CHAPTER 60 ESTATE PLANNING

23-60 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide Scope

This chapter covers estate planning. It is designed as an introduction to the subject of estate planning and as a guide to other chapters in this publication that cover particular aspects of estate planning, such as wills, trusts, lifetime gifts, durable powers of attorneys, and contracts that affect wills and trusts.

The Legal Background begins by defining the term "estate planning" and describing the goals that can be met by an estate plan. It includes a description of the roles and duties of estate planners, including estate planning attorneys. It also includes an extended discussion of important tax rules that must be considered whenever an estate is planned. These include estate tax, gift tax, income tax, and generation-skipping transfer tax rules. The Legal Background also containing an extended discussion of the principal tools that are available to the estate planner, including wills, revocable inter vivos ("living") trusts, irrevocable inter vivos trusts, co-ownership of property, life insurance, lifetime gifts, durable powers of attorney, and contracts. Finally, the Legal Background discusses the law of intestate succession in California.

The forms include worksheets and documents designed to facilitate the preparation of an estate plan, including a client interview checklist, a conflict of interest disclosure for dual representation, a cover letter designed to be sent to the client with the completed estate planning documents, follow-up letters designed to be sent to the client after the estate plan has been completed, and worksheets designed to assist the attorney in estimating the estate taxes that will be due on the client's death and the probate fees that will be payable if the client elects not to plan his or her estate so as to avoid probate administration.

Because the chapter is designed to guide the attorney to the use of other estate planning chapters in this publication, it includes frequent cross-references to those others chapters.

[1] Definition

Estate planning is the process by which a client's estate is conserved, invested, managed, and ultimately passed on to others. A good estate plan will preserve as much of the property as the client needs (or wishes to retain) during the client's lifetime, and seek to minimize delay, taxes, and administrative costs when the property is ultimately passed on to the client's relatives, friends, or other designated beneficiaries.

Wills are one of the primary tools of the estate planner. However, a competent estate planner will not attempt to achieve all of a client's estate planning goals with a will, but in appropriate circumstances will employ trusts, co-owned property, life insurance policies, multiple-party accounts, gifts, and durable powers of attorney to accomplish those goals.

The goals of an estate plan should be determined by the client's needs and the legal tools available to meet them. Transferring the client's estate after death to the persons designated by the client is, of course, one of the primary goals of every estate plan. However, many clients will also wish to transfer some property while they are still living. And nearly every client will be interested in arranging his or her affairs in such a way that if the client should ever be incapacitated, his or her property will be properly managed and conserved, both for the client's benefit and for the benefit of the persons to whom the client ultimately wishes to transfer the property.

Saving estate, gift, and other transfer taxes plays an important part in most estate plans. Many clients are aware of the substantial burden that estate [see § 60.13] and gift [see § 60.14] taxes impose on estates of sufficient value. Some may also be aware of the existence of the generation-skipping transfer tax [see § 60.16]. Nearly all clients whose estates are large enough to be subject to one or more of these taxes will wish to arrange their affairs in such a way as to minimize the overall tax burden on their estates and heirs. While tax-saving goals are legitimate, however, it is important to keep them in perspective. Taxes should be saved only when it is possible to do so without sacrificing other more important estate planning goals. Providing adequately for the client's own needs while the client is still alive is always more important than attempting to save taxes, either during the client's lifetime or after the client's death. Similarly, a plan that transfers the client's property to persons designated by the client with a minimum of delay and expense is almost always preferable to a plan that saves taxes but deprives the designated persons of some or all of the property that they would otherwise receive, or delays their receipt of the property. Reasonable tax-saving goals are usually compatible with a client's dispositive plans. It is the duty of the estate planner to implement the client's plans in such a way as to achieve both when both are achievable. In every case, of course, all of the options available to the client should be explored and explained, and the ultimate decisions should be the client's to make.

CHAPTER 60 ESTATE PLANNING
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

§ 60.11 Estate Planners

[1] In General

Estate planning is often thought to be the exclusive province of estate planning attorneys. While an attorney is key to the implementation of an estate plan, other professionals may also play an important part in devising and carrying out an estate plan.

Investment advisers, for example, may help the client invest his or her savings while still living so that the client's retirement needs can be met and the value of the assets that will be passed on to others after the client's death will be maximized. Accountants and tax advisers will often help to alert clients to tax problems and suggest ways of meeting or minimizing tax obligations. Insurance agents may be indispensable in helping the client to achieve estate planning goals that cannot be financed without insurance proceeds.

[a] Specialists and Nonspecialists

In appropriate cases, attorneys will work closely with other estate planning professionals to meet the client's overall estate planning needs. In every case, however, the preparation of estate planning documents is the proper function of a duly licensed attorney.

Some estate planning attorneys are certified as specialists under authority of the State Bar's California Board of Legal Specialists. Others qualify as experts on the basis of special knowledge or experience. Attorneys with no particular experience or expertise in the area of estate planning may also prepare wills or draft trusts for clients. However, every attorney who undertakes to render estate planning services should understand the professional responsibilities to which he or she is subject. Modern estate planning is a complex and exacting field of practice, and it is filled with traps for the unwary.

[b] Attorney's Duty to Act Competently

An attorney has a duty to use such skill, prudence, and diligence as members of his or her profession commonly possess and exercise [ Coscia v. McKenna & Cuneo (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1194, 1199, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 25 P.3d 670 ; Redante v. Yockelson (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1356, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 10 ; see Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-110].

All attorneys are expected to possess knowledge of legal principles that are commonly known by well-informed attorneys. They also have a duty to discover additional rules of law that, although not commonly known, may readily be found by standard research techniques [ Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 349, 355 n. 3, 358, 118 Cal. Rptr. 621, 530 P.2d 589 , overruled in part, In re Marriage of Brown, 15 Cal. 3d 838, 126 Cal. Rptr. 633, 544 P.2d 561, 1976 Cal. LEXIS 192 ]. Whether a legal principle is commonly known, or can readily be discovered by standard research techniques, is often a difficult question. The California courts generally have held attorneys who prepare wills and trusts to a high standard of competence, even requiring them to be familiar with difficult details of federal tax law. In one case, for example, the Court of Appeal found an attorney who had drafted a bypass trust that gave a general power of appointment to the settlor's wife, and thus caused the trust corpus to be included in the wife's estate for estate tax purposes, to be guilty of negligence [ Bucquet v. Livingston (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 914, 922-923, 129 Cal. Rptr. 514 ]. The court admitted that the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code and Treasury regulations relating to powers of appointment were a "technicality-ridden legal nightmare," but nevertheless found that the tax problems caused by powers of appointment were within the ambit of reasonably competent practitioners and should be known by them [ Bucquet v. Livingston (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 914, 922, 129 Cal. Rptr. 514 ]. In another case, the Court of Appeal held an attorney liable for drafting a "Clifford" trust and related license agreement that failed to achieve the client's objective of avoiding income taxation on the trust income. The court held that the attorney was chargeable with knowledge of the "Clifford" trust rules, despite their admitted complexity [ Horne v. Peckham (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 409-414, 158 Cal. Rptr. 714 ; see Helvering v. Clifford (1940) 309 U.S. 331, 60 S. Ct. 554, 84 L. Ed. 788 ; see also Pub. L. No. 99-514 (Tax Reform Act of 1986), § 1402(a), abolishing former "Clifford" trust rules of I.R.C. § 673(a)].

An attorney who does not have sufficient skill and knowledge to competently perform the services that a client requests must acquire the necessary skill and knowledge before the services are performed, or associate or consult another attorney who is reasonably believed to be competent [Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-110(B)]. An attorney must refer a client to a specialist, or recommend the assistance of a specialist, if a reasonably skillful and careful practitioner would do so under similar circumstances [ Horne v. Peckham (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 404, 414-415, 158 Cal. Rptr. 714 ].

[c] Inducing or Accepting Gifts from Clients

Estate planning attorneys have a general duty not to induce their clients to bestow benefits on them unless the applicable standards of fairness and disclosure are satisfied [see Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rules 3-300 (duty to avoid adverse interests), 4-400 (duty not to induce client to make gift to attorney)]. Although accepting testamentary or inter vivos gifts from a client is not absolutely prohibited, these gifts raise both ethical and legal issues and may subject an attorney to civil liability or professional discipline. In addition, such gifts can be easier to challenge than other gifts, especially when the attorney is not a relative of the client and prepared the will or other instrument containing the gift [see discussion below].

Rule 4-400 of the California Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits every member of the State Bar from inducing a client to make a substantial gift, including a testamentary gift, to the member or to the member's parent, child, sibling, or spouse, except when the client is "related to the member." The rule does not define the phrase "related to the member." It is likely, however, that the phrase extends to persons who are related to the attorney by marriage as well as by blood [compare Prob. Code §§ 21350(b), 21351(a), noted below, which specifically apply to relatives by marriage]. If, for example, the client is a sister or brother of the attorney, the express wording of Rule 4-400 would permit the attorney to induce the sister or brother to make a gift to one of the attorney's children. If the client is married to a sister or brother of the attorney, it is probable that in this case the attorney also could properly induce the client to make a gift to the sister or brother. Rule 4-400 is subject to general standards of fairness and the absence of undue influence [Cal

Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 4-400, Discussion]. The official discussion of the rule makes it clear that an attorney who participates in the preparation of an instrument memorializing a gift that is otherwise permissible should not be subject to professional discipline. If impermissible influence has occurred, however, discipline is appropriate [Cal Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 4-400, Discussion].

Rule 3-300 of the California Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits every member of the State Bar from knowingly acquiring a pecuniary interest adverse to the client, unless (1) the acquisition and its terms are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted to the client in a manner that should reasonably have been understood by the client, (2) the client is advised in writing that he or she may seek the advice of an independent lawyer of his or her choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice, and (3) the client thereafter consents in writing to the terms of the acquisition.

When an attorney participates in the preparation of a will, trust, or other instrument that makes a transfer to the attorney or to certain of the attorney's relatives, employees, or business partners, the transfer may be challenged on several grounds. The transfer may be presumed to be the product of the attorney's undue influence and, in such an event, may be set aside on the ground that it was obtained in violation of the attorney's fiduciary duties [see Estate of Auen (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 300, 310-311, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557]. When an attorney is acting as an attorney, anything of value that the attorney obtains from the client other than compensation for legal services performed is "undue" and triggers the presumption of undue influence [Estate of Auen (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 300, 310, 312-315, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557]. An "undue" benefit received by an attorney may consist of a devise under a will, a gift made from a trust, or an inter vivos gift. It may also consist of devises or gifts made to the attorney's relatives [Estate of Auen (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 300, 310, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557; Estate of Lind (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 1430, 257 Cal. Rptr. 853].

In addition, if a transfer is to a person who is a "disqualified person" under Prob. Code § 21350, the transfer is invalid unless it falls within one of the statutory exceptions specified in Prob. Code § 21351 [Prob. Code § 21350(a)].

"Disqualified persons" include such persons as the attorney who drafted the instrument, the attorney's relatives and law partners, other fiduciaries such as conservators or trustees, care custodians, and relatives of those individuals [see Prob. Code § 21350(a) (detailed definitions)]. For a detailed discussion of "disqualified persons," the exceptions, and the operation of these statutes in general, see Ch. 60A, Gifts, § 60A.16. Violation of Probate Code provisions relating to donative transfers [Prob. Code § 21350 et seq.] is grounds for professional discipline if the attorney knew or should have known of the facts leading to the violation [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6103.6].

[d] Liability to Third Parties

An attorney who renders estate planning services negligently may be liable for resulting damages, not only to the client who requested and paid for the services but also to third parties whom the attorney has never met. In the landmark case of Lucas v. Hamm, the California Supreme Court held that privity of contract is not required to bring an action against an attorney for malpractice in the preparation of a will. Since it is clearly foreseeable that the beneficiaries of a will will be harmed if the attorney fails to prepare the will correctly, the court held that those beneficiaries have standing to recover damages against the attorney in appropriate cases [Lucas v. Hamm (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 583, 590-591, 15 Cal. Rptr. 821, 364 P.2d 685; Garcia v. Borelli (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 24, 32, 180 Cal. Rptr. 768 (intended beneficiaries of will who lose their testamentary rights because of failure of attorney who drafted will to properly fulfill his or her obligations under contract with testator may recover damages as third party beneficiaries and also on tort liability for breach of duty owed directly to beneficiaries)]. By logical extension, the same rule applies to the beneficiaries of a trust instrument.

Attorneys who prepare wills and trust instruments are not always liable to the intended beneficiaries of those instruments, however. Whether in a specific case an attorney can be held liable to a third party not the attorney's client depends on various factors, including the extent to which the attorney's services were intended to affect the third party, the foreseeability of harm to the third party, the degree of certainty that the third party in fact suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the attorney's negligence and the third party's injury, the moral blame attached to the attorney's conduct, the policy of the law in preventing future harm, the likelihood that imposing liability might interfere with the attorney's ethical duties to the client, and whether imposing liability would impose an undue burden on the legal profession [ Lucas v. Hamm (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 583, 588, 15 Cal. Rptr. 821, 364 P.2d 685 ; Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1295, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 ; Bucquet v. Livingston (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 914, 921, 129 Cal. Rptr. 514 ].

An attorney preparing a will for a testator does not owe a duty to the beneficiary of the will or to the beneficiary under a prior will to ascertain and document the client's testamentary capacity. When the testator's testamentary capacity is the basis for a will challenge, the testator's true intent is the central question, and that intent cannot be ascertained from the will or other challenged estate plan document. The attorney who is persuaded of the client's testamentary capacity by the attorney's own observations and experience, and who drafts the will accordingly, fulfills the attorney's duty of loyalty to the testator. In doing so, the attorney should not be required to consider the effect of the new will on beneficiaries under a former will or beneficiaries of the new will. These beneficiaries do not have a cause of action against the attorney for malpractice. Their remedy is to contest the probate and challenge the will on the ground that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the time of executing the will [ Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1298-1307, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 (attorney's duty of loyalty to client might be compromised by imposing duty to beneficiaries in these circumstances)].

In one case, the court was asked to decide whether an attorney who prepared a will for a client but did not take steps to make sure that the client executed the will before the client's death could be held liable to a beneficiary named in the unsigned will for failing to see to it that it was executed [ Radovich v. Locke-Paddon (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 946, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 573 ]. The attorney had prepared a "first draft" of the will and delivered it to the client. The attorney and the client had no contact thereafter, and the client died without executing the will. The Court of Appeal held that the mere fact that the client asked the attorney to prepare a will with specific provisions did not raise a duty on the part of the attorney to see to it that the will was signed [ Radovich v. Locke-Paddon (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 946, 965, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 573 ]. The court stated that it would improperly compromise the attorney's primary duty of undivided loyalty to the client if the attorney were required to exert pressure on the client to execute estate planning documents without delay [ Radovich v. Locke-Paddon (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 946, 965, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 573 ]. The fact that the will was not signed distinguished the case from Lucas v. Hamm [ Radovich v. Locke-Paddon (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 946, 957-959, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 573 ]. However, the court suggested that an attorney might be held liable if the evidence showed that the client was strongly committed to executing a will that would benefit a particular beneficiary. Under those circumstances, the attorney would have a duty to effectuate the client's commitment [ Radovich v. Locke-Paddon (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 946, 964, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 573 ].

In another case, the court held that when the attorney drafting a will is aware that a beneficiary may be a presumptively disqualified donee under Prob. Code § 21350, the attorney has a duty of care to advise the client-testator that, absent steps taken under Prob. Code § 21351(b) to obtain a certificate of independent review from another attorney, the devise to the proposed beneficiary, if challenged, will have a significant likelihood of failing because of the presumptive disqualification. The attorney also has a duty to recommend that the client-testator seek independent counsel in an effort to obtain this certificate [ Osornio v. Weingarten (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 334, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 246 ]. This duty of care is owed to both the testator and the prospective beneficiary [ Osornio v. Weingarten (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 334, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 246 ].

For liability to attach, there must be a proximate causal connection between the attorney's breach of duty and the resulting injury, and actual loss or damage resulting from the attorney's negligence [ Coscia v. McKenna & Cuneo (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1194, 1199, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 25 P.3d 670 ; Redante v. Yockelson (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1356, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 10 ; see Sisco v. Cosgrove, Michelizzi, Schwabacher, Ward & Bianchi (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1302, 1307, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 647 (attorneys not liable to minor's mother for failing to arrange settlement of minor's claim so that in event of minor's death, settlement proceeds would be paid solely to mother rather than to both of minor's parents; minor had no power of testamentary disposition and could not have agreed to such a settlement or denied estranged father's rights under intestate succession statutes, so it was not possible for attorneys to have arranged settlement in desired manner)].

A careful estate planning attorney will not test the limits of the rules imposing liability on attorneys for negligently preparing wills, or failing to take steps to ensure that wills are executed promptly. Attorneys who render estate planning services should be well acquainted with the principles and techniques of modern estate planning and render all estate planning services in a competent, knowledgeable, and careful manner. For a more detailed discussion of the professional responsibilities of estate planning attorneys, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 4, Ethical Considerations and Professional Responsibility (Matthew Bender).

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

§ 60.12 The Client's Estate

[1] In General

Estate planning should always begin with a careful consideration of the client's estate. For estate planning purposes, a client's "estate" may be regarded as all of the property that the client owns or in which the client has an interest. This definition is broad enough to include all kinds of property, tangible and intangible, real and personal, community, quasi-community, and separate. It includes assets to which the client holds legal title as well as assets in which the client holds only an equitable interest. It includes such obvious items as real estate, automobiles, stocks and bonds, cash on deposit at banks, furniture and furnishings, jewelry, and works of art, as well as less obvious items, such as interests in life insurance policies and the right to receive payments from retirement or pension plans. The client's estate will include items that the client owns outright, as well as items held by trusts in which the client is either an income or a remainder beneficiary.

It is important for a client to understand the all-encompassing nature of the client's "estate." It is equally important, however, for the client to understand the differences between a "probate estate" [see [2], below] and a "taxable estate" [see [3], below]. These latter two terms are the subject of much confusion among clients, and even among some attorneys.

[2] Probate Estate

The client's "probate estate" consists of all property that the client owns, or in which the client has an interest, that is subject to probate administration after the client dies. Probate administration is a judicial process under which all of the assets of a decedent that are subject to the jurisdiction of the probate court are collected, valued, conserved, and distributed, either under the terms of the decedent's will or, if the decedent left no valid will, in accordance with the laws of intestate succession.

The probate estate should not be confused with the "taxable estate" [see [3], below]. Many people die with substantial probate estates that are not subject to any death taxes. Conversely, many people die without probate estates, but with property that is nonetheless subject to substantial estate taxation.

From a practical viewpoint, the probate estate can best be understood as all of a decedent's assets that cannot legally be transferred to the persons entitled to receive them without an order of distribution issued by a probate court. Stated otherwise, if the only way to transfer the assets to the persons entitled to the assets is to subject them to formal probate administration, those assets comprise the "probate estate." If there is some other way of transferring those assets, they are not included in the "probate estate." Assets that can be transferred in other ways include such items as property held in trusts [see § 60.17[2], [3]], joint tenancy assets [see §§ 60.12[5], 60.13[1][f], 60.17[4][b]], accounts in banks or other savings institutions with "pay-on-death" payees, multiple-party accounts [see § 60.17[4][c]], the proceeds of life insurance policies that are not payable to the estate or the personal representative of the estate [see §§ 60.13[1][h], 60.17[5]], and the proceeds of retirement and pension funds with designated "pay-on-death" beneficiaries.

[3] Taxable Estate

The client's "taxable estate" consists of all of the items of property that the client owns, or in which the client has an interest, that are subject to estate taxation upon the client's death. For estate tax purposes, the taxable estate is properly determined by first determining the value of the client's "gross estate" and then deducting the items entitled under the estate tax law to be deducted [see I.R.C. § 2051 (definition of "taxable estate"); Davis v. Comm'r (9th Cir. 2005) 394 F.3d 1294, 1297].

The Internal Revenue Code adopts a very broad definition of "gross estate." For estate tax purposes, the value of a decedent's gross estate includes the value at the time of the decedent's death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, to the extent provided for in the Code [I.R.C. § 2031; see § 60.13[1]]. Some items of property are specifically required to be included in the gross estate [see, e.g., I.R.C. §§ 2035 (property transferred within three years of death), 2036 (transfers with retained life estate), 2037 (transfers taking effect at death), 2038 (revocable transfers), 2039 (annuities), 2040 (joint interests), 2041 (powers of appointment), 2042 (proceeds of life insurance), 2043 (transfers for insufficient consideration), 2044 (property for which marital deduction was previously allowed)]. However, an item of property is required to be included in a decedent's gross estate whether or not it is specifically required to be included if the decedent has at the time of death "an interest therein" [I.R.C. § 2033]. Whether a decedent had a sufficient interest in an item of property to require its inclusion in the decedent's gross estate is usually a question of local property law [see, e.g., Helvering v. Rhodes' Estate (8th Cir. [B.T.A.] 1941) 117 F.2d 509, 510].

The fact that an item is not subject to probate administration and thus does not comprise part of a decedent's "probate estate" has no bearing on whether the item is includible in the decedent's "gross estate." Many items of property that are not subject to probate administration are includible in the "gross estate." Items of this kind include the proceeds of life insurance policies in which the decedent held "incidents of ownership" [see I.R.C. § 2042(2) (proceeds of life insurance)], property held by the decedent and another person as joint tenants [see I.R.C. § 2040 (joint interests)], and property held by a decedent in an irrevocable inter vivos trust [see I.R.C. § 2038 (revocable transfers)].

For a more detailed discussion of estate taxation, see § 60.13.

[4] Community and Quasi-Community Property

[a] Interests of Deceased and Surviving Spouses

When a married person dies in California, one half of the community property or the quasi-community property belongs to the deceased spouse and the other half belongs to the surviving spouse [Prob. Code § 100(a), 101(a)]. Each spouse has the right of testamentary disposition over that spouse's half of the community property [ Estate of Miramontes-Najera (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 750, 756, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 240 ].

The half that belongs to the deceased spouse is subject to disposition in the same manner as other property. Thus it may be transferred by will [Prob. Code § 6101(b)] or through the mechanism of an inter vivos trust. If a person who owns an interest in community or quasi-community property dies without a will, his or her half of the property will pass to the surviving spouse under the laws of intestate succession [Prob. Code § 6401].

For estate tax purposes, the value of a decedent's estate includes the decedent's half of the community or quasi-community property. It does not include the surviving spouse's half of that property [see Prob. Code § 100(a)].

The equal division of community or quasi-community property does not apply if the spouses have agreed to a non pro rata division of that property (either as to the aggregate value or as to an individual asset) [see Prob. Code §§ 100(b), 101(b)].

Although the phrase "one-half of the community property," as used in Prob. Code § 100(a) is capable, on its face, of meaning either one-half of the total value of all community property or one-half of each item of community property, the courts have concluded that the statute means a decedent has a right to dispose of only one-half of each community property asset to someone other than a spouse [ Estate of Wilson (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 67, 70, 227 Cal. Rptr. 794 ]. This rule is based on the nature of community property. Each spouse has a vested, undivided one-half interest in the community property. A spouse's death only dissolves the community. It does not affect the character of the property acquired or rights vested before the spouse's death. Because each asset is only half of his or hers to give, a spouse cannot make a testamentary disposition to a third party of any specific item of community property except by a "forced election" requiring the surviving spouse to elect to take under the testamentary scheme or to take his or her community property share [ Estate of Wilson (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 67, 72, 227 Cal. Rptr. 794 ]. For example, a spouse cannot devise the family residence to a third party, even if there are sufficient other community assets to counterbalance the value of the gift, because each spouse only owns an undivided one-half interest in the residence [ Estate of Wilson (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 67, 73, 227 Cal. Rptr. 794 ].

Although this rule makes less practical sense with respect to fungible assets like money, it applies nevertheless [ Estate of Wilson (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 67, 73, 227 Cal. Rptr. 794 ]. Thus, for example, when a spouse has transferred community property into pay-on-death accounts for third persons without the surviving spouse's consent, the surviving spouse may enforce his or her community property interest in each account on an asset-by-asset basis, even if the surviving spouse is already receiving more than one-half of the total community property [ Estate of Miramontes-Najera (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 750, 753, 756-760, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 240 ; see Prob. Code §§ 5020 (provision for nonprobate transfer of community property on death executed by married person without spouse's written consent is not effective as to nonconsenting spouse's interest in property), 5021(a) (court must set aside nonprobate transfer of community property as to nonconsenting spouse's interest in that property)]. Only one-half of the community property funds in the account belong to the third person. The other one-half, which is the surviving spouse's share of the community property, belongs to that spouse [ Estate of Wilson (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 67, 68-69, 227 Cal. Rptr. 794 ].

[b] When Subject to Probate Administration

A decedent's interest in community property may or may not be subject to probate administration after the decedent's death. Any property that passes from the deceased spouse to the surviving spouse, regardless of whether the property is separate or community, and regardless of whether it passes by will or under the laws of intestate succession, may be transferred or "set aside" to the surviving spouse without probate administration [Prob. Code § 13500]. However, the surviving spouse may elect to subject all or part of the property to administration [Prob. Code § 13502]. A surviving spouse will often elect to subject community property to probate administration if the deceased spouse left debts that must be paid out of the community assets and the spouse wishes to obtain a prompt and efficient termination of those debts. A surviving spouse who receives property from a deceased spouse without administration will be personally liable for the debts of the deceased spouse [Prob. Code § 13550]. However, this liability is limited to the total amount of property received from the deceased spouse that is not exempt from the enforcement of a money judgment, less the amount of any liens or encumbrances against the property [Prob. Code § 13551].

[c] "Stepped-Up" Basis for Community Property

Community property has one estate planning attribute that sharply differentiates it from separate property. Property that is received by inheritance from a decedent receives a new (sometimes called "stepped-up") basis for income tax purposes. For decedents dying before 2010, this basis is the fair market value of the property at the time of the decedent's death [I.R.C. § 1014(a)(1), (f)]; a modified carryover basis rule applies generally for decedents dying after 2009 [I.R.C. § 1022]. Property that is acquired by purchase, in contrast, has a basis equal to its original cost (as adjusted for subsequent improvements or depreciation) [I.R.C. § 1012 (cost basis); see I.R.C. § 1016 (adjustments to basis)].

If a married person dies leaving his or her share of the community property to his or her surviving spouse, the surviving spouse will have acquired one half of the community property by virtue of the original purchase and one half by inheritance from the deceased spouse. In the absence of some special provision, this would result in the acquisition of a new date-of-death basis for one half of the property and the retention of the original cost basis for the other half. Under these circumstances, however, a special provision of the Internal Revenue Code gives a new, date-of-death basis to both halves of the community property, for decedents dying before 2010 [I.R.C. § 1014(b)(6), (f)]. If the property has appreciated substantially since it was originally purchased, and if the surviving spouse sells the property after the deceased spouse's death, this new date-of-death value basis will typically produce significant income tax savings. The result is otherwise, however, if the property received from the deceased spouse was separate property, as there is no comparable provision giving both halves of separate property a new, date-of-death value basis when it is acquired by a surviving spouse. For this reason, it may be more desirable for a surviving spouse to receive community rather than separate property from the deceased spouse, particularly if the property has appreciated substantially in value. If one spouse owns substantial separate property, it may thus be desirable to transmute the property to community property before either spouse dies [for estate planning uses of transmutation agreements, see § 60.17[8][c]].

For decedents dying after 2009, a modified carryover basis rule generally applies, under which recipients of property transferred at the decedent's death receive a basis equal to the lesser of the adjusted basis of the decedent in the property or the fair market value of the property on the date of the decedent's death [I.R.C. § 1022(a)]. Each decedent's estate, however, generally is permitted to increase (i.e., step up) the basis of assets transferred by up to a total of $1.3 million [I.R.C. § 1022(b)(1), (2)(B)]. The $1.3 million is increased by the amount of unused capital losses, net operating losses, and certain "built-in" losses of the decedent [I.R.C. § 1022(b)(2)(C)].

In addition, for decedents dying after 2009, the basis of property transferred to a surviving spouse can be increased by an additional $3 million. Thus, the basis of property transferred to surviving spouses can be increased by a total of $4.3 million [I.R.C. § 1022(c)(1), (2)(B)]. Nonresidents who are not U.S. citizens will be allowed to increase the basis of property by up to $60,000, but may not increase that amount by any losses [I.R.C. § 1022(b)(3)]. The decedent is treated as having owned the surviving spouse's one-half share of community property (which will be eligible for a basis increase) if at least one-half of the property was owned by, and acquired from, the decedent [I.R.C. § 1022(d)(1)(B)(iv)]. Thus, similar to the rule under pre-2010 law, [see I.R.C. § 1014(b)(6)], both the decedent's and the surviving spouse's share of community property could be eligible for a basis increase [I.R.C. § 1022(d)(1)(B)(iv)].

[5] Joint Tenancy Property

[a] In General

Joint tenancy is a form of co-ownership of property in which two or more persons hold title to property in equal shares and as a result of a transfer in which they are named as joint tenants [see Civ. Code § 683(a)]. When one joint tenant dies, his or her interest in the joint tenancy passes by operation of law to the surviving joint tenant or tenants [ Estate of Dow (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 675, 680, 186 P.2d 977 ].

A joint tenancy interest does not become part of a deceased joint tenant's probate estate, and it cannot be transferred by the deceased tenant's will [ Estate of Bibb (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 461, 469, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 415 ; Estate of Petersen (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1742, 1746-1747, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 449 ; Goldberg v. Goldberg (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 623, 628, 32 Cal. Rptr. 93 ; see Prob. Code §§ 6600(b)(1), 13050(a)(1) (joint tenancy property excluded from estate for purposes of small estate set-aside and transfer of small estate without administration)]. However, a joint tenancy may be severed by all of the joint tenants acting together, or by one of the joint tenants acting alone, provided that the required formalities are observed [see Civ. Code § 683.2(a), (d); see also [b], below]. Once a joint tenancy has been effectively severed, the interest of the severing joint tenant may be transferred in the same manner as any other property, including by will.

[b] Severance of Joint Tenancy

All of the joint tenants may sever a joint tenancy in real property by executing a written instrument that severs the joint tenancy, or by executing an agreement that the tenancy is or will be severed [see Civ. Code § 683.2(d)]. One joint tenant acting alone may sever a joint tenancy in real property by executing and conveying a deed conveying his or her interest in the property to a third party [Civ. Code § 683.2(a)(1)], or simply by executing a written declaration or other instrument that evidences his or her intent to sever the joint tenancy [Civ. Code § 683.2(a)(2)]. However, a deed, declaration, or other written instrument will not terminate the survivorship rights of the other joint tenants unless it is recorded before the death of the severing joint tenant [Civ. Code § 683.2(c)(1)], or acknowledged by the severing joint tenant at least three days before the severing joint tenant's death and recorded not more than seven days after the death [Civ. Code § 683.2(c)(2)].

When three persons hold title to real property as joint tenants, a deed from two of the tenants to themselves as joint tenants is effective to sever the joint tenancy, even when the deed is not recorded until after the death of one of the severing joint tenants, since the rule requiring that the deed be recorded or acknowledged before the severing joint tenant's death [see Civ. Code § 683.2(c)] does not apply to a deed from one joint tenant to another joint tenant [ Re v. Re (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 91, 98-99, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62 ].

[c] Property Characterization Issues in Estate Planning Context

Joint tenancies are widely used by married persons in California. However, it is not commonly understood that joint tenancy and community property are inconsistent concepts and cannot properly exist in the same property at the same time [see Tomaier v. Tomaier (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 754, 758, 146 P.2d 905 ; Siberell v. Siberell (1932) 214 Cal. 767, 770-772, 7 P.2d 1003 ; see also Fam. Code § 750]. Moreover, the fact that married persons take title to property as joint tenants does not conclusively prove that they hold the property as joint tenants at the time of death.

If a husband and wife acquire property by a written instrument in which they are described as husband and wife, it is presumed that they take the property as community property [ Estate of Petersen (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1742, 1747, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 449 ]. Under Fam. Code § 803(c), however, if the property was acquired before January 1, 1975, the community property presumption may be overcome merely by showing that a "different intention" was expressed in the instrument. A statement in the instrument that the spouses take the property as joint tenants is sufficient to express such a "different intention" and to establish that the property is joint tenancy property for this purpose [ Estate of Petersen (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1742, 1747, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 449 ]. In other words, in determining the character of real property on the death of a spouse, there was a rebuttable presumption that the property is as described in the deed [ Estate of England (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1, 5, 284 Cal. Rptr. 361 ]. Parol evidence was admissible, however, to show that the parties intended the property to be community property, regardless of the form of title in the deed [ Tomaier v.

Tomaier (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 754, 757, 146 P.2d 905 ; Edwards v. Deitrich (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 254, 260, 257 P.2d 750 ; Schindler v. Schindler (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d 597, 602, 272 P.2d 566 ]. The presumption created by the deed could not be overcome by testimony of the hidden intentions of the parties, but only by evidence tending to prove a common understanding or an agreement that the character of the property was to be other than joint tenancy [ Machado v. Machado (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 501, 506, 25 Cal. Rptr. 87, 375 P.2d 55 ; see Hansford v. Lassar (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 364, 372-374, 125 Cal. Rptr. 804 (discussing what evidence can be used to show the existence of a common understanding or agreement)]. Because this presumption caused problems in connection with marital dissolutions, it was replaced with a contrary presumption, currently codified in Fam. Code § 2581, that for purposes of division of property on dissolution of marriage, property acquired by the parties in joint form during marriage, including joint tenancy property, is presumed to be community property. However, since the Family Code presumption applies only to property divisions in connection with marital dissolutions, it has no effect on the characterization of property, or the application of the presumption in favor of the form of title, in other situations [see Hansford v. Lassar (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 364, 371, 125 Cal. Rptr. 804 ].

The statutory transmutation requirements that became effective on January 1, 1985, can substantially affect the characterization of property that is held in joint tenancy form but that was acquired with community property assets. The state of the law with respect to the character of such assets is probably best described as unsettled, although it is possible to draw some conclusions from the statutes and cases relying on the statutory transmutation provisions.

Any transmutation made on or after January 1, 1985, is invalid unless made in writing by an express declaration that is made, joined in, consented to, or accepted by the spouse whose interest in the property is adversely affected [Fam. Code § 852(a)]. Gifts between spouses of clothing, jewelry, and other tangible items of a personal nature and a value that is not substantial under the circumstances of the marriage are not covered by this requirement [Fam. Code § 852(c)]. In Estate of MacDonald, the California Supreme Court held that, to satisfy the requirement of an "express declaration," a writing must expressly state that the characterization or ownership of the property is being changed [ Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 262, 272, 272 Cal. Rptr. 153, 794 P.2d 911 ; In re Marriage of Starkman (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 659, 663-665, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 639 (clause in trust agreement providing that property transferred to trust is community property unless transferor spouse identifies it as separate property was insufficient to transmute husband's separate property, which he failed to identify as separate property, to community property)]. Use of extrinsic evidence to prove that the writing effected a transmutation is precluded [ Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 262, 264, 272 Cal. Rptr. 153, 794 P.2d 911 ].

There is no exception from the "express declaration" requirement for partial performance of an agreement to transmute property [ In re Marriage of Benson (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1096, 1100, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471, 116 P.3d 1152 ]. Fam. Code § 852(a) is stated in the negative--that is, an agreement to change the character of marital property is not valid unless it is in writing, contains an express declaration by which the transmutation is made, and is accepted in some fashion by the adversely affected spouse--as though all intendments weigh against finding compliance with the requirements for transmutation in the usual case. Furthermore, no exception to the requirement of an "express" written declaration appears in Fam. Code § 852(a). The California Supreme Court has concluded that these features suggest the legislature envisioned a standard for transmutations from which married couples could not freely depart [ In re Marriage of Benson (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1096, 1104, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471, 116 P.3d 1152 ]. The writing requirement of Fam. Code § 852(a) cannot be satisfied when there is no writing at all about the subject property, and when a transmutation would have to be inferred from acts surrounding the parties' purported agreement [ In re Marriage of Benson (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1096, 1107, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471, 116 P.3d 1152 ]. However, these requirements for a valid transmutation do not apply when separate property and community property have been commingled or otherwise combined [Fam. Code § 852(d); see In re Marriage of Weaver (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 858, 870-871, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 121 (transmutation of real property parties purchased before marriage to community property occurred as consequence of commingling parties' separate property interest with community property used to pay for mortgage and home improvements during marriage)].

Two consequences of the transmutation statutes are especially important in the context discussed here. First, oral transmutions of property may no longer be made (oral transmutions predating January 1, 1985, however, remain valid if they met the pre-1985 requirements [see Fam. Code § 852(e)]). Second, a deed reciting that married persons hold title to real property in joint tenancy does not meet the requirements for a transmutation agreement because it is not "made, joined in, consented to, or accepted by the spouse whose interest in the property is adversely affected" within the requirements of MacDonald [see Fam. Code § 852(a)].

A distinction has been made between an intent to transmute property (which is subject to the statutory and MacDonald requirements) and an intent merely to transfer property without probate when one of the spouses dies (which the court held was not subject to those requirements). In Estate of Petersen, the husband and wife acquired annuity contracts with community funds. The contracts contained no language stating that the character of the property was transmuted from community to separate, but they did provide that on the death of one of the spouses, the annuities would be paid to the surviving spouse. The Court of Appeal stated that it was possible for spouses to agree that, on the death of one of them, the property would be transferred to the other spouse without probate, without also transmuting the property from community to separate property [ Estate of Petersen (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1742, 1750, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 449 ; see Prob. Code § 5022(a) (consent of spouse to nonprobate transfer not a transmutation of spouse's interest in the property)]. When the husband and wife merely provide that the community property will be transferred to the survivor outside of probate, the property may be described as "community property with a right of survivorship" [ Estate of Petersen (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1742, 1750, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 449 ]. It is community property for all purposes except transfer to the surviving spouse without probate on the death of the first spouse. The result would be different, however, if the joint tenancy was created with some person other than the surviving spouse. In that case, a transmutation would be necessary, and the requirements of Estate of MacDonald would have to be satisfied [ Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 262, 272, 272 Cal. Rptr. 153, 794 P.2d 911 ].

[d] Joint Tenancy Property Held After Dissolution of Marriage

When a husband and wife hold title to real property as joint tenants and their marriage is terminated by a judgment of dissolution, the court ordinarily will decide whether the joint tenancy property is community property and thus subject to division by the court, or separate property and not subject to division. In some cases, however, the court may render a "status-only" judgment, which is a judgment that terminates the marriage but does not adjudicate property issues. When the court does this, questions as to the proper characterization of the property may arise at some later time, even after the death of one of the parties.

A status-only judgment of dissolution does not automatically sever a joint tenancy [ Estate of Layton (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 1337, 1342, 1344, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 251 ]. However, if the court reserves jurisdiction to decide property issues, the court may later sever the joint tenancy and divide the property between the parties, even after one of the parties has died. In that case, the property is deemed to be divided "upon the dissolution of the marriage," and the rules applicable to division of property upon dissolution of marriage apply [ In re Marriage of Hilke (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 215, 220, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 371, 841 P.2d 891 ; see Fam. Code § 2581].

For purposes of division of property on dissolution of marriage, property acquired by the parties during marriage in joint form, including property held in tenancy in common, joint tenancy, or in tenancy by the entirety, or as community property, is presumed to be community property [Fam. Code § 2581]. This presumption is a presumption affecting the burden of proof and may be rebutted (1) by a clear statement in the deed or other documentary evidence of title by which the property is acquired that the property is separate property and not community property; or (2) proof that the parties have made a written agreement that the property is separate property [Fam. Code § 2581; In re Marriage of Weaver (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 858, 865-866, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 121 (under Fam. Code § 2581, spouses cannot hold property in joint title while preserving its separate property characterization through oral or implied agreements)]. When the court in a dissolution of marriage proceeding has issued a status-only judgment but reserved jurisdiction to determine property issues, it must apply this rebuttable presumption in any subsequent proceeding to determine the character of property held in joint tenancy [ In re Marriage of Hilke (1992) 4 Cal.4th 215, 221-222, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 371, 841 P.2d 891 ; In re Marriage of Allen (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1231-1235, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 ]. If the court finds that the presumption applies and is not adequately rebutted, the court must sever the joint tenancy and divide the property as community property, even when one of the parties is already dead [ In re Marriage of Hilke (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 215, 221-222, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 371, 841 P.2d 891 ; In re Marriage of Allen (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1231-1235, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 ].

Married persons may also terminate a joint tenancy by taking action in the course of a dissolution proceeding that evidences their intention to terminate the joint tenancy. They may, for example, agree to treat the property as community property either by agreeing that the court may divide the property [ In re Marriage of Allen (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1227, 1231, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 ] or that the property may be sold and the proceeds divided by the court [ Estate of Seibert (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 338, 341, 276 Cal. Rptr. 508 ]. The agreement to terminate a joint tenancy may be evidenced by an oral stipulation reduced to court order in the dissolution proceedings. When this is done, the joint tenancy is terminated and the property is treated as community property for purposes of division on dissolution [ In re Marriage of Allen (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1227, 1231, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 ; Estate of Seibert (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 338, 341, 276 Cal. Rptr. 508 ].

The mere fact that the court renders a status-only judgment and reserves jurisdiction to adjudicate property issues will not overcome the effect of a joint tenancy deed if the parties never seek to litigate the property issues. If both parties die before the court adjudicates the property issues, the rebuttable community property presumption [see Fam. Code § 2581] does not apply. In that case, the property will be treated as joint tenancy property and, on the death of the first spouse, the surviving spouse will acquire all of the property by right of survivorship. Upon the subsequent death of the surviving spouse, the property will be subject to disposition in the estate of the surviving spouse [ Estate of Layton (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 1337, 1339-1344, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 251 ].

For discussion of the severance of joint tenancies under Prob. Code § 5601, which provides generally that a joint tenancy created between a decedent and the decedent's former spouse is severed as to the decedent's interest if it was created before or during marriage and, at the time of death, the former spouse is not the decedent's surviving spouse, due to annulment or dissolution of marriage, see § 60.17[10][c].

[e] Advantages and Disadvantages of Joint Tenancy in Estate Planning Context

The popularity of joint tenancy is due in large part to the right of survivorship. When one joint tenant dies, his or her interest in the joint tenancy property passes to the survivor and no probate administration is necessary [ Estate of Dow (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 675, 680, 186 P.2d 977 ; see Goldberg v. Goldberg (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 623, 628, 32 Cal. Rptr. 93 (probate court has no jurisdiction over joint tenancy property)]. Notwithstanding this advantage, joint tenancies suffer from distinct estate planning disadvantages. Although the surviving joint tenant will receive all of the property when the first tenant dies, some other device will be necessary to transfer the property on the death of the surviving tenant. That device will almost always be a will or a trust. While both joint tenants are living, joint tenancy property cannot be conveyed to a trust, so that joint tenancy property cannot be used to fund a marital deduction trust or a bypass trust [see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions ] on the death of the deceased spouse. Further, when married persons hold property in a joint tenancy, the property will not receive the double "stepped-up" basis that community property receives when the first spouse dies. Only one-half of the joint tenancy property will receive a stepped-up basis when the first spouse dies, while both halves of community property will receive that basis on the death of the first spouse [see I.R.C. § 1014(b)(6); [4][c], above; see also I.R.C. § 1022 (post-2009 rule)].

[6] Tenancy in Common

Tenancy in common is a form of co-ownership of real property by two or more persons that is neither a joint interest nor a partnership interest [Civ. Code §§ 685, 686]. A tenancy in common differs from a joint tenancy in that there is no right of survivorship when one of the tenants dies, and the interests of the tenants do not have to be equal (although they often are). When a tenant in common dies, his or her interest in the property is subject to disposition by will or trust in the same manner as other property.

[7] Partnership Interests

[a] In General

A partnership is an association formed by two or more persons to carry on a business as co-owners for profit [see Corp. Code § 16101(9); Civ. Code § 684]. California law recognizes three basic types of partnerships: general partnerships [see Corp. Code § 16100 et seq. (Uniform Partnership Act of 1994, effective Jan. 1, 1997); see also Ch. 15, Part A, Formation of General Partnerships], limited partnerships [see Corp. Code § 15900 et seq. (Uniform Limited Partnership Act of 2008)]; see Corp. Code §§ 15912.04, 15912.06 (operative date and limited application of former limited partnership acts prior to January 1, 2010); see also Chs. 16- 16B], and limited liability partnerships [see Corp. Code §§ 16951-16962; see also Ch. 16C, Limited Liability Partnerships].

In general partnerships, the partners have equal rights to control and manage the partnership business [see Corp. Code § 16301], and are jointly and severally liable for the partnerships debts [see Corp. Code § 16306]. In limited partnerships, the general partners have all of the rights of management and control of the partnership business and are personally liable for the partnership debts [see Corp. Code §§ 15904.04, 15904.06 (ULPA '08)], whereas the limited partners do not participate in the management and control of the business and generally are not liable for partnership debts beyond the amounts of their capital contributions [Corp. Code § 15903.03(a) (ULPA '08); see Corp. Code §§ 15643, 15632(a) (CRLPA); see also Corp. Code §§ 15912.04, 15912.06 (operative date and limited application of former limited partnership acts prior to January 1, 2010)].

A limited liability partnership is a type of general partnership which has complied with certain registration formalities and limited the extent of its liability to creditors [see Corp. Code §§ 16951-16962 (Uniform Partnership Act of 1994)]. California limited liability partnerships may be formed only for the practice of architecture, law, or accountancy [Corp. Code § 16101(8) (UPA '94)].

In California, every general partnership is governed by the Uniform Partnership Act of 1994 (UPA '94) [Corp. Code § 16100 et seq.]. The UPA '94, which governed newly formed partnerships effective January 1, 1997, and all partnerships as of January 1, 1999 [see Corp. Code § 16111], made a number of important and fundamental changes in California partnership law. As discussed in [c], below, some of these changes can have a significant impact on estate planning for partnerships. For a detailed analysis of the UPA '94 and its impact on California partnership law, see Ch. 15, Part A, Formation of General Partnerships.

[b] No Interest in Specific Partnership Property

A deceased partner has no interest in specific partnership property, but merely owns an interest in the partnership business, with a right to participate in its profits, losses, and distributions [Corp. Code §§ 16203, 16401, 16502].

[c] Dissolution or Dissociation

Under the former version of the UPA [former Corp. Code § 15001 et seq. (repealed Jan. 1, 1999)], the death of a partner dissolved a general partnership unless there was a written agreement of the partners providing otherwise, or unless the probate court ordered the personal representative to continue as a partner [former Corp. Code § 15031(4), repealed Jan. 1, 1999; see Prob. Code § 9762]. The probate court could make such an order only upon a showing that it would be to the advantage of the estate and in the best interest of the interested persons [Prob. Code § 9762(a); see Ch. 63, Will Provisions, § 63.461[1][b][ii]].

Under the UPA '94, the death of a partner does not cause the dissolution of the partnership, but rather merely "dissociates" the deceased partner from it [Corp. Code § 16601(7)(A)]. The surviving partners have the right to continue the partnership business, but the partnership has an obligation to buy out the deceased partner's interest [Corp. Code § 16701(a)]. The buyout price is the amount that would have been distributable to the deceased partner if, on the date of the deceased partner's death, the assets of the partnership were sold at the greater of their liquidation value or the value of the entire business as a going concern without the deceased partner and the partnership was wound up as of that date [Corp. Code § 16701(b)].

The UPA '94 contemplates that the surviving partners and the deceased partner's personal representative will seek to reach an agreement as to a definite price for the deceased partner's interest [see Corp. Code § 16701(e)]. If they do not do so within 120 days after a written demand for payment, however, the partnership must make a cash payment of the amount it estimates to be the buyout price, plus accrued interest and reduced by any offsets [Corp. Code § 16701(e)]. The payment or tender must be accompanied by a statement of partnership assets and liabilities as of the date of the deceased partner's death, the latest available partnership balance sheet and income statement, an explanation of how the estimated amount of the payment was calculated, and a written notice that the payment is in full satisfaction of the obligation to purchase unless, within 120 days, the deceased partner's personal representative commences an action to determine the buyout price [Corp. Code § 16701(g)]. Any such action must be commenced within the 120 days, or within one year after written demand for payment if no payment or offer to pay is tendered [Corp. Code § 16701(i)]. In the action, the court may determine the buyout price, any offsets that the partnership is entitled to, and accrued interest that the deceased partner's personal representative is entitled to, and enter judgment for any additional payment or refund [Corp. Code § 16701(i)].

However, the UPA '94 makes it clear that the partnership has no obligation to buy out the deceased partner's interest in the partnership if the partnership is dissolved and its business is wound up within 90 days after the deceased partner's death [Corp. Code § 16701.5]. In such an event, the partnership's assets and liabilities will be distributed as in the case of any other windup and dissolution of a partnership business [see Corp. Code § 16801].

[d] Importance of Partnership Agreement

Partnerships are often governed by written partnership agreements. If there is a partnership agreement, and if it makes provisions for the death of a partner, those provisions generally will govern the rights and obligations of the surviving partners and the deceased partner's personal representative [Corp. Code § 16103(a)]. If the attorney encounters in the estate planning process a partnership that is not memorialized by a written partnership agreement, the attorney ordinarily should strongly recommend to the client that a formal partnership agreement be prepared [see Ch. 15, Part A, Formation of General Partnerships].

A well-drafted partnership agreement will provide for the disposition of a partnership interest on the death of one of the partners, either by winding up the business and liquidating its assets or by giving the surviving partner or partners the right to purchase the deceased partner's interest. In many cases, the surviving partner(s) will have the obligation to purchase the deceased partner's interest on terms set forth in the agreement. Buy-sell agreements are often funded with life insurance on the life of the partners [for discussion, see Ch. 8D, Buy-Sell Agreements].

Before any effort is made to dispose of a partnership interest by will or trust, the governing partnership agreement should be examined to determine the rights and obligations of the partners in the event of a partner's death. If the agreement does not adequately provide for the dissolution of the business or the purchase of the deceased partner's interest by the surviving partner(s), the attorney should propose that the agreement be amended to deal with those important questions. For general discussion of buy-sell agreements, and complete buy-sell forms, see Ch. 8D, Buy-Sell Agreements. For more detailed discussion of the dissolution of general partnerships, see Ch. 15, Part B, Dissolution of General Partnerships. ## [8] Community Property With Right of Survivorship

[a] Effect of Manner of Holding Property

Spouses may hold title to property as "community property with right of survivorship" [Civ. Code § 682.1 (effective July 1, 2001)]. This form of title has all the tax benefits of community property, specifically a step-up in basis on both halves of the property, and a right of survivorship that allows the property to avoid probate administration and its attendant costs [see [4][c], and [5][e], above]. This manner of holding title was previously available for securities and securities accounts under the Uniform TOD Security Registration Act [see Prob. Code § 5500 et seq.]. Effective July 1, 2001, spouses may take title to real and personal property as community property with a right of survivorship [Civ. Code § 682.1; but see Civ. Code § 682.1(b)].

When real or personal property is held as community property with a right of survivorship, and one of the spouses dies, the property passes to the surviving spouse without estate administration, pursuant to the terms of the instrument and subject to the same procedures as property held in joint tenancy [Civ. Code § 682.1(a); see [5], above; see also § 60.17[4][b]]. In addition, the community property character ensures that both spouse's interests receive an automatic step-up in basis when the first spouse dies [Civ. Code § 682.1(a); see [4][c], above]. Because the property remains community property for purposes of liability for debts, and therefore generally liable for debts of either spouse, "true" joint tenancy may provide better asset protection against the debts of the deceased spouse: the interest of a joint tenant terminates on death and the survivor takes the property free from any claims of the deceased tenant's creditors [ Grothe v. Cortlandt Corp. (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 1313, 1318, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 38 ; see Anderson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 230, 232, 70 Cal. Rptr. 389 ].

The statutory authorization for this manner of holding title does not apply to a joint account in a financial institution governed by Prob. Code § 5100 et seq. [Civ. Code § 682.1(b)]. Specifically, this manner of holding property is not authorized for joint, P.O.D., and Totten trust accounts including checking accounts, savings accounts, certificates of deposit, share accounts, and similar arrangements [see Civ. Code §§ 682.1(b), 683(b); see also Prob. Code §§ 5122(a), 5132]. For further discussion, see § 60.17[4][c].

PRACTICE TIP:

When a surviving spouse is the surviving joint tenant, estate administration ordinarily is not an issue. Joint tenancy property held by spouses passes to the surviving spouse without administration; community property may pass to the surviving spouse without administration, provided that the deceased had a will [ see Prob. Code § 13650 et seq.]. Attorneys' fees for services in connection with a petition to determine or confirm property passing to a surviving spouse is determined by private agreement and ordinarily is not subject to court approval [Prob. Code § 13660].

[b] Documentation Requirements

Civ. Code § 682.1(a), applicable to transfer instruments created on or after July 1, 2001, provides that the community property of a husband and wife may pass to the surviving spouse on the death of the other spouse without estate administration when the property is expressly declared to be community property with right of survivorship in the transfer document. When accepted in writing on the face of the transfer document by a statement signed or initialed by the grantee spouses, the property passes to the survivor without administration and with a stepped up basis on both halves of the community property [Civ. Code § 682.1(a); see I.R.C. § 1014(a)(1), (b)(6); see also [4][c], above]. Although the statutory language "may be accepted in writing" [see Civ. Code § 682.1(a)] sounds permissive, the Assembly Committee of the Judiciary has clarified that the parties' signatures or initials are required to demonstrate the requisite clear intent to take the property as community property with a right of survivorship.

Civ. Code § 682.1(a) applies to instruments created on or after July 1, 2001 [Civ. Code § 682.1(c)]. For property held in joint tenancy before this operative date, spouses do not necessarily need to execute and record new deeds. However, the failure to establish the property as community property ordinarily will cause the surviving spouse's half interest not to receive a stepped-up basis. Nevertheless, the issue does not arise if, depending on the value of the couple's property, estate tax credits cover both spouse's estates. Further, with regard to the spouses' primary residence, the $250,000 per spouse exemption on capital gains may obviate the need for change. As a caveat, the spouses may otherwise establish their clear intent to hold their joint tenancy property as community property before the death of either spouse [see Rev. Rul. 87-98, 1987-2 C.B. 206 ; see also Fam. Code §§ 850-853]. For example, the spouses might execute a transmutation agreement to establish a clear intent to hold the subject property as community property. In general, transmutation agreements must be made in writing, in the form of an express declaration, consented to or accepted by the spouse whose interest in the property is adversely affected, but need not be recorded [see Fam. Code § 852(a); see also [5][c], above; In re Marriage of Campbell (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 1058, 1062-1065, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580 ; In re Marriage of Barneson (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 583, 588, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726].

[c] Termination of Right of Survivorship

The right of survivorship inherent in assets held as community property with right of survivorship may be terminated before the death of either spouse using the same procedures by which a joint tenancy may be severed [Civ. Code § 682.1(a)]. For further discussion, see [5][b], above.

[9] Property Subject to Nonprobate Transfers

Various types of property interests may be subject to transfer after death without probate administration. If there is a written instrument that provides that money or other benefits due to, controlled by, or owned by one person will be paid after that person's death to another person or persons designated either in the instrument or in a separate writing, the provision is not invalid merely because the instrument does not comply with the requirements for execution of a will [Prob. Code § 5000(a), (b)(1)]. Various types of instruments may provide for nonprobate transfers on death, including insurance policies, contracts of employment, bonds, mortgages, promissory notes, certificated or uncertificated securities, account agreements, custodial agreements, deposit agreements, compensation plans, pensions plans, individual retirement plans, employee benefit plans, trusts, conveyances, deeds of gift, marital property agreements, and other written instruments of a similar nature [Prob. Code § 5000(a)].

Although a will, in rare cases, may designate the person or persons to whom the transfer is to be made [Prob. Code § 5000(b)(1)], it is more typical for that designation to be made in the governing instrument. Thus property subject to nonprobate transfer does not usually form a part of the probate estate [see § 60.12[2]] and is not usually subject to transfer by will.

Notwithstanding this, nonprobate transfers may (and usually do) play an important part in an estate plan. For example, the proceeds of a life insurance policy may by terms of the policy be payable directly to members of the insured's family. If they are, the proceeds will not form part of the probate estate and will not be subject to disposition by will. However, the proceeds will form a part of the insured's taxable estate [see § 60.12[3]] if, at the time of death, the insured holds any "incidents of ownership" in the policy [I.R.C. § 2042(2)]. Similarly, money deposited in a multiple-party account (such as a joint account, a "P.O.D. account," or a Totten trust account) will be paid to the person or persons designated to receive the funds after the death of one of the parties unless there is clear and convincing evidence of a different intent [Prob. Code § 5302; see Prob. Code §§ 80 ("Totten trust account" defined), 5130 ("joint account" defined), 5132 ("multiple-party account" defined), 5139 ("P.O.D." defined), 5140 ("P.O.D. account" defined)]. The funds will not form part of the probate estate of the deceased party and will not be subject to disposition under the deceased party's will.

Nonprobate transfers, like joint tenancies [see [5], above], have the virtue of avoiding probate. However, they are not usually subject to disposition under a will or trust, and for this reason special care must be taken to coordinate them with an estate plan. Many estate planners seek to coordinate property subject to nonprobate transfers with other property by transferring it to a revocable living trust, or by making the proceeds payable to the trustee of a revocable living trust. For example, the trustee of a trust (revocable or irrevocable) can be designated as the death payee under a life insurance policy. When that is done, the proceeds of the policy will be paid to the trustee after the insured dies and combined with other assets of the insured's trust estate. Similarly, money that is deposited in financial institutions can be held in the name of the trustee rather than deposited in a multiple-party account. If the trust is revocable, the settlor will have the free use of the trust funds so long as he or she is living. When the settlor dies, however, the funds will be available to the trustee for the purposes set forth in the trust instrument.

[10] Out-of-State Property

Many clients own property that is located outside California. Although the disposition of personal property is generally governed by the laws of the decedent's domicile [see Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws §§ 260-266], the disposition of real property is generally governed by the law of the state in which the real property is located [Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws §§ 236-243]. When a person dies owning real property located in more than one state, some sort of probate proceedings may be necessary in every state in which the real property is located.

A revocable living trust may help to avoid the necessity of probating property in more than one state. If the trustee holds title to the property, it will not be necessary to subject the property to probate administration. Rather, it may be held or transferred with other property of the trust estate and paid or distributed to the persons designated in the trust instrument.

§ 60.12A Prospective Repeal of Federal Estate Tax

NOTE

REGARDING ESTATE TAX REPEAL: The federal estate tax has been repealed, effective for decedents dying after 2009 [I.R.C. § 2210(a)]. Similarly, the generation-skipping tax has been repealed, effective for generation-skipping transfers after 2009 [I.R.C. § 2664]. Until then, both taxes remain in effect, subject to various phased-in changes discussed throughout this chapter.

However, under a sunset provision of the 2001 legislation that enacted the repeals, none of the provisions of that legislation--including the repeal of the estate tax and generation-skipping tax--apply to estates of decedents dying, gifts made, or generation-skipping transfers, after December 31, 2010 [Pub. Law 107-16, § 901]. Thus, unless Congress affirmatively acts before the end of 2010 to extend the provisions repealing the estate tax and generation-skipping tax, the estate tax law that was in effect before enactment of the 2001 legislation (including the 55 percent maximum estate tax rate) will apply again after 2010 [see Pub. Law 107-16, § 901; I.R.C. § 2001, before amendment by Pub. Law 107-16].

Most commentators believe that significant changes will be made to the estate tax law before its current repeal date of January 1, 2010.

For now, estate tax planning after 2001 involves to some degree guessing how long a client will live. Between now and 2011, estate planning may require year-to-year refinements tailored to each client, as transitional increases in the estate and gift tax unified credit, estate tax rate decreases, and other changes take effect [see I.R.C. §§ 2001(c), 2010(c), 2505 and discussion throughout this chapter]. For clients who die in 2010, under the law as currently on the books no estate tax will be due [I.R.C. § 2210(a)]. For clients who are likely to live past 2010, estate tax planning for larger estates, under the law as currently constituted, would involve many of the same considerations and planning techniques as under the law that was in effect before the 2001 legislation, because post-2010 law will revert to that law in the absence of further Congressional action [I.R.C. § 2210(a)]. Again, however, it is important to recognize that there is no guarantee that the much-touted repeal of the estate tax law will ever actually take effect in its current form, or be re-enacted before the 2010 sunset provision takes effect. Changes in the political climate, the national economy and federal budget, and the political composition of Congress and the executive branch may and probably will result in modifications to the 2001 repeal legislation. The nature of such modifications is speculative at this point. Estate planners need to remain constantly aware of developments in the legislative arena and will need to continually re-evaluate the probable effect of any such developments on individual client estate plans.

 CHAPTER 60 ESTATE PLANNING
 PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

§ 60.13 Estate Tax Considerations

[1] The Gross Estate

[a] In General

Before the "taxable estate" can be determined, it is necessary to determine the client's "gross estate." As defined in the Internal Revenue Code, the gross estate includes "the value of all property to the extent therein of the interest of the decedent at the time of his death" [I.R.C. § 2033]. This rule is broad enough to include all property that, under familiar rules of property law, a decedent "owns" at the time of death. However, the Internal Revenue Code contains special rules under which property that ordinarily is not considered to be "owned" is also included in the gross estate [see I.R.C. §§ 2035 (gifts made within three years of death), 2036 (transfers with retained life estate), 2037 (transfers taking effect at death), 2038 (revocable transfers), 2039 (annuities), 2040 (joint interests), 2041 (powers of appointment), 2042 (proceeds of life insurance), 2043 (transfers for insufficient consideration), 2044 (certain property for which marital deduction was previously allowed)]. The most important of these special rules are discussed in [b] through [j], below.

Because the gross estate consists of all property held by the decedent to the extent of his or her interest in the property at death, it includes a decedent's one-half interest in all community property [I.R.C. §§ 2031(a), 2033].

[b] Transfers With Retained Life Estate

Under I.R.C. § 2036, the gross estate includes the value of all property as to which the decedent has made a transfer, by trust or otherwise, under which the decedent has retained the possession or enjoyment of the property, or the right to receive the income from the property, for any period not ascertainable without reference to the decedent's death, or that does not in fact end before the decedent's death [I.R.C. § 2036(a)]. This rule applies in the case of all transfers, except bona fide sales for adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth [I.R.C. § 2036(a); see Magnin v. C.I.R. (9th Cir. 1999) 184 F.3d 1074, 1077-1078 (for purposes of determining whether remainder interest is transferred for adequate and full consideration, amount received must equal value of remainder interest only)]. A transferor retains "possession or enjoyment" of property within the meaning of I.R.C. § 2036(a) if the transferor retains a substantial present economic benefit from the property rather than a speculative contingent benefit that may or may not be realized [Strangi v. C.I.R. (5th Cir. 2005) 417 F.3d 468, 476 (benefits transferor retained, including periodic payments made before his death, continued use of transferred property, and post-death payment of various debts and expenses, were clearly substantial and present benefits, not speculative or contingent benefits) see Estate of Bigelow (2007) 503 F.3d 955 . 963-965 (full value of real property transferred to family limited partnership, where decedent and her children had implied agreement that decedent would retain income and economic enjoyment of the transferred asset and that the inter vivos transfer was not a bona fide sale for adequate and full consideration and should have been included in decedent's gross estate).]. In addition, there must be an express or implied agreement at the time of the transfer that the transferor will retain possession or enjoyment of the property [Treas. Reg. § 20.2036-1(a)].

This provision intended to bring in the gross estate property in which the decedent has retained a life estate, or a lifetime income interest, as illustrated by the following cases:

- The assets a decedent transferred to a family limited partnership were not includable in the decedent's gross estate because the transfer qualified as a bona fide sale for full and adequate consideration; the decedent received a partnership interest that was proportionate to the assets contributed, the decedent's capital account was credited with the assets contributed, and the decedent was entitled to a distribution commensurate with her capital account balance on termination or dissolution of the partnership. The decedent also retained sufficient assets outside of the partnership for her own support and did not commingle partnership and personal assets, partnership formalities were observed, and there were credible business reasons for the partnership formation [ Kimbell v. United States (5th Cir. 2004) 371 F.3d 257 ].

- Stock in an operating company that the decedent transferred to a holding company organized as a limited liability company was not includable in the decedent's gross estate because the transfer was a bona fide sale for full and adequate consideration. However, membership units in the limited liability company that the decedent transferred to a family limited partnership were includable in his estate when there was an implied agreement under which the decedent retained an interest in the transferred units [ Estate of Bongard v. Comm'r (2005) 124 T.C. No. 8 ].

- The fair market value of stock a decedent contributed through a revocable trust to a Delaware business trust was not includable in the decedent's gross estate because the stock transfers were bona fide for adequate and full consideration. The decedent was not financially dependent on distributions from the business trust because the decedent retained sufficient assets outside of the trust to amply support his needs [ Estate of Schutt v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2005-126 ].

- The value of property transferred to family limited partnership by deceased husband and wife was included in their respective gross estates when there was an implied agreement between the spouses and their children that they would retain the right to the income from the transferred property as long as they needed it, and they retained insignificant income-producing assets in their names to meet their needs [ Estate of Korby v. Comm'r, T.C. Memo 2005-102, 103 ].

- Rental real estate transferred from a decedent's revocable trust to a family limited partnership was includable in the decedent's gross estate when there was an implied agreement that the decedent would retain, for her life, the right to the property's rental income and its economic benefit [ Estate of Virginia A. Bigelow, T.C. Memo. 2005-65, aff'd, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 22030 ].

- The value of real property a decedent transferred to a limited partnership was includable in the decedent's gross estate because the decedent retained the enjoyment of this property for life, as shown by the absence of any change in the decedent's relationship to the property following creation of the partnership, her use of partnership assets for her support, and a lack of formality surrounding the limited partnership and repeated disregard of the partnership agreement [ Estate of Hillgren v. Commissioner,

- The full date of death value of three family limited partnerships was includable in a decedent's gross estate because the decedent retained the right to all income generated by the partnerships [ Estate of Ida Abraham v. Commissioner (1st Cir. 2005) 408 F.3d 26 (decedent need not have retained legally enforceable interest in transferred property; inclusion can be triggered under I.R.C. § 2036 if enjoyment of transferred property is retained under an arrangement or understanding)].

- The full value of property a decedent transferred to a limited partnership was includable in the decedent's gross estate because documents governing the partnership did not prevent the decedent from being designated as a recipient of income from the partnership, and an implied agreement among the parties provided that the decedent would retain the economic benefit of the transferred property. Substantial distributions from the partnership to pay the decedent's funeral expenses, estate administration expenses, specific bequests, and personal debts the decedent had incurred was strong circumstantial evidence of an understanding between the decedent and his children who controlled the partnership that "partnership" assets would be used to meet the decedent's expenses. The decedent's continued occupancy of "partnership" property was also evidence of an implied agreement that the decedent would continue to use his assets as needed. Finally, the decedent's lack of liquid assets after the transfer was evidence that some arrangement to meet his expenses must have been made [ Strangi v. C.I.R. (5th Cir. 2005) 417 F.3d 468, 477-478 ].

- The date of death value of property a decedent transferred to family limited partnerships for the benefit of the decedent's children and their families was included in the decedent's gross estate when the decedent retained virtually complete control of the assets in both partnerships which he used to pay for his living expenses [ Estate of T.R. Thompson, T.C. Memo 2002-246 ].

- A gift of 24 percent of real property containing two residences and other buildings was not a transfer with a retained interest, even though the transferor continued to reside on the property, when the transferor did not have exclusive use of the property and her continued use was consistent with her retained interest [ Estate of Rebecca A. Wineman, T.C. Memo 2000-193 ].

A decedent's retention of direct or indirect voting rights in stock of a controlled corporation is also treated as the retention of the enjoyment of the property that causes the value of the stock to be included in the decedent's gross estate [I.R.C. § 2036(b)(1)]. A corporation is controlled if the decedent owned or had the right to vote stock possessing at least 20 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock of the corporation within three years of the decedent's death [I.R.C. § 2036(b)(2)]. The relinquishment or cessation of these voting rights is deemed a transfer of the property, which begins the three-year time period to determine whether the transfer of property was made within three years of the decedent's death [I.R.C. § 2036(b)(3)]. The value of the stock will not be included in the decedent's estate if the decedent dies more than three years after the transfer of the voting rights [I.R.C. § 2035(a)(2)].

[c] Transfers Taking Effect at Death

Under I.R.C. § 2037, the gross estate includes the value of all property as to which the decedent has made a transfer, by trust or otherwise, if possession or enjoyment of the property can be obtained only by surviving the decedent and if the deceased retained a reversionary interest in the property that, immediately before the decedent's death, was worth more than 5 percent of the total value of the property. This rule is designed to bring into the gross estate property that the decedent transferred to others only for a term of years. When a transfer of this type has been made, the probability that the property will return to the decedent must be determined under actuarial principles; and if the value of the reversion as determined under those principles exceeds 5 percent of the total value of the property, it will be included in the decedent's gross estate.

Under the survivorship condition, inclusion in the gross estate may be avoided by making possession or enjoyment dependent on either survivorship or expiration of a term of years [see Treas. Reg. § 20.2037-1(b)]. The term reversionary interest under the second condition is not used in a technical sense, but refers to any reserved right that requires that the transferred property must or may be returned to the grantor [Treas. Reg. § 20.2037-1(c)(2)]. The 5-percent limitation under the third condition is determined by comparing the value of the reversionary interest to the value of the transferred property, including interests that are not dependent on survivorship [see Treas. Reg. § 20.2037-1(c)(4)]. The value of a reversionary interest is determined by multiplying the value of the property by figures contained in Treasury Regulation Tables [see Treas. Reg. § 20.2031-7(a), (d), 20.2031-7T(d)(5), and 20.2031-7A(f)(4)].

[d] Revocable Transfers

Under I.R.C. § 2038, the value of the gross estate includes the value of all property as to which the decedent has made a transfer, by trust or otherwise, under which he or she has retained the power to alter, amend, revoke, or terminate the transfer [I.R.C. § 2038(a)(1)]. This rule requires that all of the assets of a revocable inter vivos trust be included in the gross estate of the settlor.

The value of the transferred property is not includible if the transfer was for adequate and full consideration, if the decedent's power could only be exercised with the consent of all parties having a vested or contingent interest in the transferred property, if the power is held solely by a person other than the decedent, or if the decedent relinquished the power more than three years before death [Treas. Reg. § 20.2038-1(a)(1)-(3); see I.R.C. § 2035(a)].

For purposes of the revocable transfer provision, the power is considered to exist on the date of the decedent's death, even though notice must be given before the power is exercised or a period of time must expire before the change takes effect, and whether or not notice has actually been given or the time period has elapsed on or before the decedent's death [I.R.C. § 2038(b)]. In valuing the retained interest in such a case, however, the amount of the interest added to the gross estate must be discounted to take into consideration the period between the decedent's death and the date when the power could have taken effect [Treas. Reg. § 20.2038-1(b); see Treas. Reg. § 20.2031-7 (valuation provisions)].

Only the value of a property interest that is subject to the retained power is to be included in the decedent's gross estate [Treas. Reg. § 20.2038-1(a)].

[e] Annuities

Under I.R.C. § 2039, the value of the gross estate includes the value of any annuity or other payment receivable by any beneficiary pursuant to a contract or agreement under which the decedent was entitled to receive an annuity or other payment for any period not ascertainable without reference to the decedent's death, or that does not in fact end before the decedent's death [I.R.C. § 2039(a)]. If the decedent contributed only part of the purchase price for the annuity, then only part of the annuity will be includible in the decedent's gross estate. The part that is includible will be proportional to the part of the purchase price paid by the decedent. However, any part contributed by the decedent's employer will be included to the same extent as if it were contributed by the decedent [I.R.C. § 2039(b)].

[f] Joint Interests

Under I.R.C. § 2040, the value of the gross estate includes the value of all property held by the decedent and any other person as joint tenants, or deposited in a financial institution in their joint names and payable to either or the survivor, except the portion that may be shown to have originally belonged to the other person and never to have been received or acquired by the other person from the decedent for less than an adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth [I.R.C. § 2040(a)]. The effect of this rule is to include the value of the whole property in the gross estate of the first joint tenant to die unless the surviving tenant can prove that the property originally belonged to the survivor and was never received from the deceased tenant by gift, inheritance, or other gratuitous transfer.

The above rule does not apply to property held in joint tenancy by married persons when the married persons are the only joint tenants, or to property held by married persons in a tenancy by the entirety. When married persons hold property in this way, only one half of the value of the property is included in the gross estate of the deceased spouse [I.R.C. § 2040(b)].

If joint tenancy property (or property deposited in a financial institution in joint names) was acquired by a deceased spouse and a surviving spouse by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance, one half of the value of the property is includible in the deceased spouse's estate [I.R.C. § 2040(a)]. If property of that kind was acquired by a decedent and someone other than a spouse, and their interests are not otherwise specified by law, the portion includible in the gross estate of the decedent will be determined by dividing the value of the whole property by the number of joint tenants [I.R.C. § 2040(a)].

[g] Property Subject to Powers of Appointment

Under I.R.C. § 2041, the value of the gross estate generally includes the value of all property over which the decedent held a general power of appointment at the time of death [I.R.C. § 2041(a)(2)]. For this purpose, a power of appointment is a general power if it can be exercised in favor of the decedent, the decedent's estate or creditors, or creditors of the decedent's estate [I.R.C. § 2041(b)(1)].

In determining whether a power of appointment is general, it is necessary to examine the substance of the power and not merely its form. For estate tax purposes, all powers that are general powers of appointment in substance and effect will be treated as general powers, regardless of the nomenclature used in creating them and regardless of whether they would qualify as powers of appointment under local law [Treas. Reg. § 20.2041-1(b)(1)]. Thus a power to consume or appropriate the principal of a trust will be treated as a general power of appointment, regardless of whether it is denominated as such in the governing instrument [Treas. Reg. § 20.2041-1(b)(1)]. Similarly, a beneficiary who has the power to alter, amend, or terminate a trust, or to invade the trust for his or her own benefit, the benefit of his or her estate or creditors, or the benefit of the creditors of his or her estate, will be deemed to have a general power of appointment over the trust assets [Treas. Reg. § 20.2041-1(b)(1)].

Many seemingly innocent powers held by trustees and beneficiaries will have potentially unfavorable tax consequences if, in substance and effect, they give the trustees or beneficiaries broad powers to decide who will receive or have the benefit of the trust assets. For example, if a beneficiary has the power to remove or discharge a trustee and either assume the office of trustee himself or herself or designate another person to serve as trustee, and if the trustee has the power to alter, amend, or terminate the trust for the trustee's own benefit, or the benefit of the trustee's estate or creditors, or creditors of the trustee's estate, the beneficiary may be deemed to hold a general power of appointment over all of the trust assets; and, when the beneficiary dies, all of the assets may be includible in the beneficiary's gross estate [Treas. Reg. § 20.2041-1(b)(1)].

The Internal Revenue Code provides an important exception to the general rule of includability of property that is subject to a general power of appointment. Under this exception, if a person has the power to consume, invade, or appropriate property for himself or herself (or for another person), and if the power is limited by an "ascertainable standard" relating to the health, education, support, or maintenance of the person for whom the power may be exercised, the power is not a general power of appointment for estate or gift tax purposes [I.R.C. §§ 2041(b)(1)(A), 2514(c)(1)]. Ascertainable standards are important and potentially valuable estate-planning tools, and they are often included in trust instruments. However, an ascertainable standard will not achieve its purpose unless it is precisely drafted. The Treasury Regulations state that a power is limited by an "ascertainable standard" if the extent of the holder's duty to exercise the power is reasonably measurable in terms of the beneficiary's needs for health, education, or support (or any combination of those things). Under those regulations, it is acceptable to define the "ascertainable standard" in terms of the beneficiary's "support," "support in reasonable comfort," "maintenance in health and reasonable comfort," "support in his [or her] accustomed manner of living," "education, including college and professional education," "health," and "medical, dental, hospital and nursing expenses and expenses of invalidism." However, it is not acceptable to define the duty in terms of the beneficiary's "comfort," "welfare," or "happiness," as those words are too indefinite to constitute an "ascertainable standard" [Treas. Reg. § 20.2041-1(c)(2)].

Another important rule that affects the taxable consequences of holding a general power of appointment is the so-called "five or five rule" or "five or five power" [see I.R.C. §§ 2041(b)(2), 2514(e)]. However, this rule affects the gift and not the estate tax consequences of a general power of appointment. For a discussion of the "five or five rule" and "five or five powers," see Ch. 64, Testamentary Trusts: Payment and Distribution Provisions, § 64.302[1].

[h] Proceeds of Life Insurance

Under I.R.C. § 2042, the value of the gross estate includes the proceeds of any life insurance policy on the life of the decedent that are receivable by the decedent's executor [I.R.C. § 2042(1)]. Insurance proceeds are receivable by the executor if they are payable to the executor, administrator, or the decedent's estate. The estate does not have to be specifically named as the beneficiary under the terms of the policy to have the proceeds includable in the gross estate. Thus, proceeds are deemed "receivable by the executor" if they are receivable by another beneficiary but are subject to a legally binding obligation to pay taxes, debts, or other charges enforceable against the estate. In such a case, the amount includable in the gross estate is the amount required to pay the taxes, debts, or other charges in full. Proceeds will also be includable if the policy is purchased in favor of another person or corporation as collateral for a loan. The proceeds are considered to be receivable for the benefit of the estate, and the amount of the loan outstanding at the date of the decedent's death with accrued interest will be deductible in determining the taxable estate [Treas. Reg. § 20.2042-1(b)(1)].

The value of the gross estate also includes the proceeds of any life insurance policy on the life of the decedent that are not receivable by the executor if, at the time of death, the decedent possessed any of the "incidents of ownership" in the policy, exercisable either alone or in conjunction with any person [I.R.C. § 2042(2)]. For estate tax purposes, an "incident of ownership" is a power or right to change the beneficiary of the policy, surrender or cancel the policy, assign the policy, revoke an assignment of the policy, pledge the policy for a loan, or obtain a loan from the insurer against the surrender value of the policy [Treas. Reg. § 20.2042-1(c)(2); see Priv. Ltr. Rul. 200518005 (taxpayer did not possess incidents of ownership over life insurance policies insuring her life that were purchased by trust, when she renounced her rights as co-trustee in connection with these policies, subsequently resigned as co-trustee, and did not contribute assets to trust or commingle life insurance policies held as trust assets with her personal assets)].

An irrevocable life insurance trust may be created for the purpose of acquiring and holding one or more policies of life insurance. If the trust is properly planned, it may acquire a life insurance policy on the life of the settlor, and the settlor will not have any "incidents of ownership" in the policy. When the settlor dies, assuming that the proceeds of the policy are not paid to the settlor's executor, the proceeds will not be includable in the settlor's gross estate for estate tax purposes. For further discussion of the estate tax treatment of life insurance proceeds and the use of irrevocable trusts to remove insurance proceeds from a settlor's gross estate, see Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts.

When insurance proceeds are includable in the decedent's gross estate, the amount to be included is generally the full amount receivable under the policy. If the proceeds are payable to a beneficiary as an annuity for life or for a term of years, however, the amount to be included is either an optional lump sum payment if one is provided by the policy or the amount used by the insurer in determining the amount of the annuity if there is no lump sum option in the policy [Treas. Reg. § 20.2042-1(a)(3)]. If the proceeds of a policy made payable to the decedent's estate are community property, only one half of the proceeds is includable since only one half is considered receivable by or for the benefit of the decedent's estate [Treas. Reg. § 20.2042-1(b)(2); Rev. Rul. 2003-40, 2003-17 I.R.B. 813 (if surviving spouse is beneficiary, marital deduction would be available for decedent's half that is included in decedent's estate)].

Under I.R.C. § 2043, certain property must be included in the gross estate when the decedent has transferred the property to others for value, but not in a bona fide sale for an adequate and full consideration. If the property was transferred in a way that would require the inclusion of the property in the decedent's gross estate under I.R.C. §§ 2035 through 2038 or under I.R.C. § 2041, and if the transfer is made for a consideration in money or money's worth but is not a bona fide sale for an adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth, the excess of the fair market value of the property at the time of the transferor's death over the consideration received by the decedent will be included in the decedent's gross estate [I.R.C. § 2043(a)]. For this purpose, a relinquishment or promised relinquishment by a decedent's spouse of marital rights in the decedent's property or estate is not considered to any extent a consideration "in money or money's worth" [I.R.C. § 2043(b)(1)].

[j] Gifts Made Within Three Years of Death

The value of certain gifts made within three years of a decedent's death must be included in the decedent's gross estate. These gifts include transfers of an interest in property or the relinquishment of a power that would have been included in the decedent's gross estate if retained at death, including [I.R.C. § 2035(a)(2)]:

- Transfers with a retained life interest [I.R.C. § 2036].
- Transfers taking effect at death [I.R.C. § 2037].
- Revocable transfers [I.R.C. § 2038].
- Proceeds of life insurance [I.R.C. § 2035(a); see I.R.C. § 2042; see also Priv. Ltr. Rul. 200432015 (entire amount payable on insurance policy on decedent's life was includable in decedent's gross estate and estate was not entitled to estate tax marital deduction when proceeds of policy were payable to limited liability company)].

This inclusion rule, however, does not apply if the decedent made a bona fide sale for full and adequate consideration [I.R.C. § 2035(d)]. The value of any gift tax on gifts made within three years of death must also be included in the decedent's estate [I.R.C. § 2035(b)].

In addition to the inclusion rules concerning retained interests, the value of gifts made within three years of death must be included in the transferor's gross estate for other special purposes. The value of these gifts must be included for application of the rules with respect to redemption of stock to pay death taxes [I.R.C. § 2035(c)(1)(A); see I.R.C. § 303], the special valuation provisions for certain types of farm and real property [I.R.C. § 2035(c)(1)(B); see I.R.C. § 2032A], the provisions determining property subject to estate tax liens [I.R.C. § 2035(c)(1)(A); see I.R.C. Ch. 64, Subchapter C], and the provisions allowing an extension of time to pay estate taxes when the estate consists largely of an interest in a closely held business [I.R.C. § 2035(c)(2)]. The rules requiring inclusion for purposes of stock redemption, special valuation, and tax liens do not apply to gifts (except as to transfers of life insurance policies) if no gift tax return was filed because the value of the gift was less than the annual gift tax exclusion [I.R.C. § 2035(c)(3); see I.R.C. § 6019(1)].

[2] Exclusion for Qualified Conservation Easement

For decedents dying on or after January 1, 1998, an exclusion is available for a "qualified conservation easement" as defined in I.R.C. § 2031(c)(8)(B). Basically, this exclusion allows a decedent, family member, executor, or trustee to grant to a qualified charitable organization [see I.R.C. 170(h)(3)] an easement in qualifying real property [see I.R.C. 170(h)(2)] restricting the use of that property to conservation purposes [see I.R.C. 170(h)(4)(A)], and exclude a portion of the value of that property from the decedent's gross estate for federal estate tax purposes [I.R.C. § 2031(c)(1)], while retaining ownership and use of the property to the extent not incompatible with the easement.

The portion that may be excluded is 40 percent, reduced, if applicable, by two percent for each percentage point or fraction thereof by which the value of the conservation easement is less than 30 percent of the value of the property without the easement [I.R.C. § 2031(c)]. The total value of the property that may be excluded may not exceed $300,000 for estates of decedents dying in 2000, $400,000 for decedents dying in 2001, and $500,000 for decedents dying in 2002 or later [I.R.C. § 2031(c)]. The date for determining values is the date the contribution is made [I.R.C. § 2031(c)(2)].

The exclusion is complex and subject to numerous qualifications and conditions. Among the more important of these is that the easement include a prohibition on more than a de minimis use for a commercial recreational activity [I.R.C. § 2031(c)(8)(B)]. The land must be located within the United States or its possessions [see I.R.C. § 2031(c)(8)(A)], effective for decedents dying after 2000; for prior years, the land had to be located within 25 miles of a metropolitan area (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget) or a national park or wilderness area, or within 10 miles of an Urban National Forest (as designated by the Forest Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture)(I.R.C. § 2031(c)(8)(A)(I), before amendment by Pub Law 107-16) and must have been owned by the decedent or a member of the decedent's family [see I.R.C. § 2031(c)(8)(D) (definition)] at all times during the three-year period ending on the date of the decedent's death [see I.R.C. § 2031(c)(8)(D)]. The executor must elect the exclusion on the estate tax return, and the exclusion, once made, is irrevocable [I.R.C. § 2031(c)(1), (6)].

Postmortem creation of easements and postmortem amendments to easements that require amendment in order to qualify are permitted [I.R.C. § 2031(c)].

For more detailed discussion of the exclusion for qualified conservation easements, see Ch. 69, Charitable Dispositions; see also California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 2, Overview of Tax Laws Affecting the Disposition of Estates, § 2.06[6] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Deductions

[a] In General

The federal estate law allows certain deductions from the gross estate. It is important to consider all of the available deductions when an estate is planned, as the value of the taxable estate can be determined only after the deductions are subtracted from the value of the gross estate [I.R.C. § 2051].

The following deductions are available:

- Funeral expenses, estate administration expenses, claims against the estate, and mortgages or other encumbrances on property included in the gross estate [I.R.C. § 2053(a); see Estate of Howard Gilman, T.C. Memo. 2004-286 (interest and costs associated with loan used to pay estate taxes may be deductible as administration expenses when loan is necessary to pay estate taxes due to estate's illiquidity); but see Tech. Adv. Mem. 200513028 (interest on loan that was not necessary to administration of estate is not deductible as administration expense; decedent's estate consisted primarily of 99 percent interest in limited partnership which had substantial liquid assets available to pay estate tax); see also Priv. Ltr. Rul. 200532049 (attorney's fees and litigation expenses incurred by personal representative of estate in malpractice suit connected with estate are deductible as administration expenses)].
- Certain state and foreign death taxes [I.R.C. § 2053(d); see Letter Rul. 200444021 (estate tax deduction is not allowed for income taxes estate paid on amounts it was forced to withdraw from decedent's IRAs to pay estate tax)].

- Casualty losses incurred during the settlement of the estate [I.R.C. § 2054].
- Transfers to charitable beneficiaries [I.R.C. § 2055; for general coverage of charitable transfers, see Ch. 69, Charitable Dispositions ].
- Transfers to the decedent's spouse [I.R.C. § 2056; for general coverage of marital deduction, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions ].
- A deduction for state death taxes, effective for the estates of decedents dying after 2004 [I.R.C. § 2058; see [b], below].

For estates of decedents dying before 2004 [I.R.C. § 2057(j)], an extremely complex "family-owned business deduction" permitted the value of qualifying family-owned business interests to be deducted from the gross estate. The deduction was designed to give an estate tax break to small family-owned and operated businesses. The maximum available deduction was $675,000 [I.R.C. § 2057(a)(2)], and when the maximum deduction applied, the "applicable exclusion amount" (unified credit) under I.R.C. § 2010 was fixed at $625,000, regardless of the year of the decedent's death [I.R.C. § 2057(a)(3)(A)]. The deduction was eliminated for decedents dying after 2003 [I.R.C. § 2057(j)]. However, the repeal of the deduction and the eventual repeal of the estate tax [see I.R.C. § 2210(a)] do not eliminate the compliance requirements imposed as a condition for claiming the deduction for estates of decedents dying before 2004. Thus, in order to avoid recapture of the estate tax, taxpayers claiming the deduction must continue to materially participate in the business interest for which the deduction under I.R.C. § 2057 is claimed for at least 10 years following the decedent's death [see I.R.C. § 2057]. For detailed discussion of the family-owned business deduction, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 2, Overview of Tax Laws Affecting Disposition of Estates, § 2.07[4] (Matthew Bender).

[b] Deduction for State Death Taxes

For estates of individuals dying after 2004, the value of the taxable estate is determined by deducting from the gross estate any estate, inheritance, legacy, or succession taxes actually paid to any state or the District of Columbia for any property included in the gross estate, but not including any taxes paid for the estate of a person other than the decedent [I.R.C. § 2058]. No dollar limits are imposed on the amount of this deduction.

A deduction for state death taxes is allowed only for taxes actually paid and claimed as a deduction during the time period that ends before the later of [I.R.C. § 2058(b)]:

- Four years after the estate tax return is filed;
- 60 days after a decision of the Tax Court becomes final if a timely petition for redetermination of a deficiency has been filed;
- The expiration date of any extension of time that has been granted for payment of the tax; or
- If a timely claim for a refund or credit of an overpayment of tax has been filed, the latest of 60 days after a notice of disallowance is mailed, 60 days after the decision of the court becomes final as to a timely suit started on the claim, or two years after a notice of the waiver of disallowance is filed.

The certificate of the proper taxing authority should be submitted with the estate tax return to support the claimed deduction. This certificate should show the total amount of the tax imposed, the amount of discount allowed, the amount of penalties and interest imposed or charged, the total amount actually paid in cash, and the date of payment.

For estates of individuals dying before 2005, a credit (as opposed to a deduction) for state death taxes is allowed [see [4][c], below].

[4] Credits

[a] In General

The Internal Revenue Code allows various credits in determining the amount of the estate tax. These credits include the "unified credit" [I.R.C. § 2010], credits for certain state and foreign death taxes [I.R.C. §§ 2011, 2014], credits for certain gift taxes [I.R.C. § 2012], and credits for taxes on certain prior transfers [I.R.C. § 2013].

[b] Unified Credit

The most important credit is the unified credit [see I.R.C. § 2010]. For decedents dying between 1987 and December 31, 1997, the amount of the credit was $192,800, enough to effectively exclude $600,000 of property from estate taxation [I.R.C. § 2010(a)]. Beginning January 1, 1998, the amount of the credit is equal to the "applicable credit amount" available in the year of the decedent's death. The "applicable credit amount" is the amount of credit that will exclude the "applicable exclusion amount" according to the following table [I.R.C. § 2010(c)]:

2002 or 2003	$1 million
2004 or 2005	$1.5 million
2006-2008	$2 million
2009	$3.5 million
After 2010	Not Applicable (estate tax repealed)

After December 31, 2010, the applicable exclusion amount is currently slated to return to $1,000,000, the amount that was in effect in 2001, unless Congress affirmatively acts to change that amount [see I.R.C. § 2010(c)], prior to amendment by Pub. Law 107-16, § 521(a); Pub. Law 107-16 § 901 (repeal date); for more detailed discussion, see § 60.12A].

The unified credit against estate taxes works in conjunction with the unified credit against gift taxes. The amount of the gift tax credit was the same as the estate tax credit through 2003, but after 2003, the amount of the gift tax credit remained $1 million, while the estate tax unified credit continues to increase as noted above [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505(a)]. To the extent that the gift tax credit is depleted by lifetime gifts, however, the amount of the estate tax credit is reduced or even eliminated. If none of the gift tax credit is used during the decedent's lifetime, an estate tax credit equal to the full "applicable exclusion amount" will be available on the decedent's death. If part of the gift tax credit is used during the decedent's lifetime, only part of the estate tax credit will be available on the decedent's death.

Each decedent is entitled to a unified credit. When an attorney plans the estates of a married couple, it is important to remember that both the husband and wife are each entitled to a separate unified credit. The amount each spouse can shelter depends on the year of death, as shown in the table above [I.R.C. § 2010(c)].

For estates of decedents dying before 2002, the benefit of the unified credit was progressively "phased out" for estates in excess of $10,000,000. This was accomplished by increasing the tax that would otherwise be due by an amount equal to 5 percent of the portion of the estate tax exceeding $10,000,000 [I.R.C. § 2001(c)(2)], before amendment by Pub Law 107-16]. The phaseout of the unified credit has been repealed for estates of decedents dying after 2001 [I.R.C. § 2010(c)(2)].

[c] Credit for State Death Taxes

For the estates of decedents dying before 2005 [see I.R.C. § 2011(f)], the Internal Revenue Code permits a credit to be taken against the gross estate tax for any estate, inheritance, legacy, or succession taxes actually paid to a state or the District of Columbia [I.R.C. § 2011(b)]. The credit is limited to specific amounts set forth in I.R.C. § 2011(b). The credit has been replaced with a deduction for state death taxes, effective for decedents dying after 2004 [I.R.C. § 2058; see discussion of this deduction in [3][b], above].

Like many other states, California has enacted a special estate tax designed to take advantage of the federal credit [Rev. & Tax. Code § 13302]. This tax is generally known as the California "pick-up" tax.

The California tax is equal to the maximum allowable amount of the federal credit for state death taxes attributable to property located in California [Rev. & Tax. Code § 13302]. It specifically provides that the total amount of the federal and California taxes cannot exceed the amount that would be paid in the absence of the California tax [Rev. & Tax. Code § 13302]. The effect of the tax is thus to divert to the State of California tax revenues that would otherwise be payable to the federal government. The California tax does not increase the total amount of the estate taxes and is not a critical factor in planning for the disposition of an estate.

[5] Rate of Tax

NOTE

REGARDING ESTATE TAX REPEAL: The estate tax has been repealed, effective for decedents dying after 2009 [I.R.C. § 2210(a)]. For a more detailed explanation of the effect of the repeal, see § 60.12A.

The federal estate and gift taxes share a unified rate schedule. These rates begin at 18 percent. The maximum tax rate is 55 percent for decedents dying before 2002, 50 percent for decedents dying in 2002, 49 percent for decedents dying in 2003, 48 percent for decedents dying in 2004, 47 percent for decedents dying in 2005, 46 percent for decedents dying in 2006, and 45 percent for decedents dying in 2007 through 2009 [I.R.C. § 2001(c)(1), (2)]. For decedents dying before 2002, the maximum rate applies to estates exceeding $3 million [I.R.C. § 2001(c)(1), before amendment by Pub. Law 107-16]. For decedents dying after 2001, the maximum rate applies to estates exceeding $2.5 million [I.R.C. § 2001(c)(1)].

Due to the operation of the unified credit [I.R.C. §§ 2010, 2505; see [3][b], above], only amounts in excess of the "applicable exclusion amount" [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in [4][b], above] are actually subject to estate tax. For example, if a decedent died in 2004 (when the applicable exclusion amount is $1.5 million), the first $500,000 actually subject to tax will be taxed at the rate of 45 percent, the rate applicable to transfers in excess of $1,500,000 but not over $2,000,000 [see I.R.C. § 2001(c)]. Thus, the very first dollar actually exposed to tax will be taxed at a 45 percent rate. The federal estate and gift tax tables are reproduced in § 60.206.

 CHAPTER 60 ESTATE PLANNING
 PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

§ 60.14 Gift Tax Considerations

[1] Tax

The federal gift tax is imposed on taxable gifts made by a donor during a calendar year [I.R.C. § 2501]. The amount of the tax is determined by first computing the value of each gift made during the year [I.R.C. § 2512] and then determining the total amount of the taxable gifts made during the year [I.R.C. § 2503]. The value of a gift is generally equal to the price, on the date the gift is made, at which the property would change hands between a willing buyer and a willing seller, both having reasonable knowledge of the relevant facts [Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-1].

[2] Annual Exclusion

In determining the total amount of the taxable gifts for a calendar year, an exclusion (called the "annual exclusion") is available for gifts made to each donee by each donor during a calendar year [I.R.C. § 2503(b)]. The amount of the annual gift tax exclusion which is subject to annual adjustment for inflation is $13,000 for calendar years 2009-2010 [ Rev. Proc. 2009-50, 2009-45 IRB 624 (2010 Amount), Rev. Proc. 2008-66, 2008-45 IRB 1107 (2009 Amount)]. For gifts made between 2006-2008, the annual gift tax exclusion was $12,000 for calendar years 2006 through 2008 [ Rev. Proc. 2006-53, 2006-48 IRB 996 (2007 amount); Rev. Proc. 2005-70, 2005-47 IRB 979 (2006 amount)]. For gifts made between 2002 through 2005, the annual gift tax exclusion was $11,000 for calendar years 2002 through 2005 [I.R.C. § 2503(b); Rev. Proc. 2004-71, 2004-50 I.R.B. 970 (2005 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2003-85 (2004 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2002-70 (2003 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2001-59 (2002 exclusion amount)]. For gifts made before 2002, the annual gift tax exclusion was $10,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2001-13 ].

The annual exclusion is a valuable estate planning tool and plays an important part in gift planning because a regular program of annual gifts to multiple donees can avoid a substantial amount of transfer tax. The excluded amounts avoid not only the gift tax; they are also excluded in the computation of adjusted taxable gifts under the estate tax and thus do not push the taxable estate into higher brackets. As with all gifts, income and appreciation of the gift property are removed from the donor's estate.

The annual exclusion is available only for gifts of "present interests" in property [see I.R.C. § 2503(b)(1)]. A present interest is an unrestricted right to the immediate use, possession, or enjoyment of property or the income from property [

Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(b). If the right to the use or possession of property is postponed (as in the case of a future interest), or if the right to the use or possession of property depends on the satisfaction of some condition or the occurrence of some event (as in the case of a contingent interest), the annual exclusion is not available [see Hackl v. Comm'r (7th Cir. 2003) 335 F.3d 664 (gifts of membership interests in LLC were held to be gifts of future interests due to restrictions against transfer in LLC agreement and expectation that business would not generate income for years to come)].

When gifts are made by a husband and wife, an annual exclusion is available for each donor. If the gift is of community property, for example, only one half of the property will be deemed to have been given by each spouse. Thus, a husband and wife can give each donee up to $26,000 worth of community property a year in calendar years 2009-2010 [ Rev. Proc. 2009-50, 2009-45 IRB 624 (2010 Amount), Rev. Proc. 2008-66, 2008-45 IRB (2009 Amount)] for exclusion amounts in prior years, see [ Rev. Proc. 2007-45 ( 2008 Amount), Rev. Proc. 2006-53 ( 2007 Amount), Rev. Proc. 2005-70 (2006 Amount), Rev. Proc. 2004-71 (2005 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2003-85 (2004 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2002-70 (2003 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2001-59 (2002 exclusion amount)] without incurring gift tax liability, or more in subsequent years if the annual exclusion amount is adjusted upward for inflation as discussed above [I.R.C. § 2503(b)]. Split-gift treatment is also available for gifts of separate property made by a husband and wife [I.R.C. § 2513]. However, split-gift treatment is available only if both spouses are citizens of the United States and only if both spouses have consented to the gifts [I.R.C. § 2513(a)(2), (b)].

[3] Exclusion for Tuition and Medical Expenses

A gift tax exclusion is also available for transfers made to pay for tuition and medical expenses [I.R.C. § 2503(e)]. This exclusion is unlimited in amount, but it requires that the transfer be made in behalf of an individual to a qualified educational organization for the education or training of the individual, or to any person who provides medical care for the individual [I.R.C. § 2503(e)(2); see I.R.C. § 170(b)(1)(A)(ii) (qualified educational organization); see also I.R.C. § 213(d)(1) (definition of medical care)]. The exclusion is allowed without regard to the relationship between the donor and the donee [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-6(a)]. Amounts the donor pays for medical care are not subject to the exclusion to the extent the donee receives reimbursement from an insurance company. If a donor previously paid qualifying medical care costs for a donee, a taxable gift occurs on the date the donee receives the insurance reimbursement [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-6(b)(3)].

To qualify for the exclusion, the donor must make the payments directly to the educational institution or the medical care provider. Indirect payments, such as payment to the benefited individual, do not qualify [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-6(c) (Example 4)]. A transfer to a trust established to pay tuition or medical costs also does not qualify for the exclusion [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-6(c) (Example 2)].

The exclusion for medical care and tuition generally covers transfers that most donors are unlikely to perceive as "gifts." In many cases, the statutory exclusion will not be strictly necessary because the payment will be in satisfaction of the donor's legal obligation of support, and therefore not a gift within the meaning of the gift tax. However, the exclusion can serve valuable estate planning ends. For example, a grandparent might pay a grandchild's tuition, even though the grandchild's parents are still alive and can afford the tuition themselves. The transfer amounts to a gift from the grandparent to the parents, but avoids transfer tax without consuming any portion of the annual gift tax exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2503(b)].

[4] Deductions

The Internal Revenue Code offers various deductions in determining the amount of the gift tax. The most important of these deductions are the charitable deduction [I.R.C. § 2522] and the marital deduction [I.R.C. § 2523(a)].

The charitable deduction will shelter transfers to a qualified charitable organization, providing the transfers meet certain qualifications [see I.R.C. § 2522]. For a general discussion of the charitable deduction and its requirements, see Ch. 69, Charitable Dispositions.

The marital deduction generally will shelter any transfer from one spouse to another [I.R.C. § 2523]. However, the marital deduction is not available for the transfer of "terminable interests" [I.R.C. § 2523(b); Treas. Reg. § 25.2523(b)-1]. Further, the marital deduction generally is not available for transfers to spouses who are not citizens of the United States [I.R.C. § 2523(i)(1)]. There is, however, a larger annual exclusion for gifts to non-citizen spouses. The amount of the annual exclusion for non-citizen spouses is adjusted annually for inflation [I.R.C. § 2503(b)]. For gifts made in 2010, the amount of the exclusion is $134,000 [Rev. Proc. 2009-50, 2009-45 IRB 624 (2010 Amount)]. For gifts made in 2009, the amount of the exclusion is $133,000 [Rev. Proc. 2008-66, 2008-45 IRB 1107]. For gifts made in 2008, the amount of the exclusion is $128,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2007-45 m 2007-45 IRB 976 ]. For gifts made in 2007, the amount of the exclusion is $125,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2006-53, 2006-48 IRB 996 ]. For gifts made in 2006, the amount of the exclusion is $120,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2005-70, 2005-47 IRB 979 ]. For gifts made in 2005, the amount of the exclusion is $117,000 [I.R.C. §§ 2503(b), 2523(i); Rev. Proc. 2004-71, 2004-50 I.R.B. 970]. For gifts made in 2004, the amount of the exclusion is $114,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2003-85 ]. For gifts made in 2003, the amount of the exclusion is $112,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2002-70 ]. For gifts made in 2002, the amount of the exclusion is $110,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2001-59 ]. For general discussion of the annual exclusion, see § 60.14[2]. For discussion of the marital deduction, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions.

[5] Unified Credit

The unified credit against estate taxes [see § 60.13[4][b]] also applies to the gift tax [I.R.C. § 2505]. The amount of the unified gift tax credit is the amount that will exclude the "applicable exclusion amount" [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505(a)]. The gift tax unified credit was the same as the estate tax unified credit through 2003, but after 2003, the amount of the gift tax credit remains $1 million, while the estate tax unified credit increases as discussed in § 60.13[4][b] [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505(a)]. In addition, the gift tax unified credit continues after 2009, because the gift tax continues to be imposed after that time. In contrast, subject to a sunset provision, the estate tax is repealed for decedents dying after 2009, so there is no longer an estate tax unified credit after that time [I.R.C. §§ 2505(a)(1), 2210(a); see Pub. Law 107-16, § 901; but see § 60.112A regarding uncertainty over whether and in what form the estate tax repeal will actually take effect].

If, in any calendar year, a donor makes a taxable gift to a donee that exceeds the annual exclusion amount [see I.R.C. § 2503(b) (base annual exclusion amount of $10,000, with upward adjustments for inflation for gifts made in calendar years after 1998) and discussion in [2], above], a gift tax return must be filed, and a part of the unified credit applied against the gift tax. Frequent gifts in excess of the annual exclusion amount will thus significantly reduce the amount of the unified credit that is available on the donor's death.

[6] Rate of Tax

The gift and estate taxes share the same tax rate schedule through 2009 [see I.R.C. §§ 2001(c), 2502(a); see also § 60.13[5]]. The parallel rate schedules and unified credits [see [5], above; see also § 60.13[4][b]] effectively constitute a single rate schedule applied to the cumulative taxable transfers (both inter vivos and testamentary) of a donor. Although the federal estate tax is repealed for decedents dying after 2009 (subject to a sunset provision) [I.R.C. §§ 2505(a)(1), 2210(a); see Pub. Law 107-16, § 901; but see § 60.112A regarding uncertainty over whether and in what form the estate tax repeal will actually take effect], the gift tax continues to be imposed for gifts made after 2009, at rates ranging from 18 percent (for taxable gifts in excess of the annual exclusion of up to $10,000) to 35 percent (for taxable gifts over $500,000) [I.R.C. § 2502(a)(2)].

The federal estate and gift tax tables are reproduced in § 60.206.

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
CHAPTER 60 ESTATE PLANNING
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

§ 60.15 Income Tax Considerations

[1] Income Tax Liability for Property and Income

Gross income does not include the value of property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance [I.R.C. § 102(a)]. Thus a donee, beneficiary, or devisee need not report the property received in an inter vivos gift, or by devise or transfer from a trust on the death of the settlor, as income when received. However, if a gift is made specifically of the income from property, the income is taxable to the recipient when received [I.R.C. § 102(b)(2)]. This could occur, for example, if a settlor creates a trust and provides that the income from the trust will be received by the settlor's son or daughter for a period of 10 years. During such time as the son or daughter actually receives the income, the income is taxable to the son or daughter.

Any income from property transferred by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance will be taxable to the recipient after the transfer has been completed. Assume, for example, that Mr. Smith gives his son 50 acres of agricultural property worth $100,000. Assume further that the property is leased for a net rental of $8,000 per year. The value of the gift property ($100,000) is not taxable to the son, but the annual rent of $8,000 is taxable [I.R.C. § 102].

Gifts may be a useful way of transferring income from the donor to the donee. If the donor wishes to avoid income tax liability on the income produced by the gift property, a gift will accomplish that purpose. If, however, the donee would prefer not to have the income, a gift of income-producing property might be unsuitable.

[2] Gain on Sale of Property

The potential gain to be realized by the sale of property may be an important factor in determining whether it should be transferred by inter vivos gift or upon death.

The income tax basis of property received by inter vivos gift is generally the same in the hands of the donee as in the hands of the donor [I.R.C. § 1015(a)]. However, if the fair market value of the property at the time of the gift is less than its basis, the donee must use the fair market value for purposes of determining loss (but not gain) on a subsequent sale [I.R.C. § 1015(a)]. In the case of gifts made after 1976, the donee's basis in gift property is increased by any gift tax paid by the donor on the appreciated element of the property [I.R.C. § 1015(d)(6)].

For decedents dying before 2010, income tax basis of property acquired from a decedent is generally its fair market value at the date of the decedent's death (or six months after the date of death, if the alternate valuation date is elected) [I.R.C. § 1014(a), (f); see I.R.C. § 2032 (alternate valuation)]. This can result in valuable income tax savings if the property has appreciated substantially since it was acquired by the decedent.

Retaining property for inclusion in an estate may also be beneficial for decedents dying after 2009. The estate tax is repealed for decedents dying after 2009, but a sunset provision of the repealing legislation re-imposes the estate tax at its pre-2001 rates after 2010 unless the repeal is re-enacted [I.R.C. § 2210(a); Pub. Law 107-16, § 901]. In this regard, however, many commentators believe legislative changes will be made regarding the repeal before 2010 [see § 60.112A regarding uncertainty over whether and in what form repeal will actually take effect]. Therefore, planning to hold onto property to avoid the estate tax is risky. If the estate tax is re-imposed after 2010, it is likely a basis step-up provision similar to current I.R.C. § 1014 would be included, so the same considerations as under current law would apply. For post-2009 periods for which the estate tax is repealed, a modified carryover basis regime generally applies for property received from those decedents, under which recipients of property transferred at the decedent's death receive a basis equal to the lesser of the adjusted basis of the decedent in the property or the fair market value of the property on the date of the decedent's death [I.R.C. § 1022(a)]. Nevertheless, a step up in basis of up to $1.3 million ($4.3 million for certain property transferred to a surviving spouse) is allowed for each decedent's estate [I.R.C. § 1022(b)(1), (2)(B), (c)(2)(B)]. This limited step up in basis may also favor holding onto assets, because gain on the sale of the property can be sheltered to that extent [see I.R.C. § 1022].

When planning an estate, it is advisable to consider the basis of the transfer property as well as its fair market value. All other things being equal, it may be preferable to transfer property that has appreciated substantially on the transferor's death rather than by inter vivos gift, so as to obtain the benefits of a new date-of-death value basis [see I.R.C. § 1014(a)]. This is especially true with the scheduled repeal of the estate tax [see I.R.C. § 2210(a)].

[3] Income Taxation of Trusts and Estates

[a] General Principles

The income taxation of trusts and estates is governed by Subchapter J of the Internal Revenue Code [I.R.C. §§ 641-692]. The taxable income of an estate or trust is basically computed in the same manner as that of an individual. The tax is paid by the personal representative or trustee [I.R.C. § 641(b)]. Subchapter J divides trusts into two broad categories--grantor trusts and nongrantor trusts. These categories are subject to entirely different tax treatment.

[b] Grantor Trusts

Trusts in which the settlor has retained certain powers or interests [see I.R.C. §§ 672-677] are treated for federal income tax purposes as though no trust had been created at all. These trusts are known as "grantor trusts." The income of grantor trusts is taxed directly to the settlor, the trust is disregarded as a taxable entity, and no separate return is usually required [I.R.C. § 671].

The grantor trust rules treat the settlor as owner of the trust property if he or she does any of the following:

- Retains more than an insignificant reversionary interest [I.R.C. § 673];
- Retains certain powers to control the beneficial enjoyment of the trust property [see I.R.C. § 674];
- Retains certain administrative powers [see I.R.C. § 675];

- Holds a power to revoke [I.R.C. § 676]; or
- Retains a power to appoint income to himself or herself, or to his or her spouse [I.R.C. § 678].

Under these rules, the typical revocable inter vivos trust is categorized as a grantor trust during the lifetime of the settlor (or, in the case of a two-settlor trust, at least while both settlors are alive), and its income is taxable to the settlor during that time.

In some cases, a person other than the settlor is treated as the direct owner of the property for tax purposes and is taxed directly on the trust income [see I.R.C. § 678].

[c] Estates and Nongrantor Trusts

Trusts that do not come within the grantor trust rules are known as nongrantor trusts. These trusts, as well as estates, are treated as independent taxable entities in the first instance [see I.R.C. § 641 (imposition of tax)]. However, they are allowed a deduction for certain amounts distributed to beneficiaries [see I.R.C. §§ 651, 661], who in turn are taxable on these distributions [see I.R.C. §§ 652, 662].

Only irrevocable trusts qualify for non-grantor trust status [see I.R.C. § 676]. However, under the criteria discussed in [b], above, irrevocability does not mean that a trust will automatically avoid classification as a grantor trust.

[d] Importance of Distinction in Trust Planning

The distinction between grantor and nongrantor trusts is critical in trust planning. If a trust is a grantor trust, the income must be paid by the settlor (or other party treated like the settlor) out of his or her own funds. Treatment as a grantor trust for federal tax purposes does not affect property rights under state law, and therefore the grantor often may have no access to the trust property to pay the taxes. In contrast, the beneficiaries of a grantor trust receive any trust property free of income tax.

Grantor trust status will sometimes be unavoidable, but the estate planner must always be aware of who will bear the income tax burden.

[e] Tax Rates

The tax rates applicable to trusts and estates differ significantly from those that apply to individuals. Like the individual tax rates, the rates applicable to estates and trusts are determined by reference to a series of income brackets, each of which is taxed at a progressively higher rate. The maximum tax rate for trusts and estates, as for individuals, is 35 percent after 2002 [see I.R.C. § 1(a)- (d) (individual rates), (e)(rates applicable to trusts and estates), (i)(2)(reduction in rates)]. However, the tax brackets for trusts and estates are substantially compressed, so that the rates take effect at much lower dollar amounts for trusts and estates than for individuals. For example, the maximum tax rate for individuals applies to taxable income in excess of $250,000 (or $125,000 in the case of married individuals filing separate returns) [see I.R.C. § 1(a)- (d)]. In contrast, the maximum tax rate for trust and estates applies to taxable income in excess of only $9,550 [see I.R.C. § 1(e)]. Thus, trusts and estates pay significantly more tax than individuals on comparable amounts of income.

For this reason, it is usually more advantageous from a tax perspective for a trust to distribute income to a beneficiary, take a deduction for the distribution [see I.R.C. §§ 651, 661], and have the beneficiary pay the income tax on the distributed income (unless the beneficiary is already in or near the maximum income tax bracket). In other words, the compressed income tax rates operate to discourage estate planning arrangements that require accumulations of income. Even under plans that provide for discretionary payments of income, the trustee may have to choose between distributing income to a beneficiary (such as a minor) or accumulating it and having it incur a significant amount of additional income tax.

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

§ 60.16 Generation-Skipping Transfer Tax Considerations

[1] Tax

NOTE

REGARDING GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER TAX REPEAL: The generation-skipping transfer tax (GSTT) has been repealed, effective for generation-skipping transfers after 2009 [I.R.C. § 2664]. Similarly, the estate tax has been repealed, effective for decedents dying after 2009 [I.R.C. § 2210(a)]. Until then, both taxes remain in effect.

However, under a sunset provision of the 2001 legislation that enacted the repeals, all provisions of the legislation--including the repeal of the GSTT and the estate tax--do not apply to generation-skipping transfers, or to estates of decedents dying, after December 31, 2010 [Pub. Law 107-16, § 901]. Thus, unless the provisions repealing the GSTT and estate tax are re-enacted before the end of 2010, the GSTT law in effect before enactment of the 2001 legislation will apply once again after 2010 [see Pub. Law 107-16, § 901; see I.R.C. §§ 2601-2663, before amendment by Pub. Law 107-16].

Many commentators believe that significant changes will be made to the estate tax law, and probably the GSTT, before 2010. For now, planning around the GSTT after 2001 involves to some degree guessing how long a client will live. For transfers made in 2010, under the law as currently constituted, no GSTT will be due [I.R.C. § 2264]. For clients who are likely to live past 2010 and make taxable transfers after that time, the same GSTT considerations apply as under the law that was in effect before the 2001 legislation because, in the absence of further Congressional action, the law will be the same [Pub. Law 107-16, § 901].

The generation-skipping transfer tax (GSTT) is the third component of the federal government's tripartite transfer tax system. Before 1976, transfers of wealth were subject only to gift and estate taxes. In that year, Congress enacted the first GSTT. However, the 1976 version of the tax proved to be unworkable, and so an entirely new GSTT was enacted in 1986. The 1976 tax was repealed retroactively, and the 1986 tax became effective on October 26, 1986 [Pub. L. No. 99-514, § 1433(a)].

The GSTT is based on the premise that transfers of wealth should be subject to taxation at every generation, regardless of whether or not the transfers are subject to taxation under familiar principles of gift and estate tax law. Accordingly, the GSTT is designed to subject property to taxation when it is transferred to a person who is two or more generations younger than the transferor. When a transfer of this kind is made, the transferee is described as a "skip person" [I.R.C. § 2613(a)]. Whether a person is deemed a skip person for GSTT purposes depends on the person's generation assignment as specified in the GSTT statutes [see I.R.C. § 2651]. Skip persons are typically grandchildren, although persons who are not related to the transferor may also qualify as skip persons if they are more than 37½ years younger than the transferor [I.R.C. § 2651(d)(2); see Treas. Reg. § 26.2618-1].

The GSTT is imposed at a flat rate, which is the maximum estate or gift tax rate in effect at the time of the transfer [I.R.C. § 2641(a)(1); see Treas. Reg. § 26.2641-1]. Thus, generation skipping transfers are subject to a 55 percent tax rate for transfers before 2002, 50 percent for transfers 2002, 49 percent for transfers in 2003, 48 percent for transfers in 2004, 47 percent for transfers in 2005, 46 percent for transfers in 2006, and 45 percent for transfers in 2007 through 2009 [I.R.C. §§ 2001(c)(1), (2), 2641]. This rate, by itself, would provide a substantial disincentive to all generation-skipping transfers. However, the statute also provides an exemption (called the "GST exemption") [see I.R.C. § 2631(a), (c) and discussion in [3], below]. The actual rate of the tax on a particular transfer varies depending on the "inclusion ratio" applicable to the transfer [I.R.C. § 2641(a)(2)]. The inclusion ratio is determined by dividing the value of the property subject to the transfer into the amount of the GST exemption allocated to the transfer [I.R.C. § 2642(a); see Treas. Reg. § 26.2642-1]. For discussion, see [4], below.

[2] Transfers Subject to the Tax

[a] Taxable Distributions

Three types of transfers are subject to the GSTT. These are defined in the Internal Revenue Code as "taxable distributions," "taxable terminations," and "direct skips."

A "taxable distribution" is a distribution from a trust to a skip person that does not qualify as a "taxable termination" or a "direct skip" [I.R.C. § 2612(b)]. A taxable distribution may be of principal or income. Taxable distributions typically occur when money or property is distributed from a trust to the settlor's grandchildren. When a transfer is subject to GSTT as a taxable distribution, the tax must be paid by the transferee [I.R.C. § 2603(a)(1)].

[b] Taxable Terminations

Generally, a "taxable termination" is the termination of a beneficiary's interest in trust property as a result of death, lapse of time, or some other reason. However, there is no taxable termination if a non-skip person has an interest in the trust immediately after the termination, or if distributions cannot be made to non-skip persons after the termination [I.R.C. § 2612(a)]. Taxable terminations typically occur when the trust interest of a non-skip person terminates and the trust either comes to an end or all of the interests in the trust are held by skip persons. If, for example, a settlor creates a trust for the benefit of his or her children for their lives, with remainder to such of the settlor's grandchildren as are living when the last child dies, a taxable termination will occur when the last child dies. When GSTT is payable on a taxable termination, the tax must be paid by the trustee [I.R.C. § 2603(a)(2)].

[c] Direct Skips

A "direct skip" is a transfer to any skip person that is also subject to gift or estate tax [I.R.C. §§ 2612(c)(1), 2613(a)]. Assume, for example, that a grandparent gives his or her grandchild $50,000. Assume further that in the year the gift is made the annual gift tax exclusion amount is $11,000 [see I.R.C. § 2503(b) and discussion in § 60.14[2]]. Since $11,000 passes free of gift tax under the annual exclusion, only $39,000 is subject to tax. Since the grandchild is a skip person, the transfer of $39,000 is a direct skip and thus subject to the GSTT.

Since a trust may also qualify as a skip person if all of the beneficiaries are skip persons [see I.R.C. § 2613(a)(2)(A)], a direct skip may also occur when money is transferred to a trust. Assume, in the example above, that a grandparent gives $50,000 to a trust created for the benefit of his or her grandchildren. The trust provides that the trust property will be held for the benefit of the grandchildren until the youngest grandchildren reaches the age of 21, at which time all of the trust principal and accumulated trust income will be distributed to the grandchildren. The transfer of $39,000 qualifies as a direct skip.

[d] Exception for Transfers to Persons with Deceased Parents

Transfers to any individual who meets both of the following requirements are exempted from the GSTT [I.R.C. § 2651(e)] (applicable to terminations, distributions, and transfers occurring after December 31, 1997):

- The individual is a descendant of a parent of the transferor (or the transferors spouse or former spouse; and
- The individual's parent who is a lineal descendant of the parent of the transferor (or the transferor's spouse or former spouse) is dead when the transfer is made.

If the transferee meets both of these requirements, the transferee is treated as if he or she were a member of a generation only one generation lower than that of the transferor [I.R.C. § 2651(e)] (applicable to terminations, distributions, and transfers occurring after December 31, 1997), with the result that the transfer is not subject to the GSTT. However, a transfer to any person who is not a lineal descendant of the transferor (or the transferors spouse or former spouse) will still be treated as a generation-skipping transfer if, at the time of the transfer, the transferor has any living lineal descendant [I.R.C. § 2651(e)(2)].

This exception will remove a transfer to grandchildren from the operation of the GSTT when the grandchildren's parents are deceased.

EXAMPLE:

Mindy Green transfers property to a charitable lead unitrust for a 10-year term, with the remainder going to her granddaughter, Jessica White. Jessica's father (Mindy's son) is deceased at the time the trust was created and the transfer to the trust was subject to the gift tax. The termination of the 10-year term is not a taxable termination subject to the GSTT [see I.R.C. § 2651(e)].

This exception will also remove transfers to qualifying collateral heirs of the transferor (such as nieces, nephews, grandnieces, and grandnephews) from the operation of the GSTT when their parents are deceased [see I.R.C. § 2651(e)].

EXAMPLE:

Jack Gray, who has no living lineal descendants, transfers property to his grandniece Betty Black. Betty's father (Jack's nephew) is deceased at the time of the transfer. The transfer is not subject to the GSTT [see I.R.C. § 2651(e)].

For terminations, distributions, and transfers occurring on or after July 18, 2005, the following rules apply [Treas. Reg. § 26.2651-3] (for transfers occurring after December 31, 1997 and before July 18, 2005, taxpayers may rely on any reasonable interpretation of I.R.C. § 2651(e)):

- If an individual's parent, who is a lineal descendant of the parent of the transferor (or the transferor's spouse or former spouse), is deceased at the time of the transfer from which the individual's interest is established or derived, the individual is treated as if he or she were a member of the generation that is one generation below the lower of the transferor's generation or the generation assignment of the individual's youngest living lineal ancestor who is also a descendant of the parent of the transferor (or the transferor's spouse or former spouse [Treas. Reg. § 26.2651-1(a)(1)]).

- If an individual's generation assignment is so adjusted with respect to a transfer, a corresponding adjustment with respect to that transfer is also made to the generation assignment of each spouse or former spouse of that individual, each descendant of that individual, and each spouse or former spouse of each descendant [Treas. Reg. § 26.2651-1(a)(2)(i)].

- An individual's interest is established or derived when the transferor is subject to estate or gift tax. If the transferor is subject to transfer tax on the property on more than one occasion, then the individual's interest is considered established or derived on the earliest of those occasions [Treas. Reg. § 26.2651-1(a)(3)].

- The interest of a remainder beneficiary of a trust for which a QTIP election has been made will be deemed to have been established or derived, to the extent of the QTIP election, on the date as of which the value of the trust corpus is first subject to tax under I.R.C. § 2519 or I.R.C. § 2044. This rule does not apply to a trust to the extent that a reverse QTIP election has been made for the trust because, to the extent of the reverse QTIP election, the spouse who established the trust remains the transferor of the trust for GST tax purposes [Treas. Reg. § 26.2651-1(a)(3)].

- The above rules do not apply in the case of a transfer to any individual who is not a lineal descendant of the transferor (or the transferor's spouse or former spouse) if the transferor has any living lineal descendant at the time of the transfer [Treas. Reg. § 26.2651-1(b)].

- In general, an individual who would be assigned to more than one generation is assigned to the youngest of the generations to which he or she would be assigned [Treas. Reg. § 26.2651-2(a)].

- An adopted individual is treated as a member of the generation that is one generation below the adoptive parent. The adopted individual must be legally adopted by the adoptive parent, be a descendant of a parent of the adoptive parent (or the spouse or former spouse of the adoptive parent, be under 18 years of age at the time of the adoption, and not be adopted primarily for the purpose of avoiding the GST tax [Treas. Reg. § 26.2651-2(b)].

- If an adopted individual's generation assignment is so adjusted with respect to a transfer, a corresponding adjustment with respect to that transfer is also made to the generation assignment of each spouse or former spouse of that individual, each descendant of that individual, and each spouse or former spouse of each descendant [Treas. Reg. § 26.2651-2(c)(1)].

[3] GST Exemption

[a] In General

Each transferor is entitled to an exemption (referred to as the "GST exemption") for purposes of determining the GSTT inclusion ratio. The basic exemption amount depends on the year of the transfer. The basic exemption amount through 2003 was $1,000,000 [I.R.C. § 2631(a), before amendment by Pub. Law 107-16], adjusted annually for inflation [see

I.R.C. § 2631(c)(1) (computation of adjustment)]. For 2002, the adjusted amount was $1,100,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2001-59, § 3.20, 2001-52 I.R.B. 623 ]. The exemption amount for 2003 was $1,120,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2002-70, 2002-46 I.R.B. 845 ]. For generation-skipping transfers after 2003, the exemption amount is determined by the estate tax exclusion amount for the calendar year. [I.R.C. § 2631(c)]. For 2004 and 2005, the amount is $1.5 million; for 2006 through 2008, the amount is $2 million; for 2009, the amount is $3.5 million [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2631(a), (c)].

The purpose of the GST exemption is to limit the impact of the GSTT to large transfers of wealth. When a husband and wife make generation-skipping transfers, each is entitled to a separate exemption. Thus married persons may transfer up to twice the amount of the GST exemption without subjecting any of the transfer to the GSTT [see I.R.C. § 2631(a)].

[b] Allocation of GST Exemption

Special rules apply in allocating the GST exemption [I.R.C. § 2632].

An individual (or that individual's executor) may allocate GST exemption to any property transferred by that individual [I.R.C. § 2631(a)]. Once made, an allocation is irrevocable [I.R.C. § 2631(b)]. All later appreciation attributable to property to which the GST exemption has been allocated is exempt from the GST tax [see H.R. Rep. No. 99-426, 99th Cong, 2nd Sess. 826 (1985)]. If an individual makes a direct skip while living, any unused GST exemption is automatically allocated to a direct skip to the extent necessary to make the inclusion ratio for that property equal to zero [I.R.C. § 2632(b)(1)]. An individual can elect out of the automatic allocation for lifetime direct skips [I.R.C. § 2632(b)(3)].

If any individual makes an indirect skip while living, then any unused portion of that individual's GST exemption is allocated to the property transferred to the extent necessary to produce the lowest possible inclusion ratio [I.R.C. § 2632(c)(1)], effective for transfers subject to estate or gift tax made after December 31, 2000, and to estate tax inclusion periods ending after December 31, 2000]. An indirect skip is any transfer of property (that is not a direct skip) subject to the gift tax that is made to a generation-skipping transfer trust. A generation-skipping transfer trust is a trust that could have a generation-skipping transfer with respect to the transferor (e.g., a taxable termination or taxable distribution), unless [I.R.C. § 2632(c)(3)(B)]:

- The trust instrument provides that more than 25 percent of the trust corpus must be distributed to or may be withdrawn by one or more individuals who are non-skip persons (1) before the date that the individual attains age 46; (2) on or before one or more dates specified in the trust instrument that will occur before the date that the individual attains age 46; or (3) upon the occurrence of an event that, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Treasury Secretary, may reasonably be expected to occur before the date that the individual attains age 46;
- The trust instrument provides that more than 25 percent of the trust corpus must be distributed to or may be withdrawn by one or more individuals who are non-skip persons and who are living on the date of death of another person identified in the instrument (by name or by class) who is more than 10 years older than those individuals;
- The trust instrument provides that if one or more individuals who are non-skip persons die on or before a date or event described in one of the above two paragraphs, more than 25 percent of the trust corpus either must be distributed to the estate or estates of one or more of those individuals or is subject to a general power of appointment exercisable by one or more of those individuals;
- The trust is a trust any portion of which would be included in the gross estate of a non-skip person (other than the transferor) if that person died immediately after the transfer;

- The trust is a charitable lead annuity trust or a charitable remainder annuity trust or a charitable unitrust; or
- The trust is a trust with respect to which a deduction was allowed under I.R.C. § 2522 for the amount of an interest in the form of the right to receive annual payments of a fixed percentage of the net fair market value of the trust property (determined yearly) and which is required to pay principal to a non-skip person if that person is alive when the yearly payments for which the deduction was allowed terminate.

An individual can elect not to have the automatic allocation rules apply to an indirect skip, and any such election will be deemed timely if filed on a timely filed gift tax return for the calendar year in which the transfer was made or deemed to have been made or on such later date or dates as may be prescribed by the Treasury Secretary. An individual can elect not to have the automatic allocation rules apply to any or all transfers made to a particular trust and can elect to treat any trust as a generation-skipping transfer trust with respect to any or all transfers made to the trust. The election can be made on a timely filed gift tax return for the calendar year for which the election is to become effective [I.R.C. § 2632(c)(5); Treas. Reg. § 26.2632-1(b)(2)(iii)(B),(C), (4)(iv) (manner and time for making election out, and example of language that may be used in statement required to elect out)].

An election not to have the automatic allocation rules apply may be made with respect to the following [Treas. Reg. § 26.2632-1(b)(2)(iii)(A)]:

- One or more prior year transfers made to a specified trust or trusts.
- One or more (or all) current year transfers made to a specified trust or trusts.
- One or more (or all) future transfers made to a specified trust or trusts.
- All future transfers made to all trusts whether or not in existence at the time the election out is made.
- Any combination of the above.

An election out does not affect the automatic allocation of the GST exemption to any transfer that is not covered by the election out statement. An election out with respect to future transfers remains in effect unless and until terminated, and once made, a transferor need not file a Form 709 in future years solely to prevent the automatic allocation of the GST exemption to any future transfer covered by the election out [Treas. Reg. § 26.2632-1(b)(2)(iii)(D)].

Requests for an extension of time to allocate a GST exemption are governed by Treas. Reg. § 301.9100-3 [I.R.C. § 2642(g)(1)(B); see Letter Rul. 200439001 (60-day extension to allocate exemption was granted to donor who intended that sufficient GSTT exemption be allocated to gifts to create an inclusion ratio of zero, but accounting firm donor relied on to prepare and file federal gift tax returns failed to make requisite allocation); Letter Rul. 200439036 (60-day extension of time was granted to estate to sever marital trust into exempt and nonexempt trusts, and to make reverse QTIP election for exempt marital trust, when estate had retained attorney to prepare federal estate tax return and to take these actions; estate acted reasonably and in good faith in relying on qualified tax professional); Letter Rul. 200322014 (60-day extension to allocate exemption granted to grantor who reasonably relied on qualified tax professional who failed to make allocation); Letter Rul. 200324041 (60-day extension to allocate exemption to lifetime transfers made to irrevocable trust granted to grantor and his wife, when accounting firm they retained to prepare tax returns related to trust failed to advise them to allocate their GST exemption to these transfers)]. A simplified alternate method for allocating the GST exemption is provided by Rev. Proc. 2004-46, 2004-31 I.R.B. 142.

The GST exemption can be allocated retroactively when there is an unnatural order of death. If a lineal descendant of the transferor predeceases the transferor, then the transferor can allocate any unused GST exemption to any previous transfer or transfers to the trust on a chronological basis. A transferor may retroactively allocate the GST exemption to a trust if a beneficiary [I.R.C. § 2632(d)(1), effective for deaths of non-skip persons occurring after December 31, 2000]:

- Is a non-skip person;
- Is a lineal descendant of the transferor's grandparent or a grandparent of the transferor's spouse;
- Is a generation younger than the generation of the transferor; and
- Dies before the transferor.

The exemption is allocated under this rule retroactively, and the applicable fraction and inclusion ratio would be determined based on the value of the property on the date that the property was transferred to the trust [I.R.C. § 2632(d)(2)].

Any portion of a GST exemption allocation that is not made before the time for filing an individual's estate tax return (determined with regard to extensions) [see I.R.C. § 2632(a)(1)] is deemed allocated first to property that is the subject of a direct skip at the individual's death, and second to trusts with respect to which the individual is the transferor and from which a taxable distribution or taxable termination occurs at or after the individual's death [I.R.C. § 2632(e)(1)].

Substantial compliance with the statutory and regulatory requirements for allocating the GST exemption will suffice to establish that the exemption was allocated to a particular transfer or a particular trust. If a taxpayer demonstrates substantial compliance, then so much of the transferor's unused GST exemption will be allocated to the extent it produces the lowest possible inclusion ratio. In determining whether there has been substantial compliance, all relevant circumstances will be considered, including evidence of intent contained in the trust instrument or instrument of transfer and such other factors as the Treasury Secretary deems appropriate [I.R.C. § 2642(g)(2), effective for transfers subject to estate or gift tax made after December 31, 2000].

The GST exemption is the principal tool available to estate planners in planning for the GSTT. Proper allocation of the exemption to generation-skipping transfers will minimize the impact of the tax. Improper allocation may result in the loss of all or a portion of the exemption.

[4] Applicable Fraction, Inclusion Ratio, and Applicable Tax Rate

The "inclusion ratio" of a GSTT is determined by subtracting the "applicable fraction" from the number one [I.R.C. § 2642(a)(1)]. The "applicable fraction" is determined by dividing (1) the amount of the GST exemption [see I.R.C. § 2631(a), (c) and discussion in [3], above] that is being allocated to the trust or transfer property by (2) the value of the property transferred (less the sum of any federal or state estate or death taxes actually collected from the trust attributable to the transferred property and any federal gift or estate tax charitable deduction allowed with respect to the transferred property) [I.R.C. § 2642(a)(2)]. If the transfer is a direct skip, the inclusion ratio is determined for that direct skip [I.R.C. § 2642(a)(1)(B)]. If the transfer is a taxable termination or taxable distribution, the inclusion ratio is determined for the trust from which the transfer is made [I.R.C. § 2642(a)(1)(A)]. Thus, the inclusion ratio is generally a number more than zero but less than one.

A trustee can establish inclusion ratios of zero and one by severing a trust that is subject to the GSTT in a "qualified severance." If a qualified severance is made, the trusts resulting from the severance are treated as separate trusts for purposes of the GSTT [I.R.C. § 2642(a)(3)(A), effective for severances occurring after December 31, 2000]. The severance may be made at any time [I.R.C. § 2642(a)(3)(C)]. A qualified severance is a division of a single trust and the creation of two or more trusts if the following requirements are met [I.R.C. § 2642(a)(3)(B)(I)]:

- The single trust was divided on a fractional basis; and
- The terms of the new trusts, in the aggregate, provide for the same succession of interests of beneficiaries as are provided in the original trust.

If a trust has an inclusion ratio of greater than zero and less than one, a severance is a qualified severance only if the single trust is divided into two trusts, one of which receives a fractional share of the total value of all trust assets equal to the applicable fraction of the single trust immediately before the severance. In that case, the trust receiving the fractional share will have an inclusion ratio of zero and the other trust will have an inclusion ratio of one [I.R.C. § 2642(a)(3)(B)(ii)].

The applicable tax rate is then determined by multiplying the inclusion ratio by the maximum estate tax rate in effect at the time of the transfer [I.R.C. § 2641(a)].

EXAMPLE:

To illustrate how the inclusion ratio and the applicable fraction are computed, assume that a grandmother gives her grandson $510,000 in cash in 1998. Assume further that the GST exemption applicable to the gift is $1 million [ see I.R.C. § 2631(a), (c) and discussion in [3], above] and that the annual gift tax exclusion amount in the year of the gift is $10,000 [see I.R.C. § 2503(b) and discussion in § 60.14[2]]. (Note that the amounts used here do not reflect the increase in the GST exemption in post-2003 years or inflation adjustments that have increased the actual amount of the annual gift tax exclusion; the round numbers are retained here as they make the calculations in this illustration easier to follow.) Finally, assume that the grandmother allocates $200,000 of her GST exemption to the gift. Since the first $10,000 of the gift is excluded from taxation under the annual exclusion [I.R.C. § 2503(b)], the inclusion ratio for the $10,000 is zero [I.R.C. § 2642(c)(1)]. As to the remaining $500,000, the applicable fraction is two-fifths (the $200,000 of exemption allocated to the property divided by the $500,000 value of the property), and the inclusion ratio is three-fifths (one less the applicable fraction, which is two-fifths). Assume the maximum estate tax rate in the year of the gift is 55 percent. Since generation-skipping transfers are taxed at the maximum estate tax rate [see I.R.C. §§ 2001(c), 2641 (rate schedule)], the applicable tax rate for GSTT purposes would be 33 percent.

Property with an inclusion ratio of zero will effectively be completely exempt from generation-skipping transfer tax [see I.R.C. §§ 2641, 2602]. Property with an inclusion ratio of one will be fully subject to the tax. Transfers involving inclusion ratios of other than zero or one are rather cumbersome to deal with, and estate planners try to avoid them if possible. This is particularly true in the case of trusts, when it is possible that future transfers will necessitate recalculation of the inclusion ratio. The trust severance provisions, discussed above, make the severance of trusts relatively straightforward [see I.R.C. § 2642(a)(3)]. Before their enactment, estate planners commonly drafted sometimes complex trust provisions that provided fiduciaries with discretion to split trusts in a manner that will assure the creation of trusts with inclusion ratios of zero or one.

Proposed treasury regulations explain the proper procedure, timing, and required reporting of a qualified severance, and the permitted methods of funding the resulting trusts. Each new trust must receive assets with a value equal to a fraction or percentage of the total value of the trusts assets. For example, the severance of a single trust into one trust funded with 40 percent of the trust assets and another trust funded with the remaining 60 percent of the trust assets satisfies this requirement. Similarly, a severance stated in terms of a fraction of the trust assets in such a manner that one trust is to receive, for example, that fraction of the trust assets the numerator of which is $1,500,000 and the denominator of which is the fair market value of the trust assets on a specified date, and the second trust is to receive the remaining fraction, satisfies this requirement. However, the severance of a trust based on a pecuniary amount (for example, one trust is to be funded with $1,500,000, and the other trust is to be funded with the balance of the trust corpus), does not satisfy this requirement [see Prop. Treas. Reg. § 26.2642-6(b)(3)]. Each separate trust need not be funded with a pro rata portion of each asset held by the original trust; they may be funded on a non pro rata basis if funding is based on the total fair market value of the assets on the funding date [Prop. Treas. Reg. § 26.2642-6(b)(3)].

The beneficiaries of each separate trust resulting from the severance need not be identical to those of the original trust. For trusts that grant the trustee the discretionary power to make non pro rata distributions to beneficiaries, the separate trusts are considered to have the same succession of interests of beneficiaries if:

- The terms of the separate trusts are the same as the terms of the original trust;
- The severance does not shift a beneficial interest in the trust to any beneficiary in a lower generation than the person or persons who held the beneficial interest in the original trust; and
- The severance does not extend the time for vesting of any beneficial interest in the trust beyond the period provided for in the original trust [Prop. Treas. Reg. § 26.2642-6(b)(4)].

A qualified severance must be reported by doing the following:

- Filing a Form 706-GS(T)(Generation-Skipping Transfer Tax Return for Terminations) and writing "Qualified Severance" in red at the top;
- Attaching a "Notice of Qualified Severance" that clearly identifies the trust that is being severed and the new trusts created, and that provides the inclusion ratio of the trust that is being severed and the inclusion ratios of the new trusts; and
- Filing the return and attached notice even if the severance does not result in a taxable termination [Prop. Treas. Reg. § 26.2642-6(c)].

[5] Reverse QTIP Election

[a] QTIP and Bypass Trusts

Estate plans for married couples often provide for the division of a trust estate on the death of the first spouse (the "deceased spouse") into two trusts, one denominated a "bypass"(or "credit shelter") trust and the other a qualified terminable interest property (QTIP) trust. QTIP trusts are popular estate planning tools because they permit full use of the marital deduction for federal estate tax purposes [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(7)] while at the same time allowing the deceased spouse to exercise control over the disposition of the trust property on the death of the surviving spouse. By combining a bypass trust with a QTIP trust, it is possible for a husband and wife to leave the combined values of the "applicable exclusion amounts" available in both of their estates [see I.R.C. § 2010(c)] (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b] free of federal estate tax. For more detailed discussion, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions.

[b] Allocation of GST Exemptions to Trusts

When the surviving spouse dies, the assets of the QTIP trust will be included in the surviving spouse's gross estate for estate tax purposes [I.R.C. § 2044(b)(1)(A)] and the surviving spouse will be deemed the transferor for GSTT purposes [

I.R.C. § 2652(a)(1)(A). Both the husband and the wife are entitled to GST exemptions [see I.R.C. § 2631(a), (c); see also I.R.C. § 2010(c)]. Proper coordination of these exemptions through use of the reverse QTIP election, as discussed in [c], below, can avoid or reduce GSTT liability in some cases. The following example illustrates the nature of the problem:

EXAMPLE:

Assume that a husband and wife have combined estates of $5 million, all of which is community property. They wish to create typical QTIP and bypass trusts on the death of the first spouse, and to provide that the surviving spouse will have lifetime interest in the two trusts, with remainders equally to one child and one grandchild. On the death of the first spouse, the value of the first spouse's estate will be $2.5 million. If the first spouse dies in 2005, for example, the applicable exclusion amount will be $1.5 million. In that case, under a typical marital deduction formula clause, $1.5 million of the deceased spouse's $2.5 million estate would be allocated to the bypass trust, and $1 million to the QTIP trust [for applicable exclusion amounts, see I.R.C. § 2010(c) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]]. The deceased spouse will be treated for GSTT purposes as the transferor of the one-half of the bypass trust that will pass to the grandchild. The deceased spouse's GST exemption of $1.5 million [see I.R.C. § 2631(c)] (GST exemption for any calendar year after December 31, 2003 is equal to the applicable exclusion amount under I.R.C. § 2010(c) for that year) will completely shield the $750,000 in the bypass trust passing to the grandchild from GSTT taxation, leaving the remaining $750,000 of the GST exemption unused.

Assuming no change in the value of the trust assets, the surviving spouse will have a $3.5 million estate consisting of his or her own $2.5 million, plus the $1 million in the QTIP trust. If, on the death of the surviving spouse, one half of that amount passes directly to the grandchild under the terms of the trusts (see above), then the surviving spouse will be the deemed transferor of $1.75 million for GSTT purposes. Assuming that the surviving spouse dies prior to 2006, under current law the surviving spouse's GST exemption ($1.5 million in 2004 and 2005 [see I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2631(c)]) would be inadequate to fully shield this $1.75 million from GSTT. Absent some other arrangement, a substantial GSTT could be due on the unprotected $250,000, while the unused portion--$750,000--of the first spouse's GST exemption would have been wasted.

Similar results can occur when underfunding of the bypass trust results in an amount in the QTIP trust that will exceed the surviving spouse's available GST exemption.

[c] Use of Reverse Election

The unfavorable result in the preceding example can be avoided in this case by using the so-called "reverse QTIP election." This election is available to treat certain transfers involving qualified terminable interest property as if, for GSTT purposes, a QTIP election had not been made [I.R.C. § 2652(a)(3)]. In other words, the surviving spouse, although still treated as the owner of the QTIP property for estate tax purposes, will not be treated as the owner for GSTT purposes [see I.R.C. § 2652(a)(3)]. Instead, the deceased spouse would be treated as the transferor for GSTT purposes, thereby allowing the deceased spouse's GST exemption to be applied to that property [see I.R.C. § 2652(a)(3)].

EXAMPLE:

Under the facts in the example in [b], above, when the first spouse dies, the personal representative can elect to have the deceased spouse treated as the transferor of $250,000 worth of the QTIP trust for GSTT purposes. Since $750,000 of the deceased spouse's $1.5 million GST exemption is still available [see I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2631(c) and discussion in example in [b], above], it can be applied to the $250,000 in the QTIP trust to completely eliminate any GSTT liability.

However, a special rule provides that the reverse QTIP election must be made as to "all of the property in [the] trust" [I.R.C. § 2652(a)(3)]. If the value of the QTIP trust is greater than the amount of the available GSTT exemption, the QTIP trust should be divided into two portions, with one of the portions fully qualified for the exemption and the other part unqualified. This will result in full utilization of the available GST exemption. Failure to require a division will result in an "inclusion ratio" between one and zero and a loss of part of the GST exemption [see I.R.C. § 2642 and [4], above].

Requests for an extension of time to make a reverse QTIP election are governed by Treas. Reg. § 301.9100-3. A simplified, alternate method for obtaining permission to file a later reverse QTIP election is provided by Rev. Proc. 2004-47, 2004-32 I.R.B. 169.

A complete discussion of the reverse QTIP election is beyond the scope of this chapter. For a detailed discussion, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 113, Generation-Skipping Transfers and Trust Strategies (Matthew Bender).

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
CHAPTER 60 ESTATE PLANNING
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

§ 60.17 Estate Planning Tools

[1] Will

[a] In General

The will is the most widely used of all the estate planning tools. A will is commonly understood to be a written instrument by terms of which a person (called a "testator") undertakes to dispose of his or her property after his or her death. Although disposition of property is one of the primary functions of a will, a will may also be used for other purposes. For example, a will may be used to leave instructions respecting the disposition of one's remains, to exercise a testamentary power of appointment, to nominate an executor, or to nominate a guardian for the testator's minor children. If a will is effective for some other valid testamentary purpose, it is valid and enforceable even if it does not dispose of the testator's property [ In re Hickman (1894) 101 Cal. 609, 613, 36 P. 118 ; Estate of Fries (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 558, 562, 47 Cal. Rptr. 888 ].

[b] Will With Living Trust

Every estate plan should include a will. Even when the bulk of the client's estate is to be transferred by means of a living trust [see [2], below], the client should execute a will, so that property that has not been transferred to the trust will be properly disposed of after the client's death.

When a living trust is created, the settlor will commonly transfer most of his or her property to the trust. However, some may be left out of the trust, either purposely or inadvertently. A will will direct the transfer of that property after the client's death. Wills are also essential to nominate executors and guardians for minor children. If the client holds a testamentary power of appointment, the will may also be used to exercise the power.

When a client creates a living trust, it is often useful for the client to execute a so-called "pour-over" will.

[c] Pour-Over Will

A "pour-over" will is a will that devises property to the trustee of an existing trust. The existing trust may be either testamentary or inter vivos. However, the trust must be in existence at the time the devise takes effect (that is, the date of the testator's death) [see Prob. Code § 6300]. In practice, a pour-over will usually transfers property to an inter vivos trust created by the testator.

Unless the will provides otherwise, property that is poured over to a trust must be held, administered, and distributed under terms of the governing instrument of the trust, and not of the will. This means that the operative trust terms must be set forth in the trust instrument rather than the will. If, for example, Mr. Jones devises property to the trustee of Mr. Jones's living trust, the trustee will take the property and hold, administer, and distribute it under terms of Mr. Jones's trust and not his will.

