This form is not designed to change the status of the parties' property, but merely to list their property interests at the time the agreement is executed. For a "transmutation" agreement [see Fam. Code § 850 et seq.] in which the parties change the ownership status of their property, see § 112.201. The provisions of the form set forth in § 112.201[2] and this form may be combined to create an agreement that accomplishes the purposes of both forms.

If the postnuptial agreement affects rights to real property, it is recommended that the agreement be executed and acknowledged or proved in the same manner as a grant of real property, and recorded in the office of the recorder of each county in which real property affected by the agreement is situated [see Fam. Code § 1502(a); see § 112.30[5]]. The recording or nonrecording of an acknowledged postnuptial agreement affecting real property has the same effect as the recording or nonrecording of any other grant of real property [Fam. Code § 1502(b); see Civ. Code § 1189 (acknowledgment form)].

PART IV. FORMS

A. Agreements Defining and Changing Character of Property

§ 112.201 Declaration Changing (Transmuting) Character of Separate or Community Personal Property

[1] Comment

This form is a form of declaration that may be used in changing the character of separate or community personal property. An agreement changing the character of separate or community property is known as a "transmutation" [see Fam. Code §§ 850, 851, 852], as discussed in § 112.15. This form may be used to accomplish any of the following: (1) transmute community property to separate property of either spouse, (2) transmute separate property of either spouse to community property, or (3) transmute separate property of one spouse to separate property of the other spouse [Fam. Code § 850]. The provisions in this form may be combined with those in § 112.200[2], defining existing property rights, to create an agreement that accomplishes the purposes of both forms. For a form setting forth a premarital agreement that income from separate property will be treated as community property, see Ch. 111, Premarital Agreements.

A transmutation will not be valid unless it is made in writing and contains a declaration expressly stating that the characterization or ownership of the property is being changed. The writing must be made, joined in, consented to, or accepted by the spouse whose interest in the property is adversely affected [Fam. Code § 852(a); In re Marriage of Benson (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1096, 1106-1111, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471, 478-482, 116 P.3d 1152; In re Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 262, 267-268, 272-273, 272 Cal. Rptr. 153, 794 P.2d 911; see In re Marriage of Leni (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 1095-1096, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 886 (escrow instruction that proceeds of sale of residence "be split 50/50" does not transmute proceeds from community to separate property, because it does not include express declaration that character of property is being changed)]. If an agreement contains the requisite express, unequivocal declaration of a present transmutation, any accompanying recital of the parties' motivations for executing the agreement do not change the nature of the transmutation itself [In re Marriage of Lund (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 40, 50-54, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 84 (clear and unambiguous statement that all separate property of spouse "is hereby converted to community property" accomplished transmutation, despite accompanying recital that conversion was made "for estate planning purposes"); In re Marriage of Holtemann (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1172-1174, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 385 (agreement that certain property "is hereby transmuted from [one spouse's] separate property to the community property of the spouses" was not made ambiguous by accompanying statement that agreement "is made solely for purpose of interpreting how property shall be disposed of on the deaths of the parties")]. For further discussion of the writing requirement, see § 112.30[4][b].

The form in [2], below, may be modified for use in transmuting the character of real property. A transmutation of real property is not effective as to third parties who do not have notice of the transmutation unless it is recorded [Fam. Code § 852(b); see Civ. Code §§ 1169-1220 (recordation)]. Any transmutation of real property should be drafted in recordable form and recorded. For a deed designed to be used for the transmutation of real property, see Ch. 27, Deeds and Recording. However, because an agreement transmuting the character of real property does not have to be in the form of a deed, this form may be modified to include real property and, if so modified, should also be recorded [see California Real Estate Law and Practice (Matthew Bender), Ch. 346, Community Property]. For discussion of the desirability of including language to specifically sever a joint tenancy in property, in order to clarify that the parties intend it to be community property (or otherwise), see the comments set forth in § 112.202.

The statute requiring that a transmutation of property be made by "express declaration" [see Fam. Code 852(a)] does not mention whether the declaration needs to be made under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5], but there is no indication elsewhere in the transmutation statutes that this would be required. The form set forth in [2], below, and the form in § 112.202[2] do not contain declarations under penalty of perjury. Instead, they make provision for acknowledgment [see Civ. Code § 1189 (form of acknowledgment)] to assure that the document can be recorded.

This form is not designed to be used by parties contemplating dissolution or legal separation. For discussion and forms relating to agreements between spouses incident to legal separation or dissolution proceedings, see Ch. 120, Complete Marital Settlement Agreements. For discussion of the tax effects of transmutation, see § 112.15[2].

PART IV. FORMS

A. Agreements Defining and Changing Character of Property

33-112 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 112.202

§ 112.202 Agreement That All Property Will Be Community Property

[1] Comment

This form is an agreement between married persons providing that all of the parties' property, except for damages resulting from personal injury by one spouse, will be community property. Damages are excepted from this agreement in order to allow one spouse to recover damages for personal injuries inflicted by the other spouse [see Fam. Code § 781(c) (damages paid by one spouse to other are separate property of injured spouse)]. The form presents a type of "transmutation" agreement, in which one or both spouses transmute separate property to community property [see Fam. Code § 850(b)].

This form may be used to transmute property to be acquired in the future, as well as property owned at the time of the agreement. However, it may not be advantageous to make decisions regarding the character of property in advance of its receipt.

If the parties acquire property together after the agreement is made and take title in a form other than as community property, it may be unclear whether they actually intended for the property to be transmuted by their prior agreement, and questions may arise, particularly with respect to third parties, over whether the common law "form of title" presumption should apply for certain purposes. Under the "form of title" presumption, a description in a deed as to how title is held is presumed to reflect the actual ownership interests in the property. For example, the act of taking title to property solely in the name of one spouse, during marriage and with the acquiescence of the other spouse, effectively removes that property from the general presumption that property acquired during marriage is community property [In re Marriage of Brooks, (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 176, 184-187, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 624 ; see Fam. Code § 760 (general presumption that property acquired during marriage is community property)]. Therefore, it is recommended that after the acquisition of property in a form other than as community property, the parties either amend their agreement in writing to specifically refer to the property, or prepare a new agreement concerning that property. In the case of joint tenancy property, the agreement should be drafted so as to make it clear that the joint tenancy is severed and the property is held as community property. This applies to any joint tenancies held at the time of the original agreement as well. Any such amendment or new agreement should be recorded, as should the original agreement, at least if real property is involved, as noted further below. For discussion of special rules pertaining to joint tenancy, and to accounts in banks and similar institutions, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed. (Matthew Bender), Ch. 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles, and Ch. 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues, respectively.

A transmutation of separate property to community property will not be valid unless it is made in writing and contains a declaration expressly stating that the characterization or ownership of the property is being changed [see [2], P 3, below]. The writing must be made, joined in, consented to, or accepted by the spouse whose interest in the property is adversely affected [Fam. Code § 852(a); In re Marriage of Benson (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1096, 1106-1111, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471, 478-482, 116 P.3d 1152; In re Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 262, 267-268, 272-273, 272 Cal. Rptr. 153, 794 P.2d 911; see In re Marriage of Leni (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 1095-1096, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 886 (escrow instruction that proceeds of sale of residence "be split 50/50" does not transmute proceeds from community to separate property, because it does not include express declaration that character of property is being changed)]. If an agreement contains the requisite express, unequivocal declaration of a present transmutation, any accompanying recital of the parties' motivations for executing the agreement do not change the nature of the transmutation itself [In re Marriage of Lund (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 40, 50-54, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 84 (clear and unambiguous statement that all separate property of spouse "is hereby converted to community property" accomplished transmutation, despite accompanying recital that conversion was made "for estate planning purposes"); In re Marriage of Holtemann (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1172-1174, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 385 (agreement that certain property "is hereby transmuted from [one spouse's] separate property to the community property of the spouses" was not made ambiguous by accompanying statement that agreement "is made solely for purpose of interpreting how property shall be disposed of on the deaths of the parties")]. For further discussion of the writing requirement, see § 112.30[4][b].

Because a transmutation of real property is not effective as to third parties who do not have notice of the transmutation unless it is recorded [see Fam. Code § 852(b)], a document evidencing the transmutation of real property should be recorded. This form contains an acknowledgment [see Civ. Code § 1189 (form of acknowledgment)] to facilitate recording. In addition, this form provides that the parties will execute any additional instruments, such as a deed, required to effectuate the agreement.

For a general form for a transmutation agreement, see § 112.201. For a form used to define the parties' existing property rights, which may be combined with the provisions of this form to accomplish the purposes of both forms, see § 112.200.

B. Agreements Amending or Revoking Premarital Agreement

§ 112.210 Agreement of Spouses Amending Premarital Agreement

[1] Comment

This form is an agreement between a husband and wife amending the provisions of a premarital agreement. After marriage, a premarital agreement may be amended only by a written agreement signed by the parties. The amended agreement is enforceable without consideration [Fam. Code § 1614]. For discussion and examples of premarital agreements, see Ch. 111, Premarital Agreements. For a general discussion of matters about which spouses may contract, which appears to apply to the amendment during marriage of a premarital agreement, see §§ 112.13-112.14.

If the premarital agreement provides for modification on the occurrence of specified events and pursuant to a designated procedure, this form should be changed to conform with those requirements.

For general discussion and examples of the modification, rescission, and cancellation of contracts, see Ch. 77, Discharge of Obligations.

An amended premarital agreement affecting real property that is executed and acknowledged or proved in the manner that a grant of real property is required to be executed and acknowledged or proved may be recorded in the office of the recorder of each county in which real property affected by the agreement is situated [Fam. Code § 1502(a)]. This form contains an acknowledgment [see Civ. Code § 1189 (form of acknowledgment)] to facilitate recording.

PART IV. FORMS

B. Agreements Amending or Revoking Premarital Agreement

§ 112.211 Agreement of Spouses Revoking Premarital Agreement

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, is an agreement that spouses may use to revoke a premarital agreement. This form may be used to either rescind or cancel the premarital agreement [see [b], below].

For examples and discussion of premarital contracts, see Ch. 111, Premarital Agreements. For an example of a postnuptial agreement modifying a premarital agreement, see § 112.210. For a complete discussion of the termination of contracts generally, see Volume 14, Chapter 77, Discharge of Obligations.

The form contains an acknowledgment [see Civ. Code § 1189 (form of acknowledgment)] to facilitate recording, if the revoked agreement pertained to real property [see Fam. Code § 1502; see also discussion in § 112.30[5]].

[b] Revocation Method

After marriage, a premarital agreement may be "revoked" only by a written agreement signed by the parties. The revocation is enforceable without consideration [Fam. Code § 1614]. A contract may be terminated, or "revoked," in several different ways. A rescission is an agreement under which the parties to a contract agree to extinguish it, and restore the parties to the position they were in when the contract was made [see Civ. Code § 1688]. In comparison, a cancellation [see Civ. Code § 1699] is an agreement in which the parties agree only to abrogate so much of a contract as remains unperformed [see Mamula v. McCulloch (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 184, 197, 79 Cal. Rptr. 571]. The parties may also cancel a written agreement by destroying the agreement or the signatures of the parties with the intent to extinguish the agreement [Civ. Code § 1699].

The form below is drafted to allow the parties to either rescind or cancel their premarital agreement, depending on the nature of the premarital agreement that they wish to terminate. If they wish to restore their respective positions to those existing at the time the contract was made, the rescission provisions, rather than cancellation provisions, should be used.

A rescission clause is also desirable in a contract in which the parties intend to supersede a previous agreement. While an inconsistent contract will provide an implied rescission, if the new contract has the same legal effect and differs only in terms, the two instruments will be construed together [Thomson v. Leak (1933) 135 Cal. App. 544, 549, 27 P.2d 795] . The use of a definite rescission clause avoids that result by making the intent of the parties completely clear. The rescission clause set forth in this agreement may be inserted in a postnuptial agreement intended to supersede the premarital agreement [see, e.g., § 112.201[2]].

For a discussion and example of novation, which is the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties with intent to extinguish the old obligation [see Civ. Code § 1531; see also vol. 14, ch. 77, Discharge of Obligations].

This chapter discusses agreements made between spouses primarily in contemplation of the dissolution of their marriage or of obtaining a legal separation. The Legal Background presents an overview of the matters that should be considered when preparing a marital settlement agreement. The Transaction Guide sets out checklists to assist counsel in drafting the agreement, and the Forms part includes complete forms of agreements as well as optional general provisions that may be used in connection with the complete forms.

In In re Marriage Cases, the California Supreme Court held that differential treatment of opposite-sex and same-sex couples in California's marriage statutes violated the California Constitution's guarantees of privacy, due process, and equal protection [In re Marriage Cases (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 757, 784, 847-856, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 183 P.3d 384] . That holding was superseded by the subsequent adoption of Proposition 8, which amended the California Constitution to provide that only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California [see Cal. Const. art. I, § 7.5 (eff. Nov. 5, 2008)]. The Supreme Court upheld Proposition 8 against a constitutional challenge, but in doing so the Court reaffirmed the continuing validity of same-sex marriages entered into before November 5, 2008, the effective date of Proposition 8 [Strauss v. Horton (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 364, 470-474, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591, 207 P.3d 48 (estimating 18,000 same-sex marriages lawfully entered into before Proposition 8 took effect)]. If a form in this chapter is used in the context of a same-sex marriage lawfully entered into before that date, the language in the form should be modified accordingly. For example, the names of the parties may be used instead of terms like "Husband" and "Wife."

Later chapters cover specific alternate provisions designed to be substituted into the complete forms illustrated in this chapter. For provisions that concern the general division of property in a marital settlement agreement, see Ch. 121, Provisions for Division of Property . For provisions to divide employee benefits, see Chapter 122. Provisions for spousal and child support are covered in Chapter 123; provisions concerning child custody and visitation are discussed in Chapter 124; and provisions for the payment of taxes, attorney's fees, and costs are set forth in Chapter 125.

For detailed coverage of separation and dissolution, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed. (Matthew Bender).

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

A. Validity and Effect of Marital Settlement Agreements

34-120 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 120.10

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.

§ 120.10 Definition and Usage of "Marital Settlement Agreement"

For purposes of this chapter and Chs. 121-125, the term "marital settlement agreement" refers to an agreement between spouses made in contemplation of their indefinite separation, or, more frequently, made in contemplation of obtaining a judgment of dissolution of marriage or legal separation. Technically, it can also refer to an agreement reached by parties to a proceeding for nullity of marriage, though the use of such agreements in nullity proceedings is generally less frequent because of the typical unwillingness of both parties to stipulate to the underlying facts and grounds for an annulment in advance of trial.

Attorneys, courts, and legal commentators have used various terms to label these agreements [see, e.g., Di Marco v. Di Marco (1967) 60 Cal. 2d 387, 389, 33 Cal. Rptr. 610, 385 P.2d 2 ("property settlement agreement"); Flynn v. Flynn (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 55, 57, 265 P.2d 865 ("separation agreement"); In re Marriage of Gonzalez (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 736, 739, 129 Cal. Rptr. 566 ("marital settlement agreement")]. As used in this chapter, "marital settlement agreement" is synonymous with the term "marital termination agreement," which has growing acceptance within the legal community but lacks the general usage and recognition currently associated with "marital settlement agreement."

Note that the term "marital settlement agreement" is not synonymous with "marriage settlement agreement," which under former law generally referred to a premarital agreement [see former Civ. Code §§ 5133-5135 (expressly prescribing effect and requirements of "marriage settlement agreements"; repealed, operative January 1, 1986, but still applicable to agreements executed before that date); see also Corker v. Corker (1891) 87 Cal. 643, 648, 25 P. 922 ; but see Plante v. Gray (1945) 68 Cal. App. 2d 582, 587, 157 P.2d 421 (refers to "marriage settlement" agreement as agreement made so parties may live separate and apart)]. For discussion of premarital agreements, see Ch. 111, Premarital Agreements . For discussion of postmarital agreements, see Ch. 112, Postnuptial Agreements .

Marital settlement agreements, also known as "MSA's," generally have as their purpose the settlement of some or all of the rights, claims, and liabilities that arise out of the parties' marriage. Accordingly, these agreements cover such primary items as the division of community property, payment of child and spousal support, and custody of the children of the marriage. The agreement may also include waivers and indemnification agreements between the parties, income tax provisions, attorney's fees provisions, and any other provisions that are necessary or desirable to wind up the marriage and the parties' legal relationship.

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Validity and Effect of Marital Settlement Agreements

§ 120.11 Validity of Agreement

[1] In General

In general, spouses are competent to contract with one another with respect to their marital property rights [see Fam. Code §§ 721(a), 1500, 1620] and, subject to the approval of the court, to determine matters relating to child and spousal support, child custody, and visitation [see Fam. Code §§ 3061, 3080, 3580, 3585]. Spouses may agree in writing to an immediate separation, and may make provision for the support of either of them and of their children during that separation or on dissolution of their marriage [see Fam. Code § 3580 (incorporating substance of former Civ. Code § 4802)]. Such an agreement is valid even if it fails to provide expressly for the immediate separation of the parties [see Brown v. Brown (1927) 83 Cal. App. 74, 81-83, 256 P. 595] or to recite the fact of separation [Boland v. Boland (1935) 7 Cal. App. 2d 401, 405, 46 P.2d 238] . The agreement is valid even if the parties were living separate and apart at the time of its execution [Cookinham v. Cookinham (1934) 219 Cal. 723, 726, 28 P.2d 1045 (agreement dealing with division of property and spousal and child support)].

As in the case of other agreements involving spouses, marital settlement agreements must have a lawful object [see Civ. Code § 1596] and must not otherwise violate public policy, such as for example, by "promoting dissolution of marriage" [see [4], below], or by attempting to contract away the right of a child to support [see Elkind v. Byck (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 453, 457, 67 Cal. Rptr. 404, 439 P.2d 316] . Nevertheless, as a general rule, agreements between spouses that settle their respective rights and obligations occupy a favored position in California, in that courts greatly prefer agreement to litigation. Courts prefer not to disturb an agreement, especially concerning property, except for equitable considerations [see generally Rose v. Rose (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 585, 589, 346 P.2d 460 ; see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles (Matthew Bender)], though courts will scrutinize particularly carefully provisions for child custody, child support, and spousal support, as discussed in Chs. 123- 124 [see, e.g., Armstrong v. Armstrong (1976) 15 Cal. 3d 942, 947, 126 Cal. Rptr. 805, 544 P.2d 941 (prohibition against agreements that compromise children's right to support); In re Marriage of Goodarzirad (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 1020, 1026, 230 Cal.

Rptr. 203 (prohibition against agreements that abrogate court's authority in custody matters)].

In addition, note that a marital property agreement remains valid even if it contains a provision for a non-probate transfer of property on death and the agreement is not otherwise executed with the formalities required for a will [see Prob. Code § 5000(a)].

Agreements between spouses are construed under the statutory rules governing the interpretation of contracts generally, unless a more specific statute provides otherwise [In re Marriage of Benjamins (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 423, 429, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313 ; see Civ. Code § 1635].

[2] Necessity of a Writing

Marital settlement agreements are not subject to a comprehensive statutory requirement of a writing to be enforceable in the same sense that premarital agreements are [see Fam. Code § 1610 et seq.; see also Ch. 111, Premarital Agreements]. However, the practical implication of a number of current statutes is that marital settlement agreements must ordinarily be written. First, in proceedings for marital dissolution or legal separation, the court must equally divide the parties' community estate in accordance with the provisions of the Family Code, in the absence of a written agreement between the parties, or an oral stipulation in open court [see Fam. Code § 2550; In re Marriage of Dellaria (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 196, 201-205, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 802 (trial court erred in enforcing parties' oral property settlement agreement that was neither reduced to writing nor made in open court)]. Thus, if the parties wish to effect their own division in the context of a family law proceeding, without stipulating in open court, they must do so pursuant to a written instrument.

Second, on and after January 1, 1985, to the extent that a marital settlement agreement effects a transmutation of property, it must ordinarily be in writing, except for certain items of personal property of insubstantial value that are gifts between the spouses [Fam. Code § 852(a), (c)]. This requirement is more than an evidentiary standard; it is an essential element of any transmutation. Therefore, the requirement is not subject to implied exceptions that may apply in the context of a general statute of frauds [In re Marriage of Benson (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1096, 1106-1109, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471, 478-480, 116 P.3d 1152 ("[W]e see no evidence the Legislature intended to incorporate traditional exceptions to the statute of frauds into [Fam. Code § 852]. Indeed, the Commission Comment ... supports the opposite proposition." [emphasis in original])]. Thus, for example, a transmutation cannot be accomplished by part performance of an unwritten transmutation agreement [In re Marriage of Benson (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1096, 1106-1107, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471, 478-479, 116 P.3d 1152 (statutory language and legislative history establish that Fam. Code § 852(a) "cannot be satisfied where there is no writing about the subject property at all, and where a transmutation would have to be inferred from acts surrounding the contract in dispute")]. For detailed coverage of transmutation agreements, see Ch. 112, Postnuptial Agreements .

Third, Fam. Code § 3580 provides that, subject to certain statutory provisions relating to child and spousal support, a husband and wife may agree, in writing, to an immediate separation, and may provide in the agreement for the support of either of them and of their children during the separation or on dissolution of the marriage. The requirement of a writing in that provision has been held to imply that the writing must be signed by both parties [Fitch v. Tyler (1930) 105 Cal. App. 306, 311, 288 P. 74 ("separation and maintenance" agreement; interpreting predecessor statute)].

Finally, there may be instances in which, because of the nature of the transaction contemplated by the agreement, such as the sale of real property [Civ. Code § 1624(c)], that the general statute of frauds requires a writing, even though the statute of frauds does not specify marital settlement agreements within its list of agreements that must always be written [see Civ. Code § 1624(c); see also Estate of Patterson (1920) 46 Cal. App. 415, 420, 189 P. 483] .

Accordingly, although there were exceptions to the need for a writing under former law [see Doxsee Co. v. All Persons (1935) 3 Cal. 2d 609, 613-614, 45 P.2d 192 ; Estate of Patterson (1920) 46 Cal. App. 415, 419-420, 189 P. 483] and may still be limited instances in which an oral agreement is enforceable [see Fam. Code § 852(c); see also Braden v. Braden (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 481, 485, 3 Cal. Rptr. 120 (at least under then applicable law, party who fully performed under oral marital agreement dealing solely with property issues could enforce agreement)], the best practice is to reduce all marital settlement agreements to writing.

[3] Consideration

Like other contracts, a valid marital settlement agreement is subject to the general technical requirement that it must contain adequate consideration [see Civ. Code §§ 1550, 1605]. Nevertheless, the mutual consent of the parties is sufficient consideration for an agreement, in writing, to separate immediately, regardless of whether it also provides for the support of either party and of their children during the separation [see Fam. Code § 3580].

Furthermore, the mutual promises of the parties are sufficient consideration to support marital settlement agreements containing other types of provisions as well. Thus, for example, one spouse's promise to release certain community property and her right to support is sufficient consideration to support the other spouse's promise to release other community property and his right to support. The fact that the consideration proves worthless or of little value because of an unexpected occurrence is immaterial [Konecko v. Konecko (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 249, 252-253, 330 P.2d 393]. Similarly, one spouse's promise to release further claims against the other spouse's earnings and his or her estate is sufficient consideration to support the latter spouse's promise to pay spousal support [Remondino v. Remondino (1940) 41 Cal. App. 2d 208, 213-214, 106 P.2d 437]. Finally, note that a written transmutation agreement is valid with or without consideration [Fam. Code § 850]. Thus, little in the way of formal consideration is actually needed for a valid marital settlement agreement.

[4] Agreements Promoting Dissolution Invalid

In California, there is a strong public policy favoring preservation of marriage [see Hill v. Hill (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 82, 88, 142 P.2d 417]. A marital settlement agreement entered into between spouses that has as its primary object the procurement of dissolution of marriage is contrary to such public policy and is invalid for that reason. Hence, an agreement having as its sole consideration for a property settlement a promise by one spouse to dissolve the marriage of the parties may be invalid [Moss v. Moss (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 640, 642, 128 P.2d 526]. The test of invalidity of an agreement does not turn on the subjective contemplation of the parties--a standard that would make it impossible to rely on any agreement--but on the language of the agreement itself [In re Marriage of Dawley (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 342, 349-354, 131 Cal. Rptr. 3, 551 P.2d 323 (premarital agreement)].

However, agreements promotive of dissolution of marriage must be distinguished from those made in contemplation of dissolution. Marital settlement agreements are upheld even though made in contemplation of dissolution. Although public policy seeks to foster and protect marriage, to encourage parties to live together, and to prevent separation, it does not discourage dissolution of marriage if the relations between husband and wife are such that the legitimate objects of matrimony have been utterly destroyed. In the absence of fraud, collusion, or imposition on the court, public policy does not prevent parties who have separated from entering into a contract disposing of their property rights, which becomes effective only in the event that one of the parties dissolves the marriage, even though such a contract may be a factor persuading a party to obtain a dissolution [Hill v. Hill (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 82, 93, 142 P.2d 417; see Glickman v. Collins (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 852, 857-859, 120 Cal. Rptr. 76, 533 P.2d 204; see also Miranda v. Miranda (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 61, 69, 183 P.2d 61; Cookinham v. Cookinham (1934) 219 Cal. 723, 726, 28 P.2d 1045].

[5] Consent

Because a marital settlement agreement is a contract, the consent of both parties to the agreement must be free [Civ. Code § 1565; see In re Marriage of Moore (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 22, 32, 169 Cal. Rptr. 619]. In general, an agreement can be rescinded if the consent of a party was given by mistake or obtained through duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence [Civ. Code §§ 1566, 1689(b)(1); see, e.g., In re Marriage of McNeill (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 548, 557-558, 206 Cal. Rptr. 641 (disapproved on other grounds in In re Marriage of Fabian (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 440, 451 n.13, 224 Cal. Rptr. 333, 715 P.2d 253)].

Lack of consent in entering into a marital settlement agreement often occurs as a result of one spouse's breach of the duties arising from the confidential and fiduciary relationship between spouses. For further discussion of these duties, see § 120.12. For coverage of the conditions under which a judgment may be set aside, and of limitations on relief, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 122, Judgment of Dissolution or Legal Separation (Matthew Bender) [see In re Marriage of Brockman (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 1045-1048, 240 Cal. Rptr. 96 ; see also Fam. Code § 2122 (special statutory provision for setting aside judgments because of fraud, perjury, mistake, or other factors)].

[6] Effect of Partial Invalidity

Although parties to a marital settlement agreement should always endeavor to include only provisions that are valid, the inclusion of unlawful provisions in an agreement will not necessarily invalidate the entire agreement. Any lawful provisions that are severable from the unlawful ones will be valid [see Civ. Code § 1599]. This rule will apply only if it is consistent with the intention of the parties [see Keene v. Harling (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 318, 320-321, 38 Cal. Rptr. 513, 392 P.2d 273] . For a related discussion of severability of contractual provisions in the context of premarital agreements, see Ch. 111, Premarital Agreements .

§ 120.12 Effect of Duties Between Spouses

[1] General Rules Governing Interspousal Transactions

[a] Nature of Confidential Relationship

In transactions between themselves, spouses ordinarily are subject to the general rules governing fiduciary relationships that control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other. This confidential relationship imposes a duty of the highest good faith and fair dealing on each spouse and neither may take any unfair advantage of the other [Fam. Code § 721(b); see In re Marriage of Burkle (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 712, 730-736, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 181 (Fam. Code § 721(b) prohibits taking of unfair advantage but does not prohibit transaction in which benefits or advantages are obtained by both spouses and neither gains unfair advantage)]. Moreover, the relationship is a fiduciary relationship subject to certain rights and duties that apply to nonmarital business partners [Fam. Code § 721(b)] (legislatively abrogating holding of In re Marriage of Duffy (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 923, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 160, to extent in conflict with accompanying statement of legislative intent in Stats. 2002, ch. 310, § 2); see Corp. Code §§ 16403, 16404, 16503]. Thus, for example, a spouse must (1) provide the other spouse access to any books kept regarding a transaction for the purposes of inspection and copying [Fam. Code § 721(b)(1); see Corp. Code § 16403]; (2) render, on request, true and full information of all things affecting any transaction that concerns the community property [Fam. Code § 721(b)(2); see Corp. Code § 16403(c)(1); see also In re Marriage of Walker (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1408, 1427, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 325 (Corp. Code § 16403(c)(1), which is incorporated by reference in Fam. Code § 721(b), requires partners to disclose to each other without demand any information concerning partnership's business and affairs reasonably required for proper exercise of partner's rights and duties)]; and (3) account to the other spouse, and hold as a trustee, any benefit or profit derived from any transaction made without the consent of the other spouse that concerns the community property [Fam. Code § 721(b)(3); see Corp. Code § 16404]. However, the Family Code's imposition of these duties of business partners does not broaden the spouses' duties and obligations to include those of corporate officers and directors beyond providing access, information, and an accounting [In re Marriage of Leni (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 1092-1094, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 886] .

For a detailed discussion of fiduciary duties between spouses concerning the management and control of community property and other financial dealings, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 24, Management and Control of Property (Matthew Bender)].

In addition, each spouse ordinarily must act with respect to the other spouse in the management and control of the community property in accordance with the general rules governing fiduciary relationships that control the actions of persons having a relationship of personal confidence, until such time as the property is divided by the parties or by the court [see Fam. Code § 1100(e); Worton v. Worton (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1638, 1648, 286 Cal. Rptr. 410 ; In re Marriage of Alexander (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 677, 682-684, 261 Cal. Rptr. 9]. This duty includes the obligation to make full disclosure to the other spouse of all material facts and information regarding the existence, characterization, and valuation of all assets in which the community has or may have an interest, and debts for which the community is or may be liable. It also includes a duty to provide equal access to all information, records, and books that pertain to the value and character of those assets and debts, on request [see Fam. Code § 1100(e)].

For further discussion of the spouses' confidential and fiduciary relationship, its treatment under prior law, and remedies for its breach, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 24, Management and Control of Property (Matthew Bender).

[b] Fraud, Undue Influence, or Other Breach

Spouses generally have a confidential, fiduciary relationship with each other. Thus, each spouse has a duty of the highest good faith and fair dealing with the other spouse, and neither spouse may take any unfair advantage of the other [Fam. Code § 721(b)]. Whenever spouses enter into an agreement in which one spouse gains an unfair advantage, a presumption of undue influence arises, and the advantaged spouse has the burden of demonstrating that the agreement was not obtained through undue influence [In re Marriage of Bonds (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 1, 27, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 252, 5 P.3d 815 ; In re Marriage of Haines (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 277, 293, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 673]. The presumption of undue influence does not arise, however, unless one spouse gains an unfair advantage; the presumption has no application in a transaction in which benefits or advantages are obtained by both spouses and neither gains an unfair advantage [In re Marriage of Burkle (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 712, 730-736, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 181 ; see Gray and Wagner, Complex Issues in California Family Law, Chs. A5.01[5][b], B7.04[3][b], and C5.05[2][b] (Matthew Bender)].

The statute setting forth the spouses' fiduciary relationship--and prohibiting the taking of unfair advantage--became operative January 1, 1994 [1992 Stats., ch. 162, enacting Fam. Code § 721, operative Jan. 1, 1994]. Before that statute took effect, some courts applied legal principles governing the duties of trustees to impose a presumption of undue influence in interspousal agreements based on any advantage gained by a spouse [see, e.g., Gaines v. California Trust Co. (1941) 48 Cal. App. 2d 709, 714-715, 121 P.2d 28 ; see also Prob. Code § 16004(c); Rader v. Thrasher (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 244, 252, 18 Cal. Rptr. 736, 368 P.2d 360 (attorney-client relationship)]. However, the legal requirements applicable to the one-way trustee-beneficiary relationship do not necessarily apply to an interspousal transaction, in which fiduciary duties run in both directions [In re Marriage of Burkle (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 712, 732-734, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 181]. Thus, while a trustee is presumed to have violated his or her fiduciary duty by gaining any advantage from a trust beneficiary, a spouse is presumed to have exerted undue influence only if he or she gained an unfair advantage [compare Prob. Code § 16004(c) (transaction between trustee and beneficiary by which trustee "obtains an advantage" from beneficiary is presumed to violate trustee's fiduciary duties) (emphasis added) with Fam. Code § 721(b) ("neither [spouse] shall take any unfair advantage of the other") (emphasis added)]. Accordingly, pre-1994 decisions based on general trust principles are of limited value in assessing whether a transaction between spouses gives rise to a presumption of undue influence under the current statute governing interspousal transactions [see In re Marriage of Burkle (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 712, 733-734, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 181].

Note that regardless of whether there is a presumption of unfair advantage, a spouse who seeks to avoid a marital settlement agreement with the other spouse may submit evidence of actual undue influence, fraud, or other breach of the confidential relationship [see, e.g., Haseltine v. Haseltine (1962) 203 Cal. App. 2d 48, 54-58, 21 Cal. Rptr. 238 (husband grossly undervalued community property business when arranging wife's interest in it)]. For discussion of possible defenses to the confidential relationship imposed on spouses, see Ch. 112, Postnuptial Agreements. For discussion of remedies for breach of interspousal duties, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 24, Management and Control of Property (Matthew Bender); for discussion of the conditions under which a judgment can be set aside, and limitations on such relief, see Ch. 122, Judgment of Dissolution or Legal Separation, of that publication [see Fam. Code § 2122 (special statutory provision for setting aside judgments because of fraud, perjury, mistake, or other factors)].

[2] Special Disclosure Duties After Separation

In addition to the disclosure discussed in § 120.12[1] [see Fam. Code §§ 721(b), 1100(e)], the Family Code further prescribes interspousal disclosure duties after separation. From the date of separation to the date of the distribution of the community or quasi community asset or liability in question, each party is now subject to the standards set forth in Fam. Code § 721 with respect to all activities that affect the assets and liabilities of the other party. For a discussion of the "activities" described by statute, which primarily involve the disclosure of information about assets, liabilities, income, expenses, investment opportunities, and operation or management of a business [see Fam. Code § 2102], see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 24, Management and Control of Property (Matthew Bender).

[3] Exchange of Disclosure Forms Before Entering Into Agreement

In family law proceedings, the parties are required to serve on one another prescribed "preliminary" and "final" declarations of disclosure pertaining to such matters as assets, liabilities, income, and expenses. During the proceedings, each party has a general, continuing duty to immediately, fully, and accurately update and augment his or her disclosure of such matters to the extent there have been any material changes, so that at the time the parties enter into an agreement about them, or at the time of trial, each party will have as full and complete knowledge of the relevant underlying facts as is reasonably possible under the circumstances [see Fam. Code §§ 2100(c), 2104-2113].

For further discussion of the disclosure requirements, including a special provision for a mutual waiver of the final declaration of disclosure [see Fam. Code 2105(c)], see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chs. 92, Petitioning for Dissolution or Legal Separation, § 92.11, and 111, Pretrial Procedures, § 111.20 (Matthew Bender).

§ 120.13 Effect of Judicial Action Concerning Agreement on Enforcement

[1] In General

Because marital settlement agreements are typically prepared at a time when the parties are contemplating dissolution of their marriage, counsel must determine whether there will be judicial action with regard to the agreement, and if necessary, include provisions governing such action [see § 120.211]. Judicial action can consist of approval of the agreement or merger of all or part of the agreement in the judgment, or some combination of these [see § 120.13[3], [4]]. The significance of "incorporating" an agreement for one of these purposes is discussed in § 120.13[2].

As discussed hereafter, the choice of judicial action regarding the agreement may affect the remedies available for enforcement. If a contractual remedy is desirable and available, for example, the provision generally should not be merged into the judgment, even though it might otherwise be approved by the court [see § 120.13[4][a]]. Note that an action in contract to enforce an interspousal agreement is subject to all usual contract defenses. For example, the agreement may be rescinded by a party whose consent was obtained by duress, coercion, intimidation, and threats [In re Marriage of Gonzalez (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 736, 743-748, 129 Cal. Rptr. 566 ; cf. In re Marriage of Benjamins (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 423, 429, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313 (agreements between spouses are construed under statutory rules governing interpretation of contracts generally, unless more specific statute provides otherwise)]. In addition, a marital settlement agreement entered into between parties to pending family law litigation may be enforced by a motion for judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 664.6 (applicable generally to settlement agreements in civil actions) [see In re Marriage of Assemi (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 896, 900-901, 905-907, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 265, 872 P.2d 1190 ; see, e.g., In re Marriage of Hasso (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 1174, 1179, 280 Cal. Rptr. 919 ; see also Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.21 (all provisions of law applicable to civil actions generally apply to family law proceedings unless otherwise provided by Family Rules, Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.5 et seq.); California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 520, Settlement and Release (Matthew Bender)]. For a general discussion of enforcing family law judgments, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 140, General Enforcement Principles and Remedies (Matthew Bender).

[2] Significance of Incorporation

The term "incorporation" is sometimes used to describe the inclusion of the terms of a marital settlement agreement in a judgment of dissolution of marriage. An agreement may be incorporated in a judgment either by setting forth the provisions of the agreement in the judgment, by apt reference to the agreement in the judgment and its physical attachment to the judgment, or by apt reference to the agreement in the judgment and clear identification of it [see Flynn v. Flynn (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 55, 59, 265 P.2d 865 ; see, e.g., In re Marriage of Smith & Maescher (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 100, 103, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133 (parties' separation agreement was incorporated by reference in Massachusetts's divorce judgment)].

Describing an agreement as "incorporated" is potentially misleading with respect to its legal effect. The legal effect of incorporation is determined by the language of the judgment that indicates the reason for incorporation, which usually will be to merge the agreement in the judgment or to obtain court approval of the agreement, or both, as discussed in [3] and [4], below [see Flynn v. Flynn (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 55, 58, 265 P.2d 865] .

PRACTICE TIP:

In order to preserve the privacy of a client's marital settlement agreement, counsel can offer the marital settlement agreement as evidence and then withdraw it, and incorporate it into the judgment only by reference. Because most consent judgments are now entered by mail, this procedure is awkward, and some courts prefer to seal the file rather than to incorporate the marital settlement agreement by reference only. Commentary by Diana Richmond.

[3] Approval

A marital settlement agreement may be submitted to the court for its approval as fair and equitable, although court approval is not a necessary prerequisite as such for the validity of the overall agreement unless the agreement makes court approval a precondition for its effectiveness [see Sanborn v. Sanborn (1934) 3 Cal. App. 2d 437, 442, 39 P.2d 830] . Note that to the extent there are provisions that concern matters deemed severable from the rest of the agreement or otherwise subject to the court's powers, such as child and spousal support and child custody, court approval is required before the court will issue an order that effectuates those provisions [see Fam. Code §§ 3585, 3590 (orders for child or spousal support deemed law-imposed and made under power of court to order); see also Fam. Code § 3021 (court's power to determine child custody); Ch. 123, Spousal and Child Support Provisions; Ch. 124, Provisions for Child Custody and Visitation].

If an agreement is in fact approved but not merged in the judgment, enforcement of the agreement generally rests in a cause of action for breach of the agreement and contempt is not available [Plummer v. Superior Court (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 158, 161-165, 124 P.2d 5 ; Lazar v. Superior Court (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 617, 620, 107 P.2d 249 ; see Howarth v. Howarth (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 266, 270-273, 183 P.2d 670] . However, because provisions for child and spousal support are deemed law-imposed and severable from other portions of the agreement, those provisions are enforceable by all judicial remedies for enforcement of judgment, whether or not the agreement is merged into the judgment [see Fam. Code §§ 3585, 3590 (child and spousal support); see also Fam. Code § 3021 (court's power to determine child custody)].

[4] Merger

[a] Definition and Effect

As an alternative, or in addition, to approval, all or part of the agreement may be incorporated in and merged with the judgment. Merger is a legally recognized process by which an agreement, incorporated in a judgment, becomes part of the court order. The effect of merger is that the agreement is superseded by the judgment, and the obligations imposed are not those imposed by contract, but are those imposed by the judgment and are enforceable as such [Hough v.

Hough (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 605, 609-610, 160 P.2d 15]. If the agreement is merged in the judgment, the provisions of the agreement so merged must be enforced as a judgment and not as a contract [Plummer v. Superior Court (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 158, 163, 124 P.2d 5 ; Lazar v. Superior Court (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 617, 620, 107 P.2d 249 ; see In re Marriage of Lane (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 1143, 1147, 211 Cal. Rptr. 262]. Thus, the remedies of contempt, execution, and receivership are available to enforce the provisions of the agreement that are merged in the judgment [Fam. Code § 290; see Fam. Code § 291(a), (b) (family law judgment remains enforceable until paid in full or otherwise satisfied, and judgment need not be renewed)], but the contractual remedies, such as an action for breach of contract, are no longer available for the provisions merged in the judgment [Hough v. Hough (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 605, 610, 160 P.2d 15] .

If a judgment into which an agreement has been merged is set aside, the agreement is also set aside [In re Marriage of Jones (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1097, 1104, 241 Cal. Rptr. 231 ; but see Marriage of Testa (1985) 149 Cal. App. 3d 319, 322, 196 Cal. Rptr. 780 (moving party must specifically request that both judgment and agreement be set aside)]. It has also been held that parol evidence is inadmissible to construe a merged agreement because the intent of the parties is of no use in interpreting a judgment of the court [In re Marriage of Benson (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 907, 912, 217 Cal. Rptr. 589] . However, another court has rejected this position and allowed extrinsic evidence about the intent of the parties in the construction of an ambiguous term in the merged agreement [In re Marriage of Trearse (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1189, 1192-1195, 241 Cal. Rptr. 257] .

Note that there may be a disadvantage to merging property division provisions in the judgment. In certain situations, these merged property division provisions may not be enforceable by contempt because it would constitute imprisonment for debt [see In re Fontana (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 1011, 101 Cal. Rptr. 465 ; but see Verner v. Verner (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 718, 729, 143 Cal. Rptr. 826 ; In re Marriage of Fithian (1977) 74 Cal. App. 3d 397, 405-406, 141 Cal. Rptr. 506 ; see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 140, General Enforcement Principles and Remedies (Matthew Bender)].

Furthermore, merger may extinguish the effect of a warranty in the agreement. For example, although one court concluded on the facts that there had been no merger, it stated that a husband's warranty of having provided accurate and current financial information would be extinguished by merger of the agreement into the dissolution judgment [see In re Marriage of Lane (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 1143, 1149, 211 Cal. Rptr. 262] . Therefore, counsel should exercise caution in determining whether to merge any particular portions of an agreement in the judgment.

[b] Merger as Based on Intention of Parties and Court

In determining whether an incorporated agreement has merged with a judgment, a court will look to the intention of the parties and of the court rendering the judgment at the time of incorporation. This intention may be established by any of the following factors [Garrett v. Garrett (1968) 258 Cal. App. 2d 407, 415, 65 Cal. Rptr. 580 ; see Jackson v. Jackson (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 1026, 1034, 62 Cal. Rptr. 121] :

- Recitals in the agreement indicating that the agreement is to be presented to the court;
 - Physical incorporation of the words of the agreement in either the body of the judgment or as an exhibit;
 - The extent to which the judgment expressly purports to incorporate the provisions of the agreement;
- or
- The extent to which the judgment purports to order the performance of the terms of the agreement.

One appellate court found that the parties lacked intent to merge a marital agreement based on the lack of express incorporation of the agreement into the judgment, the absence of language in the agreement that merger was intended, the existence of language in the agreement to the effect that it could be enforced by successors in interest, and the fact that the agreement was operative even in the event of a reconciliation. The appellate court noted that the trial court merely approved the terms of the agreement and ordered the parties to comply with it, rather than ordering them to perform each and every covenant and condition. Additionally, the court noted that the judgment recited that neither party was discharging the other from any provision of any document executed in connection with the dissolution of marriage [In re Marriage of Lane (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 1143, 1148-1150, 211 Cal. Rptr. 262] .

[c] Available Uses of Merger

[i] Complete Incorporation and Merger

The agreement may provide for incorporation and merger of the entire agreement in the judgment and order the parties to comply fully with the agreement. Some courts permit an original or fully executed copy of the agreement to be attached to the judgment to accomplish incorporation. Other courts prohibit the incorporation of any provision of an agreement by reference, and in those counties the text of the agreement will have to be set forth in the body of the judgment. Accordingly, counsel should ascertain whether local rules of practice prescribe a particular format for the judgment in this regard.

[ii] Partial Merger

The parties may prefer to merge only certain provisions from the marital settlement agreement in the judgment. Generally, it is preferable to have support and custody provisions merged in the judgment so that the remedies of contempt and execution are available, although express merger is not required as support by statute is deemed law-imposed rather than contractual, whether or not the agreement is merged [see Fam. Code §§ 3585, 3590; see also Fam. Code § 3021; see also [3], above].

On the other hand, if there are executory property division provisions, the question of their merger should be considered carefully because contempt may not be available to enforce them, and contractual remedies that may be preferable would not be available after merger [see [a], above]. Thus, if the parties anticipate the need for a certain type of contract-related remedy, such as specific performance, the provision should not be merged [see Plummer v. Superior Court (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 158, 163, 124 P.2d 5 ; see also In re Marriage of Lane (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 1143, 1147, 211 Cal. Rptr. 262] . However, if the property division provisions can best be enforced by execution, the provisions may be merged so that execution is available. Therefore, counsel must examine the type of property provision involved to determine the most appropriate remedy and consider the effect of merger on that remedy. Thus, in some situations it may be desirable to obtain court approval of the entire agreement but only merge certain provisions.

Complete merger may also be avoided in order to protect the parties' privacy with respect to certain provisions, such as those enumerating their property.

Conceivably, the parties could also provide by agreement to make approval by the court or merger in the judgment optional with either party, but this course of action seems less desirable than having the parties settle on the extent to which any of the provisions should be merged.

§ 120.20 Obtaining Necessary Information

Settlement of the rights, claims, and liabilities arising out of the marriage requires that the attorney for each spouse know all the relevant facts before drafting a marital settlement agreement. Many attorneys use information sheets or checklists when obtaining information to remind them of the general categories of facts involved in marital matters and necessary for the preparation of marital settlement agreements.

For a checklist of matters that could be included in a marital settlement agreement, see the Transaction Guide [see § 120.100 et seq.]. A detailed interview checklist is set forth in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 91, Petitioning for Dissolution or Legal Separation (Matthew Bender). It includes a list of information to be obtained from the client regarding the couple's financial affairs and a list of documents and sources that counsel should consult in becoming fully informed regarding their assets and liabilities.

At the client interview, the attorney should inquire about documents that may be relevant to the parties' affairs and ask the client to obtain copies of all such documents available to him or her. If the parties are still living together, the client should be instructed immediately to obtain copies of all documents that may not be available after a separation. It is important that the attorney examine all relevant documents to ascertain their legal import because the client may be misinformed or unaware of their legal effect.

§ 120.22 Obtaining Information From Third Persons

In many situations, information that the client cannot supply must be obtained from third parties. The first source is the spouse of the client, who may be willing to provide certain information voluntarily. If the other spouse is represented by an attorney, the approach must be made through the attorney [Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 2-100]. Once litigation commences, of course, the parties are subject to the requirement that they serve on one another preliminary and final declarations of disclosure on the prescribed Judicial Council form [see Fam. Code § 2100 et seq.; Cal. Judicial Council Form FL-140; see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 92, Petitioning for Dissolution or Legal Separation (Matthew Bender)], and the information derived from disclosure should greatly aid counsel in determining the scope of the parties' assets and liabilities. For an illustrated version of the disclosure declaration form, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 221, Dissolution of Marriage: Procedure, § 221.311 (Matthew Bender).

In addition, necessary information can often be obtained without resort to discovery procedures from other third persons, including the:

1. Attorney of the other party;
2. Prior attorney of the client;
3. Employer of the client or the client's spouse;
4. Accountant and banker of the client;
5. Business associates of the client;
6. Client's stock broker, insurance agent, and real estate broker;

7. Trustee of any trust in which either party has, or has had, an interest; and
8. Executor of any estate from which either party has, or will receive, a distribution.

If third persons will not voluntarily disclose necessary information, counsel may use appropriate discovery procedures. For forms and a discussion of discovery procedure in family law proceedings, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 110, Trial Preparation and Discovery (Matthew Bender). For a comprehensive listing of matter that counsel may wish to discover, see Denner, Rothschild, and Johnson, California Family Law Trial Guide (Matthew Bender), Unit 1.

§ 120.23 Use of Experts

The attorney drafting a marital settlement agreement may find it necessary to consult with and utilize the services of experts (hired by the client) who are able to analyze information obtained for the preparation of the agreement. The expert most frequently used in marital cases is the accountant. When the parties have substantial income and assets, an accountant may be selected to prepare a financial statement, which the attorneys may use during the negotiation stage of the transaction. Accountants may also be used in connection with valuing specific assets such as a closely held business.

When one party obtains the services of an accountant, the attorney representing the other party should, at a minimum, inform the client that any financial statements prepared by the accountant are unconfirmed and should be investigated and verified [see Ishmael v. Millington (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 520, 527, 50 Cal. Rptr. 592]. The better practice is for the client to retain the services of an independent accountant to review the submitted financial statement. If cost, however, is the primary consideration, excessive costs may be avoided at the onset of the negotiation process if the parties agree on utilizing one accountant.

Another expert commonly used to obtain and analyze information in marital cases is the appraiser. Many assets are of such a nature that it takes an expert to evaluate them properly. Examples of these assets are real property, business assets, and personal property having a unique character. In helping the client to select an appraiser, counsel should consider whether the particular person is qualified to appraise the assets in question and the extent to which the person will be an effective witness if called in the proceeding. Pension plan valuations may require the services of an actuary, or other professional who appraises employee benefits.

In some cases, the services of other experts, such as physicians, may be needed, and investigators may be required when one party appears to be concealing assets or income. Valuation of selected community assets is discussed in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 22, Valuation of Property Interests (Matthew Bender). For a comprehensive discussion of evidence used in family law proceedings, see Denner, Rothschild, and Johnson, California Family Law Trial Guide (Matthew Bender), Unit 20.

§ 120.200 Marital Settlement Agreement Dividing Property and Requiring Child Support and Spousal Support--Both Parties Employed and Share Child Custody

[1] Comment

Set forth in [2], below, is a complete marital settlement agreement for use by parties who are obtaining a dissolution of marriage. It may easily be adapted for use in a legal separation or nullity proceeding [see [c] below]. The form should be modified as needed to suit the particular facts at hand [see [b] below]. Alternative general provisions are set forth in §§ 120.210-120.218. Alternative provisions concerning property, in general, are set forth in Ch. 121. Provisions specifically concerning employee benefits are set forth in Ch. 122. Provisions concerning child and spousal support are contained in Ch. 123; and provisions on child custody, and attorney's fees, costs, and tax provisions are set forth in Chapters 124, and 125, respectively.

This form includes provisions that (1) provide for child custody and visitation and child support; (2) provide for spousal support and attorney fees; (3) divide all of the parties' community and quasi-community assets and debts; and (4) establish a plan for the parties' handling of income tax matters during the pendency of their family law proceeding. In addition, the form contains general provisions concerning the parties' respective rights and responsibilities; and the operation of the agreement.

This form contemplates a situation in which (1) both parties are employed and will continue to work following the conclusion of their family law proceeding; (2) the parties will share joint custody of their minor children, with one party assuming physical custody of the children during the school year and the other for a period during the summer; (3) the parent with physical custody during the school year will receive child support payments for that time (and, for a limited time, spousal support payments) from the other party; (4) all of the parties' property that is subject to division on dissolution will be divided at or near the time of the execution of their agreement; and (5) both parties are represented by independent counsel.

For an alternative, illustrative form for a complete agreement that may be used when one party is not currently employed and will remain unemployed or work only part-time following the conclusion of the parties' family law proceeding in order to care for the parties' minor children, see § 120.201.

[b] Modification of Form

Although this form and the form in § 120.201 illustrate complete illustrative agreements, neither will ever be completely appropriate "as is" in any particular case. Prior to drafting an agreement, the attorney should consult Chapters 121 through 125, which contain additional and alternative provisions that may be inserted into this form and the agreement in § 120.201.

Counsel should carefully consider the effect of each provision chosen for the complete marital settlement agreement on the consistency of the agreement as a whole. For example, if a provision in the asset division paragraph dictates that an item of property be sold to pay a particular debt, the discussion of the debt in the debt payment paragraph should also indicate that it is to be paid from the proceeds of that sale. When inserting provisions from Chapters 121 through 125 in this form or the form in § 120.201, modifications of either the new provision or the original agreement, or both, may be necessary to maintain internal consistency.

[c] Settlement Agreements in Annulment Proceedings

Although use of marital settlement agreements in annulment proceedings is not common, if a putative marriage is found to exist, or the parties have child custody or support issues to resolve, a settlement agreement may be appropriate. In the case of a putative marriage, at least one party must have believed in good faith that the marriage was valid when contracted, despite the marriage being void or voidable. Property that would have been community property in a putative marriage is deemed "quasi-marital" property, and is subject to division by the court in the same manner as community property [see Fam. Code §§ 2251, 2550; see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 11, Putative Marriage (Matthew Bender)].

Accordingly, the form of agreement set forth in [2] below is appropriate for an annulment situation in which (1) at least one party believed in good faith that the marriage was valid at the time the marriage was entered into, and (2) the parties' parentage of the minor children covered by the agreement is not in dispute.

[d] Child Custody and Visitation

This form provides for joint legal and physical custody of the parties' minor children, with physical custody alternating between the parties based on the children's school year [see Paragraphs 5-8]. A parent or other person has "physical custody" of children if they reside with and are supervised by him or her [see Fam. Code §§ 3004, 3007]. "Legal custody" refers to the right and responsibility to make decisions relating to the health, education, and welfare of the children [see Fam. Code §§ 3003, 3006]. As used in the Family Code, the term "joint custody" includes both joint legal custody and joint physical custody [Fam. Code § 3002]. For purposes of drafting an agreement, it is suggested that the types of custody agreed to by the parties either be defined, as above, in the agreement, or that the parties otherwise specify exactly the types of custody each party has in order to help avoid a later dispute over meaning. For additional provisions concerning custody and visitation, see Ch. 124, Provisions for Child Custody and Visitation.

PRACTICE TIP:

The terms "custody" and "visitation" can be highly inflammatory among parents, even those who are otherwise in agreement about what times their children spend in each household. In some instances, it may be wiser to refer simply to periods of residence in each parent's household rather than to use the loaded words. However, when there is any perceived danger of kidnapping by either parent, the statutory words should be used to aid in criminal enforcement. Commentary by Diana Richmond.

[e] Child Support

Paragraph 9 of this form is a general provision for child support. It requires the supporting party to make a payment of a specific sum each month. Paragraph 10 partially abates child support for the period of time when the payor parent has the physical custody of the children [see [d], above]. Paragraph 11 provides for both parents to provide health care coverage for the children under their respective employer-provided plans. For additional and alternative child support payment provisions, including provisions related to stay of a wage assignment when a support order issues, see Ch. 123, Spouse and Child Support Provisions. For a general discussion of child support orders, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 41, Child Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

Note that the support provision, like the custody provision, is subject to court approval. Moreover, if the support amount agreed to is less than would be provided by application of the statewide support guideline, the parties may agree to that amount only if they declare all of the following [Fam. Code § 4065]:

- They are fully informed of their rights concerning child support;
- The order is being agreed to without coercion or duress;
- The agreement is in the best interests of the children involved;
- The needs of the children will be adequately met by the stipulated amount; and
- The right to support has not been assigned to the county pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 11477, and no public assistance application is pending.

Child support payable under a marital settlement agreement usually will qualify as a "domestic support obligation," which is not dischargeable in bankruptcy [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5)]. A "domestic support obligation" for bankruptcy purposes includes any debt payable to a bankruptcy debtor's spouse or former spouse in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support of that spouse, former spouse, child, or child's parent under a separation agreement, divorce decree, or property settlement agreement [11 U.S.C. § 101(14A)]. For further discussion, see Ch. 123, Spousal and Child Support Provisions.

[f] Spousal Support

This form provides that one spouse will pay spousal support for a limited period of time, but with the court's jurisdiction over spousal support retained to extend the duration or modify the amount of support in the future [see Paragraph 12.1]. The supporting spouse's obligation terminates on the death of either party, or on the remarriage of the supported spouse, even if it occurs before the otherwise applicable termination date [see Paragraph 12.2]. It does not automatically terminate should the supported spouse cohabit with a person of the opposite gender, but any cohabitation is stated to be a change of circumstances on which the court may decrease the amount of support if the cohabitation produces a decrease in the supported spouse's needs [see Paragraph 13]. The payor spouse forever waives his or her rights to support from the payee spouse [see Paragraph 14].

Spousal support payable under a marital settlement agreement usually will qualify as a "domestic support obligation," which is not dischargeable in bankruptcy [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5)]. A "domestic support obligation" for bankruptcy purposes includes any debt payable to a bankruptcy debtor's spouse or former spouse in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support of that spouse, former spouse, child, or child's parent under a separation agreement, divorce decree, or property settlement agreement [11 U.S.C. § 101(14A)]. For further discussion, see Ch. 123, Spousal and Child Support Provisions.

For additional provisions concerning spousal support, see Ch. 123. For a general discussion of spousal support, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

[g] Division of Community Estate

[i] In General

Generally, the community estate (including both assets and debts) must be divided equally overall between the parties to a marital dissolution or legal separation, except as otherwise agreed by the parties in writing (or by oral stipulation in open court) [Fam. Code § 2550; see In re Marriage of Dellaria (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 196, 201-205, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 802 (trial court erred in enforcing parties' oral property settlement agreement that was neither reduced to writing nor made in open court); see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles, Ch. 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues (Matthew Bender)]. Each asset of the parties will be included in the Judicial Council form of Schedule of Assets and Debts [Cal. Judicial Council Form FL-142], an illustrated version of which is set forth in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure 2d ed., Ch. 111, Pretrial Procedures, § 111.31 (Matthew Bender)]. In this form, each asset and each obligation, including employee benefit plans, that is listed on the Judicial Council Schedule is distributed or allocated to one of the parties [see Paragraphs 15-22]. For forms for use for other dispositions, such as sale to a third party, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 212, General Property Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements (Matthew Bender).

The list format for identifying and dividing community assets and debts may become unwieldy if long lists of assets and debts are involved. In that case, counsel should use attached schedules or exhibits to divide the community assets and debts. For examples of reference to schedules, see § 120.201 and Ch. 121, Provisions for Division of Property.

This form presumes that the division of the overall community estate comes out equal, so that each party is receiving essentially the same net amount. Often, an equalizing payment is required in order to effect an overall equal division of the estate. For a form for a secured equalizing payment, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 212, General Property Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements (Matthew Bender).

[ii] Division of Family Home

This form does not include a separate provision dealing with the family home. The home may be listed and disposed to one party or the other in the same manner as other property, under Paragraphs 16 and 17. However, if the parties wish to postpone sale of the family home because the custodial spouse and minor children will continue living there for a certain period, a special provision should be included concerning the terms of the postponement and eventual disposal of the home. For specific provisions governing the handling of the family home, see Ch. 121, Provisions for Division of Property. For a general discussion of "deferred sale of home orders," see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues (Matthew Bender).

[iii] Division of Employee Benefits

This form allocates to each party his or her own employee benefit plans [see Paragraphs 16 and 17]. Often, however, it will be impossible to obtain an equal division of the community estate without preserving one spouse's community interest in pension or other employee benefits of the other spouse for future payment. In such a case, it will be necessary to divide the benefit plans between the parties. Division of employee benefits requires both provisions in the marital settlement agreement [see Ch. 122, Provisions for Division of Employee Benefits], and preparation and entry by the court of a separate Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO) or other benefit division order.

The classification, valuation, and division of employee benefits requires a knowledge of both federal law and financial principles. Counsel should carefully review Chapter 122 before attempting to negotiate or draft any provision dealing with the retirement benefits of either party.

[iv] Full and Fair Disclosure

Paragraphs 23-26 of this form pertain to full disclosure of assets and obligations. In Paragraph 23, each party warrants that he or she has made full and fair disclosure of all community and separate property, both assets and debts. Each party is required to make full disclosures to the other concerning all assets in which that party has or may have an interest and all liabilities for which that party is or may be liable, regardless of the characterization of the asset or liability as community, quasi-community, or separate property [see Fam. Code §§ 2100, 2102, 2104, 2105].

Paragraphs 24 and 25 address the disposition of after-discovered assets and omitted debts, whether or not the failure to include the asset or obligation in the agreement is due to inadvertence, unawareness, or intentional omission.

Paragraph 26 is a provision under Fam. Code § 2105(d), for mutual waiver of the final declaration of disclosure that otherwise would be required. For discussion of special disclosure forms that must be exchanged by the parties once family law litigation has commenced, and before or at the time the parties enter into an agreement during the litigation that settles property or support issues (other than temporary support), see § 120.12[3] [see Fam. Code § 2105].

[h] Income Taxes

This form provides that the parties will file joint income tax returns for the year during which their dissolution or separation action is pending [see Paragraph 27]. This type of provision may not be desired by the parties in all cases and may be modified to suit the particular circumstances of the parties.

Paragraph 28 provides for the allocation of any potential tax refund from any return that has not yet been filed. Specific expected tax refunds should be addressed as part of the community estate and allocated between the parties [see Paragraph 16, item h]. Similarly, specific tax liabilities on returns already filed should be addressed under the provisions for division of community obligations [see Paragraph 21.1, item b]. For additional and alternative provisions concerning the filing of income tax returns and the payment of income taxes by parties, see Chapter 125. For a general discussion of the tax effects of dissolution, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender).

[i] Fees and Costs

This form provides for the supporting spouse to also make monthly payments toward the supported spouse's attorney fees and costs [see Paragraph 29]. The agreement further provides that fees and costs incurred in future litigation concerning the agreement are to be paid by the prevailing party in the litigation [see Paragraph 30; see also Civ. Code § 1717(b)(1); see generally Hsu v. Abbata (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 863, 876-877, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 824, 891 P.2d 804] .

PRACTICE TIP:

The use of a "prevailing party" fee provision enables a party to recover fees even if he or she could not otherwise qualify for a fee award under the Family Code on the basis of need or because of lack of cooperation. Commentary by Diana Richmond.

For additional forms concerning fees and costs, see Chapter 125.

[j] Modification and Revocation

This form provides for future modification or revocation of the agreement [see Paragraph 39]. Notwithstanding any agreement between the parents, arrangements for child support, custody, and visitation are always subject to court order [Fam. Code §§ 3651, 4001; In re Marriage of Alter (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 718, 726-730, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 849 (court always has power to modify child support order, upward or downward, regardless of parents' agreement to contrary); Armstrong v. Armstrong (1976) 15 Cal. 3d 942, 947, 126 Cal. Rptr. 805, 544 P.2d 941; In re Marriage of Goodarzirad (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 1020, 1026, 230 Cal. Rptr. 203] .

[k] Judicial Action

Paragraph 42 of this form provides for a partial merger of the agreement into the parties' judgment of dissolution of marriage. Note that complete merger may not be advantageous with respect to some provisions, particularly those relating to property, as discussed in § 120.13[4]. For alternative provisions, see § 120.211.

If a judgment of marital dissolution, legal separation, or nullity of marriage is granted on the default of one of the parties, the signature of the defaulting spouse on any marital settlement agreement or stipulated judgment must be notarized (acknowledged) [Fam. Code § 2338.5; see Civ. Code § 1189]. Note that notarization of both parties' signatures is necessary in order to record the agreement [see Fam. Code § 1502].

However, if [e.g., Wife] shares a residence with any person in the future, regardless of the gender of that person and regardless of the existence of or lack of a sexual relationship between them, that shared residency may constitute a change of circumstances supporting a reduction or termination of spousal support and termination of jurisdiction to order spousal support. Any such modification or termination of spousal support shall be based on the effect of the shared residency on [e.g., Wife's] need for support.

Waiver of Spousal Support by _____ [Supporting Spouse]

Omitted Assets

24. If, after the execution of this Agreement, any asset is discovered to exist that was not listed in and disposed of by this Agreement and that would have been community or quasi-community property of the parties, that omitted asset shall be divided equally between the parties. If, however, the existence of the asset was known to one of the parties at the time of execution of this Agreement, the party with that knowledge shall transfer or pay to the party without knowledge of the asset ("the other party"), at the other party's option, one of the following: (1) if the asset is reasonably susceptible to division, a portion of the asset equal to the other party's interest in it; (2) the fair market value of the other party's interest in the asset on the effective date of this Agreement, plus interest at the legal rate from the effective date to the date of payment; or (3) the fair market value of the other party's interest in the asset on the date on which the other party discovers the existence of the asset, plus interest at the legal rate from the discovery date to the date of payment. This provision will not be deemed to impair the availability of any other remedy arising from nondisclosure of community assets.

Division of Omitted Debts

25. The parties acknowledge that they have provided in this Agreement for the payment of all community debts of which each is aware. Any debt, claim, or obligation (including the cost of defending against it) not provided for in this Agreement and unknown by the parties at the time of the preparation of this Agreement, will be deemed a joint community obligation as long as the debt, claim, or obligation arose from the conduct of both parties, or from the conduct of one party and the marital community benefitted from that conduct, occurring during the marriage but before the effective date of this Agreement. If, however, an omitted claim, debt, or obligation arose from the conduct of only one party and the community did not benefit from it, then that claim, debt or obligation will be the sole and separate obligation of that party. This provision will not be deemed to impair the availability of any other remedy arising from nondisclosure of community debts.

Waiver of Final Declaration of Disclosure

26. The parties waive the exchange of Final Declarations of Disclosure, as authorized by Family Code Section 2105(d). The parties declare the following, under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California:

2. Both parties have completed and exchanged a current income and expense declaration, that includes all material facts and information regarding that party's earnings, accumulations, and expenses;
3. Both parties have fully complied with Family Code Section 2102 and have fully augmented the preliminary declarations of disclosure, including disclosure of all material facts and information regarding the characterization of all assets and liabilities, the valuation of all assets that are contended to be community property or in which it is contended the community has an interest, and the amounts of all obligations that are contended to be community obligations or for which it is contended the community has liability;
4. This waiver is knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily entered into by each of the parties; and
5. Each party understands that this waiver does not limit the legal disclosure obligations of the parties, but rather is a statement under penalty of perjury that those obligations have been fulfilled. Each party further understands that noncompliance with those obligations will result in the court setting aside the judgment.

PAYMENT OF TAXES

[For additional income tax related provisions, see ch. 216 .]

Joint Tax Returns

If all or part of any monthly installment is in default for a period of [specify amount of default period, e.g., 60 days], then the entire remaining balance shall become immediately due and payable.

29.4. [Payor spouse] agrees to indemnify and hold [payee spouse] harmless from any claim, including additional attorney fees, arising from a failure to pay any of the fees and costs specified above.

30.1. If either party to this Agreement brings an action or proceeding to enforce any provision of this Agreement, or to enforce any judgment or order made by a court in connection with this Agreement, the prevailing party in that action or proceeding shall be entitled to reasonable attorney fees and other reasonably necessary costs from the other party. 30.2. A party intending to bring an action or proceeding to enforce this Agreement shall not be entitled to recover attorney fees and costs under this provision unless he or she first gives the other party at least [specify amount of notice moving party must give, e.g., 30 days] written notice before filing the action or proceeding. The written notice shall specify (1) whether the subsequent action or proceeding is to enforce the original terms of the Agreement, (2) the reasons why the moving party believes the subsequent action or proceeding is necessary, (3) whether there is any action that the other party may take to avoid the necessity for the subsequent action or proceeding, and (4) a period of time within which the other party may avoid the action or proceeding by taking the specified action. The first party shall not be entitled to attorney fees and costs if the other party takes the specified action within the time specified in the notice.

This Agreement reflects that comprehensive resolution of those rights. In reaching this Agreement, the parties have applied their individual standards of fairness. The conclusions that they have reached are based on their respect and regard for each other. From time to time, the parties have, in order to measure the appropriateness of their conclusions, considered what might happen if the matter were to be adjudicated in court. Husband and Wife represented to each other throughout the mediation process, that their negotiations were in good faith, and that each had fully and completely disclosed all information necessary in order to resolve their interspousal rights.

Execution of Instruments and Further Assurances

[Add to waive protection of Civ. Code § 1542 : This release extends to all claims, whether known or unknown, that either party may have against the other. § 120.201 Marital Settlement Agreement Dividing Property and Requiring Spousal Support--No Children; One Party Unemployed or Underemployed

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a complete marital settlement agreement for parties with no minor children. Like the agreement contained in § 120.200, it contains provisions that divide all of the parties' community and quasi-community assets and debts; provides for spousal support; and establishes a plan for the parties' handling of income tax matters until a final judgment of dissolution is entered. It also includes general provisions concerning the parties' respective rights and responsibilities and the operation of the agreement.

This form contemplates a situation in which one party is not currently employed or employed at a low-paying job, and will remain unemployed or underemployed following the conclusion of the parties' family law proceeding. The other party will assume the primary responsibility for financial support of the former spouse.

This agreement uses schedules (or exhibits) to set forth the division of assets and debts. The agreement in § 120.200 sets forth the distribution of assets and the allocation of debts directly in the agreement.

The provisions in this agreement will never be completely appropriate "as is" in any particular case. Alternative general provisions are set forth in § 120.210 et seq. Alternative provisions concerning property, in general, are set forth in Ch. 121, Provisions for Division of Property. Provisions specifically concerning employee benefits are set forth in Ch. 122, Provisions for Division of Employee Benefits. Provisions concerning child and spousal support are contained in Ch. 123, Spousal and Child Support Provisions; and provisions on child custody are found in Ch. 124, Provisions for Child Custody and Visitation. Tax and attorney fees provisions are set forth in Ch. 125, Provisions for Payment of Income Taxes, Attorney's Fees, and Costs. For additional discussion, see § 120.200[1][b].

For discussion of the possible use of a marital settlement agreement in annulment proceedings, see § 120.200[1][c]. See § 120.200[1][d]-[m] for discussion of other provisions included in this agreement.

[b] Spousal Support

[i] Payments and Jurisdiction

This agreement provides for periodic payments of spousal support with an indefinite retention of jurisdiction [see Paragraph 5.1]. Payments and jurisdiction terminate on the death of either party or on the remarriage of the supported spouse [see Paragraph 5.2]. The effect of the supported spouse's subsequent cohabitation is not addressed [cf. agreement in § 120.200; cohabitation can be considered as changed circumstance]. The amount of support is nonmodifiable except on a stated condition, such as the supporting spouse becoming unemployed [see Paragraph 6]. The supporting spouse forever waives his or her rights to support from the supported spouse [see Paragraph 11]. For additional and alternative provisions, see Ch. 123, Spousal and Child Support Provisions .

[ii] Factors on Which Support is Based

Paragraph 9 sets forth the factors on which the spousal support provisions are based, including the duration of the marriage and the supported spouse's impaired earning capacity. The purpose of this provision is to give guidance to the court in modification proceedings. Only if there is a clear record of the facts and circumstances on which the original support provisions were based can a reviewing court determine whether there has been a material change of circumstances justifying a modification of support [see In re Marriage of Laube (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1222, 1226, 251 Cal. Rptr. 745 ; see also In re Marriage of Tydlaska (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 572, 576, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 594] .

Statements regarding the factors under Fam. Code § 4320 that are critical in determining spousal support should be set forth as findings or in the agreement [see In re Marriage of Geraci (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1278, 1296-1298, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 234 (court must weigh all factors listed in Fam. Code § 4320, and mere statement that factors favor award of support is insufficient if not accompanied by analysis of factors); In re Marriage of Fenton (1982) 134 Cal. App. 3d 451, 457-458, 184 Cal. Rptr. 597 (remanding for reconsideration and appropriate findings); but see In re Marriage of Lucero (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 836, 845, 173 Cal. Rptr. 680 (court not required to make separate findings regarding each factor in statute)]. Certain other issues have been noted by reviewing courts as particularly important to clarify at the time of the original order. If the amount of support agreed to is insufficient to meet the supported spouse's needs at the marital standard of living, the order should so specify [In re Marriage of Smith (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 469, 491-493, 274 Cal. Rptr. 911] . Such a statement is crucial to the power of the court to increase support in the future based solely on the supporting spouse's increased income [In re Marriage of Hoffmeister (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 351, 363-364, 236 Cal. Rptr. 543] .

In addition, Fam. Code § 4336 provides that jurisdiction is to be retained indefinitely in a marriage of long duration, unless the parties agree to the contrary. Paragraph 9 affirms that the marriage is of long duration within the statute and that the agreement does not abrogate the statute.

For further discussion, see Ch. 123, Spousal and Child Support Provisions .

[iii] COBRA Health Care Coverage Extension

Paragraphs 7 and 8 are for use under COBRA (the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985) [Pub. L. 99-272]. Most employer-provided health care plans terminate dependent coverage for a former spouse once a divorce is final. However, COBRA requires the employer to offer continuing coverage to "qualified beneficiaries," such as a former spouse, on the occurrence of a "qualifying event," such as dissolution of marriage [29 U.S.C. §§ 1161, 1163(3), 1167(3)(a)(i)]. Continuation coverage must be offered for a period of 36 months [29 U.S.C. § 1162(2)(A)(iv)], and the employer may require payment of a premium for any period of continuation [29 U.S.C. § 1162(3)].

Paragraph 7 requires the supporting spouse to maintain employer-provided health care coverage until the decree of dissolution is final. If the spouse's coverage terminates before that time, it may be impossible for her or him to elect continuing coverage under COBRA [see 29 U.S.C. § 1167(3)(a) (COBRA coverage requires that person be covered under plan on day before qualifying event)]. Paragraph 8 requires the supporting spouse to assist in making an election for COBRA coverage and allocates the payment of premiums. COBRA is extremely complex and is considered in detail in Bacon, Prater & Tucker, Employee Benefit Guide(Matthew Bender).

[iv] Alimony Tax Treatment

Paragraph 10 specifies that the spousal support payments are to be afforded alimony tax treatment under the Internal Revenue Code; that is, they are to be deductible to the supporting spouse and taxable income to the supported spouse [see I.R.C. §§ 71, 215]. For additional provisions regarding alimony tax treatment, see Chapter 123.

[c] Unrepresented Party

In Paragraph 24.2 of this form, the parties acknowledge that only one of them was represented by counsel in the negotiation and preparation of the agreement, and that the agreement was drafted by that attorney. When the attorney for one party in marital settlement negotiations is forced to deal directly with the other party because he or she refuses to secure counsel, the attorney is under a most strict duty to deal with the unrepresented party fairly and objectively, and should afford that party with an opportunity to obtain his or her own counsel. A court will scrutinize the agreement carefully to make sure that there has been no overreaching [Gregory v. Gregory (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 343, 349, 206 P.2d 1122] , and will set aside any agreement obtained by keeping one party in ignorance or in some other manner preventing him or her from fully participating in the proceeding [see Fam. Code § 2120 et seq.; In re Marriage of Stevenot (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 1068, 202 Cal. Rptr. 116] .

[d] Judicial Action

Paragraph 34 of this form provides that either or both of the parties will request that the court approve their agreement. The agreement will not be effective unless the court approves it in its entirety, with no modifications or deletions, on or before a specified date.

For discussion of the effect of approval or merger of an agreement, see § 120.13.

[2] FORM

Marital Settlement Agreement Dividing Property and Requiring Spousal Support--No Children; One Party Unemployed or Underemployed

MARITAL SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

This Marital Settlement Agreement is entered into between _____[name of wife] ("Wife"), and _____[name of husband] ("Husband") in order to resolve all issues between them with regard to their dissolution of marriage/legal separation. The parties intend this Agreement to be a final and complete settlement of all of their rights and obligations to each other arising out of their marriage, including without limitation, all past, present and future interspousal claims of any kind that either may have against the other, except as otherwise provided in this Agreement. Therefore, Husband and Wife agree as follows:

General Recitations

1. Husband and Wife were married on _____ [date], in _____ [city], _____ [state], and have thereafter been married to each other continuously. They have _____ [lived separate and apart since _____ (date) or agreed to live separate and apart commencing _____ (date)]. As of the separation date, the duration of the marriage is _____ Years, _____ Months.
2. Irreconcilable differences have arisen between Husband and Wife, which have led to an irremediable breakdown of the marriage. There is no possibility of saving the marriage through counseling or other means, and the parties have agreed to dissolve their marriage.
3. Husband and Wife have no children together, living or deceased, natural or adopted, and Wife is not currently pregnant.
4. [Husband or Wife] [has filed or will file] a petition for dissolution of marriage in the Superior Court of California, _____ County [, Case No. _____].