Pour-over wills are often used in conjunction with living trusts. An estate plan that includes a living trust and a pour-over will assures that the client's property will be disposed of under a comprehensive estate plan.

[d] Will with Testamentary Trust

A will may be used to create a trust. A trust that is created by a will is described as a "testamentary" trust.

A testamentary trust will come into effect only after the will creating it has been admitted to probate and the court has ordered property to be distributed to the trustee. When the court orders property to be distributed to a trustee under a testamentary trust, it must determine the existence and validity of the trust and the extent of any interest that passes to the trustee under the will [ Wells Fargo Bk. etc. Co. v. Superior Court (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 1, 8, 193 P.2d 721 ; Estate of Buckhantz (1958) 159 Cal. App. 2d 635, 642-643, 324 P.2d 317 ]. The order may set forth the terms of the will in full or incorporate them by reference. Once such an order becomes final, it constitutes a final adjudication of the validity of the will and a conclusive construction of its terms as against all interested parties, including the beneficiaries of the trust [ Estate of Callnon (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 150, 156, 74 Cal. Rptr. 250, 449 P.2d 186 ; Estate of Van Deusen (1947) 30 Cal.2d 285, 289-290, 182 P.2d 565 ].

A testamentary trust may be created for the benefit of any person. It is common, however, for a testamentary trust to be created for the benefit of minor children. A will may, for example, devise property to a trustee to be held for the benefit of the testator's children who are minors at the time of the testator's death. This may avoid the need to appoint a guardian of the children's estate by assuring that the children's property is managed for them while they are minors.

Testamentary trusts are not as common as inter vivos (or "living") trusts [see [2], below] in modern estate planning. This is because a testamentary trust does not avoid probate of the trust assets, and it affords the settlor no protection against incapacity during his or her lifetime. For further discussion of the creation and use of testamentary trusts, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 110, Testamentary Trusts (Matthew Bender).

[2] Revocable Inter Vivos ("Living") Trust

[a] In General

A revocable inter vivos trust is a trust that is created during the settlor's lifetime and that the settlor can revoke while still living. Revocable inter vivos trusts are commonly referred to as "living" trusts. Living trusts are very widely used in modern estate planning.

[b] Advantages

Assets that are transferred to the trustee of a living trust are exempt from probate administration when the settlor dies. In appropriate cases, this can result in substantial savings of both time and expense. A living trust can also avoid the need for the creation of a conservatorship if the settlor should later become incapacitated. In such an event, the trustee (or successor trustee) will have full authority to manage the trust property for the benefit of the settlor, and the expense and delay of conservatorship proceedings will be avoided.

Living trusts may also be useful to preserve the settlors' privacy. All of the records of the probate court are public documents and available for public inspection. If it is necessary to probate a will, the will must be filed with the court. All of the property subject to transfer under the will must be inventoried and appraised, and the inventory and appraisal will also be available for public inspection. The names and addresses of all persons interested in the will will also be matters of public record. None of this is necessary when property is transferred by means of a living trust.

The privacy afforded by a living trust is not absolute, however. When it becomes necessary to transfer property into or out of the trust, brokers, transfer agents, title insurance companies, and other third parties will frequently ask to see a copy of the trust instrument and other related documents. To the extent that these documents are shown to third parties, the privacy of the trust will be impaired. However, requests from third parties can often be satisfied by producing an abstract of the trust instrument, or the key pages (for example, the first page, the last page, and other relevant pages) without revealing the entire document.

[c] Disadvantages

If used only for the purpose of transferring assets after the settlor's death, a living trust can be somewhat more trouble than a will, at least during the settlor's lifetime. The costs of creating a living trust are typically greater than the costs of planning and drafting a will, and the living trust will be effective only to the extent that it is "funded" during the settlor's lifetime. This means that property that is to be transferred by means of the living trust must be transferred to the trustee during the settlor's lifetime. If the property is real estate, a deed must be prepared by which the property is transferred to the trustee. Bank accounts, mutual funds, brokerage accounts, and other property must similarly be titled in the name of the trustee. If property is not properly transferred to the trustee while the settlor is living, it will not form a part of the trust assets when the settlor dies and cannot be transferred through the mechanism of the trust after the settlor's death. If the settlor dies owning property that does not form a part of the trust estate, it may be necessary to probate that property after the settlor dies.

When property that forms a part of the trust estate is sold or otherwise transferred, the transfer must be made by the trustee. Third parties, such as brokers, transfer agents, and title insurance companies, will require some documentation proving the existence and terms of the trust before they will accept a deed or other transfer from the trustee. Providing this additional documentation can, in some cases, constitute a minor inconvenience.

While a living trust may be expected to save attorneys' fees after the settlor's death, it will typically require that additional attorneys' fees be incurred during the settlor's lifetime. This additional lifetime expense must be balanced against the expected savings after the settlor's death in determining whether the living trust format will suit an individual client's needs.

[d] Tax Consequences

A living trust will not, in itself, save any estate or other transfer taxes. When the settlor of a revocable living trust dies, all of the assets in the trust will be included in the settlor's gross estate for estate tax purposes, to the same extent as property held in the settlor's own name [I.R.C. § 2038; see § 60.13[1][d]].

However, a living trust can be used to create marital deduction trusts and bypass trusts, which may effect important estate tax savings in the estates of a married couple. For a discussion of marital deduction and bypass trusts, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions.

[3] Irrevocable Inter Vivos Trust

[a] In General

An irrevocable inter vivos trust is a trust that is created during the settlor's lifetime and that the settlor cannot revoke. A trust may be permanently irrevocable, or irrevocable for a specified time, such as a term of years. Since a trust created in California is presumed to be revocable by the settlor unless expressly stated otherwise [Prob. Code § 15400], a trust can be made irrevocable only if the trust instrument expressly declares that it is irrevocable.

Although irrevocable trusts have many uses and form a part of many sophisticated estate plans, they are somewhat less frequently used than revocable ("living") trusts [see [2], above].

[b] As Gift Substitute

Irrevocable trusts are often used as substitutes for gifts. When a settlor transfers property to an irrevocable trust, the settlor is permanently parting with the trust property in much the same way that he or she would part with the property if it were the subject of an outright gift. If the trust is properly planned and drafted, the trust property will no longer constitute a part of the settlor's gross estate. The settlor will have effectively parted with the ownership and control of the property, and the beneficiary (or beneficiaries) will have the use and enjoyment of the trust property, on the terms and conditions established by the trust instrument.

An irrevocable trust may be preferable to an outright gift for various reasons. When a transfer is made in trust, the use and enjoyment of the trust property may be divided in various ways. For example, the trust instrument may provide that one beneficiary will receive the income from the property for his or her lifetime, or until he or she reaches a specified age, after which time the trust property will be held in trust for the benefit of other beneficiaries, or distributed outright to the original or other beneficiaries. This kind of arrangement is not possible with an outright gift. A trust may also be preferable to an outright gift if the intended beneficiary is unable (or unwilling) to manage the trust property. This may be the case if the beneficiary is a minor, is suffering from some sort of incapacity, or is unable to manage the trust property because of advanced age. A trust may also be used to save taxes in a way that an outright gift cannot [see [c], below].

[c] Tax Savings

Irrevocable inter vivos trusts are often used to achieve tax-savings goals. Since a properly planned and drafted irrevocable trust will effectively remove the trust property from the settlor's ownership [see [b], above], such a trust can be used to remove property from the settlor's gross estate for federal estate tax purposes [see I.R.C. § 2031 (definition of gross estate); see also § 60.13[1]]. If it is desirable for the settlor to avoid income tax liability on income produced by the trust property, the trust can also be planned so that the settlor possesses none of the interests or powers that would cause the trust to be treated as a "grantor trust" for income tax purposes [see I.R.C. §§ 671-679 ("grantor trust" rules); see also § 60.15[3]].

A transfer of property to an irrevocable inter vivos trust will be treated as a gift for federal gift tax purposes if the transfer is "complete." A transfer is generally "complete" for gift tax purposes if the transferor gives up "dominion and control" over the transferred property [see Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-1]. If a gift is "complete," it is potentially subject to gift tax [see I.R.C. § 2501(a) (taxable transfers)]. The gift tax burden may be lessened (or entirely avoided) by structuring the trusts and the gifts in such a way that the transfers will qualify for the annual gift tax exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2503(b)]; for discussion of the annual exclusion and the applicable exclusion amounts, which are adjusted annually for inflation, see § 60.14[2]]. It is important to remember, however, that a gift will qualify for the annual exclusion only if it transfers a "present interest" in the gift property under I.R.C. § 2503(b)(1), or if it qualifies as a "minor's trust" under I.R.C. § 2503(c). A beneficiary may have a "present interest" in a trust if the beneficiary has the right to demand payments (or withdrawals) from the trust on an annual basis. A right of this kind is commonly called a "Crummey" power [see Crummey v. Commissioner (9th Cir. [Cal.] 1968) 397 F.2d 82]. For a discussion of "Crummey" powers of withdrawal, see Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts.

It is common for irrevocable inter vivos trusts to be planned and drafted to achieve specific estate-planning goals. For example, an irrevocable inter vivos trust can be planned to acquire a hold one or more life insurance policies on the life of the settlor. If an irrevocable life insurance trust is properly planned and drafted, the trustee can acquire substantial insurance on the settlor's life and, when the settlor dies, none of the insurance proceeds will be included in the settlor's gross estate for federal estate tax purposes [see I.R.C. § 2042]. This can result in a very substantial estate tax savings [for discussion, see Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts ; see also California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 115, Life Insurance Trusts (Matthew Bender). Irrevocable trusts may also be structured so that they will qualify for the federal income or estate tax charitable deductions [see I.R.C. §§ 170 (income tax), 2055 (estate tax)] as split-interest charitable trusts. For discussion of irrevocable trusts that qualify for the charitable deduction, see Ch. 74, Split-Interest Charitable Trusts .

For further discussion of the tax savings uses of irrevocable inter vivos trusts, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 114, Irrevocable Inter Vivos Trusts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Need for Will or Revocable Trust When Client Creates Irrevocable Trust

An irrevocable inter vivos trust will rarely be the sole (or even the principal) tool used in planning a settlor's estate. Thus, an estate plan for a client who establishes an irrevocable trust will almost always require some other estate planning tools. In many cases, the client will also wish to establish a revocable inter vivos ("living") trust [see [2], above]. The client will also require a will to direct the transfer of property that does not form a part of the irrevocable (or revocable) trust estate. As noted earlier [see § 60.17[1][b]], every estate plan should include a will so that property that has not been transferred to a trust during the client's lifetime (whether the trust is revocable or irrevocable) will be properly disposed of after the client's death.

[4] Co-ownership of Property

[a] In General

Many persons own property in various forms of co-ownership, such as joint tenancies, tenancies in common, partnerships, and multiple-party accounts. Some of these forms of co-ownership include mechanisms by which the surviving co-owner acquires the interest of a deceased co-owner when the deceased co-owner dies. Transfers to a surviving co-owner are often described as "transfers by operation of law." Since these transfers are automatic, they will be made even without a direction in a will or trust. Indeed, if a transfer by operation of law is required, the transfer will be carried out even if there is a contrary or inconsistent provision in the deceased co-owner's will or trust.

[b] Joint Tenancy

Joint tenancy [see §§ 60.12[5], 60.13[1][f]] is the most commonly used form of co-ownership. When one joint tenant dies, his or her interest in the jointly owned property passes to the surviving tenant (or tenants) by operation of law and no probate is necessary [ Estate of Dow (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 675, 680, 186 P.2d 977 ]. Joint tenancy property does not constitute a part of the deceased tenant's probate estate and is not subject to disposition under the deceased tenant's will or trust [ Estate of Dow (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 675, 680, 186 P.2d 977 ; see Goldberg v. Goldberg (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 623, 628, 32 Cal. Rptr. 93 (probate court has no jurisdiction over joint tenancy property)].

Joint tenancies can be useful devices. It is generally quite easy to set up a joint tenancy; and, after one of the tenants dies, it is also quite easy to "terminate" the deceased tenant's interest and confirm title in the surviving tenant. Typically, no attorney is necessary either to plan or to "terminate" a joint tenancy.

Notwithstanding their apparent simplicity, however, joint tenancies are not always ideal estate planning tools. A joint tenancy is generally quite inflexible. It does not provide adequately for different orders of death and the different needs of different beneficiaries. If a husband and wife hold title to their residence as joint tenants, for example, the residence will pass to the survivor without probate when the first spouse dies. However, the joint tenancy makes no provision for disposition of the property on the death of the survivor. If the property is disposed of under the will of the survivor, it will be subject to probate administration at that time. Further, property held in joint tenancy cannot be transferred to a revocable inter vivos ("living") trust and thus cannot be used to fund a marital deduction or bypass trust without first being converted to some other form of title [see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions (general coverage of marital deduction and bypass trusts)]. If the combined estates of the joint tenants exceed the "applicable exclusion amount" available in the year of the surviving spouses death [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]], this may result in a substantially greater estate tax on the death of the surviving spouse than would result if part of the property had been transferred to a bypass trust.

True joint tenancy property does not qualify for the double "stepped-up" basis that community property receives when the first spouse dies [see I.R.C. § 1014(b)(6)]. If the surviving spouse sells the property after the death of the first spouse, this may cause greater gain to be realized on the sale and result in a substantially higher income tax burden for the surviving spouse [see § 60.12[4][c], [5]].

However, to overcome these limitations on the usefulness of joint tenancies in estate planning, spouses may hold title to property as "community property with right of survivorship." This form of title has all the tax benefits of community property, specifically a step-up in basis on both halves of the property [see § 60.12[4][c], [8]], and a right of survivorship that allows the property to avoid probate administration and its attendant costs [see § 60.12[5][e], [8]]. Effective July 1, 2001, spouses may take title to real and personal property as community property with a right of survivorship [Civ. Code § 682.1 (statute inapplicable to joint accounts in financial institutions governed by Prob. Code § 5100 et seq.); see [b], below].

The creation of a joint tenancy can result in gift tax liability unless each of the tenants contributes equally to the creation of the tenancy. Assume, for example, that a widowed mother decides to change the title to her home so that it will be held in the name of the mother and her adult daughter. She executes a deed from herself to herself and her daughter as joint tenants. If a true joint tenancy has been created, the daughter will have acquired a one-half interest in the property by gift, and the gift will be potentially subject to gift taxation. In cases of this kind, however, the joint tenancy is rarely created for the purpose of giving the daughter a present one-half interest in the home, but merely to avoid probate when the mother dies. In other words, the joint tenancy is created "for convenience only."

For gift tax purposes, local law must be consulted to determine whether a present interest in the property has been conveyed by a joint tenancy deed [see Bouchard v. C.I.R. (5th Cir. [T.C.] 1961) 285 F.2d 556, 556 (effect of joint tenancy deed determined by law of Maine)]. In California, when persons who are not married to each other take title to property as joint tenants, there is a rebuttable presumption that the property is held in joint tenancy [see Machado v. Machado (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 501, 506, 25 Cal. Rptr. 87, 375 P.2d 55; Estate of Zeisel (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 516, 523, 192 Cal. Rptr. 25]. However, the presumption can be overcome by evidence of a common understanding that the character of the property is to be other than joint tenancy [see Machado v. Machado (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 501, 506, 25 Cal. Rptr. 87, 375 P.2d 55; Estate of Zeisel (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 516, 523, 192 Cal. Rptr. 25]. If the joint tenants are husband and wife, the presumption is that the property is held as community property, even when the title is taken as joint tenants [Fam. Code § 2581]. Although the latter rule applies only for purposes of division of property on dissolution of marriage or legal separation [Fam. Code § 2581], proposals have been made to extend the rule so that it will apply on the death of one of the spouses.

[c] Multiple-Party Accounts

Many persons deposit funds into "multiple-party accounts" that are held in banks, savings and loan associations, or other financial institutions. California law recognizes three distinct types of multiple-party accounts. These are (1) joint accounts, (2) pay on death (or "P.O.D.") accounts, and (3) Totten trust accounts [Prob. Code § 5132].

Although these types of accounts differ in various particulars, they all share the common characteristic of permitting the transfer of the deposited funds to a designated person or persons when one of the depositors dies. If the account is a joint account [see Prob. Code § 5130], the funds will belong to the surviving depositor on the death of the first depositor unless there is clear and convincing evidence of a different intent [Prob. Code § 5302(a)]. If the account is a pay on death account [see Prob. Code § 5140], the funds belong, on the death of the depositor, to the designated pay on death payee or payees [Prob. Code § 5302(b)(2)]. If the account is a Totten trust account [see Prob. Code § 80], the funds belong, on the death of the depositor, to the designated beneficiary or beneficiaries unless there is clear and convincing evidence of a different intent [Prob. Code § 5302(c)(2)]. Any right of survivorship arising from the terms of the account or by statute, a beneficiary designation in a Totten trust account, or a P.O.D. payee designation cannot be changed by will [Prob. Code § 5302(e)].

Multiple-party accounts share the same estate planning virtues as joint tenancies. They are easy to establish and easy to terminate after the death of one of the parties. They may be established and terminated without the services of an attorney, and they completely avoid probate on the first death. However, they are subject to the same disadvantages as joint tenancies. Thus, they are inflexible arrangements; the deposited funds cannot be transferred to an inter vivos trust; and, on the death of the last surviving depositor, some other arrangement (whether by virtue of a will, a trust, or perhaps another multiple-party account) must be made for the transfer of the funds to the designated person or persons.

When one person contributes the funds to an account and title is taken jointly, in the names of that person and another, no gift tax liability is incurred until the funds are withdrawn by the other person without any obligation to account to the original contributor [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-1(h)(4)]. The creation of a pay on death account or a Totten trust account does not result in a gift, since the pay on death payee or beneficiary will not have any interest in the account until the death of the original depositor.

[d] Community Property With Right of Survivorship

Spouses may hold title to real and personal property as "community property with right of survivorship." This manner of holding title to property is particularly important in the estate planning context. This form of title has all the tax benefits of community property, specifically an automatic step-up in basis on both halves of the community property when the first spouse dies [Civ. Code § 682.1(a); see § 60.12[4][c]]. When real or personal property is held as community property with a right of survivorship and one spouse dies, the property passes to the surviving spouse without estate administration, avoiding the cost of probate, pursuant to the terms of the instrument and subject to the same procedures as property held in joint tenancy [Civ. Code § 682.1(a); see § 60.12[5][e]].

The statutory authority for holding property in this manner applies to instruments created on or after July 1, 2001 [Civ. Code § 682.1(c)]. However, the statute does not apply to certain joint accounts in financial institutions [Civ. Code § 682.1(b); see § 60.12[8][a]; see also [c], above]. For further discussion of this manner of holding title and documentation requirements, see § 60.12[8].

[5] Life Insurance

[a] In General

Life insurance can play an important part in an estate plan. Life insurance can provide liquidity for the payment of debts and expenses of administration after the client's death, and provide the client's dependents with support after the client's death. Life insurance is often a necessity when the client is young and has children (or a spouse and children) who depend on the client's earnings for their support. When the client's earnings cease, life insurance can provide those dependents with capital that can be invested to provide an income stream that will replace the client's lost earnings.

[b] Business Uses

Life insurance can also play an important role in planning for the orderly disposition of a business after the client's death. If the client is a partner in a business, for example, the life insurance can provide the funds necessary to buy out the client's partnership interest after the client dies. Often, this will permit the continued operation of a business that would otherwise have to be liquidated to pay off the deceased client's heirs and beneficiaries. When life insurance is used for this purpose, it should be coupled with a "buy-sell" agreement by terms of which the surviving partners agree to use the life insurance proceeds to purchase the deceased partner's interest in the partnership. This permits the surviving partners to continue to operate the business without interruption and guarantees that the deceased partner's estate (or inter vivos trust) will receive the proceeds in payment of the deceased partner's interest in the partnership.

[c] Irrevocable Life Insurance Trust

Life insurance may also be used to fund an irrevocable inter vivos trust designed to acquire and hold a life insurance policy whose proceeds will be paid to designated beneficiaries on the client's death without being included in the client's gross estate for federal estate tax purposes. A trust that accomplishes this purpose is commonly described as an "irrevocable life insurance trust," or just a "life insurance trust." For additional coverage of life insurance trusts, see Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts; see also California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 115, Life Insurance Trusts (Matthew Bender).

[6] Lifetime Gifts

[a] In General

Lifetime gifts can be useful estate planning tools. The annual gift tax exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2503(b) and discussion in § 60.14[2]], the exclusion for tuition and medical care payments [I.R.C. § 2503(e); see § 60.14[3]], and the unlimited marital deduction [I.R.C. § 2523; see § 60.14[4]], combine to provide many opportunities for wealth transferral during a client's lifetime.

If the client's financial condition permits, lifetime gifts may be a useful means of transferring wealth without either gift or estate taxation. Assume, for example, that the client is an elderly widow with a taxable estate of $1 million and that she has three married children. The client can give up to $11,000 per year to each of the children (the amount of the gift tax exclusion for gifts in calendar years 2002 through 2005; the amount of the exclusion may be adjusted annually for inflation in subsequent years) [I.R.C. § 2503(b); see § 60.14[2]], and an additional $11,000 per year to the three spouses. In this way, the client can give away up to $66,000 a year without any gift or estate tax liability. If the client is married, the client and the client's spouse can give away up to $132,000 a year to the same donees. This can be done if the gift property is community property (in which case the client and the client's spouse will each be treated as the donor of one-half of the gift), or if the gift property is separate property but the client and the client's spouse elect to split the gifts under I.R.C. § 2513.

[b] Basis of Gift Property

When gifts are made, it is important to consider the value of the gift property and the total value that may safely be given away without gift tax liability. It is also important to consider the basis of the property, particularly if the property has appreciated since it was acquired by the client and there is any possibility that the donee or donees will sell the property at some time in the future.

If property is acquired by gift, the basis for income tax purposes in the hands of the donee is the same as the basis in the hands of the donor [I.R.C. § 1015]. This is generally the cost of the property [I.R.C. § 1012]. If property is acquired by inheritance, however, the property acquires a new fair market value computed as of the date of death [I.R.C. § 1014]. If the property is later sold, a new date-of-death value may result in substantial income tax savings for the donees [see I.R.C. § 1001(c) (determination and recognition of gain or loss)].

[c] Potential for Appreciation

When a gift is made, it may also be useful to consider the appreciation potential of the gift property. If the property has a good potential for future appreciation, the potential estate tax savings will be greater, as the total value of the property removed from the client's estate as of the date of the client's death will be greater. If, on the other hand, the property has little potential for appreciation, it may make more sense for the client to keep the property until death. Of course, these considerations will vary from client to client and depend in large measure on the client's ability to make gifts and the projected tax savings that will result from the gifts.

[7] Durable Powers of Attorney

[a] In General

A power of attorney is a written instrument by which one person (called the "principal") authorizes another person (called the "attorney in fact" or "agent") to act on his or her behalf [Prob. Code § 4022; see Prob. Code §§ 4014 ("attorney in fact" defined), 4026 ("principal" defined)]. A durable power of attorney is a power of attorney that contains words showing the intent of the principal that the attorney in fact's authority will be exercisable notwithstanding the principal's later incapacity [Prob. Code § 4124]. In this respect, a durable power of attorney differs from a conventional power of attorney, under which the authority of the attorney in fact terminates when the principal becomes incapacitated [Civ. Code § 2356(a)(3)]. Under a durable power of attorney, all acts done by the attorney in fact during the principal's incapacity have the same effect as if the principal had capacity [Prob. Code § 4125].

Unless a power states a time of termination, the authority of attorney in fact is exercisable notwithstanding any lapse of time since execution of the power [Prob. Code § 4127].

For general coverage of durable powers of attorney, including forms for use in drafting durable powers of attorney for property management, durable powers of attorney for health care, and related documents, see Ch. 68, Durable Powers of Attorney. See also California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 150, Durable Powers of Attorney for Health Care, and Ch. 151, Durable Powers of Attorney for Property Management (Matthew Bender).

[b] Types

There are two basic types of durable powers of attorney: durable powers of attorney for health care and durable powers of attorney for property management. A durable power of attorney for health care authorizes the attorney in fact to make health care decisions for the principal [Prob. Code §§ 4123(d), 4650 (repealed effective July 1, 2000); Prob. Code §§ 4600-4805 (Health Care Decisions Law; effective July 1, 2000)]. A durable power of attorney for property management authorizes the attorney in fact to make other types of decisions for the principal [see Prob. Code §§ 4123(a), (b), (c), 4124, 4125].

A durable power of attorney may confer present authority on the attorney in fact, or it may confer authority on the attorney in fact only at a specified future time, or on the occurrence of a specified future event or contingency, such as the subsequent incapacity of the principal [Prob. Code § 4030]. When the power of attorney confers present authority on the attorney in fact it must contain the words "This power of attorney shall not be affected by subsequent incapacity of the principal," or similar words [Prob. Code § 4124(a), (c)]. When it confers authority only in the event of the principal's subsequent incapacity, it must state "This power of attorney shall become effective upon the incapacity of the principal," or similar words [Prob. Code § 4124(b), (c)].

A power of attorney that becomes effective only at a specified future time or on the occurrence of a specified future event or contingency is known as a "springing power of attorney" [Prob. Code § 4030]. Although springing powers of attorney may be either durable or nondurable [see Prob. Code § 4030], they are typically durable, since they are usually created for the purpose of conferring authority on the attorney in fact only if the principal becomes incapacitated at a later date.

[c] As Creatures of Statute

Durable powers of attorney are the creatures of statute. The California durable power of attorney statutes were first enacted in 1979 [Stats. 1979, ch. 234] and have been revised several times since then. Effective January 1, 1995, a comprehensive set of Probate Code sections governs the creation, use, effect, and termination of powers of attorney [see Prob. Code § 4000 et seq., as added by Stats. 1994, ch. 307]. Known as the Power of Attorney Law, these statutes replaced statutory provisions formerly included in the Civil Code [see former Civ. Code §§ 2400-2407, 2430-2445, 2475-2499.5, repealed by Stats. 1994, ch. 307]. The Power of Attorney Law generally applies to both durable and nondurable powers of attorney [see Prob. Code § 4050].

Despite the comprehensive scope of the Power of Attorney Law, it is not completely severed from the general law of agency. Powers of attorney are a type of agency, and the Power of Attorney Law recognizes that fact by explicitly providing that they are subject to the general rules of agency, except to the extent that the Power of Attorney Law provides its own rules [Prob. Code § 4051; see Civ. Code §§ 2295-2400 (agency); see also Comprehensive Power of Attorney Law, 24 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 111, 121 (1994)].

Durable powers of attorney for health care formerly were regulated by special provisions of the Power of Attorney Law [see Prob. Code §§ 4600-4779 (repealed effective July 1, 2000)]. However, effective July 1, 2000, durable powers of attorney are no longer subject to the Power of Attorney law [Prob. Code § 4050(a)(1)] and are instead treated as a species of "advance health care directive" [see Prob. Code § 4605] governed by the Health Care Decisions Law [Prob. Code §§ 4050(a)(1), 4651(a); see Prob. Code §§ 4600-4805 (effective July 1, 2000)].

For more detailed discussion of durable powers of attorney for property management, see Ch. 68, Durable Powers of Attorney. Rules governing powers of attorney generally are discussed in Ch. 98, Powers of Attorney.

[d] Uses

Durable powers of attorney are widely used in modern estate planning. In fact, most estate planners regard them as an integral component of the complete estate plan, just as a will or (in many cases) a trust are key components of that plan. It is commonplace for estate planners to prepare a durable power of attorney for property management at the same time as a will, trust, or other estate planning documents. By authorizing an attorney in fact to act for and on behalf of the principal even when the principal is incapacitated, a durable power of attorney for property management can obviate the need for a conservatorship or even a trust. If the client's only concern is to make sure that his or her property will be properly managed in the event the client becomes incapacitated, a durable power of attorney for property management will often satisfy this concern. If the client has properly executed a durable power of attorney for property management, it may be unnecessary for the client also to establish a revocable inter vivos ("living") trust [see § 60.17[2]]. A properly executed durable power of attorney for health care may also obviate the need for a conservatorship of the person.

In appropriate circumstances, a durable power of attorney may be used to give the attorney in fact authority to make personal care decisions for the principal, to contract with respect to the principal's property, to plan and complete sales of the principal's property, and to make tax planning decisions for the principal [see Prob. Code § 4123(a)-(c)]. However, some acts are so important that, under the Power of Attorney Law, the attorney in fact will not be deemed to have authority to perform them unless the power of attorney specifically authorizes the attorney in fact to do so. Thus, the attorney in fact may not create, modify, or revoke a trust on behalf of the principal, make gifts of the principal's property, exercise the right to make a disclaimer on behalf of the principal, create or change survivorship interests in the principal's property, make or change the designation of beneficiaries to receive property or other rights on the principal's death, or make a loan to the attorney in fact, unless the power of attorney expressly allows the attorney in fact to do so [Prob. Code § 4264].

[8] Contracts

[a] In General

Various types of contracts can have an effect on a client's estate plan. The most obvious of these is the contract to make a will, not to revoke a will, or to die intestate [see [b], below]. However, other contracts that may also have important estate-planning consequences are transmutation agreements, buy-sell agreements, premarital (or antenuptial) agreements, and marital settlement agreements. The most important estate planning uses of transmutation agreements and buy-sell agreements are discussed in this subsection [see [c], [d], below]. For general coverage of premarital agreements, see Ch. 108, Antenuptial Agreements . For marital settlement agreements, see Chs. 120, Complete Marital Settlement Agreements , and 121, Provisions for Division of Property .

[b] Contract To Make or Not to Revoke a Will or Other Instrument

Contracts to make (or not to revoke) a will or devise are generally valid in California [ Redke v. Silvertrust (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 94, 100, 98 Cal. Rptr. 293, 490 P.2d 805 , cert. denied, 405 U.S. 1041 ; Estate of Watson (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 569, 573, 223 Cal. Rptr. 14 ]. Since the existence and terms of such a contract are generally put in issue only after one of the parties has died, however, special requirements for the proof of the contract are set forth in the Probate Code.

Prob. Code § 21700(a) provides that a contract to make a will or devise or other instrument, or not to revoke a will or devise or other instrument, or to die intestate (if made after January 1, 2001), can be established only by one of the following:

- Provisions of a will or other instrument stating material provisions of the contract;
- An express reference in a will or other instrument to a contract and extrinsic evidence proving the terms of the contract;
- A writing signed by the decedent evidencing the contract;
- Clear and convincing evidence of an agreement between the decedent and the claimant or a promise by the decedent to the claimant that is enforceable in equity; or
- Clear and convincing evidence of an agreement between the decedent and another person for the benefit of the claimant or a promise by the decedent to another person for the benefit of the claimant that is enforceable in equity.

Case law makes it clear that a party may recover as third-party beneficiary of a contract to make (or not to revoke) a will only if the party was an intended beneficiary of the contract. It is not sufficient to show merely that the party was incidentally named in the contract, or would have derived some benefit from a will made pursuant to the contract. An intent to benefit the claimant must appear from the contract itself [ Kalmanovitz v. Bitting (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 311, 314-315, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 332 ].

Notwithstanding their validity, contracts to make (or not to revoke) a will or devise are generally avoided by most estate planners, because they are difficult to enforce, can result in the loss of valuable tax benefits, and often lead to costly and time-consuming litigation.

A contract to make a will is often followed by the execution of joint or mutual wills. Joint and mutual wills frequently devise property to one of the surviving parties and provide that, upon the death of that party, the property will pass to another person or persons. When this is done, the interest of the survivor is a life estate and the interests of the others are remainders [ Estate of Mulholland (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 392, 396, 97 Cal. Rptr. 617 ; Estate of Cooper (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 70, 79, 78 Cal. Rptr. 740 ]. This is because a devise of property that provides that the property must go to another person on the death of the first devisee transfers only a life estate, even when the words "life estate" are not used in the devise [ Estate of Mulholland (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 392, 397, 97 Cal. Rptr. 617 ; Estate of Cooper (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 70, 79, 78 Cal. Rptr. 740 ].

An action to enforce a claim that arises from an oral or written promise or agreement made on or after January 1, 2001, for distribution from an estate or trust or under another instrument, must be brought within one year after the date of death. Any otherwise applicable period of limitations does not apply [Code Civ. Proc. § 355.3].

Even when a contract to make a will can be enforced, it can have very unfavorable results. Assume, for example, that a husband and wife enter into a contract that provides that the first spouse to die will leave all of his or her property to the survivor and that the surviving spouse will leave all of his or her property to the spouses' children. Assume further that each spouse has an estate that is worth more than the "applicable exclusion amount" available in the year of the first spouses death [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]]. When the first spouse dies, all of the property will pass to the surviving spouse. If the contract is enforceable, however, the surviving spouse's interest in the property will be only a life estate. A life estate is a "terminable interest" and thus ineligible for the federal estate tax marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(1); Treas. Reg. § 20.2056(b)-1(b)]. A substantial estate tax will thus be payable on the death of the first spouse. Further, none of the property will be in a bypass trust and thus none of it will qualify for the tax-saving advantages that a bypass trust can afford on the death of the surviving spouse, so even more substantial estate taxes will be payable on the death of the surviving spouse. All of these unfavorable results could be avoided by the simple expedient of transferring the property through a revocable inter vivos ("living") trust and avoiding the cumbersome and dangerous mechanism of a contract to make a will. For a general discussion of the marital deduction, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions .

[c] Transmutation Agreement

Married persons sometimes enter into contracts designed to change the character of their property from separate property to community property or vice versa. Contracts of this kind are generally described as "transmutation agreements" [see Fam. Code §§ 850-853]. By statute, California law specifically sanctions agreements that transmute community property to the separate property of either spouse, separate property of either spouse to community property, or separate property of one spouse to the separate property of the other spouse [see Fam. Code § 850].

Transmutation agreements are used by estate planners for various purposes. A transmutation agreement may, for example, be designed to protect one or both of the spouses from creditors, to reorder inheritance rights in the spouses' property, or to achieve specified tax advantages.

Although transmutation agreements are generally governed by the same rules as other contracts, they are subject to additional rules applicable to property contracts between a husband and wife [see Fam. Code § 721(b)]. Under these rules, transactions between a husband and wife are subject to the general rules governing fiduciary relationships that control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other [Fam. Code § 721(b)]. Further, most transmutation agreements made on or after January 1, 1985, must be in writing and signed by the spouse whose interest in the property is adversely affected [Fam. Code § 852(a)]; but see Fam. Code § 852(c) (exception for gifts between spouses of clothing, wearing apparel, jewelry, and other tangible articles of a personal nature)].

An attorney who is consulted by clients who wish to enter into a transmutation agreement must remember his or her ethical responsibility to avoid conflicts of interest. Transmutation agreements almost always raise actual or potential conflicts between the spouses. An attorney cannot ethically represent two clients who have conflicting or potentially conflicting interests, unless the attorney first explains the facts giving rise to the conflict and obtains written authorization from the clients to proceed with the dual representation [Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-310(B)]; see § 60.201[1][b]]. For general coverage of the ethical responsibilities of estate planning attorneys, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 4, Ethical Considerations and Professional Responsibility (Matthew Bender).

[d] Buy-Sell Agreement

A buy-sell agreement is a contract under which the surviving owners of a business agree to purchase the interest of a withdrawing or deceased owner of the same business [Black's Law Dictionary (5th ed. 1979) at 181]. The business may be organized as a partnership or a corporation, and the parties may be partners or shareholders. Buy-sell agreements are also known as "buyout agreements."

Buy-sell agreements can be very useful estate planning tools. If the client is a partner or shareholder in a closely held corporation, some provision should be made for the continuation of the business after the client's death. This will most typically be accomplished by setting up a buy-sell agreement that establishes terms and conditions under which the surviving partners or shareholders will purchase the deceased partner's or shareholder's interest in the business. The funds for the purchase will often be provided by a life insurance policy on the life of the deceased partner or shareholder that calls for the death benefits to be paid to the surviving partners or shareholders [for estate planning uses of life insurance, see § 60.17[5]].

Another variation of the buy-sell agreement is the so-called "entity agreement," under which the business entity itself (rather than the individual partners or shareholders) agrees to purchase the deceased partner's or shareholder's interest in the business. An entity agreement may also be funded by the proceeds of a life insurance policy on the life of the deceased partner or shareholder with the death benefits payable to the entity.

An estate plan that simply provides for the transfer of a client's interest in a business organized as a partnership or a closely held corporation after the client's death without setting up an appropriate buy-sell mechanism is inadequate and will not adequately address the needs of either the business or the deceased partner's or shareholder's estate in the event of the deceased partner's or shareholder's death.

For further discussion of buy-sell agreements, with illustrative forms, see Ch. 8D, Buy-Sell Agreements. For discussion of the devise of business interests, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 29, Devises of Business Interests (Matthew Bender). For the legal requisites of partnership agreements, and buy-sell agreements for partnerships, see Ch. 15, Part A, Formation of General Partnerships; see also Ballantine & Sterling, California Corporation Laws, Ch. 24, Partnerships (Matthew Bender).

[9] Uniform TOD Security Registration Act

[a] Transfer of Securities Without Probate

Under the Uniform TOD Security Registration Act, effective January 1, 1999 [Prob. Code § 5512], securities may be registered in "beneficiary form" to be transferrable on death outside of probate administration [Prob. Code § 5500 et seq.]. Designation of a T.O.D. beneficiary on a registration in beneficiary form has no effect on ownership until the owner's death, and registration in beneficiary form may be canceled or changed at any time by the sole owner (or in the case of multiple ownership by all then surviving owners) without the consent of the beneficiary [Prob. Code § 5506]. Transfer on death resulting from registration in beneficiary form is not testamentary; it is effective by reason of the contract regarding the registration between the owner and the registering entity pursuant to the Act [Prob. Code § 5509(a)]. The Act provides protection for entities registering securities in beneficiary form, including discharge from claims by the estate, creditors, heirs, or devisees of a deceased owner who registered the security [see Prob. Code § 5508]. However, the Act does not limit the rights of a surviving spouse or creditors against beneficiaries and transferees under other laws [Prob. Code § 5509(b)].

Registration in beneficiary form means registration of the security indicating the present owner and the intention of the owner regarding the person who will become the owner of the security on the death of the present owner [Prob. Code § 5501(a) (definition of "beneficiary form")]. A security is registered in beneficiary form when the registration includes a designation of a beneficiary to take ownership at the death of the present owner or the deaths of multiple present owners, whether the security is evidenced by certificate or account [Prob. Code § 5504]. In the case of multiple ownership, only individuals whose registration shows multiple ownership with right of survivorship, that is, in joint tenancy, tenancy by the entirety or community property in survivorship form, may obtain registration in beneficiary form. [Prob. Code § 5502]. Registration in beneficiary form is shown by the words "transfer on death" or "pay on death" or the abbreviations "T.O.D." or "P.O.D." after the name of the registered owner and before the name of the beneficiary [Prob. Code § 5505].

The registering entity may establish terms and conditions for requests for registration in beneficiary form and implementation of registration. [see Prob. Code § 5512].

[c] Death of Owner

On the death of the sole owner or the last to die of multiple owners, ownership of securities registered in beneficiary form passes to the beneficiary or beneficiaries who survive all owners. On proof of death of all owners and compliance with applicable requirements of the registering entity, the security may be reregistered in the name of the beneficiary. Until division of the security after the death of all owners, multiple beneficiaries hold their interests as tenants in common. If no beneficiary survives the death of the owner or multiple owners, the security belongs to the estate of the deceased sole owner or the estate of the last to die of all multiple owners [Prob. Code § 5507].

[10] Nonprobate Transfers to a Former Spouse*[a] In General

Nonprobate transfers are a common and efficient way of transferring property to a surviving spouse at death. The Probate Code addresses nonprobate transfers to a former spouse of a divorced individual. The provisions affecting such transfers apply to instruments executed before, on, and after January 1, 2002. However, the provisions do not apply to an instrument if either of the following apply [Prob. Code § 5604]:

- The person making the nonprobate transfer or creating the joint tenancy dies before the January 1, 2002; or
- The dissolution of marriage or other event that terminates the status of the nonprobate transfer beneficiary or joint tenant as a surviving spouse occurs before January 1, 2002.

A nonprobate transfer to a decedent's former spouse under an instrument executed before or during the marriage fails if, at the time of death, the transferee is no longer the decedent's surviving spouse, due to annulment or dissolution of the marriage [Prob. Code § 5600(a)]. Such a transfer will not fail, however, if the transfer is not subject to revocation at the time of death, there is clear and convincing evidence that the decedent intended to preserve the transfer to the former spouse, or a court order that the transfer be maintained is in effect [Prob. Code § 5600(b)]. This provision does not affect the court's authority to order a party for dissolution or annulment of a marriage to maintain the former spouse as a beneficiary on any nonprobate transfer [Prob. Code § 5603]. In the case of a nonprobate transfer that fails under this provision, the instrument of transfer is treated as if the former spouse did not survive the transferor [Prob. Code § 5600(c)].

Nonprobate transfers do not include life insurance policies, but do include contracts of employment, bonds, mortgages, promissory notes, certificated or uncertificated securities, account agreements, custodial agreements, deposit agreements, compensation plans, pension plans, individual retirement plans, employee benefit plans, trusts, conveyances, deeds of gift, marital property agreements, similar written instruments, or instruments, not including wills, that operate on death and confer a power of appointment or name a trustee [Prob. Code § 5600(e); see Prob. Code § 5000(a)].

[c] Joint Tenancy

A joint tenancy created between a decedent and the decedent's former spouse is severed as to the decedent's interest if it was created before or during marriage and, at the time of death, the former spouse is not the decedent's surviving spouse, due to annulment or dissolution of marriage [Prob. Code § 5601(a)]. A joint tenancy is not severed, however, if it is not subject to severance by the decedent at the time of his or her death or if there is clear and convincing evidence that the decedent intended to preserve the joint tenancy in favor of the former spouse [Prob. Code § 5601(b)]. This provision does not affect the rights of a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer who relies on an apparent severance or lacks knowledge of a severance [Prob. Code § 5601(c)]. Joint tenancies include property held as community property with right of survivorship [Prob. Code § 5601(d); see Civ. Code § 682.1]. This provision does not affect the court's authority to order a party for dissolution or annulment of a marriage to preserve a joint tenancy [Prob. Code § 5603].

For additional discussion of the status of joint tenancy property held after a marital dissolution, see § 60.12[5][d].

[d] Purchaser or Encumbrancer's Rights

The Probate Code provision providing for the failure of a nonprobate transfer to a former spouse does not affect the rights of a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer who in good faith relies on an apparent failure of a transfer or lacks knowledge of a failed transfer [Prob. Code § 5600(d)]. Similarly, the provision severing a joint tenancy between a decedent and his or her former spouse does not affect the rights of a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer who in good faith relies on an apparent severance or lacks knowledge of a severance [Prob. Code § 5601(c)]. In either case, the rights of a purchaser or encumbrancer of real property who in good faith relies on an affidavit or declaration under penalties of perjury are protected. The affidavit or declaration may be recorded and must contain the following information [Prob. Code § 5602(a), (c)]:

- The decedent's name.
- The date and place of the decedent's death.
- A description of the real property transferred to the affiant or declarant by an instrument making a nonprobate transfer or by operation of joint tenancy survivorship.
- Either that the affiant or declarant is the surviving spouse of the decedent, or that the affiant or declarant is not the surviving spouse of the decedent, but the rights of the affiant or declarant to the described property are not affected by Probate Code §§ 5600 or 5601.

A person relying on an affidavit or declaration has no duty to inquire into the truth of the matters stated therein [Prob. Code § 5602(b)].

[1] In General

The Probate Code regulates the transfer of estate planning and other documents held by an attorney for safekeeping [Prob. Code §§ 700-735]. Documents covered include original wills, trusts, codicils, and powers of attorney [see Prob. Code § 704]. An attorney must use ordinary care for preserving an estate planning document, whether or not consideration is given, must hold a document in a safe, vault, safe-deposit box, or other secure place where it will be reasonably protected against loss or destruction [Prob. Code § 710], and must notify the person who deposited the document if it is lost or destroyed [see Prob. Code § 711; see also Prob. Code §§ 702, 703 ("deposit" and "depositor" defined)]. However, an attorney who fails to satisfy the required standard of care is not liable for loss or destruction if (1) the depositor has actual notice of the loss or destruction and a reasonable opportunity to replace the document and (2) the attorney offers without charge either to assist the depositor in replacing the document, or to prepare a substantially similar document and assist in its execution [Prob. Code § 712]. In addition, accepting a document for safekeeping does not require the attorney to inquire into the contents, validity, or correctness of any information in the document or to provide continuing legal services to the depositor or to any beneficiary under the document, unless, of course, the attorney holding the document for safekeeping also drafted the document [see Prob. Code § 713].

If provided in a written agreement signed by the person depositing a document for safekeeping, an attorney may charge for compensation and expenses incurred in connection with holding the document [Prob. Code § 714(a)]. An attorney may also give written notice to, and obtain written acknowledgment from, a depositor that a document has been accepted for safekeeping and that the depositor must notify the attorney of any address change [see Prob. Code § 715; see also § 60.208]. Utilizing the notice and acknowledgment has the effect of changing the standard of care for preserving a document from "ordinary care" to "slight care" [see Prob. Code §§ 710, 716].

A depositor may terminate a deposit on demand, in which case the attorney must deliver the document to the depositor [Prob. Code § 720]. However, an attorney with whom a document has been placed for safekeeping may only terminate the deposit in accordance with one of the methods set forth by statute [Prob. Code § 730; see Prob. Code §§ 731-735 (methods and procedures for terminating deposit by attorney)]. These methods include [Prob. Code § 731]:

- Personal delivery of the document to the depositor;
- Mailing the document to the depositor's last known address, by registered or certified mail with return receipt requested, and receiving a signed receipt; or
- Another method agreed on by the depositor and attorney.

An attorney may also terminate a deposit by transferring the document to another attorney [Prob. Code § 732(b)]. However, an attorney may terminate by this method only if he or she has mailed notice to reclaim the document to the depositor's last known address and the depositor has failed to reclaim the document within 90 days of the mailing [Prob. Code § 732(a)]. In addition, an attorney transferring a document must file a notice of transfer with the State Bar [Prob. Code § 733].

If the document held for safekeeping is a will, and the attorney has actual notice that the depositor died, the attorney may terminate the deposit only by personal delivery of the document to the depositor's personal representative [Prob. Code §§ 732(f), 734(a)]. If the attorney has actual notice of the depositor's death but does not have actual notice that a personal representative has been appointed for the depositor, the attorney may terminate the deposit only as provided in Prob. Code § 8200, which sets forth the provisions governing a will's delivery to the superior court and the executor named in the will after the testator's death [Prob. Code § 734(b)]. If the document is a trust, after the depositor's death the attorney may terminate the deposit by personal delivery of the document to the depositor's personal representative or to the trustee named in the trust [Prob. Code § 734(c)].

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-60 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 60.19

§ 60.19 Intestate Succession

[1] Governing Law

When a decedent dies intestate (that is, without a will), or when any property is not effectively disposed of by the will of a testate decedent, the property not disposed of by will is distributed to the decedent's heirs according to the laws of intestate succession [see Prob. Code § 6400]. These laws are set out in Prob. Code §§ 6400-6455, and are discussed in this section. They apply to estates of decedents dying on or after January 1, 1985 [Prob. Code § 6414(a), (b)]. The intestate succession of a decedent who died before that date is governed by former Prob. Code §§ 200-258 (repealed by Stats. 1983, ch. 842, operative, January 1, 1985) [Prob. Code §§ 3, 6414(a), (c)]. If there is no taker of the intestate estate under the provisions of Prob. Code §§ 6400-6455, the property escheats to the state as provided in Prob. Code §§ 6800-6806 [Prob. Code § 6404]. The right to succession is defined by statute [ Estate of Griswold (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 904, 907, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 24 P.3d 1191 ]. Courts have no authority to change the statutory rules governing the law of succession [ Estate of McCrary (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 100, 102, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 504 ].

[a] Heirs, Child, Parent, and Issue

"Heirs," as used in the Probate Code, means the persons, including the surviving spouse who are entitled under the statutes of intestate succession to a decedent's property [Prob. Code § 44; see [10], [11], below]. "Child" means any individual entitled to take as a child by intestate succession from the parent whose relationship is involved [Prob. Code § 26]. "Parent" means any individual entitled to take as a parent by intestate succession from the child whose relationship is involved [Prob. Code § 54]. "Issue" of a person means all of his or her lineal descendants of all generations, with the relationship of parent and child at each generation being determined by the definitions of child and parent [Prob. Code § 50]. For a discussion of establishing the parent-child relationship for the purpose of intestate succession, see [4], below.

[b] Predeceased Spouse

For purposes of intestate succession [see [11], below], a "predeceased spouse" means a person who died before the decedent while married to the decedent, but does not include the following [Prob. Code § 59]:

- A person who obtains or consents to a final decree or judgment of dissolution of marriage from the decedent or a final decree or judgment of annulment of their marriage, which decree or judgment is not recognized as valid in California, unless they subsequently participate in a marriage ceremony purporting to marry each to the other or subsequently live together as husband and wife.
- A person who, following a decree or judgment of dissolution or annulment of marriage obtained by the decedent, participates in a marriage ceremony to a third person.
- A person who was a party to a valid proceeding concluded by an order purporting to terminate all marital property rights.

[c] Surviving Spouse

For purposes of intestate succession [see [8], below], a "surviving spouse" does not include any of the following [Prob. Code § 78]:

- A person whose marriage to the decedent has been dissolved or annulled, unless, by virtue of a subsequent marriage, the person is married to the decedent at the time of death.
- A person who obtains or consents to a final decree or judgment of dissolution of marriage from the decedent or a final decree or judgment of annulment of their marriage, which decree or judgment is not recognized as valid in California, unless they subsequently participate in a marriage ceremony purporting to marry each to the other or subsequently live together as husband and wife.
- A person who, following a decree or judgment of dissolution or annulment of marriage obtained by the decedent, participates in a marriage ceremony with a third person.
- A person who was a party to a valid proceeding concluded by an order purporting to terminate all marital property rights. Under this provision, a spouse who obtains a judgment of legal separation that resolves the parties' marital property rights does not qualify as a "surviving spouse" on the subsequent death of the other spouse for purposes of intestate succession [ Estate of McDaniel (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 458, 463, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 907 ].

In addition, the following individuals do not qualify as a "surviving spouse" for purposes of intestate succession:

- A spouse who has waived his or her rights to take from the decedent's estate by entering into a written property settlement agreement [see Prob. Code §§ 140-147; Estate of Lahey (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1058 fn. 2, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30 ].
- An undivorced bigamous spouse with respect to the estate of his or her legally recognized first spouse [ Estate of Anderson (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 436, 441-444, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 266 (inheritance is precluded by doctrine of judicial estoppel when claimant states in application for marriage license to second spouse that he or she has never been married)].
- An individual who married the decedent in a purported marriage ceremony that did not result in a valid marriage, because the parties had not obtained a marriage license [see Estate of DePasse (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 92, 107, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 143 (when day before decedent's death from terminal illness, hospital chaplain performed marriage ceremony for petitioner and decedent, but they had not obtained marriage license because of imminence of her death, there was no valid marriage and petitioner could not qualify as surviving spouse)].

[d] Domestic Partner

A "domestic partner" is one of two persons who have filed a declaration of domestic partnership with the Secretary of State under Fam. Code § 297 et seq., provided that the domestic partnership has not been terminated under Fam. Code § 299 [Prob. Code § 37(a)]; for discussion and the declaration of domestic partnership form, see Ch. 110, Nonmarital Cohabitation Agreements and Related Transactions, §§ 110.50 et seq., 110.220 et seq.]. Notwithstanding Fam. Code § 299, if a domestic partnership is terminated by the death of one of the partners and neither partner filed a notice of termination of the domestic partnership before the date of the decedent's death, the domestic partner who survives the deceased is a "surviving domestic partner" and is entitled to the rights of a surviving domestic partner as provided in the Probate Code [Prob. Code § 37(b)]. This includes the right to an intestate share of the deceased partner's separate property [Prob. Code § 6401(c) (effective July 1, 2003); see [9], below].

[3] Inheritance by Relatives of the Halfblood, Afterborn Relatives, and Aliens

Relatives of the halfblood generally inherit the same share they would inherit if they were of the whole blood [Prob. Code § 6406]. Relatives of the decedent conceived before the decedent's death and born thereafter inherit as if they had been born in the decedent's lifetime [Prob. Code § 6407]. A person is not disqualified to take as an heir because the person, or persons through he or she claims, is or has been an alien [Prob. Code § 6411].

[4] Establishing Parent-Child Relationship for Purpose of Intestate Succession

[a] Natural Parent

The relationship of parent and child exists, for the purpose of intestate succession, between a person and the person's natural parents, regardless of the parents' marital status [Prob. Code § 6450(a)]. In determining whether a parent is a "natural parent," the following rules apply:

- A natural parent and child relationship is established if that relationship is presumed and not rebutted under the Uniform Parentage Act (Fam. Code § 7600 et seq.) [Prob. Code § 6453(a)]. For example:
  - A man is presumed to be the natural father of a child if he receives the child into his home and openly holds the child out as his natural child [Fam. Code § 7611(d)].
  - A woman may also be a presumed mother of a child of her lesbian partner if they agree to raise the child together, she receives the child into her home, and she holds the child out as her natural child [see Elisa B. v. Superior Court (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 108, 125, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 46, 117 P.3d 660 (both of child's parents can be women, and woman with no biological connection to child can be child's presumed mother under Fam. Code § 7611(d)); see also K.M. v. E.G. (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 130, 143, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 61, 117 P.3d 673 (when woman provides ova to her lesbian partner so that partner can bear child who will be raised in their joint home, both women are child's parents); Kristine H. v. Lisa R. (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 156, 166, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 81, 117 P.3d 690 (lesbian mother of child was estopped from challenging validity of stipulated judgment declaring that she and her lesbian partner were child's parents)].
  - A man who acknowledges a child conceived during marriage is entitled to inherit as a natural parent, regardless of the man's alleged failure to pay child support or the lack of a meaningful parent-child relationship [see Estate of Shellenbarger, (2008) Cal. App. 4th 894, 896; 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 862 (court cannot on principles of equity disinherit a natural parent who abandons a child who later dies intestate where decedent was conceived during parent's marriage and father acknowledged paternity)].

■ A natural parent and child relationship may be established under any provision of the Uniform Parentage Act, except that the relationship may not be established by an action under Fam. Code § 7630(c) unless one of the following conditions exists [Prob. Code § 6453(b)]:

■ A court order was entered during the father's lifetime declaring paternity [see Estate of Griswold (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 904, 921-924, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 24 P.3d 1191 (judgment in bastardy proceeding, in which decedent's biological father confessed paternity, established father as decedent's natural parent for purposes of intestate succession)]. A finding in a proceeding for dissolution of marriage between the decedent and his or her spouse that the claimant is their child establishes, for the purpose of intestate succession, that the claimant is the decedent's issue [ Weir v. Ferreira (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 1518-1522, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 33 ].

■ Paternity is established by clear and convincing evidence that the father has openly held out the child as his own [see, e.g., Estate of Burden (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1030; 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 390 (decedent's acknowledgements during his lifetime of son born out of wedlock, which included (1) decedent's written acknowledgement that he was a party to conception; (2) that he had asked the child's mother to marry him; and (3) his admissions to his own mother, brother, and sister, as well as to the child himself and his mother, that the child was the decedent's son, were sufficient to meet the evidentiary burden of Prob. Code § 6453(b)(2))].

■ It was impossible for the father to hold out the child as his own and paternity is established by clear and convincing evidence. This alternative does not require proof of any specified conduct by the father, but merely proof that he is (or was) the child's biological father [ Cheyanna M. v. A.C. Nielsen Co. (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 855, 867, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 (statute does not limit type or source of permissible evidence)]. It governs a situation in which the father dies before the child is born [ Cheyanna M. v. A.C. Nielsen Co. (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 855, 870, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 ].

■ A natural parent and child relationship may be established for a posthumously conceived child under Prob. Code § 249.5 [Prob. Code § 6453(c); see [e], below].

If a child is born out of wedlock, neither a natural parent nor a relative of that parent inherits from or through the child on the basis of the parent and child relationship between that parent and the child, unless the parent or a relative of the parent acknowledged the child and contributed to the support or care of the child [Prob. Code § 6452]. For example, when the natural father of a decedent who was born out of wedlock acknowledged the decedent as his child by confessing to paternity in court and contributed to his support, the decedent's half siblings were entitled to inherit from the decedent's estate through their father who was also deceased [see Estate of Griswold (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 904, 910-920, 924, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 24 P.3d 1191 (no requirement that father receive child into his or her home or have personal contact with child)].

A child is no longer considered the "issue" of his or her natural parent for purposes of intestate succession when the parental rights of the parent have been terminated [ Jackson v. Fitzgibbons (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 329, 335-336, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 478 ].

[b] Adoptive Parent

The relationship of parent and child exists, for the purpose of intestate succession, between an adopted person and his or her adopting parent or parents [Prob. Code § 6450(b)].

An adoption severs the relationship of parent and child between an adopted person and a natural parent of the adopted person, unless the natural parent and the adopted person lived together at any time as parent and child (or the natural parent was married to or cohabiting with the other natural parent at the time the person was conceived and died before the person's birth), and the adoption was by the spouse of either of the natural parents or after the death of either of the natural parents [Prob. Code § 6451(a)]. Neither a natural parent nor a relative of a natural parent, except for a wholeblood sibling of the adopted person or the issue of that sibling, inherits from or through the adopted person on the basis of a parent and child relationship between the adopted person and that natural parent, unless the adoption is by the spouse or surviving spouse of that parent [Prob. Code § 6451(b)]. A prior adoptive parent and child relationship is treated as a natural parent and child relationship [Prob. Code § 6451(c)].

The relationship of parent and child exists, for the purpose of intestate succession, between a person and the person's foster parent or stepparent if (1) the relationship began during the person's minority and continued throughout the joint lifetimes of the person and the person's foster parent or stepparent, and (2) it is established by clear and convincing evidence that the foster parent or stepparent would have adopted the person but for a legal barrier [Prob. Code § 6454]. The barrier to adoption must have begun during the child's minority and have continued throughout the joint lifetimes of the child and the decedent [ Estate of Joseph (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 203, 211-212, 216-217, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 619, 949 P.2d 472 (not sufficient that barrier only existed at time when adoption was contemplated or attempted; legal barrier must have continued until decedent's death or at least until such point in time before death as to amount to a factual barrier to adoption in the period remaining)]. The benefits of Prob. Code § 6454 are not limited to minors, but also apply to adult foster children or stepchildren [ Estate of Joseph (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 203, 214, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 619, 949 P.2d 472 ].

[d] Equitable Adoption

These statutes do not affect or limit application of the judicial doctrine of equitable adoption for the benefit of the child or the child's issue [Prob. Code § 6455; see In re Marriage of Lewis & Goetz (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 514, 250 Cal. Rptr. 30 (applying doctrine)]. The doctrine allows a person who was accepted and treated as a natural or adopted child, and as to whom adoption was promised or contemplated but never performed, to share in inheriting the property of the equitable "parent" [ Estate of Ford (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 160, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 541, 82 P.3d 747 ]. Under the doctrine, an equitable adoption may be found to exist based on an express contract to adopt [see Estate of Cleveland (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1700, 1713 fn. 15, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 590 ].

Although California decisions have explained equitable adoption as the specific enforcement of a contract to adopt, the doctrine rests less on ordinary rules of contract law than on considerations of fairness and intent [ Estate of Ford (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 160, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 541, 82 P.3d 747 ]. However, the California law of equitable adoption does not recognize an estoppel arising merely from the existence of a family relationship between the decedent and the claimant. While a person with whom the decedent had a close, caring, and enduring relationship may be seen as more deserving of inheritance than the decedent's heirs whose personal relationships with the decedent may have been more attenuated, the doctrine of equitable adoption is not a means of compensating the child for services rendered to the parent or a device for avoiding the unjust enrichment of other more distant relatives who will succeed to the estate under the intestacy statutes. Absent proof of an intent to adopt, a court must follow the statutory law of intestate succession [ Estate of Ford (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 160, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 541, 82 P.3d 747 ].

An equitable adoption claimant need not prove all the elements of an enforceable contract to adopt. The claimant, however, must demonstrate the existence of a direct expression by the decedent of an intent to adopt the claimant. This intent may be shown by proof of an unperformed express agreement or promise to adopt. It may also be shown by proof of other acts or statements directly showing that the decedent intended the claimant to be, or to be treated as, a legally adopted child, such as an invalid or unconsummated attempt to adopt, the decedent's statement of his or her intent to adopt, or the decedent's representation to the claimant or to the community at large that the claimant was the decedent's natural or legally adopted child [ Estate of Ford (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 160, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 541, 82 P.3d 747 ]. In addition to a statement or act by the decedent that unequivocally shows the decedent's intent to adopt, the claimant must show that the decedent acted consistently with that intent by forming with the claimant a close and enduring family relationship that must persist up to, or at least not be repudiated by the decedent before, the decedent's death. These elements of an equitable adoption must be shown by clear and convincing evidence [ Estate of Ford (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 160, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 541, 83 P.3d 747 ].

For purposes of determining rights to property to be distributed on a decedent's death, a child of the decedent who was conceived after the decedent's death is deemed to have been born in the decedent's lifetime, and after the execution of all of the decedent's testamentary instruments, if the child or the child's representative proves by clear and convincing evidence that all of the following conditions are satisfied:

- The decedent specified in writing that his or her genetic material could be used for the posthumous conception of a child of the decedent. This writing must be signed by the decedent and dated [Prob. Code § 249.5(a)(1)].
- The person the decedent designated to control the use of the genetic material has given written notice by certified mail, return receipt requested, that the decedent's genetic material was available for posthumous conception. The notice must have been given to a person who has the power to control the distribution of the decedent's property or death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death, within four months of the date of issuance of a certificate of the decedent's death or entry of a judgment determining the fact of the decedent's death, whichever event occurs first [Prob. Code § 249.5(b)].
- The child was in utero using the decedent's genetic material within two years of the date of issuance of a certificate of the decedent's death or entry of a judgment determining the fact of the decedent's death, whichever occurs first. This provision does not apply to a child who shares all of his or her nuclear genes with the person donating the implanted nucleus as a result of the application of somatic nuclear transfer technology commonly known as human cloning [Prob. Code § 249.5(c)].

The person with the power to control the distribution of the decedent's property or death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death may not make a distribution of property or pay death benefits before two years following the date of issuance of a certificate of the decedent's death or entry of a judgment determining the fact of the decedent's death, whichever occurs first, if the person receives timely notice under Prob. Code § 249.5(b), or has actual knowledge, of the availability of the decedent's genetic material for posthumous conception [Prob. Code § 249.6(a)]. This provision does not apply to, and the distribution of property or the payment of death benefits may proceed in a timely manner as provided by law with respect to, any property if the birth of the posthumously conceived child or children will not affect the proposed distribution of the decedent's property, the payment of death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death, the determination of rights to property to be distributed on the decedent's death, or the right of any person to claim a probate homestead or probate family allowance [Prob. Code § 249.6(b)]. The provision for delayed distribution also does not apply if the person the decedent designated to control the use of the genetic material sends written notice by certified mail, return receipt requested, that he or she does not intend to use the genetic material for the posthumous conception of a child of the decedent. The notice must be signed by the person and at least one competent witness, and dated [Prob. Code § 249.6(c)].

The person with the power to control the distribution of the decedent's property or death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death is not liable for making a distribution of property or paying death benefits before receiving notice or acquiring actual knowledge of the existence of genetic material available for posthumous conception purposes [Prob. Code § 249.6(d)]. Each person to whom payment, delivery, or transfer of the decedent's property is made is personally liable to a person who, under Prob. Code § 249.5, has a superior right to the property. A person's aggregate personal liability cannot exceed the fair market value, valued as of the time of the transfer, of the property paid, delivered, or transferred to the person, less the amount of any liens and encumbrances on the property at that time [Prob. Code § 249.6(e)]. In addition, any person who fraudulently secures the payment, delivery, or transfer of the decedent's property is liable to the person having a superior right for three times the fair market value of the property [Prob. Code § 249.6(f)]. Any action to impose liability must be filed within three years after the distribution to the holder of the decedent's property, or three years after the discovery of the fraud, whichever is later. This three-year period may not be tolled for any reason [Prob. Code § 249.6(g)].

If the notice required by Prob. Code § 249.5(b) (see above) is not given in a timely manner, the person with the power to control the distribution of the decedent's property or death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death may make the distribution in the manner provided by law as if any child of the decedent conceived after his or her death had predeceased the decedent without heirs. A posthumously conceived child, or that child's representative, is barred from making a claim for wrongful distribution against either the person making the distribution or the recipient of the distribution, when timely notice was not given [Prob. Code § 249.7].

Any interested person may file a petition under Prob. Code § 248 or Prob. Code § 17200 requesting distribution of the decedent's property or death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death that are subject to the delayed distribution provisions of Prob. Code § 249.6 [Prob. Code § 249.8]. At the hearing, if it appears that distribution can be made without any loss to any interested person, including any loss (either actual or contingent) to the decedent's posthumously conceived child, the court may order distribution of all, or a portion, of the property or death benefits. The order is stayed until any bond required by the court is filed [Prob. Code § 249.8].

[5] Failure to Survive Decedent

A person who fails to survive the decedent by 120 hours is deemed to have predeceased the decedent for the purpose of intestate succession, and the heirs are determined accordingly [Prob. Code § 6403(a)]. If it cannot be established by clear and convincing evidence that a person who would otherwise be an heir has survived the decedent by 120 hours, then it is deemed that the person failed to survive for the required period [Prob. Code § 6403(a)]. If the application of the 120-hour survival requirement would result in the escheat of the decedent's property to the state, then the requirement does not apply [Prob. Code § 6403(a)]. In addition, these provisions do not apply if any of the persons on whose time of death the disposition of property depends died before January 1, 1990 [Prob. Code § 6403(b)]. These cases continue to be governed by the law applicable before that date, which had no required period of survival (former Prob. Code § 6403) [Prob. Code § 6403(b)].

[6] Advancements by Decedent

If a person dies intestate as to all or part of his or her estate, property the decedent gave to an heir before death is treated as an advancement against that heir's share of the intestate estate only if (1) the decedent declares in a contemporaneous writing that the gift is an advancement against the heir's share of the estate or that its value is to be deducted from the value of the heir's share, or (2) the heir acknowledges in writing that the gift is to be so deducted or is an advancement, or that its value is to be deducted from the value of the heir's share of the estate [Prob. Code § 6409(a)].

The property advanced is to be valued as of the time the heir came into possession or enjoyment of it or as of the time of the decedent's death, whichever occurs first [Prob. Code § 6409(b)]. If the value of the advanced property is expressed in the decedent's contemporaneous writing or in an acknowledgement the heir made contemporaneously with the advancement, then that value is conclusive in the division and distribution of the intestate estate [Prob. Code § 6409(c)].

If the recipient of the advanced property fails to survive the decedent, the property is not taken into account in computing the intestate share to be received by the recipient's issue, unless the declaration or acknowledgment provides otherwise [Prob. Code § 6409(d)].

[7] Debts Owed to Decedent

A debt owed to the decedent is not charged against the intestate share of any person except the debtor [Prob. Code § 6410(a)]. If the debtor fails to survive the decedent, the debt is not taken into account in computing the intestate share of the debtor's issue [Prob. Code § 6410(b)].

[8] Distribution to Surviving Spouse

The surviving spouse's intestate share of community property [see Prob. Code § 28] and quasi-community property [see Prob. Code § 66] is the one-half of the community property and quasi-community property that belongs to the decedent under Prob. Code §§ 100 and 101 [Prob. Code § 6401(a), (b)]. As to the decedent's separate property, the surviving spouse's intestate share is as follows [Prob. Code § 6401(c)]:

- The entire estate if the decedent does not have any surviving issue, parent, sibling, or issue of a deceased sibling.
- One-half of the intestate estate if the decedent has only one surviving child or the issue of one deceased child, or has no surviving issue but has a surviving parent or parents or their issue or the issue of either of them.
- One-third of the intestate estate if the decedent has more than one surviving child, one surviving child and the issue or one or more deceased children, or the issue of two or more deceased children.

Except to the extent provided in Prob. Code § 120, the estate of dower and curtesy are not recognized [Prob. Code § 6412]. Under Prob. Code § 120, the surviving spouse of a decedent who died while domiciled outside of California, but who left a valid will disposing of real property in this state that is not the community property of the decedent and the surviving spouse, has the same right to elect to take a portion of or interest in the property against the decedent's will as though the property were situated in the decedent's domicile at death.

[9] Distribution to Surviving Domestic Partner

A surviving domestic partner [see [2][d], above] is entitled to the same intestate share of the decedent's separate property to which a surviving spouse would be entitled [Prob. Code § 6401(c) (effective July 1, 2003); see [8], above]. A surviving registered domestic partner, following the other partner's death, has the same rights, protections, and benefits, and is subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law that are granted to and imposed on a surviving spouse [Fam. Code § 297.5(c); see Fam. Code § 297.5(j) (when necessary to implement statutory rights of domestic partners, gender-specific terms referring to spouses must be construed to include domestic partners)]. A transfer of separate real property inherited by a surviving domestic partner by intestate succession on the other partner's death does not constitute a change in ownership requiring a reassessment for property tax purposes [18 Cal. Code Reg. § 462.240(k)].

[10] Distribution to Other Heirs

Except as provided in Prob. Code § 6402.5 [see [11], below (distribution when decedent has predeceased spouse but no surviving spouse or issue), the part of the intestate estate not passing to the surviving spouse under Prob. Code § 6401 [see [8], above] or to a surviving domestic partner under Prob. Code § 6401(c) [see [9], above], or the entire intestate estate if there is no surviving spouse or surviving domestic partner, passes as follows [Prob. Code § 6402]:

- To the decedent's issue. If they are all of the same degree of kinship to the decedent, they take equally. If they are of unequal degree, those of a more remote degree take in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240.
- To the decedent's parent or parents equally if there is no surviving issue.
- To the issue of the parents or either of them if there is no surviving issue or parent. The issue take equally if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the decedent. If they are of unequal degree, those of a more remote degree take in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240.
- To the grandparent or grandparents equally, or if there is no surviving grandparent, to their issue, if there is no surviving issue, parent, or issue of a parent, but the decedent is survived by one or more grandparents or issue of grandparents. The issue take equally if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the decedent. If they are of unequal degree, those of a more remote degree take in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240. The degree of the grandparents' issue is measured by their degree of kinship to the decedent, not their degree of kinship to the grandparents [see Estate of McCrary (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 100, 103-105, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 504]. For example, in distributing the estate of a decedent who died intestate and who was not survived by any children, parents, siblings, grandparents, aunts, or uncles, but who was survived by four maternal first cousins and the issue of 14 predeceased paternal first cousins, the court properly divided the decedent's estate into 18 shares and distributed 4/18 ths of the estate to the first cousins and 14/18 ths of the estate to the decedent's relatives who were the issue of the 14 deceased paternal first cousins. The paternal first cousins were not of a different generation of issue by reason of being descendants of a different grandparent [see Estate of McCrary (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 100, 102-105, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 504 (rejecting contention of maternal first cousins that they were entitled to entire estate, and that nothing should have been awarded to more remote relatives, because first cousins were nearest generation of issue then living from any of decedent's grandparents)].
- To the issue of a predeceased spouse if there is no surviving issue, parent or issue of a parent, or grandparent or issue of a grandparent. The issue take equally if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the predeceased spouse. If they are of unequal degree, those of a more remote degree take in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240.
- To the next of kin in equal degree if there is no surviving issue, parent or issue of a parent, grandparent or issue of a grandparent, or issue of a predeceased spouse. If there are two or more collateral kindred in equal degree claiming through different ancestors, those who claim through the nearest ancestor are preferred to those claiming through a more remote ancestor.
- To the parents of a predeceased spouse or the issue of the parents if there is no surviving next of kin of the decedent and no surviving issue of a predeceased spouse of the decedent. The parents take equally. The issue take equally if they are of the same degree of kinship to the predeceased spouse. If they are of unequal degree, those of a more remote degree take in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240.

Under Prob. Code § 240, the property must be divided into as many equal shares as there are living members of the nearest generation of issue then living and deceased members of that generation who leave issue then living. Each living member of the nearest generation of issue then living receives one share. The share of each deceased member of that generation who leaves issue then living is divided in the same manner among his or her then living issue [see Estate of Beckle (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 34, 38, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 890 (Distribution of an intestate decedent's estate could not be limited to surviving first cousins and the children of predeceased first cousins while excluding grandchildren of predeceased first cousins because the governing statutes, Prob. Code §§ 50, 240, 6402(d), do not limit the surviving issue of a predeceased heir entitled to inherit to the first generation; rather, surviving issue includes all lineal descendants of all generations)].

A person who is related to the decedent through two lines of relationship is entitled to only a single share based on the relationship that would entitle the person to the larger share [Prob. Code § 6413].

[11] Distribution of Estate Attributable to Decedent's Predeceased Spouse

[a] Portion of Estate Attributable to Predeceased Spouse

When a decedent has no surviving spouse or issue, but had a predeceased spouse, the portion of the decedent's estate attributable to the predeceased spouse must be determined [see [2][b], above ("predeceased spouse" defined)]. The term "portion of the decedent's estate attributable to the decedent's predeceased spouse" means all of the following property in the decedent's estate [Prob. Code § 6402.5(f)]:

- One-half of the community property in existence at the time of the predeceased spouse's death.
- One-half of any community property in existence at the time of the predeceased spouse's death, which the predeceased spouse gave to the decedent by way of gift, descent, or devise.
- The portion of any community property in which the predeceased spouse had any incident of ownership and that vested in the decedent on the predeceased spouse's death by right of survivorship.
- Any separate property of the predeceased spouse that came to the decedent by gift, descent, or devise of the predeceased spouse, or that vested in the decedent on the predeceased spouse's death or by right of survivorship.

Quasi-community property is treated in the same manner as community property [Prob. Code § 6402.5(g)].

[b] Distribution of Real Property

For the purposes of distributing real property when a decedent has no surviving spouse or issue, but had a predeceased spouse who died not more than 15 years before the decedent, the portion of the decedent's estate attributable to the decedent's predeceased spouse passes as follows [Prob. Code § 6402.5(a)]:

- To the surviving issue if the decedent is survived by issue of the predeceased spouse. If they are all of the same degree of kinship to the predeceased spouse, they take equally. If they are of unequal degree, those of a more remote degree take in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240 [see [10], above].
- To the surviving parent or parents equally if there is no surviving issue of the predeceased spouse but the decedent is survived by a parent or parents of the predeceased spouse.
- To the surviving issue of the parents or either of them if there is no surviving issue or parent of the predeceased spouse but the decedent is survived by the issue of a parent of the predeceased spouse. The issue take equally if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the predeceased spouse. If they are of unequal degree, those of a more remote degree take in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240 [see [10], above].

- To the decedent's next of kin in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 6402 [see [10], above] if the decedent is not survived by issue, parent, or issue of a parent of the predeceased spouse.
- To the predeceased spouse's next of kin in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 6402 if the portion of the decedent's estate attributable to the predeceased spouse would otherwise escheat to the state because there is no kin of the decedent to take the estate under that section.

[c] Distribution of Personal Property

For the purposes of distributing personal property when a decedent has no surviving spouse or issue, but had a predeceased spouse who died not more than five years before the decedent, the portion of the decedent's estate attributable to the decedent's predeceased spouse passes as follows [Prob. Code § 6402.5(b)]:

- To the surviving issue if the decedent is survived by issue of the predeceased spouse. If they are all of the same degree of kinship to the predeceased spouse, they take equally. If they are of unequal degree, those of a more remote degree take in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240 [see [10], above].
- To the surviving parent or parents equally if there is no surviving issue of the predeceased spouse but the decedent is survived by a parent or parents of the predeceased spouse.
- To the surviving issue of the parents or either of them if there is no surviving issue or parent of the predeceased spouse but the decedent is survived by the issue of a parent of the predeceased spouse. The issue take equally if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the predeceased spouse. If they are of unequal degree, those of a more remote degree take in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240 [see [10], above].
- To the decedent's next of kin in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 6402 [see [10], above] if the decedent is not survived by issue, parent, or issue of a parent of the predeceased spouse.
- To the predeceased spouse's next of kin in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 6402 if the portion of the decedent's estate attributable to the predeceased spouse would otherwise escheat to the state because there is no kin of the decedent to take the estate under that section.

The claimant heir bears the burden of proof to show the exact personal property to be disposed of to the heir [Prob. Code § 6402.5(c)]. The term "personal property" means personal property having an aggregate value of at least $10,000 and to which there is a written record of title or ownership [Prob. Code § 6402.5(e)].

[d] Inheritance by Afterborn Relatives or Person Related Through Two Lines of Relationship

Relatives of the predeceased spouse conceived before the decedent's death but born thereafter inherit as if they had been born in the decedent's lifetime [Prob. Code § 6402.5(h)(1)]. A person who is related to the predeceased spouse through two lines of relationship is entitled to only a single share based on the relationship that would entitle the person to the larger share [Prob. Code § 6402.5(h)(2)].

[12] Use of Decedent's Tax Returns to Locate Decedent's Assets

Individuals who inherit from a decedent who dies intestate may have difficulty in discovering and locating the decedent's assets. They may be assisted in locating these assets by requesting access to the decedent's previously filed income tax returns. On request, the decedent's returns are open to inspection by, or disclosure to, any heir at law, next of kin, or beneficiary under the will, of the decedent, or a donee of property, if the IRS finds that the individual has a material interest that will be affected by the information contained in the returns [I.R.C. § 6103(e)(3)(B)]. The IRS treats an heir at law or next of kin who is a distributee under state law of the estate of a decedent who dies intestate as having a material interest that will be affected by information contained in the decedent's return filed for the year before his or her death [ Rev. Rul. 2004-68, 2004-31 I.R.B. 118 ].

1. If clients are husband and wife, determine whether their interests are subject to actual or potential conflict of interest arising from the following:

NOTE:

It is impossible to describe all of the circumstances that may give rise to a conflict (or potential conflict) of interest between a husband and wife, and each case must be evaluated on its own circumstances. However, some of the circumstances that may indicate the existence of a conflict of interest are listed below. For discussion, see § 60.201[1].

a. Previous marriages.

NOTE:

When there have been previous marriages, there will often be children by those marriages. Further, property will often have been acquired in the previous marriages, and the property will usually be separate rather than community property. For further discussion, see (b), (c), and (d), below.

b. Children by previous marriages.

NOTE:

If spouses have children by previous marriages, they will often wish to leave some (or all) of their property to those children when they die. But the surviving spouse may expect that the property will be left to the surviving spouse. If both spouses do not have identical ideas concerning the disposition of the property, a conflict may exist.

- c. One spouse with substantially larger estate than other.

NOTE:

When one spouse has a substantially larger estate than the other, the spouse with the smaller estate may seek to persuade the spouse with the larger estate to convert some or all of the estate to community property, or to leave the estate to the surviving spouse to the exclusion of other family members. If the spouses have different ideas about the disposition of the larger estate, a conflict of interest will exist.

- d. Interest expressed by either or both spouses in transmuting some or all of their property from community to separate or separate to community.

NOTE:

A transmutation of marital property will almost always benefit one spouse at the expense of the other and thus result in a conflict of interest.

- e. Interest expressed by either or both spouses in leaving property to someone other than surviving spouse.

NOTE:

A spouse who has children by a previous marriage will often wish to leave some (or all) of the property acquired before the later marriage to those children. If both spouses do not agree on the appropriateness of doing this, a conflict of interest will exist.

- f. Previous attorney-client relationship between attorney and one spouse.

NOTE:

If the attorney has previously represented one (but not both) of the spouses, the attorney will often have received information in confidence that cannot be divulged, even to the other spouse. If this information would be important to the other spouse in making estate planning decisions, the attorney cannot ethically represent both.

2. If interests of husband and wife are subject to actual or potential conflict of interest, determine whether they would be willing to do the following:

- a. Waive the conflict; and
b. Give attorney written authorization to proceed with dual representation.

NOTE:

If a husband and wife have conflicting (or potentially conflicting) interests, the attorney cannot ethically represent both without first explaining the facts giving rise to the conflict and obtaining written authorization from both clients to proceed with the dual representation [Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-310(B)]. For a form for a conflict of interest disclosure for dual representation, see § 60.201[2].

§ 60.111 Estimated Estate Tax Liability

1. Estimate estate taxes that will be due on client's death.

NOTE:

Section 60.205[2] is a worksheet that may be used to estimate the estate taxes that will be due on the client's death. All of the steps necessary to make the estimate are set forth in the worksheet.

2. Determine whether estate taxes would be reduced (or eliminated) through utilization of marital deduction by transferring some or all of client's estate to surviving spouse by:

- a. Outright devise; or
- b. Qualifying transfer in trust;

NOTE:

Property that passes from a decedent to the decedent's surviving spouse will generally qualify for the marital deduction if the spouse is a citizen of the United States and the property does not pass in the form of a nondeductible "terminable interest" [I.R.C. § 2056(a), (b)]. For general discussion of the marital deduction see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions .

3. Determine whether all or part of client's estate can be sheltered from estate tax under "unified credit."

NOTE:

The amount of property that can be sheltered from taxation under the unified credit is called the "applicable exclusion amount" [see I.R.C. § 2010(c)] (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]]. The amount of property that can be sheltered by the estate tax unified credit varies and depends on the year of death. The amount is $675,000 for decedents dying in 2001, $1 million for decedents dying in 2002 and 2003, $1.5 million for decedents dying in 2004 and 2005, $2 million for decedents dying in 2006, 2007, and 2008, and $3.5 million for decedents dying in 2009 [I.R.C. § 2010(c)]. Planning around the credit to some degree involves guessing when a client will die. The estates of both a husband and a wife are entitled to the benefits of the applicable exclusion amount. In calculating the estate of the surviving spouse, however, the attorney should include both property that originally belonged to the surviving spouse and any property that the surviving spouse will have received from the first spouse to die. Unless it is depleted through gifts or consumption, the surviving spouse's estate will often be substantially larger than the deceased spouse's estate.

4. Determine whether overall estate tax burden on estates of client and client's spouse would be reduced (or eliminated) by creation of "bypass" trust.

NOTE:

A "bypass" trust is a trust that is created on the death of the first spouse to die and that is designed to entirely avoid estate taxation in the estate of the surviving spouse. A properly planned and drafted bypass trust will qualify for the full "applicable exclusion amount" available in the year of the first spouse's death [see I.R.C. § 2010(c)] (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]]. Bypass trusts are sometimes called "credit shelter trusts," "exemption trusts," "credit trusts," or "nonmarital trusts." For general coverage of bypass trusts and their use, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions .

§ 60.112 Estimated Probate Costs

1. Estimate attorney's and executor's compensation if client's estate is subject to probate administration.

NOTE:

The form in § 60.207[2] is a worksheet that may be used to estimate the attorney's and executor's fees that would be payable in the event the client's estate is subject to probate administration. All of the steps necessary to estimate those fees are set forth in the worksheet.

2. Factor amount of fee for filing petition for probate [Gov. Code § 70650(a)].

NOTE:

The uniform filing fee for the first petition for letters of administration or letters testamentary, or the first petition for special letters of administration with the powers of a general personal representative is three hundred fifty-five dollars ($355) [Gov. Code § 70650(a)].

3. Determine whether total cost of transferring client's estate after client's death could be significantly reduced by avoiding probate administration of all or part of estate.

NOTE:

To make this determination, the estimated attorney's and executor's fees [see P 1, above] payable after the client's death must be compared with the costs of establishing and implementing probate-avoiding mechanisms (such as a revocable inter vivos trust) now and administering the trust after the client's death. To make this comparison, the attorney must estimate the total fees payable to the attorney for planning the estate, drafting any necessary trust instruments, making the necessary transfers to the trust, and providing necessary administrative services to the trustee (or successor trustee) after the client's death. The costs of creating a living trust are typically greater than the costs of planning and drafting a will, and the living trust will be effective only to the extent that it is "funded" during the settlor's lifetime [see § 60.17[2][c]]. This means that property must be transferred to the trustee by means of deeds, assignments, or other instruments. In some cases, the attorney will handle the "funding" of the trust, and will charge fees for that work. In many cases, however, the costs of funding will be excessive, and it will be sufficient if the attorney gives the client detailed instructions as to how these transfers can be accomplished. After the settlor of a revocable trust has died, some legal services will almost always be necessary to carry out the dispositive provisions of the trust and file any necessary tax returns.

 CHAPTER 60 ESTATE PLANNING
 PART III. TRANSACTION GUIDE
 B. Preliminary Determinations

§ 60.113 Will

1. Determine whether will would be adequate to transfer client's estate after client's death without additional estate planning tools.

NOTE:

In many cases, a will is adequate to accomplish the client's estate planning goals without the additional use of other estate planning tools, such as revocable or irrevocable trusts. Even when the estate plan is to include one or more trusts, however, a will is still important, if only to provide for the transfer of property that was not included in the trusts, either intentionally or by inadvertence. In many cases, a "pour-over" will will be indicated. This is a will that devises property to the trustee of a trust established before the will becomes effective. The trust to which property is "poured over" is typically (although not always) a revocable inter vivos ("living") trust established by the testator. For discussion of "pour overs" and "pour-over" wills, see § 60.17[1][c] and Ch. 63, Will Provisions . For basic considerations in the use of wills in estate planning, see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms .

2. Determine whether will should include testamentary trust.

NOTE:

A testamentary trust is, by definition, a trust that is created by a will and that does not come into existence until the will becomes effective (that is, until the testator dies). A testamentary trust has no existence during the settlor's lifetime. Testamentary trusts are often used to provide for beneficiaries (such as young children or aged parents) who will need the benefits of professional property management after the settlor has died. For discussion of testamentary trusts, see § 60.17[1][d]. For basic considerations in the use of testamentary trusts, see Ch. 64, Testamentary Trusts: Payment and Distribution Provisions , Ch. 64A, Testamentary Trusts: Trustee Provisions , and Ch. 64B, Testamentary Trusts: Administrative Provisions . For additional discussion of testamentary trusts, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 110, Testamentary Trusts (Matthew Bender).

3. Determine whether client's interests would be served by both will and inter vivos trust.

NOTE:

In many cases, a client's estate planning needs can be served only by the use of a will and one or more inter vivos trusts. When inter vivos trusts are created, a will (even if only a "pour-over" will) is always indicated [see NOTE to P 1, above]. In some cases, a client may wish to transfer some property by will and other property through the mechanism of a trust or trusts. For the suitability of using a revocable inter vivos ("living") trust to carry out the estate plan, see § 60.114. For the suitability of using an irrevocable inter vivos trust, see § 60.115.

§ 60.114 Revocable Inter Vivos ("Living") Trust

1. Determine whether client's interests would be served by creation of revocable inter vivos ("living") trust for purposes of:

NOTE:

For detailed discussion of the advantages and disadvantages of revocable inter vivos trusts, see Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms, § 70.10. For discussion of the federal estate tax marital deduction [I.R.C. § 2056], and tax planning involving the coordination of that deduction and the unified credit against federal estate and gift taxes [I.R.C. § 2010], see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions .

a. Avoiding probate.

NOTE:

Assets that form a part of a revocable inter vivos ("living") trust at the time of the settlor's death will not be subject to probate administration. In many cases, this will result in the saving of time and expense. For discussion, see § 60.17[2][b]. For estimated costs of probate, see §§ 60.112 and 60.207.

b. Providing property management in event of client's incapacity.

NOTE:

Property that has been transferred to the trustee of a revocable inter vivos ("living") trust can be managed by the trustee in the event of the settlor's incapacity. If the settlor was originally the trustee of the trust, the successor trustee will succeed to the powers of the trustee in the event of the settlor's incapacity. This will obviate the expense and delay of conservatorship proceedings. However, property management in the event of incapacity can also be provided by an attorney in fact under a durable power of attorney [see §§ 60.17[7], 60.119].

c. Providing property management for client's children.

NOTE:

Minor children do not have the legal capacity to manage their own property, and some other person will generally have to act in their behalf. This other person may be a guardian [see Prob. Code §§ 1500-1601], a custodian under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act [see Prob. Code §§ 3900-3925], or a trustee acting under a trust instrument. Even children who have attained the age of majority will often lack the maturity to properly manage substantial sums of money or property. If the settlor has children who may need property management after the settlor's death, the trust will provide this management and obviate the need for the appointment of guardians of the minors' estates. For discussion of the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act, see Ch. 60A, Gifts . For discussion of guardianships for minor children, see Ch. 66, Guardianship and Conservatorship Planning . For further discussion of problems faced by minors who acquire property by gift or inheritance, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 28, Devises to Minors , and Ch. 37, Nomination of Guardians for Minor Children (Matthew Bender).

d. Protecting client's privacy.

NOTE:

A living trust will help to preserve the settlor's privacy. The records of the probate court are public records and, as such, open to public inspection. Trust documents, in contrast, are private documents and need not become public records unless there is some litigation involving the trust. However, third parties such as brokers, transfer agents, and title insurers may ask to inspect the trust instrument before participating in certain trust transactions. To the extent that it is necessary to divulge the contents of the trust documents, the settlor's privacy will be impaired. However, requests of this kind can often be satisfied by furnishing the first and last pages, or merely an abstract, of the trust instrument. For discussion, see § 60.17[2][b].

e. Creating "bypass trust" to reduce or eliminate estate taxes in estates of client and client's spouse.

NOTE:

If the combined estates of a married couple exceed the "applicable exclusion amount" that is likely to be available in the year of the first spouses death [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]], estate taxes may be reduced or eliminated by creating a "bypass trust" on the death of the first spouse. The surviving spouse can receive the income from the trust, and distributions of principal according to an "ascertainable standard" [see I.R.C. §§ 2041(b)(1)(A); see also § 60.13[1][g]]. When the surviving spouse dies, the assets of the "bypass trust" will not be included in the surviving spouse's gross estate for estate tax purposes, but will pass to other beneficiaries (for example, children) as provided in the trust instrument. For general coverage of bypass trusts and their use, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions .

2. Determine whether client's interests would be served by planning estate without revocable inter vivos ("living") trust because:

- a. Client's estate can be adequately transferred after client's death by will.
- b. Combined estates of client and client's spouse are small enough to be completely sheltered from estate taxation under unified credit.

NOTE:

The full amount of the "applicable exclusion amount" available in the year of the client's death will be sheltered from estate taxation under the unified credit [see I.R.C. § 2010(c)] (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]]. If the combined estates of a married couple will not exceed that amount (even after property owned by the deceased spouse is transferred to the surviving spouse and combined with other property owned by the surviving spouse), estate taxes are not a problem, and there is no need for a bypass trust to reduce or eliminate estate taxes in the estate of the surviving spouse. Under these circumstances, both estates can safely be planned without any consideration for estate taxes. To make sure that the combined estates do not exceed the credit shelter amount, however, the attorney should carefully consider all items of property that could be included in the gross estates of both spouses [see I.R.C. § 2031 (gross estate); see also § 60.13[1]].

- c. Client's potential need for property management in event of incapacity can be adequately met by durable powers of attorney.

NOTE:

Durable powers of attorney are useful estate planning tools. For legal rules governing durable powers of attorney, see § 60.17[7]. For preliminary considerations relating to the use of durable powers of attorney, see § 60.119.

- d. Client's estate can be transferred without probate administration because:

(1) Property is in form that calls for nonprobate transfer, or transfer by operation of law, upon client's death;

NOTE:

Various forms of property ownership include automatic provisions for the transfer of the property to designated persons on the owner's death. These persons may be co-owners or designated beneficiaries. Forms of property that fall into this category include joint tenancy property [see § 60.12[5]], other property that is subject to co-ownership with another person or persons [see § 60.17[4]], and various types of property that are subject to nonprobate transfers [see § 60.12[8]].

- (2) Property passes to surviving spouse or registered domestic partner; or

NOTE:

If property passes to a surviving spouse, the surviving spouse will have full power to deal with the property if no other person claims an interest in the property within 40 days after the death of the deceased spouse [Prob. Code § 13540]. Any claim made by another person must be in writing and recorded in the office of the county recorder [see Prob. Code § 13541]. However, the surviving spouse may elect to subject some or all of the property to probate [Prob. Code § 13550]. For discussion, see the Legal Background to Ch. 65, Executors.

Beginning January 1, 2005, these rules apply with respect to the surviving registered domestic partner of a decedent. A surviving registered domestic partner, following the other partner's death, has the same rights, protections, and benefits, and is subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law that are granted to and imposed on a surviving spouse [Fam. Code § 297.5(c); see Fam. Code § 297.5(j) (when necessary to implement statutory rights of domestic partners, gender-specific terms referring to spouses must be construed to include domestic partners)].

(3) Client's probate estate is small enough to qualify for "summary administration."

NOTE:

Certain types of property may be transferred to certain beneficiaries without formal probate administration. For example, the court may order a "small estate set-aside" to the surviving spouse and minor children of a decedent if the net value of the decedent's property (over and above all liens and encumbrances, and excluding joint tenancy property and multiple-party accounts) does not exceed $20,000 [Prob. Code §§ 6600-6615 (small estate set-aside)]. "Small estate set-asides" are available for real property located in California and personal property wherever located [Prob. Code § 6600(a)].

If the total value of all of the decedent's property in California does not exceed $100,000 and 40 days have elapsed since the decedent's death, the decedent's successor may collect any money due the decedent, receive any item of tangible personal property belonging to the decedent, and transfer any debt, obligation, right, or chose in action belonging to the decedent without waiting for probate of the will or appointment of a personal representative [Prob. Code § 13100]. The following property must be excluded in determining whether the total value of the decedent's property exceeds $100,000: joint tenancy property; property in which the decedent held only a life estate; property held by the decedent in a revocable trust or multiple-party account; registered vehicles, mobilehomes, truck campers, and vessels; amount due the decedent for service in the United States armed forces; and up to $5,000 of compensation owing to the decedent from other employment [Prob. Code § 13050]. For discussion, see the Legal Background to Ch. 65, Executors.

Beginning January 1, 2005, these rules apply with respect to the surviving registered domestic partner of a decedent. A surviving registered domestic partner, following the other partner's death, has the same rights, protections, and benefits, and is subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law that are granted to and imposed on a surviving spouse [Fam. Code § 297.5(c); see Fam. Code § 297.5(j) (when necessary to implement statutory rights of domestic partners, gender-specific terms referring to spouses must be construed to include domestic partners)].

3. Determine whether creation of trust would result in significant savings of attorneys' fees and expenses by avoiding probate of client's property after client's death [see § 60.112].

1. Determine whether client's interests would be served by removing property from client's estate by creation of irrevocable inter vivos trust.

NOTE:

An irrevocable trust is typically used to remove property from the settlor's ownership and thus to avoid the income and estate tax consequences of continuing to own the property. A properly planned and drafted irrevocable trust will achieve these goals, either permanently or for a specified term (such as a period of years or the life of a designated person). For further discussion, see Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts, and California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 114, Irrevocable Inter Vivos Trusts (Matthew Bender).

2. Determine whether client's interests would be served by transferring property to irrevocable trust in lieu of outright gift.

NOTE:

Irrevocable trusts are often used as substitutes for outright gifts. By transferring property to an irrevocable trust, the settlor can transfer the beneficial use and enjoyment of the trust property to other persons without giving those persons outright control over the property. The settlor will have effectively parted with the property, but its use and enjoyment will be subject to terms and conditions set forth in the trust instrument. For further discussion, see Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts; see also California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 114, Irrevocable Inter Vivos Trusts (Matthew Bender).

3. Determine whether client's interests would be served by establishing irrevocable life insurance trust.

NOTE:

A life insurance trust is a trust created for the purpose of acquiring and owning one or more policies of life insurance. These policies will typically be on the life of the settlor. However, the trust will be planned and drafted so that the settlor will not hold any "incidents of ownership" in the policy as that term is used in the Internal Revenue Code [see I.R.C. § 2042(2)]. If the settlor does not possess any "incidents of ownership" at the time of death, the policy proceeds will not be included in the settlor's death for estate tax purposes [see I.R.C. § 2042(2)]. This may result in substantial estate tax savings. For further discussion of life insurance trusts and their use, see Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts ; see also California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 115, Life Insurance Trusts (Matthew Bender).

4. Determine whether client's interests would be served by establishing split-interest charitable trust.

NOTE:

Charitable lead trusts are designed to confer benefits on charitable beneficiaries while permitting the settlor (or the settlor's designated beneficiaries) to retain the use and enjoyment of the trust property for a period of time. The beneficial use and enjoyment of the property is split between two interests, a present income interest and a remainder interest. If the remainder interest is transferred to the charitable beneficiary, the trust is described as a charitable remainder trust. If the present income interest is transferred to the charitable beneficiary, the trust is described as a charitable lead trust. By conferring benefits on a charitable beneficiary, the settlor (or the settlor's estate) will obtain the benefits of a charitable deduction [see I.R.C. §§ 170 (income tax deduction), 2055 (estate tax deduction)]. For further discussion, see Ch. 74, Split-Interest Charitable Trusts ; see also California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 116, Charitable Remainder Trusts , and Ch. 117, Charitable Lead Trusts (Matthew Bender).

1. Determine whether client's interests in avoiding probate would be served if client owned property as co-owner with another person.

NOTE:

Co-owned property may avoid probate administration if the property is subject to automatic transfer to some other person on the death of one of the owners. Property held in joint tenancy or in a multiple-party account will be transferred in this way. Transfers to a surviving co-owner are often described as "transfers by operation of law." However, there are many estate planning disadvantages to co-ownership of property. For discussion, see § 60.17[4].

2. Determine whether client's interests in providing for management of property in event of client's incapacity would be served if client owns property as co-owner with another person.

NOTE:

A joint account at a bank or other financial institution may provide some protection from conservatorship proceedings if the depositor later becomes incapacitated. The other joint depositor may have access to the funds in the account and use them to pay the first depositor's bills. This will sometimes be appropriate if the first depositor is elderly (for example, a parent or grandparent) and the joint depositor is younger (for example, an adult child or grandchild). However, there is no assurance that the funds will in fact be used in the way the first depositor would wish them to be used. When the parties agree that the funds will only be used for the benefit of the first depositor (for example, the parent or grandparent), a kind of informal "trust" may have been established; but it may be difficult to enforce the "trust," and the success of the arrangement will depend largely on the trustworthiness of the joint depositor (for example, the adult child or grandchild).

This kind of arrangement is far from ideal, and if substantial sums of money are involved it should not be encouraged by the estate planner. A revocable inter vivos ("living") trust [see § 60.114] or one or more durable powers of attorney [see § 60.119] will almost always be preferable.

1. Determine whether life insurance (or additional life insurance) would serve client's interests by enhancing liquidity of client's estate.

NOTE:

Life insurance can provide liquidity for the payment of debts and expenses of administration after the client's death. If the client does not have liquid assets sufficient to meet these needs, it may be advisable to obtain insurance for that purpose. For discussion, see § 60.17[5].

2. Determine whether client's interests would be served by acquiring life insurance to replace income that would be lost on client's death.

NOTE:

If the client's earnings are the source of support for others (for example, the client's spouse, children, or elderly parents) and if the client does not have other assets that could be used to replace the income stream that would end with the client's death, life insurance may be necessary to supply those assets. Life insurance is generally needed for this purpose when the client is young and has minor children who must be supported. Older clients will rarely have dependent minor children, and they will often have acquired substantial estates that can be invested to produce an income stream sufficient to support dependents. In some cases, however, the need to replace the client's earnings will continue into middle age or later.

3. Determine whether client wishes to reduce estate tax burden on estate through creation of irrevocable life insurance trust.

NOTE:

A life insurance trust can be a valuable tax saving device in appropriate cases. If the settlor does not hold any "incidents of ownership" in the policy [see I.R.C. § 2042(2)], the death benefits received on the settlor's death will not be included in the settlor's estate for estate tax purposes [see I.R.C. § 2042(2); see also § 60.17[5]]. § 60.118 Lifetime Gifts

1. Determine whether client is financially able to make lifetime gifts.

NOTE:

A client should consider making substantial lifetime gifts for estate planning purposes only if the client has adequate resources to meet all of the client's future needs. Lifetime gifts should not be made by a client who will need the gift funds or property at some time in the future. While future needs can never be precisely predicted, a reasonable forecast of those needs should be made, taking into consideration the likelihood that the cost of living will continue to increase in the future as it has in the past.

2. Determine whether objects of client's bounty would benefit by receiving lifetime gifts.

NOTE:

Lifetime gifts should be made to persons who will benefit from the gifts. The ability of the donee to make use of the property, and to properly manage the property, should be considered. Unless there are countervailing considerations, it is not generally advisable to make gifts to persons who are financially irresponsible, or to persons who already have substantial estates.

3. Determine whether total estate tax burden on client's estate would be reduced by making lifetime gifts.

NOTE:

In determining the total amount of the taxable gifts for a calendar year, an exclusion (called the "annual exclusion") each calendar year for gifts made in that year to each donee [I.R.C. § 2503(b)]; for discussion of the annual exclusion and the applicable exclusion amounts, which are adjusted annually for inflation, see § 60.14[2]. When gifts are made by a husband and wife, an annual exclusion is available for each donor, thus doubling the amount of the exclusion. Qualified tuition and medical payments are also excluded from gift taxation [see I.R.C. § 2503(e); see also § 60.14[3]]. Gifts that do not qualify for a gift tax exclusion will reduce the amount of the "unified credit" otherwise available to the donor (or the donor's estate) [see I.R.C. §§ 2010 (unified credit against estate tax), 2505 (unified credit against gift tax); see also § 60.14[5]].

4. Determine whether client wishes to make lifetime gifts to irrevocable life insurance trust.

NOTE:

Gifts to an irrevocable life insurance trust may be used to fund the premiums on the life insurance policy or policies owned by the trust. If beneficiaries of the trust have so-called "Crummey" powers of withdrawal, the gifts will also qualify for the annual gift tax exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2503(b)] (base annual exclusion amount of $10,000, with upward adjustments for inflation for gifts made in calendar years after 1998) and discussion in § 60.14[2]]. For discussion of "Crummey" powers, see Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts, and California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 114, Irrevocable Inter Vivos Trusts, and Ch. 115, Life Insurance Trusts (Matthew Bender).

§ 60.119 Durable Powers of Attorney

1. Determine whether client's interests would be served by executing:

a. Durable power of attorney for property management;

NOTE:

A durable power of attorney for property management authorizes the attorney in fact to manage the client's property in the event of the client's incapacity [see Prob. Code §§ 4123(a), (b), 4124, 4125]. Durable powers of attorney are useful estate planning tools and can obviate the need for conservatorship proceedings.

Many estate planners regard a durable power of attorney as an essential element of any complete estate plan, and these powers are routinely prepared as part of the planning process, in conjunction with a will, trust, or both. For coverage of durable powers of attorney, including a form for a durable power of attorney for property management, see Ch. 68, Durable Powers of Attorney. For additional discussion of durable powers of attorney for property management, see California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 151, Durable Powers of Attorney for Property Management (Matthew Bender).

b. Durable power of attorney for health care.

NOTE:

A durable power of attorney for health care will give a designated person authority to make health care decisions for the client if the client is unable to make those decisions personally. They complement virtually all estate plans and are generally recommended by estate planners. For coverage of durable powers of attorney, including a form of durable power of attorney for health care, see Ch. 68, Durable Powers of Attorney. For additional discussion of durable powers of attorney for health care, see California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 150, Durable Powers of Attorney for Health Care (Matthew Bender).

2. Determine whether client has some other mechanism in place for property management in event of incapacity.

NOTE:

A revocable inter vivos ("living") trust will also provide some protection against incapacity. However, this protection only extends to the property that has actually been transferred to the trust, and it does not authorize the trustee to make health care decisions for the client.

1. Determine whether client's interests would be served by entering into agreement:

NOTE:

Although contracts to make (or not to revoke) a will or devise are generally valid in California [see Prob. Code § 21700(a) (requirements for proof of contract)], they are difficult to enforce and often result in costly and time-consuming litigation. They are not ordinarily recommended by estate planners. For discussion, see § 60.17[8][b]. For general coverage of contracts relating to wills, see California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 61, Contracts and Other Instruments Affecting Wills (Matthew Bender).

- a. To make will or devise; or
- b. Not to revoke will or devise.

2. Determine whether client's interests would be served by entering into agreement transmuting:

NOTE:

Transmutation agreements may be used to protect one or both of the spouses from creditors, to reorder inheritance rights in the spouses' property, or to achieve specified tax advantages. Transmutation agreements are generally subject to the same rules as other contracts. However, they are also subject to rules applicable to property contracts between a husband and wife [see Fam. Code § 721(b); see also § 60.17[8][c]]. Further, since transmutation agreements almost always create conflicts of interests between the spouses, one attorney can represent both spouses in the preparation and execution of a transmutation agreement only if the attorney first explains the facts giving rise to the conflict and obtains written authorization from the clients to proceed with the dual representation [Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-310(B)]; see § 60.201[1][b].

- a. Community property to separate property of either spouse;
- b. Separate property of either spouse to community property; or
- c. Separate property of one spouse to separate property of other spouse.

3. Determine whether client's interests would be served by entering into buy-sell agreement because client is:

NOTE:

A properly planned buy-sell agreement will facilitate the continuation of a business operated as a partnership or closely held corporation after the death of a partner or shareholder and assure the deceased partner's or shareholder's estate that it will receive fair value for the client's interest. Funds for the purchase will often be provided by a life insurance policy on the life of the deceased partner or shareholder. For estate planning uses of buy-sell agreements, see § 60.17[8][d]. For estate planning uses of life insurance, see § 60.17[5]. For general coverage of buy-sell agreements, with illustrative forms, see Ch. 8D, Buy-Sell Agreements .

- a. Partner in unincorporated business; or
- b. Shareholder in small or closely held corporation.

PART IV. FORMS

§ 60.200 Client Interview Checklist

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a checklist that an estate planning attorney may use to record estate planning information. It is designed to be filled out by the attorney rather than the client and to suggest important questions that the attorney should ask the client. Properly used, the form will help the attorney elicit all of the information necessary to begin the preparation of an estate plan.

[b] Advantages and Disadvantages of Questionnaires

Different attorneys have different opinions about the use of estate planning questionnaires. Some routinely ask clients to complete detailed questionnaires before (or shortly after) the first interview. They believe that the early completion of a questionnaire will provide the attorney with the essential information at the earliest possible stage of the estate planning process and reduce the likelihood that important facts will be overlooked. Other attorneys, however, use questionnaires sparingly, if at all. These attorneys are concerned that questionnaires will annoy or intimidate many clients, and may discourage some potential clients from availing themselves of the attorney's services.

Clients who have had no previous relationship with the attorney are most likely to respond negatively to questionnaires. Attorneys who are reluctant to use questionnaires at or before the first interview will sometimes use a questionnaire after they have personally spoken with a client, explained the purpose of the questionnaire, and satisfied themselves that the client is not reluctant to commit personal information to a printed form.

Since this form is designed to be completed by the attorney rather than the client, it will minimize many of the concerns associated with the use of questionnaires while helping to assure that the attorney obtains the essential estate planning information.

[c] Need for Further Information

This form is designed to elicit only the information that is necessary to initiate the estate planning process. As the process continues, the specific needs and wishes of the client will become apparent and further information will be required. The character of that further information will depend on the circumstances of each client.

CHAPTER 60 ESTATE PLANNING
PART IV. FORMS

§ 60.201 Conflict of Interest Disclosure for Dual Representation

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a letter disclosing the potential conflicts of interest that may arise if an attorney represents both a husband and a wife in estate planning matters. It is designed to be signed by the attorney and presented to the clients at the same time that the attorney-client agreement is signed. At some later time, the letter is to be signed by the clients and returned to the attorney for retention in the attorney's file.

The letter explains potential problems that can arise with dual representation. However, it does not overstate those problems. Exaggerating the difficulties that can be encountered when one attorney represents both a husband and wife can intimidate some prospective clients and unnecessarily discourage them from availing themselves of the attorney's services.

[b] Married Clients and Conflicts of Interest

For reasons of economy and convenience, it is common for married persons to employ a single attorney to plan their estates. In most cases, it is quite proper for one attorney to represent both spouses. However, it is not proper for one attorney to represent clients who have conflicting interests without their informed written consent [Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-310(B)]. If a husband and wife have conflicting (or potentially conflicting) interests, the attorney cannot ethically represent both unless the attorney first explains the facts giving rise to the conflict and obtains written authorization from the clients to proceed with the dual representation [Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 3-310(B)].

Various circumstances may give rise to conflicts, or potential conflicts, between a husband and wife. If the spouses have substantial separate as well as community property, for example, the interests of the spouses in the characterization of the property may conflict. If there is any suggestion that the character of property should be transmuted (either from community to separate, or separate to community), a conflict will nearly always arise, as a transmutation will inevitably benefit one spouse at the expense of the other. If either spouse wishes to leave property to someone other than the surviving spouse, a conflict may also arise.

It is common for an attorney to meet with both spouses in a joint conference. However, a joint conference may impair the confidentiality of the spouses' communications to the attorney. Although the attorney-client privilege ordinarily prohibits an attorney from disclosing confidential communications made to the attorney in the course of the attorney-client relationship [see Evid. Code §§ 950-962], when two clients consult an attorney on a matter of common interest they may not claim the privilege if a communication made in the course of the relationship is later offered in a civil proceeding between the clients or their successors in interest [Evid. Code § 962]. Notwithstanding this, either client may compel the attorney to testify regarding any matter arising in the course of the joint consultations [ In re Estate of Bauer (1889) 79 Cal. 304, 312, 21 P. 759 ]. For this reason, an attorney who is consulted by a husband and wife should advise the spouses of the possibly adverse effects that a joint conference might have on the confidentiality of their communications. If either client objects to that loss of confidentiality, the attorney should advise them of the need for separate counsel.

Separate conferences will sometimes be useful in determining whether a conflict or potential conflict of interest exists. Separate conferences will be particularly appropriate if the attorney has had a previous relationship with one but not both of the spouses.

For further discussion of the ethical duties of estate planning attorneys, see California Wills & Trusts, Chapter 4, Ethical Considerations and Professional Responsibility (Matthew Bender).

Re: Estate Plan

Dear _____ [names]:

This letter will confirm that you have asked _____ [me or this firm] to advise and represent you concerning certain estate planning matters. This representation is expected to include the matters covered in the [enclosed] Attorney-Client Employment Agreement.

In the course of our preliminary discussions, _____ [I or we] have explained to each of you that it is possible that the two of you may not always agree with each other regarding every detail of your estate plans. For example, you may have different ideas about how you want to dispose of your property during your lifetimes or at your deaths; or you may disagree about which of you owns particular items of your property, or whether particular assets are your separate or community property.

Minor disagreements between you will not ordinarily affect _____ [my or our] ability to represent both of you fully and fairly. However, serious disagreements may create a conflict of interest that will render it impossible for _____ [me or us] to continue to represent both of you in a manner consistent with _____ [my or our] ethical and professional obligations. If a disagreement should arise, _____ [I or we] may find it necessary to withdraw from representing one or both of you in connection with this matter. Should that occur, _____ [I or we] will bill you jointly for services through the date on which _____ [I or we] ceased representing you both.

Of course, should either of you feel for any reason that you need the advice of another attorney regarding any aspect of the services _____ [I or we] provide for you, you should feel free to obtain your own attorney to provide advice and counsel and to assure you that _____ [my or our] representation of one of you is not adversely influenced by _____ [my or our] representation of the other.

Anything that either of you communicates to _____ [me or us] will be fully and freely disclosed to the other, and no information will be kept confidential as between the two of you. Should the two of you ever become involved in any lawsuit against one another, neither of you will be able to invoke the lawyer-client privilege as to any communication made by or to _____ [me or us] in the course of _____ [my or our] joint representation of you, and either of you may compel _____ [me or us] to testify in court as to any communication made in the course of that representation.

_____ [I or we] have no reason to expect that any of these problems will actually arise in your case. Nevertheless, the ethical rules governing the conduct of lawyers require that _____ [I or we] explain to you the problems that could arise if _____ [I or we] represent each of you at the same time, and that _____ [I or we] obtain your consent to this joint representation.

_____ [I or we] have explained these possible problems and the potential advantages of separate counsel to you. _____ [I or we] also have explained to you the value and importance of achieving a coordinated estate plan, and the difficulties that can arise in this area when separate counsel are involved. Having been provided with all of this information, you have requested that _____ [I or we] represent you in this matter.

To signify that you understand the matters discussed in this letter, please sign and date the enclosed copy of this letter and return it to _____ [me or us] in the enclosed envelope. If you have any questions about the matters covered in this letter, please feel free to discuss them with _____ [me or us]. Thank you for your cooperation, and _____ [I or we] look forward to representing you.

Sincerely yours,

_____ [typed name of attorney and law firm]

We have read this letter, understand the matters discussed in it, and agree to have _____ [you or your firm] represent each of us with respect to the matters described in the letter.

§ 60.202 Cover Letter Accompanying Estate Planning Documents

[1] Comment--Use of Form

This form is a cover letter designed to accompany the estate planning documents when they are sent to the clients. The letter identifies the documents and requests that the clients review them immediately. It asks the clients (1) to advise the attorney if any changes are necessary, and (2) if there are none, to call the attorney to make arrangements for final execution.

The letter also restates the personal information provided to the attorney by the clients and that is the basis for the estate planning documents. It asks the clients to review that information and to advise the attorney if it contains any errors.

This is a standard form letter and should accompany any estate materials sent to the client for review before final execution.

Changes in your financial situation or changes in your family may also require changes in the documents. You should plan to review these documents periodically. _____ [I or We] hope you will decide to have our office help you review them.

Thank you for choosing _____ [me or us] to prepare your estate planning documents.

Sincerely yours,

§ 60.203 Follow-Up Letter: Estate Plan Not Sensitive to Changes in Tax Laws

[1] Comment--Use of Form

This form is a follow-up letter designed to be mailed to clients whose estate plans are not sensitive to subsequent changes in the tax laws. It advises the client that changes in his or her circumstances may require periodic reviews of the estate plan and recommends that the plan be reviewed on a regular basis. The letter also provides a space in which the client can indicate whether he or she wishes the attorney to review the plan.

A letter of this kind should be sent to all estate planning clients approximately two months after their initial estate planning documents have been signed. The letter should be accompanied by an addressed return envelope so that clients who wish to avail themselves of the advantages of periodic review may easily inform the attorney of that fact.

Re: Estate Plan

Dear _____ [Name(s)]:

It has been approximately _____ [e.g., two] months since you executed your _____ [will(s) or trust or will(s) and trust]. Your _____ [will(s) or trust or will(s) and trust] _____ [was or were] prepared on the basis of the facts, circumstances, and law in existence at the time _____ [it was or they were] executed. Those things may change as time passes.

To accommodate any future changes, _____ [I or we] suggest that you review your estate plan every _____ [e.g., year or two years]. This review should cover changes in your family status and changes in the applicable law.

Your _____ [will(s) or trust or will(s) and trust] _____ [was or were] prepared on the assumption that certain of your descendants and relatives will survive you. In drafting those documents, care was taken to provide for an alternate disposition if specified descendants or relatives did not survive you. Nevertheless, if there is a change in your family status (such as a birth, a death, an adoption, a divorce, or a marriage) you should review your estate plan documents and determine if any change should be made due to the change in your family status.

During the last few years both the California and federal law relating to wills and trusts has undergone comprehensive changes. These changes were taken into consideration when your current _____ [will(s) or trust or will(s) and trust] _____ [were or was] drafted. While _____ [I or we] do not anticipate similar changes in the near future, it is almost inevitable that legal changes will occur in the future. Since the nature and frequency of the changes cannot be predicted, the prudent approach is to review your _____ [will(s) or trust or will(s) and trust] on a periodic basis to determine if changes are necessary.

The first quarter of each calendar year is usually an appropriate time to review estate planning documents. The tax information needed to prepare income tax returns is usually assembled at this time, and that information can be helpful in identifying changes in your financial situation. Further, many changes in the law become effective at the beginning of the year. A review conducted during the first quarter of the year will be sure to include any recent changes in the law.

If asked, _____ [I or we] would be pleased to help you conduct the type of review _____ [I or we] have recommended in this letter. If _____ [I or we] assist in this review, _____ [I or we] will charge you for _____ [my or our] time at _____ [my or our] hourly fee then in effect. Unless unusual circumstances exist, _____ [I or we] do not feel that _____ [I or we] would charge you for more than two hours of _____ [my or our] time.

_____ [I or We] would like to know if you would like _____ [me or us] to help you conduct the type of review _____ [I or we] have recommended. Thus, would you please complete and sign the bottom portion of the copy of this letter and return it to _____ [me or us] at your earliest convenience? If you indicate that you wish _____ [me or us] to conduct the review, _____ [I or we] will schedule _____ [my or our] calendar to contact you at the appropriate time. If you indicate that you do not wish _____ [me or us] to conduct the review, _____ [I or we] will not bother you with further correspondence.

Dear _____ [Name(s)]:

It has been approximately _____ [e.g., two] months since you executed your _____ [will(s) or trust or will(s) and trust]. Your _____ [will(s) or trust or will(s) and trust] _____ [was or were] prepared on the basis of the facts, circumstances, and law in existence at the time _____ [it was or they were] signed. Those things may change as time passes.

To accommodate any future changes, _____ [I or we] suggest that you review your estate plan every _____ [e.g., year or two years]. This review should cover changes in your family status and changes in the applicable law.

Changes in your financial situation may affect your estate plan. For example, you may wish to alter the disposition of your property should there be a substantial increase or decrease in the size of your estate [s]. Additionally, a change in the size of your estate [s] may require a change in the tax savings devices used in your current estate plan.

Your _____ [will(s) or trust or will(s) and trust] _____ [was or were] prepared on the assumption that certain of your descendants and relatives will survive you. In drafting those documents, care was taken to provide for an alternate disposition if specified descendants or relatives did not survive you. Nevertheless, if there is a change in your family status (such as a birth, a death, an adoption, a divorce, or a marriage) you should review your estate plan documents and determine if any change should be made due to the change in your family status.

If the past is a valid indicator, the future will bring important changes in the federal income, gift, and estate tax laws. Since the nature and frequency of the changes cannot be predicted, the prudent approach is to review your _____ [will(s) or trust or will(s) and trust] on a periodic basis to determine if changes are necessary.

During the last few years California law relating to wills and trusts has undergone comprehensive changes. These changes were taken into consideration when your _____ [will(s) or trust or will(s) and trust] _____ [was or were] drafted. While _____ [I or we] do not anticipate changes in California law on a scale similar to what has been experienced in the past few years, it is almost inevitable that there will be changes. Therefore, you should review the effect of any change in California law on your estate plan as soon as possible.

The first quarter of each calendar year is usually an appropriate time to review estate planning documents. The tax information needed to prepare income tax returns is usually assembled at this time, and that information can be helpful in identifying changes in your financial situation. Further, many changes in federal and California law become effective at the beginning of the year. Unless unusual circumstances exist, _____ [I or we] do not feel that _____ [I or we] would charge you for more than three hours of _____ [my or our] time.

_____ [I or we] would like to know if you would like _____ [me or us] to help you conduct the type of review _____ [I or we] have recommended. DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
CHAPTER 60 ESTATE PLANNING
PART IV. FORMS

§ 60.205 Estimate of Estate Tax

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a worksheet that may be used to estimate the client's estate tax liability. The worksheet may be used at any point in the estate planning process at which an estimate of the estate tax payable in the client's estate is required. At a minimum, an estimate should be made before the estate plan is drawn up and before any changes or alterations are made to an existing plan that might affect the client's estate tax liability. This worksheet may also be used to test the relative tax saving advantages of alternative estate plans.

[b] Gross Estate

The starting point in determining the estate tax is the computation of the decedent's gross estate. The value of the gross estate is determined by including, to the extent provided in I.R.C. §§ 2033-2045, the value at the time of the decedent's death, or on the alternative valuation date [see I.R.C. § 2032] of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated [I.R.C. § 2031; Treas. Reg. § 20.2031-1(a)].

Property that a decedent owns at death is the most obvious example of property that is included in the decedent's gross estate. This may include a home, investments, and bank accounts; but it may also extend to amounts owed to the decedent, such as the principal of any loans the decedent made to another during life (plus accrued interest), accrued salary, and installment obligations owed to the decedent on property sold during life [see I.R.C. §§ 2031(a), 2033].

The decedent need not have owned the property solely or outright for it to be included in his or her gross estate. The value of a decedent's share of community property [see I.R.C. § 2033; U.S. v. Goodyear (9th Cir. 1938) 99 F.2d 523], or his or her interest in property owned as a joint tenant with another [see I.R.C. § 2040], or the value of a future interest, may need to be included in the gross estate.

The gross estate may also include the value of property interests transferred during the decedent's lifetime when the transfer is, in effect, of a testamentary nature, as well as the value of property that is transmitted on account of the decedent's death and over which the decedent enjoyed the requisite ownership or control at death. Thus, property transferred in such lifetime transfers as transfers of life insurance [see I.R.C. § 2042], revocable transfers [see I.R.C. § 2038], and transfers with a retained life estate [see I.R.C. § 2036] is included in valuing the gross estate.

For a discussion of the specific items that must be included in a gross estate, see § 60.13[1].

[c] Valuation of Assets

The value of a decedent's gross estate for estate tax purposes must be determined as of the date of the decedent's death or, at the election of the decedent's personal representative, at the alternate valuation date, which is generally six months after the decedent's death [I.R.C. §§ 2031, 2032]. The value of every property interest included in the gross estate is its fair market value. All relevant facts and elements of value as of the applicable valuation date must be considered [Treas. Reg. § 20.2031-1(b)]. Those factors include income yield, appraisals, sales prices of similar property near the time of death, bids made for the property, and general economic conditions [see Treas. Reg. §§ 20.2031-2-20.2031-8; Estate of Helen M. Noble, T.C. Memo. 2005-2 (fair market value of decedent's interest in closely held stock was determined using actual sales price of stock in arm's length transaction that occurred approximately one year after decedent's death); Estate of Josephine T. Thompson, T.C. Memo. 2004-174 (capitalization of income approach used to value decedent's 20-percent interest in closely held company; see also Estate of Frazier Jelke III, T.C. Memo. 2005-131 (value of holding company stock should be reduced by discounted, not full, built-in capital gain tax)].

The sum of the estate tax and the generation-skipping transfer tax due in respect to the property included in a decedent's gross estate may be reduced by electing an alternate valuation date [see I.R.C. § 2032]. Under the alternate valuation date election, all property included in the gross estate is valued as of six months after the decedent's death, except for property sold, distributed, exchanged, or otherwise disposed of during the six months, which is valued as of the date of disposition [I.R.C. § 2032(a)(1), (2)]. Adjustments to value due to a mere lapse of time are not allowed [see I.R.C. § 2032(a)(3); Treas. Reg. § 20.2032-1(f)].

The alternate valuation date election can only be made if it will reduce both the value of the gross estate and the sum of the estate tax imposed and the tax on generation-skipping transfers [see I.R.C. §§ 2601-2663] with respect to property that is includable in the decedent's gross estate [I.R.C. § 2032(c)]. The election must be made with respect to all property included in the gross estate on the date of the decedent's death; it cannot be applied only to a portion of the estate property [see I.R.C. § 2032(a); Treas. Reg. § 20.2032-1(b)(1)].

Deductions provided by other sections of the tax code must be coordinated with the alternate valuation provision. If the value of the property for estate tax purposes is determined on an alternate valuation date, that same value must be used for all other purposes [I.R.C. § 2032(b)]. Thus, if an asset is lost or destroyed during the six-month period following the decedent's death, for example, the loss may be deductible from the value of the gross estate in determining the taxable estate [see I.R.C. § 2054]. However, if the alternate valuation date is elected, so that the value of the asset is zero, the deduction under I.R.C. § 2054 will not be allowed [see I.R.C. § 2032(b)].

Special valuation rules apply to charitable and marital deductions [see I.R.C. §§ 2055, 2056] when the executor elects to use the alternate valuation date. The value of the charitable or marital deduction is to be determined as of the date of the decedent's death with adjustments made for any difference in value during the six-month period after the date of death. The difference in value must not be due to the mere lapse of time or the occurrence of a contingency, and if the property is disposed of during the six-month period, the adjustment period ends on the date of disposition [I.R.C. § 2032(b)]. When, for example, a decedent devises a life estate in specific property to a beneficiary with a remainder to a qualified charity, the value of the charitable deduction is determined at the date of death without adjustment, even if the contingency, that is, the beneficiary's death, occurs within the six-month period. However, if the property actually appreciates in value during the six-month period, the appreciation will be included in determining the value of the charitable deduction [see Treas. Reg. § 20.2032-1(g)].

The election to value the gross estate as of the alternate valuation date is exercisable by the decedent's personal representative on a timely filed estate tax return. Once the return is filed, the election cannot be revoked [I.R.C. § 2032(d)]. Estates that fail to make an alternate valuation election on the last estate return filed before the due date or the first return filed after the due date may request an extension of time to make the election; however, a request for an extension of time that is submitted more than one year after the due date of the return will not be granted [Prop. Treas. Reg. § 20.2032-1(b)(2); Treas. Reg. §§ 301.9100-1, 301.9100-3; see Letter Rul. 200324048 (decedent's estate granted extension of time under Treas. Reg. § 301.9100-1 to make alternate valuation election when accountant who was hired to prepare estate tax return failed to make election); but see Estate of Eddy v. Commissioner, (2000) 115 T.C. No. 10 (alternate valuation cannot be elected on return filed more than one year after due date, including extensions; estate should have filed return based on available information and then later filed supplemental return)]. Under proposed treasury regulations, a protective election may be made in cases in which, based on the return as filed, alternate valuation does not result in a decrease in tax liability, but it is later determined that such a decrease would occur. While a protective election generally would be irrevocable, it could be revoked on a subsequent return filed by the due date. If a decrease occurred, absent a revocation, alternate valuation would apply and could not be changed subsequently [Prop. Treas. Reg. § 20.2032-1(b)(2)].

If specified conditions are met, the personal representative may elect to value qualified real property included in a decedent's gross estate at its value based on the current use being made of the property rather than on the basis of its highest and best use [I.R.C. § 2032A]. Qualified real property must be located in the United States and must be used for farming or for another closely held trade or business [I.R.C. § 2032A(b)]. To qualify, the property must pass to a qualified heir (a family member) [I.R.C. § 2032A(e)(1), (2)], who must continue the qualified use [I.R.C. § 2032A(a)-(c)]. The special valuation method may not be used to decrease the value of the qualified real property in the decedent's gross estate by more than $750,000, subject to inflation adjustments for decedents dying after 1998 [I.R.C. § 2032A(a)(2)]. For decedents dying in 2005, for example, the adjusted figure is $870,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2004-71 ].

Transfers of partial interests in corporations, partnerships, and trusts to other family members are subject to special valuation rules [I.R.C. §§ 2701-2704]. These rules are intended to curtail an individual's ability to make lifetime transfers to family members of future appreciation in property. They value any retained interest other than a "qualified interest" at zero, unless the retained interest meets specified exceptions. In general, these provisions accept a present gift and focus on the valuation of that gift. Structuring partnerships and corporations without preferred interests is one of the most common ways of avoiding the application of I.R.C. § 2701. However, even partnerships and corporations with only one class of equity ownership are still subject to the valuation rules of I.R.C. §§ 2703 and 2704.

[d] Exclusions

In computing the gross estate [see [b], above], the following items may be excluded if the executor so elects:

- For decedents dying before 2004 [see I.R.C. § 2057(j)], interests qualifying for the family-owned business deduction [I.R.C. § 2057; see § 60.13[3]].
- The applicable percentage of the value of any real property subject to a qualified conservation easement [I.R.C. § 2031(c); see discussion in § 60.13[2]].

[e] Deductions

The deductions allowed by law must be deducted from the gross estate to determine the value of the taxable estate [I.R.C. § 2051]. Deductions are allowed for the following items:

- Funeral expenses, estate administration expenses, claims against the estate, and mortgages or other encumbrances on property included in the gross estate [I.R.C. § 2053(a); see Estate of Howard Gilman, T.C. Memo. 2004-286 (interest and costs associated with loan used to pay estate taxes may be deductible as administration expenses when loan is necessary to pay estate taxes due to estate's illiquidity); Letter Rul. 200449031 (interest on loan used to pay estate tax is deductible as administration expense if loan was necessary for administration of estate, but amount of loan should reflect any reduction in tax liability resulting from deductibility of interest); but see Letter Rul. 200444021 (estate may not claim estate tax deduction under I.R.C. § 2053 for income taxes estate paid on amounts it was compelled to withdraw from decedent's IRAs in order to pay estate tax)].

- Certain state and foreign death taxes [I.R.C. § 2053(d)].
- Casualty losses incurred during the settlement of the estate [I.R.C. § 2054].
- Transfers to charitable beneficiaries [I.R.C. § 2055; for general coverage of charitable transfers, see Ch. 69, Charitable Dispositions ].
- Transfers to the decedent's spouse [I.R.C. § 2056; for general coverage of the marital deduction, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions ].
- For decedents dying after 2004, state death taxes [I.R.C. § 2058].

[f] Adjusted Taxable Gifts

The amount of the client's adjusted taxable gifts must be added to the client's taxable estate before the tentative estate tax can be determined [I.R.C. § 2001(b)(1)(A), (B)]. They include all taxable gifts made after December 31, 1976 [I.R.C. § 2001(b)]. Whether a gift is "taxable" must be determined under the general gift tax rules [I.R.C. § 2001(b); see I.R.C. § 2503]. For example, a gift is not a "taxable" gift if it qualifies for the annual exclusion [I.R.C. § 2503(b)]. Gifts that are included in the client's gross estate must be excluded from the adjusted taxable gifts [I.R.C. § 2001(b)]. Thus there is no double counting for purposes of determining the estate tax rate applicable to a decedent's estate. However, the two types of gifts are valued differently. Gifts that are included in the gross estate are valued as of the client's death, while adjusted taxable gifts are valued as of the date the gifts were made.

[g] Tentative Tax

The tentative estate tax is determined by adding the amount of the adjusted taxable gifts [see [e], above] to the taxable estate and multiplying that amount by the applicable transfer tax rate [I.R.C. § 2001(b)(1)]. The transfer tax rates are prescribed by I.R.C. § 2001(c). For a table of those rates, see § 60.206[2].

[h] Gift Tax Payable During Lifetime

The gross estate tax is determined by subtracting the aggregate amount of the gift taxes that would have been payable on gifts made by the client after December 31, 1976, from the tentative tax. However, the amount of the gift taxes that must be subtracted must be determined by applying the estate tax rates in effect at the time of the client's death [I.R.C. § 2001(b)(2)].

[i] Credits

After the taxable estate has been determined, it is necessary to determine the credits allowed by the Internal Revenue Code. The allowable credits include credits for certain state and foreign death taxes [I.R.C. §§ 2011 (state death tax credit is replaced by a deduction for state death taxes, for estate of decedents dying after 2003), 2014], credits for certain gift taxes [I.R.C. § 2012], and credits for taxes on certain prior transfers [I.R.C. § 2013].

The most important credit is the unified credit [see I.R.C. § 2010]. The amount of property that can be sheltered by the estate tax unified credit varies and depends on the year of death. The amount is $675,000 for decedents dying in 2001, $1 million for decedents dying in 2002 and 2003, $1.5 million for decedents dying in 2004 and 2005, $2 million for decedents dying in 2006, 2007, and 2008, and $3.5 million for decedents dying in 2009 [see I.R.C. § 2010(c)] (table of graduated amounts) and discussion/table in § 60.13[4][b]. However, the unified credit against estate taxes works only in conjunction with the unified credit against gift taxes. The amount of the gift tax credit is the same as the estate tax credit through 2003, but after 2003, the amount of the gift tax credit remains $1 million, while the estate tax unified credit increases as noted above [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505(a)]. To the extent that the gift tax credit is depleted by lifetime transfers (gifts), however, the amount of the estate tax credit is reduced or even eliminated. If none of the gift tax credit is used during the decedent's lifetime, the full "applicable credit amount" and "applicable exclusion amount" will be available on the decedent's death. If part or all of the gift tax unified credit is used during the decedent's life, the otherwise available estate tax unified credit must be reduced by that amount [see I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505].

CHAPTER 60 ESTATE PLANNING
PART IV. FORMS

§ 60.206 Federal Transfer Tax Tables

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a table of federal transfer tax rates. It may be used to estimate the amount of federal gift or estate taxes payable in a client's estate. The table is copied from the table set forth in I.R.C. § 2001(c)(1). Under the unified transfer tax system, transfers by gift and transfers at death made after December 31, 1976, are taxed at the same rates [I.R.C. §§ 2001, 2501, 2502]. Thus, the rates shown in this form are applicable to both types of transfers.

Under legislation passed in 2001, the federal estate tax has been repealed for decedents dying after 2009, subject to a sunset provision [I.R.C. § 2505(a)(1), 2210(a); see Pub. Law 107-16, § 901; for more detailed discussion of this repeal, see § 60.112A]. In contrast, the gift tax continues to be imposed for gifts made after 2009, at rates ranging from 18 percent (for taxable gifts in excess of the annual exclusion of up to $10,000) to 35 percent (for taxable gifts over $500,000) [I.R.C. § 2502(a)(2)].

[b] Maximum Tax Rate

The maximum transfer tax rate for decedents dying and gifts made after 1983 and before 2002 is 55 percent [I.R.C. § 2001(c)(1), before amendment by Pub. Law 107-16]. The maximum tax rate is 50 percent for decedents dying in 2002, 49 percent for decedents dying in 2003, 48 percent for decedents dying in 2004, 47 percent for decedents dying in 2005, 46 percent for decedents dying in 2006, and 45 percent for decedents dying in 2007 through 2009 [I.R.C. § 2001(c)(1), (2)]. The estate tax is scheduled for repeal for decedents dying after 2009, but many commentators do not believe the repeal will occur as planned [I.R.C. § 2210(a); see § 60.12A].

[c] Former Phaseout of Graduated Rates and Unified Credit

The unified credit against gift and estate taxes effectively eliminates any estate or gift tax unless the tax base (taxable estate plus adjusted taxable gifts) exceeds the "applicable exclusion amount" [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]]. However, for estates of decedents dying, and gifts made, before 2002, the benefit of the unified credit is progressively "phased out" for estates in excess of $10,000,000. This is accomplished by increasing the tax that would otherwise be due by an amount equal to 5 percent of the portion of the estate that exceeds $10,000,000 [I.R.C. § 2001(c)(2)], before amendment by Pub. Law 107-16].

The maximum rates will be as shown in the table below, and brackets and amounts setting forth the tax will be adjusted accordingly.

CHAPTER 60 ESTATE PLANNING
PART IV. FORMS

§ 60.207 Estimate of Probate Fees

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a worksheet that may be used to estimate the fees that would be payable to the personal representative and the attorney for the personal representative if the client's estate were subject to probate administration. This worksheet may be used at any point in the estate planning process at which it is helpful to contrast the costs of probate administration with the costs of transferring the client's estate without probate. An estimate of this kind will often be useful in the preliminary stages of estate planning, when the client is considering the advantages and disadvantages of probate avoidance.

[b] Statutory Fees for Ordinary Services

The fees of the personal representative and the attorney for the representative in probate proceedings are governed by statute. For all "ordinary services," the personal representative and the attorney are entitled to fees determined according to a statutory schedule. The schedule is as follows [Prob. Code §§ 10800(a), 10810(a)]:

Four percent of the first $100,000;

Three percent of the next $100,000;

Two percent of the next $800,000;

One percent of the next $9,000,000;

One half of one percent of the next $15,000,000; and

A reasonable amount to be determined by the court for all amounts above $25,000,000.

The statutory fees of the personal representative and the attorney are identical [Prob. Code §§ 10800(a), 10810(a)]. For purposes of determining the statutory fees, "ordinary services" are the common services ordinarily rendered by the personal representative and the attorney in probate proceedings, and must be contrasted with "extraordinary services," for which additional compensation may be ordered by the court [see [c], below].

The statutory fees are determined by multiplying the statutory percentages by the value of the "estate accounted for" [Prob. Code § 10800(a)]. The "estate accounted for" is the total appraisal value of all of the property in the probate estate, plus gains over appraisal value on sales, plus receipts, less losses over appraisal on sales [Prob. Code § 10800(b)].

In calculating the value of the estate accounted for, no deduction is allowed for encumbrances or other obligations on estate property [Prob. Code § 10800(b)]. Thus, if the client owns a personal residence with an appraised value of $500,000 that is subject to a deed of trust with an unpaid balance of $400,000, the statutory fees will be determined on the basis of the $500,000 value without any deduction for the $400,000 encumbrance. Fees for ordinary services are calculated on the net income of any businesses that are part of the estate, not on the gross income [ Estate of Sanchez (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 239, 243, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 141 ].

The award of statutory fees is not discretionary. The personal representative and the attorney are entitled to the statutory fees as a matter of right [ Estate of Getty (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 455, 466, 191 Cal. Rptr. 897 ]. The fact that the estate is a simple one, and the fees are larger than would be adequate compensation for the work involved, does not affect the right to full statutory compensation [ Estate of Hilton (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 890, 909, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 ]. This right to statutory fees is absolute unless the personal representative fails to administer the estate in a timely manner or causes the estate to suffer a loss due to his or her default or neglect [Prob. Code § 12205; Estate of Bonaccorsi (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 462, 472, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 604 (courts may disallow compensation for services rendered negligently or in breach of trust)]. If the personal representative incurs expenses for work he or she has the duty to perform, those expenses may be charged against the personal representative's statutory commission [ Estate of Billings (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 426, 430, 278 Cal. Rptr. 439 ].

Any agreement between the personal representative and his or her attorney to grant the attorney compensation exceeding that allowed by statute is void as against public policy [Prob. Code § 10813; Estate of Gilkison (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 1446 fn. 2, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 463 ].

[c] Additional Fees for Extraordinary Services

Personal representatives and their attorneys are entitled to additional compensation for so-called "extraordinary services" [Prob. Code §§ 10801(a), 10811(a)]. Extraordinary services are services rendered by the representative or attorney that are beyond or in addition to their common or ordinary services. Examples of extraordinary services include selling real or personal property, handling contested or litigated claims against the estate, defending in good faith against the contest of a will, preparing tax returns, and participating in litigation involving estate property [see Estate of Hilton (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 890, 895 fn. 5, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 ; see also California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 35, Nomination of Executors (Matthew Bender)].

Unlike statutory fees, which are awarded as a matter of right [see [b], above], the allowance of extraordinary compensation is a matter of discretion with the trial court [Prob. Code §§ 10801(a), 10811(a); Estate of Trynin (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 868, 874, 264 Cal. Rptr. 93, 782 P.2d 232 (when amount awarded as ordinary compensation is fair and reasonable for all attorney services, court may disallow request for extraordinary compensation even though some extraordinary services have been performed); Estate of Gilkison (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 1448, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 463 ; Estate of Hilton (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 890, 914, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 (court has discretion to deny extraordinary fees when statutory fees are reasonable compensation for services performed)]. The trial court has discretion to determine, first, whether extraordinary compensation is warranted [see Estate of Billings (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 426, 431, 278 Cal. Rptr. 439 (accounting of complex estate is not always extraordinary)] and, second, when extraordinary compensation is warranted, how much the compensation should be [ Estate of Hilton (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 890, 907, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 ].

Since the amount of extraordinary compensation is not fixed, only a rough estimate of the amount of that compensation can be made at the estate planning stage. In determining whether extraordinary compensation is likely to be payable, the likelihood that property will be sold, that tax returns will have to be prepared, and that other similar services will have to be rendered, should be considered.

[d] Will Provisions Governing Compensation

The Probate Code explicitly authorizes a testator to provide in the will for the compensation of the executor and the attorney for the executor [Prob. Code §§ 10802(a), 10812(a)]. When the will specifies what compensation the executor and the attorney will receive, the compensation provided by the will is the full and only compensation for the services of the executor and the attorney [Prob. Code §§ 10802(a), 10812(a)]. However, the court may relieve the executor or the attorney from the will provisions if the court determines that it would be to the advantage of the estate and in the best interests of the persons interested in the estate to do so [Prob. Code §§ 10802(b), (d), 10812(b), (d)].

Notwithstanding the Probate Code provisions, will provisions setting the compensation of the executor and the attorney are rare.

[e] Contracts Void

Any contract between a personal representative and an heir or devisee for a higher compensation than that allowed by the will or by statute is void [Prob. Code § 10803].

[f] Probate Filing Fees

The filing fee is an additional factor to be considered in estimating total probate costs. The uniform filing fee for the first petition for letters of administration or letters testamentary, or the first petition for special letters of administration with the power of a general personal representative is three hundred fifty-five dollars ($355) [Gov. Code § 70650(a)]. The uniform filing fee for the first objections to the probate of any will or codicil under Prob. Code § 8250, or the first petition for revocation of probate of any will or codicil under Prob. Code § 8270 is three hundred fifty-five dollars ($355) [Gov. Code § 70650 (b)]. The uniform filing fee for the first petition for special letters of administration without the powers of a general personal representative is provided in Gov. Code § 70657.5 [Gov. Code § 70650(b)]. A fee of three hundred fifty-five dollars ($355) will also be charged for the filing of each subsequent petition or objection in the same proceeding by a person other than the original petitioner or contestant [Gov. Code § 70650(c)]. If a petition for special administration is filed together with a petition for letters of administration or letters testamentary by the same person, the person filing the petitions will be charged the applicable filing fees for both petitions [Gov. Code § 70650(d)].

A $20.00 surcharge is added to the above fees to ensure and maintain adequate funding for court security [Gov. Code § 69926.5(a)].

[1] Comment--Use of Form

This form is a notice that an attorney has accepted an estate planning document, such as an original will or trust, for "deposit" and an acknowledgment from the "depositor" that he or she will keep the attorney informed of any change in their address [Prob. Code § 715; see Prob. Code §§ 702, 703 ("deposit" and "depositor" defined); see also Prob. Code § 704 ("document" defined)]. An attorney may, but is not required to, use the form after accepting a document for safekeeping [see Prob. Code § 715]. However, if an attorney (1) gives notice to, and obtains acknowledgment from, the depositor, in substantially the form provided in Prob. Code § 715, and (2) satisfies the requirements of Prob. Code § 732(a) (regarding notifying a depositor to reclaim a document before it may be transferred to another attorney), the attorney, and a successor attorney that accepts a document's transfer, are required only to use slight care for preserving the document deposited [see Prob. Code § 716; see also Prob. Code § 733 (attorney transferring document must complete notice of transfer with state bar)]. This is in contrast to the general "ordinary care" standard imposed on attorneys who accept wills and other estate planning documents for safekeeping [compare Prob. Code § 710 with Prob. Code § 716].

For a further discussion of the rules governing the deposit of estate planning documents with an attorney for safekeeping, see § 60.18.

This chapter covers gifts of property made during the donor's lifetime, including the general law governing gifts and the procedural requirements for making gifts of different types of property. An overview of the tax treatment of gifts is provided. The chapter also provides information to guide the determination of how to effectuate a particular client's intention to make a gift, along with forms to assist in drafting documents. Gifts to minors under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act are covered.

Gifts of property to the natural objects of the donor's affection should be made within the context of the donor's total estate plan, particularly when the gifts are of substantial value. Therefore, it is recommended that the attorney also consult Ch. 60, Estate Planning, Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, Ch. 64, Testamentary Trusts: Payment and Distribution Provisions, Ch. 64A, Testamentary Trusts: Trustee Provisions, Ch. 64B, Testamentary Trusts: Administrative Provisions, Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms, Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, and Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts. Gifts to charitable organizations present special tax issues and are discussed in Ch. 69, Charitable Dispositions, and Ch. 74, Split-Interest Charitable Trusts.

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Gifts in General

23-60A California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 60A.10

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 60A.10 Gifts of Personal Property

[1] Definition

A gift of personal property is a transfer of personal property made voluntarily and without consideration [Civ. Code § 1146; see Civ. Code § 1040 (voluntary transfer)]. A gift is a gratuitous transfer, made with the intention of transferring beneficial ownership of the property from one person (the donor) to another person (the donee). The following six elements are essential to a valid gift of personal property in California [ Bank of America v. Cottrell (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 361, 363, 20 Cal. Rptr. 126 ; see Yamaha Corp. of Am. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 338, 358, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362 ; Jaffe v. Carroll (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 53, 59, 110 Cal. Rptr. 435 ; see discussion in [2], below]:

- The donor's intent to make a gift.
- The donor's capacity to contract.
- Delivery to the donee.
- Acceptance by the donee.
- Divestment of the donor's control.
- The absence of consideration.

A valid gift of personal property takes effect when it is made, and not at some time in the future [see Civ. Code § 1054 (grant takes effect on delivery); Robinson v. Mutual Sav. Bank (1908) 7 Cal. App. 642, 647, 95 P. 533 ]. The donee becomes the owner of the property for all purposes, and the donor retains no rights in or powers over the property.

When a completed gift of personal property has been made, the donor generally has no power to revoke the gift or to regain control of the gift property [see Civ. Code § 1148 (revocability of gift); Taylor v. Taylor (1944) 66 Cal. App. 2d 390, 399, 152 P.2d 480 ; but see Prob. Code § 5704 (revocation of gift in view of impending death)]. For discussion of revocability, see [3], below.