SPOUSAL SUPPORT

[For additional and alternative provisions governing spousal support, including provisions for stay of wage assignment and related issues, see ch. 214.]

Periodic Payments

5.1. [Supporting spouse, e.g., Husband] shall pay spousal support to [supported spouse, e.g., Wife] in the sum of $ _____ per month, beginning _____ [date]. Payments shall be due on or before the [specify day, e.g., fifth] of each month.

5.2. The payments of spousal support provided in this Agreement, and the court's jurisdiction to order spousal support, shall terminate on the death of either party or on the remarriage of [e.g., Wife].

Subsequent Modification of Amount

6. The amount of the periodic payments of spousal support provided for in this Agreement shall not be subject to modification or termination unless _____ [set forth condition, e.g., Husband is involuntarily terminated from his current employment]. Should this condition occur, the court may consider whether the changed circumstance justifies modification of the amount of support, as the court deems proper.

COBRA: Maintenance of Health Care Coverage

7. The parties affirm that on account of their marriage, [supported spouse, e.g., Wife] is a covered family member under the following health care plans provided by [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband's] employment: [specify all medical, dental, vision, prescription medicines, and other plans through which coverage was provided to supported spouse]. These coverages are dependent on the existence of the marital relationship and will terminate on the termination of their marriage. [E.g., Husband] shall maintain [e.g., Wife's] coverage under all of the above plans, and shall pay all costs associated with this maintenance, until the termination of the parties' marriage.

COBRA: Election and Payment of Premium

8. Immediately on entry of the judgment of dissolution of the parties' marriage, [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband] shall notify [his/her] employer and all employer-provided health care plan administrators of the fact and date of judgment. [E.g., Husband] shall obtain all forms and other documents and information necessary, and shall provide all requested assistance, to allow [e.g., Wife] to elect continuation coverage under all such plans under the requirements of 29 United States Code Section 1161 (COBRA). [specify, e.g., Husband] will pay the cost of all premiums assessed with regard to continuation health care coverages under COBRA.

Facts and Circumstances Regarding Spousal Support

9. The parties affirm that the following facts are true as of the date of this Agreement, and that the spousal support provisions of this Agreement are made in consideration of these facts:

a. The parties were married on _____ [date] and separated on _____ [date]. The duration of the marriage is _____ years, _____ months. Therefore, this is a marriage of long duration within the meaning of Family Code Section 4336. This Agreement is not intended to avoid the otherwise applicable effects of that statute regarding indefinite retention of jurisdiction over spousal support in a marriage of long duration.

b. Husband is _____ years old and Wife is _____ years old.
 _____ [Specify facts concerning factors affecting appropriateness and amount of spousal support, e.g., Both are in good health. From 1974 through 1979, Wife was employed outside of the home and provided Husband's sole support so that he could obtain a professional degree in Optometry.]

c. Wife is currently _____ [employed or self-employed or unemployed] [add if employed as a _____ (job title) by _____ (employer) at _____ (employer or business address)]. Her gross monthly income from all sources is $ _____ and her monthly expenses are $ _____.

d. Husband is currently _____ [employed or self-employed or unemployed] [add if employed or self-employed as a _____ (job title) by _____ (employer) at _____ (employer or business address)]. His gross monthly income from all sources is $ _____ and his monthly expenses are $ _____.

[Include if support will be based on actual earnings rather than earning capacity:]

e. The parties' current incomes, as set forth above, are a reasonable reflection of their earning capacities, and the spousal support provisions of this Agreement are based on their actual earnings, not on their earning capacity.

f. The marital standard of living was _____ [describe generally, e.g., middle class; comfortable, but not lavish]. Total marital net monthly income at the time of separation was approximately $ _____.
 _____ [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband's current income [is/is not] sufficient to maintain both parties separately at the marital standard of living.]

g. _____ [Specify facts concerning supported spouse's ability to support himself or herself, e.g., Wife has a bachelor of arts degree from the University of California, but was unemployed during the marriage until 1991 to] devote time to domestic duties. Since 1991, Wife has worked part-time as a graphic designer]. _____

 [Supported spouse's, e.g., Wife's] current net monthly income is insufficient to support [herself/himself] at the marital standard of living.

h. _____ [Supported spouse's, e.g., Wife's] reasonable needs to maintain [herself/himself] at the marital standard of living, considering the cost of living as of the date of this Agreement, require approximately $_____ per month of total net disposable income]. The support provided for in this Agreement, together with _____ [supported spouse's, e.g., Wife's] reasonably anticipated income, [is/is not] sufficient to meet [her/his] reasonable needs.

i. _____ [Specify facts regarding underlying assumptions on which support provisions are based, e.g., Support for an indefinite term, as set forth in this Agreement, is based on the assumption that given _____ (supported spouse's) age, skills, and employment history, it is unlikely that (she/he) will ever be able to support (herself/himself) at the marital standard of living.].

Alimony Tax Treatment

10. All payments to or on behalf of [supported spouse, e.g., Wife] for [her/his] support are intended to qualify as alimony under Internal Revenue Code Sections 71 and 215, and are to be included in [e.g., Wife's] gross income and deducted by [e.g., Husband] as provided in those Code sections.

_____ [Supporting Spouse's] Waiver of Spousal Support

11. [Supporting spouse, e.g., Husband] waives the right ever to obtain spousal support from [supported spouse, e.g., Wife]. [Supporting spouse, e.g., Husband] understands that by waiving spousal support, [he/she] will never be able to return to court to request spousal support ever again, regardless of any change of circumstances that may occur. This waiver is knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily made. The court's jurisdiction to order spousal support to be paid by [e.g., Wife] to [e.g., Husband] at any time is terminated.

DIVISION OF COMMUNITY ESTATE

[For additional and alternative provisions governing division of community assets and obligations, see ch. 212.]

Division of Community Assets

12.1. Husband and Wife agree that their community [and quasi-community] assets shall be divided between them as set forth in Schedules _____ and _____. [The parties further agree that this Agreement effects an equal division of their community (and quasi-community) property.]

12.2. Each party releases and transfers and assigns to the other as his or her sole and separate property, all right, title, and interest in and to the assets listed in Schedules _____ and _____. Each party further agrees to execute any and all documents that may be required to establish or confirm the other party's sole ownership of any listed asset.

Encumbrances

13. With regard to all property assigned under this Agreement, except as may otherwise be specifically provided in this Agreement (including in Paragraph 15 regarding payment of community obligations), the assignee spouse assumes all encumbrances and liens on the property and agrees to indemnify and hold the other party free and harmless from any claim or liability that the other party may suffer or may be required to pay because of those encumbrances or liens, including the payment of reasonable attorney fees.

Insurance

14. The party assigned an insured asset shall, as of the effective date of this Agreement, receive the benefits and protections of that insurance, shall be considered the owner of the insurance policy, and shall pay all policy premiums coming due on and after that date, for so long as the policy is maintained in force. A party assigned insured property must notify the insurance carrier for the property concerning the change in ownership within [period of time] after the execution of this Agreement.

Division of Community Debts

15.1. Husband and Wife agree that their community [and quasi-community] debts and obligations shall be allocated between them as set forth in Schedules _____ and _____. [Add if desired: The parties further agree that this Agreement effects an equal division of their community (and quasi-community) debts and obligations.]

15.2. Wife agrees to (1) indemnify and hold Husband harmless from the debts set forth in Schedule _____, and (2) defend Husband, at her own expense, against any claim, action, or proceeding that is hereafter brought seeking to hold Husband liable on account of these debts, including the payment of reasonable attorney fees incurred by Husband in his defense of any such claim, action, or proceeding.

15.3. Husband agrees (1) to indemnify and hold Wife harmless from the debts set forth in Schedule _____, and (2) defend Wife, at his own expense, against any claim, action, or proceeding that is hereafter brought seeking to hold Wife liable on account of these debts, including the payment of reasonable attorney fees incurred by Wife in her defense of any such claim, action, or proceeding.

Warranty of Disclosure of Assets and Debts

16. Each party warrants to the other that (1) all community assets and debts of which he or she has any knowledge have been addressed in this Agreement, (2) that he or she is not possessed of or entitled to any community assets of any kind or description that have not been disposed of by this Agreement, and (3) that he or she has not incurred any community debts or obligations other than those disposed of by this Agreement.

Omitted Assets

17. If, after the execution of this Agreement, any asset is discovered to exist that was not listed in and disposed of by this Agreement and that would have been community or quasi-community property of the parties, that omitted asset shall be divided equally between the parties. If, however, the existence of the asset was known to one of the parties at the time of execution of this Agreement, the party with that knowledge shall transfer or pay to the party without knowledge of the asset ("the other party"), at the other party's option, one of the following: (1) if the asset is reasonably susceptible to division, a portion of the asset equal to the other party's interest in it; (2) the fair market value of the other party's interest in the asset on the effective date of this Agreement, plus interest at the legal rate from the effective date to the date of payment; or (3) the fair market value of the other party's interest in the asset on the date on which the other party discovers the existence of the asset, plus interest at the legal rate from the discovery date to the date of payment. This provision will not be deemed to impair the availability of any other remedy arising from nondisclosure of community assets.

Division of Omitted Debts

18. The parties acknowledge that they have provided in this Agreement for the payment of all community debts of which each is aware. Any debt, claim, or obligation (including the cost of defending against it) not provided for in this Agreement and unknown by the parties at the time of the preparation of this Agreement, will be deemed a joint community obligation as long as the debt, claim, or obligation arose from the conduct of both parties, or from the conduct of one party and the marital community benefitted from that conduct, occurring during the marriage but before the effective date of this Agreement. If, however, an omitted claim, debt, or obligation arose from the conduct of only one party and the community did not benefit from it, then that claim, debt or obligation will be the sole and separate obligation of that party. This provision will not be deemed to impair the availability of any other remedy arising from nondisclosure of community debts.

Waiver of Final Declaration of Disclosure

19. The parties waive the exchange of Final Declarations of Disclosure, as authorized by Family Code Section 2105(d). The parties declare the following, under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California:

1. Both parties have complied with Family Code Section 2104 and the preliminary declarations of disclosure have been completed and exchanged;
2. Both parties have completed and exchanged a current income and expense declaration, that includes all material facts and information regarding that party's earnings, accumulations, and expenses;
3. Both parties have fully complied with Family Code Section 2102 and have fully augmented the preliminary declarations of disclosure, including disclosure of all material facts and information regarding the characterization of all assets and liabilities, the valuation of all assets that are contended to be community property or in which it is contended the community has an interest, and the amounts of all obligations that are contended to be community obligations or for which it is contended the community has liability;
4. This waiver is knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily entered into by each of the parties; and
5. Each party understands that this waiver does not limit the legal disclosure obligations of the parties, but rather is a statement under penalty of perjury that those obligations have been fulfilled. Each party further understands that noncompliance with those obligations will result in the court setting aside the judgment.

PAYMENT OF INCOME TAXES

[For additional and alternative provisions relating to income taxes, see Ch. 216.]

Joint Tax Returns

20.1. The parties shall file joint federal and state income tax returns for the calendar year(s) ending December 31, [specify tax year(s) before the year in which a final judgment dissolving the marriage is expected to be entered].

20.2. [Husband or Wife] shall be responsible for the preparation of the joint tax returns. [Wife or Husband] shall cooperate with [Husband or Wife] in the preparation of the joint tax return by providing all information necessary information to prepare the joint return (including but not limited to, W-2 forms from all employers, statements of income from any source other than employment, interest from bank accounts, itemized deductions, and tax credits). If the tax returns as prepared are not acceptable to [Wife or Husband], [she/he] shall notify [Husband or Wife] of [her/his] objections within [specify time period, e.g., 10 days] before the filing deadline.

20.4. Should either spouse fail to cooperate in the preparation and filing of joint returns, that party shall pay any additional tax liability, late penalties, interest, attorney's or accountants' fees, and any other fees or costs incurred as a result of the failure to cooperate.

20.5. [Husband or Wife] shall pay all expenses incurred in the preparation and filing of the joint returns. [For additional optional provisions, see § 216.30[2] .]

20.6. [Husband or Wife] shall pay all amounts owing, if any, in connection with each joint income tax return filed under this Agreement. [For additional optional provisions, see § 216.30[2] .]

20.7. Allocation of Tax Refunds

21. Any tax refund received in connection with any joint income tax return filed by the parties shall be [the sole and separate property of _____ (Husband or Wife) or divided between the parties as follows: _____ (specify percentage share of each party, e.g., each party shall receive 50 percent of the refund)].

[For alternative provisions governing attorneys' fees and costs, see Ch. 216.]

Payment of Attorney Fees and Expenses

22.1. [Payor spouse, e.g., Husband] shall pay to _____ [payee spouse, e.g., Wife) or

Payment of attorney fees and costs shall be made [specify time for payment, e.g., within 30 days after the effective date of this Agreement].

22.2. Full payment by [payor spouse] shall fully release [him/her] from all liability to [payee spouse] and to [his/her] attorneys for legal fees and costs associated with the negotiation, preparation, and execution of this Agreement and with regard to the proceeding for dissolution of marriage.

22.3. If payment is not made in full within the time specified above, the unpaid balance will immediately become due, with interest at the legal rate from the date of default to the date payment is finally made.

22.4. [Payor spouse] agrees to indemnify and hold [payee spouse] harmless from any claim, including additional attorney fees, arising from a failure to pay any of the fees and costs specified above.

Payment of Future Fees and Costs to Prevailing Party

23.1. If either party to this Agreement brings an action or proceeding to enforce any provision of this Agreement, or to enforce any judgment or order made by a court in connection with this Agreement, the prevailing party in that action or proceeding shall be entitled to reasonable attorney fees and other reasonably necessary costs from the other party. The definition of "prevailing party" shall be the same as that set forth in Civil Code Section 1717(b).

23.2. A party intending to bring an action or proceeding to enforce this Agreement shall not be entitled to recover attorney fees and costs under this provision unless he or she first gives the other party at least [specify amount of notice moving party must give, e.g., 30 days] written notice before filing the action or proceeding. The written notice shall specify (1) whether the subsequent action or proceeding is to enforce the original terms of the Agreement, (2) the reasons why the moving party believes the subsequent action or proceeding is necessary, (3) whether there is any action that the other party may take to avoid the necessity for the subsequent action or proceeding, and (4) a period of time within which the other party may avoid the action or proceeding by taking the specified action. The first party shall not be entitled to attorney fees and costs if the other party takes the specified action within the time specified in the notice.

Representation by Counsel

24.1. [Husband or Wife] has been represented in the negotiation and preparation of this Agreement by his/her attorney of record _____ [name of attorney]. This Agreement was drafted by [Husband's or Wife's] attorney.

24.2. _____ [name of attorney], as attorney for [Husband or Wife], has, throughout the negotiation process and at all stages of the proceeding, informed [Wife or Husband] that he/she was acting solely as counsel for [Husband or Wife], and was not representing the interests of [Wife or Husband] in any manner whatsoever. At all stages during the negotiation and preparation of this Agreement, [Wife or Husband] has been told that she/he has a right to be represented by counsel of record of her/his own choosing. [Wife or Husband] has the financial means, and has had a reasonable opportunity, to engage counsel or to otherwise have this Agreement reviewed by counsel. [Wife or Husband] acknowledges that she/he has been advised, and has had the opportunity, to obtain counsel of her/his own choosing, but has freely elected to proceed without the assistance of counsel.

Mediation

25. This Agreement was arrived at through mediation with _____ [name of mediator]. At the commencement and throughout the mediation process, the parties agreed that mediation was intended to produce a comprehensive resolution of all of their property and support rights. This Agreement reflects that comprehensive resolution of those rights. In reaching this Agreement, the parties have applied their individual standards of fairness. The conclusions that they have reached are based on their respect and regard for each other. From time to time, the parties have, in order to measure the appropriateness of their conclusions, considered what might happen if the matter were to be adjudicated in court. Husband and Wife represented to each other throughout the mediation process, that their negotiations were in good faith, and that each had fully and completely disclosed all information necessary in order to resolve their interspousal rights.

26. Husband and Wife shall each execute and deliver promptly on request to the other any and all additional papers, documents, and other assurances, and shall do any and all acts and things reasonably necessary or proper to carry out their obligations under this Agreement. If either party fails or refuses to comply with the requirements of this Paragraph in a timely manner, that party shall reimburse the other party for all expenses, including attorney fees and costs, incurred as a result of that failure, and shall indemnify the other for any loss or liability incurred as a result of the breach. Further, in case of a breach of the duties imposed by this Paragraph, the court may, on ex parte application, order the county clerk to execute any document or other paper on behalf of the breaching party.

27. Except for the obligations contained in or expressly arising out of this Agreement, each party releases the other from all interspousal obligations, and all claims to the property of the other. This release extends to all claims based on rights that have accrued before or during marriage, including, but not limited to, property and support claims and claims sounding in tort. [Add to waive protection of Civ. Code § 1542 : This release extends to all claims, whether known or unknown, that either party may have against the other. Each party waives, with respect to the other, the benefits of Civil Code Section 1542, which protects against the inadvertent waiver of material claims that one does not know or suspect to exist. Civil Code Section 1542 provides: "A general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his or her favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him or her must have materially affected his or her settlement with the debtor."

28. Each party waives all right to inherit in the estate of the other party on his or her death, whether by testamentary disposition or intestacy, except under the terms of a will executed after the effective date of this Agreement. Each party further waives the right to claim a family allowance or probate homestead, or to act as personal representative of the estate of the other unless nominated by another person legally entitled to the right.

Indemnity and Hold Harmless

[See also § 120.214 .]

29. Except for the obligations contained in or expressly arising out of this Agreement, each party warrants to the other that he or she has not incurred, and shall not incur, any liability or obligation for which the other party is, or may be, liable. Except as may be expressly provided in this Agreement, if any claim, action, or proceeding, whether or not well founded, shall later be brought seeking to hold one party liable on account of any alleged debt, liability, act, or omission of the other, the warranting party shall, at his or her sole expense, defend the other against the claim, action, or proceeding. The warranting party shall also indemnify the other and hold him or her harmless against any loss or liability that he or she may incur as a result of the claim, action, or proceeding, including attorney fees, costs, and expenses incurred in defending or responding to any such action.

Agreement Entered Into Voluntarily

Judicial Action

[For additional provisions on judicial action, see § 120.211 .]

34. Either party who obtains a judgment of dissolution of marriage [shall/may] offer this Agreement to the court, without objection by the other party, with the request that the court approve this Agreement as being fair and equitable and that it be incorporated by reference only into any judgment that may be entered by the court. If this request is granted, the judgment submitted to the court shall state that a [properly authenticated copy or duplicate original] of this Agreement is attached to it for identification only and not for the purpose of being an operative part of the judgment. It is intended by the parties that this Agreement not be merged in any judgment, but that it shall survive the judgment and be binding on the parties for all time. The validity and effectiveness of this Agreement and each provision of this Agreement shall not, however, be affected by the parties' failure to obtain a final judgment from the court.

39. No waiver of any breach of this Agreement or default under it shall be deemed to be a waiver of any subsequent breach or default of the same or similar nature. 40. This Agreement may be executed in two or more counterparts, each of which shall be deemed to be an original, but all of which shall constitute one and the same instrument.

§ 120.202 Reconciliation Agreement Revoking Prior Marital Settlement Agreement

[1] Comment--Use of Form

Set forth in [2], below, is a form illustrating a complete reconciliation agreement. The form contains two alternate provisions relating to revocation of a prior marital settlement agreement. The first provides that the marital settlement agreement is revoked by the reconciliation agreement; the second provides that that the marital settlement agreement is not revoked, or is revoked only in part [see Paragraph 4]. This form is designed for use when the parties reconcile either before or after the entry of a judgment of dissolution of the marriage, and anticipates the situation in which divorced parties remarry. Counsel will need to modify this form in accordance with the particular circumstances presented.

Use of the first alternative (revoking the marital settlement agreement) is especially vital if the marital settlement agreement contains a provision stating that it can be abrogated only by another written agreement. Use of the second alternative (not revoking the marital settlement agreement) is appropriate when the parties wish to maintain the efficacy of the marital settlement agreement for a period of time, or when they wish to abrogate some but not all of the provisions of that agreement. In using this alternative, each provision of the prior agreement should be examined to determine whether its survival is advisable. For example, it might be determined that provisions relating to the status of property should survive and all other provisions that have not been fully performed should be revoked.

Counsel must evaluate the need to formally modify (or seek termination of) any order the court has made under a prior marital settlement agreement if that agreement has been revoked in whole or in part. For a general discussion of modification proceedings, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapters 35, 42, Modification of Child Support Orders, and 52, Modification and Termination of Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender) [see Fam. Code §§ 2026 (effect of reconciliation in considering contempt of court order), 2334 (temporary orders during continuance occasioned by reconciliation), 3602 (orders for support as not enforceable during period in which parties have reconciled and are living together, unless order specifies otherwise); cf. In re Marriage of McCann (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 102, 107, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 639 (child support order does not terminate automatically by operation of law on death of custodial parent, unless order provides for termination; noncustodial parent could not terminate it unilaterally before time listed in order)].

§ 120.210 Effective Date of Agreement

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

Set forth in [2], below, is a form containing several alternative provisions relating to the effective date of a marital settlement agreement. The effective date of an agreement should be carefully evaluated because it has a direct bearing on the rights and liabilities of the parties. Accordingly, the agreement should be specific about the date on which it will become effective. The form may be modified as needed to suit the particular circumstances of the parties.

In selecting a provision for the effective date of the agreement, it is most important that the provision be entirely consistent with the provision in the agreement dealing with judicial action concerning the agreement [see § 120.211[2]]. Several of the alternative provisions in this form and in § 120.211[2] are inconsistent with each other.

[b] Alternative Provisions for Effective Date

[i] Agreement Immediately Effective on Execution

This provision makes the agreement effective as of the date of execution. It should be used only when the parties intend that the agreement be effective immediately, regardless of whether a judgment of dissolution of the marriage is obtained or whether the agreement is approved by a court. In certain situations, the parties may desire that the agreement become effective immediately even though a dissolution action is pending or contemplated.

[ii] Agreement Effective on Specified Date

This provision specifies a particular date in the future on which the agreement will be effective. It is generally used if there is a particular date on which a transaction must be completed, regardless of whether a judgment of dissolution has been entered. The parties might select a particular date for any number of reasons, including for tax reasons. For discussion of tax issues, see Chapter 125.

[iii] Agreement Effective on Court Approval

This provision makes the agreement effective on the date that it is approved by the court. The purpose of this type of provision is to protect the parties if the court changes some part of the parties' arrangement. It ensures that a party will not lose his or her bargained-for benefits in court while remaining bound to other detrimental parts of the agreement which were given in exchange for the lost benefits.

In drafting any provision making the agreement effective on court approval, the attorney should consider whether the provision should or should not require approval in its entirety. For a discussion of court approval of marital settlement agreements, see § 120.13[3]. If the court refuses to approve an agreement in its entirety that becomes effective only on that approval, a new agreement would have to be reached or the matter must be tried.

If the effectiveness of the agreement is dependent on action by a court, consideration should be given to whether a California court should be specified. Many agreements used in California do not specify the "California" court, although it is usually assumed that the matter will be brought to a California court. If the attorney desires certainty in the agreement that a California court will be involved, he or she should so specify in the agreement.

[iv] Agreement Effective When Dissolution Judgment Granted

Provisions specifying that the agreement is effective only when a judgment of dissolution of the marriage is granted are most frequently used if one of the parties wants to make certain that the other party will actually obtain the judgment.

[v] Agreement Effective When Final Judgment Granted Within Specified Time Period

Provisions specifying that the agreement becomes effective on the date on which a final judgment of dissolution is granted, and so long as it is obtained within a specified period of time, are generally used if one of the parties is very anxious to remarry and wants assurance that the other party will not delay in seeking the judgment.

[vi] Agreement Effective on Attorney Approval, Approval by Court, and When Final Judgment Granted

This provision, which specifies three events, each of which must occur before the agreement can become effective, is designed to illustrate how a provision can be drafted specifying more than one event that must occur before the agreement is effective. The three events specified in the provision are (1) approval by the attorneys representing the parties to the agreement, (2) approval by the court handling the dissolution of marriage proceeding, and (3) the granting of a final judgment of dissolution of marriage. If a marital settlement agreement has signature lines for "approval as to form" by the parties' attorneys but does not in any way state that it is subject to review or content-approval by the attorneys, attorney approval is not a condition precedent to the effectiveness of the agreement [In re Marriage of Hasso (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 1174, 1180-1182, 280 Cal.Rptr. 919] .

[vii] Agreement Effective on Approval by Court Without Merger

In certain situations the parties may desire that the agreement be enforceable only as a private contract and that none of the remedies specified for the enforcement of judgments and orders under the Family Code [see Fam. Code § 290] be immediately available. For a further discussion, see § 120.211[1][b]. This provision fulfills this purpose by making the effective date of the agreement the date on which the court issues a final judgment of dissolution that simply approves the agreement and does not order compliance with any of its provisions.

§ 120.211 Judicial Action Concerning Agreement

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The forms in [2], below, are several alternative provisions relating to judicial action affecting a marital settlement agreement, that is, the action that will be taken by the court, and the relation between the agreement and the judgment. Generally, judicial action can consist of judicial approval of all or part of the agreement, or merger of all or part of the agreement into the judgment, or some combination of these. Before execution of the agreement, counsel must consider whether the agreement is simply to be approved by the court, or whether it is to become an operative part of the judgment so that it is "merged" into the judgment. For a discussion of "approval" and "merger" of an agreement, see § 120.13.

In selecting or modifying one of the alternative provisions set forth in [2], below, the attorney should make certain that the particular provision chosen is entirely consistent with the provision regarding the effective date of the agreement [see § 120.210].

[b] Alternatives for Judicial Action

[i] Merger of Agreement Into Judgment

Merger incorporates the agreement as an operative part of the judgment. The court is requested to approve the agreement and make specific orders requiring each party to perform all provisions of the agreement. After merger, the agreement loses its independent nature as a contract, and becomes part of the judgment. Thus, the agreement cannot be enforced by legal action for breach of contract. The judgment may, however, be enforced by any of the remedies available for any judgment, or order rendered under the Family Code [Fam. Code § 290 (contempt, execution, receivership, or other order)]. The judgment will be enforceable until paid in full or otherwise satisfied, and the judgment is exempt from any general requirement that a judgment be renewed for purposes of enforcement [Fam. Code § 291(a),(b); see Fam. Code § 291(c) (family law judgment may be renewed)].

An advantage of this method is that the rights and liabilities of the parties after the judgment can be determined by reference to the judgment alone. This makes it easier, not only for the attorneys and their clients, but also for any judge hearing subsequent proceedings. However, there may be a disadvantage to complete merger, particularly with respect to property provisions [see § 120.13[4]].

[ii] Request for Court Approval by Either Party

This provision may be used if the parties do not desire to have the agreement made an operative part of the judgment, but they wish the court to approve the agreement at the request of either party. An agreement that has been approved only and not merged retains its contractual nature, but cannot be enforced by the remedies for enforcement of a judgment. Note, however, that support provisions are deemed law-imposed and made under the power of the court to order support. They are severable from other portions of the agreement [see Fam. Code §§ 3585, 3590 (child and spousal support)].

[iii] Partial Merger of Agreement Into Judgment

This provision is used if the parties intend that parts of the agreement will be merged into and become operative parts of the judgment, while other parts will be merely approved by the court.

Before the passage of the (now former) Family Law Act in 1969, this type of provision was often used with regard to "integrated" agreements to ensure that the provisions for support of the spouse would remain contractual in nature and not subject to later modification by the court. This procedure is no longer necessary, because Family Code Section 3591 now provides that the provisions of any agreement or order for spousal support are subject to subsequent modification or revocation by court order only if no written agreement (or, if there is no written agreement, no oral agreement entered into in open court between the parties) specifically provides to the contrary.

This provision is provided because in certain situations the attorney may decide that some provisions of the agreement should, and others should not, become an operative part of the judgment.

[iv] Insertion of Agreement's Provisions in Judgment

An attorney may decide that all or some provisions of the agreement should be merged in the judgment, and that it would be useful to set forth these merged portions verbatim in the judgment, rather than simply setting forth a listing of paragraphs of the agreement that are to be merged. Alternatively, counsel may wish to set forth verbatim only matters such as child custody, visitation, child support, and spousal support, and attach the agreement to the judgment, with appropriate language in the judgment that incorporates and merges the attached matter (in whole or in part) into the judgment.

Judicial Action Concerning Agreement

[FIRST ALTERNATIVE]

[If the court will be requested to merge entire agreement into the judgment and make specific orders requiring each party to perform all provisions of the agreement:]

Merger of Agreement into Judgment

A _____ [properly authenticated copy or duplicate original] of this Agreement shall be attached to the judgment of dissolution of marriage and merged into the judgment for the purpose of becoming an operative part of the judgment. The validity and effectiveness of this Agreement and each provision of this Agreement shall not be affected by the parties' failure to obtain a final judgment from the court.

[OR]

[SECOND ALTERNATIVE]

[If either party may request that court simply approve the agreement:]

Request for Court Approval by Either Party

Either party who obtains a judgment of dissolution of marriage _____ [shall or may] offer this Agreement to the court, without objection by the other party, with the request that the court approve this Agreement as being fair and equitable and that it be incorporated by reference only into any judgment that may be entered by the court. If this request is granted, the judgment submitted to the court shall state that a _____ [properly authenticated copy or duplicate original] of this Agreement is attached to it for identification only and not for the purpose of being an operative part of the judgment. It is intended by the parties that this Agreement not be merged in any judgment, but that it shall survive the judgment and be binding on the parties for all time. The validity and effectiveness of this Agreement and each provision of this Agreement shall not, however, be affected by the parties' failure to obtain a final judgment from the court.

[OR]

[THIRD ALTERNATIVE]

[If certain provisions are to be merged into the judgment and the the remainder of the agreement will be approved only:]

Partial Merger of Agreement Into Judgment

A party who obtains a judgment of (dissolution of marriage/legal separation) shall attach a [properly authenticated copy or duplicate original] of this Agreement to the judgment without objection from the other party. The parties agree that the court shall be requested to:

(1) Approve the entire agreement as fair and equitable.

(2) Merge _____ [e.g., the provisions relating to child custody, visitation, child support, and spousal support or Paragraphs _____, _____, and _____] (specify appropriate sections of agreement)] into the judgment for the purpose of being operative parts of the judgment.

(3) Incorporate the remainder of the provisions of this Agreement by reference into the judgment for the sole purpose of identification

The validity and effectiveness of this Agreement and each provision of this Agreement shall not be affected by the parties' failure to obtain a final judgment from the court.

[OR]

[FOURTH ALTERNATIVE]

[If provisions of agreement that are to be merged into judgment will be set forth verbatim:]

Insertion of Agreement's Provisions in Judgment

The judgment of dissolution of marriage shall expressly set forth verbatim all of the provisions of this Agreement that the parties intend shall merge with and become an operative part of the judgment. These provisions are [set forth specific provisions by subject matter or Paragraph number that the parties intend to merge into the judgment and that will be set forth verbatim there]. A [properly authenticated copy or duplicate original] of the Agreement shall otherwise be attached to the dissolution judgment, and the judgment shall incorporate, for identification only, those portions of the agreement not stated above, which are not being merged. The parties agree that the court will be requested to approve all provisions of the Agreement, both merged and unmerged, as fair and equitable. The validity and effectiveness of this Agreement and each provision of this Agreement shall not be affected by the parties' failure to obtain a final judgment from the court.

§ 120.212 Waiver of Rights on Death

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, is a marital settlement agreement clause providing for the waiver by each party of specified rights on the death of the other. The rights waived include all rights to inherit in the estate of the other party, whether by testamentary disposition or intestacy, to claim a family allowance or probate homestead, or to act as personal representative of the estate of the other. The waiver expressly excludes any rights given by a will or codicil dated after the effective date of the agreement, in case either party decides later that the other party should have a right in the estate. Counsel and the client should confirm that the client's estate plan is consistent with the intentions expressed in this form.

[b] Effect of Dissolution on Prior Will

A judgment of dissolution will revoke all of the following unless the will expressly provides otherwise [Prob. Code § 6122(a); see Fam. Code § 2024]:

1. Any disposition of property made by the will to the former spouse;
2. Any provisions of the will conferring a general or special power of appointment on the former spouse; and
3. Any will provision nominating the former spouse as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian.

Nevertheless, it is advisable for the spouses to execute a waiver explicitly renouncing any interest either party may have in the other's estate [see Prob. Code §§ 141, 145].

[c] Effect of Waiver on Intestate Rights

This form waives intestate as well as testate rights. If a spouse dies intestate before the effective date of a judgment of dissolution, the surviving spouse will not be held to have waived or relinquished in a marital settlement agreement his or her right to succeed by inheritance to the property of the other spouse unless the intention to do so [see Estate of Smith (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 205, 210, 50 Cal. Rptr. 374] :

1. Is expressed in the agreement in clear and unmistakable language (this form); or
2. Appears from the provisions of the will by necessary implication.

A marital settlement agreement constitutes a waiver of the right of inheritance in the spouse's property by "necessary implication" if the agreement states that each party releases all claims against the other and that all property distributed to each party under the agreement will be the separate property of the recipient free from any claim or claims of the other party [Estate of Smith (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 205, 210-215, 50 Cal. Rptr. 374] . Nevertheless, use of an express provision is strongly recommended.

[2] FORMWaiver of Rights on Death*Waiver of Rights on Death

Each party waives all right to inherit in the estate of the other party on his or her death, whether by testamentary disposition or intestacy, except under the terms of a will executed after the effective date of this Agreement. Each party further waives the right to claim a family allowance or probate homestead, or to act as personal representative of the estate of the other unless nominated by another person legally entitled to the right.

§ 120.213 Release of All Claims

[1] Comment

Set forth in [2], below, is a general form of release of all claims between the parties. The form provides that the release extends to all claims except any that are otherwise stated in the agreement, or that arise out of the agreement, or a judgment based on the agreement. If counsel wishes to preserve the right of a party to make subsequent claims arising out of issues not addressed in the agreement, any exceptions to this general release provision should be explicitly set out in the appropriate paragraph of the agreement.

Language waiving the benefits of Civil Code Section 1542 may also be included. This section provides: "A general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his or her favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him or her must have materially affected his or her settlement with the debtor."

Some practitioners feel that language releasing future claims should never be included in a marital settlement agreement because of the possibility of the need for future enforcement proceedings. To protect against any such construction, the release should clearly except future proceedings based on rights created by the agreement.

[2] FORM

Release of All Claims

Release of All Claims

Except for the obligations contained in or expressly arising out of this Agreement, each party releases the other from all interspousal obligations, and all claims to the property of the other. This release extends to all claims based on rights that have accrued before or during marriage, including, but not limited to, property and support claims and claims sounding in tort. [Add if desired: This release extends to all claims, whether known or unknown, that either party may have against the other. Each party waives, with respect to the other, the benefits of Civil Code Section 1542, which protects against the inadvertent waiver of material claims that one does not know or suspect to exist. Civil Code Section 1542 provides: "A general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his or her favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him or her must have materially affected his or her settlement with the debtor."]

§ 120.214 Indemnity and Hold Harmless From Liabilities

[1] Comment

Set forth in [2], below, is a provision stating that each party agrees to hold the other harmless from liabilities and obligations that have been, or will be, incurred, except as otherwise specified in the agreement. The right of indemnification extends to attorney fees, costs, and other expenses incurred in defending against a claim on a debt incurred by the other, regardless of whether the claim is successful. The attorney must carefully examine the operation of this form with regard to the division of the community obligations of the parties. It may be necessary to modify this form to make it clearly consistent with the other parts of the agreement. For forms related to the division of the debts and obligations of the parties, see Ch. 121, Provisions for Division of Property.

[2] FORM

Indemnity and Hold and Harmless

Except for the obligations contained in or expressly arising out of this Agreement, each party warrants to the other that he or she has not incurred, and shall not incur, any liability or obligation for which the other party is, or may be, liable. Except as may be expressly provided in this Agreement, if any claim, action, or proceeding, whether or not well founded, shall later be brought seeking to hold one party liable on account of any alleged debt, liability, act, or omission of the other, the warranting party shall, at his or her sole expense, defend the other against the claim, action, or proceeding. The warranting party shall also indemnify the other and hold him or her harmless against any loss or liability that he or she may incur as a result of the claim, action, or proceeding, including attorney fees, costs, and expenses incurred in defending or responding to any such action.

§ 120.215 Satisfaction of Temporary Orders

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is a provision that clarifies that all pendente lite orders between the parties in any pending proceeding have been satisfied, subject to any necessary confirmation to this effect by the court. Because the parties cannot by their agreement actually abrogate a preexisting court order, they will need to seek court approval of any changes desired in pendente lite orders. These types of changes would ordinarily be embodied in provisions of the marital settlement agreement regarding which the parties will seek court approval and merger in the judgment, such as provisions governing child custody, child support, and spousal support.

§ 120.216 Representation by Independent Counsel

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

Set forth in [2], below, is a provision stating that both parties have been represented by independent counsel and identifies the attorneys of record. If one party is unrepresented, the agreement clarifies that counsel is not in any way acting for the unrepresented party. It also specifies who the drafter of the agreement is. For a form provision dealing with a party's refusal to secure independent counsel, see § 120.217. For related provisions acknowledging that an agreement was jointly drafted and is understood by the parties, see §§ 120.218 and 120.219.

[b] Independent Counsel Does Not Relieve Spouses' Fiduciary Duty

Courts have held that spouses owe a fiduciary duty to one another that survives their separation or commencement of dissolution proceedings [Marriage of Modnick (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 897, 906, 191 Cal. Rptr. 629, 663 P.2d 187] . This duty is also codified [see Fam. Code §§ 721, 1101(e), 2102]. Retaining independent counsel does not relieve either spouse from meeting his or her obligation to deal in good faith and not exercise any advantage through concealment, adverse pressure, or undue influence. For a more detailed discussion of fiduciary duties between separated spouses, see § 120.12 [see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., ch. 24, Management and Control of Property (Matthew Bender)].

§ 120.217 Acknowledgment of Party's Refusal to Obtain Independent Counsel

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

Set forth in [2], below, is a provision specifying that only one party was represented by counsel in the negotiation and preparation of the agreement, and the agreement was drafted by that attorney.

[b] Attorney's Duty in Dealing With Party Not Represented by Counsel

When the attorney for one party in family law negotiations is forced to deal directly with the other party because he or she refuses to secure counsel, the attorney is under a most strict duty to deal with the unrepresented party fairly and objectively, and should afford that party with an opportunity to obtain his or her own counsel. A court will scrutinize the agreement carefully to make sure that there has been no overreaching [Gregory v. Gregory (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 343, 349, 206 P.2d 1122], and will set aside any agreement obtained by keeping one party in ignorance or in some other manner preventing him or her from fully participating in the proceeding [see Fam. Code § 2120 et seq.; In re Marriage of Stevenot (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 1068, 202 Cal. Rptr. 116] .

§ 120.218 Nonapplicability of Rule of Construction Against Drafting Party

[1] Comment

Set forth in [2], below, is a provision stating that the agreement was the product of a joint effort by both parties and that, in the event of any ambiguity, it should not be strictly interpreted against either party. The general rule is that any ambiguities caused by the attorney drafting a contract should be resolved against that attorney's client [Neal v. State Farm Ins. Co. (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 690, 695, 10 Cal. Rptr. 781 ; Civ. Code § 1654]. Applying this general rule to the typical marital settlement agreement could at times be unfair, because marital settlement agreements involving parties who are both represented by counsel in dissolution proceedings are typically drafted, reviewed, and approved jointly.

[If agreement prepared jointly, use the following provision:]

This Agreement was prepared and revised by the joint efforts of the respective attorneys for each of the parties. The rule of construction that ambiguities are to be construed in favor of the nondrafting party shall not be employed in the construction of this Agreement.

[OR, if agreement prepared primarily by one party's attorney, use the following provision:]

This Agreement was prepared primarily by the attorney for [Husband or Wife], but with substantial revisions by the respective attorneys for each of the parties. [1] Comment

Set forth in [2], below, is a provision that the parties are fully and completely informed regarding the substance of the agreement, have entered into the agreement voluntarily, without any coercion, undue influence, duress, or threat from any person; have carefully read each provision; fully understand each provision; and acknowledge that the agreement is fair and equitable to both parties. Of course, if a party is under coercion, undue influence, duress, or threat, stating that there is none does not make it so, and the provision is not likely to have any effect if the facts are to the contrary.

§ 120.220 Effect of Reconciliation

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

Set forth in [2], below, is a form designed to eliminate the problem of determining the effect of a reconciliation of the parties on the agreement, by specifying that a reconciliation will or will not result in the modification or abrogation of the agreement. For a revocation of the entire marital settlement agreement, see § 120.202.

[b] Effect of Reconciliation of the Parties

Reconciliation alone will not provide a court sufficient factual evidence to determine the future effect of the parties' original agreement. The mutual intent and understanding of the parties, as understood by the court, determines the future effect of the agreement. The clearest way for the parties to manifest their intent is by an express provision in the agreement itself.

In drafting a provision that concerns the parties' possible reconciliation, counsel should also determine what effect a reconciliation may have, if any, on court orders that will exist with respect to the parties. For a related discussion, see § 120.202.

[2] FORM

§ 120.221 Execution of Instruments and Further Assurances

[1] Comment

Set forth in [2] below is a form expressly providing that the parties will execute whatever documents and do whatever acts are necessary to carry out the terms of the agreement. There appears to be an implied provision in contracts to this effect [see Civ. Code § 1656], but such a provision is generally included to avoid any later claim of misunderstanding concerning the duties arising from executing the agreement.

[2] FORM

Execution of Instruments and Further Assurances

Execution of Instruments and Further Assurances

Husband and Wife shall each execute and deliver promptly on request to the other any and all additional papers, documents, and other assurances, and shall do any and all acts and things reasonably necessary or proper to carry out their obligations under this Agreement. If either party fails or refuses to comply with the requirements of this paragraph in a timely manner, that party shall reimburse the other party for all expenses, including attorney fees and costs, incurred as a result of that failure, and shall indemnify the other for any loss or liability incurred as a result of the breach. Further, in case of a breach of the duties imposed by this Paragraph, the court may, on ex parte application, order the county clerk to execute any document or other paper on behalf of the breaching party.

§ 120.222 Parties Bound

[1] Comment

Set forth in [2], below, is a form providing that it will be binding on, and inure to the benefit of, the successors and assigns of the parties. This type of provision is commonly used in marital settlement agreements that contain executory property division. The purpose of a successors-and-assigns provision is to ensure the performance of all executory obligations by any successor in interest or assignee of either of the parties. This provision will settle any question of intention of the parties regarding the assumption of obligations by an assignee or successor in interest [see Brady v. Fowler (1920) 45 Cal. App. 592, 595, 188 P. 320] . A successors-and-assigns provision automatically binds any successors and assigns in the event of an assignment or succession, even in the absence of an express assumption of obligations [Citizens Suburban Co. v. Rosemont Dev. Co. (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 666, 675, 53 Cal. Rptr. 551] .

This general provision should not be relied on to determine the effect of the death of either party on the child and spousal support obligations contained in the agreement. The effect of the death of each party on support should be addressed in the child and spousal support provisions of the agreement. Appropriate options are contained in Chapter 123.

[1] Comment

Set forth in [2], below, is a form providing that a waiver of a breach of the marital settlement agreement is not a waiver of any subsequent breaches. This type of provision is helpful if one party unintentionally or inadvertently overlooks a breach of a particular provision, and the parties desire that the breached provision, and any others that may be breached in the future, remain in effect regardless of whether any remedial action is taken by the nonbreaching party.

For a discussion of this type of provision generally, see Chapter 75, Formation of Contracts and Standard Contractual Provisions.

[1] Comment

Set forth in [2], below, is a form that specifies that a judicial determination that a provision is invalid or unenforceable does not affect the remainder of the agreement. It is a standard clause commonly used in contracts to protect the totality of the bargain against the possibility that one or more provisions will be found to be unenforceable. § 120.225 Modification and Revocation

[1] Comment

Marital settlement agreements often contain a provision, such as that set forth in [2], below, that states that amendments or modification to the agreement may be made only by written agreement. The use of this form tends to prevent misunderstandings arising out of alleged oral commitments made after the execution of the agreement.

The application of this type of provision is limited. It effectively prevents executory oral modifications [Civ. Code § 1698(c)], but there may still remain an exception for a modification by an executed oral agreement [Civ. Code § 1698(b)]. Furthermore, provisions for child support and custody can be modified by the court regardless of any agreement to the contrary [Fam. Code §§ 3021, 3651; In re Marriage of Alter (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 718, 726-730, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 849 (court always has power to modify child support order, upward or downward, regardless of parents' agreement to contrary)]. Similarly, provisions for spousal support are modifiable or revocable by the court unless there is a written agreement, or oral stipulation in open court, to the contrary [Fam. Code § 3591(a), (c); but see In re Marriage of Cauley (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1100, 1105-1108, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 902 (under Fam. Code § 4325(a), parties' agreement for nonmodifiable support will not prevent court from terminating support if payee spouse is convicted of domestic violence offense perpetrated against payor spouse)]. For further discussion of modification of custody and support obligations, see Ch. 124, Provisions for Child Custody and Visitation and Ch. 123, Spousal and Child Support Provisions.

[2] FORM

Modification and Revocation

Modification and Revocation

Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement, the terms of this Agreement may be modified or revoked only by a writing signed by Husband and Wife that expressly refers to this Agreement. [If there are children: The parties understand that this limitation is subject to the power of a court to modify any provisions or orders at any time concerning the custody, visitation, and support of their children.]

PART IV. FORMS
B. General Provisions

34-120 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 120.226

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.

§ 120.226 Governing Law

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, is a marital settlement agreement provision specifying that it will be governed and construed in accordance with California law. Under California's choice-of-law rules, a contract is to be interpreted according to the law and usage of the place where it is to be performed, but if the contract does not indicate a place of performance, it is to be interpreted according to the law and usage of the place where it is made [Civ. Code § 1646]. The value of this provision is that it expressly informs all concerned that the agreement will be controlled by California law.

If one party is living outside the state at the time of execution and the agreement is to be signed by that party while outside the state, it is most important that the agreement include this provision if it is desired that the agreement be governed by California law.

The governing law provision should address the effect of future changes in California law. For example, a provision that requires support of "minor" children will be altered if there is a change in the age of majority. The better practice is probably to incorporate future changes in California law into the governing law clause, but if a party has bargained for a particular right, then it might be appropriate to insulate that right from any possible future change in the law.

[2] FORM

Governing Law

Governing Law

This Agreement has been drafted, and shall be executed, entirely within the State of California and shall be governed by and interpreted and enforced under the law of the State of California as that law _____[may from time to time be amended or stands on the effective date of this Agreement. Interpretation shall not be affected by any changes in that law after that date]. [Add if there are children: The parties understand, however, that child custody and child support orders are subject to state and federal laws that determine and limit state court jurisdiction to make and modify these orders, and do not, by this provision, intend to affect the application of those laws.]

§ 120.227 Entirety of Agreement

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, is a provision stating that it contains the entire agreement of the parties, superseding all previous contracts and understandings. This is a standard contract clause that is designed to eliminate attacks on the agreement based on the existence of other and further matters that were agreed to by the parties, but not reduced to writing and included in the agreement. The intent is to eliminate parole evidence of other matters not contained in the four corners of the document.

[2] FORM

Entirety of Agreement

[For short form of recital, use:]

Entire Agreement

This Agreement constitutes the entire agreement of Husband and Wife concerning the settlement of their respective rights and obligations arising out of their marriage. It is a full and final settlement of all those rights and obligations, including spousal support, property rights, liabilities, and other interspousal claims of any nature whatsoever that either party may have against the other. This Agreement supersedes any and all other agreements, oral or written, entered into between the parties before the effective date of this Agreement concerning their respective rights and obligations arising out of their marriage. There are no enforceable representations or warranties other than those set forth in this Agreement.

This chapter discusses provisions intended to be included in marital settlement agreements to divide community and quasi-community assets and debts, and to confirm the parties' respective separate property interests. Legal Background focuses on the tax aspects of property division. The Transaction Guide contains a general drafting guide that provides an overview of available provisions. Forms include provisions for the division of the parties' property, as well as related provisions and agreements, such as an agreement between a closely held corporation and a spouse for the purchase by the corporation of the spouse's stock. The forms are intended to be used in conjunction with the complete forms of marital settlement agreement set forth in Ch. 120, as explained in the form comments.

In In re Marriage Cases, the California Supreme Court held that differential treatment of opposite-sex and same-sex couples in California's marriage statutes violated the California Constitution's guarantees of privacy, due process, and equal protection [In re Marriage Cases (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 757, 784, 847-856, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 183 P.3d 384] . That holding was superseded by the subsequent adoption of Proposition 8, which amended the California Constitution to provide that only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California [see Cal. Const. art. I, § 7.5 (eff. Nov. 5, 2008)]. The Supreme Court upheld Proposition 8 against a constitutional challenge, but in doing so the Court reaffirmed the continuing validity of same-sex marriages entered into before November 5, 2008, the effective date of Proposition 8 [Strauss v. Horton (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 364, 470-474, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591, 207 P.3d 48 (estimating 18,000 same-sex marriages lawfully entered into before Proposition 8 took effect)]. If a form in this chapter is used in the context of a same-sex marriage lawfully entered into before that date, the language in the form should be modified accordingly. For example, the names of the parties may be used instead of terms like "Husband" and "Wife."

The chapter covers the division of real and personal property other than of employee benefits; division of those benefits is the subject of Ch. 122. For forms relating to child and spousal support, see Ch. 123. Forms pertaining to child custody and visitation are set forth in Ch. 124, and forms concerning attorney's fees, costs, and payment of income tax are set forth in Ch. 125.

For a general discussion of characterizing and dividing property, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles (Matthew Bender). That publication also discusses the division of particular assets in Ch. 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues.

 PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
 A. Division of Property

34-121 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 121.10

§ 121.10 Desirability of Agreed Division of Property

[1] Advantages

There is a definite advantage in having the parties agree between themselves on the division of their property by means of a marital settlement agreement rather than leaving the division of the property to the court in connection with a proceeding for marital dissolution or legal separation. If the division of the property is made by the court, the court will be bound by the "equal division" requirement set forth by statute [Fam. Code § 2550], and in attempting to arrive at an equal division the court may not divide the property in the manner that the parties would have selected if they were making the division. Furthermore, the parties will generally have greater flexibility in determining the means of arriving at a division method, than if a court were to divide the property [see, e.g., In re Marriage of Cream (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 81, 88, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575 (court lacks authority to order interspousal auction of property, over party's objection)]. Division of property by the court is discussed in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles, and Ch. 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues (Matthew Bender).

If the parties and their respective attorneys can negotiate a division of the property, the parties will generally save the additional time and attorneys' fees that would be involved if the division of the property had to be tried. When extensive property is involved, the parties will then be able to arrange for the continuation of their business and financial affairs with a minimum amount of disruption. Also, they will be better able to avoid unwanted publicity concerning their personal financial affairs than would be possible in connection with a court-ordered division of the property.

[2] Equal or Unequal Division

Because, in most cases, either party could obtain an equal division from the court, the parties often will simply choose to divide the property equally to avoid the need for further litigation [Fam. Code § 2550].

However, Fam. Code § 2550 expressly excepts written agreements of the parties, as well as oral stipulations made in open court, from the requirement that the court in an action for dissolution or legal separation must divide the parties' community estate equally. Section 2550 therefore authorizes the parties to enter into any division of property that they desire, including one that is unequal, so long as they memorialize that agreement in writing or in an oral stipulation made in open court [Fam. Code § 2550; In re Marriage of Dellaria (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 196, 201-205, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 802 (trial court erred in enforcing parties' oral property settlement agreement that was neither reduced to writing nor made in open court)]. The validity of any such division does not depend on the degree of inequality involved in the division, but only on whether such an agreement is free of invalidating defects such as fraud, undue influence, or similar equitable grounds for setting aside the agreement.

For a general discussion of the statutory equal division requirement [see Fam. Code § 2550] and of exceptions to that requirement, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles (Matthew Bender).

PRACTICE TIP:

It should be a standard consideration to recite in any marital settlement agreement that the parties each have freely and voluntarily entered into the agreement, knowingly and with full understanding and acceptance of all of its terms and provisions [see § 120.219[2], for a related form]. An explicit detailing of the various quid-pro-quos on which the agreement is based will also be helpful in resisting any subsequent challenge to the fairness of enforceability of the instrument. Thus, although the law does provide that an agreement for division between the parties need not necessarily be as rigidly "equal" as a division decreed by the court, the agreement should still profess that it was designed and intended to be equal or substantially equal, and actually be so in provable fact [see §§ 120.200[2] (cl. [3(d)]), 121.220[2], for forms with related provisions]. Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

PRACTICE TIP: Conversely, if the parties have made an agreement that obviously is unequal, or that arguably is so, they should not use a recital in the MSA stating that the division is equal. The MSA should set forth the quid-pro-quos, one of which might be that in consideration of other provisions in the agreement, one party has agreed to accept less than half of the community property. Such provisions will help establish "knowing consent" and protect the agreement against future challenge. Commentary by Diana Richmond.

The Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act (UFTA) [Civ. Code §§ 3439-3439.12] applies to marital settlement agreements. Thus, for example, if a marital settlement agreement provides for an unequal division of real property for the purpose of preventing a third person from collecting child support for one spouse's child conceived outside the marriage, the UFTA authorizes a court to impose a lien on the real property [Mejia v. Reed (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 657, 663-669, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 390, 74 P.3d 166 (marital settlement agreement provided for transfer of all of husband's interest in jointly held property to wife); see Civ. Code §§ 3439.01, 3439.04(a), 3439.05]. Similarly, a fraudulent transfer made in a marital settlement agreement may result in the denial of a discharge in bankruptcy [11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(A) (bankruptcy discharge may be denied if debtor, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditor, transfers debtor's property within one year before filing of bankruptcy petition); see Wolkowitz v. Beverly (In re Beverly) (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2007), 374 B.R. 221, 242-246] .

[3] Tax Consequences

Most interspousal transfers of property on marital dissolution are now less burdened with tax consequences than under former law, because transfers incident to a dissolution are generally treated as "nonrecognition events," with limited exception [see I.R.C. § 1041]. Thus, as a general rule, spouses can make agreements in which the division of the parties' community property is unequal, without adverse income tax consequences. Exceptions to the nonrecognition rules do exist, however, and should be carefully reviewed before making any agreement to settle the parties' property interests [see, e.g., I.R.C. § 1041(a)(2), (c)-(e)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Expert advice is always desirable, but perhaps in no other aspect of family law is expert consultation more necessary than in dealing with the tax consequences of property division and support. The suggested terms for any marital division should always be reviewed with at least one person relatively expert in tax laws and procedures. Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

[4] Nondischargeability in Bankruptcy of Debt Incurred in Connection With Property Division

Generally, a debt owed to a spouse, former spouse, or child of a bankruptcy debtor will not be dischargeable in the bankruptcy proceeding if it was incurred in the course of a divorce or separation or in connection with a separation agreement, divorce decree or other order of a court of record, or determination made in accordance with state or territorial law by a governmental unit [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(15)]. This nondischargeability provision applies even if the debt is not in the nature of alimony or spousal or child support [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(15) (nondischargeability applies to debts to former spouse incurred in course of divorce or separation that do not constitute domestic support obligations under 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14A), 523(a)(5))]. Therefore, if a marital settlement agreement requires one spouse to make payments to the other spouse as part of the parties' division of property, the obligation to make those payments may not be discharged in a bankruptcy proceeding.

Moreover, even if an obligation under an agreement for settlement of property to a spouse is discharged in bankruptcy, the court in a dissolution proceeding may make all proper orders for the support of the spouse, as the court determines are just, based on the circumstances of the parties and the amount of the obligations under the agreement that are discharged [Fam. Code § 3592].

§ 121.11 Determination of Assets and Debts

[1] Sources of Information

[a] Information From Client

In order to draft provisions for the division or confirmation of the parties' property interests, counsel will, of course, need to have complete information on the nature and extent of those interests. Primary sources of this information include the client, the client's spouse or counsel, and third-party holders of property belonging to the parties. A detailed client interview checklist is set forth in Ch. 120, Complete Marital Settlement Agreements. Pretrial discovery from the client's spouse and third parties is discussed in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 110, Trial Preparation and Discovery (Matthew Bender).

[b] Disclosure Between Parties

The parties are subject to special disclosure provisions imposed by statute. In general, spouses in family law litigation are required to make a full and accurate disclosure to one another of all assets and liabilities in which one or both parties have or may have an interest, regardless of the characterization as community, separate, or otherwise, together with a disclosure of all income and expenses. Each party has a continuing duty to immediately, fully, and accurately update and augment that disclosure to the extent there have been any material changes so that at the time the parties enter into an agreement for the resolution of these issues each party will have full and complete knowledge of the relevant underlying facts [Fam. Code § 2100(c); see Fam. Code § 2102 (standards imposed on spouses from date of separation until date of distribution of asset or liability in question)].

Under the disclosure rules, spouses must generally exchange "preliminary" and "final" declarations of disclosure, and income and expense declarations during the course of the family law proceeding [Fam. Code §§ 2104, 2105]. For further discussion of spousal duties and disclosure requirements, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chs. 24, Management and Control of Property, 92, Petitioning for Dissolution or Legal Separation , and 111, Pretrial Procedures (Matthew Bender).

[2] Effect of Omitted Property

If the parties fail to dispose of all their community or quasi-community assets or debts in their agreement, and the property is not otherwise divided by the court in a proceeding for marital dissolution or legal separation, it will remain subject to later division by a motion or order to show cause, or by an independent partition action [see Fam. Code § 2556; Henn v. Henn (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 323, 330, 161 Cal. Rptr. 502, 605 P.2d 10] . In general, until an adjudicated asset is divided in a later proceeding, the court will consider the parties' interests in the asset, as between themselves, as that of tenants in common [see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles (Matthew Bender)].

In a postdissolution order to show cause or motion proceeding, a family law court must equally divide the omitted or unadjudicated asset or debt, unless the court finds on good cause shown that the interests of justice require an unequal division [Fam. Code § 2556]. In an equitable action to partition unadjudicated community property, the court has broad discretion to fashion any appropriate equitable remedy [see Zarrah v. Zarrah (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4-6, 252 Cal. Rptr. 20] .

However, the availability of a postdissolution remedy to divide omitted property does not mean that parties can deliberately fail to disclose the existence of property to one another. To the contrary, such a failure to disclose would not only violate the special disclosure provisions noted in [1], above [see Fam. Code § 2100 et seq.], but also constitute grounds for setting aside any agreement based on the nondisclosure [see Fam. Code § 2120 et seq.]. Thus, it remains imperative for the parties to make a complete disclosure. For a general discussion of dividing omitted property, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles (Matthew Bender). For a discussion of special limitations on dividing certain omitted military retirement benefits, see Chapter 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues , of that publication.

§ 121.30 Transfers of Property Between Spouses or Incident to Divorce

[1] No Recognition of Gain or Loss on Transfer

[a] Current Law

Generally no gain or loss is recognized on a transfer of property from an individual to (or in trust for the benefit of) a spouse. Transfers to (or for the benefit of) a former spouse also generally qualify for nonrecognition if the transfers are made incident to divorce [I.R.C. § 1041(a); Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(a), Q&A 2; but see [4], [5], below, for discussion of exceptions to the general rule for transfers in trust and transfers to nonresident alien spouses; Ch. 122, Provisions for Division of Employee Benefits (§ 122.12) for special rules for nontaxability of distributions made under employee benefit plan; but cf. Tahamtan v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1995-226, (when spouse transferred community business assets to other spouse under duress, court ignored Section 1041 and allowed the business a loss deduction for theft by conversion)]. Property transferred to a former spouse need not have been owned by the transferor during marriage [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(a), Q&A 5].

PRACTICE TIP:

Date of Transfer Crucial. I.R.C. § 1041 was enacted as part of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, and generally allows nonrecognition to an interspousal transfer incident to divorce only if the transfer occurred after July 18, 1984. The Tax Court in one case required a wife to recognize gain on the transfer of her one-half community interest in various partnerships to her former husband, although incident to divorce, because the transfer occurred prior to enactment of Section 1041 [see Harrington v. Commissioner (1994) T.C. Memo. 1994-258 (this result followed although divorce was finalized after statute's enactment date, because date of transfer, not of divorce, determines application of the statute)]. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

PRACTICE TIP:

Expert advice is always desirable, but perhaps in no other aspect of family law is expert consultation more necessary than in dealing with the tax consequences of property division and support. The suggested terms for any marital division should always be reviewed with at least one person relatively expert in tax laws and procedures. Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

Gain is not recognized even if the transferred property is subject to liabilities in excess of basis, provided the transfer is not in trust [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(d), Q&A 12; see I.R.S. Letter Rul. 9615026; I.R.C. § 1041(e) (excepting certain transfers in trust from nonrecognition treatment, discussed in [4], below)]. Similarly, the transferor recaptures no investment credit on the transfer, if the credit was taken before 1986 or pursuant to a transitional rule effective for a subsequent year. If the transferred property is disposed of by the transferee, or otherwise ceases to be investment credit property with respect to the transferee, however, the transferee is subject to recapture of the investment credit taken by the transferor [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(d), Q&A 13; see former I.R.C. § 47; see also former I.R.C. § 49]. The transfer of an installment obligation does not trigger recognition of gain [see I.R.C. § 453B] unless the transfer is in trust [H.R. Rep. No. 432, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 1491-1493 (1984); see [4], below]. Furthermore, because of the carryover basis rule, no possibility exists that the proceeds of a life insurance policy transferred between spouses will be subject to income tax [I.R.C. § 101(a)(2)(A)].

In contrast to the transfer of "property" incident to divorce, one spouse's assignment of personal service income to the other, although incident to divorce, will generally be taxable to the spouse who earned the income [see Kochansky v. Commissioner (1994) T.C. Memo 1994-160 (citing Lucas v. Earl (1930) 281 U.S. 111, 50 S. Ct. 241, 74 L. Ed. 731 for proposition that "income is taxed to those who earn it"); affm'd. Kochansky (Richard W.) v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1996) 92 F. 3d 957]. The Tax Court has held that an attorney husband, required by a dissolution judgment to pay his wife part of a contingent fee to be earned from a personal injury case, owed income tax on the whole fee earned. The husband was taxable on the entire fee earned because he had transferred personal service income and not income-producing property to his former spouse [see Kochansky v. Commissioner (1994) T.C. Memo 1994-160].

However, if, in the situation posed above, the husband had transferred an income-producing asset to his wife, then she alone would have been taxed on the income stream from the asset [see Kochansky v. Commissioner (1994) T.C. Memo 1994-160 (dicta)]. Note that transfer of the income-producing asset itself per divorce should be accorded nonrecognition under I.R.C. § 1041.

The Tax Court has also distinguished between payments made between spouses in order to settle their rights to a community asset, and payments received by the spouses directly from a third party entity--such as a pension plan--as a result of the division of their community property. Thus, in a 1992 decision, the Tax Court held that three payments made by a military retiree to his former spouse in settlement of her community interest in the retiree's military retirement benefits were not taxable to her, but did not rule on the taxability of the retirement income if it had been paid to her directly by the government [Balding v. Commissioner (1992) 98 T.C. 368 ; see I.R.C. § 1041]. However, in a 1996 decision, the Tax Court held that a former spouse was taxable on retirement benefits she received directly from the federal government that were her community property share of her former husband's benefits [Graham (Angela M.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1996-512].

PRACTICE TIP:

Counsel would do well to deal with the issue of who pays the taxes when the buy-out negotiations occur. The spouses should provide in their marital settlement agreement or judgment for allocation of tax liability. One of the things to consider is that the assignment of income doctrine generally will not apply. The general rule is that no tax recognition arises to either spouse on a division in kind incident to divorce of the community's economic interest in a commonly held business or asset [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(d), Q&A 10, 11]. Under existing case authority, it appears equally clear that after a court makes its division in kind of the community's economic interest in a partnership or similar business, each spouse will thereafter be taxed on his or her proportional share of the income stream arising from that division in kind. It will not matter that the interest may continue to be held in the name of one spouse and administered by him or her solely [Kenfield v. United States (10th Cir. 1986) 783 F.2d 966 ; Schulze v. Commissioner (1983) T.C. Memo. 1983-263 ; see Friscone v. Commissioner (1996) 71 T.C.M. 2837] .

[b] Pre-1984 Law Contrasted

Before the 1984 enactment of the rule governing transfers of property between spouses or incident to divorce contained in I.R.C. § 1041 [see [a], above], although equal divisions of the community estate were not subject to tax, unequal divisions were taxable events [Carrieres v. Commissioner (1975) 64 T.C. 959 , aff'd, (9th Cir. 1977) 552 F.2d 1350] . An unequal division of community property or co-owned property was treated as a nontaxable equal division followed by a taxable transfer of a portion of the property between the spouses. Each spouse carried over the community basis in the property except that the spouse receiving the taxable portion took a cost basis in that portion [Rev. Rul. 74-347, 1974-2 C.B. 26 ; see Rev. Rul. 81-292, 1981-2 C.B. 158 ; Siewert v. Commissioner (1979) 72 T.C. 326, 332 ; Davis v. Commissioner (1987) 88 T.C. 1460 (applying both Carrieres and Siewert to hold that former wife's award of money judgment on divorce, representing portion of debt reimbursable to community by her former husband, was nontaxable--that is, equal--community property division); United States v. Davis (1962) 370 U.S. 65, 82 S. Ct. 1190, 8 L. Ed. 2d 335 , reh'g denied, 371 U.S. 854, 83 S. Ct. 14 (transfer of inchoate rights for property taxable transaction)].

The pre-1984 rules remain important for transfers pursuant to marital settlement agreements executed before 1984 if no transition elections were made, and also for transfers to nonresident alien spouses, and transfers between unmarried cohabitants.

[2] Nonrecognition Applies to Appreciated Gain but Not Income

The IRS has taken the position that nonrecognition of gain applies only to market appreciation and not to ordinary income items. In a published ruling, a spouse transferred United States savings bonds with accrued interest to the other spouse incident to divorce. The IRS ruled that the transferor spouse must report the accrued interest as taxable income because it was not "gain" within the meaning of Internal Revenue Code Section 1041. The transferee spouse was allowed a basis adjustment reflecting the accrued interest taxed to the transferor [Rev. Rul. 87-112, 1987-2 C.B. 207]. In a subsequent private ruling, a spouse purchased the other spouse's interest in a military pension. The IRS ruled that the spouse receiving the cash payment recognized taxable income because the value of her right to receive a portion of the pension could not be treated as "gain" [Letter Rul. 8813023 (Dec. 27, 1987)].

[3] Unequal Division of Property to Adjust for Tax Consequence

Property settlements may be adjusted to account for tax factors without risking loss of nonrecognition treatment for the settlement [I.R.C. § 1041; see [1][b], above, regarding treatment under prior law]. Although such an adjustment may result in an unequal division in terms of fair market value, the settlement is still nontaxable, and the division may be equal after tax consequences are considered. Unequal community property divisions may be equalized by a transfer of separate property to adjust for the shifting of tax liabilities and benefits--again without the recognition of gain or loss.

In addition, apart from the nonrecognition provisions, it appears that if a property settlement is considered as an unequal division because it involves a transfer of property in return for a promissory note bearing below-market interest, the transaction will not be subject to the imputed interest rules or below-market interest rules [see Letter Rul. 8645082 (Nov. 7, 1986) (spouses proposed note of this type, purportedly to effect equal division of community property); see also I.R.C. §§ 483, 1271-1274, 7872 (unstated interest; classification as original issue discount; loans with below-market interest rates)]. However, the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 amended the provisions of I.R.C. § 1271 that exempted debt obligations issued by natural persons from the rule that treats gain or loss realized on retirement of the debt as gain or loss realized on an exchange. Accordingly, with respect to obligations issued by a natural person after June 9, 1997, gain or loss on the retirement of this type of debt is capital gain or loss if the debt is a capital asset [see

I.R.C. § 1271 (b)(1)(A). Until guidance is given by regulations or case law, it appears that while no gain is recognized on a transfer of property to a spouse incident to divorce, gain may nonetheless be recognized on retirement of debt obligations related to such a transfer [compare I.R.C. § 1041 with I.R.C. § 1271(b)(1)(A) (amended by Pub. L. No. 105-34, § 1003(c)(2)]. For further discussion of the use of promissory notes in connection with property transfers, see Chapter 25A.

[4] Transfers Deemed Incident to Divorce

A transfer is deemed to be incident to divorce if it occurs within one year after the date the marriage ceases or if it is related to the cessation of marriage [I.R.C. § 1041(c)]. Thus, if a transfer occurs more than one year after divorce, it must be related to the cessation of marriage, in order to qualify for nonrecognition treatment. A transfer is considered as related to the cessation of marriage if the transfer is pursuant to a divorce or separation instrument and the transfer occurs no more than six years after the date of divorce [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(b), Q&A 7; see I.R.S. Letter Rul. 9306015 (party's transfer of interest in former marital residence was unrelated to termination of marriage, occurring more than eight years after final decree and not addressed in divorce judgment)].

Decrees of divorce or separate maintenance, written agreements incident to decrees of divorce or separate maintenance, and written separation agreements all qualify as divorce or separation instruments, as do modifications and amendments [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(b), Q&A 7; see I.R.C. § 71(b)(2); cf. Harris v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1991-375 (in noncommunity property state, husband as taxable on withdrawals from IRA even though they were used to pay former spouse's income taxes pursuant to divorce decree; decree as not otherwise satisfying alimony income-shifting rules, and husband as not required to transfer his interest in IRA to wife in lieu of portion of his obligation to pay her taxes)]. Transfers may be closely scrutinized to ascertain whether they bear a sufficient connection to the marital settlement to be deemed "incident to divorce" [see, e.g., Praegitzer (Dennis A.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1997-79 (large cash distribution made by closely held corporation as part of overall marital settlement was taxable as not made "incident to divorce" because the cash distribution was not necessary part of marital settlement)].

Any transfer occurring more than six years after divorce is presumed not to be related to the cessation of marriage. This presumption can be rebutted by showing that the transfer was made to effect a division of property owned by the spouses at the time of divorce. For example, the presumption may be rebutted by showing that (1) the transfer was not made within six years of divorce because of factors that hampered an earlier transfer, such as legal or business impediments to transfer or disputes about value, and (2) the transfer was effected promptly after the impediments were removed [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(b), Q&A 7; see Letter Rul. 9123053 (June 7, 1991) (60-installment transfer of community share of employment benefits effected division of marital property when spouses simply chose to extend transfers over period of more than six years after divorce)]. Annulments and cessations of marriages that are void ab initio because of violations of state law are considered as divorces [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(b), Q&A 8].

[5] Transfers to Third Parties on Behalf of Spouse

[a] Transfers Qualifying for Nonrecognition in General

Transfers of property to third parties on behalf of a spouse or former spouse may qualify for nonrecognition [I.R.C. § 1041(a); Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(c), Q&A 9]. In general, a transfer to a third party on behalf of a spouse or former spouse qualifies if the transfer to a third party is required by the divorce or separation agreement or is made pursuant to the written request of the spouse or former spouse. A transfer to a third party also qualifies, generally, if the transferor receives a written consent or ratification from the other spouse or former spouse. The consent or ratification must state that the parties intend the transfer to be treated as a transfer to the spouse or former spouse subject to Internal Revenue Code Section 1041 and must be received by the transferor before the date of filing the transferor's first tax return for the taxable year in which the transfer is made. In these circumstances, the transfer to the third party will be considered as made directly to the spouse or former spouse, who is then deemed to have transferred the property to the third party. Only the first of these two deemed transfers (that is, to the transferee spouse or former spouse) is subject to nonrecognition [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(c), Q&A 9].

[b] Treatment of Corporate Stock Redemptions on Behalf of Spouse

Generally, if a corporation redeems its stock from a spouse, the redemption is treated as a distribution in part or full payment in exchange for the stock, and the selling spouse will recognize a capital gain or loss [see I.R.C. § 302(a); cf. Yonadi v. C.I.R. (3rd Cir. 1994) 21 F.3d 1292, 1300-1302]. However, a version of the "transfer to a third party on behalf of a spouse" nonrecognition principle can arise if a corporation redeems a spouse's stock "on behalf of" the other spouse [see Arnes v. United States (9th Cir. 1992) 981 F.2d 456, 459-460]].

In the Arnes case, a married couple held all shares of a corporation in their joint names. The corporation was formed to operate a franchise that required 100-percent ownership of equity and profits by the owner-operator. When the couple agreed to divorce, joint ownership of the franchise was no longer possible, and their decree of dissolution therefore included an agreement to have the corporation redeem the wife's 50-percent interest in the outstanding stock. The redemption was treated as a transfer qualifying for nonrecognition treatment under I.R.C. § 1041, as a transfer on behalf of the husband, because it relieved him of his obligation to purchase his wife's stock. The redemption was viewed as a constructive transfer from the wife to the husband, who then transferred the stock to the corporation. The Court of Appeals upheld a district court ruling that the wife was entitled to a refund for income tax paid on capital gains from the redemption. She did not have to recognize income on the redemption [Arnes v. United States (9th Cir. 1992) 981 F.2d 456, 459-460]].

Based on the above facts involving these parties, the Internal Revenue Service (I.R.S.) proceeded in the Tax Court against the husband on the theory that the redemption was taxable to him as a constructive dividend. The Tax Court disagreed, ruling that no constructive dividend occurred because the husband was not primarily obligated to buy the shares. The court appeared to base its decision partly on a 1969 revenue ruling concerning two shareholders who agreed that the corporation would redeem the shares of either shareholder who died, and if the corporation did not, then the surviving shareholder would buy the decedent's shares [John A. Arnes v. Commissioner (1994) 102 T.C. 522, 527 (citing Rev. Rul. 69-608, 1969-2 C.B. 43, 44)]. The Tax Court concluded that the husband had received no constructive distribution on redemption of the wife's shares [John A. Arnes v. Commissioner (1994) 102 T.C. 522, 528-529].

Shortly before hearing the Arnes case, the Tax Court had, in a case involving different parties but similar facts, refused to follow the Ninth Circuit's (Arnes) holding that the spouse whose shares were redeemed recognized no gain on the redemption. The Tax Court held that redemption of the wife's shares, although incident to the divorce judgment, was not a "transfer on behalf of" the husband [Blatt v. Commissioner (1994) 102 T.C. 77, 83; Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(b), Q&A 9].

In another decision involving similar facts, the Tax Court had earlier considered the issue of a constructive dividend to the nonredeeming spouse on redemption of the other spouse's stock in the context of divorce. In that case, the spouses had entered into a separation agreement, later incorporated into a divorce judgment, under which the husband agreed to purchase the wife's shares in the parties' closely held franchise. However, it later became clear that the husband's cost of obtaining the buy-out funds would be greater than the cost to the wife of redeeming her shares. After executing a redemption agreement, the parties obtained a court order correcting the earlier divorce judgment to require redemption of the wife's shares. The Tax Court held that the redemption was a "constructive dividend" to the husband, who was obligated to purchase the wife's shares under the separation agreement and original divorce decree. The Tax Court refused to honor the nunc pro tunc order, which instead required the redemption of the wife's shares under the judgment, because in the court's view the order was violative of state law. However, the court noted that the result would have been the same even if the nunc pro tunc order were given effect, because the corporation in that case would have assumed the husband's obligation to purchase the wife's shares under the earlier separation agreement, and the assumption would have amounted to a constructive dividend to the husband [Mary Ruth Hayes v. Commissioner

The net effect of the two Arnes cases is that neither spouse was taxable on the stock redemption. The dissenting judges who heard the husband's case in the Tax Court expressed certainty that the majority opinion will be reversed on appeal to the Ninth Circuit [John A. Arnes v. Commissioner (1994) 102 T.C. 522, 543, 549] . This awaits further judicial action. The Ninth Circuit decision was based on the view that the corporate redemption of the wife's stock satisfied the husband's divorce-related obligation to her. The redemption was seen as an interspousal transfer incident to divorce, entitling her to I.R.C. § 1041 nonrecognition of gain on the redemption [see Arnes v. United States (9th Cir. 1992) 981 F.2d 456, 459- 460] . Accordingly, the Tax Court's strained and artificial reasoning that the redemption was not a "constructive dividend" to the former husband, because the corporation and not the husband had the primary obligation to redeem wife's stock, is not likely to fare well on appeal to the Ninth Circuit [see Arnes v. United States (9th Cir. 1992) 981 F.2d 456, 459- 460 ; cf. Friscone v. Commissioner (1996) 71 T.C.M. 2837 (in Ohio case, Tax Court allocated fraction of tax burden to each party in accordance with marital settlement agreement that clearly assigned a fractional share from the sale of corporate stock to each party)].