The definition of a gift under California law differs significantly from the definition of a gift under federal tax law. For discussion of the essentials of a gift for federal tax purposes, see § 60A.32.

[2] Requirements

[a] Donor's Intent

A gift requires an intent on the part of the donor to make a present gift to the donee [ Bank of America v. Cottrell (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 361, 363, 20 Cal. Rptr. 126 ; see Civ. Code § 1146 (gift is transfer of personal property "made voluntarily")]. If the intention is merely to transfer the property at some time in the future, no gift has been made [ Estate of Hall (1908) 154 Cal. 527, 532, 98 P. 269 ; Hart v. Ketchum (1898) 121 Cal. 426, 428, 53 P. 931 ]. In some cases, the intent with which property was transferred can be determined only by examining the donor's acts and intentions, both before and after the property was transferred [ Bank of America v. Cottrell (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 361, 363, 20 Cal. Rptr. 126 ].

Because intent is such an important factor in determining whether a gift was made, it is always prudent to create clear written evidence of any transaction in which property is delivered or divested without an exchange of something of reasonably equivalent value. Without documentary evidence, the ultimate issue of whether a gift was made might have to be resolved on the basis of a "testimony contest" between the purported donor and the purported donee [see, e.g., Matson v. Jones (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 826, 829, 77 Cal. Rptr. 717 ("The only issue is the credibility or inherent improbability of Matson's testimony. There was a conflict in the evidence as to the intent of each of the parties which was resolved by the trial court ... .")].

[b] Donor's Capacity to Contract

Case law generally holds that a gift requires capacity in the donor to contract with respect to the property that is the subject of the gift [see Bank of America v. Cottrell (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 361, 363, 20 Cal. Rptr. 126 ]. One case involving a gift deed of real property stated that a donor's capacity to make a gift is judged by the same standards as a testator's capacity to make a will, on the basis that the rules governing capacity to execute a deed are in general the same as those governing testamentary capacity [ Hughes v. Grandy (1947) 78 Cal. App. 2d 555, 177 P.2d 939 ; see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms ; see also Blevin v. Mayfield (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 649, 652, 11 Cal. Rptr. 882 ; Brunoni v. Brunoni (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 215, 218, 208 P.2d 1028 (both equating capacity to execute deeds with testamentary capacity)]. However, the capacity to make a gift usually has been equated with capacity to contract regarding the subject property, rather than testamentary capacity [see, e.g., Bank of America v. Cottrell (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 361, 363, 20 Cal. Rptr. 126 ; see Yamaha Corp. of Am. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 338, 358, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362 ; Jaffe v. Carroll (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 53, 59, 110 Cal. Rptr. 435 ]. In general, all persons except unemancipated minors, persons of unsound mind, and persons deprived of civil rights have the capacity to contract in California [Civ. Code § 1556; see Fam. Code § 6500 (all persons under 18 years of age are minors)]. For discussion of the capacity to contract, see Ch. 75, Formation of Contracts and Standard Contractual Provisions .

An unemancipated minor cannot give a delegation of power, cannot make a contract relating to real property or any interest in real property, and cannot make a contract relating to any personal property not in his or her immediate possession or control [Fam. Code § 6701; see Civ. Code § 1557(a) (capacity of minor to contract is governed by Fam. Code § 6500 et seq.)]. An unemancipated minor may make any other type of contract in the same manner as an adult, subject only to the power of disaffirmance [Fam. Code § 6700; for more detailed discussion of the power of minors to contract, see Ch. 100B, Contracts and Employment of Minors ]. Therefore, an unemancipated minor (who is not of unsound mind) may make a gift of personal property that the minor owns and that is in his or her immediate possession and control, but the gift can be revoked by exercise of the power of disaffirmance.

An emancipated minor is considered to be an adult for the purpose of entering into a binding contract and specifically for the purpose of making a gift, whether outright or in trust [Fam. Code § 7050(e)(2), (7)].

An adult who is "entirely without understanding" has no power to make a contract of any kind [Civ. Code § 38; see Civ. Code § 1557(b) (capacity of person of unsound mind to contract is governed by Civ. Code § 38 et seq.)]. An adult who is "of unsound mind, but not entirely without understanding," can make a contract "before the incapacity of the person has been judicially determined," but the contract is subject to being rescinded [Civ. Code § 39(a)]. A rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof that a person is of unsound mind exists for purposes of the foregoing rule if the person is substantially unable to manage his or her own financial resources or resist fraud or undue influence. Substantial inability may not be proved solely by isolated incidents of negligence or improvidence [Civ. Code § 39(b)].

After a judicial determination of the incapacity of a person of unsound mind, the person can make no conveyance or other contract, and cannot delegate any power or waive any right, until his or her restoration to capacity [Civ. Code § 40(a)], subject only to the right of the person, as a conservatee, to control an allowance [see Prob. Code § 2421] or wages or salary [see Prob. Code § 2601] and to make a will [see Prob. Code § 1871] and to the rights of the person under the Lanterman-Petris Short Act [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 5000 et seq.]. The establishment of a conservatorship [see Prob. Code § 1400 et seq.] is a judicial determination of the incapacity of the conservatee for the purposes of the foregoing rule [Civ. Code § 40(b)].

The appointment of a conservator of the estate is an adjudication that the conservatee lacks the legal capacity to enter into or make any transaction that binds or obligates the conservatorship estate [Prob. Code § 1872(a)]. For this purpose, "transaction" is specifically defined to include making a gift [Prob. Code § 1870]. However, the court has the power, either in its order appointing the conservator or on petition, to authorize the conservatee to enter into transactions or types of transactions that may be appropriate under the circumstances, subject to the power of the court to broaden or restrict the conservatee's legal capacity and subject to the supplemental authority of general principles of law and equity relating to transactions [Prob. Code §§ 1873, 1874; see also Prob. Code § 1876 (provisions relating to legal capacity of conservatee do not displace, but rather are supplemented by, general principles of law and equity relating to transactions)]. Furthermore, in the case of a limited conservatorship [see Prob. Code §§ 1827.5, 1828.5 (limited conservatorship for persons with developmental disabilities)], the appointment of a limited conservator does not limit the capacity of the limited conservatee to enter into transactions or types of transactions, except as otherwise provided in the court's order [Prob. Code § 1872(b)]. Thus, it is possible under some circumstances for a conservatee to make a valid gift.

Whether and to what extent a conservator has power to make a gift of property from the conservatorship estate will depend on the terms of the order of appointment and any subsequent order or instructions. For discussion of conservatorships and the powers and duties of a conservator respecting property of the estate, see Ch. 66A, Conservatorships , and California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 290A, Guardianship and Conservatorship: Asset Management and Investment (Matthew Bender).

[c] Delivery to Donee

A gift requires actual or symbolic delivery of the gift property to the donee [ Bank of America v. Cottrell (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 361, 363, 20 Cal. Rptr. 126 ; see Civ. Code § 1147]. Delivery generally is accomplished when the property is physically transferred to the donee or to some third person not subject to the donor's direction [see Beebe v. Coffin (1908) 153 Cal. 174, 176, 94 P. 766 ; Bishop's School Upon Scripps Foundation v. Wells (1937) 19 Cal. App. 2d 141, 146, 65 P.2d 105 ]. If delivery of the property itself is impossible or impractical, the means of obtaining possession of the property, or a written instrument of gift executed by the donor, may be symbolically delivered in place of the property [Civ. Code § 1147]. Thus, delivery of a key to a safe deposit box may constitute a valid symbolic delivery of the contents of the box [see Estate of Escolle (1933) 134 Cal. App. 473, 480, 25 P.2d 860 ].

[d] Acceptance by Donee

A gift requires acceptance of the gift property by the donee [ Bank of America v. Cottrell (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 361, 363, 20 Cal. Rptr. 126 ; Connelly v. Bank of America (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 303, 307, 291 P.2d 501 ]. A donee who does not wish to receive the property cannot be forced to accept it. In most cases, however, acceptance will be presumed unless there are facts showing that the donee refused to accept the property [see, e.g., Estate of Kalt (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 807, 813, 108 P.2d 401 ].

[e] Divestment of Donor's Control

A gift requires complete divestment of all control over the gift property by the donor [ Bank of America v. Cottrell (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 361, 363, 20 Cal. Rptr. 126 ; Connelly v. Bank of America (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 303, 307, 291 P.2d 501 ]. If the donor retains dominion over the property after it has been delivered, then no gift has been made.

[f] Absence of Consideration

A gift requires the absence of consideration for the transfer of the subject property [ Bank of America v. Cottrell (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 361, 363, 20 Cal. Rptr. 126 ; Connelly v. Bank of America (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 303, 307, 291 P.2d 501 ]. A gift must be a gratuitous transfer. If property is transferred as part of a bargain in which the transferor receives valuable consideration in return for the transferred property, the transfer is not gratuitous and does not constitute a gift [ Estate of Breschini (1953) 120 Cal. App. 2d 154, 156, 260 P.2d 804 ; see Letter Rul. 200442003 (husband's lump sum payment to wife in exchange for her community property interest in husband's deferred compensation plan as part of marital property settlement was transfer for full and adequate consideration and thus not subject to gift tax)]. However, a valuable consideration need not be money or even property. In appropriate circumstances, it may consist of the cancellation of a debt or the waiver of a right [ Estate of Bishop (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 48, 55, 25 Cal. Rptr. 763 ].

[g] Writing

There is no general requirement that a gift be made in writing [Civ. Code § 1052]. In contrast, gifts of real property are required to be made in writing [Civ. Code § 1091; see Civ. Code § 1053 (grant as transfer in writing); see also § 60A.11[1]], but an oral gift of real property can be enforced in some cases [ see § 60A.11[2]].

[3] Revocability

[a] Revocation Generally Precluded

A gift generally cannot be revoked by the donor [Civ. Code § 1148]. However, a gift in view of impending death can be revoked in limited circumstances [see Prob. Code § 5704; § 60A.15[5]].

In addition, case law recognizes a limited right to rescind a completed gift that was induced by fraud or undue influence [ McDonald v. Hewlett (1951) 102 Cal. App. 2d 680, 686-687, 228 P.2d 83 ; Murdock v. Murdock (1920) 49 Cal. App. 775, 781-786, 194 P. 762 ]. For further discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 278, Gifts (Matthew Bender).

[b] Gift in Contemplation of Marriage

The Civil Code recognizes a limited right to revoke a gift made in contemplation of marriage. When either party to a contemplated marriage in California makes a gift of money or property to the other on the basis or assumption that the marriage will take place, the donor may recover the gift or its value if the donee refuses to enter into the marriage as contemplated, or if the marriage is given up by mutual consent. In the event of a suit to recover the gift or its value, the court may award the donor a part of the value of the gift if, under all circumstances of the case, partial recovery is found to be just [Civ. Code § 1590; but see Lee v. Yang (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 481, 493, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 819 (man was not entitled to reimbursement for funds that fiancée withdrew from joint bank account after parties terminated relationship; California Multiple-Party Accounts Law (Prob. Code § 5100 et seq.) governed account and under its terms fiancée had an unrestricted right to withdraw the funds in question; failure to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that parties had a legally enforceable oral agreement restricting fiancée's right to withdraw funds)].

[4] Reservation of Rights

When the payee of a promissory note returned the note to the maker with the "reservation" that the installment payments be continued during the payee's lifetime, a valid gift was made [ Connelly v. Bank of America (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 303, 306-307, 291 P.2d 501 ].

§ 60A.11 Gifts of Real Property

[1] Writing Required

Real property may be transferred by gift. However, an instrument in writing, signed by the transferor or the transferor's agent duly authorized in writing, is essential to transfer most interests in real property [Civ. Code § 1091 (exception only for estate at will or for term not exceeding one year)]. A gift of real property typically is made by executing and delivering a deed to the gift property [see Civ. Code § 1053 (grant as transfer in writing); see, e.g., City of Palm Springs v. Living Desert Reserve (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 613, 617-618, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859 (gift of real property made by trustee under decedent's will by execution of grant deed)]. For a discussion of the legal rules for execution, acknowledgment, delivery, and recordation of deeds to real property, see Ch. 27, Deeds and Recording .

[2] Oral Gift of Real Property

An oral gift of real property may be enforced, despite the statutory rule requiring that the gift be made by an instrument in writing [see Civ. Code § 1091; [1], above], if the person challenging the transfer is estopped to plead the statute [Andreotti v. Andreotti (1964) 224 Cal. App. 2d 533, 538, 36 Cal. Rptr. 709 ]. A person generally will be estopped to plead the statute requiring an instrument in writing if the property actually has been transferred pursuant to the oral gift and the donee, relying on the gift, has made valuable and substantial improvements on the property or substantial expenditures in connection with it, or otherwise has acted in relation to the property in such a way as to make it unjust to deprive him or her of its ownership by reason of an imperfection in the mode of transfer [ Andreotti v. Andreotti (1964) 224 Cal. App. 2d 533, 538, 36 Cal. Rptr. 709 ].

[3] Reservations of Rights

A completed gift may be made despite the fact that the donor reserves the right to income from the property during his or her lifetime [ Gordon v. Barr (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 596, 602, 91 P.2d 101 ].

§ 60A.12 Gifts of Community Property

[1] In General

A spouse generally may not make a gift of community property unless the other spouse consents to the gift or joins in making it. A spouse may not make a gift of community personal property, or dispose of community personal property for less than fair and reasonable value, without the written consent of the other spouse. However, this rule does not apply to gifts mutually given by both spouses to third parties and to gifts given by one spouse to the other spouse [Fam. Code § 1100(b)].

Although there is no general rule prohibiting one spouse from making a gift of community real property, both spouses must join (either personally or by a duly authorized agent) in executing any instrument by which community real property is sold, conveyed, encumbered, or leased for longer than one year [Fam. Code § 1102(a)]. However, this rule is subject to exceptions. First, the rule does not apply to any lease, mortgage, conveyance, or transfer of community real property from one spouse to another [Fam. Code § 1102(b)]. Second, if one spouse alone holds record title to community real property, a lease, contract, or mortgage executed by that spouse alone to a lessee, purchaser, or encumbrancer in good faith without knowledge of the marriage relation is presumed to be valid, and an action to avoid the instrument must be commenced within one year from the date it was recorded [Fam. Code § 1102(c), (d) (presumption applicable to lease, contract, mortgage or deed executed after 1974)].

[2] Gifts of Quasi-Community Property

Property that was acquired by a person while domiciled outside California and that would have been community property if the person had been domiciled in California at the time of acquisition is classified in California as "quasi-community property" [Fam. Code § 125(a); Prob. Code § 66(a)]. Property that is acquired by a person while domiciled outside California in exchange for property that would have been community property if the person had been domiciled in California at the time of acquisition is also classified as "quasi-community property" [Fam. Code § 125(b); Prob. Code § 66(b)].

Quasi-community property differs from community property in a key particular: Although spouses have present and equal interests in their community property while both are living, a spouse will obtain an interest in quasi-community property acquired by the other spouse only on the death of the other spouse, or on dissolution of their marriage. The statutory definitions of quasi-community personal property and quasi-community real property differ slightly for purposes of division on dissolution of marriage and distribution after the death of the acquiring spouse. When the spouses' marriage is being dissolved, all property, real and personal and wherever situated, is eligible to be classified as quasi-community property, providing it meets the other requirements of the definition described above [Fam. Code § 125]. After the acquiring spouse has died, however, all personal property, wherever situated, is eligible to be classified as quasi-community property, but only real property situated in California may be so classified [Prob. Code § 66].

The spouse who acquires quasi-community property is generally free to dispose of the property in any way he or she sees fit, whether by gift or otherwise, during his or her lifetime. Conversely, the other spouse has no power to dispose of the property while the acquiring spouse is living [see Paley v. Bank of America (1958) 159 Cal. App. 2d 500, 509, 324 P.2d 35]. If the acquiring spouse dies owning quasi-community property, however, one-half of the property belongs to the deceased spouse and the other half belongs to the surviving spouse [Prob. Code § 101(a)], unless the spouses have agreed to a non-pro rata division of the property [Prob. Code § 101(b)]. Until the acquiring spouse dies, the other spouse's interest in the quasi-community property is an expectancy and nothing more.

If the acquiring spouse dies after making a gift of quasi-community property, the surviving spouse may have a right to require the transferee to restore the property to the acquiring spouse's estate or, if the transferee does not retain the property, one half of its proceeds or value [Prob. Code § 102]. However, an action to require restoration of quasi-community property to the acquiring spouse's estate will be successful only if all of the following requirements are met [Prob. Code § 102(a)]:

- The surviving spouse must have had an expectancy in the property at the time of the acquiring spouse's death.
- The acquiring spouse must have died domiciled in California.
- The acquiring spouse must have transferred the property to a person other than the surviving spouse without receiving in exchange a consideration of substantial value and without the written consent or joinder of the surviving spouse.
- The acquiring spouse must have retained at the time of death the possession or enjoyment of the property or its income, a power to consume, invade, or dispose of the principal the property, or a joint tenancy ownership interest in the property.

The surviving spouse may not require a transferee to restore any life insurance, accident insurance, joint annuity, or pension payable to a person other than the surviving spouse [Prob. Code § 102(b)]. If property is restored to the acquiring spouse's estate, it belongs to the surviving spouse as though the transfer had not been made [Prob. Code § 102(c); see Prob. Code § 101 (surviving spouse's interest in quasi-community property)].

[3] Transmutation of Community Property by Gifts Between Spouses

The process by which the property rights of married persons are changed from separate property to community property, or from community property to separate property, is known as "transmutation" [see Fam. Code § 850 et seq.]. The Family Code specifically authorizes married persons to transmute community property to separate property of either spouse, separate property of either spouse to community property, or separate property of one spouse to separate property of the other spouse [Fam. Code § 850]. It also provides that a transmutation may be effected by an agreement or transfer, and with or without consideration [Fam. Code § 850].

The spouse whose interest is to be adversely affected by a transmutation generally must make, join in, consent to, or accept an express written declaration making the transmutation [Fam. Code § 852(a)]. The written declaration must contain language expressly stating that the characterization or ownership of the property is being changed [ Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 262, 272, 272 Cal. Rptr. 153, 794 P. 2d 911 ; see In re Marriage of Starkman (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 659, 663-665, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 639 (clause in trust agreement providing that property transferred to trust is community property unless transferor spouse identifies it as separate property was insufficient to transmute husband's separate property, which he failed to identify as separate property, to community property); Estate of Bibb (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 461, 465-471, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 415 (grant deed signed by husband transferring his separate property interest in real property to himself and his wife as joint tenants satisfied "express declaration" requirement, but unsigned computer printout entitled "DMV Vehicle Registration Information," reflecting that automobile previously registered in husband's name alone was reregistered in names of husband or wife did not satisfy requirements for valid transmutation)]. There is no exception from the "express declaration" requirement for partial performance of an agreement to transmute property [ In re Marriage of Benson (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1096, 1100, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471, 116 P.3d 1152 ]. Use of extrinsic evidence to prove that a writing effected a transmutation is precluded [ Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 262, 264, 272 Cal. Rptr. 153, 794 P.2d 911 ].

If the property to be transmuted is real property, the transmutation must also be recorded, or it will not affect the rights of third parties without notice [Fam. Code § 852(b)]. However, neither a written declaration nor recordation is required if the gift is merely of clothing, wearing apparel, jewelry, or other tangible articles of a personal nature that are used solely or principally by the spouse to whom the gift is made and that are not substantial in value taking into account the circumstances of the marriage [Fam. Code § 852(c)].

Transmutations are subject to rules set forth in the Family Code that limit and regulate contracts between married persons. Although married persons generally may enter into the same property transactions as unmarried persons, contracts between married persons are subject to the general rules governing fiduciary relationships that control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other [Fam. Code § 721(a), (b)]. Because of their confidential relationship, married persons must deal with each other on the basis of the highest duty of good faith and fair dealing [Fam. Code § 721(b)]. Among other things, each spouse must provide the other spouse with access at all times to any books kept regarding a transaction. Further, each spouse must render on request true and full information of all things affecting any transaction that concerns the community property and account to the other spouse for any benefit or profit derived from any community property transaction made without the other spouse's consent [Fam. Code § 721(b)].

An attorney who represents married persons in connection with a transmutation of property should be aware of the special professional duties to which this kind of representation is subject. Under Rule 3-310(C) of the California Rules of Professional Conduct, an attorney cannot represent clients whose interests conflict, except with their informed written consent. Since transmutations almost always benefit one spouse and adversely affect the other spouse, the parties to spousal transmutations almost always have conflicting interests. An attorney cannot properly represent both spouses to a transmutation transaction unless the attorney fully informs both parties of all of the circumstances of the proposed transaction and all of the adverse results of the transaction that are reasonably foreseeable. The clients must also be informed of the right to obtain independent counsel [see Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 3.300(B)]. For a detailed discussion of the ethical duties of attorneys who represent clients with conflicting interests in estate planning transactions, see California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 4, Ethical Considerations and Professional Responsibility .

For additional discussion of the conversion of community property to separate property and vice versa, see Ch. 121, Provisions for Division of Property .

§ 60A.13 Gifts to Minors

Gifts to minors can be made in several ways. If the gift is small, it can be made to the minor outright or through a transfer under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act [Prob. Code § 3900 et seq.] (UTMA). For discussion of the UTMA, see § 60A.40 et seq. If the gift is large, it usually is advisable to create a trust and appoint a trustee to hold the gift property. In the absence of a trust, it is likely that a guardian would have to be appointed to hold the property for the minor [see Prob. Code § 3413 (appointment of guardian to hold money for minor)]. Property held for a minor by a guardian or a custodian under the UTMA will ordinarily be transferred to the minor when he or she reaches the age of 18, although an instrument of inter vivos transfer under the UTMA may postpone the ultimate transfer to a later time, not to exceed the minor's twenty-first birthday [Prob. Code § 3920.5(e); see § 60A.40]. A trust will give the donor greater flexibility to determine when the gift property will be distributed to the minor. For a discussion of inter vivos trusts, see Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts .

§ 60A.15 Gifts in View of Impending Death

[1] In General

A gift in view of impending death is one that is made in contemplation, fear, or peril of impending death, whether from illness or other cause, and with the intent that it will be revoked if the giver recovers from the illness or escapes from the peril [Prob. Code § 5702(a)]. A gift in view of impending death is also known as a gift causa mortis [see, e.g., LaMar v. Bank of America etc. Assn. (1933) 218 Cal. 252, 254, 22 P.2d 689 ; Rosenberg v. Broy (1961) 190 Cal. App. 2d 591, 595, 12 Cal. Rptr. 103].

Before the adoption of Probate Code rules relating to gifts in view of impending death [see Prob. Code § 5700 et seq.], the applicable Civil Code statutes referred to gifts "in view of death" [see former Civ. Code § 1149 et seq. (repealed Jan. 1, 1992)]. By referring to gifts "in view of impending death," the current Probate Code rules make it clear that they do not apply to gifts made in contemplation of remote death, but rather apply only to gifts made under circumstances that would naturally impress on the giver an expectation of death in the very near future [Prob. Code § 5703; see Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2873-2874 (1990)]. Thus the Probate Code statutes have no application to gifts made solely for the purpose of saving death taxes or avoiding probate at some remote time in the future [see Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2873-2874, 2880 (1990)]. A reference in a statute to a "gift in view of death" means a "gift in view of impending death" [Prob. Code § 5702(b)].

[2] As Will Substitute

A gift in view of impending death differs from other gifts in that it is intended to take effect, not during the giver's lifetime, but on his or her death. It thus functions as a kind of will substitute. It has the effect of transferring property on death without complying with the formalities required for wills and without probate administration [see Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2873-2874 (1990)]. Recognizing that gifts in view of impending death avoid the rules governing testamentary dispositions of property, the courts have traditionally viewed them with caution and sustained them only when they have been established by clear and convincing proof [see, e.g., Schuler v. Winstanley (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 759, 766, 297 P.2d 512 ; Broderick v. Koehler (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 813, 817, 207 P.2d 1070].

The Probate Code recognizes the quasi-testamentary status of gifts in view of impending death by setting forth special rules relating to their revocation [see [5], below] and to the rights of creditors of the giver [see [6], below].

[3] Conditional Nature

A gift in view of impending death is a conditional gift [see Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2879 (1990); Prob. Code §§ 5702(a), 5704]. The Civil Code formerly defined such a gift as one made "with intent that it shall take effect only in case of the death of the giver" [see former Civ. Code § 1149, repealed Jan. 1, 1992]. Under a literal application of this language, a gift in view of death would vest in the donee only when the giver died. Vesting of the gift would thus be subject to a condition precedent, i.e., the death of the giver. Because the gift would vest only if the giver died before the gift was revoked, and would not vest if the giver did not die before the gift was revoked, the gift had the same effect as a devise in a will, namely that of transferring the giver's property on the giver's death. Because the gift did not comply with the statutory formalities for wills, it was ineffective for all purposes [see Yates v. Dundas (1947) 80 Cal. App. 2d 468, 474-475, 182 P.2d 305 ; see also [2], above].

However, the Probate Code statutes make it clear that a gift in view of impending death is not subject to a condition precedent. Rather, the gift is made with the intent that it "shall be revoked" if the giver escapes from the illness or escapes from the peril that induced the gift [Prob. Code § 5702(a)]. Under this language, the donee's title vests immediately on delivery of the gift property, subject to later revocation if the giver recovers from the illness or survives the peril. The gift is thus subject to a condition subsequent rather than a condition precedent. It is not an invalid attempt to transfer property on death, and it is not vulnerable to challenge on the ground that it does not comply with the statutory formalities for wills [see Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2875 (1990)].

[4] Presumption

If a gift was made during the last illness of the giver, or under circumstances that would naturally impress the giver with an expectation of speedy death, it is presumed to be a gift in view of impending death [Prob. Code § 5703].

Notwithstanding this presumption, however, gifts in view of impending death are subject to the general law relating to gifts of personal property [Prob. Code § 5701]. Thus, a valid and completed gift in view of impending death must meet other requirements relating to gifts of personal property, such as intent, delivery, and acceptance [Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2879 (1990); Paddock v. Fonner (1927) 84 Cal. App. 652, 655, 258 P. 423 ; see § 60A.10[2]]. Further, a gift in view of impending death can be made only by a person who has the legal capacity to make a gift [ LaMar v. Bank of America etc. Assn. (1933) 218 Cal. 252, 255-256, 22 P.2d 689 ]; and, if the gift is of community or quasi-community property, it is subject to the rights of the giver's spouse [Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2880 (1990); see § 60A.12[1], [2]].

[5] Revocation

The Probate Code includes special rules relating to the revocation of gifts in view of impending death [see Prob. Code § 5704]. Under those rules, the giver has the right to revoke the gift at any time [Prob. Code § 5704(b)(1)]. The gift may be revoked inter vivos [Prob. Code § 5704(b)(1)] or by the giver's will, if the will expresses an intention to revoke the gift [Prob. Code § 5704(b)(2)]. However, a gift in view of impending death is not affected by a previous will of the giver [Prob. Code § 5704(c)].

A gift in view of impending death is automatically revoked by the giver's recovery from the illness, or escape from the peril, under the presence of which it was made [Prob. Code § 5704(a)(1)]. This means that an enforceable gift in view of impending death can be made only if the giver in fact dies as a result of the illness or other peril that induced the gift [ Paddock v. Fonner (1927) 84 Cal. App. 652, 655, 258 P. 423] . However, the mere fact that the death occurred as a result of suicide will not nullify the gift if the other elements of a valid and completed gift in view of impending death have been found [see Berl v. Rosenberg (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 125, 130, 336 P.2d 975 ; Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2873-2874 (1990)].

If the gift has been delivered to the donee, revocation of the gift may be subject to the rights of purchasers or encumbrancers. If a person, acting in good faith, for a valuable consideration, and without knowledge of the conditional nature of the gift, purchases the gift property, or lends money on the security of the property, the person's rights will not be affected by the revocation [Prob. Code § 5704(d)].

[6] Rights of Creditors

The Probate Code includes special rules governing the rights of creditors of a person who makes or has made a gift in view of impending death [see Prob. Code §§ 5705, 9653]. If a deceased person made a gift of property in view of impending death and if the personal representative has insufficient assets to pay creditors, a creditor of the deceased person or the deceased person's estate may request that the personal representative commence and prosecute an action for the recovery of the property [Prob. Code § 9653(a); see Prob. Code § 58 ("personal representative" means executor, administrator, administrator with will annexed, etc.)]. However, a creditor who makes such a request must pay a part of the costs and expenses of the suit and attorneys' fees, or give an undertaking to the personal representative for that purpose [Prob. Code § 9653(b)]. The amount that the creditor must pay will be determined by mutual agreement of the personal representative and the creditor or, if they cannot agree, by the court [Prob. Code § 9653(b)].

Any property recovered in the suit must be sold for the payment of debts in the same manner as if the deceased person has died seized or possessed of the property. The proceeds of the sale first must be applied to payment of the costs and expenses of the suit, including attorneys' fees, and then to payment of the deceased person's debts in the same manner as other property in possession of the personal representative. After all debts of the decedent have been paid, the remainder of the proceeds must be paid to the person from whom the property was recovered. The property may be sold in its entirety or in such portion as is necessary to pay the debts [Prob. Code § 9653(c)].

§ 60A.16 Limitations on Gifts to Disqualified Persons

[1] Invalidity of Gifts to Disqualified Persons

[a] Persons Who Are Disqualified

The Probate Code contains special rules under which donative transfers to certain persons and classes of persons, generally called "disqualified persons," are presumptively invalid [Prob. Code § 21350 et seq.; see Prob. Code § 21350.5], unless they come within statutory exceptions [see [2], below]. These rules, which apply to instruments that become irrevocable on or after September 1, 1993 [Prob. Code § 21355], generally establish a presumption of invalidity as to provisions in wills, trusts, and other instruments that purport to make gifts to any of the following [Prob. Code § 21350(a)]:

- The person who drafted the instrument.
- A person who is related by blood or marriage to, is a domestic partner [see Prob. Code § 21350(d); Fam. Code § 297 (meaning of "domestic partner")] of, or is a cohabitant with, or employee of, the person who drafted the instrument.
- Any partner or shareholder of any law partnership or law corporation in which the person who drafted the instrument has an ownership interest, and any employee of that law partnership or law corporation.
- Any person who has a fiduciary relationship with the transferor, including a conservator or trustee, who transcribes the instrument or causes it to be transcribed. In this regard, a conservator was held not to have caused a will and trust to be "transcribed" for purposes of these rules when he had called an estate planning company to meet with the conservatee, brought the company's agent to the conservatee's house, and wrote a check from the conservatee's funds for the will and trust. The court concluded that to cause a document to be transcribed would necessarily involve directing the drafted document to be written out in its final form, which the conservator had not done [ Estate of Swetmann (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 807, 819-820, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 ].

- A person who is related by blood or marriage to, is a domestic partner of, or is a cohabitant with, or employee of, a person described in the immediately preceding category.
- A care custodian of a dependent adult who is the donor [see (b), below].
- A person who is related by blood or marriage to, is a domestic partner of, is a cohabitant with, or is an employee of, a person who is a care custodian of a dependent adult who is the donor.

For purposes of this rule, a "person who is related by blood or marriage" to a person means all of the following [Prob. Code § 21350(b)]:

- The person's spouse or predeceased spouse.
- Relatives within the third degree of the person and the person's spouse.
- The spouse of any person described in the immediately preceding category.

In determining relationships for purposes of this rule, Prob. Code § 6406, which governs the inheritance rights of relatives of the half blood, Prob. Code § 6407, which covers the inheritance rights of after-born heirs, and Prob. Code § 6450 et seq., which prescribe rules for determining the relationship of parent and child for purposes of intestate succession, are all applicable [Prob. Code § 21350(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

It is important for practitioners to understand the net effect of the disqualification rules, and how the disqualification provisions in Prob. Code § 21350 interact with the exceptions in Prob. Code § 21351, which are discussed in greater detail in [2], below. Basically, a gift that is made to a "disqualified person" other than the person who actually drafted the instrument, and that does not qualify for any of the specific exceptions in Prob. Code § 21351, is subject to a rebuttable presumption of invalidity [Prob. Code § 21351(d),(e)(1); Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300]. A rebuttable presumption also applies (regardless of whether or not the gift was made to the person who drafted the instrument) to gifts made in instruments executed on or before July 1, 1993, by a person who was a California resident at the time of execution, and to instruments executed by a California resident who was a nonresident at the time the instruments was executed [Prob. Code § 21351(e)(2),(3)]. This presumption is rebuttable only on a showing, by clear and convincing evidence, not based solely on the testimony of disqualified persons, that the transfer was not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence [Prob. Code § 21351(d)]. If the attorney can make such a showing, a gift to a disqualified person still may be found valid.

However, if the recipient of the gift was the person who actually drafted the instrument, the gift was made in an instrument executed on or after July 1, 1993, by a person who was a California resident at the time the instrument was executed, and none of the other exceptions in Prob. Code § 21351 apply, the presumption is conclusive rather than rebuttable and the gift is automatically invalid [Prob. Code § 21351(d),(e)(1); Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300]. Thus, for example, assuming no other exception in Prob. Code § 21351 applied, an attorney who drafted an instrument so as to benefit himself or herself would be conclusively disqualified, but if the same attorney drafted the instrument so as to benefit the attorney's relative or law partner, the presumption would be rebuttable by clear and convincing evidence that the client freely chose that disposition [ Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300] . Commentary by publisher's editorial staff.

[b] Dependent Adults and Care Custodians

The term "dependent adult" as used in [a], above, means any of the following [Prob. Code § 21350(c); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 15610.23(a)]:

- Any person residing in California, between the ages of 18 and 64 years, who has physical or mental limitations that restrict his or her ability to carry out normal activities or to protect his or her rights including, but not limited to, persons who have physical or developmental disabilities or whose physical or mental abilities have diminished because of age [Prob. Code § 21350(c)].
- Any person between the ages of 18 and 64 who is admitted as an inpatient to a 24-hour health facility as defined in Health & Safety Code §§ 1250, 1250.2, and 1250.3.
- Any person older than age 64 who would be a "dependent adult" under the above definitions if he or she were between the ages of 18 and 64.

The term "care custodian" means an administrator or an employee of any of the following public or private facilities or agencies, or persons providing care or services for elders or dependent adults, including members of the support staff and maintenance staff [Prob. Code § 21350(c); Welf & Inst. Code § 15610.17]:

- Twenty-four hour health facilities [see Health & Saf. Code §§ 1250, 1250.2, 1250.3].
- Clinics.
- Home health agencies.
- Agencies providing publicly funded in-home supportive services, nutrition services, or other home and community-based support services.
- Adult day health care centers and adult day care.
- Secondary schools that serve 18- to 22-year-old dependent adults and postsecondary educational institutions that serve dependent adults or elders.
- Independent living centers.
- Camps.
- Alzheimer's Disease day care resource centers.
- Community care facilities [see Health & Saf. Code § 1502] and residential care facilities for the elderly [see Health & Saf. Code § 1569.2].
- Respite care facilities.
- Foster homes.

- Vocational rehabilitation facilities and work activity centers.
- Designated area agencies on aging.
- Regional centers for persons with developmental disabilities.
- State Department of Social Services and State Department of Health Services licensing divisions.
- County welfare departments.
- Offices of patients' rights advocates and clients' rights advocates, including attorneys.
- The office of the long-term care ombudsman.
- Offices of public conservators, public guardians, and court investigators.
- Any protection or advocacy agency or entity that is designated by the Governor to fulfill the requirements and assurances of the federal Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 2000 [see 42 U.S.C. § 15001 et seq.] or the Protection and Advocacy for the Mentally Ill Individuals Act of 1986 [see 42 U.S.C. § 10801 et seq.], for the protection and advocacy of the rights of persons with mental illness.
- Humane societies and animal control agencies.
- Fire departments.
- Offices of environmental health and building code enforcement.
- Any other protective, public, sectarian, mental health, or private assistance or advocacy agency or person providing health services or social services to elders or dependent adults.

The last item in the preceding list of care custodians is the most significant in light of its broad interpretation by California courts. In Bernard v. Foley, the California Supreme Court held that the statutory definition set out above does not include a professional or occupational limitation and does not provide for a pre-existing personal friendship exception. Thus, the definition includes any person providing care or health services to a dependent adult [ Bernard v. Foley (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 794, 803, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 248, 139 P.3d 1196 ; see also Estate of Odian (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 152, 167, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 390 (paid live-in caregiver who provides social services within the meaning of Prob. Code § 21350(a) is a care custodian and is subject to the presumption of undue influence)]. In Bernard v. Foley, the presumptive disqualification of gifts to care custodians was held applicable although the trustee and other caregivers involved in the case were not health care professionals and had a preexisting personal friendship with the decedent [ Bernard v. Foley (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 794, 803, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 248, 139 P.3d 1196 ] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Estate planners are concerned about the effect of Bernard v. Foley because it makes virtually any gift to a family friend who has incidentally provided care to a donor subject to challenge under Prob. Code § 21350. It is not uncommon for elderly donors to want to make gifts to close friends who have helped them during their last years. Since such close friends often provide incidental care for the elderly on an informal basis--driving them to medical appointments, helping with medications, exercise, meals, and so on--it is very likely that an argument can be made that such a person is a "care custodian" within the meaning of Bernard v. Foley, even if no formal relationship exists. Therefore, estate planners faced with such a situation now need to anticipate not only a traditional challenge based on undue influence, but also a statutory challenge based on a claim that the beneficiary is a "care custodian" under Prob. Code § 21350. Since the "clear and convincing evidence" standard can be difficult to meet in this type of case, it is strongly recommended that whenever an elderly person wants to make a gift to a close friend, the attorney attempt to qualify the gift in advance by obtaining a certificate of independent review if possible. In addition, or alternatively if a certificate of independent review cannot be obtained, the attorney should anticipate ways of meeting the evidentiary standard, such as videotaping the donor and /or obtaining affidavits or other documentary evidence by disinterested parties at the time the instrument is executed in case the persons with knowledge of the facts are not available after the donor's death.

It has also been held that a long-term care ombudsman for a health care facility is a "care custodian" for purposes of the statute during the time he or she serves as ombudsman for a particular "dependent adult," and remains a care custodian within the meaning of the statute even after his or her formal ombudsman relationship with a particular resident has ended, due either to a change in the ombudsman's facility assignment or the fact that the resident has left the facility, when the ombudsman, as a result of his or her fiduciary relationship with the resident, develops a personal relationship with the resident and thereby acquires personal and financial information about the resident [ Estate of Shinkle (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 990, 993, 1007, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 ; overruled in part on other grounds in Bernard v. Foley (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 794, 816, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 248, 139 P.3d 1196] .

[c] Disposition of Property Subject to Invalid Transfer

If a transfer fails under any of the rules discussed in this section, the subject property then must be disposed of as if the disqualified person predeceased the transferor without spouse or issue [Prob. Code § 21353].

[d] Liability for Invalid Transfer

No person will be liable for making any transfer that is invalid under these rules unless the person received actual notice of the possible invalidity of the transfer prior to making the transfer [Prob. Code § 21352]. Further, a person who receives actual notice cannot be held liable for failing to make the transfer unless the validity of the transfer has been conclusively determined by a court [Prob. Code § 21352].

[2] Exceptions

[a] Transfer to Donor's Relative, Cohabitant, or Domestic Partner

A transfer is not invalidated if the transferor is related by blood or marriage to, is a cohabitant with, or is the registered domestic partner of the transferee or the person who drafted the instrument [Prob. Code § 21351(a)]. This exception applies to any instrument that becomes irrevocable on or after July 1, 1993 [Prob. Code § 21351(a)]. For this purpose, a person is "related by blood or marriage" to another person if the person is related within the fifth degree [Prob. Code § 21351(g)].

[b] Transfer to Public Entity or Public Trust

A transfer is not invalidated if the transferee is a federal, state, or local public entity, an entity that qualifies for a charitable exemption from taxation under I.R.C. § 501(c)(3) or I.R.C. § 501(c)(19), or a trust holding an interest for this entity, but only to the extent of the interest of the entity, or the trustee of this trust [Prob. Code § 21351(f)].

[c] Independent Attorney's Review

A transfer is not invalidated if the instrument is reviewed by an independent attorney who counsels the transferor about the nature of the intended transfer; attempts to determine if the intended consequence is the result of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence; and signs and delivers a Certificate of Independent Review in substantially the form set forth in Prob. Code § 21351(b) [ see § 60A.240 (form for Certificate of Independent Review)].

PRACTICE TIP:

As a practical matter, a Certificate of Independent Review can be difficult to obtain, even when there is little or no actual doubt regarding the absence of fraud or undue influence. Many estate planning attorneys are reluctant to issue Certificates of Independent Review out of concern over potential liability and the fear that in the event the gift is subsequently contested by the donor's heirs, they may end up being attacked on the issue of whether or not they performed an adequate investigation prior to issuing the certificate. Commentary by publisher's editorial staff.

[d] Court Approval

A transfer is not invalidated if, after full disclosure of the relationships of the persons involved, the court approves the instrument by order under Prob. Code § 2580 et seq. (substituted judgment) [Prob. Code § 21351(c)].

[e] Court-Determined Absence of Fraud, Duress, Menace, or Undue Influence

A transfer is not invalidated if the court determines on clear and convincing evidence that the transfer was not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence [Prob. Code § 21351(d)]. However, this exception applies only to the following categories of instruments [Prob. Code § 21351(e); see Prob. Code § 21351(a)(1)]:

- Instruments executed by persons who were not residents of California at the time the instruments were executed.
- Instruments that do not make transfers to the persons who actually drafted the instruments.
- Instruments executed on or before July 1, 1993, by persons who were California residents at the time the instruments were executed.

In making a determination that the transfer was not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence, the court cannot consider any evidence given by the person who drafted the instrument [Prob. Code § 21351(d); see Prob. Code § 21351(a)(1)].

PRACTICE TIP:

The effect of the preceding provision (Prob. Code § 21351(d)) is to establish a rebuttable presumption of invalidity under Prob. Code § 21350, except as to a person who actually drafted an instrument that was executed after July 1, 1993, by a California resident then residing in the state. As to the latter, the presumption is conclusive rather than rebuttable [see Prob. Code § 213151(d),(e); Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300]. As to other disqualified persons, the presumption may be rebutted on a showing of clear and convincing evidence [Prob. Code § 213151(d),(e)]. Commentary by publisher's

§ 60A.30 Unified Transfer Tax System

[1] In General

The federal gift tax is imposed, for each calendar year, on taxable transfers of property by gift by any person (whether resident or nonresident) during that calendar year [I.R.C. § 2501(a)(1); see §§ 60A.31, 60A.32]. The federal estate tax is imposed on the taxable estate of every decedent who is a citizen or resident of the United States [I.R.C. § 2001(a)]. Both taxes are subject to related exemptions, deductions, exclusions, and credits that together enable tax-free transfers of gifts, up to a certain amount for each gift, every year, as well as the tax-free transfer of additional property during life and after death, up to a certain value.

Estate and gift taxes are effectively merged into a single tax scheme, often called the unified transfer tax, by both the rate schedule and the exemption amount, which is actually a credit. Under a fully unified estate and gift tax, the application of the gift tax credit to lifetime gifts would reduce the estate tax credit on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

The Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 [Pub. L. No. 107-16] resulted in a partial undoing of the unification of the gift and estate taxes. Although the same tax rate schedule [I.R.C. §§ 2001(c), 2502(a)] remains applicable for both the gift tax and the estate tax, and the term "unified credit" [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505(a)] is retained until 2010, the gift tax exclusion amount is limited to $1,000,000, while the estate tax exclusion amount increases gradually to $3,500,000 for estates of decedents dying in 2009. The estate tax is gradually phased out by increasing the applicable exclusion amount and by reducing the maximum tax rate until its complete repeal in 2010 [I.R.C. § 2010(c)]. In contrast, the gift tax is not repealed. Because of a sunset provision in the 2001 act, however, the law effective prior to that act is reinstated as of January 1, 2011, unless further legislation is enacted [Pub. L. No. 107-16, § 901(a)]; for more detailed discussion of the repeal legislation and the issues it raises for estate planners, see Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.12A]. See California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 2, Overview of Tax Laws Affecting the Disposition of Estates (Matthew Bender), for discussion of the modified carryover basis rules that replace the estate tax after its repeal. Because of the temporary nature of the estate tax repeal (and related changes) under the 2001 tax legislation, most commentators believe that significant changes will be made to the 2001 legislation before the 2011 sunset date takes effect.

PRACTICE TIP:

Even if the estate and gift taxes remained fully unified [ see above ], a degree of disparity would exist between the transfer tax treatment of wealth transfers by a donor during the donor's lifetime as opposed to those made at the donor's death. This disparity exists because gifts are taxed on a "tax exclusive" basis while transfers at death are taxed on a "tax inclusive" basis; that is, even the dollars used to pay estate tax are themselves taxed, whereas gift tax is imposed only on the assets actually reaching the donee's hands--the dollars used to pay the tax are not taxed themselves. This can result in a greater disparity than it might seem at first glance. For example, if a hypothetical 50 percent tax bracket (which is in excess of the current maximum rates, but useful for purposes of this example) applied equally to the gift and estate tax brackets, the estate tax actually due would be effectively twice as much as the gift tax on the same net amount received by the donee. For this reason, estate planners have long felt that gift taxes are "cheaper" than estate taxes on comparable amounts of transferred assets received by intended beneficiaries. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman

[2] Operation of Unified Rate Schedule and Unified Credit

The unified rate schedule and unified credit will be in effect as described below until 2010 (in the absence of Congressional action prior to that date relating to the estate tax repeal). The federal estate tax will not be applicable to estates of decedents dying during 2010 [I.R.C. § 2210 added by Pub. L. No. 107-16, § 501(a)].

The gift and estate taxes share the same tax rate schedule [see I.R.C. §§ 2001(c), 2502(a)]. The rates in this table begin at 18 percent of the tax base (taxable gifts or taxable estate) and rise to 50 percent as the tax base exceeds $2,500,000 [I.R.C. § 2001(c)(1)]. The maximum 50 percent tax rate applies to the estates of decedents dying, and gifts made, during 2002. The maximum tax rate thereafter decreases 1 percent each year until it becomes 45 percent in 2007; this maximum rate remains in place until 2009, after which (under current law) the estate tax--but not the gift tax--is repealed. After 2009, under current law, the maximum gift tax rate is scheduled to drop to 35 percent [I.R.C. § 2502(a); see § 60A.31[3]], subject to the sunset provision noted in [1], above.

Both gift and estate taxes also provide for a unified credit against estate or gift tax that would otherwise be due [ see § 60A.31[4] ]. The applicable credit amount increases on a graduated basis over a specified span of years and is that amount of credit which will exclude the "applicable exclusion amount." The 2001 act schedules the applicable exclusion amount for estate tax to increase according to the following table [I.R.C. § 2010(c)]:

2002 and 2003	$1,000,000
2004 and 2005	$1,500,000
2006, 2007, 2008	$2,000,000
2009	$3,500,000

Prior to the 2001 act, the applicable exclusion amount was scheduled to increase according to the table below [I.R.C. § 2010(c) prior to amendment by Pub. L. No. 107-16, § 521(a)]. If the law effective prior to the 2001 act is reinstated under the sunset provision in that act [I.R.C. § 2210], this table will again apply; thus, in 2011 the applicable exclusion amount for both the estate tax and the gift tax would revert to $1,000,000, the amount scheduled to begin in 2006:

Decedents dying in:	Applicable exclusion amount:
1999	$650,000

2002 and 2003	$700,000
2004	$850,000
2005	$950,000
2006 or later	$1,000,000

Prior to the 2001 act, the applicable exclusion amount for the estate tax was the same as the applicable exclusion amount for the gift tax [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505(a)]. Under the 2001 act, however, while the applicable exclusion amount for estate tax increases according to the table above, the applicable exclusion amount for the gift tax is limited to $1,000,000, and is not subject to adjustment for inflation [I.R.C. § 2505(a)]. The limitation of the applicable exclusion amount for the gift tax to $1,000,000 makes lifetime giving in excess of that amount less attractive since higher exclusion amounts are available for transfers at death beginning in 2004.

It is important to remember that for married couples, each spouse is entitled to a separate unified credit. Those credits can fully shelter at least $2,000,000 of property from transfer tax (see the table above).

[3] Distinctions Between Gift Tax and Estate Tax

[a] Tax Treatment of Amounts Used to Pay Tax

The estate tax is imposed on the entire taxable estate of the decedent, including the amount that will not be transferred to beneficiaries because it will have to be used to pay the estate tax [see I.R.C. § 2001(a), (b)]. In contrast, the gift tax is imposed only on the amount actually transferred to the donee [see I.R.C. §§ 2501(a), 2502(a)]. The gift tax is paid by the donor using other funds [I.R.C. § 2502(c)], and the amount of tax paid generally is not itself subject to transfer taxes (although it would be paid, in most cases, with money already taxed as income).

[b] Additional Exclusions Available Under Gift Tax

Two significant exclusions from the gift tax base are not available under the estate tax. First, the annual gift tax exclusion covers aggregate gifts to any donee in a calendar year, up to the applicable annual exclusion amount. The amount of the annual gift tax exclusion, which is subject to annual adjustment for inflation, is $11,000 for calendar years 2002 through 2005 [I.R.C. § 2503(b); Rev. Proc. 2004-71, 2004-50 I.R.B. 970 (2005 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2003-85 (2004 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2002-70 (2003 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2001-59 (2002 exclusion amount)]. For gifts made before 2002, the annual gift tax exclusion was $10,000 [Rev. Proc. 2001-13].

This exclusion is a major feature of estate planning because a series of annual gifts before the donor's death, to numerous donees over a number of years, without exceeding the annual exclusion amount, can significantly reduce that portion of a moderate size estate which will be subject to estate tax, without any transfer tax cost.

In addition, qualifying tuition payments and payments to medical care providers for the benefit of another individual are excluded for purposes of the gift tax [I.R.C. § 2503(e); see § 60A.32[3]]. Inasmuch as providing for the education and medical care of family members is an important aspect of practical estate planning, the impact of this gift tax exclusion can be significant.

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

B. Tax Aspects of Gifts

23-60A California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 60A.31

§ 60A.31 Computation of Gift Tax

[1] Initial Computation of Tax

The gift tax is computed on a calendar year basis with respect to all gifts made during the year [I.R.C. § 2501(a)]. The tax base is the aggregate value of gifts for the calendar year, subject to certain exclusions and deductions [I.R.C. § 2503; see § 60A.32]. The tax bracket at which gifts are taxed begins in the highest bracket in which gifts were taxed in the last prior gift tax year in which taxable gifts were made (subject, of course, to the current maximum rate). Therefore, in order to determine the bracket and the tax due on taxable gifts made during the current year, it is necessary to determine the sum of taxable gifts made for prior years, giving effect to all deductions or exclusions applicable in the years those gifts were made [I.R.C. § 2504(a), (b)]. Gift tax errors in previous years, other than simple valuation errors on which the statute of limitations has run, must be corrected in determining the proper amount of prior gifts for the purpose of computing the current year's tax [I.R.C. § 2504(c); Treas. Reg. § 25.2504-1(d)].

Once the amount of taxable gifts for the current year and all prior years is determined, the gift tax is computed as follows:

- (1) A tentative tax is computed by applying the unified estate and gift tax rates [I.R.C. § 2001(c); see [3], below] to the aggregate sum of the taxable gifts for the current year and each of the preceding calendar periods [I.R.C. § 2502(a)(1)].
- (2) Another tentative tax is computed by applying the same rate structure to only the aggregate sum of the taxable gifts for each of the preceding calendar periods, but not the current year [I.R.C. § 2502(a)(2)].
- (3) The gift tax (prior to the application of the unified credit) is the first tentative tax as reduced by the second tentative tax [I.R.C. § 2502(a)].

Thus, each successive gift is placed higher on the graduated rate structure. The following example demonstrates this mechanism in the simplest way (and without reference to the actual statutory rates):

EXAMPLE:

Assume that a 30-percent rate applies to gifts under $1,000,000, and a 40-percent rate applies to gifts over $1,000,000. Further assume that in prior years a donor has made taxable gifts totaling $1,000,000. If the donor makes a further gift of $50,000 during the current calendar year, that gift will be effectively subject to a 40-percent tax rate.

[2] Application of Unified Credit

Once the gift tax is initially determined, it is offset by the "applicable credit amount" of the unified credit [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts); §§ 60A.30[2], 60A.32[4]]. The applicable credit amount is exhausted when the donor's total of post-1976 taxable gifts reaches the "applicable exclusion amount." Only when the cumulative total passes the "applicable exclusion amount" is there gift tax liability.

The "applicable credit amount" and the "applicable exclusion amount" are precisely equivalent only if the donor made no pre-1977 gifts. Because the unified credit became applicable only in 1977 [Pub. L. 94-455, § 2001(b)(2), (d)(2) (I.R.C. § 2505 effective only for gifts made after 1976)], donors with pre-1977 gifts received what appears to be a clean slate, but there is some loss of the full benefit of the unified credit. There is a narrow exception to this rule, applicable to gifts made after September 8, 1976, and before 1977 [see I.R.C. § 2505(b)]. This exception affects persons who took advantage of a specific $30,000 exemption for gifts made in a calendar quarter (less amounts allowed under this exemption in prior calendar years and calendar quarters) available under former I.R.C. § 2521, repealed by Pub. L. No. 94-55, § 2001(b)(3), prior to the effective date of the Tax Reform Act of 1976. On advice of counsel, some persons took advantage of this exemption in the last quarter of 1976 based on the then-prevailing opinion that Congress would never permit the full amount of the unified credit to take effect.

[3] Federal Gift Tax Rates

For gifts made before 2010, the federal gift tax rates are the same as the federal estate tax rates [I.R.C. § 2502(a)]. The following rates are taken from the rate table set forth in I.R.C. § 2001(c), which sets the rates for the federal estate tax, subject to the phased-in maximum rate limitations discussed below:

AMOUNT OF TAXABLE GIFT	TAX
Not over $10,000 .....	18 percent of that amount.
Over $10,000 but not over $20,000 .....	$1,800, plus 20 percent of the excess of that amount over $10,000.
Over $20,000, but not over $40,000 .....	$3,800, plus 22 percent of the excess of that amount over $20,000.
Over $40,000, but not over $60,000 .....	$8,200, plus 24 percent of the excess of that amount over $40,000.
Over $60,000, but not over $80,000 .....	$13,000, plus 26 percent of the excess of that amount over $60,000.
Over $80,000 but not over $100,000 .....	$18,200, plus 28 percent of the excess of that amount over $80,000.
Over $100,000 but not over $150,000 .....	$23,800, plus 30 percent of the excess of that amount over $100,000.
Over $150,000 but not over $250,000 .....	$38,800, plus 32 percent of the excess of that amount over $150,000.

Over $250,000 but not over $500,000 .....	$70,800, plus 34 percent of the excess of that amount over $250,000.
Over $500,000 but not over $750,000 .....	$155,800, plus 37 percent of the excess of that amount over $500,000.
Over $750,000 but not over $1,000,000 .....	$248,300, plus 39 percent of the excess of such amount over $750,000.
Over $1,000,000 but not over $1,250,000 .....	$345,800, plus 41 percent of the excess of such amount over $1,000,000.
Over $1,250,000 but not over $1,500,000 .....	$448,300, plus 43 percent of the excess of such amount over $1,250,000.
Over $1,500,000 but not over $2,000,000 .....	$555,800, plus 45 percent of the excess of such amount over $1,500,000.
Over $2,000,000 but not over $2,500,000 .....	$780,800, plus 49 percent of the excess of such amount over $2,000,000.
Over $2,500,000 .....	$1,025,800, plus 50 percent of the excess over $2,500,000.

The maximum rate of tax as shown by the above table is gradually phased down for gifts made after 2002 and before 2010 [I.R.C. §§ 2001(c)(2), 2502(a)]. The maximum rates for those years are as shown below, and the tax brackets and amounts setting forth the tax are adjusted accordingly:

Gifts made before 2002	55 percent
Gifts made in 2002	50 percent
Gifts made in 2003	49 percent
Gifts made in 2004	48 percent
Gifts made in 2005	47 percent
Gifts made in 2006	46 percent
Gifts made in 2007 through 2009	45 percent
Gifts made after 2009	35 percent

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

B. Tax Aspects of Gifts

23-60A California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 60A.32

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 60A.32 Taxable Gifts

[1] In General

The tax base for the gift tax is the total amount of transfers by gift during the taxable year (as valued on the date of the gift), less specified exclusions and deductions [I.R.C. §§ 2501(a), 2503, 2512(a)].

The exclusions are for:

- Certain qualifying educational and medical expenses paid on behalf of a donee [see I.R.C. § 2503(e); [3], below].
- Lifetime gifts covered by the annual exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2503(b)] (annual exclusion amount of $11,000 for gifts made in calendar years 2002 through 2005, and $10,000 for gifts made before 2002; amount is subject to annual adjustment for inflation); see also [4], below].

The deductions are for:

- Gifts to spouses (the marital deduction) [see I.R.C. § 2523].
- Gifts to qualifying charities [see I.R.C. § 2522].

The only practical difference between an exclusion and a deduction under the gift tax is that a return still must be filed for a deductible charitable gift (no return is required for marital-deduction gifts) if the value of the gift exceeds the annual exclusion amount, whereas no return is required for an excluded gift [I.R.C. § 6019(a); see I.R.C. § 2524 (extent of available deductions)].

[2] Transfers by Gift

[a] Basic Rule

The gift tax applies broadly to all transfers by gift, whether in trust or otherwise, and whether the gift is direct or indirect, and whether the property is real or personal, or is tangible or intangible [I.R.C. § 2511(a)]. For example, a taxable transfer may be effected by the creation of a trust, the forgiveness of a debt, the assignment of a judgment, the assignment of the benefits of an insurance policy, or the transfer of cash or securities [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-1(a)].

[b] What Constitutes "Gift"

There has been confusion about the meaning of the word "gift" for gift tax purposes because the regulations expressly negate donative intent as an essential element of a gift. Rather, the regulations claim to rely only on the "objective facts of the transfer and the circumstances under which it is made, rather than on the subjective motives of the donor" [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-1(g)(1)]; see Commissioner v. Wemyss (1945) 324 U.S. 303, 306, 65 S. Ct. 652, 89 L. Ed. 958; but see Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-8 (donative intent is element to be considered in determining whether transfer was made in ordinary course of business)].

The practical meaning of the definition of "gift" for gift tax purposes is best understood in light of the statutory rule that if property is "transferred for less than an adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth, then the amount by which the value of the property exceed[s] the value of the consideration shall be deemed a gift" [I.R.C. § 2512(b)]; see, e.g., Priv. Ltr. Rul. 200532024 (grandchildren's proposed renunciation of their interests in trust is gift for gift tax purposes of value of renounced interests)]. Thus, if a transfer is supported by full consideration in money or money's worth, there is no gift [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-1(g)(1)]; see Priv. Ltr. Rul. 200442003 (husband's lump sum payment to wife in exchange for her community property interest in husband's deferred compensation plan as part of marital property settlement was transfer for full and adequate consideration and thus not subject to gift tax)]. The regulations indicate that a bona fide sale or exchange in a business context will not be deemed a gift to any extent, even though the transferor may have made a bad bargain in retrospect [Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-8]. However, in order for a transfer to be deemed to have occurred during the ordinary course of business, it must be "bona fide, at arm's length, and free from any donative intent" [Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-8]. In short, although the regulations appear to dismiss donative intent as critical, donative intent inherently enters into the determination of whether a transfer was made for valuable consideration in a business context [see, e.g., Heringer v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1956) 235 F.2d 149, 151; Estate of Lang v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1980) 613 F.2d 770, 773-774 ].

No gift has been made unless the donor has effectively parted with "dominion and control" over the property [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-2(b)]. A person has effectively parted with dominion and control over property when the person has disposed of property without retaining the right to change the disposition, whether for his or her own benefit or for another person's benefit [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-2(b)]; see, e.g., Priv. Ltr. Rul. 200534015 (proposed assignment to irrevocable trust of portion of potential proceeds from judgment or settlement in wrongful death action would constitute completed gift at time of assignment)]. A gift is incomplete if the donor reserves the power to revest beneficial title to the property in himself or herself, to name new beneficiaries, or to change the interests of the beneficiaries as between themselves [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-2(c)]. A donor can retain dominion and control over gift property transferred to a trustee, by reserving various powers over the trust property. Dominion and control also can be retained in less formal ways. If, for example, the gift property is cash and the mode of transfer is a check, the donor is deemed to retain dominion and control over the property until the check is presented to the bank and paid, because the donor can stop payment on the check at any time before it has been paid [ Estate of Dillingham v. Commissioner (10th Cir. 1990) 903 F.2d 760, 762-763 ; Estate of Gagliardi v. Commissioner (1987) 89 T.C. 1207, 1212 ]. This can be critical when a gift is made by check and the donor wants the gift to be qualified for the annual gift tax exclusion. For example, if a donor gave the donee a check for $11,000 (the amount of the annual exclusion) on December 24, 2003, and the check was paid on January 5, 2004, when the donee presented it to the bank, then the gift is deemed to have been completed (and qualified for the annual gift tax exclusion) in January 2004, not in December 2003.

A revocable trust is not a gift at the time it is created [ Burnet v. Guggenheim (1933) 288 U.S. 280, 288, 53 S. Ct. 369, 77 L. Ed. 748 ]. Only as distributions are made from a revocable trust, and thus pass beyond the donor's power to take back, does a taxable gift occur. Therefore, a transfer may be deemed complete enough to constitute a taxable gift at the time of the transfer, yet be considered incomplete enough (because of powers retained by the donor) to be brought back into the donor's taxable estate.

The gift tax applies only to transfers of a beneficial interest in property, not to transfers of bare legal title. Thus, a transfer in trust is a gift only to the extent that beneficial interests pass to someone other than the settlor. Transfers by the trustee under the terms of the trust (such as a distribution to the remainder beneficiary) are not themselves gifts if the transfer does not pertain to property in which the trustee has a beneficial interest [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-1(g)].

The estate and gift tax laws generally adopt the concept that one who has the power to take possession of property should be treated as the owner [see, e.g., I.R.C. §§ 2033, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2511, 2514(b) (decendent's gross estate includes value of all property to extent of decendent's interest in that property at death; transfers in which transferor retains interest are included in transferor's gross estate; transfers taking effect only on or after transferor's death are included in transferor's gross estate; revocable transfers are included in transferor's gross estate; gift tax is applicable whether transfer is direct or indirect, in trust or otherwise; gift tax treatment of general powers of appointment)]. Thus, it is arguable that if A makes a gift to B, and B refuses to accept the gift knowing it will pass by default to C, B should be treated as making a gift of the property to C. However, under the tax law, if B makes a "qualified disclaimer" with respect to property that B is entitled to receive, the property is treated as passing directly from the original donor (A) to the taker in default (C) [I.R.C. § 2518(a)]. There is no taxable gift from B to C. This rule applies for purposes of both the gift tax and the estate tax [I.R.C. § 2518(a)].

A "qualified disclaimer" is an irrevocable and unqualified refusal to accept an interest in property, made in writing [I.R.C. § 2518(b)(1)]. The refusal must be made before the disclaiming party has accepted the interest or any of its benefits [I.R.C. § 2518(b)(3)]. Acts indicative of acceptance include using the property or an interest in the property, accepting dividends or rents from the property, and directing others to act with respect to the property or an interest in the property [Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-2(d)(1); see Estate of Engelman v. Commissioner (2003) 121 T.C. 54 (attempted disclaimer of property by executor of decendent's estate on decendent's behalf was not qualified disclaimer because decendent's exercise of power of appointment over property, effective on her death, constituted acceptance of property under California law)].

The written refusal must be received by the transferor of the interest, his or her legal representative, or the holder of legal title to the property to which the interest relates not later than the date nine months after the later of (1) the date the transfer creating the interest is made or (2) the day the disclaiming party turns 21 [I.R.C. § 2518(b)(2)]. A final requirement is that, as a result of the disclaimer, the interest passes to another person without any direction on the part of the disclaiming party (or to the decendent's surviving spouse if the transfer occurs on the transferor's death) [I.R.C. § 2518(b)(4)]. Regulations expand on these rules at length [see Treas. Reg. §§ 25.2518-1, 25.2518-2, 25.2518-3].

A donee may disclaim only a portion of an interest in property if he or she chooses [I.R.C. § 2518(c)(1)]. However, the disclaimed portion must be an undivided portion [I.R.C. § 2518(c)(1); Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-3(a)(1)(i)]. For example, a wife's disclaimer of her survivorship interest in a joint brokerage account with her husband constituted a qualified disclaimer even though, before making the disclaimer, she made cash withdrawals from the account and sold certain securities in the account. Despite the cash withdrawal and sale of securities, the disclaimer was a qualified disclaimer because the cash and securities were separable assets, and the wife did not accept the benefits of the disclaimed interest [see Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-3(a)(1)(ii); Letter Rul. 200503024].

Property passing to a tax-exempt charity as a result of a disclaimer qualifies for the estate tax charitable deduction [

Priv. Ltr. Rul. 200519042 (daughter's disclaimer of interest in residue of mother's estate, which resulted in transfer of residue to charity of which daughter is president, is qualified disclaimer as long as charity's charter and bylaws are amended to require that no person may have wholly discretionary power to direct distribution of funds received by reason of that person's disclaimer, and that disclaimed funds will be held in segregated account)).

For additional discussion and forms for making disclaimers, see §§ 60A.230-60A.232.

[d] Effect of Powers of Appointment

The treatment of disclaimers is somewhat inconsistent with the gift tax treatment of powers of appointment. The exercise or release of a general power of appointment is treated as a gift by the holder of the power to the beneficiary of the appointment or the taker in default [I.R.C. § 2514(b)].

If a general power of appointment must be exercised within a specific time, the lapse of the power is treated as a taxable release [I.R.C. § 2514(e)] (lapse of power during life of individual possessing power is deemed release of power). This rule is subject, however, to an important exception. A lapse is treated as a taxable gift during a calendar year only to the extent that the value of the property subject to the lapsed power exceeds the greater of $5,000 or 5 percent of the value of the property out of which the power could be satisfied (a "five and five power") [I.R.C. § 2514(e)].

The definition of "general power of appointment" for gift tax purposes is the same as under the estate tax [see I.R.C. §§ 2041(b)(1), 2514(c)]. Thus it includes powers to appoint to the holder of the power, his or her estate, his or her creditors, or the creditors of his or her estate. It does not include certain powers subject to an ascertainable standard [see I.R.C. § 2514(c)(1)] and certain jointly held powers [see I.R.C. § 2514(c)(2), (3)].

[3] Exclusion for Educational and Medical Expenses

Certain "qualified transfers" in the form of payments for tuition or medical care for another individual are excluded from the definition of "gift" for federal gift tax purposes [see I.R.C. § 2503(e)(1)]. A "qualified transfer" is defined as any amount paid on behalf of an individual either (1) as tuition to an educational organization for the education and training of that individual or (2) to any person who provides medical care [see I.R.C. § 213(d)] (definition) with respect to that individual, as payment for medical care [I.R.C. § 2503(e)(2)].

The qualifying educational organizations are those that normally maintain a regular faculty and curriculum and normally have a regularly enrolled body of pupils or students in attendance at the place where educational activities are regularly carried on [I.R.C. § 170(b)(1)(A)(ii)]. The exclusion applies to tuition for both full-time and part-time students but applies only to tuition. Amounts paid for books, supplies, dormitory fees, or boarding do not qualify [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-6(b)(2)].

Qualifying "medical care" is any of the following [I.R.C. § 213(d)(1)]:

- The diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease, or for the purpose of affecting any structure or function of the body.
- Transportation for medical care.
- Insurance covering medical care.

Amounts paid by the donor for medical care are not subject to the exclusion to the extent that the donee receives reimbursement from an insurance company. If a donor previously paid qualifying medical care costs for a donee, a taxable gift is deemed to occur on the date the donee receives the insurance reimbursement [Treas. Reg. §

To qualify for the exclusion, the payments must be made directly to the educational institution or medical care provider. Indirect payments, such as payment to the individual (who has made or will make payment to the school or care provider), do not qualify [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-6(c)]. Moreover, the regulations take the position that a transfer to a trust established to pay tuition or medical costs does not qualify for the exclusion, on the theory that the use of a trust does not constitute a direct transfer to the educational organization or medical care provider [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-6(c)]. On the other hand, the exclusion is allowed without regard to the relationship between the donor and the donee [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-6(a)].

The exclusion for medical care and tuition generally covers transfers that most donors are not likely to perceive as "gifts" in the conventional sense. In many cases, the statutory exclusion will not be strictly necessary because the payment will be in satisfaction of the donor's legal obligation of support, and therefore not a gift for purposes of the gift tax. However, the exclusion can serve some valuable estate planning ends. For example, a grandparent might pay the tuition of a grandchild even though the grandchild's parents are still alive and can afford the tuition themselves. The transfer amounts to a gift from the grandparent to the parents, but avoids transfer tax without consuming any portion of the annual gift tax exclusion. (For an individual retirement account that can be used to pay a beneficiary's postsecondary education expenses, including room and board if applicable, see I.R.C. § 530.) Note that transfers which qualify for the gift tax exclusion for educational and medical expenses under I.R.C. § 2503(e) are also excluded from treatment as generation-skipping transfers [I.R.C. § 2611(b)(1)].

[a] In General

In determining the total amount of the taxable gifts for a calendar year, an exclusion (called the "annual exclusion") is available for gifts made to each donee by each donor during the calendar year [I.R.C. § 2503(b)]. The amount of the annual gift tax exclusion, which is subject to annual adjustment for inflation, is $11,000 for calendar years 2002 through 2005 [I.R.C. § 2503(b); Rev. Proc. 2004-71, 2004-50 I.R.B. 970 (2005 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2003-85 (2004 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2002-70 (2003 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2001-59 (2002 exclusion amount)]. For gifts made before 2002, the annual gift tax exclusion was $10,000 [Rev. Proc. 2001-13]. The exclusion applies separately to each donee, without limitation on the number of donees [see, e.g., Priv. Ltr. Rul. 200533001 (cash contribution to tax-exempt club will be treated as gift to club as single entity that will qualify for annual gift tax exclusion to extent it does not exceed annual exclusion amount)].

The annual exclusion is available only for a gift of a "present interest" [I.R.C. § 2503(b)]. A present interest is an "unrestricted right to the immediate use, possession, or enjoyment of property or the income from property (such as a life estate or term certain)" [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(b)]. For instance, gifts of LLC membership interests in a tree-growing business were found to be gifts of future interests due to the restrictions against transfer in the LLC agreement and the expectation that the business would not generate income for years to come, resulting in a federal gift tax deficiency over $600,000 [Hackl v. Commissioner (2002) 118 T.C. No. 14 (court rejected argument that when gift takes form of outright transfer of equity interest in property, that alone is sufficient to qualify transfer as one of present interest)].

The annual exclusion plays an important part in gift planning because a regular program of annual gifts to multiple donees can avoid a substantial amount of transfer tax. The excluded amounts not only avoid the gift tax; they are also excluded in the computation of adjusted taxable gifts under the estate tax and thus do not push the taxable estate into higher brackets. As with all gifts, income and appreciation of the transferred property are removed from the donor's estate. Further, the amount of the annual exclusion can be effectively doubled if gifts are made by a husband and wife [see I.R.C. § 2513(a) (gift splitting)].

The reciprocal trust doctrine has been applied to deny the availability of the annual exclusion in various cases. For instance, annual exclusions were unavailable for a couple's transfers to their nieces and nephews when the donees' parents made reciprocal gifts to the donors' children. While the reciprocal trust doctrine (under which the substance rather than the form of a transaction is examined) was developed in the trust context, the doctrine is applicable in this non-trust context as well [ Sather v. Comm'r (8th Cir. 2001) 251 F.3d 1168 ; see Estate of Schuler v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 2000-392 , aff'd, 282 F3d 575 (8th Cir. 2002) (transfers to brother's family were indirect gifts to his own family, by application of reciprocal trust doctrine)].

Gifts to the donor's spouse who is a U.S. citizen generally are not subject to gift tax at all [see I.R.C. § 2523; [5], below]. Gifts to the donor's spouse who is not a citizen of the United States are subject to an exclusion greater than the annual gift tax exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2523(i)]. The larger annual exclusion is allowed because the federal gift tax marital deduction is generally unavailable for transfers to spouses who are not citizens [see I.R.C. § 2523(i)(1)]. The amount of the annual exclusion is adjusted annually for inflation [I.R.C. § 2503(b)]. For gifts made in 2005, the amount of the exclusion is $117,000 [I.R.C. §§ 2503(b), 2523(i); Rev. Proc. 2004-71, 2004-50 I.R.B. 970]. For gifts made in 2004, the amount of the exclusion is $114,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2003-85 ]. For gifts made in 2003, the amount of the exclusion is $112,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2002-70 ]. For gifts made in 2002, the amount of the exclusion is $110,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2001-59 ].

[b] Application to Future Interests

The annual exclusion does not apply to "gifts of future interests in property" [I.R.C. § 2503(b)]. The original rationale for this exception was that the value of a future interest can be difficult to determine, but this rationale is not always consistent with the definition of "future interests" established by the regulations and the courts. The regulations define "future interests" as including reversions, remainders, and other interests or estates (whether vested or contingent, and whether or not supported by a particular interest or estate) that are limited to commence in use, possession, or enjoyment at some future date or time. The term has no reference to such contractual rights as exist in a bond, note (even if bearing no interest until maturity), or a policy of life insurance, the obligations of which are to be discharged by payments in the future. However, a future interest in such a contractual obligation may be created by limitations contained in a trust or other instrument of transfer used in effecting a gift [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(a)].

Thus the regulations distinguish between an outright gift of property that naturally results in future cash flow (eligible for exclusion) and a future interest created through the form of the transfer. A zero-coupon bond given outright qualifies for the exclusion, but a regular-coupon bond transferred in trust to accumulate the interest and distribute it along with the principal at the bond's maturity does not qualify for the exclusion, even though these may be economically identical scenarios. Moreover, if the zero-coupon bond were placed in trust, to be distributed only at maturity, the transfer in trust would be disqualified from the exclusion as a future interest. In short, the use of a trust, when a trust is not strictly necessary to accomplish the estate planning ends of the donor, can jeopardize the exclusion. This is highlighted in two examples in the regulations:

EXAMPLE:

C transfers an insurance policy on C's life in trust for D. On C's death, the proceeds of the policy are to be reinvested and the income is to be paid to D. D's interest is a future interest, not qualifying for the exclusion [ Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(c), example 2]. Had C simply transferred the policies outright to D, the exclusion would have been available, despite the fact that the proceeds would be paid only in the future.

EXAMPLE:

J transfers real property in trust, subject to a mortgage. The trust terms require that the income from the property be used to repay the mortgage, with the beneficiary K to receive income only after the mortgage is repaid. K's interest is a future interest, and therefore the transfer does not qualify for the exclusion [ Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(c), example 5]. Had J transferred the property outright to K, the exclusion would have been available even though K would have been obliged to service the mortgage debt or lose the property.

[c] Application to Income Interests

In contrast to a disqualified "future interest," the regulations characterize the "unrestricted right to the immediate use, possession, or enjoyment of property or the income from property (such as a life estate or term certain)" as a present interest in property [ Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(b)]; see, e.g., Priv. Ltr. Rul. 200532024 (grandchildren's proposed renunciation of their interests in trust is gift for gift tax purposes of value of renounced interests, and this value qualifies for annual gift tax exclusion as gifts of present interests)]. Thus, an income interest in property transferred in trust qualifies for the exclusion, at least if the income interest takes effect as of the inception of the transfer. Only the income interest qualifies [ see Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(b)].

For instance, if A transfers property in trust, with income to B and remainder to C, the value of the transfer must be divided into the portion allocable to the income interest and the portion allocable to the remainder. This allocation is made according to standard tables in the regulations [ see Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-5(d)]. The annual exclusion applies only against the value of the income interest as so measured. This is true even if the income beneficiary is also the remainder beneficiary.

The regulations indicate that the income interest must be "unrestricted" [ see Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(b)]. The apparent purpose of this requirement is to ensure that the value of the income interest can be determined. If the income, for instance, were subject to accumulation at the discretion of the trustee, then the income interest would not be a present interest and therefore would not qualify for the exclusion [ Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(c), example 1]. If the trustee had complete discretion to sprinkle income between multiple income beneficiaries, none of the beneficiaries would have an interest of ascertainable value, and none of these interests would qualify for the exclusion [ Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(c), example 3].

The power of the trustee to distribute corpus inherently diminishes the value of an income interest, and if the power is entirely discretionary, then the income interest is likely to lack any ascertainable value and therefore also likely not to qualify for the exclusion. However, a power to distribute corpus to the income beneficiary is disregarded in measuring the value of that beneficiary's income interest [ I.R.C. § 2503(b); Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(b)].

[d] Special Problems Involving Transfers to Minors

Transfers to minors have raised numerous issues under the future interest rule. A gift to a minor generally entails control of the property by an adult. Even when control is not provided by a trustee, the legal disability of a minor in dealing with his or her own property may leave control in a parent, legal guardian, or legal custodian. At one time, whether an outright gift of property to a minor could be treated as a present interest was questionable, given the limitation on the child's own control. However, an outright gift to a minor has long been treated as a present interest, whether or not a legal guardian has been appointed. Limitations placed on the child or the guardian by state law are disregarded. Only limitations on present enjoyment created by the form of the gift (as in a transfer in trust) raise the question of the existence of a future interest [ 1954-2 C.B. 319 ]. Even when a trust is created, the transfer may be treated as an outright gift if the powers of the trustee are the same as those of a legal guardian [ 1959-1 C.B. 690 ]. If the powers of the trustee exceed those of a guardian, the income interest may qualify as a present interest even if the remainder interest does not [ see Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-4(c)].

Additional protection exists for gifts to minors. A transfer for the benefit of a donee under age 21 on the date of the gift will not be treated as a gift of a future interest (and therefore will qualify for the annual exclusion) if all of the following conditions are met [I.R.C. § 2503(c); Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-4(a)]:

- Both the property itself and its income may be expended by or for the benefit of the donee before he or she reaches age 21.
- Any portion of the property and its income not expended by or for the benefit of the donee will pass to the donee when he or she attains age 21.
- If the donee dies before age 21, any portion of the property or its income not disposed of will be payable either to the estate of the donee or as the donee may appoint in a general power of appointment.

Transfers to trusts meeting these requirements will qualify for the annual exclusion. The entire amount of the transfer, not just the portion allocable to the income interest, will qualify. In effect, transfers to qualifying trusts (sometimes referred to as "minors' qualifying trusts") are treated the same as an outright gift to the minor beneficiary if both income and corpus are paid as required. An income interest alone that meets the above requirements will qualify for the exclusion, even if the remainder interest does not [ Commissioner v. Herr (3d Cir. 1962) 303 F.2d 780, 782 ; Rev. Rul. 68-670, 1968-2 C.B. 413 ]. Thus, if an income interest must either be used or accumulated for a minor beneficiary, with any accumulated income distributed to him or her at age 21 or paid as required above if he or she dies before age 21, the value of the income interest qualifies for the exclusion even if corpus (other than accumulated income) is distributed to a different remainder beneficiary.

The trustee may be allowed complete discretion to distribute or accumulate income [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-4(b)(1)]. If the trust provides the donee with a power of appointment (in lieu of requiring distribution to the donee's estate), this power may be exercisable by will or during the donee's life, as long as it is not subject to substantial restrictions. The fact that state law may limit the donee's ability to exercise a power of appointment or to make a will is disregarded, and the trust instrument may name the takers in default of appointment by the donee [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-4(b)].

Gifts made under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act would qualify for the exclusion because they meet the conditions of I.R.C. § 2503(c) [see Rev. Rul. 59-357, 1959-2 C.B. 212 ]. This is true even though the statute requires distribution at age 18 rather than age 21 (unless postponed to the latter date) [ Rev. Rul. 73-287, 1973-2 C.B. 321 ; see 60A.40].

An important technique devised to ensure an exclusion for gifts in trust to minors is the so-called "Crummey" power (or Crummey trust) [see Crummey v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1968) 397 F.2d 82 ], which is often used with minor beneficiaries, although its use is not limited to those situations. In a Crummey trust, the minor beneficiary is given the power to demand distribution of transfers made to the trust during the calendar year, often limited to the amount of the annual gift tax exclusion, the amount covered by a "five or five power," or some other specified part of the entire amount contributed during the year. Transfers subject to this power are present interests and therefore are qualified for the exclusion, even though, as a practical matter, it might be very difficult for a young beneficiary to request and obtain a distribution [ Crummey v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1968) 397 F.2d 82, 88 ; Rev. Rul. 73-405, 1973-2 C.B. 321 ; but see Estate of Trotter v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 2001-250 (Crummey powers may be disregarded in certain situations)]. Thus, a trust with a proper Crummey power can be established with any other terms, such as mandatory accumulation of income, and still serve as a vehicle for continuing excludable transfers. For additional discussion of Crummey trusts and Crummey powers, see Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts , and California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 114, Irrevocable Inter Vivos Trusts (Matthew Bender).

[5] Marital Deduction

The gift tax marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2523] is essentially identical to the unlimited estate tax marital deduction. The aggregate value of gifts to the donor's spouse is not included in taxable gifts, unless the spouse's interest is terminable. Similarly, under the estate tax, the terminable interest hurdle is avoided by granting the spouse a life estate coupled with a general power to appoint corpus (thereby bringing the corpus into the gross estate), or by granting the spouse a life estate alone and electing to subject the corpus to estate taxation in the spouse's gross estate at death (a QTIP trust) [I.R.C. § 2523(e), (f); see I.R.C. § 2044; see also Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions ].

The federal gift tax marital deduction generally is unavailable for transfers to spouses who are not citizens of the United States [see I.R.C. § 2523(i)(1)]. Instead, an enhanced annual exclusion is available for gifts to noncitizen spouses [see I.R.C. § 2523(i)]. For additional information about this exclusion, see [4][a], above.

[6] Charitable Deduction

The gift tax charitable deduction [see I.R.C. § 2522], which excludes gifts to qualifying charitable beneficiaries from the gift tax, is also essentially identical to its estate tax counterpart [ see Ch. 69, Charitable Dispositions ]. One practical distinction is that a separate gift tax return must be filed if the amount of the gift exceeds the annual exclusion [I.R.C. § 6019(a)]. The rules governing split-interest charitable trusts are perhaps more significant in the gift tax context because, in view of the income tax deduction for charitable contributions [see I.R.C. § 664], these trusts are more often created before death. For discussion of these rules, see Ch. 74, Split-Interest Charitable Trusts , and California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 116, Charitable Remainder Trusts (Matthew Bender).

§ 60A.33 Gift of S Corporation Stock to Trust

A gift to a trust of stock in an S corporation will cause the corporation to lose its S corporation status unless (1) the donee trust meets specified requirements and (2) the gift does not otherwise endanger the corporation's S status [see generally I.R.C. § 1361 et seq. (Subchapter S); Ch. 2B, Electing Subchapter S Status]. In this regard, an S corporation may have no more than 100 shareholders [I.R.C. § 1361(b)(1)(A)], and all of those shareholders must be individuals, estates, qualifying trusts, or tax-exempt organizations [see I.R.C. § 1361(b)(1)(B); see also I.R.C. § 1361(c)(6) (eligibility of tax-exempt organizations described in I.R.C. §§ 401(a) and 501(c)(3))].

A trust may hold stock in an S corporation only if specific requirements are met. If a U.S. citizen or resident is treated as owner of all of the trust under the grantor trust rules [see I.R.C. § 671 et seq.], the trust may properly hold the stock during the owner's lifetime and for two years thereafter [I.R.C. § 1361(c)(2)(A)(i), (ii)], and the deemed owner or the deemed owner's estate will be treated as the shareholder [I.R.C. § 1361(c)(2)(B)(i), (ii)]. If a trust was created primarily to exercise the voting power of S corporation stock, it may properly hold the stock without time limitations [I.R.C. § 1361(c)(2)(A)(iv)], and each beneficiary will be treated as a shareholder [I.R.C. § 1361(c)(2)(B)(iv)].

A qualified Subchapter S trust (QSST) may hold stock in an S corporation without time limitations [I.R.C. § 1361(d)], and an electing small business trust (ESBT) may also hold stock in an S corporation [I.R.C. § 1361(e)]. For discussion of these trusts and limitations on their use, see Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms .

§ 60A.34 Gift Tax Return

A federal gift tax return (IRS Form 709) must be filed on or before April 15th of the year after the year in which a gift is made [I.R.C. § 6075(b)(1)]. A short-form gift tax return (IRS Form 709-A) may be used by spouses who elect to split gifts [see I.R.C. § 2513(a) (gift made by one spouse may be considered as made half by one spouse and half by other spouse)]. If a donor dies in the year in which taxable gifts were made, the gift tax return for that year must be filed not later than the due date for filing the estate tax return, including extensions [I.R.C. § 6075(b)(3); see I.R.C. § 6018 (estate tax return is called "return relating to large transfers at death" after 2009)].

A gift tax return need not be filed in any of the following circumstances [I.R.C. § 6019]:

- The value of the gift, when added to the value of all other gifts to the same donee during the calendar year, does not exceed the amount of the annual gift tax exclusion [see I.R.C. §§ 2503(b), 2523(i)(2)].
- The donor makes medical payments on behalf of the donee or pays tuition to a qualifying educational organization on behalf of the donee [I.R.C. § 2503(e)].
- The gift is to a spouse who is a U.S. citizen [I.R.C. § 2523(a), (i)].
- The gift qualifies as a deductible charitable contribution [see I.R.C. § 2522], and is a gift of the donor's entire interest in the gift property, and the donor has not transferred any other interest in the gift property for less than adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth for a noncharitable use.
- If the gift qualifies for a charitable deduction [see I.R.C. § 2522(d)] as a "qualified conservation contribution," which is a contribution of a "qualified real property interest" to a charity exclusively for conservation purposes [see I.R.C. § 170(h)].

An extension of time to file a federal gift tax return may be obtained by filing IRS Form 8892 when the donor is not applying for an extension of time to file an income tax return. It may also be used to make a payment of gift tax when a donor is applying for an extension of time to file Form 709.

§ 60A.35 Income Tax Consequences of Gifts

Gifts during the donor's life are not subject to income tax when received by the donee [I.R.C. § 102(a)]. This rule applies only to the transferred property, not to any subsequently received income from the property, and it does not apply to a gift of income from property [I.R.C. § 102(b)].

The income tax basis of property received as a gift is generally the same as the basis in the hands of the donor [I.R.C. § 1015(a)]. However, if the fair market value of the property at the time of the gift is less than its basis, the donee must use the fair market value to compute a taxable loss (but not gain) on the donee's sale of the property [I.R.C. § 1015(a)]. The basis of the donee will be increased by any gift tax paid by the donor on the appreciated value of the property [I.R.C. § 1015(d)(6)].

§ 60A.40 California UTMA

The California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act [Prob. Code § 3900 et seq.] (the UTMA) provides a nonexclusive method for giving property to minors without the creation of a guardianship or trust [see Prob. Code § 3925]. Testamentary or inter vivos transfers of any type of property or property interest may be made under the UTMA [see Prob. Code §§ 3901(f), 3903-3907].

Under the UTMA, property is transferred to a custodian who holds, manages, and invests the property [see Prob. Code § 3912]. The custodial property is indefeasably vested in the minor, subject to the rights, powers, duties, and authority granted to the custodian by the UTMA [Prob. Code § 3911(b)]. The property is transferred to the minor when he or she reaches age 18 [see Prob. Code § 3920.5(g)], unless the instrument of transfer provides for a longer custodial period, which may be up to age 21 for property transferred by irrevocable gift [Prob. Code § 3920.5(e)], or age 25 for property transferred (1) on the occurrence of a future event, (2) by the exercise of a power of appointment, or (3) from a personal representative or trustee when there is no will or trust authorizing a transfer under the UTMA [Prob. Code § 3920.5(c), (d), (f)].

§ 60A.41 Gifts Under the UTMA

The procedural requirements for completing a transfer under the UTMA vary depending on the type of property transferred and, in some cases, on whether the custodian or another party will be the transferor [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)-(7); see also § 60A.43[1]]. These requirements are relatively simple, particularly in comparison to the creation of a typical trust. Essentially, the transferor must place the property or a specified instrument of title (depending on the kind of property involved) into the possession or control of the custodian and state that the transfer is made under the UTMA. The precise methods for transferring specific kinds of property are discussed in detail in § 60A.123. Although the UTMA states that the transferor must place the custodian in control of the custodial property as soon as practicable [Prob. Code § 3909(c)], it also provides that failure to comply with that requirement will not affect an otherwise valid transfer [Prob. Code § 3911(a)(1)].

Each transfer under the UTMA may be made for only one minor [Prob. Code § 3910]. A transfer made under the UTMA is irrevocable [Prob. Code § 3911(b)].

§ 60A.42 Testamentary Transfers and Other Transfers to Take Effect on Occurrence of a Future Event

A transferor may make a revocable nomination of a custodian to receive property for a minor beneficiary on occurrence of a future event. The nomination may be made in a will, trust, deed, an instrument exercising a power of appointment, or in a writing designating a beneficiary of contractual rights that is registered with or delivered to the payor, issuer, or other obligor of those rights [Prob. Code § 3903(a); see Prob. Code § 6341 et seq. (testamentary dispositions)]. Such a nomination does not create custodial property until the nominating instrument becomes irrevocable or the transfer to the nominated custodian is completed. Unless previously revoked, the custodianship becomes effective on the occurrence of the specified event [Prob. Code § 3903(c)]. A personal representative or trustee may make an irrevocable transfer to a custodian as authorized in the governing will or trust [see Prob. Code § 3905].

A testamentary gift under the UTMA to a person who, prior to distribution, has attained the age at which the custodianship was to terminate, will be deemed to be a direct devise to that person unless the will clearly requires otherwise [Prob. Code § 6341(b)].

§ 60A.43 Custodian

[1] Designation of Custodian

In most cases, the custodian may be the transferor, an adult other than the transferor, or a trust company [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)-(6)]. The permissible methods of transferring some types of property are more limited if the transferor rather than some other person or entity is named as custodian [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1), (3), (6)] (securities; insurance policies and annuities; tangible personal property evidenced by a certificate of title); see also § 60A.123]. If the property is personal property of a type not evidenced by a title document or other certificate of ownership, the custodian must be an adult other than the transferor or a trust company [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(7); see Prob. Code § 3909(b)] (form of transfer instrument)].

The designation of an ineligible custodian will not affect the validity of the transfer, except when the transferor is designated as custodian and is ineligible to serve in that capacity [Prob. Code § 3911(a)(2); see Prob. Code § 3909(a)]. Similarly, the death, incapacity, or disclaimer of the office by the designated custodian will not affect the validity of the transfer [Prob. Code § 3911(a)(3)].

A particular transfer may be made for only one minor, and only one person may be the custodian [Prob. Code § 3910]. All custodial property held under the UTMA by the same custodian for the benefit of the same minor constitutes a single custodianship [Prob. Code § 3910].

[2] Vacancy in Position of Custodian

A person nominated as custodian may decline to serve by delivering a valid disclaimer to (1) the person who made the nomination, (2) the transferor, or (3) the transferor's legal representative [Prob. Code § 3918(a); see Prob. Code § 260 et seq.] (disclaimer of testamentary and other interests); see also § 60A.230]. A custodian may resign at any time by (1) delivering a written notice to the successor custodian (and to the minor, if the minor is at least 14 years old), and (2) delivering the custodial property to the successor custodian [Prob. Code § 3918(c)]. A custodian may also be removed for cause [Prob. Code § 3918(f), (h)].

The transferor may designate one or more persons to serve as successor custodians in case the original custodian (or a successor custodian) is unable or ineligible to serve, or declines, resigns, dies, becomes incapacitated, or is removed. A designation by the transferor must be made in the original transfer document, or in a separate writing executed and dated at the same time as the original transfer document [Prob. Code § 3918(b)]. The transferor may designate one successor, or two or more successors to serve in a stated order of priority [Prob. Code § 3918(b)]. The designation must set forth the name of each successor custodian and, if the transferor is designating two or more successors, the order in which each is designated to serve [Prob. Code § 3918(b)].

A similar procedure for designating successor custodians applies to a transfer that is to be made only on the occurrence of a future event [ see § 60A.42]. In such a case, the nomination may name one or more substitute custodians to whom the property must be transferred (in the order designated) if the first nominated custodian dies before the transfer takes effect, or is unable, declines, or is ineligible to serve [Prob. Code § 3903(a)].

A custodian may designate a successor custodian at any time [Prob. Code § 3918(b)]. Unlike a transferor, who may designate two or more successor custodians to serve in a stated order of priority [Prob. Code § 3918(b)], a custodian is limited to designating one successor at a time [see Prob. Code § 3918(b)]. If the instrument in which the custodian designates a successor does not contain or is not accompanied by the custodian's resignation, the custodian's designation of a successor will not take effect until the custodian resigns, dies, becomes incapacitated, or is removed [Prob. Code § 3918(b)]. A successor custodian effectively designated by a transferor, however, has priority over a successor custodian designated by a custodian [Prob. Code § 3918(b)].

A minor 14 years of age or over has a limited right to designate a successor custodian. The minor may designate a custodian only if the transferor has not effectively designated a successor and the original custodian is ineligible, dies, or becomes incapacitated without having effectively designated a successor [Prob. Code § 3918(d)]. The successor nominated by the minor must be an adult member of the minor's family, a conservator of the minor, or a trust company [Prob. Code § 3918(d)]. If the minor has not reached the age of 14 years or fails to act within 60 days after the ineligibility, death, or incapacity, the minor's conservator becomes the successor custodian [Prob. Code § 3918(b)]. If the minor has no conservator or if the conservator declines to act, the transferor, the legal representative of the transferor or the custodian, an adult member of the minor's family, or any other interested person may petition the court to designate a successor custodian [Prob. Code § 3918(d)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Note that the term "conservator" as used above includes a guardian of the minor's estate [ Prob. Code § 3901(d)]. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

A successor custodian may be any adult or trust company. However, the original transferor may not be the successor if the original transfer was by irrevocable gift or irrevocable exercise of a power of appointment [Prob. Code § 3918(b); see Prob. Code § 3904].

[3] General Powers and Duties of Custodian

The custodian has broad powers with respect to the handling, management, and investment of the custodial property [Prob. Code §§ 3912(a), 3913]. The exercise of these powers is limited only by the "prudent person" standard and is not limited by any other statute restricting investments by fiduciaries [Prob. Code § 3912(b)]. The custodian also has discretion to retain any custodial property received from the transferor without liability to the minor or the minor's estate [Prob. Code § 3912(b)(2)].

The custodian is required to keep records of transactions in custodial property [see Prob. Code § 3912(e)] and must keep the custodial property separate from other property and in a manner that clearly identifies it as custodial property of the minor [Prob. Code § 3912(d)].

A custodian is entitled to reimbursement from the custodial property for reasonable expenses incurred in the performance of the custodian's duties. Except when the custodian is also transferor, a custodian has a noncumulative election during each calendar year to charge reasonable compensation for services performed during that year. A custodian is not required to give bond unless an interested party petitions the court to require that a bond be given [Prob. Code § 3915; see Prob. Code § 3918(f)].

[4] Payments of Custodial Property to or for Benefit of Minor

The custodian may deliver or pay to or for the benefit of the minor as much of the custodial property as the custodian considers advisable for the minor's use and benefit, without court order and without regard for any personal duty or ability of the custodian or any other person to support the minor or to any other income or property of the minor that could be available for that purpose [Prob. Code § 3914(a)]. On petition by an interested person, or by the minor if he or she is 14 years of age or older, the court may order the custodian to pay or deliver to the minor or expend for the minor's benefit as much of the custodial property as the court considers advisable for the minor's use and benefit [Prob. Code § 3914(b)]. These rights and duties do not affect any obligation of any person to support the minor [Prob. Code § 3914(c)].

A transferor who names himself or herself as custodian may restrict his or her powers, if desired, by prohibiting payments of custodial property to or for the benefit of the minor except by court order on a showing that the expense is necessary for the support, maintenance, or education of the minor [Prob. Code § 3914(d); see § 60A.222]. For discussion of the estate tax advantages of such a restriction, see § 60A.44[3].

[5] Liability of Custodian

A custodian who serves without compensation is not liable for losses to the custodial property unless the losses result from the custodian's bad faith, intentional wrongdoing, gross negligence, or failure to observe the prudent person rule in making investments [Prob. Code § 3912(b)].

The custodian is not liable on contracts entered into in a custodial capacity unless the custodian fails to reveal that capacity and to identify the custodianship in the contract. The custodian is also insulated from personal liability for obligations arising from control of custodial property and from liability for torts committed during the custodianship unless the custodian is personally at fault [Prob. Code § 3917(b)]. Third parties are entitled to rely on the authority of the custodian and the validity or propriety of acts performed in a custodial capacity [see Prob. Code § 3916].

§ 60A.44 Tax Aspects of UTMA Gifts

[1] Gift Tax Consequences

Gifts under the UTMA qualify for the annual gift tax exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2503(b); § 60A.32[4]]. Although the general rule is that gifts of future interests are ineligible for that exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2503(b)(1); § 60A.32[4][b]], a gift to an individual who has not attained age 21 is not considered a future interest for purposes of this rule if the property and any income from it may be expended by or for the benefit of the donee before the donee attains 21 and will pass to the donee (or the donee's estate) when the donee reaches 21 [I.R.C. § 2503(c); see § 60A.32[4][d]].

No taxable gift occurs for federal gift tax purposes if the custodian subsequently resigns or the custodianship is terminated [see Rev. Rul. 59-357, 1959-2 C.B. 212].

[2] Income Tax Consequences

Income earned by the custodial property is taxable to the minor except to the extent that the income is distributed to the minor for his or her support [ Rev. Rul. 56-484, 1956-2 C.B. 23 ]. Regardless of the identity of the custodian, the person charged with responsibility for support of the minor under California law is taxed on income earned by the custodial property that is used for the support of the minor [ Rev. Rul. 56-484, 1956-2 C.B. 23 ]. Such distributions are taxable to the donor with a legal obligation to support the minor under federal and California law because they discharge the donor's legal duty to support the minor [see I.R.C. §§ 61, 677(b); Rev. & Tax. Code § 17071].

Before the Tax Reform Act of 1986, it was possible for parents to shift income tax liability for certain income to their children by transferring income-producing property to the children. Since income taxed in the hands of the parents was almost always taxed at higher rates than income taxed in the hands of the children, a family could achieve potentially significant income tax savings by making transfers of this kind. However, the Tax Reform Act of 1986 included provisions for a "kiddie tax" under which some of the unearned income of children under the age of 14 (increased to age 18 in 2006) will be taxed at the parents' rates [see I.R.C. § 1(g)]. For "kiddie tax" purposes, "unearned income" is all income that is not earned income, which includes wages, salaries, fees, and other compensation for personal services [I.R.C. § 911(d)(2)]. Thus, the "kiddie tax" applies broadly to all of the kinds of income that a parent could shift to a child by transferring property to the child, such as interest, dividends, rent, and similar items.

The "kiddie tax" applies to the net unearned income of any child who is under the age of 18 years and has at least one living parent at the close of the taxable year [I.R.C. § 1(g)(1), (2)]. Net unearned income is determined by computing the child's unearned income for the year and subtracting from it the sum of (1) the maximum standard deduction available for the child for the year under I.R.C. § 63(c)(5)(A) and (2) the greater of the maximum standard deduction available for the child for the year or the amount of the child's itemized deductions, if any, directly relating to the production of the unearned income [I.R.C. § 1(g)(4)]. The amount of the maximum standard deduction available for the child under I.R.C. § 63(c)(5)(A) is indexed for inflation and changes from year to year [I.R.C. § 63(c)(4)].

For "kiddie tax" purposes, the source of the unearned income is immaterial. The tax applies with equal force to unearned income produced by property transferred by gift under the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act, property held in trust, property received by way of gift, and property earned by the minor himself or herself. If, for example, the minor works, saves money, and then deposits the money in an interest-bearing account, the interest will be "unearned income" and potentially subject to the "kiddie tax."

[3] Estate Tax Consequences

If a UTMA donor is the custodian and dies while acting in that capacity, the custodial property will be included in the donor's gross estate for federal estate tax purposes [ Rev. Rul. 57-366, 1957-2 C.B. 618 ]. The donor's power as custodian to distribute custodial property at his or her discretion for the minor's benefit is deemed to be the exercise of a power over a revocable transfer [see I.R.C. § 2038; Stuit v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 1971) 452 F.2d 190 ]. However, if the donor waives the right as custodian to make support payments, so that the support payments are made pursuant to court order and not at the donor-custodian's discretion [Prob. Code § 3914(d)], the donor will not be deemed to have retained a power over the custodial property, and the custodial property will not be included in the donor's gross estate.

B. Preliminary Determinations

23-60A California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 60A.111

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 60A.111 Tax Considerations

1. Consider advantages and disadvantages of inter vivos transfers over transfers by will:

a. Advantages include:

- (1) Donee's immediate needs are satisfied while donor is still living.
- (2) Income from transferred property is taxable to donee, rather than donor, often at lower rate, and is not includable in donor's gross estate.
- (3) Within applicable limits of annual exclusion, gifts may be made without incurring any federal estate tax or using up any portion of unified credit.

NOTE:

In determining the total amount of the taxable gifts for a calendar year, an exclusion (called the "annual exclusion") is available for gifts made to each donee by each donor during a calendar year [I.R.C. § 2503(b); see § 60A.32[4]]. The amount of the annual gift tax exclusion, which is subject to annual adjustment for inflation, is $11,000 for calendar years 2002 through 2005 [I.R.C. § 2503(b); Rev. Proc. 2004-71, 2004-50 I.R.B. 970 (2005 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2003-85 (2004 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2002-70 (2003 exclusion amount); Rev. Proc. 2001-59 (2002 exclusion amount)]. For gifts made before 2002, the annual gift tax exclusion was $10,000 [Rev. Proc. 2001-13]. The amount of the annual exclusion can be effectively doubled if gifts are made by a husband and wife [see I.R.C. § 2513(a) (gift splitting)].

Although transfers to a spouse generally are tax-free under the marital deduction [see

I.R.C. § 2523(a) (unlimited marital deduction for gift to spouse), the marital deduction generally is unavailable for gifts to a spouse who is not a U.S. citizen [see I.R.C. § 2523(i)]. However, a significantly increased annual exclusion is allowed for gifts to noncitizen spouses [see I.R.C. § 2523(i) (annual exclusion amount of $100,000, with upward adjustments for inflation for gifts made after 1998)]. For gifts made in 2005, the amount of the exclusion is $117,000 [I.R.C. §§ 2503(b), 2523(i); Rev. Proc. 2004-71, 2004-50 I.R.B. 970]. For gifts made in 2004, the amount of the exclusion is $114,000 [Rev. Proc. 2003-85]. For gifts made in 2003, the amount of the exclusion is $112,000 [Rev. Proc. 2002-70]. For gifts made in 2002, the amount of the exclusion is $110,000 [Rev. Proc. 2001-59; see § 60A.32[5]].

(4) Gift property is valued on date of transfer, so subsequent appreciation is not taxable to donor's estate [I.R.C. § 2512].

(5) Funds used to pay gift tax on gifts made more than three years prior to donor's death are removed from donor's gross estate for federal estate tax purposes [I.R.C. § 2035(c)].

b. Disadvantages include:

(1) Donee takes donor's tax basis in gift property [see I.R.C. §§ 1015, 1041], thus increasing potential taxable gain on donee's subsequent disposition of property.

(2) Donor's enjoyment of estate is reduced.

2. Determine value of gift.

a. Generally, value is fair market value on date of transfer reduced by consideration given by donee [I.R.C. § 2512; Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-1].

b. Value of insurance policy is replacement cost or interpolated terminal reserve [Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-6(a)].

c. Value of forgiven debt is amount of unpaid principal plus accrued interest [Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-4].

d. Value of stocks and bonds is fair market value on date of gift.

(1) If sold on exchange, fair market value is mean selling price [Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-2(b)].

(2) If stock of closely held corporation, fair market value is based on factors such as financial history, value of assets, goodwill, and business conditions [see Rev. Rul. 59-60, 1959-1 C.B. 237; Rev. Rul. 80-213, 1980-2 C.B. 101].

e. Value of annuities, life estate, and future interests based on continuation of person's life is present value, determined with reference to age and sex of that person [Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-5].

f. Value of interest in business is amount a willing buyer would pay a willing seller [Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-3].

g. Value of real estate, valuable personal property or interest in closely held corporation should be determined by professional appraiser.

3. Consider use of methods to maximize excludable gifts to donee:

a. Election to split gifts with spouse will effectively double amount of annual exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2513(a) (gift splitting); see also I.R.C. § 2503(b) (annual exclusion); § 60A.32[4][a]].

b. If gift is to donor's spouse and spouse is not a U.S. citizen, amount of annual gift tax exclusion is significantly increased [see I.R.C. § 2523(i); see also § 60A.32[5]].

PART III. TRANSACTION GUIDE

B. Preliminary Determinations

23-60A California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 60A.112

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 60A.112 Determinations Under California UTMA

NOTE:

The principal advantage of making a gift under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act is administrative simplicity. In addition, such a gift qualifies as a gift of a present interest for purposes of the annual gift tax exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2503(b); § 60A.32[4][a], [d]]. In contrast, the creation of a trust is usually more complex, but gives the transferor greater flexibility, including the ability to postpone outright transfer of the gift property to the donee for far longer than would be possible under the UTMA [see Prob. Code §§ 3920, 3920.5; see also § 60A.123].

1. Determine whether gift property is special type of property for purposes of Act [see Prob. Code § 3909]:

NOTE:

The requirements for completing a gift under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act vary somewhat according to the category of property involved [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)].

a. Registered or unregistered securities.

NOTE:

The former Uniform Gifts to Minors Act [former Civ. Code § 1154 et seq. (repealed 1984)] defined "security" to include an interest in a partnership or limited partnership [former Civ. Code § 1155]. Although Prob. Code § 3901, which replaced former Civ.

Code § 1155, does not define "security" for purposes of the UTMA, the omission was not intended to change the meaning or construction of that term [see Senate Legislative Committee Comment to Prob. Code § 3901]. Before attempting to make a gift of securities, it is necessary to determine whether the securities are subject to any conditions or restrictions on transfer. There are two types of transfer restrictions: those imposed by the issuer of the securities (such as a buy-sell agreement or right of first refusal) and those imposed by the Commissioner of Corporations. Transfer restrictions imposed by the Commissioner of Corporations generally are inapplicable to transfers by gift or on death [see 10 Cal. Code Reg. § 260.141.11(b)].

- b. Money.
- c. Life insurance policy, endowment insurance policy, or annuity contract.
- d. Irrevocable exercise of power of appointment or irrevocable present right to future payment under a contract.
- e. Interest in real property.
- f. Tangible personal property evidenced by certificate of title issued by a government agency.

2. Decide on individual or entity to be named as custodian of gift [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)-(7)].

NOTE:

Only one person may act as custodian for a gift at any time [Prob. Code § 3910]. The designation of an ineligible custodian will not affect the validity of the transfer, except when the transferor is designated as custodian and is ineligible to serve in that capacity [Prob. Code § 3911(a)(2); see Prob. Code § 3909(a)].

- a. Transferor.

NOTE:

If the gift property consists of securities, insurance policies, annuities, or tangible personal property evidenced by an official certificate of title, the methods available for transferring the property are more limited if the transferor is named as custodian [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(3), (6); see § 60A.123 (procedures)]. If the transferred property is of a type not described in paragraph 1, above, the transferor may not be named as custodian [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(7)].

- b. Adult other than transferor.
- c. Trust company.

3. If transfer is revocable transfer to take place on occurrence of future event, determine whether transferor wishes to nominate one or more substitute custodians in event that first nominee dies before transfer or is unable, declines, or is ineligible to serve [see Prob. Code § 3903(a)].

NOTE:

Although the statutory provision permitting nomination of a substitute custodian is relevant principally to testamentary gifts, it is not limited exclusively to that situation [see Prob. Code § 3903(a)]. For example, it would apply to a revocable inter vivos transfer to take effect on the death of a third party. The UTMA does not authorize the transferor to name a successor custodian for property transferred by irrevocable inter vivos gift. Instead, this right is reserved first to the custodian, then to the minor if he or she is 14 or older, and finally to the court on petition of any interested party (including the transferor or the transferor's legal representative) [see Prob. Code §§ 3904, 3918(b), (d); see also § 60A.43[2]].

4. Determine whether to delay time for outright transfer of gift property to minor beyond minor's eighteenth birthday.

NOTE:

Unless the governing instrument specifies a different period, the custodianship will be terminated when the minor attains age 18 or dies, whichever occurs first [Prob. Code § 3920].

a. Transfer may be delayed until minor attains age 21 if property is transferred by irrevocable inter vivos gift [Prob. Code § 3920.5(e)].

b. Transfer may be delayed until minor attains age 25 if property is either:

(1) Transferred by irrevocable exercise of power of appointment [Prob. Code § 3920.5(d)];

(2) Transferred by revocable transfer to take place on occurrence of a future event [Prob. Code § 3920.5(c); see Prob. Code § 3903]; or

(3) Irrevocably transferred to custodian by personal representative or trustee pursuant to terms of governing will or trust [Prob. Code § 3920.5(c); see Prob. Code § 3905(a)].

5. If transferor will be named as custodian, determine whether to limit transferor's custodial powers by authorizing payment or expenditure to or for use or benefit of minor only by court order on showing that expenditure is necessary for minor's support, maintenance, or education [see Prob. Code § 3914(d)].

NOTE:

If the donor names himself or herself as custodian under the UTMA and dies while acting in that capacity, the custodial property will be included in his or her gross estate unless the custodial powers are limited in the manner described above [ Rev. Rul. 57-366, 1957-2 C.B. 618 ; see I.R.C. § 2038; § 60A.44[3]]. To determine whether or not such an election should be made, it is necessary to weigh the loss of flexibility that would result from such an election against the anticipated tax savings. The tax advantages of such an election obviously increase according to the size of the transferor's taxable estate and the value of the gift. If such an election will be made, a declaration must be prepared and filed with the superior court [Prob. Code § 3914(d); see § 60A.123; see also § 60A.222].

6. Determine whether custodian will be compensated [see Prob. Code § 3915(b)].

NOTE:

The statute gives a custodian (other than a custodian who is also the transferor) a noncumulative election during each calendar year to charge a reasonable compensation for services performed during that year, and does not specifically authorize the compensation for an inter vivos gift to be fixed prior to the time of transfer [see Prob. Code § 3915(b)]. However, the comments to that provision state that compensation can be determined by agreement of the parties [see Law Revision Commission comment to Prob. Code § 3915(b)]. Further, in the case of a testamentary gift under the UTMA, the will may specify the standard of compensation of the custodian [Prob. Code § 6345].

1. If gift consists of personal property, prepare gift instrument containing [ see § 60A.200]:

NOTE:

A written instrument is not required for a gift of personal property, but is nevertheless advisable except for outright gifts of cash.

- a. Name of donee.
- b. Clear, complete, and accurate description of gift property.
- c. Statement of donative intent.

NOTE:

A statement of donative intent is especially advisable if the transfer is a gift causa mortis or if the donee will pay gift tax or furnish other consideration [ see §§ 60A.201 (gift causa mortis), 60A.207 (gift conditional on payment of gift tax by donee)].

d. Date of execution.

NOTE:

Since a gift is valued on the date of transfer for tax purposes [ see I.R.C. § 2512], it is important to include the date of execution.

e. If property is community property, space for signature of donor's spouse.

NOTE:

A spouse generally cannot make a gift of community personal property, or dispose of community personal property for less than fair and reasonable value, without the written consent of the other spouse [Fam. Code § 1100(b)]. However, this rule does not apply to gifts mutually given by both spouses to third parties, or to gifts given by one spouse to the other spouse [Fam. Code § 1100(b)]. For further discussion, see § 60A.12.

f. Acknowledgment (optional).

g. Statement of acceptance to be executed by donee (optional).

2. If gift consists of real property:

a. Prepare deed [for formal requisites for execution, acknowledgment, delivery, and recordation of deeds, see Ch. 27, Deeds and Recording ].

b. If property is community property, have deed executed by both spouses.

NOTE:

Although there is no general rule prohibiting one spouse from making a gift of community real property, generally both spouses must join (either personally or by duly authorized agent) in executing any instrument by which community real property is conveyed [Fam. Code § 1102]. For further discussion, see § 60A.12.

c. Record deed [see Civ. Code §§ 1169, 1170].

3. If gift is in or to trust:

a. Prepare and execute trust instrument if trust is not already in existence [ see Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts ].

b. Transfer property to trust if trust is already in existence.

4. If donee is a minor or a person under a legal disability, draft instrument granting title to guardian or custodian in that capacity.

NOTE:

A gift to a minor (other than a gift in trust) ordinarily should be made under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act [Prob. Code § 3900 et seq.]. The procedures for completing a gift under the UTMA are discussed in § 60A.123.

5. If instrument under which gift is made was drafted or transcribed by donee, or if donee is relative (by blood or marriage), employee, partner, domestic partner [see Fam. Code § 297], or cohabitant of person who drafted instrument, transcribed instrument, or caused it to be transcribed, take either of following steps to avoid having gift invalidated:

NOTE:

The Probate Code contains special rules invalidating donative transfers to "disqualified persons" [Prob. Code § 21350 et seq.; see Prob. Code § 21350.5]. These rules, however, are subject to important exceptions. For example, a transfer to a disqualified person will not be invalidated when the instrument under which the transfer is made is reviewed by an independent attorney who must attempt to determine if the intended consequence is the result of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence, and who signs and delivers a Certificate of Independent Review; or when, after full disclosure of the relationships of the parties to the transfer, the instrument is approved by the court [Prob. Code § 21351(b), (c)]. For detailed discussion of these rules and the exceptions, see § 60A.16.

a. Request that independent attorney [Prob. Code § 21351(b)]:

- (1) Review instrument;
- (2) Advise transferor on the nature of the transfer; and
- (3) Sign and deliver Certificate of Independent Review [ see § 60A.240].

b. Seek court approval of transfer [Prob. Code § 21351(c); see Prob. Code § 2580 et seq. (substituted judgment)].

§ 60A.121 Delivery

1. Determine whether delivery requirements for gifts of tangible personal property are met; either:

- a. Deliver property itself; or
- b. Deliver written instrument transferring property if actual delivery is impractical.

NOTE:

Delivery of a bank book or safe deposit box key to a donee, and the donee's acceptance of the bank book or key, has been held sufficient to create a completed gift; it is not necessary for the donee to withdraw the funds from the account, or use the safe deposit key to take actual possession of the property [ Braun v. Brown (1939) 14 Cal. 2d 346, 354-355, 94 P.2d 348 ].

2. If gift consists of real property, advise donor to execute and deliver gift deed to property [see Civ. Code § 1091].

NOTE:

Although there are limited circumstances under which an oral gift of real property will be held valid [see Andreotti v. Andreotti (1964) 224 Cal. App. 2d 533, 538, 36 Cal. Rptr. 709 ; see also § 60A.11[2]], any attempt to make a gift of real property in this manner is highly inadvisable.

3. If gift consists of money, advise donor to do one of the following:

- a. Deliver cash to donor.

b. Deposit cash into donee's bank account.

c. Deliver check or money order.

NOTE:

A noncharitable gift of money represented by a check is not complete for federal gift and estate tax purposes until the check is presented to the bank and paid [ Estate of Dillingham v. Commissioner (10th Cir. 1990) 903 F.2d 760, 762-763 ].

(1) If check is drawn on donor's bank, gift is effective when bank accepts check.

(2) If check is a third-party check, gift is effective on delivery.

d. Deliver savings account passbook together with donor's execution of written assignment of account.

4. If gift consists of contents of safe deposit box, advise donor to:

a. Deliver key to box to donee.

b. Execute written assignment transferring box to donee.

5. If gift consists of insurance policy, advise donor to:

NOTE:

A gift of an insurance policy will not remove the policy from the gross estate of the insured if the insured retains any incident of ownership of the policy, such as the right to change beneficiaries [I.R.C. § 2042].

a. Deliver policy to donee.

b. Notify insurance company of assignment.

c. Execute written assignment of policy [ see § 60A.202 ].

6. If gift consists of promissory notes or mortgages, advise donor to:

a. Deliver note to donee.

b. Deliver security if held by donor.

7. If gift consists of securities, advise donor to either:

NOTE:

When making a gift of government securities, it is essential to comply with the appropriate federal regulations relating to transfer. In one case, a registered co-owner of several United States Savings Bonds (Series E) delivered the bonds (some to the other co-owner and others to a third party) with the intent of making complete, irrevocable, inter vivos gifts. The bonds were not reissued in the names of the donees, however, as required by the pertinent Treasury regulations [see 31 C.F.R. §§ 315.15, 315.47]. After the death of the purported donor, the Supreme Court held, the gifts were incomplete and the bonds were includable in the estate of the purported donor [ United States v. Chandler (1973) 410 U.S. 257, 260-261, 93 S. Ct. 880, 35 L. Ed. 2d 247 ].

a. Deliver gift instrument (if one is used) and endorsed share certificate to donee, with instruction to forward certificate to issuer for issuance of new certificate.

b. Deliver gift instrument (if one is used) to donee, and forward endorsed share certificate to issuer for issuance of new certificate in donee's name.

8. If gift consists of cancellation of an existing indebtedness, advise donor to:

a. Either:

(1) Destroy note with intent to cancel; or

(2) Mark note "canceled" and deliver it to donee.

b. Execute written instrument evidencing gift [ see § 60A.203 ] as evidence of donative intent and deliver instrument to donee.

3. For gift tax purposes, acceptance by donee is presumed [see Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-1(c)].
4. If donee wishes not to accept gift, file written disclaimer with donor within nine months of date of gift. [I.R.C. § 2518(b); Prob. Code § 279].

§ 60A.123 Gifts Under California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act

NOTE:

The requirements for making a gift under the UTMA vary according to the type of property being given [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)-(7)]. The basic requirements for each specific category of property are listed in paragraphs 1 through 7 below. The remaining paragraphs in this guide section discuss matters relating to more than one category of property.

1. If gift consists of uncertificated security [see Com. Code § 8102(a)(18)] or certificated security in registered form [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)]:

a. If transferor will be custodian, register security in name of transferor, followed in substance by words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act."

b. If custodian will be trust company or adult other than transferor, either:

(1) Register security in name of custodian, followed in substance by words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act"; or

(2) Deliver certificate (if in certificated form) or any document necessary for transfer (if in uncertificated form), together with any necessary endorsement, to custodian, accompanied by written instrument substantially similar to form in § 60A.220[2].

2. If gift consists of money or security held in name of broker, financial institution, or its nominee, pay or deliver it to broker or financial institution for credit to account in name of transfer, adult other than transferor, or trust company, followed in substance by words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(2)].

3. If gift consists of life or endowment insurance policy or annuity contract [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(3)]:

a. If transferor will be custodian, register policy with issuer in name of transferor, followed in substance by words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act."

b. If custodian will be trust company or adult other than transferor, either:

(1) Register policy with issuer in name of custodian, followed in substance by words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act"; or

(2) Have transferor execute written instrument assigning policy to custodian whose name in assignment is followed in substance by words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act."

4. If gift consists of irrevocable exercise of power of appointment or irrevocable present right to future payment under a contract, deliver written notice to payor, issuer, or other obligor, that right is transferred to transferor, adult other than transferor, or trust company, whose name in notification is followed in substance by words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(4)].

5. If gift consists of interest in real property, record gift deed in name of transferor, adult other than transferor, or trust company, followed in substance by words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(5)].

6. If gift consists of tangible personal property evidenced by certificate issued by a federal or state agency [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(6)]:

a. If transferor will be custodian, have certificate of title issued in name of transferor, followed in substance by words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act."

b. If custodian will be trust company or adult other than transferor, either:

(1) Have certificate of title issued in name of custodian, followed in substance by words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act"; or

(2) Deliver certificate of title to custodian, endorsed to custodian, followed in substance by words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act."

7. If gift consists of any interest in property not described in preceding paragraphs, transfer property to trust company or adult other than transferor by written instrument substantially similar to form in § 60A.220 [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(7)].

NOTE:

The above category principally includes tangible property, other than securities or money, which is not evidenced by a certificate of title. In this situation, the UTMA makes no provision for naming the transferor as custodian [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(7)].

8. If transferor wishes to postpone termination of custodial period to a specified time after minor attains age 18, modify language of transfer to read "... as custodian for _____ [name of minor] until age _____ [age for delivery of property to minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3920.5(b)].

NOTE:

In the case of an irrevocable inter vivos gift, the custodial period cannot be continued beyond the time the minor attains age 21 [Prob. Code § 3920.5(e)]. For more coverage of the applicable rules, see § 60A.112.

9. If transferor is custodian and wishes to limit custodial powers by permitting payment of any part of custodial property to or for use or benefit of minor only by court order on showing that expenditure is necessary for minor's support, maintenance, or education [see Prob. Code § 3914(d)]:

NOTE:

A transferor who names himself or herself as custodian may wish to impose such a limitation to avoid having the custodial property included in the transferor's estate for federal estate tax purposes if he or she should die prior to termination of the custodianship [see Rev. Rul. 57-366, 1957-2 C.B. 618 ; see also I.R.C. § 2038]. For additional discussion and guidance, see §§ 60A.44[3] and 60A.112.

- a. Prepare declaration substantially conforming to form § 60A.222[2].
- b. File declaration with clerk of superior court.

NOTE:

Since Prob. Code § 3914(b) does not specify when the declaration must be filed, there is apparently no bar to filing it after the gift is made.

10. Place custodian in control of custodial property as soon as possible [Prob. Code § 3909].

NOTE:

Failure to comply with this requirement will not affect the validity of the transfer [Prob. Code § 3911(a)(1)].

§ 60A.130 Federal Gift Tax Liability

1. Observe filing requirements.

a. File federal gift tax return (IRS Form 709) even if no tax is due, unless gift qualifies for [I.R.C. § 6019]:

(1) Annual exclusion.

NOTE:

The amount of the annual gift tax exclusion, which is adjusted annually for inflation, is $11,000 per donee per year for gifts made in 2002 through 2005, and $10,000 per donee per year for gifts made before 2002 [I.R.C. § 2503(b); see § 60A.32[4]]. The amount can be effectively doubled if gifts are made by a husband and wife [see I.R.C. § 2513(a) (gift splitting)] and significantly increased if the donee is a noncitizen spouse [see I.R.C. § 2523(i) (base annual exclusion amount is $100,000, with upward adjustments for inflation for gifts made after 1998); see also § 60A.32[5]]. For example, for gifts made in 2005, the amount of the exclusion for gifts to noncitizen spouses is $117,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2004-71, 2004-50 I.R.B. 970 ].

(2) Unlimited tuition and medical care exclusion [I.R.C. § 2503(e)].

(3) Unlimited marital deduction [I.R.C. § 2523].

(4) Deduction for charitable gifts [I.R.C. § 2522] if gift is of donor's entire interest in gift property and no other interest in gift property has been transferred for less than adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth from donor to any person for a noncharitable use.

(5) Deduction for charitable gifts when gift is "qualified conservation contribution" as defined in I.R.C. § 170(h)].

NOTE:

A qualified conservation easement is a contribution of a "qualified real property interest" to a charity exclusively for conservation purposes [see I.R.C. § 170(h) (income tax deduction for qualified conservation contribution)]. A gift tax deduction is allowed for such a contribution [I.R.C. § 2522(d)].

b. Due date:

(1) Generally, on or before April 15 following year in which gift was made [I.R.C. § 6075].

(2) If donor dies during calendar year, on or before due date for filing estate tax return, plus extensions [I.R.C. §§ 6018, 6075(b)(3)].

2. Determine total taxable gifts for calendar year.

a. Determine value of each gift [see I.R.C. § 2512; Treas. Reg. §§ 25.2512-1-25.2512-9; see also § 60A.111].

b. If gift splitting with spouse is elected [I.R.C. § 2513(a)]:

(1) Subtract half of total gifts made by donor during calendar year; and

(2) Add half of total gifts made by donor's spouse during calendar year.

c. Reduce by exclusions.

(1) Annual gift tax exclusion.

NOTE:

The annual exclusion applies only to gifts of present interests, except for gifts made under the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act [see I.R.C. § 2503(b)(1), (c); see also § 60A.131].

(a) Base rate (which is adjusted annually for inflation) is $11,000 per donee per year for gifts made in 2002 through 2005, and $10,000 per donee per year for gifts made before 2002 [I.R.C. § 2503(b); see § 60A.32[4]].

(b) If donee is noncitizen spouse of donor, $100,000, subject to upward adjustment for inflation for gifts made after 1998 [see I.R.C. § 2523(i); see also § 60A.32[5]].

NOTE:

For example, for gifts made in 2005, the amount of the exclusion for gifts to noncitizen spouses is $117,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2004-71, 2004-50 I.R.B. 970 ].

(2) Unlimited exclusion for qualified payments of tuition and medical care on behalf of any donee [I.R.C. § 2503(e)].

d. Subtract deductions, if applicable.

- (1) Marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2523; see also § 60A.32[5]].
- (2) Charitable deduction [see I.R.C. § 2522; see also § 60A.32[6]].

3. Compute tax.

- a. Using copies of donor's prior gift tax returns, determine total previous taxable gifts made prior to this calendar year [see I.R.C. § 2502(a)].
- b. Add total taxable gifts for this calendar year to total previous taxable gifts [I.R.C. § 2502(a)].
- c. Using rate table in instructions to gift tax return IRS Form 709, determine tentative tax on total of previous and present taxable gifts [I.R.C. § 2502(a)(1)].
- d. Using rate table, determine tentative tax on total previous taxable gifts [I.R.C. § 2502(a)(2)].
- e. Compute tax by subtracting result obtained under (d), above, from result obtained under (c), above.
- f. Reduce tax by available unified credit [see I.R.C. § 2505(a)(1)]:

(1) Determine applicable credit amount for calendar year in which gift is made [see I.R.C. §§ 2505(a)(1), 2010(c)].

NOTE:

The "applicable credit amount" is equal to an amount sufficient to exclude a specified amount (known as the "applicable exclusion amount") from taxation. The gift tax unified credit can shelter property worth $1,000,000 from the gift tax for gifts made in 2002 and later years [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505(a)]. Prior to the 2001 tax legislation [Pub. L. 107-16], the applicable exclusion amount for the estate tax was the same as the applicable exclusion amount for the gift tax [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505(a)]. Under the 2001 legislation, however, while the applicable credit amount for the estate tax continues to increase to $3.5 million until the estate tax ultimately is repealed entirely in 2010, the applicable exclusion amount for the gift tax is limited to $1,000,000, and is not subject to adjustment for inflation [I.R.C. § 2505(a); see also § 60A.32[4] for discussion of the effect of a sunset provision in the 2001 tax legislation]. For additional discussion of the unified credit, see §§ 60A.30[2], 60A.32[4].

(2) Reduce by amounts allowable to donor under unified credit for all preceding calendar periods [I.R.C. § 2505(a)(2)].

NOTE:

In other words, if the donor made any gifts in excess of the amount protected under the annual exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2503(b); § 60A.32[4]] in prior years, the amount of those gifts must be deducted from the applicable credit amount, whether or not the credit was actually claimed in prior years when the gifts were made [see I.R.C. § 2505(a)(2) (reduction of available credit for credit allowable, not credit actually allowed)].

(3) Further reduce by 20 percent of aggregate amount allowed as a specific exemption under pre-1977 law [see former

I.R.C. § 2521] for gifts made between September 8, 1976 and December 31, 1976 [I.R.C. § 2505(b)]; see § 60A.31[2]].

g. Do not reduce tax below zero [I.R.C. § 2505(c)].

§ 60A.131 Tax Liability Under UTMA

1. File gift tax return only if value of gift, when added to value of all other gifts to same donee during calendar year, exceeds amount of annual exclusion available for that year [see I.R.C. § 2503(b)]; see also § 60A.43[4], or twice that amount in case of split gifts by husband and wife [see I.R.C. § 2513(a) (gift splitting)].

NOTE:

A gift under the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act will not be considered a gift of a future interest for purposes of the annual gift tax exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2503(b)(1)]; § 60A.32[4][d].

2. For federal income tax purposes, report income from custodial property as follows:

a. Minor donee must file income tax returns and report income earned by custodial property that is distributed to minor, except to extent that income is distributed for minor's support [ Rev. Rul. 56-484, 1956-2 C.B. 23 ].

NOTE:

If a minor is required to pay tax on unearned income at the parent's rates under I.R.C. § 1(g) [ see § 60A.44[2]], the parent's taxpayer identification number (TIN) must be provided to the child and included on the child's income tax return [I.R.C. § 1(g)(6)].

b. If child is under age 18, parent may elect to report child's interest and dividends on parent's return (thereby avoiding need to file separate return for minor child) by making election on IRS Form 8814 and attaching that form to parent's tax return, but only if all of following conditions are met [I.R.C. § 1(g)(7)]; see IRS Publication 929, Tax Rules for Children and Dependents]:

NOTE:

The IRS cautions that it is possible that making the election and reporting the interest and dividends on the parent's return could result in a higher tax rate than would apply if those items were reported on a separate return for the minor child [see IRS Publication 929, Tax Rules for Children and Dependents].

(1) Child was under age 18 at end of year.

(2) Child is required to file a return unless election is made.

(3) Child had income only from interest and dividends (including capital gain distributions and Alaska Permanent Fund dividends).

(4) Dividend and interest income was less than $7,500.

(5) No estimated tax payments were made for tax year and no overpayment from prior tax year was applied to current year's tax liability under child's name and social security number.

(6) No federal income tax was taken out of child's income under the backup withholding rules.

(7) Parent is the parent whose return must be used when applying the special tax rules for children under age 14.

c. Custodian must report on his or her income tax return income earned by custodial property to extent distribution discharges custodian's legal duty to support minor [see I.R.C. §§ 61, 677(b); Rev. Rul. 56-484, 1956-2 C.B. 23].

3. If transferor is custodian and dies while acting in that capacity, include custodial property in custodian's gross estate for federal estate tax purposes unless custodian has made election to limit custodial power to make payment or expenditure to or for use or benefit of minor [ Rev. Rul. 57-366, 1957-2 C.B. 618 ; I.R.C. § 2038; see Prob. Code § 3914(d)].

§ 60A.200 General Form for Gift of Personal Property

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a declaration that may be used to make a gift of personal property. Although a writing is not essential to a valid gift of personal property [see Civ. Code §§ 1040, 1052 (voluntary transfer may be made without writing)], a written declaration will serve the useful purpose of evidencing that a gift was made, who the parties to the gift were, and when the gift was made. It will also identify the gift property.

PRACTICE TIP:

Such a declaration may be particularly useful when a later challenge to the gift can be reasonably anticipated. For example, if a parent gives a piece of jewelry or an item of special sentimental value within the family to one of several children, a declaration setting forth the specifics of the gift can go a long way to heading off disputes as to whether the property was the subject of a valid gift versus having been misappropriated by the donee. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman

A gift of real property must be in writing [see Civ. Code §§ 1053, 1091 (grant as transfer in writing; writing necessary for transfer of estate in real property)]. To make a valid gift of real property, a deed should be used. For general discussion and model forms for deeds, see Ch. 27, Deeds and Recording .

[b] Importance of Date of Gift

The amount of any federal gift tax liability is determined by the fair market value of the gift property on the date of the transfer [see I.R.C. § 2512(a)]. Since particular property may change rapidly in value, the exact date of the gift may become an issue which the taxpayer will have to establish with certainty. The written declaration of gift serves as evidence of this date. The instrument need not be acknowledged when personal property is given. However, an acknowledgment will corroborate the exact date of the gift.

[c] Spouse's Consent to Gift of Community Property

When a married person makes a gift of community property, the married person's spouse should consent to the gift or join in making it. A spouse may not make a gift of community personal property, or dispose of community personal property for less than fair and reasonable value, without the written consent of the other spouse [Fam. Code § 1100(b)]. Although there is no general rule prohibiting one spouse from making a gift of community real property, both spouses must join (either personally or by duly authorized agent) in executing any instrument by which community real property is sold, conveyed, encumbered, or leased for longer than one year [Fam. Code § 1102]. For further discussion, see § 60A.12[1].

Although gifts of quasi-community property are not subject to the same restrictions as gifts of community property, if a spouse dies after making a gift of quasi-community property, the surviving spouse may have a right to require the transferee to restore the property to the deceased spouse's estate [see Prob. Code § 102]. To avoid this eventuality, it is also advisable to obtain the spouse's written consent to a gift of quasi-community property. For discussion, see § 60A.12[2].

[d] Gift Splitting by Married Donors

For federal gift tax purposes, a gift made by one spouse may be considered as having been made one-half by each spouse [I.R.C. § 2513(a)(1)]. This rule is generally referred to as "gift splitting," and effectively doubles the amount of the annual gift tax exclusion [see I.R.C. § 2503(b); see also § 60A.32[4]] otherwise available. Gift splitting is available for all property, whether community, quasi-community, or separate. However, a gift may be split only if the spouses have signified their consent to the split-gift treatment [I.R.C. § 2513(a)(2); see I.R.C. § 2513(b)]. Further, gift splitting is not actually necessary when the gift property is community property, since both spouses have present, existing, and equal interests in the community property [Fam. Code §§ 760, 1100 (management and control of community property)] and, to the extent that a completed gift of community property is made, it is deemed to have been made one-half by each spouse.

[e] Delivery and Acceptance

Delivery and acceptance are generally essential to a completed gift of personal property in California [see Civ. Code § 1147; Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Assn. v. Cottrell (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 361, 363, 20 Cal. Rptr. 126; Connelly v. Bank of America (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 303, 307, 291 P.2d 501; see also § 60A.10[2]]. Delivery is generally accomplished when the property is physically transferred to the donee or to some third person not subject to the donor's direction [see Beebe v. Coffin (1908) 153 Cal. 174, 176, 94 P. 766; Bishop's School Upon Scripps Foundation v. Wells (1937) 19 Cal. App. 2d 141, 146, 65 P.2d 105]. If delivery of the property itself is impossible or impractical, the means of obtaining possession of the property, or a written instrument of gift executed by the donor, may be symbolically delivered in place of the property [Civ. Code § 1147]. Thus, delivery of a key to a safe deposit box may constitute a valid symbolic delivery of the contents of the box [see Estate of Escolle (1933) 134 Cal. App. 473, 480, 25 P.2d 860].

A donee who does not wish to receive the property cannot be forced to accept it. In most cases, however, acceptance will be presumed unless there are facts showing that the donee refused to accept the property [see, e.g., Estate of Kalt (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 807, 813, 108 P.2d 401].

§ 60A.201 Gift Causa Mortis

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This is a declaration for use in making a gift in view of the giver's impending death. Because gifts in view of impending death avoid the rules governing testamentary dispositions of property, the courts have traditionally viewed them with caution and sustained them only when they have been established by clear and convincing proof [see, e.g., Schuler v. Winstanley (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 759, 766, 297 P.2d 512; Broderick v. Koehler (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 813, 817, 207 P.2d 1070]. This declaration is designed to supply the proof necessary to make a gift fully enforceable.

For a detailed discussion of gifts in view of impending death, see § 60A.15[1].

[b] Gift in View of Impending Death

A gift in view of impending death (also called a gift causa mortis) is a gift that is made in contemplation, fear, or peril of impending death, whether from illness or other cause, and with the intent that it will be revoked if the giver recovers from the illness or escapes from the peril [Prob. Code § 5702(a)]. In California, gifts in view of impending death are governed by rules set forth in the Probate Code [see Prob. Code § 5700 et seq.]. Under those rules, an enforceable gift in view of impending death can only be made during the last illness of the giver, or under circumstances that "would naturally impress the giver with an expectation of speedy death" [Prob. Code § 5703; see Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2873-2874 (1990)]. An enforceable gift in view of impending death cannot be made in general contemplation of the distant possibility of death. For example, an enforceable gift in view of impending death cannot be made solely for the purpose of saving death taxes or avoiding probate at some remote time in the future [see Prob. Code § 5703; Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2873-2874, 2880 (1990)].

[c] Gift as Conditional

A gift in view of impending death is a conditional gift [see Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2879 (1990); Prob. Code §§ 5702(a), 5704(d)]. When properly made, the gift is subject to a condition subsequent; that is, if the giver does not die of the illness or escapes from the peril under the presence of which the gift was made, the gift will be automatically revoked [see Prob. Code § 5704(a)]. A gift in view of impending death cannot properly be made subject to a condition precedent; that is, it cannot be made conditional on the giver's death. If a gift is made subject to the giver's death, it functions in the same way as a devise in a will; and, if the gift does not comply with the formal requirements for execution of a will, it will be unenforceable [see Yates v. Dundas (1947) 80 Cal. App. 2d 468, 474-475, 182 P.2d 305 ; see also § 60A.15[2]].

A gift in view of impending death, unlike most other gifts [see Civ. Code § 1148; § 60A.10[3]], is subject to revocation by the giver. The giver has the right to revoke the gift at any time [Prob. Code § 5704(b)(1)]. The gift may even be revoked by the giver's will, if the will expresses an intention to revoke the gift [Prob. Code § 5704(b)(2)]. However, a gift in view of impending death is not affected by a previously-existing will of the giver [Prob. Code § 5704(c)].

A gift in view of impending death is automatically revoked by the giver's recovery from the illness, or escape from the peril, under the presence of which the gift was made [Prob. Code § 5704(a)(1)]. This means that an enforceable gift in view of impending death can only be made if the giver in fact dies as a result of the illness or other peril that induced the gift [ Paddock v. Fonner (1927) 84 Cal. App. 652, 655, 258 P. 423 ]. However, the mere fact that the death occurred as a result of suicide will not nullify the gift, if the other elements of a valid and completed gift in view of impending death have been found [see Berl v. Rosenberg (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 125, 130, 336 P.2d 975 ; Recommendation Relating to Gifts in View of Impending Death, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2869, 2873-2874 (1990)].

If the gift has been delivered to the donee, revocation of the gift may be subject to the rights of purchasers or encumbrancers. If a person, acting in good faith, for a valuable consideration, and without knowledge of the conditional nature of the gift, purchases the gift property, or lends money on the security of the property, the person's rights will not be affected by the revocation [Prob. Code § 5704(d)].

[e] Rights of Creditors

Property transferred by a gift in view of impending death may be subject to claims of the giver's creditors if, after the giver's death, the giver's personal representative has insufficient assets to pay all creditors [Prob. Code §§ 5705, 9653; see Prob. Code § 58 ("personal representative" means executor, administrator, administrator with will annexed, etc.)]. In that case, a creditor of the deceased person or the deceased person's estate may request that the personal representative commence and prosecute an action for the recovery of the property [Prob. Code § 9653(a)]. However, a creditor who makes such a request must pay a part of the costs and expenses of the suit and attorneys' fees, or give an undertaking to the personal representative for that purpose [Prob. Code § 9653(b)]. The amount that the creditor must pay will be determined by mutual agreement of the personal representative and the creditor or, if they cannot agree, by the court [Prob. Code § 9653(b)]. For further discussion of the rights of creditors after a gift in view of impending death has been made, see § 60A.15[6].

[f] Spouse's Consent to Gift of Community Property

If the gift property is community property, the giver's spouse should consent to the gift or join in making it. A spouse may not make a gift of community personal property, or dispose of community personal property for less than fair and reasonable value, without the written consent of the other spouse [Fam. Code § 1100(b)]. Although there is no general rule prohibiting one spouse from making a gift of community real property, both spouses must join (either personally or by duly authorized agent) in executing any instrument by which community real property is sold, conveyed, encumbered, or leased for longer than one year [Fam. Code § 1102]. For further discussion, see § 60A.12[1].

Although gifts of quasi-community property are not subject to the same restrictions as gifts of community property, if a spouse dies after making a gift of quasi-community property, the surviving spouse may have a right to require the transferee to restore the property to the deceased spouse's estate [see Prob. Code § 102]. To avoid this eventuality, it is also advisable to obtain the spouse's written consent to a gift of quasi-community property. For discussion, see § 60A.12[2].

[g] Taxation of Gift Causa Mortis

Because a gift in view of impending death is not legally effective until the death of the donor, it is considered an incomplete gift until the time of death and will not be subject to federal gift tax [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-2(c); Rev. Rul. 74-365, 1974-2 C.B. 324]. It will, however, be subject to federal estate tax [I.R.C. § 2035; see United States v. Wells (1931) 283 U.S. 102, 115-117, 51 S. Ct. 446, 75 L. Ed. 867].

§ 60A.202 Gift of Life Insurance Policy

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a written assignment that may be used to make a gift of a life insurance policy. The form includes four alternative provisions and a community property waiver and consent. The first alternative provision may be used to make an assignment from an individual to another individual. The second may be used to make an assignment from a trustee to an individual. The third alternative may be used to make an assignment from an individual to a trustee. The fourth may be used to make an assignment from a trustee to another trustee. The community property waiver and consent should be included in the form if the assignor is a married person because a spouse has community property rights in any life insurance policy if the premiums are paid with community property [see [c], below].

This form is based in part on forms developed by Keith V. Abramson, J.D.

For a form that may be used to make a gift of a life insurance policy under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act [Prob. Code § 3900 et seq.], see § 60A.220.

PRACTICE TIP:

The options provided in this form allow a gratuitous transfer of a life insurance policy by a trustee acting in a fiduciary capacity. In advising a client, the lawyer should be extremely careful to point out that in the case of an irrevocable trust (or a revocable trust when the settlor is not serving as trustee or the transfer from the trust is to someone other than the settlor), a trustee making a gift of trust property is almost certainly engaging in a breach of the trust (unless the trust contains a highly unusual provision permitting such a gratuitous transfer by the trustee).

Additionally, if one is considering using this form because the policy is being sold to a third party or the trustee of a different trust and there is concern that the consideration may not be adequate, attention should be focused on the so-called "transfer for value rule" which will substantially alter the income tax treatment of the policy proceeds (making them taxable instead of tax free) if any consideration is given for the transfer of the policy [see I.R.C. § 101(a), including the limited exceptions to the transfer for value rule contained in I.R.C. § 101(a)(2)]. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman

A transfer of life insurance policies from one trust to another trust for valuable consideration will be disregarded for federal income tax purposes, and the transfer for value rule will not apply, when both trusts are owned by the same individual [see Priv. Ltr. Rul. 200514001-002 ; Priv. Ltr. Rul. 200518061 ].

[b] Gift of Life Insurance Policy

A life insurance policy, like any other form of personal property, may be the subject of a gift [ Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Franck (1935) 9 Cal. App. 2d 528, 538, 50 P.2d 480 ; see Morrison v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. (1940) 15 Cal. 2d 579, 583, 103 P.2d 963 ]. The donee of the policy need not have an insurable interest [Ins. Code § 10130], but the gift must satisfy all of the general legal requirements for a valid gift [ Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Franck (1935) 9 Cal. App. 2d 528, 538, 50 P.2d 480 ; Lo Presti v. Manning (1932) 125 Cal. App. 442, 445, 13 P.2d 1002 ]. An effective gift of personal property requires: (1) an actual or symbolic delivery of the gift to the donee; and (2) an intention on the part of the donor to completely divest himself or herself of control and dominion over the property [ Savelli v. Simon (1938) 25 Cal. App. 2d 365, 367, 77 P.2d 486 ]. Direct evidence of delivery need not be shown, however, when delivery may be inferred from proof of possession and independent evidence that the donor intended to make delivery [ Woodard v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (1937) 8 Cal. 2d 361, 363, 65 P.2d 353 ].

A gift of a life insurance policy may be made orally [ Woodard v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (1937) 8 Cal. 2d 361, 362-363, 65 P.2d 353 ; see Asper, Ownership and Transfer of Interests in Life Insurance Policies, 20 Hastings L.J. 1175, 1182 (1969)] or in writing [see Savelli v. Simon (1938) 25 Cal. App. 2d 365, 366-367, 77 P.2d 486 ]. An oral gift, however, is not valid unless the means of obtaining possession and control of the property are given, or (if the property is capable of delivery) there is an actual or symbolic delivery [Civ. Code § 1147].

In all cases, the donor must intend to make a present transfer of the policy. A promise to make a gift at some time in the future is not a present gift and is not effective to transfer ownership [ Savelli v. Simon (1938) 25 Cal. App. 2d 365, 368, 77 P.2d 486 ; see Asper, Ownership and Transfer of Interests in Life Insurance Policies, 20 Hastings L.J. 1175, 1184 (1969)].

[c] Premiums Paid With Community Property

A life insurance policy purchased during marriage with community funds is a community asset [ Tyre v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 399, 402, 6 Cal. Rptr. 13, 353 P.2d 725 ]. Similarly, an income protection policy (which for this purpose is analytically indistinguishable from a life insurance policy) is community property if the premiums are paid with community funds [ Marriage of Donnelly (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 135, 137, 190 Cal. Rptr. 756, disapproved on other grounds In re Marriage of Saslow (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 848, 861 n. 5, 221 Cal. Rptr. 546, 710 P.2d 346 ]. No spouse may make a gift of community personal property without the written consent of the other spouse [Fam. Code § 1100(b)].

The result may be different if community assets are used to pay the premiums on life insurance policies issued pursuant to federal statutes, such as the National Service Life Insurance Act (NSLIA) [38 U.S.C. § 1901 et seq.] or the Servicemembers' Group Life Insurance Act (SGLIA) [38 U.S.C. § 1965 et seq.]. Rights acquired under community property laws are preempted by conflicting provisions of the NSLIA [ Wissner v. Wissner (1950) 338 U.S. 655, 70 S. Ct. 398, 94 L. Ed. 424 ], and a beneficiary designation under a policy issued pursuant to the SGLIA takes precedence over conflicting state law [ Ridgway v. Ridgway (1981) 454 U.S. 46, 55-60, 102 S. Ct. 49, 70 L. Ed. 2d 39 ].

Although federal law generally has only limited application in the field of domestic relations [see McCarty v. McCarty (1981) 453 U.S. 210, 220, 101 S. Ct. 2728, 69 L. Ed. 2d 589 ], the Supremacy Clause [U.S. Const., art. VI, cl. 2] would invalidate any provision of state law that frustrates or erodes clearly expressed policies of federal law [ Ridgway v. Ridgway (1981) 454 U.S. 46, 54, 102 S. Ct. 49, 70 L. Ed. 2d 39 ]. The guiding rule is that if the state law does "major damage" to "clear and substantial" federal interests, the state law must yield [ Hisquierdo v. Hisquierdo (1979) 439 U.S. 572, 581, 99 S. Ct. 802, 59 L. Ed. 2d 1 ]. Application of this general rule to particular cases can present problems. For instance, under California law, federal military insurance policies would be community property for which the non-insured spouse might be awarded other community property of equal value [ Marriage of Milhan (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 765, 777-778, 166 Cal. Rptr. 533, 613 P.2d 812 , judgment vacated in, Milhan v. Milhan (1981) 453 U.S. 918 ]; however, the Supremacy Clause generally precludes the application of state community property laws to military retirement pay [ McCarty v. McCarty (1981) 453 U.S. 210, 235-236, 101 S. Ct. 2728, 69 L. Ed. 2d 589 ]. Nevertheless, military pensions for periods beginning after June 25, 1981, are to be treated as separate or community property in accordance with state laws [10 U.S.C. § 1408(c)(1)].

Regardless of whether a provision of state law frustrates or erodes a federal policy, the federal policy must give way to community property rights if application of the community property law is necessary to prevent a fraud against an innocent spouse [ Yiatchos v. Yiatchos (1964) 376 U.S. 306, 84 S. Ct. 742, 11 L. Ed. 2d 724 ; see Ridgway v. Ridgway (1981) 454 U.S. 46, 58, 102 S. Ct. 49, 70 L. Ed. 2d 39 ].

[d] Rights of Donee

On completion of a valid, present assignment of a life insurance policy, the assignee acquires all of the rights of ownership of the prior owner and may recover whatever the insured might have recovered on the policy [Ins. Code § 10130]. Although the ownership rights will vary according to the terms of the policy, they will typically include such things as the right to change the beneficiary, the right to encumber the policy with a policy loan, the right to surrender the policy for cash, and the right to make another assignment of the policy [see Asper, Ownership and Transfer of Interests in Life Insurance Policies, 20 Hastings L.J. 1175, 1184 (1969)].

[e] Policy Requirements and Notice

Gifts of life insurance policies are generally valid whether or not they are effected in the manner prescribed in the policy [see Asper, Ownership and Transfer of Interests in Life Insurance Policies, 20 Hastings L.J. 1175, 1182 (1969)]. In California, notice to the insurer is not necessary to preserve the validity of the policy unless notice is expressly required by the policy Ins. Code § 10131. Notice, however, may be important to perfect or protect the rights of the donee. An insurer who has no notice of a policy assignment is not bound to honor it, but an insurer with notice of an assignment must recognize the rights of the lawful owner [ Morrison v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. (1940) 15 Cal. 2d 579, 587, 103 P.2d 963 ]. When a life insurance policy has been assigned in writing, the insurer may deal with the assignee in any manner not inconsistent with the terms of the assignment until the insurer has received at its home office written notice by or on behalf of some other person that the other person claims some interest in the policy [Ins. Code § 10173].

[f] Gift to Beneficiary

A life insurance policy may be given to any person, including the designated beneficiary [ McEwen v. New York Life Ins. Co. (1919) 42 Cal. App. 133, 141, 183 P. 373 ]. Although the beneficiary's interest in a policy in which the owner reserves the right to change the beneficiary is a mere expectancy of a gift at the time of the insured's death [ Grimm v. Grimm (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 173, 175-176, 157 P.2d 841 ], if the policy has been given to the beneficiary inter vivos, the beneficiary's interest as owner becomes absolute, and the donor, in the absence of some act again vesting him or her with title, has no further power or control over the policy [ McEwen v. New York Life Ins. Co. (1919) 42 Cal. App. 133, 141, 183 P. 373 ; see Asper, Ownership and Transfer of Interests in Life Insurance Policies, 20 Hastings L.J. 1175, 1183-1184 (1969)].

[g] Use of Company Forms

Insurers typically provide printed forms for assignment of ownership interests in life insurance policies. Although these forms are not legally essential to the completion of valid assignments, by gift or otherwise [see [b], above], as a practical matter they should be used whenever possible. When an insurance company clerk receives an unfamiliar form, the clerk may be uncertain as to how to proceed, and the form may be returned unfiled. Use of a form provided by the insurer will reduce the likelihood of such an occurrence.

An attorney who is asked to prepare an assignment (by gift or otherwise) of a life insurance policy should first contact the insurer or the insurer's agent to determine if the company will provide a form for assignment. If the insurer will provide such a form, the attorney should request a copy and, whenever possible, use it to accomplish the transaction. Whether or not a printed form is used, the written assignment should be delivered to the donee, together with the policy, and notice of the assignment should be given to the insurer.

[h] Estate and Income Tax Consequences

For federal estate tax purposes, the gross value of an estate will include certain amounts received as insurance under policies on the life of the decedent. Any amount receivable by the executor under a policy on the life of the decedent will be included in the decedent's estate [I.R.C. § 2042(1)]; amounts receivable by other beneficiaries will be included if the decedent, at the time of death, retained any of the "incidents of ownership" in the policy [I.R.C. § 2042(2); Treas. Reg. § 20.2042-1(c)(1)]. The term "incidents of ownership" is not limited to ownership in the technical legal sense, but generally refers to the economic benefits of the policy and includes the power to change the beneficiary, to surrender or cancel the policy, to assign the policy, to revoke an assignment, to pledge the policy for a loan, or to obtain a loan from the insurer against the surrender value of the policy [Treas. Reg. § 20.2042-1(c)(2)].

Although gifts made within three years of death generally are not includable in the decedent's gross estate, a gift made within three years of death (even a gift that qualifies for the annual gift tax exclusion) [see I.R.C. § 2503(b); see also § 60A.32[4]] is includable if the gift property would have been includable in the decedent's estate under I.R.C. §§ 2036, 2037, 2038, and 2042 (transfers with retained life estate; transfers taking effect at death; revocable transfers; proceeds of life insurance), if the donor had retained the property at the time of death [I.R.C. § 2035(a)].

If the insured, by gift, parts with all of the incidents of ownership in the policy, and if the gift was not made during the three-year period ending with the insured's death, the proceeds will be effectively removed from the insured's estate and the beneficiary will receive the proceeds free of income tax liability [I.R.C. § 101(a); but see I.R.C. § 101(f) (special rule for proceeds of flexible premium contracts issued before 1985)].

[i] Gift Tax Consequences

A gift of an insurance policy may result in gift tax liability, depending on the value of the policy at the time of the gift, the availability of the annual exclusion, and the availability of any unused portion of the unified credit against gift and estate tax [see I.R.C. §§ 2503, 2505; see also § 60A.32].

The value of an insurance policy at the date of gift is typically much less than its face value. For gift tax purposes, the value of a life insurance contract is determined by reference to the price at which the company sells comparable policies; but if the price of comparable policies is not readily available (either because the policy has been in force for some time or because it is not issued by a company regularly engaged in selling contracts), other valuation methods may be used [see Treas. Reg. § 20.2512-6(a)]. If, after assigning the policy, the prior owner continues to pay the premiums, the payments constitute additional gifts of present interests [Treas. Reg. § 25.2503-3(c), example 6].

[j] Drafting Caution

Because a gift of an insurance policy is an attractive method of removing the proceeds of the policy from the insured's estate, such a gift will be closely scrutinized. If tax saving is one of the reasons for making a gift of an insurance policy, it is important to clearly establish that the donor intends to make a present and complete inter vivos transfer of the policy and that all of the "incidents of ownership" are presently and completely transferred.

23-60A California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 60A.203AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman§ 60A.203 Gift by Forgiveness of Debt[1] Comment*[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a declaration that may be used to make a gift by forgiving a debt. Any written instrument evidencing the debt should be canceled and delivered to the donee-debtor at the same time that the declaration is delivered. If the debt is secured, a release of the security interest should also be executed and delivered. If the original security interest was recorded, the release should also be recorded.

[b] Proof of Donative Intent

When a creditor wishes to make a gift by forgiving a debt, donative intent should be clearly established for tax purposes. Without proof of donative intent, the forgiven debt may be considered income in the hands of the donee and thus subject to income tax. Although gross income generally includes income from the discharge of indebtedness [I.R.C. § 61(a)(12); Rev. & Tax. Code § 17071], it does not include the value of any property acquired by gift [I.R.C. § 102(a); see Rev. & Tax. Code § 17071]. Regardless of whether the creditor is motivated by donative intent, forgiving a debt will constitute a gift for federal gift tax purposes, as donative intent is not one of the elements of a taxable gift [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-1(g)(1)]. The value of the release of a debt is the amount of unpaid principal plus accrued and unpaid interest at the time of the release [Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-4]. For a general discussion of taxable gifts, see § 60A.32.

CHAPTER 60A GIFTS

PART IV. FORMS

A. Gifts in General

23-60A California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 60A.204

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 60A.204 Gift of Securities

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, may be used to make a gift of securities. Execution of the form, together with delivery of the properly endorsed securities, will complete the gift. Although a gift of securities may be completed without a written instrument, a written instrument will establish the date of the transfer, which is important for determining the value of the gift [see [d], below]. For a form for a gift of securities under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act, see § 60A.220.

[b] Gift of Securities

If the owner of shares of stock delivers a properly endorsed stock certificate to another person (or to the agent of another person), a gift of the stock is complete, for gift tax purposes, on the date of delivery [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-2(h)]. If the donor delivers the certificate to the donor's bank or broker as agent, or to the issuing corporation or its transfer agent, for transfer into the name of the donee, the gift is complete on the date the stock is transferred on the books of the corporation [Treas. Reg. § 25.2511-2(h); see Com. Code § 8401 (duty of issuer to register transfer of securities on presentation of properly endorsed certificate)].

Transfer of stock on the books of a corporation, without delivery of the certificates, may not be sufficient to constitute a completed gift. When, for example, shares of stock are transferred on the books of a corporation, but the transferor retains control over the stock and later revokes the transfer, there is no gift [ Bucholz v. Commissioner (1949) 13 T.C. 201 ]. Further, the execution of an instrument purporting to immediately assign and transfer the stock will not render a gift of the stock complete if the certificates are not endorsed or delivered [ Broadhead Trust v. Commissioner (1972) T.C. Memo 1972-196 ]. Under appropriate circumstances, however, a gift may be completed without delivery of the stock certificates. In a case in which the donor issued stock in a family corporation in the names of trustees for the benefit of his children but left the certificates attached to the stock record book (which remained in the donor's custody), the court found a gift since gift tax returns were filed and dividends on the stock were paid into the children's bank accounts [ Kraft v. Commissioner (1969) T.C. Memo 1969-232 ].

[c] Delivery of Endorsed Certificates or Completion of Other Requirements

This form should be accompanied by delivery of properly endorsed certificates (or the unendorsed certificates along with the appropriate stock or bond assignment(s) separate from certificate) to the donee, the donee's agent, or the issuer of the security. If the gift is of "uncertificated securities" [see Com. Code § 8102(a)(18)], the requirements of the issuer for transfer should be ascertained and complied with [see Corp. Code § 416(b) (issuer authorized to adopt system of issuance, recordation, and transfer not involving certificates)].

PRACTICE TIP:

A gift of less than the full number of shares represented by a certificate probably will require delivery of the certificate to a broker or transfer agent with a request to issue a new certificate in the donee's name for the shares being given and to issue a new certificate in the donor's name for the remaining shares represented by the existing certificate. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman

[d] Importance of Date of Gift

The amount of any federal gift tax liability is determined by the fair market value of the gift property on the date of transfer [see I.R.C. § 2512(a)]. Since the market value of securities can vary from day to day [see Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-2(b)], it is particularly important to establish the date of such a gift. Moreover, although a gift of securities may be completed by endorsement of the securities and delivery to the donee, or delivery directly to the corporation for issuance of new securities in the donee's name, the date of the gift may still be open to challenge. For example, the donor's mere request to a broker to transfer securities or the donor's endorsement of securities, without proof of the date of delivery, is insufficient to establish the date of transfer for valuation purposes [see Rev. Rul. 54-135, 1954-1 C.B. 205 ].

A. Gifts in General

23-60A California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 60A.205

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 60A.205 Gift of Interest in Trust

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a declaration of gift to be used when the donor desires to make a gift of an interest in an existing trust, such as the right to receive income from the trust or the remainder interest in the trust. The Statute of Frauds [Civ. Code § 1624] applies to the transfer of an interest in a trust containing real property, but as a matter of good practice a writing should be used in all cases to effect the transfer of a trust interest. This form, once executed, should be delivered to the donee as evidence of the gift. The trustee of the trust should be notified of the assignment of the trust interest and, if required by the trust instrument, his or her consent to the assignment should be obtained in writing.

A disclaimer of a trust instrument will in many cases accomplish the same goals as an assignment of the interest, except for a shifting of the potential liability for transfer taxes (a disclaimant can often avoid any transfer tax liability, while a donor of an interest under a trust may well face transfer tax liability). However, if a disclaimer is not made within the applicable time limits, a gift of the trust interest may be the only way of shifting the trust income to persons in a lower tax bracket [see [c], below]. For more detailed discussion of disclaimers, § 60A.230.

Unless the trust instrument provides otherwise, a beneficiary has the unrestricted right to assign or otherwise alienate his or her interest in the trust [ Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Duffill (1923) 191 Cal. 629, 649, 218 P. 14 ]. Such an interest may be transferred regardless of whether it is a present or future interest [Civ. Code § 699]. Many trust instruments, however, contain so-called "spendthrift clauses" which specifically prohibit the beneficiary from making any assignment of or otherwise alienating his or her interest in the trust.

[c] Tax Consequences of Gift of Trust Instrument

For gift tax valuation purposes, the present value of a life interest is determined by applying an actuarial figure obtained from the tables set forth in the regulations [see Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-5(d)] against the value of the property in the trust [Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-5(c), (d)]. The value of a remainder interest is equal to the total value of the property in the trust less the value of the life interest [see Treas. Reg. § 25.2512-5(d)(2)].

A major purpose of a gift of an interest in the income of a trust is to shift the income tax liability to another, such as a family member, who is in a lower tax bracket. When a trust beneficiary irrevocably assigns all or a portion of trust income, the transfer creates an interest in the trust corpus for the donee, who is therefore taxable on the income produced by the portion of the corpus subject to the interest [ Blair v. Commissioner (1937) 300 U.S. 5, 12, 57 S. Ct. 330, 81 L. Ed. 465 ]. The donor will remain taxable on trust income which accrues prior to the date of the gift [ Marx v. Commissioner (1939) 39 B.T.A. 537 ].

The attempt to shift income will be unsuccessful and trust income will remain taxable to the donor if the donor imposes restrictions on the donee's right to alienate trust income or limits the donee's enjoyment of the income [ Power v. Commissioner (8th Cir. 1932) 61 F.2d 625, 626 ]. If the gift of trust income is unauthorized under the trust instrument, the tax burden will not shift to the donee [ King v. United States (1st Cir. 1936) 84 F.2d 156, 159 ]. For this reason, the beneficiary of a spendthrift trust will remain taxable on the trust income even if the income is assigned to, and received by, another [ St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. United States (8th Cir. 1944) 143 F.2d 842, 843 ].

§ 60A.206 Gift of Tuition or Medical Expenses

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a declaration to be used for making a gift of tuition or medical expenses that will qualify for the gift tax exclusion under I.R.C. § 2503(e).

[b] Exclusion of Medical and Educational Payments

Amounts paid on behalf of any person (1) to a qualified educational organization [see I.R.C. § 170(b)(1)(A)(ii) ("educational organization")] as tuition for the education or training of that person or (2) to any person who provides medical care [see I.R.C. § 213(d) ("medical care")] for that person are not treated as taxable gifts [I.R.C. § 2503(e); see § 60A.32[3]]. A donor may make medical or tuition payments under this rule on behalf of any donee and regardless of the amount of the payments. The medical and educational payments may be in addition to any gifts to the same donee that are excluded from taxation under the annual gift tax exclusion [see I.R.C. §§ 2503(b), 2523(i); see also § 60A.32[4]]. The exclusion for medical and education payments, however, does not change the rule that a transfer is not a gift if, under state law, the donor is obligated to provide such payments or otherwise support the donee [House Committee Report, § 1441, Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 (Pub. L. No. 97-34); Rev. Rul. 56-484, 1956-2 C.B. 23].

[c] Eligible Donee

The donee can be any individual; no special relationship to the donor is required [I.R.C. § 2503(e)(2)]. However, the donee may not directly receive the payments; rather, qualified transfers must be made in the donee's behalf to certain transferees [I.R.C. § 2503(e)(2); see [d], below].

[d] Qualified Transfers

Qualified transfers include tuition for the education and training of the donee [I.R.C. § 2503(e)(2)(A)] and medical care furnished to the donee [I.R.C. § 2503(e)(2)(B)]. Tuition payments must be made directly to an educational organization that is a qualified charitable organization [I.R.C. §§ 170(b)(1)(A)(ii), 2503(e)(2)(A)]. Such an educational organization normally must maintain a regular faculty and curriculum and normally have a regularly enrolled student body in attendance at the place where its educational activities are regularly carried on [I.R.C. § 170(b)(1)(A)(ii)]. The exclusion is permitted for both full-time and part-time students, but is limited to direct tuition costs; payments for books, supplies, dormitory fees, and the like are not eligible for the exclusion [House Committee Report, § 1441, Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 (Pub. L. No. 97-34)].

Payments for medical care must be made directly to the person or organization that provides the care [I.R.C. § 2503(e)(2)(B)]. The term "medical care" includes the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment or prevention of disease, treatment affecting any structure or function of the body, transportation primarily for and essential to medical care, and insurance covering medical care [I.R.C. §§ 213(d)(1), 2503(e)(2)(B)]. The exclusion is not subject to the percentage limitations on the income tax deduction for medical care [I.R.C. §§ 213, 2503(e); House Committee Report, § 1441, Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 (Pub. L. No. 97-34)]. However, the donor's payment does not qualify for the exclusion to the extent the donee is reimbursed by medical insurance, regardless of the taxable year in which the donee receives the reimbursement [House Committee Report, § 1441, Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 (Pub. L. No. 97-34)].

[e] Income Tax Consequences

The gift tax exclusion of qualified transfers under I.R.C. § 2503(e) does not affect the income tax consequences of such transfers. No income tax deduction is generally permitted for tuition payments or for medical payments made on behalf of another. However, a charitable deduction of up to $50 a month is available for amounts paid to maintain a full-time student as a member of the taxpayer's household while the student is attending a qualified educational organization [I.R.C. § 170(g); see Rev. & Tax. Code § 17201].

§ 60A.207 Gift Conditional on Payment of Gift Tax by Donee

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a declaration of gift that makes the gift conditional on the donee (rather than the donor) paying any federal gift tax due. The donor otherwise has primary responsibility for the payment of gift tax [I.R.C. § 2502]. The amount of the gift is reduced by the amount of gift tax paid by the donee [ Harrison v. Commissioner (1952) 17 T.C. 1350 ; Rev. Rul. 81-223, 1981-2 C.B. 189 ]. The donor's available unified credit must be used to reduce the tax liability that the donee has assumed, to the extent the unified credit is available [ Rev. Rul. 81-223, 1981-2 C.B. 189 ; see I.R.C. § 2505 ]. The net gift typically is used when the donor desires to give the donee specific property other than cash, but does not wish the transaction to cost anything more than the value of the gift property. Generally a net gift transaction is not considered the equivalent of a sale or exchange in which gain must be recognized [ Hirst v. Commissioner (1974) 63 T.C. 307 ]. Therefore the donor may make a gift of appreciated property without being taxed on any gain, providing the gift tax liability is not greater than the donor's adjusted basis [see Diedrich v. Commissioner (1982) 457 U.S. 191, 102 S. Ct. 2414, 72 L. Ed. 2d 777 ].

[b] Federal Gift Taxation of Net Gift

Although the donor is primarily responsible for the payment of gift tax [I.R.C. § 2502(c)], payment of the tax by the donee generally will not result in taxable income to the donor, as long as the transaction is in fact a gift and not a disguised sale [ Estate of Henry v. Commissioner (1978) 69 T.C. 665 ; McNeice v. Commissioner (1981) T.C. Memo 1981-86 ]. If the gift tax liability assumed by a donee exceeds the donor's adjusted basis in the transferred property, however, the donor realizes taxable income to the extent that the gift tax exceeds the adjusted basis [see Diedrich v. Commissioner (1982) 457 U.S. 191, 102 S. Ct. 2414, 72 L. Ed. 2d 777 ]. The income is taxable to the donor in the year the tax is paid by the donee, not in the year the gift is made [ Estate of Weeden v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1982) 685 F.2d 1160 ].

The value of the taxable gift and the tax due can be computed by the use of an algebraic formula recommended by the Internal Revenue Service [see Rev. Rul. 75-72, 1975-1 C.B. 310]. Special computations are required in the event of a bracket change resulting from the computation of the tax [see Rev. Rul. 75-72, 1975-1 C.B. 310].

§ 60A.220 Gift of Personal Property Under California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, may be used to make a gift to a minor under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act [Prob. Code § 3900 et seq.] when the custodian is to be a trust company or an adult other than the transferor. Only two types of property may be transferred with this form: (1) unregistered securities that are not held by a broker or financial institution, and (2) uncertificated and unregistered tangible personal property. For a detailed discussion of these types of property, see [c] and [d], below.

This form is prescribed by Prob. Code § 3909(b). It includes space for the custodian to acknowledge receipt of the property as custodian for the minor. Since acknowledgment of receipt is not necessary when the transferor intends to hold the gift property as custodian for the minor, this form should not be used when the transferor is to be the custodian [see [b], below]. Nor should it be used when some evidence other than an acknowledgment of receipt will establish that the gift has been made. If, for example, the gift property is to be held by a broker or financial institution in an account in the name of the custodian, acknowledgment of receipt of the property is not required to establish that the gift has been made [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(2)]. Similarly, when the gift property is registered with a corporation or governmental agency, acknowledgment of receipt is not necessary [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)(A), (2)-(6)]. If the gift property is real property, the gift should be made by deed, and the deed should be recorded in the office of the county recorder [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(5)].

For a complete list of gifts that should not be made using this form, see [e], below. When a gift should not be made with this form, the gift property should simply be registered, deposited, assigned, recorded, or otherwise titled in the name of the custodian as custodian for the minor, and a formal transfer form is not required [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)(A), (2)-(6)].

[b] Transferor Cannot Act as Custodian

The California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act permits the transferor to act as custodian of a wide variety of gifts made under the UTMA [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)]. However, there are some gifts of which the transferor cannot be the custodian because transfer of possession and control to a third party is necessary to establish donative intent and consummation of the transfer [Recommendation Relating to Uniform Transfers to Minors Act, 17 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 601, 620 (1984)].

Generally, the transferor can act as custodian if the transfer is reflected in the public records or notice of the transfer is given to an appropriate third person [Recommendation Relating to Uniform Transfers to Minors Act, 17 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 601, 620 (1984)]. Conversely, the transferor generally cannot act as custodian if the transfer is not reflected in the public records and no notice of the transfer is given to a third person. The transferor cannot simply keep the gift property and purport to make an irrevocable transfer by executing and retaining an instrument transferring the property to himself or herself as custodian [Recommendation Relating to Uniform Transfers to Minors Act, 17 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 601, 621 (1984)]. This rule is designed to avoid uncertainty and discourage fraud. Since this form can only be used to make gifts of unregistered securities that are not held by brokers or financial institutions, and unregistered and uncertificated tangible personal property, the transferor cannot be the custodian when this form is used. The custodian must be an adult other than the transferor, or a trust company [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)(B), (7), (b)].

[c] Unregistered Securities Not Held by Broker or Financial Institution

This form may be used to make a gift of securities when the securities are neither registered nor held by a broker or financial institution in an account in the name of the custodian. Acknowledgment of receipt is not required when the securities are registered or are held by a broker or financial institution in an account in the name of the custodian [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)(B), (b)].

This form may be used to make a gift of either "certificated" or "uncertificated" securities [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)(B)]. A "certificated" security is a security that is represented by a certificate [Com. Code § 8102(a)(4)]. A "certificated security" is in "registered form" if (1) the certificate specifies a person who is entitled to the security and (2) a transfer of the security may be registered on books maintained for that purpose by or on behalf of the issuer, or the certificate states that the transfer may be registered in that way [Com. Code § 8102(a)(13)]. A "certificated security" is in "bearer form" if the security is payable to the bearer of the certificate according to its terms but not by reason of an indorsement [Com. Code § 8102(a)(2)]. If securities are registered, acknowledgment of receipt by the custodian is not necessary, and this form should not be used [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)(A); see also [e], below].

If unregistered securities are certificated, they should be delivered with this form and with any necessary endorsement to the designated custodian [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)(B)]. If the securities are uncertificated, any other documents necessary for the transfer of the securities should be delivered to the custodian with any necessary endorsement and this form [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)(B)].

[d] Uncertificated Tangible Personal Property

This form may also be used to transfer personal property when the personal property is not registered, represented by a certificate of title, or held by a broker or financial institution in an account in the name of the custodian [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(7), (b)]. Property that meets this description generally consists of tangible personal property that is not certificated or registered with a governmental agency. Acknowledgment of receipt is not required when the property is registered, represented by a certificate of title, or deposited in an account in the name of the custodian. Thus, this form should not be used to transfer automobiles, boats, or other articles of tangible personal property that are certificated by a governmental agency [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(6), (b)]. Nor should it be used to transfer real property, since a transfer of real property must be evidenced by recordation of an appropriate instrument of transfer, such as a deed or lease; and when the instrument has been recorded, acknowledgment of receipt is not necessary [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(5)].

[e] Gifts for Which This Form Should Not Be Used

It is generally unnecessary to prepare a formal transfer or title document to make a gift to a minor under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. Most gifts under the UTMA may be made by simply registering, depositing, or titling the gift property in the name of the custodian, followed in substance by the words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)(A), (2)-(6)]. When the gift is made in this way, the registration, deposit, or title document itself is sufficient evidence that the gift has been made, and an additional instrument is unnecessary. Prob. Code § 3909(a) contains a complete list of the types of property that may be given to a minor under the UTMA, with detailed descriptions showing which types require a formal transfer or title instrument such as this form and which types do not require such an instrument. The following gifts may be made without such an instrument [Prob. Code § 3909(a)]:

- A gift of registered securities, when the securities are registered in the name of the transferor, an adult other than the transferor, or a trust company, followed in substance by the words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)(A)].
- A gift of money, or of securities held in the name of a broker or financial institution, or its nominee, when the money is paid or delivered or the securities are transferred to a broker or financial institution for credit to an account in the name of the transferor, an adult other than the transferor, or a trust company, followed in substance by the words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(2)].
- A gift of the ownership of a life or endowment insurance policy or annuity contract when the ownership is registered with the issuer in the name of the transferor, an adult other than the transferor, or a trust company, followed in substance by the words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(3)(A)].
- A gift of the ownership of a life or endowment insurance policy or annuity contract when the ownership is assigned in a writing delivered to an adult other than the transferor or to a trust company whose name in the assignment is followed in substance by the words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(3)(B)].
- A gift of an irrevocable present right to future payments under a contract, or a gift made by an irrevocable exercise of a power of appointment, when a written notification is delivered to the payor, issuer, or other obligor that the right is transferred to the transferor, an adult other than the transferor, or a trust company, whose name in the notification is followed in substance by the words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(4)].
- A gift of an interest in real property when the instrument of transfer is recorded in the name of the transferor, an adult other than the transferor, or a trust company, followed in substance by the words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(5)].
- A gift of a certificate of title issued by a department or agency of a state or of the United States which evidences title to tangible personal property when the certificate is issued in the name of the transferor, an adult other than the transferor, or a trust company, followed in substance by the words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(6)(A)].

■ A gift of a certificate of title issued by a department or agency of a state or of the United States which evidences title to tangible personal property when the certificate is delivered to an adult other than the transferor or to a trust company, endorsed to that person followed in substance by the words "as custodian for _____ [name of minor] under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act" [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(6)(B)].

[f] Gift of Community Property

A spouse ordinarily cannot make a gift of community property unless the other spouse consents to the gift or joins in making it. A spouse may not make a gift of community personal property, or dispose of community personal property for less than fair and reasonable value, without the written consent of the other spouse [Fam. Code § 1100(b)]. However, this rule does not apply to gifts mutually given by both spouses to third parties, or to gifts given by one spouse to the other spouse [Fam. Code § 1100(b)].

If community property is given to a minor, both spouses should either consent to the gift or join in making it. This form does not include a consent of the transferor's spouse. The form is statutory, and the statutory language does not include spousal consent language [see Prob. Code § 3909(b)]. However, the statute provides only that the gift instrument must be "substantially" in this form [Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)(B)]. There is no reason to suppose that the addition of spousal consent language would violate the terms of the statute. For an example of such a line for spousal consent to a gift, see § 60A.200[2].

[g] Age for Termination of Custodianship

This form contains optional language, prescribed by statute [see Prob. Code § 3920.5(b)], that can be used if the transferor wishes to have the custodianship continue beyond the minor's eighteenth birthday. Ordinarily, the custodianship will terminate, and the property will be distributed to the minor outright, when the minor attains age 18 or dies, whichever comes first [Prob. Code § 3920]. However, the UTMA permits the transferor to extend the custodial period beyond the minor's eighteenth birthday by specifying an extended period in the instrument of transfer [see Prob. Code §§ 3920(b), 3920.5]. In the case of a transfer by irrevocable inter vivos gift, the time for transfer of the custodial property to the minor may be delayed until no later than the time the minor attains 21 years of age [Prob. Code § 3920.5(e)].

Any attempt to delay distribution beyond age 21 will be futile, and in that event the property will be distributed when the minor attains 21 [Prob. Code § 3920.5(h)]. If it is essential to the transferor that distribution be postponed beyond that time, then a trust should be created in lieu of a gift under the UTMA.

§ 60A.221 Agreement for Compensation of Custodian Under California UTMA

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is an agreement fixing the compensation of a custodian under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. It provides that the custodian will receive a fixed annual fee, or, in the alternative, an annual fee amounting to a specified percentage of the value of the custodial property.

This form is a separate contract between the transferor and the custodian and is designed to be used in addition to the instrument (if any) actually making the transfer. This method is used here because many kinds of property can be transferred under the UTMA without the use of a formal transfer instrument such as the form in § 60A.220[2] (for example, by reregistering securities, depositing money in a custodial account, or transferring the certificate of title to a motor vehicle) [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1), (2), (6); see also § 60A.123].

A trust company may be named as custodian of property transferred under the UTMA [see Prob. Code § 3909(a)(1)-(7)]. If the custodian will be a trust company, it may have its own rate scale for computing compensation and may use its own forms.

[b] Compensation in Absence of Agreement

A custodian (except a custodian who is also the transferor) ordinarily has a noncumulative election during each calendar year to charge reasonable compensation for services performed during that year [Prob. Code § 3915(b)]. This option must be exercised at least annually or it lapses and may not be exercised later. However, the compensation need not actually be paid in the year in which the option is exercised. The purpose of this requirement is to avoid imputing income to a custodian who waives compensation, and also to avoid a large unanticipated claim for compensation exercisable at termination of the custodianship [Law Revision Commission comment to Prob. Code § 3915].

[c] Compensation by Agreement

Although the governing statutes say nothing about whether or not the parties can fix the custodian's compensation by mutual agreement, the Law Revision Commission's comments to the relevant provision state that compensation may be determined by agreement, by a will provision, by reference to a statute, or by court order [Law Revision Commission comment to Prob. Code § 3915]. In the case of a testamentary gift, the will may specify the measure of compensation of the custodian in the will [Prob. Code § 6345].

In addition to the right to reasonable compensation, the custodian is entitled to reimbursement from the custodial property for reasonable expenses incurred in the performance of the custodian's duties [Prob. Code § 3915(a)]. This form preserves this right by essentially restating the language of the statute.

[2] Form*Agreement for Compensation of Custodian Under California UTMA

Agreement for Compensation of Custodian Under California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act

This Agreement is made _____ [date], between _____ [name of transferor], _____ [address] ("Transferor") and _____ [name of custodian] ("Custodian").

Recitals

In a transfer made [by written instrument dated] _____ [date], Custodian has been named by Transferor as custodian of _____ [description of property, e.g., 5,000 shares of Acme Corporation Class A common stock] (the "custodial property") for _____ [name of minor], a minor, under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act.

Custodian has agreed to act as custodian for the custodial property.

Transferor and Custodian desire to fix Custodian's right to compensation for the performance of Custodian's duties in connection with the custodial property.

Compensation of Custodian

1. The annual compensation to be paid to Custodian for services as custodian shall be _____ [state annual compensation, either a flat fee or a percentage of the value of the custodial property], payable out of the custodial property _____ [state time of payment, e.g., at the end of each calendar year]. Compensation for the first payment period shall be proportionally reduced based on the ratio that the number of days during which Custodian serves as custodian bears to the total number of days in that period. Compensation for the payment period in which the custodianship is terminated shall be proportionately reduced by the ratio that the amount of time remaining in the payment period bears to the entire payment period, and shall be payable at the time of termination. The compensation specified in this paragraph shall be in lieu of Custodian's right under Probate Code Section 3915(b) or any successor statute to charge reasonable compensation for services performed during the calendar year. As used herein, the phrase "payment period" means a calendar year.

Reimbursement for Reasonable Expenses

2. In addition to the compensation specified above, Custodian shall be entitled to reimbursement from the custodial property for reasonable expenses incurred in the performance of custodial duties.

Controlling Law

3. Except as specifically provided in this Agreement, all matters relating to the custodial property and the rights, duties, and obligations of the parties shall continue to be governed in all respects by the provisions of the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act [and the instrument making the transfer of the custodial property].

§ 60A.222 Declaration That Transferor-Custodian May Pay Custodial Property to or on Behalf of Minor Only by Court Order [Prob. Code § 3914(d)]

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a declaration limiting the custodial power of a transferor-custodian under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. It provides that the custodian may not pay over any part of the custodial property to or for the use or benefit of the minor prior to termination of the custodianship except by court order on a showing that the expenditure is necessary for the support, maintenance, or education of the minor. A transferor-custodian who desires to limit his or her custodial powers in this manner must file with the clerk of the superior court a declaration in substantially the form set forth here [Prob. Code § 3914(d)]. The language of this form is specified by statute and states that the election is irrevocable [Prob. Code § 3914(d)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Filing such a declaration with the clerk of the court may be problematic. It appears that such filings are very infrequent and as a result at least some local probate court clerks may be unfamiliar with them. There is also a question whether such a filing requires opening a proceeding and paying a minimum filing fee for a first appearance and, once the filing is made, what the clerk does with the filings. It is recommended that attorneys contemplating such a filing contact the local probate clerk in advance to determine the local answers to these questions. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman

The Uniform Transfers to Minors Act does not specify any time limit for making such an election.

[b] Estate Tax Reasons for Election

Ordinarily, a custodian under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act, including a transferor who has named himself or herself as custodian, may deliver or pay to the minor, or expend for the minor's benefit, as much of the custodial property as the custodian deems advisable. This right may be exercised without court order and without regard to the duty or ability of the custodian or any other person to support the minor, or to any other income or property of the minor that may be applicable or available for that purpose [Prob. Code § 3914(a)].

This unfettered right to pay custodial property to or for the benefit of the minor may have undesirable federal estate tax consequences if the transferor names himself or herself as custodian. If a donor who is named as custodian dies while acting in that capacity, the custodial property is included in his or her gross estate unless the donor waives the right to make support payments so that they are made only pursuant to court order and not at the discretion of the donor [ Rev. Rul. 57-366, 1957-2 C.B. 618 ; see I.R.C. § 2038; § 60A.44[3]].

The advantages that will be derived from such an election obviously will vary depending on the circumstances. If the donor's estate is not large enough to have any potential for federal estate tax liability, there is no point in making such an election. In that situation, it will only deprive the custodian of flexibility by restricting payments to those necessary for the minor's support, maintenance, and education. Further, it could complicate administration of the custodial property by requiring a court proceeding as a condition precedent to any payments to or for the minor. However, if the estate of the transferor-custodian is large enough that imposition of federal estate tax is likely or certain, such an election can result in tax savings for the estate. To determine whether or not an election should be made in such a situation, it is necessary to weigh the loss of flexibility that would result from an election against the anticipated tax savings.

§ 60A.230 Disclaimer of Gift or Other Interest

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is an instrument that a donee may use to disclaim an inter vivos gift. The form may be modified to disclaim property or interests transferred or created by will or by the exercise of a power of appointment. For a form that may be used to disclaim an interest in an inter vivos trust, see § 60A.231.

[b] Use of Disclaimers in Estate Planning

A person who accepts a gift becomes the owner of the gift property. If, after accepting the property, the donee returns it to the donor, or transfers it to another person, the return to the donor or transfer to another person is a transfer and potentially subject to gift tax. If the donee does not return the property or transfer it to another person, it will be included in the donee's gross estate for federal estate tax purposes and be subject to estate taxation on the donee's death.

To avoid these potentially undesirable results, the donee may elect to disclaim the gift. A disclaimer of a gift will often be appropriate when the donee does not need the gift property and would prefer that it pass to other persons, such as the donee's children or grandchildren. The potentially unfavorable consequences of accepting a gift may be avoided if the disclaimer is a "qualified disclaimer" for gift tax purposes.

Care should be taken to ensure that unintended consequences do not result from a devisee's disclaimer. For example, a decedent's estate was found liable for an estate tax deficiency when a disclaimer executed by the decedent's surviving spouse caused a trust created under the decedent's will to be funded in an amount that exceeded the decedent's applicable exclusion amount. The will provided that the trust was to be funded in an amount equal to the "aggregate federal estate tax exemption equivalent" and that this amount was not to be reduced by any disclaimer executed by the surviving spouse. It also provided that any portion of the decedent's residuary estate that was disclaimed by the surviving spouse was to be added to the trust. The decedent's will and the surviving spouse's qualified disclaimer had the effect of funding the trust with an amount equal to the "aggregate federal estate tax exemption equivalent" and with the interests of the securities specified in the disclaimer. Assuming that the decedent's intent was to minimize taxes, this intent was defeated by execution of the disclaimer [see Estate of David Katz, T.C. Memo. 2004-166].

[c] Qualified Disclaimers for Federal Gift Tax Purposes

A disclaimer is a "qualified disclaimer" for federal gift tax purposes if it meets the requirements of I.R.C. § 2518. A "qualified disclaimer" is an irrevocable and unqualified refusal to accept an interest in property, but only if it meets the following requirements [I.R.C. § 2518(b)]:

- The refusal is in writing.
- The writing is received by the transferor of the interest, the transferor's legal representative, or the holder of legal title to the property not later than nine months after (1) the transfer creating the interest is made, or (2) the transferee's 21st birthday, whichever is later.
- The transferee has not accepted the interest or any of its benefits [Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-2(d)(1)]; see, e.g., Estate of Engelman v. Commissioner (2003) 121 T.C. 54 (attempted disclaimer of property by executor of decedent's estate on decedent's behalf was not qualified disclaimer because decedent's exercise of power of appointment over property, effective on her death, constituted acceptance of property under California law)]. Acts indicative of acceptance include using property or interest in property, accepting dividends or rents from property, and directing others to act with respect to property or interest in property [Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-2(d)(1)].

If a transferee who disclaims an interest in property is also a fiduciary, actions taken in the exercise of fiduciary powers to preserve or maintain the disclaimed property are not treated as an acceptance of that property [Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-2(d)(2)]; see Letter Rul. 200406038 (individual's disclaimer of interest in limited liability company was qualified disclaimer, even though in her fiduciary capacity, she also executed amendment to LLC agreement)].

PRACTICE TIP:

A wife's disclaimer of her survivorship interest in a joint brokerage account with her husband constituted a qualified disclaimer even though, before making the disclaimer, she made cash withdrawals from the account and sold certain securities in the account.

Despite the cash withdrawal and sale of securities, the disclaimer was a qualified disclaimer because the cash and securities were separable assets, and the wife did not accept the benefits of the disclaimed interest [see Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-3(a)(1)(ii)]; Letter Rul. 200503024 ].

- As a result of the refusal, the interest passes without any direction on the part of the transferee to some other person [see, e.g., Letter Rul. 200333023 (example of qualified disclaimer)]. A disclaimer is not qualified if the transferee, either alone or with another, directs the redistribution or transfer of the property or interest in property to another person, or has the power to do so, unless the power is limited by an ascertainable standard [see Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-2(e)]; Letter Rul. 200420007 (disclaimer was qualified even though property would pass to charitable foundation of which transferee was a director, when actions would be taken to prevent transferee from having any say over administration of property by foundation)].

For purposes of determining whether a disclaimer is a qualified disclaimer, the nine-month period begins from the date on which the interest is created, not the date on which the interest becomes vested [ Jewett v. Commissioner (1982) 455 U.S. 305, 318-319, 102 S. Ct. 1082, 71 L. Ed. 2d 170 ; Ordway v. United States (11th Cir. 1990) 908 F.2d 890, 895-896 ].

EXAMPLE:

Assume, for example, that a grandfather created a trust in 1917 and provided that, on the death of the last surviving life beneficiary, the trust corpus would be distributed to his grandchildren. Assume further that a grandson who was born in 1922 learned of his contingent interest in the trust in 1941 and reached his twenty-first birthday in 1943. Assume also that the last surviving life beneficiary died on June 27, 1979, and that the grandson filed a disclaimer of his interest in the trust on August 23, 1979. Although the disclaimer was made within nine months after the remainder interest vested in the grandson, it was not made within nine months after the grandson learned of the remainder interest, or reached his twenty-first birthday; hence the disclaimer was not a "qualified disclaimer" under I.R.C. § 2518 [see Ordway v. United States (11th Cir. 1990) 908 F.2d 890, 895-896 ].

A qualified disclaimer may be partial or whole. For example, a qualified disclaimer may extend only to an undivided portion of an interest in the gift property [I.R.C. § 2518(c)(1)]. The disclaimed property may be a power with respect to property (e.g., a power of appointment) [I.R.C. § 2518(c)(2)]. A qualified disclaimer also may consist of a written transfer of the transferor's interest in the property. Such a transfer will qualify as a qualified disclaimer if it otherwise meets the requirements for a qualified disclaimer and if the transfer is to a person or persons who would have received the property had the transferor made a qualified disclaimer of the property [I.R.C. § 2518(c)(3)].

A beneficiary's disclaimer of a beneficial interest in a decedent's individual retirement account (IRA) is a qualified disclaimer under I.R.C. § 2518 if all of the requirements of that section are met, even though, before making the disclaimer, the beneficiary receives the required minimum distribution for the year of the decedent's death from the IRA. The beneficiary may make a qualified disclaimer with respect to all or a portion of the balance of the IRA, other than the income attributable to the required minimum distribution that the beneficiary received, as long as at the time the disclaimer is made, the disclaimed amount and the income attributable to that amount are paid to the beneficiary entitled to receive the disclaimed amount, or are segregated in a separate account [ Rev. Rul. 2005-36, 2005-26 I.R.B. 1368 ].

[d] California Disclaimer Requirements

The Probate Code sets forth requirements for the content and execution of disclaimers [see Prob. Code § 260 et seq.]. However, any disclaimer that meets the requirements of federal law will be sufficient under California law [Prob. Code § 295].

A disclaimer must be in writing and signed by the person disclaiming the interest [Prob. Code § 278]. It must identify the creator of the interest, describe the interest to be disclaimed, and state the disclaimer and its extent [Prob. Code § 278].

[e] Who May Disclaim

The beneficiary of any interest may disclaim the interest, in whole or in part [Prob. Code § 275]. A disclaimer on behalf of a conservatee must be made by the conservator of the estate of the conservatee pursuant to a court order [Prob. Code § 276; see Prob. Code § 2580 et seq. (court orders authorizing conservators to take proposed action)]. A disclaimer on behalf of a minor must be made by the guardian of the minor's estate if one has been appointed, and by a guardian ad litem of the minor if there is no guardian of the estate [Prob. Code § 277(a)]. A disclaimer by a guardian ad litem must be pursuant to court order [Prob. Code § 277(a)]. A disclaimer on behalf of a decedent must be made by the personal representative of the decedent [Prob. Code § 277(b)]. Except as provided in the Independent Administration of Estates Act [see Prob. Code § 10400 et seq.; see also Ch. 65, Executors ], a disclaimer by a guardian or personal representative is not effective unless made pursuant to a court order [Prob. Code § 277(b)].

A petition for an order authorizing or requiring a guardian or personal representative to execute and file a disclaimer must be filed in the superior court in the county in which the estate of the minor or decedent is administered or, if there is no administration, in the superior court in any county in which administration would be proper [Prob. Code § 277(c)]. The petition may be filed by the guardian, personal representative, or other interested person [Prob. Code § 277(c)]. It must identify the creator of the interest, describe the interest to be disclaimed, state the extent of the disclaimer, and identify the person or persons the petitioner believes would take the interest in the event of the disclaimer [Prob. Code § 277(d)].

The right to disclaim is not impaired by any limitation on the interest of a beneficiary in the nature of an expressed or implied spendthrift provision or similar restriction [Prob. Code § 286; see Prob. Code § 15300 et seq. (spendthrift provisions in trusts); Ch. 64, Testamentary Trusts: Payment and Distribution Provisions ].

[f] When Disclaimer Must Be Filed

A disclaimer is effective under California law if it is filed within a "reasonable time" after the person able to disclaim acquires knowledge of the interest [Prob. Code § 279(a)]. Disclaimers of interests created under wills, intestate succession, pursuant to the exercise or nonexercise of testamentary powers of appointment, or otherwise arising from death are presumed to have been filed within a reasonable time if they are filed within nine months after the death of the creator of the interest, or within nine months after the interest becomes indefeasibly vested, whichever occurs later [Prob. Code § 279(b)].

Disclaimers of interests in inter vivos trusts [ see § 60A.231 ], interests created by the exercise of a presently exercisable power of appointment, outright inter vivos gifts, powers of appointment, and interests resulting from succession to an interest disclaimed by another person, are conclusively presumed to have been filed within a reasonable time if they are filed within nine months after the latest of the following [Prob. Code § 279(c)]:

- The creation of the trust, the exercise of the power of appointment, the making of the gift, the creation of the power of appointment, or the disclaimer of the disclaimed property.
- The time the first knowledge of the interest is acquired by the person able to disclaim.
- The time the interest becomes indefeasibly vested.

A disclaimer of a future estate is conclusively presumed to have been filed within a reasonable time if it is filed within nine months after it becomes an estate in possession or within the time period that would otherwise apply to it, whichever is later [Prob. Code § 279(e)]. Disclaimers of other types of interests are conclusively presumed to have been filed within a reasonable time if they are filed within nine months after the time the first knowledge of the interest is acquired by the person able to disclaim, or the time the interest becomes indefeasibly vested, whichever is later [Prob. Code § 279(d)].

If the disclaimer is not filed within the time periods specified above, the person filing the disclaimer has the burden of proving that the disclaimer was filed within a reasonable time after he or she acquired knowledge of the interest [Prob. Code § 279(f)].

A disclaimer may not be made after the beneficiary has accepted the interest sought to be disclaimed [Prob. Code §

285(a)], unless the beneficiary became entitled to the interest because another person disclaimed an interest and the beneficiary (or the person acting on his or her behalf) had no knowledge of the interest to which he or she became entitled [Prob. Code § 285(c)]. A beneficiary will be deemed to have accepted an interest if, before filing a disclaimer of the interest, the beneficiary (or someone acting on the beneficiary's behalf) either (1) accepts all or part of the interest; (2) executes a written waiver of the right to disclaim the interest [see Prob. Code § 284; § 60A.232]; or (3) voluntarily assigns, conveys, encumbers, pledges, or transfers all or part of the interest, or contracts to do so Prob. Code § 285(b)(1)-(3)]. A beneficiary also will be deemed to have accepted an interest if, before the beneficiary files a disclaimer with respect to the interest, all or part of the interest is sold at a judicial sale [Prob. Code § 285(b)(4)].

A beneficiary will not be deemed to have accepted an interest, however, merely by making a gratuitous conveyance or transfer of the beneficiary's entire interest in property to the person or persons who would have received the property had the beneficiary made an otherwise qualified disclaimer of the interest [Prob. Code § 285(b)(1)]. Further, a beneficiary who is a surviving joint tenant will not be deemed to have accepted the interest of the deceased joint tenant in the joint tenancy property merely because the beneficiary accepted a joint interest in the property when the joint tenancy was originally created [Prob. Code § 285(d)].

[g] Filing Requirements

The disclaimer must be filed with any of the following [Prob. Code § 280(a)]:

- The superior court in the county in which the decedent's estate is administered, or, if there is no administration of the decedent's estate, the superior court in any county in which administration of the decedent's estate would be proper.
- The trustee, personal representative, fiduciary, or person responsible for distributing the interest to the beneficiary.
- Any other person having custody or possession of or legal title to the interest.
- The creator of the interest.

[h] Recording of Disclaimers Affecting Real Property

If a disclaimer affects real property or an obligation secured by real property, it may be recorded in the same manner as a grant of real property [Prob. Code § 280(b); see Ch. 27, Deeds and Recording ]. All provisions relating to the recordation or nonrecordation of real property apply to the disclaimer, without regard to the date the disclaimer was filed [see [g], above]. Failure to file a disclaimer that has been recorded does not affect the validity of any transaction with respect to the real property or the obligation secured by the real property, and the general laws on recording and its effect govern any such transaction [Prob. Code § 280(b)].

[i] Irrevocability

A disclaimer, when effective, is irrevocable. It binds the beneficiary and all persons claiming by, through, or under the beneficiary, including the beneficiary's creditors [Prob. Code § 281].

[j] Disposition of Disclaimed Interest

If the disclaimed interest is a present interest, it will be treated as if the person making the disclaimer had predeceased the creator of the interest. If it is a future interest, it will be treated as if the person making the disclaimer had died before the determinative event on which the taker of the interest had become finally ascertained and the taker's interest indefeasably vested. The creator of the interest, however, may provide for a specific alternate disposition of the interest in the event of a disclaimer [Prob. Code § 282(a)]. The beneficiary is not treated as having predeceased the decedent for the purpose of determining the division of the estate under the Probate Code rules relating to distribution among heirs or beneficiaries [Prob. Code § 282(b)(1)] (applicable to disclaimers filed on or after Jan. 1, 1985); see Prob. Code § 240 et seq. (distribution among heirs or beneficiaries)].

A disclaimer relates back for all purposes to the date of death of the creator of the disclaimed interest or the determinative event, as the case may be [Prob. Code § 282(a)].

§ 60A.231 Disclaimer by Beneficiary of Interest in Trust

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is an instrument that may be used to disclaim an interest created by an inter vivos trust. It may also be modified to disclaim interests created by will or the exercise of a power of appointment. For a general discussion of the federal and California rules governing disclaimers, see § 60A.230[1].

The use of special "disclaimer trusts" as postmortem estate planning devices is common. The function of disclaimer trusts is basically to allow the trust beneficiary to assess, at the time when he or she would come into actual possession of the interest, whether or not it would be advantageous for tax purposes to divert the trust income or principal to other beneficiaries in a manner predetermined by the settlor or testator and specified in the trust instrument. Most commonly, this involves a disclaimer by a spouse of the settlor or testator into a trust for his or her own benefit or for the benefit of his or her children, or by children of the settlor or testator for the purpose of diverting trust income or principal to grandchildren. If the disclaimer trust is not needed, then it simply never becomes operative. For more detailed discussion of the use of disclaimer trusts in estate planning, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.16. The complete marital deduction trust forms in this publication all contain disclaimer trusts [ see Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms, §§ 70.201, Sections 5.06, 5.07 (nonformula trust), 70.202, Section 5.11 (formula trust--two settlors), 70.203, Section 5.12 (formula trust--one settlor)].

[b] When Disclaimer Must Be Filed

For federal gift tax purposes, a disclaimer must be received by the transferor, the transferor's legal representative, or the holder of legal title to the property to which the interest relates within nine months after (1) the date on which the transfer creating the interest is made, or (2) the beneficiary's 21st birthday, whichever occurs later [I.R.C. § 2518(b)(2)]. California law requires only that the disclaimer be filed within a reasonable time after the person able to disclaim acquired knowledge of the interest [Prob. Code § 279(a); see Prob. Code § 280 (where disclaimer must be filed)]. California law also provides, however, that the disclaimer of an interest created by an inter vivos trust is conclusively presumed to have been filed within a reasonable time if it is filed within nine months after (1) the trust was created; (2) the beneficiary first acquired knowledge of the interest; or (3) the interest became indefeasibly vested, whichever occurs last [Prob. Code § 279(c)]. In any event, a disclaimer valid under federal law is also valid under California law [Prob. Code § 295].

§ 60A.232 Waiver of Right to Disclaim Interest

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a waiver by the recipient of an interest of any right to disclaim the interest. Under California law, any person who could file a disclaimer of an interest may instead file a written waiver of the right to disclaim [Prob. Code § 284]. Once this waiver is filed in the same manner as a disclaimer [see Prob. Code § 280; see also § 60A.230[1][f], [g]], the waiver is irrevocable and is binding on the beneficiary and all persons claiming by, through, or under the beneficiary [Prob. Code § 284].

PRACTICE TIP:

A waiver of this sort would most frequently be used when a will or trust incorporated disclaimer planning (in other words, it contemplated and planned for the possible use of disclaimers) and the prospective disclaimant wanted to clearly announce his or her intention to not make a disclaimer, thereby allowing the administration of the will or trust to go forward with a clear understanding on the part of the fiduciary as to how to administer the assets under management. *Commentary by Albert G. § 60A.240 Certificate of Independent Review [Prob. Code § 21351(b)]

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a Certificate of Independent Review. It may be used when an instrument makes a donative transfer to a "disqualified person" and that transfer otherwise would be invalidated under the rules set forth in Prob. Code § 21350 et seq. For a Certificate of Independent Review that may be used when a person who drafts a trust instrument wishes to serve as trustee of the trust [see Prob. Code § 15642(b)(6)(B)], see Ch. 64A, Testamentary Trusts: Trustee Provisions.

[b] Requirement of Certificate of Independent Review

A donative transfer is subject to a statutory presumption of invalidity if the instrument under which it is made was drafted by the donee, or if the donee is a relative (by blood or marriage), domestic partner [see Fam. Code § 297], partner, employee, or cohabitant of the person who drafted the instrument, transcribed the instrument, or caused it to be transcribed [Prob. Code § 23150(a)]. Under these circumstances, the donee is classified as a "disqualified person" [Prob. Code § 23150.5] and the transfer is subject to the special rules set forth in Prob. Code § 21350 et seq. For a detailed discussion of those rules, and the exceptions to them, see § 60A.16.

One of the exceptions to the general rule creating the presumption of invalidity of donative transfers to "disqualified persons" provides that such a transfer is not invalid if the instrument making the transfer is reviewed by an independent attorney who counsels the transferor about the nature of the intended transfer and signs and delivers a Certificate of Independent Review in substantially the form set forth in Prob. Code § 21351(b). This form illustrates the required certificate and is taken verbatim from the language that appears in Prob. Code § 21351(b).

[c] Status of Attorney Who Prepares Certificate

An attorney who prepares a Certificate of Independent Review under an agreement that is limited solely to preparing the certificate and counseling the client about its use is not deemed to represent the client for any other purpose [Prob. Code § 21351(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

As a practical matter, a Certificate of Independent Review can be difficult to obtain, even when there is little or no actual doubt regarding the absence of fraud or undue influence. Many estate planning attorneys are reluctant to issue Certificates of Independent Review out of concern over potential liability and the fear that in the event the gift is subsequently contested by the donor's heirs, they may end up being attacked on the issue of whether or not they performed an adequate investigation prior to issuing the certificate. Commentary by publisher's editorial staff.

[2] FORM

Certificate of Independent Review [Prob. Code § 21351(b)]

Certificate of Independent Review

I, _____ [name of attorney], have reviewed _____ [name of instrument] and counseled my client, _____ [name of client], on the nature and consequences of the transfer, or transfers, of property to _____ [name of potentially disqualified person] contained in such instrument. I am so disassociated from the interest of the transferee as to be in a position to advise my client independently, impartially, and confidentially as to the consequences of the transfer. On the basis of this counsel, I conclude that the transfer, or transfers, in the instrument that otherwise might be invalid under Probate Code Section 21350 are valid because the transfer, or transfers, are not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence.

This chapter covers will drafting and complete will forms. The Legal Background surveys the California law governing the planning, drafting, execution, and attestation of wills. The Transaction Guide covers preliminary considerations that are critical to proper planning of a will, and general drafting principles that should be followed whenever an attorney drafts a will. It also includes a drafting guide to the use of the complete will forms in the chapter and a procedural guide to the execution and attestation of wills in California. The forms consist of complete will forms that have been chosen to illustrate basic will arrangements that will commonly be encountered in the attorney's office.

A will is an important estate planning document and should be planned and prepared as part of a comprehensive estate plan. Ch. 60, Estate Planning, is a general introduction to the subject of estate planning and a guide to the other estate planning chapters in this publication. It should be consulted before any other estate planning documents are prepared. Lifetime gifts and gift-giving strategies are covered in Ch. 60A, Gifts.

Due to space limitations, this chapter does not illustrate the thousands of possible alternative and optional provisions that can be included in a will. For a broad range of alternative provisions, the reader may consult Ch. 63, Will Provisions. Additional provisions will be found in Ch. 64, Testamentary Trusts: Payment and Distribution Provisions, Ch. 64A, Testamentary Trusts: Trustee Provisions, Ch. 64B, Testamentary Trusts: Administrative Provisions, Ch. 65, Executors, Ch. 66, Guardianship and Conservatorship Planning, Ch. 67, Future Interests and Perpetuities; and Ch. 69, Charitable Dispositions. Some of the wills in this chapter contain extensive trust provisions. Alternatives to many of those trust provisions will be found in Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms, Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, and Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts. Attorneys who wish to consider an even wider range of alternative provisions should refer to Matthew Bender's specialty publication, California Wills & Trusts. Specific references to that publication are included in appropriate places in this chapter.

PRACTICE TIP:

When "gathering" forms from different sources in the preparation of a will or any other estate planning document, strict attention must be paid to the intended use of each form. For example, wills and forms for wills and individual will provisions are typically written in the first person (e.g., "my personal residence"). By contrast, non-testamentary trusts and forms for such trusts and their individual provisions are typically written in the third person (e.g., "the settlor's personal residence"), and often assume more than one settlor (e.g., "the settlors' personal residence). Thus, care must be taken to conform each specific form used in a given drafting project to the type of document being produced, in order to insure clarity and consistency. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.10

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.10 Nature and Characteristics of Will

[1] In General

A will is a legal declaration of the intentions that a person wills to be performed after his or her death [Black's Law Dictionary (6th ed. 1990) at 1598]. Although leaving directions for the disposition of one's property is one of the primary functions of a will [see Tennant v. John Tennant Memorial Home (1914) 167 Cal. 570, 577, 140 P. 242 ; Estate of Hall (1906) 149 Cal. 143, 146, 84 P. 839], a will also may be used to accomplish other purposes, such as leaving burial instructions [see Health & Safety Code § 7100.1] or nominating an executor [see Prob. Code § 8420] or a guardian for minor children [see Prob. Code §§ 1500, 1502]. A will need not dispose of the testator's property if it is effective for some other purpose [ In re Hickman (1894) 101 Cal. 609, 613, 36 P. 118 ; Estate of Fries (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 558, 562, 47 Cal. Rptr. 888].

The words "testament" and "will" were at one time used to describe distinct instruments, the former referring to an instrument that disposed of personal property and the latter to an instrument that disposed of real property. However, the words are now generally regarded as synonymous [Black's Law Dictionary (6th ed. 1990) at 1474]. Since modern drafting practice favors the elimination of unnecessary or archaic words, this publication uses the word "will" in all discussions of testamentary instruments.

A "testator" is a person who makes or has made a will [Black's Law Dictionary (6th ed. 1990) at 1475]. Although at one time the word "testatrix" was used to refer to a woman who makes a will, the Probate Code refers to both men and women who make wills as "testators" [see, e.g., Prob. Code §§ 6101, 6110, 6111, 6120], and this publication follows the same practice.

[2] Types of Wills

[a] In General

California law recognizes two principal classes of wills. These are formal witnessed wills [see Prob. Code §§ 6110, 6112] and holographic wills [see Prob. Code § 6111]. Although this chapter includes brief discussions of holographic [see [c], below; see also § 61.13[2]] and nuncupative wills [see [f], below], it focuses primarily on formal witnessed wills.

The California statutory will is a type of formal witnessed will [see Prob. Code §§ 6223(a), 6240 and discussion in § 61.21], although it differs from others of its kind in that it is a printed form and not drafted by an attorney. It is designed to be filled in by persons who do not have the assistance of attorneys, or who need to complete a stopgap will that will be followed by an attorney-drafted will.

Two other types of wills are briefly discussed in this chapter. These are joint wills and mutual wills. For reasons explained in the discussion of those wills [see [e], below], joint wills and mutual wills are fraught with dangers and generally avoided by most estate planning attorneys.

[b] Witnessed Wills

A formal witnessed will is a will that is signed by the testator, or by some other person authorized by law to sign for the testator [see Prob. Code § 6110(b) and discussion in § 61.13[1][a]], and that is properly witnessed by two qualified witnesses who are either present when the will is signed or when the testator acknowledges his or her signature [see Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1) and discussion in § 61.13[1][b]]. The witnesses also must sign the will [Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1)]. The subscription of a will must occur during the testator's lifetime, and a will that has not been subscribed by two witnesses at the time of the testator's death neither complies nor substantially complies with Prob. Code § 6110 [see Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1), see also Estate of Saueressig (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1045, 1057, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 672]. Additionally, if a will was not executed in compliance with Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1), the will must be treated as if it was executed in compliance with Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1) if the proponent of the will can establish by clear and convincing evidence that, at the time the testator signed the will, the testator intended the will to constitute the testator's will [Prob. Code § 6110(c)(2)].

Formal witnessed wills are often (although not always) prepared by attorneys. They are the kind of wills that can best be tailored to the specific needs and wishes of individual testators. They can be designed, for example, to create trusts, to create or exercise powers of appointment, to make devises to or for the benefit of charities, to take maximum advantage of tax-saving opportunities, to establish protections for minor children or those with so-called "special needs," and to reduce the possibility of will contests. Since the formal witnessed will is a flexible estate planning tool capable of almost infinite permutations, it is the subject of most of the discussion in this chapter. For execution and witnessing requirements for formal, witnessed wills, see § 61.13[1].

[c] Holographic Wills

A holographic will is a will, usually informally drafted and signed by the testator without witnesses, that is written entirely (or at least partially) in the testator's handwriting [see Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 882, 885-886, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 (instrument handwritten on three pages of partially preprinted stationer's form was upheld as holographic will, when printed language on stationer's form incorporated in will was not material to its substance or essential to its validity as a testamentary disposition)]. Prob. Code § 6111 provides an exception to the formalities for a will specified in Prob. Code § 6110, and makes valid a holographic or handwritten will if the signature and the material provisions are in the testator's handwriting [ Estate of Brenner (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 1301, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149] . Prob. Code § 6111 gives validity to an unwitnessed handwritten will because of the "recognized difficulty of forging an entire handwritten instrument" [ Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 888, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754] . Whether a document should be admitted to probate as a holographic will depends on proof of its authorship and authenticity, and on whether the words used establish that the testator intended it to be his or her last will and testament at the time he or she wrote it [ Estate of Southworth (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 564, 571, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 272] .

Although no particular words are necessary to establish a holographic will, a holographic will must be executed with testamentary intent [ Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1204-1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 ; see Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 888, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 (reference to instrument as testator's will and statement that testator hoped this writing would be given legal effect as testamentary disposition was evidence of testator's intent to authenticate document as will) see also Estate of Williams (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 197, 207 ; 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 34 , (Evidence supported finding that decedent's handwritten document, where his name was written in block letters at the top, stated the disposition of some of his assets and had included some language of testamentary intent, was a valid holographic will).]. The required statement of testamentary intent may be set forth either in the testator's own handwriting or as part of a commercially printed form will [Prob. Code § 6111(c)]. In either case, however, the will must describe, or at least refer to, the property to be disposed of, and it must reveal an intention to dispose of the property [ Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1208, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 ] . Further, this intention must be shown by words. A symbol without a fixed meaning, such as an arrow, cannot supply the required intention [ Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1208-1209, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 ] .

The testator's signature need not be located at the end of the holographic will, but may appear in another part of the will, as long as the testator wrote his or her name there with the intention of authenticating or executing the instrument as his or her will [ Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 888, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 (fact that testator wrote her name in each page of holographic will was deemed a sufficient signature) see also Estate of Williams (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 197, 207 ; 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 34 , (Holographic will need not be signed at the bottom provided the testator wrote his name on the document with the intent of authenticating or executing the instrument as his will).]. For discussion of the execution requirements for holographic wills, see § 61.13[2].

Photocopies of a testator's handwritten property dispositions, included in a holographic will, satisfy the statutory requirement that the material provisions of the will must be in the testator's handwriting, as long as the photocopies are properly authenticated [ Estate of Brenner (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 1299, 1302, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149 ] .

Both the courts and the legislature have shown a tendency toward liberality in accepting a writing as a holographic will [ Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 883-884, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 ; Estate of Brenner (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 1301, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149 ] . Substantial compliance with the statutory requirements, not absolute precision, is all that is necessary [ Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 883-884, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 ] . An overly technical application by the courts of the holographic will statute to handwritten testamentary dispositions, which generally are made by people who have no legal training, would seriously limit the effectiveness of the legislative decision to authorize holographic wills [ Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 884, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 ] .

However, an instrument that does not meet the requirements of Prob. Code § 6111 is not a holographic will. For example, a charitable donor card containing printed language showing an intent to make a future gift to the charity on which the testator writes that his or her entire estate is left to the charity and which is dated and signed by the testator is not a holographic will; the donor card is not a "commercially printed form will" as specified by the statute, and the material printed language together with the handwriting show a future intent, not a present testamentary intent [see Estate of Southworth (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 564, 566, 571-572, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 272 ] . Likewise, a written, witnessed will, which the testator alters by crossing out portions and substituting language in the testator's handwriting does not constitute a holographic will; when the handwriting itself lacks testamentary intent and substance, and has meaning only in relationship to the typewritten words, there is no complete testamentary document that can be deemed to be a holographic will [see Estate of Sola (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 241, 245-248, 275 Cal. Rptr. 98 ("even rules of liberal construction do not permit us to ignore clear and explicit statutory requirements")].

PRACTICE TIP:

The California cases reveal a judiciary keenly interested in allowing a testator's intent to be carried out, to the point of allowing questionable documents to be treated as wills and thereby blurring the lines previously thought by estate planners to distinguish valid from invalid holographic instruments. For those seeking the validation of holographic instruments in the context of will contests, this development may be comforting. However, the careful practitioner advising a client on the preparation of a holographic will--and this often happens in "emergency" situations, such as the client call one hour before the start of an extended vacation--will urge that some basics be followed: use of a plain piece of paper; a clear statement that the document is intended to be a will; clear statements regarding the disposition of assets; inclusion of the date of the instrument; all written personally by the testator and, of course, signed by the testator. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

Extrinsic evidence is admissible to determine whether a writing claimed to be a will is in fact a will, or to determine the meaning of a will or portion of a will if the meaning is unclear [Prob. Code § 6111.5]. This statute expands the court's inquiry beyond merely determining if the statutory formalities for a traditional will or a holographic will are satisfied. The court may look at extrinsic evidence to confirm the testator's intent and to determine whether there is any danger of fraud [ Estate of Brenner (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 1302-1303, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149 ]. For example, a court may consider statements the testator made before and after making a holographic will, as well as the surrounding circumstances [ Estate of Southworth (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 564, 566, 572, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 272 ].

When a testator executes a holographic will before marriage naming as a beneficiary a person whom he or she later marries and divorces, Prob. Code § 6122, the "revocation by divorce" statute, applies to revoke the holographic will by operation of law [ Estate of Reeves (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 651, 654-655, 284 Cal. Rptr. 650 ]. The holographic will may be revived only by the testator's remarriage to the former spouse [Prob. Code § 6122(b); Estate of Reeves (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 651, 659, 284 Cal. Rptr. 650 (evidence of statements testator made that former spouse should take entire estate and evidence of testator's continuing belief that holographic will was still valid are irrelevant)]. For further discussion, see § 61.19[3].

[d] California Statutory Will

The California statutory will is a simple will form prescribed by the Probate Code and made available to the public in printed form [see Prob. Code §§ 6223(a), 6240]. The will may be completed by the simple process of filling out the printed form, signing at the place indicated, and obtaining the signatures of two witnesses [Prob. Code § 6221; see Prob. Code §§ 6110(c), 6222 (two witnesses)]. If witnesses do not sign, however, the will may still be enforceable if the testator knew and approved of its contents and intended it to have testamentary effect, and the testamentary intent of the testator as reflected in the document is clear [Prob. Code § 6226(c)].

Since statutory wills offer few estate planning options, they are rarely used by attorneys. In special circumstances, however, an attorney may properly use a California statutory will. For discussion, see § 61.21[1].

[e] Joint and Mutual Wills

A joint will is a single instrument containing the wills of two or more persons [ Stahmer v. Schley (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 200, 203-204, 157 Cal. Rptr. 756 ; Estate of Lane (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 52, 57, 120 Cal. Rptr. 499 ]. Mutual wills are separate wills with "reciprocal" provisions [see Crail v. Blakely (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 744, 747, 106 Cal. Rptr. 187, 505 P.2d 1027 (spouses executed mutual and reciprocal wills on same date under which each spouse left his or her estate to surviving spouse or, in event neither spouse survived, to their children); Juran v. Epstein (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 882, 887, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 588 (spouses executed mutual wills devising their respective property to surviving spouse and on surviving spouse's death equally between husband's daughter and wife's daughter from their previous marriages)]. Wills are "reciprocal" if they show on their faces that they are executed in consideration of each other [ Van Houten v. Whitaker (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 510, 514, 337 P.2d 900 ].

Although a joint will is executed by two persons jointly, a joint will is not necessarily either mutual or reciprocal [ Estate of Lane (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 52, 57, 120 Cal. Rptr. 499 ; Daniels v. Bridges (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 585, 588, 267 P.2d 343] . It is, in legal effect, the separate will of each of the persons who execute it [ Estate of Lane (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 52, 57, 120 Cal. Rptr. 499 ; Estate of Lee (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 578, 580, 37 Cal. Rptr. 572 ; Daniels v. Bridges (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 585, 588, 267 P.2d 343] . The validity of each will is determined independently of the other [see Daniels v. Bridges (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 585, 588, 267 P.2d 343 ; Estate of Lane (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 52, 57, 120 Cal. Rptr. 499] and, on the death of one of the testators, the instrument is offered for probate as the separate will of that testator [ Estate of Lee (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 578, 580, 37 Cal. Rptr. 572] .

A will may be both joint and mutual, in which case it is described as a "joint and mutual will" [see Thompson v. Boyd (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 365, 374, 32 Cal. Rptr. 513] .

Although joint wills, mutual wills, and joint and mutual wills may be revoked in the same manner as other wills [see Crail v. Blakely (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 744, 747, 106 Cal. Rptr. 187, 505 P.2d 1027 ; Stahmer v. Schley (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 200, 203, 157 Cal. Rptr. 756] , the revocation of wills executed pursuant to a contract (either a contract to make a will or a contract not to revoke a will) may lead to serious complications. If it can be proven that the wills were executed pursuant to a contract, the persons designated as devisees are recognized as third-party beneficiaries of the contract and entitled to enforce it by judicial action [see Crail v. Blakely (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 744, 746-747, 106 Cal. Rptr. 187, 505 P.2d 1027 (suit by children to enforce oral agreement between their parents which provided that first spouse who died would leave his or her estate to other spouse on the condition that survivor would leave their combined estate to their children in equal shares); but see Kalmanovitz v. Bitting (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 311, 314-316, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 332 (claimants may not sue to enforce their interpretation of will agreement, when they were not specified beneficiaries of agreement at time it was made)].

A contract to make a particular testamentary disposition of property is valid and enforceable [ Redke v. Silvertrust (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 94, 100, 98 Cal. Rptr. 293, 490 P.2d 805 ; Estate of Housley (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 342, 351, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 628 ; Juran v. Epstein (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 882, 889, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 588] . However, the mere fact that the wills are reciprocal or contain similar or identical provisions, or that the wills were executed at the same time and before the same witnesses, is not sufficient evidence of an oral agreement to make the wills irrevocable. Such an agreement is enforceable only if it is proved by clear and convincing evidence [ Crail v. Blakely (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 744, 747-749, 106 Cal. Rptr. 187, 505 P.2d 1027 ; Estate of Housley (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 342, 358, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 628 ; see Prob. Code § 150(b) (execution of joint will or mutual wills does not create presumption of contract not to revoke will or wills)]. Nevertheless, when parties contract to make a particular disposition of property by will, their agreement necessarily includes a promise not to breach the contract by revoking the will and failing to dispose of the property as agreed. The parties' rights depend on the contract, and the revocation of the will or other breach of the contract does not prevent the intended devisees from enforcing the contractual obligations [ Crail v. Blakely (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 744, 749-750, 106 Cal. Rptr. 187, 505 P.2d 1027 ; Estate of Housley (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 342, 351-358, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 628 (even when contract is oral, it may be enforceable by intended beneficiary under doctrine of estoppel; equitable estoppel principles continue to apply to contracts to make or not to revoke will made after December 31, 1984, effective date of Prob. Code § 150 (statute of frauds for such contracts)].

The remedy for breach of an agreement to make a will is not invalidation of the will [ Estate of Housley (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 342, 351-352, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 628] . Instead, the law provides various remedies for the breach of a contract to make a will, or not to revoke a will, including an action at law for damages [ Wilkison v. Wiederkehr (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 822, 825, 828-833, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 631] or equitable relief in the form of quasi-specific performance and imposition of a constructive trust [ Crail v. Blakely (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 744, 747, 106 Cal. Rptr. 187, 505 P.2d 1027 ; Walton v. Walton (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 277, 282 fn. 2, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 901 ("quasi-specific performance" is term used for enforcement of contract to make will because court cannot compel making of will but may declare constructive trust on property in hands of those who succeeded to estate, which is in effect equivalent of specific performance); see Wilkison v. Wiederkehr (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 822, 835-838, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 631 (equitable relief in form of quasi-specific performance of contract to make a will may be obtained when remedy at law is inadequate and promisor has failed to make promised disposition in will; quasi-specific performance is precluded if legal remedy, award of damages, is adequate]. An action for quasi-specific performance accrues on the death of the person who breached the agreement [ Estate of Brenzikofer (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1461, 1468-1469, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 401 (action may be brought within four years when property is impressed with qualities of a resulting trust; 2-year statute for contracts not in writing does not apply)]. There is no right to a jury trial [ Walton v. Walton (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 277, 287-295, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 901 ] .

Joint wills, mutual wills, and joint and mutual wills are strongly discouraged by most estate planning attorneys. Enforcement of a mutual will (or a joint and mutual will) after the death of the first testator to die may require costly and time-consuming litigation. If the will is not enforced, its purpose will be frustrated. If it is enforced, it may seriously limit the right of the surviving testator to use the devised property or make unrelated changes to his or her estate plan. If (as is usually the case) the surviving testator is the first testator's spouse, the will may result in the loss of the marital deduction,[see Bartlett v. C.I.R. (7th Cir. [T.C.] 1991) 937 F.2d 316, 322-324 ] , since the surviving spouse might be viewed as having the equivalent of a life estate in the devised property and a life estate will not qualify for the marital deduction unless the surviving spouse also has a power of appointment over the devised property [ see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(5) ]. Further, when a joint will is executed, it is necessary to present the will for probate twice, once on the death of the first testator and a second time on the death of the surviving testator. This can present practical problems, particularly when the wills are probated in different courts, or in different states. Additionally, there can be embarrassment, or even the enhanced likelihood of a will contest, for the surviving joint testator. Once his or her estate plan becomes a matter of public record, later permissible changes might be emotionally difficult to carry out or become fodder for a lawsuit brought by a disappointed person who has been omitted from the revised estate plan.

For additional discussion of the problems presented by joint and mutual wills, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 60, Joint and Mutual Wills (Matthew Bender).

[f] Nuncupative Wills

Before January 1, 1983, California accorded limited recognition to nuncupative (oral) wills. A nuncupative will could be made by a person who was in actual military service in the field or on duty on shipboard at sea and (1) was in actual contemplation, fear, or peril of death or (2) was in expectation of immediate death from an injury received on the day the will was executed [former Prob. Code § 54, repealed Jan. 1, 1983 by Stats. 1982, ch. 187, § 4]. Although the nuncupative will statute was repealed as of January 1, 1983, the repeal did not apply to the estates of decedents who died before that date [Stats. 1982, ch. 187, § 8]. Thus, California law still includes a limited recognition of the validity of nuncupative wills made by persons who died before January 1, 1983.

[3] Will Distinguished from Other Instruments

[a] Will Distinguished from Deed or Contract

A deed is a legal instrument by which property is conveyed from one living person to another [ Brusseau v. Hill (1927) 201 Cal. 225, 228, 256 P. 419 ] . A will, in contrast, transfers property only on the death of the testator [ Tennant v. John Tennant Memorial Home (1914) 167 Cal. 570, 577, 140 P. 242 ] .

Various types of contractual arrangements specifically call for the transfer of property upon the death of an individual. For example, life insurance contracts and death benefit provisions of IRAs and other retirement plan arrangements mandate payments to named individuals or members of specified groups upon the death of the insured or account holder or plan participant. Unless the decedent's estate or executor has been named as the death benefit beneficiary, the assets subject to such contractual provisions will not be controlled by the decedent's will and will not be subject to probate administration.

[b] Will Distinguished from Trust

A trust is a legal relationship between one person (called the "settlor" or "trustor") and another person or persons (called the "trustee" and the "beneficiary" or "beneficiaries") [see Prob. Code §§ 24 ("beneficiary" defined), 84 ("trustee" defined)]. Some trusts (called "testamentary" trusts) are created by wills, while others (called "inter vivos" trusts) are created by instruments executed during their settlors' lifetimes.

Although the terms "will" and "trust" are distinct, they are not mutually exclusive. A valid will may or may not create a trust. If it does, it may be referred to both as a "will" and as a "trust instrument."

[c] Will Distinguished from Joint Tenancy

A joint tenancy is a property interest owned by two or more persons in equal shares [see Civ. Code § 683(a)]. The "distinguishing incident" of joint tenancy is the right of survivorship [see Tenhet v. Boswell (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 150, 155-156, 133 Cal. Rptr. 10, 554 P.2d 330]. When one of the joint tenants dies, the survivor becomes the sole owner of the property and no interest in the property passes to the deceased tenant's heirs or devisees [see Sterling, Joint Tenancy and Community Property in California, 14 Pac. L. J. 927, 951-952 (1983)].

Since a deceased joint tenant's interest terminates on death, it cannot be transferred by the joint tenant's will [see, e.g., Estate of England (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4, 284 Cal. Rptr. 361]. Further, since a joint tenancy interest is not subject to transfer by will, it is not subject to probate on the joint tenant's death, and the surviving joint tenant acquires ownership of the interest without probate and subject only to the statutory procedures for establishing the fact of death [Goldberg v. Goldberg (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 623, 628, 32 Cal. Rptr. 93; see Prob. Code §§ 200-215 (procedures for establishing and reporting fact of death)].

[4] Ambulatory Character of Will

The will is often described as an "ambulatory" instrument, because it can be modified, amended, or even revoked while the testator is still living [Tennant v. John Tennant Memorial Home (1914) 167 Cal. 570, 577, 140 P. 242; Estate of Berger (1926) 198 Cal. 103, 106, 243 P. 862; Nichols v. Emery (1895) 109 Cal. 323, 329, 41 P. 1089]. A will is effective only on the testator's death. While the testator is still living, the interests of the devisees in the property subject to the will are inchoate and legally unenforceable [Estate of Berger (1926) 198 Cal. 103, 106, 243 P. 862; see Tennant v. John Tennant Memorial Home (1914) 167 Cal. 570, 579, 140 P. 242]. When the testator dies, however, the will--once admitted to probate--becomes firmly established and immediately ceases to be ambulatory. At that time, it acquires a fixed status and operates as a conveyance of property [Tennant v. John Tennant Memorial Home (1914) 167 Cal. 570, 577, 140 P. 242].

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.11

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.11 Testamentary Capacity

[1] Age

To make a will in California, a person generally must be 18 years of age or older [Prob. Code § 6100(a)]. However, a will may also be made by an emancipated minor [Fam. Code § 7050(e)(6)]. A person under the age of 18 years may qualify as an emancipated minor if he or she meets one or more of the following requirements [Fam. Code § 7002]:

- He or she has entered into a valid marriage (whether or not the marriage was terminated by dissolution).
- He or she is on active duty with any of the armed forces of the United States.
- He or she has received a judicial declaration of emancipation under Fam. Code § 7122.

A judicial declaration of emancipation must be granted under Fam. Code § 7122 upon proof of all of the following [Fam. Code §§ 7120(b), 7122(a)]:

- That the minor is at least 14 years of age.
- That the minor is willingly living separate and apart from his or her parents or guardian with the consent or acquiescence of the parents or guardian.
- That the minor is managing his or her own financial affairs.
- That the source of the minor's income is not derived from any activity declared to be a crime under the laws of California or the United States.

Because a minor cannot make a will, a minor dies intestate. In the absence of any spouse or issue at death, a minor's estate is distributed to his or her parents equally [Prob. Code § 6402(b); Sisco v. Cosgrove, Michelizzi, Schwabacher, Ward & Bianchi (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1302, 1308, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 647 (minor lacks legal capacity to designate beneficiary; any purported designation of beneficiary during minority is void as either a testamentary act or an attempted disposition of a future interest)].

[2] Soundness of Mind

A person must be of sound mind to make a will [Prob. Code § 6100(a)]. Conversely, a person may not make a will if the person is not mentally competent [Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)].

The requirement of a sound mind must be satisfied at the time the will is executed [Prob. Code § 6100.5(a); Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 372, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656]. Evidence as to a person's mental condition before or after the person executed a will is relevant only insofar as it tends to show the person's mental condition at the time the will was executed [ In re Estate of Finkler (1935) 3 Cal. 2d 584, 595, 46 P.2d 149].

A person is not mentally competent to make a will if, at the time the will is made, the person does not have sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the testamentary act, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of the person's property, or to remember and understand the person's relations to living descendants, spouse, and parents, and those whose interests are affected by the will; or if the person suffers from a mental disorder with symptoms including delusions or hallucinations, and those delusions or hallucinations result in the person devising property in a way which, except for the delusions or hallucinations, the person would not have done [Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)]. It is not sufficient to establish simply that the testator was the victim of some hallucination or delusion. The evidence must establish that the will itself was the product of the hallucination or delusion, and that the hallucination or delusion bore directly on and influenced the creation and terms of the will [ Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1677, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419]. A mistaken belief is not necessarily a delusion [ Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1677, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419]. Even if the person's beliefs are inaccurate, this mistaken belief will not justify overturning the person's will if there is any evidence supporting the belief [ Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1676, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419].

The foregoing rules do not affect the statutory definition of the circumstances under which a person is deemed to lack the capacity to make a valid will as stated in Prob. Code § 6100.5(a). They merely prescribe a minimum level of evidence that must be presented to support a determination that a testator lacked testamentary capacity, and the character of findings made in support of that determination [see Prob. Code § 812(e)].

PRACTICE TIP:

If the practitioner anticipates a possible will contest--for example, when a near-do-well child is to be disinherited or given a disproportionately small share of the estate--and when circumstances indicate a potential claim of lack of testamentary capacity, steps should be taken at the time the will is planned and executed to establish the testamentary capacity of the testator. This should include a contemporaneous examination of the testator by a qualified physician or psychiatrist, preferably on the same day as the execution of the will. This examination should be documented in a plain-English written report, and should cover not only medical standards such as orientation as to place and time [see Prob. Code § 811(a)], but the core questions of the testator's understanding of the testamentary act, extent of his or her estate, and his or her relationships with family and friends.

There are two potential drawbacks to this process. First, it can be difficult to diplomatically convince a client to subject himself or herself to such an examination. Second, the future contestant might later argue that such careful documentation of the testator's capacity is proof that the estate planner personally had doubts about the testator's capacity, and wanted a "second opinion" before proceeding. Commentary

by Albert G. Handelman.

[3] Effect of Establishment of Conservatorship

A person who is subject to a conservatorship is not necessarily incompetent to make a will [Prob. Code § 1871(c)]. The grounds for appointment of a conservator [see Prob. Code § 1801] are not inconsistent with competence to make a will [see Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 605, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225]. Although the appointment of a conservator may have some bearing on the conservatee's testamentary capacity, the appointment in itself furnishes only a weak inference of lack of capacity [Conservatorship of Bookasta (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 445, 450 n.5, 265 Cal. Rptr. 1].

When a conservatee is competent to make a will, he or she may do so [Prob. Code § 1871(c)]. A conservator of the estate may also make a will for the conservatee, providing the court first authorizes the action [Prob. Code §§ 2580(b)(13), 6100(b), 6100.5(c)]. A conservator might seek to make a will for the conservatee if the conservatee lacks the mental competence to make the will, or if the conservatee is mentally competent to make the will but physically unable to do so.

If a conservator has made a will for the conservatee, the conservatee may later revoke or amend the will, or make a new and inconsistent will, but only if he or she is then mentally competent to do so [see Prob. Code § 6100(b)]. The fact that the conservatorship might still be in existence would not prevent the conservatee from doing any of these things, providing the conservatee has the required mental competence [see Prob. Code § 6100(b)].

[4] Effect of Mental or Physical Disorder

The mere diagnosis of a mental or physical disorder is not sufficient in itself to support a determination that a person is of unsound mind or lacks the capacity to make a will [Prob. Code § 811(d)]. That determination must be supported by evidence of a deficit in at least one of a number of specified mental functions, such as alertness and attention, information processing, thought processes, and ability to modulate mood and affect, and there must be evidence of a correlation between the deficit and the act in question [Prob. Code § 811(a); Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1300, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 (even hallucinations and delusions do not demonstrate lack of capacity if unrelated to testamentary act)].

A deficit in these mental functions may be considered only if the deficit, by itself or in combination with one or more other mental function deficits, significantly impairs the person's ability to understand and appreciate the consequences of his or her actions with regard to the type of act or decision in question [Prob. Code § 811(b)]. In determining whether a person suffers from a deficit in mental function so substantial that the person lacks the capacity to do a certain act, the court may take into consideration the frequency, severity and duration of periods of impairment [Prob. Code § 811(c)].

[5] Lack of Capacity as Ground for Contest of Will

Lack of testamentary capacity is one of the grounds for contest of a will [see Prob. Code § 8252(a)]. At the trial of a will contest, the contestants have the burden of proving lack of testamentary capacity [Prob. Code § 8252(a)].

Before July 1, 1989, a will contest could be tried by a jury [see former Prob. Code § 371, repealed July 2, 1989]. The Probate Code now requires the court to try and determine any contested issue of fact that affects the validity of a will [Prob. Code § 8252(b)].

An attorney preparing a will for a testator does not owe a duty to the beneficiary of the will or to the beneficiary under a prior will to ascertain and document the client's testamentary capacity [Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1298, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888]. When the testator's testamentary capacity is the basis for a will challenge, the testator's true intent is the central question, and that intent cannot be ascertained from the will or other challenged estate plan document. The attorney who is persuaded of the client's testamentary capacity by the attorney's own observations and experience, and who drafts the will accordingly, fulfills the attorney's duty of loyalty to the testator. In doing so, the attorney should not be required to consider the effect of the new will on beneficiaries under a former will or beneficiaries of the new will [ Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1298-1299, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888] . The attorney is not required to urge the testator to consider an alternative plan to forestall a claim by someone thereby excluded from the will or included in the will but deprived of a specific asset that is devised to someone else. Any other conclusion would place the attorney in an untenable position of divided loyalty [ Boronian v. Clark (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1020, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 405] . These beneficiaries do not have a cause of action against the attorney for malpractice. Their remedy is to contest the probate and challenge the will on the ground that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the time of executing the will [ Boronian v. Clark (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1020-1021, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 405 ; Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1300, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888] .

Likewise, an attorney retained by a grantor to prepare a grant deed transferring the grantor's residence to her daughter as part of the grantor's testamentary plan owed no duty to the grantor's children to ascertain the grantor's intent or capacity to favor one child over another. Imposing an obligation on the attorney to act in the grantee's best interests would necessarily result in a breach of the attorney's duty to the client, a classic example of divided loyalty [ Featherson v. Farwell (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1022, 1029, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 412 (if attorney had acted in grantee's best interests, he would also have subjected himself to claims from grantor's other children)].

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.12

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.12 Testamentary Intent

[1] In General

An instrument is not a will unless it was intended to be a will [ Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 ] . When it is claimed that an instrument offered for probate was not intended to be a will, Prob. Code § 8252(a) states that the contestants have the burden of proving lack of testamentary intent. However, Prob. Code § 8252(a) is meant to apply to documents that are clearly wills. Thus, the party challenging a document that apparently is a will and that exhibits testamentary intent must prove testamentary intent was lacking due, for example, to undue influence. If the question is whether a document exhibits testamentary intent, this rule does not apply [ Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 ] . When there is doubt as to whether a particular instrument was intended to be a will, the proponent of the instrument and not the contestant of the will has the burden of proving the required intent [ Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 ] .

The testator must have intended, by the instrument offered for probate, to make a revocable disposition of his or her property to take effect on his or her death [ Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 ] . No particular words are necessary to show testamentary intent [ Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 ; Estate of Archer (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 238, 244, 239 Cal. Rptr. 137 ] , and the word "will" itself need not appear in the instrument [ Estate of Gutierrez (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 165, 169, 11 Cal. Rptr. 51 ] . However, the instrument must contain some words showing an intent to dispose of the author's property on his or her death [ Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 ] . If there are no words showing this intent, the instrument will not qualify as a will. Further, the required intent cannot be supplied by a nonverbal symbol (such as an arrow), as such a symbol has no fixed meaning and cannot be used in place of words evidencing an intention to "give," "bequeath," or "will" [ Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205, 1208-1209, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 ] .

Regardless of the language used in an alleged testamentary instrument, extrinsic evidence may be introduced to show that the testator did not intend it to be effective as a will [ Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 266, 71 Cal.

Rptr. 2d 424]. Extrinsic evidence is only relevant and admissible if it is offered for the purpose of ascertaining the intent with which the instrument was executed, and not for the purpose of proving the meaning the testator attributed to specific provisions of the will [ Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 266, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 (trial court improperly focused on decedent's intended disposition of her estate, instead of on her intent to execute a testamentary instrument); Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 (if it is not completely clear that document evidences testamentary intent, it is possible to resort to extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances in order to prove it)]. An instrument will not satisfy the requirement of testamentary intent if it appears that it was intended to effect an immediate transfer of property, or a transfer to become effective before the author's death [ Cohn v. Klein (1930) 209 Cal. 421, 425, 287 P. 459 ].

[2] Effect of Undue Influence

[a] In General

The execution or revocation of a will or part of a will is ineffective to the extent that the execution or revocation was procured by undue influence [Prob. Code § 6104]; David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 684, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622 (courts have long held that testamentary document may be set aside if it was procured by undue influence)]. Undue influence is pressure brought to bear directly on the testamentary act, sufficient to overcome the testator's free will and amounting to coercion that destroys the testator's free agency [ Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 96, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300]. It is defined as an improper or wrongful constraint, machination, or urgency of persuasion whereby the will of a person is overpowered and the person is induced to do an act that he or she would not do, or induced not to do an act that he or she would do if left to act freely [Black's Law Dictionary (6th ed. 1990) at 1528].

Although undue influence often consists of untrue statements made to the testator for the purpose of overpowering the testator's free agency, untrue statements are not essential to a claim of undue influence, and such a claim may be supported in whole or in part by proof of completely true statements [ Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 ]. It is essential to distinguish undue influence from fraud [see discussion in § 61.12[3]]. Falsity is an essential element of fraud but not of undue influence. Thus truth is not an absolute defense to a claim of undue influence, as it is to a claim for fraud, although the truth of statements may tend to negate the inference that they had the effect of unduly influencing the testator [see Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 180-183, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 ].

[b] Factors Tending to Show Undue Influence

The courts have traditionally considered five factors in determining whether a will is the product of undue influence. They are [ Estate of Lingenfelter (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 571, 585, 241 P.2d 990 ; Estate of Yale (1931) 214 Cal. 115, 122, 4 P.2d 153 ]:

- Whether the provisions of the will were unnatural. A will is "unnatural" if it prefers strangers to persons who, because of their close family relationship to the testator, are the natural objects of the testator's bounty [see Estate of Shay (1925) 196 Cal. 355, 364, 237 P. 1079 ; Estate of Straisinger (1967) 247 Cal. App. 2d 574, 586, 55 Cal. Rptr. 750 ].
- Whether the dispositions made in the will were at variance with the testator's intentions expressed before and after its execution.
- Whether the relations between the testator and the principal beneficiary or beneficiaries were such as to give the latter an opportunity to control the testamentary act of the former.

- Whether the testator's mental and physical condition was such as to permit a subversion of his or her free will.
- Whether the principal beneficiaries under the will were active in procuring the will.

Undue influence is not proven by the existence of any one or more of these factors. However, the probative force of several of the factors coinciding is often persuasive [ Estate of Lingenfelter (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 571, 585, 241 P.2d 990 ]. Even when several factors are proven, however, undue influence is not established unless all of the evidence considered together indicates that a particular disposition was brought about by undue pressure, argument, entreaty, or coercive acts that destroyed the testator's freedom of choice [ Estate of Franco (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 374, 382, 122 Cal. Rptr. 661, 123 Cal. Rptr. 458 ].

If it is claimed that the dispositions made in a will conflict with other intentions expressed by the testator, the other intentions may be gleaned from declarations, oral or written, made by the testator either before or after the purported will was executed, or by a will or wills executed by the testator before the challenged instrument [see Estate of Jamison (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 1, 9, 256 P.2d 984 ]. However, the mere fact the dispositions of a will conflict with other intentions expressed by the testator will not sustain a claim of undue influence if the dispositions are adequately explained [see Estate of Holloway (1925) 195 Cal. 711, 721, 235 P. 1012 ].

[c] Presumption of Undue Influence

At the trial of a will contest, the contestants ordinarily have the burden of proving that the will was the result of undue influence [Prob. Code § 8252(a)]. Under limited circumstances, a presumption of undue influence may arise, which shifts to the proponent of the will the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the will was not procured by undue influence [ Conservatorship of Davidson (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1035, 1059, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 702 ].

A presumption of undue influence arises if (1) there was a confidential relationship between the testator and the person allegedly exerting undue influence, (2) the person allegedly exerting undue influence actively participated in the preparation or execution of the will, and (3) the person allegedly exerting undue influence (or a member of that person's family) would receive an undue profit if the will were allowed to stand [ Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 96-97, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300 ]. For example, a confidential relationship existed between a son and his 81 year old father, when, at the time of executing a new will leaving everything to the son, the father relied almost completely on the son, was critically ill, disoriented, and not eating. The son had a lawyer prepare the will without ever talking to the father alone and had two friends act as witnesses [ Estate of Gonzalez (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1296, 1306, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 332 ].

While evidence of procurement is highly probative of undue influence and figures repeatedly in judicial discussions of the principle, it is essential to proof of undue influence only if the court relies on the presumption of undue influence to shift the burden of proof to the proponent of the will [ David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 684, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622 ].

OBSERVATION:

One of the frustrating ironies faced by would-be will contestants seeking to establish a presumption of undue influence is that they must first "prove" a close and trusting relationship between the testator and the alleged undue influencer before they can move on to their claim that the alleged undue influencer abused that relationship. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

Active participation in the preparation or execution of a will may be proven by circumstantial evidence of facts occurring both before and after the execution of the will [ Estate of Baker (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 481, 182 Cal. Rptr. 550 ]. Undue profit may be shown by such facts as unequal distribution of the testator's property to the testator's children [ Estate of Gelonese (1974) 36 Cal. App. 3d 854, 866, 111 Cal. Rptr. 833 ] or an explained failure to provide for living relatives while making a generous devise to a stranger [ Estate of Clegg (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 603, 151 Cal. Rptr. 158 ]. When a testator and an attorney have an ongoing attorney-client relationship, any benefit received by the attorney (or the attorney's relatives) from the testator other than compensation for legal services performed is regarded as undue profit [ Estate of Auen (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 300, 310, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 ].

A testamentary transfer to the testator's attorney, or to any person who drafted the will or who is related to the person who drafted the will, may be invalid under the statutory rules limiting donative transfers to "disqualified persons" [ see Prob. Code §§ 21350-21356 ]. A devise to a "disqualified person" [ see Prob. Code § 21350.5 ] is presumptively invalid unless it comes within one of the statutory exceptions to the presumption [ see Prob. Code § 21351 ]. For a discussion of the statutory rules limiting donative transfers to "disqualified persons," see § 61.15[3].

[3] Effect of Fraud

The execution or revocation of a will or part of a will is ineffective to the extent that the execution or revocation was procured by fraud [ Prob. Code § 6104 ]. Fraud is defined as a false representation or concealment of a matter of fact, whether by words or conduct, that is intended to deceive another and does in fact result in deception [ Black's Law Dictionary (6th ed. 1990) at 660 ]. As used in the law of wills, fraud generally consists of false statements, false pretenses, or some trick or deceptive device designed to deceive the testator [ In re Estate of Ricks (1911) 160 Cal. 467, 480, 117 P. 539 ]. Fraud may consist of false representations made to a testator [ see Estate of Newhall (1923) 190 Cal. 709, 720, 214 P. 231 ] or concealment from the testator of material facts when a confidential relationship gives rise to a duty to disclose the facts [ see Estate of Garibaldi (1961) 57 Cal. 2d 108, 113-114, 17 Cal. Rptr. 623, 367 P.2d 30 ].

The elements of fraud in the procurement of a testamentary instrument are the same as those required to invalidate a contract [ David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 685, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622 ]. An intent to deceive the testator or to induce the testator to execute the will is a necessary element [ David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 685-686, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622 ]. Because proof of intent to deceive is necessarily largely or entirely circumstantial, a contestant is not confined to the bare facts, but is entitled to the benefit of all inferences that can legitimately be drawn from the established facts [ David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 686, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622 ]. Proof that the testator was induced by misrepresentations into making dispositions that the testator would not have made absent those misrepresentations constitutes fraud [ David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 686, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622 ].

Although will contests are often based on both fraud and undue influence [ see discussion in § 61.12[2] ], these are actually distinct grounds for the contest of a will [ Estate of Garibaldi (1961) 57 Cal. 2d 108, 114, 17 Cal. Rptr. 623, 367 P.2d 39 ]. The essence of undue influence is a subjugation and control of the testator's will, while fraud is a deception practiced on the testator [ In re Estate of Ricks (1911) 160 Cal. 467, 480, 117 P. 539 ]. A person who attempts to unduly influence a testator may also attempt to deceive the testator by making fraudulent representations to the testator. In such a case, the fraudulent representations may be considered in determining whether there was undue influence [ Estate of Garibaldi (1961) 57 Cal. 2d 108, 114, 17 Cal. Rptr. 623, 367 P.2d 39 ; David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 685, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622 ]. In other cases, however, the undue influence may be entirely separate and distinct from the fraud [ see Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 ]. In such cases, the two grounds for contest must be analyzed separately. Truth is an absolute defense to a claim for fraud, but not to a claim for undue influence [ see Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 180-183, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 and discussion in § 61.12[2][a] ].

At the trial of a will contest, the contestants have the burden of proving that the will was the result of fraud [ Prob. Code

[4] Effect of Duress or Menace

The execution or revocation of a will or part of a will is ineffective to the extent that the execution or revocation was procured by duress or menace [Prob. Code § 6104]. Neither duress nor menace are defined in the Probate Code. However, the Civil Code contains definitions of those terms, which are primarily applicable to the law of contracts but may be useful by way of analogy in the law of wills. Civ. Code § 1569 provides that duress consists of any of the following:

- Unlawful confinement of any person, or of the husband, wife, ancestor, descendant, or adopted child of any person.
- Unlawful detention of the property of any person.
- Confinement of any person when the confinement is lawful but fraudulently obtained, or fraudulently made unjustly harassing or oppressive.

Civ. Code § 1570 provides that menace consists of a threat of any of the following:

- Duress as defined in Civ. Code § 1569.
- Unlawful and violent injury to the person or property of any person specified in Civ. Code § 1569.
- Injury to the character of any person specified in Civ. Code § 1569.

The Probate Code provides that at the trial of a will contest, the contestants have the burden of proving duress [Prob. Code § 8252(a)]. Although the Code does not also provide that the contestants have the burden of proving menace [see Prob. Code § 8252(a)], the two concepts are so similar that the court would almost certainly assign the burden of proof of menace to the contestants.

[5] Effect of Mistake

The Probate Code does not list mistake as one of the grounds for declaring the execution or revocation of a will to be ineffective [see Prob. Code § 6104]. However, it provides that at the trial of a will contest, the contestants have the burden of proof of "mistake" [Prob. Code § 8252(a); see Recommendation Relating to Opening Estate Administration, 19 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 787, 823 (1988)].

A mistake by the testator does not preclude admission of a will to probate unless the mistake vitiates the execution of the will or the formation of testamentary intent [ Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 270, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 ] . "Testamentary intent" in this context means the testator's general intent to make a revocable disposition of his or her property to be effective on the testator's death; it does not refer to the testator's intentions regarding particular dispositions of property [ Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 270, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 ] . The validity of the will, or any part of it, is not affected by a mistake of law or fact inducing the execution of the will, unless fraud or undue influence was perpetrated on the testator or the mistake shows a lack of testamentary intent, for example, when the testator executed the wrong instrument [ Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 270, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 ] . However, the will would be subject to attack if the testator executed it in the mistaken belief that it was some instrument other than a will. The grounds of the contest in such a case would be lack of testamentary intent, and the contestants would seek to prove that the testator did not intend the instrument to be effective as a will [see Estate of Sargavak (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 93, 95, 216 P.2d 850 ; Estate of Hathaway (1940) 38 Cal. App. 2d 526, 528, 101 P.2d 741].

(instrument not effective as will unless testator intended it to be will)]. For further discussion of testamentary intent, see § 61.12[1].

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.13

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.13 Execution and Witnesses

[1] Witnessed Will

[a] Execution

A witnessed will [see § 61.10[2][b]] must be in writing and properly signed [Prob. Code § 6110(a), (b)]. The will must be signed either [Prob. Code § 6110(b); see Prob. Code § 2580(b)(13)]:

- By the testator personally,
- By some other person acting in the testator's presence and by the testator's direction, or
- By a conservator pursuant to a court order to make a will for the testator.

A person acting in the testator's presence and by the testator's direction may sign the testator's name, or merely guide the testator's hand while he or she signs [ Estate of Holloway (1925) 195 Cal. 711, 719, 235 P. 1012 ; Estate of Clark (1915) 170 Cal. 418, 424, 149 P. 828 ] . It may be preferable to guide the testator's hand, since this may make it easier to prove that the signature was in the testator's presence and by the testator's direction.

When a conservator makes a will for a conservatee, the conservator does not simply sign (or help the conservatee to sign) the will; he or she plans the will and causes it to be executed, in much the same way that the conservatee would do if able. A conservator may make a will for the conservatee only after a petition for "substituted judgment" has been filed with the court seeking authority to do so, and only after the court has granted the requested authority [Prob. Code §§ 2580(a), (b)(13), 6110(b)(3)].

A witnessed will must be signed by at least two persons acting as witnesses [Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1)]. The witnesses must be present at the same time and must witness either the signing of the will or the testator's acknowledgment of his or her signature or of the will [Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1)]. Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1) contains no express temporal limitation on when the witnesses must sign the will in order for the document to be valid, however, the will must be witnessed during the testator's lifetime [Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1), see also [ Estate of Saueressig (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1045, 1050, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 672, 136 P.3d 201 ] . In other words, although Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1) requires that the witnesses must both be present at the same time when the testator signs the will or acknowledges the signature, it does not expressly require that the witnesses actually sign the will in the presence of the testator, or in each other's presence, or at any particular time--thus, the witnesses apparently can sign at different times without affecting the validity of the will. However, Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1) requires that the subscription of a will must occur prior to the testator's death. A will that has not been subscribed by two witnesses at the time of the testator's death neither complies nor substantially complies with Prob. Code § 6110, and a post-death signature will not validate a will that fails to meet this requirement [ Estate of Saueressig (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1045, 1050, 1057, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 672, 136 P.3d 201 ; overruling Estate of Eugene (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 907, 912-914 ]. Additionally, if a will was not executed in compliance with Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1), the will must be treated as if it was executed in compliance with Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1) if the proponent of the will can establish by clear and convincing evidence that, at the time the testator signed the will, the testator intended the will to constitute the testator's will [Prob. Code § 6110(c)(2)].

There is no requirement of "publication," that is, there is no requirement that the testator make a formal declaration that the instrument is his or her will, or that the testator request that the witnesses sign [see Prob. Code § 6110; Report of Senate Committee on Judiciary on Assembly Bills 25 and 68, 17 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 871 872 (1984)]. Nor is there any requirement that the witnesses sign the will in each other's presence, or even in the presence of the testator [see Report of Senate Committee on Judiciary on Assembly Bills 25 and 68, 17 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 871-872 (1984)]. However, the witnesses must understand that the instrument they sign is the testator's will [Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1)].

[c] Interested Witnesses

A will or any of its provisions is not invalid merely because the will was signed by an interested witness [Prob. Code § 6112(b)]. Unless there are at least two other witnesses who are disinterested, however, the fact that the will makes a devise to a witness creates a presumption that the witness procured the devise by duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence [Prob. Code § 6112(b)]. However, this presumption does not apply if the devise is made to the witness in a fiduciary capacity only (e.g., as trustee) [Prob. Code § 6112(c)]. This presumption is a presumption affecting the burden of proof [Prob. Code § 6112(c); see Evid. Code §§ 500-523, 605, 606 (burden of proof)].

If a devise made to an interested witness fails because of this presumption, the interested witness is entitled to take that part of the devise that does not exceed the share of the estate that would be distributed to the witness if the will were not established [Prob. Code § 6112(d)].

For purposes of the foregoing rules, an "interested witness" is any of the following [see Prob. Code § 48(a) (defining "interested person" for purposes of Probate Code)]:

- An heir, devisee, child, spouse, creditor, beneficiary, and any other person having a property right in or claim against a trust estate or the estate of the decedent that may be affected by the will.
- Any person having priority for appointment as personal representative.
- A fiduciary representing an interested person.

[2] Holographic Will

[a] Testator's Handwriting

Before January 1, 1983, the Probate Code required that a holographic will [see § 61.10[1][c]] be entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator [former Prob. Code § 53, repealed Jan. 1, 1985]. The Code now requires only that the signature and material provisions of the will be in the testator's handwriting [Prob. Code § 6111(a)].

Prob. Code § 6111 gives validity to an unwitnessed handwritten will because of the "recognized difficulty of forging an entire handwritten instrument" [ Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 888, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754] .

Whether a document should be admitted to probate as a holographic will depends on proof of its authorship and authenticity, and on whether the words used establish that the testator intended it to be his or her last will and testament at the time he or she wrote it [ Estate of Southworth (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 564, 571, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 272] .

Although no particular words are necessary to establish a holographic will, a holographic will must be executed with testamentary intent [see Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 888, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 (testator's reference to instrument as her will and statement that she hoped this writing would be given legal effect as testamentary disposition was evidence of testator's intent to authenticate document as will) see also Estate of Williams (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 197, 207 ; 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 34 , (Evidence supported finding that decedent's handwritten document, where his name was written in block letters at the top, stated the disposition of some of his assets and had included some language of testamentary intent, was a valid holographic will).].

If a printed form is used, however, the will must evidence testamentary intent. In one case, the decedent filled out a printed "donor card" prepared by an animal shelter. The card provided the donor with three options: (1) naming the animal shelter as beneficiary of a life insurance policy, (2) changing the donor's will to leave securities or cash to the shelter, or (3) not taking "immediate action" but stating his or her future intentions. The decedent circled option (3) and in the blank space provided after it wrote "My entire estate is to be left to North Shore Animal League." The superior court ruled that the card qualified as a valid holographic will because the signature and the material provisions were in the decedent's handwriting [see Prob. Code § 6111(a)]. The Court of Appeal disagreed, concluding that when the decedent selected option (3) she evidenced an intent not to take "immediate action" but to take some action in the future, and that her handwritten words evidenced an intent to make a will in the future. Since there was no present intent to make a will, the requirement of testamentary intent was not satisfied and the card did not qualify as a will [ Estate of Southworth (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 564, 572, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 272] . Moreover, a donor card is not a "commercially printed form will" as specified by the statute [see Estate of Southworth (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 564, 566, 571-572, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 272] .

Photocopies of a testator's handwritten property dispositions, included in a holographic will, satisfy the statutory requirement that the material provisions of the will must be in the testator's handwriting, as long as the photocopies are properly authenticated [ Estate of Brenner (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 1299, 1302, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149] .

There is no requirement that the testator's signature be at the end of a holographic will [see Prob. Code § 6111(a)]. The signature may appear in another part of the writing, provided the testator writes his or her name there with the intention of authenticating the writing as his or her will [ Estate of MacLeod (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1235, 1242-1243, 254 Cal. Rptr. 156] see Estate of Williams (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 197, 207 ; 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 34 , (Holographic will need not be signed at the bottom provided the testator wrote his name on the document with the intent of authenticating or executing the instrument as his will).

There is no requirement that a holographic will be dated [see Prob. Code § 6111(b)]. However, if the will does not contain a statement as to the date of its execution, and if the omission results in doubt as to whether its provisions or the inconsistent provisions of another will are controlling, the holographic will is invalid to the extent of the inconsistency, unless the time of its execution is established to be after the date of execution of the other will [Prob. Code § 6111(b)(1)]. Further, if the will is undated and if it is established that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at any time during which the will might have been executed, the will is invalid unless it is established that it was executed at a time when the testator had testamentary capacity [Prob. Code § 6111(b)(2)].

[d] Witnesses

Although there is no requirement that a holographic will be signed by witnesses, witnesses will not invalidate a will that otherwise meets the requirements of a valid holographic will [Prob. Code § 6111(a); Estate of Clark (1942) 55 Cal. App. 2d 85, 89, 129 P.2d 969].

CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.14

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.14 Property Subject to Disposition by Will

[1] In General

Unless a contrary intention is indicated by the will, a will passes all property the testator owns at death, including property acquired after execution of the will [Prob. Code § 21105]. For this purpose, "property" means anything that may be the subject of ownership, and includes both real and personal property and any interest in real or personal property [Prob. Code § 62].

[2] Property Subject to Nonprobate Transfer on Owner's Death

Property that is subject to nonprobate transfer on the death of its owner is not subject to disposition under the owner's will. The Probate Code provides that a provision for a nonprobate transfer on death in an insurance policy, contract of employment, bond, mortgage, promissory note, certificated or uncertificated security, account agreement, custodial agreement, deposit agreement, compensation plan, pension plan, individual retirement plan, employee benefit plan, trust, conveyance, deed of gift, marital property agreement, or other written instrument of a similar nature is not invalid because the instrument does not comply with the requirements for execution of a will [Prob. Code § 5000(a)].

The contract rights transferred pursuant to these instruments, or benefits payable to beneficiaries under their terms, ordinarily are payable under a designation of beneficiary provision, or under terms of the instruments themselves [see Prob. Code § 5002 (holder of property not required to receive, hold, or transfer property if provision for nonprobate transfer on death does not comply with governing instrument)]. Unless the benefits are payable to the decedent's estate, they ordinarily are not subject to disposition under the will of the contracting party and are not subject to administration in that person's estate [see Prob. Code § 5002; see also Recommendation Proposing New Probate Code, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 1001, 1394-1395 (1989); Tentative Recommendation Relating to Wills and Intestate Succession, 16 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports, 2301, 2350-2351, 2381-23822 (1982)].

[3] Joint Tenancy Property

The distinguishing incident of a joint tenancy is the right of survivorship, under which the surviving joint tenant becomes the sole owner of the joint tenancy property on the death of the first tenant [see Sterling, Joint Tenancy and Community Property in California, 14 Pac. L. J. 927, 951-952 (1983)]. Because the deceased joint tenant's interest terminates on death, he or she has no property interest that may be subject to disposition by will [see Estate of England (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4, 284 Cal. Rptr. 361 ; Estate of Moy (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 24, 29, 31 Cal. Rptr. 374].

[4] Separate Property

A married person's separate property generally consists of all property that was owned before marriage or acquired afterward by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, together with the rents, issues, and profits of that property [Prob. Code § 28; see Fam. Code § 770(a)]. A married person has full power of testamentary disposition over his or her own separate property [Prob. Code § 6101(a)].

[5] Community Property

In California, community property consists of all property acquired by a married person while domiciled in California that is not declared by statute to be some other type of property [Prob. Code § 28; see Fam. Code § 760].

A married person's community property may include both real and personal property, and property that is situated outside as well as inside California [Fam. Code § 760]. Community property also includes personal property wherever situated, and real property situated in California, that a married person acquires during marriage in exchange for real or personal property, wherever situated, that is community property or a substantially equivalent type of marital property under the laws of the place where the acquiring spouse was domiciled at the time the property so exchanged was acquired [Prob. Code § 28(c)].

The testamentary power of the spouse who dies first extends to only one half of the community property [see Prob. Code § 6101(b)]. Whether the testamentary power of the spouse who dies first extends to one half of the community property as a whole, as compared to one half of each community asset, depends on whether the "aggregate theory" or the "item theory" is applied to the community. Under the "aggregate theory," the community assets are viewed as a whole, and the first spouse to die is deemed to have the power to dispose of any half of the whole, but not more than one-half. Under the "item theory," the first spouse to die can devise only one-half of any particular community asset to a third party, even when the surviving spouse will ultimately receive one half (or more) of all of the community property. The "item theory" has been adopted by court decision in California [see Estate of Wilson (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 67, 73, 227 Cal. Rptr. 794].

PRACTICE TIP:

While it is now often conceded that California follows the "item theory," many estate planners continue to rely on the "aggregate theory" when dividing and allocating community property assets after the first spouse dies. There are distinct advantages to employing the "aggregate theory," including the convenience of holding 100 percent of specific assets in marital deduction, bypass or other shares of an estate without the need for exchanging assets between shares, and the potential for allocating assets more likely to appreciate after the first spouse's death to bypass trusts or other shares of the estate which will not be taxed at the surviving spouse's death. To date, the Internal Revenue Service has not aggressively insisted that California estate planners utilize the "item theory" of community property. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

If a married person attempts to dispose by will of more than his or her one-half interest in the community property, the disposition is not void, but merely voidable at the election of the surviving spouse [ Harris v. Harris (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 367, 369, 19 Cal. Rptr. 793, 369 P.2d 481 ]. The surviving spouse has the right to avoid the disposition, up to his or her one-half interest in the subject property [ Harris v. Harris (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 367, 369, 19 Cal. Rptr. 793, 369 P.2d

Notwithstanding the rule that a married person can only dispose of one half of the community property by will, a married person's will may purport to dispose of more than one half. However, such an attempt will be successful only if the surviving spouse elects to accept benefits under the will rather than to take "against" the will. For a discussion of the election of a surviving spouse to take under the will or against it (the so-called "widow's election"), see California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 22, Property Devised by Will, § 22.06[4] (Matthew Bender).

A married person's right to dispose of his or her community property interest in specified property may be restricted in other ways. For example, anti-alienation provisions in an employee spouse's pension plan may prohibit the non-employee spouse who predeceases the employee spouse from devising his or her community property interest in the plan [see Regents of University of California v. Benford (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 867, 875-877, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 441].

[6] Quasi-Community Property

Quasi-community property generally consists of property acquired by married persons while domiciled outside California that does not qualify as community property in the state of domicile, but that would have been community property if the persons had been domiciled in California at the time of acquisition [see Fam. Code § 125; Prob. Code § 66]. It includes the following:

- All personal property wherever situated, and all real property situated in California acquired by a decedent while domiciled elsewhere that would have been the community property of the decedent and the surviving spouse if the decedent had been domiciled in California at the time of its acquisition [Prob. Code § 66(a)].
- All personal property wherever situated, and all real property situated in California, acquired in exchange for real or personal property, wherever situated, that would have been the community property of the decedent and the surviving spouse if the decedent had been domiciled in California at the time the property so exchanged was acquired [Prob. Code § 66(b)].

Upon the death of a married person domiciled in California, one half of the quasi-community property acquired by the deceased spouse belongs to the surviving spouse, and the other half belongs to the deceased spouse [Prob. Code § 101(a)], unless the spouses have agreed to a non-pro-rata division of the property [see Prob. Code § 101(b)]. The half that belongs to the deceased spouse is subject to disposition under the deceased spouse's will [Prob. Code § 6101(c)].

The power of testamentary disposition over quasi-community property differs from the power of disposition over community property in that a deceased spouse has the power of testamentary disposition over one half of all of the community property, including community property acquired by the surviving spouse, while a deceased spouse has the power of testamentary disposition only over quasi-community property acquired by the deceased spouse [Prob. Code § 6101(b), (c)]. A deceased spouse has no power of testamentary disposition over quasi-community property acquired by the surviving spouse [see Prob. Code § 6101(c)].

[7] Community Property With Right of Survivorship

Spouses also may hold title to real or personal property as community property with a right of survivorship [Civ. Code § 682.1 (effective July 1, 2001)]. This form of title has all the tax benefits of community property, specifically a step-up in basis on both halves of the property [see I.R.C. § 1014(a)(1), (b)(6)], and a right of survivorship that allows the property to avoid probate administration and its attendant costs. However, although property held in this manner avoids the costs of probate administration when the first spouse dies, the property remains subject to the inflexibility and other estate planning limitations of property held in joint tenancy [see [3], above; see also §§ 60.12[8], 60.17[4][d]]. For further discussion, see Ch. 60, Estate Planning.

[8] Property Held in Tenancy in Common

Property held by the testator and another person or persons in a tenancy in common is subject to disposition under the testator's will in the same manner as other property. A tenancy in common (also called a "common interest" or an "interest in common") [see Civ. Code § 685] is an interest owned by two or more persons that is neither a joint interest nor a partnership interest [see Civ. Code §§ 685, 686].

When persons own property as tenants in common, each has an interest in the property, and there is no right of survivorship [see Civ. Code § 685 (common interest as one owned by several persons, not in joint ownership or partnership); Estate of Hittell (1903) 141 Cal. 432, 436, 75 P. 53]. When one tenant in common dies, his or her interest in the property does not automatically pass to the survivor or survivors but is subject to disposition under his or her will or, if there is no will, under the laws of intestate succession [see Prob. Code §§ 6400-6455 (intestate succession)].

[9] Property Subject to Power of Appointment

A testator who holds a power of appointment over property may effect the disposition of the property by exercising the power in his or her will. Generally, a power of appointment can be exercised only in the manner prescribed by the creating instrument [Prob. Code § 630(a)]. If the power is a "general" power of appointment, it can be exercised in favor of the holder, the holder's estate, creditors of the holder or the holder's estate, or any other persons specified in the creating instrument [Prob. Code § 611(a)]. If the power is a "special" power, it can be exercised only in favor of someone (typically named individuals or members of a specified group) other than the holder, the holder's estate, or creditors of the holder or the holder's estate [Prob. Code § 611(d)].

If the power is a "testamentary" power, it is exercisable only by will [Prob. Code § 612(a)]. However, a power stated to be exercisable by an inter vivos instrument may also be exercised by a will unless the creating instrument expressly prohibits a testamentary exercise [Prob. Code § 630(b)].

A general residuary clause in a will, or a will making a general disposition of all of the testator's property, does not exercise a power of appointment held by the testator unless specific reference is made to the power, or there is some other indication of an intention to exercise the power [Prob. Code § 641(a); but see Prob. Code § 641(b) (rule applicable only when donee dies on or after July 1, 1982)].

For a detailed discussion of powers of appointment and their use in estate planning, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 31, Powers of Appointment (Matthew Bender).

[10] Property Held in Trust

Property held by a trustee usually will not be subject to disposition under the will of a lifetime or income beneficiary of the trust. A testator who has transferred assets to a trust while living (even if he or she is the trustee or a co-trustee) will not generally retain any power of testamentary disposition over the trust assets. The assets will not be included in the testator's probate estate and will not be subject to distribution under terms of the testator's will. Rather, the assets will be held by the trustee (or, if the testator was the original trustee, then by the successor trustee) and administered and distributed according to the terms of the trust instrument.

An exception to this rule exists if the testator has a power of appointment over the trust assets [see discussion in [8], above]. In such a case, the testator may exercise the power of appointment in accordance with the terms of the instrument creating it. If the trust instrument created a power of appointment in favor of the testator, and if the power of appointment is exercisable by will, then the testator can exercise the power of appointment as part of his or her will and, to that extent, affect the disposition of some or all of the trust assets [see Prob. Code § 630 (requirements for exercising power of appointment)]. Often this situation will arise when a marital deduction trust gives the surviving spouse a general power of appointment over the trust assets (a "lifetime income/power of appointment trust") [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(5) and discussion in Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions ].

[11] Life Insurance Policy

A life insurance policy is property and can be sold, assigned, or devised by its owner [ Blethen v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1926) 198 Cal. 91, 98, 243 P. 431 ; Estate of Mendenhall (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 441, 444, 6 Cal. Rptr. 45] . Its pecuniary value is the same as if the owner held a promissory note of the insurance company payable on condition [ Blethen v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1926) 198 Cal. 91, 98, 243 P. 431 ; Estate of Mendenhall (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 441, 444, 6 Cal. Rptr. 45] . A testator who is the owner of a life insurance policy has the power to dispose of the policy under his or her will [ Blethen v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1926) 198 Cal. 91, 98, 243 P. 431 ; Estate of Mendenhall (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 441, 444, 6 Cal. Rptr. 45] .

However, the property rights of the owner of a life insurance policy are distinct from the right of the designated beneficiary or beneficiaries to receive death benefits on the death of the insured. Death benefits are not subject to disposition under the will of the policy owner (unless the designated beneficiary is the policy owner's estate), but rather are payable directly to the designated beneficiary or beneficiaries under the terms of the policy [ Estate of Welfer (1952) 110 Cal. App. 2d 262, 265, 242 P.2d 655 ; see Prob. Code § 5000(a); Recommendation Proposing New Probate Code, 20 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 1001, 1394-1395 (1989); Tentative Recommendation Relating to Wills and Intestate Succession, 16 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports, 2301, 2350-2351, 2382 (1982)]. For discussion of benefits and other rights that are payable directly to beneficiaries under contract provisions, see [1], above.

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.15

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.15 Devisees

[1] In General

A devisee is a person designated in a will to receive a disposition of real or personal property [Prob. Code § 34(a); see Prob. Code § 32 ("devise" defined)]. A devisee may be any person, including but not limited to any of the following [Prob. Code § 6102]:

- An individual.
- A corporation.
- An unincorporated association, society, lodge, or any branch of an unincorporated association, society, or lodge.
- A county, city, city and county, or any municipal corporation.
- Any state, including the State of California.
- The United States or any instrumentality of the United States.
- A foreign county or a governmental entity in a foreign country.

By special constitutional and statutory provisions, all of the following entities are also authorized to receive devises:

- The Regents of the University of California [Cal. Const., art. IX, § 9(f)].
- The Board of Trustees of Stanford University [Cal. Const., art. XX, § 2].

- The California Department of Education [Educ. Code § 33332].
- The Huntington Library and Art Gallery [Cal. Const., art. XX, § 2].
- Any county library in California [Educ. Code § 19174].
- Any harbor district in California [Harb. & Nav. Code § 6074].
- Any port district in California [Harb. & Nav. Code § 6294].
- Any river port district in California [Harb. & Nav. Code § 6894].
- Any public cemetery district in California [Health & Safety Code §§ 9041, 9074].
- Any hospital district in California [Health & Safety Code § 32121(e)].
- The commissioners of any public park in California [Pub. Res. Code § 5158].
- The Board of Supervisors of any county in California, for the purpose of erecting a monument in memory of California pioneers [Pub. Res. Code § 5101].
- Any corporation for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals incorporated in California [Corp. Code § 10403].

[2] Subscribing Witnesses

A person who signed the will as a witness may properly receive a devise under the will [Prob. Code § 6112(b)]. Unless there are at least two other witnesses who are disinterested, however, the fact that the will makes a devise to a witness creates a presumption that the witness procured the devise by duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence, and may invalidate the devise [Prob. Code § 6112(b); see Prob. Code § 6104]. This presumption is a presumption affecting the burden of proof and may be overcome by appropriate evidence [Prob. Code § 6112(c); see Evid. Code §§ 500-523, 605, 606 (burden of proof); for discussion, see § 61.13[1][c]].

[3] Disqualified Persons

The Probate Code contains special rules that invalidate donative transfers to certain persons and classes of persons, generally called "disqualified persons" [Prob. Code §§ 21350-21356; see Prob. Code § 21350.5]. These rules, which apply to instruments that become irrevocable on or after September 1, 1993 [Prob. Code § 21355], generally invalidate provisions in wills, trusts, and other instruments that purport to make gifts to any of the following [Prob. Code § 21350(a)]:

- The person who drafted the instrument.
- A person who is related by blood or marriage to, is a domestic partner of, or is a cohabitant with or employee of, the person who drafted the instrument.
- Any partner or shareholder of any law partnership or law corporation in which the person who drafted the instrument has an ownership interest, and any employee of any such law partnership or law corporation.

- Any person who has a fiduciary relationship with the transferor, including a conservator or trustee, who transcribes the instrument or causes it to be transcribed.
- Any person who is related by blood or marriage to, is a domestic partner of, or is a cohabitant with or employee of, a person described in the category immediately above.
- A care custodian of a dependent adult.
- A person who is related by blood or marriage to, is a domestic partner of, or is a cohabitant with or an employee of, a care custodian.

PRACTICE TIP:

It is important for practitioners to understand the net effect of the disqualification rules, and how the disqualification provisions in Prob. Code § 21350 interact with the exceptions in Prob. Code § 21351. The definitions and exceptions under Prob. Code §§ 21350 and 21351 are discussed in greater detail below. Basically, a gift that is made to a "disqualified person" other than the person who actually drafted the instrument, and that does not qualify for any of the specific exceptions in Prob. Code § 21351, is subject to a rebuttable presumption of invalidity [Prob. Code § 21351(d),(e)(1); Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300]. A rebuttable presumption also applies (regardless of whether or not the gift was made to the person who drafted the will) to gifts made in instruments executed on or before July 1, 1993, by a person who was a California resident at the time of execution, and to instruments executed by a California resident who was a nonresident at the time the instrument was executed [Prob. Code § 21351(e)(2),(3)]. This presumption is rebuttable only on a showing, by clear and convincing evidence, not based solely on the testimony of disqualified persons, that the transfer was not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence [Prob. Code § 21351(d)]. If the attorney can make such a showing, a gift to a disqualified person still may be found valid.

However, if the recipient of the gift was the person who actually drafted the instrument, the gift was made in an instrument executed on or after July 1, 1993, by a person who was a California resident at the time the instrument was executed, and none of the other exceptions in Prob. Code § 21351 apply, the presumption is conclusive rather than rebuttable and the gift is automatically invalid [Prob. Code § 21351(d),(e)(1); Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300]. Thus, for example, assuming no other exception in Prob. Code § 21351 applied, an attorney who drafted a client's will so as to benefit himself or herself would be conclusively disqualified, but if the same attorney drafted the will so as to benefit the attorney's relative or law partner, the presumption would be rebuttable by clear and convincing evidence that the client freely chose that disposition [Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300]. Commentary by publisher's editorial staff.

For purposes of the preceding rules, a "person who is related by blood or marriage" to a person means all of the following [Prob. Code § 21350(b)]:

- The person's spouse or predeceased spouse.
- Relatives within the third degree of the person and the person's spouse.
- The spouse of anyone who is a relative within the third degree of the person or the person's spouse.

In determining relationships for purposes of this rule, Prob. Code § 6406, which governs the inheritance rights of relatives of the half blood, Prob. Code § 6407, which covers the inheritance rights of afterborn heirs, and Prob. Code §§ 6450-6455, which prescribe rules for determining the relationship of parent and child for purposes of intestate succession, are all applicable [Prob. Code § 21350(b)].

The term "dependent adult" means any of the following [Prob. Code § 21350(c); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 15610.23(a)]:

- Any person residing in California, between the ages of 18 and 64 years, who has physical or mental limitations that restrict his or her ability to carry out normal activities or to protect his or her rights including, but not limited to, persons who have physical or developmental disabilities or whose physical or mental abilities have diminished because of age [Prob. Code § 21350(c)].
- Any person between the ages of 18 and 64 who is admitted as an inpatient to a 24-hour health facility as defined in Health & Safety Code §§ 1250, 1250.2, and 1250.3.
- Any person older than age 64 who would be a "dependent adult" under the above definitions if he or she were between the ages of 18 and 64.

The term "care custodian" means an administrator or an employee of any of the following public or private facilities or agencies, or persons providing care or services for elders or dependent adults, including members of the support staff and maintenance staff [Prob. Code § 21350(c); Welf & Inst. Code § 15610.17]:

- Twenty-four hour health facilities [see Health & Saf. Code §§ 1250, 1250.2, 1250.3].
- Clinics.
- Home health agencies.
- Agencies providing publicly funded in-home supportive services, nutrition services, or other home and community-based support services.
- Adult day health care centers and adult day care.
- Secondary schools that serve 18- to 22-year-old dependent adults and postsecondary educational institutions that serve dependent adults or elders.
- Independent living centers.
- Camps.
- Alzheimer's Disease day care resource centers.
- Community care facilities [see Health & Saf. Code § 1502] and residential care facilities for the elderly [see Health & Saf. Code § 1569.2].
- Respite care facilities.
- Foster homes.
- Vocational rehabilitation facilities and work activity centers.

- Designated area agencies on aging.
- Regional centers for persons with developmental disabilities.
- State Department of Social Services and State Department of Health Services licensing divisions.
- County welfare departments.
- Offices of patients' rights advocates and clients' rights advocates, including attorneys.
- The office of the long-term care ombudsman.
- Offices of public conservators, public guardians, and court investigators.
- Any protection or advocacy agency or entity that is designated by the Governor to fulfill the requirements and assurances of the federal Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 2000 [see 42 U.S.C. § 15001 et seq.] or the Protection and Advocacy for the Mentally Ill Individuals Act of 1986 [see 42 U.S.C. § 10801 et seq.], for the protection and advocacy of the rights of persons with mental illness.
- Humane societies and animal control agencies.
- Fire departments.
- Offices of environmental health and building code enforcement.
- Any other protective, public, sectarian, mental health, or private assistance or advocacy agency or person providing health services or social services to elders or dependent adults.

The last item in the preceding list of care custodians is the most significant in light of its broad interpretation by California courts. In Bernard v. Foley, the California Supreme Court held that the statutory definition set out above does not include a professional or occupational limitation and does not provide for a pre-existing personal friendship exception. Thus, the definition includes any person providing care or health services to a dependent adult [ Bernard v. Foley (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 794, 803, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 248, 139 P.3d 1196 ; see also Estate of Odian (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 152, 167, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 390 (paid live-in caregiver who provides social services within the meaning of Prob. Code § 21350(a) is a care custodian and is subject to the presumption of undue influence)]. In Bernard v. Foley, the presumptive disqualification of gifts to care custodians was held applicable although the trustee and other caregivers involved in the case were not health care professionals and had a preexisting personal friendship with the decedent [ Bernard v. Foley (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 794, 803, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 248, 139 P.3d 1196 ] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Estate planners are concerned about the effect of Bernard v. Foley because it makes virtually any gift to a family friend who has incidentally provided care to a testator subject to challenge under Prob. Code § 21350. It is not uncommon for elderly testators to want to make testamentary gifts to close friends who have helped them during their last years. Since such close friends often provide incidental care for the elderly on an informal basis--driving them to medical appointments, helping with medications, exercise, meals, and so on--it is very likely that an argument can be made that such a person is a "care custodian" within the meaning of Bernard v. Foley, even if no formal relationship exists. Therefore, estate planners faced with such a situation now need to anticipate not only a traditional challenge based on undue influence, but also a statutory challenge based on a claim that the beneficiary is a "care custodian" under Prob. Code § 21350. Since the "clear and convincing evidence" standard can be difficult to meet in this type of case, it is strongly recommended that whenever an elderly person wants to make a testamentary gift to a close friend, the attorney attempt to qualify the gift in advance by obtaining a certificate of independent review if possible. In addition, or alternatively if a certificate of independent review cannot be obtained, the attorney should anticipate ways of meeting the evidentiary standard, such as videotaping the testator and/or obtaining affidavits or other documentary evidence by disinterested parties at the time the will is executed in case the persons with knowledge of the facts are not available after the testator's death. Commentary by publisher's editorial staff.

It has also been held that a long-term care ombudsman for a health care facility is a "care custodian" for purposes of the statute during the time he or she serves as ombudsman for a particular "dependent adult," and remains a care custodian within the meaning of the statute even after his or her formal ombudsman relationship with a particular resident has ended, due either to a change in the ombudsman's facility assignment or the fact that the resident has left the facility, when the ombudsman, as a result of his or her fiduciary relationship with the resident, develops a personal relationship with the resident and thereby acquires personal and financial information about the resident [ Estate of Shinkle (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 990, 993, 1007, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 ; overruled in part on other grounds in Bernard v. Foley (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 794, 816, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 248, 139 P.3d 1196 ] .

Prob. Code § 21350(a)(4), which includes in the category of presumptive disqualified persons any fiduciary who transcribes the testamentary instrument or causes it to be transcribed, does not apply to a person who provides information needed in the preparation of the instrument (e.g., a list of the testator's assets) and who encourages the donor to execute it, but does not direct or otherwise participate in the transcription of the instrument to final written form [ Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 101-105, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300 ] . Similarly, a conservator was held not to have caused a will and trust to be transcribed for purposes of this rule when he had called an estate planning company to meet with the conservatee, brought the company's agent to the conservatee's house, and wrote a check from the conservatee's funds for the will and trust. To cause a document to be transcribed would necessarily involve directing the drafted document to be written out in its final form, which the conservator had not done [ Estate of Swetmann (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 807, 819-820, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 ] .

When the attorney drafting a will is aware that a beneficiary may be a presumptively disqualified donee, the attorney has a duty of care to advise the client-testator that, absent steps taken under Prob. Code § 21351(b) to obtain a certificate of independent review from another attorney, the devise to the proposed beneficiary, if challenged, will have a significant likelihood of failing because of the presumptive disqualification. The attorney also has a duty to recommend that the client-testator seek independent counsel in an effort to obtain this certificate [ Osornio v. Weingarten (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 334, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 246 ] . This duty of care is owed to both the testator and to the prospective beneficiary [ Osornio v. Weingarten (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 304, 334, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 246 ] .

Prob. Code § 21350 implicitly requires a person whose interest in a will or trust is threatened by a transfer to a disqualified person to invoke the protection of the statute affirmatively by seeking a court order establishing the invalidity of the transfer [ Estate of Shinkle (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 990, 1004, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 ] . The burden then shifts to the transferee to justify the transfer under Prob. Code § 21351, discussed below [ Estate of Shinkle (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 990, 1004, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 ] .

The rules that invalidate donative transfers to "disqualified persons" are subject to the following exceptions:

- A transfer is not invalidated if the transferor is related by blood or marriage to, is a cohabitant with, or is the registered domestic partner [for discussion of registered domestic partnerships, see § 61.19[4][a], see also Ch. 110, Nonmarital Cohabitation Agreements and Related Transactions, §§ 110.50 et seq., 110.220 et seq.] of, the transferee or the person who drafted the instrument [Prob. Code §

21351(a)]. This exception applies to any instrument that becomes irrevocable on or after July 1, 1993 [Prob. Code § 21351(a)]. For this purpose, a person is "related by blood or marriage" to another person if the person is related within the fifth degree or is an heir of the transferor [Prob. Code § 21351(g)]. A "cohabitant" means two unrelated adult persons living together for a substantial period of time, resulting in some permanency of relationship [Prob. Code § 21351(a); see Pen. Code § 13700(b)].

- A transfer is not invalidated if the instrument is reviewed by an independent attorney who counsels the transferor about the nature and consequences of the intended transfer, attempts to determine if the intended consequence is the result of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence, and signs and delivers a Certificate of Independent Review in substantially the form set forth in Prob. Code § 21351(b) [for form, see California Wills & Trusts Forms, Div. IX, Miscellaneous Documents, Misc. Doc. 18 (Matthew Bender)].

PRACTICE TIP:

As a practical matter, a Certificate of Independent Review can be difficult to obtain, even when there is little or no actual doubt regarding the absence of fraud, undue influence, and so on. Many estate planning attorneys are reluctant to issue Certificates of Independent Review out of concern over potential liability and the fear that in the event of a will contest they may end up being dragged into court on the issue of whether or not they performed an adequate investigation prior to issuing the certificate. Commentary by publisher's editorial staff.

- A transfer is not invalidated if, after full disclosure of the relationships of the persons involved, the court approves the instrument by order under the substituted judgment provisions of Prob. Code §§ 2580-2586 [Prob. Code § 21351(c)].

- A transfer is not invalidated if the court determines on clear and convincing evidence that the transfer was not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence [Prob. Code § 21351(d), (e)]. However, this exception applies only to (a) instruments executed by persons who were not residents of California at the time the instruments were executed, (b) instruments that do not make transfers to the persons who actually drafted the instruments, and (c) instruments executed on or before July 1, 1993, by persons who were California residents at the time the instruments were executed [Prob. Code § 21351(e); see Prob. Code § 21351(a)(1)]. In making a determination that the transfer was not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence, the court cannot consider any evidence given by the person who drafted the instrument [Prob. Code § 21351(d); see Prob. Code § 21351(a)(1)]. If the court finds that the transfer was the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence, the disqualified person must bear all costs of the proceeding, including reasonable attorney's fees [Prob. Code § 21351(d)].

PRACTICE TIP:

The effect of the preceding provisions is to establish a rebuttable presumption of invalidity under Prob. Code § 21350, except as to a person who actually drafted an instrument that was executed after July 1, 1993, by a California resident then residing in the state. As to the latter, the presumption is conclusive rather than rebuttable [see Prob. Code § 21351(d),(e); Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300]. As to other disqualified persons, the presumption may be rebutted on a showing of clear and convincing evidence [Prob. Code § 21351(d),(e)]. Commentary by publisher's editorial staff.

- A transfer is not invalidated if the transferee is a federal, state, or local public entity, an entity that qualifies for a charitable exemption from taxation under I.R.C. § 501(c)(3) or 501(c)(19), or a trust holding an interest for this entity, but only to the extent of the interest of the entity, or the trustee of this trust [Prob. Code § 21351(f)].

■ A transfer is not invalidated if it is for $3,000 or less [Prob. Code § 21351(h)]. This provision does not apply if the total value of the property in the transferor's estate does not exceed the amount prescribed in Prob. Code § 13100, which is $100,000 [Prob. Code § 21351(h)].

■ A transfer is not invalidated if it is made by an instrument executed by a nonresident of California who was not a resident at the time of the execution and that was not signed in California [Prob. Code § 21351(i), see also, Estate of Clementi (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 375, 383, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 685 (Prob. Code, § 21351(i) exempted testator's will from the prohibition in Prob. Code, § 21350 against donative transfers to the drafter of the will, since testator was nonresident of California when he signed will, even though the testator was a resident of California at the time of his death)].

The executor cannot be held liable for making any transfer that is invalid under these rules unless the executor received actual notice of the possible invalidity of the transfer before making the transfer [Prob. Code § 21352]. Further, an executor who receives actual notice cannot be held liable for failing to make the transfer unless the validity of the transfer has been conclusively determined by a court [Prob. Code § 21352].

[4] Effect of Homicide

A person who feloniously and intentionally kills another cannot receive any property, interest, or benefit under the will of the person who is killed [Prob. Code § 250(a)(1)]. Such a person cannot receive any property from the victim under a trust created by the victim, under a power of appointment created by the victim's will or trust, under the laws of intestate succession [see Prob. Code §§ 6400-6455], under the laws of quasi-community property [see Prob. Code §§ 66, 101], under the laws governing gifts in view of impending death [see Prob. Code §§ 5700-5705], or under the family protection provisions of the Probate Code [Prob. Code § 250(a)(1)-(5); see Prob. Code §§ 6500-6615 (family protection)].

Any property interest or benefit that would have passed to the killer if he or she had not killed the victim will pass as if the killer had died before the victim [Prob. Code § 250(b)]. If the interest or benefit derives from a will executed by the victim, or a trust created by or for the benefit of the victim, the interest or benefit will pass as if the killer had died before the victim without leaving surviving issue [Prob. Code § 250(b)(1); see Prob. Code § 21110 ("anti-lapse" statute)]. The same rule applies when an interest or benefit derives from a power of appointment [Prob. Code § 250(b)(2)]. Similarly, any provision in a will or trust nominating the killer as executor, trustee, guardian, conservator, or custodian that becomes effective on the victim's death must be interpreted as if the killer had died before the victim [Prob. Code § 250(b)(3)].

For purposes the foregoing rule, a final judgment of conviction of felonious and intentional killing is conclusive [Prob. Code § 254(a)]. In the absence of a final judgment, the court may determine by a preponderance of the evidence whether the killing was felonious and intentional [Prob. Code § 254(b)]. However, the party seeking to establish that the killing was felonious and intentional bears the burden of proof [Prob. Code § 254(b)].

[5] Effect of Simultaneous Death

[a] Potential Problems

When two persons who are beneficiaries under each other's wills die in a common disaster, or under other circumstances that render it difficult or impossible to determine who died first, a problem will arise regarding the disposition of their estates. Since both persons will have died, neither will have survived long enough to have come into beneficial enjoyment of the other's estate. If one survived the other by only a few days (or even a fraction of a second), the one who survived the longest would inherit property from the other, in the absence of a special provision to the contrary [see Recommendation Relating to Simultaneous Deaths, 17 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 443, 447 (1984)]. Upon the death of the second person, the property that the second person took from the first person would pass through the second person's estate to the second person's heirs or devisees. The property would be subject to double administration and taxation, once in the estate of the first person to die and a second time in the estate of the second to die. Although a federal estate tax credit is available for previously taxed property [see I.R.C. § 103], the credit would not necessarily offset the disadvantages that would arise from having the property pass through the second estate.

[b] Probate Code Rules

The Probate Code contains rules designed to avoid the problems presented by simultaneous death. First, it sets forth a special rule governing the rights of a husband and wife in their community and quasi-community property when they die and it cannot be established by clear and convincing evidence which died first. Under this rule, each spouse's share of the community and quasi-community property is treated as if it belonged to that spouse and did not pass to the other [Prob. Code § 103]. The effect of this rule is to treat each spouse's half of the community and quasi-community property as that spouse's separate property for purposes of both intestate succession and testamentary disposition. Each spouse has the power to dispose of his or her half of the community and quasi-community property by will, but has no power of testamentary disposition over the other spouse's half [see Prob. Code § 6101 and discussion of property subject to disposition by will in § 61.14].

Second, the Probate Code provides that if title to or devolution of property depends on the priority of death of two persons and it cannot be established by clear and convincing evidence that one of the persons survived the other, the property of each must be administered, distributed, or otherwise dealt with as if he or she had survived the other [Prob. Code § 220]. Under this rule, neither person's property will pass to the other, but will be disposed of as if the other person had died first.

Third, when two persons die leaving property to each other by will, neither person will take under the will of the other unless he or she survives the other, or survives until a future time required by the will of the other [Prob. Code § 21109(a); see Prob. Code § 21101]. If it cannot be determined by clear and convincing evidence that one of the persons survived the other, or survived until a future time required by the will of the other, he or she will be deemed not to have survived the other, or not to have survived until a future time required by the will of the other [Prob. Code § 21109(b); see Prob. Code § 21101]. However, this rule applies only when the will in question does not contain a contrary provision [Prob. Code § 21102(b); see Prob. Code § 21101]. If the will contains specific provisions dealing with simultaneous death and survivorship requirements, those provisions are controlling [Prob. Code § 21102(a); see Prob. Code § 21101].

The Probate Code applies similar rules to simultaneous death problems that arise when joint tenants [see Prob. Code § 223], or the insured and the beneficiary under a policy of life or accident insurance [see Prob. Code § 224], have died and it cannot be established by clear and convincing evidence which died first.