PRACTICE TIP:

The conflict of authority between the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals and the Tax Court places counsel in something of a dilemma in terms of both analysis and client advice. Although partly in conflict with the Ninth Circuit, the Tax Court decisions are at least fairly consistent when read together. In the Tax Court, there appear to be some basic patterns: (1) generally, the redemption of a spouse's shares are not a "transfer in behalf of" the other spouse; (2) the redeeming spouse most likely must pay the tax if the corporation has the "primary obligation" to purchase the shares; (3) however, the nonredeeming spouse will likely be taxed if that spouse has the "primary obligation" to purchase the other spouse's shares and the corporation is fulfilling the nonredeeming spouse's obligation [see John A. Arnes v. Commissioner (1994) 102 T.C. No. 20, 25 ; Blatt v. Commissioner (1994) 102 T.C. 77, 83 ; Mary Ruth Hayes v. Commissioner (1993) 101 T.C. 593] . When does a corporation, or a spouse, have the "primary obligation" to purchase the other spouse's shares? The answer in the Tax Court appears to be to look to the form of the agreement. By contrast, the Ninth Circuit apparently looks more to the substance of the transaction, and will more likely view redemptions in these situations "in behalf of" the other spouse even if in form the corporation has the "primary obligation" to purchase the shares [see generally Arnes v. United States (9th Cir. 1992) 981 F.2d 456, 459-460] . Although the issue is still open, the Ninth Circuit might possibly hold the nonredeeming spouse liable for tax based on receipt of a "constructive dividend" or perhaps some other theory having the same result. Accordingly, counsel for the redeeming spouse should remember that the Tax Court will likely require the client to pay the tax on the redemption, a likelihood increasing all the more the transaction appears in form to be between the redeeming spouse and the corporation. The redeeming spouse may prevail on appeal to the Ninth Circuit, based on the view that the redemption is entitled to nonrecognition of income as a transfer in behalf of the other spouse. Counsel for the nonredeeming spouse might advise the client that tax on the redemption as a "constructive dividend" may be avoided at the Tax Court level, if the transaction is structured so that the corporation, not the nonredeeming spouse, has the "primary obligation" to purchase the other spouse's shares. However, if the I.R.S. appeals to the Ninth Circuit, the nonredeeming spouse will probably be taxed on the redemption under a constructive dividend or similar theory. It is difficult to conceive of a situation crying out any more for the tax liability shifting of an indemnification agreement between the spouses. Although the I.R.S. is not bound by such an agreement because it is not a party to the agreement [Angelina G. Alioto (1994) T.C. Memo 1994-51] , the family law courts most likely will enforce the agreement. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff

[6] Transfers in Trust

The nonrecognition provisions do not apply to the transfer of property in trust to the extent that the sum of the amount of the liabilities assumed, plus the amount of the liabilities to which the property is subject, exceeds the transferor's adjusted basis in the property transferred. Proper adjustment must be made to the transferee's basis in the property to take into account gain recognized because of these trust exceptions [I.R.C. § 1041(e); see [8], below, for discussion of basis].

EXAMPLE:

H purchased an apartment building in 1970 for $50,000. In 1986, H obtained an $80,000 loan using the building as security. One year later, when the building had appreciated to $200,000, H and W dissolved their marriage. As part of their marital settlement agreement, H agreed to place the building in trust for W, with rent payments to be used to pay the mortgage and any remainder to be paid to W. Because the building's liabilities ($80,000) exceeded H's basis (the $50,000 purchase price), the excess liabilities ($30,000) must be recognized to H as gain [see I.R.C. 1041(e)].

The nonrecognition provisions for transfer of an installment obligation do not apply if the obligation is transferred in trust [I.R.C. § 453B(g)].

If the spouses choose to create an "alimony trust" by the transfer of property, the transaction may require consideration of both of these exceptions to the general nonrecognition rule, as well as provisions concerning taxation of income from the trust [see Ch. 123, § 123.37].

[7] Transfers to Nonresident Alien Spouse

Transfers to a spouse or former spouse who is a nonresident alien do not qualify for nonrecognition [I.R.C. § 1041(d)]. Note that originally, the rule did not encompass transfers to former spouses who are nonresident aliens at the time of a property transfer incident to a divorce [see I.R.C. § 1041(d), before amendment by Pub. L. No. 100-647, § 1018(1)(3)]. Transfers that do not qualify for nonrecognition treatment may result in the recognition of gain or loss, except to the extent precluded by the disallowance of losses on transactions between "related parties" [see generally I.R.C. § 267].

[8] Basis in Transferred Property

A transferor's basis in the property is carried over to the transferee [I.R.C. § 1041(b)]. Because the transfer is treated as a gift, the transferee recognizes no income from the receipt of the property [see I.R.C. § 102(a)]. The carryover of basis ensures that the transferee retains any unrecognized gain or loss in the property.

This carryover basis rule differs from the carryover basis rule generally applied to gifts, under which the donee's basis is the donor's basis or the fair market value of the property as of the date of the gift, whichever is less [I.R.C. § 1015(a)]. Thus, an unrecognized loss cannot be transferred to a donee by gift. If the transfer qualifies for nonrecognition of gain or loss, however, the transferee's basis in the property is the same as the transferor's basis. As a result, an unrecognized loss can be transferred to the transferee. In addition, the transferee assumes the transferor's holding period for the transferred property [I.R.C. § 1223(2)].

[9] All Transfers Covered--Step Transaction

Although Internal Revenue Code Section 1041 was enacted to eliminate the taxability of marital property settlements, its effect is much broader. All transfers of property between spouses generally are subject to Section 1041, without regard to divorce. Thus, if a husband sells property to his wife, the transaction is treated as a gift of the property to the wife and a gift of the purchase price to the husband, that is, neither spouse recognizes gain or loss. Furthermore, a transfer from a corporation owned by a spouse to the other spouse may be treated, in appropriate circumstances, as a transfer made directly by the owner spouse [see Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(a), Q&A 2 (applying general tax principles, including step-transaction doctrine, in recharacterizing transaction)].

[10] Obligation of Transferor to Supply Records

The transferor must supply, at the time of the transfer, records sufficient to determine the adjusted basis and holding period of the property as of the date of the transfer. If the property is subject to potential investment tax credit recapture, the transferor also must supply records sufficient to determine the amount and period of potential liability [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(e), Q&A 14].

§ 121.31 Gift Tax Consequences of Property Divisions

It has been long established that equal divisions of the community estate do not result in taxable gifts, either on the theory that no transfer occurs between the spouses or because the transfer is for full consideration [Commissioner v. Mills (9th Cir. 1950) 183 F.2d 32, 34 ; see I.R.C. §§ 2511, 2512(b) (transfers and valuation of gifts)]. Unequal divisions of the community estate that are equalized by a payment out of separate property also are deemed nontaxable because the exchange of excess community property for separate property is for full consideration from the point of view of both spouses [see I.R.C. § 2512(b) (property transferred for less than adequate and full consideration)].

Apart from the statutory exception discussed below, divisions of the community property in which there is no (or insufficient) consideration in the form of separate property or the relinquishment of spousal support rights appear to result in taxable gifts to the extent of the inequality [see I.R.C. §§ 2511, 2512(b)]. Even more clearly, uncompensated transfers of separate property at the time of divorce are taxable gifts. If the division or transfer is accomplished while the spouses are still married, the gift is exempted from tax by the unlimited marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2523(a)], although this deduction is no longer allowed if the donor's spouse is not a United States citizen, in which case other special gift tax rules apply.

If the division or transfer takes place after divorce, it is arguable that the transfer may be exempt under a statutory provision [see I.R.C. § 2516] or judicial rule [Harris v. Commissioner (1950) 340 U.S. 106, 71 S. Ct. 181, 95 L. Ed. 111] . The statutory provision exempts any transfers in settlement of marital or property rights, or to provide a reasonable allowance for support of minor children of the marriage, from gift tax if the transfers are made pursuant to a written agreement of the spouses and divorce occurs within the three-year period beginning one year before the agreement is entered. This rule applies regardless of whether the agreement is approved by the divorce decree [I.R.C. § 2516]. Because each spouse has a right to only half of the community estate, it is unclear whether the transfer of excess property actually is a transfer in settlement of property rights within the meaning of the statute. The statute originally was drafted to exempt transfers in settlement of inchoate marital property rights in common-law jurisdictions, in effect allowing equal divisions of the marital property in common-law states to receive the same gift tax-free treatment as equal divisions of community property [see I.R.C. § 2516].

PRACTICE TIP:

A possible alternative exemption theory may be found in the judicial rule that transfers are exempt if "founded" on the divorce decree rather than on an agreement of the spouses [see Harris v. Commissioner (1950) 340 U.S. 106, 71 S. Ct. 181, 95 L. Ed. 111] . The scope of this exemption is somewhat unclear, but it can apply only if the settlement is incorporated into the divorce decree. This rule, too, was fashioned in a case involving transfers in settlement of inchoate marital rights that were otherwise taxable under the law existing at that time, and the decision was motivated by the desire to exempt such transfers from gift tax. Strictly speaking, it should not apply to transfers that are not made in satisfaction of property rights. The court's confusing opinion in the case, however, arguably can be read broadly to exempt all transfers that are incorporated in the divorce decree. In addition, some practitioners take the (arguably) aggressive view that when a settlement agreement is incorporated into a dissolution decree, no gift occurs on transfers pursuant to the settlement agreement, even if there is not a final divorce decree within the three-year period beginning one year before or two years after the agreement is entered, as normally required for exemption from gift taxes under the Internal Revenue Code [see I.R.C. § 2516]. This view, if correct, will certainly provide relief in instances when the statutory time limits cannot be met due to protracted litigation. However, rather than relying completely on such an alternative exemption theory, the more conservative (and prudent) approach is to assure the exemption from gift tax by avoiding whenever possible any undue delay to getting a final decree, after execution of the marital settlement agreement, so that it is obtained within the time limits required under the Internal Revenue Code. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

§ 121.32 Estate Tax Consequences of Property Divisions

[1] Death Before Property Settlement or Divorce

If a spouse dies before a property settlement is effected or completed, estate taxes are avoided to the extent that the property to be transferred in the settlement is deductible from the decedent's gross estate [see I.R.C. § 2053(a)(3)]. On the other hand, with limited exception, the decedent's right to receive property from the other spouse is includible in the gross estate [I.R.C. § 2031; see I.R.C. § 2031(c) (providing special rules for "qualified conservation easements")]. If the spouses are still married at the time of death, and the community estate still exists, all of the decedent's separate property along with half of the community property is includible in the gross estate [I.R.C. § 2033].

If the property settlement then to be effected between the surviving spouse and the decedent spouse's estate involves an equal division of the community estate or an unequal division with an equalizing payment out of separate property, the value of the decedent's estate is not affected. This is because the deduction for the claims of the surviving spouse is offset by the inclusion of an equal amount of property to be received by the estate from the surviving spouse. If the property settlement would effect an unequal division of community property (without equalization out of separate property) in which the surviving spouse is to receive a greater share, or would effect an uncompensated transfer of separate property to the surviving spouse, the decedent's estate will be diminished below what it would have been had it included half of the community property and all of the decedent's separate property. This decrement is not deductible from the gross estate as a claim against the estate because it is not made for adequate consideration [see I.R.C. § 2053(c)(1)(A)]. It is deductible, however, if made in a form qualifying for the unlimited marital deduction [see I.R.C. § 2056(a)], subject to special rules regarding transfers to surviving spouses who are not United States citizens [see I.R.C. §§ 2056(d), 2056A].

Thus, if the spouses are still married at the time of death, the taxable estate of the decedent will contain only the property that passes from the estate to persons other than the surviving spouse [see I.R.C. § 2056(a)].

[2] Spouses Divorced at Time of Death

If the spouses are already divorced or legally separated at the time of the death of one of them, and transfers pursuant to the property settlement remain to be effected, the property to be transferred by the decedent's estate to the other spouse to complete an equal division of the community estate or an unequal division with equalizing payment out of separate property are deductible from the gross estate. The claims of the surviving former spouse are supported by adequate consideration in the form of the property received by the decedent or to be received by the estate [I.R.C. § 2053(a)(3), (c)(1)(A)]. Claims to complete an unequal division of community property (without separate property consideration) in which the surviving spouse receives the greater portion, however, are not deductible to the extent of the inequality, because of the absence of full consideration in money or money's worth [I.R.C. § 2053(a)(3), (c)(1)(A); see Estate of Scholl v. Commissioner (1987) 88 T.C. 1265 (claims against estate in satisfaction of unpaid spousal support)]. The same rule applies to the surviving former spouse's claims for uncompensated transfers out of the decedent's separate property. Because the spouses are no longer married, the marital deduction is not available. Thus, the decedent's taxable estate includes these amounts despite the obligation of the estate to make the transfers to the surviving former spouse.

PRACTICE TIP:

If a spouse dies in the period between filing of the petition and completion of the trial on all property issues, it becomes particularly important to ascertain whether there was a bifurcated judgment on marital status and, if so, whether the "standard conditions" were given to the surviving spouse [see Fam. Code § 2337]. Because the conditions set forth in Family Code Section 2337 usually are given only to the spouse who requests the bifurcation, and one of the conditions provides for tax indemnification to the "other" spouse for any damages arising from the bifurcated judgment, the issue of who "requests" the bifurcated status judgment becomes crucial. Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

A deduction is allowed to the decedent's taxable estate for all transfers made after death to a former spouse that satisfy the requirements for transfers to be exempt from gift tax [I.R.C. § 2043(b); see I.R.C. § 2516 (property settlements); cf. Estate of Herrmann (Herbert R.) T.C. Memo 1995-90, (for purposes of deducting claim against estate of decedent married at time of death, waiver of marital rights in premarital agreement is not adequate consideration "in money or money's worth")].

[3] Similarities to Gift Tax

As under the gift tax, it is unclear whether the claims of surviving former spouses for property that are not supported by consideration can be deducted under the estate tax version of Internal Revenue Code Section 2516 [see § 121.31]. A deduction from the gross estate is allowed for claims made pursuant to a written agreement relative to marital property rights if the claim is in settlement of marital or property rights, and divorce occurred within the three-year period beginning one year before the agreement was entered [I.R.C. §§ 2043(b), 2516]. As discussed with respect to the gift tax, this provision was enacted to eliminate the estate taxation of amounts to be transferred to surviving spouses in satisfaction of inchoate marital property rights in common-law jurisdictions. Given this purpose, it appears that claims to more than half of the community property or to the decedent's separate property (if uncompensated) should not be treated as in settlement of property rights, and thus be eligible for deduction.

In addition, as is true of the gift tax, the Harris rule can be invoked to permit a deduction if the claims are made pursuant to a settlement incorporated in the divorce decree. However, the applicability of the Harris rule in the community property context is uncertain [see Harris v. Commissioner (1950) 340 U.S. 106, 71 S. Ct. 181, 95 L. Ed. 111 ; see § 121.31].

§ 121.40 Gain or Loss on Transaction

[1] Amount of Gain or Loss

Gain on the sale or exchange of a personal residence is the amount that a taxpayer realizes from the sale or exchange less the adjusted basis in the residence. Loss is the excess of the adjusted basis over the amount realized [I.R.C. § 1001(a)]. The amount realized from a sale or exchange of a personal residence is the sum of money received plus the fair market value of any other property received. The amount realized does not include any amount received as reimbursement for real property taxes that are treated as imposed on the purchaser, but it does include amounts representing real property taxes that are treated as imposed on the taxpayer-seller if the taxes are paid by the purchaser [I.R.C. § 1001(b)].

A taxpayer's basis in a personal residence generally is the cost [I.R.C. § 1012]. A separate basis, however, must be computed if the residence was inherited or received as a gift [see I.R.C. §§ 1014, 1015; cf. I.R.C. § 1022 (for decedents dying after 2009, modified carryover basis regime generally applies, as discussed in Ch. 60, Estate Planning)]. Adjustments to basis, in general, are [I.R.C. § 1016]:

- Additions for capital improvements made to the residence, and
- Subtractions if any part of the residence has been depreciated.

PRACTICE TIP:

Keeping records of capital improvements in order to document increases in the basis of a personal residence is critically important in the event that gain on the sale of the principal residence will exceed the exclusion amounts [see I.R.C. § 121]. Also, if the taxpayer's acquisition of a new residence resulted in nonrecognition of gain from a sale, exchange, or involuntary conversion of a former residence under (now former) I.R.C. § 1034, as in effect on the day before enactment of the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, the taxpayer's basis in the new personal residence is reduced to the extent of the gain not recognized on sale of that former residence [see I.R.C. § 1016(a)(7)]. For further discussion of the treatment of gain on sale or exchange of a personal residence, see § 121.42. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

As a general rule, all gain or loss realized on the sale or exchange of property must be recognized [I.R.C. § 1001(c)]. But, for all practical purposes the recognition of gain or loss on the sale or exchange of a personal residence is the unusual rather than the usual case. Loss, although realized, is not recognized because it is not deductible with respect to a personal residence (since there is no profit motive in an investment sense when the home is acquired) [Treas. Reg. § 1.165-9(a); Pulliam v. Commissioner (1963) 39 T.C. 883, 885, aff'd on other grounds, (10th Cir. 1964) 329 F.2d 97; but see § 121.41 (conversion of a personal residence to property held for profit or investment)]. In the case of gain, although it may be recognized in part, one of the following usually applies [see § 121.42]:

- Gain realized on the sale or exchange of a "principal residence" [see I.R.C. § 121(a)] may be excluded from taxable income, up to $250,000 for an individual, and up to $500,000 for married taxpayers filing a joint tax return, or for an unmarried taxpayer whose spouse died within two years before the sale if the taxpayer and deceased spouse would have qualified for the $500,000 exclusion immediately before the spouse's death [I.R.C. § 121(b)(1),(2),(4); see also I.R.C. § 121(b)(3) (exclusion available only for one sale or exchange in any two-year period)].

- Under certain limited circumstances, gain may still be totally or partly deferred through acquisition of a replacement residence within the time limits prescribed under former I.R.C. § 1034, despite the 1997 repeal of the I.R.C. § 1034 "rollover" rule [see Pub. L. No. 105-34, § 312(b) (repealing I.R.C. § 1034); see also § 121.42].

- Under certain limited circumstances, the former "once-in-a-lifetime" $125,000 exclusion from income of gain on the sale of a principal residence by a taxpayer age 55 or over may still be utilized, possibly in combination with the former "rollover" rule, despite the 1997 repeal of both the special exclusion and the rollover rule [see I.R.C. § 121].

However, even in the limited circumstances under which the former "rollover of gain" rule and the age 55 and over exclusion might be asserted, these provisions are less likely to be utilized given the special provisions for excluding substantial amounts of gain on the sale or exchange of a personal residence [see I.R.C. § 121].

[2] Gain Treated as Capital Gain

The sale or exchange of a personal residence is treated as a capital transaction. Thus, any gain required to be recognized [but see I.R.C. § 121 (exclusion of gain from sale of principal residence)] is treated as capital gain [see I.R.C. § 1221]. Capital gains are generally taxed at rates that are more favorable to the taxpayer than those specified for ordinary income [compare I.R.C. § 1(a)-(e), (i)(2) with I.R.C. § 1(h)].

§ 121.41 Conversion of Principal Residence to Property Held for Profit or Investment

A taxpayer does not recognize loss on the sale of a personal residence unless the taxpayer establishes that the property was held for profit or investment [Treas. Reg. § 1.165-9(b); Gordon v. Commissioner (1928) 12 B.T.A. 1191, 1194]. The intent to hold property for profit or investment clearly is shown if the property is held for production of rental, trade, or business income [Treas. Reg. § 1.165-9(b)(1)]. Insignificant acts, such as leasing the property at low rent for a short period, do not evidence a profit motive [Foehl v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1961-93]. Once the taxpayer establishes a profit motive, however, vacancy of the property does not defeat the profit motive [McBride v. Commissioner (1968) 50 T.C. 1, 10].

The conversion of a principal residence to income-producing property allows the taxpayer to recognize loss. The recognizable loss is limited to the adjusted basis or the adjusted fair market value as of the time of conversion (adjusted for depreciation for the period between the conversion and the sale), whichever is less [Treas. Reg. § 1.165-9(b)(2); Heiner v. Tindle (1928) 276 U.S. 582, 48 S. Ct. 326, 72 L. Ed. 714; see Estate of De Lucchi v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1957-234]. Thus, loss is limited to the difference between the amount realized on the sale and whichever of the above amounts is less [Treas. Reg. § 1.165-9(b); Heiner v. Tindle (1928) 276 U.S. 582, 48 S. Ct. 326, 72 L. Ed. 714; see Parsons v. United States (3d Cir. 1955) 227 F.2d 437, 438-439 (value of property at time of conversion to rental property deemed taxpayer's basis for computing depreciation when property has declined in value between date of purchase and date of conversion)]. Recognizable gain is determined by subtracting the adjusted basis from the amount realized on the sale [I.R.C. § 1001; see I.R.C. § 1011 (adjusted basis); Parsons v. United States (3d Cir. 1955) 227 F.2d 437, 438-439 (for purposes of depreciation, taxpayer's basis is limited by property's value at time of conversion)]. Neither gain nor loss results when the amount realized is greater than the basis for loss but less than the basis for gain--an outcome that may occur if the fair market value as of the conversion date is less than the adjusted basis as of that date.

Taxpayers may recognize loss on the sale of rental homes that they own and in which they temporarily resided, provided they can show that they always intended to occupy a different dwelling as their personal residence [Willcox v. Commissioner (1953) 20 T.C. 305, 307] . Thus, the taxpayer's intentions generally will determine the availability of loss on the sale of a home [see Tillotson v. Commissioner (1953) 12 T.C.M. 171] .

A taxpayer's intent not to use a residence permanently, however, is insufficient to show that the property was purchased with a profit motive [Warrick v. Commissioner (1941) 44 B.T.A. 1068, 1071-1073] . Similarly, loss will be disallowed if a taxpayer's primary intent for purchasing a home is to reside there temporarily while constructing a permanent residence [Meyer v. Commissioner (1960) 34 T.C. 528, 531-532] . A profit motive is evidenced, however, if a taxpayer changes the construction of a custom residence to a commercial residence [see Treas. Reg. § 1.165-9(b); Heiner v. Tindle (1928) 276 U.S. 582, 48 S. Ct. 326, 72 L. Ed. 714] .

When a taxpayer cannot show a profit motive on multiple sales of personal residences, the taxpayer's actual losses cannot be used to offset realized gains. Furthermore, two or more transactions may not be aggregated to produce a net result. As a result, only the gain may be recognized [Koehn v. Commissioner (1951) 16 T.C. 1378, 1380-1381] . Similarly, only gain is recognized from the sale of a single unit of personal residential property even if the sale is made in separate transactions to different buyers [Rev. Rul. 54-95, 1954-1 C.B. 98].

§ 121.42 Treatment of Gain on Sale of Principal Residence

[1] Exclusion of Gain Under Current Law

[a] Overview

As a result of passage of the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 (Pub. L. No. 105-34), individuals are permitted to exclude from taxable income up to $250,000 of gain on the sale or exchange of a "principal residence," and this amount generally increases to $500,000 for married couples who file a joint return [see I.R.C. § 121(b)(1), (2)]. The $500,000 exclusion is also available to an unmarried taxpayer whose spouse died within two years before the sale, if the taxpayer and spouse would have qualified for the $500,000 exclusion immediately before the spouse's death [I.R.C. § 121(b)(4)]. The exclusion is allowed each time a taxpayer selling or exchanging a principal residence meets the eligibility requirements discussed hereinafter, but generally no more often than once every two years [see I.R.C. § 121(b)(3)]. The Act abolished the special rules for "rollover of gain," as well as the "once-in-a-lifetime" exclusion of up to $125,000 in gain for taxpayers aged 55 or older, on the sale or exchange of a personal residence. It generally applies to sales or exchanges occurring after May 6, 1997 [Pub. L. No. 105-34, §§ 312(a), (b), (d); see [c], below].

To qualify, a taxpayer must have both owned and used the property as his or her principal residence for at least two years during the five year period ending on the date of the sale or exchange [see I.R.C. § 121(a)]. However, married couples who file a joint return may claim the $500,000 exclusion if (1) either spouse meets the ownership requirement; (2) both spouses meet the use requirement; and (3) neither spouse is ineligible for exclusion by way of a sale or exchange of a residence within the last two years [I.R.C. § 121(b)(2)(A), (B)].

PRACTICE TIP:

According to a House Committee Report on the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, if a single taxpayer who is otherwise eligible for an exclusion marries someone who has used the exclusion within the two years prior to the marriage, the 1997 Act allows the newly married taxpayer a maximum exclusion of $250,000; that is, the fact that an individual's spouse used the exclusion within the past two years does not preclude the individual from claiming the exclusion. Once both spouses satisfy the eligibility rules and two years have elapsed since the last exclusion was allowed to either of them, the taxpayers may exclude $500,000 of gain on their joint return [see House Ways and Means Comm. Report (H.R. 1014), rel. June 18, 1997 (construing the bill preceding final enactment of § 312(a) of the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, amending I.R.C. § 121]. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

Note that the law allows an exception under which a taxpayer is entitled to a prorated amount of the exclusion on failing to meet either of the two year requirements (i.e., ownership and use) because of a change in the place of employment, health, or other unforeseen circumstances [see I.R.C. § 121(c)(2)(A), (B)]. In this event, the taxpayer's exclusion is a percentage of the amount that would have been allowed if the two-year requirements had been met, and is derived from the ratio of the aggregate amount of time the taxpayer owned or used the property as a principal residence during the statutory five-year period (or, if shorter, the amount of time since the most recent prior sale to which the exclusion applied), to two years [see I.R.C. § 121(c)(1)(A)(i), (ii)]. For discussion of a special, additional provision of the 1997 law concerning the ability of a spouse or former spouse to claim an exclusion from gain despite having lived away from the residence pursuant to a divorce or separation instrument, see [b], below [see I.R.C. § 121(d)(3)].

The exclusion of gain under the 1997 law does not apply to any gain attributable to depreciation deductions taken in connection with the rental or business use of the property for periods after May 6, 1997 [I.R.C. 121(d)(6)].

The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 also amended I.R.C. § 1038, which imposes recognition of gain on certain reacquisitions of real property. The amendment provides that no gain will be recognized upon either the reacquisition or resale of real property previously sold as a principal place of residence, with no gain having been recognized under I.R.C. § 121 from the previous sale, if within one year after reacquisition the taxpayer resells the property [see I.R.C. § 1038(e)].

[b] Principal Residence

To qualify for the exclusion of gain on the sale or exchange of a residence, the taxpayer must have owned or used the property as a "principal residence" during the applicable time period [see I.R.C. § 121(a); see also [a], above]. In construing this term, resort to decisions under the former "rollover" rules may be instructive, because it would seem that such decisions would have analogous application, except to the extent inconsistent with the revisions to the law made by the 1997 Act. Thus, whether a residence constitutes the taxpayer's principal residence has been required to be determined from all the facts and circumstances of each case. Although a taxpayer may have more than one residence, only one of those residences is the taxpayer's principal residence [see, e.g., Grace v. Commissioner (1969) 51 T.C. 685, 686-690, aff'd, (5th Cir. 1969) 421 F.2d 165; Smith v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1964) 332 F.2d 671, 673]. It has been held that a principal residence can be stock held by a tenant-shareholder in a cooperative housing corporation [Treas. Reg. § 1.1034-1(c)(3)(i)], a house-trailer [Disney v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1961-177], a houseboat [Treas. Reg. § 1.1034-1(c)(3)], a condominium [Rev. Rul. 64-31, 1964-1 C.B. 300; see Rev. Rul. 85-132, 1985-2 C.B. 182], a mobile home [Treas. Reg. § 1.1034-1(c)(3)], or a cooperative apartment [Barnum v. Commissioner (1952) 19 T.C. 401, 408-409; see Treas. Reg. § 1.1034-1(c)(3)(i)]. The primary factor has been whether the taxpayer uses the property as a residence [Stanley v. Commissioner (1959) 33 T.C. 614, 616; see Skorniak v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1996-178]. Although land and a house may together constitute a personal residence, it has been held that land in itself does not [O'Barr v. Commissioner (1965) 44 T.C. 501, 503].

However, under a special provision of the 1997 Act, an individual is treated as using property as a principal residence during any period of ownership in which the individual's spouse or former spouse is granted use of the property under a divorce or separation instrument, as defined in I.R.C. § 71(b)(2) [see I.R.C. § 121(d)(3)].

PRACTICE TIP:

This provision of the 1997 Act affords significant relief to "out spouses" who live away from the family residence pursuant to a court order, such as an order for deferred sale of the residence [see Fam. Code § 3800 et seq.] or other "divorce or separation instrument." The key for the "out spouse" would appear to be to ensure that a "divorce or separation instrument" is in place to establish the other ("in") spouse's right to use the residence. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

[c] Effective Dates and Election to be Bound by Former Law

The current rules for exclusion of gain [see [a], above] are generally effective for sales or exchanges after May 6, 1997, which, of necessity, would be those taking place on or after May 7, 1997. Sales before May 7, 1997, are subject to the former "rollover" and "once-in-a-lifetime exclusion" provisions [I.R.C. § 121(b)(3)(B) (excluding "pre-May 7, 1997" sales or exchanges)].

A taxpayer may nonetheless elect to be subject to the former provisions if: (1) the sale or exchange occurred prior to August 5, 1997, the enactment date of the new law; (2) the sale or exchange occurs after August 5, 1997, but is pursuant to a binding contract in effect on that date; or (3) no gain on the sale would be recognized, under the prior rollover rules, due to a replacement residence that was acquired on or before August 5, 1997, or pursuant to a binding contract effective on that date [Pub. L. No. 105-34, § 312(d), (e)(2)-(4)].

In addition, a taxpayer can elect not to have the revised I.R.C. § 121 exclusion apply to any sale or exchange [see I.R.C. § 121(f)].

[2] Former "Rollover" Rule and "Once-in-a-Lifetime" Exclusion

[a] Rollover of Gain

Under former law, if property used by the taxpayer as his or her principal residence was sold or exchanged, and the taxpayer acquired a new principal residence within a period beginning two years before and ending two years after the sale or exchange, then gain, if any, was recognized only to the extent that the adjusted sale price of the old residence exceeded the cost of the new residence [former I.R.C. § 1034; see Kirst (Randall L.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1997-353; Snowa (Jeanne G.) v. Commissioner, 123 F.3d 190 (4th Cir. 1997); Ryan v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1995-579; Pagliarulo (Robert), T.C. Memo 1994-506]. If these conditions were met, nonrecognition of gain was mandatory [Treas. Reg. § 1.1034-1(a)]. California incorporated the federal rollover provisions [Rev. & Tax. Code § 18031].

In determining whether a particular property remained a taxpayer's principal residence for rollover purposes, the Tax Court generally demonstrated a remarkable tolerance for periods of absence from the property. Thus, for example, the court found that a house remained the taxpayers' principal residence for rollover purposes despite a three year absence, when the taxpayers could not sell the house because of depressed market conditions [Clapham v. Commissioner (1975) 63 T.C. 505]. In another case, a taxpayer's principal residence was found to have remained her principal residence for rollover purposes even though she had not lived in the house on a permanent basis for six years at the time she sold it, because she was prevented from selling the house by her co-owner [Green v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1992-439].

By contrast, courts held that a divorce is not a "force beyond [the taxpayer's] control," so a voluntary release of exclusive possession without a mandate for immediate sale of a residence prevented the "out spouse" from treating it as his or her "principal residence" [Perry (Curtis B.) v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1996) 91 F.3d 82]. Thus, an order allowing one party to have "exclusive use," such as a "deferred sale of home order" (also known as a "Duke" order), without an order for immediate sale of the home, apparently precluded its use as a "residence" by the nonpossessory party and thereby precluded that party from taking an I.R.C. § 1034 rollover [see Perry (Curtis B.) v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1996) 91 F.3d 82].

PRACTICE TIP:

This adverse treatment of "out spouses" has been eliminated under the 1997 provisions for exclusion of gain, under which an individual is treated as using property as a "principal residence" during any period of ownership in which the individual's spouse or former spouse is granted use of the property under a "divorce or separation instrument," as defined in I.R.C. § 71(b)(2) [see I.R.C. § 121(d)(3)]. Thus, the considerations discussed above, pertaining to the "out spouse" being precluded from treating a property occupied by a former spouse as a "principal residence" for rollover of gain purposes (and, in general, all rollover discussion in this section) are relevant now only to the extent that the rollover provisions still have limited application under the 1997 tax law [see [1][c], above]. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

The former rollover provisions did not eliminate but only deferred recognition of the gain on the sale of a principal residence. The gain that was not recognized under the rollover provisions was subtracted from the taxpayer's basis in the replacement principal residence. Thus, the gain was preserved and recognized on the sale of the replacement property [former I.R.C. § 1034(e)].

[b] "Once-in-a-Lifetime" Exclusion of Gain by Older Taxpayer

Under former law, a taxpayer aged 55 or older could elect to exclude from gross income up to $125,000 of gain on the sale or exchange of property owned and used as his or her principal residence [prior version of I.R.C. § 121]. The residence had to be the taxpayer's principal residence for an aggregate period of three or more years during the five-year period ending on the date of the sale or exchange [I.R.C. § 121(a)(2)]. A married taxpayer who filed a separate return could exclude up to $62,500 [prior version of I.R.C. § 121(b)(1)]. If a property was used partly as a taxpayer's principal residence and partly for other purposes, only that part used for the residence qualified for the election [prior version of I.R.C. § 121(d)(5)]. The California exclusion conformed to the federal exclusion [Rev. & Tax. Code § 17131].

In addition, if a taxpayer aged 55 or over replaced his or her principal residence within the former rollover-of-gain period [see [a], above], and also elected to exclude gain from the sale, he or she was entitled to reduce the amount required for reinvestment under the rollover provisions by the amount of gain excluded [see prior version of I.R.C. § 121(d)(7)]. The taxpayer presumably would have increased his or her basis in the replacement property by the excluded amount.

§ 121.100 General Drafting Guide to Provisions Dividing Assets and Debts

[1] Description of Assets and Obligations

1. If assets and debts are to be listed and characterized in exhibit or schedule, include provision that incorporates by reference that exhibit or schedule [see § 121.200[2]].

NOTE:

It is generally not necessary to separately describe the parties' assets and obligations in their marital settlement agreement. Their Judicial Council form of Schedule of Assets and Debts [Cal. Judicial Council Form FL-142] will set forth the entirety of the community estate. The dispositional provisions of the marital settlement agreement should address all assets and obligations listed on the Judicial Council form, and should describe each item sufficiently to identify it. For an illustrated version of this Judicial Council form, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2d ed., Ch. 111, Pretrial Procedures, § 111.31 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Warranties and Other General Provisions

1. Include warranty by each spouse to other party that property described in agreement is all of the community estate, including both assets and obligations [see § 121.220].
2. If desired, add warranty providing that each party has not and will not incur any debt [see § 121.221]:
 - a. That is not disclosed in marital settlement agreement; and

- b. That could result in liability against other party.
- 3. If desired, include warranty that each party has made full disclosure of all information concerning the value of all items comprising the community estate [see § 121.222].
- 4. Set forth warranty provision stating that neither party has made prior gift of community personal property without prior written consent of other party [see Fam. Code § 1100(b); see also § 121.223].
- 5. If desired, add warranty that neither party has done anything to cause any dissipation of any asset in the community estate during the pendency of the legal proceeding [see § 121.224].
- 6. Provide for the disposition of any asset or obligation, not addressed in the agreement, that subsequently is found to be a part of the community estate [see § 121.206].
- 7. If applicable, affirm that one party has relied in good faith on an appraisal provided by the other party in accepting the valuation of one or more assets [see § 121.207].
- 8. If desired, specify that each party waives any right to the future earnings and acquisitions of the other [see § 121.208].
- 9. If desired, confirm that each party has fully complied with the requirements of the Family Code regarding full disclosure of all community assets and obligations [see Fam. Code § 2100 et seq.; see also § 121.209].

- e. Provide for parties to retain income-producing property as tenants in common [see § 121.234].

§ 121.200 Reference to Schedule Listing Assets and Obligations

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, incorporates by reference an exhibit or a schedule that lists and characterizes all of the assets and obligations of the parties. This clause does not divide the property or allocate the debts.

It is not generally necessary to both separately describe and also divide the property and debts in a marital settlement agreement. It is sufficient if the dispositional clauses also adequately describe each item of property and each obligation. However, if the parties own numerous items of property, counsel should consider preparing an exhibit or a schedule that lists the property, with a breakdown between assets and debts (with community and separate property and obligations scheduled separately), and attaching the exhibit or schedule to the marital settlement agreement. In that case, the agreement should incorporate the exhibit or schedule by reference. The dispositive provisions then might simply cross refer to the property as described in the schedule (e.g., "Wife shall receive all securities listed under Item 4 of Schedule A.").

The degree of specificity used in describing the property is largely a factor of the complexity of the property division and the personal preference of the attorneys involved in the transaction. As a general rule, the property need be described only in sufficient detail to identify it. For example, the list may include the legal description or common designation of real property, although a legal description of realty should always be included if it is anticipated that the agreement will be recorded. A listing that includes motor vehicles would commonly include the year and make of the vehicle, along with its license number. The vehicle identification number may also be included. Once the item has been described with specificity, any additional references elsewhere in the agreement to that item may consist of a more abbreviated description of the item.

[b] Characterization of Property

Each item of property owned by either or both spouses should be characterized by type as community, quasi-community, or separate property. Characterization is important because the agreement should dispose of all of the community and quasi-community assets and liabilities of the parties [see Fam. Code § 2500 et seq.].

Although a marital settlement agreement need not list or otherwise cover the separate property of each of the spouses, it should identify that property for several important reasons. First, this permits the parties to confirm that the property is separate property. Second, a disclosure of the existence of the property may be important if the property is later claimed to be community property. Finally, spouses must disclose the existence of all assets in which they have, or may have an interest, and liabilities for which they are or may be liable, regardless of the characterization of the asset or liability as community, quasi-community, or separate. This latter disclosure is required to be made on special Judicial Council disclosure forms [see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., chs. 92, Petitioning for Dissolution or Legal Separation, and 111, Pretrial Procedures (Matthew Bender)], but the parties also may wish to make such a disclosure in the marital agreement [see Fam. Code §§ 2100 et seq., 2104(c)].

For a complete discussion of community, quasi-community, and separate property, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles (Matthew Bender).

[c] Dual Character Property

If an item of property has a dual character, that is, it has both separate and community or quasi-community property components, the marital agreement should reflect the apportioned interests. This may be accomplished by creating an individual category in which to list the property, or, by listing the property under each applicable category and setting forth the fractional share or percentage of the property applicable to that category. For example, if 40 percent of an asset is the wife's separate property, the paragraph describing her separate property should contain the following or a similar entry: "40 percent of the single-family residence described as _____, more particularly described in Exhibit _____, which is attached to this Agreement and incorporated by reference." In that instance, there would need to be a corresponding entry under the community property listing for the remaining fractional share of the same property.

For discussion of issues related to dual character property and a sample worksheet for apportioning interests, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issue (Matthew Bender).

[d] Description of Debts

[i] In General

All debts for which either or both of the parties are personally liable should be listed in the agreement or in an attached exhibit or schedule. For example, the list should include any outstanding credit card accounts; department store accounts; other credit accounts; real estate loans; automobile loans; loans secured by household appliances, furniture, or other personal property; medical bills; business loans; obligations on which one or both of the parties have signed as cosigner or guarantor; tax obligations; liens on real or personal property (if there is also personal liability); unsatisfied judgments; pending or potential lawsuits; and any other present or contingent liability that should be satisfied or divided between the parties.

Parties are now required to disclose all liabilities for which they are or may be liable, using special Judicial Council disclosure forms [Fam. Code §§ 2104, 2105; see In re Marriage of Burkle (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 712, 746-748, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 181 (statutory disclosure requirements apply only when parties are making agreement that contemplates judgment dissolving marriage, not reconciliation agreement)]. Their agreement should also set forth these liabilities and be consistent with the disclosure forms [see Fam. Code §§ 2104(c), 2105(b)]. For a general discussion of disclosure requirements, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chs. 92, Petitioning for Dissolution or Legal Separation, and 111, Pretrial Procedures (Matthew Bender).

[ii] Information Obtained by Counsel

Before preparing the list, counsel should elicit from the client all of the relevant facts concerning the debts, including the party or parties liable, the name and address of the creditor, the amount unpaid, the due date or dates of the debt, the interest rate, whether any amounts are past due, the security for secured loans, and the nature of the debt as a community or separate liability. If the liability is contingent, counsel should determine the potential liability of each spouse.

[iii] Preparation of Entries

Although it is important that the attorney obtain all relevant information concerning the debts, it is normally not necessary or desirable to set forth all of that information in the agreement. Instead, counsel should simply provide sufficient information to identify the debt so that it is clear what debts the parties wish to include in the agreement. In most cases, an entry for a particular debt should include the following, to the extent applicable: the name of the creditor; the account number; the balance due; and the means by which the debt is secured. If the debt is secured by a community or separate asset that is listed elsewhere in the agreement (or in an attached exhibit or schedule), the debt entry should briefly describe the security and cross-refer to the earlier description of the asset.

§ 121.201 Confirmation of Separate Assets and Obligations

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The forms set forth in [2] and [3], below, set forth the separate assets and obligations of each of the spouses. The property and debts being confirmed as separate may either be listed directly in the agreement or in a schedule.

These forms include language indicating that each spouse confirms to the other spouse all right, title, and interest in the separate property of the other spouse. Form [3] (separate debts) includes indemnity and hold harmless provisions to protect the nondebtor spouse against any claim of liability for the debt. These forms are for use to confirm property and debts that have always been the separate asset or obligation of the indicated spouse; not community property or debts that will become the separate asset or obligation of a spouse on division.

Although neither spouse has any interest in the separate property of the other [see Fam. Code § 752] and separate property is not subject to division by the court in a marital dissolution or legal separation action [see Fam. Code §§ 2550, 2551], there are advantages to confirming each party's separate property in a marital settlement agreement. First, if the separate property provision contains the language discussed above, it should forestall a later claim by a party regarding the character of the other party's separate property. Second, if the property is later claimed to be community property and the agreement sets forth all of the material facts concerning the existence or source of the property that would have a bearing on its characterization as separate or community property, this information should help dispel any claim that the owner failed to satisfy his or her duty to disclose the existence of the community property [see Fam. Code §§ 1100(e), 2100 et seq.; but see Fam. Code § 2650 (jurisdiction of court to divide parties' separate interests in jointly held property, at request of party)]. For a general discussion of spouse's duty to disclose the existence of community and separate assets and liabilities and of special Judicial Council forms for that disclosure, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapters 92, Petitioning for Dissolution or Legal Separation, and 111, Pretrial Procedures (Matthew Bender).

[b] Joint Tenancy or Tenancy in Common Property

The parties might own property as true joint tenants or as true tenants in common (and not community property). If so, the interest of each spouse in the property is a separate property interest. The spouses may set forth these interests under their respective descriptions of separate property, or may create an individual listing category for it. It is recommended that these interests be set forth under each spouse's separate property listing. For example, the following entry could appear under the paragraph entitled "Husband's Separate Property": "That certain undivided one-half interest in joint tenancy in the house and lot located at _____, more particularly described in Exhibit _____, which is attached to this Agreement and incorporated by reference." Any subsequent reference to that interest, or to the wife's corresponding one-half interest, could cross-refer to the first description.

The parties must distinguish true joint tenancy or tenancy in common property from any property held in one of those joint forms that is actually divisible as community property on dissolution or legal separation because of the operation of the "joint form-community property" presumption [see Fam. Code §§ 2580-2581]. Property held in "joint form" that the parties agree is actually divisible community property should be set forth under the community property listing. For a complete discussion of the "joint form--community property presumption" and the means of its rebuttal, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles (Matthew Bender).

[2] FORM--Confirmation of Separate AssetsConfirmation of Separate Assets

Confirmation of Separate Assets

[Husband or Wife] confirms to [Wife or Husband] all of [her/his] right, title, and interest in and to the assets set forth [below or in Schedule _____]. [Husband or Wife] acknowledges that all of these assets are the sole and separate property of [Wife or Husband], and that [he/she] has no community property interest in any of them. § 121.202 Division of Community Assets

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is for use to divide all or some of the community (and quasi-community) estate between the parties in kind. Assets can be allocated to either Husband or Wife. Each party's allocation can be placed either directly into the agreement or into schedules.

The clause contains optional language providing that the property is being divided equally. Further, it makes the transfer subject to existing encumbrances and liens. It also contains an optional provision relating to providing security for the division. Finally, it transfers any insurance on the property to the party receiving the property.

There are other property division dispositions that may be used for community assets that are not to be assigned to one party or the other. For example, an asset may be sold, either to a third party or to the other party, or made subject to an option or to a deferred sale. A pension or other retirement or employer-provided asset may be divided pursuant to a Qualified Domestic Relations Order [see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 213, Employee Benefits Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements].

§ 121.203 Allocation of Community Debts

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, is for use to divide all or some of the community (and quasi-community) obligations between the parties in kind. Debts can be allocated to either Husband or Wife. Each party's allocation can be placed either directly into the agreement or into schedules. The form contains optional language providing that the debts are being divided equally.

There are other debt allocation dispositions that may be used for community obligations that are not to be assigned to one party or the other. For example, particular property may be sold and the proceeds used to pay community obligations [see § 121.292]. Clauses effecting these other dispositions are found in Subpart 7.

If a specific asset is encumbered, the party receiving the asset should ordinarily assume the debt, and the parties may wish to list such a debt as part of the award of the corresponding asset. For example, if one party is assigned an automobile with a value of $4,500, he or she should also assume the debt secured by the automobile.

[b] Assumption and Indemnification

This form also provides for the spouse to whom a debt is allocated to indemnify the other and to hold the other harmless on any claim against the indemnitee spouse based on the debt. The right of indemnity extends to attorney fees incurred in defending against the claim, whether or not the claim is meritorious or successful. Although an indemnity provision will not relieve the nonassuming spouse from liability to a creditor, [see Fam. Code § 910 (liability of community property for debts of spouses); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 410.70 (when defendants are jointly and/or severally liable, court may proceed against any defendant as though he or she were only defendant); Civ. Code § 1457], it will provide some measure of recourse against the other spouse for any payments that the nonassuming spouse may have to make to the third party.

§ 121.204 Reimbursement of Separate Property Contributions to Acquisition of Property

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is for use if one or both of the spouses wish to be reimbursed for contributions of separate property to acquisition of community property. It is intended to be used in connection with the division of a specific community asset. The form in [3], below, is an alternative provision by which a party expressly waives the right to reimbursement in connection with the acquisition of a specific asset. The form in [4], below, is a waiver of a party's right to reimbursement for his or her separate property contributions to the acquisition of the other party's separate property.

In the division of community property on marital dissolution or legal separation, unless a spouse has made a written waiver of the right to reimbursement or signed a writing that has the effect of a waiver, that spouse is entitled to reimbursement for his or her separate property contributions to the acquisition of the property to the extent he or she traces the contributions to a separate property source [Fam. Code § 2640(b); see, e.g., In re Marriage of Weaver (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 858, 866-870, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 121 (spouse who transferred real property from separate property to joint tenancy with other spouse is entitled to reimbursement unless written statement, apart from joint tenancy deed, specifically waives right to reimbursement); In re Marriage of Lange (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 360, 365, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 379; In re Marriage of Carpenter (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 424, 427, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 526]. For discussion of important limitations on the application of this section based on when the subject property was acquired and when the proceeding for dissolution or legal separation was commenced, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapters 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles, and 23, Debt Liability and Division and Related Reimbursement Issue (Matthew Bender) [see also Fam. Code § 2580; In re Marriage of Heikes (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 1211, 1225, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 155, 899 P.2d 1349 (reimbursement statute may not constitutionally be applied to property acquired before January 1, 1984); In re Marriage of Bankovich (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 49, 51, 249 Cal. Rptr. 713]. This form assumes that the parties will want to limit any right to reimbursement to that which exists by law.

In the absence of a written agreement between the parties, the spouse who has contributed separate property to the acquisition of community property is not entitled to interest or an adjustment for change in monetary values. Further, the amount reimbursed may not exceed the net value of the property at the time of the division. Separate property contributions that may be reimbursed include down payments, payments for improvements, and payments that reduce the principal of a loan used to finance the purchase or improvement. On the other hand, payments of interest on the property and payments made for maintenance, insurance, or taxation of the property are not subject to reimbursement [Fam. Code § 2640(a), (b)]. Further, the payment of community credit-card debt to enable the parties to qualify for a loan to purchase property is not a reimbursable "contribution to the acquisition of property" [Nicholson v. Sparks (In re Marriage of Sparks) (2003) 104 Cal. App. 4th 289, 292-297, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 882] .

A spouse who has contributed his or her separate property to the acquisition of the other spouse's separate property during the marriage must be reimbursed for that contribution unless there has been a transmutation in writing [see Fam. Code § 850 et seq.; see also Ch. 112, Postnuptial Agreements] or a written waiver of the right to reimbursement [Fam. Code § 2640(c)]. Unless otherwise agreed in writing, the amount reimbursed is to be without interest or adjustment for a change in monetary values and may not exceed the net value of the acquired property at the time of the property division [Fam. Code § 2640(c)].

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below may be used to equalize the division of the marital assets and debts if one of the spouses is to receive more than half of the community property (for example, if one spouse is to receive the family residence and it is the primary marital asset). The equalizing payment may be made either in a lump sum or in installments. If to be made in installments, then proper security should be provided, such as a first deed of trust on real property (such as the family residence) in the possession of the spouse executing the note. For comprehensive coverage of promissory notes and deeds of trust in general, see Ch. 25A, Security Instruments for Real Estate Financing. For discussion of promissory notes in relation to the "equal division" requirement for community property divisions on marital dissolution, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles (Matthew Bender).

[b] Tax Consequences

The transfer of property between spouses generally does not result in recognition of gain or loss for income tax purposes [I.R.C. § 1041(a)(1)]. The same rule applies to transfers between former spouses, provided the transfer is incident to divorce [I.R.C. § 1041(a)(2), (c)]. When one spouse takes more than half of the community property, compensation to the other spouse with a promissory note or with separate property is not a taxable event [see In re Marriage of Bergman (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 742, 762, 214 Cal. Rptr. 661 (abrogating Carrieres v. Commissioner (1975) 64 T.C. 959, aff'd, 552 F.2d 1350 (9th Cir. 977))].

An equalizing payment should be clearly specified as that; otherwise, the payments might be construed as spousal support and be subject to alimony tax treatment, meaning that they would be taxable income to the payee spouse and deductible to the payor spouse [see I.R.C. §§ 71, 215].

For further discussion of Internal Revenue Code Section 1041, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender).

PART IV. FORMS

1. General Provisions for Dividing Property

34-121 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 121.206

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.

§ 121.206 Division of After-Discovered Assets and Debts

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in § 121.206[2] provides that any community or quasi-community asset discovered after the execution of the marital settlement agreement will be divided equally between the parties, unless one of them knew of the asset's existence when the agreement was executed. In that case, the form provides alternate dispositions, at the election of the other party (who did not know about the asset): (1) equal division; (2) the fair market value of the party's share, plus interest from the effective date of the agreement, or (3) the fair market value of the party's share, plus interest from the date of the asset's discovery. The form thereby places the risk of loss of willfully concealed property on the concealing party.

The form in § 121.206[3] provides for joint responsibility for the payment of any community debt that is discovered after the execution of the marital settlement agreement, as long as the debt arose from the conduct of both parties, or from the conduct of one party and the community benefitted from the conduct. Otherwise, the debt becomes the separate obligation of the party who was aware of it.

In transactions between themselves, a husband and wife are subject to the rules that govern the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other [Fam. Code § 721(b)]. Their relationship is a fiduciary relationship. It subjects both spouses to a duty of the highest good faith and fair dealing and prohibits either from taking any unfair advantage of the other [Fam. Code § 721(b); see In re Marriage of Burkle (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 712, 730-736, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 181 (Fam. Code § 721(b) prohibits taking of unfair advantage but does not prohibit transaction in which benefits or advantages are obtained by both spouses and neither gains unfair advantage)]. In their dealings with each other, the spouses are subject to the rights and duties that govern the relations of nonmarital business partners as provided in Corp. Code §§ 16403, 16404, and 16503 [see Fam. Code § 721(b) (legislatively abrogating holding of In re Marriage of Duffy (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 923, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 160, to extent in conflict with accompanying statement of legislative intent in Stats. 2002, ch. 310, § 2); see also In re Marriage of Leni (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 1092-1094, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 886 (reference in Fam. Code § 721(b) to Corp. Code §§ 16403, 16404, and 16503 does not broaden spouses' duties and obligations to include those of corporate officers and directors, beyond providing access, information, and accounting)]. The fiduciary duties of the spouses continue until their community property is divided, by the spouses themselves or by the court [Fam. Code §§ 1100(e), 2102].

Specific disclosures regarding all assets, liabilities, income, and expenses must be made by each spouse before entering into any agreement for the resolution of property or support issues, absent a court order for good cause or the parties' stipulation to a mutual waiver of the final declaration of disclosure [see Fam. Code §§ 2105(a), (d), 2106]. Specific disclosures also are required in connection with community property [see Fam. Code § 1100(e)]. Remedies for breach of the fiduciary duties of spouses in connection with community property are set forth by statute, as discussed in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 24, Management and Control of Property (Matthew Bender) [see also Fam. Code § 1101].

[2] FORM--Division of After-Discovered Assets Division of After-Discovered Assets

Division of After-Discovered Assets

Omitted Assets

If, after the execution of this Agreement, any asset is discovered to exist that was not listed in and disposed of by this Agreement and that would have been community or quasi-community property of the parties, that omitted asset shall be divided equally between the parties. If, however, the existence of the asset was known to one of the parties at the time of execution of this Agreement, the party with that knowledge shall transfer or pay to the party without knowledge of the asset ("the other party"), at the other party's option, one of the following: (1) if the asset is reasonably susceptible to division, a portion of the asset equal to the other party's interest in it; (2) the fair market value of the other party's interest in the asset on the effective date of this Agreement, plus interest at the legal rate from the effective date to the date of payment; or (3) the fair market value of the other party's interest in the asset on the date on which the other party discovers the existence of the asset, plus interest at the legal rate from the discovery date to the date of payment. This provision will not be deemed to impair the availability of any other remedy arising from nondisclosure of community assets.

[3] FORM--Division of Omitted Debts

Division of Omitted Debts

Division of Omitted Debts

The parties acknowledge that they have provided in this Agreement for the payment of all community debts of which each is aware. Any debt, claim, or obligation (including the cost of defending against it) not provided for in this Agreement and unknown by the parties at the time of the preparation of this Agreement, will be deemed a joint community obligation as long as the debt, claim, or obligation arose from the conduct of both parties, or from the conduct of one party and the marital community benefitted from that conduct, occurring during the marriage but before the effective date of this Agreement. If, however, an omitted claim, debt, or obligation arose from the conduct of only one party and the community did not benefit from it, then that claim, debt or obligation will be the sole and separate obligation of that party. This provision will not be deemed to impair the availability of any other remedy arising from nondisclosure of community debts.

PART IV. FORMS

1. General Provisions for Dividing Property

34-121 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 121.207

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.

§ 121.207 Acknowledgment of Reliance on Spouse's Appraisal

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, states that one spouse is relying on an appraisal of property obtained by the other spouse. This provision is sometimes used if the party obtaining the appraisal is also in possession of the subject property (for example, real estate or a family business). The inclusion of the statement makes the basis of the valuation a part of the agreement. For coverage of the valuation of marital property, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 22, Valuation of Property Interests (Matthew Bender).

Each spouse has a duty of the highest good faith and fair dealing with respect to the other spouse in the management and control of the community property, in accordance with the general rules governing fiduciary relationships that control the actions of persons having relationships of personal confidence [see Fam. Code § 721(b)]. This duty continues until the property has been divided by the parties or by a court [Fam. Code §§ 1101(e), 2102].

As part of the final declaration of disclosure [see § 121.209] that each party is required to furnish the other party before, or at the time of entering into an agreement for the resolution of property or support issues (absent a court order for good cause or the parties' stipulation to a mutual waiver of that declaration), each spouse must include all material facts and information regarding the valuation of all assets that are contended to be community or in which it is contended the community has an interest [see Fam. Code § 2105(a), (b)(2), (d)]. For a discussion of this and related disclosure requirements, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chs. 92, Petitioning for Dissolution or Legal Separation, and 111, Pretrial Procedures (Matthew Bender).

Acknowledgment of Reliance on Spouse's Appraisal

Reliance on Appraisal

The parties acknowledge that in arriving at the division of property set forth in this Agreement, [Husband or Wife] is relying on the appraisal of [specify asset, e.g., Wife's business] dated _____. That appraisal was prepared by an appraiser employed by [Wife or Husband] and acting solely for the benefit of [Wife or Husband]. [Husband or Wife] has elected not to pursue [his/her] own appraisal based on [Wife's or Husband's] assurances that the appraisal was conducted in good-faith and represents a fair evaluation of the property.

§ 121.209 Compliance With Family Code Disclosure Requirements

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, affirms that both parties have complied with the disclosure requirements of the Family Code. In family law proceedings, each party is required to make full disclosures to the other concerning all assets in which that party has or may have an interest and all liabilities for which that party is or may be liable, regardless of the characterization of the asset or liability as community, quasi-community, or separate property [see Fam. Code §§ 2100(c), 2102, 2104(c)]. Special disclosure duties are imposed on spouses in connection with family law proceedings, and in the management and control of community property [see Fam. Code § 2105]. For a general discussion of these duties, and of disclosure forms that must be exchanged by the parties once family law litigation has commenced, and before or at the time the parties enter into an agreement during the litigation that settles property or support issues (other than temporary support), see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapters 24, Management and Control of Property, and 211, Complete Marital Settlement Agreements (Matthew Bender).

[2] FORM

Compliance With Family Code Disclosure Requirements

Compliance With Family Code Disclosure Requirements

Each party warrants to the other that the warrantor has complied with the service, filing, and exchange requirements of California Family Code Section 2100 et seq. with respect to Declarations of Disclosure, Schedules of Assets and Debts, and Income and Expense Declarations, and that his or her respective declarations and schedules set forth all required information. The information disclosed included, but was not limited to, all assets, liabilities, and obligations, income, earnings, accumulations, expenses, any investment opportunity, business opportunity, or other income-producing opportunity presenting itself after the date of separation but that resulted from any investment, significant business activity outside the ordinary course of business, or other income-producing opportunity of either party from the date of marriage to the date of separation, inclusive, and concerning the operation or management of any business or business interest in which the community may have an interest. The parties are fully satisfied with the nature and extent of disclosure made.

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, confirms that the parties waive the statutory requirement that final declarations of disclosure be exchanged [see Fam. Code § 2105; see also § 121.208]. The parties in a dissolution of marriage or legal separation may stipulate to a mutual waiver of the declaration of disclosure by execution of a waiver under penalty of perjury entered into in open court or by separate stipulation. The waiver must include all of the representations set forth in the form [see Fam. Code § 2105(c)].

[2] FORM

Waiver of Final Declaration of Disclosure

Waiver of Final Declaration of Disclosure

The parties waive the exchange of Final Declarations of Disclosure, as authorized by Family Code Section 2105(d). The parties declare the following, under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California:

1. Both parties have complied with Family Code Section 2104 and the preliminary declarations of disclosure have been completed and exchanged;
2. Both parties have completed and exchanged a current income and expense declaration, that includes all material facts and information regarding that party's earnings, accumulations, and expenses;
3. Both parties have fully complied with Family Code Section 2102 and have fully augmented the preliminary declarations of disclosure, including disclosure of all material facts and information regarding the characterization of all assets and liabilities, the valuation of all assets that are contended to be community property or in which it is contended the community has an interest, and the amounts of all obligations that are contended to be community obligations or for which it is contended the community has liability;

4. This waiver is knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily entered into by each of the parties; and

5. Each party understands that this waiver does not limit the legal disclosure obligations of the parties, but rather is a statement under penalty of perjury that those obligations have been fulfilled. Each party further understands that noncompliance with those obligations will result in the court setting aside the judgment.

§ 121.211 Reimbursement for Contributions to Education and Training

[1] Comment

In an action for dissolution of marriage or legal separation, the community must be reimbursed for community contributions to education or training of either party that substantially enhanced that party's earning capacity [Fam. Code § 2641(b)(1)]; see Fam. Code § 2641(a) ("community contributions to education or training" defined); see also In re Marriage of Graham (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1321, 1324-1326, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 685 (attaining law degree does not as matter of law result in substantially enhanced earning capacity for purposes of Fam. Code § 2641(b)(1))). Reimbursement is not limited to education or training that was received during the marriage; rather, the reimbursement obligation depends on whether community funds were used to pay for the education, even if the education took place before the marriage [In re Marriage of Weiner (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 235, 238-241, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 288]. The form in [2], below, provides for this reimbursement and establishes the amount to be reimbursed. As required by statute, the amount includes interest at the legal rate, accruing from the end of the calendar year in which the contributions were made [Fam. Code § 2641(b)(1)].

Reimbursement must be reduced or modified to the extent that circumstances render it "unjust," as prescribed by statute [see Fam. Code § 2641(c)]. Reimbursement is the exclusive remedy of the community or of a party for the education or training and any resulting enhancement of the earning capacity of a party. However, the effect of the education, training, or enhancement, or of the amount reimbursed, on the circumstances of the parties may be considered in setting spousal support [Fam. Code § 2641(d)]; see Fam. Code § 4320(b); see also chs. Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., chs. 51, Spousal Support Orders, 214, Spousal and Child Support Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements (Matthew Bender)].

This statutory right of reimbursement may be waived by an express written agreement of the parties to the contrary [Fam. Code § 2641(e)]. The form in [3], below, effects this waiver.

For a provision requiring that one spouse be reimbursed for his or her separate property contributions to the acquisition of community property, see § 121.204. For further discussion of all situations in which reimbursement is required or permitted in family law actions, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 23, Debt Liability and Division and Related Reimbursement Issues (Matthew Bender).

§ 121.222 Disclosure of Value of Property

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, is for use to affirm that each party has disclosed sufficient information regarding the value of all assets in which the community has an interest. Compliance can be either by disclosing the fair market value of the asset, or by disclosing sufficient information from which the fair market value may be determined by the other party. If an asset assigned to the warrantor is undervalued, or if an asset assigned to the warrantee is overvalued, then the warrantor is to pay to the warrantee one-half of the difference between the actual and the stated fair market values of the asset.

[2] FORM

Disclosure of Value of Property

Disclosure of Value of Assets

Each party warrants to the other that the warrantor has disclosed either the fair market value of the community [and quasi-community] assets described in this Agreement, or all material facts and information regarding the valuation of all assets that are contended to be community property or in which it is contended that the community has an interest. If either warrantor has willfully understated the fair market value of any asset assigned to him or her, or has willfully overstated the fair market value of any asset assigned to the other party, the warrantor shall pay to the warrantee a sum of money equal to one-half (1/2) of the difference between the stated and actual fair market values of the undervalued or overvalued asset. For purposes of this warranty, the actual fair market value of any undervalued or overvalued asset should be determined as of the effective date of this Agreement or the date of discovery, at the warrantee's option.

§ 121.223 Warranty Against Unauthorized Gifts and Transfers of Community Assets

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, contains a warranty provision stating that neither spouse has made an unauthorized gift of community property. A spouse may not make a gift of community personal property, or otherwise dispose of community personal property for less than fair and reasonable value, unless he or she obtains the written consent of the other spouse. Special restrictions are also imposed on the transfer of community real property [Fam. Code §§ 1100(b), 1102]. Because an unauthorized gift or other transfer will affect the amount of community property that is available for division between the spouses under a marital settlement agreement, each spouse should obtain the express warranty of the other that unauthorized gifts or other transfers have not been made within a stated period before the date of the agreement.

[b] Violations of Gift Restriction

Special rules apply with respect to voiding gifts or other transfers made in violation of statute [see generally In re Marriage of Stephenson (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1057, 1071, 209 Cal. Rptr. 383 ; Bank of California v. Connolly (1973) 36 Cal. App. 3d 350, 377, 111 Cal. Rptr. 468 (decided under former Civ. Code § 5125(b))]. For discussion of these rules, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 24, Management and Control of Property (Matthew Bender).

[2] FORM

Warranty Against Unauthorized Gifts and Transfers of Community Assets

Warranty Against Unauthorized Gifts or Other Transfers

Each party represents and warrants to the other that he or she has not made any gifts of community personal property to any other person, or otherwise disposed of such property for less than fair and reasonable value, without the written consent of the other party [within the past ____ years]. Each party further represents and warrants that he or she has not sold, conveyed, encumbered, leased, or otherwise transferred any community real property of the parties or any interest in any community real property of the parties without the other party having joined in the instrument of transfer [within the past ____ years].

If it is subsequently determined that either party has made such a gift or other transfer [within the past ____ years], the party making the gift or transfer agrees to pay to the other party, on demand, a sum equal to the higher of (1) one-half of the fair market value of the property as of ____ [valuation date], plus interest at the rate of ____ percent per annum, or (2) one-half of the value of the fair market value of the property as of the date of discovery by the other party.

This Agreement shall not impair the availability, in a court of competent jurisdiction, of any other remedy arising from the undisclosed disposition of any property. [Add if desired: This provision shall not impair any Family Law Attorney's Real Property Lien that has been established under Family Code Section 2033 if all procedural requirements of that statute have been met prior to the execution of this Agreement.]

§ 121.224 No Dissipation of Community Assets

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, contains a provision against dissipation or other waste of community assets. It provides that if the warrantor intentionally caused the dissipation in value of an asset after legal proceedings were commenced, he or she is to pay to the warrantee half of the difference between the current value of the asset and the value of the asset before it dissipated. For a warranty that the property described in the marital settlement agreement constitutes all of the property of the spouses, see § 121.220. If desired, that warranty and this form may be combined into one provision.

Warranty Against Dissipation of Community Assets

Each party represents to the other that there has been no intentional dissipation, waste, depletion, or destruction of community assets after the filing of the petition for dissolution of marriage. If it later appears the warrantor has caused a disposition of community property contrary to this warranty, the warrantor shall pay the warrantee one-half (1/2) of the difference between the actual fair market value of the asset and the fair market value of the asset measured, at the warrantee's election, (a) on the effective date of this Agreement; or (b) at the time the warrantee discovers the disposition. This Agreement shall not impair the availability of any other remedy arising from the disposition of any property.

§ 121.230 Description of Real Property

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, contains descriptions of different types of real property assets. The descriptions may be inserted into a marital settlement agreement provision (or an attached exhibit or schedule) that describes or divides the property of the parties. No special form of description is required, although it is recommended that, in addition to a common (street) description, a legal description of the property also be included in an exhibit that is incorporated by reference, in case a party wishes to record the agreement. Including a full legal description is particularly important in the case of acreage, which may take a variety of physical configurations. Finally, a legal description should be included for any business real properties, especially in the case of large, irregular, or multiple parcels.

§ 121.231 Sale of Real Property to Third Party

[1] Comment

The forms set forth in [2] and [3], below, provide for the sale of community real property to a third party. Form [2] is a short form, and Form [3] is a long form. Either may be used in connection with the disposition of virtually any type of real property. Some common uses might be with respect to the family home, income-producing realty, or a vacation home.

The short form includes only a direction to sell the property and the disposition of the proceeds. The proceeds may be divided either equally or in specified unequal percents.

The long form sets forth all of the terms and conditions of sale. It provides for setting the initial asking price, either at the value as shown on the parties' Schedule of Assets and Debts (Judicial Council Form FL-142) or at a value to be agreed to subsequently within a specified time. If the property does not sell at that price after a specified time on the market, the parties may either agree to a specified percent reduction or to attempt to agree on a reduced asking price. The court is given the authority to resolve disputes over reducing the asking price and other terms and conditions of sale.

The long form also specifies the respective rights and responsibilities of the parties while the property is on the market and pending closing of a sale. One or both parties is given the right of occupancy. And one or both are given the responsibility for maintenance, and payment of mortgage, taxes, and insurance.

The long form also addresses the computation of the net proceeds of sale that are subject to division. Liens and other deductions from gross proceeds may be specified, and either or both parties may be given specified credits to be applied before the net proceeds are divided.

For a provision governing the deferred sale of the family residence, see § 121.232. For discussion of tax aspects of a sale of property to a third party, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender).

Price and Terms

[Use if parties will agree to terms and conditions of sale in future:]

The parties shall mutually agree on the sale price and on any other terms and conditions of sale. If the parties are unable to agree on the initial asking price, they shall appoint an appraiser to determine the value of the property. If they are unable to agree on an appraiser, either party may apply to the court for an order appointing an appraiser. The value of the residence, as determined by the appraiser, shall be conclusively binding on the parties.

[OR: Use if changes in asking price or terms and conditions of sale will be set forth in agreement:]

If no offer acceptable to the parties has been received within _____ days of the execution of the listing agreement, the parties shall reduce the price by _____ percent. This same procedure shall be repeated every _____ days until an acceptable offer is received. [Add if desired: However, in no event shall the property be offered for sale for less than $_____ (total amount of encumbrances on property or other minimum price).]

Until the property is sold, [Husband or Wife or both parties] shall be responsible for maintaining the property in good condition. If major repairs or improvements (such as a new roof) become necessary, [Husband or Wife] shall obtain the consent of [Wife or Husband], which consent shall not be unreasonably withheld, before making any repairs or improvements. The cost of maintenance, repairs, and improvements shall be [shared equally by the parties or paid by _____ (Husband or Wife) or paid _____ percent by Husband and _____ percent by Wife].

Until the property is sold, [(Husband or Wife) shall make all or each party shall pay half or Husband shall pay _____ percent and Wife shall pay _____ percent] of the required monthly mortgage payments and payments of property taxes and assessments against the property. Until the property is sold, [Husband shall pay or Wife shall pay or each party shall pay half of or Husband shall pay _____ percent and Wife shall pay _____ percent of] the cost to maintain in force a policy of insurance of a type and in an amount sufficient to protect the parties against loss by fire or other casualty and loss by virtue of liability to third persons resulting from ownership of the property. Both parties shall be named insureds under the policy. If [Husband or Wife or either party] fails to pay to maintain the insurance in force, [Wife or Husband or the other party] shall have the right to secure an appropriate policy and shall be entitled to reimbursement from [Husband or Wife or the defaulting party] for sums expended in preserving the insurance in force that should have been paid by [Husband or Wife or the defaulting party].

§ 121.232 Deferred Sale of Family Home for Benefit of Minor Children

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form illustrated in [2], below, is a provision for the deferred sale of a family home, under Family Code Section 3800 et seq. It provides for the custodial parent to be given exclusive right of continued possession of the family home until a terminating event occurs. The terminating event is generally when all children of the marriage have attained a specified age. At that time, the family residence is to be sold and the proceeds divided. For discussion of requirements for deferred sale orders, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues (Matthew Bender).

The clause contains an optional provision that gives one party an option to purchase the interest of the other on the occurrence of the terminating event. It also contains optional provisions for the complete terms and conditions of sale on the ultimate sale of the property to a third party. Finally, it allocates the net proceeds of sale, either equally or according to specified percents.

[b] Joint Ownership

This form provides that the parties will hold the residence as tenants in common. The parties must execute and record a deed to accomplish this purpose. Use of a tenancy in common is preferable in this circumstance to a joint tenancy because neither party would presumably desire a right of survivorship to exist in favor of the other party, which a joint tenancy would involve. The form requires that the parties execute and record a deed to accomplish this purpose. Use of a tenancy in common is preferable in this circumstance to a joint tenancy because neither party would presumably desire a right of survivorship to exist in favor of the other party, which a joint tenancy would involve. For additional discussion of this type of co-ownership arrangement, see § 121.201[1][b].

[c] Tax Consequences

No gain or loss is recognized for income tax purposes on a transfer of property to (or for the benefit of) a former spouse if the transfer is incident to divorce [I.R.C. § 1041(a)(2)]. Instead, the transfer is treated as a gift, and the transferor's basis in the property is carried over to the transferee [I.R.C. § 1041(b)]. For these purposes, a transfer is incident to a divorce if it occurs within one year after the date on which the marriage ceases, or is related to the cessation of the marriage [I.R.C. § 1041(c)].

Under temporary regulations, a transfer is treated as related to the cessation of marriage if (1) it is pursuant to a divorce or separation instrument [see Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(b)(A-7); I.R.C. § 71(b)(2)], and (2) it occurs not more than six years after the date on which the marriage ceases. If it occurs more than six years after the cessation of the marriage, it is presumed to be not related to the cessation of marriage. This presumption may be rebutted only by showing that the transfer was made to effect a division of property owned by the former spouses at the time of the cessation of marriage [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(b)(A-7)]. For additional coverage of Internal Revenue Code Section 1041, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender).

Note that if the residence is sold to a third party, the transaction may have capital gains tax consequences, although these have been ameliorated to some extent by repeal of the rollover provisions of (now former) Internal Revenue Code § 1034 and enactment of provisions for liberal exclusion of gain [see Ch. 160].

[d] Mortgage and Related Payments

This form provides that one or both of the parties will make all mortgage, tax, and insurance payments. Normally, that party will be the resident party. The payment by the resident party of the housing costs is essentially a payment of a reasonable amount for the cotenant's yielding of his or her right of possession. Alternatively, the parties may wish to have the nonresident party make payments on the mortgage as additional support for the resident party, but these payments will apparently fail to qualify as deductible spousal support for income tax purposes if both parties remain owners of the property [see I.R.C. § 71; Temp. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q-6, 7]. For discussion of the deductibility of payments made to a third party "on behalf of" a spouse, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender). For support related forms in that publication, see Chapter 214, Spousal and Child Support Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements.

[2] FORMDeferred Sale of Family Home for Benefit of Minor Children

Deferred Sale of Family Home for Benefit of Minor Children

The parties presently own a home titled as [specify form of ownership, e.g., community property], located at _____ [specify street address] in _____ County, California, and that is more particularly described [as follows: _____ (legal description) or in Exhibit _____, which is attached to this Agreement and incorporated by reference]. As part of the division of their community estate, the parties agree that the residence shall be sold, but that sale shall be deferred temporarily for the following reasons:

- a. It is economically feasible for the parties to maintain the payments on the note secured by the trust deed on their family residence, property taxes, and insurance for the deferral period stated hereafter, and to maintain the condition of the home comparable to that at the time of this Agreement.
- b. A deferred sale of the residence is in the best interest of, and would otherwise minimize the adverse impact of the dissolution on, the parties' minor children, in that _____ [state relevant factors, e.g., the residence has been specially modified for the special needs of the child/children (and/or resident parent), and/or the residence is in close proximity to the child care [or other] facility for the child/children and/or the location of the residence will permit the resident parent to continue employment, and/or other factor(s) found in Family Code Section 3802], and _____ [nonresidential parent] will not be substantially burdened economically by the deferral of sale.

The parties agree to execute, concurrently with the execution of this Agreement, a deed to the property to themselves as tenants in common. The deed shall be in the form set forth in Exhibit _____, which is attached to this Agreement and incorporated by reference. The parties also agree to have the deed recorded forthwith.

The period of temporary deferral and of exclusive use, occupancy, and possession by [residential parent], referred to as the "deferral period," shall terminate on the occurrence of any of the following events: [Select those desired:]

- The youngest child of the parties attains the age of 18 years.
- _____ [residential parent] moves from or otherwise abandons the residence.
- The parties sell the residence by mutual agreement.
- _____ [residential parent] dies or remarries.
- _____ [residential parent] cohabits in the family home with an unrelated adult of the opposite gender.
- _____ [other terminating event].