The foregoing rules all apply when two persons die under circumstances that make it difficult or impossible to determine which died first. Another rule applies (for purposes of intestate succession only) when it is established by clear and convincing evidence that one person survived the other, but the period of survival is less than 120 hours. Under Prob. Code § 6403(a), a person who fails to survive a decedent by 120 hours is deemed to have predeceased the decedent for purposes of intestate succession, and the heirs are determined accordingly. Clear and convincing evidence is required to establish that a person survived another for 120 hours; if the evidence is not clear and convincing, the person will be deemed not to have survived the other for the required period [Prob. Code § 6403(a)]. However, the 120-hour rule will not apply if it would result in the escheat of property to the state [Prob. Code § 6403(a)].

[6] Rights of Devisees Under Class Gifts

[a] Nature of Class Gifts

A class gift is a gift that is made to a group of persons who are uncertain in number at the time the gift is made and who are to be ascertained at some future time [see In re Estate of Murphy (1909) 157 Cal. 63, 65, 106 P. 230]. Class gifts typically are made by describing the class members in a general way, through the use of words such as "children," "grandchildren," "issue," "descendants," or "heirs," as opposed to individually naming the recipients of the gift.

The appeal of class gifts lies in the fact that they are able to automatically take into account any increase or decrease in the category of individuals whom the testator or donor wishes to benefit. Thus, for example, if the number of a testator's grandchildren might increase between the time the testator's will is drafted, a class gift to the grandchildren as a class would eliminate any need to modify the will each time a new grandchild is born.

If a devise is made to persons as a class, the right of persons to take the devise will depend on whether they answer the class description at the time of the testator's death (or, in the case of a future interest, at the time the devise is to take effect in enjoyment) [see Prob. Code § 21101]. If one member of the class dies before the testator, the share that he or she member would have been entitled to take if he or she has survived the testator will pass to other members of the class who survive the testator [see Estate of Hittell (1903) 141 Cal. 432, 435, 75 P. 53].

A devise is not a class gift merely because it is made to several persons. If a devise is made to persons individually, each has an interest in the devised property and there is no right of survivorship [see Civ. Code § 685; Estate of Hittell (1903) 141 Cal. 432, 436, 75 P. 53]. In the latter situation, if one of the individuals dies before the testator, his or her interest does not automatically pass to the other devisees or devisees (as it would in the case of a class gift), but rather is subject to distribution according to other terms of the will, if any [see Estate of Hittell (1903) 141 Cal. 432, 435-437, 75 P. 53].

[b] Determining Whether a Class Gift Exists

Whether a particular devise is to a class or to individuals must be determined with reference to the testator's intention as reflected in the language of the will [ Estate of Henderson (1911) 161 Cal. 353, 361, 119 P. 496 ; Estate of McCallen (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 142, 150, 125 Cal. Rptr. 645 ]. If the will identifies the devisees by name, an inference may be drawn that the testator intended only the named persons take [see Estate of Murphy (1909) 157 Cal. 63, 67, 106 P. 230 ; Estate of Moore (1955) 135 Cal. App. 2d 122, 137, 286 P. 2d 939 ]. A similar inference may be drawn when the testator refers to devisees by a specific number (e.g., "my two children," or "the four children of my sister, Sally Brown") [see Estate of Murphy (1909) 157 Cal. 63, 67, 106 P. 230 ]. However, these rules are rules of construction only, and in every case they must give way if the intentions of the testator can otherwise be determined from the words of the will [see Estate of Murphy (1909) 157 Cal. 63, 67, 106 P. 230 ].

[c] Determining Members of Class

At the time that a class gift vests, only those persons who are alive are regarded as members of the class, and those persons who would have been included if living are considered technically as never having been members of the class [ Estate of Haney (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 1, 13-14, 344 P.2d 16 ].

The class can grow after the testator's death and before the devise takes effect in enjoyment [ Estate of Grove (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 355, 361, 138 Cal. Rptr. 684 ], or shrink when a potential class member dies before the future interest vests [ Estate of Haney (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 1, 14-15, 344 P.2d 16 ].

Unless the will provides otherwise, half-bloods, adopted persons, persons born out of wedlock, stepchildren, foster children, and the issue of all such persons, when appropriate to the class, are included in the terms of a class gift [Prob. Code § 21115(a)]. However, in construing a devise by a testator who is not a natural parent (such as a grandparent, an uncle, or a friend), a person born to the natural parent will not be considered the child of that parent unless the person lived while a minor as a regular member of the household of the natural parent or that parent's parent, brother, sister, spouse, or surviving spouse [Prob. Code § 21115(b)]. Similarly, in construing a devise by a parent who is not the adoptive parent, a person adopted by the adoptive parent will not be considered the child of that parent unless the person lived while a minor, either before or after adoption, as a regular member of the household of the adopting parent or of that parent's parent, brother, sister or surviving spouse [Prob. Code § 21115(b); see Estate of DeLoreto (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1048, 1052-1053, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 513 (adopted adult children of beneficiary of father's trust were not members of class of grandchildren who were trust beneficiaries)].

If a statute or a will provides for transfer of a present or future interest to, or creates a present or future interest in, a designated person's heirs, heirs at law, next of kin, relatives, family, or words of similar import, the transfer is to the persons, including the state under Prob. Code § 6800, and in the shares that would succeed to the designated person's intestate estate under the intestate succession law of the transferor's domicile, the designated person died when the transfer is to take effect in enjoyment [Prob. Code § 21114(a)]. If the designated person's surviving spouse is living but is remarried at the time the transfer is to take effect in enjoyment, the surviving spouse is not an heir of the designated person for this purpose [Prob. Code § 21114(a)]. The term "designated person" includes the transferor [Prob. Code § 21114(b)].

[d] Distribution Under Prob. Code § 240

When a will, trust, or other instrument that expresses no contrary intention provides for "issue" or "descendants" to take without specifying the manner in which they are to take, the property must be distributed in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240. This pattern of distribution must be followed in cases of intestacy. It also applies whenever any statute calls for property to be distributed or taken "in the manner provided in Section 240 of the Probate Code" [Prob. Code § 245(a); see Prob. Code §§ 673, 6402, 6402.5, 21110 (statutes calling for distribution in manner provided in Prob. Code § 240)].

Prob. Code § 240 requires that the property be divided into as many equal shares as there are living members of the nearest generation of issue then living, and deceased members of that generation who leave issue then living. Each living member of the nearest generation of issue then living receives one share, and the share of each deceased member of that generation that leaves issue then living is divided in the same manner among his or her then-living issue [see Estate of Beckle (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 34, 38, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 890 (Distribution of an intestate decedent's estate could not be limited to surviving first cousins and the children of predeceased first cousins while excluding grandchildren of predeceased first cousins because the governing statutes, Prob. Code §§ 50, 240, 6402(d), do not limit the surviving issue of a predeceased heir entitled to inherit to the first generation; rather, surviving issue includes all lineal descendants of all generations)]. The primary division under Prob. Code § 240 takes place at the first generation having any living members [ Estate of Begley (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 791, 795, 247 Cal. Rptr. 632 ]. If, for example, a testator had two deceased children, one of whom had two children now living and the other of whom had one child now living, each of the testator's three living grandchildren would be entitled to receive one third of the property.

[e] Distribution Per Stirpes or By Representation

Prob. Code § 246 describes the pattern of distribution that must be followed when a will, trust, or other instrument calls for property to be distributed or taken "per stirpes," "by representation," "by right of representation," or "in the manner provided in Section 246 of the Probate Code," unless the instrument expressly provides otherwise [Prob. Code § 246(a), (b) (applicable to wills and trusts executed on and after Jan. 1, 1986; see Prob. Code § 246(c) for rule applicable to will or trust executed before that date)]. Under this pattern, the property must be divided into as many equal shares as there are living children of the designated ancestor, if any, and deceased children who leave issue then living. Each living child of the designated ancestor is allocated one share, and the share of each deceased child who leaves issue then living is divided in the same manner [Prob. Code § 246(a)].

The pattern of distribution under Prob. Code § 246 will differ significantly from the pattern of distribution under Prob. Code § 240 [see discussion in [c], above] if the designated ancestor has no children living at the time the distribution rights are determined. Under Prob. Code § 246, for example, if the testator had two deceased children, one of whom had two children now living and the other of whom had one child now living, the share that each child would have received if living passes to that child's own children in equal shares. The two grandchildren who are the issue of the first deceased child would each take one fourth of the property, and the grandchild who is the issue of the other deceased child would take one half. Under Prob. Code § 240, the three grandchildren would take equal shares.

[f] Distribution Per Capita at Each Generation

Prob. Code § 247 describes the pattern of distribution that must be followed when a will, trust, or other instrument calls for property to be distributed or taken "per capita at each generation" or "in the manner provided in Section 247 of the Probate Code" [Prob. Code § 247(b) (applicable to wills and trusts executed on and after Jan. 1, 1986; see Prob. Code § 247(c) for rule applicable to will or trust executed before that date)]. This pattern calls for the property to be divided into as many equal shares as there are living members of the nearest generation of issue then living and deceased members of that generation who leave issue then living. Each living member of the nearest generation of issue then living is allocated one share, and the remaining shares, if any, are combined and then divided and allocated in the same manner among the remaining issue as if the issue already allocated a share and their descendants were then deceased [Prob. Code § 247(a)].

[g] Distribution Per Capita

When descendants or other members of a designated class take as individuals and not "by representation" or "per stirpes," they are said to take "per capita" [ Estate of Rauschenplat (1931) 212 Cal. 33, 35, 297 P. 882 ; Estate of Carroll (1944) 62 Cal. App. 2d 798, 801-802, 145 P.2d 644 ] . When property is distributed "per capita," the distributees take in equal shares and in their individual rights, without reference to their bloodlines or the right of representation [ Estate of Edwards (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1366, 1372, 250 Cal. Rptr. 779 ] . If, for example, the testator had one living child, and also had two deceased children, one of whom was survived by two children and the other of whom was survived by one child, each of the four living descendants of the testator (the child and the three grandchildren) would take one fourth of the estate under a "per capita" pattern of distribution.

A testator who wishes to require that members of a designated class take "per capita" will usually provide they will take "in equal shares." The words "per capita," without more, will not achieve a traditional distribution "per capita" when living members of the designated class are not all of the same generation, but rather will result in distribution in the manner provided by Prob. Code § 240 [Prob. Code § 245(b)(1)].

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.16

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.16 Protected Persons

[1] In General

The Probate Code contains rules designed to protect certain persons against unintentional omission from wills and other testamentary instruments [see Prob. Code § 21601(a) ("decendent's testamentary instruments" defined)]. These persons are generally described as "omitted" (or sometimes "pretermitted") heirs. Two classes of heirs are protected under the Probate Code rules:

- Omitted spouses [see Prob. Code §§ 21610-21612 and discussion in [2], below].
- Omitted children [see Prob. Code §§ 21620-21623 and discussion in [3], below].

The Probate Code also contains provisions that protect certain persons who are not named as devisees in the will but who are "kindred" of the testator or of a surviving, deceased, or former spouse of the testator against unintentional lapse of devises [see Prob. Code § 21110(c) and discussion in [4], below].

[2] Omitted Spouse

[a] Basic Rule

If a decedent fails to provide in a testamentary instrument for a spouse who married the decedent after the execution of all of the decedent's testamentary instruments, the omitted spouse generally will be entitled by statute to receive a prescribed share of the decedent's estate [Prob. Code § 21610; but see Prob. Code § 21611 (no share if spouse intentionally omitted or otherwise provided for) and discussion, below]. The share consists of all of the following [Prob. Code § 21610]:

- The one-half of the community property that belongs to the decedent under Prob. Code § 100(a).

- The one-half of the quasi-community property that belongs to the decedent under Prob. Code § 101(a).
- A share of the decedent's separate property equal in value to the share the spouse would have received if the decedent had died without having executed a testamentary instrument, but in no event is the share to be more than one-half the value of the separate property in the estate.

The equal division of community or quasi-community property does not apply if the spouses have agreed in writing to a non-pro-rata division of that property (either as to the aggregate value or as to an individual asset). This does not mean, however, that a written agreement is automatically required to permit or recognize a non pro rata division of community property [see Prob. Code §§ 100(b), 101(b)].

For purposes of this rule, a "testamentary instrument" is either a will or a trust instrument that was executed by the decedent and that became irrevocable on the decedent's death [Prob. Code § 21601(a)] and "estate" is the decedent's probate estate and all property held in any revocable trust executed by the decedent that became irrevocable on the decedent's death [Prob. Code § 21601(b)].

Beginning January 1, 2005, the statutory share provided to an omitted spouse must also be provided to an omitted surviving registered domestic partner. A surviving registered domestic partner, following the other partner's death, has the same rights, protections, and benefits, and is subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law that are granted to and imposed on a surviving spouse [Fam. Code § 297.5(c); see Fam. Code § 297.5(j) (when necessary to implement statutory rights of domestic partners, gender-specific terms referring to spouses must be construed to include domestic partners)].

[b] Application to Putative Spouse

The rules protecting omitted spouses are not limited to legally married spouses. A putative spouse is also entitled to the benefits of the Probate Code rules. In one case, the testator executed a will in 1942 in which he left all of his estate to his wife. In 1957, the testator obtained a divorce and remarried. However, the remarriage was defective because the final judgment of divorce was not signed or filed until one day after the remarriage. Following the testator's death, the second (putative) spouse claimed a share of the testator's estate as an omitted spouse. The court held that the word "spouse" as used in the statute included a putative spouse [ Estate of Sax (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1300, 1306, 263 Cal. Rptr. 190, 263 Cal. Rptr. 190] (decided under former Prob. Code § 6560, repealed effective January 1, 1998; see Prob. Code § 21610, applicable when decedent died on or after January 1, 1998).

[c] Intentional Failure to Provide for Spouse

The spouse is not entitled to receive a share of the estate if any of the following is established [Prob. Code § 21611]:

- The decedent's failure to provide for the spouse in the decedent's testamentary instruments was intentional and that intention appears from the testamentary instruments.
- The decedent provided for the spouse by transfer outside of the estate passing by the decedent's testamentary instruments and the intention that the transfer be in lieu of a provision in those instruments is shown by statements of the decedent or from the amount of the transfer or by other evidence.
- The spouse made a valid agreement waiving the right to share in the decedent's estate [see Estate of Butler (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 311, 315-317, 252 Cal. Rptr. 210 ; see also discussion in [e], below].

[d] Satisfaction of Omitted Spouse's Share

In satisfying the omitted spouse's share, the share must be taken first from any part of the decedent's estate that is not disposed of by will or trust [Prob. Code 21612(a)(1); but see Prob. Code § 21612(b) (exception to rule) and discussion, below]. If that is not sufficient, so much as may be necessary to satisfy the share must be taken from all beneficiaries of the decedent's testamentary instruments in proportion to the value they may respectively receive [Prob. Code § 21612(a)(2); but see Prob. Code § 21612(b) (exception to rule) and discussion, below]. This value must be determined as of the date of the decedent's death [Prob. Code § 21612(a)(2)]. However, if the obvious intention of the decedent in relation to some specific gift or devise or other provision of a testamentary instrument would be defeated by satisfying the omitted spouse's share in this way, the specific devise or gift or provision may be exempted from the apportionment and a different apportionment, consistent with the decedent's intention, may be adopted [Prob. Code § 21612(b)].

[e] Pre-1998 Rules

The rules set forth in Prob. Code §§ 21610-26112 governing the inheritance rights of omitted spouses [see discussions in [a] through [c], above] apply only if the decedent died on or after January 1, 1998 [Prob. Code § 21630]. If the decedent died before January 1, 1998, but on or after January 1, 1985, former Prob. Code §§ 6560-6562 (repealed effective January 1, 1998 by Stats. 1997, ch. 724, § 34) govern the rights of omitted spouses. While those rules were substantially similar to the rules described above, they applied only when the decedent failed to provide for a spouse married after the execution of a will that did not provide for the spouse [see former Prob. Code § 6560]. The rules applicable on and after January 1, 1998, differ from the former rules in that they apply not just when the decedent failed to provide for the spouse in a will, but also when the decedent failed to provide for the spouse in a trust instrument that becomes irrevocable on the decedent's death [see Prob. Code § 21610]. Conversely, under the rules applicable on and after January 1, 1998, an intention not to provide for the surviving spouse may be shown not just by the decedent's will, but also by a trust instrument executed by the decedent that becomes irrevocable on the decedent's death [see Prob. Code § 21610]. If the decedent died before January 1, 1985, former Prob. Code § 70 (repealed effective January 1, 1985) governs the rights of omitted spouses [see former Prob. Code § 6580 (repealed effective January 1, 1998)].

[f] Effect of Waiver by Spouse

A spouse may agree to waive his or her right to share in the testator's estate [Prob. Code § 21611(c); see [c], above]. However, a waiver will not be enforced unless it meets certain requirements. First, it must be in writing and signed by the surviving spouse [Prob. Code § 142]. Second, the waiving spouse must either be represented by an independent attorney at the time the waiver is signed, or receive a fair and reasonable disclosure of the property or financial obligations of the other spouse before signing [Prob. Code § 143(a)]. Third, the waiver must clearly show that the waiving spouse intended to give up his or her right to share in the estate of the other spouse.

In one case, the spouses signed an antenuptial agreement prepared for them by an attorney. A statement was attached to the agreement providing, in substance, that the parties considered the possible disposition of their property in the event of their death or the dissolution of their marriage. However, the statement was signed only by the attorney who drafted the agreement. After the wife's death, the court held that the husband had not waived his right to share in the wife's estate as an omitted spouse. The statement attached to the antenuptial agreement did not clearly reveal the parties' intention to waive the right to inherit from each other and thus could not be enforced as a waiver [ Estate of Butler (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 311, 318, 252 Cal. Rptr. 210 ]. However, where a waiver of the widow's inheritance rights is in writing, signed by the widow, and complies with the requirements of Prob. Code § 144, the waiver is enforceable regardless of whether the document containing the waiver is enforceable [ Estate of Will (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 902, 908 ; 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 502 (waiver enforceable regardless of whether document containing the waiver was enforceable as a prenuptial agreement under Fam. Code § 1615)].

Every spousal waiver is subject to the strict scrutiny of the court, which may enforce it only if the waiver made a fair and reasonable disposition of the rights of the non-waiving spouse, or the waiving spouse had (or reasonably should have had) an adequate knowledge of the property and financial obligations of the other spouse and the non-waiving spouse did not take any unfair advantage of the waiving spouse [Prob. Code § 144; see Fam. Code § 721(b)].

[g] Drafting Considerations

If a client does not wish to provide in a will or a revocable trust for a spouse who, in the absence of such a provision, might qualify as an omitted spouse [see Prob. Code § 21610], the client's intentions should be clearly expressed in the client's will or revocable trust instrument [see Prob. Code § 21611(a)]. The intention not to provide for a person who would otherwise share in the client's estate is traditionally expressed in a disinheritance clause. For discussion of disinheritance clauses, see § 61.17.

If the client's estate plan includes both a will and a revocable trust, the provisions of the two instruments respecting an omitted spouse should be coordinated. It is not clear whether the intention not to provide for the spouse must be shown in both the will and the trust instrument, or only in one of those instruments. Prob. Code § 21611(a) provides that the spouse will not receive a share of the estate if the "decendent's failure to provide for the spouse in the decendent's testamentary instruments was intentional and that intention appears from the testamentary instruments" [emphasis added]. It may be argued that in determining the decendent's intentions respecting the spouse, the court should look at both instruments and, if either reflects an intention not to provide for the spouse, the requirements of Prob. Code § 21611(a) will be satisfied. However, to avoid any possibility of misinterpretation, it is recommended that any intention not to provide for the spouse should be reflected in both instruments.

It is not necessary for the client to provide for the spouse in both the will and the trust instrument solely to avoid application of the omitted spouse rules. A spouse will qualify as an omitted spouse under Prob. Code § 21610 only if the client fails to provide for the spouse in "a testamentary instrument," and either the will or the trust instrument will qualify as "a testamentary instrument for this purpose [Prob. Code § 21601(a) "decendent's testamentary instruments" defined); emphasis added]. Thus, if the client does not wish to provide for the spouse in the will, a provision for the spouse in the trust instrument is adequate to remove the spouse from the definition of an omitted spouse in Prob. Code § 21610. Similarly, if the client does not wish to provide for the spouse in the trust, a provision for the spouse in the will is adequate to remove the spouse from the definition of an omitted spouse in Prob. Code § 21610.

[3] Omitted Children

[a] Basic Rule

If a decedent fails to provide in a testamentary instrument for a child born or adopted after the execution of all of the decedent's testamentary instruments, the omitted child will generally be entitled by statute to receive a prescribed share of the decedent's estate [Prob. Code § 21620; but see Prob. Code § 21621 (no share if child intentionally omitted or otherwise provided for) and discussion in [b], below; see also Estate of Mowry (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 338, 343-344, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 855 (daughter adopted before decedent executed holographic will, and who failed to prove mistaken omission, was not omitted heir)]. The share will be equal in value to the share the child would have received if the decedent had died without executing any testamentary instrument [Prob. Code § 21620]. For purposes of this rule, a "testamentary instrument" is either a will or a trust instrument that was executed by the decedent and that became irrevocable on the decedent's death [Prob. Code § 21601(a)] and "estate" is the decedent's probate estate and all property held in any revocable trust executed by the decedent that became irrevocable on the decedent's death [Prob. Code § 21601(b)].

[b] Intentional Failure to Provide for Child

A child is not entitled to receive a share of the estate if any of the following is established [Prob. Code § 21611]:

- The decedent's failure to provide for the child in the decedent's testamentary instruments was intentional and that intention appears from the testamentary instruments.

- The decedent had one or more children and devised or otherwise directed the disposition of substantially all the estate to the other parent of the omitted child.
- The decedent provided for the child by transfer outside of the estate passing by the decedent's testamentary instruments and the intention that the transfer be in lieu of a provision in those instruments is shown by statements of the decedent or from the amount of the transfer or by other evidence.

[c] Child Believed to Be Dead

If, at the time of the execution of all of the decedent's testamentary instruments effective at the time of the decedent's death, the decedent failed to provide for a living child solely because the decedent believed the child to be dead or was unaware of the birth of the child, the child must receive a share in the estate equal in value to the share the child would have received if the decedent had died without having executed any testamentary instruments [Prob. Code § 21622].

[d] Satisfaction of Omitted Child's Share

In satisfying an omitted child's share, the share must be taken first from any part of the decedent's estate that is not disposed of by will or trust [Prob. Code § 21623(a)(1); but see Prob. Code § 21623(b) (exception to rule) and discussion, below]. If that is not sufficient, so much as may be necessary to satisfy the share must be taken from all beneficiaries of the decedent's testamentary instruments in proportion to the value they may respectively receive [Prob. Code § 21623(a)(2); but see Prob. Code § 21623(b) (exception to rule) and discussion, below]. The proportion of each beneficiary's share that may be taken must be determined based on values as of the date of the decedent's death [Prob. Code § 21623(a)(2)]. However, if the obvious intention of the decedent in relation to some specific gift or devise or other provision of a testamentary instrument would be defeated by satisfying the omitted child's share in this way, the specific devise or gift or provision may be exempted from the apportionment and a different apportionment, consistent with the decedent's intention, may be adopted [Prob. Code § 21623(b)].

[e] Pre-1998 Rules

The foregoing rules apply only if the decedent died on or after January 1, 1998 [Prob. Code § 21630]. If the decedent died before January 1, 1998, but on or after January 1, 1985, former Prob. Code §§ 6560-6562 (repealed effective January 1, 1998 by Stats. 1997, ch. 724, § 34) govern the rights of omitted spouses [Prob. Code § 21630]. While those rules were substantially similar to the rules described above, they applied only when the decedent failed to provide for a child born or adopted after the execution of a will that did not provide for the child [see former Prob. Code § 6570]. The rules applicable on and after January 1, 1998, differ from the former rules in that they apply not just when the decedent failed to provide for the child in a will, but also when the decedent failed to provide for the child in a trust instrument that becomes irrevocable on the decedent's death [see Prob. Code § 21620]. Conversely, an intention not to provide for the child may, under the rules applicable on and after January 1, 1998, be shown not just by the decedent's will, but also by a trust instrument executed by the decedent that becomes irrevocable on the decedent's death [see Prob. Code § 21620]. If the decedent died before January 1, 1985, former Prob. Code §§ 71, 90, and 91 (repealed effective January 1, 1985) govern the rights of omitted children [see former Prob. Code § 6580 (repealed effective January 1, 1998)].

[f] Drafting Considerations

If a client does not wish to provide in a will or revocable trust for a child who might otherwise qualify as an omitted child [see Prob. Code § 21620], the client's intentions should be clearly expressed in the client's will or trust instrument [see Prob. Code § 21611(a)]. The intention not to provide for a person who would otherwise share in the client's estate is traditionally expressed in a disinheritance clause. For discussion of disinheritance clauses, see § 61.17.

If the client's estate plan includes both a will and a revocable trust instrument, the provisions of the two instruments respecting an omitted child should be coordinated. It is not clear whether the intention not to provide for the child must be shown in both the will and the trust instrument, or only in one of those instruments. Prob. Code § 21621(a) provides that the child will not receive a share of the estate if the "decendent's failure to provide for the child in the decendent's testamentary instruments was intentional and that intention appears from the testamentary instruments" [emphasis added]. It may be argued that in determining the decendent's intentions respecting the child, the court should look at both instruments and, if either reflects an intention not to provide for the spouse, the requirements of Prob. Code § 21621(a) will be satisfied. However, if the client wishes to exclude the child from any share in either the probate estate or the trust estate, it is recommended that this intention be reflected in both instruments.

It is not necessary for the client to provide for the child in both the will and the trust instrument solely to avoid application of the omitted child rules. A child will qualify as an omitted child under Prob. Code § 21620 only if the client fails to provide for the child in "a testamentary instrument," and either the will or the trust instrument will qualify as "a testamentary instrument" for this purpose [Prob. Code § 21601(a) "decendent's testamentary instruments" defined]; emphasis added]. Thus, if the client does not wish to provide for the child in the will, a provision for the child in the trust instrument will adequately remove the child from the definition of an omitted child in Prob. Code § 21620. Similarly, if the client does not wish to provide for the child in the trust, a provision for the child in the will is adequate to remove the child from the definition of an omitted child in Prob. Code § 21620.

[4] Kindred

The survivorship provisions of the Probate Code protect certain persons who are not named as devisees in the will but who are "kindred" of the testator or of a surviving, deceased, or former spouse of the testator [see Prob. Code § 21110(c); Estate of Sowash (1923) 62 Cal. App. 512, 516, 217 P. 123 ("kindred" refers to persons related by blood)]. Under these provisions, if a gift is made to kindred of the testator (or of a surviving, deceased, or former spouse of the testator), and if the kindred beneficiary is dead when the will is executed (or is treated as if he or she predeceased the testator, or fails or is treated as failing to survive the testator or to survive until a future time required by the will), the issue of the deceased devisee take in his or her place in the manner provided by Prob. Code § 240 [Prob. Code § 21110(a)]; see Prob. Code §§ 81 ("transferor" includes testator), 81.5 ("transferee" includes devisee under will); see also Estate of Mooney, (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 654, 663; 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 115 (anti-lapse statute provides that when a bequest to a protected transferee would otherwise lapse due to the transferee's death, the bequest passes by right of representation to his or her descendants), see also discussion in § 61.15[6][c]]. This rule is inapplicable, however, if the will expresses a contrary intention or makes a substitute disposition [Prob. Code § 21110(b)].

A requirement that the initial devisee survive the testator or survive for a specified period of time after the death of the testator constitutes such a "contrary intention," as does a requirement that the initial devisee survive until a future time that is related to the probate of the will or administration of the estate of the testator [Prob. Code § 21110(b)]; for further discussion, see Ch. 63, Will Provisions, § 63.411[1][d].

PRACTICE TIP:

No devise under a will, even one which is seemingly trivial, should fail to include a statement indicating the disposition of the devise in the event the devisee predeceases the testator (or dies before the occurrence of some specified event). If there is to be an alternate taker, the will should so indicate. If the gift simply fails, that should also be stated. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

§ 61.17 Disinheritance Clauses

[1] In General

A disinheritance clause is a provision in a will or trust instrument expressing the intention of the testator or settlor that a specific person or persons will receive no property under the instrument [see Black's Law Dictionary 468 (6th ed. 1990)]. A disinheritance clause is different from a no-contest clause, which is a provision in a will or trust instrument that is designed to discourage devisees or beneficiaries from contesting provisions of the instrument [see discussion in § 61.18].

A disinheritance clause in a will is directed against persons who are not provided for in the will and who would otherwise be entitled to claim a share of the testator's estate. A no-contest clause in a will, in contrast, is directed against any person who might contest the will. Although disinheritance and no-contest clauses may be combined in a single provision, the more accepted practice is to state them separately, since each has its own purpose.

The law governing disinheritance clauses is complex and exacting. For a detailed discussion of that law, see California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 40, Disinheritance and No-Contest Clauses (Matthew Bender).

[2] Limited Effectiveness

Many persons erroneously believe that a disinheritance clause is effective (or even necessary) to ensure that persons not specifically mentioned in a will do not receive any portion of the testator's estate. In fact, under current law a disinheritance clause has a much more limited application and is strictly necessary to cut off inheritance rights in only limited circumstances.

Under present California law, most persons not mentioned in the decedent's "testamentary instruments" [see Prob. Code § 21601(a)] ("decedent's testamentary instruments" means the decedent's will or revocable trust)] have no right to any of the decedent's property that is validly disposed of under those instruments. The only exceptions are persons who qualify as "omitted heirs." A spouse who was married and a child who was born or adopted after the execution of all of the decedent's "testamentary instruments" will qualify as omitted heirs [Prob. Code §§ 21610 (spouse), 21620; see Prob. Code § 21601(a) ("decedent's testamentary instruments" means the decedent's will or revocable trust)], as will a living child for whom the decedent made no provision solely because the decedent believed the child to be dead or was unaware of the child's birth [Prob. Code § 21622]. Thus, a disinheritance clause is essential to cut off the statutory rights of these persons under the "omitted heir" statutes. No other persons will qualify as omitted heirs [see discussion in § 61.16[2], [3]].

As to all other persons, therefore, a disinheritance clause is not strictly necessary. Simply making no provision for these persons in the decedent's testamentary instruments, and assuring that those instruments collectively make a full and complete disposition of all the decedent's property so as to avoid any possibility of intestacy [see discussion, below], is enough to assure that persons not mentioned in the decedent's testamentary instruments will not take any portion of the decedent's property.

Regardless of how broadly a disinheritance clause is worded, it cannot prevent a decedent's heirs from taking under the intestate succession statutes [ Estate of Barnes (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 580, 583, 47 Cal. Rptr. 480, 407 P.2d 656] . This is true regardless of whether or not the heirs qualify as "omitted heirs." The only effective way for a testator to cut off the intestate succession rights or his or her heirs is to validly dispose of his or her property to others [ Estate of Lefranc (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 289, 295, 239 P.2d 617] . This can be successfully accomplished only if the will includes a residuary clause and provides for a valid alternative disposition of the residue in the event that the primary residuary disposition fails [see Estate of Munson (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 146, 151-152, 330 P.2d 302] . If the residue is not effectively disposed of, the intestate heirs will inherit under the laws of intestate succession regardless of the terms of any disinheritance clause [see Estate of Munson (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 146, 151-152, 330 P.2d 302] .

[3] Specific Language

A testator who wishes to disinherit an omitted spouse or child in a will should state that intention "in strong and convincing language" [ Estate of Gardner (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 620, 623, 147 Cal. Rptr. 184, 580 P.2d 684] . A general provision disinheriting "my heirs," "any legal heir of mine," or "my heirs living at the time of my demise," is not sufficient to prevent an omitted heir from taking against the will [ Estate of Axcelrod (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 761, 767-768, 147 P.2d 1 ; Estate of Katleman (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 51, 59-60, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 468] . The disinheritance clause may name the heir to be disinherited, or describe the heir with some language that leaves no doubt as to his or her identity. If the testator is contemplating marriage at the time the will is executed, for example, a will provision that names the intended spouse and includes an unequivocal statement that the will "shall not be revoked by the marriage" is sufficient to defeat the intended spouse's rights under the omitted heir statutes [ Estate of Cooper (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 118, 119, 121, 190 Cal. Rptr. 826] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Beware of too much specificity in crafting disinheritance clauses. In particular, statements of "factual" bases for disinheritances are better set forth in terms of the testator's "belief." For example, the statement of a testator's "belief" that a child is already "well provided for" is preferable to a direct statement that the child is, in fact, "well provided for." The latter sort of statement can set the stage for a will contest in which the child seeks to establish that he or she was, in fact, destitute; a statement of the testator's belief might open the door to a will contest based on a theory of fraud, but it is much less likely to be successful. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

In particular cases, a provision disinheriting a child may be essential. Since children born or adopted before the will was executed ordinarily will not qualify as omitted children [see Prob. Code § 21620 and discussion in § 61.16[3]], it is not strictly necessary to name those children in the will when the testator does not wish to provide for them. However, if a question might later arise as to whether a testator mistakenly believed a child to be dead at the time the will was executed, or was unaware a child had been born [see Prob. Code § 21622 and discussion in § 61.16[3][c]], a provision specifically referring to the child may be essential to disinherit the child.

Every will should name or identify all persons who have the potential to qualify as the testator's omitted heirs. Every will should also include a general disinheritance clause, even when no omitted heirs can reasonably be anticipated. A general disinheritance clause typically states that, except as otherwise specifically provided in the will, the testator has intentionally and with full knowledge omitted to provide for his or her heirs, regardless of whether the testator is aware of their existence and identities at the time the will is executed.

§ 61.18 No-Contest Clauses

[1] Nature and Validity

No contest clauses are valid and enforceable in California [ Burch v. George (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 246, 254, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 866 P.2d 92 ]. The purpose of a no contest clause is to discourage will contests by imposing a penalty of forfeiture against any beneficiary who challenges the will [ Estate of Gonzalez (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1296, 1302, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 332 ]. A no contest clause also is known as an "in terrorem" clause. As discussed in § 61.17[1], a no contest clause is distinct from a disinheritance clause, which seeks to prevent an heir or heirs from receiving any property under the instrument.

A no contest clause in a will or other dispositive instrument creates a condition on the gifts and dispositions provided for in the instrument [ Burch v. George (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 246, 254, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 866 P.2d 92 ; Estate of Lindstrom (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 375, 381, 236 Cal. Rptr. 376 ]. In essence, a no contest clause in a will conditions the rights of the devisees named in the will to take the devises provided for in the will on their acquiescence in its terms. To the extent that a particular devisee acquiesces in those terms, the devisee is entitled to take the devise; to the extent that the devisee does not acquiesce, the devisee cannot take [see Burch v. George (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 246, 254, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 866 P.2d 92 ].

Rules relating to the enforcement of no contest clauses are codified in the Probate Code [see Prob. Code § 2131-21315]. For additional detailed discussion of the enforceability of no contest clauses, and for a will provision containing a no contest clause, see Ch. 63, Probate: Will Provisions § 63.651

[2] Enforcement of No Contest Clause Under Probate Code

[a] In General

Effective January 1, 2010, a revised Prob. Code §§ 21310-21315 controls the enforcement of no contest clauses as [ Prob. Code § 21315 ]. The statute provides for the enforcement of no contest clauses in a protected instrument filed on or after January 1, 2010, wherever executed, provided that the protected instrument became irrevocable on or after January 1, 2001 [Prob. Code § 21315]. For the enforcement of all other no contest clauses, common law continues to apply [Prob. Code § 21315]. Under the new statute, a no contest clause is only enforceable in three specific circumstances: 1) a direct contest brought without probable cause, 2) a challenge to the transfer of property (provided the no contest clause provides), and 3) the filing of a creditor's claim (provided the no contest clause provides) [Prob. Code § 21311(a)]. Furthermore, there is no opt-out of this statute. The provisions of Prob. Code § 21310-21315 apply notwithstanding any contrary provisions in an instrument [Prob. Code § 21314]. See also, Demurrer to Contest and Ground of Opposition to Probate--Contest Violates No contest Clause, § 444.102A.

[b] No Contest Clause Defined

Under the Probate Code, a no contest clause is a provision in a valid instrument, which, if enforced, would penalize a beneficiary for filing a pleading in any court [Prob. Code § 21310(c)]. A pleading is a petition, complaint, cross-complaint, objection, answer, response, or claim [Prob. Code § 21310(d)].

[c] Protected Instrument

The Probate Code only allows the enforcement of a no contest clause of a protected instrument [see Prob. Code §§ 21310, 21311]. A protected instrument is the instrument containing the no contest clause, or an instrument that is in existence on the date the instrument containing the no contest clause is executed and is expressly identified in the no contest clause, either individually or as part of an identifiable class of instruments, as being governed by the no contest clause [Prob. Code § 21310(e)]. Since a no contest clause cannot apply to future instruments under the revised code, each amendment of existing instruments should contain its own no contest clause where one is desired. A commonly used statement in amendments that the settler confirms and ratifies the original trust agreement is inadequate to incorporate the no contest clause into the amendment [see Prob. Code § 21310(e), see also Perrin v. Lee (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 1239, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 885 (no contest clause does not apply to amendment where amendment stated that grantor and trustee confirm and ratify original trust agreement because (former) Prob. Code § 21305(a) requires that no contest clause must explicitly state that challenging validity of amendment is a violation of the no contest clause)]. It is also important to clarify whether a no contest clause is applicable to a testamentary trust that is created under a will that contains a no contest clause. Any no contest clause for the trust should be separately contained in the trust terms as recited in the order for distribution entered in the probate proceeding [ Meyer v. Meyer (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 983, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 546 (no contest clause had not been incorporated by reference into the testamentary trust because the decrees of distribution specifying the terms of the testamentary trust did not include the will's no contest clause as one of those terms)].

[d] Direct Contest

A no contest clause is enforceable in a direct contest that is brought without probable cause [Prob. Code § 21311(a)(1)]. A direct contest is one that alleges the invalidity of a protected instrument or one or more of its terms based on [Prob. Code § 21310(b)]:

- Forgery;
- Lack of due execution;
- Lack of capacity;
- Menace, duress, fraud or undue influence;
- Revocation of a will pursuant to § 6120, revocation of a trust pursuant to § 15401, or revocation of an instrument other than a will or trust pursuant to the procedure for revocation that is provided by statute or by the instrument; and

- Disqualification of a beneficiary under Prob. Code §§ 6112, 21350.

Probable cause exists if, at the time of filing a contest, the facts known to the contestant would cause a reasonable person to believe that there is a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery [Prob. Code § 21311(b)].

[E] Challenge to Transfer of Property

A no contest clause is also enforceable against a pleading challenging the transfer of property on the grounds that it was not the transferor's property at the time of the transfer (a "forced election"), so long as the no contest clause expressly provides [Prob. Code § 21311(a)(2)]. In this type of contest, probable cause is irrelevant, and the forced election may be applicable to anyone [see Prob. Code § 21311(a)(2)].

[f] Creditor's Claim

A no contest clause is also enforceable against the filing of a creditor's claim or prosecution of an action based on it, so long as the no contest clause expressly provides [Prob. Code § 21311(a)(3)]. In this type of contest, probable cause is also irrelevant [see Prob. Code § 21311(a)(3)].

[g] No Availability of Declaratory Relief

Under the new statutory provisions, declaratory relief (previously granted under the Safe Harbor Provision of former Prob. Code § 21320) will no longer be available [see Prob. Code §§ 21310-21315].

[3] Enforcement of No contest Clauses Under Common Law

[a] In General

For contests of a will or trust which contain a no contest clause, but are not governed by Prob. Code § 21310 et seq., common law continues to apply. Whether there has been a "contest" within the meaning of the language of a no contest clause is to be determined according to the circumstances of each case and the language used [ Estate of Strader (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 996, 1003, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 649 ; Nairne v. Jessop-Humble (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1128, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726] .

Factors relevant to determining whether a claim involving the characterization, inclusion, or distribution of a certain item of property in a testamentary instrument is a contest include [ Nairne v. Jessop-Humble (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1129, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726] :

- The particular language of the no contest clause;
- Whether the instrument specifies the property and its distribution;
- Whether the instrument specifically characterizes the property, e.g., as separate versus community property;
- Whether the challenge, if successful, would thwart the testator's intent.

[b] Indirect Attack

Under the common law, an indirect attack in a separate proceeding that nullifies or thwarts the express wishes of the creator of the instrument may constitute a "contest" for purposes of a no contest clause [see Burch v. George (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 246, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 866 P.2d 92 (proposed federal complaint by surviving spouse against pension plan administrators to assert community property rights to plan benefits that had been transferred to trust); Mc Kenzie v. Vanderpoel (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1454, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 129 (no contest clause in trust instrument that applied to any attempt to "impair" trust extended to trust beneficiary's adjustment petition under California Uniform Principal and Income Act to reallocate principal and income, when reallocation would have resulted in more income to beneficiary than allowed by trust and invasion of trust principal reserved to other beneficiaries); [ Estate of Pittman (1997) 63 Cal. App. 4th 290, 298-305, 73 Cal Rptr. 2d 622 (beneficiary's petition to recharacterize property that had been specifically characterized by trustors); Genger v. Delsol (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1410, 1428-1429, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 527 (proposed challenge by surviving spouse to corporate stock redemption agreement which was "cornerstone" of decedent's integrated estate plan); but see Jacobs-Zorne v. Superior Court (1966) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1064, 1075, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385 (thwarting of testator's intent not appropriate test in determining whether no contest clause has been triggered)].

[c] Oral Contract

Although some older cases suggest that actions seeking to enforce an oral contract independent of a testamentary instrument do not constitute "contests" [see Estate of Watson (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 569, 573-574, 223 Cal. Rptr. 14 ; Estate of Black (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 582, 591, 206 Cal. Rptr. 663] , the California Supreme Court has clearly indicated that there is no "categorical proposition that any proceeding based upon a claim of right independent of a will or trust instrument is never a contest for purposes of the no contest law" [ Burch v. George (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 246, 261, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 866 P.2d 92 . As a result, more recent cases have held that a complaint that seeks to establish and enforce an oral contract based on a right independent of a testamentary instrument may constitute a contest within the meaning of a no contest provision in that instrument [ Nairne v. Jessop-Humble (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1129-1131, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726 (complaint alleging that trustors had orally agreed to give specified property to plaintiff and therefore that property should not have been included in trust violated no contest clause in trust because it directly attacked provision of trust that identified and disposed of this property)].

[d] Interpretation

A judicial action seeking an interpretation of a will or other dispositive instrument is not an attack on the instrument and does not constitute a contest of the instrument. It is merely an effort to ascertain the true intentions of the author of the instrument [ Graham v. Lenzi (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 248, 258, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407] . A petition seeking to interpret a will generally does not violate a no contest clause because, rather than thwarting the testator's dispositive intent, the proceeding serves to ascertain and enforce that intent [ Estate of Strader (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 996, 1004, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 649] .

[4] Strict Construction

The strict statutory rules regarding no contest clauses reflect the general doctrine that no contest clauses are disfavored by the public policy against forfeiture [ McIndoe v. Olivos (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 483, 487, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 689 ; Estate of Richter (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1361, 1367, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 ; Scharlin v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 162, 168-169, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448] . Accordingly, under both the Probate Code and common law, no contest clauses must be strictly construed and cannot be extended beyond what the settler or testator (as the case may be) clearly intended by the wording of the governing document [see Prob. Code § 21312; see also Meyer v. Meyer (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 983, 998, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 546 ; Zwirn v. Schweizer (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1159, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 527 ; Nairne v. Jessop-Humble (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1128, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726 ; see also Scharlin v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 162, 168-169, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448 (rule of strict construction applies to no contest clauses in inter vivos trusts as well as in wills)]. Under the common law, a beneficiary will be found to have violated a no contest clause only if the beneficiary's action clearly falls within the terms of the clause, and the penalty will be imposed only if it is found that the beneficiary's act clearly was intended by the settlor or testator to require the imposition of the penalty [ Estate of Rossi (2006) 138 Cal. App. 1325, 1338, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 244 ; McIndoe v. Olivos (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 483, 487, 489, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 689 ; Estate of Richter (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1361, 1367, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 ; Scharlin v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 162, 168-169, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448 . Although these basic rules were developed in connection with no contest clauses in wills, they have been held applicable to no contest clauses in inter vivos trusts as well [see Scharlin v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 162, 168-169, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448] .

Thus, for example, a testator could permissively provide that three of his five children would all lose their testamentary gifts under a trust if any one of them contested it [ Tunstall v. Wells (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 554, 557-558, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468] . The court concluded that the no contest clause did not violate public policy and reasoned that the decedent's intentions to impose conditions on the gifts of the three children were within his rights as a testator [ Tunstall v. Wells (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 554, 557-558, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468] . Similarly, a no contest clause in a testamentary trust was upheld although it forced the settlor's former wife and their children to choose between enforcing their rights under an existing martial dissolution judgment by filing creditor's claims, or relinquishing those rights and taking the gifts provided for them in the settlor's trust [ Colburn v. Northern Trust Co. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 439, 447, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 828] . Also upheld was a clause in a trust instrument that applied to any attempt to "impair" the trust, which was held applicable to the trust beneficiary's adjustment petition under the California Uniform Principal and Income Act to reallocate principal and income, when the reallocation would have resulted in more income to the beneficiary than was allowed by the trust and the invasion of trust principal reserved to other beneficiaries [ McKenzie v. Vanderpoel (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1454, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 129] .

Extrinsic evidence on the testator's intended meaning of the no contest clause is admissible if it is relevant to show a meaning to which the language is reasonably susceptible [ Estate of Kaila (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1122, 1132, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 865] . However, consideration of extrinsic evidence does not necessarily require a determination of an action on the merits that would preclude relief [ Estate of Kaila (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1122, 1136, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 865] .

[5] Review of Determination

A court order determining whether a particular motion, petition, or other act by the beneficiary would constitute a contest within the terms of the no contest clause is appealable [Prob. Code § 1303(j), see Estate of Hoffman (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 1436, 1438 fn 1, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248] .

Cases have held that, given the short filing times in many probate matters and the need for timely and orderly administration of estates, appeal may constitute an inadequate legal remedy. Under these circumstances, a writ of mandate would be the appropriate remedy for reviewing the court's order [see Varney v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1098, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 865 ; Scharlin v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 162, 167, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448] .

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.19

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.19 Revocation

[1] In General

A will, or any part of a will, may be revoked (1) by a later will that revokes the earlier will or part of a will expressly or by inconsistency, or (2) by being burned, torn, canceled, obliterated, or destroyed with the intent and for the purpose of revoking it, either by the testator or by another person in the testator's presence and at the testator's direction [Prob. Code § 6120]. A will or any part of a will executed in duplicate is revoked if one of the duplicates is burned, torn, canceled, obliterated, or destroyed with the intent and for the purpose of revoking it, by either the testator or another person in the testator's presence and by the testator's direction [Prob. Code § 6121].

[2] Presumption of Revocation of Missing Will

If a testator's will cannot be found after the testator's death, a presumption may arise that the testator destroyed the will with the intent to revoke it [Prob. Code § 6124]. This presumption will arise if it is established (1) that the will was last in the testator's possession, (2) that the testator was competent until death, and (3) that neither the will nor a duplicate original of the will can be found [Prob. Code § 6124]. This statutory presumption codifies case law [Communication Concerning Assembly Bill 196, 18 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 373 (1986); see Sparks v. Lauritzen (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 269, 274-275, 56 Cal. Rptr. 370]. In effect, it constitutes a double presumption. First, destruction of the will is presumed from disappearance of the will; second, revocation is presumed from destruction [Estate of Obermolte (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 129 n.7, 153 Cal. Rptr. 798].

The term "duplicate original," as used in Prob. Code § 6124, does not include a photocopy of the will that has not been personally signed by the testator and the witnesses. Therefore, the presumption of revocation applies when such a photocopy is the only copy of the will that can be produced. The fact that the testator preserved a photocopy of the will is not of sufficient significance to permit a court to infer that the testator would not have preserved the photocopy if he or she intended to revoke the will [Lauermann v. Superior Court (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1327, 1333, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 258].

The presumption may be rebutted by evidence showing that it is equally probable that the will was destroyed by someone other than the testator, or that the act was done by the testator but not with an intention to revoke the instrument [ Estate of Bristol (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 221, 224-225, 143 P.2d 689 ; Estate of Obernolte (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 129, 153 Cal. Rptr. 798] . The presumption is considered to be a weak one and is relatively easily rebutted [see Lauermann v. Superior Court (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1327, 1332 n. 8, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 258 (presumption only affects burden of producing evidence rather than burden of proof)].

[3] Revocation by Dissolution or Annulment of Marriage

The annulment or dissolution of a marriage may affect a will executed by one of the spouses before the annulment or dissolution, depending on the date of the annulment or dissolution and the subsequent conduct of the parties.

If the dissolution or annulment occurred before January 1, 1985 (the operative date of Prob. Code § 6122), it will have no effect on the will [Prob. Code § 6122(f); Tentative Recommendation Relating to Wills and Intestate Succession, 16 Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Reports 2398 (1982)], since the case law in effect before that date provided that dissolution or annulment of a marriage had no effect on a will previously executed by one of the parties [ Estate of Patterson (1923) 64 Cal. App. 643, 646, 222 P. 374] . An annulment or dissolution that occurs on or after January 1, 1985, generally will revoke any provision of the will that benefits the former spouse [Prob. Code § 6122].

Unless the will expressly provides otherwise, if a person executes a will and the person's marriage is later dissolved or annulled by a dissolution or annulment occurring on or after January 1, 1985, the dissolution or annulment will revoke any disposition or appointment of property made by the will to the former spouse, any provision of the will conferring a general or special power of appointment on the former spouse, and any provision of the will nominating the former spouse as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian [Prob. Code § 6122(a)]. This rule applies whenever a dissolution or annulment occurs after the will was executed. There is no requirement that the will be executed after the marriage. In one case, the testator executed a holographic will in favor of a woman with whom he was living but to whom he was not then married. Some time after the will was executed, the testator married the woman. Still later, the marriage was terminated by dissolution. The court held that the will was revoked by the dissolution, even though it was executed before the marriage [ Estate of Reeves (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 651, 658-659, 284 Cal. Rptr. 650] .

Any marriage that has been finally terminated by a valid judgment of dissolution or annulment will be sufficient to revoke the provisions of a previously executed will [Prob. Code § 6122(d); see Prob. Code § 78(a)]. A judgment that is not recognized as valid (whether obtained in California or outside the state) will still be effective to revoke the provisions of a previously executed will if the person in whose favor the provisions were made subsequently participates in a marriage ceremony with a third person [Prob. Code § 6122(d); see Prob. Code § 78(d)]. An invalid judgment will also be sufficient to revoke will provisions in favor of a person who did not subsequently marry a third person but who originally obtained or consented to the judgment, unless the person later participated in a marriage ceremony with the testator or lived with the testator as husband and wife [Prob. Code § 6122(d); see Prob. Code § 78]. A judgment of legal separation will not revoke provisions of a previously executed will [Prob. Code § 6122(d)].

When will provisions are revoked because of a dissolution or annulment of a marriage, property that would have passed to the former spouse but for the revocation will pass as if the former spouse failed to survive the testator [Prob. Code § 6122(c)(1)]. Other provisions of the will conferring any power or office on the former spouse must be interpreted as if the former spouse failed to survive the testator [Prob. Code § 6122(c)(2)]. For example, provisions of a trust incorporated in a decedent's will, appointing the decedent's wife as trustee, granting her a power of appointment, or transferring any property or income from property to her, were revoked by Prob. Code § 6122 on the dissolution of their marriage, because that statute provides that the terms of a trust incorporated in a will must be administered and distributed as though the former spouse had predeceased the decedent [ Estate of Coleman (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 380, 389, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282] .

Although Prob. Code § 6122 does not address the effect of dissolution on devises to children of the former spouse, the courts have held that unless a contrary intention is indicated in the will, it is generally presumed that a testator intends to exclude the children of an ex-spouse from taking under the will [ Estate of Jones (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 326, 332, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 637 (residuary bequest to adult step-daughter was revoked by her mother's dissolution from testator); Estate of Hermon (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 1531-1532, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 577 (court called on legislature to adopt provision similar to that set forth in Uniform Probate Code, which provides that dissolution revokes not only testamentary bequests to former spouse but also bequests to former spouse's relatives)]. Evidence that the testator continued to have a relationship with the child of a former spouse following dissolution may show an intent by the testator to continue to have the child take under the will [ Estate of Jones (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 326, 332, 342, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 637 ].

If any disposition or other provision of a will is revoked solely by reason of the dissolution or annulment of a marriage, it will be revived by the testator's remarriage to the former spouse [Prob. Code § 6122(b); see Prob. Code § 78(a)].

Dissolution or annulment of a marriage, and termination of a domestic partnership [see § 61.19[4]], are the only circumstances that will revoke a will [Prob. Code § 6122(e)]. However, if a testator marries or has a child after executing a will, the spouse or child ordinarily will qualify as "omitted heirs" and have important property rights that can render the will largely ineffective [see Prob. Code §§ 21610, 21620; see also § 61.16[2], [3]].

[4] Revocation by Termination of Domestic Partnership

[a] Meaning of Domestic Partnership

Under the California Domestic Partner Rights and Responsibilities Act of 2003 (the Act) [Fam. Code §§ 297-299.3], a domestic partnership may be formed when two persons who meet specific requirements complete and file a declaration of domestic partnership with the Secretary of State. In order to file a valid declaration, the two parties must meet the following requirements [Prob. Code § 37; Fam. Code § 297(b)]:

- Both must have a common residence. "Common residence" means both domestic partners must share the same residence, but it is not necessary that the legal right to possess residence be in both of their names. Domestic partners may have a common residence even if one or both have additional residences, and they do not cease to have a common residence if one leaves the residence but intends to return [Fam. Code § 297(c)].
- Neither is married or a part of another domestic partnership.
- Neither is related by blood in a way that would prevent them from being married in the state of California.
- Both are over age 18.
- Both are either of the same sex or one or both meet the eligibility criteria under Title II of the Social Security Act for old-age insurance benefits [42 U.S.C. § 1381]. Persons of opposite sexes may not form a valid domestic partnership unless at least one is 62 years of age.
- Both are capable of consenting to a domestic partnership.

As of January 1, 2005, each person filing a declaration of domestic partnership must state in the declaration that he or she consents to the jurisdiction of the superior courts of California for the purpose of a proceeding to obtain a judgment of dissolution or nullity of the domestic partnership or for legal separation of the partners in the domestic partnership, or for any other proceeding related to the partners' rights and obligations, even if one or both partners ceases to be a resident of, or to maintain a domicile in, California [Fam. Code § 298(c)(3)].

Effective January 1, 2005, registered domestic partners have the same rights, protections, and benefits, and are subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law, whether they derive from statutes, administrative regulations, court rules, government policies, common law, or any other provisions or sources of law, as are granted to and imposed on spouses [Fam. Code § 297.5(a); see Bouley v. Long Beach Memorial Medical Center (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 601, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 813 (domestic partner has right under Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 to bring wrongful death action for death of his or her partner); see also Armijo v. Miles (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1405, 1422-1424, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 623 (giving domestic partner right to bring wrongful death action for death of his or her partner does not violate California Defense of Marriage Act (Fam. Code § 308.5), which specifies that only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California)]. A surviving registered domestic partner, following the other partner's death, has the same rights, protections, and benefits, and is subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law, as are granted to and imposed on a widow or widower [Fam. Code § 297.5(c)]. However, the Act is not intended to repeal or adversely affect any other ways in which relationships between adults may be recognized or given effect in California, or the legal consequences of those relationships, including, among other things, civil marriage, enforcement of "palimony" agreements, enforcement of powers of attorney, appointment of conservators or guardians, and petitions for second parent or limited consent adoption [Stats. 2003, ch. 421, § 2].

The legislature has made clear its intention in the domestic partnership law to substantially equalize the status of registered domestic partners and spouses [ Koebke v. Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 824, 837, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565, 115 P.3d 1212] . To couples who meet the requirements of establishing a domestic partnership under the domestic partnership law and who have registered under that law, the legislature has granted legal recognition comparable to marriage, both procedurally and in terms of the substantive rights and obligations granted to and imposed on the partners, which are supported by policy considerations similar to those favoring marriage. These rights and responsibilities are not shared by couples who cohabit or who have not registered as domestic partners [ Koebke v. Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 824, 845, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565, 115 P.3d 1212 (finding that in light of domestic partnership law, Unruh Act requires businesses to treat registered domestic partners same as spouses; see Civ. Code § 51(b) (prohibiting discrimination on basis of marital status or sexual orientation)].

The legislature's enactment of Fam. Code § 297.5, giving registered domestic partners the same rights and obligations as spouses, is not an improper legislative amendment of the defense of marriage initiative (Proposition 22), as codified in Fam. Code § 308.5, which states that only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California. Because Proposition 22 did not address domestic partnerships, changing the domestic partnership law did not amend the initiative [ Knight v. Superior Court (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 14, 22-31, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687] .

Persons who have filed a declaration of domestic partnership may not file a new declaration or enter a civil marriage with someone other than their registered domestic partner unless the most recent domestic partnership has been terminated or a final judgment of dissolution or nullity of the most recent domestic partnership has been entered. This prohibition does not apply when a previous domestic partnership has ended because of the death of one of the partners [Fam. Code § 298.5(c)].

As of January 1, 2005, a legal union of two persons of the same sex, other than a marriage, that was validly formed in another jurisdiction and that is substantially equivalent to a domestic partnership under the Act, must be recognized as a valid domestic partnership in California regardless of whether it bears the name "domestic partnership" [Fam. Code § 299.2].

For discussion of declarations of domestic partnership, and the declaration of domestic partnership form, see Ch. 110, Nonmarital Cohabitation Agreements and Related Transactions, §§ 110.50 et seq., 110.220 et seq.

[b] Termination of Domestic Partnership

Until January 1, 2005, a domestic partnership was terminated when one of the following occurred [Fam. Code § 299(a) (prior to amendment by Stats. 2003, ch. 421, operative 1/1/05)]:

- One partner gave or sent by certified mail to the other partner a written notice that he or she is terminating the partnership.
- One of the domestic partners died.
- One of the domestic partners married.
- The domestic partners no longer had a common residence.

On termination of a domestic partnership prior to January 1, 2005, at least one former partner was required to mail a completed notice of termination of domestic partnership to the Secretary of State by certified mail. If the domestic partnership was terminated because of the death or marriage of a domestic partner, the termination date was the date indicated on the notice of termination of domestic partnership form. Otherwise, the date on which the notice of termination of domestic partnership was received by the Secretary of State is deemed the actual termination date of the domestic partnership [Fam. Code § 299(b) (prior to amendment by Stats. 2003, ch. 421, operative 1/1/05)].

As of January 1, 2005, a domestic partnership may be terminated by filing a notice of termination of domestic partnership with the Secretary of State, provided all of the following conditions exist at the time of the filing [Fam. Code § 299(a)]:

- Both domestic partners have signed the notice of termination.
- There are no children of the parties' relationship born before or after registration of the domestic partnership or adopted by the parties after registration of the domestic partnership, and neither of the domestic partners, to their knowledge, is pregnant.
- The domestic partnership has not lasted for more than five years.
- Neither partner has an interest in real property, wherever situated, with the exception of the lease of a residence occupied by either partner that does not include an option to purchase and that terminates within one year from the date of filing the notice of termination.
- There are no unpaid obligations in excess of the amount specified in Fam. Code § 2400(a)(6) ($4000), as adjusted for inflation under Fam. Code § 2400(b), incurred by either or both of the partners after registration of the domestic partnership, excluding the amount of any unpaid obligation for an automobile.
- The total fair market value of community property assets, excluding all encumbrances and automobiles, including any deferred compensation or retirement plan, is less than the amount specified in Fam. Code § 2400(a)(7) ($25,000), as adjusted for inflation under Fam. Code § 2400(b), and neither partner has separate property assets, excluding all encumbrances and automobiles, in excess of that amount.
- The partners have executed an agreement setting forth the division of assets and assumption of liabilities of the community property, and have executed any documents, title certificates, bills of sale, or other evidence of transfer necessary to effectuate the agreement.

- The partners have waived any rights to support by the other partner.
- The partners have read and understand a brochure prepared by the Secretary of State describing the requirements, nature, and effect of terminating a domestic partnership.
- Both partners desire that the partnership be terminated.

Beginning January 1, 2005, a domestic partnership that does not meet the conditions specified above may only be terminated by an action for dissolution of the domestic partnership, nullity of the domestic partnership, or legal separation of the partners [Fam. Code § 299(c), (d)]. A domestic partnership is terminated six months after the date the notice of termination is filed [Fam. Code § 299(b)].

If a domestic partnership is terminated by the death of one of the parties and a notice of termination was not filed by either party before the decedent's death, the domestic partner who survives the decedent is a surviving domestic partner, and is entitled to the rights of a surviving domestic partner as provided in the Probate Code [Prob. Code § 37(b); see discussion in [c], below]. This includes the right to an intestate share of the deceased partner's separate property [Prob. Code § 6401(c)]. A surviving domestic partner is entitled to the same intestate share of the decedent's separate property to which a surviving spouse would be entitled [Prob. Code § 6401(c)].

[c] Effect on Domestic Partner's Will

The termination of a testator's domestic partnership serves to revoke certain provisions of the testator's will, if the will was executed on or after January 1, 2002 [Prob. Code § 6122.1(d)]. Unless the will expressly provides otherwise, if a person executes a will and the person's domestic partnership is terminated, the termination will revoke any disposition or appointment of property made by the will to the former domestic partner, any provision of the will conferring a general or special power of appointment on the former domestic partner, and any provision of the will nominating the former domestic partner as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian [Prob. Code § 6122.1(a)].

When will provisions are revoked because of the termination of the testator's domestic partnership, property that would have passed to the former domestic partner if the provisions had not been revoked instead passes as if the former domestic partner failed to survive the testator [Prob. Code § 6122.1(c)(1)]. Other provisions of the will conferring some power or office on the former domestic partner will be interpreted as if the former domestic partner failed to survive the testator [Prob. Code § 6122.1(c)(2)].

Any disposition or other provision of a will that is revoked solely by reason of the termination of the testator's domestic partnership is revived if the testator re-establishes another domestic partnership with the former domestic partner [Prob. Code § 6122.1(b)].

[5] Revival of Revoked Will

The revocation of a will does not revive an earlier will executed by the same testator unless it is evident from the circumstances of the revocation, or from the testator's contemporary or subsequent declarations, that the testator intended the earlier will to take effect as executed [Prob. Code § 6123(a)]. This rule applies only to wills revoked by later wills which expressly or by inconsistency revoke the earlier wills; wills revoked by physical destruction cannot be revived by later revocation of a subsequent will, regardless of the circumstances. If a testator executes a third will revoking a second will which had the effect of revoking a first will, in whole or in part, the first will remains revoked unless it appears from the terms of the third will that the testator intended the first will to take effect [Prob. Code § 6123(b)].

If any provision of a will is revoked solely by reason of the dissolution or annulment of the testator's marriage [see Prob. Code § 6122 and discussion in [3], above] the testator's remarriage to the former spouse will revive it [Prob. Code § 6122(b)]. Similarly, if any provision of a will is revoked solely by reason of the termination of the testator's domestic partnership [see Prob. Code § 6122.1 and discussion in [4], above], the provision will be revived if the testator establishes another domestic partnership with the former domestic partner [Prob. Code § 6122.1(b)].

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

§ 61.20 Interpretation of Wills

[1] Governing Law

The interpretation of a will is governed by the local law of the state selected by the testator in the will, unless the application of that law is contrary to the rights of the surviving spouse in community and quasi-community property, the family protection provisions of the Probate Code [see Prob. Code §§ 6500-6615], or any other public policy of California applicable to the disposition [Prob. Code § 21103; see Prob. Code § 21101]. If the testator does not specify what law will apply, traditional choice of law rules will control [see Law Revision Commission Comment to former Prob. Code § 100 (repealed Jan. 1, 1985)]. Under these rules, personal property is governed by the law of the place of the testator's domicile at the time of death [ Estate of Moore (1961) 190 Cal. App. 2d 833, 842, 12 Cal. Rptr. 436 ; see Civ. Code § 946], while real property is governed by the law of the situs [see Estate of Reynolds (1933) 217 Cal. 557, 561, 20 P.2d 323].

Real property situated within California is governed by California law [Civ. Code § 755]. However, if a married person dies while domiciled outside California and leaves a valid will disposing of California real property that is not the community property of the decedent and the surviving spouse, the surviving spouse has the same right to elect to take an interest in that property against the will as he or she would have if the property were located in the decedent's domicile at death [Prob. Code § 120].

[2] Rules of Construction

The Probate Code provides general rules for the construction of instruments [see Prob. Code §§ 21101-21140]. These rules apply broadly to wills, trusts, deeds, and other instruments [Prob. Code § 21101].

The first and most important rule for the interpretation of a will is that the intention of the testator as expressed in the will controls the legal effect of the dispositions made in the will [Prob. Code § 21102(a)]. Accordingly, the other rules apply only when the intention of the testator is not otherwise indicated by the will [Prob. Code § 21102(b)]. These statutory provisions, however, do not limit the use of extrinsic evidence, to the extent otherwise authorized by law, to determine the transferor's intent [Prob. Code § 21102(c)].

Under the Probate Code rules, all parts of a will are to be construed in relation to each other and so as, if possible, to form a consistent whole. If the meaning of any part of a will is ambiguous or doubtful, it may be explained by any reference to or recital of that part in another part of the instrument [Prob. Code § 21121]. The words of a will must be interpreted in such a way as to give some effect to every expression in the instrument, and not so that any of the expressions will become inoperative. Preference must be given to an interpretation that will prevent intestacy or failure of a transfer rather than one that will result in an intestacy or failure of a transfer [Prob. Code § 21120].

The words of a will are to be given their ordinary and grammatical meaning, unless the intention to use them in another sense is clear and their intended meaning can be ascertained. Technical words are not necessary to give effect to a disposition in a will. However, technical words are to be considered as having been used in their technical sense unless the context clearly indicates a contrary intention or it appears that the will was drawn solely by the testator and the testator was unacquainted with the technical sense [Prob. Code § 21122].

In one case, for example, the statutory rules of construction were applied to determine what the phrase "my money" meant in the dispositive provisions of a holographic will. The court concluded that the testator used the term "my money" in its most flexible sense to include all of his financial assets (including treasury bills, money market accounts, and savings bonds), and not merely his bank accounts, because this construction would avoid intestacy, was in accord with the general scheme of the will to benefit the two beneficiaries named in the will, and also was in accord with the testator's lack of legal sophistication as shown in other parts of the will [ Estate of Goyette (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 67, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 760 ] .

Wills containing gifts or trusts intended to qualify for the marital deduction are subject to special rules of construction and interpretation to insure that they will be construed in accordance with applicable federal estate tax requirements [see Prob. Code §§ 21520-21526; see also Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.20].

Extrinsic evidence is admissible to determine whether a writing constitutes a will, or to determine the meaning of a will or portion of a will if the meaning is unclear [Prob. Code § 6111.5].

[3] Incorporation by Reference

A writing in existence when a will is executed may be incorporated into the will by reference if the language of the will manifests an intent to do so and describes the writing sufficiently to permit its identification [Prob. Code § 6130].

Nontestamentary documents that have been incorporated in wills include previously executed wills, letters of instruction, and deeds to real property [see, e.g., Estate of Nielson (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 796, 804, 165 Cal. Rptr. 319; Estate of Foxworth (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 784, 790, 50 Cal. Rptr. 237; Simon v. Grayson (1940) 15 Cal. 2d 531, 533-534, 102 P.2d 1081 ] .

Many testators want to make small gifts of personal items to relatives and friends as tokens of remembrance, love and affection, and so on. Since the items in question and the identities of the recipients often change over time, it is a frequent practice for testators to make such dispositions in an informal document separate from the will and then to incorporate the terms of that document into the will, to avoid the need for a formal amendment of the will each time the testator wants to add, delete, or change such a gift. To make it easier for testators to create such documents, and to subsequently amend them, without running afoul of the rules governing incorporation of subsequently-executed documents by reference, the legislature has enacted Prob. Code § 6132, discussed below.

Under Prob. Code § 6132, a testator may refer to a writing that directs disposition of tangible personal property not otherwise disposed of by a will [Prob. Code § 6132; see Ch. 63, Will Provisions, §§ 64.494 (will provision referencing gifts made in separate writing), 64.495 (separate writing making gifts of testator's tangible personal property)]. Such a writing is only effective if an unrevoked will refers to the writing, the writing is dated and is either in the handwriting of or signed by the testator, and the writing describes the items and the recipients of the property with reasonable certainty [Prob. Code § 6132(a)]. The total value of property identified and disposed of in the writing must not exceed $25,000, and the individual value of each item must not exceed $5,000. Items with a value in excess of $5,000 described in the writing will be disposed of as provided in the remainder clause of the will [Prob. Code § 6132(g)]. For the preceding purposes, "personal property" includes articles of personal or household use or ornament, including, but not limited to, furniture, furnishings, automobiles, boats, and jewelry, as well as precious metals in any tangible form, such as bullion or coins and articles held for investment purposes, but does not include coins or currency kept or acquired for their historical, artistic, collectable, or investment value apart from their normal use as legal tender for payment. Real property, mobilehomes [see Civ. Code § 798.3 (definition)] intangible property, such as evidences of indebtedness, bank accounts and other monetary deposits, documents of title, or securities, are also excluded [Prob. Code § 6132(h)].

The writing may be written or signed before or after the execution of the will, and need not have significance apart from its effect on the dispositions of property made by the will [Prob. Code § 6132(c)]. The testator may make subsequent handwritten or signed changes to any writing. If there is an inconsistent disposition of tangible personal property as between writings, the most recent writing controls [Prob. Code § 6132(d)].

If a writing directing disposition of tangible personal property omits a statement as to the date of its execution, resulting in doubt over its provisions or the provisions of another writing inconsistent with it are controlling, then the writing omitting the statement is invalid to the extent of its inconsistency unless the time of its execution is established to be after the date of execution of the other writing [Prob. Code § 6132(e)(1)]. If the writing omits a statement as to the date of its execution, and it is established that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at any time during which the writing may have been executed, the writing is invalid unless it is established that it was executed at a time when the testator had testamentary capacity [Prob. Code § 6132(e)(2)].

A writing that meets the requirements of Prob. Code § 6132 will be given effect as if it were actually contained in the will itself, except that if any person designated to receive property in the writing dies before the testator, the property will pass as further directed in the writing and, in the absence of any further directions, the disposition will lapse [Prob. Code § 6132(c)].

If a writing does not satisfy the conditions specified above, evidence may still be introduced regarding the testator's intent with respect to the disposition of the tangible personal property in question [Prob. Code § 6132(b)].

For a will provision referring to gifts of tangible personal property made in a separate writing, see Ch. 63, Will Provisions, § 63.494. For a form for a separate writing disposing of items of the testator's tangible personal property in accordance with Prob. Code § 6132, see Ch. 63, Will Provisions, § 63.495.

[4] Events of Independent Significance

A will may dispose of property by reference to acts and events that have significance apart from their effect on dispositions made by the will [Prob. Code § 6131]. These acts and events may occur before or after the execution of the will, or before or after the testator's death. The execution or revocation of the will of another person is such an event [Prob. Code § 6131].

CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.21

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.21 California Statutory Will

[1] In General

The California statutory will is a simple will form prescribed by the Probate Code [see Prob. Code §§ 6223(a), 6240]. It is designed to be made available to consumers in printed form and to be completed without the help of attorneys. The State Bar sells printed copies of the form to attorneys and the public.

Statutory wills are inflexible documents and rarely used by attorneys. In special circumstances, however, an attorney may use a California statutory will, or provide advice or assistance to a client who wishes to use one. If a client's estate is relatively simple, the attorney may help the client complete the statutory form, or at least provide the client with the printed form and some directions as to its use. California statutory wills have the advantage of being widely recognized and are almost always preferable to any will that a non-attorney might prepare for himself or herself. A California statutory will may also be an appropriate stopgap measure when a client needs a will at once and intends to prepare a more complex will at some time in the future.

[2] Capacity to Make

Any person of sound mind and over the age of 18 years may execute a California statutory will [Prob. Code § 6220]. Since the Family Code authorizes an emancipated minor to make or revoke a will [see Fam. Code § 7050(e)(6)], it appears that an emancipated minor also has the capacity to make a statutory will [see Fam. Code § 7002 (when minor is emancipated) and discussion in § 61.11[1]].

California statutory wills are subject to the same rules of testamentary capacity as other wills [see Prob. Code § 6220]. For discussion of those rules, see § 61.11.

[3] Execution and Witnesses

Prob. Code § 6221 states that to execute the California statutory will, the testator must complete the appropriate blanks and sign the will, and each witness must observe the testator's signature and sign his or her name in the presence of the testator. The same section states that the will may be executed "only" in the manner specified.

Notwithstanding Prob. Code § 6221, the Court of Appeal has held that the testator need not personally complete the blanks on the form if he or she signs the will and if the will is signed by two witnesses who meet the requirements specified in Prob. Code § 6110 for the execution and attestation of a formal, witnessed will. In Estate of Perry (1996) [ Estate of Perry (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 440, 58 Cal. Rptr.2d 797 ], the testator was a patient in a convalescent home. His nephew purchased a California statutory will form in a stationery store and asked a friend to fill out the blanks. The nephew took the completed form to his uncle in the convalescent hospital, and the uncle signed it in the place indicated. Two witnesses also signed the will. After the testator's death, the will was contested on the ground that the testator did not personally complete the blanks. The trial court denied probate, but the Court of Appeal reversed, holding that when a will is signed by the testator and two attesting witnesses the general execution requirements of Prob. Code § 6110 are satisfied, even though the specific requirements of Prob. Code § 6221 are not. The Court of Appeal noted that Prob. Code § 6226(c) provides that, "notwithstanding Section 6110," a document executed on a California statutory will form is valid as a will if the form is signed by the testator, the court is satisfied that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the will and intended it to take testamentary effect, and the testamentary intent of the maker as reflect in the document is clear. The court concluded that this provision showed that Prob. Code § 6110 is generally applicable to the California statutory will, as it is to formal, witnessed wills [ Estate of Perry (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 440, 445, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 ]. Thus a will that meets the requirements of Prob. Code § 6110 cannot be denied probate merely because the blanks were not completed by the testator as specified in Prob. Code § 6221. Of course, it is a question of fact whether all of the requirements specified in Prob. Code § 6226(c) have been met in a given case; notwithstanding this, it is improper to deny probate to a California statutory will merely because the testator did not personally complete the blanks [ Estate of Perry (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 440, 445, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 ; see also Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 (execution requirements met notwithstanding testator's failure to fill in some blanks on statutory will)].

A California statutory will that is not signed by two witnesses is nevertheless valid as a will if all of the following requirements are shown to be satisfied by clear and convincing evidence [Prob. Code § 6226(c)]:

- The form is signed by the testator.
- The court is satisfied that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the will and intended it to have testamentary effect.
- The testamentary intent of the maker as reflected in the document is clear.

[4] Revocation and Amendment

A California statutory will may be revoked and amended by codicil in the same manner as other wills [Prob. Code § 6226(a)]. If, after executing a statutory will, the testator's marriage is dissolved or annulled, the dissolution or annulment revokes any disposition of property made by the will to the former spouse and any nomination of the former spouse as executor, trustee, or guardian [Prob. Code § 6227(a)]. If the testator later remarries the former spouse, any disposition or nomination that was revoked solely by reason of such a dissolution or annulment is revived by the remarriage [Prob. Code § 6227(a)].

[5] Limited Usefulness

The California statutory will is not designed to reduce death taxes or other taxes, to transfer business-related assets, to create trusts, to transfer assets located outside California, to disinherit the testator's spouse or descendants, or to dispose of valuable interests in pension or profit-sharing plans [Prob. Code § 6240, Question 8].

Words in the printed form should not be crossed out, and there should be no additions to the printed form [Prob. Code § 6240, Question 9]. Any additions or deletions on the face of the form not made in accordance with the instructions will be given effect only when clear and convincing evidence shows that they would effectuate the clear intent of the testator [Prob. Code § 6226(b)]. In the absence of such a showing, the court may determine that the addition or deletion is ineffective and must be disregarded, or it may determine that all or part of the will is invalid, whichever is more likely to be consistent with the testator's intent [Prob. Code § 6226(b)].

The complete text of the California statutory will is set forth in Prob. Code § 6240 and reproduced in California Wills & Trusts, Div. III, Complete Will Forms, Will 20 (Matthew Bender).

§ 61.22 Uniform International Wills

[1] In General

An international will is a will that is executed in conformity with Prob. Code §§ 6381-6384 [Prob. Code § 6380(a)], which form a part of the Uniform International Wills Act [Prob. Code §§ 6380-6390]. This Act, which was adopted in California in 1979, is designed to increase the uniformity of wills among different states, to minimize the need for determining domiciles and applicable laws, and to reduce the likelihood that wills executed in one state or country will be invalidated because of noncompliance with the purely formal requirements of other states or counties [Review of Selected 1979 California Legislation, Administration of Estates: International Wills, 11 Pacific L. J. 295 (1980)]. Under the Act, a will is valid as to form, irrespective of the place where it was made, the location of the assets, and the nationality, domicile, or residence of the testator, if it is made in the form of an international will that complies with the requirements of the Act [Prob. Code § 6381(a)].

An international will may fill the special needs of a California resident who plans to move out of the state after executing a will in the state, or of a nonresident who seeks to execute a will in California. Because international wills are widely recognized in the United States and abroad, they may be taken to other jurisdictions with some assurance that they will not be invalidated in those jurisdictions. They may be revoked in the same manner as other wills [Prob. Code § 6386].

[2] Authorized Persons

An international will must be executed under the supervision or with the assistance of an "authorized person" or a "person authorized to act in connection with international wills" [Prob. Code § 6380(b)]. Under the Act, "authorized persons" and "persons authorized to act in connection with international wills" mean individuals who have been admitted to practice law before the courts of California and who are in good standing as active law practitioners of the state and persons, including members of the diplomatic and consular service of the United States designated by Foreign Service regulations, who are empowered by the laws of the United States to supervise the execution of international wills [Prob. Code §§ 6380(b), 6388].

[3] Execution and Witnesses

Although an international will must be in writing [Prob. Code § 6382(a)], it may be written in any language, by hand or other means, and by the testator or some other person [Prob. Code § 6382(a)].

The testator must declare in the presence of two witnesses and of "a person authorized to act in connection with international wills" [see Prob. Code §§ 6380(b), 6388 and discussion in [2], above] that the document is his or her will and that he or she knows its contents [Prob. Code § 6382(b)]. The testator need not inform the witnesses or the "authorized person" of the contents of the will [Prob. Code § 6382(b)].

The testator must sign the will or, if he or she has previously signed it, acknowledge his or her signature in the presence of the witnesses and the authorized person [Prob. Code § 6382(c)]. If the testator is unable to sign, the absence of a signature will not affect the validity of the will if the testator indicates the reason for his or her inability to sign and the authorized person notes the reason on the will [Prob. Code § 6382(d)]. In that case, any other person present (including the authorized person or one of the witnesses) may sign the testator's name at the testator's direction, if the authorized person notes this on the will [Prob. Code § 6382(d)]. There is no requirement that any person sign the testator's name for the testator [Prob. Code § 6382(d)]. The witnesses and the authorized person must then and there attest the will by signing in the presence of the testator [Prob. Code § 6382(e)].

[4] Certificate of Due Execution

The "authorized person" [see Prob. Code §§ 6380(b), 6388 and discussion in [2], above] must sign and attach a certificate to the will establishing that the requirements of the Act have been fulfilled [Prob. Code § 6384]. The certificate must be substantially in the form set forth in Prob. Code § 6384. The authorized person is required to keep a copy of the certificate and deliver another to the testator [Prob. Code § 6384]. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the certificate of the authorized person is conclusive as to the formal validity of the instrument as a will under the International Wills Act [Prob. Code § 6385]. However, the absence or irregularity of a certificate will not affect the validity of the will [Prob. Code § 6385]. The complete text of the international will certificate is set forth in Prob. Code § 6384 and reproduced in full in California Wills & Trusts, Div. IV, Individual Will Provisions, Alt. 100.40-1 (Matthew Bender).

[5] International Wills Registry System

The California Secretary of State has established an international wills registry under which "authorized persons" [see Prob. Code §§ 6380(b), 6388 and discussion in [2], above] may register information regarding the execution of international wills [see Prob. Code § 6389]. The information that may be registered is limited to the testator's name, Social Security number (or other individual identifying number established by law, if any), address, date, and place of birth, and the intended place of deposit or safekeeping of the instrument pending the testator's death [Prob. Code § 6389]. The information must be kept in the strictest confidence until the testator's death, and then made available to any person desiring information who presents a death certificate or other satisfactory evidence of death to the registry [Prob. Code § 6389]. At the request of the "authorized person," the Secretary of State may cause the information it receives to be transmitted to the registry of another jurisdiction as identified by the testator, if that other system adheres to rules protecting the confidentiality of information similar to those established in California [Prob. Code § 6389].

For further discussion of international wills and the Uniform International Wills Act, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 11, Requisites of a Valid Will (Matthew Bender).

§ 61.110 Capacity to Make Will

1. Determine whether client has testamentary capacity.

NOTE:

Generally, any individual who is 18 years of age or older and of sound mind has the capacity to make a will [Prob. Code § 6100(a)]. Although the attorney need not subject a client to unnecessary scrutiny, an attorney should not prepare a will for a client who obviously lacks the necessary capacity. If the attorney is to act as one of the witnesses to the will, some inquiry as to the client's capacity is clearly necessary, since a witness to a will must swear that it was executed "in all particulars as prescribed by law" [see Prob. Code §§ 8220, 8253]. For discussion of testamentary capacity, see § 61.11. For discussion of the attorney's ethical duty to discover a client's lack of testamentary capacity, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 4, Ethical Considerations and Professional Responsibility, § 4.06[1] (Matthew Bender).

2. Determine whether client's testamentary intent is free from vitiating influences, such as:

NOTE:

The execution of a will is ineffective if it was procured by duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence [Prob. Code § 6014; for discussion, see § 60.12[2]-[4]].

a. Undue influence.

b. Fraud.

c. Duress.

d. Menace.

e. Mistake.

§ 61.111 Property Subject to Disposition by Will

NOTE:

It is important to determine what property the client owns or has an interest in, and what property is subject to disposition under the client's will. The two lists of property will not always be the same. Many items of property will be paid, delivered, or otherwise transferred after the client's death to other persons pursuant to a joint tenancy survivorship, contractual provision, beneficiary designation, pay-on-death direction, or other instruction and will not be subject to disposition pursuant to the client's will. Property that will not be subject to disposition under the client's will generally includes such items as property held in trusts [see discussion in Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.17[2], [3]], joint tenancy assets [see discussion in Ch. 60, Estate Planning, §§ 60.12[5], 60.13[1][f], 60.17[4][b]], accounts in banks or other savings institutions with pay-on-death payees, multiple-party accounts [see discussion Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.17[4][c]], the proceeds of life insurance policies that are not payable to the estate or the executor [see discussion in Ch. 60, Estate Planning, §§ 60.13[1][h], 60.17[5]], and the proceeds of retirement and pension funds with designated pay-on-death beneficiaries.

1. Determine nature, value, location, and other relevant facts relating to client's property, including:
  - a. Real property.
  - b. Tangible personal property.
  - c. Investments, including securities, mutual funds, stocks, bonds, and similar items.

2. Characterize each item of client's property to determine whether it is:

NOTE:

It is essential to properly characterize property as separate, community, or quasi-community, as this will effect the client's power of testamentary disposition over the property. For general discussion of the characterization of property, and of the different types of property that may be disposed of by will, see § 61.14.

- a. Client's separate property.
- b. Community property of client and client's spouse.
- c. Quasi-community property of client and client's spouse.

3. Determine whether client holds property in any of following forms:

NOTE:

Property owned in tenancy in common is subject to disposition by will, while property held in joint tenancy is not [see, e.g., Estate of England (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4, 284 Cal. Rptr. 361], unless the joint tenancy is first severed [for discussion, see § 61.10[3][c]]. For a general discussion of estate planning considerations related to property held in joint tenancy and tenancy in common, see Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.12[5], [6].

- a. Tenancy in common.
- b. Joint tenancy.

4. Determine whether there are any contractual limitations on client's power to dispose of property by will, such as:

NOTE:

Various types of contracts can affect the client's power to dispose of property by will. The most obvious of these is the contract to make a will, not to revoke a will, or to die intestate [see [d], below; see also discussion in Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.17[8][b]]. However, other contracts that may also have important estate-planning consequences are premarital agreements, postnuptial agreements, and marital settlement agreements [for general coverage, see Ch. 111, Premarital Agreements, Ch. 112, Post nuptial Agreements; Ch. 120, Complete Marital Settlement Agreements].

- a. Premarital agreement.
- b. Postnuptial agreement.
- c. Marital settlement agreement.
- d. Contract to make will, not to revoke will, or to die intestate.

e. Partnership agreement.

f. Buy-sell agreement.

5. Determine whether client's testamentary power is subject to statutory limitation because client is resident of Veteran's Home of California.

NOTE:

If a veteran became a resident of the Veterans' Home of California before January 1, 1984, the veteran's will cannot leave any part of his or her estate to an officer or employee of the home unless the officer or employee would be eligible to take by intestate succession [Mil. & Vet. Code § 1035.1(a)]. If the veteran became a resident of the home after January 1, 1984, and is a resident at the time of death, the veteran's will is invalid insofar as it purports to dispose of money or personal property to anyone other than the veteran's spouse, children, grandchildren, father, or mother [Mil. & Vet. Code § 1035.1(b)].

6. Determine whether client has interest in any property held in trust, either under trust established by client or trust established by some other person for client's benefit.

NOTE:

A client will quite often establish a revocable inter vivos ("living") trust in connection with the execution of a will. In many cases, a client who consults an attorney for the preparation of a will may already have created such a trust. In either case, the provisions of the will should be closely coordinated with the provisions of the trust so that the client's overall estate plan is consistent. A will may devise property to the trustee of a revocable inter vivos trust [see Prob. Code § 6300 and discussion in § 60.211[1][b]]. Such a devise is called a "pour-over" and is commonly used in many estate plans [see discussion in Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.17[1][b], [c]]. For general coverage of revocable inter vivos trusts, see Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms .

7. Determine whether client owns any life insurance policies, whether on client's own life or life of other person(s).

NOTE:

Although the death benefits under a life insurance policy may be payable to the client's estate, it is more common for such benefits to be payable to some other beneficiary, such as the client's spouse, children, or even a life insurance trust created by the client. If the proceeds are not payable to the estate, they will not be subject to disposition under the will. However, they will be subject to estate taxation on the client's death if the client holds any "incidents of ownership" in the policy [see I.R.C. § 2042(2) and discussion in Ch. 72, Irrevocable Trusts, § 72.12[2][e]].

8. Determine whether client owns any retirement accounts or plans, including qualified plans, individual retirement accounts (IRAs), or similar items.

NOTE:

Retirement accounts and plans typically provide for beneficiaries to whom the benefits will be paid after the client's death. When this is the case, they are not subject to disposition under the will.

§ 61.112 Potential Devises

NOTE:

This information will help the client and the attorney determine what provisions, if any, the will should make for potential devisees.

1. Determine whether client has spouse and, if so:
  - a. Date of marriage.
  - b. Whether client and spouse are living together or apart.
  - c. Approximate extent, location, value, and character of spouse's property.
  - d. Whether spouse has special financial, physical, or health needs that should be met after client's death.
  - e. Whether spouse is willing and able to act as executor of client's will [see § 61.116].
  - f. Whether spouse is willing and able to act as trustee of any trust created by client's will [see § 61.117].
2. If client is unmarried, determine whether client has domestic partner and, if so, whether:

NOTE:

The Family Code defines "domestic partners" as two adults who have chosen to share one another's lives in an intimate and committed relationship [Fam. Code § 297(a)].

a. Client and domestic partner have filed valid Declaration of Domestic Partnership with California Secretary of State [see Fam. Code §§ 298, 298.5].

NOTE:

Existence of a domestic partnership will invoke application of the will revocation provisions of Prob. Code § 6122.1 in the event that the domestic partnership is subsequently terminated [see discussion in § 61.19[4][c]].

b. If no declaration has been filed, whether:

(1) Client and domestic partner are eligible to file such a declaration and, if so;

NOTE:

The requirements for creating a domestic partnership are very specific, and not all cohabiting individuals qualify [see Fam. Code § 297(b)]. For discussion, see § 61.19[4].

(2) Whether or not there are any plans to file such a declaration.

c. Client and domestic partner have any written agreements or oral understandings regarding the ownership or disposition of their property.

3. Determine whether client has children and, if so:

a. Whether children are children of marriage of client and client's current spouse or of previous marriage.

b. Whether any of children are minors and, if so, whether they reside with client or elsewhere.

c. Whether any of children have special physical, emotional, or mental needs that should be met after client's death.

d. If any of children are adults, where they reside and whether they are willing and able to act as executor of client's will [see § 61.116].

e. If any of children are adults, whether they are willing and able to act as trustee of any trust created by client's will [see § 61.117].

f. Whether any of children have children of their own and, if so, whether client desires to make special provisions for them.

g. Whether any of the children are married and, if so, whether client desires to include provisions specifically including or excluding them from will or other estate planning documents.

4. Determine whether client has living parents and, if so, whether they have special needs that should be met after client's death.

5. Determine whether client has friends or other relatives who client wishes to receive property or other benefits under will.

NOTE:

While most clients will wish to leave property to family members, it is not uncommon for clients to leave property to other persons with whom they have important relationships, such as domestic partners or long-time friends.

§ 61.113 Need for Tax-Saving Strategies

1. Determine whether client's estate plan should include marital deduction devise:

NOTE:

The unlimited marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056] is one of the most useful tax-saving provisions of the federal estate tax law. Most tax-saving planning for married couples who have assets in excess of the amount of the available federal estate and gift tax unified credit involves at least some use or consideration of the marital deduction. For detailed coverage of the marital deduction, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions .

a. Free of trust.

b. In one of following trust forms:

NOTE:

The benefits of the marital deduction can be achieved by devising property to the surviving spouse, free of trust or in the form of one of the trust arrangements that satisfy the requirements of the deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(5), (7); Treas. Reg. § 20.2056(b)-2(b)]; for discussion, see § 61.212[1][c]].

(1) Qualified terminable interest property (QTIP) trust.

NOTE:

The QTIP trust [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(7)] is the most widely used type of marital deduction trust. It gives the surviving spouse a high degree of enjoyment and use of the trust property, while permitting the testator (or settlor) to determine in advance who will receive the property on the surviving spouse's death. This can be particularly desirable if one or both of the spouses have children by previous marriages and wish to ensure that those children will receive the trust property after the death of the surviving spouse. For discussion, see § 61.214[1][d]. For general description of the QTIP trust and its requirements, see §§ 71.13[4], 71.230[1].

(2) Life estate plus power of appointment trust.

NOTE:

A life estate plus power of appointment trust is one in which the income is payable to the surviving spouse annually or at more frequent intervals, the surviving spouse has a general power of appointment over the trust assets, and no person other than the surviving spouse has any power to appoint any part of the assets to any person other than the surviving spouse during the surviving spouse's lifetime [I.R.C. § 2056(b)(5)]. For general discussion of the requirements of this type of trust, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, §§ 71.13[5], 71.231[1].

(3) Qualified domestic (QDOT) trust.

NOTE:

A qualified domestic trust (QDOT) [see I.R.C. § 2056A] is a trust that is designed to qualify transfers to a noncitizen spouse for the unlimited marital deduction. The requirements for a QDOT are detailed and specific, and are designed to ensure that the noncitizen spouse cannot take assets out of the country to avoid taxation. When one of the spouses is not a citizen of the United States, a QDOT will often be the only practical alternative to substantial estate tax liability. For discussion, see § Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.13[7].

2. Determine whether value of client's estate is likely to exceed the "applicable exclusion amount" [see I.R.C. §§ 2010(c)] (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] available on client's death (or, if client is married, when combined with surviving spouse's estate on death of surviving spouse, if client is married) and, if so, whether preservation of this unified credit must be specifically included in will.

NOTE:

Every person has a unified credit against estate and gift taxes. The amount of this credit, called the "applicable credit amount," shelters a specified amount of the person's property, referred to as the "applicable exclusion amount," from gift and estate taxation [see I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505]. The applicable exclusion amount depends on the year of death. The amount is $675,000 for decedents dying in 2001, $1 million for decedents dying in 2002 and 2003, $1.5 million for decedents dying in 2004 and 2005, $2 million for decedents dying in 2006, 2007, and 2008, and $3.5 million for decedents dying in 2009 [I.R.C. § 2010(c)]. Lifetime giving may reduce both the applicable credit amount and the applicable exclusion amount that are available to an estate [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505(a)]; see discussion in § 60.14[5]]. In determining whether the value of the client's estate is likely to exceed the applicable exclusion amount available in the year of the client's death, all of the property that will be included in the client's gross estate [see I.R.C. § 2031] for federal estate tax purposes must be included, not just property that is likely to form a part of the probate estate. If the client is married, the probability that the second spouse to die will receive property from the first spouse to die and that the property will form part of the surviving spouse's gross estate must also be considered. For general discussion of the client's estate, see Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.12.

3. Determine whether client's estate plan should include bypass trust.

NOTE:

A bypass trust (sometimes called a "credit shelter" or "exemption equivalent" trust) is designed to confer substantial lifetime benefits on the lifetime beneficiary while limiting the powers of that beneficiary over the trust property in such a way that it will not be included in the beneficiary's gross estate for federal estate tax purposes upon the beneficiary's death. A bypass trust is often used in conjunction with a marital deduction trust to structure an estate plan that will confer substantial lifetime benefits on a surviving spouse while avoiding all estate tax on the death of the first spouse to die and reducing (if not entirely eliminating) estate tax on the death of the second spouse. However, a bypass trust may also be used to confer benefits on beneficiaries other than a surviving spouse. For discussion, see § 61.212[1][f].

4. Determine whether generation-skipping transfer taxes are likely to be due after client's death and, if so, whether will should include specific provisions to optimize use of tax exemption.

NOTE:

The generation-skipping transfer tax (GST) [see I.R.C. §§ 2600-2663] is imposed on transfers of property to persons who are two or more generations younger than the transferor. The GST tax has been repealed, effective for generation-skipping transfers after 2009 [I.R.C. § 2664]. Until then, it remains in effect. Transfers that trigger GST are typically transfers to grandchildren or more remote descendants. However, transfers to other persons may also trigger the tax if the transferees are more than 37 years younger than the transferor [I.R.C. § 2651(d)(2)]. The GST is imposed at a flat rate, which is the maximum estate or gift tax rate in effect at the time of the transfer [I.R.C. § 2641(a)(1)]. However, every transferor is entitled to an exemption, the amount of which depends on the year of the transfer. The exemption amount is $1 million for 1998 [I.R.C. § 2631(a), before amendment by Pub. Law 107-16], $1,010,000 in 1999, $1,030,000 for 2000 [ Rev. Proc. 99-42, 1999-2 C.B. 568 , § 3.18, 1999-46 I.R.B. 568, 1999-2 C.B. 568 ], and $1,060,000 for 2001 [ Rev. Proc. 2001-13, 2001-1 C.B. 337 , § 3.18, 2001-3 I.R.B. 337, 2001-1 C.B. 337 ]. Inflation adjustments will also be made for 2002 and 2003 [I.R.C. § 2631(c), before amendment by Pub Law 107-16]. Beginning for generation-skipping transfers after 2003, the exemption amount is determined by the estate tax exclusion amount for the calendar year. [I.R.C. § 2631(c)]. For 2004 and 2005, the amount is $1.5 million; for 2006 through 2008, the amount is $2 million; for 2009, the amount is $3.5 million [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2631(a), (c)]. Married persons may thus transfer property equal to twice the exemption amount in a form that is subject to the GST without subjecting any of the transfer to the GST [I.R.C. § 2631].

5. Determine whether client's estate plan should include disclaimer trust.

NOTE:

A disclaimer trust is a trust that is designed to hold, administer, and distribute any property that a devisee may elect to disclaim after the testator's death. If property that the devisee would otherwise be entitled to receive (either outright or in trust) is effectively disclaimed [see I.R.C. § 2518; Treas. Reg. §§ 25.2518-1-25.2518-3], the property will pass into the trust and be removed from that devisee's estate for federal estate tax purposes. The trust can be constructed so that a devisee who is the surviving spouse will still receive substantial lifetime benefits from the trust. Disclaimer trusts are often used in estate plans that are designed to reduce the over-all estate tax burden on the combined estates of married persons. They can be used to defer decisions on allocation of trusts or devises until after the death of the first spouse, when the consequences of allocation will generally be seen much more clearly than when the will is executed. For further discussion of disclaimer trusts, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.16.

§ 61.114 Need for Trust Planning

NOTE:

Although trusts can be useful tax-saving devices under some circumstances, they can also have important non-tax uses. These uses are usually related to a beneficiary's need for asset management.

1. Determine whether client's estate plan should include one or more trusts to provide care for minor child or children.

NOTE:

Since minor children have only limited power to contract with respect to their own property [see Fam. Code §§ 6700, 6701, 6710], they almost always need some sort of help in managing their property. Although trust arrangements are not the only means for providing this kind of help, they are among the most popular, flexible, and generally useful. Estate plans of clients who have minor children often include trusts that call for the trust property to be managed and distributed for the benefit of the children during their minorities and distributed to the children when they become adults or at some specified age or ages after they become adults.

2. Determine whether client's estate plan should include a trust or trusts to provide care for an aged family member.
3. Determine whether client's estate plan should include a trust or trusts to provide asset management for an adult family member who is unable or unwilling to accept responsibility for managing assets.

4. Determine whether client's estate plan should include a trust or trusts to provide for special needs of disabled family member.

The selection of a potential guardian is an important decision and requires careful consideration. The same person, if qualified, may serve both as guardian of the person and guardian of the estate. A guardian of the person of a minor child will generally be needed if both parents are deceased. However, a guardian of the estate may not be needed if any property left for the benefit of the child is in a trust. For a general discussion of guardians, see Ch. 66, Guardianships .

- a. Use individual's full and correct legal name.
- b. Spell name correctly.
- c. Include any regularly or frequently used variations on legal names (e.g., "John George Adams, also known as Jack Adams and J. George Adams, Jr.").
- d. When appropriate, state relationship of each individual named in will to testator (e.g., "my uncle, John Edward White").
- e. Include state, town, or city in which individual resides, or full mailing address, when this would help to locate person after testator's death (e.g., "my nephew, John Robert White, of Denver, Colorado" or "my brother, William Henry White, who resides at 112 Maple Street, Springfield, Massachusetts").
- f. When describing corporations and unincorporated associations, use full and proper name of each organization (e.g., "Bank of America, National Trust and Savings Association" or "Los Angeles County chapter of the American Heart Association").

NOTE:

Precise description of corporations and unincorporated associations may be particularly important if they are to be devisees under the will. In one case, an attorney drafted a will leaving one quarter of the residue of the client's $40 million estate to the "Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (Local or National)." After the client's death, claims to the devise were made by different SPCA's in different cities, and the probate court had to conduct 13 days of hearings before determining that the client intended the devise to be distributed to local and national humane societies as a group. Several of the contesting societies then sued the attorney, arguing that his failure to describe the residuary devisee with specificity had forced them to retain counsel and participate in lengthy legal proceedings to defend their positions. The court found that the attorney was not liable, but only because none of the societies could show that a duty was owed to them as intended beneficiaries [ Ventura County Humane Society v. Holloway (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 897, 905-906, 115 Cal. Rptr. 464 ] .

2. Avoid obscure, arcane, or anachronistic legal language, such as:

a. "Last will and testament."

NOTE:

Although the words "will" and "testament" at one time had distinct meanings, they are now generally regarded as synonymous. Modern drafting practice favors the elimination of unnecessary or archaic words. For this reason, this publication generally uses the word "will" in all legal discussions and forms.

b. "Bequest" and "legacy."

NOTE:

Although "bequest" was traditionally used to describe a testamentary gift of personal property and "devise" to describe a testamentary gift of real property, there is no distinction between these terms in modern legal practice. Some Probate Code provisions relating to wills refer to "devises," while others refer to "transfers" or simply "gifts" [see Prob. Code §§ 21101-21140 (rules for interpretation of instruments)]. In this publication, a gift made by a will is commonly described as a "devise" in legal discussions. "Gift" is generally used in the forms, because that word is widely understood by nonlawyers and less likely to be misunderstood by clients, executors, and persons named in the will.

3. Minimize extraneous material that has no legal effect, such as:

a. Recitations of testamentary capacity and freedom from vitiating influences such as fraud, duress, menace, undue influence, and mistake.

NOTE:

It was common at one time to include a recitation of capacity in the introductory paragraph of a will. Such a recitation commonly stated that the testator was "of sound and disposing mind and memory" and "not actuated by any fraud, duress, menace, or undue influence." However, these recitations have little or no probative force and are now generally avoided. A testator who is acting under fraud will not be aware of the fact, and a testator who has been induced by duress, menace, or undue influence to make a will in all probability will have been similarly induced to declare that the will was free of any such influence. Moreover, every testator is presumed to be of sound mind and to possess testamentary capacity until the contrary is established [ Estate of Sanderson (1959) 171

b. Elaborate statements of motivation or beliefs.

c. Precatory language.

NOTE:

Precatory language expresses a testator's desire, hope, or wish, but is not binding on the executor or the beneficiaries. It commonly begins with an introductory phrases such as "it is my wish that" or "it is my desire that." Precatory language can cause problems in judicial construction with respect to whether or not the testator intended it to be binding, and can result in unnecessary litigation by disgruntled beneficiaries if the executor or trustee does not act in accordance with the language. Although circumstances can exist in which the use of precatory language is appropriate, its use should be thought out carefully before it is inserted into a will. Furthermore, it should be carefully drafted to make clear that it is not binding and that the executor or trustee will incur no liability to any potential beneficiary for failing to follow it.

4. Avoid defamatory statements.

NOTE:

Although the California courts apparently have never found a testator liable for a defamatory statement in a will, courts in other states have done so, and the tort of testamentary defamation may eventually be recognized in California [see Hudak, The Sleeping Tort: Testamentary Libel, 12 Cal. West. L. Rev. 491 (1976)].

5. Avoid provisions that are illegal, immoral, or contrary to public policy.

NOTE:

Restraints on alienation are contrary to public policy and unenforceable [see Civ. Code § 711; Tucker v. Lassen Sav. & Loan Assn. (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 629, 635-636, 116 Cal. Rptr. 633, 526 P.2d 1169; La Sala v. American Sav. & Loan Assn. (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 864, 877-882, 97 Cal. Rptr. 849, 489 P.2d 1113; see also the Legal Background to Ch. 67, Future Interests and Perpetuities].

§ 61.131 Organization of Will

1. Title document "Will of" followed by testator's name.

NOTE:

It was common at one time for wills to be titled as the client's "Last Will and Testament." However, since the words "will" and "testament" are now generally regarded as synonymous, and since modern drafting practice favors the elimination of unnecessary or archaic words and phrases, it is preferable to simply title the will as indicated.

2. Organize will in logical way by:

- a. Grouping provisions together by subject matter.

NOTE:

This kind of organization will make the will easier to read, facilitate the location of specific provisions, and help the court to ascertain the client's intentions, should judicial review ever become necessary. Grouping related provisions together also makes it easier to spot potential ambiguities and inconsistencies before the will is executed.

- b. Subdividing will into articles and sections.

NOTE:

Subdividing the will into numbered articles and sections will ease the task of organizing the will in a logical way, facilitate internal cross-references, and make it possible to precisely identify particular parts of the will. This kind of subdivision will be most helpful if it is ever necessary to cite portions of the will to a court or to third parties (such as insurance companies, title companies, broker, and transfer agents) who may be called upon to assist in carrying out provisions of the will.

c. Supplying captions for each article and section.

NOTE:

Supplying each article and section of the will with descriptive captions will make it easier to scan the will and quickly locate particular provisions. Some attorneys avoid captions, believing that they have a tendency to distort the operative language of the will. It is a general rule of interpretation that the words of an instrument are to receive an interpretation that will give every expression some effect, rather than one that will render any of the expressions inoperative [Prob. Code § 21120]. However, any danger posed by this rule may be overcome by including a statement that the captions are for convenience of reference only and are not to be treated as a substantive part of the will provisions themselves.

4. Include articles dealing with the following, to the extent applicable to the client's individual needs:

NOTE:

The order of articles shown below is the one followed by the wills in this chapter. If the attorney wishes to adopt another order of articles, he or she may do so; however, some logical arrangement of the essential provisions of the will must be adopted. Not all of the provisions listed below need be included in every will. For example, provisions dealing with the trustee will be appropriate only in wills that create trusts, and provisions dealing with the guardian will be appropriate only if the client has minor children.

PRACTICE TIP:

When "gathering" forms from different sources in the preparation of a will or any other estate planning document, strict attention must be paid to the intended use of each form. For example, wills and forms for wills and individual will provisions are typically written in the first person (e.g., "my personal residence"). By contrast, non-testamentary trusts and forms for such trusts and their individual provisions are typically written in the third person (e.g., "the settlor's personal residence"), and often assume more than one settlor (e.g., "the settlors' personal residence"). Thus, care must be taken to conform each specific form used in a given drafting project to the type of document being produced, in order to insure clarity and consistency. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

a. Introductory provisions, such as:

- (1) Marital status declaration.
- (2) Identification of spouse, children, and other beneficiaries.
- (3) Description of property subject to disposition under the will.
- (4) Existence or nonexistence of a contract to make a will, not to make a will, or to die intestate.

b. Particular gifts.

c. Residuary gifts.

d. Trust distributions.

e. The executor, including:

- (1) Nomination of the executor, any coexecutors, and successor executors.
- (2) The executor's bond.
- (3) The executor's compensation.
- (4) The executor's powers and duties.

f. The trustee, if any, including:

- (1) The nomination of trustees and alternate trustees.
- (2) The trustee's bond.
- (3) The trustee's powers and duties.

g. The guardian, if any, including:

- (1) The nomination of guardians and alternate guardians.
- (2) The guardian's powers and duties.

h. Concluding provisions, including:

- (1) Apportionment of death taxes.
- (2) Payment of debts.
- (3) Simultaneous death provisions, if any.
- (4) Disinheritance clauses.
- (5) No-contest clauses.
- (6) Funeral and burial directions.

§ 61.132 Basic Will Arrangements

NOTE:

There are seven complete wills in this chapter. They have been chosen to illustrate basic will arrangements that will commonly be encountered in the attorney's office. Before drafting a will for a particular client, the attorney should examine each of the seven wills and determine which most nearly meets the client's needs. Any of the wills may be modified as necessary to address a client's particular needs, wishes, or concerns. For will provisions useful in modifying the complete will forms in this chapter, see Ch. 63, Will Provisions ; see also Ch. 65, Executors . For trust provisions useful in modifying the complete forms in this chapter, see Ch. 64, Testamentary Trusts: Payment and Distribution Provisions , Ch. 64A, Testamentary Trusts: Trustee Provisions , Ch. 64B, Testamentary Trusts: Administrative Provisions , and Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions . If none of the wills in this chapter approximates the client's needs, the attorney must plan and draft an individual will for that purpose.

1. Select will in § 61.200[2] if client:
  - a. Is not married.
  - b. Has no children.
  - c. Has no need for tax-saving strategies.
  - d. Wishes to leave bulk of estate to relatives or friends.

2. Select will in § 61.201[2] if client:

- a. Is not married.
- b. Has children who are minors or who otherwise need to be cared for by a trust (such as a disabled child).
- c. Has no need for tax-saving strategies.
- d. Wishes to leave the bulk of estate in separate trusts for the benefit of children.

3. Select will in § 61.210[2] if client:

- a. Is married.
- b. Has children.
- c. Has no need for tax-saving strategies.
- d. Wishes to leave entire estate outright to spouse and children.

4. Select will in § 61.211[2] if client:

- a. Is married.
- b. Has children.
- c. Has no need for tax-saving strategies.
- d. Wishes to "pour over" bulk of estate to inter vivos ("living") trust.

5. Select will in § 61.212[2] if client:

- a. Is married.
- b. Has children.
- c. Needs tax-saving strategies because combined values of estates of client and spouse are likely to exceed "applicable exclusion amount" [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] available on death of surviving spouse.

NOTE:

Every person has a unified credit against estate and gift taxes. The amount of this credit, called the "applicable credit amount," shelters a specified amount of the person's property, referred to as the "applicable exclusion amount," from gift and estate taxation [see I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505]. The applicable exclusion amount depends on the year of death. The amount is $675,000 for decedents dying in 2001, $1 million for decedents dying in 2002 and 2003, $1.5 million for decedents dying in 2004 and 2005, $2 million for decedents dying in 2006, 2007, and 2008, and $3.5 million for decedents dying in 2009 [I.R.C. §

2010(c), see discussion in § 60.13[4][b]]. Lifetime giving may reduce both the applicable credit amount and the applicable exclusion amount [I.R.C. §§ 2010(c), 2505(a); see discussion in § 60.14[5]].

d. Wishes to leave all property to spouse and children in manner that will give spouse optimum lifetime use of property.

e. Wishes to make use of federal estate tax marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056] and unified credit against estate and gift taxes [see I.R.C. §§ 2010 (estate tax), 2505 (gift tax)] to reduce overall death tax liability in estates of both spouses.

NOTE:

This will assumes that the value of the combined estates of the testator and the testator's spouse will exceed the "applicable exclusion amount" [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] available on the death of the surviving spouse. On the death of the surviving spouse, the trust is divided into separate shares for each of the testator's children. Each child will receive a share on the spouse's death or on the date the child reaches a specified age, whichever occurs later. Shares are distributed outright to the issue of any deceased children. A disclaimer trust is included, to hold any assets that the spouse elects to disclaim after the testator's death.

6. Select will in § 61.213[2] if client:

a. Is married.

b. Has children.

c. Needs tax-saving strategies because combined value of estates of client and spouse are likely to exceed "applicable exclusion amount" [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] available on death of surviving spouse.

d. Wishes to leave entire estate in trust so that surviving spouse will have optimum lifetime control over trust assets.

e. Wishes to take advantage of unlimited marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056] and "applicable exclusion amount" [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] available in each estate to completely avoid estate tax on death of first spouse and to reduce (if not totally eliminate) estate taxes on death of second spouse.

NOTE:

This will provides for three trusts. The first, called the "Power of Appointment Trust," is designed to qualify for the unlimited marital deduction as a "lifetime income plus power of appointment" trust [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(5) and discussion in Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.13[5]]. The second, called the "Bypass Trust," is designed to take advantage of the unified credit available in the testator's estate [see I.R.C. §§ 2010 (estate tax), 2505 (gift tax) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] and, on the death of the surviving spouse, to "bypass" that estate for estate tax purposes [see discussion in § 61.212[1][f]]. The third, called the "Disclaimer Trust," is designed to hold any property that the surviving spouse elects to disclaim. The surviving spouse is given lifetime interests in all three of the trusts.

7. Select will in § 61.214[2] if client:

a. Is married.

b. Has children.

c. Needs tax-saving strategies because combined value of estates of client and spouse are likely to exceed available unified credit "applicable exclusion amount" [see "applicable exclusion amount" [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] available on death of surviving spouse.

d. Wishes to leave all property in trust so that surviving spouse will have optimum lifetime control over property.

e. Wishes to take advantage of unlimited marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056] and unified credit available in each estate [see I.R.C. §§ 2010 (estate tax), 2505 (gift tax) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] to completely avoid estate tax on death of first spouse and to reduce (if not totally eliminate) estate taxes on death of second spouse.

f. Wishes to retain right to dispose of trust assets on surviving spouse's death by making "marital deduction gift" to surviving spouse in form of a qualified terminal interest property (QTIP) trust [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(7) and discussion in § 61.214[1][d]].

NOTE:

This will provides for three trusts. The first, called the "QTIP Trust," qualifies for the unlimited marital deduction as a "qualified terminable interest property" trust [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(7) and discussion in Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.13[4]]. The second, called the "Bypass Trust," is designed to take advantage of the unified credit [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] available in the testator's estate and, on the death of the surviving spouse, to "bypass" that estate for estate tax purposes [see discussion in § 61.212[1][f]]. The third, called the "Disclaimer Trust," is designed to hold any property that the surviving spouse elects to disclaim. The surviving spouse is given lifetime interests in all three of the trusts.

§ 61.150 Preparation for Execution and Attestation of Will Made by Client

1. Prepare for execution of will, by:

a. Making appointment with client for execution of will.

NOTE:

Wills usually are signed in the attorney's office. However, they may be executed in the client's home or in a hospital, convalescent home, or similar location when appropriate to meet the client's individual needs or preference.

b. Arranging for two witnesses who meet following requirements:

NOTE:

A witnessed will must be signed by at least two persons acting as witnesses [Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1)]. There is no age requirement for witnesses to wills. Although a will is not invalid merely because it is signed by an interested witness [Prob. Code § 6112(b)], a devise to an interested witness is presumed to have been procured by duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence unless there are at least two other witnesses who are disinterested [Prob. Code § 6112(b)]. However, this presumption does not apply if the devise is made to the witness in a fiduciary capacity only (e.g., as trustee) [Prob. Code § 6112(c)]. See discussion in § 61.13[1][c].

(1) Are not devisees under will.

(2) Are likely to be available to offer evidence if and when will is offered for probate.

PRACTICE TIP:

It is often most practical for the drafting attorney to act as one of the witnesses. The attorney will almost never be an interested witness, and the State Bar is usually able to locate attorneys even after they have retired. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

2. Submit complete will to client for review and approval.

NOTE:

The client should be given ample opportunity to review the will in a private setting. The attorney should then meet with the client to answer any questions that the client may wish to ask, to explain any parts of the will that the client does not understand, and to make any corrections or changes that may be required. The process of review and approval should not be hurried. When feasible, the advance preparation of a draft may make the most sense.

§ 61.151 Execution of Will by Client

1. After client has reviewed and approved will, summon witnesses and introduce them to client (if they are not already acquainted).
2. In presence of witnesses, ask client: "Is this your will?"

NOTE:

The Probate Code does not require a formal declaration that the will is the testator's will. However, the testator and the witnesses must understand that the instrument they sign is the testator's will [Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1)]. This requirement is satisfied if it is apparent from the testator's conduct and the surrounding circumstances that the instrument is a will [Tentative Recommendation Relating to Wills and Intestate Succession, 16 Calif. L. Rev. Comm'n Reports 2394 (1982)]. The testator's affirmative response to the foregoing question is an appropriate and relatively simple method of establishing the required understanding. It is neither necessary nor appropriate to disclose the contents of the will to witnesses [Tentative Recommendation Relating to Wills and Intestate Succession, 16 Calif. L. Rev. Comm'n Reports 2394 (1982)].

3. Request that testator date will [see § 61.13[2][c]].
4. Request that testator sign will in presence of witnesses.

NOTE:

Although the Probate Code no longer requires that the witnesses be present when the testator signs (or that the testator be present when the witnesses sign) [see Prob. Code §

6110(b), (c)(1)], it will be convenient in most cases to complete the execution and attestation at one time and place while all persons concerned are present.

5. If testator is unable to sign will without assistance, use one of following methods:

a. Some other person may help client sign by guiding client's hand [ Estate of Holloway (1925) 195 Cal. 711, 719, 235 P. 1012 ] .

NOTE:

A person acting in the testator's presence and by the client's direction may sign the testator's name, or merely guide the client's hand while he or she signs [ Estate of Holloway (1925) 195 Cal. 711, 719, 235 P. 1012 ; Estate of Clark (1915) 170 Cal. 418, 424, 149 P. 828 ] . It may be preferable to guide the client's hand, since this may make it easier to prove that the signature was in the client's presence and by the client's direction.

b. Client may make his or her mark, after which some other person will write his or her name near the mark and then sign as a witness [see Civ. Code § 14; Code Civ. Proc. § 17].

c. Client may direct another person to sign his or her name in his or her presence [see Prob. Code § 6110(b)(2)].

Although the Probate Code does not require that the witnesses sign in the client's (or in each other's) presence, it is good practice in most cases to have them sign at the time that they witness the client's signature. If a question should later arise as to the genuineness of the witnesses' signatures, or if the attestation itself is challenged, the fact that the witnesses signed in each other's presence may provide evidentiary support.

2. Request that witnesses write their residence addresses in the spaces provided in the attestation clause.

NOTE:

Although there is no requirement that the witnesses supply their addresses, this information will make it easier to locate them if and when it is necessary to probate the will.

NOTE:

A conservatee who is competent to make a will may do so [Prob. Code § 1871(c)]. However, a conservator of the estate may also make a will for the conservatee if the court first authorizes the action [Prob. Code §§ 2580(b)(13), 6100(b), 6100.5(c)]. A conservator of the estate might seek authority to do this if the conservatee lacks the mental competence to make the will or if the conservatee is mentally competent to make the will but physically unable to do so. A will that is made for a conservatee differs from a will that is made by a conservatee, but which the conservatee is physically unable to sign. For discussion, see § 61.11[3]. The Probate Code offers no specific guidance as to the execution or attestation formalities for wills made by conservators, but the same rules that govern the execution and attestation of wills made personally by the testator should govern.

This guide assumes that the necessary judicial authority for the conservator to make the will has already been obtained.

1. Prepare for execution of will, by:
  - a. Making appointment with conservator for execution of will.
  - b. Arranging for two witnesses who meet following requirements [see Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1); see also § 61.150, P 1(b) NOTE].

1. After conservator has reviewed and approved will, summon witnesses and introduce them to conservator (if they are not already acquainted).
2. In presence of witnesses, ask conservator: "Is this the will you have made for _____ (name of conservatee) under the authority of the order issued by the _____ (name of county) Superior Court?"

NOTE:

The Probate Code does not require this kind of formal declaration. However, such a declaration will help to establish that the person making the will and the witnesses all understand that the instrument they sign is the conservatee's will [*see Prob. 3. Request that conservator date will [see § 61.13[2][c]].

§ 61.170 Custody of Original Will

1. Bind or staple original will in a back or cover on which is printed name and address of attorney or law firm.
2. Ensure that original will is kept in place that is:
  - a. Safe from loss or destruction by fire, water, theft, or other misfortune.
  - b. Not available to any person other than client, except at client's direction or with client's consent.
  - c. Immediately available to executor on client's death.

NOTE:

The immediate impulse of most clients is to place the will in a safety deposit box. However, this is not advised because of the delay that may be involved in opening the box after the client's death.

3. If attorney is to retain original will, take following steps:

NOTE:

The Probate Code contains rules governing the transfer of estate planning and other documents held by an attorney for safekeeping [see Prob. Code §§ 700-735]. These rules specify the standard of care imposed on attorneys holding documents for safekeeping [see Prob. Code §§ 710, 716], procedures for notifying a testator that a will has been accepted for safekeeping [see Prob. Code § 715], and procedures for terminating the holding of a will by an attorney [see Prob. Code §§ 720-735]. For general discussion of these rules, see Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.18.

a. Hold will in safe, vault, safety deposit box, or other secure place where it will be reasonably protected against loss or destruction [see Prob. Code § 710].

b. Send client notice that will has been accepted for safekeeping and obtain acknowledgment that client will notify attorney of any change in client's address [see Prob. Code § 715].

NOTE:

An attorney who accepts a will for safekeeping must use ordinary care for preserving the document [see Prob. Code § 710]. However, using a notice and acknowledgment in the form set forth in Prob. Code § 715 changes the standard of care from "ordinary care" to "slight care" [see Prob. Code §§ 715, 716].

c. If will is lost or destroyed, notify client by mailing notice to testator's last known address or by method most likely to give client actual notice [see Prob. Code § 711].

d. If client dies while attorney is holding will for safekeeping, and if attorney has actual notice of client's death and appointment of personal representative, deliver will to client's personal representative [see Prob. Code §§ 732(f), 734(a)].

NOTE:

If the attorney has actual notice that the client has died, but does not have actual notice that a personal representative has been appointed, the attorney must, within 30 days after having knowledge of the client's death, deliver will to the clerk of the superior court of the county in which the estate may be administered and mail a copy of the will to the named executor [Prob. Code § 734(b); see Prob. Code § 8200].

4. If will nominates bank or trust company as executor or co-executor, consider requesting that it retain custody of original will.

NOTE:

When this is done, the original will should be placed in a sealed envelope with the following typed on the outside: "Original of Will of _____ dated _____." The forwarding letter to the bank or trust company should include the client's address and business relationship with the bank, if any, and a brief description of the probable assets of the estate.

§ 61.200 Will for Unmarried Person; No Children

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a complete will form designed for use by a testator who is not married, who has no children, and who wishes to leave the bulk of his or her estate to relatives or friends. The will is simple and is not designed to achieve tax savings.

This will permits the testator to make one or more specific devises [see Article 2]. The residuary estate is left to one or more named persons or, if those persons do not survive the testator, to the testator's heirs [see Article 3].

PRACTICE TIP:

Many testators, particularly those with relatively small estates, wish to include lengthy lists of gifts of tangible personal property items in their wills. The estate planner should be careful in drafting such plans, especially when similar gifts might not be adequately described by the client to allow the executor, in administering the will, to determine which beneficiary is entitled to certain items in the estate. Many times, when a person of modest means dies, "friends and relatives" arrive at the residence and simply begin taking what they want just after the death. Fights over items of nominal value are all too common in these situations. The drafter must steer a course between helping the client to carry out his or her wishes and counseling against too many gifts of items with virtually no monetary value. The client should also be advised about the use of lists of items to be incorporated by reference in the will, while being warned about attempts to later modify such a list and thereby unsuccessfully seek to incorporate by reference a list that did not exist at the time the will was executed. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

This will assumes that the testator has never been married [see Article 1]. If the testator is widowed or divorced, the will should be revised to reflect that fact. If the testator marries or has children after this will is executed, a new will should be made. Spouses married and children born after a will is executed will both qualify as "omitted heirs" [see Prob. Code §§ 6560-6580]. For a general discussion of omitted heirs, see § 61.16.

[b] Survivorship

Various provisions in this will give the testator the option of requiring that devisees survive the testator, or survive the testator for a specified time, in order to receive their devises. A devisee who does not survive the testator, or who does not survive until a future time required by the will, does not take under the will [Prob. Code § 21109(a); see Prob. Code § 21101 (rules applicable to wills, trusts, deeds, and other instruments)].

It is sometimes advisable to condition a devise on survival for a specified period of time, because this may obviate successive administrations and taxation of the same property. If, for example, the testator devises property to a devisee who survives the testator for only one week, all the devised property will be included in the devisee's estate, even though the devisee will not have come into beneficial enjoyment of the property. If, on the other hand, the devise is conditioned on the devisee surviving the testator for a specified period (e.g., 60 days or six months), successive administrations of the same property will be avoided.

Whether survival is to be required should be considered as it bears on each devise. A devise to an elderly friend or relative might well be conditioned on survival for a period of time sufficient to allow the probate estate to proceed to distribution. However, it is not good practice to routinely condition devises to a surviving spouse on survival until a future time, as this may delay or defeat the confirmation proceedings authorized by Prob. Code §§ 13650-13660. Further, it may deprive the surviving spouse of the benefits of the marital deduction for estate tax purposes. Under I.R.C. § 2056(b)(1), no estate tax deduction is allowed for a "terminable" interest passing to a surviving spouse. An interest is "terminable" if it may terminate and pass to another person on the lapse of time, on the occurrence of an event or contingency, or on the failure of an event or contingency to occur. A limited exception to this rule is recognized for interests that are subject to termination if the spouse and the testator die in a common disaster or if the spouse fails to survive the testator for a period not exceeding six months [I.R.C. § 2056(b)(3)(A)], though, in this case, the termination or failure must not in fact occur [I.R.C. § 2056(b)(3)(B)]. For further discussion of the marital deduction, including the terminable interest rule, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions.

[c] Distribution of Class Gifts

Section 3.01, the primary residuary clause of this will, includes optional language providing that if a residuary beneficiary does not survive the testator, does not survive for a particular time required by the will, or for any other reason fails to take his or her portion of the residue, that portion will be distributed among the beneficiary's issue in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240, Prob. Code § 246, or Prob. Code § 247, or "in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation." Choosing the appropriate language from this provision will call for the residue to be distributed according to certain standard patterns for the distribution of class gifts described in the code sections referred to. For an explanation of each of these patterns, and the Probate Code sections that govern them, see § 61.15[6][c]-[f].

[d] Bond

Section 4.05 of this will can be used to require that the executor post a bond, or to waive the requirement of a bond. Personal representatives generally are required to post bonds before letters are issued [see Prob. Code § 8480(a)]. The bonds are for the benefit of interested persons and conditioned on the personal representative's faithful execution of the duties of the office according to law [Prob. Code § 8480(b)]. However, a bond is not required if the will waives the requirement [Prob. Code § 8481(a)(1)], and trust companies are never required to give a bond [Prob. Code § 301(a)]. A trust company is a corporate entity (such as a bank) that has qualified to conduct a trust business in California [Prob. Code § 83].

Will provisions providing that executors not be required to post bond are common. Waiving bond saves the expense of bond premiums and expresses confidence in the person nominated to serve as executor. A will should waive bond only when the testator has confidence in the honesty, integrity, and competence of the proposed executor, but if the testator does not have confidence in the honesty, integrity, and competence of a prospective executor, it may be best to nominate some other person to serve in that capacity.

[e] Independent Administration

Section 4.05 of this will gives the executor authority to administer the testator's estate under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act [Prob. Code §§ 10400-10592]. This Act allows the executor to administer the estate without having to obtain court approval for many actions taken in connection with the estate. Before an estate may be administered under the Act, however, the personal representative must petition the court for authority to do so [see Prob. Code § 10450]. The petition may request full, or merely limited, authority to administer the estate under the Act [Prob. Code § 10450(b)]. The court must grant the petition unless an interested person objects and shows good cause why the authority should not be granted [Prob. Code § 10452]. An executor may not be granted authority to administer the estate under the Act if the will provides that the estate may not be administered under the Act [Prob. Code § 10404].

Independent administration can save time and expense, and safeguards provided in the Act are generally adequate to prevent abuses. If the testator does not wish the estate to be administered under the Act, however, Section 4.05 may be revised accordingly. For general discussion of independent administration, see California Forms of Pleading Practice, Ch. 445, Probate: Independent Administration of Estates (Matthew Bender).

[f] Powers of Executor

Section 4.06 of this will contains an extended list of the executor's powers. The Probate Code grants broad administrative powers to executors and other personal representatives [see Prob. Code §§ 9600-10382]. Will provisions stating the testator's powers are not strictly necessary since, when the will is silent on the subject of the executor's powers, the executor will be able to exercise all of the statutory powers. It is the policy of many estate planning attorneys, however, to include a detailed statement of the executor's powers in every will. Such a statement will apprise all persons interested in the estate (including the executor, the devisees, and any creditors) of the exact scope and extent of the executor's powers. In addition, the executor will often find it helpful when dealing with third parties to be able to point to a specific provision in the will that spells out the executor's power to take a particular action.

If the testator prefers not to include a detailed statement of the executor's powers, the will may simply state that the executor will have all of the powers and duties conferred on executors by California law, except as otherwise specifically provided in the will. In particular cases, the attorney may find it necessary or appropriate to create a particular list of powers designed to meet the special needs of the testator or the estate. This may be done by using a general preamble, stating that, except as otherwise provided in the will, the executor will have the particular powers stated in the provision, in addition to other powers conferred on executors by law.

[g] Payments to Incapacitated Persons

Section 4.07 of this will gives the executor authority to distribute property that is to be distributed to a minor or incapacitated devisee by distributing it to some other person or persons for the benefit of the devisee. This is not a statutory power. Its inclusion in the will may obviate the need to appoint a guardian for a minor or a conservator for an incapacitated adult devisee.

[h] Executor's Liability for Own Acts

Section 4.08 of this will is a so-called "exculpatory provision," which limits the circumstances under which the executor may be held liable to the testator's estate or persons interested in the estate for losses resulting from the executor's acts or omissions in the administration of the estate. The provision states that the executor will not be liable for any act or omission unless it is committed intentionally, with gross negligence, in bad faith, or with reckless indifference to the interests of persons interested in the estate, or unless the executor derives a profit from it.

Although exculpatory provisions are not usually found in wills, they may help to persuade persons nominated as executor to accept the considerable responsibilities of the office by easing somewhat the liability rules that would otherwise apply. Section 4.08 does not exculpate the executor from liability for serious acts or omissions for which the executor should be held responsible, and thus is unlikely to harm the estate. Regardless of the terms of this provision, however, the testator and any person nominated to act as executor should always remember that liability insurance is the executor's best protection against personal liability, and the testator's best assurance that the estate will be compensated for losses resulting from the executor's failure to properly discharge the duties of his or her office.

[i] Disinheritance Clause

Section 5.02 is a standard disinheritance clause. It states the testator's intention not to provide for any heirs not specifically provided for in the will, regardless of whether those heirs were born or adopted before or after the will was executed, and regardless of whether the testator was aware of their existence and identities when the will was executed. This provision may not be effective to disinherit a spouse married after the will was executed [see Prob. Code § 21610 and discussion in § 61.16[2]]. For general discussion of disinheritance clauses and their use in wills, see § 61.17.

[j] No-Contest Clause

Section 5.03 is a standard no-contest clause. It revokes any devise made to any person who contests the will or any of its provisions.

Optional language at the end of the clause may be used to provide that any gift made to a person who contests a will is to be disposed of as if he or she had predeceased the testator without issue. Inclusion of this optional language will insure that the revocation applies not only to the contesting party, but also to the contesting party's issue. The optional language is somewhat draconian in its effect and should be included only when the testator clearly wishes to extend the application of the no-contest clause to the issue of contesting parties. For general discussion of no-contest clauses and their use in wills, see § 61.18.

If _____ [he or she or any person named in this section] does not survive me or does not make a selection within three months after the date of my death or within 30 days after this will is admitted to probate, whichever is later, then the gift made to _____ [him or her or that person] in this section shall fail. [If desired, specify any types of property that may not be selected, e.g., For purposes of this gift only, the word "personal effects" shall not include any motor vehicles or any items of property with an appraised value in excess of $2,500].

2.03. General Pecuniary Gift. I give the sum of $_____ to _____ [name of

2.05. Tangible Personal Property. I give all of my tangible personal property that is not otherwise disposed of as a specific gift in this will, including my interest in any insurance on that property, to those of the following persons who survive me [if desired, add survivorship clause, e.g., for 60 days], to be divided among them by the executor, in equal or unequal shares as the executor believes to be in accordance with my wishes, the decision of the executor as to this division to be final and incontestable by anyone: _____ [class description, e.g., my brother, Mark Daniel Black, my sister, Mary T. Black, and their issue]. If none of those beneficiaries survives me [for that period], or if in the executor's opinion any of the property should not be distributed to any of the beneficiaries, the executor may sell the undistributed items, and any proceeds shall be added to the residue of my estate and disposed of accordingly. It is my further wish that this care include daily walks, monthly grooming at _____ (name of pet parlor), and use of Dr. _____ (name of veterinarian) as regular veterinarian. This request is precatory only, and not mandatory.]

Article 3 : Residuary Provisions

3.01. Disposition of Residue. I give the residue of my estate to _____ [name(s) and relationship(s) to testator, e.g., my brother, Mark Daniel Black, or my brother, Mark Daniel Black, my sister, Mary T. [or] distributed among the issue (if any) of the deceased beneficiary _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation], or, if the deceased person has no issue, _____ [specify alternate disposition, e.g., divided among the surviving alternate beneficiaries named in this section _____ (equally or in proportion to their respective shares in the residue of my estate)].

[or specify other alternative method of disposition, e.g.] given to _____ [e.g., the Marin County chapter of The Anonymous Artists of America or my heirs].

3.02. Alternate Disposition of Residue. If the residue of my estate is not completely disposed of by the preceding provisions, I give the portion that is not disposed of to _____ [e.g., the Marin County chapter of The Anonymous Artists of America or my heirs].

Article 4 : Executor

4.01. Nomination of Executor. I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my brother, Mark Daniel Black,] as executor of this will.

4.02. Successor Executors. If _____ [initial nominee, e.g., my brother, Mark Daniel Black,] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or to continue to serve, as executor, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as successor executor:

First, _____ [name and relationship to testator, e.g., my sister, Mary T. Black];

Second, _____ [name and relationship to testator, e.g., my nephew, Robert C. Black];

Third, _____ [name of corporate executor, e.g., Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

4.03. Definition of Executor. The term "executor," as used in this will, refers to each personal representative of my estate who is serving at the pertinent time.

4.04. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or bond] shall be required of any executor nominated in this will.

4.05. Independent Administration. The executor shall _____ [have full or not have] authority to administer my estate under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act.

4.06. Powers of Executor. Subject to any limitations stated elsewhere in this will, the executor shall have, in addition to all of the powers now or hereafter conferred on executors by law, and any powers enumerated elsewhere in this will, the power to perform any of the acts specified in this section:

(a) Take possession or control of all of my estate subject to disposition by this will, and collect all debts due to me or to my estate.

(b) Receive the rents, issues, and profits from all real and personal property in my estate until the estate is settled or delivered over by order of court to my heirs or beneficiaries.

(c) Pay taxes on, and take all steps reasonably necessary for the management, protection, and preservation of, all property in my estate.

(d) Commence and prosecute, either individually or jointly with my heirs or beneficiaries, any action necessary or proper to quiet title to or recover possession of any real or personal property in my estate.

(e) Vote in person, and give proxies to exercise, any voting rights with respect to any stock, any membership in a nonprofit corporation, or any other property in my estate, and waive notice of a meeting, give consent to the holding of a meeting, and authorize, ratify, approve, or confirm any action that could be taken by shareholders, members, or property owners.

(f) Insure the property of my estate against damage or loss, and insure the executor against liability to third persons.

(g) Deposit money belonging to my estate in an insured account in a financial institution in California.

(h) Invest and reinvest any money of my estate not reasonably required for the immediate administration of my estate in any kind of property, real, personal, or mixed, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own accounts; provided, however, that in investing any property of my estate, the executor shall act with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing, including but not limited to the general economic conditions and the anticipated needs of my estate and its beneficiaries, that a prudent person acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of like character and with like aims to accomplish the purposes of my estate as determined from this will.

(i) Retain any assets of my estate for as long as the executor deems to be in the best interest of my estate.

(j) Borrow money on behalf of my estate and pledge, hypothecate, or otherwise encumber property of my estate, real or personal, as security for any sums so borrowed.

(k) In order to satisfy a pecuniary gift or to distribute or divide estate assets into shares or partial shares, the executor may distribute or divide those assets in kind, or divide undivided interests in those assets, or sell all or any part of those assets and distribute or divide the property in cash, in kind, or partly in cash and partly in kind. Property distributed to satisfy a pecuniary gift under this will shall be valued at its fair market value at the time of distribution.

(l) Pay any and all charges reasonably incurred in connection with or incidental to the distribution of any property of my estate, including but not limited to expenses of storage, freight, shipping, delivery, packing, and insurance; and, on any accounting, treat any such expenditures as expenses of the administration of my estate.

(m) To the extent permitted by law, and without regard to the resulting effect on any other provision of this will, on any person interested in my estate, or on the amount of taxes that may be payable, the executor shall have the power to choose a valuation date for tax purposes; choose the methods to pay any death taxes; elect to treat or use any item for state or federal estate or income tax purposes as an income tax deduction or an estate tax deduction; disclaim all or any portion of any interest in property passing to my estate at or after my death; and determine when an item is to be treated as taken into income or used as a tax deduction.

(n) If any asset of my estate consists of an option right, exercise the option after authorization by order of court, upon a showing that the exercise would be to the advantage of my estate, and use any funds or property in my estate to acquire the property covered by the option.

(o) Hold a security in the name of a nominee or in any other form without disclosure of my estate so that title to the security may pass by delivery.

(p) Exercise any subscription rights owned or received by my estate by reason of owning securities, after authorization by court upon a showing that it is to the advantage of my estate.

(q) Sell, at either public or private sale and with or without notice, and grant options to purchase, any property belonging to my estate [optional:, subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(r) Lease any real or personal property belonging to my estate on such terms and conditions as the executor determines to be in the best interest of my estate [optional:, subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(s) Dispose of or abandon tangible personal property, except tangible personal property that is a specific gift, when the cost of collecting, maintaining, and safeguarding the property would exceed its fair market value.

(t) Compromise or settle any claim, action, or proceeding by or for the benefit of, or against, me, my estate, or the executor [optional:, subject only to any confirmation of court that may be required by law].

(u) Employ professional investment counsel to make recommendations with respect to, and otherwise assist in, investing the assets of my estate; and, on any accounting, treat any fees paid to investment counsel as expenses of the administration of my estate.

4.07. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any beneficiary under this will is a minor, or it appears to the executor that any beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the executor, in lieu of making direct payments to the beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the executor); to one or more suitable persons as the executor deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the executor for all purposes.

4.08. Executor's Liability for Own Acts. The executor shall not be liable to my estate or to any person interested in it for any act or omission of the executor, except an act or omission that is committed intentionally, with gross negligence, in bad faith, or with reckless indifference to the interests of persons interested in my estate, or an act or omission from which the executor derives a profit.

Article 5 : Concluding Provisions

5.01. Simultaneous Death. If any beneficiary under this will and I die simultaneously, or if it cannot be established by clear and convincing evidence whether that beneficiary or I died first, I shall be deemed to have survived that beneficiary, and this will shall be construed accordingly.

5.02. Intentional Omission of Heirs Not Specifically Provided For in Will. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will, I have intentionally and with full knowledge omitted to provide for my heirs, regardless of whether or not I am aware of their existence and identities at the time this will is executed.

5.03. No-Contest Clause. If any person, directly or indirectly, contests the validity of this will in whole or in part, or opposes, objects to, or seeks to invalidate any of its provisions, or seeks to succeed to any part of my estate otherwise than in the manner specified in this will, any gift or other interest given to that person under this will shall be revoked and shall be disposed of as if he or she had predeceased me [optional: without issue].

5.04. Definition of Incapacity. For purposes of this will, a person shall be deemed "incapacitated" if and for so long as a court of competent jurisdiction has made a finding to that effect, or a guardian or conservator of that person's estate or person duly appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction is serving, or upon certification by two physicians licensed to practice under the laws of the state where the person is domiciled at the time of the certification that the person is unable properly to care for himself or herself or for his or her property. The latter certification shall be made by each physician in a written declaration under penalty of perjury.

5.05. Captions. The captions appearing in this will are for convenience of reference only, and shall be disregarded in determining the meaning and effect of the provisions of this will.

5.06. Severability Clause. If any provision of this will is invalid, that provision shall be disregarded, and the remainder of this will shall be construed as if the invalid provision had not been included.

5.07. California Law to Apply. All questions concerning the validity and interpretation of this will, including any trusts created by this will, shall be governed by the laws of the State of California in effect at the time this will is executed.

5.08. Gifts to "Heirs." For any gift to my heirs that is made outright in this instrument, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate at the time for distribution, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death. For any assets of any trust estate created by this will to be distributed to my heirs, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate immediately following the termination of the trust of each share, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death.

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
PART IV. FORMS
A. Wills for Unmarried Persons

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.201

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.201 Will for Unmarried Person; Trust(s) for Child(ren)

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This is a complete will form designed for use by a testator who is not married but has children and wishes to leave the bulk of his or her estate in separate trusts for the benefit of the children.

It illustrates the basic framework that may be used whenever a testator wishes to create separate trusts for several beneficiaries and to treat one or more beneficiaries differently from the others. The form may be revised as appropriate to accommodate the different circumstances of particular clients.

The will permits the testator to make one or more specific devises. The residuary estate is left in equal shares for the testator's children. For illustrative purposes, this form assumes that one of the children is disabled, mentally impaired, or, for some other reason, unable to managing his or her own financial affairs.

All of the children (except the child who is unable to manage his or her own financial affairs) will receive their shares outright if they are over a specified age (such as 35 years) when the testator dies. The share of any child who has not reached that age will be held in a separate trust. Principal and income payments will be made to the child for the term of the trust, and the trust principal will be distributed to the child in three stages as the child attains three specified ages (such as 25, 30, and 35). Upon final distribution, the separate trust of that child will terminate.

The share of the remaining child will be held in trust for the child's lifetime. The child will receive as much of the income and principal of his or her separate trust as is necessary for his or her health, education, support, and maintenance. At the testator's option, however, a broader standard may be specified for these distributions. When the child dies, any remaining assets of the trust will be distributed to the child's issue, if any, to the shares or trusts set up for the other children, or to the testator's issue.

The provisions for the latter child are not designed to preserve any entitlements that child may have to benefits under available public assistance programs. A trust that is designed to protect those entitlements is sometimes referred to as a "special needs trust"; for discussion of these trusts, see California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 118, Special Needs Trusts (Matthew Bender). A form for a special needs trust is illustrated in California Wills & Trusts Forms, Div. I, Complete Inter Vivos Trusts, Trust No. 43 (Matthew Bender).

[b] Survivorship

This form gives the testator the option of requiring that devisees survive the testator, or survive the testator for a specified time, in order to receive their devises. It is sometimes advisable to condition a devise on survival for a specified period of time, as this may obviate successive administration and taxation of the same property. In some circumstances, however, routine use of survivorship clauses may be unnecessary, or even harmful. For discussion, see § 61.200[1][b].

[c] Standard Provisions

This will contains some of the same provisions that are found in the will in § 61.200[2]. These are provisions relating to the executor's bond [see Section 5.04 of form], the executor's authority to act under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act [see Section 5.05 of form], the executor's powers [see Section 5.06 of form], payments to incapacitated persons [see Section 5.07 of form], the executor's liability [see Section 5.08 of form], disinheritance of the testator's heirs [see Section 8.05 of form], and contest of the will [see Section 8.06 of form]. For discussion of each of these provisions, see § 61.200[1].

[d] Ascertainable Standard

Sections 4.01[a] and 4.02[a] of this will offer optional language that may be used to specify a so-called "ascertainable standard" for distributions of trust income and principal to particular beneficiaries. A standard is "ascertainable" if distributions to a beneficiary can be made only for the beneficiary's "health, education, support, and maintenance" [see Treas. Reg. § 20.2041-1(c)(2)], but not if distributions can be made to the beneficiary for other less definite purposes, such as for the beneficiary's "comfort, welfare, and happiness" [see Treas. Reg. § 20.2041-1(c)(2)].

An ascertainable standard should be used if the same person is to be both the trustee and the beneficiary of a trust and it is desirable to avoid having the trust assets included in the beneficiary's estate for federal estate tax purposes [see I.R.C. § 2041(b)(1)(A) (power limited by ascertainable standard not general power of appointment for estate tax purposes)]. In almost all other cases, a broader standard may be safely be used. However, in practice even an ascertainable standard is broad enough to encompass almost any reasonable, non-frivolous expenditure. For general discussion of ascertainable standards, see Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms, § 70.12[6][c]. For detailed discussion of the tax consequences of conferring discretionary payment and distribution powers on the trustee, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 96, Powers of Trustee, § 96.08[3], and Ch. 95, Trust Provisions for Payment and Distribution of Income and Principal, § 95.06[1][c], [3][d] (Matthew Bender).

[e] Administration of Generation-Skipping Trusts

Section 4.08 of this will governs the administration of any trust created by the will in which there is property that is or may become subject to the federal generation-skipping transfer tax [see I.R.C. § 2601 et seq.]. The GST tax has been repealed effective for generation-skipping transfers after 2009 [I.R.C. § 2664]. The section is designed to give the executor post-mortem flexibility to eliminate or minimize any generation-skipping transfer tax.

If the executor elects to allocate any portion of the testator's generation-skipping transfer tax exemption [see I.R.C. § 2631(a)] to any trust otherwise created by the will, Section 4.08 requires or permits the executor to split the trust in question into two trusts, one (called the Exempt Trust, and with an "inclusion ratio" of zero) which is exempt from the tax and the other (the Non-Exempt Trust, with an "inclusion ratio" between zero and one) which is not. The trustee is given discretion to make payments and distributions to "non-skip" beneficiaries [see I.R.C. § 2613(b) ("non-skip person" defined)], such as children, from the non-exempt trust, and payments and distributions to beneficiaries who are "skip persons" [see I.R.C. § 2613(a) ("skip person" defined)], such as grandchildren, from the exempt trust. This will ensure maximum use of the testator's exemption [see I.R.C. § 2631].

A trust may be divided if division is required by the trust instrument [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(b)(1)(i)] or if either local law or the governing instrument gives the trustee discretion to divide it [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(b)(1)(ii)]. When a trust is divided pursuant to the trustee's discretionary authority, however, the terms of each of the new trusts must provide for the same succession of interests and beneficiaries as are provided in the original trust, and the division must occur (or a reformation proceeding, if required, must be commenced) before the date prescribed for filing the federal estate tax return (including any extensions granted) for the estate of the transferor [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(b)(1)(ii)]. The new trusts may be funded on either a fractional share or a pecuniary basis, but funding on a fractional basis is required unless the trust instrument specifically requires funding on a pecuniary basis [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(b)(1)(ii)(C)(1)]. If a trust is funded on a fractional basis, the separate trusts need not be funded with a pro rata portion of each asset held by the original trust, but the funding must be based on the fair market value of the assets on the date of funding or done in a manner that fairly reflects the net appreciation or depreciation in the value of the assets from the valuation date to the date of funding [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(b)(1)(ii)(C)(1)]. If the trust instrument requires pecuniary funding, the trustee must pay interest on the pecuniary amount unless it is set aside within 15 months after the date of death [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(b)(1)(ii)(C)(2); see Treas. Reg. §§ 26.2642-2(b)(4)(i), (ii), 26.2654-1(a)(1)(ii)]. Further, if the pecuniary amount is payable in kind on the basis of value other than the date of distribution value of the assets, the assets must be allocated in a manner that fairly reflects net appreciation or depreciation in the assets from the valuation date to the date of payment [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(a)(1)(ii)(B)].

Dividing trusts in this way will make it easier to compute generation-skipping transfer taxes on distributions made from the new trusts. Following division of the trust, the executor or trustee will have discretion to allocate the transferor's GST exemption to the separate trusts [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(b)(3)]. Discretionary invasions of principal can be made to children first from the non-exempt trust. Because the children will be non-skip persons, no generation-skipping transfer tax will be due as a result of these distributions. Meanwhile, the exempt trust will continue to grow for the benefit of future generations. Further, different investment objectives can be pursued for each trust. For example, growth-oriented investments may be pursued by the exempt trust, while income-oriented investments can be held in the non-exempt trust.

If the testator's estate is so large that generation-skipping transfer taxes are unavoidable, mandatory division may be preferable to discretionary division. If, however, this would create very small exempt trusts, discretionary division may be preferable. This is particularly true if the trusts are designed to terminate in favor of a non-skip person when he or she reaches a specified age. Because the chance of actually incurring a generation-skipping transfer tax will in these circumstances be rather slight, the executor or trustee may prefer to administer a trust with an inclusion ratio between zero and one rather than administering two trusts, one of which is too small to be administratively convenient.

A provision giving an executor discretion to divide a trust for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes will generally give the executor greater flexibility than a provision requiring division for that purpose. When the executor is given discretion, however, there is a risk that the executor may through inadvertence or neglect fail to make a division that would be advantageous to the estate.

The generation-skipping transfer tax is complex and technical, and strategies for minimizing its impact on an estate require careful planning. For an extended discussion of the tax, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 113, Generation-Skipping Transfers and Trust Strategies (Matthew Bender). For further discussion of the comparative advantages and disadvantages of mandatory and discretionary division of trusts for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 113, Generation-Skipping Transfers and Trust Strategies, § 113.11[3][b] (Matthew Bender).

[f] Perpetuities Savings Clause

Section 8.07 of this will is a perpetuities savings clause. It requires that every trust created by the will, or by the exercise of a power of appointment created by the will, terminate not later than 21 years after the death of a person or persons living at the time of the testator's death. This is designed to avoid a violation of the Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities (USRAP), which became operative in California on January 1, 1992 [see Prob. Code §§ 21200-21231].

Under the USRAP, a nonvested property interest is invalid unless, when the interest is created, it is certain to vest or terminate no later than 21 years after the death of an individual then alive, or the interest either vests or terminates within 90 years after its creation [Prob. Code § 21205]. The USRAP differs from the old common law rule against perpetuities [see former Civ. Code § 715.2, repealed Jan. 1, 1992] in that it does not invalidate an interest from its inception, but waits to see if it actually vests or terminates within 90 years after it is created. During the 90-year period, persons with a potential interest in property "wait to see" if the interests in fact vest or terminate.

Although the USRAP has greatly reduced the dangers of violating the rule against perpetuities, it is still good practice to include a perpetuities savings clause in a will or other instrument when future interests are created and there is even a remote possibility of a violation of the rule. Although a will or other instrument that is executed in California may be effectively protected against potential violations of the rule by the USRAP, it is always possible that the testator or settlor will later move to a state that has not adopted the USRAP, and the dangers of a violation could increase dramatically. Even if the testator or settlor does not move to another state, there is a remote possibility that a violation of the USRAP may be discovered at the end of the 90-year wait-and-see period. For this reason, inclusion of Section 8.07 in this will is recommended. For a general discussion of the rule against perpetuities, the USRAP, and the use of perpetuities savings clauses in California, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 24, Devises--General Considerations, § 24.09 (Matthew Bender).

[g] Distribution of Class Gifts

Section 3.01, the primary residuary clause of this will, includes optional language providing that if a residuary beneficiary does not survive the testator, does not survive for a particular time required by the will, or for any other reason fails to take his or her portion of the residue, that portion will be distributed among the beneficiary's issue in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240, Prob. Code § 246, or Prob. Code § 247, or "in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation." Choosing the appropriate language from this provision will call for the residue to be distributed according to certain standard patterns for the distribution of class gifts described in the code sections referred to. For an explanation of each of these patterns, and the Probate Code sections that govern them, see § 61.15[6][c]-[f].

If _____ [he or she or any person named in this section] does not survive me or does not make a selection within three months after the date of my death, or within 30 days after this will is admitted to probate, whichever is later, then the gift made to _____ [him or her or that person] in this section shall fail. [If desired, specify any types of property that may not be selected, e.g., For purposes of this gift only, the word "personal effects" shall not include any motor vehicles or any items of property with an appraised value in excess of $2,500.]

2.03. Tangible Personal Property. I give all of my tangible personal property that is not otherwise disposed of as a specific gift in this will, including my interest in any insurance on that property, to those of the following persons who survive me [if desired, add survivorship clause, e.g., for 60 days or for 180 days], to be divided among them as they believe to be in accordance with my wishes: _____ [class description, e.g., my children]. If none of those beneficiaries survives me [for that period], or if any of the property is not chosen by the beneficiaries, the undistributed items shall be added to the residue of my estate and disposed of accordingly. [Optional: The term "tangible personal property" _____ (includes, but is not limited to, or does not include) _____ (specify items, e.g., livestock, pets, airplanes, and motor vehicles).]

2.04. General Pecuniary Gift. I give the sum of $ _____ to _____ [name of devisee and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my niece, Mary Margaret White] [if desired, add survivorship clause, e.g., if she survives me or, if she survives me for 60 days]. [If gift is conditioned on survival, add appropriate alternative disposition, e.g., If she does not survive me (for that period), this gift shall _____ (e.g., lapse and become part of the residue of my estate).]

2.05. General Pecuniary Gift Under Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. I give the sum of _____ [ $10,000 ] to _____ to _____ [name and relationship of custodian, e.g., my brother, Charles Robert White,] as custodian for _____ [name of minor and relationship to testator, e.g., my niece, Mary Margaret White], until _____ [he or she] reaches the age of _____ [majority or specify age not to exceed 25 years, e.g., 24 years], under the California Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. If, for any reason, _____ [name of proposed custodian, e.g., Charles Robert White,] is unable, unwilling, or ineligible to serve as custodian, then I nominate _____ [name and relationship of substitute custodian, e.g., my sister, Alice R. Turner,] as substitute custodian. [To make devise outright if minor attains stated age before devise is to be distributed, add: If _____ (name of minor, e.g., Mary Margaret White) has reached the age of _____ before this gift is to be distributed, then this gift shall be distributed to _____ (him or her) outright.]

[Select one of the following alternatives:]

2.06. Interest on Pecuniary Gifts. [Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will,] [n]o interest shall accrue on all [general] pecuniary gifts made in this will.

[or]

2.06. Interest on Pecuniary Gifts. [Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will,] [I]nterest at the rate _____ [e.g., of 10 percent per annum or specified in California Probate Code Section 12001, or any successor to that section,] shall accrue on all [general] pecuniary gifts made in this will from and after _____ [e.g., the date of my death or the first anniversary of my death] and until those gifts are paid in full. All interest shall be paid at the time the gift is distributed.

Article 3 : Residuary Provisions

3.01. Disposition of Residue. I give the residue of my estate as follows:

(a) If any of my children survive me, the residue of my estate shall be divided into as many shares of equal market value as are necessary to create one share for each of my children who survive me and one share for the issue who survive me of each of my children who predecease me.

(b) Each share created for a surviving child [to make exception for one or more shares held for specific persons, add: , except the share(s) (if any) created for _____ (name(s), e.g., my son, Richard Henry White)], shall be distributed outright to that child if that child has reached the age of _____ [e.g., 35] years at the time of my death. If a child has not reached that age at the time of my death, the share created for that child shall be held, administered, and distributed by the trustee in a separate trust according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Separate Share Trust. [To make exception for one or more shares held for specific persons, add: The share(s) (if any) created for _____ (name(s), e.g., my son, Richard Henry White,) shall be held, administered, and distributed by the trustee in a separate trust according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Trust for _____ (e.g., my son, Richard Henry White), regardless of _____ (his age or her age or their ages) at the time of my death.]

(c) If any of my children do not survive me, each share created for the issue of a deceased child shall be distributed outright to those issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation].

(d) If none of my children survive me, but I leave issue surviving, I give the residue of my estate outright to those issue, who are to take that property _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation].

3.02. Alternate Disposition of Residue. If none of my issue survive me, I give the residue of my estate to _____ [e.g., the Marin County chapter of the Anonymous Artists of America or my heirs].

Article 4 : Trust Distributions

4.01. Separate Share Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of each Separate Share Trust as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay or distribute to or apply for the benefit of the beneficiary, until he or she reaches the age of _____ [e.g., 35] years, in monthly or other convenient installments, but not less often than annually, as much of the net income of the trust, and as much of the principal of the trust, as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary for his or her _____ [to specify an "ascertainable standard": health, education, support, and maintenance or specify some other standard, e.g., comfort, welfare, and happiness]. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone. The trustee shall accumulate and add to principal any net income not distributed.

(b) When the beneficiary reaches the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years, the trustee shall distribute to him or her outright an amount from the trust principal equal to _____ [fraction or percentage, e.g., one third or thirty-three and one-third percent] of the fair market value of the principal of the trust, determined as of the first day of the calendar month preceding the month in which the distribution is made.

(c) When the beneficiary reaches the age of _____ [e.g., 30] years, the trustee shall distribute to him or her outright an amount from the trust principal equal to _____ [fraction or percentage; e.g., one half or fifty percent] of the fair market value of the remaining principal of the trust, determined as of the first day of the calendar month preceding the month in which the distribution is made.

(d) If the beneficiary has already reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years or _____ [e.g., 30] years when property is first allocated to this trust, then upon making the allocation, the trustee shall distribute to him or her outright an amount from the trust principal equal to _____ [fraction or percentage; e.g., one third or thirty-three and one-third percent] or _____ [fraction or percentage; e.g., two thirds or sixty-six and two-thirds percent], as the case may be, of the fair market value of the principal of the trust, and the balance shall be retained in trust pursuant to the applicable provisions of this section.

(e) When the beneficiary reaches the age of _____ [e.g., 35] years, the trustee shall distribute to him or her outright the balance of the trust property.

(f) If the beneficiary dies before the trust property has been fully distributed as provided in this section, the assets of his or her separate share shall be divided among his or her issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue. If the beneficiary dies without issue before the trust property has been fully distributed as provided in this section, the trustee shall distribute the entire undistributed balance of his or her separate share outright among the other then-living persons for whom separate shares were created under this will, and the issue of any deceased persons for whom separate shares were created under this will, _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]; provided, however, that if any part of that balance would otherwise be distributed to a person for whose benefit a trust is being administered under this will, that part shall instead be added to that trust and shall thereafter be administered according to its terms. If there are no surviving persons who may take the share of the beneficiary under this section, any remaining trust property shall be distributed outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., the Marin County chapter of the Anonymous Artists of America or my heirs].

4.02. Separate Trust for _____ [name, e.g., Richard Henry White]. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the Separate Trust for _____ [name, e.g., Richard Henry White] as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay or distribute to or apply for the benefit of _____ [e.g., Richard Henry White], for life, in monthly or other convenient installments, but not less often than annually, as much of the net income of the trust, and as much of the principal of the trust, as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary for

_____ [his or her] _____ [to specify an "ascertainable standard": health, education, support, and maintenance or specify some other standard, e.g., comfort, welfare, and happiness]. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone. The trustee shall accumulate and add to principal any net income not distributed.

(b) On the death of _____ [e.g., Richard Henry White], the trustee may pay the expenses of the last illness and funeral of _____ [e.g., Richard Henry White] out of the principal of the trust, unless the trustee determines that other adequate provisions have been made for payment of these expenses.

(c) On the death of _____ [e.g., Richard Henry White], and after the payment of any debts, expenses, fees, costs, and taxes that are payable from the trust property, the trustee shall divide the trust property among the issue of _____ [e.g., Richard Henry White] _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue. If the issue of _____ [e.g., Richard Henry White] all predecease _____ [e.g., Richard Henry White], or if _____ [e.g., Richard Henry White] should die without issue, the trustee shall distribute the entire undistributed balance of the trust property outright among the other then-living persons for whom separate shares were created under this will, and the issue of any deceased persons for whom separate shares were created, _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]; provided, however, that if any part of that balance would otherwise be distributed to a person for whose benefit a trust is being administered under this will, that part shall instead be added to that trust and shall thereafter be administered according to its terms. If there are no surviving persons who may take the share of the beneficiary under this section, any remaining trust property shall be distributed outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., the Marin County chapter of the Anonymous Artists of America or my heirs].

4.03. Other Resources Taken Into Account. In making any payments of income and distributions of principal from any trust created by this will for _____ [specify standard of discretion as set forth in provision authorizing the discretionary distribution, e.g., the health, education, support, and maintenance or care and comfort] of any of my children, the trustee shall take into consideration, to the extent the trustee deems advisable, any other income or resources available to that child that are known to the trustee and that are reasonably available for that purpose.

4.04. Undistributed Payments Pass to Next Successive Beneficiary. On the termination of the right of any beneficiary to receive payments from net income or principal under any of the trusts created by this will, all payments that are accrued but undistributed by the trustee at the date of the termination shall be distributed to the beneficiary next entitled to the successive interest by the terms of this will.

4.05. Trustee's Power to Determine Income and Principal. Unless otherwise specifically provided in this will, the determination of all matters with respect to what is principal and income of any trust under this will and the apportionment and allocation of receipts, expenses and other charges between principal and income shall be governed by the provisions of the California Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act from time to time existing. The trustee in the trustee's discretion shall determine any matter not provided for either in this instrument or in the California Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act.

4.06. Trustee Shall Favor Income Beneficiaries. The primary purpose in establishing _____ [e.g., the Separate Trust for Richard Henry White] is to benefit the person who is the income beneficiary. It is my intention that the trustee shall exercise the powers and discretion granted in this will in favor of the person who is the then-current income beneficiary of the trust, except when such an exercise would be inconsistent with other provisions of this will. In each instance, the rights of subsequent beneficiaries and remainder beneficiaries shall be considered subordinate to the rights of the then-current income beneficiary. This declaration of intention is intended to include, but is not limited to, investment policy, the exercise of discretionary powers to determine what constitutes principal and what constitutes income, and the determination of the amounts to be paid to or applied for the benefit of the income beneficiary.

4.07. Spendthrift Clause. The interests of each trust beneficiary under this will are not transferable by voluntary or involuntary assignment or by operation of law, and shall be free from the claims of creditors and from attachment, execution, bankruptcy, and other legal process, to the maximum extent permitted by law.

4.08. Administration of Generation-Skipping Trusts. The provisions of this section apply to any trust under this will in which there is property that is or may become subject to the federal generation-skipping transfer tax:

(a) If the executor intends to allocate any part of the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption that is available to me to some but not all of the property to be distributed to any trust to which this section of the will applies, the executor _____ [shall or may, in the executor's discretion,] obtain an order for distribution that divides that trust into two separate trusts, to be designated as the Exempt Trust and the Non-Exempt Trust. [*If executor has discretionary power to divide trusts: If the executor elects to divide a trust in the manner provided in this section, the or, if division of trusts is mandatory rather than discretionary: The] Exempt Trust shall contain the share of the property of that trust equal in value to the amount of the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption that the executor intends to allocate to the trust. The Non-Exempt Trust shall contain the balance of the property of that trust. The executor shall then actually allocate the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption to the Exempt Trust and not to the Non-Exempt Trust so that the Exempt Trust shall have an inclusion ratio of zero for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes and the Non-Exempt Trust shall have an inclusion ratio of one for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes.*

(b) In allocating assets between the Exempt Trust and Non-Exempt Trust for purposes of this section, the executor shall _____ [*for a pecuniary allocation: allocate the trust assets between the Exempt Trust and Non-Exempt Trust in cash or in kind, or partly in each, on a pro rata or non pro rata basis, and in undivided interests or not or, for a fractional allocation: allocate to each trust a fractional share of each and every substantial interest or right held by the trust being divided. [*If preceding sentence provides for a pecuniary allocation, add: If the allocation is not made within 15 months from the date of my death, the executor shall pay interest, at the legal rate, from the date of my death to the date of distribution. For purposes of allocation under this section, assets shall be valued at their values _____ (to use date of distribution values: on the date or dates of distribution or, to use valuation for estate tax purposes: as finally determined for federal estate tax purposes; provided that any assets allocated in kind shall be allocated between the Exempt Trust and the Non-Exempt Trust in a manner that fairly reflects the net appreciation or depreciation in the value of the assets in the trust being divided, measured from the date of my death to the date of payment.]

(c) Regardless of whether or not subsection (a) applies, if the amount of my generation-skipping transfer tax exemption actually allocated by the executor to a trust to which this section applies is equal to the value of the property of that trust so that the entire trust has an inclusion ratio of zero for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes, the entire trust shall be referred to as the Exempt Trust. On the other hand, if no part of my generation-skipping transfer tax exemption is actually allocated to the trust by the executor so that the entire trust has an inclusion ratio of one for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes (or if I am not the transferor of that trust for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes), the entire trust shall be referred to as the Non-Exempt Trust.

(d) The trustee may, but is not required to, administer the trusts under this will to which this section applies in such a manner that distributions made during the trust terms to "skip persons" (as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 2613(a) or any equivalent successor section) are made from Exempt Trusts, and distributions made during the trust terms to "non-skip persons" (as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 2613(b) or any equivalent successor section) are made from Non-Exempt trusts.

[Optional:]

[(e)] If the trustee determines that the burdens of generation-skipping transfer taxes, income taxes, and death taxes on a Non-Exempt Trust, my estate, or the beneficiaries of that trust would be reduced, the trustee may petition the court to amend the trust to grant to one or more trust beneficiaries who are non-skip persons in a generation below me a general testamentary power of appointment over all or a specified portion of that Non-Exempt Trust. Any power to amend the trust is within the discretion of the court, and the preceding sentence shall not be construed to give the trustee any power that the trustee does not already have under California trust law to petition the court under the appropriate circumstances, nor shall it be construed to limit the power of the trustee or any beneficiary under the California trust law to petition the court under the appropriate circumstances.

[(f)] The purpose of this section is to allow the trustee to administer the trusts so as to decrease the amount of generation-skipping transfer taxes owed on generation-skipping transfers from the trusts. The trustee shall balance that consideration against any other tax and non-tax considerations, and may disregard the generation-skipping transfer tax consequences to the extent that the trustee determines that doing so will allow the trustee to carry out my intentions in creating the trusts. All decisions of the trustee under this subsection are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone.

[(g)] If, in the judgment of the executor or the trustee, at any time after the execution of this will, any statute, regulation, court decision, or administrative ruling imposes different or additional requirements on the trust in connection with the generation-skipping transfer tax, the executor or the trustee may petition the court to amend the terms of the trust to meet those requirements and achieve the purpose of this section.

Article 5 : Executor

5.01. Nomination of Executor. I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my brother, Charles Robert White,] as executor of this will.

5.02. Successor Executors. If _____ [nominee(s) for initial executor, e.g., my brother, Charles Robert White,] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or to continue to serve, as executor, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as successor executor:

First, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for coexecutors) my sister, Alice R. Turner];

Second, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for individual) Arthur J. Taylor, of Santa Rosa, California];

Third, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for corporate executor) Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

5.03. Definition of Executor. The term "executor," as used in this will, refers to each personal representative of my estate who is serving at the pertinent time.

5.04. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any executor nominated in this will.

5.05. Independent Administration. The executor shall _____ [have full or not have] authority to administer my estate under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act.

5.06. Powers of Executor. Subject to any limitations stated elsewhere in this will, the executor shall have, in addition to all of the powers now or hereafter conferred on executors by law, and any powers enumerated elsewhere in this will, the power to perform any of the acts specified in this section:

(a) Take possession or control of all of my estate subject to disposition by this will, and collect all debts due to me or to my estate.

(b) Receive the rents, issues, and profits from all real and personal property in my estate until the estate is settled or delivered over by order of court to my heirs or beneficiaries.

(c) Pay taxes on, and take all steps reasonably necessary for the management, protection, and preservation of, all property in my estate.

(d) Commence and prosecute, either individually or jointly with my heirs or beneficiaries, any action necessary or proper to quiet title to or recover possession of any real or personal property in my estate.

(e) Vote in person, and give proxies to exercise, any voting rights with respect to any stock, any membership in a nonprofit corporation, or any other property in my estate, and waive notice of a meeting, give consent to the holding of a meeting, and authorize, ratify, approve, or confirm any action that could be taken by shareholders, members, or property owners.

(f) Insure the property of my estate against damage or loss, and insure the executor against liability to third persons.

(g) Deposit money belonging to my estate in an insured account in a financial institution in California.

(h) Invest and reinvest any money of my estate not reasonably required for the immediate administration of my estate in any kind of property, real, personal, or mixed, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own accounts; provided, however, that in investing any property of my estate, the executor shall act with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing, including but not limited to the general economic conditions and the anticipated needs of my estate and its beneficiaries, that a prudent person acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of like character and with like aims to accomplish the purposes of my estate as determined from this will.

(i) Retain any assets of my estate for as long as the executor deems to be in the best interest of my estate.

(j) Borrow money on behalf of my estate and pledge, hypothecate, or otherwise encumber property of my estate, real or personal, as security for any sums so borrowed.

(k) In order to satisfy a pecuniary gift or to distribute or divide estate assets into shares or partial shares, the executor may distribute or divide those assets in kind, or divide undivided interests in those assets, or sell all or any part of those assets and distribute or divide the property in cash, in kind, or partly in cash and partly in kind. Property distributed to satisfy a pecuniary gift under this will shall be valued at its fair market value at the time of distribution. This section shall apply only to the extent that it does not conflict with the provisions of Article 4 specifying allocation of assets involving generation-skipping trusts.

(l) Pay any and all charges reasonably incurred in connection with or incidental to the distribution of any property of my estate, including but not limited to expenses of storage, freight, shipping, delivery, packing, and insurance; and, on any accounting, treat any such expenditures as expenses of the administration of my estate.

(m) To the extent permitted by law, and without regard to the resulting effect on any other provision of this will, on any person interested in my estate, or on the amount of taxes that may be payable, the executor shall have the power to choose a valuation date for tax purposes; choose the methods to pay any death taxes; elect to treat or use any item for state or federal estate or income tax purposes as an income tax deduction or an estate tax deduction; disclaim all or any portion of any interest in property passing to my estate at or after my death; and determine when an item is to be treated as taken into income or used as a tax deduction.

(n) If any asset of my estate consists of an option right, exercise the option after authorization by order of court, upon a showing that the exercise would be to the advantage of my estate, and use any funds or property in my estate to acquire the property covered by the option.

(o) Hold a security in the name of a nominee or in any other form without disclosure of my estate so that title to the security may pass by delivery.

(p) Exercise any subscription rights owned or received by my estate by reason of owning securities, after authorization by court upon a showing that it is to the advantage of my estate.

(q) Sell, at either public or private sale and with or without notice, and grant options to purchase, any property belonging to my estate [optional], subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(r) Lease any real or personal property belonging to my estate on such terms and conditions as the executor determines to be in the best interest of my estate [optional], subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(s) Dispose of or abandon tangible personal property, except tangible personal property that is a specific gift, when the cost of collecting, maintaining, and safeguarding the property would exceed its fair market value.

(t) Compromise or settle any claim, action, or proceeding by or for the benefit of, or against, me, my estate, or the executor [optional], subject only to any confirmation of court that may be required by law].

(u) Employ professional investment counsel to make recommendations with respect to, and otherwise assist in, investing the assets of my estate; and, on any accounting, treat any fees paid to investment counsel as expenses of the administration of my estate.

5.07. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any beneficiary under this will is a minor, or it appears to the executor that any beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the executor, in lieu of making direct payments to the beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the executor); to one or more suitable persons as the executor deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the executor for all purposes.

5.08. Executor's Liability for Own Acts. The executor shall not be liable to my estate or to any person interested in it for any act or omission of the executor, except an act or omission that is committed intentionally, with gross negligence, in bad faith, or with reckless indifference to the interests of persons interested in my estate, or an act or omission from which the executor derives a profit.

Article 6 : Trustee

6.01. Nomination of Trustee. I nominate _____ [name of trustee and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my brother, Charles Robert White,] as trustee of any trust created under this will.

6.02. Successor Trustee. If _____ [nominee for initial trustee, e.g., my brother, Charles Robert White,] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or continue to serve, as trustee, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as trustee:

First, _____ [name and description, e.g., my sister, Alice R. Turner];

Second, _____ [name and description, e.g., my niece, Mary Margaret White];

Third, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for corporate trustee): Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

6.03. Definition of Trustee. Reference in this instrument to "the trustee" shall be deemed a reference to whoever is serving as trustee or co-trustees, and shall include alternate or successor trustees, unless the context requires otherwise.

6.04. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any trustee nominated in this will.

6.05. Compensation of Trustee. The trustee shall be entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered, payable without court order. [Optional: If a trustee serves for only part of a calendar year, the annual compensation shall be prorated according to the number of days during that year that the trustee was acting as trustee.]

6.06. Compensation of Trustee. The trustee shall be entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered, payable without court order. [Optional: If a trustee serves for only part of a calendar year, the annual compensation shall be prorated according to the number of days during that year that the trustee was acting as trustee.]

6.07. Procedure for Resignation. Any trustee may resign at any time, without giving a reason for the resignation, by giving written notice, at least _____ [specify; e.g., 30 days] before the time the resignation is to take effect, to any other trustee then acting, to any persons authorized to designate a successor trustee, to all living trust beneficiaries known to the trustee (or, in the case of a minor beneficiary, to the parent or guardian of that beneficiary), and to the successor trustee. A resignation shall be effective upon written acceptance of the trust by the successor trustee.

6.08. General Powers of Trustee. To carry out the purposes of the trusts created under this will, and subject to any limitations stated elsewhere in this will, the trustee shall have all of the following powers, in addition to all of the powers now or hereafter conferred on trustees by law:

(a) Retain property received into the trust at its inception, or later added to the trust, as long as the trustee considers that retention in the best interests of the trust or in furtherance of my goals in creating the trust, as determined from this will, but subject to the standards of the prudent investor rule as set forth in the California Uniform Prudent Investor Act.

(b) Invest and manage the trust assets as a prudent investor would, by considering the purposes, terms, distribution requirements, and other circumstances of the trust. In satisfying this standard, the trustee shall exercise reasonable care, skill, and caution. The trustee's investment and management decisions respecting individual assets and courses of action must be evaluated not in isolation, but in the context of the trust portfolio as a whole and as a part of an overall investment strategy having risk and return objectives reasonably suited to the trust.

(c) Retain or acquire unproductive or underproductive property.

(d) In the trustee's discretion, invest or reinvest in mutual funds, money market funds, investment trusts, regulated investment companies, market funds, and index funds, and in the shares or securities of any such funds or companies, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own account.

(e) Acquire and maintain as a trust asset a life insurance policy on the life of any person, including _____ [the trustee or any of the trustees], issued by any company and in any amount that the trustee may deem advisable, and to exercise all rights of ownership granted in that policy.

(f) With or without court authorization, sell (for cash or on deferred payments, and with or without security), convey, exchange, partition, and divide trust property; grant options for the sale or exchange of trust property for any purpose, whether the contract is to be performed or the option is to be exercised within or beyond the term of the trust; and lease trust property for any purpose, for terms within or extending beyond the expiration of the trust, regardless of whether the leased property is commercial or residential and regardless of the number of units leased.

(g) Lend or advance the trustee's own funds to my estate or to any other trust created by me, for any purpose properly related to that estate or trust, with interest thereon at the then-prevailing rates, and to receive security for any such loans in any commercially reasonable form. The trustee may, from time to time, purchase or lease assets from, sell or lease assets to, and exchange assets with my estate at fair market values. [Optional: However, the fair market value of any asset sold, purchased, or leased pursuant to this provision must first be determined by an independent appraisal.]

(h) Engage in any transactions with the personal representative of my estate that are in the best interest of any trusts under this will.

(i) Manage, control, improve, and maintain all real and personal trust property.

(j) Subdivide or develop land; make or obtain the vacation of plats and adjust boundaries, or adjust differences in valuation on exchange or partition by giving or receiving consideration; and dedicate land or easements to public use with or without consideration.

(k) Make ordinary or extraordinary repairs or alterations in buildings or other trust property, demolish any improvements, raze existing party walls or buildings, and erect new party walls or buildings, as the trustee deems advisable.

(l) Enter into oil, gas, and other mineral leases, on terms deemed advisable by the trustee; enter into any pooling, unitization, repressurization, community, or other types of agreements relating to the exploration, development, operation, and conservation of mineral properties; drill, mine, and otherwise operate for the development of oil, gas, and other minerals; contract for the installation and operation of absorption and repressuring plants; and install and maintain pipelines. Any such leases or agreements may be for a term within or extending beyond the term of the trust.

(m) In the trustee's discretion, abandon any [unproductive or wasted] trust asset or interest therein.

(n) Employ and discharge agents and employees, including but not limited to attorneys, accountants, investment and other advisers, custodians of assets, property managers, real estate agents and brokers, and appraisers, to advise and assist the trustees in the management of any trusts created under this will, and compensate them from the trust property. [Optional: The agents and employees may be associated or affiliated with the trustee, or may be descendants or other persons related to the trustee or to me, or a company associated with any such persons.] [Optional: The trustee is entitled to rely on the advice of any professional advisers employed under this provision. Reasonable compensation paid to any such agents or employees shall not diminish the compensation to which the trustee is otherwise entitled.]

(o) With respect to securities held in trust, exercise all the rights, powers, and privileges of an owner, including, but not limited to, the power to vote, give proxies, and pay assessments and other sums deemed by the trustee necessary for the protection of the trust property; participate in voting trusts, pooling agreements, foreclosures, reorganizations, consolidations, mergers, and liquidations, and, in connection therewith, deposit securities with and transfer title to any protective or other committee under such terms as the trustee deems advisable; exercise or sell stock subscription or conversion rights; and accept and retain as investments of the trust any securities or other property received through the exercise of any of the foregoing powers.

(p) Hold securities or other trust property in the trustee's own name or in the name of a nominee, without disclosure of the trust, or in unregistered form, so that title may pass by delivery.

(q) Deposit securities in a securities depository that is either licensed or exempt from licensing.

(r) Borrow money for any trust purpose from any person or entity on such terms and conditions as the trustee deems advisable, and obligate the trust for repayment; encumber any trust property by mortgage, deed of trust, pledge, or otherwise, whether for terms within or extending beyond the term of the trust, as the trustee deems advisable, to secure repayment of any such loan; replace, renew, and extend any such loan or encumbrance; and pay loans or other obligations of the trust deemed advisable by the trustee.

(s) In the trustee's discretion, make loans to beneficiaries out of funds of the trust and guarantee the repayment of loans made to beneficiaries by third parties by encumbering trust assets.

(t) Procure and carry, at the expense of the trust, insurance in such forms and in such amounts as the trustee deems advisable to protect the trust property against damage or loss, and to protect the trustee against liability with respect to third persons.

(u) Enforce any obligation owing to the trust, including any obligation secured by a deed of trust, mortgage, or pledge held as trust property, and to purchase any property subject to a security instrument held as trust property at any sale under the instrument.

(v) Extend the time for payment of any note or other obligation held as an asset of, and owing to, the trust, including accrued or future interest, and extend the time for repayment beyond the term of the trust.

(w) Pay or contest any claim against the trust; release or prosecute any claim in favor of the trust; or, in lieu of payment, contest, release, or prosecution, adjust, compromise, or settle any such claim, in whole or in part, with or without consideration.

(x) At trust expense, prosecute or defend actions, claims, or proceedings of whatever kind for the protection of the trust property and of the trustee in the performance of the trustee's duties, and employ and compensate attorneys, advisers, and other agents as the trustee deems advisable.

(y) Accept additions to any trusts created by this will, from any source and at any time; all such additions shall become a part of the trust and shall be held, administered, and distributed in accordance with the terms of the trust. Any additions to the trust shall be made by designating in writing the property to be added. However, the titling of any account, deed, or similar asset in the name of the trustee, as trustee of the trust, shall be deemed to be a transfer to the trust. Any designation by a third party, whether by will, deed, account title designation, or similar transfer, shall also be a transfer to the trust estate. No addition shall become part of the trust estate until it is accepted in writing by the trustee.

6.09. Trustee's Discretion to Allow Income Beneficiaries to Occupy Real Property. The trustee may permit any current income beneficiary of any trust created by this will to occupy any real property that forms a part of the trust. The terms of the occupancy shall be determined by the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, and may include, but are not limited to, rent-free occupancy or occupancy in consideration of full or partial payment of mortgage or trust deed payments, taxes, assessments, insurance, maintenance, and ordinary repairs.

6.10. Power to Combine Trust Assets. Each trust created under this will shall constitute a separate trust and be administered and accounted for accordingly; however, the assets of all of the trusts may be combined and held for the trust beneficiaries without physical division into separate trusts until time of distribution.

6.11. Early Termination of Trusts. The trustee shall have the power, in the trustee's discretion, to terminate any trust created under this will whenever the fair market value of the trust falls below _____ [amount, e.g., $25,000], or becomes so small in relation to the costs of administration as to make continuing administration uneconomical. Upon termination, the trustee shall distribute the principal and any accrued or undistributed net income to the income beneficiaries in proportion to their shares of the income. If no fixed amount of income is payable to specific beneficiaries, the trustee shall distribute the principal and any accrued or undistributed net income in equal shares to those beneficiaries who would then be entitled to income payments from the trust.

6.12. Power to Delay Distributions. Following my death, the trustee shall have the power, in the trustee's discretion, to determine the reasonable administrative period necessary or appropriate to pay my debts, expenses, taxes, and other liabilities, before dividing or distributing the trust assets as provided herein, and to delay the division or distribution during that period. During that administrative period, the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, may accumulate the trust income, or distribute the income currently, or partially accumulate and partially distribute the income, as the trustee determines, but any income accumulated shall be distributable to the beneficiary or beneficiaries next entitled to distribution or allocation of the same upon conclusion of the administrative period.

6.13. Division or Distribution in Cash or in Kind. In order to satisfy a pecuniary gift or to distribute or divide trust assets into shares or partial shares, the trustee may distribute or divide those assets in kind, or divide undivided interests in those assets, or sell all or any part of those assets and distribute or divide the property in cash, in kind, or partly in cash and partly in kind. Property distributed to satisfy a pecuniary gift under this will shall be valued at its fair market value at the time of distribution. This section shall apply only to the extent that it does not conflict with the provisions of Article 4 specifying allocation of assets involving generation-skipping trusts.

6.14. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any trust beneficiary is a minor, or it appears to the trustee that any trust beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the trustee, in lieu of making direct payments to the trust beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the trustee); to one or more suitable persons as the trustee deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the trustee for all purposes.

6.15. Grant of Specific Powers Not to Limit Exercise of General Powers. The enumeration of specific powers under this will shall not limit the trustee from exercising any other power with respect to any trusts created by this will that may be necessary or appropriate for the trustee to have and exercise in order to carry out the purposes of the trusts or to permit the trustee to fulfill the trustee's responsibilities and duties with respect to the trust.

6.16. Power to Disclaim or Release Powers. Any trustee may disclaim, release, or restrict the scope of any power or discretion that the trustee may hold in connection with any trust created under this will, whether the power or discretion is expressly granted in this will or is implied by law. The trustee shall disclaim a power in the manner required by applicable federal or California law. The trustee shall release or restrict any power or discretion by giving written notice to the beneficiary or beneficiaries then entitled to current distribution of income from the trust, specifying the power or discretion to be released or restricted, the nature of the restriction, and, if appropriate, the person or persons to whom the released or restricted power shall pass and be exercisable. If a power is disclaimed, the power shall be available to and exercisable by the other trustee or trustees.

6.17. Trustee's Liability. No [optional:"family" or individual] trustee [optional: who is serving without compensation under this will] shall be liable to any interested party for acts or omissions of that trustee, except those resulting from that trustee's willful misconduct or gross negligence. [Optional: As used in this provision, a "family" trustee is a trustee who is related to me by blood or marriage.] This standard shall also apply regarding a trustee's liability for the acts or omissions of any co-trustee or agent employed by the trustee.

6.18. Written Notice to Trustee. Until the trustee receives written notice of any death or other event upon which the right to payments from any trust may depend, the trustee shall incur no liability for disbursements made in good faith to persons whose interests may have been affected by that event.

6.19. Duty to Account. The trustee shall render accounts at least annually, at the termination of a trust, and upon a change of trustees, to the persons and in the manner required by law.

Article 7 : Guardian

7.01. Nomination of Guardian. If a guardian of the person, estate, or person and estate is necessary for any minor child of mine, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my sister, Alice R. Turner, or Edward C. Gardner, who resides at _____ (address)], as that guardian. If at any time _____ [name, e.g., my sister, Alice R. Turner, or Edward C. Gardner] is unable or unwilling to serve or continue as guardian, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my brother, Charles Robert White,] as guardian.

PRACTICE TIP

In some circumstances it may be appropriate to nominate one or more individuals to serve as guardian(s) of the person and a different set of individuals to serve as guardian(s) of the estate. In such cases, the form for Section 7.01 should be repeated, once for each set of nominations. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

7.02. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any guardian of the estate nominated in this will.

Article 8 : Concluding Provisions

8.01. Definition of Death Taxes. The term "death taxes," as used in this will, shall mean all inheritance, estate, succession, and other similar taxes that are payable by any person on account of that person's interest in my estate or by reason of my death, including penalties and interest, but excluding the following:

(a) Any additional tax that may be assessed under Internal Revenue Code Section 2032A.

(b) Any federal or state tax imposed on a generation-skipping transfer, as that term is defined in the federal tax laws unless the applicable tax statutes provide that the generation-skipping transfer tax on that transfer is payable directly out of the assets of my gross estate].

8.02. Payment of Death Taxes. The executor shall pay death taxes as follows:

(a) Death taxes attributable to property inventoried in my probate estate shall be paid out of my residuary estate, and none of those death taxes shall be prorated or apportioned among the persons interested in that property.

(b) Death taxes attributable to property not inventoried in my probate estate shall be prorated and apportioned among the persons interested in that property as provided in the California Probate Code.

(c) The method of apportionment of death taxes specified in this will shall apply equally to any property passing under any codicil to this will, except to the extent that a codicil expressly provides for a different method of apportionment.

PRACTICE TIP

The allocation of taxes shown in this form is but one of many possible allocation schemes. In each case the drafter should carefully consider the nature of the client's assets, including whether those assets will pass under the will or otherwise, and the value of assets passing under the will as specific, rather than residuary, gifts. Only when these factors are considered can the appropriate tax allocation formula be selected. Other possible allocation clauses appear in CALIFORNIA WILLS & TRUSTS FORMS, Div. IV, Individual Will Provisions, Pt. 90, Concluding Provisions, Form 90.30 (Alts. 90.30-1-90.30-7); for more detailed discussion of tax allocation, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 23, Provisions for Payment of Taxes, Expenses, and Debt (Matthew Bender).

8.03. Abatement of Gifts. If my estate is insufficient to satisfy in full all of the gifts provided for in this will, I direct that gifts shall abate in the following order:

First, the gift to _____ [name, e.g., Mary Margaret White] made in Section _____ [e.g., 2.04] of this will;

Second, the gift to _____ [name, e.g., Charles Robert White] made in Section _____ [e.g., 2.05] of this will.

8.04. Simultaneous Death. If any beneficiary under this will and I die simultaneously, or if it cannot be established by clear and convincing evidence whether that beneficiary or I died first, I shall be deemed to have survived that beneficiary, and this will shall be construed accordingly.

8.05. Intentional Omission of Heirs Not Specifically Provided For in Will. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will, I have intentionally and with full knowledge omitted to provide for my heirs, regardless of whether or not I am aware of their existence and identities at the time this will is executed.

8.06. No-Contest Clause. If any person, directly or indirectly, contests the validity of this will in whole or in part, or opposes, objects to, or seeks to invalidate any of its provisions, or seeks to succeed to any part of my estate otherwise than in the manner specified in this will, any gift or other interest given to that person under this will shall be revoked and shall be disposed of as if he or she had predeceased me [optional: without issue].

8.07. Perpetuities Savings Clause. Notwithstanding any other provision of this will, every trust created by this will[, or by the exercise of any power of appointment created by this will,] shall terminate no later than 21 years after the death of _____ [designate measuring life or lives, e.g., the last survivor of my sister, Rose Elizabeth White, and my issue] who are alive at the time of my death. If a trust is terminated under this section of the will, the trustee shall distribute all of the principal and undistributed income of the trust to the income beneficiaries of the trust in the proportion in which they are entitled (or eligible, in the case of discretionary payments) to receive income immediately before the termination. If that proportion is not fixed by the terms of this will, the trustee shall distribute all of the trust property to the persons then entitled or eligible to receive income from the trust _____ [specify pattern of distribution, e.g., outright in a manner that, in the trustee's opinion, will give effect to my intent in creating the trust, the trustee's decision to be final and incontestable by anyone or as a class, in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether all of such persons are members of the same generation].

8.08. Definition of Incapacity. For purposes of this will, a person shall be deemed "incapacitated" if and for so long as a court of competent jurisdiction has made a finding to that effect, or a guardian or conservator of that person's estate or person duly appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction is serving, or upon certification by two physicians licensed to practice under the laws of the state where the person is domiciled at the time of the certification that the person is unable properly to care for himself or herself or for his or her property. The latter certification shall be made by each physician in a written declaration under penalty of perjury.

8.09. Definition of Education. As used in this will, the term "education" refers to the following:

- (a) Education at public or private elementary, junior high, middle, or high schools, including boarding schools;
- (b) Undergraduate, graduate, and postgraduate study in any field, whether or not of a professional character, in colleges, universities, or other institutions of higher learning;
- (c) Specialized formal or informal training in music, the stage, the handicrafts, or the arts, whether by private instruction or otherwise; and

(d) Formal or informal vocational or technical training, whether through programs or institutions devoted solely to vocational or technical training, or otherwise.

8.10. Captions. The captions appearing in this will are for convenience of reference only, and shall be disregarded in determining the meaning and effect of the provisions of this will.

8.11. Severability Clause. If any provision of this will is invalid, that provision shall be disregarded, and the remainder of this will shall be construed as if the invalid provision had not been included.

8.12. California Law to Apply. All questions concerning the validity and interpretation of this will, including any trusts created by this will, shall be governed by the laws of the State of California in effect at the time this will is executed.

8.13. Gifts to "Heirs." For any gift to my heirs that is made outright in this instrument, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate at the time for distribution, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death. For any assets of any trust estate created by this will to be distributed to my heirs, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate immediately following the termination of the trust of each share, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death.

§ 61.210 Will for Married Person; All Property Outright to Spouse and Children; Disclaimer Trust

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a complete will designed for use by a testator who is married, has children, and wishes to leave his or her entire estate outright to the spouse and children.

The will permits the testator to make one or more specific devises [see Article 2]. The residuary estate is left to the testator's spouse or, if the spouse does not survive the testator, to the testator's children in equal shares [see Article 3].

For illustrative purposes, it is assumed that the number of the testator's children may increase or decrease after the will is executed. To accommodate the possibility that the testator may have additional children, dispositions to the children are made in the form of class gifts.

The devises to the surviving spouse provided for in this will avoid all estate taxation in the testator's estate by reason of the unlimited federal estate tax marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056; see also discussion of the marital deduction in Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions].

However, this will not achieve the maximum tax savings if the combined assets of the testator and spouse are likely to exceed the "applicable exclusion amount" (unified credit) [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] available on the death of either the testator or the spouse. To achieve maximum estate tax savings under these circumstances, a marital deduction formula devise coupled with a bypass trust should be considered [see §§ 61.212, 61.213, 61.214].

The will contains provisions nominating an executor [see Article 5] and a guardian for any of the testator's children who are minors at the testator's death [see Article 7].

[b] Disclaimer Trust

Section 3.03 of this will provides that if the testator's spouse elects to disclaim any property that he or she would have been entitled to receive under the will, the property will be held in trust under the provisions of Article 4. This has the effect of creating a "disclaimer trust," but only if and to the extent that the surviving spouse disclaims the property.

Disclaimers can be useful estate planning tools. If property that the surviving spouse would otherwise be entitled to receive (either outright or in trust) upon the death of the deceased spouse is effectively disclaimed under rules set forth in the Internal Revenue Code [see I.R.C. § 2518; Treas. Reg. §§ 25.2518-1-25.2518-3], the property may be removed from the surviving spouse's estate for estate tax purposes. The property will pass to alternative devisees or heirs outright or, if the will provides for a disclaimer trust, be transferred to a trust which can be structured in such a way that its assets will not be included in the surviving spouse's estate on the surviving spouse's death. Disclaimers can be used to defer decisions on allocation of assets or devises until after a testator's death, when the consequences of allocation will generally be seen much more clearly than when the will is executed. For further discussion of disclaimer trusts, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.16.

Although the disclaimer trust makes the will more complicated than it would otherwise be, it can save substantial estate taxes if the value of the combined estates of the testator and the spouse should increase unexpectedly after the will is executed. The increase may result from an unexpected inheritance, a large personal injury award, or some other cause. The attorney may omit the disclaimer trust if a simpler will is desired, but its inclusion is recommended even if it is thought unlikely that it will be needed.

Since the disclaimer trust will not become operative in many cases, its provisions have been kept relatively simple. They provide for lifetime distributions to the surviving spouse of all of the income and as much of the principal as is needed for the surviving spouse's health, education, support, and maintenance. This provision establishes a so-called "ascertainable standard" and will ensure that, even if the surviving spouse serves as trustee of the disclaimer trust, its assets will not be included in the surviving spouse's estate on his or her death [see I.R.C. § 2041(b)(1)(A) and discussion in Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.13[1][g]]. On the death of the surviving spouse, the trust assets are distributed to the testator's issue. If more complex disclaimer trust provisions are desired, the attorney may refer to the more complex wills in this chapter for sample patterns of distribution. If those provisions are inadequate, the attorney should refer to the detailed will provisions in California Wills & Trusts (Matthew Bender). However, the attorney should modify the provisions of the disclaimer trust only after analyzing the proposed modifications carefully to determine that they will not result in unfavorable tax consequences.

[c] Survivorship

This form gives the testator the option of requiring that devisees survive the testator, or survive the testator for a specified time, in order to receive their devises. It is sometimes advisable to condition a devise on survival for a specified period of time, as this may obviate successive administration and taxation of the same property. In some circumstances, however, routine use of survivorship clauses may be unnecessary, or even harmful. For discussion, see § 61.200[1][b].

[d] Standard Provisions

This will contains numerous commonly encountered provisions that are also found in other wills in this chapter. These are provisions relating to the executor's bond [see Section 5.04 of form], the executor's authority to act under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act [see Section 5.05 of form], the executor's powers [see Section 5.06 of form], payments to incapacitated persons [see Section 5.07 of form], the executor's liability [see Section 5.08 of form], disinheritance of the testator's heirs [see Section 8.04 of form], and contest of the will [see Section 8.05 of form]. For discussion of these provisions, see § 61.200[1].

Section 3.02 of this will provides that the residue will be distributed to the testator's children if the testator's spouse does not survive the testator. It also provides that, if any of the children fail to survive the testator, the share of the deceased child will be distributed outright among the child's issue who survive the testator in the manner provided in Prob. Code §§ 240, 246, or 247, or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation. Choosing the appropriate language from this provision will call for the residue to be distributed according to certain standard patterns for the distribution of class gifts described in the code sections referred to. For an explanation of each of these patterns, and the Probate Code sections that govern them, see § 61.15[6][c]-[f].

I make this gift to _____ [him or her or them] as a symbol of my love and affection. If _____ [he or she or any person named in this section] does not survive me or does not make a selection within three months after the date of my death, or within 30 days after this will is admitted to probate, whichever is later, then the gift made to _____ [him or her or that person] in this section shall fail. [If desired, specify any types of property that may not be selected, e.g., For purposes of this gift only, the word "personal effects" shall not include any motor vehicles or any items of property with an appraised value in excess of $2,500].

3.01. Disposition of Residue. I give the residue of my estate outright to my _____ [husband or wife] [if desired, add survivorship clause, e.g., if he survives me or, if she survives me for 60 days].

3.02. Alternate Disposition of Residue. If my _____ [husband or wife] does not survive me [for 60 days], I give the residue of my estate outright to my children, as a class, in equal shares. If any of my children should fail to survive me, the share of the deceased person shall be distributed outright among the issue of the deceased person, if any, who survive me, _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of any child who dies without surviving issue shall be divided equally among the other shares created under this section. If the residue of my estate is not completely disposed of by the preceding provisions, I give the portion that is not disposed of to _____ [specify alternative method of disposition, e.g., the Marin County chapter of the Anonymous Artists of America or my heirs].

3.03. Disclaimer of Property by My Spouse. Any property or portion of property that is disclaimed by my _____ [wife or husband] shall pass to the trustee named in Article 6, in trust, to be held, administered, and distributed according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Disclaimer Trust. [However, if my _____ (wife or husband) also disclaims an interest in all or any portion of the Disclaimer Trust, that disclaimed interest shall be administered and distributed as if my _____ (wife or husband) predeceased me.]

Article 4 : Trust Distributions

4.01. Disclaimer Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the Disclaimer Trust as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife] all of the net income of the trust, in monthly or other convenient installments [agreed upon by _____ (identity of beneficiary, e.g., my wife) and the trustee], but not less often than annually, for life.

(b) The trustee shall distribute to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife], for life, as much of the principal of the trust as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary [, when added to the income payments from this trust,] for _____ [his or her] health, education, support, and maintenance. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone.

(c) On the death of my _____ [husband or wife], [and after the payment of any debts, expenses, fees, costs, and taxes that are payable from the trust property,] the trustee shall divide the trust property among my issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue. If all my issue predecease my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall distribute any undistributed balance of the trust property outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., my heirs or the Marin County chapter of the Anonymous Artists of America].

4.02. Other Resources Taken Into Account. In making any distributions of principal from the Disclaimer Trust for the health, education, support, and maintenance of my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall take into consideration, to the extent the trustee deems advisable, any other income or resources available to _____ [him or her] that are known to the trustee and that are reasonably available for that purpose.

4.03. Trustee's Power to Determine Income and Principal. Unless otherwise specifically provided in this will, the determination of all matters with respect to what is principal and income of any trust under this will and the apportionment and allocation of receipts, expenses, and other charges between principal and income shall be governed by the provisions of the California Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act from time to time existing. The trustee in the trustee's discretion shall determine any matter not provided for either in this instrument or in the California Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act.

Article 5 : Executor

5.01. Nomination of Executor. I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my husband or my wife or my brother, Edward R. Brown,] as executor of this will.

5.02. Successor Executor. If _____ [nominee(s) for initial executor, e.g., my husband or my wife or my brother, Edward R. Brown,] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or to continue to serve, as executor, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as successor executor:

First, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for coexecutors) my sister, Margaret E. Hunter];

Second, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for individual) Arthur J. Shoemaker, who resides at _____ (address)];

Third, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for corporate executor) Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

5.03. Definition of Executor. The term "executor," as used in this will, refers to each personal representative of my estate who is serving at the pertinent time.

5.04. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any executor nominated in this will.

5.06. Powers of Executor. Subject to any limitations stated elsewhere in this will, the executor shall have, in addition to all of the powers now or hereafter conferred on executors by law, and any powers enumerated elsewhere in this will, the power to perform any of the acts specified in this section:

(a) Take possession or control of all of my estate subject to disposition by this will, and collect all debts due to me or to my estate.

(b) Receive the rents, issues, and profits from all real and personal property in my estate until the estate is settled or delivered over by order of court to my heirs or beneficiaries.

(c) Pay taxes on, and take all steps reasonably necessary for the management, protection, and preservation of, all property in my estate.

(d) Commence and prosecute, either individually or jointly with my heirs or beneficiaries, any action necessary or proper to quiet title to or recover possession of any real or personal property in my estate.

(e) Vote in person, and give proxies to exercise, any voting rights with respect to any stock, any membership in a nonprofit corporation, or any other property in my estate, and waive notice of a meeting, give consent to the holding of a meeting, and authorize, ratify, approve, or confirm any action that could be taken by shareholders, members, or property owners.

(f) Insure the property of my estate against damage or loss, and insure the executor against liability to third persons.

(g) Deposit money belonging to my estate in an insured account in a financial institution in California.

(h) Invest and reinvest any money of my estate not reasonably required for the immediate administration of my estate in any kind of property, real, personal, or mixed, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own accounts; provided, however, that in investing any property of my estate, the executor shall act with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing, including but not limited to the general economic conditions and the anticipated needs of my estate and its beneficiaries, that a prudent person acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of like character and with like aims to accomplish the purposes of my estate as determined from this will.

(i) Retain any assets of my estate for as long as the executor deems to be in the best interest of my estate.

(j) Borrow money on behalf of my estate and pledge, hypothecate, or otherwise encumber property of my estate, real or personal, as security for any sums so borrowed.

(k) In order to satisfy a pecuniary gift or to distribute or divide estate assets into shares or partial shares, the executor may distribute or divide those assets in kind, or divide undivided interests in those assets, or sell all or any part of those assets and distribute or divide the property in cash, in kind, or partly in cash and partly in kind. Property distributed to satisfy a pecuniary gift under this will shall be valued at its fair market value at the time of distribution.

(l) Pay any and all charges reasonably incurred in connection with or incidental to the distribution of any property of my estate, including but not limited to expenses of storage, freight, shipping, delivery, packing, and insurance; and, on any accounting, treat any such expenditures as expenses of the administration of my estate.

(m) If any asset of my estate consists of an option right, exercise the option after authorization by order of court, upon a showing that the exercise would be to the advantage of my estate, and use any funds or property in my estate to acquire the property covered by the option.

(n) Hold a security in the name of a nominee or in any other form without disclosure of my estate so that title to the security may pass by delivery.

(o) Exercise any subscription rights owned or received by my estate by reason of owning securities, after authorization by court upon a showing that it is to the advantage of my estate.

(r) Dispose of or abandon tangible personal property, except tangible personal property that is a specific gift, when the cost of collecting, maintaining, and safeguarding the property would exceed its fair market value.

(s) Compromise or settle any claim, action, or proceeding by or for the benefit of, or against, me, my estate, or the executor [optional:, subject only to any confirmation of court that may be required by law].

(t) Employ professional investment counsel to make recommendations with respect to, and otherwise assist in, investing the assets of my estate; and, on any accounting, treat any fees paid to investment counsel as expenses of the administration of my estate.

5.07. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any beneficiary under this will is a minor, or it appears to the executor that any beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the executor, in lieu of making direct payments to the beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the executor); to one or more suitable persons as the executor deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the executor for all purposes.

5.08. Executor's Liability for Own Acts. The executor shall not be liable to my estate or to any person interested in it for any act or omission of the executor, except an act or omission that is committed intentionally, with gross negligence, in bad faith, or with reckless indifference to the interests of persons interested in my estate, or an act or omission from which the executor derives a profit.

Article 6 : Trustee

6.01. Nomination of Trustee. I nominate _____ [name of trustee and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Margaret E. Hunter,] as trustee of any trust created under this will.

6.02. Successor Trustee. If _____ [nominee(s) for initial trustee, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Margaret E. Hunter,] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or to continue to serve, as trustee, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as successor trustee:

First, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for coexecutors) my brother, Edward R. Brown];

Second, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for individual) Arthur J. Shoemaker, who resides at _____ (address)];

Third, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for corporate executor) Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

6.03. Definition of Trustee. Reference in this instrument to "the trustee" shall be deemed a reference to whoever is serving as trustee or co-trustees, and shall include alternate or successor trustees, unless the context requires otherwise.

6.04. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any trustee nominated in this will.

6.05. Compensation of Trustee. The trustee shall be entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered, payable without court order. [Optional: If a trustee serves for only part of a calendar year, the annual compensation shall be prorated according to the number of days during that year that the trustee was acting as trustee.]

6.06. Procedure for Resignation. Any trustee may resign at any time, without giving a reason for the resignation, by giving written notice, at least _____ [specify; e.g., 30 days] before the time the resignation is to take effect, to any other trustee then acting, to any persons authorized to designate a successor trustee, to all living trust beneficiaries known to the trustee (or, in the case of a minor beneficiary, to the parent or guardian of that beneficiary), and to the successor trustee. A resignation shall be effective upon written acceptance of the trust by the successor trustee.

6.07. General Powers of Trustee. To carry out the purposes of the trusts created under this will, and subject to any limitations stated elsewhere in this will, the trustee shall have all of the following powers, in addition to all of the powers now or hereafter conferred on trustees by law:

(a) Retain property received into the trust at its inception, or later added to the trust, as long as the trustee considers that retention in the best interests of the trust or in furtherance of my goals in creating the trust, as determined from this will, but subject to the standards of the prudent investor rule as set forth in the California Uniform Prudent Investor Act.

(b) Invest and manage the trust assets as a prudent investor would, by considering the purposes, terms, distribution requirements, and other circumstances of the trust. In satisfying this standard, the trustee shall exercise reasonable care, skill, and caution. The trustee's investment and management decisions respecting individual assets and courses of action must be evaluated not in isolation, but in the context of the trust portfolio as a whole and as a part of an overall investment strategy having risk and return objectives reasonably suited to the trust.

(c) Retain property only so long as it produces income. If any income-producing property ceases to produce income, the trustee shall, within a reasonable time, replace it with income-producing property.

(d) In the trustee's discretion, invest or reinvest in mutual funds, money market funds, investment trusts, regulated investment companies, market funds, and index funds, and in the shares or securities of any such funds or companies, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own account.

(e) Acquire and maintain as a trust asset a life insurance policy on the life of any person, including _____ [the trustee or any of the trustees], issued by any company and in any amount that the trustee may deem advisable, and to exercise all rights of ownership granted in that policy.

(f) With or without court authorization, sell (for cash or on deferred payments, and with or without security), convey, exchange, partition, and divide trust property; grant options for the sale or exchange of trust property for any purpose, whether the contract is to be performed or the option is to be exercised within or beyond the term of the trust; and lease trust property for any purpose, for terms within or extending beyond the expiration of the trust, regardless of whether the leased property is commercial or residential and regardless of the number of units leased.

(g) Engage in any transactions with the personal representative of my estate that are in the best interest of any trusts under this will.

(h) Manage, control, improve, and maintain all real and personal trust property.

(i) Subdivide or develop land; make or obtain the vacation of plats and adjust boundaries, or adjust differences in valuation on exchange or partition by giving or receiving consideration; and dedicate land or easements to public use with or without consideration.

(j) Make ordinary or extraordinary repairs or alterations in buildings or other trust property, demolish any improvements, raze existing party walls or buildings, and erect new party walls or buildings, as the trustee deems advisable.

(k) Enter into oil, gas, and other mineral leases, on terms deemed advisable by the trustee; enter into any pooling, unitization, repressurization, community, or other types of agreements relating to the exploration, development, operation, and conservation of mineral properties; drill, mine, and otherwise operate for the development of oil, gas, and other minerals; contract for the installation and operation of absorption and repressuring plants; and install and maintain pipelines. Any such leases or agreements may be for a term within or extending beyond the term of the trust.

(l) In the trustee's discretion, abandon any [unproductive or wasted] trust asset or interest therein.

(m) Employ and discharge agents and employees, including but not limited to attorneys, accountants, investment and other advisers, custodians of assets, property managers, real estate agents and brokers, and appraisers, to advise and assist the trustees in the management of any trusts created under this will, and compensate them from the trust property. [Optional: The agents and employees may be associated or affiliated with the trustee, or may be descendants or other persons related to the trustee or to me, or a company associated with any such persons.] [Optional: The trustee is entitled to rely on the advice of any professional advisers employed under this provision. Reasonable compensation paid to any such agents or employees shall not diminish the compensation to which the trustee is otherwise entitled.]

(n) With respect to securities held in trust, exercise all the rights, powers, and privileges of an owner, including, but not limited to, the power to vote, give proxies, and pay assessments and other sums deemed by the trustee necessary for the protection of the trust property; participate in voting trusts, pooling agreements, foreclosures, reorganizations, consolidations, mergers, and liquidations, and, in connection therewith, deposit securities with and transfer title to any protective or other committee under such terms as the trustee deems advisable; exercise or sell stock subscription or conversion rights; and accept and retain as investments of the trust any securities or other property received through the exercise of any of the foregoing powers.

(o) Hold securities or other trust property in the trustee's own name or in the name of a nominee, without disclosure of the trust, or in unregistered form, so that title may pass by delivery.

(p) Deposit securities in a securities depository that is either licensed or exempt from licensing.

(q) Borrow money for any trust purpose from any person or entity on such terms and conditions as the trustee deems advisable, and obligate the trust for repayment; encumber any trust property by mortgage, deed of trust, pledge, or otherwise, whether for terms within or extending beyond the term of the trust, as the trustee deems advisable, to secure repayment of any such loan; replace, renew, and extend any such loan or encumbrance; and pay loans or other obligations of the trust deemed advisable by the trustee.

(r) In the trustee's discretion, make loans to beneficiaries out of funds of the trust and guarantee the repayment of loans made to beneficiaries by third parties by encumbering trust assets.

(s) Procure and carry, at the expense of the trust, insurance in such forms and in such amounts as the trustee deems advisable to protect the trust property against damage or loss, and to protect the trustee against liability with respect to third persons.

(t) Enforce any obligation owing to the trust, including any obligation secured by a deed of trust, mortgage, or pledge held as trust property, and to purchase any property subject to a security instrument held as trust property at any sale under the instrument.

(u) Extend the time for payment of any note or other obligation held as an asset of, and owing to, the trust, including accrued or future interest, and extend the time for repayment beyond the term of the trust.

(v) Pay or contest any claim against the trust; release or prosecute any claim in favor of the trust; or, in lieu of payment, contest, release, or prosecution, adjust, compromise, or settle any such claim, in whole or in part, with or without consideration.

(w) At trust expense, prosecute or defend actions, claims, or proceedings of whatever kind for the protection of the trust property and of the trustee in the performance of the trustee's duties, and employ and compensate attorneys, advisers, and other agents as the trustee deems advisable.

(x) Accept additions to any trusts created by this will, from any source and at any time; all such additions shall become a part of the trust and shall be held, administered, and distributed in accordance with the terms of the trust. Any additions to the trust shall be made by designating in writing the property to be added. However, the titling of any account, deed, or similar asset in the name of the trustee, as trustee of the trust, shall be deemed to be a transfer to the trust. Any designation by a third party, whether by will, deed, account title designation, or similar transfer, shall also be a transfer to the trust estate. No addition shall become part of the trust estate until it is accepted in writing by the trustee.

6.08. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any trust beneficiary is a minor, or it appears to the trustee that any trust beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the trustee, in lieu of making direct payments to the trust beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the trustee); to one or more suitable persons as the trustee deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the trustee for all purposes.

6.09. Grant of Specific Powers Not to Limit Exercise of General Powers. The enumeration of specific powers under this will shall not limit the trustee from exercising any other power with respect to any trusts created by this will that may be necessary or appropriate for the trustee to have and exercise in order to carry out the purposes of the trusts or to permit the trustee to fulfill the trustee's responsibilities and duties with respect to the trust.

6.10. Written Notice to Trustee. Until the trustee receives written notice of any death or other event upon which the right to payments from any trust may depend, the trustee shall incur no liability for disbursements made in good faith to persons whose interests may have been affected by that event.

6.11. Duty to Account. The trustee shall render accounts at least annually, at the termination of a trust, and upon a change of trustees, to the persons and in the manner required by law.

Article 7 : Guardian

7.01. Nomination of Guardian. If a guardian of the person, estate, or person and estate is necessary for any minor child of mine, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my sister, Margaret E. Hunter or Edward C. Gardner, who resides at _____ (address)], as that guardian. If at any time _____ [name, e.g., my sister, Margaret E. Hunter or Edward C. Gardner] is unable or unwilling to serve or continue as guardian, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my brother, Edward R. Brown,] as guardian.

7.02. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any guardian of the estate nominated in this will.

Article 8 : Concluding Provisions

8.01. Abatement of Gifts. If my estate is insufficient to satisfy in full all of the gifts provided for in this will, I direct that gifts shall abate in the following order: first general gifts, then specific gifts, then demonstrative gifts; provided, however, that the gifts to my _____ [husband or wife] shall not abate until all other gifts have abated [, and the gifts to my children shall not abate until gifts to all persons and entities other than my _____ (husband or wife) have abated]. All gifts of the same class shall abate proportionally.

8.02. Simultaneous Death. If any beneficiary under this will and I die simultaneously, or if it cannot be established by clear and convincing evidence whether that beneficiary or I died first, I shall be deemed to have survived that beneficiary, and this will shall be construed accordingly.

8.03. Intentional Omission of Heirs Not Specifically Provided For in Will. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will, I have intentionally and with full knowledge omitted to provide for my heirs, regardless of whether or not I am aware of their existence and identities at the time this will is executed.

8.04. No-Contest Clause. If any person, directly or indirectly, contests the validity of this will in whole or in part, or opposes, objects to, or seeks to invalidate any of its provisions, or seeks to succeed to any part of my estate otherwise than in the manner specified in this will, any gift or other interest given to that person under this will shall be revoked and shall be disposed of as if he or she had predeceased me [optional: without issue].

8.05. Perpetuities Savings Clause. Notwithstanding any other provision of this will, every trust created by this will[, or by the exercise of any power of appointment created by this will,] shall terminate no later than 21 years after the death of _____ [designate measuring life or lives, e.g., the last survivor of my spouse and my issue] who are alive at the time of my death. If a trust is terminated under this section of the will, the trustee shall distribute all of the principal and undistributed income of the trust to the income beneficiaries of the trust in the proportion in which they are entitled (or eligible, in the case of discretionary payments) to receive income immediately before the termination. If that proportion is not fixed by the terms of this will, the trustee shall distribute all of the trust property to the persons then entitled or eligible to receive income from the trust _____ [*specify pattern of distribution, e.g., outright in a manner that, in the trustee's opinion, will give effect to my intent in creating the trust, the trustee's decision to be final and incontestable by anyone or as a class, in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether all of such persons are members of the same generation*].

8.06. Definition of Incapacity. For purposes of this will, a person shall be deemed "incapacitated" if and for so long as a court of competent jurisdiction has made a finding to that effect, or a guardian or conservator of that person's estate or person duly appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction is serving, or upon certification by two physicians licensed to practice under the laws of the state where the person is domiciled at the time of the certification that the person is unable properly to care for himself or herself or for his or her property. The latter certification shall be made by each physician in a written declaration under penalty of perjury.

8.07. Captions. The captions appearing in this will are for convenience of reference only, and shall be disregarded in determining the meaning and effect of the provisions of this will.

8.08. Severability Clause. If any provision of this will is invalid, that provision shall be disregarded, and the remainder of this will shall be construed as if the invalid provision had not been included.

8.09. California Law to Apply. All questions concerning the validity and interpretation of this will, including any trusts created by this will, shall be governed by the laws of the State of California in effect at the time this will is executed.

8.10. Gifts to "Heirs." For any gift to my heirs that is made outright in this instrument, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate at the time for distribution, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death. For any assets of any trust estate created by this will to be distributed to my heirs, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate immediately following the termination of the trust of each share, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death.

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
 CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
 PART IV. FORMS
 B. Wills for Married Persons

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.211

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.211 Will for Married Person; Pour-Over to Inter Vivos Trust

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a complete will that is designed for use by a testator who is married, has children, and wishes to "pour over" the bulk of his or her estate to an inter vivos trust.

The will permits the testator to make one or more specific devises [see Article 2]. The tangible personal property is left outright to the surviving spouse [see Section 2.03of form], so that the executor and trustee will not have to choose between selling the property or dealing with the practical problems of holding personal property in trust.

It is assumed that the testator's residence has already been transferred to the trust, or will pass to it under the terms of the residuary devise. The residuary estate is left to an inter vivos ("living") trust created by the testator or by the testator and the testator's spouse [see Article 3].

PRACTICE TIP:

It is considered poor practice to rely on funding an inter vivos trust through the workings of a "pour-over" will. When a client establishes a typical inter vivos trust, the idea of avoiding probate is often one of the paramount concerns. If the trust is fully (or nearly fully) funded during the client's lifetime, the "pour-over" will then serves only a "back stop" role (which is truly its purpose), and the will then will not have to be probated. On the other hand, if substantial portions of the client's assets have intentionally been left out of the trust, a probate proceeding will be necessary. This means there will be a probate proceeding which has the primary purpose of finally funding the inter vivos trust, and there will have to be a "second administration" of the assets inside the trust as the trust's post-mortem provisions are followed. Not only will the surviving spouse or other trust beneficiaries be upset (perhaps to the point of filing suit against the attorney), but difficulties in planning for the post-mortem tax choices designed into the inter vivos trust are likely to ensue. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

The will contains provisions nominating an executor [see Article 4] and a guardian for any of the testator's children who are minors at the time of the testator's death [see Article 5].

[b] Pour-Over Devise to Inter Vivos Trust

A "pour-over" is a devise to the trustee of an existing trust. Although the trust may be either testamentary or inter vivos, it must be in existence at the time the devise takes effect, i.e., the date of the testator's death [see Prob. Code § 6300].

PRACTICE TIP:

While it is unlikely that the "target" inter vivos trust will have been revoked or otherwise will not be in existence at the testator's death without substantial changes also having been made to the testator's will, such an eventuality is possible. To guard against the "pour-over" residuary clause being thoroughly ineffective, it is common practice to incorporate by reference in the will the provisions of the inter vivos trust as they exist at the date of the will and make an alternate residuary gift to a testamentary trust to be held and managed pursuant to those incorporated provisions. This form follows that practice [see Section 3.02 of form]. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

Prob. Code § 6130 provides that a writing in existence when the will is executed "may be incorporated by reference if the language of the will manifests this intention and describes the writing sufficiently to permit its identification." If the will makes a pour-over devise to a revocable trust and the trust is later amended, it might be argued that the pour-over is invalid under Prob. Code § 6130 because the trust instrument was not in existence when the will was executed [see Ferguson & Sinsheimer, Back to the Basics: Drafting, Part II, Calif. Tr. and Est. Quarterly (Fall 1996), 50-51]. However, Prob. Code § 6300 clearly provides that a devise to a trust "is not invalid because the trust is amendable or revocable, or both, or because the trust was amended after the execution of the will or after the death of the testator." Prob. Code § 6300 also provides that unless the will provides otherwise, the property devised to the trust must be "administered and disposed of in accordance with the provisions of the instrument or will setting forth the terms of the trust, including any amendments thereto made before or after the death of the testator (regardless of whether made before or after the execution of the testator's will)." The pour-over devise in this will provides that property that is poured over to the trust must be held in accordance with the provisions of the trust instrument, including any amendments of the instrument that have been made before or after execution of the will [see Section 3.01 of form]. This makes it clear that the pour-over devise is subject to all provisions of the trust instrument, including amendments made after the execution of the will, but not amendments made after the testator's death.

Pour-over wills typically are used in conjunction with inter vivos ("living") trusts created by the testator or the testator and his or her spouse. When a married person's will devises property to a living trust, the spouse's will often devises property to the same trust. This helps to assure that the estates of both spouses are disposed of under a comprehensive estate plan. For further discussion of pour-overs, see Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.17[1][c]. For general coverage of living trusts, see Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms.

[c] Standard Provisions

This will contains numerous standard provisions that are also found in other wills in this chapter. These are provisions relating to the executor's bond [see Section 4.04 of form], the executor's authority to act under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act [see Section 4.05 of form], the executor's powers [see Section 4.06 of form], payments to incapacitated persons [see Section 4.07 of form], the executor's liability [see Section 4.08 of form], disinheritance of the testator's heirs [see Section 6.06 of form], and contest of the will [see Section 6.07 of form]. For discussion of these provisions, see § 61.200[1].

Article 3 : Residuary Provisions

3.01. Disposition of Residue. I give the residue of my estate to the trustee(s) of the _____ [name of trust, e.g., Green Family Trust], created under the _____ [identify trust instrument, e.g., trust agreement or declaration of trust] executed on _____ [date] by _____ [identify party or parties executing instrument, e.g., Joseph Arthur Green and Anne Taylor Green, as Settlers and Trustees]. The trustee(s) of that trust shall add the residue of my estate to the trust principal and hold, administer, and distribute the property in accordance with the provisions of that _____ [e.g., trust agreement or declaration of trust], including any amendments of that _____ [e.g., trust agreement or declaration of trust] that have been made before or after execution of this will.

3.02. Alternate Disposition of Residue. If the _____ [name of trust, e.g., Green Family Trust] has been revoked, terminated, or declared invalid for any reason, I give the portion of the residue of my estate to _____ [name(s) of current trustee(s) or other person(s), e.g., the executor of this will], as trustee, who shall hold, administer, and distribute the property under a testamentary trust, the terms of which shall be identical to the terms of the _____ [name of trust, e.g., Green Family Trust] that are in effect on the date of execution of this will.

3.03. Alternate Disposition of Residue. If the residue of my estate is not completely disposed of by the preceding provisions, I give the portion that is not disposed of to my heirs.

4.02. Successor Executors. If _____ [nominee(s) for initial executor, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Ellen Green Fiddler,] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or to continue to serve, as executor, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as successor executor:

First, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for coexecutors) my brother, Charles D. Green];

Second, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for individual) Edward R. Taylor, who resides at _____ (address)];

Third, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for corporate executor) Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

4.03. Definition of Executor. The term "executor," as used in this will, refers to each personal representative of my estate who is serving at the pertinent time.

4.04. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any executor nominated in this will.

4.05. Independent Administration. The executor shall _____ [have full or not have] authority to administer my estate under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act.

4.06. Powers of Executor. (b) Receive the rents, issues, and profits from all real and personal property in my estate until the estate is settled or delivered over by order of court to my heirs or beneficiaries.

(c) Pay taxes on, and take all steps reasonably necessary for the management, protection, and preservation of, all property in my estate.

(d) Commence and prosecute, either individually or jointly with my heirs or beneficiaries, any action necessary or proper to quiet title to or recover possession of any real or personal property in my estate.

(e) Vote in person, and give proxies to exercise, any voting rights with respect to any stock, any membership in a nonprofit corporation, or any other property in my estate, and waive notice of a meeting, give consent to the holding of a meeting, and authorize, ratify, approve, or confirm any action that could be taken by shareholders, members, or property owners.

(f) Insure the property of my estate against damage or loss, and insure the executor against liability to third persons.

(g) Deposit money belonging to my estate in an insured account in a financial institution in California.

(h) Invest and reinvest any money of my estate not reasonably required for the immediate administration of my estate in any kind of property, real, personal, or mixed, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own accounts; provided, however, that in investing any property of my estate, the executor shall act with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing, including but not limited to the general economic conditions and the anticipated needs of my estate and its beneficiaries, that a prudent person acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of like character and with like aims to accomplish the purposes of my estate as determined from this will.

(i) Retain any assets of my estate for as long as the executor deems to be in the best interest of my estate.

(j) Borrow money on behalf of my estate and pledge, hypothecate, or otherwise encumber property of my estate, real or personal, as security for any sums so borrowed.

(k) In order to satisfy a pecuniary gift or to distribute or divide estate assets into shares or partial shares, the executor may distribute or divide those assets in kind, or divide undivided interests in those assets, or sell all or any part of those assets and distribute or divide the property in cash, in kind, or partly in cash and partly in kind. Property distributed to satisfy a pecuniary gift under this will shall be valued at its fair market value at the time of distribution.

(l) Pay any and all charges reasonably incurred in connection with or incidental to the distribution of any property of my estate, including but not limited to expenses of storage, freight, shipping, delivery, packing, and insurance; and, on any accounting, treat any such expenditures as expenses of the administration of my estate.

(m) If any asset of my estate consists of an option right, exercise the option after authorization by order of court, upon a showing that the exercise would be to the advantage of my estate, and use any funds or property in my estate to acquire the property covered by the option.

(n) Hold a security in the name of a nominee or in any other form without disclosure of my estate so that title to the security may pass by delivery.

(o) Exercise any subscription rights owned or received by my estate by reason of owning securities, after authorization by court upon a showing that it is to the advantage of my estate.

(p) Sell, at either public or private sale and with or without notice, and grant options to purchase, any property belonging to my estate [optional], subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(q) Lease any real or personal property belonging to my estate on such terms and conditions as the executor determines to be in the best interest of my estate [optional], subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(r) Dispose of or abandon tangible personal property, except tangible personal property that is a specific gift, when the cost of collecting, maintaining, and safeguarding the property would exceed its fair market value.

(s) Compromise or settle any claim, action, or proceeding by or for the benefit of, or against, me, my estate, or the executor [optional], subject only to any confirmation of court that may be required by law].

(t) Employ professional investment counsel to make recommendations with respect to, and otherwise assist in, investing the assets of my estate; and, on any accounting, treat any fees paid to investment counsel as expenses of the administration of my estate.

4.07. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any beneficiary under this will is a minor, or it appears to the executor that any beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the executor, in lieu of making direct payments to the beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the executor); to one or more suitable persons as the executor deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the executor for all purposes.

4.08. Executor's Liability for Own Acts. The executor shall not be liable to my estate or to any person interested in it for any act or omission of the executor, except an act or omission that is committed intentionally, with gross negligence, in bad faith, or with reckless indifference to the interests of persons interested in my estate, or an act or omission from which the executor derives a profit.

Article 5 : Guardian

5.01. Nomination of Guardian. If a guardian of the person, estate, or person and estate is necessary for any minor child of mine, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my sister, Ellen Green Fiddler or Robert J. Farmer, who resides at _____ (address)], as that guardian. If at any time _____ [name, e.g., my sister, Ellen Green Fiddler or Robert J. Farmer] is unable or unwilling to serve or continue as guardian, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my brother, Charles D. Green,] as guardian.

5.02. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any guardian of the estate nominated in this will.

Article 6 : Concluding Provisions

6.01. Definition of Death Taxes. The term "death taxes," as used in this will, shall mean all inheritance, estate, succession, and other similar taxes that are payable by any person on account of that person's interest in my estate or by reason of my death, including penalties and interest, but excluding the following:

(a) Any additional tax that may be assessed under Internal Revenue Code Section 2032A.

(b) Any federal or state tax imposed on a generation-skipping transfer, as that term is defined in the federal tax laws [, unless the applicable tax statutes provide that the generation-skipping transfer tax on that transfer is payable directly out of the assets of my gross estate].

6.02. Payment of Death Taxes. The executor shall pay death taxes, whether or not attributable to property inventoried in my probate estate, by prorating and apportioning them among the persons interested in my estate as provided in the California Probate Code. The method of apportionment of death taxes specified in this will shall apply equally to any property passing under any codicil to this will, except to the extent that a codicil expressly provides for a different method of apportionment.

PRACTICE TIP:

The allocation of taxes shown in this form is but one of many possible allocation schemes. In each case the drafter should carefully consider the nature of the client's assets, including whether those assets will pass under the will or otherwise, and the value of assets passing under the will as specific, rather than residuary, gifts. Only when these factors are considered can the appropriate tax allocation formula be selected. Other possible allocation clauses appear in California Wills & Trusts Forms, Div. IV, Individual Will Provisions, Pt. 90, Concluding Provisions, Form 90.30 (Alts. 90.30-1-90.30-7); for more detailed discussion of tax allocation, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 23, Provisions for Payment of Taxes, Expenses, and Debt (Matthew Bender).

6.03. Abatement of Gifts. If my estate is insufficient to satisfy in full all of the gifts provided for in this will, I direct that gifts shall abate in the following order: first general gifts, then specific gifts, then demonstrative gifts; provided, however, that the gifts to my _____ [husband or wife] shall not abate until all other gifts have abated [, and the gifts to my children shall not abate until gifts to all persons and entities other than my _____ (husband and children or wife and children) have abated]. All gifts of the same class shall abate proportionally.

6.04. Simultaneous Death. If any beneficiary under this will and I die simultaneously, or if it cannot be established by clear and convincing evidence whether that beneficiary or I died first, I shall be deemed to have survived that beneficiary, and this will shall be construed accordingly.

6.05. Intentional Omission of Heirs Not Specifically Provided For in Will. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will, I have intentionally and with full knowledge omitted to provide for my heirs, regardless of whether or not I am aware of their existence and identities at the time this will is executed.

6.06. No-Contest Clause. If any person, directly or indirectly, contests the validity of this will in whole or in part, or opposes, objects to, or seeks to invalidate any of its provisions, or seeks to succeed to any part of my estate otherwise than in the manner specified in this will, any gift or other interest given to that person under this will shall be revoked and shall be disposed of as if he or she had predeceased me [optional: without issue].

6.07. Perpetuities Savings Clause. Notwithstanding any other provision of this will, every trust created by this will[, or by the exercise of any power of appointment created by this will,] shall terminate no later than 21 years after the death of _____ [designate measuring life or lives, e.g., the last survivor of my spouse and my issue] who are alive at the time of my death. If a trust is terminated under this section of the will, the trustee shall distribute all of the principal and undistributed income of the trust to the income beneficiaries of the trust in the proportion in which they are entitled (or eligible, in the case of discretionary payments) to receive income immediately before the termination. If that proportion is not fixed by the terms of this will, the trustee shall distribute all of the trust property to the persons then entitled or eligible to receive income from the trust _____ [specify pattern of distribution, e.g., outright in a manner that, in the trustee's opinion, will give effect to my intent in creating the trust, the trustee's decision to be final and incontestable by anyone or as a class, in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether all of such persons are members of the same generation].

6.08. Definition of Incapacity. For purposes of this will, a person shall be deemed "incapacitated" if and for so long as a court of competent jurisdiction has made a finding to that effect, or a guardian or conservator of that person's estate or person duly appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction is serving, or upon certification by two physicians licensed to practice under the laws of the state where the person is domiciled at the time of the certification that the person is unable properly to care for himself or herself or for his or her property. The latter certification shall be made by each physician in a written declaration under penalty of perjury.

6.09. Captions. The captions appearing in this will are for convenience of reference only, and shall be disregarded in determining the meaning and effect of the provisions of this will.

6.10. Severability Clause. If any provision of this will is invalid, that provision shall be disregarded, and the remainder of this will shall be construed as if the invalid provision had not been included.

6.11. California Law to Apply. All questions concerning the validity and interpretation of this will, including any trusts created by this will, shall be governed by the laws of the State of California in effect at the time this will is executed.

6.12. Gifts to "Heirs." For any gift to my heirs that is made outright in this instrument, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate at the time for distribution, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death. For any assets of any trust estate created by this will to be distributed to my heirs, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate immediately following the termination of the trust of each share, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death.

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
 CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
 PART IV. FORMS
 B. Wills for Married Persons

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.212

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.212 Will for Married Person; Marital Deduction Formula Devise Outright to Surviving Spouse; Residue to Bypass Trust; Disclaimer Trust

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a complete will designed for use by a testator who is married, has children, and wishes to leave all of his or her property to the spouse and children in a manner that will give the spouse optimum lifetime use of the property while making use of the federal estate tax marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056] and the unified credit against estate and gift taxes [see I.R.C. § 2010, 2505 and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] to reduce the overall death tax liability in the estates of both spouses.

This will assumes that the value of the combined estates of the testator and the testator's spouse will exceed the "applicable exclusion amount" [see I.R.C. § 2010(c)] (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] available in the year of the surviving spouse's death. If this assumption is not reasonable, taking into consideration all of the property likely to be included in the surviving spouse's estate on his or her death, the kind of tax planning included in this will is probably not warranted and the attorney should select one of the simpler wills included in this chapter.

On the death of the surviving spouse, the trust is divided into separate shares for each of the testator's children. Each child will receive a share on the spouse's death or on the date the child reaches a specified age, whichever occurs later. Shares are distributed outright to the issue of any deceased children.

A disclaimer trust is included to hold any assets that the spouse elects to disclaim after the testator's death.

[b] Standard Provisions

This will contains some provisions that are also found in other wills in this chapter. These are provisions relating to the executor's bond [see Section 5.04 of form], the executor's authority to act under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act [see Section 5.05 of form]], the executor's powers [see Section 5.06 of form]], payments to incapacitated persons [see Section 5.07 of form]], the executor's liability [see Section 5.08 of form]], disinheritance of the testator's heirs [see Section 8.06 of form]], and contest of the will [see Section 8.07 of form]]. For discussion of these provisions, see § 61.200[1].

[c] Marital Deduction Devise

Section 2.04 of this will makes a general pecuniary devise to the testator's surviving spouse. This devise, which is referred to as the "marital deduction gift," is a pecuniary formula devise that is stated to be the minimum amount necessary to eliminate (or reduce to the maximum extent possible) any federal estate tax at the testator's death, taking into account the net value of all other property that passes or has passed to the spouse under the will or otherwise and that qualifies for the federal estate tax marital deduction and all allowable federal estate tax credits, exclusions, and deductions (other than the marital deduction). The devise to the spouse is outright and free of trust. The residue is given to a trustee in the form of a bypass trust [see discussion in [f], below].

A will that includes a marital deduction devise like that in Section 2.04 is designed to take advantage of two key provisions of the federal estate tax law: (1) the unlimited marital deduction [I.R.C. § 2056] and (2) the unified credit against estate and gift taxes [I.R.C. §§ 2010 (estate tax), 2505 (gift tax)]. The unified credit can be used to shelter property from estate taxation up to the amount of the "applicable exclusion amount" available in the testator's estate. This amount depends on the year of death. The amount is $675,000 for decedents dying in 2001, $1 million for decedents dying in 2002 and 2003, $1.5 million for decedents dying in 2004 and 2005, $2 million for decedents dying in 2006, 2007, and 2008, and $3.5 million for decedents dying in 2009 [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]].

The benefits of the marital deduction can be achieved by devising property to the surviving spouse, either outright or in the form of one of the trust arrangements that satisfy the requirements of the deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(5), (7); Treas. Reg. § 20.2056(b)-2(b); see also discussion in Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.13]. The benefits of the unified credit can be achieved by devising property equal to the available unified credit (the statutory amount of the credit reduced by any part of the credit that may have been depleted by lifetime gifts) to a person or persons other than the surviving spouse, or by placing an equivalent amount of property in a trust that gives the surviving spouse the right to receive all of the income from the trust property for life [see discussion of bypass trust in [f], below]. Most estate plans that seek to totally avoid estate taxes on the death of the first spouse and to minimize (if not totally eliminate) estate taxes on the death of the second spouse center on successful coordination of the unlimited marital deduction and the unified credit.

[d] Division Into Marital and Nonmarital Shares

An estate plan that seeks to avoid estate taxes on the death of the first spouse and to minimize estate taxes on the death of the second spouse through coordination of the unlimited marital deduction and the unified credit requires that the estate of the first spouse to die be divided into two or more shares. The first share, which is designed to qualify for the marital deduction, is typically called the "marital share." The other share is often called the "nonmarital share."

A division of this kind could be accomplished by simply transferring to the nonmarital share a specified dollar amount equal to the then-available unified credit, and leaving all of the residue to the surviving spouse. However, this approach cannot account for changes in the values of the respective spouses' estates after the will is executed, for partial or complete depletion of the spouses' unified credits through lifetime giving, for the increased unified credit that is being gradually phased in for years after 1997, or for changes in the needs of the prospective beneficiaries. For this reason, most estate planners prefer the flexibility afforded by so-called "marital deduction formulas" [see discussion in [e], below].

[e] Marital Deduction Formula

Section 2.04 of this will is a marital deduction formula clause. Two basic types of marital deduction formulas are used: "pecuniary formulas" and "fractional formulas."

A pecuniary formula permits the testator to prescribe the dollar value of the property that will constitute one of the resulting shares. The dollar amount will be determined by the formula. The executor or trustee is instructed to transfer property of that value to either the marital or the nonmarital share, depending on the formula selected. Whether the specified dollar value is transferred to the marital or the nonmarital share, the residue of the property will be transferred to the other share. If, for example, the formula clause requires that property of the specified dollar amount be transferred to the marital share, the residue will go to the nonmarital share. Conversely, if the formula requires that property of the specified dollar amount be transferred to the nonmarital share, the residue will go to the marital share. A fractional formula, in contrast, requires that each share have a fractional interest in each asset.

Pecuniary formulas are the most popular form of marital deduction formulas among estate planners. They avoid administrative headaches that result when the marital and nonmarital shares receive fractional interests in the same assets. These headaches can be particularly painful if family members who have interests in the assets (either through a trust or outright) are unfriendly or uncooperative. Pecuniary formulas also offer flexibility in funding, because the executor or trustee can be given discretion to decide which assets to transfer to the marital and nonmarital shares to satisfy the pecuniary and residuary devises [see Section 3.03 of form]. If assets that have a good potential for appreciation are transferred to the nonmarital share, any appreciation in the value of those assets will be removed from the surviving spouse's estate and the estate tax burden on that estate will be reduced. However, the actual allocation of assets to the two shares need not be made until after the first spouse's death, when the executor and the trustee will usually have a better picture of all of the circumstances of the first spouse's estate than would be possible when the will is drafted.

Section 2.04 of this will is a pecuniary formula clause. It funds the marital share to a dollar amount determined by the formula. The residue of the estate constitutes the nonmarital share and is transferred to the bypass trust. Section 3.03 gives the executor discretion to allocate assets in the testator's estate to the marital and nonmarital shares in cash or in kind, or partly in each, on a pro rata or non pro rata basis, and in undivided interests or not. This gives the executor maximum flexibility to allocate assets to the respective shares in the manner that seems most favorable at the time of the allocation.

For an example of a fractional formula clause, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.204. That provision is designed for an inter vivos trust but may be adapted to the testamentary trust format. For a fractional formula clause specifically designed for a testamentary trust, see California Wills & Trusts Forms, Div. IV, Individual Will Provisions, Alt. 40.20-3 (Matthew Bender).

For detailed discussion of the marital deduction and its use in estate planning, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions; see also California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 112, The Marital Deduction and Marital Deduction Trusts (Matthew Bender).

[f] Bypass Trust

Section 3.01 of this will gives the residue of the testator's estate to a trust in which the surviving spouse will receive a lifetime income interest. The distributive terms of the trust are set forth in Section 4.01.

This type of trust is sometimes called a "credit shelter" trust, because it is designed to hold property equal in value to the "applicable exclusion amount" of the unified credit [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]]. It is also frequently called a "bypass" trust, because it is designed to "bypass" the surviving spouse's estate for estate tax purposes. None of the rights or powers given to the surviving spouse in this trust will cause the trust property to be included in the surviving spouse's estate on his or her death. In this will, this trust is referred to as a "bypass trust," and the devise made to it is referred to as a "bypass gift."

During the surviving spouse's lifetime, the trustee is required to pay the surviving spouse all of the net income of the bypass trust [see Section 4.01(a) of form]. On the surviving spouse's death, the trustee is required to divide the trust property into separate shares for each of the testator's surviving issue [see Section 4.01(b) of form]. Each share created for a surviving child will be distributed outright to that child if the child has reached a particular age, to be specified by the testator [see Section 4.01(c) of form]. If the child has not reached the specified age, the share will be held in a separate trust for the benefit of that child [see Section 4.02 of form]. Each share created for the issue of a deceased child will be divided among those issue in the manner provided in Prob. Code §§ 240, 246, or 247, or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation [see Section 4.01(d) of form]. Choosing the appropriate language from this provision will call for the residue to be divided according to certain standard patterns for the distribution of class gifts described in the code sections referred to. For an explanation of each of these patterns, and the Probate Code sections that govern them, see § 61.15[6][c]-[f].

[g] Disclaimer Trust

Section 3.05 of this will provides that any property that the testator's surviving spouse elects to disclaim will pass to the trustee and be held in trust under the provisions of Section 4.03. This language creates a disclaimer trust, but only if and to the extent that the surviving spouse disclaims property. If the surviving spouse makes a qualified disclaimer [see I.R.C. § 2518(b)], assets subject to the disclaimer will pass to the disclaimer trust and be removed from the surviving spouse's estate for estate tax purposes [see discussion in § 61.210[1][b]].

The distributive provisions of the disclaimer trust provide that the surviving spouse will receive all of the net income of the trust for life [see Section 4.03(a) of form]. The trustee has discretion to invade trust principal for the surviving spouse's health, education, support, and maintenance [see Section 4.03(b) of form]. On the surviving spouse's death, the trustee will divide the assets of the trust into separate shares according to the same directions provided for the division of the assets of the bypass trust on the surviving spouse's death [see Section 4.03(c) of form].

PRACTICE TIP:

In this form, there are only minor differences between the "Bypass Trust" and the "Disclaimer Trust" in their provisions for the surviving spouse. Specifically, the latter trust allows invasions of principal for the benefit of the surviving spouse, while the former does not. In practice, it would be quite common for the provisions of these two trusts to be identical (typically both allowing such invasions of principal). In cases in which the two trusts will be identical, only one trust is needed, and amounts disclaimed by the surviving spouse can simply be added to the "Bypass Trust." Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

Because the interests of the surviving spouse in the disclaimer trust are appropriately limited, its assets will not be included in the surviving spouse's estate for estate tax purposes when the surviving spouse dies. For a general discussion of disclaimer trusts, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.16.

[h] Choice of Trustee

Section 6.01 of this will nominates the trustee of the trusts created under this will. Any person or entity chosen by the testator may serve as the trustee. The testator's surviving spouse may serve as trustee, if he or she has the requisite temperament, experience, and skill to perform the duties required of a trustee. None of the rights or powers given to the surviving spouse will require that the trust assets be included in the surviving spouse's estate merely because the surviving spouse serves as trustee.

[i] Administration of Generation-Skipping Trusts

Section 4.06 of this will governs the administration of any trust created by the will in which there is property that is or may become subject to the federal generation-skipping transfer tax [see I.R.C. §§ 2601-2663]. The section is designed to give the executor post-mortem flexibility to eliminate or minimize any generation-skipping transfer tax. For further discussion of this provision, see § 61.201[1][e]. For general consideration of the generation-skipping transfer tax and generation-skipping transfer tax planning, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 113, Generation-Skipping Transfers and Trust Strategies (Matthew Bender).

[Continue as necessary for each additional item of property to be specifically devised.]

2.02. Gift[s] to Be Selected From Among My Personal Effects. I give _____ [name(s) of devisee(s) and relationship(s) to testator, e.g., my brother, John Joseph Gray, or my niece, Mary Jo Porter, or my brother, John Joseph Gray, and my niece, Mary Jo Porter, and each of them,] the right to select _____ [specify, e.g., one item or one item each or two items or two items each] from among my personal effects so that _____ [he or she or they] will have _____ [a memento or mementos] to remember me by. I make this gift to _____ [him or her or them] as a symbol of my love and affection. If _____ [he or she or any person named in this section] does not survive me or does not make a selection within three months after the date of my death, or within 30 days after this will is admitted to probate, whichever is later, then the gift made to _____ [him or her or that person] in this section shall fail. [If desired, specify any types of property that may not be selected, e.g., For purposes of this gift only, the word "personal effects" shall not include any motor vehicles or any items of property with an appraised value in excess of $2,500].

2.03. General Pecuniary Gift. I give the sum of $_____ to _____ [name of devisee and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my niece, Mary Jo Porter] [if desired, add survivorship clause, e.g., if she survives me or, if she survives me for 60 days]. [If gift is conditioned on survival, add appropriate alternative disposition, e.g., If she does not survive me (for that period), this gift shall _____ (e.g., lapse and become part of the residue of my estate).]

2.04. Marital Deduction Gift. If my _____ [wife or husband] survives me [specify survivorship period if desired, e.g., for six months], I give a pecuniary gift (referred to as the "marital deduction gift"), in the amount determined in this section, outright to _____ [him or her]. The marital deduction gift shall consist of assets having a value equal to the minimum amount necessary to eliminate (or reduce to the maximum extent possible) any federal estate tax at my death, taking into account the following:

(a) The net value of all other property that passes or has passed to my _____ [wife or husband] under this will or otherwise and that qualifies for the federal estate tax marital deduction. For purposes of this subsection of the will, any qualified disclaimer made by my _____ [wife or husband] shall be disregarded, and any property that will qualify as qualified terminable interest property under Internal Revenue Code Section 2056(b)(7) if my executor makes the requisite election shall be considered to be qualified terminable interest property, regardless of whether the election is made;

(b) All federal estate tax deductions and exclusions actually allowed, other than the marital deduction;

(c) The applicable exclusion amount, as specified in Internal Revenue Code Section 2010, available to my estate;

(d) The credit for state death taxes available to my estate, to the extent that the use of that credit does not result in or increase any death tax payable to any state; and

(e) Any other allowable credits available to my estate (except the credit for tax on prior transfers from a "transferor," as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 2013, who dies within two years after the date of my death), but only to the extent that those credits do not disqualify this gift from receiving the marital deduction.

The marital deduction gift shall be distributed outright to my _____ [wife or husband].

If my _____ [wife or husband] does not survive me [specify survivorship period if desired, e.g., for six months], this gift shall lapse and become part of the residue of my estate.

[Select one of the following alternatives:]

2.05. Interest on Pecuniary Gifts. [Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will, and] [n]o interest shall accrue on all [general] pecuniary gifts made in this will. This provisions shall not apply to the marital deduction gift made under Section 2.04 of this will. With respect to the marital deduction gift, interest at the rate _____ [e.g., of 10 percent per annum or specified in California Probate Code Section 12001, or any successor to that section,] shall accrue from and after _____ [e.g., the date of my death or the first anniversary of my death] and until that gift is are paid in full. All interest shall be paid at the time the gift is distributed.

[or]

2.05. Interest on Pecuniary Gifts. [Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will,] [I]nterest at the rate _____ [e.g., of 10 percent per annum or specified in California Probate Code Section 12001, or any successor to that section,] shall accrue on all [general] pecuniary gifts made in this will from and after _____ [e.g., the date of my death or the first anniversary of my death] and until those gifts are paid in full. All interest shall be paid at the time the gift is distributed.

Article 3 : Residuary Provisions

3.01. Disposition of Residue. If my _____ [wife or husband] survives me _____ [if desired, add survivorship period not to exceed six months, e.g., for six months], I give the residue of my estate (referred to as the "bypass gift") to the trustee, in trust, to be held, administered, and distributed according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Bypass Trust.

3.02. Alternate Disposition of Residue. If my _____ [husband or wife] does not survive me [restate any survivorship period imposed in primary residuary devise, but not to exceed six months, e.g., for six months], I give the _____ [residue of my estate or portion of the residue of my estate not taken] as follows:

(a) If any of my children survive me, the residue of my estate shall be divided into as many shares of equal market value as are necessary to create one share for each of my children who survive me and one share for the issue who survive me of each of my children who predecease me.

(b) Each share created for a surviving child shall be distributed outright to that child if that child has reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years at the time of my death. If the child has not reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years at the time of my death, the share created for the child shall be held, administered, and distributed by the trustee in a separate trust according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Separate Share Trust.

(c) If any of my children survive me, each share created for the issue of a deceased child shall be distributed outright to those issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation].

(d) If none of my children survive me, but I leave issue surviving, I give the residue of my estate outright to those issue, who are to take that property _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation].

(e) If none of my issue survive me, I give the residue of my estate to _____ [e.g., the San Francisco chapter of the American Lung Association or my heirs].

3.03. Allocation and Valuation of Assets. In allocating assets between the marital deduction gift and the bypass gift, the executor shall allocate the assets in my estate that qualify for the marital deduction between the marital deduction gift and the bypass gift in cash or in kind, or partly in each, on a pro rata or non pro rata basis, and in undivided interests or not; subject, however, to the following:

(a) Only assets that qualify for the marital deduction shall be allocated to the marital deduction gift.

(b) Assets allocated in kind shall be _____ [to use date of distribution values: valued for purposes of allocation on the date or dates of distribution or, to use valuation for estate tax purposes under "minimum worth" test: deemed to satisfy the marital deduction amount on the basis of their values as finally determined for federal estate tax purposes, but in no event shall the date of distribution values be less than the amount of the marital deduction or, to use valuation for estate tax purposes under "fair representation" test: deemed to satisfy the marital deduction amount on the basis of their values as finally determined for federal estate tax purposes; provided, however, that the executor shall act impartially, consistent with equitable principles requiring impartiality among beneficiaries, in allocating assets in satisfaction of the marital deduction gift, so that any distribution of assets in satisfaction of the marital deduction gift shall be made of assets, including cash, fairly representative of appreciation or depreciation in the value of all property thus available for distribution].

(c) The executor shall not allocate assets that qualify for the foreign death tax credit to the marital deduction gift unless all other assets or interests available for allocation have been so allocated.

[Optional: (d) Any incidents of ownership to a policy of insurance on the life of a person other than me shall be allocated to the bypass gift.]

3.04. Intention That Marital Deduction Gift Qualify for Marital Deduction. I intend that the marital deduction gift qualify for the federal estate tax marital deduction, and this instrument shall be construed accordingly. No fiduciary under this will shall take any action or exercise any power that may impair the federal estate tax marital deduction.

3.05. Disclaimer of Property by My Spouse. Any property or portion of property that is disclaimed by my _____ [wife or husband] shall pass to the trustee, in trust, to be held, administered, and distributed according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Disclaimer Trust. [However, if my _____ (wife or husband) also disclaims an interest in all or any portion of the Disclaimer Trust, that disclaimed interest shall be administered and distributed as if my _____ (wife or husband) predeceased me.]

Article 4 : Trust Distributions

4.01. Bypass Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the Bypass Trust as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife] all of the net income of the trust, in monthly or other convenient installments agreed upon by my _____ [husband or wife] and the trustee, but not less often than annually, for life.

(b) On the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall divide the trust property into as many shares of equal market value as are necessary to create one share for each of my children who survives my _____ [husband or wife], and one share for the issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife] of each of my children who predeceases my _____ [husband or wife].

(c) Each share created for a surviving child shall be distributed outright to that child if that child has reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years. If the child has not reached the age of _____ years, the share created for the child shall be held, administered, and distributed by the trustee in the Separate Share Trust as set forth in Section 4.02 of this will.

(d) Each share created for the issue of a deceased child shall be divided among those issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue.

(e) If all my children predecease my _____ [husband or wife] without leaving issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall distribute any undistributed balance of the trust property outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., my heirs or the San Francisco chapter of the American Lung Association].

4.02. Separate Share Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the separate share created for each child as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay or distribute to or apply for the benefit of that child, until _____ [he or she or he or she] reaches the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years, in monthly or other convenient installments, but not less often than annually, as much of the net income of the trust, and as much of the principal of the trust, as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary for _____ [his or her or his or her] _____ [to specify an "ascertainable standard": health, education, support, and maintenance or specify some other standard, e.g., comfort, welfare, and happiness]. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone. The trustee shall accumulate and add to principal any net income not distributed.

(b) When that child reaches the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years, the trustee shall distribute to _____ [him or her or him or her] outright the balance of the trust property.

(c) If that child dies before the trust property has been distributed as provided in this section, the assets of _____ [his or her or his or her] separate share shall be divided among _____ [his or her or his or her] issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue. If that child dies without issue before the trust property has been distributed as provided in this section, the trustee shall distribute the entire undistributed balance of _____ [his or her or his or her] separate share outright among the other then-living persons for whom separate shares were created, and the issue of any deceased persons for whom separate shares were created, _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]; provided, however, that if any part of that balance would otherwise be distributed to a person for whose benefit a trust is being administered under this section, that part shall instead be added to that trust and shall thereafter be administered according to its terms. If there are no surviving persons who may take the share of that child under this section, any remaining trust property shall be distributed outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., my heirs or the San Francisco chapter of the American Lung Association].

4.03. Disclaimer Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the Disclaimer Trust as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife] all of the net income of the trust, in monthly or other convenient installments [agreed upon by _____ (identity of beneficiary, e.g., my wife) and the trustee], but not less often than annually, for life.

(b) The trustee shall distribute to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife], for life, as much of the principal of the trust as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary [, when added to the income payments from this trust,] for _____ [his or her] health, education, support, and maintenance. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone.

(c) On the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall divide the trust property into as many shares of equal market value as are necessary to create one share for each of my children who survives my _____ [husband or wife], and one share for the issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife] of each of my children who predeceases my _____ [husband or wife].

(d) Each share created for a surviving child shall be distributed outright to that child if that child has reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years. If the child has not reached the age of _____ years, the share created for the child shall be held, administered, and distributed by the trustee in the Separate Share Trust as set forth in Section 4.02 of this will.

(e) Each share created for the issue of a deceased child shall be divided among those issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue.

(f) If all my children predecease my _____ [husband or wife] without leaving issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall distribute any undistributed balance of the trust property outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., my heirs or the San Francisco chapter of the American Lung Association].

4.04. Consideration of Beneficiary's Other Resources. In making any payments of income and distributions of principal from any trust created by this will for _____ [specify standard of discretion as set forth in provision authorizing the discretionary distribution, e.g., the health, education, support, and maintenance or care and comfort] of any beneficiary, the trustee shall take into consideration, to the extent the trustee deems advisable, any other income or resources available to that beneficiary that are known to the trustee and that are reasonably available for that purpose.

4.05. Trustee's Power to Determine Income and Principal. Unless otherwise specifically provided in this will, the determination of all matters with respect to what is principal and income of any trust under this will and the apportionment and allocation of receipts, expenses and other charges between principal and income shall be governed by the provisions of the California Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act from time to time existing. The trustee in the trustee's discretion shall determine any matter not provided for either in this instrument or in the California Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act.

4.06. Administration of Generation-Skipping Trusts. The provisions of this section apply to any trust under this will in which there is property that is or may become subject to the federal generation-skipping transfer tax:

(a) If the executor intends to allocate any part of the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption that is available to me to some but not all of the property to be distributed to any trust to which this section of the will applies, the executor _____ [shall or may, in the executor's discretion,] obtain an order for distribution that divides that trust into two separate trusts, to be designated as the Exempt Trust and the Non-Exempt Trust. [If executor has discretionary power to divide trusts: If the executor elects to divide a trust in the manner provided in this section, the or, if division of trusts is mandatory rather than discretionary: The] Exempt Trust shall contain the share of the property of that trust equal in value to the amount of the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption that the executor intends to allocate to the trust. The Non-Exempt Trust shall contain the balance of the property of that trust. The executor shall then actually allocate the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption to the Exempt Trust and not to the Non-Exempt Trust so that the Exempt Trust shall have an inclusion ratio of zero for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes and the Non-Exempt Trust shall have an inclusion ratio of one for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes.

(b) In allocating assets between the Exempt Trust and Non-Exempt Trust for purposes of this section, the executor shall _____ [for a pecuniary allocation: allocate the trust assets between the Exempt Trust and Non-Exempt Trust in cash or in kind, or partly in each, on a pro rata or non pro rata basis, and in undivided interests or not or, for a fractional allocation: allocate to each trust a fractional share of each and every substantial interest or right held by the trust being divided]. [If preceding sentence provides for a pecuniary allocation, add: If the allocation is not made within 15 months from the date of my death, the executor shall pay interest, at the legal rate, from the date of my death to the date of distribution. For purposes of allocation under this section, assets shall be valued at their values _____ (to use date of distribution values: on the date or dates of distribution or, to use valuation for estate tax purposes: as finally determined for federal estate tax purposes; provided that any assets allocated in kind shall be allocated between the Exempt Trust and the Non-Exempt Trust in a manner that fairly reflects the net appreciation or depreciation in the value of the assets in the trust being divided, measured from the date of my death to the date of payment).]

(c) Regardless of whether or not subsection (a) applies, if the amount of my generation-skipping transfer tax exemption actually allocated by the executor to a trust to which this section applies is equal to the value of the property of that trust so that the entire trust has an inclusion ratio of zero for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes, the entire trust shall be referred to as the Exempt Trust. On the other hand, if no part of my generation-skipping transfer tax exemption is actually allocated to the trust by the executor so that the entire trust has an inclusion ratio of one for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes (or if I am not the transferor of that trust for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes), the entire trust shall be referred to as the Non-Exempt Trust.

(d) The trustee may, but is not required to, administer the trusts under this will to which this section applies in such a manner that distributions made during the trust terms to "skip persons" (as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 2613(a) or any equivalent successor section) are made from Exempt Trusts, and distributions made during the trust terms to "non-skip persons" (as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 2613(b) or any equivalent successor section) are made from Non-Exempt trusts.

[Optional: (e) If the trustee determines that the burdens of generation-skipping transfer taxes, income taxes, and death taxes on a Non-Exempt Trust, my estate, or the beneficiaries of that trust would be reduced, the trustee may petition the court to amend the trust to grant to one or more trust beneficiaries who are non-skip persons in a generation below me a general testamentary power of appointment over all or a specified portion of that Non-Exempt Trust. Any power to amend the trust is within the discretion of the court, and the preceding sentence shall not be construed to give the trustee any power that the trustee does not already have under California trust law to petition the court under the appropriate circumstances, nor shall it be construed to limit the power of the trustee or any beneficiary under the California trust law to petition the court under the appropriate circumstances.]

[(f)] The purpose of this section is to allow the trustee to administer the trusts so as to decrease the amount of generation-skipping transfer taxes owed on generation-skipping transfers from the trusts. The trustee shall balance that consideration against any other tax and non-tax considerations, and may disregard the generation-skipping transfer tax consequences to the extent that the trustee determines that doing so will allow the trustee to carry out my intentions in creating the trusts. All decisions of the trustee under this subsection are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone.

[(g)] If, in the judgment of the executor or the trustee, at any time after the execution of this will, any statute, regulation, court decision, or administrative ruling imposes different or additional requirements on the trust in connection with the generation-skipping transfer tax, the executor or the trustee may petition the court to amend the terms of the trust to meet those requirements and achieve the purpose of this section.

[(h)] If, upon the death of my _____ [husband or wife], (1) my _____ [husband or wife] is considered to be the transferor of any Non-Exempt Trust established by this will for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes, and (2) my _____ [husband or wife]'s executor allocates any part of the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption that is available to my _____ [husband or wife] under Internal Revenue Code Section 2631(a) (or any equivalent successor section) to that Non-Exempt Trust so that the entire trust then has an inclusion ratio of zero for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes, that trust shall then be considered to be an Exempt Trust for purposes of this section of the will.

Article 5 : Executor

5.01. Nomination of Executor. I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Catherine Gray Sawyer,] as executor of this will.

5.02. Successor Executors. If _____ [nominee(s) for initial executor, e.g., my husband] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or to continue to serve, as executor, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as successor executor:

First, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for coexecutors) my brother, John Joseph Gray];

Second, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for individual) Frank J. Potter, who resides at _____ (address)];

Third, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for corporate executor) Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

5.03. Definition of Executor. The term "executor," as used in this will, refers to each personal representative of my estate who is serving at the pertinent time.

5.04. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any executor nominated in this will.

5.05. Independent Administration. The executor shall _____ [have full or not have] authority to administer my estate under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act.

5.06. Powers of Executor. Subject to any limitations stated elsewhere in this will, the executor shall have, in addition to all of the powers now or hereafter conferred on executors by law, and any powers enumerated elsewhere in this will, the power to perform any of the acts specified in this section:

(a) Take possession or control of all of my estate subject to disposition by this will, and collect all debts due to me or to my estate.

(b) Receive the rents, issues, and profits from all real and personal property in my estate until the estate is settled or delivered over by order of court to my heirs or beneficiaries.

(c) Pay taxes on, and take all steps reasonably necessary for the management, protection, and preservation of, all property in my estate.

(d) Commence and prosecute, either individually or jointly with my heirs or beneficiaries, any action necessary or proper to quiet title to or recover possession of any real or personal property in my estate.

(e) Vote in person, and give proxies to exercise, any voting rights with respect to any stock, any membership in a nonprofit corporation, or any other property in my estate, and waive notice of a meeting, give consent to the holding of a meeting, and authorize, ratify, approve, or confirm any action that could be taken by shareholders, members, or property owners.

(f) Insure the property of my estate against damage or loss, and insure the executor against liability to third persons.

(g) Deposit money belonging to my estate in an insured account in a financial institution in California.

(h) Invest and reinvest any money of my estate not reasonably required for the immediate administration of my estate in any kind of property, real, personal, or mixed, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own accounts; provided, however, that in investing any property of my estate, the executor shall act with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing, including but not limited to the general economic conditions and the anticipated needs of my estate and its beneficiaries, that a prudent person acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of like character and with like aims to accomplish the purposes of my estate as determined from this will.

(i) Retain any assets of my estate for as long as the executor deems to be in the best interest of my estate.

(j) Borrow money on behalf of my estate and pledge, hypothecate, or otherwise encumber property of my estate, real or personal, as security for any sums so borrowed.

(k) In order to satisfy a pecuniary gift or to distribute or divide estate assets into shares or partial shares, the executor may distribute or divide those assets in kind, or divide undivided interests in those assets, or sell all or any part of those assets and distribute or divide the property in cash, in kind, or partly in cash and partly in kind. Property distributed to satisfy a pecuniary gift under this will shall be valued at its fair market value at the time of distribution. This section shall apply only to the extent that it does not conflict with the provisions of Articles 2 and 3 specifying allocation of assets involving the marital deduction gift and of Article 4 specifying allocation of assets involving generation-skipping trusts.

(l) Pay any and all charges reasonably incurred in connection with or incidental to the distribution of any property of my estate, including but not limited to expenses of storage, freight, shipping, delivery, packing, and insurance; and, on any accounting, treat any such expenditures as expenses of the administration of my estate.

(m) To the extent permitted by law, and without regard to the resulting effect on any other provision of this will, on any person interested in my estate, or on the amount of taxes that may be payable, the executor shall have the power to choose a valuation date for tax purposes; choose the methods to pay any death taxes; elect to treat or use any item for state or federal estate or income tax purposes as an income tax deduction or an estate tax deduction; disclaim all or any portion of any interest in property passing to my estate at or after my death; join with my _____ [husband or wife] or my _____ [husband's or wife's] estate in filing joint income or gift tax returns for me or my estate; consent to any gifts made by my _____ [husband or wife] as being made one half by me for gift tax purposes; and determine when an item is to be treated as taken into income or used as a tax deduction.

(n) If any asset of my estate consists of an option right, exercise the option after authorization by order of court, upon a showing that the exercise would be to the advantage of my estate, and use any funds or property in my estate to acquire the property covered by the option.

(o) Hold a security in the name of a nominee or in any other form without disclosure of my estate so that title to the security may pass by delivery.

(p) Exercise any subscription rights owned or received by my estate by reason of owning securities, after authorization by court upon a showing that it is to the advantage of my estate.

(q) Sell, at either public or private sale and with or without notice, and grant options to purchase, any property belonging to my estate [optional:, subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(r) Lease any real or personal property belonging to my estate on such terms and conditions as the executor determines to be in the best interest of my estate [optional:, subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(s) Dispose of or abandon tangible personal property, except tangible personal property that is a specific gift, when the cost of collecting, maintaining, and safeguarding the property would exceed its fair market value.

(t) Compromise or settle any claim, action, or proceeding by or for the benefit of, or against, me, my estate, or the executor [optional:, subject only to any confirmation of court that may be required by law].

(u) Employ professional investment counsel to make recommendations with respect to, and otherwise assist in, investing the assets of my estate; and, on any accounting, treat any fees paid to investment counsel as expenses of the administration of my estate.

5.07. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any beneficiary under this will is a minor, or it appears to the executor that any beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the executor, in lieu of making direct payments to the beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the executor); to one or more suitable persons as the executor deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the executor for all purposes.

5.08. Executor's Liability for Own Acts. The executor shall not be liable to my estate or to any person interested in it for any act or omission of the executor, except an act or omission that is committed intentionally, with gross negligence, in bad faith, or with reckless indifference to the interests of persons interested in my estate, or an act or omission from which the executor derives a profit.

Article 6 : Trustee

6.01. Nomination of Trustee. I nominate _____ [name of trustee and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Catherine Gray Sawyer,] as trustee of any trust created under this will.

6.02. Successor Trustee. If _____ [nominee for initial trustee, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Catherine Gray Sawyer,] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or continue to serve, as trustee, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as trustee:

First, _____ [name and description, e.g., my brother, John Joseph Gray];

Second, _____ [name and description, e.g., Frank J. Potter, who resides at _____ (address)];

Third, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for corporate trustee): Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

6.03. Definition of Trustee. Reference in this instrument to "the trustee" shall be deemed a reference to whoever is serving as trustee or co-trustees, and shall include alternate or successor trustees, unless the context requires otherwise.

6.04. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any trustee nominated in this will.

6.05. Compensation of Trustee. The trustee shall be entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered, payable without court order. [Optional: If a trustee serves for only part of a calendar year, the annual compensation shall be prorated according to the number of days during that year that the trustee was acting as trustee.]

6.06. Procedure for Resignation. Any trustee may resign at any time, without giving a reason for the resignation, by giving written notice, at least _____ [specify; e.g., 30 days] before the time the resignation is to take effect, to any other trustee then acting, to any persons authorized to designate a successor trustee, to all living trust beneficiaries known to the trustee (or, in the case of a minor beneficiary, to the parent or guardian of that beneficiary), and to the successor trustee. A resignation shall be effective upon written acceptance of the trust by the successor trustee.

6.07. General Powers of Trustee. To carry out the purposes of the trusts created under this will, and subject to any limitations stated elsewhere in this will, the trustee shall have all of the following powers, in addition to all of the powers now or hereafter conferred on trustees by law:

(a) Retain property received into the trust at its inception, or later added to the trust, as long as the trustee considers that retention in the best interests of the trust or in furtherance of my goals in creating the trust, as determined from this will, but subject to the standards of the prudent investor rule as set forth in the California Uniform Prudent Investor Act.

(b) Invest and manage the trust assets as a prudent investor would, by considering the purposes, terms, distribution requirements, and other circumstances of the trust. In satisfying this standard, the trustee shall exercise reasonable care, skill, and caution. The trustee's investment and management decisions respecting individual assets and courses of action must be evaluated not in isolation, but in the context of the trust portfolio as a whole and as a part of an overall investment strategy having risk and return objectives reasonably suited to the trust.

(c) Retain or acquire unproductive or underproductive property.

(d) In the trustee's discretion, invest or reinvest in mutual funds, money market funds, investment trusts, regulated investment companies, market funds, and index funds, and in the shares or securities of any such funds or companies, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own account.

(e) Acquire and maintain as a trust asset a life insurance policy on the life of any person, including _____ [the trustee or any of the trustees], issued by any company and in any amount that the trustee may deem advisable, and to exercise all rights of ownership granted in that policy.

(f) With or without court authorization, sell (for cash or on deferred payments, and with or without security), convey, exchange, partition, and divide trust property; grant options for the sale or exchange of trust property for any purpose, whether the contract is to be performed or the option is to be exercised within or beyond the term of the trust; and lease trust property for any purpose, for terms within or extending beyond the expiration of the trust, regardless of whether the leased property is commercial or residential and regardless of the number of units leased.

(g) Lend or advance the trustee's own funds to my estate or to any other trust created by me, for any purpose properly related to that estate or trust, with interest thereon at the then-prevailing rates, and to receive security for any such loans in any commercially reasonable form. The trustee may, from time to time, purchase or lease assets from, sell or lease assets to, and exchange assets with my estate at fair market values. [Optional: However, the fair market value of any asset sold, purchased, or leased pursuant to this provision must first be determined by an independent appraisal.]

(h) Engage in any transactions with the personal representative of my estate that are in the best interest of any trusts under this will.

(i) Manage, control, improve, and maintain all real and personal trust property.

(j) Subdivide or develop land; make or obtain the vacation of plats and adjust boundaries, or adjust differences in valuation on exchange or partition by giving or receiving consideration; and dedicate land or easements to public use with or without consideration.

(k) Make ordinary or extraordinary repairs or alterations in buildings or other trust property, demolish any improvements, raze existing party walls or buildings, and erect new party walls or buildings, as the trustee deems advisable.

(l) Enter into oil, gas, and other mineral leases, on terms deemed advisable by the trustee; enter into any pooling, unitization, repressurization, community, or other types of agreements relating to the exploration, development, operation, and conservation of mineral properties; drill, mine, and otherwise operate for the development of oil, gas, and other minerals; contract for the installation and operation of absorption and repressuring plants; and install and maintain pipelines. Any such leases or agreements may be for a term within or extending beyond the term of the trust.

(m) In the trustee's discretion, abandon any [unproductive or wasted] trust asset or interest therein.

(n) Employ and discharge agents and employees, including but not limited to attorneys, accountants, investment and other advisers, custodians of assets, property managers, real estate agents and brokers, and appraisers, to advise and assist the trustees in the management of any trusts created under this will, and compensate them from the trust property. [Optional: The agents and employees may be associated or affiliated with the trustee, or may be descendants or other persons related to the trustee or to me, or a company associated with any such persons.] [Optional: The trustee is entitled to rely on the advice of any professional advisers employed under this provision. Reasonable compensation paid to any such agents or employees shall not diminish the compensation to which the trustee is otherwise entitled.]

(o) With respect to securities held in trust, exercise all the rights, powers, and privileges of an owner, including, but not limited to, the power to vote, give proxies, and pay assessments and other sums deemed by the trustee necessary for the protection of the trust property; participate in voting trusts, pooling agreements, foreclosures, reorganizations, consolidations, mergers, and liquidations, and, in connection therewith, deposit securities with and transfer title to any protective or other committee under such terms as the trustee deems advisable; exercise or sell stock subscription or conversion rights; and accept and retain as investments of the trust any securities or other property received through the exercise of any of the foregoing powers.

(p) Hold securities or other trust property in the trustee's own name or in the name of a nominee, without disclosure of the trust, or in unregistered form, so that title may pass by delivery.

(q) Deposit securities in a securities depository that is either licensed or exempt from licensing.

(r) Borrow money for any trust purpose from any person or entity on such terms and conditions as the trustee deems advisable, and obligate the trust for repayment; encumber any trust property by mortgage, deed of trust, pledge, or otherwise, whether for terms within or extending beyond the term of the trust, as the trustee deems advisable, to secure repayment of any such loan; replace, renew, and extend any such loan or encumbrance; and pay loans or other obligations of the trust deemed advisable by the trustee.

(s) In the trustee's discretion, make loans to beneficiaries out of funds of the trust and guarantee the repayment of loans made to beneficiaries by third parties by encumbering trust assets.

(t) Procure and carry, at the expense of the trust, insurance in such forms and in such amounts as the trustee deems advisable to protect the trust property against damage or loss, and to protect the trustee against liability with respect to third persons.

(u) Enforce any obligation owing to the trust, including any obligation secured by a deed of trust, mortgage, or pledge held as trust property, and to purchase any property subject to a security instrument held as trust property at any sale under the instrument.

(v) Extend the time for payment of any note or other obligation held as an asset of, and owing to, the trust, including accrued or future interest, and extend the time for repayment beyond the term of the trust.

(w) Pay or contest any claim against the trust; release or prosecute any claim in favor of the trust; or, in lieu of payment, contest, release, or prosecution, adjust, compromise, or settle any such claim, in whole or in part, with or without consideration.

(x) At trust expense, prosecute or defend actions, claims, or proceedings of whatever kind for the protection of the trust property and of the trustee in the performance of the trustee's duties, and employ and compensate attorneys, advisers, and other agents as the trustee deems advisable.

(y) Accept additions to any trusts created by this will, from any source and at any time; all such additions shall become a part of the trust and shall be held, administered, and distributed in accordance with the terms of the trust. Any additions to the trust shall be made by designating in writing the property to be added. However, the titling of any account, deed, or similar asset in the name of the trustee, as trustee of the trust, shall be deemed to be a transfer to the trust. Any designation by a third party, whether by will, deed, account title designation, or similar transfer, shall also be a transfer to the trust estate. No addition shall become part of the trust estate until it is accepted in writing by the trustee.

6.08. Retention of Family Residence. The trustee shall retain, in any trust or trusts under this will, any of my interest in real property used by me and my _____ [husband or wife] as our principal residence at the time of my death ("the family residence"), and shall deal with the family residence in accordance with the following terms and conditions:

(a) During _____ [his or her] lifetime, my _____ [husband or wife] shall have the right to occupy the family residence (or any substitute residence or residential property purchased as provided in this section of the will) free of any rent.

(b) The trustee shall pay as much of the mortgage or note payments, property taxes, assessments, insurance, maintenance, and ordinary repairs on the family residence (or on any substitute residence or residential property purchased as provided in this section of the will) as corresponds to the trust's proportionate interest in the same. The trustee shall make those payments out of income or principal of the trust or trusts in accordance with the principles applicable to charging of payments under California law.

(c) My _____ [husband or wife] shall, at _____ [his or her] option, have the right to advise the trustee in writing that _____ [he or she] no longer wishes to occupy the family residence and to direct the trustee to sell it, or any interest therein. In deciding on the terms and conditions relating to any sale, the trustee shall take into account all relevant factors, including, but not limited to, my intent that no sale be made in a "forced sale" situation (other than at my _____ [husband's or wife's] direction) or at a time when, because of high mortgage rates or otherwise, the residential real estate market is depressed. In selling the family residence, the trustee may dispose of it on such terms as the trustee deems desirable, including an installment sale or any other desirable method of disposing of the family residence, provided that if the sale is for consideration other than cash, the purchaser's obligation shall be secured by a first deed of trust. In the event of a sale, my _____ [husband or wife] may direct the trustee in writing to apply the proceeds of the sale to the purchase of a substitute residence or residential property, of comparable or lesser value, to be selected by my _____ [husband or wife]; or to reinvest the proceeds in any manner that _____ [he or she] may direct, provided that any such investments satisfy normal fiduciary standards of prudence and safety, and to use the income from reinvestment to pay the rental or lease payments on another residence or residential property, to be selected by my _____ [husband or wife]. Any net trust accounting income from any such investments, in excess of the trust share of the rental costs and any other expenses of trust administration, shall be added to the other trust income and distributed in accordance with the relevant provisions of the trust or trusts as set forth in Article 4 of this will.

[Optional: (d) If my _____ [husband or wife] does not direct the trustee to sell the family residence, _____ [he or she] shall have the right to direct the trustee in writing to lease it, or any interest in it. In the event of lease, the trustee shall continue to pay the expenses of maintaining the family residence as specified above, subject to the lease terms, and shall use the entire net income from the lease to pay the rental or lease payments on another residence or residential property, to be selected and occupied by my _____ [husband or wife]. Any net trust accounting income from any lease of the family residence, in excess of the trust share of the cost of the rental or lease payments on another residence or residential property, shall be added to the other trust income and distributed in accordance with the relevant provisions of the trust or trusts, as set forth in Article 4 of this will.]

(e) Upon the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trust interest in either the family residence, any proceeds remaining from the sale of the family residence, or any substitute residence or residential property purchased by the trustee with any proceeds of sale of the family residence, shall be distributed in accordance with the applicable provisions of the trust or trusts in which the interest or interests are held, as set forth in Article 4 of this will.

6.09. Power to Combine Trust Assets. Each trust created under this will shall constitute a separate trust and be administered and accounted for accordingly; however, the assets of all of the trusts may be combined and held for the trust beneficiaries without physical division into separate trusts until time of distribution.

6.10. Early Termination of Trusts. The trustee shall have the power, in the trustee's discretion, to terminate any trust created under this will whenever the fair market value of the trust falls below _____ [specify amount, e.g., $25,000], or becomes so small in relation to the costs of administration as to make continuing administration uneconomical. Upon termination, the trustee shall distribute the principal and any accrued or undistributed net income to the income beneficiaries in proportion to their shares of the income. If no fixed amount of income is payable to specific beneficiaries, the trustee shall distribute the principal and any accrued or undistributed net income in equal shares to those beneficiaries who would then be entitled to income payments from the trust.

6.11. Power to Delay Distributions. Following my death, the trustee shall have the power, in the trustee's discretion, to determine the reasonable administrative period necessary or appropriate to pay my debts, expenses, taxes, and other liabilities, before dividing or distributing the trust assets as provided herein, and to delay the division or distribution during that period. During that administrative period, the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, may accumulate the trust income, or distribute the income currently, or partially accumulate and partially distribute the income, as the trustee determines, but any income accumulated shall be distributable to the beneficiary or beneficiaries next entitled to distribution or allocation of the same upon conclusion of the administrative period.

6.12. Division or Distribution in Cash or in Kind. In order to satisfy a pecuniary gift or to distribute or divide trust assets into shares or partial shares, the trustee may distribute or divide those assets in kind, or divide undivided interests in those assets, or sell all or any part of those assets and distribute or divide the property in cash, in kind, or partly in cash and partly in kind. Property distributed to satisfy a pecuniary gift under this will shall be valued at its fair market value at the time of distribution. This section shall apply only to the extent that it does not conflict with the provisions of Articles 2 and 3 specifying allocation of assets involving the marital deduction gift and of Article 4 specifying allocation of assets involving generation-skipping trusts.

6.13. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any trust beneficiary is a minor, or it appears to the trustee that any trust beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the trustee, in lieu of making direct payments to the trust beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the trustee); to one or more suitable persons as the trustee deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the trustee for all purposes.

6.14. Grant of Specific Powers Not to Limit Exercise of General Powers. The enumeration of specific powers under this will shall not limit the trustee from exercising any other power with respect to any trusts created by this will that may be necessary or appropriate for the trustee to have and exercise in order to carry out the purposes of the trusts or to permit the trustee to fulfill the trustee's responsibilities and duties with respect to the trust.

6.15. Surviving Spouse's Power Over Bypass and Disclaimer Trust Not to Constitute General Power of Appointment. Notwithstanding any other provision of this will, at any time that my _____ [wife or husband] is serving as [a] trustee of the Bypass Trust and/or the Disclaimer Trust, if any, any power or discretion exercisable by my _____ [wife or husband] with respect to that trust, whether granted by this will or conferred by law, insofar as that power or discretion may be exercisable to consume, invade, or appropriate property for the benefit of my _____ [wife or husband], _____ [his or her] estate, _____ [his or her] creditors, or the creditors of _____ [his or her] estate, shall be exercisable only for _____ [his or her] health, education, support, and maintenance.

6.16. Power to Disclaim or Release Powers. The trustee may disclaim, release, or restrict the scope of any power or discretion that the trustee may hold in connection with any trust created under this will, whether the power or discretion is expressly granted in this will or is implied by law. The trustee shall disclaim a power in the manner required by applicable federal or California law. The trustee shall release or restrict any power or discretion by giving written notice to the beneficiary or beneficiaries then entitled to current distribution of income from the trust, specifying the power or discretion to be released or restricted, the nature of the restriction, and, if appropriate, the person or persons to whom the released or restricted power shall pass and be exercisable. If a power is disclaimed, the power shall be available to and exercisable by _____ [if trust nominates co-trustees: the other trustee or trustees or, if trust nominates successor trustee: the successor trustee].

6.17. Written Notice to Trustee. Until the trustee receives written notice of any death or other event upon which the right to payments from any trust may depend, the trustee shall incur no liability for disbursements made in good faith to persons whose interests may have been affected by that event.

6.18. Duty to Account. The trustee shall render accounts at least annually, at the termination of a trust, and upon a change of trustees, to the persons and in the manner required by law.

Article 7 : Guardian

7.01. Nomination of Guardian. If a guardian of the person, estate, or person and estate is necessary for any minor child of mine, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my sister, Catherine Gray Sawyer or my brother, John Joseph Gray,], as that guardian. If at any time _____ [name, e.g., my sister, Catherine Gray Sawyer or my brother, John Joseph Gray] is unable or unwilling to serve, or to continue to serve, as guardian, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., Frank J. Potter, who resides at _____ (address),] as guardian.

7.02. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any guardian of the estate nominated in this will.

Article 8 : Concluding Provisions

8.01. Definition of Death Taxes. The term "death taxes," as used in this will, shall mean all inheritance, estate, succession, and other similar taxes that are payable by any person on account of that person's interest in my estate or by reason of my death, including penalties and interest, but excluding the following:

(a) Any additional tax that may be assessed under Internal Revenue Code Section 2032A.

(b) Any federal or state tax imposed on a generation-skipping transfer, as that term is defined in the federal tax laws [, unless the applicable tax statutes provide that the generation-skipping transfer tax on that transfer is payable directly out of the assets of my gross estate].

8.02. Payment of Death Taxes. The executor shall pay death taxes, whether or not attributable to property inventoried in my probate estate, by prorating and apportioning them among the persons interested in my estate as provided in the California Probate Code, except as follows:

(a) Any death taxes attributable to any property passing to my _____ [husband or wife] under this will or otherwise that qualifies for the federal estate tax marital deduction shall be paid out of my residuary estate, so that the property shall pass to my _____ [husband or wife] free of any death taxes.

(b) Any death taxes attributable to the following specific gift[s] shall be paid out of my residuary estate, and _____ [the or each such] gift shall pass free of death taxes: _____ [describe each gift

(c) The method of apportionment of death taxes specified in this will shall apply equally to any property passing under any codicil to this will, except to the extent that a codicil expressly provides for a different method of apportionment.

PRACTICE TIP:

The allocation of taxes shown in this form is but one of many possible allocation schemes. In each case the drafter should carefully consider the nature of the client's assets, including whether those assets will pass under the will or otherwise, and the value of assets passing under the will as specific, rather than residuary, gifts. Only when these factors are considered can the appropriate tax allocation formula be selected. Other possible allocation clauses appear in CALIFORNIA WILLS & TRUSTS FORMS, Div. IV, Individual Will Provisions, Pt. 90, Concluding Provisions, Form 90.30 (Alts. 90.30-1-90.30-7); for more detailed discussion of tax allocation, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 23, Provisions for Payment of Taxes, Expenses, and Debt (Matthew Bender). Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

8.03. Abatement of Gifts. If my estate is insufficient to satisfy in full all of the gifts provided for in this will, I direct that gifts shall abate in the following order: first general gifts, then specific gifts, then demonstrative gifts; provided, however, that the gifts to my _____ [husband or wife] shall not abate until all other gifts have abated [, and the gifts to my children shall not abate until gifts to all persons and entities other than my _____ (husband or wife) have abated]. All gifts of the same class shall abate proportionally.

8.04. Simultaneous Death. If any beneficiary under this will and I die simultaneously, or if it cannot be established by clear and convincing evidence whether that beneficiary or I died first, I shall be deemed to have survived that beneficiary, and this will shall be construed accordingly.

8.05. Intentional Omission of Heirs Not Specifically Provided For in Will. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will, I have intentionally and with full knowledge omitted to provide for my heirs, regardless of whether or not I am aware of their existence and identities at the time this will is executed.

8.06. No-Contest Clause. If any person, directly or indirectly, contests the validity of this will in whole or in part, or opposes, objects to, or seeks to invalidate any of its provisions, or seeks to succeed to any part of my estate otherwise than in the manner specified in this will, any gift or other interest given to that person under this will shall be revoked and shall be disposed of as if he or she had predeceased me [optional: without issue].

8.07. Perpetuities Savings Clause. Notwithstanding any other provision of this will, every trust created by this will [, or by the exercise of any power of appointment created by this will,] shall terminate no later than 21 years after the death of _____ [designate measuring life or lives, e.g., the last survivor of my spouse and my issue] who are alive at the time of my death. If a trust is terminated under this section of the will, the trustee shall distribute all of the principal and undistributed income of the trust to the income beneficiaries of the trust in the proportion in which they are entitled (or eligible, in the case of discretionary payments) to receive income immediately before the termination. If that proportion is not fixed by the terms of this will, the trustee shall distribute all of the trust property to the persons then entitled or eligible to receive income from the trust _____ [specify pattern of distribution, e.g., outright in a manner that, in the trustee's opinion, will give effect to my intent in creating the trust, the trustee's decision to be final and incontestable by anyone or as a class, in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether all of such persons are members of the same generation].

8.08. Definition of Incapacity. For purposes of this will, a person shall be deemed "incapacitated" if and for so long as a court of competent jurisdiction has made a finding to that effect, or a guardian or conservator of that person's estate or person duly appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction is serving, or upon certification by two physicians licensed to practice under the laws of the state where the person is domiciled at the time of the certification that the person is unable properly to care for himself or herself or for his or her property. The latter certification shall be made by each physician in a written declaration under penalty of perjury.

8.09. Definition of Education. As used in this will, the term "education" refers to the following:

- (a) Education at public or private elementary, junior high, middle, or high schools, including boarding schools;
- (b) Undergraduate, graduate, and postgraduate study in any field, whether or not of a professional character, in colleges, universities, or other institutions of higher learning;
- (c) Specialized formal or informal training in music, the stage, the handicrafts, or the arts, whether by private instruction or otherwise; and
- (d) Formal or informal vocational or technical training, whether through programs or institutions devoted solely to vocational or technical training, or otherwise.

8.10. Captions. The captions appearing in this will are for convenience of reference only, and shall be disregarded in determining the meaning and effect of the provisions of this will.

8.11. Severability Clause. If any provision of this will is invalid, that provision shall be disregarded, and the remainder of this will shall be construed as if the invalid provision had not been included.

8.12. California Law to Apply. All questions concerning the validity and interpretation of this will, including any trusts created by this will, shall be governed by the laws of the State of California in effect at the time this will is executed.

8.13. Gifts to "Heirs." For any gift to my heirs that is made outright in this instrument, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate at the time for distribution, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death. For any assets of any trust estate created by this will to be distributed to my heirs, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate immediately following the termination of the trust of each share, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death.

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
 CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
 PART IV. FORMS
 B. Wills for Married Persons

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.213

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.213 Will for Married Person; Marital Deduction Formula Devise to Power of Appointment Trust; Residue to Bypass Trust; Disclaimer Trust

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a complete will designed for use by a testator who is married, has children, and wishes to leave his or her entire estate in trust in such a way that the surviving spouse will have maximum control over the trust assets during his or her lifetime. It is further assumed that the testator wishes to take advantage of the unlimited marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056] and the unified credits available in each estate [see I.R.C. §§ 2010 (estate tax), 2505 (gift tax)] to completely avoid estate tax on the death of the first spouse and to reduce (or totally eliminate) estate taxes on the death of the second spouse.

This will assumes that the combined estates of the testator and the testator's spouse will be too large at the time of the second spouse's death to be passed free of estate tax to the testator's children under the unified credit available in the second spouse's estate. If it is not reasonably foreseeable that the combined estates will exceed the amount of the available unified credit, the kind of tax planning included in this will is probably not warranted and the attorney should select one of the simpler wills included in this chapter.

This will provides for three trusts. The first, called the "Power of Appointment Trust" [see Section 4.01 of form], is designed to qualify for the unlimited marital deduction as a "lifetime income plus power of appointment" trust [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(5) and discussion in Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.13[5]]. The second, called the "Bypass Trust" [see Section 4.02 of form], is designed to take advantage of the unified credit available in the testator's estate [see I.R.C. §§ 2010 (estate tax), 2505 (gift tax) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] and, on the death of the surviving spouse, to "bypass" that estate for estate tax purposes [see discussion in § 61.212[1][f]]. The third trust, called the "Disclaimer Trust" [see Section 4.04 of form], is designed to hold any property of the Power of Appointment Trust that the surviving spouse elects to disclaim.

The surviving spouse is given lifetime interests in all three of the trusts. On the surviving spouse's death, the Bypass Trust and the Disclaimer Trust will be divided into separate shares for each of the testator's children. Each child will receive a share on the spouse's death or on the date the child reaches a specified age, whichever occurs later. Shares are distributed outright to the issue of any deceased children. On the surviving spouse's death, the assets of the Power of Appointment Trust will be distributed to the person or persons appointed to receive the property in the surviving spouse's will or, in default of such an appointment, pursuant to the terms of the Bypass Trust.

[b] Standard Provisions

This will contains a number of provisions that are also found in other wills in this chapter. These are provisions relating to the executor's bond [see Section 5.04 of form], the executor's authority to act under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act [see Section 5.05 of form], the executor's powers [see Section 5.06 of form], payments to incapacitated persons [see Section 5.07 of form], the executor's liability [see Section 5.08 of form], disinheritance of the testator's heirs [see Section 8.06 of form], and contest of the will [see Section 8.07 of form]. For discussion of these provisions, see § 61.200[1].

[c] Marital Deduction Gift

Section 2.05 of this will makes a general pecuniary devise that is to be held in trust for the benefit of the surviving spouse during the surviving spouse's lifetime [see Section 4.01 of form]. This devise, referred to as the "marital deduction gift," is a pecuniary formula devise that is stated to be the minimum amount necessary to eliminate (or reduce to the maximum extent possible) any federal estate tax at the testator's death, taking into account the net value of all other property that passes or has passed to the spouse under the will or otherwise and that qualifies for the federal estate tax marital deduction and all allowable federal estate tax credits and deductions (other than the marital deduction).

This formula clause requires that the testator's estate be divided into "marital" and "nonmarital" shares [see discussion in § 61.212[1][d]] in a way that will maximize the tax-saving potential of the unlimited marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056 and discussion in § 61.212[1][c]] and the "applicable credit amount" [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] available in the testator's estate. The formula prescribes the dollar amount of the property that will constitute the "marital" share of the estate.

Pecuniary formulas are the most popular marital deduction formulas. They avoid the administrative headaches that result when the marital and nonmarital shares receive fractional interests in the same assets and offer flexibility in funding, because the executor or trustee can be given discretion to decide which assets to transfer to the marital and nonmarital shares to satisfy the pecuniary and residuary devises [see Section 3.03 of form]. However, the actual allocation of assets to the two shares need not be made until after the first spouse's death. For further discussion of marital deduction devises and formula clauses, see § 61.212[1][c], [d], [e]. For detailed discussion of the marital deduction and its use in estate planning, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, and California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 112, The Marital Deduction and Marital Deduction Trusts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Power of Appointment Trust

This will requires that the marital deduction gift [see Section 2.05 of form] be held in the Power of Appointment Trust [see Section 4.01 of form]. This trust will qualify for the unlimited marital deduction as a lifetime income plus power of appointment trust under I.R.C. § 2056(b)(5). For general discussion of the requirements of this type of trust, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, §§ 71.13[5], 71.231[1].

PRACTICE TIP:

As noted, there are a several ways to qualify for the marital deduction through the use of trusts, the "lifetime income plus power of appointment trust" being only one of them. The advantage to such a trust is the surviving spouse's relative sense of control over his or her destiny. However, qualified terminable interest property (QTIP) trusts [ see § 61.214] have become by far the most popular type of marital deduction trust, for good reasons. When the spouses have (or one of them has) children from a prior marriage, the order of deaths could greatly affect the ultimate distribution of property subject to a power of appointment--there is a great tendency for a parent to leave property to his or her own children at the expense of the deceased spouse's children. Of course, there is just as much desire on the part of the deceased spouse to benefit his or her own children, but the ability to assure this as to marital deduction assets is eliminated where a general power of appointment is granted to the surviving spouse. The same "problem" can arise for young couples, when a premature death of one spouse could likely lead to a remarriage by the surviving spouse to a person who either has his or her own children or with whom the surviving spouse will have additional children. In each instance, the QTIP trust allows the deceased spouse to exert considerably greater control over the ultimate disposition of his or her property interests. General power of appointment marital deduction trusts such as the one illustrated here are primarily used these days for older couples in their first (and likely only) marriage. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

[e] Bypass Trust

Section 3.01 of this will gives the residue of the testator's estate to a "bypass trust" [ see Section 4.02 of form]. This trust gives the testator's surviving spouse the lifetime right to receive all of the net income from the trust [ see Section 4.01(a) of form] and principal distributions pursuant to an "ascertainable standard" [ see Section 4.02(b) of form].

Bypass trusts play an important part in most estate plans that seek to give the surviving spouse optimum use of the testator's estate during the surviving spouse's lifetime while at the same time avoiding estate tax on the testator's death and reducing (or eliminating) estate tax on the death of the surviving spouse. For a general discussion of bypass trusts, see § 61.212[1][f].

[f] Allocation of Assets

Section 3.03 gives the executor discretion to allocate assets in the testator's estate to the marital and nonmarital shares in cash or in kind, or partly in each, on a pro rata or non pro rata basis, and in undivided interests or not. This gives the executor maximum flexibility to allocate assets to the respective shares in the manner that seems most favorable at the time of the allocation.

[g] Disclaimer Trust

Section 4.04 of this will provides that any property that the testator's surviving spouse elects to disclaim will pass to the trustee and be held in the disclaimer trust. However, the disclaimer trust will actually come into being only if the surviving spouse makes a qualified disclaimer of property [ see I.R.C. § 2518(b)]. The distributive provisions of the disclaimer trust provide that the surviving spouse will receive all of the net income of the trust for life [ see Section 4.03(a) of form]. The trustee has discretion to invade trust principal for the surviving spouse's benefit pursuant to an "ascertainable standard" [ see Section 4.03(b) of form; for "ascertainable standard," see I.R.C. § 2041(b)(1)(A) and discussion in Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.13[1][g]]. The Disclaimer Trust also gives the surviving spouse the right to request annual principal distributions not to exceed the greater of $5,000 or 5 percent of the value of the principal of the trust per year [ see Section 4.02(c) of form].