[Set forth terms of deferred sale (including provisions relating to actual sale after deferral).]

During the deferral period, [residential parent], who is the parent with primary physical custody of the parties' minor children, shall have exclusive use, occupancy, and possession of the family residence.

During the deferral period, neither party may encumber the family residence with any other encumbrances than those existing as of the time of this Agreement.

During the deferral period, [Husband or Wife or both parties] shall be responsible for maintaining the property in good condition. If major repairs or improvements (such as a new roof) become necessary, [Husband or Wife or a party] shall obtain the consent of [Wife or Husband or the other party], which consent shall not be unreasonably withheld, before making any repairs or improvements. The cost of maintenance, repairs, and improvements shall be [shared equally by the parties or paid by _____ (Husband or Wife) or paid _____ percent by Husband and _____ percent by Wife].

During the deferral period, [(Husband or Wife) shall make all or each party shall pay half or Husband shall pay _____ percent and Wife shall pay _____ percent] of the required monthly mortgage payments and payments of property taxes and assessments against the property. If [Husband or Wife or either party] fails to make a required mortgage or property tax payment, [Wife or Husband or the other party] shall have the right to make the payment directly and shall be entitled to reimbursement from [Husband or Wife or the defaulting party] for the payment.

During the deferral period, [Husband shall pay or Wife shall pay or each party shall pay half of or Husband shall pay _____ percent and Wife shall pay _____ percent of] the cost to maintain in force a policy of insurance of a type and in an amount sufficient to protect the parties against loss by fire or other casualty and loss by virtue of liability to third persons resulting from ownership of the property. Both parties shall be named insureds under the policy. If [Husband or Wife or either party] fails to pay to maintain the insurance in force, [Wife or Husband or the other party] shall have the right to secure an appropriate policy and shall be entitled to reimbursement from [Husband or Wife or the defaulting party] for sums expended in preserving the insurance in force that should have been paid by [Husband or Wife or the defaulting party].

[To give one party an option to purchase the other's interest in the property at the end of the deferral period, insert provisions from § 121.233.]

On the first occurrence of a terminating event, the family residence shall be listed for sale with a licensed real estate broker and shall remain listed for sale until it is sold. The property shall be offered for sale at a price that is the fair market value of the residence at that time, as determined by agreement between the parties. On sale of the residence, the net proceeds of sale shall be distributed [equally to the parties or _____ percent to Husband and _____ percent to Wife].

If the property is condemned or totally destroyed, the proceeds remaining after payment of liens and encumbrances and reasonable necessary costs of sale shall be distributed [equally to the parties or _____ percent to Husband and _____ percent to Wife]. In the event of partial destruction and the property is covered by insurance, any insurance proceeds shall be used first for the repair and restoration of the property to its former condition. Any remaining funds shall be used to reduce the amount of any existing encumbrances in accordance with the applicable terms of any outstanding deeds of trust.

The parties agree that a court that hears their proceeding for dissolution of marriage may reserve jurisdiction over the deferral of the sale of the family residence for the purpose of determining any and all issues that arise with respect to the deferral.

§ 121.233 Option to Purchase Other Party's Interest in Family Home

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is for use in a situation in which one party intends to purchase the other's interest in the family home, but needs more time to arrange financing.

This form includes a short form of provisions for the ultimate sale to a third party should the optionee be unable to complete the transaction. If desired, the long form of sale of real property may be used instead [see § 121.231[3]]. This form also include provisions directing the rights and responsibilities of the parties until the option is exercised and the transaction completed.

The option provisions of this form may be inserted in the form in § 121.232 (Deferred Sale of Family Home for Benefit of Minor Children) to give either party an option to purchase the interest of the other when the deferral period ends [see Fam. Code § 3800 et seq.]. For community real property other than the family home, these option provisions may be included in the form in § 121.234 (Retention of Joint Interest in Real Property as Tenants in Common) to give one party an option to purchase the interest of the other on termination of the tenancy in common. For a community business, these option provisions may also be included in the form in § 121.283 (Retention of Co-ownership in Business), to give one party an option to purchase the interest of the other in the business when the co-ownership is terminated.

§ 121.234 Retention of Joint Ownership of Real Property as Tenants in Common

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, is a marital settlement agreement provision that divides real property of the parties by transferring it to them as tenants in common. This form is for use with community real property other than the family home. Its most likely use would be with income-producing property for which it would make better economic sense for the parties to retain than to sell and divide the proceeds. It might also be used with regard to a vacation home that the parties wish to continue to be able to share.

This form provides for the continuation of this joint ownership arrangement until the parties agree to sell, until receipt of an offer to purchase at a specified price, or until the occurrence of any other terminating event to be specified by the parties. A party may be given an option to buy out the interest of the other on the occurrence of a terminating event. The form in § 121.233[2] for an option to purchase the family home, may be adapted and inserted for this purpose. The clause provides a short form of provisions for the ultimate sale of the property to a third party should no option be exercised. For the long form for sale of real property to a third party, see § 121.231[3].

This form provides for the payment of all expenses associated with the property from any income produced by the property. If income is insufficient, it includes language allocating responsibility for maintenance and repairs, the payment of the mortgage and related expenses, and the maintenance of insurance.

[b] Joint Ownership

The parties to a marital settlement agreement may wish to co-own certain real property after the termination of their marriage. For example, joint ownership may be advantageous if market conditions are unfavorable for an immediate sale or if a tax holding period has not been completed [see, e.g., I.R.C. § 121 (providing for exclusion of gain up to statutory amount on sale or exchange of property owned and used as principal residence for two or more years during five-year period ending on date of sale or exchange)].

When joint ownership is desired, tenancy in common is generally preferred to a joint tenancy because the parties typically do not wish to create a right of survivorship, which is the principal distinguishing feature of a joint tenancy [see Goldberg v. Goldberg (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 623, 628, 32 Cal. Rptr. 93]. Tenants in common do not have a right of survivorship.

Each tenant in common holds an undivided interest in the property [Davis v. Davis (1963) 222 Cal. App. 2d 691, 693, 35 Cal. Rptr. 281]. The interests of the cotenants need not be equal [see Civ. Code §§ 683, 685]. For further discussion of tenancy in common, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles (Matthew Bender).

The main drawback to the creation of a tenancy in common in connection with a dissolution of marriage or a legal separation is that the parties' affairs will not be completely severed. Consequently, there is the potential for future conflicts over the property and its management and control. If the transfer of marital property to the parties as tenants in common is made without any further agreement, the parties will each have the right of possession and all the other attributes of tenants in common [see Cole v. Cole (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 691, 695, 294 P.2d 494]. Consequently, if they wish to allocate rights and responsibilities with respect to the property, they should include provisions that accomplish this purpose, or enter into a separate management agreement.

Retention of Joint Ownership of Real Property as Tenants in Common

Tenancy in Common

Husband and Wife presently own as [specify form of ownership, e.g., community property] real property situated in [location], and more particularly described [as follows: _____ (legal description) or in Exhibit _____, which is attached to this Agreement and incorporated by reference]. This property is [nature of property, e.g., a 12-unit apartment building]. On _____, this property shall be divided equally between the parties so that each party will retain an undivided one-half separate interest as a tenant in common.

The parties agree to execute, concurrently with the execution of this Agreement, a deed to the property to themselves as tenants in common. The deed shall be in the form set forth in Exhibit _____, which is attached to this Agreement and incorporated by reference. The parties also agree to have the deed recorded as of [specify when deed should be recorded].

Each party agrees to obtain the written consent of the other before encumbering the property.

During the tenancy in common, [(Husband or Wife) shall be entitled to the exclusive possession and use or both parties shall have a right of possession and use] of the property.

During the tenancy in common, any gross income produced by the property shall first be applied to the payment of mortgages and other debts encumbering the property, taxes and other assessments against the property, insurance on the property, and maintenance of and repairs to the property. Any net income remaining after all such amounts have been paid shall be distributed [equally to the parties or _____ percent to Husband and _____ percent to Wife].

During the tenancy in common, to the extent not paid from income from the property, [Husband or Wife or both parties] shall be responsible for maintaining the property in good condition. If major repairs or improvements (such as a new roof) become necessary, [Wife or Husband or a party] shall obtain the consent of [Husband or Wife or the other party], which consent shall not be unreasonably withheld, before making the repairs or improvements. The cost of maintenance, repairs, and improvements shall be [shared equally by the parties or paid by _____ (Husband or Wife) or paid _____ percent by Husband and _____ percent by Wife].

During the tenancy in common, to the extent not paid from income from the property, [(Husband or Wife) shall make all or each party shall pay half or Husband shall pay _____ percent and Wife shall pay _____ percent] of the required monthly mortgage payments and payments of property taxes and assessments against the property. If [Husband or Wife or either party] fails to make a required mortgage or property tax payment, [Wife or Husband or the other party] shall have the right to make the payment directly and shall be entitled to reimbursement from [Wife or Husband or the defaulting party] for the payment.

During the tenancy in common, to the extent not paid from income from the property, [Husband shall pay or Wife shall pay or each party shall pay half of or Husband shall pay _____ percent and Wife shall pay _____ percent of] the cost to maintain in force a policy of insurance of a type and in an amount sufficient to protect the parties against loss by fire or other casualty and loss by virtue of liability to third persons resulting from ownership of the property. Both parties shall be named insureds under the policy. If [Husband or Wife or either party] fails to pay to maintain the insurance in force, [Wife or Husband or the other party] shall have the right to secure an appropriate policy and shall be entitled to reimbursement from [Husband or Wife or the defaulting party] for sums expended in preserving the insurance in force that should have been paid by [Husband or Wife or the defaulting party].

The parties agree to take steps to terminate their co-ownership on the occurrence of the earliest of the following (hereafter referred to as "terminating events"):

- The parties mutually agree to sell the property.
- The parties receive an offer to purchase the property from a buyer who is ready, willing, and able to buy the real property for a selling price of at least $ _____.
- The expiration of the period of time commencing on the execution of this Agreement and ending on _____ [date].

[To give one party an option to purchase the other's interest in the property on the occurrence of a terminating event, insert provisions from § 121.233[2].]

[To provide for the eventual sale of the property, continue with the following (or use Long Form of Sale of Real Property to Third Party, § 121.231[3]).]

On the first occurrence of a terminating event, the property shall be listed for sale with a licensed real estate broker and shall remain listed for sale until it is sold. The property shall be offered for sale at a price that is the fair market value of the property at that time, as determined by agreement between the parties. On sale of the property, the net proceeds of sale shall be distributed _____ [equally to the parties or _____ percent to Husband and _____ percent to Wife].

If the property is condemned or totally destroyed, the proceeds remaining after payment of liens and encumbrances and reasonable necessary costs of sale shall be distributed _____ [equally to the parties or _____ percent to Husband and _____ percent to Wife]. In the event of partial destruction and the property is covered by insurance, any insurance proceeds shall be used first for the repair and restoration of the property to its former condition. Any remaining funds shall be used to reduce the amount of any existing encumbrances in accordance with the applicable terms of any outstanding deeds of trust.

§ 121.235 Provisions for Interspousal Transfer of Real Property

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Forms

The forms set forth in [2]-[4], below, are for use in a transfer of community real property from one spouse to the other. An interspousal transfer of realty may be accomplished in a marital settlement agreement simply by including the property in the schedule or list of assets that are assigned to the transferee spouse. Then, if appropriate, these forms may be included to address other matters involved in the transfer.

Form [2] is for use if the transferee spouse is to be protected from liability for a debt that is secured by the transferred real property [see [b], below]. Form [3] specifies the form of deed and places requirements for its delivery from the transferor to the transferee. Form [4] is the transferor's release in various deposits from community rental property.

[b] Handling Existing Encumbrances

A transferee of real property who takes the property "subject to" an existing mortgage or deed of trust does not assume or agree to pay the secured debt [see Wolfert v. Guadagno (1933) 130 Cal. App. 661, 663, 20 P.2d 360], and does not become personally liable for the debt [see Braun v. Crew (1920) 183 Cal. 728, 731, 192 P. 531; Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 590, 599, 125 Cal. Rptr. 557, 542 P.2d 981]. Instead, the property remains the primary security for the obligation [Birkhofer v. Krumm (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 43, 50, 40 P.2d 553], and the transferor (if he or she is the original trustor or mortgagor) remains personally liable for the payment of the debt, subject to the antideficiency provisions of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 580b and 580d [see Ward v. DeOca (1898) 120 Cal. 102, 105, 52 P. 130].

A transferee of real property subject to a mortgage or deed of trust "assumes" the encumbrance by agreeing to pay and discharge the debt that the transferor is liable for and that is secured by the mortgage or trust deed. Thus, the assuming transferee becomes personally liable for the debt to the mortgagee or beneficiary [see Williams v. Naftzger (1894) 103 Cal. 438, 440, 37 P. 411] . Although the assuming transferee becomes the principal debtor of the mortgagee or beneficiary, the transferor remains liable, but only as a surety for the transferee [see Braun v. Crew (1920) 183 Cal. 728 . 731, 192 P. 531] .

In a marital settlement, a transfer "subject to" is not likely to be common. Usually, in a transfer of community real property from one spouse to the other, both parties will be liable on all mortgages secured by the real property. There may be situations, however, in which the spouses have given a security interest in the property to secure indebtedness unrelated to the purchase, refinancing, or improvements to the real property (often a business loan) that will become the separate obligation of the transferor spouse. In such a case, use of the "subject to" clause might be appropriate to protect the transferee spouse from any possible liability on the debt, even though the property will remain as security.

[2] FORM--Transfer "Subject To" Existing Encumbrances

Transfer "Subject To" Existing Encumbrances

The property is transferred subject to the following encumbrances and liens on the property: [specify].

[3] FORM--Delivery of Deed

Delivery of Deed

[Transferor spouse's, e.g., Husband's] conveyance of [his/her] interest in [property transferred] shall be by [form of deed]. The deed shall be executed [time, e.g., within 30 days of the effective date of this Agreement] and shall be recorded [time, e.g., within 30 days of execution]. On delivery of the deed to [transferee spouse, e.g., Wife], [she/he] shall be solely responsible for all obligations with respect to the property. [transferee spouse, e.g., Wife] indemnifies and agrees to hold [transferor spouse, e.g., Husband] harmless with respect to all obligations arising after delivery of the deed.

[4] FORM--Waiver of Right to Deposits for Rental Property

Waiver of Right to Deposits for Rental Property

[Transferor spouse, e.g., Husband] specifically waives all rights to utility deposits, rental deposits, escrow deposits, and any prepaid insurance premiums with respect to [his/her] transfer of [his/her] interest in [rental property subject to interspousal transfer].

§ 121.250 Description of Personal Property

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, consists of alternative descriptions of items of personal property (other than business interests, securities, and bank accounts) that may be included in a marital settlement agreement. Descriptions of business interests are set forth in § 121.280; and § 121.310 contains descriptions of securities and bank accounts. For descriptions of real property assets, see § 121.230.

For clauses dividing the personal property of the spouses, see §§ 121.251-121.255.

[b] General Description of Items

A marital settlement agreement frequently contains a general description of items of personal property, such as "any and all furniture, furnishings, appliances, objects of art, clothing, jewelry, and personal effects situated in or about the _____ [Husband's or Wife's] residence at _____ [address, city, state]." Particular items of value should be listed and described separately. Items that merit a separate listing include vehicles, pets and other animals of value, antiques, jewelry, furs, coins, stamps, and paintings, or other collectibles. An interest in an estate or a beneficial interest in a trust should also be listed separately.

[c] Groups of Assets

The agreement may contain a general description of a particular type or group of items, such as "power and hand tools in the garage" or "office furniture and equipment in the den," in lieu of a comprehensive listing of the individual items. However, if a dispute should arise at a later date concerning these items, it will be difficult to prove what property was in the specified location on a certain date. Consequently, if there is a possibility that a dispute may arise, the better practice would be to attach an itemized list of the major items of the property as an exhibit or a schedule to the agreement and to incorporate the exhibit or schedule by reference in a general description set forth in the agreement.

If one party is to receive most of the items in a group of assets (such as a jewelry collection) and the other party is to receive a few of them, the description of the property being given to the first party may identify the group in general terms and except certain specific items that are described elsewhere as going to the other party. For example, if the wife is to receive the bulk of a jewelry collection, the description of the collection included in the list of her property could read as follows: "Except as otherwise expressly provided in Exhibit _____, which is attached to this Agreement and incorporated by reference, the jewelry collection of the parties presently in Wife's possession."

§ 121.251 Acknowledgment of Prior Division

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is for use if the parties have already divided up some or all of their personal property and want to confirm the division in their agreement as fair and equitable. They may either list the items that have been divided in an attached exhibit or schedule, or simply confirm that each party is entitled to the personal property that is currently in his or her possession, without providing a list of the divided items. The latter approach is more appropriate if there are few or no items of significant value. Without a list, there is no evidence of what was in whose possession at the time of the agreement.

[2] FORM

Acknowledgment of Prior Division of Personal Property

Prior Division of Personal Property

The parties acknowledge that they have previously divided all of their personal property not otherwise specifically disposed of in this Agreement between them to their mutual satisfaction. Each party confirms the division as fair and equitable and transfers, assigns, and conveys to the other all right, title, and interest to the divided personal property _____, [as set forth in Schedule _____, which is attached to this Agreement and incorporated by reference or in the possession of the other].

§ 121.252 Sale of Personal Property Not Divided by Parties

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, can be used to require the sale of either a single item of personal property or a list or category of personal property to a third party. Use of the clause would be appropriate, for example, if personal property such as household furniture and furnishings are to be sold at auction. The property to be sold can be set forth either in the agreement directly or in a schedule. The clause provides that after the payment of the expenses of the sale, the net proceeds may either be used to pay debts or divided equally between the parties. If used to pay debts, the specific debts to which the proceeds are to be applied are listed either in the agreement or in a schedule.

[b] Taxation

Counsel should inform the parties that the sale of marital property to a third party will not, as a general rule, qualify for nonrecognition under Internal Revenue Code Section 1041. A transfer to a third party may qualify for nonrecognition only if the transfer is on behalf of a spouse or former spouse [see I.R.C. § 1041(a)]. A sale of property that does not qualify for nonrecognition may be a taxable event if the property is sold for more than the adjusted tax basis of the parties in the property [see I.R.C. § 1221]. For further discussion, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender).

[2] FORM

[OR, if proceeds are to be used to pay community debts:]

§ 121.253 Sale of Motor Vehicle

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, is for use to provide for the sale of one or more motor vehicles to a third party. The initial asking price is set at the value of the vehicle as shown in the parties' Schedule of Assets and Debts (Judicial Council Form FL-142). If the vehicle does not sell at this price, the clause provides either for the parties to agree on a reduced sale price, or for a percent reduction in sale price at specified intervals until the vehicle is sold. A minimum price is provided, however.

The proceeds of sale are either to be divided equally or applied to specified community debts. Debts to be paid may be either listed in the agreement or set forth in a separate schedule.

[2] FORM

_____ [short description of motor vehicle] for sale, the parties shall mutually agree to adjust the price and/or the other terms and conditions of sale. If the parties are unable to agree on adjustments, either may apply to the court for an order setting a different asking price and/or other terms and conditions of sale.

[1] Comment

The forms set forth in [2]-[4], below, are for use if one spouse, as part of the overall division of community property, is to release his or her interest in the property to the other. While the property may be simply listed in the list or schedule of property that the transferee is to receive [see § 121.202], use of these more particularized clauses provides for the disposition of certain collateral rights and obligations associated with the property. In the case of an automobile or other motor vehicle [Form [2]] the clause provides for the transfer of insurance and the duty to maintain insurance. In the case of a vessel (watercraft) [Form [3]] the clause provides for the transfer of any interest in a boat slip, berth, or docking facility. In the case of an aircraft [Form 4], the clause provides for the transfer of any hangar or other aircraft parking facility rights.

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, provides for which party is to receive a family pet. The clause includes provisions regarding veterinary care and the sale of the pet to a third party, giving the other spouse the first opportunity to acquire the pet.

In the case of an animal that has monetary worth because of its use for breeding purposes or for specialized shows, counsel should add a clause that provides for the disposition of any related anticipated income, such as unpaid breeding fees, and breeding fees that may be obtained in the future.

The question of whether the parties may, by their agreement, create enforceable visitation rights with an animal has not been addressed by a California court.

§ 121.270 Interspousal Transfer of Interest in Life Insurance Policy

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, provides for the assignment of a community property interest in a life insurance policy from one spouse to the other [see generally Life Insurance Co. of North America v. Cassidy (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 599, 606, 200 Cal. Rptr. 28, 676 P.2d 1050]. A segregated buy-out of life insurance apart from the rest of the division of community property is not necessary. The parties may simply allocate the insurance asset to the assignee party as part of their overall division of the community estate. As long as the overall division is fair and equitable, the separate consideration allocated to the life insurance assignment need not be specifically set forth.

For discussion of the assignment of life insurance policies, see California Insurance Law & Practice, Chapter 21, The Life Insurance Contract (Matthew Bender). For forms concerning insurance in relation to support, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 214, Spousal and Child Support Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements (Matthew Bender).

[b] Disposition of Community Life Insurance Policies

Community life insurance may be address in several ways. It may be allocated to the named insured as part of the parties' division of their community property in exchange for the payment of the assignor's community interest in the insurance [see [2], below]. Or it may be surrendered to the insurer and the proceeds, if any, divided [see § 121.271]. Or it may be partitioned; that is, surrendered to the insurer in exchange for two policies, one on the life of each of the spouses, each for half the amount of the surrendered policy [see § 121.272].

Life insurance is also commonly used as security for support or to provide a replacement for support in case of the death of the payor. In such a case, provisions must be included governing the disposition of the death benefit on the death of the named insured. For clauses for this purpose, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 214, Spousal and Child Support Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements (Matthew Bender).

[c] Divisibility of Life Insurance

Courts have recognized a property interest in whole life insurance and have divided that value when a policy is determined to be community property. The value of the insurance is its cash surrender value [see In re Marriage of Lorenz (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 464, 468, 194 Cal. Rptr. 237 ; see also In re Marriage of Holmgren (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 869, 871, 130 Cal. Rptr. 440] . However, in the case of term life insurance, there is a split in the courts of appeal concerning its divisibility and valuation on dissolution of marriage [see In re Marriage of Lorenz (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 464, 468, 194 Cal. Rptr. 237 ; Estate of Logan (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 319, 325-326 236 Cal. Rptr. 368 ; In re Marriage of Gonzalez (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 1021, 1024-1025, 214 Cal. Rptr. 634] . For discussion of that split, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues (Matthew Bender).

Life Insurance

The parties agree that the following life insurance policy is the community property of the parties: [set forth name of insured, policy number, name of insurer, face value, and current cash surrender value, e.g., A Prudential whole life insurance policy, policy number AF23 456 333, on the life of Jane Smith, with a face value of $10,000 and a current cash surrender value of $1,300].

As part of the division of their community property, [transferor spouse, e.g., Husband] hereby assigns all right, title, and interest that [he/she] has in the above life insurance policy (including any cash value) to [transferee spouse, e.g., Wife] as [her/his] separate property, and releases and relinquishes any and all claims that [he/she] may have or may assert in the future against the policy. [transferor spouse] agrees to release [his/her] interest as the designated beneficiary in the above policy. § 121.271 Surrender of Community Life Insurance Policy and Distribution of Proceeds

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, provides for (1) the surrender of an existing life insurance policy for its cash surrender value, and (2) the division of the cash surrender value. This is a relatively quick and simple way to effect an equal division of community life insurance. It may be used if the parties cannot otherwise agree on the disposition of life insurance, if other assets do not exist to offset the value of the insurance if it were to be assigned to one spouse, or if there are several policies with a cash value and the most efficient division is by using that value.

For coverage of the division of life insurance in general, see § 121.270[1][b].

[b] Disadvantages

There may be disadvantages in surrendering an existing policy for its cash value. These disadvantages include the elimination of a potential source of support for a spouse or child on the death of the insured spouse, the sacrifice of some of the acquisitions costs of the surrendered policy (because cash value is usually less than cost), and the difficulty or perhaps impossibility of obtaining new life insurance.

[2] FORM

Surrender of Community Life Insurance Policy and Distribution of Proceeds

Surrender of Life Insurance

The parties agree that the following life insurance policy is the community property of the parties: [set forth name of insured, policy number, name of insurer, face value, and current cash surrender value, e.g., A Prudential whole life insurance policy, policy number AF23 456 333, on the life of Jane Smith, with a face value of $10,000 and a current cash surrender value of $1,300].

As part of the division of their community property, the parties shall, on execution of this Agreement, surrender the above life insurance policy to the insurer for the current cash surrender value. Thereafter, the proceeds shall be distributed to Husband and Wife in equal shares [or according to the community and separate property interest of each or other division].

§ 121.272 Partition of Life Insurance Policy

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, provides for the partition of a life insurance policy. It may be used if the parties wish to continue to hold life insurance and to divide the community property interests in the insurance. Partition requires the parties to surrender the existing policy to the insurer in exchange for a policy on the life of each spouse with a face amount of one-half the original policy. Because partitioning requires the issuance of two new insurance policies and involves personal factors (such as the age, health, and financial capabilities of the parties), counsel should contact the insurer to ensure that this method of division is in fact feasible. Obtaining written confirmation from the insurer that two new policies will be issued appears to be the most prudent course to follow before the insured party agrees to a partition.

Partition may be the preferred disposition of community life insurance if an assignment will not provide adequate offsetting liquid assets to permit a buy-out by the assignee spouse, or if an in-kind division is necessary to achieve an equal division of the community estate.

[2] FORM

Partition of Life Insurance Policy

Partition of Life Insurance Policy

The parties agree that the following life insurance policy is the community property of the parties: [set forth name of insured, policy number, name of insurer, face value, and current cash surrender value, e.g., A Prudential whole life insurance policy, policy number AF23 456 333, on the life of Jane Smith, with a face value of $10,000 and a current cash surrender value of $1,300].

As part of the division of their community property, the parties shall, on execution of this Agreement, surrender the above life insurance policy to the insurer for a partition of the policy and the issuance of two life insurance policies with the following characteristics: one policy shall be in the name of Husband and one policy shall be in the name of Wife; each shall have one-half of the face value of the death benefit of the original policy; each shall have one-half of the current cash surrender value of the original policy; and each shall be the separate property of the spouse in whose name the policy appears.

The parties agree that surrender and partition of the foregoing policy is conditioned on the insurer's willingness to issue two policies. The parties acknowledge that the insurer's own standards will apply in determining whether the policies will be issued. Should the insurer decline to issue either or both of the new policies requested, the policy shall be surrendered and its then current cash value will be equally divided between the parties [or other disposition].

§ 121.273 Transfer of Property in Trust for Children

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, provides for both spouses to transfer community property to create an irrevocable trust for the benefit of their minor children. The provision incorporates by reference the trust instrument, which is to be attached to the agreement and executed concurrently with the execution of the marital settlement agreement.

The parties to a marital settlement agreement are often concerned with the rights of their children to succeed to some or all of their community property. Each party may be concerned that the other party will remarry and that the other party's spouse will succeed to the other party's estate to the exclusion of the children. One method of avoiding such a situation is to create a trust for the benefit of the children and to transfer a share of the community property to the trust. The parties may then equally divide the remaining portion of the property.

This trust is not designed to meet either party's duty of child support. Income produced by the trust is to be accumulated in the trust to increase the value of the property ultimately to be distributed to the children. For agreement provisions requiring trusts to meet a duty of support, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 214, Spousal and Child Support Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements (Matthew Bender).

For extensive coverage of irrevocable trusts, see Chapter 72.

[b] Taxation

Under an exception to the nonrecognition provisions of Internal Revenue Code Section 1041 [see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution

(Matthew Bender)], a transfer of property in trust will result in a taxable event to the extent that the sum of the liabilities assumed plus the liabilities to which the property is subject exceeds the total adjusted basis of the property. In that case, an adjustment must be made under Internal Revenue Code Section 1041(b) in the basis of the transferee in the property to take into account gain recognized because of the transfer [I.R.C. § 1041(e)]. For additional coverage of this exception to nonrecognition, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender).

As a general principle, a trust is a separate taxpayer and is taxable on trust income [I.R.C. § 641(a)]. However, this general principle is qualified by the grantor trust rules of the Internal Revenue Code [see I.R.C. § 671 et seq.], which, if applicable, treat the grantor as the substantial owner of a trust, and thereby taxable on trust income. Among the trust provisions that have this tax effect are the power to revoke [see I.R.C. § 676] and distributions of income to the grantor or the grantor's spouse, including distributions used to discharge the grantor's or spouse's obligation of support of a beneficiary [see I.R.C. § 677]. There are also special rules for the taxation of income from a trust used to pay alimony or child support incident to a decree of dissolution of marriage or legal separation [see I.R.C. § 682; see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., chs. 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution, 214, Spousal and Child Support Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements (Matthew Bender)]. If particular tax treatment is desired for any trust created in the context of dissolution of marriage, an estate planning or trust law specialist should be consulted.

§ 121.274 Revocation or Amendment of Trust

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, provides for the revocation of a revocable trust. If the parties wish to dispose of the property of an existing revocable trust, they should revoke the trust.

The form in [3], below, converts an existing revocable trust into an irrevocable trust. It is for use if the parties agree that the provisions of the trust are acceptable. Usually, a trust is made irrevocable if the primary concern of the parties is the rights of the children to succeed to the property. If the trust does not adequately provide for the children, the parties should consider revoking the trust and creating an irrevocable trust for the benefit of the children [see § 121.273].

If a revocable trust is being amended and one of the spouses is the trustee, the parties should remove that spouse as trustee and appoint an independent trustee.

§ 121.280 Description of Business Interests

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, contains illustrative descriptions of business interests. The descriptions may be inserted into a marital settlement agreement provision describing the property of the parties. For descriptions of securities and bank accounts, see § 121.310. Section 121.250 contains descriptions of other types of personal property. For clauses dividing the business interests of the spouses, see §§ 121.281-121.284.

The description of the business or interest normally should be in general terms and should not contain an itemization of each asset of the business. If there are any specific business assets of significant value, such as vehicles or parcels of real estate, or if there is a chance that a dispute will arise in the future concerning the assets, the assets may be described in an exhibit or schedule that is attached to the marital settlement agreement and incorporated by reference. As in other cases, it is recommended that a full legal description of any real property be given, preferably in an exhibit that is incorporated by reference, in case a party wishes to record the agreement.

§ 121.281 Interspousal Transfer of Interest in Community Business or Professional Practice

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Forms

The forms set forth in [2] and [3], below, provide for the transfer of one spouse's community interest in a sole proprietorship or other enterprise [Form [2]] or in a professional practice [Form [3]], to the other spouse. Typically, such a transfer would be made from the spouse who is not operating the business or practice to the operating spouse. In the case of a spouse who holds a professional license, such as an attorney or physician, the license holder would always be awarded the practice.

These forms also transfer the interest of the nonproprietor spouse in the assets of the business. They assume that the assets are listed in a separate exhibit or schedule. These forms are for use for businesses operated as sole proprietorships or partnerships in which a spouse is a general partner. Other clauses address community interests in limited partnerships [see § 121.282] and closely held corporations [see § 121.284].

[b] Characterization and Transfer of Partnership Interest

A partner's right in specific partnership property is not community property [Corp. Code § 15025(e) (repealed, operative January 1, 1999); cf. Corp. Code §§ 16501, 16502]. However, if community assets are transferred to a partnership of which one spouse is a member, the partner-spouse's interest in the partnership is itself community property, and the nonpartner-spouse acquires a general claim in the partner-spouse's share of the partnership in place of the nonpartner's interest in the community assets transferred to the partnership [Rosenthal v. Rosenthal (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 927, 930-931, 50 Cal. Rptr. 385] . In other words, the nonpartner does not have a community property right in the partnership or in specific partnership property, but does have a community interest in the partner-spouse's partnership interest.

On dissolution or legal separation, the nonpartner's community interest typically is transferred to the partner, and the nonpartner spouse is given property or money equal to one-half of the present value of the partner-spouse's partnership interest as compensation for giving up his or her claim to the partner-spouse's share of the partnership [see Rosenthal v. Rosenthal (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 927, 931, 50 Cal. Rptr. 385 ; Carmichael v. Carmichael (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 674, 682-683, 31 Cal. Rptr. 514] . § 121.282 Interspousal Transfer of One Party's Community Interest in Partnership

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is for use to divide a community limited partnership interest between the parties. It is for use if the community interest is as a limited partner. It is not for use if the community is interested in a limited partnership as a general partner.

The clause includes a mutual request of the limited partnership that the parties' interest be divided and that each be supplied with documentation as to his or her new ownership interest in the limited partnership. If either or both parties have received any distributions from the partnership that have not otherwise been addressed in the agreement, the clause requires an accounting and appropriate division of the distributions. The clause also provides for the division of any distributions that may be received before the division of their interests by the partnership is effected.

For discussion of using promissory notes to equalize a division of community assets, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles (Matthew Bender). If the partnership involves a professional practice, see § 121.281[3], for a related form.

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.§ 121.283 Retention of Co-ownership in Business*[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is a marital settlement agreement clause providing for the maintenance by both parties of an equal interest in an income-producing enterprise, either for an indefinite period or pending its sale to a third party. The form contemplates that one of the parties will actually manage the enterprise and that there will be a distribution of net income from the enterprise to the parties. The distribution may be either equal or according to percentages specified by the parties.

The co-ownership continues until the parties agree to sell, until an offer to purchase is received at a specified price, or until any other event that the parties specify. On the occurrence of a terminating event, one party may be given the option to purchase the interest of the other party. On the eventual sale of the property, either a long form or short form of terms and conditions of sale may be included. The distribution of the proceeds of sale may also be either equal or according to percentages specified by the parties.

For forms providing for the sale of real property, including income-producing property, see § 121.231. For a form for use to retain income-producing real property, see § 121.234.

b. From the gross income earned by the business, all fixed and operating expenses shall be paid. If the business does not generate sufficient gross income to pay all of its fixed and operating expenses, then these expenses shall be paid by _____ [Husband or Wife], and before any distribution of net income is made to the parties. After the payment of these expenses, the net income shall first be applied to reimburse _____ [Husband or Wife] for payments of business expenses made from [his/her] separate property. The balance shall be distributed _____ [equally or _____ percent to Husband and _____ percent to Wife].

The parties shall terminate their co-ownership of the business on the occurrence of the earliest of the following (hereafter referred to as "terminating events"):

- The parties mutually agree to sell the business.
- The parties receive an offer to purchase the business from a buyer who is ready, willing, and able to buy the business for a selling price of at least $_____.
- The expiration of the period of time commencing on the execution of this Agreement and ending _____ [specify terminating date or event].

[To give one party an option to purchase the other's interest in the business on the occurrence of a terminating event, adapt provisions from § 121.233[2].]

[To provide for the eventual sale of the business, continue with the following (or adapt Long Form of Sale of Real Property to Third Party, § 121.231[3]).]

On the first occurrence of a terminating event, the business shall be listed for sale with a licensed real estate broker and shall remain listed for sale until it is sold. The business shall be offered for sale at a price that is the fair market value of the business at that time, as determined by agreement between the parties. On sale of the business, the net proceeds of sale shall be distributed _____ [equally to the parties or _____ percent to Husband and _____ percent to Wife].

§ 121.284 Distribution of Community Shares of Closely Held Corporation

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Forms

The forms set forth in § 121.284[2]-[6] provide five different approaches to address the disposition of community property shares of stock in a closely held corporation. The options are the following:

1. The parties will divide their shares in the corporation equally [see § 121.284[1][c] and Form [2]];
2. One party is to transfer his or stock to the other [Form [3]];
3. The corporation is to redeem the shares of one spouse [Form [4]];
4. A voting trust will be used to enable one spouse to control the corporation [Form [5]];
5. The corporation is to be dissolved and its assets distributed [Form [6]].

The division of stock between parties should qualify for nonrecognition (for income tax purposes) under Internal Revenue Code Section 1041. For discussion of Section 1041, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender).

[b] Definition of "Closely Held Corporation"

For these purposes, "closely held corporation" means a corporation with relatively few shareholders. There are different types of closely held corporations. For example, under the General Corporation Law [Corp. Code § 100 et seq.], a "close corporation" is a corporation whose articles contain, in addition to other required provisions [see Corp. Code §

202]: (1) a provision that all of the corporation's issued shares of all classes must be held of record by not more than a specified number of persons, not exceeding 35; and (2) the statement "This corporation is a close corporation" [Corp. Code § 158(a)]. Characteristics of closely held corporations, in addition to the relatively small number of shareholders, include an emphasis on simplified and informal procedures, general participation by the shareholders in decision making, and restrictions on the transfer of shares to limit the intrusion of outsiders into the business. For further discussion of these corporations, see Ballantine & Sterling, California Corporation Laws, Ch. 4 (Matthew Bender).

[c] Division Problems

One of the most difficult problems to be resolved in connection with a marital dissolution is the disposition of one spouse's community interest in a closely held corporation operated by the other spouse. A simple division of the stock between the husband and wife [Form 2]] is seldom satisfactory because it is unlikely that the corporation could operate effectively with control split between the parties. Further, if the spouses own all of the stock of the corporation, the parties probably will not be able to agree on the directors of the corporation, and either party will always be able to threaten the other with dissolution of the corporation, because 50 percent of the voting stock of a corporation can cause a voluntary dissolution of the corporation [Corp. Code § 1900; see § 121.284[6] (voluntary dissolution)] in the absence of contrary provisions in the shareholders' agreement [Corp. Code § 300(c)]. For these reasons, parties to a marital settlement agreement often provide for the removal of one spouse's interest in the business. Forms [3] through [6] represent different ways of accomplishing this removal.

[d] Professional Corporations

In the case of a professional corporation [see Corp. Code § 13401(b) ("professional corporation" defined); see also Ch. 12A Professional Corporations] the shares may be transferred only to a licensed person or to the professional corporation, and any transfer that violates this restriction is void [Corp. Code § 13407]. Consequently, the shares could not be transferred to an unlicensed spouse, and his or her shares would have to be transferred to the licensed spouse, with an offsetting award of other community property to the unlicensed spouse, assuming the shares were community property.

For comprehensive coverage of professional corporations, see Ch. 12A Professional Corporations .

[e] Redemption

Form [4] requires one spouse to offer his or her shares for sale to the corporation. The redemption of the shares by the corporation permits the spouse with managing control of the business to use corporate funds to acquire the shares. Stock is treated as redeemed by a corporation if the corporation acquires its stock from a shareholder in exchange for property [I.R.C. § 317(b); see Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 17024.5(a), 23051.5(a), 24451-24481 (incorporating federal definition)]. For these purposes, "property" means money, securities, and any other property, but does not include the stock of the corporation (or rights to acquire that stock) [I.R.C. § 317(a)]. The redeemed stock can be canceled, retired, or held as treasury stock [I.R.C. § 317(b); see Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 17024.5(a), 23051.5(a), 24451-24481 (incorporating federal definition)].

[f] Tax Consequences of Redemption

[i] Capital Gain Treatment

If a corporation redeems its stock and one of four conditions apply, the redemption is treated as a distribution in part or full payment in exchange for the stock and the gain or loss recognized by the selling spouse is treated as capital gain or loss [see I.R.C. § 302(a)]. One of the conditions permitting capital gain treatment is that the redemption terminates the shareholder's entire interest in the corporation [I.R.C. § 302(b)(3)]. Form [4] provides for such a termination. However, a redemption of all the spouse's stock in the corporation may not satisfy this condition if the spouse constructively owns other stock of the corporation [see [ii], below]. If capital gain treatment does not apply, the transaction is deemed a dividend and any gain realized by the corporate shareholder is treated as ordinary income [I.R.C. § 302(d)].

An individual shareholder usually prefers sale or exchange treatment because it permits him or her to offset basis in the redeemed shares and receive capital gain treatment on the gain [see I.R.C. §§ 302(a), 1001(a)]. If a redemption is treated as a dividend, it is included in the shareholder's income to the extent it does not exceed the corporation's earnings and profits [I.R.C. §§ 301(a), (c), 302(d), 316]. Even for years in which dividends are taxed at capital gains rates (generally tax years beginning after December 31, 2002, and before January 1, 2009) [see I.R.C. § (h)(11); Pub. Law No. 108-27, §§ 302(f)(1), 303 (effective date and sunset provisions for dividend taxation at capital gains rates)], sale or exchange treatment is preferable because the amount of gain from the sale and exchange will be less because of the offset for the basis of the shares [see I.R.C. § 301(a),(c)]. For other years, the discrepancy between ordinary income and capital gains rates may result in significantly higher tax liability if the redemption is treated as a distribution [see I.R.C. §§ 1(a)-(e), (h), (i)(2), 301(a),(c), 316]. Any portion that exceeds the earnings and profits reduces the basis of the stock. Any portion that exceeds the earnings and profits and the basis of the stock is treated as gain from the sale or exchange of the stock [I.R.C. § 301(c); see Treas. Reg. § 1.301-2].

An individual shareholder may elect to roll over capital gain from the sale of qualified small business stock held for more than six months if other small business stock is purchased by the individual during the 60-day period commencing on the sale date. In this manner, gain is recognized only to the extent that the amount realized on the sale exceeds the cost of the replacement small business stock that is purchased during the 60 day period, reduced by any portion of cost previously taken into account [I.R.C. § 1045].

[ii] Attribution of One Spouse's Stock to Other Spouse

Although a redemption is generally taxed at capital gains rates if it effects a complete termination of the shareholder's interest in the corporation [I.R.C. § 302(b)(3); see [i], above], the family attribution rules provide that stock owned by a shareholder's spouse (or certain relatives) is generally attributed to, and deemed constructively owned by, the shareholder, with certain exceptions [I.R.C. §§ 302(c)(1), (2)(A), 318(a)]. Therefore, even though all of the stock owned by one spouse is redeemed by the corporation, that spouse will retain an interest in the stock of the corporation by virtue of the attribution rules, and any gain realized by the spouse as a result of the redemption will be treated as ordinary income, unless all of the following conditions are satisfied:

1. Immediately after the distribution the former shareholder has no interest in the corporation (including an interest as an officer, director, or employee), other than an interest as a creditor [I.R.C. § 302(c)(2)(A)(i)];
2. The former shareholder does not acquire any interest (other than stock acquired by bequest or inheritance) in the corporation within 10 years from the date of the distribution in redemption [I.R.C. § 302(c)(2)(A)(ii); but see I.R.C. § 302(b)(5)]; and
3. The former shareholder files an agreement to notify the Internal Revenue Service of any acquisition of an interest (other than stock acquired by bequest or inheritance) in the corporation within 10 years from the date of the distribution in redemption [I.R.C. § 302(c)(2)(A)(iii); Treas. Reg. § 1.302-4(a); Rev. & Tax. Code § 23051.5(f); 18 Cal. Code Reg. § 26422].

[iii] Nonrecognition Consequences on Redemption of Spouse's Corporate Stock

Generally, if a corporation redeems its stock from a spouse, the redemption is treated as a distribution in partial or full payment in exchange for the stock, and the selling spouse will recognize a capital gain or loss [see I.R.C. § 302(a); see also discussion in [i], above]. However, transfers of property to third parties on behalf of a spouse or former spouse may qualify for nonrecognition [I.R.C. § 1041(a); Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.1041-1T(c), Q&A 9]. Nonrecognition may occur if a corporation redeems a spouse's stock "on behalf of" of the other spouse. In this situation, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has held that the redeeming spouse is entitled to nonrecognition of income from the redemption [Arnes v. U.S. (9th Cir. 1992) 981 F.2d 456, 459-460] .

However, the Tax Court has denied nonrecognition to the redeeming spouse under similar circumstances [Blatt v. Commissioner (1994) 102 T.C. 77, 83] . Accordingly, there is now a split of authority regarding whether the redeeming spouse in this situation is entitled to nonrecognition of income. Another issue in controversy is whether and under what circumstances the nonredeeming spouse is taxed on redemption of the other spouse's stock (a transfer on behalf of the nonredeeming spouse) as a constructive dividend [see Arnes v. U.S. (9th Cir. 1992) 981 F.2d 456, 459-460 ; Arnes v. Commissioner (1994) 102 T.C. No. 522 ; Blatt v. Commissioner (1994) 102 T.C. 77, 83] . For a general discussion of tax treatment of property transfers on dissolution of marriage, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender).

[g] Voting Trusts

Form [5] provides that the shares of the parties in a closely held corporation are to be transferred to a voting trust. A voting trust is a trust created by a written agreement among the shareholders of a corporation to transfer their shares to a trustee or trustees in order to confer on the trustee or trustees the right to vote and otherwise represent the shares [see Corp. Code § 706(b)]. Consequently, the transfer of the spouses' shares to a voting trust permits them to retain their shares while safeguarding the operation of the corporation from any conflicts that may arise between the spouses.

The spouses should select the trustee or trustees at the time the marital settlement agreement is being negotiated. The agreement should specify the term of the voting trust, which may not exceed 10 years [Corp. Code § 706(b)].

For comprehensive coverage of voting trusts, see Ch. 8B. Voting Agreements and Voting Trusts .

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is a marital settlement agreement clause that provides that one spouse agrees (1) to assume and pay all of the community debts, and (2) to indemnify and hold the other party harmless from these debts. An assumption of all the community debts may be inadvisable in that it may expose the assuming spouse to unknown liabilities [see Ede v. Ede (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 718, 721, 25 Cal. Rptr. 576 (assuming spouse liable for income tax deficiency for prior years when deficiency assessed after execution of marital settlement agreement)]. Consequently, this type of assumption is not recommended for general use.

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, allows the parties to specify that one or more particular debts will be paid from one or more specified sources. For example, the parties might designate a particular account from which the debts are to be paid. Or the parties might agree to sell particular community property or cash in particular community investments in order to pay some or all of their community debts. The division of the community estate will then be net of these debts; that is, the community funds used to pay debts will be subtracted before equitably dividing the remainder of the assets and obligations.

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is a marital settlement agreement clause providing for the creation of a special fund, such as a checking or savings account, that will be used to pay some or all of the debts of the parties. The form provides for the attachment and incorporation by reference of an exhibit or a schedule that lists the debts to be paid from the account. Further, it states that the debts must be paid by a specified date, and that any remaining funds will be divided equally between the parties. The division of the community estate will then be net of these debts; that is, the community funds used to pay debts will be subtracted before equitably dividing the remainder of the assets and obligations.

§ 121.294 Loan to Pay Debts

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, provides that the parties will pay specified community debts by obtaining a loan from a financial institution. Debts are sometimes paid in this manner if there is no liquid source for payment, and the debts are accruing higher interest than what will be payable on the loan. The division of the community estate will then be net of these debts; that is, the amount of the debts will be subtracted before equitably dividing the remainder of the assets and obligations.

The clause provides that the proceeds of the loan are to be deposited in a joint checking account, from which they can be disbursed to the creditors. Should the total loan proceeds exceed the debts to be paid, the balance is to be divided between the parties.

The parties are made jointly and severally liable for repayment of the loan. A party who is forced to pay the share of the other is given a right of indemnity against the defaulting party.

Loan to Pay Debts

Use of Loan to Pay Community Obligations

The parties will obtain a loan from a bank, savings and loan association, or other financial institution in the amount of $ _____ for the purpose of paying the community obligations of the parties set forth in Schedule _____, which is attached to this Agreement and incorporated by reference. The listed debts shall be paid from the escrow on the loan. The parties agree to execute all loan documents required by the lender in connection with the obtaining of the loan. The loan will be secured by [specify security]. The division of the community estate as otherwise set forth in this Agreement is net of the debts to be paid from the loan proceeds.

The loan proceeds shall be deposited in a joint checking account established by the parties and shall be used solely to pay the listed debts. Either party may write checks on or make withdrawals from the account to pay the debts. Any funds remaining in the account after all of the listed debts have been paid shall be divided equally between the parties.

The parties will be jointly and severally liable for the repayment of the loan. Each shall be responsible for payment of half of each installment as it comes due. Should either party fail to make a required payment, and the other pays the entire amount of the payment, the defaulting party shall indemnify the other for all loss or liability that may result from the default.

[Add, If desired.]

If the parties are unable to obtain the required loan, [specify course of action].

34-121 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 121.295

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.§ 121.295 Payment and Termination of Joint Credit Cards and Charge Accounts*[1] Comment

The forms set forth in [2] and [3], below, provide for the payment and closing of joint credit cards [Form [2]] and charge accounts [Form [3]]. If the parties have a joint credit card or joint charge account, the marital settlement agreement should, at a minimum, provide for the termination of the joint liability on the card or account. In most situations, the better approach is to pay off the balance on the card or account, and cancel the card or close the account. Each party may then obtain new credit cards and charge accounts in his or her sole name and based solely on his or her creditworthiness.

Alternatively, the parties might provide for the assumption by one spouse of liability for the payment of the balance due on a joint charge account, and for the removal of the other party from the account. For this purpose, use the form in § 121.203 and assign each card or account to the assuming party. However, there is no guarantee that the creditor will convert the account from joint liability to sole liability, particularly if there is a large outstanding balance due and the creditor expressly relied on the creditworthiness of both spouses in opening the account. Therefore, the nonassuming spouse may not be escaping liability on the card or account.

[2] FORM--Payment and Cancellation of Joint Credit CardsPayment and Termination of Joint Credit Cards

Payment and Cancellation of Credit Card

The parties presently owe $_____ on their joint [credit card kind, e.g., Master Card], Number _____, as shown on the card statement dated _____[date]. This balance will be paid off in its entirety from community funds, and the credit card shall be cancelled. Either party may request the closing of the account from the creditor, and shall give notice to the other party of the request to close. The other party shall take any steps necessary to effect the closing. If either party has incurred or incurs any indebtedness on the credit card that is not reflected in the above balance, that party shall be wholly responsible for payment of that indebtedness, and shall indemnify the other and hold the other harmless from any loss or liability incurred by the other on account of the indebtedness, including any reasonable attorney fees incurred in defending against any alleged claim of liability on account of the indebtedness.

The other shall take any steps necessary to effect the closing. If either party has incurred or incurs any indebtedness on the account that is not reflected in the above balance, that party shall be wholly responsible for payment of that indebtedness, and shall indemnify the other and hold the other harmless from any loss or liability incurred by the other on account of the indebtedness, including any reasonable attorney fees incurred in defending against any alleged claim of liability on account of the indebtedness.

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.§ 121.296 Assumption of Liability on Existing Promissory Note*[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is a marital settlement agreement provision that may be used if (1) both spouses are liable on an existing promissory note and one spouse is to assume liability on the note, or (2) one spouse is liable on the note and the other spouse is to assume liability on it. As a practical matter, this type of provision is typically used if the loan was made to one spouse's business, the lender required the signature of the other spouse, and the unpaid balance of the note is substantial. The clause requires the assuming party to indemnify the other and to hold the other harmless on the note.

If the loan was made on the basis of a guaranty executed by both spouses, the agreement should also contain a provision under which the spouse assuming liability on the note agrees to have the other spouse removed from the guaranty. For such a provision, see § 121.297.

[2] FORMAssumption of Liability on Existing Promissory Note

Assumption of Note

[Husband is or Wife is or Husband and Wife are] presently indebted on a promissory note dated _____, for the amount of $ _____, payable to _____ [name of creditor]. The present balance of the note is $ _____ and is due _____ [date]. [Husband or Wife] agrees to assume this indebtedness and to indemnify and hold [Wife or Husband] harmless from any claim or liability that [she/he] may suffer or may be required to pay on account of the indebtedness, including the payment of reasonable attorney fees incurred by [Wife or Husband] in defending against any alleged liability. If any claim, action, or proceeding is brought seeking to hold [Wife or Husband] liable on account of the indebtedness, [Husband or Wife] will, at [his/her] expense, defend [Wife or Husband] against the claim, action, or proceeding.

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.§ 121.297 Release From Continuing Guaranty*[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is a marital settlement agreement provision that requires one spouse to secure the release of the other spouse from a continuing loan guaranty. Usually, a continuing guaranty is executed for a loan made by a bank to one spouse's business. This provision should not be used unless the creditor has agreed to the release. A creditor is most likely to agree to a release if the guarantee of the spouse who is to be removed was not a significant factor in making the loan. If the creditor will not give its consent, the existing loan may have to be refinanced in order to remove the other spouse from liability, and this assumes that any refinanced loan will obligate only one of the parties.

For coverage of continuing guaranties in general, see Chapter 43.

[2] FORMRelease From Continuing Guaranty

Release from Guaranty on Loan

[Husband or Wife] agrees to secure from _____ [name of creditor] the release of [Wife or Husband] from all liability under a continuing guaranty dated _____, by which the parties jointly and severally guaranteed all the debts of _____ [name of debtor] to _____ [name of creditor]. [Husband or Wife] further agrees to indemnify and hold [Wife or Husband] harmless from any liability on the continuing guaranty, and to defend [Wife or Husband], at [his/her] own expense, against any claim, action, or proceeding that may be brought seeking to hold [Wife or Husband] liable on account of the continuing guaranty, including the payment of reasonable attorney fees incurred by [Wife or Husband] in defending against any such alleged liability. [Husband or Wife] agrees to deliver to [Wife or Husband] the duly canceled guaranty as well as a statement of _____ [name of creditor] that it holds no other guarantees by [Wife or Husband] of the indebtedness of

_____[name of debtor].

This provision is based on the representation made on _____[date] by _____[name of creditor] that it will, in fact, release [Wife or Husband] from the continuing guaranty. The parties agree that if _____(name of creditor) subsequently fails or refuses to release [Wife or Husband] from the guaranty, the obligation of [Husband or Wife] to secure the release is null and void. In such a case, [specify alternative action, e.g., the parties will meet within 60 days and renegotiate the issue of the loan guaranty].

§ 121.298 Indemnity on Executory Contract

The form set forth in [2], below, is a marital settlement agreement provision that may be used if a party has executed a contract to purchase personal or real property and the other spouse is to be relieved from all liability in connection with the purchase. It is always preferable, and may be necessary under the terms of the purchase agreement or related instrument, to obtain the consent of the seller or lender to remove the other spouse from liability. If that consent cannot be obtained and is not required, this clause may be used. It provides that the purchaser spouse assumes all liability in connection with the purchase and indemnifies the other spouse for any liability that he or she might suffer from the purchase.

The form set forth in [2], below, provides for the repayment by one spouse of a loan made to that spouse by the other from the other's separate property during the course of the marriage. It includes options for the repayment of the debt in one lump sum on or before a specified date or for repayment in installments at a specified interest rate. Both options assume that the indebtedness has not been evidenced by a promissory note, and require the debtor spouse to provide the other with such a note.

[2] FORMPayment of Interspousal Debt

Repayment of Indebtedness

[Husband or Wife] acknowledges that [he/she] is presently indebted to [Wife or Husband] in the amount of $_____ for funds that [she/he] loaned to [him/her] from [her/his] separate property from time to time during their marriage. § 121.310 Description of Investment, Bank, and Related Accounts

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, contains illustrative descriptions of bank, investment, and other accounts owned by one or both parties to a marital settlement agreement. It contains provisions for the description of investments, including securities, limited partnerships, and like accounts. For a related form containing provisions for the division of these accounts, see § 121.311. For provisions dividing interests in employment--based deferred compensation accounts, including "401(k)" and like accounts, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 213, Employee Benefits Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements .

The description of the investment, security, or account should, as a general rule, indicate the party in whose name the security or account is held, so that it will be possible to determine what transfers will be necessary to effect the agreed division of the property. In the case of securities such as stock, certificate numbers may be included, but ordinarily will not be necessary if one party is to receive all of the particular stock or similar security owned by the parties. A description of a bank account should include the account number and the name of the branch of the financial institution where the account is located.

The forms set forth in [2] and [3], below, are two provisions that may be used to divide a community property account held for the parties by a stock broker or an account with a financial institution, such as a mutual funds account. Form [2] provides for the account to be divided strictly on the basis of the value of the assets. The division is to be made by the broker or other investment officer who is managing the account at his or her discretion. Under this clause, the broker would have the discretion to assign 100 shares of stock A to Husband and 30 shares of stock B to Wife, as long as the value of 100 shares of stock A was equal to the value of 30 shares of stock B at the time of the division.

Form [3] requires each spouse to receive a part of each asset. Under this clause, in the above example, Husband and Wife would each receive 50 shares of Stock A and 15 shares of stock B. Use of this clause equalizes the risk of loss and the opportunity for gain based on the future performance on the assets in the portfolio.

For a related form that may be used simply to describe investment accounts, see § 121.310. For provisions dividing interests in employment--based deferred compensation accounts, including "401(k)" accounts and the like, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 213, Employee Benefits Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements.

§ 121.321 Note Secured by Term Life Insurance

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, requires a spouse to acquire term insurance on his or her life as security for the payment of a note to the other spouse. Use of this form assumes that the spouse can in fact obtain the insurance, and the form should not be used without confirmation from the insurer that coverage will be issued.

This clause is usually used in connection with an equalizing payment if there is no other property that will provide adequate security for the payee spouse [see § 121.205, Equalizing Payment). If alimony tax treatment is to be avoided, it is important to make it clear that the installment payments on the note secured by insurance are pursuant to the division to the community estate and not intended as support. Insurance is also commonly used to continue support in the event of the death of the payor spouse.

For forms providing for the disposition of an existing life insurance policy in connection with the division of the marital property, see §§ 121.270-121.272.

[Wife or Husband] shall maintain the policy throughout the period that any indebtedness is owing on the promissory note. If [Wife or Husband] dies before having made full payment of the promissory note and without having the insurance policy in effect, [Husband or Wife] shall have a claim against the estate of [Wife or Husband] in the amount of $[amount of death benefit] or the amount of the unpaid balance of the indebtedness on the promissory note at the time of [her/his] death, whichever is less.

This chapter contains forms for use in marital settlement agreements to divide the parties' interests in employee benefits.

In In re Marriage Cases, the California Supreme Court held that differential treatment of opposite-sex and same-sex couples in California's marriage statutes violated the California Constitution's guarantees of privacy, due process, and equal protection [In re Marriage Cases (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 757, 784, 847-856, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 183 P.3d 384] . That holding was superseded by the subsequent adoption of Proposition 8, which amended the California Constitution to provide that only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California [see Cal. Const. art. I, § 7.5 (eff. Nov. 5, 2008)]. The Supreme Court upheld Proposition 8 against a constitutional challenge, but in doing so the Court reaffirmed the continuing validity of same-sex marriages entered into before November 5, 2008, the effective date of Proposition 8 [Strauss v. Horton (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 364, 470-474, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591, 207 P.3d 48 (estimating 18,000 same-sex marriages lawfully entered into before Proposition 8 took effect)]. If a form in this chapter is used in the context of a same-sex marriage lawfully entered into before that date, the language in the form should be modified accordingly. For example, the names of the parties may be used instead of terms like "Husband" and "Wife."

For forms concerning the division of real and personal property other than employee benefits, see Ch. 121.

For discussion of characterizing and dividing employee benefits, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues (Matthew Bender).

§ 122.10 Ascertaining Benefits Subject to Division

Employee benefits must be fully ascertained in order to draft appropriate provisions for their division in a marital settlement agreement. Employee benefits may take many forms and sometimes are not readily apparent even to an employee spouse. The more common types of benefits in which there may be a divisible community interest include:

- Pension and retirement benefits, both qualified and nonqualified;
- Stock options and other forms of deferred compensation;
- Stock purchased by an employer for an employee;
- Certain forms of termination or severance pay; and
- I.R.C. § 401(h) retiree medical accounts.

In addition, the employer may have provided term life insurance that has a community property component, though courts of appeal have split on the issue of the divisibility of such insurance [see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues (Matthew Bender)].

Finally, there are benefits that, while not divisible as such, should not be overlooked in determining the entitlement of each party to various services after a marital dissolution, and these may also merit consideration in relation to collateral matters, such as the need for spousal support. For example, with respect to health care benefits, there may be an entitlement to a continuation of group health care benefits for a limited time period under legislation known as "COBRA" [see 29 U.S.C. § 1161 et seq.; 42 U.S.C. § 300bb-1 et seq.; Pub. L. No. 99-272 (as amended by Pub. L. No. 99-514); see also Health & Safety Code §§ 1366.20, 1373.621, 1399.63; Ins. Code §§ 10116.5, 10128.3, 10128.50; Lab. Code § 2800.2 (California state provisions for extended COBRA coverage for certain employees and spouses or former spouses)). Similarly, certain former spouses of military service members may be entitled to health benefits under the CHAMPUS program [see 10 U.S.C. § 1072 et seq.].

Counsel will need to obtain information from a variety of sources in order to ascertain the nature and scope of the available benefits. The client, the opposing party (through counsel, if represented), the employer, and the employee benefit plan administrator are all sources of information. Summary descriptions of employee benefit plans, annual statements of employee benefits, including a breakdown of monetary amounts for matters such as stock ownership and savings plans, often can be obtained without the need for formal discovery. If litigation has already commenced, counsel should be able to gain basic information about the existence of the benefits from the declarations of disclosure required to be exchanged by the parties [see Fam. Code § 2100 et seq.]. Formal discovery can, of course, be employed if informal efforts to obtain the necessary information are unsuccessful.

PRACTICE TIP:

Sometimes, even an employer is not aware a plan exists. For example, a case held that an unwritten grocery voucher program for retirees of a supermarket chain was an ERISA-covered pension plan that should have been funded, and could not be terminated in connection with the sale of the company without first providing the value of the promised benefits to the qualifying retirees. Such surprises only emphasize the need for family law attorneys to thoroughly explore all potential sources of benefits when evaluating the value of the community estate [Musmeci v. Schwegmann Giant Super Markets, Inc. (5th Cir.2003) 2003 U.S. App. LEXIS 11602 (case not final as of time of this printing)]. Commentary by James M. Crawford, Jr.

For related coverage, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chs. 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues, and 110, Trial Preparation and Discovery (Matthew Bender).

DIVISION VII: PERSONAL TRANSACTIONS
CHAPTER 122 PROVISIONS FOR DIVISION OF EMPLOYEE BENEFITS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

34-122 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 122.11

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: James M. Crawford, Jr., Esq., R. Ann Fallon, Esq., and Anne E. Moss, Esq.

§ 122.11 Summary of Major Considerations

The division of employee benefits, particularly retirement and pension benefits, requires careful consideration and planning to ensure that the benefits will be properly characterized, valued, and protected from improper unilateral disposition by an employee spouse pending settlement, or from the inadvertent loss of surviving spouse status for the nonemployee spouse. Listed below is a summary of considerations that counsel should take into account at the outset of any litigation over employee benefits, even if a settlement of the division is ultimately reached without trial:

- (1) Ascertaining whether the benefits are derived from a retirement or pension plan that is subject to the provisions of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) [see 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.], or subject to some other special statutory scheme [see, e.g., 10 U.S.C. § 1408 (Federal Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act); Educ. Code § 22650 et seq. (State Teachers' Retirement System benefits); Gov. Code §§ 21290 et seq. (Public Employee's Retirement System benefits), 75050 et seq. (Judge's Retirement System benefits)];
- (2) Planning for joinder of the plan as a party to the proceeding (if the plan is otherwise subject to joinder) [U.S. government retirement systems such as the Civil Service Retirement System or military service retirement are not subject to joinder in a state court proceeding, as discussed in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issues (Matthew Bender)], keeping in mind that joinder often is the preferred method of protecting a nonemployee spouse's interest in a plan, and may even be required in certain cases [see, e.g., Educ. Code § 22656 (State Teachers' Retirement System benefits); cf. I.R.C. § 414(p) (pertaining to requirements when plan governed by ERISA)];
- (3) Determining, in the case of military retirement benefits, whether jurisdiction to divide the benefits can be obtained over the service member if he or she refuses to consent to jurisdiction [see 10 U.S.C. § 1408(c); In re Marriage of Tucker (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1249, 1255-1256, 277 Cal. Rptr. 403];

- (4) Determining the need for immediate protective orders to prevent a retirement plan participant from improperly investing, withdrawing, or otherwise liquidating plan benefits [see Fam. Code § 2610; In re Marriage of Baker (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 206, 209, 251 Cal. Rptr. 126] ;
- (5) Determining whether the benefits are qualified or nonqualified, and the state and federal tax implications of their division and distribution;
- (6) Ascertaining whether the benefits should be valued (necessary in a disposition other than an "in-kind" division, such as a "cash out" of the nonemployee spouse's interest); and if so, whether they can be valued without the aid of a professional actuary or appraiser; and, if not, whether the client is willing to incur appraisal costs (pending their possible recoupment during the proceeding);
- (7) Determining for benefits that are to be valued whether, because of their nature, the benefits should be valued as of a time other than the date of trial, such as the date of the parties' separation; and, if so, then preparing, serving, and filing the motion for an alternate valuation date [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.126; Fam. Code § 2552]; and
- (8) Making adequate provision for the interim investment of retirement accounts over which the employee spouse has investment authority.

In addition, if litigation has already commenced before settlement negotiations concerning the benefits have been undertaken, counsel should consider whether it would be advantageous to bifurcate the division of the benefits from the termination of the parties' marital status or from other issues in the case, keeping in mind the need for protective orders pending the adjudication of the benefits and the desirability of avoiding an open-ended reservation of the court's jurisdiction to adjudicate them [see Fam. Code §§ 2337, 2550, 2610; In re Marriage of Bergman (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 742, 755-757, 214 Cal. Rptr. 661 ; see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 111, Pretrial Procedures (Matthew Bender)]. Postjudgment events, such as the death of one of the spouses, can have a material effect on the feasibility of the division of retirement benefits [see, e.g., Branco v. UFCW-Northern Calif. Employers Joint Pension Plan (9th Cir. 2002) 279 F.3d 1154] .

Additional considerations are involved when disability benefits are at issue, with the main area of contention usually being whether a community interest exists at all. Moreover, because the U.S. Supreme Court has held that state courts may not divide as community property military-retirement pay that has been waived to receive veterans' disability benefits, counsel must pay particular attention to the nature of any benefits that result from military service [see Mansell v. Mansell (1989) 490 U.S. 581, 594-595, 109 S. Ct. 2023, 104 L. Ed. 2d 675, 688-689 (construing Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act, 10 U.S.C. § 1408(a)(4), (c)(1)); In re Marriage of Smith (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 1115, 1123-1124, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 341 (Mansell applies only if military retirement pay has already been waived before entry of state-court order dividing retirement pay; military spouse's waiver occurring subsequent to state-court order does not prevent state court from making further order requiring military spouse to indemnify other spouse for effects of his or her unilateral reduction of retirement asset); cf. In re Marriage of Babauta (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 784, 789-790 ; 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281 (Marine Corps voluntary separation benefits could be divided as community property)]. § 122.12 General Tax Considerations in Dividing or Distributing Retirement Benefits

[1] Distributions Under ERISA Plan Pursuant to QDRO

Distributions from a retirement or pension plan are normally taxable to the plan participant, as the distributee [see I.R.C. § 402(a)]. However, the Retirement Equity Act of 1984 (REA) created special rules for the tax treatment of distributions governed by ERISA under a qualified domestic relations order (QDRO) to an alternate payee who is the spouse or former spouse of the plan participant, from certain employee benefit plans that are prescribed by federal law. Under these rules, an "alternate payee" who is the spouse or former spouse of the plan participant must be treated as the distributee, for tax purposes, of any distribution or payment made to the alternate payee under a QDRO [see I.R.C. §§ 402(e)(1)(A), 414(p)(8); 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(3)(K) (defining alternate payee); Pub. L. Nos. 98-397, 98-406; Pub. L. No. 99-514, § 1898(c)(1)(A), (C)(if alternate payee is another dependent, such as child, plan participant may be required to include distribution in his or her gross income); see also Pub. L. No. 109-280, § 1001 (Secretary of Labor to issue regulations clarifying that QDRO does not fail to qualify solely because of time at which it is issued, or because it is issued after, or revises, another domestic relations order or QDRO); Stahl v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2001-22, (distribution from qualified retirement plan to participant's daughter for child support was taxable to participant)].

The rule of distributee tax liability applies even if the parties include language in their QDRO that requires the employee party to pay all of the tax on the distribution. The nonemployee in that instance must still include his or her share of the benefits distribution on that party's income tax return and is responsible for paying the tax thereon--subject to his or her right under state law to seek reimbursement from the other party pursuant to the court order or agreement [see Clawson v. Commissioner (1996) T.C. Memo. 1996-446].

In general, distributee tax liability will apply with respect to distributions or payments from employee benefit plans that are considered "qualified" [see Brotman v. Commissioner (1995) 105 T.C. 141 (noting that, whether order meets QDRO requirements and plan is entitled to tax-exempt treatment by being "qualified" are separate issues; distinction between orders providing for assignment of benefits under qualified plan versus assignment under nonqualified plan is accomplished "by providing for special tax treatment of a QDRO only in respect of distributions from a qualified plan"); see also I.R.C. §§ 403(b), 414(p)(9); Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.403(b)-2T]. Nevertheless, certain other plans may also be subject to ERISA. For example, although an unfunded "excess benefit" plan is not subject to ERISA [29 U.S.C. § 1003(b)], at least one reported decision held that a distribution from an unfunded, nonqualified plan that was considered a "top hat plan" was subject to division by means of a QDRO [Bass v. Mid-America Co., Inc. (N.Dist. Illinois, Eastern Division, 1995) 1995 U. S. Dist. LEXIS 15719]. In addition, while governmental plans, "non-ERISA coverage-electing" church plans, and (for distributions after 2001) eligible deferred compensation plans under I.R.C. § 457(d), are not subject to ERISA, a distribution from a such a plan will be treated as made pursuant to a QDRO if made pursuant to a domestic relations order meeting the requirements of I.R.C. § 414(p)(1)(A)(i) [I.R.C. § 414(p)(11); cf. I.R.C. § 410(d) (permitting church plan to "elect into" ERISA coverage)].

The failure of a court order that purports to divide employee benefits to meet the strict requirements for a QDRO may subject an employee spouse to taxation on both spouses' shares of a retirement plan distribution [see Hawkins v. C.I.R. (10th Cir. 1996) 86 F.3d 982, 987-988, 993-994 (divorce decree with minimally acceptable language qualified as QDRO despite failure to reference the applicable federal statute or use statutory language)]. Similarly, if the distribution from an employee benefit plan is made before a QDRO issues, and therefore is not made pursuant to a QDRO, it will be fully taxable to an employee who initially receives the entire distribution [see Rodoni v. Commissioner (1995) 105 T.C. 29]. Thus, use of a QDRO is desirable and essential, both because it provides a means of direct payment from an ERISA employee benefit plan to a former spouse of his or her share of the benefits divided, and because it makes the alternate payee the taxable distributee of that share [see I.R.C. §§ 402(e)(1)(A), 414(p)].

Arguably, in a community property state, a QDRO may not be theoretically necessary to shift the taxability of the distribution to an alternate payee. In one case arising out of a California pension distribution prior to the operative date of the QDRO provisions, the Tax Court held that a nonemployee spouse was the taxable distributee of her community property share of the pension, which her former husband paid over to her after receiving a lump sum distribution from the plan. The court based its ruling on the community property nature of the pension, which created a right of ownership in both spouses, so that there was no improper "alienation" of the benefits in its division [Powell (Rodney L.)(1993) 101 T.C. No. 32 (distinguishing Darby v. commissioner (1991) 97 T.C. 51, No. 4; see Pub. L. No. 98-397, § 303(d)(generally, operative date of QDRO provisions is January 1, 1985)]. The extent, if any, to which the rationale for that decision might conceivably be applied to a current division of community property benefits that fails to qualify as a QDRO, or to a distribution from a nonqualified plan that is not subject to ERISA coverage, is presently unclear, particularly in view of some countervailing authority. Therefore, pending further decisional or statutory clarification, the most prudent course of action appears to be to ensure that the instrument dividing the benefits meets the requirements for a QDRO to avert the potential for taxation of the employee spouse on the entire distribution [see Hawkins v. C.I.R. (10th Cir. 1996) 86 F. 3d 982, 987-988, 993-994 ; Karem v. Commissioner (1993) 100 T.C. 521 ; see also I.R.C. § 414(p)(11)].

PRACTICE TIP:

It is advisable for counsel to insert in a marital settlement agreement a provision under which the nonemployee spouse must indemnify the employee spouse against any tax liability arising from distributions made to the nonemployee spouse either directly by the plan or by the employee spouse. However, the clients should be advised that such an agreement is strictly between the spouses and does not bind the I.R.S., which is not a party to the agreement [see Alioto v. Commissioner (1994) T.C. Memo. 1994-51], . Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

[2] I.R.A. and Other Plans to Which Tax-Free Rollover May Be Made

[a] Distributions to Spouse on Employee Spouse's Death

If, on the death of an employee spouse, a retirement distribution is paid to an employee's immediate surviving spouse--that is, the person to whom the employee was married at the time of death, as opposed to a former spouse-alternate payee who is treated as a surviving spouse--that surviving spouse is entitled to transfer (or "roll over") the distribution. Effective for distributions after 2001, the surviving spouse may roll over distributions to an I.R.A., a qualified plan, an I.R.C. § 403(b) annuity plan, or a governmental I.R.C. § 457 plan in which the surviving spouse participates [I.R.C. § 402(c)(8)(B), (9)]. For distributions before 2002, rollovers could not be made to a qualified plan or to an I.R.C. § 403(b) annuity plan [I.R.C. § 402(c)(9), before amendment by Pub. L. No.107-16]. In general, an "eligible rollover distribution" is all or any portion of the balance credited to the employee in a qualified trust [see I.R.C. § 402(c)(2), (4); Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.402(c)-2T(c), Q&A 3].

By rolling over the distribution within the time period prescribed by law, the surviving spouse payee need not include it in his or her current income, in contrast to the inclusion that would be required in the absence of the rollover [see I.R.C. §§ 402(c)(3), (9), 408(d)(3)]. The payee may avoid a mandatory 20 percent tax withholding from the distribution by making the direct rollover to an I.R.A. [see I.R.C. §§ 402(f)(1)(B), 408(d)(3)(C)(ii)(II), 3405(c)(2); see also Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.402(c)-2T, Q&A 1].

[b] Distributions Under QDRO During Employee Spouse's Lifetime

A transfer from a qualified employee benefit plan to an employee will not result in recognition of current income if the employee then makes a transfer ("rollover") into a qualifying plan for the employee's own benefit within the statutory time period [see I.R.C. § 402(c)(1), (3); Rodoni v. Commissioner (1995) 105 T.C. 29]. Qualifying rollovers of all or part of the benefits distributed during an employee's lifetime to his or her spouse or former spouse as alternate payee, which would otherwise be taxable to the alternate payee [see [1], above], may be excluded from such spouse's income, so long as the distribution is made pursuant to a QDRO. A qualifying rollover may be made to an eligible plan, including a qualified plan that accepts rollovers, a qualified annuity under I.R.C. § 403(b), or an I.R.A. account, if the rollover is made within the period prescribed by law [see I.R.C. § 402(c)(3), (e)(1)(B) (transfer normally must be made within 60 days, but Secretary may waive 60-day requirement in certain cases of hardship, such as occurrence of casualty, disaster, or other events beyond parties' control); but cf. Rodoni (Mario) 1995 105 T.C. 29 (distribution and rollover took place before QDRO issued, and therefore did not qualify for favorable tax treatment)].

An "alternate payee spouse or former spouse" under a QDRO may avoid a mandatory 20 percent tax withholding from the distribution by making a direct rollover to an eligible I.R.A. or other eligible plan within the time prescribed by law [see I.R.C. §§ 402(e)(1)(A), (f)(1)(B), 408(d)(3)(C)(ii)(II), 3405(c)(2); see also I.R.C. § 402(e)(6) (regarding direct "trustee-to-trustee" transfers); Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.402(c)-2T]. An eligible I.R.A. may be the alternate payee's I.R.C. § 408(a) individual retirement account or I.R.C. § 408(b) individual retirement annuity. An alternate payee can roll over her interest in her former spouse's I.R.C. § 403(b) plan to the alternate payee's own I.R.C. § 403(b) plan or to the alternate payee's individual retirement plan [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.402(c)-2T, Q&A 1]. The foregoing explanation is a brief overview of rollovers, and should not be viewed as a comprehensive treatment of this subject. It is suggested that ERISA-tax counsel be consulted whenever a rollover is contemplated.

PRACTICE TIP:

Counsel for both spouses should note carefully the requirements for nontaxability of retirement distributions. Tax consequences to both parties will turn on strict compliance with all statutory requirements [see, e.g., Rodoni v. Commissioner (1995) 105 T.C. 29 (distribution and rollover to I.R.A. took place before QDRO issued; court noted that rules relating to QDROs are strictly construed and "substantial compliance" is not sufficient); Rudzin v. Commissioner T.C. Memo 1995-13 (wife had to incur tax on stock distribution via QDRO, which she failed to roll over to I.R.A., despite fact that delay was caused by her uncertainty over how much stock should have been distributed to her)]. In addition, counsel should exercise caution in providing any advice to the plan fiduciary. Violation of highly technical plan disclosure and notice requirements required to be made to an alternate payee relating to a rollover can be cause for disqualification of the plan [see, e.g., Treas. Reg. § 1.401(a)(31)-1, Q&A 17]. In such cases, referral to ERISA-knowledgeable counsel is advisable. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial

[3] Transfers From Individual Retirement Plans ("I.R.A.s")

"I.R.A." is an acronym for two species of "individual retirement plans": the Individual Retirement Account [I.R.C. § 408(a)] and the Individual Retirement Annuity [I.R.C. § 408(b)]. The Individual Retirement Annuity must be an annuity contract or an endowment contract issued by an insurance company that meets certain other requirements. Simplified Employee Pensions (SEP-I.R.A.s) are a species of I.R.A. [see I.R.C. § 408(k)].

An I.R.A. or an interest therein (including specific assets) may be transferred without taxable event from one spouse to the I.R.A. of the other in the context of a dissolution of marriage or separation by appropriate court order or agreement [I.R.C. §§ 408(d)(6), 1041].

An order providing that the nontitled spouse receive a distribution from an I.R.A. will result in a 10 percent penalty tax in addition to the ordinary income that must always be paid on such distributions [I.R.C. § 72(t)(3)(A)]. In order to insure that an I.R.A. transfer is tax-free, counsel should use an order or judgment meeting both the requirements of I.R.C. § 408(d)(6) and that the transfer document be a "divorce or separation instrument." In one instance, for example, I.R.C. § 1041 "nonrecognition of income treatment" was denied to separated individuals who had not filed a divorce or separation action and who contemplated none, and who proposed to transfer an I.R.A. from the husband to the wife by written agreement. Because the spouses were not separating, the agreement did not meet the "divorce or separation instrument" test [I.R.S. Letter Rul. 9344027].

On the other hand, the direct transfer of an employee spouse's interest in an I.R.A. to the I.R.A. of his or her spouse or former spouse pursuant to a divorce or separation instrument is a nontaxable transfer to both spouses. Thereafter, the account or annuity or portion thereof is treated as belonging to the distributee spouse or former spouse [see I.R.C. §§ 71(b)(2)(A), 408(d)(6); see also I.R.C. § 408(d)(3) (describing qualifying rollovers)].

A "Roth I.R.A." is a variety of I.R.A. that was created as part of the Tax Reform Act of 1997, and is effective for tax years after 1997. A Roth I.R.A. or a "regular" (that is, non-Roth) I.R.A. can be "rolled over" or converted tax-free to another Roth I.R.A. if it meets the general requirements for a qualified I.R.A. rollover contribution [I.R.C. § 408A(e); see I.R.C. § 408(d)(3)].

§ 122.100 General Information Needed in Drafting Retirement Benefits Provisions

[1] Employer and Plan

1. Employer's name, address, and telephone number:

- a. Official business (or government or other private) name and address of employer's home office.
- b. Address of any local site where employee spouse works.
- c. Telephone and fax numbers of both work site and employer's official home office.

2. Retirement plan's name, address, and telephone number:

- a. Plan name and address may differ from employer's, so both must be ascertained.
- b. Name and address of plan administrator.
- c. Telephone and fax numbers of plan administrator.
- d. E-mail address of plan administrator, if any.
- e. Name and address of any third party administrator, or TPA--as another information source--but keeping in mind that although these persons may refer to themselves as "plan administrators," they are contract service providers who in most cases are not plan fiduciaries, and thus arguably have no fiduciary duty toward nonemployee spouses.

3. Nature of plan benefits:

- a. Traditional defined benefit pension plan.
- b. Cash balance plan.
- c. Traditional defined contribution plan, such as a profit-sharing plan or money purchase pension plan.
- d. Associated elements, such as "401-k," stock savings, stock options, and the like.
- e. Nonqualified plans (such as SERPs) of both types.
- f. Early retirement "window" benefits.
- g. "Special Separation Benefits" or "Voluntary Separation Incentive Benefits" (for certain military retirees).
- h. Disability or severance components of benefits.
- i. Survivor benefit features, including limitations on payment of preretirement survivor benefits (may be payable only to spouse or deemed spouse under a QDRO).
- j. Approximate current value of benefits.
- k. Availability of self-direction of investment of plan accounts, if any.
- l. Deemed IRAs.

4. Period required for vesting and maturity of benefits, and earliest possible date of availability for distribution to nonemployee spouse.

5. Availability of summary plan description, and current plan document, annual benefit statements, and sample qualified domestic relations orders (QDROs) or benefits division orders (BDOs) from plan administrator.

6. Types of forms needed to formally change beneficiary designation(s).

7. Any restrictions on, or costs associated with, the employee's right to elect different options for retirement benefits.

8. Current funding status of plan (for traditional defined benefit or cash balance pension plans only).

9. Determine, in the case of a plan sponsored by a business of which the employee spouse is an owner, whether any postseparation funding liabilities (particularly in the case of a defined benefit plan) have been properly taken into account in the valuation of the community interest in the business. If not, it may not be reasonable to use a "time rule" approach to apportioning the benefits.

[2] Employee Spouse Information

1. Employee's full name and date of birth.
2. Employee's Social Security number, and any unique employee or identification number (such as an military identification number).
3. Employee's last known mailing address.
4. Exact date employee began employment; and date plan participation began (may vary by plan).
5. Date(s) of any break(s) in employment in current position, and duration of each break.
6. Date(s) of any prior employment service credited under the plan for benefit accrual.
7. Current beneficiary(ies) listed on employer-based life insurance and retirement benefits.
8. Availability of benefits statements issued to employee by employer on annual, quarterly, or other periodic basis.
9. Employee's retirement plan account number, if any.
10. Employee's earliest retirement date, and actual or expected date of retirement.
11. Any withdrawals of or loans against retirement benefits by employee.
12. Any written waivers of rights in benefits based on longevity of employment in favor of disability retirement.
13. Any prior QDROs.
14. Any elections made or available with respect to "window" or similar benefits.
15. If employee spouse is in "pay status," elected form of distribution and date benefit commenced, and name of survivor annuitant, if any.

[3] Nonemployee Spouse Information

1. Nonemployee's full name and date of birth.
2. Nonemployee's Social Security number.
3. Nonemployee's last known mailing address.
4. Nature and amount of any life insurance, or retirement/deferred compensation benefits currently being received by nonemployee by reason of employee spouse's current employment.

5. Any written waivers, consents, or disclaimers of interest made by nonemployee spouse in benefits of employee spouse.

[4] Other Information

1. Date of parties' marriage.

2. Date of parties' separation.

3. Describe formula or "rule" under which respective interests of spouses in plan are to be determined, or dollar amount, if a "cash out" is desired.

4. Basis of court's personal jurisdiction over employee spouse, if he or she is a military service member [see 10 U.S.C. § 1408(c)]:

a. Residence, other than because of military assignment;

§ 122.200 Provision Confirming Certain Benefits as Separate Property of Employee Spouse

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is a marital settlement agreement provision in which the spouses agree that specific employee benefits are the separate property of the employee spouse [see generally Fam. Code §§ 770, 771, 772]. It also contains an agreement by the nonemployee spouse that he or she will not assert any claims against the employee spouse's interest in the benefits and that he or she generally releases any right or claim to the benefits. The form further contains an optional provision that the nonemployee spouse's agreement to not assert a claim and to release any right or claim in the benefits does not apply to any interest created under a beneficiary designation executed and filed with the plan by the employee spouse after the effective date of the parties' agreement. Counsel should use caution in adding this latter statement, however, because it cannot be relied on in an ERISA-covered plan to defeat any existing beneficiary designation naming the nonemployee spouse. In such plans, the only sure way to change the beneficiary, is to file a new beneficiary designation with the plan administrator [see Egelhoff v. Egelhoff (2001) 532 U.S. 141, 121 S.Ct. 1322, 149 L. Ed. 2d 264] .

PRACTICE TIP:

It is important to remember that the Egelhoff decision (cited above) is not binding on non-ERISA plans, such as a pension plan that benefits only the owner (or owners) of a business and his or her spouse (or, if multiple owners, their respective spouses). However, Prob. Code § 5600 (dealing with nonprobate transfers) comes into play when a non-ERISA plan is involved, and may defeat the intentions of a participant who is relying on an old designation to continue to be valid. Given Prob. Code § 5600, when the intent is to keep the other party as beneficiary after the dissolution, be sure the order clearly so states; and, if necessary, have the beneficiary redesignated after the dissolution. Thus, for either ERISA-covered, or non-ERISA- covered plans, there really is no good substitute for filing a new designation after dissolution, even if the person designated is not changed. In addition, with respect to ERISA plans, if the intended beneficiary is one of the individuals who could qualify as an alternate payee under a QDRO (for example, a spouse, former spouse, child, or dependent of a participant), counsel may wish to include in the order sufficient information to allow the order to qualify as a QDRO (by including the amount or percentage of the death benefit to be distributed to each person, mailing addresses of those persons, and the other information required in the federal statute for QDROs), because a QDRO is the only reliable way, other than by redesignation, to ensure that a plan will pay the intended beneficiary.

Commentary by James Crawford Jr.

Alternatively, the parties may list employee benefits that are the separate property of one party in an exhibit or schedule that sets forth all of the separate property of that party, with a clause in the body of the marital settlement agreement that incorporates the exhibit or schedule by reference, and with respect to which the other party expressly waives any right or interest. For general forms of descriptions of assets that make use of an exhibit or schedule, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, Chapter 212, General Property Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements (Matthew Bender 2d ed.). For forms of complete marital settlement agreements in that publication that may be adapted for use with this form, see Chapter 211, Complete Settlement Agreements.

§ 122.201 Provision for Each Spouse to Retain Own Employment Benefits

[1] Comment

The form set forth in [2], below, is a marital settlement agreement provision in which each party retains the retirement or other benefits that he or she has earned through employment, notwithstanding any community interest either party may have in the other's benefits. The form also provides that each party generally agrees not to assert any claim to the other's employment benefits, including survivor benefits. Further, it includes a statement of release in those benefits. An additional, optional, provision states that the agreement to not assert a claim and to release any interest does not apply to any interest created under a beneficiary designation executed and filed with the plan by the employee spouse after the effective date of the agreement. In an ERISA-covered plan, releases or waivers of claims to beneficiary rights by a nonemployee spouse who is a designated beneficiary may or may not be effective. In such plans, the only sure way to change a beneficiary is to file a new beneficiary designation with the plan administrator [see Egelhoff v. Egelhoff (2001) 532 U.S. 141, 121 S.Ct. 1322, 149 L. Ed. 2d 264 ; § 122.201[1] (comments)].

This method of dividing employment benefits may be preferred by spouses who have been employed for a similar length of time during their marriage and are entitled to comparable employment benefits. By using this method, the parties can make a present and final division of their employment benefits that obviates the need for any future contact, or for a QDRO or similar order. Before using this provision, however, counsel should verify that the parties' benefits are in fact comparable so that one spouse is not unknowingly giving up a valuable community interest to which he or she would otherwise be entitled. For example, an individual account plan may not offer the same retirement security as an annuity-type pension, particularly when most annuity pensions (but not account plans) are covered by a governmental guarantee [see ERISA § 4000 et seq.].

Plans of disparate value may be allocated each to the owner spouse as long as the overall division of community property is of equal value, assuming that the parties wish to achieve an overall equal division--which is the usual case. Other property or an equalizing payment can be used to make up the difference. "Value" for an account-based plan is typically equal to the current account balance. In other types of plans, such as defined benefit plans, "value" will have to be determined based on actuarial assumptions made as to a number of future events, as to which reasonable minds may differ.

The parties may list employee benefits that are awarded to each party in an exhibit or schedule that sets forth the parties' division of community assets, with a clause in the body of the marital settlement agreement that incorporates the exhibit or schedule by reference.

In most plans, the waiver of spousal survivor rights will not be effective until the marital status is terminated unless accomplished through the plan's administrative procedures in accord with the terms of the plan and applicable ERISA requirements for consents and waivers by spouses.

§ 122.202 Division of Individual Retirement Account (IRA)

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, divides an Individual Retirement Account (IRA) between the parties. Unlike most qualified retirement plans [see § 122.220], personal Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs) are not subject to ERISA (the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974), and therefore, no Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO) is required in order to divide an IRA between divorcing spouses [see 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq. (ERISA)]. However, IRAs may still be divided between the parties under Internal Revenue Code Section 408(d)(6) without triggering income tax on the transfer to the nonowner spouse, provided that the transfer is made under a divorce or separation instrument that constitutes (1) a decree of divorce or separate maintenance or a written instrument incident to such a decree; or (2) a written separation agreement; or (3) another kind of decree requiring a spouse to make payments for the support or maintenance of the other spouse [I.R.C. § 408(d)(6); see I.R.C. § 71(b)(2)(A) ("divorce or separation instrument" defined)]. Unless the requirements of section 408(d)(6) are met, the transfer of all or any part of an IRA from one spouse to the other will result in the transferred amount being included in the gross income of the transferor, notwithstanding Internal Revenue Code Section 1041.

PRACTICE TIP:

Some IRAs, known as Simplified Employee Pensions (SEPS) or Savings Incentive Match Plans (Simple Plans), are employer-provided. Although nothing in I.R.C. § 408(d)(6) suggests that the tax treatment of interspousal transfers with respect to these IRAs is not the same as for personal IRAs, because SEPS and Simple Plans are often ERISA-covered plans, some SEP-IRA and Simple IRA custodians require that the division order meet the requirements of a QDRO, as well as those of section 408(d)(6). Because the applicability of the QDRO rules to SEPS and Simple Plans is unclear, and because the QDRO requirements are not difficult to satisfy in this context, many practitioners will choose to comply rather than to dispute the matter. Commentary by James Crawford Jr.

The IRS, in private rulings, has recognized the following three ways to effect an IRA division: (1) split the IRA into two IRAs and assign one to the nonowner spouse; (2) transfer the correct amount to a new IRA in a trustee-to-trustee transfer, followed by an assignment to the nonowner spouse; or (3) transfer the required amount to an IRA in the name of the nonowner spouse. There is no requirement that the amount transferred be limited to half of the community interest.

PRACTICE TIP:

In the case of a Roth IRA [see I.R.C. § 408A], assume that the same treatment would apply to permit tax-free transfers between spouses or former spouses within the restricted distribution period. However, the issue has not yet been addressed in published guidance. In the disposition of standard and Roth IRAs, special attention should be given to the difference in taxability on distributions. Generally speaking, Roth IRAs, unlike standard IRAs, are not taxable as ordinary income on distribution. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

PRACTICE TIP:

If the IRA to be divided is in "pay status" under the annuity exception to the early distribution additional tax, under I.R.C. § 72(t)(2)(A)(iv), care should be taken to ensure that the transfer is handled so as not to defeat the requirement under I.R.C. § 72(t)(4) that such distributions continue substantially unchanged with respect to the owner until the owner reaches 59½ or has taken distributions for at least 5 years. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

Division of Individual Retirement Account (IRA)

Division of Individual Retirement Account (IRA)

_____ [Spouse in whose name account is held] is the owner of an Individual Retirement Account (IRA) held by _____ [name of trustee], Account Number [set forth abbreviated number to preserve privacy, e.g., XXX234] (see full account number in transmittal to trustee/custodian). The current value of the account is $ _____. [Add, if this document is for stipulated order attached to Marital Settlement Agreement (MSA): The purpose of this order is to assign all or part of the IRA to _____ (name of account owner's spouse or former spouse), incident to _____ (specify title of agreement, judgment, etc.), a divorce or separation instrument described in subparagraph A of section 71(b)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended ("Code"), in a nontaxable transfer pursuant to Code section 408(d)(6).]

[EITHER, if transfer is for one-half of community interest.]

The total community property interest in the IRA is _____ percent, and [nonowner spouse's] share of the community property interest is _____ percent. The balance is the separate property of [owner spouse]. The community interest in the IRA shall be divided between the parties according to their respective interests as set forth above. [Owner] shall direct [trustee] to transfer to [nonowner] _____ [(his/her) full community property share as of the date of transfer or $ _____ or _____ percent of the value of the account as of the date of transfer] to a new IRA account as may be designated by _____ nonowner]. [Owner] shall immediately assign all right, title, and interest in the new IRA to [nonowner] as [his/her] sole and separate property [(add, for transfer within MSA) in a nontaxable transfer under I.R.C. § 408(d)(6)].

[OR, for transfer of separate interest or other than half of community interest (to equalize property division).]

[(For attached stipulated order) The IRA shall be divided between the parties (or, for transfer within MSA) Ownership in the IRA, or a portion thereof, shall be transferred between the parties incident to this Agreement] as follows: [Owner] shall direct [trustee] to transfer to [nonowner] _____[$_____or _____ percent of the value of the account as of the date of transfer] to a new IRA account as may be designated by [nonowner]. [Owner] shall immediately assign all right, title, and interest in the new IRA to [nonowner] as [his/her] sole and separate property [(add, for transfer within MSA) in a nontaxable transfer under I.R.C. § 408(d)(6)].

PRACTICE TIP

If the contents of the MSA are such that the parties would prefer not having to share the entire agreement with the IRA trustee or custodian, the agreement should instead provide for the issuance of a separate I.R.C. § 408(d)(6) order. Note also that there is no statutory reason why a section 408(d)(6) order need be limited to IRAs in which there is a community interest. Thus, it would seem that any IRA is fair game for transfer, regardless of when or how created, so long as it is being reassigned incident to the division of the community estate. In this event, the above form should be modified to remove the references to community interest. If there is a substantial delay between the divorce and the transfer, an issue may arise as to whether the transfer is still under a divorce or separation instrument. Although it is not clear they apply, the regulations under I.R.C. § 1041 (relating to nonrecognition of gain or loss on transfers incident to divorce) may offer some guidance in this area. Counsel should also be mindful of the potential effect of Prob. Code § 5600 (concerning nonprobate transfers), which may invalidate any beneficiary designation naming a former spouse unless it is renewed after divorce. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

§ 122.203 Enumeration of Employee Benefit Plans; Warranties; Duties

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a basic provision that sets forth all of the employee benefit plans of both parties that will be awarded or divided under the marital settlement agreement. The form includes a provision that each party warrants that there are no other plans not addressed in the agreement. Provisions setting forth the duty to give notice of options and elections, the duty to give notice regarding termination of employment, and the duty to give notice regarding health status are also included.

PRACTICE TIP:

Numerous changes in the law and the corresponding increase in the complexity of retirement plan design have made it incumbent on the practitioner to identify and understand not only the plans under which the parties are currently covered, but also to account for the possibility that a party may later become a participant in other plans in which there could be a community interest. Although under In re Marriage of Lehman (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 169, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 825, 955 P.2d 451, a subsequently created plan will not, in most instances, include a community interest even if its benefits derive in part from years of service that occurred during marriage, it may be that a community interest would arise if the right to have the plan put into place arose during the marriage and prior to separation--for example, if the right to have a deferred compensation plan covering all years of service was set forth in an employment agreement entered into during, or even prior to the marriage. Commentary by James M. Crawford, Jr.

[b] Survey of Employee Benefit Plans

Generally speaking, there are two varieties of qualified retirement plans: Defined Contribution Plans, and Defined Benefit Plans. "Qualified" refers to having met the requirements for tax qualification under Internal Revenue Code

Section 401(a) et seq.

Although most qualified private employer retirement plans are covered by ERISA, some are not [see 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.]. All qualified plans, and all funded ERISA-covered retirement plans, however, can only be divided between a participant and a nonparticipant spouse (or used to pay spousal, family, or child support) by a court order that meets certain criteria; that is, a Qualified Domestic Relations Order, or QDRO [see 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d); I.R.C. § 414(p)].

There are numerous other types of retirement plans that are not "qualified," but that mirror the operation of a qualified plan. Others are specialized forms of deferred compensation. Unlike qualified plans, nonqualified retirement plans, however designed, are almost always unfunded, and are, in substance, unilateral arrangements between an employer and one or more executive employees. An example might be a Supplemental Executive Retirement Plan (SERP), or "Top Hat" plan. Some employers will recognize a court ordered division of a nonqualified plan; others may not, citing federal preemption under ERISA. In contrast, all qualified plans are required to recognize a QDRO (although special rules apply for governmental qualified retirement plans; see § 122.240 et seq.).

In addition to plans that are designed primarily to provide for retirement, employers may provide a full gamut of other plan types, which are generally grouped together in the category of "welfare plans" and other plans. These generally include plans that provide for any nonretirement type benefits, such as severance, bonus, life, health and accident plans, and fringe benefits, just to name a typical few. Like the case with nonqualified retirement plans, the ability of a state court to override the operation of these plans in terms of dividing the benefits is unclear, at least if they are subject to ERISA. However, developing case law has gone a long way toward recognition of state family law court authority in this area [see, e.g., Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Marsh (6th Cir. 1997) 119 F.3d 415 (giving effect to "QDRO" held by plan participant's children from previous marriage, although participant had designated his current spouse as his sole beneficiary)].

[c] Description and Examples of Defined Benefit Plans

Under the Internal Revenue Code, a "defined benefit plan" is defined broadly as any plan that is not a defined contribution plan [I.R.C. § 414(j)]. Qualified benefit plans are always pension plans; that is, they are designed primarily to provide benefits at retirement. They are distinguished from qualified individual account, or "defined contribution" plans mainly by the fact that they provide a benefit at retirement that is defined in terms of a formula, not an account balance. A defined benefit formula is typically based on the participant's compensation, and years of service [see § 122.220[1][c]]. These formulas have various names, (e.g., unit benefit, flat benefit), and some may even be based on a hypothetical account balance (such as a Cash Balance plan). But in every case, the level of benefits is determined by formula, regardless of the actual investment experience of the plan [see 29 U.S.C. § 1002(35); I.R.C. § 414(j)].

Defined benefit plan benefits are secured by an excise-tax-enforced contribution liability for the employer, and are, in most cases, also guaranteed by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC). Small professional employer plans are an exception. Because participants do not have individual accounts in defined benefit plans (even in cash balance plans), any attempt to divide a defined benefit plan on that basis may have an unintended result [see generally In re Marriage of Bergman (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 742, 748 n.4, 214 Cal. Rptr. 661 ; see also Ch. 12B]. Governmental plans, however, can contain "accounts" in the sense that a member may withdraw his or her contributions in lieu of taking the pension benefit.

[d] Description and Examples of Defined Contribution Plans

In a defined contribution plan, a participant's benefit at retirement is determined solely by how much was contributed over the years to his or her account by the employer, the employee, or both, and how well it was invested [see 29 U.S.C. § 1002(34); I.R.C. § 414(i); In re Marriage of Bergman (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 742, 748 n.4, 214 Cal. Rptr. 661]. Although sometimes the contribution is "defined" by a formula (hence the name) the contributions can be discretionary.

Defined contribution plans that have the word "pension" in their name (for example, a Money Purchase Pension Plan, or a Target Benefit Pension Plan) will almost always have a set contribution formula. In contrast, a Profit Sharing Plan or a 401(k) plan typically will not, but will instead contain provisions stating how the employer or employee contributions, if any, will be allocated.

Funds in the participant accounts are held in trust, and may either be invested by the trustee or investment manager on a pooled basis, or as directed by the individual employee. Other examples of defined contribution plans are employee stock ownership plans (ESOPs), stock bonus plans, thrift plans, and savings plans. Although technically not a qualified plan, a tax-sheltered annuity plan (TSA or 403(b) plan) is another type of plan that is for most purposes treated as a defined contribution plan. The same is true for Simple IRA Plans and Simplified Employee Pensions (SEPS) [see § 122.202]. Defined contribution plan benefits are NOT guaranteed by the employer, or by the PBGC.

[e] Availability of Benefits

Benefits under a pension plan (whether defined benefit or defined contribution) are generally not available for distribution until separation from service, death, or retirement, although special exceptions can exist for distributions that are ordered by a QDRO. Nonpension qualified retirement plans, such as a profit sharing, 401(k) plan, or ESOP, are allowed to permit distributions while a participant is still in service. Both types of plans, pension and nonpension, will distribute benefits only to the extent that they are vested, that is, have become nonforfeitable under the plan.

The form in which any plan will pay benefits is a function of the plan document, and not all payment options (e.g., a lump sum) are available for all plans. For example, many defined benefit plans will only pay benefits in the form of an annuity, and many 401(k) plans will only pay in a lump sum or installments.

[f] Taxation of Benefits

As a general rule, benefits from all qualified plans are taxable to the participant on receipt, without concern for the constructive receipt rules, under I.R.C. § 402. That section also contains special rules for benefits paid under a QDRO to a spousal alternate payee, making them taxable to the recipient, not to the participant. Under these rules, if the alternate payee is a child or dependent (such as would occur in the case of a support QDRO), the distribution is taxed to the participant, not the recipient. Regarding nonqualified plans of deferred compensation, the IRS has ruled that the share awarded to a nonparticipant spouse incident to divorce would, under I.R.C. § 1041, not be taxable on the transfer, and would be income to the recipient spouse when paid. However, it should be noted that this is an income tax ruling, and that separate rules apply to the payment of any related employment taxes. For additional discussion of taxation of benefits, see § 122.12.

PRACTICE TIP:

The IRS regulations under I.R.C. § 3121(v) can be complicated as they apply to nonqualified plans of deferred compensation, particularly those that are designed as defined benefit plans. When dividing any of these plans, special provision may need to be made in order to fairly allocate both the withholding tax liability, if any, and the effect of any prior payment of amount due. Commentary by James M. Crawford, Jr.

Enumeration of Employee Benefit Plans; Warranties; Duties

Employee Benefit Plans

Husband has accrued retirement or other deferred compensation benefits as a participant in the employee benefit plans listed below. The community has an interest in each of the designated plans.

_____ [short title])

Wife has accrued retirement or other deferred compensation benefits as a participant in the employee benefit plans listed below. The community has an interest in each of the designated plans.

_____ [short title])

Warranties

Except as listed above, each party warrants to the other that he or she is not covered by or entitled to any benefit under an employee benefit plan that is attributable in any way to service with an employer during the marriage and before the date of separation, nor does he or she have any expectation of becoming so covered. Each further warrants that if he or she becomes covered under any new employee benefit plan, or under an amendment to an existing employee benefit plan, that may provide benefits based partly or wholly on service rendered during marriage and before the date of separation, that party shall immediately notify the other and provide a copy of the plan if reasonably available. The court shall retain jurisdiction to make any further orders as may be necessary to divide the community interest, if any, in these benefits. Each party further warrants that he or she has provided to the other a complete, current, and accurate disclosure and accounting of the following with respect to each listed plan: the current value of all benefits accrued, participant loans outstanding, "basis in the contract," prior distributions and withdrawals, "window" elections that have been made or that are currently available, beneficiary designations, and any irrevocable elections or waivers of benefits. Pending the disposition of each of the plans listed above, each party further warrants that as a participant or beneficiary, he or she shall not make any election that may affect the nature, form, value, or timing of any benefits payable under the plan without prior written notice to the other party.

Duty to Give Notice of Options and Elections

Pending the issuance of any formal Qualified Domestic Relations Order or other Benefit Division Order required under this Agreement to divide the benefits accrued under any plan set forth above (and awarded entirely to the participant spouse under this Agreement), the participant spouse with regard to the plan shall keep the nonparticipant spouse fully informed of any elections or options that may be or become available under the plan, including but not limited to subsidized early retirement, window benefits, elective transfer options, changes in selected investments, elective insurance coverage, loan availability, and hardship or other in-service distributions. The participant spouse shall consult and cooperate with the nonparticipant spouse with regard to the making or waiving of any election or option. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to resolve any dispute in connection with the exercise of any election or option.

Duty to Give Notice Regarding Termination of Employment

With regard to any plan listed above that is not awarded entirely to the participant spouse under this Agreement, the participant spouse shall give the nonparticipant spouse at least _____ days prior written notice of his or her intent to terminate employment or to retire. Immediate notice shall be give if the participant spouse is terminated from the covered employment involuntarily.

Duty to Give Notice Regarding Health Status

The parties acknowledge that each may be making future decisions concerning the timing and form of distribution of their respective community shares of the benefits provided by any or all of the plans listed above based in part on the respective state of health of the parties. Therefore, until such time as each begins to receive benefits under any affected plan, or if earlier, an order is entered that creates a separate interest in the plan for the benefit of the nonparticipant spouse, each party shall keep the other informed of any material change in health or other circumstance that may reasonably be expected to reduce his or her normal life expectancy so that the parties may tailor any benefit distribution order or election to their mutual benefit.

§ 122.204 Division of Employee Stock Options

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is for use to divide employee stock options between the spouses. It contains suggested provisions for various applications of the "time rule," and a "catch all" for those situations in which a time-rule application would be inappropriate [see [b], below]. It also contains provisions for dealing with the manner in which the intended divisions of stock options can be implemented, including various tax-related clauses and indemnity provisions designed to help deal with the uncertainty of the tax law in this area [see [d], below]. If there are multiple stock option grants from the employer, appropriate provisions for determining the community interest and for exercising the option and distributing stock to the nonemployee spouse must be selected for each grant.

Provisions are also included to address the making of and responsibility for many of the decisions that may need to be made by the employee spouse in connection with stock options; decisions that often will affect both the community and separate property interests, and potentially the employee spouse's income that can be taken into account in fashioning orders for support. These include items such as choosing the exercise date, whether to "reload" (exchange one option for another, more valuable option with different terms, such as the vesting or exercise dates); and whether to make an election for immediate taxation under Internal Revenue Code Section 83(b) [see [d], below]. In addition, this form addresses fiduciary issues, and the likelihood that the community and separate property interests will not always coincide, particularly if the decision could affect the post-separation employment of the employee spouse, or if the triggering of income tax will be a disadvantage to one party more than the other.

[b] Survey of Stock Options and Issues

In general, a stock option is a right granted by a corporation that entitles the holder to purchase a specified stock in the corporation at a later date for a specified price (sometimes called the "strike" price). The date on which a stock option

(or any stock purchased with the option) can no longer be forfeited is known as the "vesting" date. The earliest date on which the options can be exercised and the stock purchased is the "exercise" date. Stock options are usually granted in discrete blocks, each of which can have different exercise and vesting dates. The date an option or block of options is granted is the "grant" date.

Options can be granted to a corporation's employees for future services, past services, or both. They can be incentive based, or a replacement for cash compensation that would otherwise be paid as salary. They may be used as a "signing bonus," to lure an executive from another position, or as a form of "golden handcuffs," to keep a valued executive from seeking other employment. They can have different tax effects depending on how they are structured [see [d], below]. They can be subject to numerous combinations of conditions for grant, vesting, and exercise. They can be acquired by trading in other options, often with new vesting and exercise dates (a process called "reloading"). They can be styled as options to purchase ("call options") or to sell ("put" options). They can be publicly traded or highly restricted, and either way, their value may be stable, or fluctuate from week to week with extreme volatility.

PRACTICE TIP:

Because stock option plans vary widely, a critical but too-often overlooked step in dealing with stock options is to become fully acquainted with all the features of the stock option plan or program. Features such as the conditions for exercise (e.g., performance goals, cash bonus on exercise, sequential exercise dates, etc.), vesting, transferability, and subsequent sale of acquired shares are all potentially relevant to the identification and disposition of the community interest. For example, a pure "time rule" division may be appropriate to apportion options in which the community has an interest if the option right matures solely as a function of continued service, but less appropriate if vesting is a function of the employee's achieving a performance goal principally through post-separation efforts. At a minimum, practitioners in this area should always obtain and review a copy of the stock option plan if there is one, as well as any explanatory materials provided to the employee spouse by the employer. Commentary by James M. Crawford, Jr.

Because there is no one right way to approach the division of stock option compensation, the purpose of this form is to assist the practitioner in the classification (determining how the option property was or is "earned"); characterization and apportionment (identifying whether there is a community interest, and if so, determining the "time rule" formula, or other appropriate method to apply for its division); and award (designing orders to accomplish the intended allocation, and tax effect) of employee stock options. Although the discussion is limited to stock options, many of the same principles can be applied to similar compensation vehicles, such as restricted stock, discounted options; stock appreciation rights, stock repurchase agreements, junior stock plans, and phantom stock plans.

PRACTICE TIP:

Because of their complexity, stock option cases offer an opportunity to negotiate that is often not present with other forms of compensation-based property, such as a 401(k) plan account. The advantage in these negotiations will usually go to the party who is the more conversant with the various alternative approaches that are available, and the rationale used to support them. Practitioners who are not comfortable in this area, taking into account external considerations such as changes in the Internal Revenue Code, securities law, accounting rules, stockholder attitudes, and business climate issues affecting valuation, should not hesitate to seek expert assistance. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

[c] Stock Options Are Not Subject to ERISA

Although stock options are employee benefits, stock option plans are generally not subject to ERISA (the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974) because they are not welfare or pension benefit plans as those terms are defined in ERISA [see 29 U.S.C. § 1003(1)-(3); U.S. Department of Labor Opinion Letter 90-17A; Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp. (9th Cir. 1997) 120 F.3d 1006, 1009 (stipulation of non-ERISA status); see also 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq. (ERISA)]. Therefore, unlike retirement-type benefits, which can usually be divided by a QDRO (Qualified Domestic Relations Order), there is usually no practical way to compel the employer to divide stock options between the employee and nonemployee spouse even though stock options often effectively remain under the employer's control until all contractual conditions have been removed and they are exercised by the employee [see 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d); § 122.220[1][d]].

For this reason (and also for tax reasons) [see [d], below], unless the employer is willing to cooperate, a distribution of a share of the options themselves is usually not a viable vehicle for distributing the nonemployee spouse's community interest to him or her. The distribution has to be of the stock once the options have been exercised [see, e.g., Marriage of Nelson (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 150, 222 Cal. Rptr. 790 ; Marriage of Hug (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 780, 201 Cal. Rptr. 676] , or of the appreciated value of the stock (price at time of exercise minus option price) [see, e.g., Marriage of Harrison (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 1216, 225 Cal. Rptr. 234] .

[d] Income Tax Characteristics of Employee Stock Options

Employee stock options fall into one of two general categories, Incentive Stock Options (ISOs) and Nonstatutory Stock Options (NSOs). An ISO (which includes for this discussion an employee stock purchase plan or ESPP) is an option that meets the restrictive criteria of Internal Revenue Code Section 422 or 423 (such as price, duration, nontransferability, etc.) for the advantageous tax treatment afforded by Internal Revenue Code Section 421. All other options are known as NSOs, and are taxed under Internal Revenue Code Section 83 (relating to property transferred for the performance of services).

The main advantage of ISOs over NSOs is the potential for capital gains treatment and the opportunity for an additional deferral of tax for the employee. NSOs typically do not generate taxable income until they are exercised and the stock is acquired, at which time the employee is taxed on the difference between the discounted exercise ("strike") price and the fair market value of the shares [see generally, I.R.C. § 83(a) (and regulations thereunder for other timing considerations)]. In the case of ISOs, however, tax can be deferred from the date the options are granted until shares acquired by exercising the option are sold or otherwise disposed of, at which time the gain over the exercise price is taxed at the capital gains rate or as ordinary income, depending on the nature and timing of the disposition [I.R.C. § 421(a), (b)].

Note that rights earned under an ESOP (Employee Stock Ownership Plan) are not covered by these rules because an ESOP is a tax qualified plan under Internal Revenue Code Section 401(a), and therefore is treated in the same fashion as any other qualified defined contribution plan, such as a 401(k) plan, even though it is invested substantially or wholly in employer securities [I.R.C. §§ 401(a), 409]. So called "Keysops" (options granted to key employees to purchase nonemployer securities, such as mutual funds, from the employer) and other similar types of compensatory options also do not fall within the scope of this discussion, although in form and perhaps substance they can resemble NSOs.

A key disadvantage to tax-favored ISOs when compared to NSOs, is that ISOs must meet a number of strict requirements relating to the grant, holding, and disposition of the stock acquired [see I.R.C. § 422]. Of these, the requirement that ISOs must be nontransferable and exercisable only by the employee is of particular significance to divorcing spouses [see I.R.C. § 422(b)(5)], because it seems clear that the transfer of legal title to an ISO between divorcing spouses would cause the option to be taxed as an NSO under the current statutes [see, e.g., Letter Rul. 200005006].

Past practice has been to attempt to avoid this problem by transferring only a beneficial interest in the ISO, effectively making the employee a constructive trustee for the nonemployee spouse's interest. Unfortunately, however, the question of whether the exercise of an ISO by an employee at the instruction of the nonemployee spouse (or under a court order) will also run afoul of Section 422(b)(5) has not yet been resolved, and may, in fact, have a different answer depending on whether or not the divorcing couple resides in a community property state [see Letter Ruls. 84-51-031 (division of community interest in shares acquired under an ISO not a "disposition"), 9433010 (division of community interest in NSO not a "transfer" under § 83 because options considered to be owned equally from date of grant); see also Powell v. Commissioner (1993) 101 T.C. 489, 498 (pre-REA distribution of nonemployee spouse's community interest in qualified plan to employee spouse who pays it over to nonemployee spouse is taxable income to nonemployee; employee and nonemployee spouse are both the "distributee" of community earned income, and employee held funds in trust for community)]. This form therefore assumes that the transfer between spouses of a beneficial or legal interest in an ISO will transmute it into an NSO, and thus, with few exceptions, approaches the mechanics of the division (but not necessarily the apportionment) of all ISOs and NSOs alike.

Also, the tax characteristics of NSOs as they relate to a division of the options between divorcing spouses are less than settled. The general rule is that if an NSO does not have a "readily ascertainable market value" when granted (as is typically the case), the employee will not be taxed until the option is disposed of or exercised. In the past, practitioners have struggled with such issues, among other things, as whether the division of an option incident to divorce is a "disposition" for this purpose, particularly if the option is community or quasi-community property [compare Letter Rul. 9433010 (division of community interest in NSO not a "transfer" under § 83 because options considered to be owned equally from date of grant); and Powell v. Commissioner (1993) 101 T.C. 489, 498 with Field Service Advice 200005006 (division of option on divorce is taxable disposition)]. But much of this uncertainty has been removed with the issuance of Rev. Rul. 2002-22, in which the IRS clarified that such transfers are covered by I.R.C. § 1041, and thus will not trigger tax if "incident to divorce" and that the recipient of the transferred NSO will pay the tax, not the employee, and the tax will be triggered only when the nonemployee spouse exercises the option or otherwise disposes of it.

PRACTICE TIP:

Although Rev. Rul. 2002-22 has removed many of the issues surrounding the division of NSOs (and with respect to nonqualified deferred compensation plans, for that matter), it is still recommended that any intended transfer be discussed with a tax professional before it is concluded.

PRACTICE TIP:

In dealing with the issue of who is to control the timing of the employee's exercise of the nonemployee spouse's share of NSO rights (in cases in which the option rights have not been assigned), it is easy to overlook the fact that the exercise of NSOs has risk to the employee spouse, which can be substantial in volatile market conditions. This risk comes from the fact that exercise of an NSO generates immediate income tax liability for the employee spouse, as explained in the text above. This liability attaches regardless of whether the stock value subsequently rises or plummets. Assuming the stock has been transferred to the nonemployee spouse on exercise, the employee spouse will then have to hope that enough of the stock is sold in time to generate sufficient funds to pay the taxes, or that the nonemployee spouse has other funds available to cover the tax. Otherwise the "indemnified" employee could be left with a large tax bill and no way to pay it. Commentary by James M. Crawford, Jr.

[e] Characterization and Apportionment of Employee Stock Options

Employee Stock options are community property to the extent that they are earned by the time, skill, and effort of a spouse during marriage [In re Marriage of Harrison (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 1216, 1226, 225 Cal. Rptr. 234]. For options that are earned by the community, at least in part, the fact that they may not vest until after separation does not mean that there is no community interest in the options [Marriage of Judd (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 515, 526, 137 Cal. Rptr. 318]. However, the fact that the nonemployee spouse may have a community property interest in stock options acquired or vesting during the marriage, or that were acquired during marriage and vesting after separation, does not mean that the options belong entirely to the community. Thus, the determination of the extent to which options belong to the community and separate property estates is typically more a matter of apportionment, rather than characterization.

PRACTICE TIP:

In the aftermath of the Supreme Court's decision in In re Marriage of Lehman, there remains considerable uncertainty about whether the Lehman characterization test (under which the community has no interest in a defined benefit plan unless the employee accrued some right to benefits during the marriage and prior to separation) should apply to stock option plans [see In Marriage of Lehman (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 169, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 825, 955 P.2d 451]. If it does, as it arguably should, practitioners should be careful in applying the test not to assume that the community has an interest in any option program just because the grant date occurred during the community period. This is because there is a fundamental difference in the relationship between benefit accrual and vesting as between defined benefit plans and stock option plans. In a typical defined benefit plan, participation begins when the employee has met the eligibility requirements, and the benefits accrue thereafter each year the participant meets the year's minimum service required for accrual, usually 1,000 hours. Once accrued, the right to these retirement benefits becomes protected by the anti-cutback provisions of ERISA or the Internal Revenue Code, even though the participant has not yet become vested [see, e.g., I.R.C. § 411; ERISA § 204]. By contrast, in a typical stock option plan the minimum service necessary for accrual of the right to the benefit is expressed as a vesting requirement (for example, two years). Until a participant is accrued-vested, all that is really held in a stock option plan is the right to accrue and vest by meeting the plan criteria. In a very real sense, then, until a granted option is vested, at least in part, a married employee in a stock option plan is in much the same situation as if he or she were "granted" the right to participate in a defined benefit plan but had not yet met the minimum service required for the first year's benefit accrual prior to separation. In each case, since the right to a benefit did not accrue at least in part during the marriage and prior to separation, under the Lehman test, the community would have no interest in the plan. Commentary by James M. Crawford, Jr.

Although most stock options are divided by some variation of the time rule fraction [see § 122.220[1][c]], the application, or even suitability of that rule can only be determined by looking closely at the facts and circumstances of each case [see In re Marriage of Walker (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 644, 650, 265 Cal. Rptr. 32 (no single rule or formula is applicable to every dissolution case involving employee stock options; court should be vested with broad discretion to fashion approach that will achieve most equitable results under facts of each case)]. Relevant inquiry includes, for example, whether the purpose of the option is to compensate for past services, future services, or both; whether the value depends on the individual contribution of the employee, or is more related to the passage of time in service; and whether there is a component of compensation for past compensation from another employer that was foregone to accept the current employment.

Far too often, options are divided without any real understanding of the answers to these issues, which, of course, can doom from the start any attempt to fairly assess the contribution to value attributable to the marital years of service. The California courts have, over the years, struggled with the proper components for a time rule-formula, and with the question of what is the asset to which the formula is to be applied; the option, the stock, or the appreciated value of the stock [see Marriage of Walker (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 644, 265 Cal. Rptr. 32; Marriage of Harrison (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 1216, 225 Cal. Rptr. 234; Marriage of Nelson (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 150, 222 Cal. Rptr. 790; Marriage of Hug (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 780, 201 Cal. Rptr. 676].

Option grants are frequently not homogeneous in their terms and conditions, and therefore, several different division methodologies might be appropriate for different grants, depending on the circumstances under which they are structured and the reasons for the grant. In addition, it may even be appropriate to approach the division of a single grant in different ways. For example, consider a grant that gives the employee the right to buy 100 shares and that vests and becomes exercisable at the rate of 20 shares every two years. Under the traditional "cumulative method" for dividing this right, one would apply the time-rule formula to each 20 shares as the option vests with regard to those shares. Thus the community interest would extend for the entire 10 years of vesting, with its cumulative share being the sum of ever-decreasing fractions of the vesting blocks. An alternative to this approach might be the "sequential method," under which one would view the option as for five separate blocks of 20 shares each, with each block being considered to have been granted every two years. In both cases, the benefit is identical in substance, yet the community-interest calculation will be substantially larger under the former than the latter. This form's provisions are designed to allow for each block (or "deemed" block under the sequential method) to have its own division criteria and method.

PRACTICE TIP:

As stock options become a larger part of the typical compensation structure for employees at all levels, courts are increasingly looking at treating unexercised employee stock options as income rather than property, for purposes of support [see, e.g., In re Marriage of Kerr (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 87, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 374] . Thus it may be appropriate in the division negotiations to attempt to resolve any support related issues. If so, practitioners should understand and take into account as appropriate the fact that stock option income (whether deemed or attributable to a forced exercise) carries with it a cost in terms of the risks of loss, whether actual (should the underlying stock subsequently lose value) or in the form of gain foregone (should the stock value increase post-exercise), along with the costs of exercise, tax implications, and potential effect on the employee's future relationship with the employer. Commentary by James M. Crawford, Jr.

[f] Valuing Stock Options

Due to unforeseen circumstances, it may not always be possible for the nonemployee spouse to be able to realize his or her interest in an option. For example, a nonemployee spouse may not be able to pay the exercise price. Under these circumstances, it may be necessary or appropriate for the employee spouse to have an opportunity to buy out the nonemployee spouse's interest as part of the overall division of the parties' community estate.

For this reason, this form includes provisions for valuing the employee's stock option rights. Unfortunately, most employee stock options are not publicly tradable and have no readily ascertainable market value. Because factors such as the market price, volatility, the strike price, cost of exercise, tax consequences, and other contingencies (such as vesting), make valuation a difficult proposition at best, it is anticipated that any valuation will be made by one or more experts.

Probably the most widely used valuation method is the computer program known as the Black-Scholes Option Pricing Model, which was originally developed by Fisher Black and Myron Scholes in 1973. It has been modified over the years to reflect changes in the business arena and marketplace. However, other methodologies may be more appropriate to a particular situation. In order to facilitate the valuation process and reduce the opportunity for disparate results, the form allows the parties to agree in advance to the particular methodology to be used.

Identification of Employee Stock Options Definitions

For purposes of the following provisions, the phrase "during the marriage" refers to the period between the date of marriage and the date of separation. The "Grant Date" is the date the option was granted, or shall be deemed to have been granted for division purposes. The "Exercise Date" is the date the option can first be exercised and the stock acquired by paying the strike (exercise) price. The "Vesting Date" is the date on which the options become nonforfeitable. "Employer" is defined as [specify; include prior employers if applicable].

Identification of Stock Options

The following is a list of employee stock options granted to [employee spouse] during the marriage (whether or not yet vested or exercisable) or that became exercisable or vested during the marriage, regardless of when granted, but excluding options that were exercised during the marriage. The parties recognize that there is a community interest in each of the options below to the extent the option rights are earned at least in part by [employee spouse] during the marriage, and agree that the method to determine that interest shall be as shown for each.

[Repeat the following provisions as many times as necessary to include all stock options granted to the employee spouse. If both Husband and Wife have employee stock options that are subject to division, repeat the entire form for the stock options of each.]

or reissue with respect to the shares.

[OR]

[Nonemployee spouse's] interest in [the option or each option or specify option to which paragraph applies] shall be determined as follows: [specify].

Exercise of Options and Delivery of Stock to _____ [Nonemployee Spouse] [Select one of the following paragraphs for each option listed above.] Recognition of Beneficial Interest-Constructive Trust CAUTION: Use of this provision may result in the loss of ISO tax treatment with respect to the interest of the nonemployee spouse [see [1][d], above].

[Employee spouse] shall hold and exercise [nonemployee spouse's] share of [the option or each option or specify option to which paragraph applies] for the benefit of and at the direction of [nonemployee spouse], subject to payment to the Employer by [nonemployee spouse] of the exercise price in the form and manner required, including any applicable withholding [Add if desired: and delivery by _____ (nonemployee spouse) of evidence satisfactory to _____ (employee spouse) of (her/his) ability to pay directly, or indemnify _____ (employee spouse) against, any resulting tax liability (optional: without taking into account the market value of the shares to be acquired)]. [Add if desired: If so directed, _____ (employee spouse) shall use for the exercise any financing or "cashless exercise" rights available under the terms of the option.] As soon as is administratively feasible after delivery of the stock attributable to the exercise, [employee spouse] shall cause the stock to be transferred to or for the benefit of [nonemployee spouse] as [nonemployee spouse] may direct. The identification and recognition of [nonemployee spouse's] existing community interest in [the option or each option or specify option to which paragraph applies] as set forth above shall not be construed as creating, assigning, or transferring to [nonemployee spouse] any new or additional interest, whether beneficial or legal. Instead, at the time when [employee spouse] exercises the option (whether or not at the nonbinding request of [nonemployee spouse]), [employee spouse] shall notify [nonemployee spouse] in writing of the exercise. On payment by [nonemployee spouse] to [employee spouse] of an amount equal to that portion of the exercise price (and any applicable withholding and employment taxes) attributable to [nonemployee spouse's] interest in the acquired Employer stock, [employee spouse] shall immediately transfer [nonemployee spouse's] share to [nonemployee spouse]. In the case of a partial exercise of an option, [nonemployee spouse's] share of the acquired stock shall be _____ [determined on a pro rata basis based on the relative interests of the parties in the option or determined as follows: _____. In no event shall [employee spouse] be liable to [nonemployee spouse] for the timing or manner of any exercise of the option, which shall be in the sole discretion of [employee spouse]. Any transfer of stock under this paragraph is intended to be treated as a nontaxable transfer incident to divorce. [Add if desired: If, on receipt of _____ (employee spouse's) notice of intent to exercise, _____ (nonemployee spouse) should fail to timely pay to _____ (employee spouse) the amount as required above, _____ (employee spouse) may, at (his/her) discretion, either not proceed with the exercise, or proceed with the exercise and hold all shares acquired for (his/her) own account. Within _____ days of the delivery of the stock to _____ (employee spouse), _____ (employee spouse) shall then pay to _____ (nonemployee spouse), in full satisfaction of (her/his) interest, an amount, net of any applicable taxes, determined as follows: _____ (specify valuation method)].

Limitations on Liability Before Exercise of Options and Delivery of Shares

The parties understand that they each may have disparate or irreconcilable interests with respect to the vesting, form, timing, and manner of exercise, or other matters pertaining to [the option/any option] until the time when [it is/they are] transferred or exercised as provided above. The parties also recognize that the value of [the option/any option] before it is transferred or exercised may be conditioned on or determined in substantial part based on the performance by [employee spouse] of future services to the Employer or other post-separation actions. The parties intend that [nonemployee spouse's] interest shall also be subject to the risks inherent in [employee spouse's] employee-stock-option grants generally. Therefore, the parties agree that, except as otherwise specifically provided to the contrary in this Agreement, [employee spouse] shall not be liable to [nonemployee spouse] for any post-separation decisions, actions, or failures to act relevant to the manner and timing of vesting or exercise of the interest of [nonemployee spouse] in [the option/any option]. Nor shall [employee spouse] be responsible to [nonemployee spouse] for any loss in value or forfeiture of option rights attributable to changes in the terms of [employee spouse's] employment, including termination, or any failure of [employee spouse] to meet performance or other established goals or objectives required to vest or make [the option/any option] available for exercise, or for any loss in value due to any other act or failure to act relative to satisfying any conditions affecting vesting or exercise rights.

Limitations on _____ [Employee Spouse's] Rights to Modify Option(s)

[Employee spouse] shall not make any voluntary election or otherwise agree to convert, amend, renew, cancel and replace, or otherwise modify [the option/any option], to the extent of [nonemployee spouse's] interest, without the prior written consent of [nonemployee spouse]. [Add if desired: If _____ (nonemployee spouse) does not consent within a reasonable time of receipt of notice, _____ (employee spouse) may take the proposed modification action on payment to _____ (nonemployee spouse) of the value of _____ (nonemployee spouse's) interest as of the election date, determined without regard to the anticipated change. _____ (Nonemployee spouse) shall then have no further interest in the option or in any shares acquired.]

[Include if desired.]

Alternative Minimum Tax

The parties understand that the exercise of an option may give rise to Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT) Income for [employee spouse], which, although not taxable directly, may increase the amount of tax that [he/she] will owe for the taxable year. [Nonemployee spouse] [shall/shall not] be required to compensate [employee spouse] for any adverse tax effect to the extent attributable to AMT accruing on the exercise of [nonemployee spouse's] interest in [the option/any option], or the disposition of the shares acquired. [The amount to be paid by _____ (nonemployee spouse) in this regard shall be determined as follows:_____.]

[Include if desired.]

Disqualifying Disposition With Respect to ISOs.

Nothing contained in this Agreement shall preclude either party from making a disqualifying disposition (within the meaning of Internal Revenue Code Section 422(c)) of his or her respective shares of stock following exercise of [the option/any option].

IRC Section 83(b) Election

Nothing contained in this Agreement shall restrict the right of either party to make an election under Internal Revenue Code Section 83(b) for immediate tax on exercise of his or her respective shares of [the option/any option].

Modification, Extension or Renewal

[EITHER]

If [the option/any option] is modified, extended, or renewed after the date of this Agreement, [nonemployee spouse's] share shall be calculated on exercise as provided above without regard to the effect of the change.

[OR]

If [the option/any option] is modified, extended, or renewed after the date of this Agreement, [employee spouse] shall provide [nonemployee spouse] with a copy of the terms of the option as amended, and the parties shall make any adjustments in the calculation of their respective shares as they shall mutually agree so as to effect their intended division of the community interest. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to resolve any issues about which the parties are unable to reach agreement.

Notification of Changes in Circumstance Before Vesting or Exercise

Until such time as [the option/each of the options] shall be 100 percent vested and exercisable, [employee spouse] shall notify [nonemployee spouse] in writing of any change in circumstances that may affect the vesting or the Exercise Date (such as a change in control of the Employer, or a blackout period). If these circumstances are not within the control of [employee spouse], notice shall be given not more than _____ days after [employee spouse] first becomes aware of the changes. In all other cases, notice shall be given not less than _____ days in advance of any election, agreement, consent or other acceptance of the change in circumstances by [employee spouse].

[Include if desired.]

Change in Stock Value After Exercise Date

After the Exercise Date, and until such time as [the option/an option] is actually exercised, [employee spouse] shall notify [nonemployee spouse] of any material change reasonably known to [him/her] in the value of the stock to which the option applies [add if desired: unless the information is reasonable available to _____ (nonemployee spouse)]. For this purpose, a material change shall be a change of at least _____ percent of the value determined as of the most recent date for which a value was publicly available, or a change equal to or exceeding $ _____ per share. Notice shall be given in writing within _____ days of [employee spouse's] learning of the change in value. Nothing contained in this paragraph shall be construed as requiring [employee spouse] to divulge any information in violation of any securities laws or written agreement of confidentiality.

Valuation of Interest

Should it become necessary to value the interest of [nonemployee spouse], the value shall be deemed equal to [that determined by an independent expert jointly selected by the parties or the average of the values determined by the experts appointed by each of the parties] using _____ [the Black-Scholes Method or the following factors (check all that are applicable):

- _____ Intrinsic Value
- _____ Time to Execution
- _____ Value of Underlying Stock
- _____ Market Interest Rates
- _____ Dividends
- _____ Exercise Price
- _____ Potential for Adjustments in Exercise Price or Date
- _____ Expiration date
- _____ Income Tax Attributes
- _____ Other _____ [specify]

The cost of this valuation shall be _____ [born by _____ (employee spouse) or born by _____ (nonemployee spouse) or shared by the parties in proportion to their respective interests in the option or shared by the parties equally].

Payment of Taxes and Preparation of Tax Returns

Except as may otherwise be specifically provided in the Agreement to the contrary, the parties shall each be solely responsible for payment of all taxes due or that may become due with respect to their respective interests in [the option/all options] divided in this Agreement, or in any stock or other property acquired by any exercise of an option. Each party shall properly report all income, gains or losses, and withholding credits attributable to his or her respective interests in the option, any transfer or other disposition of that interest, and any stock acquired through the exercise of that interest. The parties recognize that the tax implications of the division of employee stock options on divorce are unclear, and therefore, agree to cooperate fully in the preparation of their respective tax returns in order accomplish the intent of this paragraph.

Tax Indemnification

Except as may otherwise be specifically provided in the Agreement to the contrary, each party shall indemnify and hold the other harmless from any tax liability (including but not limited to taxes, penalties, interest, and costs) arising out of any transfer or exercise of the indemnifying party's interest in [the option/any option] as awarded or confirmed in this Agreement, or arising out of the disposition of any stock acquired under [the option/an option].

Remaining Option Rights are Separate Property of _____ [Employee Spouse]

Except for the interests assigned to or recognized as belonging to [nonemployee spouse] in the option(s) identified above, all employee stock options granted to [employee spouse] by the Employer and any stock acquired by exercising the options, shall be the sole and separate property of [employee spouse].

Reservation of Jurisdiction

The court shall reserve jurisdiction to accomplish the intended disposition of the community interest in option(s) set forth above.

§ 122.220 Division of Qualified Plans

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, contains complete provisions for the division of an employee benefit plan that is covered by Title 1 of ERISA or "qualified" under Internal Revenue Code Sections 401(a) or 403(b) [see 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq. (Employee Retirement Income Security Act)]. The employee spouse is usually called the "participant" and the nonemployee spouse whose interest is being determined and distributed under the agreement is called the "alternate payee."

This form may be used with all kinds of employee retirement benefit plans, be they defined contribution plans, defined benefit plans, or other [see § 122.203[1]].

[b] Qualified and Nonqualified Plans

A qualified retirement plan is one that meets strict requirements established by the Internal Revenue Code regarding matters such as participation, coverage, nondiscrimination, nonalienation, documentation, and minimum distribution. A qualified plan must be funded by a trust (or an insurance product) for the exclusive benefit of the participants [see I.R.C. § 401(a)]. Nonqualified plans are usually "unfunded," (meaning that any funds that the employer might set aside for the payment of benefits, whether in trust or otherwise, must remain the property of the employer) and can be designed in any fashion.

The main tax difference between the two is that in a qualified plan, the employer gets an immediate deduction for amounts contributed to the plan, while the participants are not taxed until they actually receive their benefits. In a nonqualified plan, the deduction is unavailable until the benefits become includible in the employees' gross income. Although both plan types usually have antialienation provisions, they are required for qualified plans [see 29 U.S.C. §

1056(d)]. Qualified plans, however, must recognize an exception that allows a family law court to divide benefits between a participant and alternate payee spouse under a Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO) [I.R.C. § 401(a)(13); see 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(3) (QDRO provisions)]. In most jurisdictions, benefit division orders for nonqualified plans are also honored notwithstanding the anti-alienation provisions and ERISA preemption concerns, although the theories vary because the statutory QDRO provisions do not actually apply.

[c] Formula for Determining Community Interest in Plan

Although any reasonable method may be used to arrive at a fair determination of the community interest in retirement benefits, qualified plans that have a community character are usually divided either by a variant of the "time rule" (sometimes referred to as the "coverture fraction") or by "tracing." Tracing is typically used for defined contribution plans, in which contributions are allocated to individual accounts over years. The time rule is usually used for defined benefit plans (which have no individual accounts) and for defined contribution plans if there is insufficient information to do the tracing.

Orders may be structured to provide a percent of benefits as of a particular time (with or without subsequent adjustment of actuarial or investment earnings), a fixed dollar amount, or a combination of the two. A "time rule" formula will typically identify the community interest according to a fraction that gives the community a pro rata portion of the total using a ratio based on comparing years of employment (or some other measure of benefit accrual) during marriage to the total credited service. This approach has been held to be appropriate for use if the amount of the retirement benefits is substantially related to the years of service [In re Marriage of Poppe (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 1, 8-9, 158 Cal. Rptr. 500 ; see In re Marriage of Lehman (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 169, 176, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 825, 955 P.2d 451] . In constructing a time-rule fraction, the practitioner should insert the measure of benefit accrual for the particular plan involved that most nearly approximates the relative contributions of the period of service during and outside marriage. For example, a fraction based on years of employment may not be appropriate if the participant's benefit was fully accrued in the ten years of service before marriage, and was only augmented by salary increases during marriage. For further discussion of the application of the time rule and of computing the community interest under this formula, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issue (Matthew Bender).

A tracing approach can be designed in a number of ways, but the objective is to identify the portion of an individual account that is attributable to contributions made for service during the marriage and the earnings on that portion. While tracing is frequently done on a pro rata basis, without differentiating the particular investment returns that were attributable to money contributed during the marriage, that approach is not always appropriate. For example, if the parties self directed the contributions during marriage into a limited partnership investment that sustained substantial losses, it is questionable whether more conservatively invested separate property contributions should have to subsidize that poor performance. Pro rata tracing is often the only feasible method if the assets of the plan are invested on a pooled basis because there simply is no way to trace any one investment to any particular contribution or account allocation. A qualified plan may be required to implement any clearly specified method of division.

Distributions from a defined contribution plan are usually based on the value of the account as of the most recent "valuation date." These dates are established by the terms of the plan, and must be at least annual. In addition to the described date(s), plan fiduciaries are often given the discretion of calling for an interim valuation date if circumstances warrant. Plan tracing methodologies can be difficult for plans that are valued only annually (making midyear allocations impossible unless the parties agree on some deemed earnings rate), and contributions made during a year are often attributable to service in the prior year.

PRACTICE TIP:

Knowing the valuation date is critical in a qualified defined contribution plan because any earnings between the most recent valuation and the pay date could be inadvertently lost. Of course, if the account has suffered a loss, then that loss would not affect the account if it is distributed before the next valuation date. In plans with daily valuations, this is not an issue. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

Another alternative is for the parties to do the calculations themselves and agree on a specific dollar amount that is to be awarded to the alternate payee. However, if the alternate payee does not have immediate access to the money under the plan, provision must be made to adjust for subsequent events. Defined contribution plan adjustments should deal with prospective changes such as retirement subsidies, window benefits, cost of living and actuarial increases, salary increases, and any formula changes. They should also address subsequent investment experience, usually by requiring the plan to create a separate (or deemed separate) account for the alternate payee.

[d] Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO)

Generally speaking, no part of an ERISA-covered or qualified retirement plan may be awarded to an alternate payee spouse or dependent unless a Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO) is first drafted, entered by the court, and accepted by the plan as "qualified" [29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(3); I.R.C. § 414(p); see Pub. L. No. 109-280, § 1001 (Secretary of Labor to issue regulations clarifying that QDRO does not fail to qualify solely because of time at which it is issued, or because it is issued after, or revises, another domestic relations order or QDRO)]. If the QDRO is prepared simultaneously with the marital settlement agreement, it should be attached and referenced for the specific provisions relating to the division of the plan. If the QDRO will have to be prepared after the agreement, then the agreement should set forth, at a minimum, sufficient dispositive provisions to protect the interests of the parties should either of them die before the QDRO can be entered by the court and accepted by the plan [see 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(3)(C) (required contents of QDRO); Stewart v. Thorpe Holding Co. (9th Cir. 1999) 207 F.3d 1143, 200 U.S. App. Lexis 5807 (marital dissolution order qualified as QDRO); Carland v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (10th Cir. 1991) 935 F.2d 1114 (property settlement agreement that has been incorporated or merged into family law judgment can constitute QDRO); see also [1][e], below]. For some plans, if a participant dies after dissolution without a surviving spouse and before receipt of retirement benefits begins, all benefits otherwise payable revert to the plan [see, e.g., Samaroo v. Samaroo (3d Cir. 1999) 193 F.3d 185]. QDRO status can also protect against IRS levy in some cases [see Agents Pension Plan of Allstate Insurance Company v. Weeks (1999 N.D. Ill.) 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6289]. The form in [2], below, contains options for either the attachment of a QDRO or language sufficient to constitute the agreement as a QDRO.

PRACTICE TIP:

In preparing a QDRO, family law practitioners may wish to associate counsel with specialized expertise in employee benefits and ERISA to assist in negotiating and drafting the order. In some cases, particularly with regard to a defined benefit plan, the assistance of an actuary skilled in the evaluation of employee benefit plans can also be helpful. In many cases, the pension plan administrator can provide needed information and may even be able to provide sample forms or provisions. In using this information, it is important to realize that the plan administrator's responsibility is limited to ensuring that any order meets the QDRO requirements, and sample orders may or may not be adequate to effect the division of the plan that best advances the interests of the client. For example, suppose a defined benefit plan uses a sample order based on the time rule, yet includes a benefit that is based in part on employee contributions. If the employee contribution account has no nexus to the marital period of employment, using a time rule would comply with the QDRO requirements certainly, but the order would result in an improper sharing of the benefit portion attributable to separate property contributions. In this case, the drafter would want to separate that portion of the benefit to which the time rule fraction is to apply. Commentary by James M. Crawford, Jr.

PRACTICE TIP:

It should always be remembered that the so-called "time rule" is a method for apportioning plans, not determining whether they have a community character that is subject to apportionment. The difference is critical, and it should never be assumed that just because a plan computes benefits based on service during the period of marriage and prior to separation, that those benefits are in part community owned. The test is not how the benefits are measured, but simply whether the right to those benefits arose during the marriage, at least in some part [In re Marriage of Lehman (1998) 18 Cal.4th 169, 74 Cal.Rptr.2d 825, 955 P.2d 451] . Thus, a plan in which the employee spouse first participates or accrues a benefit after separation is going to be entirely separate property, even though the rights earned under that plan are measured in part by the employee's prior service during the marriage [In re Marriage of Frahm (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 536] .

[e] Death and Survivor Benefits

[i] Death of Employee-Participant Spouse

Absent an agreement to the contrary between the spouses, California law provides that a nonemployee spouse has a community interest in death and survivor benefits payable under the employee spouse's retirement plan [see Fam. Code § 2610]. However, under the federal law applicable to retirement plans (ERISA and the Internal Revenue Code) surviving spouses are entitled to no less than half of any death benefit that becomes payable if a participant should die before retirement benefits have been paid or begun, regardless of the community interest. The federally protected right of a surviving spouse to a preretirement survivor benefit is known as a QPSA right (Qualified Preretirement Survivor Annuity) [29 U.S.C. § 1055(a)(2), (e); I.R.C. §§ 401(a)(11), 417(c) (rules for qualified preretirement survivor annuities in ERISA and the I.R.C.)].

Any death benefit payable over and above the required QPSA will go to the participant's designated beneficiary, if any, under the Plan. Plans that typically do not pay an annuity, such as profit-sharing plans and 401(k) plans, can avoid having to pay a QPSA, but only if the surviving spouse is the automatic beneficiary of 100 percent, rather than just 50 percent, of the death benefit [see 29 U.S.C. 1055 (b)(1)(C)(i)]. Thus, a participant's surviving spouse has a statutorily created priority to QPSA benefits over everyone, except, of course, the IRS for tax liens [but cf. U.S. v. Taylor (8th Cir. 2003) 338 F.3d 947 (QDRO may trump IRS tax lien as alternate payee's interest)].

ERISA and the Internal Revenue Code also protect surviving spouses in another way, by providing that all pension plan retirement benefits (as distinguished from death benefits paid preretirement) must be distributed in the form of a "Qualified Joint and Survivor Annuity" (QJSA) unless the spouse consents in writing to a different form of payment [see 29 U.S.C. § 1055(a)(1), (d)]. However, unlike a QPSA, this protection does not generally extend to profit sharing, 401(k), and similar plans [29 U.S.C. 1055(b)(1)(C)]. These plans can therefore distribute retirement benefits in any nonannuity form (for example, lump sum or installments) without spousal consent.

The federally created right to QPSA and QJSA benefits for surviving spouses creates potential difficulties in effecting a fair division of ERISA-covered plans on divorce. For example, if the participant remarries, the divorcing nonparticipant's community share of a QPSA could be lost to the participant's surviving spouse. On the other hand, if the divorce occurs after a QJSA benefit has commenced, the former spouse will be receiving all of the survivor benefit, but the new spouse and the participant's estate will have no protection at all.

There are two ways in which these problems may be avoided, or at least minimized, as they relate to the death of the participant spouse. First, the participant may waive the right to a QPSA (or a QJSA) with the consent of his or her current spouse, and then name the former spouse as a beneficiary or survivor annuitant for all or a part of the survivor benefits. The waiver must be informed, in writing, and witnessed by a plan representative or notary public [I.R.C. § 417(a); 29 U.S.C. § 1055(c); see I.R.C. § 401(a)(11)(b)(iii) (current spouse); see also 29 U.S.C. § 1055(c)].

Second, although the divorcing spouses may provide by QDRO that the nonparticipant, rather than any potential or theoretical second spouse, will be treated as the participant's surviving spouse for purposes of the QPSA (or QJSA) to the extent provided in the order. 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(3)(F)].

PRACTICE TIP:

In dividing pension plans, some practitioners fail to realize, until it is too late, that these plans provide both retirement benefits and survivor benefits, and that the division is not complete until both sets of rights are properly addressed. This problem is particularly acute in some defined benefit pension plans, for which the QPSA rules are such that once the dissolution is granted, the nonparticipant spouse's community share of the survivor benefits could be lost entirely if the participant does not remarry, except to the extent provided in a QDRO [see, e.g., In re Marriage of Padgett (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 830, 836, 848-856, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 475 (domestic relations order entered before pension plan participant's death that does not award former spouse any interest at all participant's pension plan, but simply "reserves jurisdiction" over plan, does not provide basis for entry, after participant's death, of nunc pro tunc QDRO or any order determining former spouse's interest in pension plan that later may be qualified as QDRO)]; Samaroo v. Samaroo (3d Cir. 1999) 193 F.3d 185 (nunc pro tunc amendment of divorce decree after participant's death to divide QPSA is not valid QDRO)]. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

If the participant dies after payments have begun, the QPSA rules no longer apply, and any survivor benefit will be determined and paid in accord with the form elected for the distribution. It has been held that the QJSA survivor annuity is deemed to vest in whoever is the participant's spouse on the date of retirement [Hopkins v. A.T.&T. Global Information Solutions Co. (4th Cir. 1997) 105 F.3d 153, 156 (order that attempts to give former spouse interest in QJSA survivor annuity cannot be a QDRO because right has vested in participant's second spouse and is no longer payable "with respect to a participant"); see 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(3)(B)(i)(I)]. However, the Ninth Circuit has called this ruling into question [Trustees of the Dirs. Guild of America-Producer Pension Benefits Plans v. Tise (9th Cir. 2000) 234 F.3d 415, 424]. Thus, if the participant divorces, remarries, and then retires, the second spouse will receive the QJSA survivor annuity and the former spouse may receive nothing, barring a successful splitting of that interest by QDRO [Hopkins v. A.T.&T. Global Information Solutions Co. (4th Cir. 1997) 105 F.3d 153, 156 ; see In re Marriage of Padgett (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 830, 836, 848-856, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 475 (domestic relations order entered before pension plan participant's death that does not award former spouse any interest at all participant's pension plan, but simply "reserves jurisdiction" over plan, does not provide basis for entry, after participant's death, of nunc pro tunc QDRO or any order determining former spouse's interest in pension plan that later may be qualified as QDRO)].

But if the participant retires and commences receiving benefits in the form of a QJSA, divorces, and then dies, the plan will pay a survivor benefit to the former spouse as the joint annuitant, and the current spouse will receive nothing. The reason for these seemingly arbitrary results is that in order to preserve their actuarial integrity, pension plans require, at the time when the payments begin, that the administrator know the life expectancy of the person to receive the survivor benefit in order to calculate the participant's monthly benefit [see Hopkins v. A.T.&T. Global Information Solutions Co. (4th Cir. 1997) 105 F.3d 153, 157 n.7].

PRACTICE TIP:

Although careful QDRO drafting may get around many of these problems, if the QDRO process is put off until after a death occurs, it may be too late to do anything that will accomplish the intended division. Although the issuance of nunc pro tunc orders may be an answer in some situations [Patton v. Denver Post Corp. (10th Cir., 2003) 326 F.3d 1148], it is obviously better to address the problem fully before a death or change in condition occurs [see In re Marriage of Padgett (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 830, 836, 848-856, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 475 (domestic relations order entered before pension plan participant's death that does not award former spouse any interest at all participant's pension plan, but simply "reserves jurisdiction" over plan, does not provide basis for entry, after participant's death, of nunc pro tunc QDRO or any order determining former spouse's interest in pension plan that later may be qualified as QDRO)]. Another possibility is to avoid the issue, by providing the necessary survivor protection through life insurance. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

PRACTICE TIP:

Due to the impact of the QPSA and QJSA rules, a participant who marries after accumulating a large account balance or benefit in a qualified retirement plan should understand that any estate or prenuptial plan that would take away the federally protected rights of the new spouse will not have the desired effect, unless the consent of the spouse is obtained after marriage. Because spousal consent cannot be given except by a current spouse, prenuptial consents or waivers of QPSA and QJSA rights are not valid [see Treas. Reg. 1.401(a)-20]. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

[ii] Death of Nonparticipant Spouse

If the nonparticipant spouse predeceases the participant, the nonparticipant's right to a QPSA or QJSA [see [i], above] terminates and is not subject to testamentary disposition in his or her estate [Boggs v. Boggs (1997) 520 U.S. 833, 841-844, 117 S. Ct. 1754, 138 L. Ed. 2d 45 ; see Branco v. Northern Cal. Employers Joint Pension Plan (9th Cir. 2002) 279 F.3d 1154] . Further, if the parties remained married at the nonparticipant's death, the rule of ERISA is that the nonparticipant cannot pass his or her community property share in any ERISA-covered plan to a designated beneficiary by will, and any state law that purports to provide for such a testamentary transfer is preempted [Boggs v. Boggs (1997) 520 U.S. 833, 117 S. Ct. 1754, 138 L. Ed. 2d 45 (nondissolution case in which wife attempted to devise her right to survivor annuity and community property interest in husband's other employee benefits to her children by prior marriage); Ablamis v. Roper (9th Cir. 1990) 937 F.2d 1450, 1454 (nondissolution case in which estate of alternate payee who predeceased participant claimed her community interest in employee plans for trust for benefit of her children of prior marriage)]. The problem in divorce is that the nonparticipant spouse's interest also cannot be redirected to his or her heirs by a QDRO (with one exception discussed below). The theory is that because pensions are intended for the living, the QDRO rules are not equipped to handle what amounts to a testamentary disposition of a marital interest [Branco v. Northern Cal. Employers Joint Pension Plan (9th Cir. 2002) 279 F.3d 1154] .

If the parties are divorcing, at least one California court has held that a state court in a dissolution of marriage may not enter an order allowing the nonparticipant spouse to name a "successor in interest" to receive her or his community share of undistributed pension benefits on her or his death unless the successor-beneficiary also meets the definition of an "alternate payee" under ERISA and is so designated in a QDRO [In re Marriage of Shelstead (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 893, 904, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 365 (citing Boggs v. Boggs (1997) 520 U.S. 833, 117 S. Ct. 1754, 138 L. Ed. 2d 45, 59-63 ; see 29 U.S.C. § 1156(d)(3)(K) ("alternate payees" under ERISA); see also In re Rich (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 419, 423, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 452 (participant was entitled to restoration of full amount of benefit on death of nonparticipant under terms of plan and QDRO)]. And this sentiment has now been echoed by the Ninth Circuit [Branco v. Northern Cal. Employers Joint Pension Plan (9th Cir. 2002) 279 F.3d 1154] . However, both of these cases dealt with the attempt to redirect benefits by a shared interest QDRO to entities or persons who do not meet the QDRO requirement that the alternate payee be a spouse, former spouse, or dependent of the participant [I.R.C. § 414(p)]. If the intended beneficiary does not qualify in this category (although most plans will allow for any dependent of a participant to be an alternate payee, some take the position that the dependent must also be a minor), other approaches will need to be explored.

PRACTICE TIP:

It is generally accepted that a QDRO may permit the alternate payee to designate any beneficiary under the plan to receive her or his share when the QDRO divides the benefit into separate accounts, as is possible with nearly all defined contribution plans [see In re Marriage of Shelstead (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 893, 904-905, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 365 (expressly not deciding question)]. This approach may also be feasible if a defined benefit pension plan has been divided by a separate interest QDRO, as long as the participant would have the same option. In both instances, the Shelstead and Branco concerns appear not to be implicated because beneficiary status is effectively conferred by the operation of the terms of the plan on the separate interest that is created by the QDRO, rather than by the terms of the QDRO itself. Moreover, IRS regulations inferentially sanction the ability of an alternate payee to designate a beneficiary [Treas. Reg. § 1.401(a)-13(g)(4)(iii)(C); Treas. Reg. § 1.401(a)(9), Q. & A. 6]. Commentary by James M. Crawford, Jr.