PRACTICE TIP:

Note that in this will the "five or five power" is included in the Disclaimer Trust rather than the Bypass Trust. Conceptually, the last thing the testator (or estate planner) wants to do is encourage consumption of the bypass trust. Five or five powers encourage consumption--surviving spouses, especially older ones and/or second spouses with separate sets of children, often get nervous about "their next meal" and take everything they can legitimately get their hands on, without regard to tax considerations. In the worst case, if the five or five power were included in the bypass trust, there would be no disclaimer (creating maximum later estate tax exposure) and the survivor would fully utilize the five or five power over the bypass trust, perhaps in lieu of invading the marital trust which could, after all, be appointed to that spouse's own children.

If the five or five power is instead put into the disclaimer trust, good things arguably could result. For example, it may be that estate equalization is desired, without an intent to force it on the survivor--hence the option to use the disclaimer. If the five or five power is put into the disclaimer trust, it provides a modest incentive to make the disclaimer and do the estate equalization in the process. Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

On the surviving spouse's death, the trustee will divide the assets of the trust into separate shares according to the same directions provided for the division of the assets of the bypass trust on the surviving spouse's death [see Section 4.03(c) of form].

Because the interests of the surviving spouse in the disclaimer trust are appropriately limited, its assets will not be included in the surviving spouse's estate for estate tax purposes when the surviving spouse dies. For a general discussion of disclaimer trusts, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.16.

[h] Choice of Trustee

Section 6.01 of this will nominates the trustee of the trusts created under the will. Any person or entity chosen by the testator may serve as the trustee. The testator's surviving spouse may serve as trustee, if he or she has the requisite temperament, experience, and skill to perform the duties required of a trustee. None of the rights or powers given to the surviving spouse in this form will require that the trust assets be included in the surviving spouse's estate merely because the surviving spouse serves as trustee.

[i] Administration of Generation-Skipping Trusts

Section 4.07 of this will governs the administration of any trust created by the will in which there is property that is or may become subject to the federal generation-skipping transfer tax [see I.R.C. §§ 2601-2664]. The GST tax has been repealed effective for generation-skipping transfers after 2009 [I.R.C. § 2664]. Until then, it remains in effect. The section is designed to give the executor post-mortem flexibility to eliminate or minimize any generation-skipping transfer tax.

For further discussion of this provision, see § 61.201[1][e]. For general discussion of the generation-skipping transfer tax and generation-skipping transfer tax planning, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 113, Generation-Skipping Transfers and Trust Strategies (Matthew Bender).

1.05. Definition of Issue. As used in this will, the term "issue" refers to all lineal descendants of all generations, with the relationship of parent and child in each generation being determined by the definitions of "child" and "children" set forth in this will.

1.06. Number and Gender. As used in this will, references in the masculine gender shall be deemed to include the feminine and neuter genders, and vice versa, and references to the singular shall be deemed to include the plural, and vice versa, wherever the context so permits.

1.07. Property Disposed of by Will. It is my intention by this will to dispose of all of my separate property, [and] my entire one-half interest in the community property of my _____ [wife or husband] and myself [if there is likely to be any quasi-community property, add: and my entire one-half interest in my quasi-community property].

1.08. No Exercise of Power of Appointment. I intentionally refrain from exercising any power of appointment that I now possess or that hereafter may be conferred on me.

1.09. No Contract Affecting Will. I have not entered into any contract to make a will or a testamentary gift, not to revoke a will or a testamentary gift, or to die intestate. [Optional, add language referring to similar will executed by spouse: The similarity of the provisions of this will to the provisions of the will of my _____ (husband or wife) (executed on this date) shall not be construed as evidence of any such contract.]

Article 2 : Particular Gifts

2.01. Specific Gifts of Personal Property. I give the items of property described below [optional: together with my interest in any insurance on those items,] to the persons named below:

(a) I give _____ [describe property, e.g., my fourteen-karat gold dinner ring] to _____ [name of devisee and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my sister, Estelle Gold Taylor] [if desired, add survivorship clause, e.g., if she survives me or, if she survives me for 60 days] [if gift is conditioned on survival, add alternative disposition, e.g.,; but if she does not survive me (for that period), this gift shall _____ (e.g., lapse and become part of the residue of my estate or go to my daughter, Nancy Barbara Gold)];

(b) I give _____ [describe property, e.g., my sterling silver flatware service] to _____ [name of devisee and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my niece, Mary Ann Cooper] [if desired, add survivorship clause, e.g., if she survives me or, if she survives me for 60 days] [if gift is conditioned on survival, add alternative disposition, e.g.,; but if she does not survive me (for that period), this gift shall _____ (e.g., lapse and become part of the residue of my estate or go to my daughter, Nancy Barbara Gold, if she should survive me)];

(c) I give _____ [describe property, e.g., the promissory note executed in my favor by John D. Smith and Jane B. Smith, on June 1, 1990, in the principal amount of $100,000, with interest on unpaid principal in the amount of 10 percent per annum, principal and interest payable in monthly payments of $1,000 per month, together with the deed of trust of the same date on real property located in the City of Monterey, County of Monterey, State of California, and recorded on June 2, 1990, at Reel 10011, Book 10022, Official Records, Monterey County, California, securing the payment of principal and interest under that note,] to _____ [name of devisee and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my brother, Benjamin Edward Gold] [optional:, if he survives me or, if he survives me for 60 days] [if gift is conditioned on survival, add alternative disposition, e.g.,; but if he does not survive me (for that period), this gift shall _____ (e.g., lapse and become part of the residue of my estate or go to my son, Charles Robert Gold)].

[Continue as necessary for each additional item of property to be specifically devised.]

2.02. Gift[s] to Be Selected From Among My Personal Effects. I give _____ [name(s) of devisee(s) and relationship(s) to testator, e.g., my brother, Benjamin Edward Gold, or my niece, Mary Ann Cooper, or my brother, Benjamin Edward Gold, and my niece, Mary Ann Cooper, and each of them,] the right to select _____ [specify, e.g., one item or one item each or two items or two items each] from among my personal effects so that _____ [he or she or they] will have _____ [a memento or mementos] to remember me by. I make this gift to _____ [him or her or them] as a symbol of my love and affection. If _____ [he or she or any person named in this section] does not survive me or does not make a selection within three months after the date of my death, or within 30 days after this will is admitted to probate, whichever is later, then the gift made to _____ [him or her or that person] in this section shall fail. [If desired, specify any types of property that may not be selected, e.g., For purposes of this gift only, the word "personal effects" shall not include any motor vehicles or any items of property with an appraised value in excess of $2,500.]

2.03. Tangible Personal Property. I give all of my tangible personal property that is not otherwise disposed of as a specific gift in this will, including my interest in any insurance on that property, to my _____ [husband or wife] [if desired, add survivorship clause, e.g., if she survives me or, if he survives me for 60 days]. [If gift is conditioned on survival, add appropriate alternative disposition, e.g.,; and, if _____ (he or she) does not, to my children who survive me (for that period), to be divided among them by the executor, in equal or unequal shares as the executor believes to be in accordance with my wishes, the decision of the executor as to this division to be final and incontestable by anyone. [Optional: The term "tangible personal property" _____ (includes, but is not limited to, or does not include) _____ (specify items, e.g., livestock, pets, airplanes, and motor vehicles).]

2.04. General Pecuniary Gift. I give the sum of $ _____ to _____ [name of devisee and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my niece, Mary Ann Cooper] [if desired, add survivorship clause, e.g., if she survives me or, if she survives me for 60 days]. [If gift is conditioned on survival, add appropriate alternative disposition, e.g., If she does not survive me (for that period), this gift shall _____ (e.g., lapse and become part of the residue of my estate or go to my friend, Frank J. Collier).]

2.05. Marital Deduction Gift. If my _____ [wife or husband] survives me [if desired, specify survivorship period not to exceed six months, e.g., for six months], I give a pecuniary gift (referred to as the "marital deduction gift"), in the amount determined in this section, to the trustee, in trust, to be held, administered, and distributed according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Power of Appointment Trust. The marital deduction gift shall consist of assets having a value equal to the minimum amount necessary to eliminate (or reduce to the maximum extent possible) any federal estate tax at my death, taking into account the following:

(a) The net value of all other property that passes or has passed to my _____ [wife or husband] under this will or otherwise and that qualifies for the federal estate tax marital deduction. For purposes of this subsection of the will, any qualified disclaimer made by my _____ [wife or husband] shall be disregarded, and any property that will qualify as qualified terminable interest property under Internal Revenue Code Section 2056(b)(7) if my executor makes the requisite election shall be considered to be qualified terminable interest property, regardless of whether the election is made;

(b) All federal estate tax deductions and exclusions actually allowed other than the marital deduction;

(c) The applicable exclusion amount, as specified in Internal Revenue Code Section 2010, available to my estate;

(d) The credit for state death taxes available to my estate, to the extent that the use of that credit does not result in or increase any death tax payable to any state; and

(e) Any other allowable credits available to my estate (except the credit for tax on prior transfers from a "transferor," as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 2013, who dies within two years after the date of my death), but only to the extent that those credits do not disqualify this gift from receiving the marital deduction.

The marital deduction gift shall be held, administered, and distributed according to the terms of the Power of Appointment Trust as set forth in Section 4.01.

If my _____ [wife or husband] does not survive me [if desired, specify survivorship period not to exceed six months, e.g., for six months], this gift shall lapse and become part of the residue of my estate.

2.06. Interest on Pecuniary Gifts. [Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will,] [n]o interest shall accrue on all [general] pecuniary gifts made in this will.

[or]

2.06. Interest on Pecuniary Gifts. [Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will,] [I]nterest at the rate _____ [e.g., of 10 percent per annum or specified in California Probate Code Section 12001, or any successor to that section,] shall accrue on all [general] pecuniary gifts made in this will from and after _____ [e.g., the date of my death or the first anniversary of my death] and until those gifts are paid in full. All interest shall be paid at the time the gift is distributed.

Article 3 : Residuary Provisions

3.01. Disposition of Residue. If my _____ [wife or husband] survives me _____ [if desired, add survivorship period not to exceed six months, e.g., for six months], I give the residue of my estate (referred to as the "bypass gift") to the trustee, in trust, to be held, administered, and distributed according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Bypass Trust.

3.02. Alternate Disposition of Residue. If my _____ [husband or wife] does not survive me [restate any survivorship period imposed in primary residuary devise, but not to exceed six months, e.g., for six months], I give the _____ [residue of my estate or portion of the residue of my estate not taken] as follows:

(a) If any of my children survive me, the residue of my estate shall be divided into as many shares of equal market value as are necessary to create one share for each of my children who survive me and one share for the issue who survive me of each of my children who predecease me.

(b) Each share created for a surviving child shall be distributed outright to that child if that child has reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years at the time of my death. If the child has not reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years at the time of my death, the share created for the child shall be held, administered, and distributed by the trustee in a separate trust according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Separate Share Trust.

(c) If any of my children survive me, each share created for the issue of a deceased child shall be distributed outright to those issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation].

(d) If none of my children survive me, but I leave issue surviving, I give the residue of my estate outright to those issue, who are to take that property _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation].

(e) If none of my issue survive me, I give the residue of my estate to _____ [e.g., my heirs or the Ventura County chapter of the American Red Cross].

3.03. Allocation and Valuation of Assets. In allocating assets between the marital deduction gift and the bypass gift, the executor shall allocate the assets in my estate that qualify for the marital deduction between the marital deduction gift and the bypass gift in cash or in kind, or partly in each, on a pro rata or non pro rata basis, and in undivided interests or not; subject, however, to the following:

(a) Only assets that qualify for the marital deduction shall be allocated to the marital deduction gift.

(b) Assets allocated in kind shall be _____ [to use date of distribution values: valued for purposes of allocation on the date or dates of distribution or, to use valuation for estate tax purposes under "minimum worth" test: deemed to satisfy the marital deduction amount on the basis of their values as finally determined for federal estate tax purposes, but in no event shall the date of distribution values be less than the amount of the marital deduction or, to use valuation for estate tax purposes under "fair representation" test: deemed to satisfy the marital deduction amount on the basis of their values as finally determined for federal estate tax purposes; provided, however, that the executor shall act impartially, consistent with equitable principles requiring impartiality among beneficiaries, in allocating assets in satisfaction of the marital deduction gift, so that any distribution of assets in satisfaction of the marital deduction gift shall be made of assets, including cash, fairly representative of appreciation or depreciation in the value of all property thus available for distribution].

(c) The executor shall not allocate assets that qualify for the foreign death tax credit to the marital deduction gift unless all other assets or interests available for allocation have been so allocated.

[Optional: (d) Any incidents of ownership to a policy of insurance on the life of a person other than me shall be allocated to the bypass gift.]

3.04. Intention That Marital Deduction Gift Qualify for Marital Deduction. I intend that the marital deduction gift qualify for the federal estate tax marital deduction, and this instrument shall be construed accordingly. No fiduciary under this will shall take any action or exercise any power that may impair the federal estate tax marital deduction.

3.05. Disclaimer of Property by My Spouse. Any property or portion of property that is disclaimed by my _____ [wife or husband] shall pass to the trustee, in trust, to be held, administered, and distributed according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Disclaimer Trust. [However, if my _____ (wife or husband) also disclaims an interest in all or any portion of the Disclaimer Trust, that disclaimed interest shall be administered and distributed as if my _____ (wife or husband) predeceased me.]

Article 4 : Trust Distributions

4.01. Power of Appointment Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the Power of Appointment Trust as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife], so long as my _____ [husband or wife] lives, the entire net income of the trust, in monthly or other convenient installments agreed upon by my _____ [husband or wife] and the trustee, but not less often than annually. [Optional: In determining the net income of the trust distributable to my _____ (husband or wife), the trustee shall include all income that must be considered as income in order for the trust to qualify for the marital deduction under the federal estate tax law applicable to my estate, and shall make no deductions from gross income that would prevent the trust from qualifying for that marital deduction, notwithstanding any contrary provisions of this will or any applicable provisions of state law. It is my intention that my _____ (husband or wife), as the beneficiary of a marital deduction trust, shall have substantially that degree of beneficial enjoyment of the trust during _____ (his or her) lifetime that the principles of the law of trusts accord to a person who is unqualifiedly designated as the life beneficiary of a trust, and the trustee shall not exercise the trustee's discretion in a manner that is not in accord with this expressed intention. It is also my intention that the trust produce for my _____ (husband or wife) during _____ (his or her) lifetime the income, or that my _____ (husband or wife) shall have the benefit of the trust property, as is consistent with the value of the trust property and with its preservation.]

(b) The trustee shall distribute to my _____ [husband or wife] such amounts from the principal of the trust, up to the whole of the trust principal, as _____ [he or she] may request of the trustee in writing from time to time.

(c) On the death of my _____ [husband or wife], and subject to any power of appointment exercised by _____ [him or her], the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, may pay the [taxes,] debts[,] and expenses arising on my _____ [husband's or wife's] death, unless the trustee determines that other adequate provisions have been made for payment of these expenses. Any payments made under this section _____ [may be made out of income or principal (or partly from each) of the Power of Appointment Trust or shall be made first out of the income or principal of the Power of Appointment Trust, and then out of the income or principal of the Bypass Trust to the extent that the Power of Appointment Trust is insufficient for that purpose].

(d) On the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall distribute the trust property then remaining, including all principal and undistributed income, to the person, persons, or entities, including the estate of my _____ [husband or wife], on such terms and conditions, either outright or in trust, or by creating further powers of appointment, as my _____ [husband or wife] shall appoint by _____ [his or her] valid last will specifically referring to and exercising this power of appointment. The trustee may rely upon any instrument admitted to probate as the last will of my _____ [husband or wife] in carrying out the terms of the power of appointment and shall not be liable for any good faith act in reliance upon that will, even if for any reason it is later determined to be invalid with respect to its purported exercise of this power of appointment. If the trustee receives no notice of the existence of a will of my _____ [husband or wife] within six months after my _____ [husband's or wife's] death, the trustee may distribute the trust assets and income as though this power of appointment had not been exercised and shall in that event be conclusively presumed to have acted in good faith, even if a valid will is thereafter discovered.

(e) If any of the property subject to this power of appointment is not effectively appointed by my _____ [husband or wife], that property [, after any payment of taxes, debts, and expenses pursuant to the applicable provisions of this will,] shall be distributed in the manner specified in Section 4.02 applicable to the Bypass Trust. However, the property disposed of pursuant to this subsection shall not be considered to be part of the Bypass Trust unless this trust and the Bypass Trust have the same inclusion ratios for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes].

(f) Notwithstanding any other provision of this will, any power of appointment created by this will, whether expressly granted in this instrument or implied by law, may be released, disclaimed, or restricted in scope. Any such power may be released to the extent and in the manner set forth in California Probate Code Section 661 and disclaimed to the extent and in the manner set forth in California Probate Code Sections 260-295, provided that these statutes exist at the date of exercise of the release or disclaimer.

4.02. Bypass Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the Bypass Trust as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife] all of the net income of the trust, in monthly or other convenient installments agreed upon by my _____ [husband or wife] and the trustee, but not less often than annually, for life.

(b) The trustee shall distribute to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife], for life, as much of the principal of the trust as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary [, when added to the income payments from this trust,] for _____ [his or her] health, education, support, and maintenance. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone.

(c) On the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall divide the trust property into as many shares of equal market value as are necessary to create one share for each of my children who survives my _____ [husband or wife], and one share for the issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife] of each of my children who predeceases my _____ [husband or wife].

(d) Each share created for a surviving child shall be distributed outright to that child if that child has reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years. If the child has not reached the age of _____ years, the share created for the child shall be held, administered, and distributed by the trustee in the Separate Share Trust as set forth in Section 4.03 of this will.

(e) Each share created for the issue of a deceased child shall be divided among those issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue.

(f) If all my children predecease my _____ [husband or wife] without leaving issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall distribute any undistributed balance of the trust property outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., my heirs or the Ventura County chapter of the American Red Cross].

4.03. Separate Share Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the separate share created for each child as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay or distribute to or apply for the benefit of that child, until _____ [he or she or he or she] reaches the age of _____ [e.g., 25 years], in monthly or other convenient installments, but not less often than annually, as much of the net income of the trust, and as much of the principal of the trust, as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary for _____ [his or her or his or her] _____ [to specify an "ascertainable standard": health, education, support, and maintenance or specify some other standard, e.g., comfort, welfare, and happiness]. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone. The trustee shall accumulate and add to principal any net income not distributed.

(b) When that child reaches the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years, the trustee shall distribute to _____ [him or her or him or her] outright the balance of the trust property.

(c) If that child dies before the trust property has been distributed as provided in this section, the assets of _____ [his or her or his or her] separate share shall be divided among _____ [his or her or his or her] issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue. If that child dies without issue before the trust property has been distributed as provided in this section, the trustee shall distribute the entire undistributed balance of _____ [his or her or his or her] separate share outright among the other then-living persons for whom separate shares were created, and the issue of any deceased persons for whom separate shares were created, _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]; provided, however, that if any part of that balance would otherwise be distributed to a person for whose benefit a trust is being administered under this section, that part shall instead be added to that trust and shall thereafter be administered according to its terms. If there are no surviving persons who may take the share of that child under this section, any remaining trust property shall be distributed outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., my heirs or the Ventura County chapter of the American Red Cross].

4.04. Disclaimer Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the Disclaimer Trust as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife] all of the net income of the trust, in monthly or other convenient installments [agreed upon by _____ (identity of beneficiary, e.g., my wife) and the trustee], but not less often than annually, for life.

(b) The trustee shall distribute to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife], for life, as much of the principal of the trust as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary [, when added to the income payments from this trust,] for _____ [his or her] health, education, support, and maintenance. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone.

(c) In addition to any other payments and distributions that my _____ [husband or wife] may receive under this instrument, the trustee shall distribute to _____ [him or her], during _____ [his or her] lifetime, those amounts from the principal of the trust estate that _____ [he or she] may from time to time request of the trustee in writing, not exceeding in any calendar year the greater of $5,000 or 5 percent of the value of the principal of the trust, determined as of the end of the calendar year. This right of withdrawal is not cumulative, so that if _____ [he or she] does not withdraw the full amount that _____ [he or she] is entitled to withdraw under this provision in any calendar year, the right to withdraw the amount not withdrawn shall lapse at the end of the calendar year. This power shall exist each year until the death of my _____ [husband or wife].

(d) On the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall divide the trust property into as many shares of equal market value as are necessary to create one share for each of my children who survives my _____ [husband or wife], and one share for the issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife] of each of my children who predeceases my _____ [husband or wife].

(e) Each share created for a surviving child shall be distributed outright to that child if that child has reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years. If the child has not reached the age of _____ years, the share created for the child shall be held, administered, and distributed by the trustee in the Separate Share Trust as set forth in Section 4.03 of this will.

(f) Each share created for the issue of a deceased child shall be divided among those issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue.

(g) If all my children predecease my _____ [husband or wife] without leaving issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall distribute any undistributed balance of the trust property outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., my heirs or the Ventura County chapter of the American Red Cross].

4.05. Consideration of Beneficiary's Other Resources. In making any payments of income and distributions of principal from any trust created by this will for _____ [specify standard of discretion as set forth in provision authorizing the discretionary distribution, e.g., the health, education, support, and maintenance or care and comfort] of any beneficiary, the trustee shall take into consideration, to the extent the trustee deems advisable, any other income or resources available to that beneficiary that are known to the trustee and that are reasonably available for that purpose.

4.06. Trustee's Power to Determine Income and Principal. Unless otherwise specifically provided in this will, the determination of all matters with respect to what is principal and income of any trust under this will and the apportionment and allocation of receipts, expenses and other charges between principal and income shall be governed by the provisions of the California Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act from time to time existing. The trustee in the trustee's discretion shall determine any matter not provided for either in this instrument or in the California Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act.

4.07. Administration of Generation-Skipping Trusts. The provisions of this section apply to any trust under this will in which there is property that is or may become subject to the federal generation-skipping transfer tax:

(a) If the executor intends to allocate any part of the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption that is available to me to some but not all of the property to be distributed to any trust to which this section of the will applies, the executor _____ [shall or may, in the executor's discretion,] obtain an order for distribution that divides the trust into two separate trusts, to be designated as the Exempt Trust and the Non-Exempt Trust. [If executor has discretionary power to divide trusts: If the executor elects to divide a trust in the manner provided in this section, the or, if division of trusts is mandatory rather than discretionary: The] Exempt Trust shall contain the share of the property of that trust equal in value to the amount of the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption that the executor intends to allocate to the trust. The Non-Exempt Trust shall contain the balance of the property of that trust. The executor shall then actually allocate the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption to the Exempt Trust and not to the Non-Exempt Trust so that the Exempt Trust shall have an inclusion ratio of zero for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes and the Non-Exempt Trust shall have an inclusion ratio of one for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes.

(b) In allocating assets between the Exempt Trust and Non-Exempt Trust for purposes of this section, the executor shall _____ [for a pecuniary allocation: allocate the trust assets between the Exempt Trust and Non-Exempt Trust in cash or in kind, or partly in each, on a pro rata or non pro rata basis, and in undivided interests or not or, for a fractional allocation: allocate to each trust a fractional share of each and every substantial interest or right held by the trust being divided]. [If preceding sentence provides for a pecuniary allocation, add: If the allocation is not made within 15 months from the date of my death, the executor shall pay interest, at the legal rate, from the date of my death to the date of distribution. For purposes of allocation under this section, assets shall be valued at their values _____ (to use date of distribution values: on the date or dates of distribution or, to use valuation for estate tax purposes: as finally determined for federal estate tax purposes; provided that any assets allocated in kind shall be allocated between the Exempt Trust and the Non-Exempt Trust in a manner that fairly reflects the net appreciation or depreciation in the value of the assets in the trust being divided, measured from the date of my death to the date of payment).]

(c) Regardless of whether or not subsection (a) applies, if the amount of my generation-skipping transfer tax exemption actually allocated by the executor to a trust to which this section applies is equal to the value of the property of that trust so that the entire trust has an inclusion ratio of zero for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes, the entire trust shall be referred to as the Exempt Trust. On the other hand, if no part of my generation-skipping transfer tax exemption is actually allocated to the trust by the executor so that the entire trust has an inclusion ratio of one for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes (or if I am not the transferor of that trust for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes), the entire trust shall be referred to as the Non-Exempt Trust.

(d) The trustee may, but is not required to, administer the trusts under this will to which this section applies in such a manner that distributions made during the trust terms to "skip persons" (as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 2613(a) or any equivalent successor section) are made from Exempt Trusts, and distributions made during the trust terms to "non-skip persons" (as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 2613(b) or any equivalent successor section) are made from Non-Exempt trusts.

[Optional: (e) If the trustee determines that the burdens of generation-skipping transfer taxes, income taxes, and death taxes on a Non-Exempt Trust, my estate, or the beneficiaries of that trust would be reduced, the trustee may petition the court to amend the trust to grant to one or more trust beneficiaries who are non-skip persons in a generation below me a general testamentary power of appointment over all or a specified portion of that Non-Exempt Trust. Any power to amend the trust is within the discretion of the court, and the preceding sentence shall not be construed to give the trustee any power that the trustee does not already have under California trust law to petition the court under the appropriate circumstances, nor shall it be construed to limit the power of the trustee or any beneficiary under the California trust law to petition the court under the appropriate circumstances.]

[(f)] The purpose of this section is to allow the trustee to administer the trusts so as to decrease the amount of generation-skipping transfer taxes owed on generation-skipping transfers from the trusts. The trustee shall balance that consideration against any other tax and nontax considerations, and may disregard the generation-skipping transfer tax consequences to the extent that the trustee determines that doing so will allow the trustee to carry out my intentions in creating the trusts. All decisions of the trustee under this subsection are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone.

[(g)] If, in the judgment of the executor or the trustee, at any time after the execution of this will, any statute, regulation, court decision, or administrative ruling imposes different or additional requirements on the trust in connection with the generation-skipping transfer tax, the executor or the trustee may petition the court to amend the terms of the trust to meet those requirements and achieve the purpose of this section.

[(h)] If, upon the death of my _____ (husband or wife), (1) my _____ (husband or wife) is considered to be the transferor of any Non-Exempt Trust established by this will for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes, and (2) my _____ (husband or wife)'s executor allocates any part of the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption that is available to my _____ (husband or wife) under

Internal Revenue Code Section 2631(a) (or any equivalent successor section) to that Non-Exempt Trust so that the entire trust then has an inclusion ratio of zero for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes, that trust shall then be considered to be an Exempt Trust for purposes of this section of the will.

[(i)] In no event may the trustee exercise any power under this section in a manner that will impair the marital deduction.

Article 5 : Executor

5.01. Nomination of Executor. I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Estelle Gold Taylor,] as executor of this will.

5.02. Successor Executors. If _____ [nominee(s) for initial executor, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Estelle Gold Taylor,] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or to continue to serve, as executor, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as successor executor:

First, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for coexecutors) my brother, Benjamin Edward Gold];

Second, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for individual) Harry J. Taylor, who resides at _____ (address)];

Third, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for corporate executor) Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

5.03. Definition of Executor. The term "executor," as used in this will, refers to each personal representative of my estate who is serving at the pertinent time.

5.04. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any executor nominated in this will.

5.05. Independent Administration. The executor shall _____ [have full or not have] authority to administer my estate under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act.

5.06. Powers of Executor. Subject to any limitations stated elsewhere in this will, the executor shall have, in addition to all of the powers now or hereafter conferred on executors by law, and any powers enumerated elsewhere in this will, the power to perform any of the acts specified in this section:

(a) Take possession or control of all of my estate subject to disposition by this will, and collect all debts due to me or to my estate.

(b) Receive the rents, issues, and profits from all real and personal property in my estate until the estate is settled or delivered over by order of court to my heirs or beneficiaries.

(c) Pay taxes on, and take all steps reasonably necessary for the management, protection, and preservation of, all property in my estate.

(d) Commence and prosecute, either individually or jointly with my heirs or beneficiaries, any action necessary or proper to quiet title to or recover possession of any real or personal property in my estate.

(e) Vote in person, and give proxies to exercise, any voting rights with respect to any stock, any membership in a nonprofit corporation, or any other property in my estate, and waive notice of a meeting, give consent to the holding of a meeting, and authorize, ratify, approve, or confirm any action that could be taken by shareholders, members, or property owners.

(f) Insure the property of my estate against damage or loss, and insure the executor against liability to third persons.

(g) Deposit money belonging to my estate in an insured account in a financial institution in California.

(h) Invest and reinvest any money of my estate not reasonably required for the immediate administration of my estate in any kind of property, real, personal, or mixed, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own accounts; provided, however, that in investing any property of my estate, the executor shall act with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing, including but not limited to the general economic conditions and the anticipated needs of my estate and its beneficiaries, that a prudent person acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of like character and with like aims to accomplish the purposes of my estate as determined from this will.

(i) Retain any assets of my estate for as long as the executor deems to be in the best interest of my estate.

(j) Borrow money on behalf of my estate and pledge, hypothecate, or otherwise encumber property of my estate, real or personal, as security for any sums so borrowed.

(k) In order to satisfy a pecuniary gift or to distribute or divide estate assets into shares or partial shares, the executor may distribute or divide those assets in kind, or divide undivided interests in those assets, or sell all or any part of those assets and distribute or divide the property in cash, in kind, or partly in cash and partly in kind. Property distributed to satisfy a pecuniary gift under this will shall be valued at its fair market value at the time of distribution. This section shall apply only to the extent that it does not conflict with the provisions of Articles 2 and 3 specifying allocation of assets involving the marital deduction gift and of Article 4 specifying allocation of assets involving generation-skipping trusts.

(l) Pay any and all charges reasonably incurred in connection with or incidental to the distribution of any property of my estate, including but not limited to expenses of storage, freight, shipping, delivery, packing, and insurance; and, on any accounting, treat any such expenditures as expenses of the administration of my estate.

(m) To the extent permitted by law, and without regard to the resulting effect on any other provision of this will, on any person interested in my estate, or on the amount of taxes that may be payable, the executor shall have the power to choose a valuation date for tax purposes; choose the methods to pay any death taxes; elect to treat or use any item for state or federal estate or income tax purposes as an income tax deduction or an estate tax deduction; disclaim all or any portion of any interest in property passing to my estate at or after my death; join with my _____ [husband or wife] or my _____ [husband's or wife's] estate in filing joint income or gift tax returns for me or my estate; consent to any gifts made by my _____ [husband or wife] as being made one half by me for gift tax purposes; and determine when an item is to be treated as taken into income or used as a tax deduction.

(n) If any asset of my estate consists of an option right, exercise the option after authorization by order of court, upon a showing that the exercise would be to the advantage of my estate, and use any funds or property in my estate to acquire the property covered by the option.

(o) Hold a security in the name of a nominee or in any other form without disclosure of my estate so that title to the security may pass by delivery.

(p) Exercise any subscription rights owned or received by my estate by reason of owning securities, after authorization by court upon a showing that it is to the advantage of my estate.

(q) Sell, at either public or private sale and with or without notice, and grant options to purchase, any property belonging to my estate [optional], subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(r) Lease any real or personal property belonging to my estate on such terms and conditions as the executor determines to be in the best interest of my estate [optional:, subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(s) Dispose of or abandon tangible personal property, except tangible personal property that is a specific gift, when the cost of collecting, maintaining, and safeguarding the property would exceed its fair market value.

(t) Compromise or settle any claim, action, or proceeding by or for the benefit of, or against, me, my estate, or the executor [optional:, subject only to any confirmation of court that may be required by law].

(u) Employ professional investment counsel to make recommendations with respect to, and otherwise assist in, investing the assets of my estate; and, on any accounting, treat any fees paid to investment counsel as expenses of the administration of my estate.

5.07. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any beneficiary under this will is a minor, or it appears to the executor that any beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the executor, in lieu of making direct payments to the beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the executor); to one or more suitable persons as the executor deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the executor for all purposes.

5.08. Executor's Liability for Own Acts. The executor shall not be liable to my estate or to any person interested in it for any act or omission of the executor, except an act or omission that is committed intentionally, with gross negligence, in bad faith, or with reckless indifference to the interests of persons interested in my estate, or an act or omission from which the executor derives a profit.

Article 6 : Trustee

6.01. Nomination of Trustee. I nominate _____ [name of trustee and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Estelle Gold Taylor,] as trustee of any trust created under this will.

6.02. Successor Trustee. If _____ [nominee for initial trustee, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Estelle Gold Taylor,] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or continue to serve, as trustee, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as trustee:

First, _____ [name and description, e.g., my brother, Benjamin Edward Gold];

Second, _____ [name and description, e.g., Ernest W. Carpenter, who resides at _____ (address)];

Third, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for corporate trustee): Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

6.03. Definition of Trustee. Reference in this instrument to "the trustee" shall be deemed a reference to whoever is serving as trustee or co-trustees, and shall include alternate or successor trustees, unless the context requires otherwise.

6.04. Removal and Replacement of Trustee. Any trustee serving under this instrument may be removed as trustee at any time by court order upon petition by any beneficiary [or co-trustee], for any of the following grounds:

(a) Breach of trust.

(b) Insolvency or other unfitness to administer the trust.

(c) Hostility or lack of cooperation among the co-trustees that impairs the administration of the trust.

(d) Failure or refusal to act.

(e) Other good cause, as determined by the probate court. If a vacancy occurs in the office of trustee, whether by removal of a trustee or otherwise, the probate court shall appoint a new trustee to fill the vacancy. The court may, in its discretion, appoint the original number, or any lesser number of trustees. In selecting a trustee, the court shall give consideration to the wishes of the beneficiaries who are fourteen years of age or older.

6.05. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any trustee nominated in this will.

6.06. Compensation of Trustee. The trustee shall be entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered, payable without court order. [Optional: If a trustee serves for only part of a calendar year, the annual compensation shall be prorated according to the number of days during that year that the trustee was acting as trustee.]

6.07. Procedure for Resignation. Any trustee may resign at any time, without giving a reason for the resignation, by giving written notice, at least _____ [specify; e.g., 30 days] before the time the resignation is to take effect, to any other trustee then acting, to any persons authorized to designate a successor trustee, to all living trust beneficiaries known to the trustee (or, in the case of a minor beneficiary, to the parent or guardian of that beneficiary), and to the successor trustee. A resignation shall be effective upon written acceptance of the trust by the successor trustee.

6.08. General Powers of Trustee. To carry out the purposes of the trusts created under this will, and subject to any limitations stated elsewhere in this will, the trustee shall have all of the following powers, in addition to all of the powers now or hereafter conferred on trustees by law:

(a) Retain property received into the trust at its inception, or later added to the trust, as long as the trustee considers that retention in the best interests of the trust or in furtherance of my goals in creating the trust, as determined from this will, but subject to the standards of the prudent investor rule as set forth in the California Uniform Prudent Investor Act.

(b) Invest and manage the trust assets as a prudent investor would, by considering the purposes, terms, distribution requirements, and other circumstances of the trust. In satisfying this standard, the trustee shall exercise reasonable care, skill, and caution. The trustee's investment and management decisions respecting individual assets and courses of action must be evaluated not in isolation, but in the context of the trust portfolio as a whole and as a part of an overall investment strategy having risk and return objectives reasonably suited to the trust.

(c) Retain or acquire unproductive or underproductive property; provided, however, that as to any assets of the Power of Appointment Trust, my _____ [husband or wife] shall have the right, by delivery of a written instrument to the trustee, to require the trustee to make unproductive or underproductive property productive, or to convert it to productive property, within a reasonable time after receipt of the request.

(d) In the trustee's discretion, invest or reinvest in mutual funds, money market funds, investment trusts, regulated investment companies, market funds, and index funds, and in the shares or securities of any such funds or companies, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own account.

(e) Acquire and maintain as a trust asset a life insurance policy on the life of any person, including the trustee, issued by any company and in any amount that the trustee may deem advisable, and to exercise all rights of ownership granted in that policy; provided, however, that as to any assets of the Power of Appointment Trust, my _____ [husband or wife] shall have the right, by delivery of a written instrument to the trustee, to require the trustee to convert any such policy into productive property within a reasonable time after receipt of the request.

(f) With or without court authorization, sell (for cash or on deferred payments, and with or without security), convey, exchange, partition, and divide trust property; grant options for the sale or exchange of trust property for any purpose, whether the contract is to be performed or the option is to be exercised within or beyond the term of the trust; and lease trust property for any purpose, for terms within or extending beyond the expiration of the trust, regardless of whether the leased property is commercial or residential and regardless of the number of units leased.

(g) Lend or advance the trustee's own funds to my estate or to any other trust created by me, for any purpose properly related to that estate or trust, with interest thereon at the then-prevailing rates, and to receive security for any such loans in any commercially reasonable form. The trustee may, from time to time, purchase or lease assets from, sell or lease assets to, and exchange assets with my estate at fair market values. [Optional: However, the fair market value of any asset sold, purchased, or leased pursuant to this provision must first be determined by an independent appraisal.]

(h) Engage in any transactions with the personal representative of my estate that are in the best interest of any trusts under this will.

(i) Manage, control, improve, and maintain all real and personal trust property.

(j) Subdivide or develop land; make or obtain the vacation of plats and adjust boundaries, or adjust differences in valuation on exchange or partition by giving or receiving consideration; and dedicate land or easements to public use with or without consideration.

(k) Make ordinary or extraordinary repairs or alterations in buildings or other trust property, demolish any improvements, raze existing party walls or buildings, and erect new party walls or buildings, as the trustee deems advisable.

(l) Enter into oil, gas, and other mineral leases, on terms deemed advisable by the trustee; enter into any pooling, unitization, repressurization, community, or other types of agreements relating to the exploration, development, operation, and conservation of mineral properties; drill, mine, and otherwise operate for the development of oil, gas, and other minerals; contract for the installation and operation of absorption and repressuring plants; and install and maintain pipelines. Any such leases or agreements may be for a term within or extending beyond the term of the trust.

(m) In the trustee's discretion, abandon any [unproductive or wasted] trust asset or interest therein.

(n) Employ and discharge agents and employees, including but not limited to attorneys, accountants, investment and other advisers, custodians of assets, property managers, real estate agents and brokers, and appraisers, to advise and assist the trustees in the management of any trusts created under this will, and compensate them from the trust property. [Optional: The agents and employees may be associated or affiliated with the trustee, or may be descendants or other persons related to the trustee or to me, or a company associated with any such persons.] [Optional: The trustee is entitled to rely on the advice of any professional advisers employed under this provision. Reasonable compensation paid to any such agents or employees shall not diminish the compensation to which the trustee is otherwise entitled.]

(o) With respect to securities held in trust, exercise all the rights, powers, and privileges of an owner, including, but not limited to, the power to vote, give proxies, and pay assessments and other sums deemed by the trustee necessary for the protection of the trust property; participate in voting trusts, pooling agreements, foreclosures, reorganizations, consolidations, mergers, and liquidations, and, in connection therewith, deposit securities with and transfer title to any protective or other committee under such terms as the trustee deems advisable; exercise or sell stock subscription or conversion rights; and accept and retain as investments of the trust any securities or other property received through the exercise of any of the foregoing powers.

(p) Hold securities or other trust property in the trustee's own name or in the name of a nominee, without disclosure of the trust, or in unregistered form, so that title may pass by delivery.

(q) Deposit securities in a securities depository that is either licensed or exempt from licensing.

(r) Borrow money for any trust purpose from any person or entity on such terms and conditions as the trustee deems advisable, and obligate the trust for repayment; encumber any trust property by mortgage, deed of trust, pledge, or otherwise, whether for terms within or extending beyond the term of the trust, as the trustee deems advisable, to secure repayment of any such loan; replace, renew, and extend any such loan or encumbrance; and pay loans or other obligations of the trust deemed advisable by the trustee.

(s) In the trustee's discretion, make loans to beneficiaries out of funds of the trust and guarantee the repayment of loans made to beneficiaries by third parties by encumbering trust assets.

(t) Procure and carry, at the expense of the trust, insurance in such forms and in such amounts as the trustee deems advisable to protect the trust property against damage or loss, and to protect the trustee against liability with respect to third persons.

(u) Enforce any obligation owing to the trust, including any obligation secured by a deed of trust, mortgage, or pledge held as trust property, and to purchase any property subject to a security instrument held as trust property at any sale under the instrument.

(v) Extend the time for payment of any note or other obligation held as an asset of, and owing to, the trust, including accrued or future interest, and extend the time for repayment beyond the term of the trust.

(w) Pay or contest any claim against the trust; release or prosecute any claim in favor of the trust; or, in lieu of payment, contest, release, or prosecution, adjust, compromise, or settle any such claim, in whole or in part, with or without consideration.

(x) At trust expense, prosecute or defend actions, claims, or proceedings of whatever kind for the protection of the trust property and of the trustee in the performance of the trustee's duties, and employ and compensate attorneys, advisers, and other agents as the trustee deems advisable.

(y) Accept additions to any trusts created by this will, from any source and at any time; all such additions shall become a part of the trust and shall be held, administered, and distributed in accordance with the terms of the trust. Any additions to the trust shall be made by designating in writing the property to be added. However, the titling of any account, deed, or similar asset in the name of the trustee, as trustee of the trust, shall be deemed to be a transfer to the trust. Any designation by a third party, whether by will, deed, account title designation, or similar transfer, shall also be a transfer to the trust estate. No addition shall become part of the trust estate until it is accepted in writing by the trustee.

6.09. Retention of Family Residence. The trustee shall retain, in any trust or trusts under this will, any of my interest in real property used by me and my _____ [husband or wife] as our principal residence at the time of my death ("the family residence"), and shall deal with the family residence in accordance with the following terms and conditions:

(a) During _____ [his or her] lifetime, my _____ [husband or wife] shall have the right to occupy the family residence (or any substitute residence or residential property purchased as provided in this section of the will) free of any rent.

(b) The trustee shall pay as much of the mortgage or note payments, property taxes, assessments, insurance, maintenance, and ordinary repairs on the family residence (or on any substitute residence or residential property purchased as provided in this section of the will) as corresponds to the trust's proportionate interest in the same. The trustee shall make those payments out of income or principal of the trust or trusts in accordance with the principles applicable to charging of payments under California law, but in no event shall payment be made in a manner that disqualifies any part of any trust, that would otherwise so qualify, for the federal estate tax marital deduction.

(c) My _____ [husband or wife] shall, at _____ [his or her] option, have the right to advise the trustee in writing that _____ [he or she] no longer wishes to occupy the family residence and to direct the trustee to sell it, or any interest therein. In deciding on the terms and conditions relating to any sale, the trustee shall take into account all relevant factors, including, but not limited to, my intent that no sale be made in a "forced sale" situation (other than at my _____ [husband's or wife's] direction) or at a time when, because of high mortgage rates or otherwise, the residential real estate market is depressed. In selling the family residence, the trustee may dispose of it on such terms as the trustee deems desirable, including an installment sale or any other desirable method of disposing of the family residence, provided that if the sale is for consideration other than cash, the purchaser's obligation shall be secured by a first deed of trust. In the event of a sale, my _____ [husband or wife] may direct the trustee in writing to apply the proceeds of the sale to the purchase of a substitute residence or residential property, of comparable or lesser value, to be selected by my _____ [husband or wife]; or to reinvest the proceeds in any manner that _____ [he or she] may direct, provided that any such investments satisfy normal fiduciary standards of prudence and safety, and to use the income from reinvestment to pay the rental or lease payments on another residence or residential property, to be selected by my _____ [husband or wife]. Any net trust accounting income from any such investments, in excess of the trust share of the rental costs and any other expenses of trust administration, shall be added to the other trust income and distributed in accordance with the relevant provisions of the trust or trusts as set forth in Article _____ of this will.

[Optional: (d) If my _____ (husband or wife) does not direct the trustee to sell the family residence, _____ (he or she) shall have the right to direct the trustee in writing to lease it, or any interest in it. In the event of lease, the trustee shall continue to pay the expenses of maintaining the family residence as specified above, subject to the lease terms, and shall use the entire net income from the lease to pay the rental or lease payments on another residence or residential property, to be selected and occupied by my _____ (husband or wife). Any net trust accounting income from any lease of the family residence, in excess of the trust share of the cost of the rental or lease payments on another residence or residential property, shall be added to the other trust income and distributed in accordance with the relevant provisions of the trust or trusts, as set forth in Article _____ of this will.]

(e) Upon the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trust interest in either the family residence, any proceeds remaining from the sale of the family residence, or any substitute residence or residential property purchased by the trustee with any proceeds of sale of the family residence, shall be distributed in accordance with the applicable provisions of the trust or trusts in which the interest or interests are held, as set forth in Article 4 of this will.

6.10. Power to Combine Trust Assets. Each trust created under this will shall constitute a separate trust and be administered and accounted for accordingly; however, the assets of all of the trusts may be combined and held for the trust beneficiaries without physical division into separate trusts until time of distribution.

6.11. Early Termination of Trusts. The trustee shall have the power, in the trustee's discretion, to petition the court to terminate any trust created under this will whenever the fair market value of the trust falls below _____ [specify amount, e.g., $25,000] or becomes so small in relation to the costs of administration as to make continuing administration uneconomical or contrary to the primary purposes of the trust. Upon termination, the trustee shall distribute the principal and any accrued or undistributed net income to the income beneficiaries in proportion to their shares of the income. If no fixed amount of income is payable to specific beneficiaries, the trustee shall distribute the principal and any accrued or undistributed net income in equal shares to those beneficiaries who would then be entitled to income payments from the trust. [Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, and except as otherwise provided in this will, the trustee may not terminate a trust before the trust term expires unless court authorization is first obtained.]

6.12. Power to Delay Distributions. Following my death, the trustee shall have the power, in the trustee's discretion, to determine the reasonable administrative period necessary or appropriate to pay my debts, expenses, taxes, and other liabilities, before dividing or distributing the trust assets as provided herein, and to delay the division or distribution during that period. During that administrative period, the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, may accumulate the trust income, or distribute the income currently, or partially accumulate and partially distribute the income, as the trustee determines, but any income accumulated shall be distributable to the beneficiary or beneficiaries next entitled to distribution or allocation of the same upon conclusion of the administrative period. Nothing contained herein, however, shall delay the right of my spouse to receive income from a trust intended to qualify for the estate tax marital deduction beyond the period reasonably required for payment of or provision for the foregoing liabilities, or any other period that may be permitted under the applicable federal law and regulations relating to the allowance of the marital deduction.

6.13. Division or Distribution in Cash or in Kind. In order to satisfy a pecuniary gift or to distribute or divide trust assets into shares or partial shares, the trustee may distribute or divide those assets in kind, or divide undivided interests in those assets, or sell all or any part of those assets and distribute or divide the property in cash, in kind, or partly in cash and partly in kind. Property distributed to satisfy a pecuniary gift under this will shall be valued at its fair market value at the time of distribution. This section shall apply only to the extent that it does not conflict with the provisions of Articles 2 and 3 specifying allocation of assets involving the marital deduction gift and of Article 4 specifying allocation of assets involving generation-skipping trusts.

6.14. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any trust beneficiary is a minor, or it appears to the trustee that any trust beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the trustee, in lieu of making direct payments to the trust beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the trustee); to one or more suitable persons as the trustee deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the trustee for all purposes.

6.15. Grant of Specific Powers Not to Limit Exercise of General Powers. The enumeration of specific powers under this will shall not limit the trustee from exercising any other power with respect to any trusts created by this will that may be necessary or appropriate for the trustee to have and exercise in order to carry out the purposes of the trusts or to permit the trustee to fulfill the trustee's responsibilities and duties with respect to the trust.

6.16. Limitation on Powers That Would Imperil Marital Deduction. Notwithstanding any other provision of this will, the trustee shall exercise power and discretion over any trust or trust share designed to qualify for the federal estate tax marital deduction only in a manner consistent with all statutory and regulatory requirements for the full allowance of the marital deduction for that trust or share.

6.17. Power to Disclaim or Release Powers. Any trustee may disclaim, release, or restrict the scope of any power or discretion that the trustee may hold in connection with any trust created under this will, whether the power or discretion is expressly granted in this will or is implied by law. The trustee shall disclaim a power in the manner required by applicable federal or California law. The trustee shall release or restrict any power or discretion by giving written notice to the beneficiary or beneficiaries then entitled to current distribution of income from the trust, specifying the power or discretion to be released or restricted, the nature of the restriction, and, if appropriate, the person or persons to whom the released or restricted power shall pass and be exercisable. If a power is disclaimed, the power shall be available to and exercisable by the successor trustee.

6.18. Written Notice to Trustee. Until the trustee receives written notice of any death or other event upon which the right to payments from any trust may depend, the trustee shall incur no liability for disbursements made in good faith to persons whose interests may have been affected by that event.

6.19. Duty to Account. The trustee shall render accounts at least annually, at the termination of a trust, and upon a change of trustees, to the persons and in the manner required by law.

Article 7 : Guardian

7.01. Nomination of Guardian. If a guardian of the person, estate, or person and estate is necessary for any minor child of mine, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my sister, Estelle Gold Taylor, or Ernest W. Carpenter, who resides at _____ (address)], as that guardian. If at any time _____ [name, e.g., my sister, Estelle Gold Taylor, or Ernest W. Carpenter] is unable or unwilling to serve or continue to serve as guardian, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my brother, Benjamin Edward Gold,] as guardian.

7.02. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any guardian of the estate nominated in this will.

Article 8 : Concluding Provisions

8.01. Definition of Death Taxes. The term "death taxes," as used in this will, shall mean all inheritance, estate, succession, and other similar taxes that are payable by any person on account of that person's interest in my estate or by reason of my death, including penalties and interest, but excluding the following:

(a) Any additional tax that may be assessed under Internal Revenue Code Section 2032A.

(b) Any federal or state tax imposed on a generation-skipping transfer, as that term is defined in the federal tax laws [, unless the applicable tax statutes provide that the generation-skipping transfer tax on that transfer is payable directly out of the assets of my gross estate].

8.02. Payment of Death Taxes. The executor shall pay all death taxes, whether or not attributable to property inventoried in my probate estate, out of my residuary estate, death taxes, whether or not attributable to property inventoried in my probate estate, out of my residuary estate, and no death taxes shall be prorated or apportioned among the persons interested in that property.

PRACTICE TIP:

The allocation of taxes shown in this form is but one of many possible allocation schemes. In each case the drafter should carefully consider the nature of the client's assets, including whether those assets will pass under the will or otherwise, and the value of assets passing under the will as specific, rather than residuary, gifts. Only when these factors are considered can the appropriate tax allocation formula be selected. Other possible allocation clauses appear in CALIFORNIA WILLS & TRUSTS FORMS, Div. IV, Individual Will Provisions, Pt. 90, Concluding Provisions, Form 90.30 (Alts. 90.30-1-90.30-7); for more detailed discussion of tax allocation, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 23, Provisions for Payment of Taxes, Expenses, and Debt (Matthew Bender). Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

8.03. Abatement of Gifts. If my estate is insufficient to satisfy in full all of the gifts provided for in this will, I direct that gifts shall abate in the following order: first general gifts, then specific gifts, then demonstrative gifts; provided, however, that the gifts to my _____ [husband or wife] shall not abate until all other gifts have abated [, and the gifts to my children shall not abate until gifts to all persons and entities other than my _____ (husband or wife) have abated]. All gifts of the same class shall abate proportionally.

8.04. Simultaneous Death. If any beneficiary under this will and I die simultaneously, or if it cannot be established by clear and convincing evidence whether that beneficiary or I died first, I shall be deemed to have survived that beneficiary, and this will shall be construed accordingly.

8.05. Intentional Omission of Heirs Not Specifically Provided For in Will. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will, I have intentionally and with full knowledge omitted to provide for my heirs, regardless of whether or not I am aware of their existence and identities at the time this will is executed.

8.06. No-Contest Clause. If any person, directly or indirectly, contests the validity of this will in whole or in part, or opposes, objects to, or seeks to invalidate any of its provisions, or seeks to succeed to any part of my estate otherwise than in the manner specified in this will, any gift or other interest given to that person under this will shall be revoked and shall be disposed of as if he or she had predeceased me [optional: without issue].

8.07. Perpetuities Savings Clause. Notwithstanding any other provision of this will, every trust created by this will[, or by the exercise of any power of appointment created by this will,] shall terminate no later than 21 years after the death of _____ [designate measuring life or lives, e.g., the last survivor of my spouse and my issue] who are alive at the time of my death. If a trust is terminated under this section of the will, the trustee shall distribute all of the principal and undistributed income of the trust to the income beneficiaries of the trust in the proportion in which they are entitled (or eligible, in the case of discretionary payments) to receive income immediately before the termination. If that proportion is not fixed by the terms of this will, the trustee shall distribute all of the trust property to the persons then entitled or eligible to receive income from the trust _____ [specify pattern of distribution, e.g., outright in a manner that, in the trustee's opinion, will give effect to my intent in creating the trust, the trustee's decision to be final and incontestable by anyone or as a class, in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether all of such persons are members of the same generation].

8.08. Definition of Incapacity. For purposes of this will, a person shall be deemed "incapacitated" if and for so long as a court of competent jurisdiction has made a finding to that effect, or a guardian or conservator of that person's estate or person duly appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction is serving, or upon certification by two physicians licensed to practice under the laws of the state where the person is domiciled at the time of the certification that the person is unable properly to care for himself or herself or for his or her property. The latter certification shall be made by each physician in a written declaration under penalty of perjury.

8.09. Definition of Education. As used in this will, the term "education" refers to the following:

- (a) Education at public or private elementary, junior high, middle, or high schools, including boarding schools;
- (b) Undergraduate, graduate, and postgraduate study in any field, whether or not of a professional character, in colleges, universities, or other institutions of higher learning;
- (c) Specialized formal or informal training in music, the stage, the handicrafts, or the arts, whether by private instruction or otherwise; and
- (d) Formal or informal vocational or technical training, whether through programs or institutions devoted solely to vocational or technical training, or otherwise.

8.10. Captions. The captions appearing in this will are for convenience of reference only, and shall be disregarded in determining the meaning and effect of the provisions of this will.

8.11. Severability Clause. If any provision of this will is invalid, that provision shall be disregarded, and the remainder of this will shall be construed as if the invalid provision had not been included.

8.12. California Law to Apply. All questions concerning the validity and interpretation of this will, including any trusts created by this will, shall be governed by the laws of the State of California in effect at the time this will is executed.

8.13. Gifts to "Heirs." For any gift to my heirs that is made outright in this instrument, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate at the time for distribution, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death. For any assets of any trust estate created by this will to be distributed to my heirs, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate immediately following the termination of the trust of each share, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death.

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
 CHAPTER 61 WILL DRAFTING AND COMPLETE WILL FORMS
 PART IV. FORMS
 B. Wills for Married Persons

23-61 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 61.214

AUTHOR: Reviewed by Albert G. Handelman

§ 61.214 Will for Married Person; Marital Deduction Formula Devise to QTIP Trust; Residue to Bypass Trust; Disclaimer Trust

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a complete will designed for use by a testator who is married, has children, and wishes to leave his or her entire estate in trust in such a way that the surviving spouse will have optimum control over the trust assets during his or her lifetime. This form further assumes wishes to take advantage of the unlimited marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056] and the unified credits available in each estate [see I.R.C. §§ 2010 (estate tax), 2505 (gift tax)] to completely avoid estate tax on the death of the first spouse and to reduce (or totally eliminate) estate taxes on the death of the second spouse. Unlike the form in § 61.213[2], however, this form assumes that the testator wishes to retain control over the disposition of the trust assets on the death of the surviving spouse and, to that end, has chosen to create a qualified terminal interest property (QTIP) trust.

This will assumes that the combined estates of the testator and the testator's spouse will be too large at the time of the second spouse's death to be passed free of estate tax to the testator's children under the unified credit available in the second spouse's estate. If it is not reasonably foreseeable that the combined estates will exceed the amount of the available unified credit, the kind of tax planning included in this will probably is not warranted and the attorney should select one of the simpler wills included in this chapter.

This will creates three trusts. The first, called the "QTIP Trust" [see Section 4.01 of form], is designed to qualify for the unlimited marital deduction as a "qualified terminable interest property" trust [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(7) and discussion in Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.13[4]]. The second, called the "Bypass Trust" [see Section 4.02 of form], is designed to take advantage of the unified credit available in the testator's estate [see I.R.C. §§ 2010 (estate tax), 2505 (gift tax) and discussion in § 60.13[5][b]] and, on the death of the surviving spouse, to "bypass" that estate for estate tax purposes [see discussion in § 61.212[1][f]]. The third trust, called the "Disclaimer Trust" [see Section 4.04 of form], is designed to hold any property that the surviving spouse elects to disclaim.

The surviving spouse is given lifetime interests in all three of the trusts. On the surviving spouse's death, the Bypass Trust and the Disclaimer Trust will be divided into separate shares for each of the testator's children. Each child will receive a share on the spouse's death or on the date the child reaches a specified age, whichever occurs later. Shares are distributed outright to the issue of any deceased children. On the surviving spouse's death, the assets of the QTIP Trust will be distributed to the Bypass Trust, to be held, administered, and distributed according to its terms.

[b] Standard Provisions

This will contains numerous provisions that are also found in other wills in this chapter. These are provisions relating to the executor's bond [see Section 5.04 of form], the executor's authority to act under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act [see Section 5.05 of form], the executor's powers [see Section 5.06 of form], payments to incapacitated persons [see Section 5.08 of form], the executor's liability [see Section 5.09 of form], disinheritance of the testator's heirs [see Section 8.06 of form], and contest of the will [see Section 8.07 of form]. For discussion of these provisions, see § 61.200[1].

[c] Marital Deduction Gift

Section 2.05 of this will makes a general pecuniary devise that is to be held in trust for the benefit of the surviving spouse during the surviving spouse's lifetime [see Section 4.01 of form]. This devise, which is referred to as the "marital deduction gift," is a pecuniary formula devise that is stated to be the minimum amount necessary to eliminate (or reduce to the maximum extent possible) any federal estate tax at the testator's death, taking into account the net value of all other property that passes or has passed to the spouse under the will or otherwise and that qualifies for the federal estate tax marital deduction and all allowable federal estate tax credits and deductions (other than the marital deduction).

This formula clause requires that the testator's estate be divided into "marital" and "nonmarital" shares [see discussion in § 61.212[1][d]] in a way that will maximize the tax-saving potential of the unlimited marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056 and discussion in § 61.212[1][c]] and the "applicable credit amount" [see I.R.C. § 2010(c) (table of graduated amounts) and discussion in § 60.13[4][b]] available in the testator's estate. The formula prescribes the dollar amount of the property that will constitute the "marital" share of the estate.

Pecuniary formulas are the most popular marital deduction formulas. They avoid the administrative headaches that result when the marital and nonmarital shares receive fractional interests in the same assets and offer flexibility in funding, because the executor or trustee can be given discretion to decide which assets to transfer to the marital and nonmarital shares to satisfy the pecuniary and residuary devises [see Section 3.03 of form]. However, the actual allocation of assets to the two shares need not be made until after the first spouse's death. For further discussion of marital deduction devises and formula clauses, see § 61.212[1][c], [d], [e]. For detailed discussion of the marital deduction and its use in estate planning, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions; see also California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 112, The Marital Deduction and Marital Deduction Trusts (Matthew Bender).

[d] QTIP Trust

This will requires that the marital deduction gift [see Section 2.05 of form] be held in the QTIP Trust [see Section 4.01 of form]. This trust will qualify for the unlimited marital deduction as a "qualified terminable interest property trust" under I.R.C. § 2056(b)(7). For general discussion of the requirements of this type of trust, see §§ 71.13[4], 71.230[1].

The QTIP trust is probably the most popular type of marital deduction trust among estate planners. It gives the surviving spouse a high degree of enjoyment and use of the trust property, while permitting the testator to determine in advance who will receive the property on the surviving spouse's death. This can be particularly desirable if one or both of the spouses have children by previous marriages and wish to ensure that those children will receive the trust property after the death of the surviving spouse. In addition, because the executor may elect to qualify all or only part of the QTIP property for the marital deduction [see Treas. Reg. § 20.1056(b)-7(b)(2) (rules governing partial QTIP elections)], use of a QTIP trust provides a greater degree of flexibility with respect to postmortem planning than does a lifetime income/power of appointment trust. This flexibility is the reason for the popularity of QTIP trusts among estate planners even in situations that do not involve any desire on the part of the testator to limit the surviving spouse's rights to dispose of the trust property after the surviving spouse's death.

A QTIP trust will not qualify for the marital deduction unless the executor makes an election to treat the trust as a QTIP trust [I.R.C. § 2056(b)(7)(B)(v)]. An inadvertent failure to make the QTIP election may disqualify the entire trust from the marital deduction. Once the election is made, it is irrevocable [I.R.C. § 2056(b)(7)(B)(v)]. As noted in the preceding paragraph, a QTIP election may be made with respect to all or any part of property that meets the requirements for qualified terminable interest property [Treas. Reg. § 20.2056(b)-7(b)(2)(i)].

Section 5.07 states that the testator expects the executor to make a full election to qualify all of the property of the QTIP trust for the marital deduction as a qualified terminal interest property trust. However, a full election is not required if there is a compelling reason not to make any election or to make only a partial election. A compelling reason would exist, for example, if the testator's spouse were to die shortly after the testator and making the full election would be likely to increase the sum of the death taxes imposed on the estates of both the testator and the testator's spouse. Section 4.01(a) provides that if a partial QTIP election is made, the QTIP trust will be divided into two separate trusts pursuant to the terms of the election. Section 5.07 also provides that if the executor elects to qualify any property allocated to the QTIP Trust for the federal estate tax marital deduction, the executor may elect, under any applicable provision of the Internal Revenue Code then in effect, to have all or any part of that estate tax election disregarded for purposes of the federal generation-skipping transfer tax [for discussion of the reverse QTIP election, see [i], below].

[e] Bypass Trust

Section 3.01 of this will gives the residue of the testator's estate to the bypass trust [see Section 4.02 of form] This trust gives the testator's surviving spouse the lifetime right to receive all of the net income from the trust [see Section 4.02(a) of form]. On the surviving spouse's death, the bypass trust will be divided into separate shares for each of the testator's children who either survive or leave issue who survive [see Section 4.02(b) of form].

Bypass trusts play an important part in most estate plans that seek to give the surviving spouse optimum lifetime use of the testator's estate while at the same time avoiding estate tax on the testator's death and reducing (if not completely eliminating) estate tax on the death of the surviving spouse. For a general discussion of bypass trusts, see § 61.212[1][f].

[f] Allocation of Assets

Section 3.03 gives the executor discretion to allocate assets in the testator's estate to the marital and bypass gifts in cash or in kind, or partly in each, on a pro rata or non pro rata basis, and in undivided interests or not. This gives the executor maximum flexibility to allocate assets to the respective gifts in the manner that seems most favorable at the time of the allocation.

[g] Disclaimer Trust

Section 4.04 of this will provides that any property that the testator's surviving spouse elects to disclaim will pass to the trustee and be held in the disclaimer trust. However, the disclaimer trust will actually come into being only if the surviving spouse makes a qualified disclaimer of property [see I.R.C. § 2518(b)]. The distributive provisions of the disclaimer trust provide that the surviving spouse will receive all of the net income of the trust for life [see Section

4.04(a) of form]. The trustee has discretion to invade trust principal for the surviving spouse's benefit pursuant to an "ascertainable standard" [see Section 4.04(a) of form; see also I.R.C. § 2041(b)(1)(A) and discussion in Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.13[1][g]]. On the surviving spouse's death, the trustee will divide the assets of the trust into separate shares according to the same directions provided for the division of the assets of the bypass trust on the surviving spouse's death [see Section 4.04(b) of form].

Because the interests of the surviving spouse in the disclaimer trust have been appropriately limited in this form, the assets of the disclaimer trust will not be included in the surviving spouse's estate for estate tax purposes when the surviving spouse dies. For a general discussion of disclaimer trusts, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions, § 71.16.

[h] Choice of Trustee

Section 6.01 of this will nominates the trustee of the trusts created under the will. Any person or entity chosen by the testator may serve as the trustee. The testator's surviving spouse may serve as trustee if he or she has the requisite temperament, experience, and skill to perform the duties required of a trustee. None of the rights or powers given to the surviving spouse in this form will cause the trust assets to be included in the surviving spouse's estate merely because the surviving spouse serves as trustee.

[i] Administration of Generation-Skipping Trusts

Section 4.07 of this will governs the administration of any trust created by the will in which there is property that is or may become subject to the federal generation-skipping transfer tax [see I.R.C. §§ 2601-2664]. The GST tax is repealed effective for generation-skipping transfers after 2009 [I.R.C. § 2664]. Until then, it remains in effect. The section is designed to give the executor postmortem flexibility to eliminate or minimize any generation-skipping transfer tax.

Section 5.07 of this will provides, among other things, that the executor may elect to have any QTIP election [see discussion in [d], above] disregarded for purposes of the generation-skipping transfer tax. The power to disregard a QTIP election for purposes of the generation-skipping transfer tax is referred to as a "reverse QTIP election" and can be a useful tool in minimizing the generation-skipping transfer tax.

An election to qualify the assets of a QTIP trust for the unlimited marital deduction as qualified terminable interest property can result in significant estate tax savings at the time of the testator's death. However, the same election could cause the surviving spouse to be treated as the transferor of the assets of the QTIP trust for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes. This is because the generation-skipping transfer tax law defines the term "transferor" to mean the person in whose estate property subject to the transfer is also subject to estate tax [see I.R.C. § 2652(a)(1)(A); Treas. Reg. § 26.2652-1(a)]. Since QTIP property is subject to estate tax in the estate of the surviving spouse [I.R.C. § 2044(b)(1)(A)], the surviving spouse could be deemed the transferor of the QTIP property for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes. In some cases, this could cause the partial or complete loss of the testator's generation-skipping transfer tax exemption [see I.R.C. § 2631].

However, the generation-skipping transfer tax law specifically permits the executor to avoid this result by making a "reverse QTIP" election [see I.R.C. § 2652(a)(3)]. Although the estate tax law permits partial QTIP elections, a reverse QTIP election can be made only for all of the property in a given QTIP trust [I.R.C. § 2652(a)(3); Treas. Reg. § 26.2652-2(a)]. However, the generation-skipping transfer tax law permits trusts to be divided for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes. A trust may be divided for this purpose if division is required by the trust instrument [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(b)(1)(i)] or if either local law or the governing instrument gives the trustee discretion to divide it [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(b)(1)(ii)]. When a trust is divided pursuant to the trustee's discretionary authority, the terms of each of the new trusts must provide for the same succession of interests and beneficiaries as are provided in the original trust, and the division must occur (or a reformation proceeding, if required, must be commenced) before the date prescribed for filing the federal estate tax return (including any extensions granted) for the estate of the transferor [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(b)(1)(ii)]. The new trusts must be funded on a fractional basis unless the trust instrument specifically requires funding on a pecuniary basis [Treas. Reg. § 26.2654-1(b)(1)(ii)(C)]. After the new trusts are created, the reverse QTIP election can be made for only one of the trusts. Section 4.07 of this will gives the executor broad discretion to divide any trust created by the will in such a way as to minimize the application of the generation-skipping transfer tax.

For further discussion of will provisions governing the administration of the generation-skipping transfer tax, see § 61.201[1][e]. For detailed coverage of the generation-skipping transfer tax and generation-skipping transfer tax planning, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 113, Generation-Skipping Transfers and Trust Strategies (Matthew Bender).

[If gift is conditioned on survival, add appropriate alternative disposition, e.g., If she does not survive me (for that period), this gift shall _____ (e.g., lapse and become part of the residue of my estate or go to my son, James David Silver).]*

2.05. Marital Deduction Gift. If my _____ [wife or husband] survives me [if desired, specify survivorship period, e.g., for six months], I give a pecuniary gift (referred to as the "marital deduction gift"), in the amount determined in this section, to the trustee, in trust, to be held, administered, and distributed according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Qualified Terminable Interest Property (QTIP) Trust. The marital deduction gift shall consist of assets having a value equal to the minimum amount necessary to eliminate (or reduce to the maximum extent possible) any federal estate tax at my death, taking into account the following:

(a) The net value of all other property that passes or has passed to my _____ [wife or husband] under this will or otherwise and that qualifies for the federal estate tax marital deduction. For purposes of this subsection of the will, any qualified disclaimer made by my _____ [wife or husband] shall be disregarded, and any property that will qualify as qualified terminable interest property under Internal Revenue Code Section 2056(b)(7) if my executor makes the requisite election shall be considered to be qualified terminable interest property, regardless of whether the election is made;

(b) All federal estate tax deductions and exclusions actually allowed other than the marital deduction;

(c) The applicable exclusion amount, as specified in Internal Revenue Code Section 2010, available to my estate;

(d) The credit for state death taxes available to my estate, to the extent that the use of that credit does not result in or increase any death tax payable to any state; and

(e) Any other allowable credits available to my estate (except the credit for tax on prior transfers from a "transferor," as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 2013, who dies within two years after the date of my death), but only to the extent that those credits do not disqualify this gift from receiving the marital deduction.

The marital deduction gift shall be held, administered, and distributed according to the terms of the Qualified Terminable Interest Property (QTIP) Trust as set forth in Section 4.01.

If my _____ [wife or husband] does not survive me [if desired, specify survivorship period, e.g., for six months], this gift shall lapse and become part of the residue of my estate.

[Select one of the following alternatives:]

2.06. Interest on Pecuniary Gifts. [Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will,] [n]o interest shall accrue on all [general] pecuniary gifts made in this will.

[or]

2.06. Interest on Pecuniary Gifts. [Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will,] [I]nterest at the rate _____ [e.g., of 10 percent per annum or specified in California Probate Code Section 12001, or any successor to that section,] shall accrue on all [general] pecuniary gifts made in this will from and after _____ [e.g., the date of my death or the first anniversary of my death] and until those gifts are paid in full. All interest shall be paid at the time the gift is distributed.

Article 3 : Residuary Provisions

3.01. Disposition of Residue. If my _____ [wife or husband] survives me _____ [if desired, add survivorship period not to exceed six months, e.g., for six months], I give the residue of my estate (referred to as the "bypass gift") to the trustee, in trust, to be held, administered, and distributed according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Bypass Trust.

3.02. Alternate Disposition of Residue. If my _____ [husband or wife] does not survive me [restate any survivorship period imposed in primary residuary devise, not to exceed six months, e.g., for six months], I give the _____ [residue of my estate or portion of the residue of my estate not taken] as follows:

(a) If any of my children survive me, the residue of my estate shall be divided into as many shares of equal market value as are necessary to create one share for each of my children who survive me and one share for the issue who survive me of each of my children who predecease me.

(b) Each share created for a surviving child shall be distributed outright to that child if that child has reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years at the time of my death. If the child has not reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years at the time of my death, the share created for the child shall be held, administered, and distributed by the trustee in a separate trust according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Separate Share Trust.

(c) If any of my children survive me, each share created for the issue of a deceased child shall be distributed outright to those issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation].

(d) If none of my children survive me, but I leave issue surviving, I give the residue of my estate outright to those issue, who are to take that property _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation].

(e) If none of my issue survive me, I give the residue of my estate to _____ [e.g., my heirs or the Regents of the University of California].

3.03. Allocation and Valuation of Assets. In allocating assets between the marital deduction gift and the bypass gift, the executor shall allocate the assets in my estate that qualify for the marital deduction between the marital deduction gift and the bypass gift in cash or in kind, or partly in each, on a pro rata or non pro rata basis, and in undivided interests or not; subject, however, to the following:

(a) Only assets that qualify for the marital deduction shall be allocated to the marital deduction gift.

(b) Assets allocated in kind shall be _____ [to use date of distribution values: valued for purposes of allocation on the date or dates of distribution or, to use valuation for estate tax purposes under "minimum worth" test: deemed to satisfy the marital deduction amount on the basis of their values as finally determined for federal estate tax purposes, but in no event shall the date of distribution values be less than the amount of the marital deduction or, to use valuation for estate tax purposes under "fair representation" test: deemed to satisfy the marital deduction amount on the basis of their values as finally determined for federal estate tax purposes; provided, however, that the executor shall act impartially, consistent with equitable principles requiring impartiality among beneficiaries, in allocating assets in satisfaction of the marital deduction gift, so that any distribution of assets in satisfaction of the marital deduction gift shall be made of assets, including cash, fairly representative of appreciation or depreciation in the value of all property thus available for distribution].

(c) The executor shall not allocate assets that qualify for the foreign death tax credit to the marital deduction gift unless all other assets or interests available for allocation have been so allocated.

[Optional: (d) Any incidents of ownership to a policy of insurance on the life of a person other than me shall be allocated to the bypass gift.]

3.04. Intention That Marital Deduction Gift Qualify for Marital Deduction. I intend that the marital deduction gift qualify for the federal estate tax marital deduction, and this instrument shall be construed accordingly. No fiduciary under this will shall take any action or exercise any power that may impair the federal estate tax marital deduction.

3.05. Disclaimer of Property by My Spouse. Any property or portion of property that is disclaimed by my _____ [wife or husband] shall pass to the trustee, in trust, to be held, administered, and distributed according to the terms set forth in Article 4 applicable to the Disclaimer Trust. [However, if my _____ (wife or husband) also disclaims an interest in all or any portion of the Disclaimer Trust, that disclaimed interest shall be administered and distributed as if my _____ (wife or husband) predeceased me.]

Article 4 : Trust Distributions

4.01. QTIP Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the QTIP Trust as follows:

(a) The trustee shall administer the trust in a manner that will not invalidate the election to have the trust qualify for the federal estate tax marital deduction under Internal Revenue Code § 2056(b)(7) (or any equivalent successor section), or disqualify the property in which my _____ [husband or wife] has a qualifying income interest for life. Any provisions of this trust that could be deemed to invalidate the qualification under Internal Revenue Code § 2056(b)(7) shall be disregarded.

(b) If an election is made under Internal Revenue Code Section 2056(b)(7) (or any equivalent successor section) to qualify some but not all of the property allocated to the QTIP Trust for the federal estate tax marital deduction, the QTIP Trust shall be divided into two separate trusts pursuant to the terms of the election. The division shall be based on the fair market value of the trust assets at the time of the division. One of the trusts shall contain the share of the trust assets for which the election has been made and shall be designated as the Qualifying QTIP Trust. The other trust shall contain the share of the trust assets for which the election has not been made and shall be designated the Nonqualifying QTIP Trust. The Nonqualifying QTIP Trust shall be subject to all of the rights, interests, powers, and other terms prescribed for the Qualifying QTIP Trust. If a partial election is made and the trust is divided into two separate trusts, the terms "trust," "marital deduction trust," and "QTIP Trust," as used in this section and elsewhere in this will, shall be construed in a manner consistent with the provisions of this subsection of the will.

[Optional: (c) The executor shall notify the trustee in writing if the executor intends to make an election under Internal Revenue Code Section 2056(b)(7) (hereafter referred to as "the estate tax election") and also intends to make an election under Internal Revenue Code Section 2652(a)(3) (or any equivalent successor section) to have the estate tax election disregarded for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes with respect to some but not all of the property in the QTIP Trust. Upon receipt of written notification, the trustee shall divide the QTIP Trust into two separate trusts, to be known as the Exempt QTIP Trust and the Non-Exempt QTIP Trust, in accordance with _____ (section of will concerning administration of generation-skipping trusts, e.g., Section 4.07) of this will concerning the administration of generation-skipping trusts. Property allocated to the Exempt QTIP Trust must be fairly representative of the appreciation or depreciation of all QTIP Trust property. The executor shall then actually make the election under Internal Revenue Code Section 2652(a)(3) with respect to the Exempt QTIP Trust and not the Non-Exempt QTIP Trust. If a partial estate tax election is to be made, then this subsection, if applicable at all, shall apply only with respect to the Qualifying QTIP Trust. The trustee shall not be liable for relying on the written instructions of the executor when acting in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed as being inconsistent with _____ (e.g., Section 4.07) of this will concerning the administration of generation-skipping trusts, which shall apply to the QTIP trust without regard to the application of the remainder of this subsection.]

(d) The trustee shall pay to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife], so long as my _____ [husband or wife] lives, the entire net income of the trust, in monthly or other convenient installments agreed upon by my _____ [husband or wife] and the trustee, but not less often than annually. [Optional: In determining the net income of the trust distributable to my _____ (husband or wife), the trustee shall include all income that must be considered as income in order for the trust to qualify for the marital deduction under the federal estate tax law applicable to my estate, and shall make no deductions from gross income that would prevent the trust from qualifying for that marital deduction, notwithstanding any contrary provisions of this will or any applicable provisions of state law. Any grant of rights, powers, discretion, and authority to the trustee in any provision of this will or any statute relating thereto shall not be effective if and to the extent that the provision or statute, if effective, would disqualify, for federal estate tax purposes, the marital deduction trust held under this section of the will. It is my intention that my _____ (husband or wife), as the beneficiary of a marital deduction trust, shall have substantially that degree of beneficial enjoyment of the trust during _____ (his or her) lifetime that the principles of the law of trusts accord to a person who is unqualifiedly designated as the life beneficiary of a trust, and the trustee shall not exercise the trustee's discretion in a manner that is not in accord with this expressed intention. It is also my intention that the trust produce for my _____ (husband or wife) during _____ (his or her) lifetime the income, or that my _____ (husband or wife) shall have the benefit of the trust property, as is consistent with the value of the trust property and with its preservation.]

(e) The trustee shall distribute to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife], for life, as much of the principal of the trust as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary, when added to the income payments from this trust, for _____ [his or her] health, education, support, and maintenance [or specify broader standard, e.g., comfort, welfare, and happiness]. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone.

(f) On the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, may pay the [taxes,] debts[,] and expenses arising on my _____ [husband's or wife's] death, unless the trustee determines that other adequate provisions have been made for payment of these expenses. Any payments made under this section _____ [may be made out of income or principal (or partly from each) of the QTIP Trust or shall be made first out of the income or principal of the QTIP Trust, and then out of the income or principal of the Bypass Trust to the extent that the QTIP Trust is insufficient for that purpose.

(g) Upon my _____ [husband's or wife's] death, the net income of the trust then accrued but uncollected and all net income remaining in the hands of the trustee shall be distributed to my _____ [husband's or wife's] estate. The trust principal shall be dealt with as set forth below in this section.

(h) The trustee shall determine from the personal representative of my _____ [husband's or wife's] estate the amount of the federal estate tax allocable to the property of the trust by reason of Internal Revenue Code Section 2207A and shall set aside a portion of the trust principal for the purpose of paying that tax upon written demand of the personal representative.

(i) On the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall distribute the balance of the principal of the QTIP Trust (or all of the QTIP Trust principal, if the personal representative of my _____ [husband's or wife's] estate does not in due course make written demand), in the manner specified in Section 4.02 applicable to the Bypass Trust. However, the property disposed of pursuant to this subsection shall not be considered to be a part of the Bypass Trust unless this trust and the Bypass Trust have the same inclusion ratios for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes].

4.02. Bypass Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the Bypass Trust as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay or distribute to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife], for life, in monthly or other convenient installments, but not less often than annually, as much of the net income of the trust, and as much of the principal of the trust, as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary for _____ [his or her] health, education, support, and maintenance. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone. The trustee shall accumulate and add to principal any net income not distributed.

(b) On the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall divide the trust property into as many shares of equal market value as are necessary to create one share for each of my children who survives my _____ [husband or wife], and one share for the issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife] of each of my children who predeceases my _____ [husband or wife].

(c) Each share created for a surviving child shall be distributed outright to that child if that child has reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years. If the child has not reached the age of _____ years, the share created for the child shall be held, administered, and distributed by the trustee in the Separate Share Trust as set forth in Section 4.03 of this will.

(d) Each share created for the issue of a deceased child shall be divided among those issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue.

(e) If all my children predecease my _____ [husband or wife] without leaving issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall distribute any undistributed balance of the trust property outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., my heirs or the Regents of the University of California].

4.03. Separate Share Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the separate share created for each child as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay or distribute to or apply for the benefit of that child, until _____ [he or she or he or she] reaches the age of _____ [e.g., 25 years], in monthly or other convenient installments, but not less often than annually, as much of the net income of the trust, and as much of the principal of the trust, as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary for _____ [his or her or his or her] _____ [to specify an "ascertainable standard": health, education, support, and maintenance or specify some other standard, e.g., comfort, welfare, and happiness]. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone. The trustee shall accumulate and add to principal any net income not distributed.

(b) When that child reaches the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years, the trustee shall distribute to _____ [him or her or him or her] outright the balance of the trust property.

(c) If that child dies before the trust property has been distributed as provided in this section, the assets of _____ [his or her or his or her] separate share shall be divided among _____ [his or her or his or her] issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue. If that child dies without issue before the trust property has been distributed as provided in this section, the trustee shall distribute the entire undistributed balance of _____ [his or her or his or her] separate share outright among the other then-living persons for whom separate shares were created, and the issue of any deceased persons for whom separate shares were created, _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]; provided, however, that if any part of that balance would otherwise be distributed to a person for whose benefit a trust is being administered under this section, that part shall instead be added to that trust and shall thereafter be administered according to its terms. If there are no surviving persons who may take the share of that child under this section, any remaining trust property shall be distributed outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., my heirs or the Regents of the University of California].

4.04. Disclaimer Trust. The trustee shall hold, administer, and distribute the assets of the Disclaimer Trust as follows:

(a) The trustee shall pay or distribute to or apply for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife], for life, in monthly or other convenient installments, but not less often than annually, as much of the net income of the trust, and as much of the principal of the trust, as the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, deems necessary for _____ [his or her] health, education, support, and maintenance. All decisions of the trustee regarding payments under this subsection, if any, are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone. The trustee shall accumulate and add to principal any net income not distributed.

(b) On the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall divide the trust property into as many shares of equal market value as are necessary to create one share for each of my children who survives my _____ [husband or wife], and one share for the issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife] of each of my children who predeceases my _____ [husband or wife].

(c) Each share created for a surviving child shall be distributed outright to that child if that child has reached the age of _____ [e.g., 25] years. If the child has not reached the age of _____ years, the share created for the child shall be held, administered, and distributed by the trustee in the Separate Share Trust as set forth in Section 4.03 of this will.

(d) Each share created for the issue of a deceased child shall be divided among those issue _____ [in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether or not all such issue are members of the same generation]. The share of each issue shall be distributed outright to that issue.

(e) If all my children predecease my _____ [husband or wife] without leaving issue who survive my _____ [husband or wife], the trustee shall distribute any undistributed balance of the trust property outright to _____ [alternative disposition, e.g., my heirs or the Regents of the University of California].

4.05. Consideration of Beneficiary's Other Resources. In making any payments of income and distributions of principal from any trust created by this will for _____ [specify standard of discretion as set forth in provision authorizing the discretionary distribution, e.g., the health, education, support, and maintenance or care and comfort] of any beneficiary, the trustee shall take into consideration, to the extent the trustee deems advisable, any other income or resources available to that beneficiary that are known to the trustee and that are reasonably available for that purpose.

4.06. Trustee's Power to Determine Income and Principal. Unless otherwise specifically provided in this will, the determination of all matters with respect to what is principal and income of any trust under this will and the apportionment and allocation of receipts, expenses and other charges between principal and income shall be governed by the provisions of the California Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act from time to time existing. The trustee in the trustee's discretion shall determine any matter not provided for either in this instrument or in the California Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act.

4.07. Administration of Generation-Skipping Trusts. The provisions of this section apply to any trust under this will in which there is property that is or may become subject to the federal generation-skipping transfer tax:

(a) If the executor intends to allocate any part of the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption that is available to me to some but not all of the property to be distributed to any trust to which this section of the will applies, the executor _____ [shall or may, in the executor's discretion,] obtain an order for distribution that divides the trust into two separate trusts, to be designated as the Exempt Trust and the Non-Exempt Trust. [If executor has discretionary power to divide trusts: If the executor elects to divide a trust in the manner provided in this section, the or, if division of trusts is mandatory rather than discretionary: The] Exempt Trust shall contain the share of the property of that trust equal in value to the amount of the generation skipping transfer tax exemption that the executor intends to allocate to the trust. The Non-Exempt Trust shall contain the balance of the property of that trust. The executor shall then actually allocate the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption to the Exempt Trust and not to the Non-Exempt Trust so that the Exempt Trust shall have an inclusion ratio of zero for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes and the Non-Exempt Trust shall have an inclusion ratio of one for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes.

(b) In allocating assets between the Exempt Trust and Non-Exempt Trust for purposes of this section, the executor shall _____ [for a pecuniary allocation: allocate the trust assets between the Exempt Trust and Non-Exempt Trust in cash or in kind, or partly in each, on a pro rata or non pro rata basis, and in undivided interests or not or, for a fractional allocation: allocate to each trust a fractional share of each and every substantial interest or right held by the trust being divided]. [If preceding sentence provides for a pecuniary allocation, add: If the allocation is not made within 15 months from the date of my death, the executor shall pay interest, at the legal rate, from the date of my death to the date of distribution. For purposes of allocation under this section, assets shall be valued at their values _____ (to use date of distribution values: on the date or dates of distribution or, to use valuation for estate tax purposes: as finally determined for federal estate tax purposes; provided that any assets allocated in kind shall be allocated between the Exempt Trust and the Non-Exempt Trust in a manner that fairly reflects the net appreciation or depreciation in the value of the assets in the trust being divided, measured from the date of my death to the date of payment).]

(c) Regardless of whether or not subsection (a) applies, if the amount of my generation-skipping transfer tax exemption actually allocated by the executor to a trust to which this section applies is equal to the value of the property of that trust so that the entire trust has an inclusion ratio of zero for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes, the entire trust shall be referred to as the Exempt Trust. On the other hand, if no part of my generation-skipping transfer tax exemption is actually allocated to the trust by the executor so that the entire trust has an inclusion ratio of one for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes (or if I am not the transferor of that trust for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes), the entire trust shall be referred to as the Non-Exempt Trust.

(d) The trustee may, but is not required to, administer the trusts under this will to which this section applies in such a manner that distributions made during the trust terms to "skip persons" (as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 2613(a) or any equivalent successor section) are made from Exempt Trusts, and distributions made during the trust terms to "non-skip persons" (as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 2613(b) or any equivalent successor section) are made from Non-Exempt trusts.

[Optional: (e) If the trustee determines that the burdens of generation-skipping transfer taxes, income taxes, and death taxes on a Non-Exempt Trust, my estate, or the beneficiaries of that trust would be reduced, the trustee may petition the court to amend the trust to grant to one or more trust beneficiaries who are non-skip persons in a generation below me a general testamentary power of appointment over all or a specified portion of that Non-Exempt Trust. Any power to amend the trust is within the discretion of the court, and the preceding sentence shall not be construed to give the trustee any power that the trustee does not already have under California trust law to petition the court under the appropriate circumstances, nor shall it be construed to limit the power of the trustee or any beneficiary under the California trust law to petition the court under the appropriate circumstances.]

[(f)] The purpose of this section is to allow the trustee to administer the trusts so as to decrease the amount of generation-skipping transfer taxes owed on generation-skipping transfers from the trusts. The trustee shall balance that consideration against any other tax and non-tax considerations, and may disregard the generation-skipping transfer tax consequences to the extent that the trustee determines that doing so will allow the trustee to carry out my intentions in creating the trusts. All decisions of the trustee under this subsection are within the trustee's discretion and shall be final and incontestable by anyone.

[(g)] If, in the judgment of the executor or the trustee, at any time after the execution of this will, any statute, regulation, court decision, or administrative ruling imposes different or additional requirements on the trust in connection with the generation-skipping transfer tax, the executor or the trustee may petition the court to amend the terms of the trust to meet those requirements and achieve the purpose of this section.

[(h)] If, upon the death of my _____ [husband or wife], (1) my _____ [husband or wife] is considered to be the transferor of any Non-Exempt Trust established by this will for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes, and (2) my _____ [husband or wife]'s executor allocates any part of the generation-skipping transfer tax exemption that is available to my _____ [husband or wife] under Internal Revenue Code Section 2631(a) (or any equivalent successor section) to that Non-Exempt Trust so that the entire trust then has an inclusion ratio of zero for federal generation-skipping transfer tax purposes, that trust shall then be considered to be an Exempt Trust for purposes of this section of the will.

[(i)] In no event may the trustee exercise any power under this section in a manner that will impair the marital deduction.

Article 5 : Executor

5.01. Nomination of Executor. I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Charlotte Silver Smith,] as executor of this will.

5.02. Successor Executors. If _____ [nominee(s) for initial executor, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Charlotte Silver Smith,] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or to continue to serve, as executor, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as successor executor:

First, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for coexecutors) my brother, Charles Edward Silver];

Second, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for individual) Herbert J. Gardner, who resides at _____ (address)];

Third, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for corporate executor) Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

5.03. Definition of Executor. The term "executor," as used in this will, refers to each personal representative of my estate who is serving at the pertinent time.

5.04. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any executor nominated in this will.

5.05. Independent Administration. The executor shall _____ [have full or not have] authority to administer my estate under the California Independent Administration of Estates Act.

5.06. Powers of Executor. Subject to any limitations stated elsewhere in this will, the executor shall have, in addition to all of the powers now or hereafter conferred on executors by law, and any powers enumerated elsewhere in this will, the power to perform any of the acts specified in this section:

(a) Take possession or control of all of my estate subject to disposition by this will, and collect all debts due to me or to my estate.

(b) Receive the rents, issues, and profits from all real and personal property in my estate until the estate is settled or delivered over by order of court to my heirs or beneficiaries.

(c) Pay taxes on, and take all steps reasonably necessary for the management, protection, and preservation of, all property in my estate.

(d) Commence and prosecute, either individually or jointly with my heirs or beneficiaries, any action necessary or proper to quiet title to or recover possession of any real or personal property in my estate.

(e) Vote in person, and give proxies to exercise, any voting rights with respect to any stock, any membership in a nonprofit corporation, or any other property in my estate, and waive notice of a meeting, give consent to the holding of a meeting, and authorize, ratify, approve, or confirm any action that could be taken by shareholders, members, or property owners.

(f) Insure the property of my estate against damage or loss, and insure the executor against liability to third persons.

(g) Deposit money belonging to my estate in an insured account in a financial institution in California.

(h) Invest and reinvest any money of my estate not reasonably required for the immediate administration of my estate in any kind of property, real, personal, or mixed, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own accounts; provided, however, that in investing any property of my estate, the executor shall act with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing, including but not limited to the general economic conditions and the anticipated needs of my estate and its beneficiaries, that a prudent person acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of like character and with like aims to accomplish the purposes of my estate as determined from this will.

(i) Retain any assets of my estate for as long as the executor deems to be in the best interest of my estate.

(j) Borrow money on behalf of my estate and pledge, hypothecate, or otherwise encumber property of my estate, real or personal, as security for any sums so borrowed.

(k) In order to satisfy a pecuniary gift or to distribute or divide estate assets into shares or partial shares, the executor may distribute or divide those assets in kind, or divide undivided interests in those assets, or sell all or any part of those assets and distribute or divide the property in cash, in kind, or partly in cash and partly in kind. Property distributed to satisfy a pecuniary gift under this will shall be valued at its fair market value at the time of distribution.

This section shall apply only to the extent that it does not conflict with the provisions of Articles 2 and 3 specifying allocation of assets involving the marital deduction gift and of Article 4 specifying allocation of assets involving generation-skipping trusts.

(l) Pay any and all charges reasonably incurred in connection with or incidental to the distribution of any property of my estate, including but not limited to expenses of storage, freight, shipping, delivery, packing, and insurance; and, on any accounting, treat any such expenditures as expenses of the administration of my estate.

(m) If any asset of my estate consists of an option right, exercise the option after authorization by order of court, upon a showing that the exercise would be to the advantage of my estate, and use any funds or property in my estate to acquire the property covered by the option.

(n) Hold a security in the name of a nominee or in any other form without disclosure of my estate so that title to the security may pass by delivery.

(o) Exercise any subscription rights owned or received by my estate by reason of owning securities, after authorization by court upon a showing that it is to the advantage of my estate.

(p) Sell, at either public or private sale and with or without notice, and grant options to purchase, any property belonging to my estate [optional], subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(q) Lease any real or personal property belonging to my estate on such terms and conditions as the executor determines to be in the best interest of my estate [optional], subject only to any confirmation of court required by law].

(r) Dispose of or abandon tangible personal property, except tangible personal property that is a specific gift, when the cost of collecting, maintaining, and safeguarding the property would exceed its fair market value.

(s) Compromise or settle any claim, action, or proceeding by or for the benefit of, or against, me, my estate, or the executor [optional], subject only to any confirmation of court that may be required by law].

(t) Employ professional investment counsel to make recommendations with respect to, and otherwise assist in, investing the assets of my estate; and, on any accounting, treat any fees paid to investment counsel as expenses of the administration of my estate.

5.07. Power to Make QTIP Election. I expect, but do not require, that the executor will elect to qualify all of the property allocated to the QTIP Trust for the federal estate tax marital deduction under Internal Revenue Code Section 2056(b)(7), unless there is a compelling reason not to make any election or to make only a partial election. In determining whether to make a full or partial election, the executor shall consider the balance between (1) minimizing the estate tax both in my own estate and in the estate of my _____ [husband or wife]; and (2) assuring that the income to be generated for the benefit of my _____ [husband or wife] by the assets remaining after payment of death taxes will be adequate to allow my _____ [husband or wife] to maintain the lifestyle that we enjoyed prior to my death. If the executor elects to qualify any property allocated to the QTIP Trust for the federal estate tax marital deduction, the executor may elect, under any applicable provision of the Internal Revenue Code then in effect, to have all or any part of that estate tax election disregarded for purposes of the federal generation-skipping transfer tax.

5.08. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any beneficiary under this will is a minor, or it appears to the executor that any beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the executor, in lieu of making direct payments to the beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the executor); to one or more suitable persons as the executor deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the executor for all purposes.

5.09. Executor's Liability for Own Acts. The executor shall not be liable to my estate or to any person interested in it for any act or omission of the executor, except an act or omission that is committed intentionally, with gross negligence, in bad faith, or with reckless indifference to the interests of persons interested in my estate, or an act or omission from which the executor derives a profit.

Article 6 : Trustee

6.01. Nomination of Trustee. I nominate _____ [name of trustee and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Charlotte Silver Smith,] as trustee of any trust created under this will.

6.02. Successor Trustee. If _____ [nominee for initial trustee, e.g., my husband or my wife or my sister, Charlotte Silver Smith,] is for any reason unable or unwilling to serve, or continue to serve, as trustee, I nominate the following, in the order of priority indicated, as trustee:

First, _____ [name and description, e.g., my brother, Charles Edward Silver];

Second, _____ [name and description, e.g., Herbert J. Gardner, who resides at _____ (address)];

Third, _____ [name and description, e.g. (for corporate trustee): Double Eagle Bank, Fresno, California office].

6.03. Definition of Trustee. Reference in this instrument to "the trustee" shall be deemed a reference to whoever is serving as trustee or co-trustees, and shall include alternate or successor trustees, unless the context requires otherwise.

6.04. Removal and Replacement of Trustee. Any trustee serving under this instrument may be removed as trustee at any time by court order upon petition by any beneficiary [or co-trustee], for any of the following grounds:

(a) Breach of trust.

(b) Insolvency or other unfitness to administer the trust.

(c) Hostility or lack of cooperation among the co-trustees that impairs the administration of the trust.

(d) Failure or refusal to act.

(e) Other good cause, as determined by the probate court. If a vacancy occurs in the office of trustee, whether by removal of a trustee or otherwise, the probate court shall appoint a new trustee to fill the vacancy. The court may, in its discretion, appoint the original number, or any lesser number of trustees. In selecting a trustee, the court shall give consideration to the wishes of the beneficiaries who are fourteen years of age or older.

6.05. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any trustee nominated in this will.

6.06. Compensation of Trustee. The trustee shall be entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered, payable without court order. [Optional: If a trustee serves for only part of a calendar year, the annual compensation shall be prorated according to the number of days during that year that the trustee was acting as trustee.]

6.07. Procedure for Resignation. Any trustee may resign at any time, without giving a reason for the resignation, by giving written notice, at least _____ [specify; e.g., 30 days] before the time the resignation is to take effect, to any other trustee then acting, to any persons authorized to designate a successor trustee, to all living trust beneficiaries known to the trustee (or, in the case of a minor beneficiary, to the parent or guardian of that beneficiary), and to the successor trustee. A resignation shall be effective upon written acceptance of the trust by the successor trustee.

6.08. General Powers of Trustee. To carry out the purposes of the trusts created under this will, and subject to any limitations stated elsewhere in this will, the trustee shall have all of the following powers, in addition to all of the powers now or hereafter conferred on trustees by law:

(a) Retain property received into the trust at its inception, or later added to the trust, as long as the trustee considers that retention in the best interests of the trust or in furtherance of my goals in creating the trust, as determined from this will, but subject to the standards of the prudent investor rule as set forth in the California Uniform Prudent Investor Act.

(b) Invest and manage the trust assets as a prudent investor would, by considering the purposes, terms, distribution requirements, and other circumstances of the trust. In satisfying this standard, the trustee shall exercise reasonable care, skill, and caution. The trustee's investment and management decisions respecting individual assets and courses of action must be evaluated not in isolation, but in the context of the trust portfolio as a whole and as a part of an overall investment strategy having risk and return objectives reasonably suited to the trust.

(c) Retain or acquire unproductive or underproductive property; provided, however, that as to any assets of the QTIP Trust, my _____ [husband or wife] shall have the right, by delivery of a written instrument to the trustee, to require the trustee to make unproductive or underproductive property productive, or to convert it to productive property, within a reasonable time after receipt of the request.

(d) In the trustee's discretion, invest or reinvest in mutual funds, money market funds, investment trusts, regulated investment companies, market funds, and index funds, and in the shares or securities of any such funds or companies, that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence acquire for their own account.

(e) Acquire and maintain as a trust asset a life insurance policy on the life of any person, including the trustee, issued by any company and in any amount that the trustee may deem advisable, and to exercise all rights of ownership granted in that policy; provided, however, that as to any assets of the QTIP Trust, my _____ [husband or wife] shall have the right, by delivery of a written instrument to the trustee, to require the trustee to convert any such policy into productive property, within a reasonable time after receipt of the request.

(f) With or without court authorization, sell (for cash or on deferred payments, and with or without security), convey, exchange, partition, and divide trust property; grant options for the sale or exchange of trust property for any purpose, whether the contract is to be performed or the option is to be exercised within or beyond the term of the trust; and lease trust property for any purpose, for terms within or extending beyond the expiration of the trust, regardless of whether the leased property is commercial or residential and regardless of the number of units leased.

(g) Lend or advance the trustee's own funds to my estate or to any other trust created by me, for any purpose properly related to that estate or trust, with interest thereon at the then-prevailing rates, and to receive security for any such loans in any commercially reasonable form. The trustee may, from time to time, purchase or lease assets from, sell or lease assets to, and exchange assets with my estate at fair market values. [Optional: However, the fair market value of any asset sold, purchased, or leased pursuant to this provision must first be determined by an independent appraisal.]

(h) Engage in any transactions with the personal representative of my estate that are in the best interest of any trusts under this will.

- (i) Manage, control, improve, and maintain all real and personal trust property.
- (j) Subdivide or develop land; make or obtain the vacation of plats and adjust boundaries, or adjust differences in valuation on exchange or partition by giving or receiving consideration; and dedicate land or easements to public use with or without consideration.
- (k) Make ordinary or extraordinary repairs or alterations in buildings or other trust property, demolish any improvements, raze existing party walls or buildings, and erect new party walls or buildings, as the trustee deems advisable.
- (l) Enter into oil, gas, and other mineral leases, on terms deemed advisable by the trustee; enter into any pooling, unitization, repressurization, community, or other types of agreements relating to the exploration, development, operation, and conservation of mineral properties; drill, mine, and otherwise operate for the development of oil, gas, and other minerals; contract for the installation and operation of absorption and repressuring plants; and install and maintain pipelines. Any such leases or agreements may be for a term within or extending beyond the term of the trust.
- (m) In the trustee's discretion, abandon any [unproductive or wasted] trust asset or interest therein.
- (n) Employ and discharge agents and employees, including but not limited to attorneys, accountants, investment and other advisers, custodians of assets, property managers, real estate agents and brokers, and appraisers, to advise and assist the trustees in the management of any trusts created under this will, and compensate them from the trust property. [Optional: The agents and employees may be associated or affiliated with the trustee, or may be descendants or other persons related to the trustee or to me, or a company associated with any such persons.] [Optional: The trustee is entitled to rely on the advice of any professional advisers employed under this provision. Reasonable compensation paid to any such agents or employees shall not diminish the compensation to which the trustee is otherwise entitled.]
- (o) With respect to securities held in trust, exercise all the rights, powers, and privileges of an owner, including, but not limited to, the power to vote, give proxies, and pay assessments and other sums deemed by the trustee necessary for the protection of the trust property; participate in voting trusts, pooling agreements, foreclosures, reorganizations, consolidations, mergers, and liquidations, and, in connection therewith, deposit securities with and transfer title to any protective or other committee under such terms as the trustee deems advisable; exercise or sell stock subscription or conversion rights; and accept and retain as investments of the trust any securities or other property received through the exercise of any of the foregoing powers.
- (p) Hold securities or other trust property in the trustee's own name or in the name of a nominee, without disclosure of the trust, or in unregistered form, so that title may pass by delivery.
- (q) Deposit securities in a securities depository that is either licensed or exempt from licensing.
- (r) Borrow money for any trust purpose from any person or entity on such terms and conditions as the trustee deems advisable, and obligate the trust for repayment; encumber any trust property by mortgage, deed of trust, pledge, or otherwise, whether for terms within or extending beyond the term of the trust, as the trustee deems advisable, to secure repayment of any such loan; replace, renew, and extend any such loan or encumbrance; and pay loans or other obligations of the trust deemed advisable by the trustee.
- (s) In the trustee's discretion, make loans to beneficiaries out of funds of the trust and guarantee the repayment of loans made to beneficiaries by third parties by encumbering trust assets.
- (t) Procure and carry, at the expense of the trust, insurance in such forms and in such amounts as the trustee deems advisable to protect the trust property against damage or loss, and to protect the trustee against liability with respect to third persons.

(u) Enforce any obligation owing to the trust, including any obligation secured by a deed of trust, mortgage, or pledge held as trust property, and to purchase any property subject to a security instrument held as trust property at any sale under the instrument.

(v) Extend the time for payment of any note or other obligation held as an asset of, and owing to, the trust, including accrued or future interest, and extend the time for repayment beyond the term of the trust.

(w) Pay or contest any claim against the trust; release or prosecute any claim in favor of the trust; or, in lieu of payment, contest, release, or prosecution, adjust, compromise, or settle any such claim, in whole or in part, with or without consideration.

(x) At trust expense, prosecute or defend actions, claims, or proceedings of whatever kind for the protection of the trust property and of the trustee in the performance of the trustee's duties, and employ and compensate attorneys, advisers, and other agents as the trustee deems advisable.

(y) Accept additions to any trusts created by this will, from any source and at any time; all such additions shall become a part of the trust and shall be held, administered, and distributed in accordance with the terms of the trust. Any additions to the trust shall be made by designating in writing the property to be added. However, the titling of any account, deed, or similar asset in the name of the trustee, as trustee of the trust, shall be deemed to be a transfer to the trust. Any designation by a third party, whether by will, deed, account title designation, or similar transfer, shall also be a transfer to the trust estate. No addition shall become part of the trust estate until it is accepted in writing by the trustee.

6.09. Retention of Family Residence. The trustee shall retain, in any trust or trusts under this will, any of my interest in real property used by me and my _____ [husband or wife] as our principal residence at the time of my death ("the family residence"), and shall deal with the family residence in accordance with the following terms and conditions:

(a) During _____ [his or her] lifetime, my _____ [husband or wife] shall have the right to occupy the family residence (or any substitute residence or residential property purchased as provided in this section of the will) free of any rent.

(b) The trustee shall pay as much of the mortgage or note payments, property taxes, assessments, insurance, maintenance, and ordinary repairs on the family residence (or on any substitute residence or residential property purchased as provided in this section of the will) as corresponds to the trust's proportionate interest in the same. The trustee shall make those payments out of income or principal of the trust or trusts in accordance with the principles applicable to charging of payments under California law, but in no event shall payment be made in a manner that disqualifies any part of any trust, that would otherwise so qualify, for the federal estate tax marital deduction.

(c) My _____ [husband or wife] shall, at _____ [his or her] option, have the right to advise the trustee in writing that _____ [he or she] no longer wishes to occupy the family residence and to direct the trustee to sell it, or any interest therein. In deciding on the terms and conditions relating to any sale, the trustee shall take into account all relevant factors, including, but not limited to, my intent that no sale be made in a "forced sale" situation (other than at my _____ [husband's or wife's] direction) or at a time when, because of high mortgage rates or otherwise, the residential real estate market is depressed. In selling the family residence, the trustee may dispose of it on such terms as the trustee deems desirable, including an installment sale or any other desirable method of disposing of the family residence, provided that if the sale is for consideration other than cash, the purchaser's obligation shall be secured by a first deed of trust. In the event of a sale, my _____ [husband or wife] may direct the trustee in writing to apply the proceeds of the sale to the purchase of a substitute residence or residential property, of comparable or lesser value, to be selected by my _____ [husband or wife]; or to reinvest the proceeds in any manner that _____ [he or she] may direct, provided that any such investments satisfy normal fiduciary standards of prudence and safety, and to use the income from reinvestment to pay the rental or lease payments on another residence or residential property, to be selected by my _____ [husband or wife]. Any net trust accounting income from any such investments, in excess of the trust share of the rental costs and any other expenses of trust administration, shall be added to the other trust income and distributed in accordance with the relevant provisions of the trust or trusts as set forth in Article _____ of this will.

[Optional: (d) If my _____ (husband or wife) does not direct the trustee to sell the family residence, _____ (he or she) shall have the right to direct the trustee in writing to lease it, or any interest in it. In the event of lease, the trustee shall continue to pay the expenses of maintaining the family residence as specified above, subject to the lease terms, and shall use the entire net income from the lease to pay the rental or lease payments on another residence or residential property, to be selected and occupied by my _____ (husband or wife). Any net trust accounting income from any lease of the family residence, in excess of the trust share of the cost of the rental or lease payments on another residence or residential property, shall be added to the other trust income and distributed in accordance with the relevant provisions of the trust or trusts, as set forth in Article _____ of this will.]

(e) Upon the death of my _____ [husband or wife], the trust interest in either the family residence, any proceeds remaining from the sale of the family residence, or any substitute residence or residential property purchased by the trustee with any proceeds of sale of the family residence, shall be distributed in accordance with the applicable provisions of the trust or trusts in which the interest or interests are held, as set forth in Article 4 of this will.

6.10. Power to Combine Trust Assets. Each trust created under this will shall constitute a separate trust and be administered and accounted for accordingly; however, the assets of all of the trusts may be combined and held for the trust beneficiaries without physical division into separate trusts until time of distribution.

6.11. Early Termination of Trusts. The trustee shall have the power, in the trustee's discretion, to petition the court to terminate any trust created under this will whenever the fair market value of the trust falls below _____ [specify amount, e.g., $25,000] or becomes so small in relation to the costs of administration as to make continuing administration uneconomical or contrary to the primary purposes of the trust. Upon termination, the trustee shall distribute the principal and any accrued or undistributed net income to the income beneficiaries in proportion to their shares of the income. If no fixed amount of income is payable to specific beneficiaries, the trustee shall distribute the principal and any accrued or undistributed net income in equal shares to those beneficiaries who would then be entitled to income payments from the trust. [Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, and except as otherwise provided in this will, the trustee may not terminate a trust before the trust term expires unless prior court authorization is obtained.]

6.12. Power to Delay Distributions. Following my death, the trustee shall have the power, in the trustee's discretion, to determine the reasonable administrative period necessary or appropriate to pay my debts, expenses, taxes, and other liabilities, before dividing or distributing the trust assets as provided herein, and to delay the division or distribution during that period. During that administrative period, the trustee, in the trustee's discretion, may accumulate the trust income, or distribute the income currently, or partially accumulate and partially distribute the income, as the trustee determines, but any income accumulated shall be distributable to the beneficiary or beneficiaries next entitled to distribution or allocation of the same upon conclusion of the administrative period. Nothing contained herein, however, shall delay the right of my spouse to receive income from a trust intended to qualify for the estate tax marital deduction beyond the period reasonably required for payment of or provision for the foregoing liabilities, or any other period that may be permitted under the applicable federal law and regulations relating to the allowance of the marital deduction.

6.13. Division or Distribution in Cash or in Kind. In order to satisfy a pecuniary gift or to distribute or divide trust assets into shares or partial shares, the trustee may distribute or divide those assets in kind, or divide undivided interests in those assets, or sell all or any part of those assets and distribute or divide the property in cash, in kind, or partly in cash and partly in kind. Property distributed to satisfy a pecuniary gift under this will shall be valued at its fair market value at the time of distribution. This section shall apply only to the extent that it does not conflict with the provisions of Articles 2 and 3 specifying allocation of assets involving the marital deduction gift and of Article 4 specifying allocation of assets involving generation-skipping trusts.

6.14. Payments to Incapacitated Persons. If at any time any trust beneficiary is a minor, or it appears to the trustee that any trust beneficiary is incapacitated, incompetent, or for any other reason not able to receive payments or make intelligent or responsible use of the payments, then the trustee, in lieu of making direct payments to the trust beneficiary, may make payments to the beneficiary's conservator or guardian; to the beneficiary's custodian under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act or Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of any state (including a custodian selected by the trustee); to one or more suitable persons as the trustee deems proper, such as a relative of or a person residing with the beneficiary, to be used for the beneficiary's benefit; to any other person, firm, or agency for services rendered or to be rendered for the beneficiary's assistance or benefit; or to accounts in the beneficiary's name with financial institutions. The receipt of payments by any of the foregoing shall constitute a sufficient acquittance of the trustee for all purposes.

6.15. Grant of Specific Powers Not to Limit Exercise of General Powers. The enumeration of specific powers under this will shall not limit the trustee from exercising any other power with respect to any trusts created by this will that may be necessary or appropriate for the trustee to have and exercise in order to carry out the purposes of the trusts or to permit the trustee to fulfill the trustee's responsibilities and duties with respect to the trust.

6.16. Limitation on Powers That Would Imperil Marital Deduction. Notwithstanding any other provision of this will, the trustee shall exercise power and discretion over any trust or trust share designed to qualify for the federal estate tax marital deduction only in a manner consistent with all statutory and regulatory requirements for the full allowance of the marital deduction for that trust or share.

6.17. Power to Disclaim or Release Powers. Any trustee may disclaim, release, or restrict the scope of any power or discretion that the trustee may hold in connection with any trust created under this will, whether the power or discretion is expressly granted in this will or is implied by law. The trustee shall disclaim a power in the manner required by applicable federal or California law. The trustee shall release or restrict any power or discretion by giving written notice to the beneficiary or beneficiaries then entitled to current distribution of income from the trust, specifying the power or discretion to be released or restricted, the nature of the restriction, and, if appropriate, the person or persons to whom the released or restricted power shall pass and be exercisable. If a power is disclaimed, the power shall be available to and exercisable by the successor trustee.

6.18. Written Notice to Trustee. Until the trustee receives written notice of any death or other event upon which the right to payments from any trust may depend, the trustee shall incur no liability for disbursements made in good faith to persons whose interests may have been affected by that event.

6.19. Duty to Account. The trustee shall render accounts at least annually, at the termination of a trust, and upon a change of trustees, to the persons and in the manner required by law.

Article 7 : Guardian

7.01. Nomination of Guardian. If a guardian of the person, estate, or person and estate is necessary for any minor child of mine, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my sister, Charlotte Silver Smith or Herbert J. Gardner, who resides at _____ (address)], as that guardian. If at any time _____ [name, e.g., my sister, Charlotte Silver Smith or Herbert J. Gardner] is unable or unwilling to serve, or to continue to serve, as guardian, I nominate _____ [name and relationship to testator or other means of identification, e.g., my brother, Charles Edward Silver,] as guardian.

7.02. Bond. _____ [No bond or undertaking or Bond] shall be required of any guardian of the estate nominated in this will.

Article 8 : Concluding Provisions

8.01. Definition of Death Taxes. The term "death taxes," as used in this will, shall mean all inheritance, estate, succession, and other similar taxes that are payable by any person on account of that person's interest in my estate or by reason of my death, including penalties and interest, but excluding the following:

(a) Any additional tax that may be assessed under Internal Revenue Code Section 2032A.

(b) Any federal or state tax imposed on a generation-skipping transfer, as that term is defined in the federal tax laws [, unless the applicable tax statutes provide that the generation-skipping transfer tax on that transfer is payable directly out of the assets of my gross estate].

8.02. Payment of Death Taxes. The executor shall pay death taxes, whether or not attributable to property inventoried in my probate estate, by prorating and apportioning them among the persons interested in my estate as provided in the California Probate Code, except as follows:

(a) If my spouse survives me and the executor elects to qualify less than the entire property subject to the marital deduction gift made in Section 2.05 of this will for the federal estate tax marital deduction, any death taxes attributable to any part of that gift that the executor elects not to qualify for the marital deduction, or that is otherwise subject to a state transfer tax, shall be paid by the executor out of the Bypass Trust.

[Use to require that taxes on specific devise(s) be paid out of residue of estate or any bypass trust created in will:]

(b) Any death taxes attributable to the specific gift[s] made under Section[s] _____ [e.g., 2.01 and 2.02] of this will shall be paid by the executor out of _____ [my residuary estate or the Bypass Trust] without adjustment among the persons interested in my estate.

[Use to direct that taxes attributable to family allowance be paid out of residue:]

(c) Any death taxes attributable to any family allowance payable out of my estate shall be paid by the executor from my residuary estate without adjustment among the persons interested in my estate.

[Use to direct that taxes on excess retirement accumulations be paid out of residue:]

(d) Any taxes attributable to excess retirement accumulations as defined in Internal Revenue Code Section 4980A shall be paid by the executor from the residue of my estate without adjustment among the persons interested in my estate.

[Use to require that taxes on testator's community property interest in qualified plan benefits accumulated by testator's spouse be paid out of residue:]

(e) Any death taxes attributable to the inclusion in my estate of my community property interest in any qualified plan benefits accumulated through the employment of my spouse shall be paid by the executor from my residuary estate without adjustment among the persons interested in my estate.

[Use to direct that any generation-skipping transfer tax payable directly from the assets of the estate (direct skips) be paid out of residue:]

(f) Any generation-skipping transfer tax that is payable directly out of the assets of my estate shall be paid by the executor from my residuary estate without adjustment among the persons interested in my estate.

(g) The method of apportionment of death taxes specified in this will shall apply equally to any property passing under any codicil to this will, except to the extent that a codicil expressly provides for a different method of apportionment.

PRACTICE TIP:

The allocation of taxes shown in this form is but one of many possible allocation schemes. In each case the drafter should carefully consider the nature of the client's assets, including whether those assets will pass under the will or otherwise, and the value of assets passing under the will as specific, rather than residuary, gifts. Only when these factors are considered can the appropriate tax allocation formula be selected. Other possible allocation clauses appear in CALIFORNIA WILLS & TRUSTS FORMS, Div. IV, Individual Will Provisions, Pt. 90, Concluding Provisions, Form 90.30 (Alts. 90.30-1-90.30-7); for more detailed discussion of tax allocation, see California Wills & Trusts, Ch. 23, Provisions for Payment of Taxes, Expenses, and Debt (Matthew Bender). Commentary by Albert G. Handelman.

8.03. Abatement of Gifts. If my estate is insufficient to satisfy in full all of the gifts provided for in this will, I direct that gifts shall abate in the following order: first general gifts, then specific gifts, then demonstrative gifts; provided, however, that the gifts to my _____ [husband or wife] shall not abate until all other gifts have abated [, and the gifts to my children shall not abate until gifts to all persons and entities other than my _____ (husband or wife) have abated]. All gifts of the same class shall abate proportionally.

8.04. Simultaneous Death. If any beneficiary under this will and I die simultaneously, or if it cannot be established by clear and convincing evidence whether that beneficiary or I died first, I shall be deemed to have survived that beneficiary, and this will shall be construed accordingly.

8.05. Intentional Omission of Heirs Not Specifically Provided For in Will. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this will, I have intentionally and with full knowledge omitted to provide for my heirs, regardless of whether or not I am aware of their existence and identities at the time this will is executed.

8.06. No-Contest Clause. If any person, directly or indirectly, contests the validity of this will in whole or in part, or opposes, objects to, or seeks to invalidate any of its provisions, or seeks to succeed to any part of my estate otherwise than in the manner specified in this will, any gift or other interest given to that person under this will shall be revoked and shall be disposed of as if he or she had predeceased me [optional: without issue].

8.07. Perpetuities Savings Clause. Notwithstanding any other provision of this will, every trust created by this will [, or by the exercise of any power of appointment created by this will,] shall terminate no later than 21 years after the death of _____ [designate measuring life or lives, e.g., the last survivor of my spouse and my issue] who are alive at the time of my death. If a trust is terminated under this section of the will, the trustee shall distribute all of the principal and undistributed income of the trust to the income beneficiaries of the trust in the proportion in which they are entitled (or eligible, in the case of discretionary payments) to receive income immediately before the termination. If that proportion is not fixed by the terms of this will, the trustee shall distribute all of the trust property to the persons then entitled or eligible to receive income from the trust _____ [specify pattern of distribution, e.g., outright in a manner that, in the trustee's opinion, will give effect to my intent in creating the trust, the trustee's decision to be final and incontestable by anyone or as a class, in the manner provided in California Probate Code Section _____ (240 or 246 or 247) or in equal shares, regardless of whether all of such persons are members of the same generation].

8.08. Definition of Incapacity. For purposes of this will, a person shall be deemed "incapacitated" if and for so long as a court of competent jurisdiction has made a finding to that effect, or a guardian or conservator of that person's estate or person duly appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction is serving, or upon certification by two physicians licensed to practice under the laws of the state where the person is domiciled at the time of the certification that the person is unable properly to care for himself or herself or for his or her property. The latter certification shall be made by each physician in a written declaration under penalty of perjury.

8.09. Definition of Education. As used in this will, the term "education" refers to the following:

- (a) Education at public or private elementary, junior high, middle, or high schools, including boarding schools;
- (b) Undergraduate, graduate, and postgraduate study in any field, whether or not of a professional character, in colleges, universities, or other institutions of higher learning;
- (c) Specialized formal or informal training in music, the stage, the handicrafts, or the arts, whether by private instruction or otherwise; and
- (d) Formal or informal vocational or technical training, whether through programs or institutions devoted solely to vocational or technical training, or otherwise.

8.10. Captions. The captions appearing in this will are for convenience of reference only, and shall be disregarded in determining the meaning and effect of the provisions of this will.

8.11. Severability Clause. If any provision of this will is invalid, that provision shall be disregarded, and the remainder of this will shall be construed as if the invalid provision had not been included.

8.12. California Law to Apply. All questions concerning the validity and interpretation of this will, including any trusts created by this will, shall be governed by the laws of the State of California in effect at the time this will is executed.

8.13. Gifts to "Heirs." For any gift to my heirs that is made outright in this instrument, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate at the time for distribution, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death. For any assets of any trust estate created by this will to be distributed to my heirs, those heirs shall be determined as if I had died intestate immediately following the termination of the trust of each share, and the identity and shares of those heirs shall be determined according to the California laws of succession that concern separate property not acquired from a previously deceased spouse and that are in effect at my death.

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

§ 62.30 Codicil Defined and Distinguished From New Will

A later testamentary writing that is supplementary to an earlier instrument is termed a "codicil" [ Estate of Loud (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 399, 407, 161 P.2d 49 ]. A codicil is distinguished from a new will in that the codicil does not supersede a former will but merely adds to, supplements, qualifies, modifies, or alters a former will in some stated respects, and contemplates that the former will still exists and that reference to it is necessary for a complete disposal of the testator's estate [ Estate of Benson (1944) 62 Cal. App. 2d 866, 871, 145 P.2d 668 ].

 CHAPTER 62 CODICILS
 PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.31

§ 62.31 Statutory Authority, Form, and Content

[1] In General

The Probate Code does not establish any special requirements governing codicils. Rather, it defines "will" to include codicil and any testamentary instrument that merely appoints an executor or revokes or revises another will [Prob. Code § 88]. Thus, codicils are governed by the same requirements and rules of interpretation applicable to wills generally.

The statutory authority for modification of a will by codicil is Prob. Code § 6120(a), which provides that a will may be wholly or partially revoked by a subsequent will that revokes the prior will or part expressly or by inconsistency. Therefore, in order to be valid, a codicil must meet the requirements for either a holographic will [see Prob. Code § 6111; Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 559-562, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352 (handwritten codicil was not valid holographic codicil because it was not signed by testator); see also Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.10[2][c]] or a witnessed will [see Prob. Code §§ 6110, 6112; Crook v. Contreras (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1194, 1202-1203, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 319 (documents titled as trust amendments could potentially qualify as codicils if they satisfied legal requirements for wills and demonstrated testator's intent to dispose of property on death; documents in this case did not qualify as codicils because they had not been subscribed by two witnesses before testator's death as required by Prob. Code § 6110)]. The requirements for the witnessing and execution of witnessed wills are discussed in detail in Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.13, and are not repeated here.

A codicil need not take any particular form [see Estate of Darms (1966) 247 Cal. App. 2d 254, 257-259, 55 Cal. Rptr. 463 (letter as codicil)] as long as it qualifies as either a holographic or witnessed will. There is no requirement that a codicil be executed with the same formalities as the will that it modifies [see Prob. Code §§ 6113, 6120(a)]. Thus, a holographic codicil may be used to modify a witnessed will and vice versa. This was true even under the more restrictive provisions in effect prior to 1985 [see In re Soher (1889) 78 Cal. 477, 479-481, 21 P. 8]. The term "codicil" need not be used [Estate of Carr (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 750, 754, 209 P.2d 956] and it is not necessary for the codicil to make specific reference to the will [see Estate of Cazaurang (1941) 42 Cal. App. 2d 796, 798-799, 110 P.2d 138].

[2] California Statutory Wills

A California statutory will [ see § 61.21] may be amended by codicil in the same manner as any other will [Prob. Code § 6225(a)]. However, the codicil should not be written on the face of the will itself, inasmuch as any additions or deletions on the face of the statutory will form, other than in accordance with the instructions, are ineffective and will be disregarded [Prob. Code § 6225(b)].

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
 CHAPTER 62 CODICILS
 PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.32

§ 62.32 Rules of Interpretation and Construction

The Probate Code contains a comprehensive set of rules for the interpretation of wills, trusts, and similar instruments [see Prob. Code §§ 21101-21140]. Since the Probate Code definition of "will" also includes codicils to wills [see Prob. Code § 88], these rules of interpretation are also applicable to codicils. These rules are discussed in Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.20. Some of these provisions have special relevance to codicils, however, and bear repetition here.

The words of a will must receive an interpretation that will give every expression some effect, rather than one that will render any of the expressions inoperative [Prob. Code § 21120]. All parts of a will are to be construed in relation to each other and, if possible, so as to form a consistent whole. If the meaning of any part of a will is ambiguous or doubtful, it may be explained by any reference to or recital of that part in another part of the will [Prob. Code § 21121; see Prob. Code § 21101 (rule applicable to wills, trusts, deeds, and other instruments)]. This means that every attempt will be made, consistent with the intentions of the testator as expressed in a will and codicil, to reconcile the provisions of the two instruments so as to give effect to both and to avoid finding any inconsistencies or contradictions [see Prob. Code § 21102(a) (intention of transferor as expressed in instruments controls)].

CHAPTER 62 CODICILS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.33§ 62.33 Revocation of Codicil[1] In General

A codicil, like a will, may be revoked (wholly or partially) by a subsequent will or codicil that revokes the codicil expressly or by inconsistency [Prob. Code § 6120(a); see Prob. Code § 88 ("will" includes codicil)]. A codicil may also be revoked by being burned, torn, canceled, obliterated, or destroyed by the testator, or by another person in the testator's presence and at the testator's direction, with the intention and purpose of revoking it [Prob. Code § 6120(b)]. Certain provisions in a codicil may also be revoked if the testator's marriage is dissolved or annulled after the will is executed [see Prob. Code § 6122 (revocation by annulment or dissolution of marriage)]. For a discussion of this type of revocation, see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.19[3]. Similarly, if the testator has formed a domestic partnership and that partnership is later terminated, the termination revokes any codicil provisions devising property to the former domestic partner, creating powers of appointment in favor of the former domestic partner, or nominating the former domestic partner as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian [see Prob. Code § 6122.1 (revocation by termination of domestic partnership)]. For a discussion of this type of revocation, see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.19[4].

A presumption of revocation may arise if, under circumstances specified in the Probate Code, a duly executed will or codicil cannot be found after the testator's death [see Prob. Code § 6124 (presumption of revocation)]; see also Prob. Code § 88 ("will" includes codicil)]. For a discussion of this presumption, see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.19[2].

[2] Effect of Revocation on Prior Will

When a codicil is revoked, a question arises as to whether the revocation revives those portions of the will that had been modified or revoked by the codicil. The answer to that question is not entirely clear.

The Probate Code provides that revocation of a will that, had it remained in effect, would have revoked a prior will in whole or in part, does not revive the prior will unless it is evident that the testator intended the prior will to take effect as executed [Prob. Code § 6123(a)]. However, a decision under a similar but not identical provision of former law [former Prob. Code § 75 (repealed Jan. 1, 1985)] refused to extend the application of that statute to codicils and instead adopted the common law rule that revocation of a codicil leaves the original will in force and effect as written [ Estate of Hering (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 88, 95, 166 Cal. Rptr. 298 ]. Since the Probate Code now specifically defines "will" to include codicils [Prob. Code § 88]--a definition not found under prior law--and the current revival statute, unlike prior law, specifically refers to partial revocation [compare Prob. Code § 6123 with former Prob. Code § 75 (repealed Jan. 1, 1985)], it appears that this case may no longer be the law. However, further legislative or judicial action will be necessary for a final resolution of this point.

In any case, the question ultimately depends on the intent of the testator. If the codicil is revoked by an act of the testator, intent to revive the affected provisions in the original will may be shown by the circumstances of the revocation or by the testator's contemporary or subsequent declarations that the testator intended the will to take effect as originally written [Prob. Code § 6123(a)]. If the codicil is revoked by another codicil or a new will, intent to revive the affected provisions in the original will must be shown from the terms of the new codicil or will [Prob. Code § 6123(b)]. Thus, an attorney drafting an instrument that revokes a codicil can avoid the uncertainty noted in this section simply by specifying in the instrument whether or not the revocation is intended to revive any or all of the affected provisions in the original will.

 CHAPTER 62 CODICILS
 PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.34

§ 62.34 Effect of Revocation of Will on Codicils

Before January 1, 1985, former Prob. Code § 79 provided that the revocation of a will revoked all of its codicils [former Prob. Code § 79, repealed Jan. 1, 1985, by Stats. 1983, ch. 842, § 18]. The courts qualified this rule by providing that if a codicil was sufficiently complete to stand on its own as a will and the underlying will was revoked by the testator with the intent that the comprehensive terms of the codicil be given effect as the testator's final testamentary expression, the codicil became a will and was not revoked by revocation of the underlying will [ Estate of Cuneo (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 196, 202, 32 Cal. Rptr. 409, 384 P.2d 1 ]. Prob. Code § 79 was repealed effective January 1, 1985, and not replaced by a comparable provision. The Law Revision Commission's notes to this repeal state that the failure to enact a comparable provision was intended to leave the question of whether revocation of a will revokes its codicils to case law development [16 Calif. L. Rev. Comm'n Rep. 2502 (1982)].

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
 CHAPTER 62 CODICILS
 PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.35

§ 62.35 Codicil as Republication of Will

Before January 1, 1985, the execution of a codicil referring to a previous will had the effect of republishing the will as modified by the codicil [see former Prob. Code § 25 (repealed Jan. 1, 1985)]. The Probate Code revision that became effective on January 1, 1985, did not continue this provision. The original purpose of the repealed provision was to extend the effect of a will to cover property acquired after the date the will was executed, and the authors of the 1985 revision felt that its continuation was unnecessary because under current law a will passes all property that the testator owns at death, including property acquired after execution of the will [16 Calif. L. Rev. Comm'n Rep. 2499 (1982)].

The republication rule was also used to incorporate by reference documents referred to in the will but not in the codicil that came into existence after the will was made but before the codicil was executed [see Simon v. Grayson (1940) 15 Cal. 2d 531, 534, 102 P.2d 1081]. Since the republication rule has been repealed, and since the general rule, expressed in Prob. Code § 6130, is that a writing may be incorporated in a will by reference only if it is in existence when the will is executed, it appears that a codicil may no longer be used to incorporate a post-testamentary document in the will.

Although a codicil no longer automatically acts as a republication of the will, this does not necessarily mean that a codicil cannot still have this effect if it expressly so provides. Since the paramount rule in the construction and interpretation of wills is to give effect to the intent of the testator [Prob. Code § 21102(a)], a statement in a codicil that it is intended to republish the will should still be given effect as an expression of testamentary intent. Accordingly, the codicil forms in this chapter contain such a provision. The attorney should bear in mind, however, that the validity and effect of such a provision under post-1985 law have not been judicially determined.

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
CHAPTER 62 CODICILS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

*23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.36§ 62.36 Problems Involving Omitted Spouse or Child

The Probate Code contains provisions that protect the inheritance rights of certain persons, who are referred to as "omitted heirs" [see Prob. Code §§ 21600-21630]. A spouse who was married and a child who was born or adopted after the execution of all of the decedent's "testamentary instruments" qualify as omitted heirs [Prob. Code §§ 21610 (spouse), 21620], as does a living child for whom the decedent made no provision in any of the decedent's "testamentary instruments" solely because the decedent believed the child to be dead or was unaware of the child's birth [Prob. Code § 21622]. For this purpose, the "decedent's testamentary instruments" means the decedent's will or revocable trust [Prob. Code § 21601(a)]. No other person who was in being at the time of the execution of the testamentary instruments will qualify as an omitted heir [for discussion, see § 61.16[2], [3]].

If a person marries or has a child after executing a will or a revocable trust instrument, and later executes a codicil that does not provide for the spouse or child, a question may arise as to whether the spouse or child qualifies as an omitted heir. The Probate Code provides that a spouse or child will not receive a share of the estate if the failure to provide for the child or spouse "in the decedent's testamentary instruments was intentional and that intention appears from the testamentary instruments" [Prob. Code §§ 21611(a) (spouse), 21621(a) (child), emphasis added]. There is no question that a codicil is a "testamentary instrument" [see Prob. Code §§ 88 ("will" includes codicil), 21601(a) ("decedent's testamentary instruments" means the decedent's will or revocable trust)]; but one instrument may not satisfy the requirement that the necessary intention appears from "the testamentary instruments." It may be argued that in determining the decedent's intentions respecting the spouse or child, the court should look at all of the instruments and, if any one of them reflects an intention not to provide for the spouse or child, the requirements of Prob. Code §§ 21611(a) and 21612(a) will be satisfied. However, it is recommended that if a client wishes to exclude a spouse or child from any share in either the probate estate or the trust estate, the intention not to provide for the spouse or child should be clearly reflected in all the applicable instruments. When a codicil is drafted, the codicil should evidence that intention with respect to any persons who might qualify as omitted heirs. The intention not to provide for a person who would otherwise share in the client's estate is traditionally expressed in a disinheritance clause. For general discussion of disinheritance clauses, see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.17.

PART III. TRANSACTION GUIDE

A. Client Interview--Facts and Documents

23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.100

§ 62.100 Facts

1. Name, address, relationship to testator, and birthdate, if relevant, of:
  - a. New beneficiary.
  - b. Substitute or new executor.
  - c. Current beneficiary whose gift will be altered or corrected.
2. Change of bequest.
  - a. Bequest as it appears in original will, and to whom bequested.
  - b. Nature of change, such as same bequest to new beneficiary, different bequest to same beneficiary, or revocation or addition of bequest.
  - c. If new legacy to same beneficiary is of same nature as in original will, whether bequest is cumulative or substitutionary.
  - d. Alternate disposition in event beneficiary predeceases testator.
3. Other amendments to will.
  - a. Addition of provision to will.
  - b. Revocation of provision in will.

c. Correction of error in will.

d. Other changes in or additions to will, previous codicil, or both.

4. Whether testator has married or whether a child of testator has been born or adopted after execution of original will, and, if so, whether testator wishes to provide for that spouse or child.

NOTE: A spouse married and a child born or adopted after the execution of all of the testator's "testamentary instruments" will qualify as omitted heirs, and may be entitled to inherit part of the testator's estate in the absence of some provision in the testator's will, codicil, or revocable trust instrument, if any [see Prob. Code §§ 21600-21630 (omitted spouses and children); see also Prob. Code § 21601(a) ("decendent's testamentary instruments" means the decedent's will or revocable trust)]. For general discussion of the inheritance rights of omitted heirs, see § 61.16[2], [3].

5. Whether testator's marriage has been dissolved or annulled since execution of original will.

NOTE: If, after executing a will, the testator's marriage is dissolved or annulled, the dissolution or annulment revokes any disposition of property made by the will to the former spouse [Prob. Code § 6122(a)(1)]. Similarly, the termination of the testator's domestic partnership revokes any disposition or appointment of property made by the will to the former domestic partner [Prob. Code § 6122.1(a)(1)]. For discussion, see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.19[4]. In most cases, this revocation will disrupt the testamentary scheme to such an extent that execution of a new will is preferable to drafting a codicil.

PART III. TRANSACTION GUIDE
B. Procedural Guide to Drafting Codicils

§ 62.120 Preliminary Determinations

1. Determine purpose of codicil.

a. Amendment of will (e.g., to increase gift to particular beneficiary) [ see § 62.200-62.202].

b. Supplement to will (e.g., to add gift to new beneficiary or new gift to present beneficiary) [ see §§ 62.200, 62.201].

c. Revocation of will.

(1) Codicil may be used to revoke will in its entirety [Prob. Code § 6120(a); see Prob. Code § 88 ("will" includes codicil)], but it is seldom used for this purpose because new will is better for completely revoking will in conjunction with new disposition of estate.

(2) Codicil can be used to partially revoke will, such as to delete a provision for a particular bequest [ see § 62.201].

d. Revocation of previous codicil [ see § 62.203].

e. Republication of will.

NOTE: The former rule that a codicil automatically had the effect of republishing the will [former Prob. Code § 25 (repealed eff. Jan. 1, 1985)] has been repealed. For a discussion of current uncertainties resulting from this repeal, including whether a testator can specifically provide in the codicil that it acts as a republication of the will, see § 62.35.

f. Revival of revoked will [ see Prob. Code § 6123(b)].

g. Validation of invalid will, such as incorporating by reference a will not properly executed into a properly executed codicil [see Estate of Plumel (1907) 151 Cal. 77, 79, 90 P. 192 ; see also Prob. Code § 6130].

2. Determine whether codicil, rather than new will, should be drafted, and consider the following:

a. Effect that codicil will have on will.

NOTE: Codicils ordinarily should only be used to make minor changes in the will. If the changes are extensive, it is considered better practice to have an entirely new will executed.

b. Executing a codicil will require:

(1) Proving the proper execution of two separate documents for admission of will and codicil to probate.

(2) Probating and referring to two separate documents at all times during probate administration.

c. Any discrepancies between will and codicil can cause problems in interpretation.

NOTE: For example, in Estate of Steele [(1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 106, 117-120, 169 Cal. Rptr. 635], the court concluded that a holographic codicil which left an annuity to a companion of the testator indicated an intention that the annuity recipient was to receive the stated amount without a pro rata deduction for death taxes, despite the absence of any express language to that effect.

An attorney drafting a codicil that adds a specific bequest should consider the effect of the bequest on the apportionment of death taxes in the overall estate, and in appropriate instances should specify whether or not a pro rata deduction is intended [for discussion of apportionment of taxes, see Ch. 63, Will Provisions, § 63.310[1]].

d. While any number of codicils can be made, several codicils complicate problems referred to above; therefore, if one or two codicils have already been made, execution of new will is preferable to execution of another codicil.

e. If testator's marriage has been dissolved or annulled, or the testator's domestic partnership has been terminated, since execution of original will, it is likely that testamentary scheme has been disrupted to such an extent that execution of new will is preferable to amendment of existing will by codicil [see Prob. Code §§ 6122(a), (c), 6122.1(a), (c)].

 PART III. TRANSACTION GUIDE
 B. Procedural Guide to Drafting Codicils

23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.121

§ 62.121 Drafting Codicil

1. Select most appropriate model form for codicil.

- a. First codicil amending and supplementing will [§ 62.200].
- b. Second codicil supplementing, partially revoking, and amending will [§ 62.201].
- c. First codicil nominating substitute executor [§ 62.202].
- d. Second codicil revoking first codicil [§ 62.203].

e. Codicil giving testator's interest in certain property to surviving spouse to meet transmutation requirements of Estate of MacDonald [ see § 62.204].

NOTE: In Estate of MacDonald [see Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 262, 272, 272 Cal. Rptr. 153, 794 P.2d 911 ] the California Supreme Court held that words by which one spouse "gives" the other spouse any interest the first spouse may have in a particular account or asset will constitute an "express declaration" for purposes of Fam. Code § 852(a) and thus satisfy the requirements for a valid transmutation of the property [see Fam. Code § 852(a)]. This kind of transmutation can be important when a revocable inter vivos trust is funded [ see Ch. 73, Funding a Revocable Trust ]. For a general discussion of transmutation requirements and Estate of MacDonald, see § 73.12[3].

2. Draft codicil, making appropriate modifications to model form selected.

- a. Observe general rules and suggestions applicable to drafting of wills [ see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms ].

b. If codicil being prepared is not first codicil to will, clearly refer to each previous codicil.

c. If codicil revokes an earlier codicil that amended or revoked portions of will, be sure to specify whether or not revocation of codicil is intended to revive those revoked or amended provisions.

NOTE: There is some uncertainty regarding whether or not revocation of a codicil revives portions of the will that had been modified or revoked by the codicil in the absence of a statement of testamentary intent. For discussion of the problem, see § 62.33[2]. However, this uncertainty can easily be avoided simply by clearly specifying the intended effect on any provisions in the will that were modified or revoked by the prior codicil [see Prob. Code § 6123(b)].

d. If codicil incorporates any document by reference:

(1) Clearly identify document; and

(2) State date document was executed or otherwise came into existence [see Prob. Code § 6130].

NOTE: A codicil, like a will, should not attempt to incorporate by reference a document not in existence at the time the will is executed [Prob. Code § 6130], such as a trust that has not yet been drafted or a letter containing testamentary instructions that has not yet been written.

e. If codicil adds one or more specific bequests, specify effect of those bequests on apportionment of death taxes in overall estate, and, if appropriate, whether or not pro rata deduction is intended [for discussion of apportionment of taxes, see Ch. 63, Will Provisions, § 63.310[1]].

f. If testator has either married or had a child subsequent to date will was originally executed, modify codicil to either:

NOTE: If a person marries or has a child after executing a will or a revocable trust instrument, and later executes a codicil that does not provide for the spouse or child, a question may arise as to whether the spouse or child qualifies as an omitted heir [see discussion under § 62.36]. The rights of omitted spouses and children are defined in Prob. Code §§ 21600-21630. For general discussion of these rights, see § 61.16[2], [3]. Questions of this kind can be avoided by either providing for the spouse or the child in the codicil, or by including a provision clearly stating the intention not to provide for the spouse or the child. Intention not to provide for a spouse or child is traditionally expressed in a disinheritance clause [for discussion, see § 61.17].

(1) Provide for that spouse or child; or

(2) Identify that spouse or child by name and specifically state that testator has intentionally failed to provide for that spouse or child.

CHAPTER 62 CODICILS
PART IV. FORMS

23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.200

§ 62.200 First Codicil Amending and Supplementing Will

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a codicil that may be used to make a change in a paragraph of a previously executed will and to add a new paragraph to the same will. It is assumed that this will be the first codicil to the will.

Codicils of this kind are frequently used when testators wish to change the names of devisees or the amounts or descriptions of testamentary gifts. If the changes are relatively minor and the will is lengthy, it may be more expedient to execute a codicil than a new will. However, a codicil should be drafted with caution. If a gift originally made in the will is also made in the codicil, the drafter must clearly indicate whether the gift is intended to be in addition to, or instead of, the original gift, inasmuch as a second gift of quantity to the same legatee is presumed to be cumulative unless there is intrinsic evidence of contrary intent [ Estate of Lund (1973) 110 Cal. Rptr. 183 ]. For factors that should be considered in determining whether to draft a codicil or a new will, see § 62.120, P 2.

[b] Republication of Will

This form (and the other codicil forms in this chapter) contains language purporting to confirm and republish the testator's will. Republication is discussed under "Codicil as Republication of Will" in the Legal Background. As noted in that discussion, repeal of the former rule that a codicil automatically republished the will [see former Prob. Code § 25, repealed Jan. 1, 1985] raises some uncertainty as to the validity of a republication provision in a codicil. It seems likely, however, that a republication provision would be held valid, even absent specific statutory authority, as a clear expression of testamentary intent [see Prob. Code § 21102(a) (intent of testator); see also Prob. Code § 6130 (incorporation of documents by reference)]. In any event, its inclusion is unlikely to have any adverse effects.

[c] Proration of Death Taxes

This form also contains an optional provision specifying what property will bear the burden of payment of any estate taxes attributable to property that passes under the codicil. It is the general rule that estate taxes must be equitably prorated among the persons interested in the estate [Prob. Code § 20110(a)]. However, the testator may direct that specific property be applied to the satisfaction of an estate tax or that specific sums or proportions of the estate tax be satisfied from particular gifts [Prob. Code § 20110(b)(1)]. The will may provide, for example, that all of the death taxes will be paid out of the residue of the estate [for a will provision requiring payment of all death taxes out of residue, see Ch. 63, Will Provisions, § 63.310]. If, however, the will specifies a particular scheme for proration of death taxes and the testator later executes a codicil making additional gifts, doubts may arise as to whether the testator intended the additional gifts to be subject to the proration scheme [see, e.g., Estate of Steele (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 106, 117-120, 169 Cal. Rptr. 635 (annuity not subject to payment of taxes)]. A careful drafter will clearly specify whether the proration scheme set forth in the will (or any other proration scheme) is also intended to apply to the gifts made in the codicil.

The statutory procedure for prorating estate taxes does not include consideration of future income tax consequences. Unless income tax consequences can be ascertained with reasonable certainty for purposes of equitable reallocation at the time of distribution, the beneficiaries of an estate are responsible for paying their own future income taxes [ Klein v. Hughes (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 121, 128-131, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 613 ].

For a general discussion of proration of death taxes, see Ch. 63, Will Provisions, § 63.310[1][d].

[d] Execution of Codicil

The requirements for execution of a witnessed codicil are the same as those for a witnessed will [see Prob. Code §§ 6110, 6112; see also Prob. Code § 88 ("will" includes codicil) and Ch. 63, Will Provisions, §§ 63.710[1], 63.720[1]]. The signature and attestation clauses in this form (like the signature and attestation clauses in the other forms in this chapter) may be used when the testator is able to sign his or her own name. They include two alternative provisions, one of which may be used when the witnesses have witnessed the signing of the will and the other of which may be used when the witnesses have witnessed the acknowledgment of the signature or the acknowledgment of the will [see Prob. Code § 6110(b), (c)].

If the codicil is to be signed in the testator's name and at the testator's direction by a person other than the testator [see Prob. Code § 6110(b)(2)], the signature clause in § 63.711 and the attestation clause in § 63.731, both in Ch. 63, Will Provisions, should be used in place of the signature and attestation clauses in this form. If the codicil is to be signed by witnessed mark, use the forms in Ch. 63, Will Provisions, § 63.712 (signature clause) and § 63.732 (attestation clause) in place of the clauses in this form. If the testator is sight-impaired or sightless, use the form in Ch. 63, Will Provisions, § 63.733 in place of the attestation clause in this form.

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
CHAPTER 62 CODICILS
PART IV. FORMS

23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.201

§ 62.201 Second Codicil Supplementing, Partially Revoking, and Amending Will

[1] Comment--Use of Form

This form is a second codicil to a will. It adds a new provision to the will, revokes another provision without substitution, and modifies a third provision. It differs from § 62.200 in that it illustrates the use of a codicil for revoking a provision of the will, and the appropriate provision for a second codicil in the Introductory Paragraph and in Article Fifth.

A second codicil to a will need not refer to the first codicil. However, if the second codicil does not refer to the first, there may be a question of whether the second revokes the first [see Estate of Dubois (1949) 211 P.2d 895]. For additional discussion of problems relating to revocation of a codicil, see § 62.33.

For further discussion of the use of codicils, see § 62.200[1].

PART IV. FORMS

23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.203

§ 62.203 Second Codicil Revoking First Codicil

[1] Comment--Use of Form

This form is a second codicil revoking the first codicil to a will. The effect of its use is to make the will as originally written fully effective without any modification.

It is extremely important that a codicil revoking all or part of a prior codicil specify whether or not the revocation is intended to revive affected provisions in the will. Failure to do so can result in confusion over the testator's intent, and the law in the absence of an expression of testamentary intent is unsettled [see Prob. Code § 6123 (no revival absent testamentary intent); but see Estate of Hering (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 88, 95, 166 Cal. Rptr. 298 (refusing to extend former Prob. Code § 25 [repealed eff. Jan 1, 1985] to codicils and adopting common law rule that revocation of codicil leaves original will in force and effect as written); see also § 62.33[2]].