PRACTICE TIP:

Dealing with the possibility of an untimely death of a participant or alternate payee is only one reason to get any anticipated QDROs drafted sooner, rather than later. For example, until a separate account is created in an alternate payee, the full benefit is subject to a tax lien for the separate property liability of the participant spouse [see Agents Pension Plan of Allstate Insurance Company v. Weeks (1999 N.D. Ill.) 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6289, 83 A.F.T.R. 2d (RIA) 2446, 99-1 U.S. Tax Cas. (CCH) P50509 (N.D. Ill. 1999) ; see also U.S. v. Taylor (8th Cir 2003) 338 F.3d 947] . Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

[f] Suspension of Benefits

Some plans, particularly union plans, contain a provision that will result in the suspension of benefits if the participant returns to work in covered employment. Depending on how the plan is drafted, benefit suspensions may be temporary or permanent. In all such cases, care should be taken to understand how any suspension may affect the benefits otherwise payable to an alternative payee. This applies both to benefits that may be forgone, and to the potential for subsequently earned benefits or actuarial increases on the alternate payee's share.

This form contains several options for handling suspension of benefits. The first option is for the participant to make payments directly to the nonparticipant of the amount that is no longer forthcoming because of the suspension of benefits on reemployment. The second option requires the plan to continue payments to the nonparticipant, which is possible only if the plan so provides. The third option is for the nonparticipant to accept the suspension of benefits. The fourth option gives the nonparticipant the choice of deciding at the time of suspension whether to demand direct payment or accept suspension. The fifth option leaves the issue open, and allows the court to reserve jurisdiction to amend the order as may be appropriate.

PRACTICE TIP:

In negotiating QDROs that have an income component, care should be taken, if appropriate, to integrate any such provisions with the issue of support. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

[g] Matured Benefits Not Yet Being Paid

[i] Alternate Payee's Right to Immediate Receipt Under Marriage of Gillmore

In some instances, an employee spouse's retirement benefits may have matured but are not yet being paid because the employee spouse has chosen to continue working rather than retire. In this situation, the parties may take any of several courses of action. They might, for example, agree that the employee spouse will "cash out" the nonemployee spouse. Alternatively, the parties may decide to make a present division of the benefits in their agreement, but provide that the nonemployee spouse will defer receipt of his or her share of the benefits until the time the employee spouse actually retires, although additional protective orders may be required for the nonemployee spouse's benefit [see, e.g., In re Marriage of Davis (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 1015-1017, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 220 (under agreement fixing nonemployee spouse's percentage share of employee spouse's retirement benefit, nonemployee spouse was entitled to receive that percentage of enhanced retirement benefit that resulted from employee spouse's postponement of retirement); see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issue (Matthew Bender)].

A third possibility is for the nonemployee spouse to elect to immediately begin receiving payments of the amount that would be paid as his or her share of benefits if the employee spouse were to retire at the present time, which is sometimes referred to as a Gillmore election [In re Marriage of Gillmore (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 418, 428 n.9, 174 Cal.

Rptr. 493, 629 P.2d 1] . Amounts paid under a Gillmore election to reimburse a nonemployee spouse for his or her share of retirement benefits that would be payable if the employee spouse were retired are treated as part of the spouses' division of property. Thus, even if the employee spouse uses his or her wages as the source of payments to the nonemployee spouse under the latter's Gillmore election, the amount of those payments is not excludable from the employee spouse's gross income or deductible as spousal support [Commissioner v. Dunkin (9th Cir. 2007) 500 F.3d 1065, 1069-1072] . For discussion of the possible ramifications to the nonemployee spouse of making such an election, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issue (Matthew Bender) [see generally In re Marriage of Scott (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 251, 254-255, 202 Cal. Rptr. 716 , cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1035 (1984)] .

After the Gillmore case, Congress passed the Retirement Equity Act [Pub. L. No. 98-397], which included a provision that enables alternate payees to obtain their benefits by QDRO once the participant reached the earliest retirement age, even if he or she did not in fact retire [see 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(3)(E)]. By regulation, the IRS then allowed plans to provide for distribution to an alternate payee to be made at any time [see 29 U.S.C. 1056(d)(3)(E)]. Except for plans that include an early retirement subsidy, discussed in [ii], below, this change removed any need to make a Gillmore election under an ERISA plan.

[ii] Gillmore Election of Early Retirement Subsidy

An early retirement subsidy arises if a defined benefit plan allows for a participant to retire early and still receive the same, or only a slightly reduced, benefit from that which would otherwise be payable at regular retirement age. The subsidy is the difference between what would be paid if the benefit were to receive the full actuarial reduction to account for the fact that it is to be paid over a longer period, and the amount that is actually paid. For example, if a participant entitled to a benefit of $1,000 per month beginning at age 65 (the normal retirement benefit) can retire early and start to receive the same $1,000 per month, the benefit is said to be fully subsidized.

Although plans can allow an alternate payee to commence receiving a share of the participant's normal retirement benefit at the earliest retirement age, any such benefit must receive the full actuarial reduction until the subsidy is triggered by the participant's actual retirement. Thus, although the alternate payee under a subsidized plan can always get the full value of the awarded share of the participant's benefit, no matter when benefits are started, he or she cannot get a share of any subsidy until the participant effectively earns it by retiring early. Thus, In Marriage of Oddino, the California Supreme Court held, in part, that "Rule of 75" early retirement benefits are "an employer subsidy for early retirement" rather than "accrued benefits," so that, under ERISA, a QDRO cannot require a retirement plan to pay the subsidized portion of full "Rule of 75" benefits to a nonemployee former spouse if an employee former spouse does not take early retirement but continues to work [In re Marriage of Oddino (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 67, 71, 85-88, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 566, 939 P.2d 1266] .

Some practitioners argue that the alternate payee in effect owns a pro rata share of any early retirement subsidy, and therefore, the participant can, under a Gillmore type election [see [i], above], be forced to either give up the ability to continue to work until normal retirement, or pay the alternate payee directly his or her share of the same subsidy that would have been paid by the plan had the participant actually retired early. Other practitioners point to the fact that Gillmore never contemplated this result and speaks only to the right of the nonparticipant spouse to enjoy retirement benefits that have accrued as of the date of the election, not to ancillary subsidies that come into play only when "earned" by the participant's giving his or her separate property income from continued employment. In this regard, in Marriage of Lehman, the California Supreme Court justified a rule that enables an alternate payee to share in post separation plan improvements, by noting that the alternate payees are compelled to take the bad with the good [In re Marriage of Lehman (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 169, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 825, 955 P.2d 451] . Thus, for example, a participant is free to terminate employment without having to compensate the nonemployee spouse for benefits not yet earned. Because a full early retirement subsidy can, in some cases, equal or exceed the value of a participant's accrued retirement benefit, this debate is likely to continue until the issue is resolved by the courts.

[h] Joinder of Plan as Party

The form in [2], below, provides that the employee benefit plan being divided by the spouses either has been or will be joined as a party to the dissolution proceeding. Under Family Code Section 2060 et seq., joinder is a prerequisite to the court's being able to enforce any QDRO issued to the plan. For further discussion of joinder, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 94, Joinder of Parties (Matthew Bender).

The issue of whether the Family Code joinder provisions are preempted by ERISA is still somewhat unsettled. Although in California, it has been held that there is no preemption [In re Marriage of Baker (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 206, 215-219, 251 Cal. Rptr. 126] , the federal courts have yet to settle on a rule [compare AT[T] Management Pension Plan v. Tucker (C.D. Cal. 1995) 902 F. Supp. 1168, 1175 n.5 (not reaching issue of preemption of Family Code joinder provisions, but finding that Family Code-authorized attorney fee order against plan is preempted) with Nasca v. Peoplesoft, Inc. (N.D. Cal. 1999) 87 F. Supp. 2d 967 (joinder of ERISA-covered plan, alone, does raise question of federal law under ERISA; in absence of issuance by state court of actual order that conflicts with ERISA, action is not removable to federal court under conflict preemption)]. Accordingly, some plans will voluntarily sign the Judicial Council form consenting to joinder, and others will not [see Cal. Judicial Council Form FL-373 (Judicial Council form of Responsive Declaration to Motion for Joinder and Consent Order of Joinder); see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 94, Joinder of Parties (Matthew Bender)].

For ERISA-covered plans, the fiduciaries are required by federal law to adhere to the plan's published QDRO procedures, which usually contain adequate protection for prospective alternate payees by placing a hold on payment of benefits to the participant without the consent of the nonparticipant [see 29 U.S.C. 1104(a)(1)(D); see also Schoonmaker v. Employee Sav. Plan of Amoco Corp., (7th Cir. 1993) 987 F. 2d. 410] . In these circumstances, the joinder issue becomes essentially moot unless the court refuses to issue an order under the Family Code. If the plan's own procedures are inadequate, however, consideration may be given to seeking a temporary restraining order (in the form of a temporary QDRO) which the legislative history indicates Congress intended be honored [see Conference Report, Tax Reform Act of 1986, PL 99-514]. A notice of adverse interest under Family Code Section 755 may also be served on the plan.

[i] Assets Allocation and Direction of Investments

The form in [2], below, contains provisions for both the allocation of assets and direction of investments. Assets allocation involves the division of the assets of a defined contribution plan into two separate accounts, one for the participant and one for the alternate payee. Direction of investments refers to the decisions that can be made by the parties with regard to the investments of the assets in an account.

This form provides that the QDRO will specify the assets that will be allocated to each of the separate accounts to be established for the parties. If all or a portion of the participant's account is invested in qualifying employer securities (QES), special tax rules will apply if distribution is made in a lump sum, or if the account includes employee contributions [see I.R.C. § 402(e)(4)]. A participant has the right to rollover the distribution of QES to an IRA or another qualified plan, or to take distribution of the securities net of any unrealized appreciation [Treas. Reg. § 1.402(c)-2 Q[A] 3]. The result of a distribution is that tax would only be paid on the cost of the securities, with any gain deferred until their actual sale.

PRACTICE TIP:

Because the tax advantages associated with QES distributions may potentially be of more value to one spouse than the other, it presents an opportunity for constructive cooperation, particularly in high net worth cases. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

The right of a plan participant to direct the investments of the funds in the participant's account is becoming increasingly popular, either on an actual basis (in the case of defined contribution plan accounts) or on a deemed basis (in the case of a hypothetical cash balance plan account). Usually, a QDRO can provide for the alternate payee to have the same investment control rights as the participant. This form provides an option for the nonparticipant to participate in the investment decisions made in a defined contribution plan.

Special issues may arise if the participant has, after separation but before the QDRO is issued, directed investments imprudently, particularly if the participant is also a plan trustee. Although ERISA provides that if certain conditions are met, plan trustees are not liable for losses attributable to imprudent participant investments made with their accounts, in some cases a participant's exercise of investment control may result in his or her becoming an ERISA plan fiduciary, and thus liable for any imprudence under federal law [see 29 U.S.C. § 1104(c)].

PRACTICE TIP:

This is yet another reason not to delay the QDRO process. Until the nonparticipant spouse attains the status of an alternate payee, standing to object to imprudent investments under federal law is unclear, and missing entirely under state law fiduciary rules, which unlike the fiduciary rules of ERISA § 404 do not encompass the prudent investor rule [see Fam. Code §§ 721(b), 100(e), 2102]. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

[j] Present Division Providing for Future Payments

This form establishes a present agreement between the spouses regarding how benefits are to be divided, even though the benefits may not yet be payable. The parties agree that the court will be requested to reserve jurisdiction to make orders regarding the benefits, to the extent necessary to carry out the terms of the agreement between the parties. The agreement also provides for simultaneous execution of a QDRO, or for a QDRO to be prepared reasonably soon after execution of the agreement [see [d], above].

This approach is distinguished from one in which the parties do not divide benefits in the agreement at the time of dissolution (or even provide a formula for division), but rather agree to a future determination and division of the benefits by the court at the time the employee spouse retires. Although this approach is arguably permissible under the general authority of the court to divide property at a time later than the dissolution if it reserves its jurisdiction to do so, it is not recommended unless adequate provisions are made for survivor benefits and there is no possibility of adverse IRS tax liens attaching that are in excess of the participant's plan share [see Fam. Code § 2550]. For a related discussion of criticism of court's retaining open-ended jurisdiction to adjudicate interests in retirement benefits, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 21, Special Property Characterization and Division Issue (Matthew Bender) [see also In re Marriage of Bergman (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 742, 756-758, 214 Cal. Rptr. 661] .

[k] TEFRA

The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA) [P.L. 97-248] among other things, changed the rules of Internal Revenue Code Section 401(a)(9) that previously allowed participants to defer receipt of benefits past age 70½ until actual retirement. Section 242(b)(2) of TEFRA includes a provision allowing for a continued recognition of any elections to this effect, made before January 1, 1984, as long as certain conditions are met [I.R.S. Notice 83-23, 1983-2 CB 418 .] These are called "242(b)(2) elections."

In large dollar benefit situations, a 242(b)(2) election can be an important estate planning tool because it allows for the continued deferral of tax past age 70½. However, because of the rule that the elections are revoked if a distribution is not made in the form or at the time originally elected [Prop. Treas. Reg. 1.401(a)(9)-1(j)], an improperly drafted QDRO could inadvertently ruin what would otherwise be a mutually advantageous estate plan. For this reason, the form in [2], below, provides that if a TEFRA election was previously made, the parties will cooperate in electing the timing and form in which their respective shares in the plan are to be distributed.

[l] Payment of Income Taxes on Distributions

Special rules apply to the taxation of benefits received under qualified plans under a Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO). Although distributions from a pension plan are normally taxable only to the plan participant [see I.R.C. § 402(a)], if an "alternate payee" [see I.R.C. § 414(p)(8)] under a QDRO is the spouse or former spouse of the plan participant, any amount distributed or paid to the alternate payee is a distribution of income to the alternate payee [see I.R.C. § 402(e)(1)(A)]. However, if the alternate payee is a person other than a spouse or former spouse, for example, a dependent child of the plan participant, the plan participant will be required to include any distribution to the alternate payee in the participant's gross income [see I.R.C. § 402(a), (e)(1)(A)].

This form requires the nonemployee spouse to pay all income taxes on any amounts distributed to him or her from an employee benefit plan. It also requires the nonemployee spouse to indemnify the employee spouse against any tax liability arising from distributions made to the nonemployee spouse either directly by the plan or by the employee spouse. Although the Internal Revenue Service is not bound by such a provision, because it is not a party to the agreement, the provision should be enforceable as between the parties in the family law court [see Alioto v. Commissioner (1994) T.C. Memo 1994-51] .

For further discussion of the tax consequences of distributions under a pension plan, see Chapters 160 and 12B. For additional general tax provisions in a marital settlement agreement, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 216, Income Tax, Attorney's Fees, and Related Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements (Matthew Bender).

[m] Payment of QDRO-Related Expenses

The Department of Labor in a reversal of position now allows plans to charge divorcing parties for the plan's costs in administering the QDRO process [DOL Field Assistance Bulletin 2003-3]. Accordingly, to the extent appropriate, the QDRO should address the issue of how such expenses are to be allocated between the parties--for example, per capita, or pro rata. While this may be a relatively easy task for individual account plans, it may not be so easy with respect to more complex defined benefit plans.

[2] FORM

Division of Qualified Plans

Determination of Community Interest in _____ [short title of plan]

[Use if division of plan will be under time-rule formula.]

The community interest in [short title of plan] (the Plan) shall be equal to the fraction whose numerator is the number of [years or months or units] of Service while married and before separation, and whose denominator is the total number of [years or months or units] of Service, multiplied by the employer-funded Accrued Benefit determined under the Plan as of [nonparticipant spouse's] benefit commencement date to the extent vested. "Service" for purposes of this formula shall be the [years or months or units] of [covered employment or service credited for benefit accrual under the Plan or service credited for vesting under the Plan or other].

The community interest shall include the additional Accrued Benefit, if any, attributable to employee contributions made during the marriage and before separation, or to the rollover of a distribution of benefits earned during the marriage and before separation.

[Include to provide for future adjustments to time-rule formula.]

For purposes of the above formula the total Accrued Benefit and/or Service during the marriage shall be adjusted in order that the community portion accurately reflect the community contribution to benefit accrual. The adjustment shall be as follows: [specify].

[Include to reserve jurisdiction over time-rule formula.]

The court shall reserve jurisdiction to modify the above formula to account for changes in the terms of the Plan occurring after the effective date of this Agreement and before entry of the Qualified Domestic Relations Order, as provided for below.

[Add for owner-controlled plan.]

For purposes of the above formula, prior service credit granted under the Plan for periods before the initial plan effective date [shall/shall not] be counted.

[OR: Use if division of plan will be under tracing rule.]

The community interest in [short title of plan] shall be that portion of the account balance in the Plan attributable to the sum of (a) employer contributions made on account of service during the marriage and before separation, and (b) employee contributions made during the marriage and before separation; together with all earnings and losses on those amounts, and minus any withdrawals (other than participant loans) during the marriage and before separation, determined as of the applicable valuation date. The applicable valuation date for a division of the community property portion shall be _____ [the date as of which _____ (nonparticipant spouse's) percent share is allocated to a separate account in the Plan or distributed to _____ (nonparticipant spouse) or the effective date of this Agreement or other date].

[OR: Use if division of plan will be according to method other than time-rule formula or tracing rule.]

The community interest in [short title of plan] shall be [set forth other calculation method].

[Continue with:]

_____ [Nonparticipant Spouse's] Share of Community Interest

[Nonparticipant spouse's] share of the community interest in [short title of plan], shall be _____ percent.

[Include if nonparticipant will be given a share of participant's separate property interest in plan.]

_____ [Nonparticipant Spouse's] Separate Interest

[Nonparticipant spouse's] share of [participant spouse's] separate property interest in [short title of plan] shall be _____ percent.

Disposition

The community interest in [short title of plan] shall be divided between the parties as set forth below.

Any expenses charged by the plan with respect to the administration and approval of this order shall be allocated between the spousal parties, as follows:_____.

[Use if QDRO will be attached to agreement.]

Qualified Domestic Relations Order

The disposition of [short title of plan] shall be effected according to the attached Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO), which is incorporated by reference into this Agreement as though fully set forth at this point. The QDRO shall be submitted to the court forthwith and served on the plan by counsel for [Husband or Wife] immediately after it is issued by the court. In case of any conflict between the provisions of this Agreement and those of the QDRO, the QDRO shall prevail.

[End of form if QDRO is to be attached. If QDRO will be prepared subsequently, continue with the following:]

Qualified Domestic Relations Order

The disposition of [short title of plan] shall be implemented by a separate Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO) using the [shared or separate] interest method. However, this Agreement, when incorporated into a judgment, may be treated as a QDRO with respect to any survivor benefits payable with respect to [participant spouse] under the Plan should [participant spouse] die after marital status is terminated but before entry of a separate QDRO. In case of any conflict between the provisions of this Agreement and those of the QDRO, the QDRO shall prevail.

[Use if expert will be retained to draft QDRO.]

_____ [Name of QDRO expert] shall be engaged as a court-appointed expert to assist in the preparation of the QDRO for review by the respective attorneys for the parties, and if feasible, in obtaining approval of the preliminary draft order from the plan administrator before its submission to the court. The fee charged by the expert shall be [allocated _____ percent to Wife and _____ percent to Husband or shared equally between the parties]. The order as prepared and approved by the expert shall be submitted to the court and served on the plan administrator by counsel for [Husband or Wife].

[OR: Use if attorney for one of parties will draft QDRO.]

Attorney [Husband or Wife] shall prepare or cause to be prepared the initial draft of a QDRO for review by [Wife or

Husband], and if feasible, by the plan administrator. Attorney fees incurred in connection with the review and approval of the QDRO shall be allocated and paid [specify, e.g., 60 percent by Husband and 40 percent by Wife]. The order as agreed to by the parties shall be submitted to the court and served on the plan administrator by counsel for [Husband or Wife].

Designation of Surviving Spouse

[Nonparticipant spouse] is designated as the surviving spouse/beneficiary of [participant spouse] with respect to any Qualified Preretirement Survivor Annuity (within the meaning of Section 417 of the Internal Revenue Code)(QPSA) or other death benefit that may become payable under [short title of plan] after the marital status is terminated and before the issuance of the QDRO, but only to the extent that the benefit is attributable to _____ [(nonparticipant spouse's) interest in the benefits accrued to _____ (participant spouse) under the Plan or the community interest in the benefits accrued to _____ (participant spouse) under the Plan, plus _____ (nonparticipant spouse) share of _____ (participant spouse's) separate property interest)]. Should [nonparticipant spouse] predecease [participant spouse] during this same period, _____ [the court shall reserve jurisdiction to make further orders as may be required in order for the estate of _____ (nonparticipant spouse) to receive an amount equal to the value of _____ (nonparticipant spouse's) interest in the benefits accrued or _____ (nonparticipant spouse's) interest in the Plan shall revert to _____ (participant spouse) as (his/her) separate property]. Notwithstanding the above, if the only form of benefit available under the Plan with respect to the death of [participant spouse] is a QPSA (within the meaning of Section 417 of the Internal Revenue Code), and if [participant spouse] should die without an actual surviving spouse under the Plan, then [nonparticipant spouse] shall be deemed to be the surviving spouse of [participant spouse] for all purposes without limitation. [Add if desired: The court shall retain jurisdiction to make further order as may be necessary to effect the intended division and disposition of the survivor benefits.] This paragraph shall be deemed incorporated and made a part of any order of status termination, and notice of entry shall be immediately served on the plan administrator.

[Use to provide for insurance on the nonparticipant spouse's life (defined benefit plan).]

[Nonparticipant spouse] shall obtain term insurance on [her/his] life in an amount sufficient to provide an after-tax benefit for [her/his] beneficiaries equivalent to the actuarial present value of [nonparticipant spouse's] share of the community interest in the benefits accrued under the plan with respect to [participant spouse]. The cost of this insurance shall be paid by [participant spouse or the parties equally], and shall be kept in force until such time as [nonparticipant spouse] begins to receive benefits under the Plan.

[Use to provide for insurance on the participant's life.]

[Participant spouse] shall obtain term insurance on [his/her] life in an amount sufficient to provide an after-tax benefit for [his/her] beneficiaries equivalent to the actuarial present value of [participant spouse's] share of the retirement benefits accrued under the Plan with respect to [him/her]. The cost of this insurance shall be paid by [(nonparticipant spouse) or the parties equally], and shall be kept in force until such time as [participant spouse] begins to receive benefits under the Plan.

Beneficiary Designations

The beneficiary designation in effect for [participant spouse] under the [short title of plan] is as follows: [specify beneficiary designations]. [Add to change beneficiaries: The beneficiary designation shall be changed to the following: _____ (specify new beneficiary designation). The change shall take place _____ (specify time, e.g., forthwith or on dissolution).] [Participant spouse] understands that the termination of marital status or the issuance of a QDRO may not affect this beneficiary [designation or change] automatically, and that a new beneficiary designation may need to be filed with the Plan if [participant spouse] desires to change beneficiaries following termination of marital status. Nothing contained in this paragraph shall be interpreted as a waiver by [nonparticipant spouse] of any right that [she/he] may have as a beneficiary designated by [participant spouse], after the effective date of this Agreement. If a beneficiary change is to be made prior to dissolution, [nonparticipant spouse] shall cooperate in executing any documents or consent forms required by the Plan in order for the change to be effective.

Suspension of Benefits on Reemployment

[Use if participant will take over payments to nonparticipant.]

The parties understand that [short title of plan] includes suspension-of- benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced, [participant spouse] returns to work in covered employment. If a suspension of benefits should occur, [participant spouse] shall make the same payments to [nonparticipant spouse] that would have been made by the Plan but for the suspension. The payments shall be made from [participant spouse's] separate property funds, and shall continue until such time as payments from the Plan are resumed. They shall be made on a net after-tax basis, and shall not be deductible by [participant spouse], nor income to [nonparticipant spouse]. They shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing.

[OR: Use if plan will continue to make payments.]

The parties understand that [short title of plan] includes suspension-of- benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced, [participant spouse] returns to work in covered employment. The QDRO shall provide that any suspension of benefits on reemployment shall not affect payment to [nonparticipant spouse] as alternate payee.

[OR: Use if nonparticipant will accept suspension of benefits.]

The parties understand that [short title of plan] includes suspension-of- benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced, [participant spouse] returns to work in covered employment. If a suspension of benefits should occur, the benefit payments to both parties shall be suspended. The community interest in the Plan shall then be recalculated as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual. If the suspension of benefits results in a new annuity starting date, the QDRO shall grant surviving spouse status to [nonparticipant spouse] with respect to [her/his] share (or if necessary to avoid a forfeiture if [participant spouse] is not then married, the entire benefit) pending the attainment of a new annuity starting date. The court shall reserve jurisdiction over any surviving spouse benefits that may become payable to [nonparticipant spouse] if [participant spouse] should die during the period of suspension, to the extent that the benefits exceed the amount payable with respect to the share of benefits awarded [nonparticipant spouse].

[OR: Use if nonparticipant will be given option to accept payments or suspension of benefits.]

The parties understand that [short title of plan] includes suspension-of- benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced, [participant spouse] returns to work in covered employment. If a suspension of benefits should occur, [participant spouse] shall, at the election of [nonparticipant spouse], make the same payments to [nonparticipant spouse] that would have been made by the Plan but for the suspension. This election must be made, if at all, by [nonparticipant spouse] within _____ days of notice of the suspension. If elected, the payments shall be made from [participant spouse's] separate property funds, and shall continue until such time as payments from the Plan are resumed. The payments shall be made on a net after-tax basis, and shall not be deductible by [participant spouse], nor income to [nonparticipant spouse]. They shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing. If continuation of payments is elected, [nonparticipant spouse] shall not share in the value of any benefits accrued under the Plan by reason of [participant spouse's] return to covered service. If this election is not made and the benefit payments to both parties are suspended, then the community share under the Plan shall be recalculated as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual. If under the Plan the suspension of benefits results in a new annuity starting date, the QDRO shall grant surviving spouse status to [nonparticipant spouse] with respect to [her/his] share (or if necessary to avoid a forfeiture if [participant spouse] is not then married, the entire benefit) pending the attainment of a new annuity starting date. The court shall reserve jurisdiction over any surviving-spouse benefits that may become payable to [nonparticipant spouse] if [participant spouse] should die during the period of suspension, to the extent that the benefits exceed the amount payable with respect to the share of benefits awarded to [nonparticipant spouse]. If [nonparticipant spouse] should die while payments are being made by [participant spouse], then [participant spouse] shall be obligated to pay any death or survivor benefit that would have been payable with respect to [nonparticipant spouse] but for the suspension of benefits, and [nonparticipant spouse] shall have no further interest in [participant spouse's] benefits under the Plan.

[OR: Use if court will reserve jurisdiction over issue.]

The parties understand that [short title of plan] includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced, [participant spouse] returns to work in covered employment. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to make such further orders as may be required to effectuate the division of benefits set forth herein if a suspension of benefits should occur.

Disposition of Gillmore Rights

The parties acknowledge that [nonparticipant spouse] has the absolute right to commence the receipt of benefits from [short title of plan] under a QDRO beginning when [participant spouse] reaches "earliest retirement age," whether or not [participant spouse] actually retires and begins to receive benefits as of that date. To the extent that [nonparticipant spouse] is unable to receive the full value of [her/his] interest from the Plan under a QDRO before [participant spouse] retires, [nonparticipant spouse] may be entitled to make an election under In re Marriage of Gillmore (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 418 (Gillmore election) to receive payments of that interest directly from [participant spouse].

[nonparticipant spouse] understands that under a Gillmore election, [she/he] will not be entitled to receive the value of any benefit improvements subsequently accruing under the Plan, except to the extent that the improvements would be enjoyed by any similarly situated retiree in pay status as of the election date.

[Use if plan does not provide a subsidized early retirement benefit.]

The Plan currently does not provide a subsidized early retirement benefit. Because [nonparticipant spouse] may, under a QDRO, obtain distribution of the full value of [her/his] interest from the Plan at any time after [participant spouse] reaches "earliest retirement age," [nonparticipant spouse] waives whatever right [she/he] may have under Gillmore to require [participant spouse] to make any payment to [her with respect to her/him with respect to his] share of the plan benefits before the time when [participant spouse] terminates employment with the employer. [Add if desired: This waiver shall have no effect if the Plan is later amended to provide a subsidized early retirement benefit.]

[OR: Use if plan includes early retirement subsidy.]

The Plan provides an early retirement subsidy. This subsidy is not part of the accrued retirement benefits of [participant spouse] and will only have value if [he/she] terminates employment early and foregoes [his/her] future separate property earnings and employee benefits from the plan sponsor. The value of the early retirement subsidy shall _____ [be taken into account in determining the amount to be paid to _____ (nonparticipant spouse) as if _____ (participant spouse) had actually retired on the exercise date or not be taken into account in determining the payments required to be paid to _____ [nonparticipant spouse] by _____ (participant spouse) until such time as _____ (participant spouse) actually retires].

[Use if Gillmore rights are to be waived.]

[Nonparticipant spouse] acknowledges that [participant spouse] may work past first eligibility to retire and that, although [nonparticipant spouse] has the absolute right to commence the receipt of benefits under the Plan under a QDRO beginning when [participant spouse] reaches "earliest retirement age," the benefits may not be entitled to any early retirement subsidy until such time as [participant spouse] actually retires. In consideration of other provisions of this Agreement, [nonparticipant spouse] waives whatever right [she/he] may have under Gillmore to require [participant spouse] to make any payment to [her/him] with respect to [her/his] share of the plan benefits before the time when [participant spouse] terminates employment with the employer.

[OR: Use if Gillmore Rights are to be preserved.]

The amount of any payments to be made by [participant spouse] to [nonparticipant spouse] under a Gillmore election (Gillmore Share) shall be limited to [nonparticipant spouse's] share of the early retirement subsidy; that is, net of [nonparticipant spouse] retirement benefits that are payable directly by the Plan under the QDRO. The Gillmore share shall also be net of the amount of tax otherwise payable had the Gillmore payments been made by the Plan directly.

[Use to reopen spousal support.]

If [nonparticipant spouse] makes a Gillmore election, it shall be treated as an agreement to reopen the issue of spousal support at the election of [participant spouse], notwithstanding any prior agreement or order of nonmodifiability issued with respect to spousal support. The court shall reserve jurisdiction accordingly.

[Use to allow participant to cash-out nonparticipant's Gillmore share.]

If [nonparticipant spouse] makes a Gillmore election, [participant spouse] shall have the option of paying to [nonparticipant spouse] the actuarial present value of [her/his] Gillmore share as of the effective date of the election, or of allowing [nonparticipant spouse] to elect a form of payment available under the Plan, and to pay the present value to [Use if nonparticipant will participate in making investment decisions regarding plan assets.]

[Participant spouse] shall exercise [his/her] rights with respect to the direction of accounts provided by [short title of plan] as to any amounts in which the community may have an interest only with the agreement of [nonparticipant spouse]. If the parties cannot agree on an investment or investment change, the assets shall be invested in a money-market account or the equivalent pending further order of the court. The court shall retain jurisdiction to resolve any disputes in connection with the management of Plan accounts.

[IOR: Use if participant alone will make investment decisions regarding plan assets.]

[Participant spouse] shall prudently exercise [his/her] rights with respect to the direction of accounts provided by [short title of plan] as to any amounts in which the community may have an interest, applying the following investment criteria: [specify].

[Include if plan provides life insurance on participant's life.]

Life Insurance Maintained by Plan

[Short title of plan] currently maintains insurance on the life of [participant spouse]. To the extent that the continuation of this insurance coverage is elective, it shall be [canceled or maintained at the current level or increased to the maximum allowable amount [, and _____ (name(s)) shall be designated as the [beneficiary/beneficiaries] of this insurance]. If the Plan should later offer [participant spouse] the option of purchasing the policy from the Plan, then [participant spouse] shall give notice to [nonparticipant spouse] of the offer to purchase. [Husband or Wife] shall have the first right of refusal to purchase the policy as [his/her] separate property. The cost, if any, of this coverage shall be paid [by Husband or by Wife or by the parties equally or _____ percent by Husband and _____ percent by Wife].

[Use for election Under TEFRA.]

TEFRA 242(b)(2) Election

The parties understand that [participant spouse] has made a valid election under section 242(b)(2) of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (section 242(b)(2) Election) to defer the receipt of benefits under [short title of plan] until retirement, even if retirement is delayed past age 70. They further understand that this election is an important feature in their existing tax and estate planning, and that the election may be inadvertently waived by conduct inconsistent with it, giving rise to a potential excise tax. The parties accordingly agree to cooperate in electing the timing and form in which their respective shares in the Plan are to be distributed.

Duty to Pay Income Taxes on Plan Distributions

Each party shall report, pay, and be responsible for all taxes due on amounts received by him or her from any plan set forth above. Under Sections 72 and 402 of the Internal Revenue Code, the nonparticipant spouse shall be treated as the distributee of any distribution or payment made to him or her under a QDRO. As such, all amounts distributed to the nonparticipant from any plan divided above that are otherwise includible in income shall be taxable to the nonparticipant to the extent not rolled over to another qualified plan or Individual Retirement Account. [Add if support will be paid by QDRO: Any amounts payable to the nonparticipant spouse for spousal support shall not be income to, nor deductible by the participant spouse. However, the participant spouse shall report, pay and be responsible for all taxes due on amounts received on behalf of his or her child or other dependent, even if payment is made to the nonparticipant for the benefit of the child or other dependent.] The recipient spouse shall indemnify the nonrecipient spouse for any taxes (including interest and penalties, and "tax on the tax," if any) that the nonrecipient spouse may be required to pay to any taxing authority in connection with any plan distribution. The parties agree to cooperate in filing consistent tax returns in connection with distributions received from the plans divided above. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to resolve any disputes in connection with any tax return. If either spouse should breach his or her reporting or payment obligations, he or she shall indemnify the other spouse for any cost, fee, or other expense (including but not limited to accounting and attorneys fees) incurred by the other spouse in connection with any audit or examination of the other spouse's tax return, relative to accomplishing the tax result described above.

PART IV. FORMS

B. Private Employee Benefit Plans Governed by ERISA

34-122 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 122.221

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: James M. Crawford, Jr., Esq., R. Ann Fallon, Esq., and Anne E. Moss, Esq.

§ 122.221 Division of Nonqualified Plans

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, is for use to divide an employee spouse's interest in a nonqualified employee benefit plan with the nonemployee spouse. A nonqualified plan is one that is generally unfunded (that is, the benefits are typically paid either out of the general assets of the employer, or out of a trust that belongs to the employer) and does not otherwise meet the qualification requirements of the Internal Revenue Code [see I.R.C. § 401(a)]. For further discussion of the difference between qualified and nonqualified plans, see § 122.220[1][b].

The possible methods for determining the community interest in nonqualified plans of deferred compensation are much the same as those for a qualified plan of the same type, that is, either defined benefit or defined contribution. Therefore, this form includes many of the same provisions as those in the form used for qualified plans [see § 122.220]. It differs, however, in a few noteworthy respects.

First, the ERISA provisions for Qualified Domestic Relations Orders do not technically apply to nonqualified plans [see 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(3); § 122.220[1][d]]. Nevertheless, many sponsors of nonqualified plans will still require a QDRO-like order (sometimes referred to as a Benefit Division Order or BDO), which becomes the functional equivalent of a QDRO as far as that plan is concerned.

Second, it is rarely possible with a nonqualified plan for the participant's current spouse to be deemed the surviving spouse with regard to survivor benefits because this can only be accomplished with a QDRO in the absence of a specific plan provision [see 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(3)(F); § 122.220[1][e][i]]. Therefore, special provisions have been included in this form to deal with the allocation of survivor benefits. The form provides that, to the extent allowed by the plan, the participant is required to name the nonparticipant as the participant's beneficiary with respect to the nonparticipant's share of the community interest.

Third, nonqualified plans generally do not allow for the nonparticipant to receive payment of benefits directly from the plan if the participant chooses to continue to work past earliest retirement age. Plan distributions can be compelled through a QDRO, but not a BDO [see 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(3)(E); § 122.220[1][g][i]]. Therefore, this form provides that the nonparticipant may receive payment of his or her interest directly from the participant if the participant does not retire at the earliest allowable time [see In re Marriage of Gillmore (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 418, 174 Cal. Rptr. 493, 629 P.2d 1]. Amounts paid under a Gillmore election to reimburse a nonemployee spouse for his or her share of retirement benefits that would be payable if the employee spouse were retired are treated as part of the spouses' division of property. Thus, even if the employee spouse uses his or her wages as the source of payments to the nonemployee spouse under the latter's Gillmore election, the amount of those payments is not excludable from the employee spouse's gross income or deductible as spousal support [Commissioner v. Dunkin (9th Cir. 2007) 500 F.3d 1065, 1069-1072].

Fourth, in most instances, nonqualified plans are not considered to be separate entities to which a division order may be addressed. Accordingly, the order should be directed to the employer and not the "plan."

Finally, because the taxation of nonqualified benefits payable to the alternate payee may not be clear in all cases, a distribution under a QDRO, the income tax clause has been modified to help ensure that each party pays the income tax on the distributions that he or she receives [see § 122.220[1][i]].

PRACTICE TIP:

Nonqualified retirement plan benefits, including those covered by a "Rabbi Trust" are almost always "unfunded," and thus constitute only a general claim against the assets of the employer. As such, even if they are ERISA-covered, they are not subject to the fiduciary, vesting, and other protections afforded participants and alternate payees under ERISA, including the QDRO provisions. They are, in reality, nothing more than unilateral arrangements, and therefore practitioners should be aware that the normal plan joinder procedures will likely have no legal effect in terms of protecting the interest of a prospective alternate payee. Although ERISA-covered plans are given the status of legal entities capable of suing and being sued [see 29 U.S.C. § 1132(d)], it nevertheless remains questionable whether or not the state joinder statutes can apply in light of the preemptive effect of ERISA [see 29 U.S.C. § 1144].
Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

Nonqualified plan benefits cannot be rolled tax-free to an IRA [see § 122.222], and any attempt to do so will subject the IRA owner to an overcontribution excise tax as a nondeductible contribution [see I.R.C. § 4973].

In addition to its other provisions, this form also includes a provision concerning employment taxes [see IRS Notice 2002-31 (explaining IRS position of treatment of withholding in connection with plans of nonqualified deferred compensation)].

[2] FORM

Division of Nonqualified Plans

Division of Nonqualified Plan

There is a community interest in the benefits earned by [participant spouse] under [short title of plan] (the Plan) attributable to employment during the marriage and before separation with [employer] (the community interest). Accordingly, the court shall enter a Benefit Division Order (BDO) directing the employer to pay to each party his or her respective share of the community interest at such time as plan benefits would otherwise be paid to [participant spouse]. If the employer should instead distribute [nonparticipant spouse's] share to [participant spouse], [participant spouse] shall receive that share as constructive trustee for the benefit of [nonparticipant spouse] and pay it over to [her/him] on receipt, net of any applicable employer withholding.

[Use if division of plan will be under time-rule formula.]

The community interest in [short title of plan] shall be equal to the fraction whose numerator is the number of [years or months or units] of Service while married and before separation, and whose denominator is the total number of [years or months or units] of Service, multiplied by the employer-funded Accrued Benefit determined under the Plan as of [nonparticipant spouse's] benefit commencement date to the extent vested. "Service" for purposes of this formula shall be the [years or months or units] of [covered employment or service credited for benefit accrual under the Plan or service credited for vesting under the Plan or other].

The community interest shall include the additional Accrued Benefit, if any, attributable to employee contributions made during the marriage and before separation, or to the rollover of a distribution of benefits earned during the marriage and before separation.

[Include to provide for future adjustments to time-rule formula.]

For purposes of the above formula the total Accrued Benefit and/or Service during the marriage shall be adjusted in order that the community portion accurately reflect the community contribution to benefit accrual. The adjustment shall be as follows: [specify].

[Include to reserve jurisdiction over time-rule formula.]

The court shall reserve jurisdiction to modify the above formula to account for changes in the terms of the Plan occurring after the effective date of this Agreement and before entry of the Benefit Division Order, as provided for below.

[Add for owner-controlled plan.]

For purposes of the above formula, prior service credit granted under the Plan for periods before the initial plan effective date [shall/shall not] be counted.

[OR: Use if division of plan will be under tracing rule.]

The community interest in [short title of plan] shall be that portion of the account balance in the Plan attributable to the sum of (a) employer contributions made on account of service during the marriage and before separation, and (b) employee contributions made during the marriage and before separation; together with all earnings and losses on those amounts, and minus any withdrawals (other than participant loans) during the marriage and before separation, determined as of the applicable valuation date. The applicable valuation date for a division of the community property portion shall be _____ [the date as of which _____ (nonparticipant spouse's) percent share is allocated to a separate account in the Plan or distributed to _____ (nonparticipant spouse) or the effective date of this Agreement or other date].

[OR: Use if division of plan will be according to method other than time-rule formula or tracing rule.]

The community interest in [short title of plan] shall be [set forth other calculation method].

[Continue with:]

_____ [Nonparticipant Spouse's] Share of Community Interest

[Nonparticipant spouse's] share of the community interest in [short title of plan], shall be _____ percent.

[Include if nonparticipant will be given a share of participant's separate property interest in plan.]

_____ [Nonparticipant Spouse's Separate Interest]

[Nonparticipant spouse's] share of [participant spouse's] separate property interest in [short title of plan] shall be _____ percent.

Disposition

The community interest in [short title of plan], shall be [distributed to the participant spouse as part of the overall division of the community property of the parties or divided between the parties as set forth below].

[Form ends here if plan is to be distributed entirely to owner; use basic division of community property clause in Chapter 212, § 212.42. If plan is to be divided between the parties, continue with the following:]

[Use if BDO will be attached to agreement.]

Benefit Division Order

The disposition of [short title of plan] shall be effected according to the attached Benefit Division Order (BDO), which is incorporated by reference into this Agreement as though fully set forth at this point. The BDO shall be submitted to the court and served on the plan by counsel for [Husband or Wife] immediately after it is issued by the court. In case of any conflict between the provisions of this Agreement and those of the BDO, the BDO shall prevail.

[End of form if BDO is to be attached. If BDO will be prepared subsequently, continue with the following:]

Benefit Division Order

The disposition of [short title of plan] shall be implemented by a separate Benefit Division Order (BDO) using the [shared or separate] interest method. However, this Agreement, when incorporated into a judgment, may be treated as a BDO with respect to any survivor benefits payable with respect to [participant spouse] under the Plan should [participant spouse] die after marital status is terminated but before entry of a separate BDO. In case of any conflict between the provisions of this Agreement and those of the BDO, the BDO shall prevail.

[Use if expert will be retained to draft BDO.]

_____ [Name of expert] shall be engaged as a court-appointed expert to assist in the preparation of the BDO for review by the respective attorneys for the parties, and if feasible, in obtaining approval of the preliminary draft order from the plan administrator before its submission to the court. The fee charged by the expert shall be [allocated _____ percent to Wife and _____ percent to Husband or shared equally between the parties]. The order as prepared and approved by the expert shall be submitted to the court and served on the plan administrator by counsel for [Husband or Wife].

[OR: Use if attorney for one of parties will draft BDO.]

Attorney for [Husband or Wife] shall prepare or cause to be prepared the initial draft of a BDO for review by [Wife or Husband], and if feasible, by the plan administrator. Attorney fees incurred in connection with the review and approval of the BDO shall be allocated and paid [specify, e.g., 60 percent by Husband and 40 percent by Wife]. The order as agreed to by the parties shall be submitted to the court and served on the plan administrator by counsel for [Husband or Wife].

Surviving Spouse Protection

The parties recognize that applicable law generally does not allow a Benefit Division Order to designate a former spouse as a current/surviving spouse for purposes of receiving any survivor benefit otherwise payable under a nonqualified plan. Accordingly pending further order of the court, to the extent permitted under the Plan, [participant spouse] shall designate [nonparticipant spouse] as beneficiary with respect to [her/his] share of the community interest. If [nonparticipant spouse] is not so designated, or if [nonparticipant spouse] predeceases [participant spouse], the court shall reserve jurisdiction to enter further orders as may be necessary to accomplish an equal division of the community interest in the Plan.

[Use to provide for insurance on the participant's life.]

[Participant spouse] shall obtain term insurance on [his/her] life in an amount sufficient to provide an after-tax benefit for [his/her] beneficiaries equivalent to the actuarial present value of [participant spouse's] share of the retirement benefits accrued under the Plan with respect to [him/her]. The cost of this insurance shall be paid by [(nonparticipant spouse) or the parties equally], and shall be kept in force until such time as [participant spouse] begins to receive benefits under the Plan.

Beneficiary Designations

The beneficiary designation in effect for [participant spouse] under the [short title of plan] is as follows: [specify beneficiary designations]. [Add to change beneficiaries: The beneficiary designation shall be changed to the following: _____ (specify new beneficiary designation). The change shall take place _____ (specify time, e.g., forthwith or on dissolution).] [Participant spouse] understands that the termination of marital status or the issuance of a BDO may not affect this beneficiary [designation or change] automatically, and that a new beneficiary designation may need of be filed with the Plan if [participant spouse] desires to change beneficiaries following termination of marital status. Nothing contained in this paragraph shall be interpreted as a waiver by [nonparticipant spouse] of any right that [she/he] may have as a beneficiary designated by [participant spouse], after the effective date of this Agreement. If a beneficiary change is to be made prior to dissolution, [nonparticipant spouse] shall cooperate in executing any documents or consent forms required by the Plan in order for the change to be effective.

Suspension of Benefits on Reemployment

[Use if participant will take over payments to nonparticipant.]

The parties understand that [short title of plan] includes suspension-of- benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced. If a suspension of benefits should occur, [participant spouse] shall make the same payments to [nonparticipant spouse] that would have been made by the Plan but for the suspension. The payments shall be made from [participant spouse's] separate property funds, and shall continue until such time as payments from the Plan are resumed. They shall be made on a net after-tax basis, and shall not be deductible by [participant spouse], nor income to [nonparticipant spouse]. They shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing.

[OR: Use if plan will continue to make payments.]

The parties understand that [short title of plan] includes suspension-of- benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced. The BDO shall provide that any suspension of benefits on reemployment shall not affect payment to [nonparticipant spouse] as alternate payee.

[OR: Use if nonparticipant will accept suspension of benefits.]

The parties understand that [short title of plan] includes suspension-of- benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced. If a suspension of benefits should occur, the benefit payments to both parties shall be suspended. The community interest in the Plan shall then be recalculated under the BDO as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual. The court shall reserve jurisdiction over any surviving spouse benefits that may become payable to [nonparticipant spouse] if [participant spouse] should die during the period of suspension, to the extent that the benefits exceed the amount payable with respect to the share of benefits awarded [nonparticipant spouse].

[OR: Use if nonparticipant will be given option to accept payments or suspension of benefits.]

The parties understand that [short title of plan] includes suspension-of- benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced. If a suspension of benefits should occur, [participant spouse] shall, at the election of [nonparticipant spouse], make the same payments to [nonparticipant spouse] that would have been made by the Plan but for the suspension. This election must be made, if at all, by [nonparticipant spouse] within _____ days of notice of the suspension. If elected, the payments shall be made from [participant spouse's] separate property funds, and shall continue until such time as payments from the Plan are resumed. The payments shall be made on a net after-tax basis, and shall not be deductible by [participant spouse], nor income to [nonparticipant spouse]. They shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing. If continuation of payments is elected, [nonparticipant spouse] shall not share in the value of any benefits accrued under the Plan by reason of [participant spouse's] return to covered service. If this election is not made and the benefit payments to both parties are suspended, then the community share under the Plan shall be recalculated under the BDO as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual. The court shall reserve jurisdiction over any surviving-spouse benefits that may become payable to [nonparticipant spouse] if [participant spouse] should die during the period of suspension, to the extent that the benefits exceed the amount payable with respect to the share of benefits awarded to [nonparticipant spouse]. If [nonparticipant spouse] should die while payments are being made by [participant spouse], then [participant spouse] shall be obligated to pay any death or survivor benefit that would have been payable with respect to [nonparticipant spouse] but for the suspension of benefits, and [nonparticipant spouse] shall have no further interest in [participant spouse's] benefits under the Plan.

[Use if Gillmore rights are to be waived.]

Waiver of Gillmore Rights

[Nonparticipant spouse] acknowledges that [participant spouse] may work past the date on which [he/she] is first eligible to retire, and that [participant spouse] has unilateral control over the date when payments under the Plan will be distributed. [nonparticipant spouse] recognizes that because the Plan is "unfunded," any delay in the receipt or commencement of benefits involves some risk. Under In re Marriage of Gillmore (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 418, at the time when [participant spouse] becomes eligible to terminate employment and commence the receipt of benefits, [nonparticipant spouse] may require [participant spouse] to make or commence payment of an amount equal to the payments that would be made under the Plan with respect to [nonparticipant spouse's] share of the plan benefits had [participant spouse] retired or otherwise terminated employment on the effective date of the election. In consideration of other provisions of this Agreement, [nonparticipant spouse] waives whatever right [she/he] may have under Gillmore to require [participant spouse] to make any payment to [her/him] with respect to [her/his] share of the plan benefits before the time when [participant spouse] terminates employment with the employer.

[OR: Use if Gillmore Rights are to be preserved.]

Gillmore Election

Under [short title of plan], no benefits are payable before the termination of employment of [participant spouse]. Under In re Marriage of Gillmore (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 418, [nonparticipant spouse] may have the right to elect to receive direct payment of benefits from [participant spouse] on or after the earliest date that [participant spouse] could retire and commence to receive benefits under the Plan. If this election is made, [participant spouse] shall be responsible for payment of [nonparticipant spouse's] share of the plan benefits from [his/her] separate property funds as if [participant spouse] had actually terminated employment, at least until such time as direct payment of benefits by the Plan may begin. [nonparticipant spouse] acknowledges that if [she/he] makes a Gillmore election, [she/he] shall not be entitled to receive the value of any benefit improvements accruing under the Plan after the effective date of the election, except to the extent that the improvements would be enjoyed by any similarly situated retiree in pay status. The court shall retain jurisdiction to make further orders as may be necessary to implement this election. The amount of any of payments made by [participant spouse] directly to [nonparticipant spouse] under the Gillmore election shall be reduced by the tax otherwise payable had the payments come from the Plan directly.

[Use to allow participant to cash-out nonparticipant's Gillmore share.]

If [nonparticipant spouse] makes a Gillmore election, [participant spouse] shall have the option of paying to [nonparticipant spouse] the actuarial present value of [her/his] share of the accrued benefit as of the effective date of the election, or of allowing [nonparticipant spouse] to elect a form of payment available under the Plan, and to pay the present value to [nonparticipant spouse] in the form elected.

If at the time when [participant spouse] actually retires, [nonparticipant spouse] has not yet received the actuarial present value of [her/his] share of the accrued benefit, _____ [(participant spouse) shall have the option of continuing to make the remaining payments due to _____ (nonparticipant spouse) from [his/her] separate property funds, or to have the remaining payments made by the Plan under a BDO or the payments shall commence to be made by the Plan under a BDO providing for distribution of the actuarial equivalent of the remaining benefit of _____ (nonparticipant spouse) in the form previously elected]. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to resolve any dispute over the implementation of this paragraph.

The parties understand that if payment to [nonparticipant spouse] is commenced under a Gillmore election in a form of benefit available under the Plan, the form of benefit elected shall determine what payments, if any, are due on the death of [nonparticipant spouse], and [nonparticipant spouse] shall not otherwise be entitled to any payments with respect to [her/his] share of the accrued benefit, either from [participant spouse] or from the Plan.

In no event shall [participant spouse] be required to make or continue Gillmore payments for any period in which the payments would not have been payable under the Plan had [participant spouse] actually retired, as a result of insolvency of the plan sponsor, or other reasons beyond the control of [participant spouse].

[Use to treat notice served personally or by mail as notice of motion filed with court.]

[nonparticipant spouse] may make a Gillmore election by mailing or delivering written notice to [participant spouse]. The election shall be effective as of the date mailed or delivered, and shall be treated for all purposes as if made by noticed motion filed with the court as required by In re Marriage of Cornejo (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 381 in order to establish the effective date of the election.

[End of Gillmore provisions.]

Joinder

To the extent required for the enforcement of the BDO to be issued, _____ [(short title of plan or plan sponsor, as appropriate) has been joined as a party to or _____ (Husband or Wife) shall cause _____ (short title of plan or plan sponsor) to be joined as a party to and served with a notice of adverse interest in] the parties' proceeding for dissolution of marriage under Family Code Section 2060 et seq.

[Include if plan provides life insurance on participant's life.]

Life Insurance Maintained by Plan

[Short title of plan] currently maintains insurance on the life of [participant spouse]. To the extent that the continuation of this insurance coverage is elective, it shall be [canceled or maintained at the current level or increased to the maximum allowable amount [, and _____ (name(s)) shall be designated as the [beneficiary/beneficiaries] of this insurance]. If the Plan should later offer [participant spouse] the option of purchasing the policy from the Plan, then [participant spouse] shall give notice to [nonparticipant spouse] of the offer to purchase. [Husband or Wife] shall have the first right of refusal to purchase the policy as [his/her] separate property. The cost, if any, of this coverage shall be paid [by Husband or by Wife or by the parties equally or _____ percent by Husband and _____ percent by Wife].

Directions Regarding Plan Investments

[Use if nonparticipant will participate in making "deemed" investment decisions regarding plan assets.]

[Participant spouse] shall exercise [his/her] rights with respect to the direction of accounts provided by [short title of plan] as to any amounts in which the community may have an interest only with the agreement of [nonparticipant spouse]. If the parties cannot agree on an investment or investment change, the assets shall be invested in a money-market account or the equivalent pending further order of the court. The court shall retain jurisdiction to resolve any disputes in connection with the management of Plan accounts.

[IOR: Use if participant alone will make "deemed" investment decisions regarding plan assets.]

[Participant spouse] shall prudently exercise [his/her] rights with respect to the direction of accounts provided by [short title of plan] as to any amounts in which the community may have an interest, applying the following investment criteria: [specify].

Payment of Income Taxes on Plan Distributions

Notwithstanding the manner in which any plan shall report income payable under a BDO, the parties intend and agree that the recipient spouse shall report, pay and be responsible for all taxable income that he or she receives, whether directly or indirectly from any plan, and shall indemnify the nonrecipient spouse for any taxes (including interest and penalties, and "tax on the tax," if any) that the nonrecipient spouse may be required to pay in connection with any distribution. Any amounts payable to the nonparticipant spouse shall be net of applicable withholding, if any, and each spouse shall accordingly report his or her share of withholding to the extent permitted by law. If under applicable law, the nonparticipant is not able to be credited with withholding, then the participant shall immediately reimburse the nonparticipant for the full amount of withholding deductions attributable to the nonparticipant's share. The parties agree to cooperate in filing consistent tax returns in connection with distributions received from a plan. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to resolve any disputes in connection with the taxation of distributions from a plan. If either spouse should breach his or her reporting or payment obligations, he or she shall indemnify the other spouse for any cost, fee, or other expense (including but not limited to accounting, tax preparer, and attorneys fees) incurred by the other spouse in connection with any audit, examination, or amendment of the other spouse's tax return, relative to accomplishing the tax result described above.

Employment Taxes

Nonparticipant spouse's share, as otherwise determined hereunder, shall be adjusted such that each party bears a pro rata share of any taxes due or paid under I.R.C. § 3121(v) with respect to benefits accrued under the plan.

§ 122.222 Rollover to Individual Retirement Account and Assignment

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, provides for a rollover by the participant spouse of the nonemployee spouse's interest in an employee benefit plan to an Individual Retirement Account (IRA). A rollover to an IRA is a method of distribution that avoids the need for a Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO). A rollover is possible for qualified retirement plans, and Internal Revenue Code Section 403(b) annuities [see I.R.C. § 401(b)(8)]. It may not be used for most nonqualified plans [see § 122.221], other than governmental plans maintained under Internal Revenue Code Section 457(b) [see I.R.C. § 402(a)(4) ("eligible rollover distribution" limited to one coming from a 401(a) qualified plan)].

The community interest is determined as it is for a disposition under a QDRO. This form provides the same options for that. However, as in the case with QDROs, there is no requirement that the transferred interest be limited to the community interest.

The participant must initiate the rollover by directing the plan administrator to distribute the nonemployee's share to an IRA in a direct rollover. Although this form provides that the amount to be rolled over is half the community interest, any amount up to 100 percent of the IRA can be transferred. The participant then assigns all of his or her title and interest in the recipient IRA to the nonemployee spouse. This rollover distribution and subsequent transfer are both nontaxable dispositions under Internal Revenue Code Sections 402 and 408(d)(6) [see Comment to § 122.202].

This form also provides that if the participant dies before the rollover distribution can take place, the nonparticipant will be deemed to be the surviving spouse for purposes of the Qualified Preretirement Survivor Benefit (QPSA) [see 29 U.S.C. 1056(d)(3)(F)]. For further discussion of the QPSA, see § 122.220[1][e][i].

PRACTICE TIP:

In using a rollover transfer rather than a QDRO, care should be taken if the nonemployee spouse may need to spend all or part of the distribution in the near future, and is under age 59½. This is because money taken out of a rollover IRA does not qualify for the special exception to the 10 percent early distribution additional income tax under Internal Revenue Code Section 72(t), which is available for withdrawals taken directly from a plan under a QDRO and not rolled. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

[2] FORM

Rollover to Individual Retirement Account and Assignment

Determination of Community Interest

[Use if division of plan will be under time-rule formula.]

The community interest in [short title of plan] shall be equal to the fraction whose numerator is the number of [years or months or units] of Service while married and before separation, and whose denominator is the total number of [years or months or units] of Service, multiplied by the employer-funded Accrued Benefit determined under the Plan as of [nonparticipant spouse's] benefit commencement date to the extent vested. "Service" for purposes of this formula shall be the [years or months or units] of [covered employment or service credited for benefit accrual under the Plan or service credited for vesting under the Plan or other].

The community interest shall include the additional Accrued Benefit, if any, attributable to employee contributions made during the marriage and before separation, or to the rollover of a distribution of benefits earned during the marriage and before separation.

[Include to provide for future adjustments to time-rule formula.]

For purposes of the above formula the total Accrued Benefit and/or Service during the marriage shall be adjusted in order that the community portion accurately reflect the community contribution to benefit accrual. The adjustment shall be as follows: [specify].

[Include to reserve jurisdiction over time-rule formula.]

The court shall reserve jurisdiction to modify the above formula to account for changes in the terms of the Plan occurring after the effective date of this Agreement and before entry of the Qualified Domestic Relations Order, as provided for below.

[Add for owner-controlled plan.]

For purposes of the above formula, prior service credit granted under the Plan for periods before the initial plan effective date [shall/shall not] be counted.

[OR: Use if division of plan will be under tracing rule.]

The community interest in [short title of plan] shall be that portion of the account balance in the Plan attributable to the sum of (a) employer contributions made on account of service during the marriage and before separation, and (b) employee contributions made during the marriage and before separation; together with all earnings and losses on those amounts, and minus any withdrawals (other than participant loans) during the marriage and before separation, determined as of the applicable valuation date. The applicable valuation date for a division of the community property portion shall be _____ [the date as of which _____ (nonparticipant spouse's) percent share is allocated to a separate account in the Plan or distributed to _____ (nonparticipant spouse) or the effective date of this Agreement or other date].

[OR: Use if division of plan will be according to method other than time-rule formula or tracing rule.]

The community interest in [short title of plan] shall be [set forth other calculation method].

[Continue with:]

_____ [Nonparticipant Spouse's] Share of Community Interest

[Nonparticipant spouse's] share of the community interest in [short title of plan], shall be _____ percent.

[Include if nonparticipant will be given a share of participant's separate property interest in plan.]

_____ [Nonparticipant Spouse's] Separate Interest

[Nonparticipant spouse's] share of [participant spouse's] separate property interest in [short title of plan] shall be _____ percent.

Rollover to Individual Retirement Account

The parties have ascertained that [participant spouse] is entitled under [short title of plan] to take an immediate eligible rollover distribution of benefits. To avoid the cost of obtaining a Qualified Domestic Relations Order dividing the community interest in the Plan, [participant spouse] shall, as soon as feasible, cause the Plan to distribute [nonparticipant spouse's] share of the Plan in a direct nontaxable rollover distribution in the name of [participant spouse] to an Individual Retirement Account (IRA) with a custodian or trustee designated by [nonparticipant spouse]. On completion of this rollover, [participant spouse] shall immediately assign all right, title, and interest in the IRA to [nonparticipant spouse] as [her/his] sole and separate property in a nontaxable transfer under Internal Revenue Code section 408(d)(6). In order to facilitate this transfer to [nonparticipant spouse], [nonparticipant spouse] waives any community property interest that [she/he] may have in benefits payable to [participant spouse] under the Plan on the condition that the distribution and transfer is made as described above.

Designation of Surviving Spouse

If the distribution provided for above cannot be completed because of the preretirement death of [participant spouse], then [nonparticipant spouse] is designated as the surviving spouse/beneficiary of [participant spouse] with respect to any Qualified Preretirement Survivor Annuity (within the meaning of Section 417 of the Internal Revenue Code)(QPSA) or other death benefit that may become payable under [short title of plan] after the marital status is terminated, but only to the extent that the benefit is attributable to _____ [(nonparticipant spouse's) interest in the benefits accrued to _____ (participant spouse) under the Plan or the community interest in the benefits accrued to _____ (participant spouse) under the Plan (, plus _____ (nonparticipant spouse) share of _____ (participant spouse's) separate property interest)]. Should [nonparticipant spouse] predecease [participant spouse] during this same period, _____ [the court shall reserve jurisdiction to make further orders as may be required in order for the estate of _____ (nonparticipant spouse) to receive an amount equal to the value of _____ (nonparticipant spouse's) interest in the benefits accrued or _____ (nonparticipant spouse's) interest in the Plan shall revert to _____ (participant spouse) as (his/her) separate property]. Notwithstanding the above, if the only form of benefit available under the Plan with respect to the death of [participant spouse] is a QPSA (within the meaning of Section 417 of the Internal Revenue Code), and if [participant spouse] should die without an actual surviving spouse under the Plan, then [nonparticipant spouse] shall be deemed to be the surviving spouse of [participant spouse] for all purposes without limitation. [Add if desired: The court shall retain jurisdiction to make further order as may be necessary to effect the intended division and disposition of the survivor benefits.] This paragraph shall be deemed incorporated and made a part of any order of status termination, and notice of entry shall be immediately served on the plan administrator.

[Use to provide for insurance on the nonparticipant spouse's life (defined benefit plan).]

Pending completion of the rollover distribution, [nonparticipant spouse] shall obtain term insurance on [her/his] life in an amount sufficient to provide an after-tax benefit for [her/his] beneficiaries equivalent to the actuarial present value of [nonparticipant spouse's] share of the community interest in the benefits accrued under the plan with respect to [participant spouse]. The cost of this insurance shall be paid by [participant spouse or the parties equally], and shall be kept in force until such time as [nonparticipant spouse] begins to receive benefits under the Plan.

[Use to provide for insurance on the participant's life.]

Pending completion of the rollover distribution, [participant spouse] shall obtain term insurance on [his/her] life in an amount sufficient to provide an after-tax benefit for [his/her] beneficiaries equivalent to the actuarial present value of [participant spouse's] share of the retirement benefits accrued under the Plan with respect to [him/her]. The cost of this insurance shall be paid by [(nonparticipant spouse) or the parties equally], and shall be kept in force until such time as [participant spouse] begins to receive benefits under the Plan.

Beneficiary Designations

The beneficiary designation in effect for [participant spouse] under the [short title of plan] is as follows: [specify beneficiary designations]. [Add to change beneficiaries: The beneficiary designation shall be changed to the following: _____ (specify new beneficiary designation). The change shall take place _____ (specify time, e.g., forthwith or on dissolution).] [Participant spouse] understands that the termination of marital status may not affect this beneficiary [designation or change] automatically, and that a new beneficiary designation may need to be filed with the Plan if [participant spouse] desires to change beneficiaries following termination of marital status. Nothing contained in this paragraph shall be interpreted as a waiver by [nonparticipant spouse] of any right that [she/he] may have as a beneficiary designated by [participant spouse], after the effective date of this Agreement. If a beneficiary change is to be made prior to dissolution, [nonparticipant spouse] shall cooperate in executing any documents or consent forms required by the Plan in order for the change to be effective.

Duty to Pay Income Taxes on Plan Distributions

[Nonparticipant spouse] shall be responsible for payment of any taxes due in respect to any distribution from the IRA to be established for [her/him], as set forth above, including any subsequent earnings on any distribution. The IRA transfer to [nonparticipant spouse] is incident to divorce and is intended to be without immediate tax consequence to either party under Internal Revenue Code Section 408(d)(6). If [participant spouse] should be required to pay tax on any distribution amount that is directly rolled from the Plan to the IRA to be assigned to [nonparticipant spouse] or on any subsequent distribution from the IRA once assigned to [nonparticipant spouse], [nonparticipant spouse] shall fully indemnify and reimburse [participant spouse] for the full amount, including any "tax on the tax," interest or penalties. There shall be no right of reimbursement, however, for any tax, interest, or penalty that results, directly or indirectly, from the failure of [participant spouse] to comply fully with the applicable rules and regulations governing eligible rollover distributions from tax-qualified plans.

§ 122.223 Special Provisions for Plan Controlled by Business-Owner Spouse

The form in [2] below contains certain provisions that should be included if there is a community interest in employee benefit plans in which a spouse is also an owner of the business that provides the plan. The division of plans that are controlled by a business-owner spouse can present unique planning opportunities because of the ability to amend the plan to take advantage of special rules that might not otherwise be available. Provisions allowing for "in kind" distributions of questionable property, early QDRO distributions, and additional benefit forms are but a few examples. On the other hand, because it is not statistically safe to assume that a small plan will be approved for tax qualification if audited, in many situations, it would be foolhardy to proceed to develop a complex distribution strategy without first determining whether the plan has been subjected to one or more disqualifying defects, and if so, what it might cost to requalify the plan with the IRS.

There have been several cases that highlight other special problems that can plague the QDRO division of plans that are maintained by a closely held business [see, e.g., Hawkins v. Commissioner (10th Cir. 1996) 86 F.3d 982 (dispute over which spouse was taxable on equalizing payment made by distribution from spouse-owner-controlled pension plan); Stewart v. Thorpe Holding Co. (9th Cir. 1999) 207 F.3d 1143, 200 U.S. App. Lexis 5807]. This form is designed to assist the parties in dealing with issues such as the impact of plan-related liabilities on the community owned business, and the apportionment of any liability for past failures to follow the pension rules, both with respect to plan administration and funding.

PRACTICE TIP:

In small plan situations, a time rule or tracing division is almost certainly not going to produce a fair result if the division does not take into account the extent to which the plan benefits have yet to be funded (or are over-funded) as of the date of separation. For example, if the participant spouse accrues a $10,000 contribution in a profit-sharing plan immediately prior to separation, technically half of that amount belongs to the nonparticipant spouse. But unless special provision is made in the order, that benefit is likely not going to be funded until the following year, using the postseparation earnings of the business, which are likely going to be the separate property of the owner. Is such a division still correct? The situation can be considerably worse in the case of a defined benefit plan, unless the unfunded projected liability is accounted for in the business valuation, or the plan is terminated and replaced with a defined contribution plan, or the benefit award is adjusted for the fact that most of the funding for the future benefits to be shared is going to come from postseparation earnings. Of course, the converse is true if the plan is overfunded due to community contributions as of the date of separation. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

PRACTICE TIP:

In dealing with small plans, it is almost a certainty due to the complexity of the tax and ERISA rules that must be followed that there have been one or more qualification or fiduciary failures that could be cause for liability for both the participants and the employer on audit, particularly if a QDRO distribution is rolled to an IRA in the mistaken belief that the plan was qualified when payment was made. Because many of these problems can now be corrected voluntarily at a relatively minor cost if found before audit, it may well be prudent in some situations to obtain a "preemptive" audit by a qualified benefits practitioner. This form provides options for the nonparticipant spouse to either require or waive an audit. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

PRACTICE TIP:

If a small plan covers only the owner of the business, or the owner and spouse, or only partners and their spouses, the plan is likely not ERISA-covered. In such circumstances, the ERISA preemption that might otherwise be assumed to apply in the post- Egelhoff era to preclude state inheritance laws from controlling beneficiary designations will not have any effect. Thus, for example, it may turn out that Prob. Code § 5600 will invalidate on divorce certain beneficiary designations in one plan of a business, but not another depending on what employees are covered. To make matters worse, practitioners should be aware that the case law is not settled on the issue of whether a plan that is once an ERISA plan remains so, even after all common law employees have been paid out, leaving the owner or the owner's spouse as the only participant. In such circumstances, the only safe way to change a beneficiary designation is to comply with both the rules of the plan and the requirements of Prob. Code § 5600. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

[2] FORM

Special Provisions for Plan Controlled by Business-Owner Spouse

There is a community interest in _____ [name of business] and there is also a community interest in benefits payable under [short title of plan] (the Plan), a defined benefit plan in which [owner-participant spouse] is both a participant and the controlling owner of the Plan. [Add if desired: _____ (owner-participant spouse) agrees to amend the Plan to provide as follows: [specify amendments.]]

The parties understand that the Plan has, or may have, an impact on the valuation of the community's ownership interest in the business.

[Use if audit has already been performed.]

[Husband has or Wife has or The parties have] evaluated (or caused to be evaluated by a third party) the funding, investment, operation and administration of the plan for compliance with ERISA and the qualification requirements of the Internal Revenue Code. This evaluation was performed in reliance on the accuracy and completeness of the data, documentation and other information provided or made available by [owner-participant spouse]. [owner-participant spouse] warrants that to the best of [his/her] knowledge, all information was true, correct, and accurate as of the date on which it was provided or made available, and that [he/she] is not aware of any material changes in the information since that date. The court reserves jurisdiction to redetermine the value of any community interest in

_____ [name of business], and to make further orders as the interests of justice may require to equalize the division of the community estate, or otherwise, on discovery of any material breach of this warranty. Except as provided in the preceding sentence, the evaluation shall be accepted as final and binding as between the parties, notwithstanding any subsequently discovered errors, omissions, or incorrect assumptions associated with it.

[OR: Use if audit will be performed.]

The parties agree to retain the services of a qualified professional to audit the plan for compliance with ERISA and the tax qualification requirements of the Internal Revenue Code, and to evaluate its current funding status. The parties agree to cooperate in resolving any compliance, funding, or valuation issues that may be disclosed in the course of this audit. The cost of the audit shall be [_____ paid by Husband or paid by Wife or shared equally by the parties or paid _____ percent by Husband and _____ percent by Wife].

The court shall reserve jurisdiction to resolve any dispute between the parties with regard to the evaluation of the Plan, to redetermine the value of the community interest in _____ [name of business], and to make further orders as the interests of justice may require to equalize the division of the community and properly apportion any plan-related liabilities.

[OR: Use if no audit will be performed.]

The parties have, for purposes of agreeing on a valuation of _____ [name of business] assumed that the funding, investment, operation, or administration of the plan is fully in compliance with ERISA and the qualification requirements of the Internal Revenue Code. Although the validity of this assumption has not been verified by independent audit or evaluation, each warrants that he or she has no information to the contrary.

[AND EITHER: if parties will accept risks associated with no audit:]

The parties agree to accept the risk that an unknown but existing and material plan-related liability, claim or funding surplus, or potential employer reversion was not properly taken into account in valuing the community interest in the business, and accept the agreed valuation as final and binding notwithstanding any unknown liability, claim, or surplus. Should any subsequently discovered funding deficiency, operational or qualification defect, including any associated taxes, interest and penalties, give rise to any cost, expense, tax, penalty, or other liability for either party in his or her individual capacity as plan fiduciary, participant, or alternate payee, this liability shall be borne _____ [by the parties jointly in proportion to the community ownership in the business or solely by _____ (owner-participant spouse), who shall fully defend and hold _____ (nonparticipant spouse) harmless from all liability associated with the subsequently discovered cost.

If any uncured funding or other deficiency should result in a decrease in the benefits otherwise available for payment to [nonparticipant spouse], the reduction shall be _____ [shared pro rata based on the amount of plan benefits awarded to each party respectively or charged to _____ (owner-participant spouse's) share only].

[OR: if court will reserve jurisdiction to address matters arising from no audit:]

The court shall reserve jurisdiction to redetermine the value of the community interest in _____ [name of business] and to make further orders as the interests of justice may require to equalize the division of the community, or otherwise, should it later be determined that an existing and material plan-related liability, funding surplus, or reversion was not properly taken into account in valuing the community interest in the business.

[CONTINUE: Use if community has interest in more than one business under common control.]

The parties understand that the community holds an interest in one or more businesses under common control within the meaning of Section 414 of the Internal Revenue Code, and agree that the evaluation of plan-related funding or other liabilities shall take into account all plans maintained by any employer in the group.

[Use if owner-spouse will have to fund plan from separate property.]

The funding status of the Plan is such that future benefit accruals will necessarily be funded by the separate property of [owner-participant spouse]. [owner-participant spouse] has the option of terminating the plan and distributing to [nonparticipant spouse] [her/his] share of the community interest in the benefits accrued by [owner-participant spouse] to the date of termination. Should [owner-participant spouse] elect not to terminate the plan, _____ [the division of the plan shall not be affected by these separate property contributions, since this anticipated funding liability has been taken into account in the valuation of the community interest in the business or the interest of _____ (nonparticipant spouse) shall be equal to the present value of [her/his] share of the community interest as of the date of separation, as determined under Paragraph _____ of this Agreement, adjusted (increased or decreased) by the average rate of return on plan assets from that date until the date of distribution to [nonparticipant spouse].

§ 122.224 Valuation of Community Interest in Defined Benefit Plans

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below addresses issues with regard to the evaluation of a defined benefit pension plan. It provides for either a joint evaluation or separate evaluations by each party. It then sets forth the facts and data on which the valuation is based. For additional considerations in valuing defined benefit plans maintained by the participant spouse as owner, see § 122.223.

Obtaining an accurate value of a retirement plan asset is seldom necessary in order to divide the property successfully. However, if circumstances dictate that some form of buyout of the community interest in the plan is appropriate, valuation becomes an issue. While this can arise in any number of situations, it typically comes into play if the community assets are to be divided in the aggregate rather than in kind, including the situation in which the employee spouse will retain his or her undivided interest in employee benefits and the nonemployee spouse will receive other assets of equal value. It may also be an issue in the event of a Gillmore election buyout, in which the participant is effectively forced to choose between buying out the nonemployee spouse's interest in retirement benefits that are not available for distribution because the participant has elected to continue working past earliest possible retirement age, or retiring and letting the plan make the payments directly [see In re Marriage of Gillmore (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 418, 428 n.9, 174 Cal. Rptr. 493, 629 P.2d 1 ; see also § 122.220[1][g][i]].

In the case of an individual account plan, whether qualified or nonqualified [see § 122.220[1][b]], the value of the benefit earned is usually fairly easy to determine by looking at the most recent plan account statement. However, in the case of defined benefit plans, which promise only an income stream at retirement and do not have individual accounts, determining the value of those projected benefits is a far more subjective process. Generally, a defined benefit plan valuation requires the assistance of a qualified actuary, who will make assumptions about the future that are by definition guesses (hopefully educated), such as whether the participant will live his or her life expectancy, what interest rates are likely to do, what kind of benefit changes might be expected, and whether the plan will be terminated before the retirement date, to name just a few. Except in the case of a small plan, how well the plan is invested is not a factor to be considered. This is because defined benefit plan benefits are typically secured by a guarantee of the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation, as well as by the general assets of the employer.

Unfortunately, because of the nature of the mathematics involved, small changes in the actuarial assumptions and factors used in the valuation can have a major impact on the result. For example, dropping the interest rate by just 1 percent could easily make a 10 to 20 percent difference in the resulting value. Therefore, a good first step in any successful valuation is for the parties to attempt to define in advance each of the factors and assumptions that will be used.

PRACTICE TIP:

Generally speaking, it is always safer to divide defined benefit plan benefits rather than use them as an offset in the division of other property. There are a number of reasons for this. First, there is the fact that most benefit plan distributions are taxable to the distributee as income (a factor sometimes overlooked in the trading) [see I.R.C. § 402(a)]. Second, despite the apparent accuracy indicated by a result that is displayed in dollars and cents, it is almost a certainty that the actual amount received by the owner will vary substantially from what is calculated. This can be important if one spouse gives up the house to keep his or her pension, only to discover a health problem that will preclude that plan from paying anything near what was projected. Third, individual health and employment considerations will not likely be taken into account unless some change to the usual mortality tables and other assumptions is negotiated in advance. Fourth, such plans normally pay benefits in the form of an annuity, which if needed as a part of the recipient's retirement planning, may be less costly to obtain through the plan, than through a commercial annuity provider. Fifth, because pension benefits are both property and income, consideration of the impact of any contemplated buyout or offset on future support obligations will in many cases provide an additional complicating factor. Commentary by James M. Crawford Jr.

§ 122.240 California Public Employees Retirement System (CalPERS)

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, is for use to divide a state employee's interest in benefits provided by the California Public Employees Retirement System (CalPERS). The Public Employees' Retirement Law (PERL) is found at Government Code 20000 et seq. CalPERS must be joined in an action for dissolution or legal separation to obtain a direct award of benefits to the nonemployee spouse under the system [see generally Fam. Code § 2060; see also Fam. Code § 2610]. For further discussion of joinder, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 94, Joinder of Parties (Matthew Bender).

The three broad categories of membership in CalPERS are State, Local and School members. "State members" include state miscellaneous members, university members, patrol members, state safety members, state industrial members, and state peace officer/firefighter members, as well as National Guard members who elect to become members of the system [see Gov. Code § 20380.5]. "Local members" include local miscellaneous members and local safety members. "School members" include all employees within the jurisdiction of a school employer, other than local police officers, school safety members, and members included in a risk pool. The category of membership defines the terms of employment, including the retirement formula, the retirement age, the treatment of vacation pay and sick pay, death and survivor benefits (which may include a survivor continuance), and whether the employee contributes to social security [see Gov. Code § 20370 et seq.].

On written request, CalPERS will provide a booklet as to the member's classification, brochures regarding Instructions for Completion of Model Domestic Relations Orders, and model paragraphs for pension orders. All of these booklets may be obtained directly from CalPERS website (www.calpers.ca.gov). With an authorization signed by the member or a subpoena, CalPERS will provide information specific to the member's account. The address is California Public Employees' Retirement System; attn: Community Property Unit; PO Box 2056, Sacramento, CA 95812-2056; telephone: 916-326-3141; fax: (916) 326-3934. Telecommunication Device for the Deaf: (916) 326-3240.

Each member receives an annual retirement statement. Further, members now have access to a Retirement Planning Calculator to estimate retirement benefits. Information about salary, accrued sick leave, and vacation pay may be obtained from the employing public entity.

PRACTICE TIP:

The report on the Member Statement of Member Contributions is not the entire benefit that is divisible between the Member and the Nonmember. If requested, the Plan may calculate the projected accrued retirement benefit payable at the Member's earliest retirement age; in the alternative, a pension actuary should be able to provide this information. However, a calculation of the projected benefit is not necessary if there is not a buyout of the nonmember's interest. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[b] Other State Employee Benefit Plans and Reciprocity

A member of CalPERS may participate through the employing agency in other deferred-compensation plans or tax-deferred retirement plans [see Gov. Code § 20894]. Members of CalPERS may participate in a 457 Deferred Compensation Plan, or a 401(k) Plan through an independent agency known as the Savings Plus Program (website www.sppforu.com). Some university members also participate in a 403(b) Plan through their employers [see generally, Gov. Code §§ 21670 et seq., 53212 et seq.; see also Gov. Code § 21700 et seq. (alternative system for school member not eligible for PERS)]. A safety employee in certain bargaining units may also participate in the State Peace Officers' and Firefighter's Defined Contribution Program [Gov. Code § 22960 et seq.].

Reciprocity is an agreement between CalPERS and certain other public retirement systems by which an employee remains a member of both systems with benefit rights and obligations to each system. For example, if a member qualifies for reciprocity based on employment under CalPERS and then under the City and County of San Francisco, that member's benefit under each of those retirement systems is computed using the highest salary earned by the member under either system provided the member retires simultaneously under each retirement system [see Gov. Code § 20350 et seq.].

[c] Election between Separate Account or Shared-Interest Methods of Division

[i] Shared Interest and Separate Accounts Explained

A nonmember spouse under the PERL (hereafter a "nonmember") is a spouse or former spouse who has a judicially determined community property interest in CalPERS benefits [see Gov. Code § 21291]. The nonmember must make an election about whether to receive his or her community property share of the member's retirement benefits as a shared interest or in a separate account.

If the member does not have a vested benefit by having completed at least five years of credited service at the date of dissolution or legal separation, only a return of employee contributions may be payable to the nonmember spouse [Gov. Code § 21292(g)].

A shared interest in a member's retirement benefits is payable to a nonmember as a portion of the employee's benefits as it is received over the employee's life. This approach is often accompanied by the election of a survivor option to continue the benefit after the member's death. A separate account is one in which the accumulated contributions and service credits attributable to periods of service during marriage are divided into two separate and distinct accounts in the names of the member and nonmember [Gov. Code § 21290(b)]. Both shared interest and separate accounts division methods use a time-share approach in calculating the member's and nonmember's respective interests.

CalPERS publishes model orders for both approaches [see PERS booklet entitled Model Stipulated Domestic Relations].

Order Re: Divison of California Public Employees' Retirement System Benefits, available from CalPERS; see also In re Marriage of Carnall (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1010, 265 Cal. Rptr. 271] .

[ii] Structure of Benefits Under Separate Account

Specific rules about how and when benefits may be calculated and paid under a separate account are set forth under Government Code Section 21290 et seq. The first entitlement of the nonmember under a separate account is to a refund of accumulated contributions [Gov. Code § 21292(a)]. This selection ends all other entitlement to CalPERS benefits, including the pension and annuity [Gov. Code § 21292(d)]. Further, a return of contributions leaves the service credits that had been in the nonmember's separate account available for buyback by the member [Gov. Code § 20751.5].

If a return of contributions is not elected or required, the nonmember is entitled to a retirement allowance when both member and nonmember have reached age 50. The retirement allowance consists of a pension and an annuity payable for the life of the nonmember. The pension is derived from employer contributions and the annuity is derived from the member's accumulated contributions [Gov. Code § 21298]. The community has an interest in both [see Gov. Code § 21290].

PRACTICE TIP:

Be careful not to accept the member's contributions figure on the member's annual retirement statement as if that were the only component. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

The retirement allowance is subject to all cost-of-living increases, ad hoc increases, and increases provided by Government Code Section 21337 [Gov. Code § 21298]. If, prior to the nonmember's retirement, there is an increase in the service retirement formula that applies to service credited to the nonmember, that increase will apply to the applicable service credited to the nonmember, provided that the same increase also applies to the applicable service credited to the member from whose account the nonmember's service was derived [Gov. Code § 21298(c)]. The nonmember also has the right to designate a beneficiary for any member contributions that remain payable to the nonmember from the separate account at the time of the nonmember's death [Gov. Code § 21290(c)(6); see [h], below].

The nonmember is also entitled to the following, which must be addressed by the court in any Benefit Division Order [Gov. Code § 21290(c)]:

1. The right to a retirement allowance, and the consequent right to elect an optional settlement and designate a beneficiary [see [e], below];
2. The right to a refund of accumulated contributions.
3. The right to redeposit accumulated contributions that are eligible for redeposit by the member [see [f], below];
4. The right to purchase service credit that is eligible for purchase by the member [see [g], below];
5. The right to designate a beneficiary to receive the nonmember's accumulated contributions that are payable if death occurs before retirement [see [h], below].
6. The right to designate a beneficiary for any unpaid allowance payable at the time of the nonmember's death.
7. The right to elect coverage in the Second Tier for that member's service that is subject to the Second Tier, provided that the election is made within one year of the establishment of the nonmember's account or prior to the nonmember's retirement, whichever occurs first. Immediately on establishment of a nonmember account, the board must provide, by certified mail, the necessary form and information so that the election may be made.

8. Under certain circumstances, a nonmember whose account is credited with service subject to the Second Tier benefits may make an irrevocable election to have his or her Second Tier service credited under First Tier service, assuming any required contributions are deposited in the System (see [j], below) [Gov Code § 21290(e)(1)].

9. In the capacity of nonmember, a nonmember who elects a separate account is not entitled to any disability or industrial disability retirement allowance, any basic death benefit, any special death benefit, any monthly allowance for survivors of a member or retired person, any insurance benefit, or retired member lump-sum death benefit. No survivor continuance allowance is payable to a survivor of a nonmember [Gov. Code § 21290(d)].

[iii] Advantages and Disadvantages of Separate Account Versus Shared Interest

The advantage of the separate account if a monthly annuity is chosen is that the nonmember spouse may commence receipt of the annuity at any time after the member and nonmember have both reached the member's earliest retirement age, regardless of whether the member has actually retired [Gov. Code § 21295]. Further, the member's death before his or her earliest retirement age does not defeat the nonmember's separate account annuity entitlement, as would be the case generally under the shared interest approach. In other words, the nonmember's separate account is her or his alone, and is not affected by conditions related to the member.

Disadvantages of the separate account include the fact that the nonmember is not entitled to any special statutory death benefits, including a portion of the survivor continuance allowance, if one is payable [Gov. Code § 21290(d); see [ii], above]. By contrast, the shared-interest approach would include a portion of the community interest in any benefit payable under the plan on account of or on behalf of the member [see In re Marriage of Carnall (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1010, 265 Cal. Rptr. 271].

However, the overriding disadvantage of the separate account is in the calculation of the monthly allowance. The allowance formula is a function of service credit, age, and final compensation of the member [Gov. Code § 21350 et seq.]. However, for a separate account, "final compensation" is defined as that compensation earned during the three consecutive years, or one year if applicable, before the date of dissolution of marriage or legal separation [Gov. Code § 21297]. By contrast, nonmembers who do not chose the separate account will share the member's final benefit, which is calculated using the member's final compensation at the time of the member's retirement.

Limiting the compensation factor in the nonmember's allowance to the member's final compensation as of the date of judgment of dissolution of marriage or legal separation (no matter how much later the nonmember commences that allowance) creates an actuarial inequity. In other words, the later the member retires after the judgment, the higher the compensation factor applied to all member's service credits; and so, the greater the actuarial difference in value between the one-half service credits earned during the marriage awarded to the member and the one-half service credits earned during the marriage awarded to the nonmember under the separate account.

Before January 1, 2004, the plan benefited by absorbing the actuarial difference between the benefit the plan would have paid the member if the member had received the nonmember's one-half service credits earned during marriage, and what is actually payable to the nonmember based on the one-half service credits earned during the marriage. As of January 1, 2004, a member who retires after January 2, 2004, will receive the actuarial difference between the allowance that would have been payable to the member for all service had the division not occurred, and the allowance payable to the nonmember [Gov. Code § 21251.15].

One reason a nonmember spouse may have elected a separate account, notwithstanding the disadvantage of the final compensation factor, is a concern that with a shared interest, she or he could lose all but a share of the portion of accumulated contributions if the member dies without a survivor before retirement. Under CalPERS, any preretirement survivor allowance is payable only to statutory beneficiaries, and the statute excludes a former spouse as a statutory beneficiary [see Gov. Code § 21493; see also Gov. Code § 21570 et seq.].

The dilemma may be somewhat ameliorated if CalPERS, in practice, allows a nonmember to reverse his or her selection from a shared interest to a separate account for good cause. For example, if a nonmember spouse chooses a shared interest, but that choice becomes unavailable due to the member's death before retirement, CalPERS may accept a subsequent modifying court order awarding the nonmember a separate account. This option should be investigated with CalPERS, and if CalPERS allows it, language reserving the court's jurisdiction to modify the shared interest so as to substitute a separate account should be included in the original order.

Note that the nonmember's choice of a separate account or a shared interest has no impact on the value of the member's remaining benefit. The compensation level applied to service credits awarded the nonmember spouse is the factor that accounts for the difference in value to the nonmember under a separate account as opposed to a shared interest. As discussed above, under a separate account, the final compensation factor applied is that of the member's earnings at or before the date of dissolution [Gov. Code § 21297], while under a shared interest, the compensation level is that of the member's highest years' earnings at the date of the member's retirement [Gov. Code § 21350 et seq.]. As a practical matter, the nonmember's allocated marital service credits remain with her or him under either system.

[d] Further Considerations Under Shared Interest

[i] Early Retirement Enhancement

Although rare under PERL, there are limited provisions for early retirement enhancements under CalPERS [see, e.g., Gov. Code § 20901]. Public agency and school district employers can offer two years of imputed service credit to encourage early retirement if the governing board of a school district or a community college district or a county office of education by formal action determines that the best interest of the school district or county would be served. The imputed service credit is forfeited if the member reinstates employment. There is also a right to receive partial allowance on early retirement and revert to full allowance for normal retirement age. At this time, no legislation enables State agencies including the California State Universities to provide such an early retirement incentive [see, e.g., Gov. Code § 20903].

The California Supreme Court has held that a nonemployee spouse has a community property interest in any enhancement of retirement benefits attributable to the employee spouse in which the community otherwise has an interest [In re Marriage of Lehman (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 169, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 825, 955 P.2d 451] .

[ii] Accumulated Unused Sick Leave

A member's employment contract may provide that accumulated sick leave will be converted to service credits at retirement. The general rule is for 0.004 year of service credit for each unused day of sick leave certified to the board by the employer [Gov. Code § 20963(a) (excluding sick leave earned by National Guard members who elect to become members of system pursuant to Gov. Code § 20380.5)]. Although there may be alternative methods, the "time rule" approach is the most often used in calculating the parties' respective interests.

[iii] Reduced Worktime for Partial Service Retirement

Reduced worktime for partial service retirement means any arrangement of worktime agreeable to both the employer and the employee that is combined with the concurrent payment of proportionally reduced compensation and proportionally reduced retirement benefits [Gov. Code § 21112]. Not all members are eligible. The reduced service allowance is the amount of the service retirement allowance to which the employee would otherwise have been entitled had he or she fully retired on the effective date of the partial service retirement, reduced by the percentage of the employee's full-time work [Gov. Code § 21356].

[iv] Temporary Annuity

The temporary annuity is an additional monthly dollar amount payable from the retirement benefit. It is funded by a reduction in the monthly lifetime retirement allowance [see Gov. Code § 21461]. For example, a member who entered CalPERS covered employment after July 1, 1982 who wished to retire at age 56 could elect to receive a monthly temporary annuity of $500 per month for 12 years. The member's regular monthly lifetime allowance would be reduced by $350.70 to pay for the temporary annuity. Cost-of-living adjustments would apply to the combined lifetime allowance portion and the temporary annuity portion. CalPERS explains in its booklet on the temporary annuity that the survivor continuance would still be calculated on the retirement allowance before any reduction for temporary annuity. However, by reducing the monthly lifetime allowance in order to receive a temporary annuity, the member would also be reducing the monthly lifetime allowance available to any option beneficiary. If the nonmember spouse has elected a shared interest, the effect of this election should be examined.

[v] Suspension of Benefits on Reemployment

As with employee benefit plans covered by ERISA [see § 122.220[1][f]], the PERL provides for the possibility that a member may be reinstated to covered employment after retirement [see Gov. Code § 21190 et seq.]. Note that CalPERS must preapprove the reinstatement of a retiree to a permanent position with an employer covered by CalPERS [Gov. Code § 21196]. The retirement allowance ceases to be payable on the first day of active employment following CalPERS approval [Gov. Code § 21200]. If the member begins employment before CalPERS has approved reinstatement from retirement, CalPERS must be reimbursed for any retirement allowance received by the member during the period of unapproved employment. Further, the employee must pay CalPERS the employee contributions which would have been submitted during the period of "unlawful" employment, plus interest; and the member may be required to reimburse CalPERS for administrative expenses incurred in handling the situation [see Gov. Code § 21220(b)]. Further, by choosing to reinstate, the member loses any additional service credit given under a "golden handshake" or other retirement incentive program.

The nonmember spouse who is receiving a share of the member's monthly benefit would need to be protected and indemnified under all these circumstances. Further, a nonmember spouse who is legally separated from the member and still considered a beneficiary of the member on health, dental and vision insurance, if available, will need to clarify the status of these benefits with respect to the reinstatement. For further information, see CalPERS booklets "Reinstatement from Retirement" and "Employment After Retirement."

[e] Optional Settlement for Beneficiary at Retirement

The PERL provides for a member to elect one of four optional settlements, each of which will provide a reduced benefit to the member during his or her lifetime, but with payments continuing to a designated beneficiary (or to designated beneficiaries) on the death of the member [see Gov. Code § 21451; see also Gov. Code §§ 21455-21458 (the four optional settlements)]. The election of an optional settlement for a beneficiary is also available to a nonmember under a separate account [see Gov. Code § 21290(c)(1)].

There is no requirement in the PERL that the member's surviving spouse be named the beneficiary or execute a written waiver of a right to be named beneficiary. A member may designate anyone as the beneficiary of an optional settlement, provided the member's beneficiary designation does not contradict a court order in a marital action [see Gov. Code § 21490]. These optional settlements are fully explained in the CalPERS Member booklets.

Each option requires a reduction to the member's monthly allowance to fund the beneficiary's entitlement. Options 2 and 2W allow a single beneficiary to receive the same total monthly payment that the member received before death [see Gov. Code § 21456]; Options 3 and 3W allow 50 percent of the member's monthly allowance to a single beneficiary [see Gov. Code § 21457].

The option most often elected in marital actions is Option 4 [see Gov. Code § 21458]. Option 4 is unique in two ways: (1) under Option 4, the member may specify the dollar amount of the monthly allowance that the beneficiary will receive, limiting the amount of the option to the nonmember spouse's share of the community interest; and (2) Option 4 allows more than one option beneficiary to receive a lifetime benefit. For example, the nonmember spouse may be provided a lifetime allowance equal to that spouse's community property share, reduced for the cost of that option, thus ensuring a fairly level benefit over the nonmember's lifetime. At the same time, under Option 4, a member's current spouse can be provided with a lifetime allowance equal to the member's remaining share of the benefit. CalPERS will provide an estimate for Option 4 calculations on request.

[f] Redeposit of Contributions for Service Credit

Under certain employment conditions, a member may withdraw accumulated contributions with interest [see Gov. Code § 20730 et seq.]. Subject to regulations of the board, a member may file an election with the board to redeposit in the retirement fund an amount equal to the accumulated contributions withdrawn, and interest that would have been credited to his or her account to the date of completion of payments had the contributions not been withdrawn [see Gov. Code §§ 20750, 20752, 21050]. A nonmember spouse is also entitled to participate in the redeposit of contributions for service credit if earned during the marital period regardless of whether the nonmember has elected a separate or a shared account [see Gov. Code §§ 20751, 21290(c)(3), 21294]. For discussion of other retirement plans as the source of funds for the redeposit of contributions for service credit, see [j], below.

PRACTICE TIP:

A nonmember who has elected a separate account is strongly advised to find out before the judgment and order are prepared whether there are any redeposit rights; then the judgment and order can specify whether the nonmember will exercise his or her right to half of the community right in that respect. Otherwise, there may be consequences. For example, if the nonmember commences receipt of a separate account under the standard language of the statute, PERS will likely interpret that language to be an award of one-half of the right to redeposit even though the parties may not have intended that result. If nonmember commences receipt of a separate account without giving CalPERS notice of an election to redeposit one-half of any community interest in previously withdrawn contributions, the opportunity to exercise the redeposit rights assigned to the nonmember is lost to the nonmember, and possibly to the member, since any right awarded the nonmember may not be exercised by the member even if the nonmember declined the election. Note that the nonmember may exercise this election even if the member declines. Either party should be able to exercise the entire community interest if the other party declines that party's share. But the court order must reflect that arrangement. Further, in weighing whether to redeposit contributions for additional service credits, remember that if the nonmember has elected a separate account, the salary component of the allowance calculation is frozen at the date of dissolution of marriage. Weigh the cost of the service credits against the benefit under this restriction. Make sure your order either waives such rights or awards such rights as the nonmember can afford the contributions required to exercise. Unlike STRS, PERS takes an "all or nothing" approach. Either the nonmember redeposits one half the full community share, or forfeits the right. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[g] Right to Purchase Service Credit

Additional service credit may be purchased by members, and under very limited circumstances, retirees, for specific authorized periods when the member is not actively employed, such as when on active military duty, leave of absence, or part-time employment credit [see Gov. Code §§ 20990 et seq., 21020 et seq., 21050]. A nonmember spouse is permitted to purchase additional service credits attributed to the marital period even if the nonmember has elected a separate account [Gov. Code § 21290(c)(4)]. The Practice Tip in [f], above, also should be referred to in this case. For discussion of other retirement plans as the source of funds for the redeposit of contributions for service credit, see [j], below.

[h] Effect of Nonmember Spouse's Death

CalPERS recognizes the right of a nonmember spouse to name a beneficiary for her or his remaining interest on death [see Gov. Code § 21491]. If the nonmember had an order for a separate account, the beneficiary would receive a refund of the contributions in the separate account, regardless of whether the nonmember had commenced receipt under the separate account [see Gov. Code § 21290(c)(5), (6)]. If the nonmember had an order for a shared interest, the beneficiary would receive the nonmember's community property percent of each payment to the member [see In re Marriage of Powers (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 626, 640-641, 267 Cal. Rptr. 350 ; see also model paragraphs for domestic relations orders published by CalPERS]. However, if the nonmember was paying for additional service credits by way of deductions to retirement, the board must file a claim against the estate of the deceased to recover benefit payments that exceeded those for which payment was made [Gov. Code §§ 21293, 21294].

[i] Election to Obtain Higher Retirement Benefits

Coverage under the First Tier of benefits requires the member to make contributions each pay period in accordance with the category of membership and any applicable contract of employment. Coverage under the Second Tier yields a lower retirement benefit because it requires no member contributions. In order to obtain a higher retirement benefit, a nonmember whose account is credited with service subject to the Second Tier benefits may make an irrevocable election, to be filed with the board, to have his or her Second Tier service credited under Gov. Code § 21354.1 (First Tier benefits), if the member is employed by the state on or after January 1, 2000, and, if eligible, the member has made the election under Gov. Code § 21073.7 at the time of the nonmember's election.

A nonmember's election to upgrade from Second Tier to First Tier may be made at any time before the retirement of the nonmember or before payment of a refund of the accumulated contributions in the separate account of the nonmember, and will be effective the first of the month following the date the election is received in the system. A nonmember who makes this election must make the contributions specified in Gov. Code § 21073.1 [Gov. Code § 21290(e)]. For discussion of other retirement plans as a possible source of funds for the contributions required for the upgrade from Second Tier to First Tier service credit, see [j], below.

PRACTICE TIP:

In order for the nonmember to elect to deposit contributions to upgrade Second Tier service to First Tier service, the member must not only have been eligible for this upgrade but must also have elected to exercise that option. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[j] Consideration of Rollover Rights

The federal Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 (EGTRRA) [Pub. L. No. 107-16] enacted a number of federal statutory changes to improve the portability of funds by allowing direct trustee-to-trustee rollovers among different types of retirement plans, including 401(k), 403(b), and 457 plans, IRA's and retirement plans. A client should take steps to qualify through CalPERS to roll over funds from these different types of retirement plans to the CalPERS System in order to purchase permissive service credit, redeposit previously withdrawn contributions, and upgrade Second Tier benefits to First Tier, as may be permitted under CalPERS [see Stats. 2002, ch. 30 (AB 131)].

PRACTICE TIP:

A member and a nonmember should be treated the same with respect to the right to roll over eligible funds for these purposes. However, do not take for granted that a retirement plan qualifies for the rollover to obtain additional service credits. Inquire of CalPERS and obtain approval before any such planning. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[k] Right to Purchase Five Years of "Air Time"

A member with five years of service credit (including state, university, school employer, contracting agency, and certain legislative employees) may elect to make contributions and receive not less than one year and not more than five years--in one-year increments--of additional retirement service in the retirement system. This is a one-time only election that must be made prior to retirement. A member's contribution amount is the full actuarial present value of the increase in the benefit. "Air Time" does not include retirement service credit for public service, military service, leave of absence, or any other time recognized for service credit by the retirement system [Gov. Code § 20909].

PRACTICE TIP:

While there is no right created for the nonmember spouse under a separate account with respect to this benefit, to the extent that the Air Time is purchased during marriage, those service credits ought to be available at the time of division under either a separate or shared account. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[l] Effect of Member's Disability or Death on Installment Payment of Contributions for Service Credit

When a member who has elected to pay for service credits by installment dies or becomes disabled, depending on the type of death benefit payable, the payments may be discontinued, may be due in an immediate lump sum, or may continue as installment payments from disability or survivor benefits [see Gov. Code §§ 20776, 21037, 21039].

PRACTICE TIP:

A spouse with a shared account interest who is joining in the payments for additional community property service credits will want to inquire about the effect of the member's death or disability on the nonmember's entitlement. Service credits may be irrelevant to a disability retirement award, but those service credits remain relevant to the nonmember's interest. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[2] FORMCalifornia Public Employees Retirement System (CalPERS)*Disposition of Benefits in CalPERS

A community property interest exists in [member spouse's] accrued benefits under the California Public Employees' Retirement System (CalPERS) based on [his/her] employment during the marriage for [employer]. [member spouse's] CalPERS Member category of membership is _____; [his/her] date of hire for this employment was _____; and [his/her] date of birth is _____. This employment is [not] covered employment under FICA for purposes of eligibility for federal Social Security benefits. The date of marriage was _____, and the date of separation was _____. [Add, if applicable: The date of marital dissolution was _____.]

[Use if member has employee benefit plans other than CalPERS.]

In addition to CalPERS, [member spouse] has participated in the following plans during marriage: [specify other plans].

A claim of interest under Family Code Sections 751 and 1100 and Joinder of Pension Plan [has been/will be] filed with respect to each plan in which it has been determined that the community has an interest based on the employment of [member spouse] during marriage. The entitlement of the parties under every plan in which [member spouse] has accrued service credit during the marriage will be committed to orders setting forth the rights and entitlement of each respective party in each plan, and entered on or before, but not later than, entry of the judgment.

Warranties

[Except as listed above,] Each party warrants to the other that he or she is not covered by or entitled to any benefit under an employee benefit plan that is attributable in any way to service with an employer during the marriage and before the date of separation, nor does he or she have any expectation of becoming so covered. Each further warrants that if he or she becomes covered under an amendment to an existing employee benefit plan, that may provide benefits based partly or wholly on service rendered during marriage and before the date of separation, that party shall immediately notify the other and provide a copy of the plan if reasonably available. The court shall retain jurisdiction to make any further orders as may be necessary to divide the community interest, if any, in these benefits. [Each party further warrants that he or she has provided to the other a complete, current, and accurate disclosure and accounting of the following with respect to each listed plan: (1) the current value of all benefits accrued (not solely employee contributions); (2) "window" elections that have been made or that are currently available; (3) beneficiary designations; (4) any opportunity to purchase service credit or redeposit previously refunded contributions related to the marital period; (5) any community funds used to purchase service credits related to a period of service outside of the marriage; and (6) any elections or waivers of benefits.] Pending the disposition of each of the plans listed above, each party further warrants that he or she shall not make any election that may affect the nature, form, value, or timing of any benefits payable under the plan without express prior written notice to the other party.

Preservation of Right to Omitted Assets

Any plan in which [member spouse] may have accrued service credits during the marriage that is not divided by this Agreement or assigned to either party as part of the overall division of their community property, may be considered a missed asset subject to further division in this matter. [member spouse] shall indemnify [nonmember spouse] against the loss of any benefits in which [nonmember spouse] would have had an interest if benefits are no longer payable directly from the plan.

Available Retirement Benefits

The parties understand for member service that is subject to the First Tier, that there are two components to CalPERS retirement benefits; the pension, derived from employer contributions (which is a function of compensation, age, and service credit) and the annuity, which is derived from employee contributions. The community has an interest in both components.

Election of Form of Benefit

As long as [member spouse] has not retired, [nonmember spouse] has the right to choose either a separate account or a shared interest approach to [her/his] benefit interest. That choice will be set forth in an order to be presented to CalPERS on or before the entry of judgment. However, the parties understand that under some circumstances, as long as [nonmember spouse] has not commenced receipt of [her/his] benefit interest, the choice of a shared interest or separate account may be reversed. The parties agree that [nonmember spouse] may take steps to change the election, and both will cooperate in the entry of an amended court order in that respect, as long as [nonmember spouse's] change of election has no impact on the value of [member spouse's] remaining benefit.

[Use to divide into separate accounts.]

Separate Accounts (Choice of)

[Nonmember spouse] elects to receive [her/his] share of [member spouse's] retirement benefit as a separate account in accordance with Family Code Section 2610(a)(3). The parties acknowledge that [nonmember spouse] shall be entitled to all applicable rights permitted under a separate account interest as set forth in Section 21290(c) of the Government Code.

[Nonmember spouse] has the funds with which to make these deposits of contributions and will do so in a timely manner pursuant to the deadlines set by CalPERS. [Nonmember spouse] understands that if the Plan allows an election for installment payments, at the death of Nonmember, the board shall file a claim against [Nonmember spouse]'s estate to recover benefit payments that exceeded those for which payment was made.

Separate Account Pension

The court order shall state that the accumulated contributions and service credits attributable to periods of service from the date of marriage to the date of separation be divided into two separate and distinct accounts in the names of Husband and Wife, respectively. Any service credits or accumulated contributions that are not explicitly awarded by the judgment or court order shall be deemed the separate property of [member spouse].

Member Contributions Under Separate Account

The parties understand that [member spouse] made contributions to CalPERS during the marriage, [specify portion, e.g., one- half] of which will be deposited into [nonmember spouse's] separate account. These contributions will be used to fund an annuity that will also be part of the total benefit payable to [nonmember spouse] at [her/his] retirement provided that these contributions are not withdrawn.

[IF member was not yet vested in CalPERS at end of marital period:]

Refund of Contributions

Because [member spouse] does not have the necessary service credits to qualify for retirement at the time of [dissolution of marriage/legal separation], [nonmember spouse] understands that in choosing a separate account, [she/he] will receive only a refund of that portion of [her/his] interest that represents [member spouse's] contributions, and any interest accrued to those contributions, as soon as administratively practicable following the date an account is established.

[IF member was vested, but Nonmember still elects a refund of contributions:]

(Nonmember Spouse's) Election of Refund of Contributions

[Nonmember spouse] elects to receive a refund of [member spouse] contributions assigned to [nonmember spouse's] separate account. [Nonmember spouse] understands that by electing to take a cashout or refund of member contributions, [nonmember spouse] will be deemed to have permanently waived all rights to a pension allowance and all rights to any future retirement benefits pertaining to the service credits in the separate account when the refund becomes effective. Likewise, by electing a refund of accumulated contributions, [nonmember spouse] will have no right to elect to redeposit the refunded accumulated contributions from [her/his] account after the refund is effective, and will have no right to redeposit contributions under Government Code Section 20750 or 20752, or to purchase service credit under Article 4 (commencing with Section 20990) or Article 5 (commencing with Section 21020 of Chapter 11 of the Government Code) after the refund becomes effective.

[Nonmember spouse] understands that by electing a refund of contributions from [her/his] separate account, [she/he] will forfeit any right to a pension from the separate account based on service credits. As a result, [nonmember spouse] will have provided [member spouse] with the opportunity afforded by the Public Employees' Retirement Law to repurchase the service credits in [nonmember spouse's] account.

[IF member is vested and Nonmember does not elect refund of contributions, continue with:]

(Nonmember spouse's) Election of Separate Account Pension

[Nonmember spouse] understands that by electing the separate accounts method of division, [she/he] is entitled to a pension benefit payable when both parties have reached [member spouse's] earliest retirement age. [As of the date of [dissolution of marriage/legal separation], [member spouse] is entitled to an estimated accrued benefit of $[amount] per month payable at [his/her] earliest retirement age, which is [earliest retirement age].]

[Nonmember spouse] understands that in the capacity of a nonmember under a separate account, [she/he] shall not be entitled to any disability or industrial disability retirement allowance, any basic death benefit, any special death benefit, any monthly allowance for survivors of a member or retired person, any insurance benefit, or retired member lump-sum death benefit. No survivor continuance allowance is payable to a survivor of a nonmember.

[Nonmember spouse] understands that under the separate-accounts method of division, [she/he] will receive, in a separate account, [part or percent] of the service credits attributed to the marital period. [Nonmember spouse] further understands that, regardless of [member spouse's] actual salary at the time when [nonmember spouse's] pension becomes payable, the pension portion of the benefit payable to [nonmember spouse] will be calculated using [member spouse's] salary at the date of dissolution.

[EITHER, if Nonmember will reserve right to recover actuarial loss resulting from salary-factor disadvantage, include:]

Because the actuarial value lost to [nonmember spouse] due to the salary-factor disadvantage will be party of [member spouse's] retirement allowance, the parties shall consult an actuary to determine the manner in which the economic benefit can be recovered by [nonmember spouse].

[OR, if Nonmember will accept salary-factor disadvantage, include:]

Notwithstanding any disadvantage of the salary factors to [nonmember spouse] in the calculation of [her/his] separate property pension share, as set forth above, [nonmember spouse] agrees to the separate accounts method of division for the reason that [Reasons].

[If there are service credits available for reinstatement based on Nonmember's right to redeposit contributions previously refunded during marriage, include:]

Redeposit of Previously Refunded Contributions

[Nonmember spouse] [elects to exercise/waives] the right to obtain additional service credits attributable to the marital period by redepositing previously refunded accumulated contributions.

[If right of redeposit is exercised:]

[Nonmember spouse] shall have the right to redeposit [part or percent] of previously refunded contributions. The parties understand that once [nonmember spouse] has been assigned the right to redeposit, even if [nonmember spouse] fails to complete a refund of accumulated contributions, [member spouse] may not reclaim any right to the service credits subject to redeposit.

[Nonmember spouse] has the funds with which to make these redeposits of contributions, and will do so in a timely manner according to the deadlines set by CalPERS. [nonmember spouse] understands that if CalPERS allows an election for installment payments, at [her/his] death, the board will file a claim against [nonmember spouse's] estate to recover benefit payments that exceeded those for which payment was made.

[If member made redeposits with community funds for credits attributable to the nonmarital period:]

[Member spouse] shall reimburse the community for any community property funds (plus interest) used to redeposit contributions that relate to service credit attributable to [member spouse's] employment during any period other than during marriage.

[If there are service credits available for purchase attributable to employment during marital period, include:]

Right to Purchase Additional Service Credits

[Nonmember spouse] [elects to exercise/waives] the right to purchase available additional service credits based on covered employment during the marital period.

[If right to purchase is exercised:]

[Nonmember spouse] shall have the right to purchase [Part or Percent] of all service credits available to [member spouse] for purchase. The parties understand that once [nonmember spouse] has been assigned the right to purchase these additional service credits, even if [she/he] does not complete the purchase, [member spouse] may not reclaim any right to purchase the credits assigned to [nonmember spouse].

[Nonmember spouse] has the funds with which to purchase these credits, and will do so in a timely manner according to the deadlines set by CalPERS. [Nonmember spouse] understands that if CalPERS allows an election for installment payments, at [her/his] death, the board will file a claim against [nonmember spouse's] estate to recover benefit payments that exceeded those for which payment was made.

[IF member is eligible to elect to have Second Tier service credited as First Tier, include:]

Upgrade of Second Tier Credits

Each party shall have equal opportunity to upgrade that party's share of the community service from Second Tier to First Tier when [member spouse] elects to upgrade.

Death of Either Party

The parties acknowledge that under a separate account, [nonmember spouse] has the right to elect an optional settlement and designate an option beneficiary.

[Nonmember spouse] understands that if she/he dies before the refund or payout of all accumulated contributions and interest without having designated an option beneficiary, [nonmember spouse's] beneficiaries will receive any balance in her/his contribution account and any unpaid allowance payable at the time of [nonmember spouse's] death.

The parties acknowledge that the death of [member spouse] shall have no effect on [nonmember spouse's] rights and interest under the separate account.

[End of provisions limited to separate accounts method of division.]

[Use to establish shared interests instead of separate accounts.]

Shared Interest

[Nonmember spouse] elects to receive [her/his] share of [member spouse's] CalPERS retirement benefit as a shared interest in accordance with Family Code Section 2610.

The community interest shall be equal to the fraction whose numerator is [member spouse's] credited service in the system from the date of marriage to the date of separation, and whose denominator is [member spouse's] total credited service in the system. [Nonmember spouse's] share will be 50 percent of the community interest in [member spouse] retirement benefits computed at the time of [member spouse's] actual retirement. Under this shared-interest method, no benefits will be payable by CalPERS to [nonmember spouse] before [member spouse's] actual retirement. [Cross refer, as appropriate, to paragraph entitled "Gillmore Rights," below.]

The community interest in [member spouse's] retirement benefits shall include any refund of accumulated retirement contributions, any service retirement benefits, any disability retirement benefits, any industrial disability retirement benefits and any death benefits.

[Include to adjust the computation of unused sick leave:]

Accumulated Unused Sick Leave

[EITHER, "Tracing Method":]

The parties understand that member's final benefit may include service credits based on unused sick leave accumulated as of the date of retirement, and that without an agreement to the contrary, such additional credits would be included in the denominator of the time rule formula. The member's employer has provided the information that there were _____ hours of unused sick leave accumulated as of the date of separation attributable to the marital period. The service credits based on the marital unused sick leave will be included in the numerator of the time-rule formula. However, the unused sick leave credits in the numerator shall not exceed those included in the denominator of the formula.

[OR, "Proportionate Method":]

Neither the numerator nor the denominator of the time-rule formula will include any service credits related to accumulated unused sick leave. Instead, the community percentage that otherwise applies to the member's benefits in general will apply to any increase in the final benefit due to accumulated unused sick leave at the time of retirement.

[Include if desired.]

Gillmore Rights

[Nonmember spouse] [waives or reserves] the right to make an election under In re Marriage of Gillmore (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 418 for benefits to be paid directly by [member spouse] if [member spouse] does not retire at [his/her] earliest retirement date. However, nothing in this paragraph is intended to predetermine whether the nonmember spouse should be required to elect a separate account rather than precipitate a payment directly from the member under the authority of In re Marriage of Gillmore (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 418. The issue is reserved for the court's determination in the event that it should arise at some future time prior to the member's retirement.

Death of _____ [Member spouse] Before Retirement

[Nonmember spouse] understands that there are limited benefits payable to a former spouse from CalPERS under the shared-interest method if [member spouse] dies during the preretirement period.

[Include one or both of following two paragraphs:]

If [member spouse] dies before [his/her] retirement and [nonmember spouse] does not elect a separate account, [nonmember spouse] will be entitled to whichever of the following is elected by [member spouse's] statutory beneficiaries, if any:

a. one-half of the contributions made during marriage and before separation, including earnings and losses on those amounts, determined as of the applicable valuation date; or

b. a prorated interest in accordance with the time-rule formula of any death and survivor benefits payable to (Member Spouse's) statutory beneficiaries.

The court reserves jurisdiction to issue an order for a separate account in the event that the nonmember wishes to change from a shared-interest to a separate account interest, provided that CalPERS so allows.

[To provide for life insurance in addition to, or instead of, rights created in previous paragraph:]

[Until [member spouse's] retirement, [nonmember spouse] shall remain the irrevocable beneficiary of a life insurance policy on the life of [member spouse] with a death benefit amount of $_____. The premiums on this policy shall be paid [by Husband or by Wife or by the parties equally or _____ percent by Husband and _____ percent by Wife] until _____ (member spouse's) retirement.] (This life insurance shall constitute [nonmember spouse's] sole rights under the shared interest method of distribution, and [she/he] shall have no further right or remedy with regard to the interests of [member spouse's] statutory beneficiaries.)]

Effect of _____ [Nonmember spouse's] Death

[EITHER:]

If [nonmember spouse] dies before the time by which [she/he] would have received some or all of [her/his] interest under CalPERS, and benefits are payable to [member spouse] at the time of [nonmember spouse's] death, [nonmember spouse's] beneficiary shall receive [nonmember spouse's] interest directly from CalPERS. [nonmember spouse] shall designate a beneficiary in the Benefit Division Order to be prepared. If [nonmember spouse's] beneficiary is not living, then [nonmember spouse's] share shall be paid to [designate beneficiary] in accordance with Section 21493 of the Government Code.

[OR:]

For valuable consideration, namely, [specify, e.g., in return for payment of the reduction of optional settlement interest of the nonmember], [nonmember spouse] shall designate [member spouse] as [her/his] beneficiary if [nonmember spouse] is not living at the time when benefits are payable on [her/his] behalf.

[Use to address partial retirement.]

Partial Retirement

The court reserves jurisdiction over any issues that may arise in the event that [member spouse] elects partial retirement for service under Government Code section 21117 et seq.

[Use to provide for a temporary annuity.]

Temporary Annuity

The court reserves jurisdiction over whether [member spouse] may choose a temporary annuity, in that the decision may have an impact on payment of [nonmember spouse's] interest and the amount of the option settlement available. If [member spouse] wishes to elect a certain temporary annuity, at least nine months before [his/her] anticipated retirement date, [he/she] shall request from CalPERS an estimate of the retirement allowance payable, including the temporary annuity, and the effect of the temporary annuity on that option settlement ordered for the benefit of [nonmember spouse].

Suspension of Benefits on Reemployment

[Use if member will take over payments to nonmember.]

The parties understand that CalPERS includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced, [member spouse] returns to work in covered employment. If a suspension of benefits should occur, [member spouse] shall make the same payments to [nonmember spouse] that would have been made by CalPERS but for the suspension. The payments shall be made from [member spouse] separate property funds, and shall continue until such time as payments from CalPERS are resumed. They shall be made on a net after-tax basis, and shall not be deductible by [member spouse], nor income to [nonmember spouse]. They shall have no effect on the amount payable to [nonmember spouse] once [member spouse] returns to employment, except for the inclusion of cost-of-living increases. Further, they shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing.

[OR: Use if nonparticipant will accept suspension of benefits.]

The parties understand that CalPERS includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced, [member spouse] returns to work in covered employment. If a suspension of benefits should occur, the benefit payments to both parties shall be suspended. The community interest in CalPERS shall then be recalculated as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual, including the effect on any optional settlement for survivor benefits. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to make any orders necessary to give effect to this paragraph. If [member spouse] should die during the period of suspension, to the extent that the benefits are recalculated under this Paragraph, that recalculation shall identify [nonmember spouse's] prorated interest in any death and survivor benefits payable under the terms of CalPERS.

[OR: Use if nonmember will be given option to accept payments or suspension of benefits.]

The parties understand that CalPERS includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced, [member spouse] returns to work in covered employment. If a suspension of benefits should occur, [member spouse] shall, at the election of [nonmember spouse], make the same payments to [nonmember spouse] that would have been made by CalPERS but for the suspension. This election must be made, if at all, by [nonmember spouse] within _____ days of notice of the suspension. If elected, the payments shall be made from [member spouse's] separate property funds, and shall continue until such time as payments from CalPERS are resumed. The payments shall be made on a net after-tax basis, and shall not be deductible by [member spouse], nor income to [nonmember spouse]. They shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing. If continuation of payments is elected, [nonmember spouse] shall not share in the value of any benefits accrued under CalPERS by reason of [member spouse's] return to covered service. If this election is not made and the benefit payments to both parties are suspended, then the community share under CalPERS shall be recalculated as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual. If [nonmember spouse] should die during the period of suspension, [nonmember spouse's] prorated share of any death or survivor benefits shall be recalculated under this paragraph. The court shall reserve jurisdiction over any death or survivor benefits that may become payable on behalf of [nonmember spouse] in the event of the death of either party.

[If [member spouse] begins employment before CalPERS has approved reinstatement from retirement, [member spouse] shall indemnify [nonmember spouse] from any loss of basic or special benefits in effect at the time of [his/her] retirement, and shall hold [nonmember spouse] harmless from the reimbursement to CalPERS for (1) any retirement allowance received by [nonmember spouse] during the period of [member spouse's] unapproved employment, (2) employee contributions that would have been submitted during the period of "unlawful" employment, plus interest; and (3) any required reimbursement to CalPERS for administrative expenses incurred in handling the situation.]

[Use if statutory optional settlement will be selected.]

Optional Settlement for Beneficiary at Retirement

In order to ensure that a benefit is payable to [nonmember spouse] in the event of the death of [member spouse] after retirement, at the time of [his/her] retirement, [member spouse] shall designate [nonmember spouse] as beneficiary for an Optional Settlement [number].

The reduction to [member spouse] benefit in order to provide an Optional Settlement for [nonmember spouse] shall be charged against the benefit to be received by [Husband or Wife or both parties].

[Include if Optional Settlement 4 is selected.]

In electing Option 4, it is intended that [nonmember spouse's] community property share of the benefit shall be payable under this option as a level benefit for [her/his] life.

[Include if the member spouse is already retired.]

The optional form of settlement chosen for [nonmember spouse] at the time of [her/his] retirement shall remain payable to [nonmember spouse] notwithstanding the parties' [dissolution of marriage/legal separation].

[If no optional settlement will be selected, EITHER:]

At the death of [member spouse], since [nonmember spouse] will not be entitled to a monthly allowance in [her/his] own right, [nonmember spouse] will be entitled to receive from CalPERS [her/his] percent of interest in any lump sum death benefit, any remaining member contribution, or any monthly allowance otherwise payable, including any survivor continuance, for as long as the benefit is payable to another beneficiary or survivor of [member spouse].

[OR:]

[Nonmember spouse] waives any interest in the survivor benefits payable under the Plan.

[Use to address redeposit of contributions for service credit.]

Right to Redeposit of Contributions

[IF parties are unsure whether there are service credits available for reinstatement based on nonmember's right to redeposit contributions previously refunded during marriage, include following two paragraphs:]

[Member spouse] shall initiate an inquiry to CalPERS with respect to the available redeposit rights related to the marital period, and the cost, and shall provide [nonmember spouse] with that information.

The court reserves jurisdiction to assign to each party the right to redeposit all or a portion of [member spouse's] refunded accumulated retirement contributions when that information becomes known to the parties, and in accordance with each party's respective ability to comply with the cost of redeposit.

[IF parties have necessary information and Nonmember will waive redeposit rights, include:]

[Nonmember spouse] waives the opportunity to increase [her/his] share of [member spouse's] available service credit and will not share in the redeposit of refunded accumulated contributions. Any service credit restored with separate property funds of [member spouse] shall be [his/her] separate property.

[IF parties have necessary information and Nonmember will exercise redeposit rights, include:]

[Nonmember spouse] will receive [part or percent] of the service credit available for reinstatement based on [her/his] reimbursement to [member spouse] for [member spouse's] redeposit of accumulated retirement contributions previously refunded during the marital period. Any portion of [nonmember spouse's] share of accumulated retirement contributions previously refunded during the marriage not reimbursed to [member spouse] by [nonmember spouse] shall be deemed the exclusive property of [member spouse].

[To address redeposits for nonmarital period made by member with community property:]

[Member spouse] shall reimburse the community for any community property funds (plus interest) used to redeposit contributions that relate to service credits attributable to [member spouse's] employment during any period other than during marriage.

[To address purchase of additional service credits:]

Right to Purchase Additional Service Credits

[IF parties are unsure whether there are service credits available for purchase attributable to covered employment during marital period, include following two paragraphs:]

[Member spouse] shall initiate an inquiry to CalPERS with respect to any additional service credits available for purchase attributable to [member spouse's] employment during the marital period, and the cost, and shall provide [nonmember spouse] with that information.

The court shall reserve jurisdiction to assign to each party the right to purchase all or a portion of the additional service credit available due to [member spouse's] performance of service during marriage, and in accordance with each party's respective ability to comply with the cost of purchase.

[IF parties have the necessary information and Nonmember will waive purchase rights, include:]

[Nonmember spouse] waives the right to purchase additional service credits that are available on account of [member spouse's] employment during the marital period. Any additional service credits purchased with separate-property funds of [member spouse] shall be [his/her] separate property.

[IF parties have necessary information and nonmember will exercise additional credit purchase rights, include:]

[Nonmember spouse] shall receive [Part or percent] of the service credit available for purchase due to [member spouse's] performance of eligible services during the marital period. [[nonmember spouse] will present evidence of the ability to purchase additional service credit before the entry of any order assigning this right to [her/him] so that only that portion that [nonmember spouse] elects to fund will be assigned to [her/him].] Any right to purchase additional service credit not explicitly awarded to [nonmember spouse] shall be deemed the exclusive property of [member spouse].

[Include if Member has Second Tier Service.]

Upgrade of Second Tier Credits

Each party shall have equal opportunity to upgrade that party's share of the community service from Second Tier to First Tier, if the member is eligible for that election. The court reserves jurisdiction to adjust the community interest of the parties in the event that the member elects to upgrade service credits from Second Tier to First Tier and that upgrade is the product of contributions made disproportionately by the parties with respect to upgrading the service credits accumulated during the marital years.

[End of provisions limited to shared interest method of division.]

§ 122.241 State Teachers Retirement System (CalSTRS)

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is for use to divide a community interest in benefits under the California State Teachers' Retirement System (CalSTRS). CalSTRS is administered by the CalSTRS Teachers' Retirement Board under The Teachers' Retirement Law [Educ. Code § 22000].

On written or voicemail request, CalSTRS will provide booklets, models, and Instructions for Completion of Domestic Relations Orders. They may also be obtained directly from CalSTRS website (www.CalSTRS.ca.gov). With an authorization signed by the member or a subpoena, CalSTRS will provide information specific to the member's account. The CalSTRS mailing address is P.O. 15275, Sacramento, CA 95851-0275; telephone: 1-800-228-5453; Telecommunications for Hearing Impaired 916-229-3541.

Each member receives an annual retirement statement from CalSTRS. Information about salary, accrued sick leave, unused educational leave, and vacation pay may be obtained from the employing public entity. The Practice Tip in § 122.240[1][f], above, also should be referred to in this case. For discussion of other retirement plans as the source of funds for the redeposit of contributions for service credit, see [j], below.

[b] CalSTRS Plans and Programs

The California State Teachers' Retirement System (CalSTRS) administers a retirement plan consisting of the Defined Benefit Program and the Cash Balance Benefit Program [see Educ. Code § 26000 et seq.]. The Cash Balance Benefit Program is for persons who perform creditable service for less than 50 percent of the full-time equivalent for the position. A merger of these two programs in 1999 established a single retirement plan known as the State Teachers Retirement Plan [Educ. Code § 22001.5].

The Defined Benefit Program is financed by employee and employer contributions of a statutory percent of the member's creditable compensation [see Educ. Code §§ 22901, 22950]. Twenty-five percent of each member's contributions are credited to the member's Defined Benefit Supplement Account [Educ. Code § 22901.5].

The Defined Benefit Program provides a member with an annual allowance, payable in monthly installments on retirement, equal at normal retirement age (60) to 2 percent of final compensation for each year of credited service. If the member retires at less than normal retirement age (i.e., between early retirement age [55] [see Educ. Code § 22128 (early retirement age)] and normal retirement age [60] [see Educ. Code § 22148 (normal retirement age)]], the allowance is reduced [see Educ. Code § 24202(a)(1)].

A member with 30 years of credited service may retire as early as age 50 and receive the same 2 percent of final compensation for each year of credited service [see Educ. Code § 24203; see also Educ. Code §§ 24203.5, 24303.6 (career bonuses for members with 30 or more years of credited service)]. If the member also had accumulated annuity deposit contributions, the member will also receive an annuity that is the actuarial equivalent of the accumulated annuity deposit contributions standing to the credit of the member's account at the time of retirement [Educ. Code § 24202(a)(2)]. Annuity deposit contributions are additional contributions made by a member before July 1, 1972 above those required for credited service, for the purpose of providing additional retirement income [Educ. Code § 22106]. Additionally, a vested member, other than a retired member, may request to purchase up to five years of credit for nonqualified service (that is, for time during which creditable service is not performed) [Educ. Code § 22826].

Legislation effective January 1, 2001, established the Defined Benefit Supplement Program (DBSP), by which members who retire, become disabled, or die under the Defined Benefit Program are entitled to an additional lump sum or annuity [see Educ. Code § 25009 et seq. (Stats. 2000, ch. 74 (AB 1509, amending and renumbering Ed. Code § 25000 et seq.))].

Twenty-five percent of each member's contributions to the Teachers' Retirement Fund--to be allocated to the Defined Benefit Supplement Program with a guaranteed interest rate. Additional contributions credited may include contributions for summer school, overtime, money paid for service in excess of one year of service credit, and other services not counted under the Defined Benefit Program [Educ. Code § 22119.2(b)]. This allocation to the DBSP does not affect the benefit payable under the Defined Benefit Program [see Educ. Code §§ 22905, 22119.2(b)]. The court may order a separated account under the Defined Benefit Supplemental Program, as well as under the Defined Benefit Program [Educ. Code § 22652]. A member's beneficiary designation for benefits payable under the Defined Benefit Program, including a designation made under Educ. Code § 24300, also applies to benefits payable under the Defined Benefit Supplement Program. Be aware when designing the community interest formula, that the benefit payable under DBSP is based on the balance of credits in a member's DBSP account, not on service credits [Educ. Code §§ 25000 et seq., 22122.7, 22166.5, 22901.5 et seq.]. If the member designates multiple annuity beneficiaries under the DBSP, the member must specify the percentage of the annuity payable to each annuity beneficiary on the death of the member. If the member's death occurs before an annuity under the DBSP becomes payable, the final benefit must be an amount equal to the balance of credits in the member's DBSP account on the date of the member's death. Note that Educ. Code § 25021 allows a beneficiary, other than an entity, to elect an annuity [Educ. Code §§ 23300, 25015, 25020].

The Replacement Benefits Program [see Educ. Code § 22164] was established to provide a fund to hold that portion of employer contributions appropriated to pay to members or their beneficiaries that portion of the annual benefit otherwise payable to the member that exceeds the limitations on the dollar amount of annual benefit payable to that member from the Teachers' Retirement Fund under I.R.C. § 415 [see Educ. Code § 24250 et seq.]. Further, no member contributions are paid on any compensation in excess of the annual compensation limitations prescribed by I.R.C. § 401(a)(17) [Educ. Code § 22317.5].

The Board may develop one or more deferred compensation plans under I.R.C. § 457 that an employer may choose to establish and offer to its employees who are members or participants of the Defined Benefit Program or the Cash Balance Program [Educ. Code § 24975]. In addition, CalSTRS offers members of the Defined Benefit Program and the Cash Balance Benefit Program a 403(b) deferred compensation retirement savings plan called the Voluntary Investment Program (VIP), similar to 401(k) plans available to workers in private industry [Educ. Code § 24950].

PRACTICE TIP:

The Defined Benefit Program, Defined Benefit Supplement Program, and Cash Balance account division should be set forth separately in one order addressed to the State Teacher's Retirement System. The 457 and 401(k) plans should be set forth separately in one order addressed to 457 and 401(k) Thrift Plans, State of California Department of Personnel Administration 1800 -15th Street, Sacramento, CA 95814 (telephone: (916) 445 9814). For 403(b) plans counsel will likely need a separate order, as these are usually offered through employers. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[c] Joinder Required

No judgment or court order is binding on CalSTRS until the plan has been joined as a party to the action and has been served with a certified copy of the judgment or court order [Educ. Code § 22656].

[d] Division of Community Interest; Separate Account or Shared Interest

In a dissolution of marriage, the court may make whatever orders are necessary or appropriate to ensure that each party receives his or her full community property share in any benefits under CalSTRS [Fam. Code § 2610(a); see Educ. Code § 22650 et seq.]. The nonmember spouse may receive his or her community interest in one of two ways. First, there is the separate account. If the nonmember agrees, the court may order that the accumulated retirement contributions and service credits attributable to periods of service during marriage be divided into two separate and distinct accounts in the name of the member and nonmember spouses [Educ. Code § 22652(b); Fam. Code § 2610(a)(3)(B)]. A separate account is not available to the nonmember spouse if the member has already retired [see Educ. Code § 22655].

The alternative is the traditional "shared interest" approach, which calculates a fractional interest in the member's final benefit at the time of the member's retirement, usually with an option for a survivor benefit. The Education Code limits the interest of a nonmember spouse to a shared interest in the case of a member who is already retired at the time of dissolution [see Educ. Code § 22655]. CalSTRS also recognizes the right of a nonmember to a shared interest if the member has not already retired. CalSTRS considers that Fam. Code § 2610(a), which requires that each party receive his or her full community property share in any retirement plan, public or private, as authority for the right of the nonmember spouse to elect a shared interest in all cases to provide for the separate account as an additional alternative for parties involved in a dissolution or legal separation action [see Community Property Information Brochure, published by STRS November 1990, discussing effect of amendments to former Civ. Code § 4800.8 (now Fam. Code § 2610)]. STRS states in that brochure: "The recent amendments to the Civil Code did not change previous community property law affecting STRS, but did provide an additional alternative to parties involved in a dissolution or legal separation action." Because of the disadvantages of the separate account [see [e][i], below], it cannot be said that a separate account guarantees that the nonmember will receive his or her full community property interest [see Fam. Code § 2610(a)(3) (separate account cannot be ordered without consent of nonemployee spouse)].

[e] Considerations Under Separate Account

[i] Disadvantages and Advantages

The separate account has features that might have made that approach an excellent choice for all former spouses. For example, if minimum service credit requirements have been met, the separate account method allows a nonmember to commence receipt of a retirement allowance based on the awarded service credits when the nonmember reaches age 55, regardless of the member's actual retirement date or death (although the member's receipt of a disability allowance may cause a delay) [Educ. Code § 22664(a); see Educ. Code §§ 22664(e), 22666 (legislative intent indicates that separate account was established to abolish any remaining application of terminable interest doctrine in California relating to division of public retirement benefits of member in the event of dissolution of marriage or death)].

However, the election of a separate account is rarely advisable. The great disadvantage is that the nonmember's service retirement allowance must be calculated using the member's compensation at the parties' date of separation [Educ. Code § 22664(c)(5)], rather than the member's actual final compensation on retirement [see Educ. Code § 22134].

Nevertheless, there may be times when the separate account is advantageous. For example, if the parties separate when the member is near retirement, the final compensation factor may not be significantly different under the separate account than under the shared interest. Further, the separate account may be advantageous if the member dies before retirement without a designated survivor option [see [f][v], below]. With a separate account, the member's preretirement death has no effect on the rights of the nonmember. In contrast, under the shared interest, there is a preretirement survivor option that may be elected once the member reaches earliest retirement age [see Educ. Code § 24307, discussed at [f][v], below].

But if the member has not reached earliest retirement age, or if no preretirement survivor option has been selected, no preretirement survivor benefit is payable to a former spouse. The only benefits payable would be a court-ordered share of a modest death benefit [see Educ. Code §§ 23300, 23801, 23851, 23880], or a court-ordered "resulting trust" share of any family allowance or survivor allowance, depending on which disability and death benefit coverage was in effect for the member [see Educ. Code §§ 22133, 23800, 23804, 23850; In re Marriage of Carnall (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1010, 265 Cal. Rptr. 271]. If there is no eligible survivor to trigger the family allowance or survivor allowance (a former spouse is not an eligible survivor for these benefits) then the remaining contributions in the member's account will be paid to the Member's beneficiary [see Educ. Code § 23300; see also Member Handbook, Chapter VII: Benefits for Survivors].

PRACTICE TIP:

Notwithstanding that a nonmember has a court order for a shared interest, CalSTRS has a policy that allows a nonmember to obtain an order for a separate account after the death of the member. The nonmember would want a separate account if it were more valuable than a mere share of the employee contributions in the account. Check with CalSTRS before assuming that this policy will be available in the future; and put a provision into your order that acknowledges this policy. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

The member is neither advantaged nor disadvantaged by the nonmember's choice of a separate account because the value of the service credits awarded to the nonmember remains unavailable to the member. Any savings to CalSTRS based on the reduced value of the retirement allowance payable to the nonmember spouse under a separate account remains with CalSTRS and does not inure to the benefit of the member.

[ii] Nonmember's Right to Designate Beneficiary

Under CalSTRS, a nonmember spouse who is awarded a separate account has the right to designate a beneficiary to receive the nonmember's accumulated retirement contributions under the Defined Benefit Program on the death of the nonmember. The nonmember may also designate a payee to receive any accrued allowance under the Defined Benefit Program attributable to the separate account that is unpaid on the death of nonmember, as well as the accumulated Defined Benefit Supplement account balance under the Defined Benefit Supplement Program remaining in the separate account of the nonmember on the date of the nonmember's death [Educ. Code §§ 25022.5, 22660(a); see Educ. Code §§ 23300-23304]. However, the nonmember with a separate account is not permitted to elect an option that would provide an actuarially modified retirement allowance payable throughout the life of the nonmember and a designated option beneficiary [Educ. Code §§ 25011(c), 22660(b); see Educ. Code § 24300; [f][iv], below (options for member and designated beneficiary)).

[f] Considerations Under Shared Interest

[i] Time-Rule Formula

Under the shared interest approach, the community interest is defined as a portion of the member's unmodified service retirement at the time of the member's retirement. The portion is measured by a fraction, the numerator of which is the years of credited service during the marriage to the date of separation; and the denominator of which is the total years of credited service on which the member's final service is based.

The unmodified allowance is the monthly benefit that the member would receive if he or she retires without electing an option for a survivor [see Educ. Code § 24300; [iv], below (survivor options)]. The member's maximum service retirement benefit is the unmodified allowance calculated as the product of years of credited service, age and final compensation.

Under Fam. Code § 2610, the nonmember spouse is entitled to his or her full community property share in any survivor and death benefits. But with respect to the community fraction, even if there will be a survivor option selected for the former spouse, the community share is stated as a percentage of the unmodified allowance to avoid reductions for any options being provided to other beneficiaries. If an option will be provided for the nonmember, separate provisions should be made in the court order as to which party will bear the reduction for the nonmember's option benefit [see [iv], below].

[ii] Enhanced Early Retirement

Certificated or academic employees may receive two years of imputed service credit to encourage early retirement if the governing board of a school district or a community college district or a county office of education by formal action determines that the best interest of the school district or county would be served. The employer pays for the actuarial increase. The imputed service credit is forfeited if the member reinstates employment [see Educ. Code § 22714; see also Educ. Code 22715 (early retirement enhancement for state employees covered by CalSTRS)]. There is also a right to receive partial allowance on early retirement and revert to full allowance for normal retirement age unless the member has applied for a service retirement pending a determination of his or her application for disability [see Educ. Code § 24205; see also Educ. Code § 24201.5 (service retirement pending determination of application for disability)].

Note that under In re Marriage of Lehman, the California Supreme Court held that a nonemployee spouse has a community property interest in any enhancement of retirement benefits attributable to the employee spouse in which the community otherwise has an interest [In re Marriage of Lehman (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 169, 179-180, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 825, 955 P.2d 451] . Under the Lehman analysis, the years of imputed service should not be added to the denominator of the community fraction to benefit the separate property of the member at the expense of the community [In re Marriage of Lehman (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 169, 186-188, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 825, 955 P.2d 451] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Service credits which are gained by redepositing previously refunded contributions or contributions used to purchase eligible service credits would appear in the timerule fraction in the numerator and/or denominator, depending upon whether these service credits were attributed to community or separate property, and further depending on which spouse had funded the contributions to establish the additional service credit. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[iii] Accumulated Unused Leave

[A] Unused Sick Leave

A member is granted credit at service retirement for each day of accumulated and unused leave of absence for illness or injury for which full salary is allowed to which the member was entitled on the member's final day of employment with the employer by which the member was last employed to perform creditable service subject to coverage by the Defined Benefit Program [Educ. Code § 22717(a); see Educ. Code § 22156.1 (present value of unused excess sick leave days)]. The amount of service credit to be granted is determined by dividing the number of days of accumulated and unused leave of absence for illness or injury by the number of days of service the employer requires the member's class of employees to perform in a school year during the member's final year of creditable service subject to coverage by the Defined Benefit Program. The number of days does not include school and legal holidays [Educ. Code § 22717(b); see Educ. Code § 22724 (determination of excess sick leave days at retirement)]. When the member applies for service retirement, the employer must certify to the board, within 30 days following the effective date of the member's service retirement, the number of days of accumulated and unused leave of absence for illness or injury that the member was entitled to on the final day of employment. The board may assess a penalty on delinquent reports [Educ. Code § 22717(c)].

[B] Unused Educational Leave of Absence

An eligible member must receive service credits at retirement for each day of accumulated and unused leave of absence for education for which full salary is allowed. The amount of service credit to be granted is 0.004 years of service for each unused day of educational leave credit [Educ. Code § 22717.5].

PRACTICE TIP:

Information as to the unused days of accumulated sick leave and unused educational leave during the marital period should be sought from the employer, not from the retirement system. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[iv] Retirement Options for Beneficiaries

Before retirement, a member may elect an option that will provide an actuarially modified retirement allowance payable throughout the life of the member and the member's option beneficiary [Educ. Code §§ 24300(a), 24300.1(a)]. Choice of an option will reduce the member's monthly allowance, depending on the option chosen and the age of the beneficiary. CalSTRS offers seven options (Option 2 through 8) as set forth in Educ. Code § 24300, plus four further options set forth in Educ. Code § 24300.1. None of the options provide survivor benefits should the member die before retirement [but see [v], below (preretirement option may be elected at earliest retirement age)]. If the option beneficiary predeceases the member, the member may elect a new option or option beneficiary [Educ. Code § 24306(a)].

Option 8 under Educ. Code § 24300 and the "Compound Option" under Educ. Code § 24300.1 are the only options that have been designed to allow the member to name two or more option beneficiaries [see Educ. Code §§ 24300(a)(7)(A), 24300.1(a)(4)]. These options allow a member to "tailor" a former spouse's survivor option to the exact percentage of that former spouse's time rule share. For example, there is no other option that will allow an odd "23 percent" of the benefit to continue as a level benefit under a survivor option for the nonemployee after the death of the member. By permitting this precise tailoring, these options allow a subsequent spouse or other beneficiary of the member to receive an option independent of the option awarded the former spouse.

Although Option 8 generally requires the designation of multiple beneficiaries [see Educ. Code § 24300(a)(7)(A)] it does permit the designation of a single beneficiary under limited circumstances. If the member is a party to an action for legal separation or dissolution of marriage, and he or she is required by court order to designate a spouse or former spouse as an option beneficiary, the member may designate that person as a sole beneficiary under Option 8. In such a case, the member must specify the option selected for the spouse or former spouse and the percentage of his or her unmodified allowance to be modified under the option, consistent with the court order. The percentage of the member's unmodified allowance that is not modified under the option will remain an unmodified allowance payable to the member [Educ. Code § 24300(a)(7)(C)]. Therefore, if the member has no subsequent spouse or desired second beneficiary, but wishes to use Option 8 to tailor the former spouse's option interest to the time rule apportionment, the marital settlement agreement and accompanying order should direct that the member designate the former spouse as an option beneficiary.

A member's allowance must be reduced to provide funding for the survivor option, which is payable over the lifetime of the beneficiary following the member's death. The amount of the reduction is a function of the member's age and the age of the option beneficiary.

PRACTICE TIP:

When an option will be elected for the nonmember, how is an equal division of the community share of the benefit derived? There are two generally practiced approaches. Assigning the Cost of the Survivor Option: To effect an equal division under the "cost" analysis, the reduction for the former spouse's share of the option should be charged to the former spouse's share of the allowance. Assign the Value of the Benefit: An alternative method to achieve equal division is to assign the actuarial value of the survivor benefit to the nonmember, and offset that value against the nonmember's share of the community portion so that the nonmember takes less than 50 percent of the community share while the member is alive, and enjoys the survivor benefit when the member is no longer alive. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

There may be spousal support or other considerations that would obligate the member to pay a portion or all of the allowance reduction for the option. For example, the former spouse may have agreed to name the member as the former spouse's beneficiary. Actuarial assistance should be sought if measuring the value of such a trade-off.

If a married member has previously selected an option for his or her spouse, the option may be canceled if the marriage is dissolved before the member retires [Educ. Code § 24305(a)]. On notification to the board, the retired member may elect (1) to receive the unmodified retirement allowance from the date of receipt of the notification; or (2) a new joint and survivor option and may designate a new option beneficiary. However, election of a new joint and survivor option or the designation of a new option beneficiary must be consistent with the final decree of dissolution [Educ. Code § 24305(c)]. Therefore, the nonmember's spouse's community interest must be protected in the court order.

If the dissolution occurs after the member retires, and the retired member is receiving an allowance that has been actuarially modified [see Educ. Code §§ 24300, 24300.1], or a joint and survivor annuity [see Educ. Code §§ 25011, 25011.1, 25018, 25018.1], the court must order only one of the following:

- (1) That the retired member maintain the retirement allowance or joint and survivor annuity, or both, without change.
- (2) That the retired member cancel the option that modified the retirement allowance and elect a new joint and survivor option or designate a new beneficiary, or both. In such a case, CalSTRS must pay the nonmember spouse his or her community-property share of the retirement allowance payable to the retired member, the option beneficiary, or both.
- (3) That the retired member cancel the joint and survivor annuity under which the retirement benefit is being paid, and elect a new joint and survivor annuity or designate a new annuity beneficiary or both, based on the actuarial equivalent of the member's canceled annuity. In such a case, CalSTRS will pay the nonmember spouse his or her community-property share of the retirement benefit payable to the retired member, the annuity beneficiary, or both.
- (4) That the retired member take the action specified in both paragraphs (2) and (3).

(5) That the retired member cancel the option that modified the retirement allowance and elect an unmodified retirement allowance. In such a case, CalSTRS will pay the nonmember spouse his or her community-property share of the retired member's retirement allowance.

(6) That the retired member cancel the joint and survivor annuity under which the retirement benefit is being paid, and elect a single life annuity. In such a case, CalSTRS will pay the nonmember spouse his or her community property share of the retirement benefit payable to the retired member.

(7) That the retired member take the action specified in both paragraphs (5) and (6).

[v] Preretirement Options

A member who qualifies to apply for retirement may make a preretirement election of an option [see [iv], above] generally without right of revocation or change after the effective date of retirement [Educ. Code § 24307(a); see Educ. Code §§ 24201, 24203 (qualification for application)]. However, if the member is already retired at the time of dissolution, the member may change his or her original option, unless a court order is in effect directing that option for the former spouse [see Educ. Code §§ 22655(c), 24305].

Without the protection of an option in the preretirement period, the former spouse is not assured of receiving an allowance if the member dies before retirement. The member is not disadvantaged by electing a preretirement option for a spouse or former spouse because the age 55 option reduction factors are more favorable than those at age 60. If the member elects a preretirement option at the member's age 55, the reduction for the option will remain the same, even when the member reelects the same option for the same beneficiary at the member's retirement [see Educ. Code § 24307.5]. In other words, modification of the service retirement allowance under the option elected is based on the ages of the member and the beneficiary designated under the option at the age the original election was made [see Educ. Code § 24307(e)].

A member who makes a preretirement option election for a former spouse may subsequently make a second preretirement option election under the umbrella of the Compound Option under Educ. Code § 24300.1(a)(4). The member's effecting dual option coverage under the Compound Option allows the member to retain the same option and the same option beneficiary as named in the prior preretirement election [Educ. Code § 24307(b)].

If the member dies before retiring, each designated option beneficiary will receive an allowance calculated under the specific option chosen for that person under the Compound Option. The option benefit will be calculated under the assumption that the member retired from service on the date of death [Educ. Code § 24307(c)].

The member may cancel a preretirement option at any time before retirement [Educ. Code § 24309(a)]. If the designated option beneficiary predeceases the member before the member's retirement, the option is automatically canceled [Educ. Code § 24309(b)]. A canceled preretirement option may be subsequently reelected before retirement [Educ. Code § 24310].

A member who has selected Option 8 [see Educ. Code § 24300(a)(7)] or the Compound Option [see Educ. Code § 24300.1(a)(4)] may cancel the designation of an option beneficiary. If the member cancels the designation of an option beneficiary, or an option beneficiary predeceases the member prior to the member's retirement, the member may elect to receive that portion of the retirement allowance without modification for the option or elect one or multiple new or existing option beneficiaries [Educ. Code § 24309(c); see Educ. Code § 24307]. A change or cancellation of the option beneficiary will result in a reduction of the retirement allowance [Educ. Code § 24309(c)].

[vi] Death of Nonmember

Under the principles of California family law, the nonmember's right to designate a beneficiary for his or her community portion of a shared interest is guided by cases indicating this is possible under a resulting trust arrangement. The right to make this designation may well require a court order [see In re Marriage of Powers (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 626, 640-641, 267 Cal. Rptr. 350 ; In re Marriage of Carnall (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1010, 265 Cal. Rptr. 271] .

With regard to a member who has already retired at the time of dissolution, the Teacher's Retirement Law provides that the right of the nonmember spouse to receive his or her community property share of the retirement allowance or retirement benefit or both terminates on the death of the nonmember spouse. However, the nonmember spouse may designate a beneficiary under the Defined Benefit Program and a payee under the Defined Benefit Supplement Program to receive his or her community property share of the retired member's accumulated retirement contributions and accumulated Defined Benefit Supplement account balance if there are any remaining accumulated retirement contributions and any remaining balance of credits in the member's Defined Benefit Supplement account to be paid on the death of the nonmember spouse [Educ. Code § 22655(e)].

[vii] Suspension of Benefits on Reemployment

A retired member may reinstate to covered employment, in which case his or her service retirement allowance is terminated [Educ. Code § 22163; see Educ. Code § 24208 (termination of retirement allowance)]. Termination of the service retirement allowance does not cancel any survivor option elected. The option remains in effect unchanged and is reapplied to the allowance payable on the subsequent service retirement [Educ. Code § 24303; see Educ. Code §§ 24300, 24300.1 (survivor options, discussed at [iv], above)]. Further, any survivor option elected and in effect at the time of reinstatement is considered to be a preretirement election of an option elected as of the effective date of that retirement [Educ. Code § 24302; see Educ. Code § 24307 (preretirement survivor options, discussed at [v], above)].

The parties may wish to determine or reserve the issue of whether, on reinstatement the former spouse's interest, will continue to be paid by the member out of pocket under the principles of Marriage of Gillmore, or whether the former spouse's interest will also be suspended with the expectation that the community fraction will be applied to the new higher benefit which results from the reemployment [see In re Marriage of Gillmore (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 418, 174 Cal. Rptr. 493, 629 P.2d 1 ; see also § 122.220[1][g][i]].

[g] Refund of Contributions

On the termination of a member's employment by any cause other than death, disability, or retirement, the member may elect to be paid his or her accumulated retirement contributions and an amount equal to the balance of credits in his or her Defined Benefit Supplement account [Educ. Code § 23100(a)]. On receiving the refund of contributions, all rights to benefits pertaining to the service credit represented by those contributions are forfeited. Those rights and benefits, based on service performed before the refund, can be restored by redeposit [Educ. Code § 23101; see [h], below].

A nonmember spouse who has elected a separate account has the right to a refund of accumulated retirement contributions in the account under the Defined Benefit Program and the lump-sum payment of an amount equal to the balance of credits in the member's Defined Benefit Supplement account that were awarded to the nonmember [Educ. Code §§ 22652(c)(2), 22661(a)]. If the total service credit in the nonmember's separate account is less than two and one-half years, the refund of contributions is mandatory [Educ. Code § 22661(h)].

By taking a refund under a separate account, the nonmember is deemed to have permanently waived all rights and benefits pertaining to the service credit, accumulated retirement contributions, and the accumulated Defined Benefit Supplement account balance when the refund and lump-sum payment become effective [Educ. Code § 22661(e)]. The election to take a refund of contributions is irrevocable once it is effective [Educ. Code § 22661(f); see Educ. Code § 22661(c) (when refund is effective)]. It is possible to rollover eligible funds by a direct trustee-to-trustee transfer to an

IRA or another qualified plan if applicable [Educ. Code § 22661(d)].