CHAPTER 62 CODICILS
PART IV. FORMS

23-62 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 62.204

§ 62.204 Codicil Transmuting Property of Married Person

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a codicil to a will by terms of which a married person gives any interest he or she may have in a life insurance policy or retirement benefit (such as a pension plan, 401(k) account, IRA, or Keogh plan) to the surviving spouse. The codicil is designed to meet the statutory transmutation requirements set forth in Estate of MacDonald [see Fam. Code § 852(a); see also Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 262, 272, 272 Cal. Rptr. 153, 794 P.2d 911 ].

[b] Transmutation Requirements Under *Estate of MacDonald

In Estate of MacDonald [ Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 262, 272, 272 Cal. Rptr. 153, 794 P.2d 911 ], the California Supreme Court held that words by which one spouse "gives" the other spouse any interest the first spouse may have in a particular account or asset will constitute an "express declaration" for purposes of Fam. Code § 852(a) and thus satisfy the requirements for a valid transmutation [see Fam. Code § 852(a); Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 262, 273, 272 Cal. Rptr. 153, 794 P.2d 911 ]. For a general discussion of transmutation requirements and Estate of MacDonald, see § 73.12[3]. For a discussion of the various types of retirement benefits that might be affected by this type of codicil, see § 73.27.

[c] Addition of New Section to Will

This form adds a new section to the testator's will. If an addition to the terms of the will is all that is required in a specific case, then this form may be used without substantial revision. If, however, it is necessary to delete a provision of that will, or merely to amend one of its provisions, this form should be modified appropriately.

[2] FORM

Codicil Transmuting Property of Married Person

_____ [FIRST or SECOND, etc.] CODICIL TO WILL OF _____ [name] DATED _____ [date]

_____ [Paragraph number] I, _____ [full legal name of testator], a resident of _____ County, California, declare that this is the _____ [first or second, etc.] codicil to my will dated _____ [date] [if testator's will has been amended by any previous codicils, add reference to each such codicil and the date each codicil was executed, e.g., as amended by the first codicil thereto dated _____, and the second codicil thereto dated _____].

Section 1. The following new Section _____ [number] is added to page _____ [number] of the above-mentioned will:

Section _____ [number] . Gift of Insurance Policy and Pension Benefits. If at the time of my death I have any interest subject to disposition by will in any life, accident, or other similar insurance policy on the life of my spouse, or in a pension plan, 401(k) account, IRA account, or similar plan or account in which my spouse is a participant, I give all incidents of ownership therein to my spouse if _____ [he or she] she survives me. If my spouse either fails to survive me or wholly disclaims this gift, I leave those policies and benefits as part of the residue of my estate.

Section 2. In every other respect, I confirm and republish the above-mentioned will [add reference to each codicil not revoked or superseded, and the date each codicil was executed, e.g., as amended by the first codicil thereto dated _____, and the second codicil thereto dated _____].

The foregoing _____ [first or second, etc.] codicil to my will dated _____, is executed on _____ [date] , at _____ [city or town and state in which codicil is signed, e.g., San Francisco, California].

CHAPTER 63 WILL PROVISIONS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.30

§ 63.30 Organization of Chapter

The forms in this chapter are divided into thirteen principal parts, identified as Parts A through M.

Part A contains provisions that may be included in the introductory paragraph of the will, including provisions identifying the testator, establishing the testator's residence, and revoking prior wills executed by the testator. Part A also includes optional provisions reciting the testator's capacity to make the will, conditionally revoking a former will, and making a conditional will.

Part B contains provisions that identify the testator's family and other beneficiaries.

Part C contains provisions that describe and identify the property that is included in the will. It provides forms applicable to both single and married persons. It also includes optional provisions that may be used to exercise a power of appointment or to state that a power of appointment held by the testator is not to be exercised by the will.

Part D contains provisions relating to the apportionment of death taxes and the payment of specific debts. These forms may be used to apportion taxes on probate assets only or taxes on both probate and nonprobate assets.

Part E contains forms for making devises (testamentary gifts), including forms for general devises, specific devises, demonstrative devises, and residuary devises, as well as forms for making devises of particular kinds of property, such as real property, business property, and tangible and intangible personal property. Part E also contains will provisions affecting devises, including provisions imposing conditions on devises, imposing a survivorship requirement, limiting devises to a specified percentage of the estate, determining devises by objective factors, deferring devises, making gifts of insurance on devised property, making devises to existing trusts ("pour-overs"), incorporating extrinsic writings into the will, specifying whether lifetime devises or transfers will be deemed advancements, providing for the abatement of devises, and providing for the discharge of encumbrances on specific devises.

Part F contains provisions that relate to the residue of the estate and the residuary clause of the will, including general residuary clauses, residuary devises to multiple devisees and classes, provisions relating to the interpretation and operation of the residuary clause, and clauses that relate to liabilities of the residue.

Part G contains provisions relating to the testator's funeral and burial (or cremation) and disposing of the testator's burial plot.

Part H contains a simultaneous death provision that reverses the order of death of the testator and his or her spouse as specified in the Probate Code and that may be useful in appropriate circumstances to minimize federal estate taxes.

Part I contains disinheritance and no contest provisions. This part includes a general disinheritance clause, a long form disinheritance clause including a no contest clause, disinheritance clauses that apply particularly to "omitted" heirs, a provision specifying whether testamentary gifts to "kindred" beneficiaries will or will not lapse if the beneficiaries predecease the testator, and a general form for a no contest clause.

Part J contains will provisions defining various terms that are used elsewhere in the will.

Part K contains miscellaneous will provisions, including provisions as to gender and number, severability, the allocation and distribution of income during administration of the testator's estate, and contracts to make wills. Part K also includes a provision for a natural child adopted out of the testator's family.

Part L contains signature and attestation clauses that may be used in any will.

Part M contains a form for election and waiver by the testator's spouse that may be attached to the testator's will.

DIVISION IV: WILLS AND TRUSTS
 CHAPTER 63 WILL PROVISIONS
 PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.31

§ 63.31 Construction of Wills

The Probate Code provides general rules for the construction of instruments [see Prob. Code §§ 21101-21140]. These rules apply broadly to wills, trusts, deeds, and other instruments [Prob. Code § 21101]. However, these rules are subject to the basic principle that the intention of the testator as expressed in the will controls the legal effect of the dispositions made in the will [Prob. Code § 21102(a)]. Accordingly, the Probate Code rules apply only when the intention of the testator is not otherwise indicated by the will [Prob. Code § 21102(b)]. In addition, the use of extrinsic evidence is not precluded, to the extent otherwise authorized by law, to determine the testator's intention [Prob. Code § 21102(c)]. For general coverage of the statutory rules of construction, see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms. In this chapter, statutory rules relating to specific will provisions are discussed in the comments to the corresponding forms.

§ 63.120 General Drafting Considerations

1. Review general will drafting rules and suggestions [see § 61.130], with particular emphasis on rules for correct identification of beneficiaries.
2. In drafting any individual will provision, consider effect of provision upon remainder of will.

NOTE:

When integrating any individual will provision into a standard will form there is always the possibility that some inconsistency may result. A very thorough review of the completed will is vital to spot and eliminate any inconsistencies prior to execution of the will.

CHAPTER 63 WILL PROVISIONS

PART IV. FORMS

A. Introductory Paragraph of Will

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.200

§ 63.200 Introductory Declaration--Short Form

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a short form clause for the introductory paragraph of a will. It identifies the testator, states the testator's county of residence, and declares that the document is the testator's will. It also revokes all the testator's prior wills and codicils. For complete will forms, see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms.

[b] Who May Make a Will

Every individual who is 18 or more years of age and of sound mind may make a will [Prob. Code § 6100(a)].

An emancipated minor is regarded as an adult for certain purposes, including making or revoking a will [Fam. Code § 7050(e)(6)]. An emancipated minor is a person under the age of 18 years who has done any of the following [Fam. Code § 7002]:

- Entered into a valid marriage (whether or not the marriage has been dissolved);
- Is on active duty with the armed forces of the United States; or
- Received a declaration of emancipation pursuant to Fam. Code § 7122.

For coverage of the judicial procedure whereby a minor may obtain a declaration of emancipation, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 245, Emancipation of Minors (Matthew Bender).

[c] Testamentary Capacity

Prob. Code § 6100.5 provides that a person is not mentally competent to make a will if, at the time the will is made, either of the following is true:

- The person does not have sufficient mental capacity to do one or more of the following [Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)(1)]:
  - Understand the nature of the testamentary act;
  - Understand and recollect the nature and situation of his or her property; or
  - Remember and understand his or her relations to his or her living descendants, spouse, and parents, and those whose interests are affected by the will.
- The person suffers from a mental disorder with symptoms including delusions or hallucinations that result in the person devising his or her property in a way that he or she would not otherwise have done [Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)(2)].

Prob. Code § 6100.5 applies to all testators who die on or after January 1, 1985, regardless of when the will in question was executed [see Prob. Code § 6103]. However, Prob. Code § 6100.5 substantially restates case law in effect prior to that date [see Estate of Nelson (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 42, 53, 38 Cal. Rptr. 459 ("testamentary capacity" defined); Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 372, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656 ("sound mind" defined)]. Before the adoption of Prob. Code § 6100.5, courts were careful to distinguish incompetence to make a will from mental conditions that have legal significance in other contexts. Thus, it was held that an order of involuntary commitment to a hospital does not necessarily indicate that a testator lacks the capacity to make a will [ Estate of Powers (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 480, 483-484, 184 P.2d 319 ]. Further, an adjudication of insanity, by itself, does not prove that the testator is incompetent to make a will [ Estate of De Graaf (1939) 34 Cal. App. 2d 120, 122-123, 93 P.2d 199 ].

Similarly, an order establishing a conservatorship does not constitute an adjudication of testamentary incapacity. A conservator may be appointed for any person who is unable properly to provide for his or her personal needs for physical health, food, clothing, or shelter [Prob. Code § 1801(a)]. A person may be unable to provide for personal needs but still understand the nature of the testamentary act, the nature and situation of his or her property, and his or her relations to the natural objects of his or her bounty. Although appointment may have some bearing on the testator's testamentary capacity, appointment in itself furnishes only a weak inference of lack of testamentary capacity [see Conservatorship of Bookasta (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 445, 450 n.5, 265 Cal. Rptr. 1 ].

Although an adjudication of incompetence may raise an inference that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the time of the adjudication [ Estate of Fossa (1962) 210 Cal. App. 2d 464, 468-469, 26 Cal. Rptr. 687 ], it does not establish that the incapacity continued thereafter. In all cases, the question is whether the testator possessed testamentary capacity at the time the will was made [ Estate of Bullock (1956) 140 Cal. App. 2d 944, 949, 295 P.2d 954 ]. Prob. Code § 6100.5(b) specifically provides that nothing in it supersedes law in existence on its effective date relating to the admissibility of evidence to prove the existence of mental incompetence or mental disorders.

Although physical or mental infirmity may bear on a testator's capacity to make a will, it is not conclusive on the question. The courts have held that a testator may be of sound mind in spite of lapses of memory [ Estate of Nolan (1938) 25 Cal. App. 2d 738, 743, 78 P.2d 456 ], acute alcoholism [ Estate of Garvey (1940) 38 Cal. App. 2d 449, 456, 101 P.2d 551 ], rages of anger and cruelty toward family members [ In re Estate of Peterkin (1937) 23 Cal. App. 2d 597, 73 P.2d 897 ], and even drug addiction, epilepsy, and suicidal impulses [ Estate of Ross (1962) 204 Cal. App. 2d 82, 95-96, 22 Cal. Rptr. 135 ].

The diagnosis of a mental or physical disorder is not sufficient in itself to support a determination that a person is of unsound mind or lacks the capacity to do a certain act, including the capacity to execute a will [Prob. Code § 811(d)].

That determination must be supported by evidence of a deficit in at least one of a number of specified mental functions, such as alertness and attention, information processing, thought processes, and ability to modulate mood and affect, and there must be evidence of a correlation between the deficit and the act in question [Prob. Code § 811(a)].

[d] When Testator Is Subject to Conservatorship

An order establishing a conservatorship does not constitute an adjudication of testamentary incompetence. A conservator of the person may be appointed for a person who is unable to provide properly for his or her personal needs for physical health, food, clothing, or shelter [Prob. Code § 1801(a)], and a conservator of the estate may be appointed for a person who is substantially unable to manage his or her own financial resources or resist fraud or undue influence [Prob. Code § 1801(b)]. A person may be unable to do these things and still be able to understand the nature of the testamentary act, the nature and situation of his or her property, and his or her relations to the natural objects of his or her bounty [see Conservatorship of Bookasta (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 445, 450 n.5, 265 Cal. Rptr. 1]. Recognizing this, the Probate Code explicitly authorizes a conservatee who is competent to make a will [Prob. Code § 1871(c)]. The Probate Code also authorizes a conservator to make a will for the conservatee if the court first approves the action [Prob. Code §§ 2580(b)(13), 6100(b), 6110(b)(3), 6100.5(c)]. For further discussion, see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.11[3].

[e] Duress, Menace, Fraud, and Undue Influence

[i] In General

The execution or revocation of a will or a part of a will is ineffective to the extent procured by duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence [Prob. Code § 6104]. Duress, fraud, mistake, and undue influence are all grounds for the contest of a will [see Prob. Code § 8252(a) (burden of proof at trial)]. Although duress, menace, fraud, and undue influence are frequently lumped together by will contestants, the words represent distinct legal concepts and often (although not always) arise from different factual situations.

A finding of the existence of any or all of the grounds for contest of a will does not necessarily invalidate the entire instrument. Prob. Code § 6104 provides that "a will or a part of a will" is ineffective to the extent the execution was procured by duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence. If only a part of a will is so procured, then only that part will be ineffective, and the remainder may be admitted to probate [ In re Estate of Webster (1941) 43 Cal. App. 2d 6, 16, 110 P.2d 81 ]. A distinct and independent residuary clause, for example, may be upheld even if it is determined that other bequests in the same will were procured by undue influence and must be declared void [ Estate of Stauffer (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d 35, 43, 297 P.2d 1029 ]. Conversely, if the whole will is the result of fraud, duress, menace, or undue influence, probate of the whole must be refused [ Estate of Webster (1941) 43 Cal. App. 2d 6, 15, 110 P.2d 81 ].

[ii] What Constitutes Fraud

The "fraud" that will vitiate a contract is defined in Civ. Code § 1572 as any of the following acts, committed by a party with intent to deceive another party or to induce the other party to enter into a contract:

- The suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true;
- The positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though the person making the assertion believes it to be true;
- The suppression of that which is true by one having knowledge or belief of the fact;
- A promise made without any intention of performing it; or

- Any other act fitted to deceive.

Although Civ. Code § 1572, by its terms, is applicable only to contracts, the California Supreme Court has held that fraud that is sufficient to vitiate a contract will also invalidate a will [ Estate of Newhall (1923) 190 Cal. 709, 719, 214 P. 231 ]. As it applies to wills, fraud consists of false representations made with the intent to deceive the testator and for the purpose of affecting his or her testamentary disposition [ Estate of Pohlmann (1949) 89 Cal. App. 2d 563, 571, 201 P.2d 446 ]. When fraud is relied on as a ground for contest of a will, the theory is that the testator, though acting of his or her own free will, was deceived by false representations into doing that which he or she would not have done without the fraudulent inducement [ Estate of Newhall (1923) 190 Cal. 709, 718-719, 214 P. 231 ].

It is not necessary that the fraud be perpetrated at the time the will is made. Fraud perpetrated at some earlier time will invalidate a will if the testator's belief in the fraud persisted at the time of execution and if, but for that belief, the will would have been different from that actually executed [ Estate of Newhall (1923) 190 Cal. 709, 722, 214 P. 231 ].

[iii] What Constitutes Undue Influence

"Undue influence," as defined in Civ. Code § 1575, consists of the following:

- The use, by one in whom a confidence is reposed by another, or who holds a real or apparent authority over the other, of that influence or authority for the purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage over the other;
- Taking an unfair advantage of another's weakness of mind; or
- Taking a grossly oppressive and unfair advantage of another's necessities or distress.

Although this definition is specifically applicable to contracts, the courts have also applied it to wills. Thus, it has been held that conduct that subjugates the will of a testator to the will of another, and causes the testator to make a disposition of property different from that which he or she would otherwise have made, is undue influence that will invalidate a will or part of a will [ Estate of Baker (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 480, 182 Cal. Rptr. 550 ]. The essential elements that raise a presumption of undue influence are a confidential or fiduciary relationship between the testator and the person alleged to have exerted undue influence, active participation by that person in the preparation or execution of the will, and undue benefit to that person (or to another) under the will as procured [ Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 96-97, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300 ]. A confidential relationship exists whenever one person reposes trust and confidence in the integrity and fidelity of another [ Estate of Rugani (1952) 108 Cal. App. 2d 624, 630, 239 P.2d 500 ]. Such a relationship exists between husband and wife, attorney and client, physician and patient, and guardian and ward. It may also exist between persons who are closely related by blood or who are intimate friends. "Confidential" and "fiduciary" relations are, in legal contemplation, synonymous, and may be said to exist whenever one person places trust and confidence in another [ Estate of Cover (1922) 188 Cal. 133, 143, 204 P. 583 ]. If a confidential relationship between the testator and a beneficiary under a will cannot be proved by direct evidence, circumstantial evidence may give rise to an inference that the beneficiary had the opportunity to control the testator's will and was active in procuring it [ Estate of Franco (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 374, 385-386, 123 Cal. Rptr. 458 ].

Although undue influence often consists of false or misleading statements made to the testator for the purpose of influencing the testator's will, the Court of Appeal has held that falsity is not an essential element of undue influence and that statements that are perfectly true may be the basis for a claim of undue influence. In one case, two grandchildren sought to set aside a revocable trust instrument executed by their deceased grandmother on the ground that one of the grandmother's cousins had unduly influenced her decision to leave almost none of her property to the grandchildren. The grandchildren were the sole descendants of the grandmother, who was over 90 years of age at the time she executed the trust. The cousin argued that the only facts alleged to constitute undue influence consisted of true statements made by the cousin to the grandmother about the grandchildren. In those statements, the cousin reminded the grandmother that one of the grandchildren was an adopted child and informed the grandmother that the other grandchild had become involved with drugs, had sought treatment in a rehabilitation center, had impregnated his girl friend, and then had paid for the girl friend to have an abortion. The grandchildren conceded that all of these statements were true. The cousin moved the court for summary judgment, arguing that truth was a complete defense to a claim of undue influence and that the First Amendment guarantee of free speech protected her from any liability for making admittedly true statements. The trial court granted the motion, but the Court of Appeal reversed, concluding that although undue influence often consists of untrue statements made to the testator for the purpose of overpowering the testator's free agency, untrue statements are not essential to undue influence. In fact, a claim of undue influence may be supported in whole or in part by proof of completely true statements. The court stated that it is essential to distinguish undue influence from fraud or misrepresentation. Falsity is an essential element of a claim for fraud or misrepresentation, but not of a claim for undue influence. Thus truth is not an absolute defense to a claim of undue influence, as it is to a claim for fraud or misrepresentation, although the truth of statements may tend to negate the inference that they had the effect of unduly influencing the testator (or, in this case, the settlor) [ Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 180-183, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 ].

[iv] What Constitutes Duress and Menace

"Duress," as defined in Civ. Code § 1569, consists of:

- Unlawful confinement of the person of any party, or of the husband or wife of any party, or of an ancestor, descendant, or adopted child of any such party, husband, or wife;
- Unlawful detention of the property of any such person; or
- Confinement of any such person, lawful in form, but fraudulently obtained, or fraudulently made unjustly harassing or oppressive.

"Menace," as defined in Civ. Code § 1570, consists of a threat of:

- "Duress" as specified in the first and third categories immediately above;
- Unlawful and violent injury to the person or property of any person specified above; or
- Injury to the character of any such person.

[f] Title of Will

It is not necessary to title a will "Last Will and Testament." Although the word "will" at one time referred only to a disposition of real property and "testament" only to a disposition of personal property, the words are now regarded as synonymous [Black's Law Dictionary (5th ed. 1979) p. 1321]. Modern drafting practice favors the elimination of unnecessary or antiquated words and phrases whenever possible. Whether a given will is or is not the testator's "last" will be determined, not by the title assigned to it by the drafter, but by the time of the testator's death and whether or not another will is made before that event.

[g] Identity of Testator

For detailed comments on the identity of the testator and additional provisions relating to that identity, see § 63.202.

[h] Recitations of Capacity

It was common at one time for attorneys to include recitations of capacity in wills (e.g., "being of sound and disposing mind and memory" and "not actuated by fraud, duress, menace or undue influence"). Although such recitations do not vitiate a will, they are not generally favored by modern drafting practice and are not included in this form. For a discussion of these recitations and an alternate introductory declaration including them, see § 63.201.

[i] Residence

It is advisable (although not essential) to state the testator's residence, since residence will affect the venue of the administration proceedings and may bear on the law that is applicable to the will. Although the superior court has statewide jurisdiction of all proceedings for administration of decedents' estates [Prob. Code § 7050], the proper venue for an administration proceeding is determined first by the decedent's domicile at the time of death, and second by the character and location of the decedent's probate assets [see Prob. Code §§ 7051, 7052].

If the decedent was domiciled in California at the time of death, the proper county for proceedings concerning administration of the estate is the county in which the decedent was domiciled, regardless of the place of death [Prob. Code § 7051]. If the decedent was domiciled outside California [see Prob. Code § 12505 ("nondomiciliary decedent" defined)], the proper county for administration is determined as follows: If the nondomiciliary decedent left property located in the county in which he or she died, that county is the proper county for administration proceedings [Prob. Code § 7052(a)]. If no property of the nondomiciliary decedent is located in the county in which the decedent died, or if the decedent did not die in California, any county in which property of the decedent is located is the proper county, regardless of where the decedent died [Prob. Code § 7052(b)]. If the nondomiciliary decedent left property located in more than one California county, the proper county is the county in which a petition for ancillary administration is first filed [Prob. Code § 7052(b); see Prob. Code §§ 12501 ("ancillary administration" defined), 12510-12542 (rules for conduct of ancillary administration proceedings in California); see also Ch. 65, Executors, § 65.34 et seq.].

A written will is valid if its execution complies with any of the following [Prob. Code § 6113]:

- Provisions of the California Probate Code relating to written wills [see Prob. Code §§ 6110, 6111];
- Provisions of the California Probate Code relating to California statutory wills [see Prob. Code §§ 6200-6243];
- Provisions of the California Probate Code relating to international wills [see Prob. Code §§ 6380-6390];
- The law (at the time of execution) of the place where the will was executed; or
- The law of the place where at the time of execution or at the time of death the testator was domiciled, had a place of abode, or was a national.

[j] Revocation of Prior Wills and Codicils

A will should include a clause or provision expressly revoking prior wills and codicils, either as part of the introductory declaration or as a separate paragraph. For detailed comments on revocation and additional provisions relating to revocation, see § 63.202.

[2] FORM

CHAPTER 63 WILL PROVISIONS

PART IV. FORMS

A. Introductory Paragraph of Will

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.201

§ 63.201 Introductory Declaration--Recitations of Capacity

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used as an introductory declaration when it is desired to include recitations as to the capacity (soundness of mind, age, and freedom from fraud, duress, menace, and undue influence) of the testator. For an introductory declaration without such recitations, see § 63.200.

For a discussion of the law relating to emancipated minors, what constitutes a sound mind, and grounds for contest of wills, see § 63.200[1].

[b] Recitation of Capacity to Make a Will

[i] Freedom From Fraud, Duress, Menace, or Undue Influence

It was common at one time for attorneys to include recitations of capacity in the introductory paragraphs of wills. These recitations commonly stated that the testator was "of sound and disposing mind and memory" and "not actuated by any fraud, duress, menace, or undue influence." Recognizing that these recitations have little or no probative force, many attorneys now eliminate them. A testator's statement that he or she is not actuated by fraud, duress, menace, or undue influence is, at best, of minimal value. A testator who is acting under fraud will not be aware of the fact, and a testator who has been induced by duress, menace, or undue influence to make a will in all probability will have been similarly induced to declare that the will was free of any such influence. Moreover, every testator is presumed to be of sound mind and to possess testamentary capacity until the contrary is established [ Estate of Sanderson (1959) 171 Cal. App. 2d 651, 660, 341 P.2d 358 ].

Recitations of capacity, however, will not vitiate a will or any of its provisions. At worst, such provisions may be regarded as surplusage. It is the opinion of some attorneys that recitations of capacity serve a valuable purpose in that they remind testators of the importance of the will they are making and of the solemnity of the act of execution. They argue that such recitations may forestall potential will contests, as persons who are unhappy with the provisions of a will, upon reading a recitation in the document that it was made by a person of "sound and disposing mind and memory" who was "not actuated by fraud, duress, menace, or undue influence," may be discouraged from challenging the will. Although modern drafting practice does not favor such recitations, whether they should be included in a will is a matter that each attorney must decide.

[ii] Recitations of Testator's Age

It is not necessary to recite that the testator is of "legal age," "lawful age," or "over the age of majority." The age of the testator is a fact that is usually quite easy to prove, and is rarely the subject of dispute. If the age of the testator is in issue, testamentary declarations that are contrary to fact will do little to resolve the question. Further, it is always presumed that the testator was competent to make a will [ Estate of Somers (1948) 82 Cal. App. 2d 757, 187 P.2d 433 ]. It is a relatively simple matter, however, to include a statement that the testator is "eighteen or more years of age" or is an "emancipated minor." If the testator is a very young adult or an emancipated minor, it may be advisable for the attorney to include such a declaration.

CHAPTER 63 WILL PROVISIONS

PART IV. FORMS

A. Introductory Paragraph of Will

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.202

§ 63.202 Introductory Declaration--Identity of Testator

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form contains alternative provisions relating to the identity of the testator. When appropriate, these provisions may be used with or inserted in the introductory paragraph of the will [see §§ 63.200, 63.201].

The first alternative provision may be used to state additional names by which the testator has been or is known. The second may be used to state the maiden name of a married woman or the former name of any person whose name has been changed. The third alternative may be used to refer to another document in which the testator is named.

These provisions will help the personal representative identify and locate assets in which the testator had an interest and which might otherwise remain undetected after the testator's death. A statement of identity may be particularly important in the case of a trust that has been created for the benefit of the testator and in which the testator's name is different from the name which appears in the title of the will.

The first name that appears in this provision (and the name that appears in the title of the will) should be the testator's full legal name.

[b] Identity of Testator

When there is any possibility of confusion in the identity of the testator, the introductory paragraph of the will should contain some facts enabling proper identification. Where the testator has used more than one name or more than one form of a name (e.g., John Smith, John N. Smith, John Norton Smith, J. N. Smith), all of the names and all of the forms of the names should be set out. This may be done by using the phrase "also known as." A married woman who has assumed her husband's name, or any person who has legally changed his or her name, may use the phrase "formerly known as."

When drafting a will, it is particularly important for the attorney to learn what names (or forms of a name) the testator has used in taking title to real property, stocks and bonds, bank accounts or certificates, or other assets, and the name or names, if any, under which the testator may have a beneficial interest in a trust.

CHAPTER 63 WILL PROVISIONS

PART IV. FORMS

A. Introductory Paragraph of Will

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.203

§ 63.203 Revocation of Prior Wills

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a clause that revokes all prior wills and codicils made by the testator. To avoid inconsistencies between the present will and former wills and codicils, a clause revoking prior wills and codicils should be included in the introductory paragraph [see § 63.200] or set forth in a separate paragraph of the will.

[b] Revocation of Wills

[i] Generally

A will or any part of a will may be revoked by a subsequent will that revokes the prior will expressly or by inconsistency, or by being burned, torn, canceled, obliterated, or destroyed, with the intent and for the purpose of revoking it [Prob. Code § 6120(a), (b)].

If the testator's marriage is dissolved or annulled, or the testator's domestic partnership has been terminated, after execution of a will, the dissolution, annulment or termination revokes the following unless the will expressly provides otherwise [Prob. Code §§ 6122(a), 6122.1(a)]:

- Any disposition or appointment of property made by the will to the former spouse or domestic partner.
- Any provision of the will conferring a general or special power of appointment on the former spouse or domestic partner.
- Any provision of the will nominating the former spouse or domestic partner as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian.

Former Prob. Code § 79 (repealed effective January 1, 1985) provided that the revocation of a will revokes all of its codicils. Even before repeal of this section, the rule had been qualified by a decision holding that, if a codicil is capable of standing on its own as a will, revocation of the underlying will does not revoke the codicil [ Estate of Cuneo (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 196, 202, 32 Cal. Rptr. 409 ]. Prob. Code § 6120 does not continue the rule that revocation of a will automatically revokes its codicils. As in the case of the will itself, the question of whether a codicil to the will has or has not been revoked must be answered by ascertaining the intent of the testator.

[ii] By Subsequent Will

A will or part of a will may be revoked by a later will executed by the same testator [Prob. Code § 6120(a); Estate of Nielson (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 796, 803, 165 Cal. Rptr. 319 ]. The later will must, of course, have been executed in compliance with the statutory formalities required for wills [ Estate of Nielson (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 796, 803, 165 Cal. Rptr. 319, citing former Prob. Code § 74 (repealed Jan. 1, 1985)]. There is no requirement, however, that a formal witnessed will be revoked by another formal witnessed will. Thus a formal witnessed will may be revoked by a valid holographic will, by a codicil to the earlier will, or even by interlineations in or marginal notations on the earlier will, provided those interlineations or notations are in themselves the equivalent of a valid will or codicil [ Estate of Nielson (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 796, 803, 165 Cal. Rptr. 319; see Prob. Code § 6111 (holographic will); see also Prob. Code § 88 (will includes codicil)].

A later will or codicil, however, will not automatically revoke an earlier will, even if executed with the formalities required of wills [ Estate of Johnson (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 806, 154 Cal. Rptr. 586 ]. Revocation will be accomplished if the later will contains a clause expressly revoking the earlier will (or all earlier wills) [Prob. Code § 6120(a)]. If the later will does not include an express revocation clause, revocation will be accomplished only if the later will is inconsistent with the earlier will, or inconsistent with a part of the earlier will [Prob. Code § 6120(a)]. In determining the question of inconsistency, the courts must always be guided by the intentions of the testator [Prob. Code § 6140(a); Estate of Danford (1925) 196 Cal. 339, 342, 238 P. 76 ]. When there is doubt, it is the policy of the law to preserve the earlier will, in whole or in part, rather than declare a total or even partial revocation [ Estate of Johnson (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 807, 154 Cal. Rptr. 586 ].

Proof that a testator made two wills will not, in itself, establish that the second will was intended to revoke the first. The testator may have intended the second will to complement or supplement the first; or, if the testator intended to revoke the first will, he or she may have intended only a partial revocation [see Prob. Code § 6120 (will may be revoked in whole or in part)]. Two testamentary instruments executed by the same person are to be construed as one instrument unless the second instrument is wholly inconsistent with the first [ Estate of Johnson (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 808, 154 Cal. Rptr. 586 (construing former Prob. Code § 101, repealed Jan. 1, 1985); see Prob. Code § 6161 (all parts of will must be construed, if possible, to form consistent whole)]. A total revocation of the first will will be found only if the second will is so plainly inconsistent with the first that the two are incapable of standing together [ Estate of Shute (1942) 55 Cal. App. 2d 573, 576, 131 P.2d 54 ].

It has been stated that a later will that makes a complete disposition of the testator's property will revoke an earlier will that makes a different disposition [ Estate of Mallon (1938) 28 Cal. App. 2d 106, 110, 81 P.2d 992 ]. A later will that completely disposes of the testator's property, however, will not revoke an earlier will if the second disposition is not wholly inconsistent with the first disposition [ Estate of Shute (1942) 55 Cal. App. 2d 573, 576, 131 P.2d 54 ]. Whether a subsequent will without an express revocation clause will be found to have revoked a former will depends in every case on an evaluation of the two wills and a determination of whether their terms are consistent or inconsistent [ Estate of Johnson (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 154 Cal. Rptr. 586 ].

The fact that a later will disposes of all of the testator's property will often indicate that the testator intended to revoke earlier wills [see Estate of Siemers (1927) 202 Cal. 424, 435, 261 P. 298; Estate of Martin (1939) 31 Cal. App. 2d 501, 506, 88 P.2d 234 ]. When a later will undertakes a complete disposition of all of the testator's property, the court may properly find that the later will is wholly inconsistent with earlier wills and thus revokes them [ Estate of Benson (1944) 62 Cal. App. 2d 866, 871, 145 P.2d 668 ; Estate of Martin (1939) 31 Cal. App. 2d 501, 506, 88 P.2d 234 ]. However, if the earlier and later wills are consistent despite the fact that the later will disposes of all the property, they must be construed together [ Estate of Johnson (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 808, 154 Cal. Rptr. 586 ]. In one case, for example, the testator executed a formal witnessed will in which she disinherited particular heirs. She later executed a holographic will in which she disposed of all of her property to persons other than the disinherited heirs, but did not restate the disinheritance clause. The court held that the later will did not revoke the disinheritance clause of the earlier will. Under all of the circumstances, it was apparent that the testator did not intend to revoke the earlier disinheritance clause, and the dispositive provisions of the later will and the disinheritance clause of the earlier will could properly be construed together [ Estate of Johnson (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 808-809, 154 Cal. Rptr. 586 ].

[iii] By Destruction

A testator may revoke all or part of a will by burning, tearing, canceling, obliterating, or destroying it [ Prob. Code § 6120(b) ]. However, an act of destruction or cancellation will not be effective to revoke a will unless it is performed with the intent and for the purpose of revoking it [ Prob. Code § 6120(b); see Estate of Olmsted (1898) 122 Cal. 224, 229, 54 P. 745 ; Estate of Silva (1915) 169 Cal. 116, 121, 145 P. 1015 ]. Conversely, intent to revoke is ineffective to accomplish revocation if the intent is not actually carried out [ Estate of Silva (1915) 169 Cal. 116, 121, 145 P. 1015 ].

A will or part of a will may also be revoked if some person other than the testator burns, tears, cancels, obliterates, or destroys it [ Prob. Code § 6120(b) ]. However, an act of destruction or cancellation performed by someone other than the testator will effect a revocation only if it is done (1) with the intent and for the purpose of revoking and (2) in the testator's presence and at the testator's direction [ Prob. Code § 6120(b) ].

Former Prob. Code § 74(2) (repealed January 1, 1985) provided that if destruction was accomplished by someone other than the testator, the destruction (and the fact that the destruction was carried out at the direction of the testator) had to be proved by two witnesses. Prob. Code § 6121 (effective January 1, 1985) does not require two witnesses to prove destruction; the standard of proof is the same whether the destruction is by the testator personally or by another person acting at the testator's direction.

A will executed in duplicate is revoked if one of the duplicates is burned, torn, cancelled, obliterated, or destroyed, with the intent and for the purpose of revoking it, by either the testator or another person acting in the testator's presence and at the testator's direction [ Prob. Code § 6121 ].

Part of a will may be revoked by cancelling, obliterating, tearing, or otherwise destroying a part of the will, or one or more of its provisions, with the intent to revoke it [ Estate of Finkler (1935) 3 Cal. 2d 584, 599-602, 46 P.2d 149 ]. If a will is executed in duplicate, the destruction of one of the duplicates (or any part thereof) in the manner and with the intent specified in Prob. Code § 6120 will effect a revocation (whole or partial) of the will [ Prob. Code § 6121 ].

If a testator's will cannot be found after the testator's death, a presumption may arise that the testator destroyed the will with the intent to revoke it [ Prob. Code § 6124 see Evid. Code §§ 603, 604 (presumptions affecting burden of producing evidence)]. This presumption will arise if it is established (1) that the testator's will was last in the testator's possession, (2) that the testator was competent until death, and (3) that neither the will nor a duplicate original of the will can be found [ Prob. Code § 6124 ]. This statutory presumption constitutes a double presumption: first, destruction of the will is presumed from disappearance of the will; second, revocation is presumed from destruction [ Estate of Obernolte (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 129, 153 Cal. Rptr. 798 n.7 ; see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.19[2] ].

[iv] By Annulment or Dissolution of Marriage

Unless the will expressly provides otherwise, the annulment or dissolution of a testator's marriage will revoke any disposition or appointment of property made by the will to the former spouse, any provision of the will conferring a general or special power of appointment on the former spouse, and any provision of the will nominating the former spouse as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian [Prob. Code § 6122(a)].

In case of a revocation by dissolution or annulment, property that would have passed to the former spouse but for the revocation will pass as if the former spouse failed to survive the testator [Prob. Code § 6122(c)(1)]. Similarly, other provisions conferring some power or office on the former spouse (such as executor or trustee) must be interpreted as if the former spouse failed to survive the testator [Prob. Code § 6122(c)(2)]. For example, provisions of a trust incorporated in a decedent's will, appointing the decedent's wife as trustee, granting her a power of appointment, or transferring any property or income from property to her, were revoked by Prob. Code § 6122 on the dissolution of their marriage, because that statute provides that the terms of a trust incorporated in a will must be administered and distributed as though the former spouse had predeceased the decedent [ Estate of Coleman (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 380, 389, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282 ].

As used in the Probate Code, the term "predeceased spouse" does not include any person who obtains or consents to a final decree or judgment of dissolution of marriage from the decedent or a final decree or judgment of annulment of their marriage (unless they subsequently remarry or live together as husband and wife); any person who, following a decree or judgment of dissolution or annulment of marriage obtained by the decedent, participates in a marriage ceremony to a third person; or any person who was a party to a valid proceeding concluded by an order purporting to terminate all marital property rights [Prob. Code § 59].

If any provision of a will is revoked solely by reason of the dissolution or annulment of the testator's marriage, the testator's remarriage to the former spouse will revive it [Prob. Code § 6122(b)].

Although Prob. Code § 6122 does not address the effect of dissolution on bequests to children of the former spouse, the courts have held that, unless a contrary intention is indicated in the will, it is generally presumed that a testator intends to exclude the children of an ex-spouse from taking under the will [ Estate of Jones (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 326, 332, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 637 (residuary bequest to adult step-daughter was revoked by her mother's dissolution from testator); Estate of Hermon (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 1531-1532, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 577 (court called on legislature to adopt provision similar to that set forth in Uniform Probate Code, which provides that dissolution revokes not only testamentary bequests to former spouse but also bequests to former spouse's relatives)]. Evidence showing that the testator continued to have a relationship with the child of a former spouse following dissolution may show an intent by the testator to continue to have the child take under the will [ Estate of Jones (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 326, 332, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 637 ].

[v] By Termination of Domestic Partnership

Under the California Domestic Partner Rights and Responsibilities Act of 2003 (the Act) [Fam. Code §§ 297-299.3], a domestic partnership is formed when two persons who meet specific requirements complete and file a declaration of domestic partnership with the Secretary of State. In order to file a valid declaration, the two parties must meet the following requirements [Prob. Code § 37; Fam. Code § 297(b)]:

- Both must have a common residence. "Common residence" means that both domestic partners must share the same residence, but it is not necessary that the legal right to possess residence be in both of their names. Domestic partners may have a common residence even if one or both have additional residences, and they do not cease to have common residence if one leaves the residence but intends to return [Fam. Code § 297(c)].

- Neither is married or a part of another domestic partnership.
- Neither is related by blood in a way that would prevent them from being married in the state of California.
- Both are over age 18.
- Both are either of the same sex or one or both meet the eligibility criteria under Title II of the Social Security Act for old-age insurance benefits [42 U.S.C. § 1381]. Persons of opposite sexes may not form a valid domestic partnership unless at least one is 62 years of age.
- Both are capable of consenting to a domestic partnership.

As of January 1, 2005, each person filing a declaration of domestic partnership must state in the declaration that he or she consents to the jurisdiction of the California superior courts for the purpose of a proceeding to obtain a judgment of dissolution or nullity of the domestic partnership or for legal separation of the partners in the domestic partnership, or for any other proceeding related to the partners' rights and obligations, even if one or both partners ceases to be a resident of, or to maintain a domicile in, California [Fam. Code § 298(c)(3)].

Effective January 1, 2005, registered domestic partners have the same rights, protections, and benefits, and are subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law, whether they derive from statutes, administrative regulations, court rules, government policies, common law, or any other provisions or sources of law, as are granted to and imposed on spouses [Fam. Code § 297.5(a)]. A surviving registered domestic partner, following the other partner's death, has the same rights, protections, and benefits, and is subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law, as are granted to and imposed on a widow or widower [Fam. Code § 297.5(c)]. However, the Act is not intended to repeal or adversely affect any other ways in which relationships between adults may be recognized or given effect in California, or the legal consequences of those relationships, including, among other things, civil marriage, enforcement of palimony agreements, enforcement of powers of attorney, appointment of conservators or guardians, and petitions for second parent or limited consent adoption [Stats. 2003, ch. 421, § 2].

The legislature has made clear its intention in the domestic partnership law to substantially equalize the status of registered domestic partners and spouses [ Koebke v. Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 824, 837, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565, 115 P.3d 1212 ]. To couples who meet the requirements of establishing a domestic partnership under the domestic partnership law and who have registered under that law, the legislature has granted legal recognition comparable to marriage, both procedurally and in terms of the substantive rights and obligations granted to and imposed on the partners, which are supported by policy considerations similar to those favoring marriage. These rights and responsibilities are not shared by couples who cohabit or who have not registered as domestic partners [ Koebke v. Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 824, 845, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565, 115 P.3d 1212 (finding that in light of domestic partnership law, Unruh Act requires businesses to treat registered domestic partners same as spouses); see Civ. Code § 51(b) (prohibiting discrimination on basis of marital status or sexual orientation)].

The legislature's enactment of Fam. Code § 297.5, giving registered domestic partners the same rights and obligations as spouses, is not an improper legislative amendment of the defense of marriage initiative (Proposition 22), as codified in Fam. Code § 308.5, which states that only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California. Because Proposition 22 did not address domestic partnerships, changing the domestic partnership law did not amend the initiative [ Knight v. Superior Court (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 14, 22-31, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687 ].

Persons who have filed a declaration of domestic partnership may not file a new declaration or enter a civil marriage with someone other than their registered domestic partner unless the most recent domestic partnership has been terminated or a final judgment of dissolution or nullity of the most recent domestic partnership has been entered. This prohibition does not apply when a previous domestic partnership has ended because of the death of one of the partners [Fam. Code § 298.5(c)].

As of January 1, 2005, a legal union of two persons of the same sex, other than a marriage, that was validly formed in another jurisdiction and that is substantially equivalent to a domestic partnership under the Act, must be recognized as a valid domestic partnership in California regardless of whether it bears the name "domestic partnership" [Fam. Code § 299.2].

The termination of a testator's domestic partnership serves to revoke certain provisions of the testator's will, if the will was executed on or after January 1, 2002 [Prob. Code § 6122.1(d)]. Unless the will expressly provides otherwise, if a person executes a will and the person's domestic partnership is terminated, the termination will revoke any disposition or appointment of property made by the will to the former domestic partner, any provision of the will conferring a general or special power of appointment on the former domestic partner, and any provision of the will nominating the former domestic partner as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian [Prob. Code § 6122.1(a)].

When will provisions are revoked because of the termination of the testator's domestic partnership, property that would have passed to the former domestic partner if the provisions had not been revoked instead passes as if the former domestic partner failed to survive the testator [Prob. Code § 6122.1(c)(1)]. Other provisions of the will conferring some power or office on the former domestic partner will be interpreted as if the former domestic partner failed to survive the testator [Prob. Code § 6122.1(c)(2)].

Any disposition or other provision of a will that is revoked solely by reason of the termination of the testator's domestic partnership is revived if the testator re-establishes another domestic partnership with the former domestic partner [Prob. Code § 6122.1(b)].

Until January 1, 2005, domestic partnership was terminated when one of the following occurred [Fam. Code § 299(a) (prior to amendment by Stats. 2003, ch. 421, operative 1/1/05)]:

- One partner gave or sent by certified mail to the other partner a written notice that he or she was terminating the partnership.
- One of the domestic partners died.
- One of the domestic partners married.
- The domestic partners no longer had a common residence.

On termination of a domestic partnership prior to January 1, 2005, at least one former partner was required to mail a completed notice of termination of domestic partnership to the Secretary of State by certified mail. If the domestic partnership was terminated because of the death or marriage of a domestic partner, the termination date was the date indicated on the notice of termination of domestic partnership form. Otherwise, the date on which the notice of termination of domestic partnership was received by the Secretary of State is deemed the actual termination date of the domestic partnership [Fam. Code § 299(b) (prior to amendment by Stats. 2003, ch. 421, operative 1/1/05)].

As of January 1, 2005, a domestic partnership may be terminated by filing a notice of termination of domestic partnership with the Secretary of State, provided all of the following conditions exist at the time of the filing [Fam. Code § 299(a)]:

- Both domestic partners have signed the notice of termination.

- There are no children of the parties' relationship born before or after registration of the domestic partnership or adopted by the parties after registration of the domestic partnership, and neither of the domestic partners, to their knowledge, is pregnant.
- The domestic partnership has not lasted for more than five years.
- Neither partner has an interest in real property, wherever situated, with the exception of the lease of a residence occupied by either partner that does not include an option to purchase and that terminates within one year from the date of filing the Notice of Termination.
- There are no unpaid obligations in excess of the amount specified in Fam. Code § 2400(a)(6) ($4000), as adjusted for inflation under Fam. Code § 2400(b), incurred by either or both of the partners after registration of the domestic partnership, excluding the amount of any unpaid obligation for an automobile.
- The total fair market value of community property assets, excluding all encumbrances and automobiles, including any deferred compensation or retirement plan, is less than the amount specified in Fam. Code § 2400(a)(7) ($25,000), as adjusted for inflation under Fam. Code § 2400(b), and neither partner has separate property assets, excluding all encumbrances and automobiles, in excess of that amount.
- The partners have executed an agreement setting forth the division of assets and assumption of liabilities of the community property, and have executed any documents, title certificates, bills of sale, or other evidence of transfer necessary to effectuate the agreement.
- The partners have waived any rights to support by the other partner.
- The partners have read and understand a brochure prepared by the Secretary of State describing the requirements, nature, and effect of terminating a domestic partnership.
- Both partners desire that the partnership be terminated.

A domestic partnership is terminated six months after the date the notice of termination is filed [Fam. Code § 299(b)].

After January 1, 2005, a domestic partnership that does not meet the conditions specified above may only be terminated by an action for dissolution of the domestic partnership, nullity of the domestic partnership, or legal separation of the partners [Fam. Code § 299(c), (d)].

If a domestic partnership is terminated by the death of one of the parties and a Notice of Termination was not filed by either party before the decedent's death, the domestic partner who survives the decedent is a surviving domestic partner, and is entitled to the rights of a surviving domestic partner as provided in the Probate Code [Prob. Code § 37(b)].

[c] Invalidity of Revocation Procured by Duress, Menace, Fraud, or Undue Influence

The revocation of a will or a part of a will, like the execution of a will or a part of a will, is ineffective if procured by duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence [Prob. Code § 6104]. For discussion, see § 63.200[1][e][i] et seq.

[d] Revival of Revoked Will

If a testator makes a first will, later makes a second will, and at some subsequent time revokes the second will, there is a question as to whether the first will is revived. If the second will is revoked by a third will, the issue may be easily resolved by including an explicit statement in the third will expressing the testator's intentions on the question. If the revocation is not effected by a third will, however, but by an act of burning, tearing, cancellation, obliteration or destruction; or if the revocation is effected by a third will but the third will does not clearly address itself to the question of whether the first will is or is not to be revived, resolution of the question will depend on the circumstances of the revocation.

A revocation by any of the means described in Prob. Code § 6120 or 6121 (burning, tearing, cancellation, obliteration, or destruction) will not revive the first will (or part of the first will, in case only a part of the second will has been revoked) unless it is evident from the circumstances of the revocation or from the testator's contemporary or subsequent declarations that the testator intended the first will to take effect as executed [Prob. Code § 6123(a)]. Revocation of the second will by a third will will not revive the first will unless it appears from the terms of the third will that the testator intended the first will to take effect [Prob. Code § 6123(b)].

[e] Dependent Relative Revocation

If a first will is revoked by a second will, and if it appears that the testator intended the revocation to depend on the effectiveness of the second will, the law presumes that the testator intended the revocation to take effect only if the second will is valid, and if the second will should for any reason fail, the revocation will also fail [ Estate of Cuneo (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 196, 202, 32 Cal. Rptr. 409, 384 P.2d 1 ; Estate of Guerrero (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 723, 731, 228 Cal. Rptr. 408 ]. This rule is known as the doctrine of dependent relative revocation. Under it, revocation of a first will is deemed to be relative and not absolute and to depend on the effectiveness of a second will [ Estate of Kaufman (1945) 25 Cal. 2d 854, 860, 155 P.2d 831 ]. A prudent attorney, however, will never rely on the doctrine of dependent relative revocation to effectuate the testator's intentions. If there is any doubt about the validity of the second will or any doubt about the correctness of facts assumed by the testator, the attorney may wish to make the revocation of an earlier will explicitly conditional on the validity of the later one. An optional provision establishing such a condition is contained in § 63.204.

CHAPTER 63 WILL PROVISIONS

PART IV. FORMS

A. Introductory Paragraph of Will

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.204

§ 63.204 Conditional Revocation

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a conditional revocation clause. It may be used to state that any and all wills previously executed by the testator are revoked, but only conditionally. If the stated condition is satisfied, the revocation will be effective. If the condition is not satisfied, the revocation will have no force or effect. For an unconditional revocation of prior wills, see § 63.203. For a will provision making an entire will conditional, see § 63.205.

[b] Conditional Revocation

A will may be revoked conditionally. Prob. Code § 6105 provides that a will that is expressly made conditional must be admitted to probate or rejected (or denied effect after admission to probate) in conformity with the condition. Under this rule, if a will is revoked by a subsequent will [see Prob. Code § 6120(a) (revocation by subsequent will); see also § 63.203[1]], and if the subsequent will by its own terms is conditional, the effectiveness of the revocation is also conditional. The basic rule for the interpretation of wills is that the intention of the testator as expressed in the will controls the legal effect of the dispositions made in the will [Prob. Code § 21102(a); see Prob. Code § 21101 (rules applicable to wills, trusts, and other instruments)]. Under this rule, if a will disposes of property conditionally, the property must be distributed in accordance with the condition [see Burch v. George (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 246, 254, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 866 P.2d 92]. However, this rule does not limit the use of extrinsic evidence, to the extent otherwise authorized by law, to determine the testator's intention [Prob. Code § 21102(c)].

An express conditional revocation must be distinguished from a revocation that is implied under the doctrine of "dependent relative revocation." The doctrine of dependent relative revocation is a common law rule that is applied by the courts when it can be inferred that a testator who revokes an earlier will and executes a subsequent will has revoked the earlier will conditionally [see Estate of Cuneo (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 196, 202, 32 Cal. Rptr. 409, 384 P.2d 1]. It is applied for the purpose of avoiding injustice [see Tentative Recommendation Relating to Wills and Intestate Succession, 16 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 2301, 2327 n.46 (1982)] and to carry out the probable intention of the testator when there is no reason to suppose that the testator intended to revoke an earlier will if a subsequent will became inoperative [ Estate of Cuneo (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 196, 202, 32 Cal. Rptr. 409, 384 P.2d 1 ; Estate of Kaufman (1945) 25 Cal. 2d 854, 859, 155 P.2d 831 ; Estate of Strickman (1966) 247 Cal. App. 2d 469, 474, 55 Cal. Rptr. 606 ]. For a general discussion of the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, see § 63.203[1].

A conditional revocation may state that it is to be effective only if the revoking will and all of its provisions are valid and effective, or that it is predicated on the correctness of a particular factual assumption--for example, that a child of the testator thought to be deceased is in fact deceased.

CHAPTER 63 WILL PROVISIONS

PART IV. FORMS

A. Introductory Paragraph of Will

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.205

§ 63.205 Conditional Will Provision

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a will provision that may be used to make a will conditional on the occurrence (or nonoccurrence) of a specified event. If the condition is satisfied, the will becomes fully effective. If it is not, the will is ineffective for any purpose. For a form making a particular gift (as opposed to an entire will) conditional, see § 63.410.

[b] Conditional Wills and Gifts--Public Policy Limitations

A will, the validity of which is made conditional by its own terms, will be granted or denied probate (or denied effect after probate) in conformity with the condition [Prob. Code § 6105].

The words of a will are to receive an interpretation that will give every expression some effect, rather than one that will render any of the expressions inoperative [Prob. Code § 21120]. Further, a testator is free to dispose of his or her estate on whatever conditions he or she may establish, as long as the conditions are not prohibited by law and do not violate public policy [see Estate of Kitchen (1916) 192 Cal. 384, 388, 220 P. 301]. However, the language of the will must clearly express the testator's intention that the will become operative (or a disposition is to take effect) only if a specified event occurs [ Estate of Taylor (1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 574, 580, 259 P.2d 1014 ]. A condition will not be implied from indefinite language [ Black v. Taylor (In re Estate of Taylor)(1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 574, 581, 259 P.2d 1014 ], nor will language that merely expresses the testator's reasons for making a will or a particular disposition be interpreted as a condition to the effectiveness of the will or the disposition [ Estate of Moulton (1959) 176 Cal. App. 2d 87, 90, 1 Cal. Rptr. 407 ].

The test for determining whether a will is conditional is generally stated to be whether the testator intended to make the occurrence (or nonoccurrence) of a specified event a condition to the operation of the will, or merely referred to the event as the motive (or inducement) for making the will [ Estate of Taylor (1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 574, 580, 259 P.2d 1014 ]. Although the courts endeavor to interpret a will so as to give every expression some effect [Prob. Code § 21120].

], preference must be given to an interpretation that will prevent rather than result in an intestacy [Prob. Code § 6160].

Certain conditions in a will may be held invalid or denied enforcement because they violate public policy. Conditions of this kind are those that are intended to limit marriage, encourage divorce, or induce criminal, tortious, or immoral acts.

Conditions imposing restraints on marriage (except the marriage of a minor) are void [Civ. Code § 710]. If a gift is intended to restrain marriage and the gift is restricted by the imposition of a condition subsequent, the condition is invalid [ Estate of Scott (1915) 170 Cal. 65, 66, 148 P. 221 ]. For example, a devise to a surviving spouse of trust income for her lifetime or until her remarriage or cohabitation was void as a restraint on marriage when testimony showed that the testator was extremely jealous and did not intend to provide for his spouse if she formed another relationship [ Estate of Guidotti (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1407, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 674 ]. If, however, the will provides that the beneficiary is to have the use of certain property until the happening of a specified event, the gift violates no policy and is valid [Civ. Code § 710]. Thus, a will providing that a surviving husband is to have the use of an apartment "for the period of his natural life or until he shall remarry" does not violate public policy and is enforceable [ Estate of Horgan (1949) 91 Cal. App. 2d 618, 620-621, 205 P.2d 706 ].

Gifts made to induce criminal, tortious, or immoral acts are invalid. Civ. Code § 1667 condemns as "not lawful" anything that is either contrary to an express provision of law, contrary to the policy of express law, though not expressly prohibited, or otherwise contrary to good morals [Civ. Code § 1667].

A condition is not unenforceable, however, simply because the encouragement of criminal or otherwise undesirable conduct might be one of its incidental effects [ Estate of Robbins (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 718, 723, 21 Cal. Rptr. 797, 371 P.2d 573 (trust in favor of minor children of parents imprisoned for crime upheld as valid charitable trust against claim it would promote criminal conduct)]. If the beneficial effects of a condition or bequest greatly exceed its possible undesirable effects, the condition will be upheld [ Estate of Robbins (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 718, 723, 21 Cal. Rptr. 797, 371 P.2d 573 ].

§ 63.220 Marital Status Declaration--Married Testator

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to declare that a testator is married and to identify his or her spouse. When used, it should become the first paragraph of the will and should immediately follow the introductory paragraph. If the testator has never been married, § 63.221 should be used in place of this form. If a marriage of the testator has been annulled or dissolved, § 63.222 should be used. If the testator is a widow or widower, § 63.223 should be used.

[b] Testator's Marital Status

Although there is no requirement that the testator make a declaration as to marital status, such a declaration will serve several useful purposes. Relating the testator to a spouse (or declaring that the testator has never been married) may, in appropriate cases, help to identify the testator. It may also help the personal representative locate and identify estate assets and trace relatives of the testator and the spouse. In the event of a will contest, the declaration may help to establish the testator's capacity to make the will, as one of the elements of testamentary capacity is the ability to remember and understand the testator's relations to persons who are the natural objects of his or her bounty [ Estate of Nelson (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 42, 53, 38 Cal. Rptr. 459 ]. For a discussion of testamentary capacity, see § 63.220[1].

§ 63.221 Marital Status Declaration--Unmarried Testator

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to declare that a testator has never been married. When used, it should become the first paragraph of the will and immediately follow the introductory paragraph. If the testator is married, the form in § 63.220[2] should be used in place of this form. If a marriage of the testator has been annulled or dissolved, the form in § 63.222[2] should be used. If the testator is a widow or widower, the form in § 63.223[2] should be used. For a discussion of the testator's marital status and the desirability of including declarations relating to it, see § 63.220[1].

[b] Will Executed Prior to or in Contemplation of Marriage

If an unmarried testator is contemplating marriage to a specific individual in the immediate future, various issues may arise in connection with the execution of a will prior to the marriage. First, if the testator marries after the execution of all the testator's "testamentary instruments" [see Prob. Code § 21601(a) (for this purpose, "decendent's testamentary instruments" means decedent's will or revocable trust)], and the decedent's testamentary instruments fail to provide for the spouse, the testator's spouse will qualify as an omitted heir [Prob. Code § 21610] unless the failure was intentional and that failure appears from the instruments, or the testator made other provision for the spouse outside the estate, or the spouse made a valid waiver of his or her rights to share in the testator's estate [Prob. Code § 21611; for general discussion of the inheritance rights of omitted heirs, see § 61.16[2], [3]]. Thus, if the will ignores the prospective spouse, after the marriage that spouse will be entitled to take as an omitted spouse unless some other provision is made. In the majority of cases the omitted heir statutes will generate a result in accordance with the testator's intentions, but if the testator is contemplating marriage to a prospective spouse for whom he or she does not wish to provide in the will, the omitted heir issue needs to be addressed by stating that the testator has intentionally failed to provide for the prospective spouse or by satisfying one of the other exceptions to the omitted heir statutes [Prob. Code § 21611].

Conversely, if the will does provide for a prospective spouse, the testator needs to consider the possibility that the marriage may not occur. In that case, if the will is not clear on this point, an issue can arise as to whether or not the disposition to the prospective spouse was conditional on occurrence of the marriage [see Prob. Code § 6105 (conditional wills given affect or rejected in conformity with condition)]. In this situation, the will or the specific provisions for the prospective spouse may be made conditional on the marriage [see § 63.205], but conditional wills generally are not favored by estate planners because they may never become valid and because they substantially increase the possibility of an intestacy.

Under ordinary circumstances, a new will should be executed after the testator's marriage. Typically the marriage will change the estate plan significantly enough to require the preparation of new estate planning documents.

This form is a will provision that may be used to declare that a marriage of the testator was annulled or dissolved. When used, it should become the first paragraph of the will and immediately follow the introductory paragraph. If the testator is married, the form in § 63.220[2] should be used in place of this form. If the testator had a former marriage that ended in annulment or dissolution and has since remarried, this form should be used in conjunction with the form in § 63.220[2]. If the testator has never been married, the form in § 63.221[2] should be used. If the testator is a widow or widower, the form in § 63.223[2] should be used. For a discussion of the testator's marital status and the desirability of including declarations relating to it, see § 63.220[1].

[b] Effect of Annulment or Dissolution

If, after executing a will, the testator's marriage is terminated by dissolution or annulment, most provisions of the will favoring the former spouse will be automatically revoked [Prob. Code § 6122; see discussion in § 63.203[1][b][iv]]. If the testator later remarries, however, references in the earlier will to "my husband," "my wife," or "my spouse" may be ambiguous and subject to possible misinterpretation. A provision clearly identifying the testator's former spouse will help to avoid any such ambiguities. If, despite the termination of a marriage, a testator wishes to provide for a former spouse, the intention to do so must be expressly stated in the will [see Prob. Code § 6122(a)].

[b] When Testator Is Widow or Widower

When a marriage of the testator ended with the death of one spouse, that fact should be recited in the will. § 63.224 Domestic Partnership Declaration--Testator a Domestic Partner

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to declare that a testator is a member of a domestic partnership, and to identify the testator's domestic partner. When used, it should become the first paragraph of the will and should immediately follow the introductory paragraph. If the testator was previously a member of a domestic partnership, but that partnership has terminated, the form in § 63.225 should be used.

For detailed coverage of California's domestic partnership statutes, see Ch. 110, Nonmarital Cohabitation Agreements and Related Transactions, §§ 110.50 et seq., 110.220 et seq.

[b] Requisites for Domestic Partnership

Under the California Domestic Partner Rights and Responsibilities Act of 2003 (the Act) [Fam. Code §§ 297-299.3], a domestic partnership is formed when two persons who meet specific requirements complete and file a Declaration of Domestic Partnership with the Secretary of State. In order to file a valid declaration, the two parties must meet the following requirements [Prob. Code § 37; Fam. Code § 297(b)]:

- Both must have a common residence. "Common residence" means that both domestic partners must share the same residence, but it is not necessary that the legal right to possess residence be in both of their names. Domestic partners may have a common residence even if one or both have additional residences, and they do not cease to have common residence if one leaves the residence but intends to return [Fam. Code § 297(c)].
- Neither is married or a part of another domestic partnership.
- Neither is related by blood in a way that would prevent them from being married in the state of California.

- Both are over age 18.
- Both are either of the same sex or one or both meet the eligibility criteria under Title II of the Social Security Act for old-age insurance benefits [42 U.S.C. § 1381]. Persons of opposite sexes may not form a valid domestic partnership unless at least one is 62 years of age.
- Both are capable of consenting to a domestic partnership.

As of January 1, 2005, each person filing a Declaration of Domestic Partnership must state in the declaration that he or she consents to the jurisdiction of the superior courts of this state for the purpose of a proceeding to obtain a judgment of dissolution or nullity of the domestic partnership or for legal separation of the partners in the domestic partnership, or for any other proceeding related to the partners' rights and obligations, even if one or both partners ceases to be a resident of, or to maintain a domicile in, this state [Fam. Code § 298(c)(3)].

Effective January 1, 2005, registered domestic partners have the same rights, protections, and benefits, and are subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law, whether they derive from statutes, administrative regulations, court rules, government policies, common law, or any other provisions or sources of law, as are granted to and imposed on spouses [Fam. Code § 297.5(a)]. A surviving registered domestic partner, following the other partner's death, has the same rights, protections, and benefits, and is subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law, as are granted to and imposed on a widow or widower [Fam. Code § 297.5(c)]. However, the Act is not intended to repeal or adversely affect any other ways in which relationships between adults may be recognized or given effect in California, or the legal consequences of those relationships, including, among other things civil marriage, enforcement of palimony agreements, enforcement of powers of attorney, appointment of conservators or guardians, and petitions for second parent or limited consent adoption [Stats. 2003, ch. 421, § 2].

The legislature has made clear its intention in the domestic partnership law to substantially equalize the status of registered domestic partners and spouses [ Koebke v. Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 824, 837, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565, 115 P.3d 1212 ]. To couples who meet the requirements of establishing a domestic partnership under the domestic partnership law and who have registered under that law, the legislature has granted legal recognition comparable to marriage, both procedurally and in terms of the substantive rights and obligations granted to and imposed on the partners, which are supported by policy considerations similar to those favoring marriage. These rights and responsibilities are not shared by couples who cohabit or who have not registered as domestic partners [ Koebke v. Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 824, 845, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565, 115 P.3d 1212 (finding that in light of domestic partnership law, Unruh Act requires businesses to treat registered domestic partners same as spouses; see Civ. Code § 51(b) (prohibiting discrimination on basis of marital status or sexual orientation))].

The legislature's enactment of Fam. Code § 297.5, giving registered domestic partners the same rights and obligations as spouses, is not an improper legislative amendment of the defense of marriage initiative (Proposition 22), as codified in Fam. Code § 308.5, which states that only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California. Because Proposition 22 did not address domestic partnerships, changing the domestic partnership law did not amend the initiative [ Knight v. Superior Court (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 14, 22-31, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687 ].

Persons who have filed a declaration of domestic partnership may not file a new declaration or enter a civil marriage with someone other than their registered domestic partner unless the most recent domestic partnership has been terminated or a final judgment of dissolution or nullity of the most recent domestic partnership has been entered. This prohibition does not apply when a previous domestic partnership has ended because of the death of one of the partners [Fam. Code § 298.5(c)].

As of January 1, 2005, a legal union of two persons of the same sex, other than a marriage, that was validly formed in another jurisdiction and that is substantially equivalent to a domestic partnership under the Act, must be recognized as a valid domestic partnership in California regardless of whether it bears the name "domestic partnership" [Fam. Code § 299.2].

[c] Effect on Domestic Partner's Will

The termination of a testator's domestic partnership serves to revoke certain provisions of the testator's will, if the will was executed on or after January 1, 2002 [Prob. Code § 6122.1(d)]. Unless the will expressly provides otherwise, if a person executes a will and the person's domestic partnership is terminated, the termination will revoke any disposition or appointment of property made by the will to the former domestic partner, any provision of the will conferring a general or special power of appointment on the former domestic partner, and any provision of the will nominating the former domestic partner as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian [Prob. Code § 6122.1(a)].

When will provisions are revoked because of the termination of the testator's domestic partnership, property that would have passed to the former domestic partner if the provisions had not been revoked instead passes as if the former domestic partner failed to survive the testator [Prob. Code § 6122.1(c)(1)]. Other provisions of the will conferring some power or office on the former domestic partner will be interpreted as if the former domestic partner failed to survive the testator [Prob. Code § 6122.1(c)(2)].

Any disposition or other provision of a will that is revoked solely by reason of the termination of the testator's domestic partnership is revived if the testator re-establishes another domestic partnership with the former domestic partner [Prob. Code § 6122.1(b)].

[d] Termination of Domestic Partnership

Prior to January 1, 2005, a domestic partnership was terminated when one of the following occurs [Fam. Code § 299(a)]:

- One partner gave or sent by certified mail to the other partner a written notice that he or she is terminating the partnership.
- One of the domestic partners died.
- One of the domestic partners married.
- The domestic partners no longer had a common residence.

On termination of a domestic partnership prior to January 1, 2005, at least one former partner was required to mail a completed notice of termination of domestic partnership to the Secretary of State by certified mail [Fam. Code § 299; see Ch. 110, Nonmarital Cohabitation Agreements and Related Transactions, § 110.221 (form)]. If the domestic partnership was terminated because of the death or marriage of a domestic partner, the termination date is the date indicated on the notice of termination of domestic partnership form. Otherwise, the date on which the notice of termination of domestic partnership was received by the Secretary of State is deemed the actual termination date of the domestic partnership [Fam. Code § 299(b)].

Beginning January 1, 2005, a domestic partnership may be terminated by filing a notice of termination of domestic partnership with the Secretary of State, provided all of the following conditions exist at the time of the filing [Fam. Code § 299(a)]:

- Both domestic partners have signed the notice of termination.
- There are no children of the parties' relationship born before or after registration of the domestic partnership or adopted by the parties after registration of the domestic partnership, and neither of the domestic partners, to their knowledge, is pregnant.
- The domestic partnership has not lasted for more than five years.
- Neither partner has an interest in real property, wherever situated, with the exception of the lease of a residence occupied by either partner that does not include an option to purchase and that terminates within one year from the date of filing the notice of termination.
- There are no unpaid obligations in excess of the amount specified in Fam. Code § 2400(a)(6) ($4000), as adjusted for inflation under Fam. Code § 2400(b), incurred by either or both of the partners after registration of the domestic partnership, excluding the amount of any unpaid obligation for an automobile.
- The total fair market value of community property assets, excluding all encumbrances and automobiles, including any deferred compensation or retirement plan, is less than the amount specified in Fam. Code § 2400(a)(7) ($25,000), as adjusted for inflation under Fam. Code § 2400(b), and neither partner has separate property assets, excluding all encumbrances and automobiles, in excess of that amount.
- The partners have executed an agreement setting forth the division of assets and assumption of liabilities of the community property, and have executed any documents, title certificates, bills of sale, or other evidence of transfer necessary to effectuate the agreement.
- The partners have waived any rights to support by the other partner.
- The partners have read and understand a brochure prepared by the Secretary of State describing the requirements, nature, and effect of terminating a domestic partnership.
- Both partners desire that the partnership be terminated.

A domestic partnership is terminated six months after the date the notice of termination is filed [Fam. Code § 299(b)]. After January 1, 2005, a domestic partnership that does not meet the conditions specified above may only be terminated by an action for dissolution of the domestic partnership, nullity of the domestic partnership, or legal separation of the partners [Fam. Code § 299(c), (d)].

If a domestic partnership is terminated by the death of one of the parties and a notice of termination was not filed by either party before the decedent's death, the domestic partner who survives the decedent is a surviving domestic partner, and is entitled to the rights of a surviving domestic partner as provided in the Probate Code [Prob. Code § 37(b)]. This includes the right to an intestate share of the deceased partner's separate property [Prob. Code § 6401(c) (effective July 1, 2003)]. A surviving domestic partner is entitled to the same intestate share of the decedent's separate property to which a surviving spouse would be entitled [Prob. Code § 6401(c)].

[e] Will Provision Confirming Testator's Status as Domestic Partner

Although there is no requirement that the testator make a declaration as to status as a domestic partner, such a declaration will serve several useful purposes. Naming a domestic partner may help to identify the testator in some cases. It may also help the personal representative locate and identify estate assets and trace relatives of the testator and the domestic partner. In the event of a will contest, the declaration may help to establish the testator's capacity to make the will, as one of the elements of testamentary capacity is the ability to remember and understand the testator's relations to persons who are the natural objects of his or her bounty [ Estate of Nelson (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 42, 53, 38 Cal. Rptr. 459 ]. For a discussion of testamentary capacity, see § 63.200[1].

Domestic Partnership Declaration--Testator a Domestic Partner

I have established a domestic partnership, as that term is defined in the California Family Code, with _____[name of domestic partner], and have filed a Declaration of Domestic Partnership with the California Secretary of State as provided by California law. All references in this will to my domestic partner are to _____[name of domestic partner].

§ 63.225 Domestic Partnership Declaration--Domestic Partnership Terminated

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to declare that a domestic partnership in which the testator was a member was terminated. When used, it should become the first paragraph of the will and should immediately follow the introductory paragraph. If the testator is a member of a domestic partnership, the form in § 63.224 should be used. For a discussion of the California domestic partner statutes [Fam. Code § 297 et seq.] and their estate planning implications, the termination of domestic partnerships, and the desirability of including declarations relating to the testator's status as a member of a domestic partnership, see § 63.224[1]. For more detailed discussion of California's domestic partnership statutes, see Ch. 110, Nonmarital Cohabitation Agreements and Related Transactions, §§ 110.50 et seq., 110.220 et seq.

[b] Effect of Termination

If, after executing a will, the testator's domestic partnership is terminated, most provisions favoring the former domestic partner will be automatically revoked [Prob. Code § 6122.1; see discussion in § 63.203[1][b][v]]. If the testator later establishes a domestic partnership with another person, references in the earlier will to "my domestic partner" may be ambiguous and subject to possible misinterpretation. A provision clearly identifying the testator's former domestic partner will help to avoid any such ambiguities. If, despite the termination of a domestic partnership, a testator wishes to provide for a former domestic partner, the intention to do so must be expressly stated in the will [see Prob. Code § 6122.1(a)].

If a domestic partnership is terminated by the death of one of the parties and a Notice of Termination [see Ch. 110, Nonmarital Cohabitation Agreements and Related Transactions, § 110.221] was not filed by either party before the decedent's death, the domestic partner who survives the decedent is a surviving domestic partner, and is entitled to the rights of a surviving domestic partner as provided in the Probate Code [Prob. Code § 37(b)]. This includes the right to an intestate share of the deceased partner's separate property [Prob. Code § 6401(c) (effective July 1, 2003)]. A surviving domestic partner is entitled to the same intestate share of the decedent's separate property to which a surviving spouse would be entitled [Prob. Code § 6401(c)].

Domestic Partnership Declaration--Domestic Partnership Terminated

I previously established a domestic partnership, as that term is defined in the California Family Code, with _____ [name of former domestic partner and further identification, such as present name and address of former domestic partner], and filed a Declaration of Domestic Partnership with the California Secretary of State with regard to that partnership as provided by California law. That domestic partnership was subsequently terminated by _____ [specify method of termination, e.g. the _____ (marriage or death) of _____ (name of former domestic partner) or written notice as provided by law or cessation of common residence] on _____ date. [A Notice of Termination of Domestic Partnership with regard to that domestic partnership was filed with the California Secretary of State on _____ (date).].

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.226

§ 63.226 Children and Issue Declaration--No Children

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to declare that the testator has no children, living or deceased. When used, it should become the second paragraph of the will and immediately follow the marital status declaration [see §§ 63.220-63.223]. If the testator has a living child or children, § 63.227 should be used. If the testator has a deceased child or children, § 63.228 should be used. If the testator has both living and deceased children, the provisions of § 63.227 should be combined with the provisions of § 63.228. If the testator wishes to provide for a child who has been adopted out of the testator's family, § 63.695 should be used.

[b] Testator's Children

Although there is no requirement that the testator name or identify his or her children in the will, a recitation of their names (and optionally of their residences, dates of birth, and, if appropriate, dates of death) may serve several useful purposes.

Relating the testator to children (or declaring that the testator has no children) may, in appropriate cases, help to identify the testator. It may also help the personal representative locate beneficiaries and, in appropriate cases, trace and locate issue and other relatives of the testator and the children. In the event of a will contest, the declaration may help to establish the testator's capacity to make the will, since one of the elements of testamentary capacity is the ability to remember and understand the testator's relations to his or her living descendants, spouse, and parents, and those whose interests are affected by the will [Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)(1); see discussion in Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.11 (testamentary capacity); see also discussion in § 63.200[1][c]].

[c] Statutory Definitions of "Child" and "Children"

[i] In General

The Probate Code establishes rules for determining the relationship of parent and child. Although these rules are primarily applicable in cases of intestacy [see Prob. Code §§ 6450-6455], they also apply when a testator devises property to a class of persons described in a general way by words such as "heirs," "heirs at law," "next of kin," "relatives," or "family," or words of similar import [Prob. Code §§ 21114, 21115(a); see § 63.226[1][c][viii]]. The rules vary according to whether the child is a natural child, an adopted child, a foster child, or a stepchild, and whether the person seeking to inherit is a parent or a child, or claims through a parent or a child [see § 63.226[1][c][ii] et seq.].

[ii] Natural Children

Natural children generally have the right to succeed to the property of their natural parents under the laws of intestate succession [Prob. Code § 6450(a)]. The relationship of parent and child generally exists between a natural child and a natural parent regardless of the parent's marital status [Prob. Code § 6450(a)]. However, a natural child will generally lose the right to succeed to the natural parent's property under the laws of intestate succession, and the parent will generally lose the right to succeed to the child's property, if the child was adopted by someone other than the parent's spouse [Prob. Code § 6451(a); see § 63.226[1][c][iv]].

The right of a parent to succeed to the property of a child born out of wedlock is also limited. If a child is born out of wedlock, neither a natural parent nor a relative of that parent has the right to succeed to the child's property on the basis of the parent and child relationship between that parent and the child unless both of the following requirements are satisfied [Prob. Code § 6452]:

- The parent or a relative of the parent acknowledged the child; and
- The parent or a relative of the parent contributed to the support or the care of the child.

For this purpose, the father of a child born out of wedlock "acknowledged the child" by confessing to paternity in out-of-state court and making no other acts of acknowledgment or disavowal; as a result, the father's heirs shared in the child's intestate estate [ Estate of Griswold (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 904, 924, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 24 P.3d 1191 ].

[iii] Natural Parents

Special rules determine whether a person is a "natural parent" [see § 63.226[1][c][ii]]. First, a natural parent and child relationship is established if that relationship is presumed and not rebutted under the Uniform Parentage Act [Prob. Code § 6453(a); see Fam. Code § 7600 et seq. (Uniform Parentage Act)]. For example, a man is presumed to be the natural father of a child if he receives the child into his home and openly holds the child out as his natural child [Fam. Code § 7611(d)]. A woman may be a presumed mother of a child of her lesbian partner if they agree to raise the child together, she receives the child into her home, and she holds the child out as her natural child [see Elisa B. v. Superior Court (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 108, 125, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 46, 117 P.3d 660 (both of child's parents can be women, and woman with no biological connection to child can be child's presumed mother under Fam. Code § 7611(d)); see also K.M. v. E.G. (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 130, 143, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 61, 117 P.3d 673 (when woman provides ova to her lesbian partner so that partner can bear child who will be raised in their joint home, both women are child's parents); Kristine H. v. Lisa R. (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 156, 166, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 81, 117 P.3d 690 (lesbian mother of child was estopped from challenging validity of stipulated judgment declaring that she and her lesbian partner were child's parents)].

Second, a natural parent and child relationship may be established under any other provisions of the Uniform Parentage Act, except Fam. Code § 7630(c), which applies to children who have no presumed fathers or whose presumed fathers are deceased. The relationship may not be established under Fam. Code § 7630(c) unless any of the following conditions exist [Prob. Code § 6453(b)]:

- A court order was entered during the father's lifetime declaring paternity.
- Paternity is established by clear and convincing evidence that the father openly held out the child as his own.
- It was impossible for the father to hold out the child as his own and paternity is established by clear and convincing evidence.

A natural parent and child relationship may be established for a posthumously conceived child under Prob. Code § 249.5 [Prob. Code § 6453(c)].

An Ohio judgment in a bastardy case qualified as "a court order entered during the father's lifetime declaring paternity," thus establishing a parent-child relationship. The issue decided in the Ohio case was identical to the issue presented in the related California intestate succession case, and there was no evidence that the paternity confession in the Ohio case was a compromise intended to avoid a jury trial in a quasi-criminal matter [ Estate of Griswold (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 904, 922-923, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 24 P.3d 1191 ].

[iv] Adopted Children

Adopted children have the same right as natural children to succeed to the estates of their adoptive parents under the laws of intestate succession [Prob. Code § 6450(b)]. Similarly, when an adoptive parent devises property to a class of persons described in a general way by words such as "heirs," "heirs at law," "next of kin," "relatives," or "family," or words of similar import, the parent's adopted children are entitled to take in the same way as natural children, unless the will indicates a contrary intention [Prob. Code §§ 21114, 21115(a); see Prob. Code § 6450(b)].

The right of adopted persons to inherit property from their natural parents is limited. Adopted children generally do not have the right to succeed to the estates of their natural parents under the laws of intestate succession because the adoption severs the relationship of parent and child [see Prob. Code § 6451(a)]. However, they do have the right to succeed if both of the following requirements are satisfied [Prob. Code § 6451(a)]:

- The natural parent and the adopted person lived together at any time as parent and child, or the natural parent was married to, or cohabiting with the other natural parent at the time the person was conceived and died before the person's birth; and
- The adoption was by the spouse of either of the natural parents or after the death of either of the natural parents.

Further, neither a natural parent nor a relative of a natural parent has any right to succeed by intestate succession to an adopted person's property on the basis of a parent and child relationship between the adopted person and the natural parent that satisfies the requirements of Prob. Code § 6451(a)(1) and (2) [see above], unless the adoption is by the spouse or surviving spouse of that parent [Prob. Code § 6451(b)]. However, this rule does not apply to a wholeblood brother or sister of the adopted person, or the issue of that brother or sister [Prob. Code § 6451(b)]. Moreover, for purposes of the rule that an adoption severs the relationship of parent and child between an adopted person and a natural parent, a prior adoptive parent and child relationship is treated as a natural parent and child relationship [Prob. Code § 6451(c)].

When a will makes a class gift, adopted persons are included or excluded as class members in accordance with the rules governing their inheritance rights for purposes of intestate succession [Prob. Code § 21115(a); see discussion above; see also § 63.226[1][c][viii]]. Thus, under the statutory rule of construction, an adopted child will not be included as a class member for purposes of any class gifts made in the will of his or her natural parent [Prob. Code §§ 6451(a)

(adoption severs parent-child relationship for intestate succession purposes), 21115(a) (class gifts construed in accordance with rules governing intestate succession)], unless the child comes within one of the limited exceptions in the intestate succession laws discussed above. This does not mean that a testator is precluded from making a testamentary gift to a person who has been "adopted out" of his or her family. It does mean, however, that the will must contain an expression of testamentary intent sufficient to overcome the statutory rules of construction [see Prob. Code § 21102(a) (intention of testator is controlling)]. To overcome the statutory presumption, it is recommended that any gift to a person who has been "adopted out" of the testator's family be made to that person by name rather than class description; or, if the testator wants the "adopted out" person to take as a member of a class (such as the testator's "children"), that the class description and/or the will's definition of "children," as appropriate, include a specific statement that the "adopted out" person will be considered a class member (or a "child" of the testator) for purposes of the testamentary gift(s) in question. For discussion of the general rules of construction applicable to will provisions, see § 63.226[1][c][viii];

[v] Judicial Doctrine of Equitable Adoption

In addition to rights gained by virtue of formal adoption, a child's right to inherit or take under a will may also be upheld under the judicial doctrine of "equitable adoption" [Prob. Code § 6455]. The doctrine allows a person who was accepted and treated as a natural or adopted child, and as to whom adoption was promised or contemplated but never performed, to share in inheriting the property of the equitable "parent" [ Estate of Ford (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 160, 165, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 541, 82 P.3d 747 ]. Although California decisions have explained equitable adoption as the specific enforcement of a contract to adopt, the doctrine rests less on ordinary rules of contract law than on considerations of fairness and intent [ Estate of Ford (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 160, 169, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 541, 82 P.3d 747 ]. However, the California law of equitable adoption does not recognize an estoppel arising merely from the existence of a family relationship between the decedent and the claimant. While a person with whom the decedent had a close, caring, and enduring relationship may be seen as more deserving of inheritance than the decedent's heirs whose personal relationships with the decedent may have been more attenuated, the doctrine of equitable adoption is not a means of compensating the child for services rendered to the parent, or a device for avoiding the unjust enrichment of other more distant relatives who will succeed to the estate under the intestacy statutes. Absent proof of an intent to adopt, a court must follow the statutory law of intestate succession [ Estate of Ford (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 160, 171, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 541, 82 P.3d 747 ].

An equitable adoption claimant need not prove all the elements of an enforceable contract to adopt. The claimant must demonstrate, however, the existence of a direct expression by the decedent of an intent to adopt the claimant. This intent may be shown by proof of an unperformed express agreement or promise to adopt. It may also be shown by proof of other acts or statements directly showing that the decedent intended the claimant to be, or to be treated as, a legally adopted child, such as an invalid or unconsummated attempt to adopt, the decedent's statement of his or her intent to adopt, or the decedent's representation to the claimant or to the community at large that the claimant was the decedent's natural or legally adopted child [ Estate of Ford (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 160, 171, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 541, 82 P.3d 747 ]. In addition to a statement or act by the decedent that unequivocally shows the decedent's intent to adopt, the claimant must show that the decedent acted consistently with that intent by forming with the claimant a close and enduring family relationship that must persist up to, or at least not be repudiated by the decedent before, the decedent's death. These elements of an equitable adoption must be shown by clear and convincing evidence [ Estate of Ford (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 160, 171-172, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 541, 83 P.3d 747 ].

[vi] Foster Children and Stepchildren

For purposes of determining intestate succession, the relationship of parent and child exists between a foster parent and a foster child or a stepparent and a stepchild if (1) the relationship began during the foster child's or stepchild's minority and continued throughout the joint lifetimes of the child and the child's foster parent or stepparent and (2) it is established by clear and convincing evidence that the foster parent or stepparent would have adopted the foster child or stepchild but for a legal barrier [Prob. Code § 6454].

[vii] Posthumously Conceived Children

For purposes of determining rights to property to be distributed on a decedent's death, a child of the decedent who was conceived after the decedent's death is deemed to have been born in the decedent's lifetime, and after the execution of all of the decedent's testamentary instruments, if the child or the child's representative proves, by clear and convincing evidence, that all of the following conditions are satisfied [Prob. Code § 249.5]:

- The decedent specified in writing that his or her genetic material could be used for the posthumous conception of a child of the decedent. This writing must be signed by the decedent and dated [Prob. Code § 249.5(a)(1)].
- The person the decedent designated to control the use of the genetic material has given written notice by certified mail, return receipt requested, that the decedent's genetic material was available for posthumous conception. The notice must have been given to a person who has the power to control the distribution of the decedent's property or death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death, within four months of the date of issuance of a certificate of the decedent's death or entry of a judgment determining the fact of the decedent's death, whichever event occurs first [Prob. Code § 249.5(b)].
- The child was in utero using the decedent's genetic material within two years of the date of issuance of a certificate of the decedent's death or entry of a judgment determining the fact of the decedent's death, whichever occurs first. This provision does not apply to a child who shares all of his or her nuclear genes with the person donating the implanted nucleus as a result of the application of somatic nuclear transfer technology commonly known as human cloning [Prob. Code § 249.5(c)].

The person with the power to control the distribution of the decedent's property or death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death may not distribute property or pay death benefits before two years following the date of issuance of a certificate of the decedent's death or entry of a judgment determining the fact of the decedent's death, whichever occurs first, if the person receives timely notice as specified above, or has actual knowledge of the availability of the decedent's genetic material for posthumous conception [Prob. Code § 249.6(a)]. This provision does not apply to, and the distribution of property or the payment of death benefits may proceed in a timely manner as provided by law with respect to, any property if the birth of the posthumously conceived child or children will not affect the proposed distribution of the decedent's property, the payment of death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death, the determination of rights to property to be distributed on the decedent's death, or the right of any person to claim a probate homestead or probate family allowance [Prob. Code § 249.6(b)]. The provision for delayed distribution also does not apply if the person the decedent designated to control the use of the genetic material sends written notice by certified mail, return receipt requested, that he or she does not intend to use the genetic material for the posthumous conception of a child of the decedent. The notice must be signed by the person and at least one competent witness, and dated [Prob. Code § 249.6(c)].

The person with the power to control the distribution of the decedent's property or death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death is not liable for making a distribution of property or paying death benefits before receiving notice or acquiring actual knowledge of the existence of genetic material available for posthumous conception purposes [Prob. Code § 249.6(d); see Prob. Code § 249.5(b), discussed above (notice requirements)]. Each person to whom payment, delivery, or transfer of the decedent's property is made is personally liable to a person who, under Prob. Code § 249.5, has a superior right to the property. A person's aggregate personal liability cannot exceed the fair market value, valued as of the time of the transfer, of the property paid, delivered, or transferred to the person, less the amount of any liens and encumbrances on the property at that time [Prob. Code § 249.6(e)]. In addition, any person who fraudulently secures the payment, delivery, or transfer of the decedent's property is liable to the person having a superior right for three times the fair market value of the property [Prob. Code § 249.6(f)]. Any action to impose liability must be filed within three years after the distribution to the holder of the decedent's property, or three years after the discovery of the fraud, whichever is later. This three-year period may not be tolled for any reason [Prob. Code § 249.6(g)].

If notice is not given in a timely manner, the person with the power to control the distribution of the decedent's property or death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death may make the distribution in the manner provided by law as if any child of the decedent conceived after his or her death had predeceased the decedent without heirs. A posthumously conceived child, or that child's representative, is barred from making a claim for wrongful distribution against either the person making the distribution or the recipient of the distribution, when timely notice was not given [Prob. Code § 249.7].

Any interested person may file a petition under Prob. Code § 248 or 17200 requesting distribution of the decedent's property or death benefits payable by reason of the decedent's death that are subject to the delayed distribution provisions of Prob. Code § 249.6, discussed above [Prob. Code § 249.8]. At the hearing, if it appears that distribution can be made without any loss to any interested person, including any loss (either actual or contingent) to the decedent's posthumously conceived child, the court may order distribution of all, or a portion, of the property or death benefits. The order is stayed until any bond required by the court is filed [Prob. Code § 249.8].

[viii] Will Provisions

The general rule is that for purposes of construing a gift made in a will, halfbloods, adopted persons, persons born out of wedlock, stepchildren, foster children, and the issue of all such persons, when appropriate to the class, are included in the terms of a class gift or relationship in accordance with the rules for determining intestate succession [Prob. Code § 21115; see discussion in § 63.226[1][c][ii] et seq.]. However, this rule is subject to two qualifications.

First, in construing a devise by a testator who is not the natural parent (e.g., a grandfather), a person born to the natural parent (e.g., a son of the grandfather) will not be considered the child of the natural parent unless he or she lived while a minor as a regular member of the household of the natural parent or of that parent's parent, brother, sister, or surviving spouse [Prob. Code § 21115(b)]. The effect of this rule is to exclude a child born out of wedlock (if the testator is not the parent) if the child never lived while a minor as a regular member of the parent's household [Report of Senate Committee on Judiciary on Assembly Bills 25 and 68, 17 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 867, 777 (1984)].

Second, in construing a devise by a testator who is not the adoptive parent (e.g., a grandfather), a person adopted by the adoptive parent (e.g., a son of the grandfather) will not be considered the child of the adoptive parent unless he or she lived while a minor (either before or after the adoption) as a regular member of the household of the adopting parent or of that parent's parent, brother, sister, or surviving spouse [Prob. Code § 21115(b); Estate of DeLoreto (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1048, 1052-1053, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 513 (adopted adult children of beneficiary of father's trust were not members of class of grandchildren who were trust beneficiaries); see discussion in § 63.226[1][c][iv]]. A person adopted by the adoptive parent in another state is entitled to inherit the adoptive parent's distributive share of a decedent's estate as the "living lawful issue" of the parent only if the out-of-state adoption decree created a parent-and-child relationship between the person adopted and the adoptive parent [ Ehrenclou v. Macdonald (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 364, 376, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 411 (adults adopted under Colorado's adult adoption statute did not qualify as "issue" of person adopting them because, under that statute, they did not stand in relation to parent as children but only as parent's heirs at law)].

Finally, the rules for determining intestate succession are those in effect at the time the transfer is to take effect in enjoyment [Prob. Code § 21115(d)].

[d] Omitted Children

A child born or adopted after the execution of all of the testator's "testamentary instruments" may qualify as an omitted heir and be entitled to inherit the same share of the testator's estate that the child would have received if the testator had died without executing any testamentary instrument [Prob. Code § 21620]. For purposes of this rule, a "testamentary instrument" is either a will or a trust instrument that was executed by the decedent and that became irrevocable on the testator's death [Prob. Code § 21601(a)], and "estate" means the decedent's probate estate and all property held in any revocable trust executed by the testator that became irrevocable on the testator's death [Prob. Code § 21601(b)].

An omitted child is not entitled to receive a share of the estate if any of the following is established [Prob. Code § 21611]:

- The testator's failure to provide for the child in the testator's testamentary instruments was intentional and that intention appears from the testamentary instruments.
- The testator had one or more children and devised or otherwise directed the disposition of substantially all the estate to the other parent of the omitted child.
- The testator provided for the child by transfer outside of the estate passing by the testator's testamentary instruments and the intention that the transfer be in lieu of a provision in those instruments is shown by statements of the testator or from the amount of the transfer or by other evidence.

For general discussion of the inheritance rights of omitted heirs, see § 61.16[2], [3].

CHAPTER 63 WILL PROVISIONS

PART IV. FORMS

B. Identity of Testator's Family and Other Beneficiaries

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.229

§ 63.229 Children and Issue Declaration--Grandchild(ren)

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to declare that the testator has one or more grandchildren and to identify them. It makes the identification by specifying the name, birthdate, and parents of each grandchild. It also includes an optional provision establishing the testator's grandchildren as a class and providing that the class will include afterborn children. When used, this form may become part of the second paragraph of the will and immediately follow the declaration as to the testator's children [see §§ 63.226-63.228].

[b] Testator's Grandchildren

Although a grandchild is not an "omitted" heir [see Prob. Code §§ 21600-21630 and discussion in § 61.16] and may not claim an intestate share of the estate if the testator fails to provide for him or her in the will, [see § 63.226[1][d]], it may nevertheless be advisable to identify grandchildren in the will. If the testator has a large family, or if one of the testator's children has died and the son-in-law or daughter-in-law has remarried, the testator may wish to mention the grandchildren as a preliminary step to making a disposition in their favor. Whether or not the grandchildren are to share in the testator's bounty, identifying them may help to establish the testator's capacity. Testamentary capacity has been described as sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature of the testamentary act and to remember and understand the testator's relations to those who are the natural objects of his or her bounty [ Estate of Nelson (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 42, 53, 38 Cal. Rptr. 459 ].

If the will includes a class gift to grandchildren, the testator must decide whether the class will be increased by afterborn children. This form provides an optional provision establishing such a class and providing that the class will include afterborn children. If the testator wishes to provide for a child who has been adopted out of the testator's family (whether that child is a natural child, a natural grandchild, or some other blood relation of the testator), § 63.695 should be used.

It is important to remember that a gift to a class that includes grandchildren born after execution of the will has the potential for violating the rule against perpetuities. If the right of a grandchild to membership in the class cannot be determined within 21 years after the death of a person alive when the testator dies, then the class gift might fail to either vest or terminate within the 21-year period of the common-law rule against perpetuities.

In California, perpetuities are subject to the Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities (USRAP) [see Prob. Code §§ 21200-21231], which includes a recodification of Professor John Chipman Gray's classic formulation of the common-law rule against perpetuities [see Prob. Code §§ 21205(a), 21206(a), 21207(a); see also Ch. 67, Future Interests and Perpetuities, § 67.16[1]]. Under that recodification, a nonvested property interest is invalid unless, when the interest is created, it is certain to either vest or terminate no later than 21 years after the death of a person alive at the time of creation [Prob. Code § 21205(a)]. However, the USRAP also includes a 90-year "wait-and-see" rule, under which a nonvested interest may be valid if it actually vests or terminates within 90 years after its creation [Prob. Code § 21205(b); see Ch. 67, Future Interests and Perpetuities, § 67.16[1]].

The 90-year wait-and-see rule shifts the traditional perpetuities focus from what might conceivably happen to a nonvested interest during the applicable perpetuities period to what actually happens to the interest in the 90 years after it is created. Although this rule substantially liberalizes perpetuities regulation in California, it does not eliminate the need for recognizing potential perpetuities violations and taking reasonable steps to avoid them. First, any disposition that has the potential for violating the common-law rule against perpetuities (as recodified in the USRAP) should be drafted so as to avoid a violation. Second, any will that creates a trust, makes a class gift, or otherwise calls for a complex disposition of property should include a perpetuities savings clause. For perpetuities savings clauses suitable for use in wills, see Ch. 67, Future Interests and Perpetuities, §§ 67.231, 67.232. For a detailed discussion of the Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities and its operation in California, see Ch. 67, Future Interests and Perpetuities, § 67.16.

CHAPTER 63 WILL PROVISIONS

PART IV. FORMS

B. Identity of Testator's Family and Other Beneficiaries

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.230

§ 63.230 Identification of All Beneficiaries

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to identify all of the beneficiaries under the will. It is an optional provision and may be useful when the testator wishes to clearly name and identify in a single place all of the persons named as beneficiaries in the will. When used, it should be added to the provisions declaring the testator's marital status [see §§ 63.220-63.223] and children and issue [see §§ 63.226-63.229].

[b] Identification of Beneficiaries--Individuals

It is usually sufficient to identify individual beneficiaries by their names and places of residence. In some situations, however, the names alone may not be sufficient. This will be especially true if the will names different members of a single family who have the same or similar names. In many wills, the beneficiaries may be conveniently identified in the dispositive paragraphs of the will, but if the same beneficiary appears in more than one dispositive paragraph it may be more convenient to identify the beneficiary by a declaration in a separate paragraph and thereby simplify the identification in other provisions of the will.

[c] Identification of Beneficiaries--Entities

If the intended beneficiary is not an individual, the attorney should take care to make certain that the entity is properly identified and that its capacity to take is verified in advance. If the testator wishes that a specific charity be the beneficiary, it is recommended that the charity be contacted in order to determine the exact name under which it holds property. If the beneficiary is a large organization performing various functions through subordinate entities (such as a religious denomination or a fraternal organization), the specific entity (lodge, chapter, parish, etc.) should be mentioned.

A will may make a disposition of property to any person, including but not limited to an individual; a corporation; an unincorporated association, society, lodge, or any branch of such an organization; a county, city, city and county, or any municipal corporation; any state, including the State of California; the United States or any of its instrumentalities; and a foreign country or governmental entity [Prob. Code § 6102]. Wills also may make gifts to pre-existing trusts.

For a discussion of the rules relating to charities and charitable devises, together with illustrative forms, see Ch. 69, Charitable Dispositions .

§ 63.250 General Declaration for Unmarried Testator

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by an unmarried testator to state that the will disposes of all of the property that he or she is entitled to dispose of by will. Such a statement will clearly manifest the intended scope of the will. If the testator is married, this form should not be used, and an appropriate provision should instead be chosen from among §§ 63.270-63.272. If the testator holds a power of appointment, or if there is any likelihood that such a power may exist at the time of the testator's death, a statement that the testator is or is not exercising the power should be added to the provisions of this form [see §§ 63.290-63.292].

[b] Property That May Be Disposed of by Will

[i] In General

Unless a contrary intention is indicated by the will, a will passes all property the testator owns at death, including property acquired after execution of the will [Prob. Code § 21105]. As used in the Probate Code, the word "property" means anything that may be the subject of ownership, and includes both real and personal property and any interest in real or personal property [Prob. Code § 62].

A special rule applies to powers of appointment. Although a power of appointment may be exercised by a will [see Prob. Code §§ 612(a), 642], a power of appointment cannot be exercised by a will making a general disposition of all of the testator's property, unless specific reference is made to the power or there is some other indication of intent to exercise the power [Prob. Code § 641(a); see Prob. Code § 21105 (special exception to general rule that will passes all property testator owned at death)].

A will may dispose of all the testator's separate property, the testator's half of any community property owned by the testator and the testator's spouse, and the testator's half of any quasi-community property owned by the testator and the testator's spouse [Prob. Code § 6101].

[ii] Separate Property

All property owned by a spouse before marriage, and all property acquired by a spouse after marriage by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, together with the rents, issues, and profits of that property, is that spouse's separate property [Fam. Code § 770]. In addition, money or property received or to be received by a married person in satisfaction of a judgment for damages for personal injuries, or pursuant to an agreement for the settlement or compromise of such a claim, is the separate property of the injured person if the cause of action for damages arose after the entry of a judgment of dissolution or legal separation, or while the injured spouse was living separate from the other [Fam. Code § 781(a)].

All of the testator's separate property is subject to the testator's testamentary disposition [Prob. Code § 6101(a)] and, in the absence of a testamentary disposition, passes according to the rules of intestate succession [see Prob. Code §§ 6400-6455].

[iii] Community Property

Except as otherwise provided by statute, community property includes all real or personal property, wherever situated, acquired by a married person during the marriage while domiciled in California [Fam. Code § 760]. As used in the Probate Code, "community property" means the following:

- Community property acquired during marriage by a married person while domiciled in California [Prob. Code § 28(a)];
- All personal property wherever situated, and all real property situated in California, acquired during marriage by a married person while domiciled elsewhere, that is community property, or a substantially equivalent type of marital property, under the laws of the place where the acquiring spouse was domiciled at the time of its acquisition [Prob. Code § 28(b)]; and
- All personal property wherever situated, and all real property situated in California, acquired during marriage by a married person in exchange for real or personal property, wherever situated, that is community property, or a substantially equivalent type of marital property, under the laws of the place where the acquiring spouse was domiciled at the time the property so exchanged was acquired [Prob. Code § 28(c)].

On the death of a married person, one half of the community property belongs to the surviving spouse and the other half belongs to the decedent [Prob. Code § 100(a)]. The one-half that belongs to the decedent is subject to the decedent's testamentary disposition [Prob. Code § 6101(b)] and, in the absence of a testamentary disposition, passes to the surviving spouse by intestate succession [Prob. Code § 6401(a)]. A putative spouse is a "surviving spouse" within the meaning of Prob. Code § 6401 and has the same rights in the decedent's intestate estate as a legally married spouse [Estate of Leslie (1984), 37 Cal. 3d 186, 197, 207 Cal. Rptr. 561, 689 P.2d 133 (decided under former Prob. Code §§ 221, 223, 224)].

A husband and wife may agree to a non-pro-rata division of their community property (either as to the aggregate value or as to an individual asset) [see Prob. Code § 100(b)].

[iv] Quasi-Community Property

Quasi-community property generally consists of property acquired by married persons while domiciled outside

California and which would have been community property if the persons had been domiciled in California at the time of acquisition [see Fam. Code § 125]. As used in the Probate Code, the term "quasi-community property" specifically refers to the following property (other than "community property" as defined in Prob. Code § 28):

- All personal property (wherever situated) and all real property (situated in California), acquired by a decedent while domiciled outside California, that would have been the community property of the decedent and the surviving spouse if the decedent had been domiciled in California at the time of acquisition [Prob. Code § 66(a)]; and
- All personal property (wherever situated) and all real property (situated in California), acquired in exchange for real or personal property, wherever situated, that would have been the community property of the decedent and the surviving spouse if the decedent had been domiciled in California at the time the property so exchanged was acquired [Prob. Code § 66(b)].

On the death of a married person domiciled in California, one-half of the decedent's quasi-community property belongs to the surviving spouse and the other half belongs to the decedent [Prob. Code § 101(a)]. If the decedent has, before death, transferred all or any part of the decedent's quasi-community property to a third person or persons, without receiving in exchange a consideration of substantial value and without the written consent or joinder of the surviving spouse, the surviving spouse may, under limited circumstances, require the transferee to restore one-half of the property (or an equivalent value) to the decedent's estate [see Prob. Code § 102; see also Ch. 60A, Gifts, § 60A.12[2]].

A husband and wife may agree in writing to a non-pro-rata division of their quasi-community property (either as to the aggregate value or as to an individual asset) [see Prob. Code § 101(b)].

The one-half of the spouse's quasi-community property that belongs to the decedent is subject to the decedent's testamentary disposition [Prob. Code § 6101(c)] and, in the absence of a testamentary disposition, passes to the surviving spouse by intestate succession [Prob. Code § 6401(b)].

[c] Description of All of Testator's Property

This form does not include language to the effect that the testator is disposing of "all property, real and personal, community and separate, of every kind and description, and wheresoever located." Such words add nothing to the phrase "all the property over which I have a power of testamentary disposition," which is sufficiently broad to include the entire estate of the testator.

[d] Property Not Subject to Testamentary Disposition

Although this clause is effective to dispose of all property over which the testator has the power of testamentary disposition, it does not affect property over which the testator has no power of testamentary disposition. Such property includes property held in joint tenancy [ Goldberg v. Goldberg (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 623, 628, 32 Cal. Rptr. 93 ] and the proceeds of insurance on the testator's life [ Cook v. Cook (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 639, 644-648, 111 P.2d 322 ]. Life insurance proceeds are not subject to testamentary disposition unless the policy specifies that the proceeds are to be paid to the estate or to the personal representative of the insured [see Cook v. Cook (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 639, 645, 111 P.2d 322 ], since the policy is a contract with an insurance company that agrees to pay a certain sum to the named beneficiary on the testator's death [ Cook v. Cook (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 639, 644-648, 111 P.2d 322 ]. The ownership rights of the insured under a life insurance policy, however, may be disposed of by will, and, when they are, the beneficiary will take whatever interest the insured possessed under the policy [Ins. Code § 10130; see Cook v. Cook (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 639, 644, 111 P.2d 322 ].

In the absence of a prior contrary agreement, a joint tenant may unilaterally sever his or her interest from the joint tenancy by conveyance or other acts inconsistent with joint ownership and thereby nullify the right of survivorship of the other joint tenant or tenants, without their consent. Severance of the joint tenancy converts the joint tenancy into a tenancy in common. Thereafter, the severing tenant's interest in the property may be disposed of by will [ Estate of Propst (1990) 50 Cal. 3d 448, 461-462, 268 Cal. Rptr. 114, 788 P.2d 628 (personal property); Riddle v. Harmon (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 524, 526-527, 162 Cal. Rptr. 530 (real property)].

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by a married testator to state that the will disposes of the testator's one-half interest in the community and quasi-community property of the spouses and all of the testator's separate property. If the testator is unmarried, § 63.250 should be used in place of this form. If the testator wishes to dispose of the entire interest of both spouses in the community property, § 63.271 or § 63.272 should be used in place of this form.

For definitions of separate property, community property, and quasi-community property, and a discussion of the extent to which these different types of property may be disposed of by will, see § 63.250[1].

[b] "One-Half" of Community Property

If the testator intends to dispose his or her entire interest in the community and quasi-community property of the spouses (i.e., one-half of the interest of both spouses), the will should state that the testator is disposing of "all" or "my entire interest." A statement that the testator is disposing of "one-half of my interest," as opposed to "my one-half interest," may be interpreted as disposing of only one-fourth (i.e., one half of one half) of the total community and quasi-community property.

[1] Comment--Use of Form

This form may be used by a married testator to state that the will disposes of all of the community and quasi-community property of both spouses in addition to all of the testator's separate property. This form is generally used where the will creates two trusts, one a marital trust and the other a residuary trust. The surviving spouse's one-half interest in the community and quasi-community property is placed in the residuary trust, and the surviving spouse is given the right to withdraw funds from the residuary trust without limitation. Since the surviving spouse has not lost control over the property under such a disposition, a forced election [see § 63.272] is unnecessary. However, if the will provides that the testator's spouse will not have the right to withdraw his or her interest, and if the spouse is given no more than a special testamentary power to appoint his or her own interest, then the form in § 63.272[2] should be used instead of this form. For discussion of the "widow's election," see § 63.272[1].

2. Married Persons

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.272

§ 63.272 Gift of All Community, Quasi-Community, and Separate Property With Alternative Gift If Spouse Takes Against Will

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used by a married testator to state that the will disposes of all of the community and quasi-community property of the spouses, and to provide an alternative disposition if the surviving spouse elects to take "against" the will. This provision creates a so-called "widow's election," requiring the surviving spouse (who may be either a widow or a widower) to choose whether to accept the benefits conferred by the will, or to reject those benefits and enforce his or her rights in the community and quasi-community property.

The "widow's election" is a sophisticated and potentially dangerous estate planning device. It should be used only after its advantages and disadvantages have been thoroughly evaluated and the attorney is satisfied that it will achieve the client's estate planning goals more satisfactorily than other estate planning arrangements. For further discussion of the "widow's election," see California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 22, Property Devised by Will, § 22.06 (Matthew Bender); see also Modern Estate Planning, Ch. 16, Community Property (Matthew Bender).

[b] Widow's Election

[i] In General

Although a married person generally has testamentary power over only one half of the community and quasi-community property [see Prob. Code § 6101], one spouse may attempt to dispose of more than one half, even up to all, of the property. Such an attempt will be successful, however, only if the will clearly states the spouse's intention to dispose of more than one half of the property, and only if the surviving spouse acquiesces in the attempt. The right of a surviving spouse to acquiesce (or refuse to acquiesce) in an attempt by the spouse who dies first (the "deceased spouse") to dispose of more than one half of the community or quasi-community property is often called the "widow's election" [see Estate of Murphy (1976) 15 Cal. 3d 907, 913, 126 Cal. Rptr. 820, 544 P.2d 956]. A "widow's election," of course, may be made by a widower as well as a widow.

[ii] Elements

The surviving spouse will be put to a "widow's election" if the will of the deceased purports to dispose of property that belongs to the surviving spouse and if it is evident that it would thwart the intentions of the deceased spouse to permit the surviving spouse to enforce his or her own property rights while still taking under the deceased spouse's will [Estate of Murphy (1976) 15 Cal. 3d 907, 913, 126 Cal. Rptr. 820, 544 P.2d 956]. In these circumstances, the surviving spouse must choose whether he or she wishes to take under the deceased spouse's will or to enforce his or her own property rights [Estate of Murphy (1976) 15 Cal. 3d 907, 913, 126 Cal. Rptr. 820, 544 P.2d 956; Estate of Wolfe (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 570, 574, 311 P.2d 476; Estate of Wilson (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 67, 73 n.7, 227 Cal. Rptr. 794]. Requiring the surviving spouse to make this choice is justified on the ground that a person should not be permitted to accept the benefits conferred by a will while simultaneously repudiating its losses [Williams v. Williams (1915) 170 Cal. 625, 627-628, 151 P. 10].

[iii] Forced Election

In estate planning discussions, the phrase "widow's election" often refers to a more or less standardized arrangement by which one spouse attempts to control the disposition of both halves of the community property by creating one or more trusts under which the surviving spouse will receive a lifetime income interest in both halves of the property and, on the death of the surviving spouse, the trust principal will be distributed to other beneficiaries, such as the testator's children or issue. In these circumstances, the will may explicitly provide that, if the surviving spouse "elects" to take his or her interest in the community or quasi-community property "against" the will, the surviving spouse will forfeit all of part of his or her rights under the will. This kind of election is often called a "forced" or "strict" election. In particular cases, this kind of election may be necessary to persuade the surviving spouse to acquiesce in the deceased spouse's attempted disposition of more than one half of the community property.

[iv] Purposes

When a will puts a surviving spouse to a "widow's election," the objective is usually to achieve control over the ultimate disposition of the subject property. The deceased spouse will generally be content to allow the surviving spouse to enjoy the property during his or her lifetime but wish to assure that the property will be distributed after the death of the surviving spouse to persons designated by the deceased spouse. This goal will often be sought when the deceased spouse has children by a previous marriage and wishes to protect those children against disinheritance by the surviving spouse.

Another goal that the deceased spouse may wish to attain through the mechanism of a "widow's election" is professional management of the trust property. In cases of this kind, a professional trustee will often be named to manage the trust property after the deceased spouse's death, and to distribute the property on the surviving spouse's death to the designated remainder beneficiaries.

[v] Disadvantages

While the "widow's election" can be used by sophisticated estate planners to achieve well-defined estate-planning goals in particular circumstances, the arrangement is not suited to the circumstances of most married persons, and it is generally avoided by modern estate planners.

The tax disadvantages of the "widow's election" are significant. For example, a "forced" or "strict" election can actually result in higher estate taxes in the estate of the deceased spouse by impairing the value of the marital deduction that would otherwise be available for property that passes to the surviving spouse [see I.R.C. § 2056 (marital deduction)].

This happens if the deceased spouse's will requires the surviving spouse to surrender his or her interest in the community and quasi-community property in return for a devise under the deceased spouse's will. When this happens, the value of the devise to the surviving spouse must be reduced by the value of the community property surrendered [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(4) (value of interest passing to surviving spouse must be reduced by value of obligation imposed on surviving spouse by deceased spouse); see also Treas. Reg. § 20.2056(b)-(4)(b), Ex. 3].

If the surviving spouse accepts a lifetime income interest in a trust or trusts created by the deceased spouse's will, the value of the surviving spouse's half of the community or quasi-community property may be subject to estate taxation when the surviving spouse dies. Under I.R.C. § 2036(a), the gross estate includes the value of all property transferred in which a decedent has retained a life interest. By contributing his or her interest in the community property to a trust in which he or she retained a lifetime income interest, the surviving spouse has made a transfer with a retained lifetime interest [ Gradow v. U.S. (Fed. Cir. [U.S. Ct. Cl.] 1990) 897 F.2d 516, 518 ]. Although I.R.C. § 2036(a) allows an exception for property transferred "in a bona fide sale for an adequate consideration in money or money's worth," this exception is not available when the value of the surviving spouse's half is greater than the value of a lifetime income interest in the deceased spouse's half, determined on an actuarial basis according to the surviving spouse's life expectancy [ Gradow v. U.S. (Fed. Cir. [U.S. Ct. Cl.] 1990) 897 F.2d 516, 518 ; see Treas. Reg. § 20.2043-1(a)].

A taxable gift of a future interest may occur when the surviving spouse surrenders his or her half of the community property in return for a lifetime income interest in both halves. By accepting only a lifetime income interest in his or her half of the community property, the surviving spouse in effect is giving up the remainder interest in that half. If the value of this remainder interest exceeds the value of the lifetime income interest in both halves of the community property, then the surviving spouse will have made a gift to the extent of the difference [see Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Siegel (9th Cir. [T.C.] 1957) 250 F.2d 339, 349 ; Estate of Daisy F. Christ (1970) 54 T.C. 493, 530 , aff'd on other grounds, (9th Cir. 1973) 480 F.2d 171 ].

In addition to the tax disadvantages, the "widow's election" is subject to other practical disadvantages. In many cases, a "strict" or "forced" election will not be necessary to persuade the surviving spouse to acquiesce in the deceased spouse's plan of disposition. If the spouses share the same overall estate-planning objectives, they will often agree on how the trust property should ultimately be distributed. Further, many surviving spouses will be quite content to receive the income from the trust property during their lifetimes in return for giving up the right to control the disposition of the property after they have died. Even when a "strict" or "forced" election is necessary to persuade the surviving spouse to acquiesce in the deceased spouse's plan of disposition, the election will often engender bitter and divisive feelings among family members, which will practically outweigh any financial advantages achieved by the arrangement.

[vi] Alternatives

Most of the purposes sought to be accomplished by a "widow's election" can be achieved in other ways. For example, a spouse who wishes to control the disposition of trust property after the death of his or her surviving spouse may create a qualified terminable interest property (QTIP) trust under I.R.C. § 2056(b)(7). A QTIP trust will qualify for the marital deduction on the death of the deceased spouse if the surviving spouse is given the right to receive all of the income from the trust property for life. On the death of the surviving spouse, the trust principal can be distributed to remainder beneficiaries designated by the deceased spouse. For further discussion of QTIP trusts, see Ch. 71, Marital Deduction Trust Provisions .

Some of the same purposes may also be accomplished if a husband and wife create a revocable living trust funded with their community or quasi-community property. The surviving spouse will be given the right to receive the income from the trust property after the death of the deceased spouse. On the death of the surviving spouse, the trust property will be distributed to designated remainder beneficiaries. The trust instrument may include a provision stating that the surviving spouse cannot amend the instrument after the death of the deceased spouse. This will give the deceased spouse effective control over the disposition of the trust property after the death of the surviving spouse. For general coverage of revocable living trusts, see Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms .

 3. Exercise of Power of Appointment

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.290

§ 63.290 Provision Specifying Nonexercise of Powers of Appointment

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a provision stating that the testator does not wish to exercise any powers of appointment that he or she may possess. Use of this provision is not mandatory, but is nevertheless recommended to eliminate any possibility that any other provision in the will may be misconstrued as an expression of such an intent.

A general residuary clause in a will, or a will making a general disposition of all the testator's property, does not exercise a power of appointment held by the testator unless specific reference is made to the power or there is some indication of an intention on the testator's part to exercise the power [Prob. Code § 641(a)]. By indicating an absence of any such intent, this form precludes any likelihood of an inadvertent exercise of a power of appointment.

For general coverage of powers of appointment, see Ch. 64, Testamentary Trusts: Payment and Distribution Provisions, § 64.43[1] et seq.

[b] Effect of Failure to Exercise Power

[i] Disposition of Appointive Property

The failure to exercise a power of appointment will have different effects, depending on whether the power was "imperative" or "discretionary," and whether the creating instrument provided for the consequences of a failure to exercise the power.

A power of appointment is said to be "imperative" if the creating instrument manifests an intent that the particular appointees will benefit even if the donee fails to exercise the power [Prob. Code § 613]. A power of appointment is said to be "discretionary" if the donee is privileged to exercise, or not to exercise, the power as the donee chooses [Prob.

Code § 613].

If the donee of an imperative power declines to exercise the power, then the persons designated as permissible appointees will take equally of the appointive property, unless the creating instrument manifests a contrary intent [Prob. Code § 671(a)].

If the power was discretionary and the donee fails to exercise the power, the appointive property will pass to the persons named by the donor as the takers in default [Prob. Code § 672(a)]. If no taker in default was designated in the creating instrument, then the property will revert to the donor [Prob. Code § 672(a)].

[ii] Estate Tax Consequences

The tax consequences of the failure to exercise a power of appointment will vary, depending on whether the power was a "general" or a "special" power of appointment for estate tax purposes, and whether the effect of the failure to exercise the power will be to transfer property or terminate an interest in property in such a way as to subject the property to the generation-skipping transfer tax.

All powers of appointment are either "general" or "special" [see California Wills and Trusts, § 31.02[2] (Matthew Bender)]. A "general" power of appointment is one that can be exercised in favor of the donee, the donee's estate, the donee's creditors, or creditors of the donee's estate, whether or not it is exercisable in favor of others [Prob. Code § 611(a); I.R.C. § 2041(b)(1)]. The mere possession at the date of death of a general power of appointment is sufficient to include the appointive property in the gross estate of the holder for estate tax purposes [I.R.C. § 2041(a)(2) (power created after October 21, 1942)]. This result is not affected by the holder's decision not to exercise the power. Property subject to the power will be included in the holder's gross estate for estate tax purposes regardless of whether the power is or is not executed in the holder's will.

Any power of appointment that is not "general" is classified as a special power of appointment. The mere possession of a special power of appointment will not cause the appointive property to be included in the holder's gross estate for estate tax purposes. Further, the exercise or nonexercise of a special power of appointment will have no estate tax consequences for the holder's estate.

[iii] Generation-Skipping Transfer Tax Consequences

The failure to exercise a power of appointment may have generation-skipping transfer tax consequences, depending on the value of the property, the identity of the person or persons who will receive the property as a result of the failure to exercise the power, and the generation-assignment of those persons.

The generation-skipping transfer tax applies to three general types of transfers. These are defined as taxable distributions, taxable terminations, and direct skips [I.R.C. §§ 2611, 2612].

A taxable distribution is any distribution from a trust to a "skip person" I.R.C. § 2612(b). A "skip person" is defined as (1) any natural person who is assigned to a generation two or more generations below that of the transferor, (2) any trust in which all interests are held by skip persons, and (3) any trust in which no person holds an interest and that does not make any distribution from the trust to any "non-skip person" at any time after the transfer to the trust [I.R.C. § 2613(a)].

A taxable termination is generally any termination of an interest in property held in trust, whether the termination occurs as the result of death, lapse of time, release of a power, or otherwise [I.R.C. § 2612(a)(1)].

A direct skip is any transfer of a property interest to a skip person if the transfer is also subject to either gift or estate tax

[I.R.C. § 2612(c)(1)].

If, by reason of the testator's failure to exercise a power of appointment, whether general or special, a taxable distribution is made from a trust to a "skip person," the distribution will be potentially subject to the generation-skipping transfer tax. If, by reason of the failure to exercise a power of appointment, a taxable termination is made, the termination will similarly be subject to potential imposition of the generation-skipping transfer tax.

Before a determination can be made of the generation-skipping transfer tax consequences of the failure to exercise a power of appointment, the value of the appointive property must be known, the persons who will receive the property as a result of the failure must be identified, and the relationship between those persons and the transferor of the property must be determined.

A full discussion of the generation-skipping transfer tax is beyond the scope of this chapter. For a general discussion of the tax, see Ch. 61, Will Drafting and Complete Will Forms, § 61.10 et seq. For an in-depth discussion of the generation-skipping transfer tax, see California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 113, Generation-Skipping Transfers and Trust Strategies (Matthew Bender).

§ 63.291 Provision Exercising Power of Appointment Given by Will

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a will provision exercising a power of appointment. This provision must be included in the will if the testator is the donee of a power of appointment and wishes to exercise it [see § 63.291[1][b][iii]].

This form specifically refers to a power of appointment created by the will of another person. For a form exercising a power of appointment created in an inter vivos trust instrument, see § 63.292.

For general coverage of powers of appointment, see Ch. 64, Testamentary Trusts: Payment and Distribution Provisions, § 64.43[1] et seq. For the tax consequences of powers of appointment, see Ch. 64, Testamentary Trusts: Payment and Distribution Provisions, § 64.51[1] et seq.

[b] Exercise of Power of Appointment

[i] Compliance With Creating Instrument

If the creating instrument specifies requirements as to the manner, time, and conditions of the exercise of a power of appointment, the power can generally be exercised only by complying with those requirements [Prob. Code § 630(a)]. However, the court may excuse formal compliance with requirements specified in the creating instrument if an actual appointment approximates the manner of appointment prescribed by the donor and the failure to satisfy the formal requirements does not defeat the accomplishment of a significant purpose of the donor [Prob. Code § 631(a)].

If the creating instrument expressly directs that a power of appointment be exercised by an instrument that makes a specific reference to the power or to the instrument that created the power, the power can be exercised only by an instrument containing the required reference [Prob. Code § 632]. The court cannot excuse compliance with a requirement of this kind [Prob. Code § 1631(b)].

[ii] Manifestation of Intent to Exercise

The exercise of a power of appointment requires a manifestation of the donee's intent to exercise the power [Prob. Code § 640(a)]. The intent to exercise a power may be manifested in various ways [see Prob. Code § 640(b)]. For example, the donee may declare, in substance, that the donee exercises a specific power or powers, or all of the powers that the donee has [Prob. Code § 640(b)(1)]. Alternatively, the donee may purport to transfer an interest in the appointive property that the donee would have no power to transfer except by virtue of the power [Prob. Code § 640(b)(2)]. Or the donee may make a disposition that, when considered with reference to the property owned and the circumstances existing at the time of the disposition, manifests the donee's understanding that the donee was disposing of the appointive property [Prob. Code § 640(b)(3)].

[iii] Exercise by Will

A power of appointment may be exercised by a will [see Prob. Code §§ 612(a), 642]. A will may even be effective to exercise a power of appointment that was not in existence when the will was executed, provided the will adequately manifests the intent to exercise the power [Prob. Code § 642]. However, a will cannot exercise a power not in existence when the will was executed if the creating instrument manifests an intent that the power may not be exercised by a will previously executed, or if the will manifests an intent not to exercise a power subsequently acquired [Prob. Code § 642].

A power of appointment cannot be exercised by a general residuary clause in a will, or by a will making a general disposition of all of the testator's property, unless specific reference is made to the power or there is some other indication of intent to exercise the power [Prob. Code § 641(a); but see Prob. Code § 641(b) (rule applicable only when donee dies on or after July 1, 1982)].

[iv] Types of Appointments

Various types of appointments may be made under a power of appointment. The appointment may be of present or future interests, or both [Prob. Code § 650(a)(2)]. The appointment may be unconditional, or subject to conditions, charges, or otherwise lawful restraints on the alienation of the appointive interest [Prob. Code § 650(a)(3), (4)]. The appointment may be in trust, or free of trust [Prob. Code § 650(a)(5)], or by creating a new power of appointment [Prob. Code § 650(a)(6)].

If the power is, by its terms, a special power of appointment [see Prob. Code § 611 "general" and "special" powers of appointment; see also Ch. 64, Testamentary Trusts: Payment and Distribution Provisions, § 64.44[1]], any of these types of appointments may be made, provided the appointment complies with the terms of the creating instrument [see § 63.291[1][b][i]]. The donee of a special power of appointment may appoint the whole or any part of the appointive property to any one or more of the permissible appointees and exclude others, unless the donor specifies either a minimum or maximum share or amount to be appointed to one or more of the permissible appointees, in which case the exercise of the power must conform to the specification [Prob. Code § 652].

CHAPTER 63 WILL PROVISIONS

PART IV. FORMS

D. Proration of Death Taxes and Payment of Specific Debts

1. Proration of Death Taxes

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.310

§ 63.310 Proration of Death Taxes--All Taxes to Be Paid Out of Residue

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a will provision that requires payment of all death taxes out of the residue of the estate. The direction is not limited to death taxes arising out of the probate estate, but includes the payment of all death taxes, including those assessed on property passing outside of probate or on lifetime transfers by the testator [see I.R.C. §§ 2036-2038 (taxation of lifetime transfers because of a retained interest by the transferor)].

For alternative methods of prorating death taxes, see §§ 63.311-63.317.

[b] Marital Deduction

If the will contains a marital deduction trust, § 63.314 should be used in place of this form.

[c] Coordination of Will With Other Components of Estate Plan

Any tax apportionment scheme contained in will must be coordinated with the other components of the client's plan. If the client has established or plans to establish an inter vivos trust, any tax apportionment provision contained in the will must be compatible with the existence and terms of the trust. For example, if the bulk of the client's assets will be placed into the trust, it makes no sense to require that all death taxes be paid out of the residue of the client's estate, since the residue may not contain enough assets to pay the taxes generated by the trust. In this situation, it may make more sense to state in the will that all taxes are to be paid out of the trust, since that is where the bulk of the client's assets will be located [see § 63.313 for form].

Similarly, the attorney must be careful to avoid inconsistency between the tax apportionment schemes of the will and the trust. For example, if the trust provides for statutory proration and the will provides for payment of all taxes out of the residue, the two schemes would be fundamentally inconsistent. Again, proper coordination is essential. For discussion of tax apportionment provisions in inter vivos trusts, see Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms, § 70.12[6][e]; for more detailed discussion, see California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 23, Provisions for Payment of Taxes, Expenses, and Debts (Matthew Bender).

The effects of any codicils to the will also must be considered [see § 63.310[1][f]].

[d] Proration of Taxes

[i] Statutory Scheme

Rules relating to the proration of estate taxes are set forth in Prob. Code §§ 20100-20125. These rules govern the proration of federal and California estate taxes, including interest and penalties on deficiencies assessed pursuant to those taxes [Prob. Code § 20100(a); see I.R.C. §§ 2001-2210 (federal estate tax); Rev. & Tax. Code § 13302 (California "pickup" estate tax); see also discussions in § 63.310[1][e]]. Proration rules relating to generation-skipping transfer taxes are set forth in Prob. Code §§ 20200-20225. These rules similarly apply both to federal and to state generation-skipping transfer taxes [Prob. Code § 20200(a); see I.R.C. §§ 2601-2622 (federal generation-skipping transfer tax) and Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 16700-16950 (California generation-skipping transfer tax); for general discussion of the generation skipping transfer tax, see Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.16].

[ii] General Rule

The general rule is that estate and generation-skipping transfer taxes must be equitably prorated among the persons interested in the estate [Prob. Code § 20110(a) (estate tax); Prob. Code § 20210(a) (generation-skipping transfer tax)]. Except as specifically noted in the statutes [see discussions in § 63.310[1][d][iii] et seq.], equitable proration is achieved when proration is made in the proportion that the value of the property received by each person interested in the estate bears to the total value of all property received by all persons interested in the estate [Prob. Code §§ 20111, 20211].

The statutory procedure for prorating estate taxes does not include consideration of future income tax consequences. Unless income tax consequences can be ascertained with reasonable certainty for purposes of equitable reallocation at the time of distribution, the beneficiaries of an estate are responsible for paying their own future income taxes [ Klein v. Hughes (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 121, 128-131, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 613 ].

[iii] Exceptions to General Rule

The general rule is subject to significant exceptions. First, the rule does not apply if the decedent (in either a written inter vivos instrument or a will) directs that specific property be applied to the satisfaction of a tax or that a tax be prorated in a specific manner [Prob. Code §§ 20110(b)(1), 20210(b)(1); see § 63.310[1][d][iv]]. Second, the rule does not apply when federal law directs otherwise [Prob. Code §§ 20110(b)(2), 20210(b)(2); see discussion in § 63.310[1][d][v]]. Finally, the rule yields to specific proration requirements applicable to trusts, estates for years, estates for life, and other income interests [Prob. Code §§ 20113, 20213; see discussion in § 63.310[1][d][vi]], to "qualified real property" as defined in I.R.C. § 2032A [Prob. Code § 20114; see discussion in § 63.310[1][d][vii]], to extended taxes [Prob. Code § 20115; see discussion in § 63.310[1][d][viii]], and to situations in which the personal representative cannot collect the amount of a tax apportioned to a person [Prob. Code §§ 20116(b), 20214(b); see discussion in § 63.310[1][d][ix]].

[iv] When Will or Inter Vivos Trust Specifies Manner of Proration

As noted earlier [see § 63.310[1][d][iii]], the general rule of equitable proration of taxes does not apply if the will or a trust instrument directs that particular property be applied to the satisfaction of a tax or that a tax be prorated in a specific manner [Prob. Code § 20110(b)(1)]. Prob. Code § 20110(b)(1) specifically provides that the general rule of equitable proration [see Prob. Code § 20110(a) and discussion in § 63.310[1][d][ii]] does not apply "to the extent the decedent in a written inter vivos or testamentary instrument disposing of property specifically directs that the property be applied to the satisfaction of an estate tax or that an estate tax be prorated to the property in the manner provided in the instrument." Before the adoption of this statute, the California Supreme Court held in Estate of Armstrong (1961) [Estate of Armstrong (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 796, 17 Cal. Rptr. 138, 366 P.2d 490] that, absent a "clear and unambiguous direction" by the decedent of an intention to the contrary, the general rule of equitable proration applies so that the tax burden is equitably allocated among those who are benefitted [Estate of Armstrong (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 796, 800, 802, 17 Cal. Rptr. 138, 366 P.2d 490]. In Estate of Wathen (1997) [Estate of Wathen (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 48, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 805], the Court of Appeal was asked to apply Estate of Armstrong to an ambiguous tax proration clause contained in a will that "poured over" the decedent's property to an inter vivos trust. Although it was clear that the will was intended to give directions with respect to tax proration, it was not clear how that the directions were intended to apply. One of the beneficiaries under the trust argued that since the proration directions were not clear and unambiguous, Estate of Armstrong required the court to apply the general rule of equitable proration and prohibited it from considering extrinsic evidence on the question. The trial court disagreed and admitted extrinsic evidence that the testator-settlor had intended by the clause to require that all of the death taxes be paid out of the residue of the trust. The Court of Appeal agreed with the trial court, holding that Estate of Armstrong required the application of the general rule of equitable proration only when the dispositive instrument failed altogether to refer to tax proration; when the existence of a tax proration clause is clear but its terms are ambiguous, it is proper to consider extrinsic evidence to determine the decedent's intentions with respect to proration [Estate of Wathen (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 48, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 805].

The objecting beneficiary in Estate of Wathen further argued that since the proration clause was in the will and not in the inter vivos trust instrument, the provision had no application to the trust assets. Again the Court of Appeal disagreed, pointing out that the will and the inter vivos trust instrument were executed on the same day and as part of an "integrated testamentary plan" intended to accomplish the same purpose. Accordingly, both documents had to be considered to determine whether the decedent had expressed a clear direction against statutory proration. When there is an "integrated testamentary plan" consisting of a will and a trust, it is sufficient if the tax proration directions are contained in either document; there is no requirement that they be contained in both [Estate of Wathen (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 48, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 805].

Good drafting practice obviously requires that the terms of any tax proration clause be clear and unambiguous, and that if the client's estate plan is to include both a will and a trust instrument no doubt be left as to whether the clause is to apply to the assets that pass under the will, the trust, or both the will and the trust. In no event should inconsistent directions be included in the different instruments.

In many cases, the statutory rule of equitable proration will suit the client's intentions quite well, and it will not be necessary to include any provision varying it. If the client's estate is so small that the likelihood of any estate taxes being due, it will rarely be necessary to address the question of proration. However, both the client and the attorney should remember that circumstances may quickly change. An unanticipated inheritance, for example, could increase the client's estate and suddenly make the proration of estate taxes a real rather than a merely theoretical concern.

[v] When Federal Law Establishes Proration Rule

In some cases, federal law sets forth rules for proration of taxes. For example, the Internal Revenue Code provides that the tax on qualified terminable interest property (QTIP) will be at the highest incremental bracket [I.R.C. § 2207A], with the result that other property in the estate is taxed at lower brackets. In this situation, the California proration rule should give way to the federal rule, and the higher tax attributable to the QTIP property should be collected from that property [see Recommendation Relating to Proration of Estate Taxes, 18 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 1127, 1133 (1986)]. Accordingly, the California statute provides that whenever federal law directs the manner of proration of the federal estate or generation-skipping transfer taxes, the California tax will be prorated in the same manner [Prob. Code §§

20110(b)(2), 20210(b)(2)].

[vi] Trusts, Estates for Years, and Other Income Interests

If a trust is created or other provision is made whereby a person is given an interest in the income of an estate, an estate for years, an estate for life, or any other temporary interest in property, the tax on both the temporary interest and other interests in the property (including remainder interests) must be charged against, and paid out of, the corpus of the property, without apportionment between the temporary and other interests [Prob. Code §§ 20113, 20213]. The proration rule under Prob. Code § 20113 governing payment of taxes on temporary/remainder interests applies to interest payments on delinquent taxes as well as the tax payment itself [ Simpson v. White (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 814, 821, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 361 ].

An annuity, however, is not a gift of income [ Estate of Bourn (1938) 25 Cal. App. 2d 590, 597, 78 P.2d 193 ] and does not come within this rule. An annuity is a general pecuniary gift that is payable periodically [Prob. Code § 21117(e); see Prob. Code § 21117(d) ("general pecuniary gift" defined)]. A pecuniary gift is one that is either expressly stated as a fixed dollar amount, or is a dollar amount determinable by the provisions of the instrument [Prob. Code § 21118(b)]. A general gift is a transfer from the general assets of the transferor [Prob. Code § 21117(b)]. The right to an annuity does not depend on the existence of an income, but is unconditional [ Estate of Steele (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 106, 116, 169 Cal. Rptr. 635 ]. Accordingly, taxes will not be prorated against it [ Estate of Steele (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 106, 116-117, 169 Cal. Rptr. 635 (decided under former Prob. Code § 973)].

[vii] Qualified Real Property

The Internal Revenue Code permits an executor to elect to specially value certain qualified real property for estate tax purposes [I.R.C. § 2032A(a)]. This election may be made with respect to real property used for farming purposes or in a trade or business, provided the property constitutes at least 50 percent of the adjusted gross value of the estate and certain other requirements are met [I.R.C. § 2032A(b)(1)]. Since the special value may be as much as $750,000 less than the fair market value of the qualified property [I.R.C. § 2032A(a)(2)], it may result in a substantial reduction in the estate tax. This amount is subject to inflation adjustments for decedents dying after 1998 [I.R.C. § 2032A(a)(2)]. For example, for decedents dying in 2005, the figure is $870,000 [ Rev. Proc. 2004-71, 2004-50 I.R.B. 970 ]. However, if persons who receive specially valued property do not continue to use it for farming purposes or in a trade or business for at least 10 years, an additional tax may be imposed [I.R.C. § 2032A(c)]. The mere passive rental of property to a nonfamily member is not a qualified use under the statute [ Brockman v. C.I.R. (7th Cir. 1990) 903 F.2d 518, 521-522 ]. The rules of equitable proration require that when an election has been made, the reduction in taxes be allocated entirely to the persons who receive the qualified property [Prob. Code § 20114(b)] and that any additional tax imposed for failure to continue the qualified use for at least 10 years be imposed on the same persons [Prob. Code § 20114(c); see Recommendation Relating to Proration of Estate Taxes, 18 Cal. Law Rev. Comm'n Reports 1127, 1133 (1986)].

[viii] Extended Taxes

The Internal Revenue Code authorizes extended payment of estate taxes attributable to certain kinds of property [see I.R.C. §§ 6163-6166]. Extensions may be granted with respect to estate taxes attributable to reversionary interests [I.R.C. § 6163] and interests in closely held businesses [I.R.C. § 6166]. Since the right to extend payment of the tax is granted with respect to particular devisees, the California rules of equitable proration provide that the right to extend the payment also belongs to those devisees. Accordingly, when the payment of any portion of the federal estate tax is extended under the provisions of the federal estate tax law, the amount of extended tax will be a charge against the persons who receive the specific property that gives rise to the extension [Prob. Code § 20115].

[ix] When Personal Representative Cannot Collect Prorated Amount

After a proration has been made, it sometimes happens that the personal representative is unable to collect the full amount of the prorated taxes. Notwithstanding the rule that a court order requiring persons to pay a prorated amount of an estate tax is a judgment and may be enforced as such [Prob. Code § 20123(b)], one or more of the persons required to pay may be beyond the jurisdiction of the court or otherwise unsusceptible to enforcement. In such a case, the amount not recoverable must be equitably prorated among the other persons in the estate who are subject to proration [Prob. Code § 20116(b)]. If a person is required to pay a greater estate tax by reason of another's failure to pay his or her prorated share of the tax, the person charged with or required to pay the greater amount has a right of reimbursement against the other person [Prob. Code § 20117].

[e] California "Pickup" Estate Tax

The California inheritance tax was repealed by initiative on June 8, 1982 [see Rev. & Tax. Code § 13301]. However, California does impose a "pickup" estate tax equal to the maximum allowable federal estate tax credit for state death taxes [Rev. & Tax. Code § 13302]. By providing for apportionment of "any state taxes" payable as a result of the testator's death, this form and the other apportionment provisions in this chapter take into account any California "pickup" estate tax as well as death taxes imposed by any other state in which property owned by the testator is located [see Rev. & Tax. Code § 13303 (apportionment of "pickup" tax when decedent leaves property in more than one state); see Ch. 60, Estate Planning, § 60.13[4][c]].

[f] Effect of Codicils on Apportionment Provision

When drafting a will provision apportioning death taxes, the attorney should consider the potential effect of subsequent changes in the will. For example, in Estate of Steele (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 106, 117-120, 169 Cal. Rptr. 635, the court concluded that a holographic codicil creating an annuity for a companion of the testator indicated an intention that the recipient receive the stated amount without any pro rata deduction for estate taxes, although the codicil contained no express language to that effect. If changes in the will can be anticipated, the attorney should consider making the apportionment provision applicable to any future codicils that do not specifically provide for a different method of apportionment. In addition, when drafting any codicils, it may be advisable to specify whether or not they are subject to or exempt from the apportionment scheme set out in the will [see Ch. 62, Codicils].

[a] Use of Form

This form is a will provision that may be used to require that all death taxes payable on assets of the probate estate be paid out of the residue of the probate estate. Taxes on any property passing outside of the probate estate are to be collected from the transferees of that property. 1. Proration of Death Taxes

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.312

§ 63.312 Proration of Death Taxes--All Taxes Prorated Among Probate Assets

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a will provision that may be used to direct that all death taxes, including taxes on assets passing outside the probate estate as well as on those included in the probate estate, be equitably prorated among the assets of the probate estate. The effect of this provision is to permit assets outside the probate estate to pass free of tax and to impose the burden of payment of all taxes on probate assets. At the same time, the executor will be relieved of the duty (which in some circumstances can be burdensome) of attempting to collect prorated shares of the death taxes from the recipients of assets passing outside of probate.

For alternative forms for proration of death taxes, see §§ 63.310-63.311 and 63.313-63.317. For a general discussion of the rules relating to proration of taxes, see § 63.310[1].

[b] Optional Provision Governing Assets in Inter Vivos Trust

Since collection of taxes from the trustee of an inter vivos trust will often be less difficult than from the recipients of other nonprobate assets, the reasons for exempting trust assets from proration may not be as compelling as those for exempting other nonprobate assets. Accordingly, this form contains an optional clause that may be used to specify that taxes attributable to assets passing by virtue of an inter vivos transfer in trust will not be prorated among the probate assets, but rather will be prorated among the trust assets in the manner specified in the trust instrument. This clause may be added if the testator has specified a proration scheme in the inter vivos trust.

[c] Marital Deduction

If the will contains a marital deduction trust, § 63.314 should be used instead of this form.

[d] Need for Specificity in Drafting Proration Provisions

Any will provision setting forth a scheme for proration of taxes should precisely identify the "estate" that will be used as the basis for the proration. The provision should specify whether the "probate estate," the "total estate" (which includes assets passing outside of probate as well as those subject to probate), or the "gross estate" for federal estate tax purposes is to be the proration base. Failure to precisely define the "estate" that is to be the proration base may be fatal to the provision, since only a clear and unambiguous direction of the decedent will relieve a beneficiary from the tax burden imposed on that beneficiary by the proration statutes [ Estate of Wakefield (1968) 258 Cal. App. 2d 274, 278-279, 65 Cal. Rptr. 664 (proration statutes govern when will does not precisely identify "estate"); Estate of Carley (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 582, 588-589, 153 Cal. Rptr. 528 (words "my estate" held not to refer to residuary estate); see Estate of Armstrong (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 796, 802, 17 Cal. Rptr. 138, 366 P.2d 490 (decided under former Prob. Code § 970)]. For a general consideration of will provisions sufficient to vary the statutory rules of proration, see discussion in § 63.310[1][d][iv].

[2] FORM*Proration of Death Taxes--All Taxes Prorated Among Probate Assets

[(a)] I direct that all federal estate taxes and any state taxes payable as a result of my death, including taxes on any property passing outside of my probate estate, shall be prorated among the assets of my probate estate in the proportion that the value of the property received by each person interested in my probate estate bears to the total value of all property received by all persons interested in my probate estate. No payment shall be made or required out of any assets passing outside of my probate estate.

[Optional provision specifying different proration scheme for taxes on assets passing by inter vivos transfer in trust:]

(b) Notwithstanding subparagraph (a), above, any taxes that may be attributable to assets passing by any transfer in trust that I may have made during my lifetime shall not be a charge on any assets of my probate estate, but shall be prorated among the assets passing by that transfer according to directions set forth in the trust instrument governing the transfer.

This form is a will provision that may be used to direct that all death taxes be paid out of an inter vivos trust created by the testator. Although the provision does not relieve the executor of the obligation of paying the taxes, it authorizes him or her to compel reimbursement from the trust.

For alternative will provisions directing the proration of death taxes, see §§ 63.310-63.312 and 63.314-63.317. For a general discussion of the rules relating to proration of taxes, see § 63.310[1].

§ 63.314 Proration of Death Taxes--Marital Deduction Provision

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a will provision that may be used to direct that all death taxes be paid out of assets not intended to qualify for the federal estate tax marital deduction. It is suitable for use in any will that makes provision for a marital deduction gift, whether in trust or otherwise.

The form includes two alternative provisions. The first alternative may be used when it is not contemplated that there will be any assets passing outside of the probate estate and the testator wishes all death taxes to be paid out of nonmarital assets passing under the will. The second alternative may be used when there will be assets passing outside the probate estate and the testator wishes the nonprobate assets to bear their proportional share of the taxes. The second alternative directs that taxes on nonprobate assets be equitably prorated among the recipients of those assets.

For a general discussion of the rules relating to proration of taxes, see § 63.310[1].

[b] Effect of Death Taxes on Amount of Marital Deduction

The amount of any marital deduction will be reduced by the amount of any death taxes paid out of the marital deduction property [see I.R.C. § 2056(b)(4)(A); see also Treas. Reg. § 20.2056(b)-4(c)]. The simplest way of avoiding this reduction is to provide in the will that all death taxes will be paid out of assets that are not intended to qualify for the deduction. Some provision shifting the burden of payment of death taxes from the marital deduction assets to other assets should be included in every will that provides for a marital deduction trust. For deduction of tax apportionment provisions designed to protect the marital deduction, see California Wills and Trusts, Ch. 23, Provisions for the Payment of Taxes, Expenses, and Debts, § 23.03[2][c] (Matthew Bender).

I direct that all federal estate tax and any state taxes payable as a result of my death and attributable to or imposed on property passing under this will shall be paid out of _____ [describe nonmarital assets or trust, e.g., the residue of my probate estate or Trust B, referred to in Paragraph _____ of this will] and shall not be paid out of or prorated against any other assets of my probate estate. 23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.315

§ 63.315 Proration of Death Taxes--"Forced Widow's Election" Provision

[1] Comment--Use of Form

This form is a will provision prorating death taxes in a widow's election will. In the forced widow's election will, one spouse disposes of all the community property, giving the surviving spouse a life estate and, at most, a special power of appointment. This provision requires that all death taxes payable at the death of the first spouse, including taxes on property passing outside of probate and inter vivos transfers subject to death taxes, are to be paid out of the residue of the estate. It also provides that any taxes payable by the surviving spouse as the result of the forced widow's election will are to be paid out of the residue of the first spouse's estate.

For a general discussion of proration of death taxes, see § 63.310[1].

Proration of Death Taxes--"Forced Widower's Election" Provision

I direct that all federal estate tax and any state taxes payable as a result of my death, not limited to taxes payable on property passing under this will, shall be paid out of the residue of my estate, and shall not be deducted or collected from any legatee, devisee, or beneficiary hereunder. To the extent that my _____ [wife or husband] shall incur any tax liability whatsoever resulting from the disposition hereunder of _____ [his or her] one-half interest in our community property, that tax liability shall also be paid out of the residue of my estate.

23-63 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 63.316§ 63.316 Proration of Death Taxes--Specific Bequest Exempt From Proration[1] Comment--Use of Form

This form is a will provision that may be used to exempt a specific gift made in the will from any payment of estate taxes. Such a provision is appropriate if the testator wishes a particular beneficiary to receive the full value of a particular gift undiminished by any reduction for death taxes.

The form includes three alternative provisions. The first alternative may be used to direct that all death taxes due in the testator's estate be paid out of the residue of the probate estate and that the specific gift be exempt from those taxes. The second alternative may be used to require proration of death taxes among all assets of the probate estate except the specific gift. The third alternative may be used to require proration among all assets subject to death taxes (including both probate and nonprobate assets) but to preserve the exemption for the specific gift.

For alternative provisions for proration of death taxes, see §§ 63.310-63.315 and 63.317. For a general discussion of the rules relating to proration of taxes, see § 63.310[1].