After the refund under a separate account is effective, the nonmember spouse will have no right (1) to elect to redeposit the refunded accumulated retirement contributions from the nonmember's separate account, (2) to redeposit contributions previously refunded to the member based on service during the marriage, or (3) to purchase additional service credit based on service during the marriage [Educ. Code § 22661(g); see Educ. Code §§ 22662, 22663]. If the nonmember withdraws accumulated contributions, the member may elect to buy back the service credits awarded the nonmember by redepositing a sum equal to those contributions [Educ. Code § 23200(b)]. This election may be made any time before the effective date of the member's retirement [Educ. Code § 23202(a)].

[h] Redeposit of Previously Refunded Contributions

If a former member whose accumulated retirement contributions were refunded is rehired and again becomes a member of the Defined Benefit Program, the person may regain forfeited service credits by electing to redeposit those contributions with regular interest from the date of refund to the date of payment. The person may elect to regain some or all of the forfeited service credits by redepositing all or a portion of those contributions [Educ. Code § 23200]. Before 2001, only a redeposit of all previously refunded contributions was possible. For discussion of other retirement plans as possible sources of funding for the redeposit of previously refunded contributions, see [j], below.

An election to redeposit accumulated retirement contributions may be made by a member any time before retirement [Educ. Code § 23202(a)]. If any payment is not received within 120 days of its due date, the election is canceled and any payments that have been made can be returned [Educ. Code § 23202(c)]. If the election is canceled, the member may at any time before the effective date of retirement again elect to redeposit accumulated retirement contributions previously withdrawn or returned [Educ. Code § 23202(d); cf. Educ. Code § 22662(d), discussed below (nonmember loses right to redeposit if election is canceled)].

A nonmember spouse who is awarded a separate account under the Defined Benefit Program, and who has not elected a refund of contributions in that account, may redeposit accumulated retirement contributions previously refunded to the member in accordance with the determination of the court [Educ. Code §§ 22652(c)(3), 22662]. The nonmember spouse may redeposit only those accumulated retirement contributions that were previously refunded to the member and in which the court has determined the nonmember spouse has a community property interest [Educ. Code § 22662(a)].

To redeposit, the nonmember must repay all or a portion of the member's refunded accumulated retirement contributions that were awarded to the nonmember along with regular interest from the date of the refund to the date payment of the redeposit is completed [Educ. Code § 22662(c)]. Note that it is now possible to elect to redeposit only some of the previously refunded contributions. Before 2001, only a redeposit of all previously refunded contributions was possible.

The difficulty is that under current law, the nonmember spouse is under strict deadlines. The nonmember spouse must inform CalSTRS in writing of his or her intent to redeposit within 180 days after the judgment or court order that specifies the redeposit rights of the nonmember spouse is entered. The nonmember spouse's election to redeposit must be made within 30 days after CalSTRS mails an election form and the billing [Educ. Code § 22662(b)]. Redeposit may be made in one sum or in up to 120 monthly installments, not to exceed 10 years, so long as no installment except the final one is less than $25 [Educ. Code §§ 22662(e), 23203(c)]. All payments must have been received before the nonmember's retirement [Educ. Code § 22662(d)].

The member does not have a right to redeposit the share of previously refunded accumulated retirement contributions awarded to the nonmember, whether or not the nonmember spouse elects to redeposit. However, any accumulated retirement contributions previously refunded and not explicitly awarded to the nonmember spouse by the judgment or court order are deemed the exclusive property of the member [Educ. Code § 22662(f)].

PRACTICE TIP:

It would be prudent to find out before the judgment is entered whether the member is eligible for any redeposit so each party has an opportunity to realistically assess whether he or she can afford the redeposit, particularly if retirement is not imminent. Ask CalSTRS to confirm the redeposit opportunities associated with the marital period and the amount of contributions that must be redeposited. At any rate, be careful not to use language such as "equally divide" or "one-half of," which might predetermine the issue, until the parties have had a chance to decide how much each can afford. For potential sources of funding by roll over from other plans, see [j], below. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

PRACTICE TIP:

If a nonmember has elected a separate account, in weighing whether to redeposit contributions for additional service credits, remember the salary component of the allowance calculation is frozen at the date of dissolution of marriage. Weigh the cost of the service credits against the benefit under this restriction. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[i] Purchase of Additional Service Credit

A CalSTRS member may purchase additional service credit for periods when he or she was in the military or was previously excluded from membership, or was performing other specified services not otherwise made creditable [see Educ. Code § 22800 et seq.]. A court order must recognize the right of the nonmember spouse under a separate account to purchase his or her community interest in the additional service credit that the member is eligible to purchase, and must specify the shares of the additional service credit awarded to the member and the nonmember spouse [Educ. Code §§ 22652(c)(4), 22663(a)]. Purchase is not available if the nonmember has elected a refund of contributions from his or her separate account [Educ. Code § 22663(d); see [g], above]. The member has no right to purchase the community interest of the nonmember [Educ. Code § 22663(e)].

Purchase requires depositing the contributions plus interest that would have been in the system had the service credits been awarded when earned [Educ. Code § 22663(c)]. First, there must be a court order awarding the nonmember a portion of the potential service credits related to the marital period. The court order should then be presented to STRS. The nonmember spouse must inform CalSTRS in writing of his or her intent to redeposit within 180 days after the judgment or court order that specifies the purchase rights of the nonmember spouse is entered. The nonmember spouse's election to purchase must be made within 30 days after CalSTRS mails an election form and the billing [Educ. Code § 22663(b)]. Payment may be made in one sum or in up to 120 monthly installments, but no installment except the final one may be less than $25 [Educ. Code § 22663(c)(1)(A)]. For discussion of possible sources of funds from other retirement plans to purchase additional service credit, see [j], below.

PRACTICE TIP:

Be cautious about reserving this issue because an order failing to define the nonmember spouse's entitlement may be treated as a forfeiture. It is not clear whether specifically reserving the issue without stating how much of the potential community service credit purchase is awarded to the former spouse will preserve that right under the statute. If it is necessary to reserve the issue, unless you know that the nonmember spouse has the funds and is willing to purchase one-half of the community's potential credits, do not state that the former spouse is entitled to one-half of any available service credit subject to repurchase. This caution is based on current law, by which any additional service credit eligible for purchase that is not explicitly awarded to the nonmember spouse by the judgment or court order shall be deemed the exclusive property of the member, and at the same time the member loses the right to repurchase any additional service credit awarded the nonmember spouse whether or not the nonmember spouse elects to purchase the additional service credit [Educ. Code § 22663(e)]. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

PRACTICE TIP:

If a nonmember has elected a separate account, in weighing whether to purchase additional service credits, remember the salary component of the allowance calculation is frozen at the date of dissolution of marriage. Weigh the cost of the service credits against the benefit under this restriction. Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[j] Consideration of Rollover Rights

The Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 (EGTRRA) [Pub. L. No. 107-16] enacted federal statutory changes to improve the portability of funds by allowing direct trustee-to-trustee rollovers among different types of retirement plans, as discussed in § 122.240[1][j]. Check with CalSTRS for application of the tax rules to a member or nonmember who rolls over funds from different types of retirement plans to the CalSTRS System [see Stats. 2001, ch. 803 (amending Education Code to authorize rollovers for these purposes)].

[2] FORM

State Teachers Retirement System (CalSTRS)

Disposition of Benefits in CalSTRS

A community property interest exists in [member spouse's] accrued benefits under the CalSTRS Defined Benefit Program (DBP) [and the CalSTRS Defined Benefit Supplement Program (DBSP)] based on [his/her] employment during the marriage for _____. [name of employer]. For privacy considerations, [member spouse's] Member's Identification Number and each party's social security number and date of birth will not be included in this Agreement but will be referenced on the letter transmitting this Agreement to the Plan. _____ [Member spouse's] date of hire for this employment was _____. [Member spouse] is covered under Survivor Benefit and Disability Program [A or B]. CalSTRS employment is not covered employment under FICA for purposes of eligibility for federal Social Security benefits. The date of marriage is _____, and the date of separation is _____.

[Include if the member has other employee benefits plans:]

In addition to the CalSTRS DBP [and DBSP], [member spouse] has participated in the following plans during marriage: [specify other plans].

A claim of interest under Family Code sections 751 and 1100 and Joinder of Plan [has been/will be] filed with respect to each plan in which it has been determined that the community has an interest based on the employment of [member spouse] during marriage. The entitlement of the parties under every plan in which [member spouse] has accrued service credit during the marriage will be committed to orders setting forth the rights and entitlement of each party in each plan as described in this Agreement. The orders will be filed with the court, and served on the plan.

Warranties

[Except as listed above,] Each party warrants to the other that he or she is not covered by or entitled to any benefit under an employee benefit plan that is attributable in any way to service with an employer during the marriage and before the date of separation, nor does he or she have any expectation of becoming so covered. Each further warrants that if he or she becomes covered under an amendment to an existing employee benefit plan, that may provide benefits based partly or wholly on service rendered during marriage and before the date of separation, that party shall immediately notify the other and provide a copy of the plan if reasonably available. The court shall retain jurisdiction to make any further orders as may be necessary to divide the community interest, if any, in these benefits. [Each party further warrants that he or she has provided to the other a complete, current, and accurate disclosure and accounting of the following with respect to each listed plan: (1) if known, the current value of all benefits accrued (not solely employee contributions); (2) "window" elections that have been made or that are currently available; (3) beneficiary designations; (4) any opportunity to purchase service credit or redeposit previously refunded contributions related to the marital period, (5) any community funds used to purchase service credits related to a period of service outside of the marriage, and (6) any elections or waivers of benefits.] Pending the disposition of each of the plans listed above, each party further warrants that he or she shall not make any election that may affect the nature, form, value, or timing of any benefits payable under the plan without express prior written notice to the other party.

Preservation of Right to Omitted Assets

Any plan in which [member spouse] may have accrued service credit during the marriage that is not divided by this Agreement or assigned to either party as part of the overall division of their community property, may be considered a missed asset subject to further division in this matter. [member spouse] shall indemnify [nonmember spouse] against the loss of any benefits in which [nonmember spouse] would have had an interest if benefits are no longer payable directly from the plan.

[Include if the member also participates in other plans under CalSTRS:]

Other CalSTRS Plans and Programs

The parties understand that [member spouse] also participates in the following programs or plans, which shall be addressed in a separate order: [Include all that apply.]

Replacement Benefit Program

Tax Sheltered Annuity

457 Plan

403(b) Plan

Annuity attributable to _____ [member spouse's] accumulated annuity deposit contributions]

They intend that the community interest as defined in this Agreement, will extend to the annuity form of benefit and to any other death benefit that may be payable under that additional plan or program. Separate orders will be prepared for each program or plan as may be required by CalSTRS to effect this intent.

[Include if the member has not already retired:]

_____ [Nonmember Spouse's] Benefit Elections

[Nonmember spouse] has the right to choose either a separate account or a shared interest approach to [nonmember spouse's] benefit interest. The election will be set forth in an order to be presented to CalSTRS. However, the parties understand that under some circumstances, as long as [nonmember spouse] has not commenced receipt of [her/his] benefit interest, CalSTRS may allow the choice of a shared interest or separate account to be reversed. The parties agree that, should CalSTRS allow, [nonmember spouse] may take steps to change the election, and both will cooperate in the entry of an amended court order to that effect, as long as [nonmember spouse's] receipt of a shared account rather than a separate interest, or vice versa, does not have a significant impact on the value of [member spouse's] remaining benefit.

Nothing in this paragraph is intended to act as a guarantee that CalSTRS will accept such a change, and the parties affirm that they have been advised to seek written reassurance from CalSTRS.

[Use the following paragraphs to elect a separate account for the nonmember:]

Establishment of Separate Accounts

The benefit division court order shall state that the accumulated retirement contributions and service credit under the DBP [and an amount equal to the balance of credits in _____ (member spouse's) DBSP account] that are attributable to periods of service from the date of marriage to the date of separation be divided into two separate accounts, in the name of Husband and Wife respectively, in accordance with Family Code Section 2610(a)(3)(B). The parties acknowledge that [nonmember spouse] shall be entitled to all applicable rights permitted under a separate account as set forth in Education Code Section 22652 et seq. Any service credit and accumulated retirement contributions under the DBP [and accumulated DBSP account balance] that are not explicitly awarded by the judgment or court order shall be deemed the exclusive property of [member spouse].

Member Contributions and Service Credit

The parties understand that [member spouse] made contributions to the Defined Benefit Program [and the Defined Benefit Supplement Program] during the marriage, one-half of which will be deposited into [nonmember spouse's] separate account. These contributions will partially fund an allowance payable to [nonmember spouse] provided that these contributions are not withdrawn.

Member Service Credit

The parties further understand that [member spouse] has accumulated service credit during marriage under the Defined Benefit Program, one-half of which shall be attributed to [nonmember spouse's] separate account, including [specify how any early retirement incentive granted to Member will be handled].

[Use if there is insufficient service credit in the separate account for retirement benefits:]

Refund of Contributions

[Nonmember spouse] understands that because the service credit in [nonmember spouse's] separate account is less than two and one-half years, under Education Code Section 22661(h), [nonmember spouse] will receive only a refund of the accumulated retirement contributions in the account.

[Use if there is sufficient service credit in the separate account for retirement benefits:]

[Nonmember spouse] elects to receive a refund of the accumulated retirement contributions under the DBP [and a return of the DBSP account balance] assigned to [her/his] separate account. [Nonmember spouse] understands that by electing to take a cashout or refund of member contributions [and a return of the DBSP account balance], [nonmember spouse] is deemed to have permanently waived all rights and benefits pertaining to the allowance based on service credit when the refund [and lump sum payment under the DBSP] becomes effective. This election is irrevocable after it is effective. Likewise, [nonmember spouse] will have no further right under CalSTRS to do any of the following: (1) elect to redeposit [her/his] share in any previously refunded accumulated retirement contributions under Education Code Section 22662 even if [member spouse] is permitted to redeposit [his/her] portion of previously refunded contributions; (2) purchase any additional service credit available to the community under Education Code Section 22663 after the refund is effective; and (3) redeposit the accumulated DBSP account balance after the lump-sum payment under that Program becomes effective].

[Nonmember spouse] understands that as a result of the election to take a refund of contributions, [nonmember spouse] is providing [member spouse] the opportunity afforded by Education Code Section 23200 to repurchase the service credit in [nonmember spouse's] account.

[If refund of contributions is not elected:]

[Nonmember spouse's] Election of Separate Account

[Nonmember spouse] understands that by electing the separate account method of division, [she/he] is entitled to a retirement allowance payable under the DBP [and the DBSP] when [nonmember spouse] will have reached age 55, regardless of [member spouse's] retirement status, unless [member spouse] is receiving a disability allowance, in which case the timing and amount of [nonmember spouse's] eligibility to retire and benefit amount are governed by the termination of [member spouse's] disability allowance as set forth in Education Code Section 22664(e).

With respect to the DBP allowance payable to [nonmember spouse], even though [nonmember spouse] must wait until [she/he] has reached age 55 to receive an allowance, the allowance payable to [nonmember spouse] will be calculated using [member spouse's] salary at the date of separation. This is so, notwithstanding [member spouse's] actual salary at the time when [nonmember spouse's] allowance becomes payable under the DBP separate account.

[Include to set forth the election of the nonmember of separate account despite salary computation disadvantage:]

Notwithstanding the disadvantage of the salary factors to [nonmember spouse] in the calculation of [her/his] allowance under the DBP as set forth above, [nonmember spouse] elects to receive [her/his] share of [member spouse's] retirement benefit as a separate account in accordance with Family Code Section 2610(a)(3)(b). The parties acknowledge that [nonmember spouse] shall be entitled to all applicable rights permitted under a separate account interest as set forth in Education Code Section 22652.

[Add, if redeposit opportunity exists and is elected.]

[Nonmember spouse] makes the following elections:

[Select as relevant:]

[elects to exercise or waives] the right to redeposit [specify portion, e.g., one-half] of previously refunded contributions that are community property;

[elects to exercise or waives] the right to purchase [specify portion, e.g., one-half] of the service credits available based on community property service;

[Continue, if right to make deposit(s) is elected.]

Nonmember acknowledges that he or she has or will have the funds with which to make these deposits of contributions and will do so in a timely manner pursuant to the deadlines set by CalSTRS.

Nonmember acknowledges that to redeposit previously refunded contributions, the nonmember must repay all or a portion of the member's refunded accumulated retirement contributions that were awarded to the nonmember along with regular interest from the date of the refund to the date payment of the redeposit is completed. The nonmember spouse must inform CalSTRS in writing of his or her intent to redeposit within 180 days after the judgment or court order that specifies the redeposit rights of the nonmember spouse is entered. The nonmember spouse's election to redeposit must be made within 30 days after CalSTRS mails an election form and the billing and must be paid in full before the nonmember's retirement.

Nonmember acknowledges that purchase requires depositing the contributions plus interest that would have been in the system had the service credits been awarded when earned. The nonmember spouse must inform CalSTRS in writing of his or her intent to redeposit within 180 days after the judgment or court order that specifies the purchase rights of the nonmember spouse is entered. The nonmember spouse's election to purchase must be made within 30 days after CalSTRS mails an election form and the billing and all payments must have been received before the nonmember's retirement.

[If there are previously refunded contributions subject to right of redeposit or if member has used community property to redeposit previously refunded contributions attributable to nonmarital period:]

Redeposit of Previously Refunded Contributions

[Nonmember spouse] [elects to exercise/waives] the right to obtain additional service credits attributable to the marital period by redepositing previously refunded accumulated contributions.

[Nonmember spouse] shall have the right to redeposit [Part] of all previously refunded contributions. [Nonmember spouse] acknowledges that [she/he] has or will have the funds with which to make these redeposits of contributions and will do so in a timely manner under the deadlines set by CalSTRS. The parties understand that once [nonmember spouse] has been assigned the right to redeposit, even if [she/he] fails to complete a refund of accumulated contributions, [member spouse] may not reclaim any right to the service credits subject to redeposit.

[Nonmember spouse] acknowledges that to redeposit previously refunded contributions, [she/he] must repay all or a portion of [member spouse's] refunded accumulated retirement contributions that were awarded to [nonmember spouse], along with regular interest from the date of the refund to the date payment the redeposit is completed. [Nonmember spouse] must inform CalSTRS in writing of [her/his] intent to redeposit within 180 days after the judgment or court order that specifies the redeposit rights of [nonmember spouse] is entered. [Nonmember spouse's] election to redeposit must be made within 30 days after CalSTRS mails an election form and the billing and must be paid in full before [ nonmember spouse's] retirement.

[If member made redeposits with community funds for credits attributable to nonmarital period:]

[Member spouse] shall reimburse the community for any community property funds (plus interest) used to redeposit contributions that relate to service credit attributable to [member spouse's] employment during any period other than during marriage.

[If there are service credits available for purchase attributable to employment during marital period:]

Right to Purchase Additional Service Credits

[Nonmember spouse] [elects to exercise/waives] the right to purchase additional service credits available attributable to the marital period.

[IF right to purchase is exercised:]

[Nonmember spouse] shall have the right to purchase [part or percent] of all service credits available for purchase. [Nonmember spouse] acknowledges that purchase requires depositing the contributions plus interest that would have been in the system had the service credits been awarded when earned. [Nonmember spouse] must inform CalSTRS in writing of [her/his] intent to purchase within 180 days after the judgment or court order that specifies [her/his] purchase rights is entered. [Nonmember spouse's] election to purchase must be made within 30 days after CalSTRS mails an election form and the billing, and all payments must have been received before [nonmember spouse's] retirement.

Death of Either Party

[Nonmember spouse] acknowledges that under the separate account method of division, [she/he] will have no right to elect to modify a retirement allowance in order to provide a survivor option under the DBP [or to elect a joint and survivor annuity under the DBSP]. However, election of a separate account will allow [nonmember spouse] to designate a beneficiary to receive any accumulated retirement contributions remaining in [her/his] account or accrued unpaid allowance [and to designate a payee to receive the accumulated DBSP account balance remaining in (her/his) separate account or any accrued benefit payable to (her/him) under the DBSP] on the date of [her/his] death.

The parties acknowledge that the death of [member spouse] will have no effect on [nonmember spouse's] rights and interest under the separate account.

[END of provisions for separate account.] [Use the following paragraphs to elect a shared interest for the nonmember instead of a separate account:]

Election of Shared Interest

[Nonmember spouse] elects to receive [her/his] interest in [member spouse's] DBP allowance [and the DBSP annuity] as a shared interest as authorized by Family Code Section 2610(a)(1) and (2) and by Education Code Section 22651. The community interest in the DBP allowance [and DBSP annuity] shall be the accrued benefit attributable to the service credit and contributions earned during marriage.

The community interest shall be the fraction whose numerator is [member spouse's] credited service in CalSTRS from the date of marriage to the date of separation and whose denominator is [member spouse's] total credited service in the system. [Nonmember spouse's] share will be _____ percent of the community interest in [member spouse's] retirement benefits computed at the time of [member spouse's] actual retirement. Under this shared-interest method, no benefits will be payable by CalSTRS to [nonmember spouse] before [member spouse's] retirement or death.

[Include if there is an early retirement enhancement:]

Additional Service Imputed to Enhance Early Retirement

[EITHER, if Nonmember is to share in early retirement enhancement:]

[Nonmember spouse] shall share in the benefit improvement provided by way of any imputed additional service credit granted to [member spouse] as part of an incentive to promote [his/her] early retirement. Further, any imputed additional years of credited service shall not be included in the denominator as actual years of credited service in making the calculation of the community interest as set forth above.

[OR, if Nonmember is not to share in early retirement enhancement:]

[Nonmember spouse] shall not share in any additional service credit granted to [member spouse] as part of an incentive to promote [his/her] early retirement.

[Include to address accumulated unused sick or educational leave:]

Accumulated Unused Sick Leave

[EITHER:]

The parties understand that [member spouse's] final benefit may include service credits based on unused [sick and/or educational] leave accumulated as of the date of retirement, and that these additional credits will be included in the denominator of the time rule formula. The parties agree that there were _____ hours of unused _____ [sick and/or educational] leave accumulated as of the date of separation attributable to the marital period. Additional service credits based on the marital unused [sick and/or educational] leave will be included in the numerator of the time-rule formula when the order is prepared. However, the unused [sick and/or educational] leave credits in the numerator shall not exceed those included in the denominator of the formula.

[OR:]

Neither the numerator nor the denominator of the time-rule formula will include any service credit related to accumulated unused _____ [sick and/or educational] leave. Instead, the community percent that otherwise applies to _____ [member spouse's] benefits in general will apply to any increase in the final benefit due to accumulated unused _____ [sick and/or educational] leave at the time of retirement.

[OR:]

The denominator but not the numerator of the time-rule formula shall include any service credit related to accumulated unused _____ [sick and/or educational] leave that may be available to _____ [member spouse] at _____ [his or her] retirement.

[Include to address rights under Marriage of Gillmore:]

Gillmore Rights

_____ [Nonmember spouse] _____ [reserves or waives] the right to petition the court under In re Marriage of Gillmore (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 418 for benefits to be paid directly by _____ [member spouse] if _____ [he or she] does not retire at _____ [his or her] earliest retirement date. However, nothing in this paragraph is intended to predetermine whether the nonmember spouse should be required to elect a separate account rather than precipitate a payment directly from the member under the authority of In re Marriage of Gillmore (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 418. The issue is reserved for the court's determination in the event that it should arise at some future time prior to the member's retirement.

Selection of Option for Survivor Benefits

[Use if the member has already retired, but no survivor option was chosen:]

The parties acknowledge at the time of _____ [member spouse's] retirement, no option under Education Code Section 24300 or 24300.1 providing for benefits to _____ [member spouse's] beneficiary at _____ [his or her] death was selected. Consequently, _____ [nonmember spouse] will be awarded a shared interest in _____ [member spouse's] DBP allowance, but can have no survivor option elected. However, _____ [nonmember spouse] will retain an interest in any survivor continuance payable on behalf of any eligible survivor of _____ [member spouse].

[If the member has already retired, and a survivor option was chosen,
EITHER:]

The parties acknowledge at the time of _____ [member spouse's] retirement, _____ [specify statutory option] under _____ [Education Code Section 24300 or Education Code Section 24300.1], providing for benefits to _____ [name or names of option beneficiary or beneficiaries] as _____ [member spouse's] designated _____ [beneficiary or beneficiaries] at _____ [his or her] death, was selected. This survivor option shall remain in place, without change but the reduction to provide the survivor option will be charged solely to the nonmember's benefit share.

[OR:]

The parties acknowledge at the time of _____ [member spouse's] retirement, _____ [specify statutory option] under _____ [Education Code Section 24300 or Education Code Section 24300.1], providing for benefits to _____ [name or names of option beneficiary or beneficiaries] as _____ [member spouse's] designated _____ [beneficiary or beneficiaries] at _____ [his or her] death, was selected. _____ [Member spouse] will cancel this survivor option and select an unmodified retirement allowance. CalSTRS shall pay _____ [nonmember spouse] _____ [her or his] share, but only until the death of _____ [member spouse].

[OR:]

The parties acknowledge at the time of _____ [member spouse's] retirement, _____ [specify statutory option] under _____ [Education Code Section 24300 or Education Code Section 24300.1], providing for benefits to _____ [name or names of option beneficiary or beneficiaries] as _____ [member spouse's] designated _____ [beneficiary or beneficiaries] at _____ [his or her] death, was selected. _____ [Member spouse] will cancel this survivor option and select a new option as shall be subsequently agreed to by the parties.

[OR:]

The parties acknowledge at the time of _____ [member spouse's] retirement, _____ [specify statutory option] under _____ [Education Code Section 24300 or Education Code Section 24300.1], providing for benefits to _____ [name or names of option beneficiary or beneficiaries] as _____ [member spouse's] designated _____ [beneficiary or beneficiaries] at _____ [his or her] death, was selected. _____ [Member spouse] will cancel this survivor option and beneficiary designation. _____ [Member spouse] may choose any survivor option provided that _____ [nonmember spouse] is entitled to receive an amount after _____ [member spouse's] death equal to the full community property interest in the Option 3 allowance.

[OR:]

The parties acknowledge at the time of _____ [member spouse's] retirement, _____ [specify statutory option] under _____ [Education Code Section 24300 or Education Code Section 24300.1], providing for benefits to _____ [name or names of option beneficiary or beneficiaries] as _____ [member spouse's] designated _____ [beneficiary or beneficiaries] at _____ [his or her] death, was selected. _____ [Member spouse] will cancel this survivor option and shall select _____ [specify statutory option] and name _____ [name or names of new beneficiary or beneficiaries] as the option _____ [beneficiary or beneficiaries].

The reduction to _____ [member spouse's] benefit in order to provide a survivor option for _____ [nonmember spouse] shall be charged against the benefit to be received by _____ [Husband or Wife or both parties].

[Use to provide for a survivor option if the member has not yet retired:]

In order to ensure that a survivor benefit is payable to _____ [nonmember spouse] at the death of _____ [member spouse], _____ [member spouse] will elect Option 8 under Education Code Section 24300 and name _____ [nonmember spouse] as irrevocable beneficiary. This election shall be made at the time when _____ [member spouse] reaches _____ [his or her] earliest retirement age and then again at the time of _____ [his or her] actual retirement. _____ [Member spouse] may choose any survivor option under Option 8, subject to the following conditions:

- a. _____ [nonmember spouse] shall be entitled to receive an amount after _____ [member spouse's] death equal to the nonmember's community property interest in the Option 2 allowance;
- b. _____ [nonmember spouse] or _____ [her or his] named beneficiary, shall be entitled to receive an amount during _____ [member spouse's] lifetime equal to one-half of the community property interest in the member's unmodified allowance.

The reduction to _____ [member spouse's] benefit in order to provide a survivor option for _____ [nonmember spouse] shall be charged against the benefit to be received by _____ [Member or Nonmember or both parties].

If there is only one beneficiary and _____ [member spouse] fails to select a survivor option, _____ [member spouse] will be deemed to have elected Option Number 2 under Option 8 and to have named _____ [nonmember spouse] as irrevocable beneficiary for the nonmember's community property interest in the Option 2 allowance.

If there are two or more option beneficiaries, and _____ [member spouse] fails to select a survivor option, _____ [member spouse] will be deemed to have elected Optional Settlement number 2 under Option 8 for _____ [nonmember spouse's] share of the community interest in that Option. In this manner, _____ [nonmember spouse] will receive the actuarial equivalent of _____ [member spouse's] share for _____ [her or his] lifetime, regardless of whether _____ [member spouse] predeceases _____ [nonmember spouse].

The parties are free to make any other arrangement that may be permitted by the plan.

[Use to waive the survivor option if the member is not yet retired:]

_____ [Nonmember spouse] waives any interest in the survivor benefits payable under CalSTRS [for the following reason: _____ (specify)].

Death of _____ [Member Spouse] Before Earliest Retirement Age

_____ [Nonmember spouse] understands that until _____ [member spouse] reaches _____ [his or her] earliest retirement age and elects a survivor option naming _____ [nonmember spouse] as beneficiary, the only benefit payable to _____ [nonmember spouse] on the death of _____ [member spouse] is a share of the return of contributions or a pro rata share of any family allowance or survivor allowance that may become payable to an eligible survivor of _____ [member spouse].

The parties acknowledge that CalSTRS may allow _____ [nonmember spouse] to elect a separate account should _____ [member spouse] die before the election of a preretirement survivor option, even if _____ [nonmember spouse] had previously elected a shared interest.

However, _____ [nonmember spouse] is not limited to relying on this possibility alone as a remedy for lost benefits in the event of the death of _____ [member spouse] during this period.

[To provide life insurance against the possibility that there will be no survivor option for the nonmember, EITHER:]

_____ [Nonmember spouse] shall be named as the irrevocable beneficiary of life insurance on the life of _____ [member spouse] with a death benefit amount of $ _____. All premiums and other costs of the policy shall be paid by [Husband or Wife or the parties equally]. [The policy shall remain in effect at least until _____ (member spouse's) election of a survivor option at (his/her) earliest retirement age.]

[OR:]

[Nonmember spouse] will be permitted to obtain a life insurance policy at [her/his] own expense against the life of [member spouse]. [Member spouse] will cooperate with taking a physical and allowing any testing that may be needed in order to obtain the insurance.

Effect of _____ [Nonmember Spouse's] Death

[EITHER:]

If [nonmember spouse] dies before [she/he] has received all of [her/his] interest under the DBP [and DBSP], [nonmember spouse] may designate a beneficiary to receive [her/his] share of the community interest in [member spouse's] benefit.

[OR:]

[Nonmember spouse] shall designate [member spouse] as [her/his] beneficiary if [nonmember spouse] is not living at the time when benefits are payable on [her/his] behalf [in return for the following consideration: _____ (specify)].

Reservation of Jurisdiction Over Other CalSTRS Programs

The court reserves jurisdiction over any issues that may affect the rights of [nonmember spouse] if [member spouse] elects:

- a. election to receive a lump-sum payment and reduced monthly retirement allowance under Education Code Section 24221.
- b. the workload reduction program, under Education Code Section 22713.
- c. the option to receive partial allowance on early retirement and revert to full allowance for normal retirement age under Education Code Section 24205.

Suspension of Benefits on Reemployment

[Use to continue payments to nonmember:]

The parties understand that CalSTRS includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced, [member spouse] returns to work in covered employment. If a suspension of benefits should occur, [member spouse] shall make the same payments to [nonmember spouse] that would have been made by CalSTRS but for the suspension. The payments shall be made from [member spouse's] separate property funds, and shall continue until such time as payments from CalSTRS are resumed. They shall be made on a net after-tax basis, and shall not be deductible by [member spouse], nor income to [nonmember spouse]. They shall have no effect on the amount payable to [nonmember spouse] once [member spouse] returns to employment, except for the inclusion of cost-of-living increases. Further, they shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing.

[OR: Use to suspend payments to the nonmember also:]

The parties understand that CalSTRS includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced, [member spouse] returns to work in covered employment. If a suspension of benefits should occur, the benefit payments to both parties shall be suspended. The community interest in CalSTRS shall then be recalculated as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual, including the effect on any optional settlement for survivor benefits. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to make any orders necessary to give effect to this paragraph. If [member spouse] should die during the period of suspension, to the extent that the benefits are recalculated under this Paragraph, that recalculation shall identify [nonmember spouse's] prorated interest in any death and survivor benefits payable under the terms of CalSTRS.

[OR: Use to give the nonmember an election:]

The parties understand that CalSTRS includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced, [member spouse] returns to work in covered employment. If a suspension of benefits should occur, [member spouse] shall, at the election of [nonmember spouse], make the same payments to [nonmember spouse] that would have been made by CalSTRS but for the suspension. This election must be made, if at all, by [nonmember spouse] within _____ days of notice of the suspension. If elected, the payments shall be made from [member spouse's] separate property funds, and shall continue until such time as payments from CalSTRS are resumed. The payments shall be made on a net after-tax basis, and shall not be deductible by [member spouse], nor income to [nonmember spouse]. They shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing. If continuation of payments is elected, [nonmember spouse] shall not share in the value of any benefits accrued under CalSTRS by reason of [member spouse's] return to covered service. If this election is not made and the benefit payments to both parties are suspended, then the community share under CalSTRS shall be recalculated as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual. If [nonmember spouse] should die during the period of suspension, [nonmember spouse's] prorated share of any death or survivor benefits shall be recalculated under this paragraph. The court shall reserve jurisdiction over any benefits that may become payable on behalf of [nonmember spouse] in the event of the death of either party.

If [member spouse] begins employment before CalSTRS has approved reinstatement from retirement, [member spouse] shall indemnify [nonmember spouse] from any loss of basic or special benefits in effect at the time of retirement, and shall hold [nonmember spouse] harmless from the reimbursement to CalSTRS for (1) any retirement allowance received by [nonmember spouse] during the period of [member spouse's] unapproved employment, (2) employee contributions that would have been submitted during the period of "unlawful" employment, plus interest; and (3) any required reimbursement to CalSTRS for administrative expenses incurred in handling the situation.

Right to Redeposit Previously Refunded Contributions

[IF parties do not know if there is right to redeposit:]

[Member spouse] shall initiate an inquiry to CalSTRS with respect to the available redeposit rights related to the marital period, and the cost, and shall provide [nonmember spouse] with that information.

The court shall reserve jurisdiction to assign to each party the right to redeposit all or a portion of [member spouse's] refunded accumulated retirement contributions when that information becomes known to the parties, and in accordance with each party's respective ability to comply with the cost of redeposit.

[To waive redeposit:]

[Nonmember spouse] waives the opportunity to increase [her/his] share of Member's available service credit and will not share in the redeposit of refunded accumulated contributions. Any service credit restored with separate property funds of [member spouse] shall be [his/her] separate property.

[OR: Use to provide for redeposit:]

[Nonmember spouse] will receive [part or percent] of the service credit available for reinstatement based on [her/his] reimbursement to [member spouse] for [member spouse's] redeposit of accumulated retirement contributions previously refunded during the marital period. Any portion of [nonmember spouse's] share of accumulated retirement contributions previously refunded during the marriage not reimbursed to [member spouse] by [nonmember spouse] shall be deemed the exclusive property of [member spouse].

[IF member has used community property funds to make previous redeposits:]

[Member spouse] shall reimburse the community for any community property funds (plus interest) used to redeposit contributions that relate to service credit attributable to [member spouse's] employment during any period other than marriage.

[IF there are or may be rights to purchase additional service credits attributable to employment during marital period:]

Right to Purchase Additional Service Credit

[IF parties do not know if there is right to purchase additional credits:]

[Member spouse] shall initiate an inquiry to CalSTRS with respect to any additional service credits available for purchase attributable to [member spouse's] employment during the marital period, and the cost, and shall provide [nonmember spouse] with that information.

The court shall reserve jurisdiction to assign to each party the right purchase all or a portion of the additional service credit available due to [member spouse's] performance of service during marriage, and in accordance with each party's respective ability to comply with the cost of purchase.

[To waive right to purchase additional service credits:]

[Nonmember spouse] waives the right to purchase additional service credits that are available on account of [member spouse's] employment during the marital period. Any additional service credits purchased with separate-property funds of [member spouse] shall be [his/her] separate property.

[To provide for nonmember to purchase additional service credit:]

[Nonmember spouse] shall receive [part or percent] of the service credit available for purchase due to [member spouse's] performance of eligible services during the marital period. [[Nonmember spouse] will present evidence of the ability to purchase additional service credit before the entry of any order assigning this right to [her/him] so that only that portion that [nonmember spouse] elects to fund will be assigned to [her/him].] Any right to purchase additional service credit not explicitly awarded to [nonmember spouse] shall be deemed the exclusive property of [member spouse] under Education Code Section 22663(e).

§ 122.250 Federal Employees Retirement System (FERS) and Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS)

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Forms

The forms in [2] and [3], below, are for use to divide the community interest in federal retirement benefits between the parties. Nearly all federal civilian employees are covered by one of two retirement systems, the Federal Employees Retirement System [FERS; [2], below] and the Civil Service Retirement System [CSRS; [3], below]. CSRS includes most employees who were hired before January 1, 1984 [5 U.S.C. § 8331(1)]. However, the majority of federal employees are now covered by FERS, which applies to employees hired on or after January 1, 1984, as well as some former CSRS employees who elected to transfer to FERS [5 U.S.C. § 8401(11)]. CSRS statutory provisions are found generally at Title 5 United States Code, Section 8331 et seq. FERS statutory provisions are found generally at Title 5 United States Code, Section 8401 et seq. Regulations for both are found at Title 5 Code of Federal Regulations, Parts 831 and 838.

All FERS employees are also covered automatically by Social Security and the federal Thrift Savings Plan [see § 122.251]. CSRS employees are usually not covered by Social Security, but may elect to contribute to the Thrift Savings Plan.

FERS and CSRS are "governmental plans" as defined in Title 29 United States Code, Section 1002(32), and are therefore exempt from the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) [29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.; see sbpt. 2, above]. Accordingly, FERS and CSRS do not use ERISA qualified domestic relations orders (QDROs). A court order for FERS and CSRS benefits is correctly referred to as a "court order acceptable for processing" (COAP) [see 5 C.F.R. § 838.103].

There are numerous distinctions between COAPs and QDROs. One example is that a COAP cannot require that payments to the former spouse commence before the employee actually begins to receive benefits [5 C.F.R. §

838.211(a)(3)]. For additional information, see the publication Handbook for Attorneys on Court-Ordered Retirement, Health Benefits and Life Insurance at the website for the federal Office of Personnel Management (OPM), www.opm.gov/retire/htm/library/other.asp. This book may also be ordered from the U.S. Government Printing Office.

OPM's mailing address for a COAP is: Office of Personnel Management, Retirement & Insurance Group, P.O. Box 17, Washington, D.C. 20044-0017. Further information may be found at Title 5 Code of Federal Regulations, Section 838.221 and Part 838 Subpart A, Appendix A.

[b] Division of Retirement Annuity and Annuity Supplement

The FERS or CSRS "annuity" is the lifetime monthly pension paid to a retired federal employee and is subject to division as community property [5 U.S.C. §§ 8345(j), 8467; see 5 C.F.R. § 838.201 (OPM must comply with state court orders awarding portion of employee annuity to former spouse)]. The terms "self-only," "gross," and "net" annuity have technical meanings under OPM regulations and should be used carefully. In most cases, the marital settlement agreement and Court Order Acceptable for Processing (COAP) should divide the self-only (that is, the unreduced) employee annuity [see [a], above]. The misleading term gross annuity actually means the self-only annuity minus the cost of all survivor annuities, if any. The net annuity is the gross annuity minus the employee's health and life insurance premiums, federal and state income tax withholding, etc. [see 5 C.F.R. § 838.103].

Under FERS, the typical annuity paid to a retired employee is known as a "basic annuity," as distinguished from the "annuity supplement," which some retired employees also receive [see 5 U.S.C. § 8412]. The annuity supplement is a temporary annuity paid, in addition to the basic annuity, to a federal employee who retires before age 62. It terminates at age 62, when the employee becomes eligible for social security [5 U.S.C. § 8421]. It is also subject to division as community property.

[c] Salary and Cost-of-Living Adjustments

Unless the court expressly orders otherwise, an award of a percent, fraction, or amount according to a formula of the employee annuity will automatically be adjusted to provide for increases due to salary adjustments through the date of retirement, as well as postretirement cost-of-living adjustments [5 C.F.R. § 838.622(b)(1); see 5 U.S.C. §§ 8340, 8462]. A court order that awards a specific dollar amount prevents the former spouse from any salary or cost-of-living adjustments, unless the court expressly orders their inclusion [5 C.F.R. § 838.622(b)(2)].

[d] Former Spouse Survivor Annuity

[i] Regular Survivor Annuity

[A] Postretirement Death of Employee

Both FERS and CSRS provide for a reduction in the federal employee's annuity in order to provide for a survivor annuity payable to a former spouse on the postretirement death of the employee [5 U.S.C. §§ 8341(h), 8445; see 5 U.S.C. §§ 8339(j)(2), 8417]. For FERS, the maximum basic former spouse survivor annuity is 50 percent of the unreduced (self-only) annuity of the retired employee [5 U.S.C. § 8442(a)(1); see 5 U.S.C. § 8445(b)(2)]. A supplementary survivor annuity is also paid in addition to the basic survivor annuity until the surviving former spouse reaches age 60 and is presumably eligible for a social security survivor benefit [5 U.S.C. § 8442(f)]. For CSRS, the maximum possible survivor annuity is 55 percent of the unreduced (self-only) annuity of the retired employee [5 U.S.C. § 8341(b)(1); see 5 U.S.C. § 8341(h)(2)(B)].

The former spouse may be awarded all or a portion of the maximum possible survivor annuity. The former spouse survivor annuity may be elected by the employee or provided for in the Court Order Acceptable for Processing (COAP) [5 U.S.C. §§ 8341(h)(1), 8445(a); see 5 C.F.R. § 838.801 et seq.; see also [a], above].

[B] Preretirement Death of Employee

A former spouse survivor annuity may also be available if the employee dies before retiring [5 U.S.C. §§ 8341(h)(1), 8445(a); see 5 U.S.C. §§ 8341(d), 8442(b)]. Under FERS, if the employee dies before retirement but after completing at least ten years of service, the former spouse survivor annuity is 50 percent of the annuity that would have been payable to the employee based on service and earnings up to the date of death [5 U.S.C. § 8442(b)(1)(B)]. A separate lump-sum death benefit is provided if the employee dies after completing at least 18 months of service [see 5 U.S.C. § 8442(b)(1)(A)]. Under CSRS, the former spouse survivor annuity in the case of the preretirement death of the employee is 55 percent of the annuity that would have been payable to the active employee based on service and earnings up to the date of death, provided that the employee completed at least 18 months of service [5 U.S.C. § 8341(d)]. Preretirement survivor benefits must be provided by COAP; they cannot be elected by the employee because elections are made at retirement [see 5 U.S.C. §§ 8339(j)(2), 8417(b)(2)].

Under CSRS, no former spouse survivor annuity is payable to the former spouse of an employee (except for a Member of Congress) who leaves federal employment before retirement age and then dies before applying for an annuity [5 U.S.C. § 8341(h)(1); see 5 U.S.C. § 8331(2) ("Member" refers to members of Congress)]. FERS does provide for an annuity under these circumstances [see 5 U.S.C. § 8445(a) (applicable to employees with at least 10 years of service); see also 5 U.S.C. §§ 8413, 8442(c); [e], below].

[C] Employee Already Retired at Dissolution

On retirement, a married federal employee's annuity will be reduced to provide a survivor annuity for his or her spouse unless the right to the survivor annuity is waived. A waiver can only be made with the consent of the spouse [5 U.S.C. §§ 8339(j)(1), 8416(a)(1); see 5 C.F.R. § 831.611(a)]. If the spouses subsequently divorce, they cannot then provide for a former spouse survivor annuity in an amount that is inconsistent with any joint designation or waiver made at the time of retirement [5 U.S.C. §§ 8341(h)(5), 8445(e); 5 C.F.R. § 831.632(b)(3)(ii)]. This means, for example, that if the nonemployee spouse waived half the survivor annuity while the parties were married, then he or she would be entitled to receive no more than half the survivor annuity following a divorce.

Notwithstanding that the employee may have provided for a survivor annuity for his or her spouse at the time of retirement while the marriage was intact, the reduction is terminated on dissolution of marriage unless a court order provides for a former spouse survivor annuity or the employee makes a timely post-divorce election [see 5 U.S.C. §§ 8339(j)(5)(A)(ii), 8419(b)(1)(B)].

[D] Restrictions on Payment of Survivor Annuities

There are a number of situations in which no survivor annuity can be paid to the nonemployee spouse. The most frequently-applied restriction is that the reduction of the employee's annuity to provide a former spouse survivor annuity terminates when the surviving spouse dies or remarries before reaching age 55 [5 U.S.C. §§ 8339(j)(5)(B), 8341(h)(3)(B)(i), 8445(c)(2)]. However, remarriage before age 55 does not terminate the right to a survivor annuity if the duration of the marriage to the employee was 30 years or more [5 U.S.C. §§ 8341(k)(1), 8445(h)(1)].

Other restrictions include:

1. The nonemployee spouse previously consented to waive the survivor annuity when the employee retired [5 U.S.C. §§ 8341(h)(5), 8445(e)];
2. For CSRS, the marriage terminated before May 7, 1985 [5 C.F.R. § 838.802(a)];
3. For CSRS, the marriage terminated on or after May 7, 1985, but the employee retired before that date without electing a survivor annuity at retirement to benefit that spouse [5 C.F.R. § 838.802(b)].

This last rule may prevent payment of a former spouse survivor annuity to a nonemployee spouse who married the employee after retirement.

Although a former spouse's remarriage before age 55 normally terminates the right to the survivor annuity, this may not be the case if the former spouse remarries the retiree. A retiree who remarries a former spouse under age 55 who is entitled to a survivor annuity is deemed to have elected to continue the reduction to provide a current spouse survivor annuity unless the retiree requests in writing that OPM terminate the reduction [5 C.F.R. § 831.644(d)(3)]. The forms in [2] and [3], below, contain an optional paragraph to avoid this unilateral election.

[E] Importance of Timely Court Order

Counsel should not delay preparation of the COAP if the nonemployee spouse is to receive a survivor annuity. The award of a former spouse survivor annuity will only be honored if it is provided for in the FIRST ORDER dividing the marital property of the retiree and the former spouse [5 C.F.R. § 838.1004(e)(1)]. OPM may not accept an "amended" order relating to a survivor annuity that is entered after the retirement or death of the divorced employee [5 U.S.C. §§ 8341(h)(4), 8445(d); 5 C.F.R. § 838.806]. For example, OPM would typically reject a court order as being amended if it awards a survivor annuity and is entered after the date of entry of a decree of dissolution that approves a property settlement agreement dividing any marital property [see 5 C.F.R. § 838.1004(e)(4) ("first order" defined)]. As a fallback when it is not feasible to obtain a timely court order, counsel may submit to OPM the decree of dissolution or court-approved property settlement itself as a COAP awarding a survivor annuity if it contains sufficiently detailed language.

[F] Cost of Survivor Annuity

The cost for the postretirement survivor annuity is charged through a reduction in the employee annuity beginning at retirement [see 5 U.S.C. §§ 8339(j)(1), (4), 8417, 8419]. The cost of the former spouse survivor annuity may be allocated via the COAP all to one spouse or the other, or divided in any fashion between the two spouses. If the nonemployee spouse is to pay any portion of the cost, that spouse must also be awarded a share of the employee's annuity sufficient to cover the spouse's cost. There is no cost for a preretirement survivor annuity under FERS or CSRS.

[ii] Insurable Interest Survivor Annuity

At the time of retirement, a federal employee may elect an "insurable interest survivor annuity" for a current or former spouse [5 U.S.C. §§ 8339(k)(1), 8420]. However, the nonemployee spouse is not entitled to receive both a regular survivor annuity and an insurable interest annuity [5 C.F.R. § 831.613(c)(5)(i)].

The maximum insurable interest survivor annuity is equal to 55 percent of the employee's annuity after the survivor reduction is applied [5 U.S.C. §§ 8341(c), 8444; cf. [i], above. (maximum regular former spouse survivor annuity is 50 percent of the employee annuity before any reduction for FERS and 55 percent of employee annuity before reduction for CSRS)]. The reduction for the cost of the insurable interest survivor annuity ranges from 10 percent to 40 percent of the employee annuity, depending on how much younger the nonemployee spouse is compared to the employee.

The advantage of the insurable interest survivor annuity for the nonemployee spouse is that it does not terminate on remarriage before age 55.

The disadvantages are numerous and, for that reason, this benefit should be considered only as a last resort for the nonemployee spouse. The drawbacks include [5 C.F.R. § 838.912(c)(2); see 5 U.S.C. §§ 8339(k)(2)(B), 8416(b)(3), (c)(2)]:

1. It must be elected by the employee; OPM will not enforce a court order requiring an insurable interest survivor annuity;
2. It may be elected only at the time of the employee's retirement, not during service or after retirement;
3. The employee making the election must not be retiring on disability and must be in good health; and
4. The employee may cancel the election at will if the employee remarries after retirement and elects a regular survivor annuity for a current spouse.

[iii] Survivor Annuity for Health Insurance Eligibility

A nonemployee spouse may be eligible to continue coverage indefinitely under the Federal Health Employee Benefits Program as a former spouse as long as he or she has the current or future right to receive a portion of the employee's annuity or survivor annuity [5 C.F.R. § 890.803(a)]. A minimum award of a survivor annuity of $1.00 a month is sufficient to meet this requirement, as long as the nonemployee spouse pays the monthly health insurance premiums and does not remarry before age 55 [see generally 5 C.F.R. Pt. 890, sbpt. H].

[e] Refund of Contributions on Termination of Government Employment Before Retirement

An employee who leaves government employment before reaching retirement age may request a lump-sum refund of his or her employee contributions. The employee's receipt of a lump-sum refund extinguishes all annuity rights, including the nonemployee spouse's entitlement to any portion of the employee's annuity or survivor annuity [5 U.S.C. §§ 8342(a), 8424(a)]. However, the employee's right to a refund is subject to any court order that addresses a former spouse's right to a portion of the benefits to be refunded [5 U.S.C. §§ 8342(j)(1)(B), 8424(b)(1)(B)]. The COAP may direct OPM not to pay the employee a refund in contributions in order to preserve the nonemployee spouse's court-awarded entitlement to a portion of an employee annuity or to a former spouse survivor annuity [5 C.F.R. § 838.401(a)(2); see 5 C.F.R. § 838.505]. In the alternative, the COAP may award all or a portion of the refund to the nonemployee spouse should the employee make an application [5 C.F.R. § 838.401(a)(1)]. A COAP may not require the employee to take a refund.

[f] Employee's Receipt of Payments before COAP is Entered

It is possible that the employee spouse may have already retired and commenced receiving annuity payments before a COAP can be entered awarding the nonemployee spouse his or her share. In this case, OPM will honor a COAP requiring the payment of an arrearage to the nonemployee spouse as long as the order applies only to employee's future annuity payments [5 C.F.R. § 838.234].

[g] Death of Nonemployee

If the nonemployee spouse predeceases the employee, the nonemployee spouse's share of the annuity terminates on death and automatically reverts to the employee, unless the COAP directs otherwise. The COAP may provide that the remaining share be paid to the court, to the nonemployee spouse's estate, or to the child or children of the employee [5 C.F.R. § 838.237].

PRACTICE TIP:

A pension actuary should be consulted as to the effect on the actuarial value each party would receive if there is a reversion of the former spouse's share to the employee. There are ways to balance the respective values, including the measure of and allocation of the cost of the survivor annuity.
Commentary by Ann Fallon.

[h] Suspension of Benefits on Reemployment

There are several situations in which the employee's annuity payments will be terminated or suspended on reemployment [see 5 C.F.R. §§ 837.202, 837.203]. Most notably, payments will be terminated if an employee who retired on disability returns to work before age 60 [5 C.F.R. §§ 831.1209(a), 837.202(a), (b)(1)(i), 837.403]. Also payments will be terminated if an involuntarily retired CSRS employee returns to work [5 C.F.R. § 837.202(b)(1)(ii)].

Payments from OPM to a former spouse will be discontinued whenever the employee's annuity payments are suspended or terminated. If annuity payments to the employee are restored, payment to the nonemployee spouse will also resume [5 C.F.R. § 838.232].

This form contains three options for handling suspension of benefits. The first option is for the employee to make payments directly to the nonemployee of the amount that is no longer forthcoming because of the suspension of benefits on reemployment. The second option is for the nonemployee to accept the suspension of benefits. The third option gives the nonemployee the choice of deciding at the time of suspension whether to demand direct payment or accept suspension.

[2] FORM--Federal Employees Retirement System (FERS)Federal Employees Retirement System (FERS) Benefits*Federal Employees Retirement System Benefits

A community property interest exists in [employee spouse's] accumulated benefit under the Federal Employees System (FERS), administered by the United States Office of Personnel Management (OPM) based on [his/her] employment during the marriage for the United States government.

A Court Order Acceptable for Processing (COAP) will be prepared by counsel for [Husband or Wife] setting forth the rights and entitlement of [nonemployee spouse] as set forth in this Agreement.

If the order as entered by the court is not found to be acceptable for processing by OPM, the parties will cooperate in a timely manner in the preparation of a subsequent stipulation and order, as long as that subsequent order does not substantively change the rights and obligations of each party from those in this Agreement. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to amend the COAP as necessary should OPM determine that order is not acceptable.

Annuity Division

[Nonemployee Spouse] shall receive a share, as set forth below, of [employee spouse's] [self-only or gross or net] monthly basic annuity and annuity supplement under FERS directly from OPM.

[Use to provide the nonemployee spouse with a dollar amount:]

[Nonemployee Spouse's] share shall be $_____ per month from [employee spouse's] federal retirement benefits. [Any Cost-of-Living Adjustments (COLA's) that are applied to_____ (employee spouse's) retirement benefits shall also be applied to_____ (nonemployee spouse's) share.]

[OR: Use to provide the nonemployee spouse with a percent according to the time-rule formula:]

That portion of the [self-only or gross or net] annuity and annuity supplement to be awarded to [nonemployee spouse] is one-half of the community share fraction whose numerator is the number of months of creditable federal civilian and military service performed by [employee spouse] during the marriage through the date of separation, and whose denominator is the total number of months of creditable federal civilian and military service performed by [employee spouse]. The date of marriage is _____, and the date of separation is _____.

[OR: Use to provide the nonemployee spouse's share according to another formula:]

That portion of the [self-only or gross or net] annuity and annuity supplement to be awarded [nonemployee spouse] shall be determined according to the following formula: [specify formula].

Survivor Annuity

[Use to provide for a regular survivor annuity if the employee is already retired:]

[Nonemployee Spouse] shall be entitled to receive a FERS survivor annuity and supplemental survivor annuity [in the same amount to which _____ (nonemployee spouse) would have been entitled if the divorce had not occurred or of _____ percent of the maximum possible survivor annuity].

[Use if regular survivor annuity was not elected at retirement and therefore is waived:]

[Nonemployee Spouse] is not entitled to a FERS survivor annuity (including any supplemental survivor annuity) in that [she/he] waived the right to the annuity at the time of [employee spouse's] retirement.

[Use one of the following to provide for a regular survivor annuity if the employee is not yet retired:]

In the event of the death of [employee spouse], whether before or after retirement, [nonemployee spouse] shall be entitled to receive a FERS survivor annuity, and any supplementary survivor annuity or basic employee death benefit that may be payable. [Nonemployee Spouse's] share shall be equal to one-half of the community share fraction (as set forth above) of the maximum possible survivor annuity, and of the supplementary survivor annuity or basic employee death benefit.

[OR]

In the event of the death of [employee spouse], whether before or after retirement, [nonemployee spouse] shall be entitled to receive a FERS survivor annuity in the amount of $_____ per month, [increased or not increased] by any cost-of-living adjustments occurring before the death of [employee spouse].

[OR]

In the event of the death of [employee spouse], whether before or after retirement, [nonemployee spouse] shall be entitled to receive a FERS survivor annuity, and any supplementary survivor annuity or basic employee death benefit that may be payable. The survivor annuity shall be equal to _____ percent of the maximum possible survivor annuity, and of the supplementary survivor annuity or basic employee death benefit.

[OR]

In the event of the death of [employee spouse], whether before or after retirement, [nonemployee spouse] shall be entitled to receive a FERS survivor annuity, and any supplementary survivor annuity or basic employee death benefit that may be payable. The amount payable to [nonemployee spouse] shall be the portion of [employee spouse's] maximum possible survivor annuity, and of the supplementary survivor annuity or basic employee death benefit, computed as follows: [specify formula].

[OR]

In the event of the death of [employee spouse], whether before or after retirement, [nonemployee spouse] shall be entitled to receive a FERS survivor annuity, and any supplementary survivor annuity or basic employee death benefit that may be payable. The amount payable to [nonemployee spouse] shall be the maximum possible survivor annuity, and supplementary survivor annuity or basic employee death benefit under FERS, unless [employee spouse] remarries before retirement. If [employee spouse] remarries before retirement, [nonemployee spouse] shall be entitled to one-half of the community share fraction (as set forth above) of the maximum possible benefits.

[OR]

In the event of the death of [employee spouse], whether before or after retirement, [nonemployee spouse] shall be entitled to receive a FERS survivor annuity, and any supplementary survivor annuity or basic employee death benefit that may be payable. The amount payable to [nonemployee spouse] shall be the maximum possible survivor annuity, and supplementary survivor annuity or basic employee death benefit under FERS, unless [employee spouse] remarries before retirement. If [employee spouse] remarries before retirement, [nonemployee spouse] shall be entitled to the full community share; that is, 100 percent of the community share fraction (as set forth above) of the maximum possible benefits. In consideration for receipt of the maximum possible survivor benefits, or in the alternative, the full community share of the maximum possible survivor annuity, [employee spouse] shall be entitled to receive _____ [nonemployee spouse's] remaining share of the life annuity and annuity supplement, should [nonemployee spouse] predecease [employee spouse].

[Continue with:]

[Employee Spouse] agrees to make whatever elections are required under this Agreement.

[Nonemployee Spouse] shall immediately notify [employee spouse] of any event that causes [her/him] to lose eligibility for the survivor annuity, for example, on [her/his] remarriage before age 55.

[Use to provide for an insurable interest annuity instead of a regular survivor annuity:]

Insurable-Interest Survivor Annuity

At such time as [employee spouse] applies for retirement, [he/she] shall indicate on the application the intention to make an election of an "insurable interest survivor annuity" on behalf of [nonemployee spouse].

The amount of the insurable interest shall be [the maximum 55 percent of the reduced annuity or equal to the entire community interest fraction of the reduced annuity or equal to one-half of the community interest fraction of the reduced annuity].

[Employee Spouse] shall cooperate in a timely manner to provide evidence of good health, and any other requirements for an insurable interest survivor election that OPM may prescribe through regulation or other issuances.

If [employee spouse] fails to qualify for an insurable interest annuity, due to health or otherwise, [he/she] shall maintain [nonemployee spouse] as the beneficiary on $[amount of death benefit] of life insurance if available to [employee spouse] through FERS or otherwise. The cost, if any, of this coverage shall be paid [by Husband or by Wife or by the parties equally or _____ percent by Husband and _____ percent by Wife]. Should [employee spouse] fail to qualify for both the insurable interest annuity and life insurance, the court shall reserve jurisdiction to adjust [nonemployee spouse's] share of the retirement annuity as may be appropriate.

[Use to provide for only a token survivor annuity to retain eligibility for federal health insurance instead of a regular or insurable interest survivor annuity:]

Survivor Annuity Requirement for Health Insurance Eligibility

[Nonemployee Spouse] shall be entitled to a survivor annuity in the amount of $1.00 per month in order to qualify for the Federal Employees Health Insurance for Former Spouses.

[Use to charge nonemployee's share of annuity to pay cost of survivor annuity:]

Cost of the Survivor Annuity

To the extent that [nonemployee spouse's] portion of [employee spouse's] annuity is sufficient to pay the cost associated with providing the former spouse survivor annuity, [nonemployee spouse's] share may be reduced to pay [the entire cost or _____ percent of the cost].

[Include if the employee spouse is not yet retired:]

Order Preventing Payment of Lump Sums

[EITHER;]

The COAP will direct OPM not to pay [employee spouse] a refund of employee contributions as this would extinguish [nonemployee spouse's] right to a portion of an employee annuity and survivor annuity.

[OR;]

The COAP will direct that if [employee spouse] becomes eligible and applies for a refund of employee contributions, [nonemployee spouse] is entitled one-half of the community share fraction of the refund of employee contributions.

Death of _____ [Nonemployee Spouse]

The COAP will direct OPM that if [nonemployee spouse] predeceases [employee spouse], [nonemployee spouse's] share of [employee spouse's] retirement benefits will _____[revert to _____ (employee spouse) or be paid to the court or be paid to _____ (nonemployee spouse's) estate or be paid to _____ (employee spouse's)(child/children)].

[Include if the employee spouse is retired and receiving annuity payments, but has not been making estimated payments to the nonemployee spouse:]

Payment of Arrearage

An arrearage exists because [employee spouse] began receiving retirement benefits effective on _____[date] and has not shared the monthly annuity payments with [nonemployee spouse]. If [employee spouse] has not cured the full arrearage by the time [nonemployee spouse] receives a first annuity payment directly from OPM, either party may request that the court issue a new or revised court order that increases [nonemployee spouse's] entitlement prospectively to cure the arrearage.

[OR: Include if the employee spouse is retired and has been making estimated payments to the nonemployee spouse:]

Estimated Payments

[Employee Spouse] began receiving retirement benefits effective on _____[date] and has paid to [nonemployee spouse] a total of $_____ as [nonemployee spouse's] estimated share of all benefits already received. [Employee Spouse] will continue to pay to [nonemployee spouse] this estimated amount until FERS commences payment to [nonemployee spouse] directly. If the amount that [nonemployee spouse] receives directly from FERS under a COAP differs from the estimated payment, taking into account the tax effects of the arrangement for payment between the parties, the parties will cooperate to cure any overpayment or underpayment of the benefit share, including by modification of the COAP.

Suspension of Benefits on Reemployment

[Use if the employee spouse will take over payments to nonemployee:]

The parties understand that FERS includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced under an involuntary retirement, [employee spouse] returns to work in covered employment or recovers from a disability before age 60. If a suspension of benefits should occur for any reason, [employee spouse] shall make the same payments to [nonemployee spouse] that would have been made by FERS but for the suspension. The payments shall include cost-of-living increases and shall be made from [employee spouse's] separate property funds. The payments shall continue until such time as payments from FERS are resumed. They shall be made on a net after-tax basis, and shall not be deductible by [employee spouse], nor income to [nonemployee spouse]. The payments shall have no effect on the amount payable to [nonemployee spouse] once [employee spouse] retires permanently, except for the inclusion of cost-of-living increases. Further, they shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing.

[OR: Use if the nonemployee spouse will accept suspension of benefits:]

The parties understand that FERS includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced under an involuntary retirement, [employee spouse] returns to work in covered employment or recovers from a disability before age 60. If a suspension of benefits should occur for any reason, the benefit payments to both parties shall be suspended. The community interest in FERS shall then be recalculated as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual, including any supplemental annuity. If [employee spouse] should die during the period of suspension, to the extent that the benefits are recalculated under this paragraph, the recalculation shall identify [nonemployee spouse's] prorated interest in any survivor benefit payable under the terms of FERS. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to make any orders necessary to give effect to this paragraph.

[OR: Use if the nonemployee spouse will be given option to accept payments or suspension of benefits:]

The parties understand that FERS includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced under an involuntary retirement, [employee spouse] returns to work in covered employment or recovers from a disability before age 60. If a suspension of benefits should occur for any reason, [employee spouse] shall, at the election of [nonemployee spouse], make the same payments to [nonemployee spouse] that would have been made by FERS but for the suspension. This election must be made, if at all, by [nonemployee spouse] within _____ days of notice of the suspension. If elected, the payments shall be made from [employee spouse's] separate property funds, and shall continue until such time as payments from FERS are resumed. The payments shall be made on a net after-tax basis, and shall not be deductible by [employee spouse], nor income to [nonemployee spouse]. They shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing. If continuation of payments is elected, [nonemployee spouse] shall not share in the value of any benefits accrued under FERS by reason of [employee spouse's] return to covered service. If this election is not made and the benefit payments to both parties are suspended, then the community share under FERS shall be recalculated as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual, including any supplemental annuity. If [employee spouse] should die during the period of suspension, to the extent that the benefits are recalculated under this paragraph, the recalculation shall identify [nonemployee spouse's] prorated interest in any survivor benefits payable under the terms of FERS. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to make any orders necessary to give effect to this paragraph.

Transmittal of Order to OPM

A certified copy of the final order will be mailed by counsel for [Husband or Wife] to the component of OPM responsible for processing court orders for a determination that the court order will be acceptable as a COAP under Title 5 Code of Federal Regulations, section 838.103. A copy of the transmittal of that certified order will be provided by the sender to each party.

[Use to reserve jurisdiction should the parties remarry each other:]

Remarriage to Each Other

The parties shall ask the court to reserve jurisdiction to amend the COAP as the parties may agree, and as may be permitted by FERS, should the parties remarry each other. In the event of remarriage, [employee spouse] shall not take any unilateral action that will abridge the right of [nonemployee spouse] to survivor benefits under FERS.

[3] FORM--Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS)

Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS) Benefits

The court shall reserve jurisdiction to amend the COAP as necessary should OPM determine that order is not acceptable.

[Employee Spouse] shall take no act that might interfere with [nonemployee spouse's] right to receive [her/his] full community interest in all benefits under CSRS.

Annuity Division

The date of marriage is_____, and the date of separation is_____.

[OR: Use to provide the nonemployee spouse's share according to another formula:]

That portion of the [self-only or gross or net] annuity to be awarded [nonemployee spouse] shall be determined according to the following formula: [specify formula].

after retirement. The survivor annuity shall be the maximum possible survivor annuity under CSRS unless [employee spouse] remarries before retirement. If [employee spouse] remarries before retirement, [nonemployee spouse] shall be entitled to one-half of the community share fraction (as set forth above) of the maximum possible survivor annuity.

[OR]

[Nonemployee Spouse] shall be entitled to receive a CSRS survivor annuity, whether [employee spouse] dies before or after retirement. The survivor annuity shall be the maximum possible survivor annuity under CSRS unless [employee spouse] remarries before retirement. If [employee spouse] remarries before retirement, [nonemployee spouse] shall be entitled to the full community share; that is, 100 percent of the community share fraction (as set forth above) of the maximum possible survivor annuity. In consideration for receipt of the maximum possible survivor annuity, or in the alternative, the full community share of the maximum possible survivor annuity, [employee spouse] shall be entitled to receive [nonemployee spouse's] remaining share of the life annuity, should [nonemployee spouse] predecease [employee spouse].

[Employee Spouse] agrees to make whatever elections are required under this Agreement.

[Nonemployee Spouse] shall immediately notify [employee spouse] of any event that causes [her/him] to lose eligibility for the survivor annuity, for example, on [her/his] remarriage before age 55.

[Use to provide for an insurable interest annuity instead of a regular survivor annuity:]

Insurable-Interest Survivor Annuity

At such time as [employee spouse] applies for retirement, [he/she] shall indicate on the application the intention to make an election of an "insurable interest survivor annuity" on behalf of [nonemployee spouse].

The amount of the insurable interest shall be [the maximum 55 percent of the reduced annuity or equal to the entire community interest fraction of the reduced annuity or equal to one-half of the community interest fraction of the reduced annuity].

[Employee Spouse] shall cooperate in a timely manner to provide evidence of good health, and any other requirements for an insurable interest survivor election that OPM may prescribe through regulation or other issuances.

If [employee spouse] fails to qualify for an insurable interest annuity, due to health or otherwise, [he/she] shall maintain [nonemployee spouse] as the beneficiary on $[amount of death benefit] of life insurance if available to [employee spouse] through CSRS or otherwise. The cost, if any, of this coverage shall be paid [by Husband or by Wife or by the parties equally or _____ percent by Husband and _____ percent by Wife]. Should [employee spouse] fail to qualify for both the insurable interest annuity and life insurance, the court shall reserve jurisdiction to adjust [nonemployee spouse's] share of the retirement annuity as may be appropriate.

[Use to provide for only a token survivor annuity to retain eligibility for federal health insurance instead of a regular or insurable interest survivor annuity:]

Survivor Annuity Requirement for Health Insurance Eligibility

[Nonemployee Spouse] shall be entitled to a survivor annuity in the amount of $1.00 per month in order to qualify for the Federal Employees Health Insurance for Former Spouses.

[Use to charge nonemployee's share of annuity to pay cost of survivor annuity:]

Cost of the Survivor Annuity

To the extent that [nonemployee spouse's] portion of [employee spouse's] annuity is sufficient to pay the cost associated with providing the survivor annuity, [nonemployee spouse's] share may be reduced to pay [the entire cost or _____ percent of the cost].

[Include if the employee spouse is not yet retired:]

Order Preventing Payment of Lump Sums

[EITHER;]

The COAP will direct OPM not to pay [employee spouse] a refund of employee contributions as this would extinguish [nonemployee spouse's] right to a portion of an employee annuity and survivor annuity.

[OR;]

The COAP will direct that if [employee spouse] becomes eligible and applies for a refund of employee contributions, [nonemployee spouse] is entitled one-half of the community share fraction of the refund of employee contributions.

Death of _____ [Nonemployee Spouse]

The COAP will direct OPM that if [nonemployee spouse] predeceases [employee spouse], [nonemployee spouse's] share of [employee spouse's] retirement benefits will _____[revert to _____ (employee spouse) or be paid to the court or be paid to _____ (nonemployee spouse's) estate or be paid to _____ (employee spouse's)(child/children)].

Payment of Arrearage

An arrearage exists because [employee spouse] began receiving retirement benefits effective on _____[date] and has not shared the monthly annuity payments with [nonemployee spouse]. If [ employee spouse] has not cured the full arrearage by the time [nonemployee spouse] receives a first annuity payment directly from OPM, either party may request that the court issue a new or revised court order that increases [nonemployee spouse's] entitlement prospectively to cure the arrearage.

[OR: Include if the employee spouse is retired and has been making estimated payments to the nonemployee spouse:]

Estimated Payments

[Employee Spouse] began receiving retirement benefits effective on _____ [date] and has paid to [nonemployee spouse] a total of $_____ as [nonemployee spouse's] estimated share of all benefits already received. [Employee Spouse] will continue to pay to [nonemployee spouse] this estimated amount until CSRS commences payment to [nonemployee spouse] directly. If the amount that [nonemployee spouse] receives directly from CSRS under a COAP differs from the estimated payment, taking into account the tax effects of the arrangement for payment between the parties, the parties will cooperate to cure any overpayment or underpayment of the benefit share, including by modification of the COAP.

Suspension of Benefits on Reemployment

[Use if the employee spouse will take over payments to nonemployee:]

The parties understand that CSRS includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced under an involuntary retirement, [employee spouse] returns to work in covered employment or recovers from a disability before age 60. If a suspension of benefits should occur for any reason, [employee spouse] shall make the same payments to [nonemployee spouse] that would have been made by CSRS but for the suspension. The payments shall include cost-of-living increases and shall be made from [employee spouse's] separate property funds. The payments shall have no effect on the amount payable to [nonemployee spouse] once [employee spouse] retires permanently, except for the inclusion of cost-of-living increases. Further, they shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing.

[OR: Use if the nonemployee spouse will accept suspension of benefits:]

The parties understand that CSRS includes suspension-of-benefits provisions, which may affect the retirement distributions payable under it if, after retirement and receipt of benefits has commenced under an involuntary retirement, [employee spouse] returns to work in covered employment or recovers from a disability before age 60. If a suspension of benefits should occur for any reason, the benefit payments to both parties shall be suspended. The community interest in CSRS shall then be recalculated as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual, including any supplemental annuity. If [employee spouse] should die during the period of suspension, to the extent that the benefits are recalculated under this paragraph, the recalculation shall identify [nonemployee spouse's] prorated interest in any survivor benefit payable under the terms of CSRS. The court shall reserve jurisdiction to make any orders necessary to give effect to this paragraph.

[OR: Use if the nonemployee spouse will be given option to accept payments or suspension of benefits:]

If a suspension of benefits should occur for any reason, [employee spouse] shall, at the election of [nonemployee spouse], make the same payments to [nonemployee spouse] that would have been made by CSRS but for the suspension. This election must be made, if at all, by [nonemployee spouse] within _____ days of notice of the suspension. If elected, the payments shall be made from [employee spouse's] separate property funds, and shall continue until such time as payments from CSRS are resumed. The payments shall be made on a net after-tax basis, and shall not be deductible by [employee spouse], nor income to [nonemployee spouse]. They shall have no effect on any support obligation otherwise owing. If continuation of payments is elected, [nonemployee spouse] shall not share in the value of any benefits accrued under CSRS by reason of [employee spouse's] return to covered service. If this election is not made and the benefit payments to both parties are suspended, then the community share under CSRS shall be recalculated as necessary to take into account the effect of any additional credited service or benefit accrual, including any supplemental annuity. If [employee spouse] should die during the period of suspension, to the extent that the benefits are recalculated under this paragraph, the recalculation shall identify [nonemployee spouse's] prorated interest in any survivor benefits payable under the terms of CSRS. Transmittal of Order to OPM

A certified copy of the final order will be mailed by counsel for [Husband or Wife] to the component of OPM responsible for processing court orders for a determination that the court order will be acceptable as a COAP under Title 5 Code of Federal Regulations, section 838.103. Remarriage to Each Other

The parties shall ask the court to reserve jurisdiction to amend the COAP as the parties may agree, and as may be permitted by CSRS, should the parties remarry each other. CHAPTER 122 PROVISIONS FOR DIVISION OF EMPLOYEE BENEFITS
D. Federal Employee Benefit Plans

34-122 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 122.251

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: James M. Crawford, Jr., Esq., R. Ann Fallon, Esq., and Anne E. Moss, Esq.

§ 122.251 Thrift Savings Plan (TSP)

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

All Federal Employee Retirement System (FERS) [see § 122.250] employees and many Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS) [see § 122.250] employees have Thrift Savings Plan (TSP) accounts [see 5 U.S.C. § 8351(a)(1)]. The TSP was established under Subchapter III and VII of the Federal Employee Retirement System Act of 1986 [5 U.S.C. §§ 8351, 8401 et seq. (establishing FERS)]. The federal statutes applicable to TSP domestic relations orders are found at Title 5 United States Code Sections 8431 et seq. Regulations are at Title 5 Code of Federal Regulations Part 1600 et seq. The Plan is administered by the Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board.

The TSP is a "governmental plan" as defined in Title 29 United States Code § 1002(32), and is exempt from the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) [29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.]. Accordingly, the ERISA requirements for Qualified Domestic Relations Orders (QDRO's) are not applicable to the TSP, although distributions and payments from the TSP are accorded the same special tax treatment as private sector plans [see 5 U.S.C. § 8440].

The Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board uses the term "Retirement Benefits Court Order" when describing a state court order that divides TSP benefits [see 5 C.F.R. § 1653.1 et seq.]. For further information, see publication "Information About Court Orders" on the Thrift Savings Plan's website at www.tsp.gov. The TSP's website also provides the current address of the TSP record keeper, to which Retirement Benefits Court Orders should be submitted [5 C.F.R. § 1653.3(b)].

[b] Distribution of Community Interest to Nonemployee Spouse

The employee's interest in the TSP is subject to the community property rights of the nonemployee spouse as presented in a Retirement Benefits Court Order [see 5 U.S.C. § 8435(c)]. An award to a former spouse may be for a specified dollar amount, or a stated percentage or fraction [5 C.F.R. § 1653.2(a)(3)(i), (ii)]. A date from which interest will accrue should be given if a dollar amount or percent is selected if earnings are to be included. Earnings on the nonemployee spouse's share will be paid only if the order so states [5 C.F.R. § 1653.4(d)]. A lump sum distribution under a Retirement Benefits Court Order will be paid to the former spouse as soon as practicable following TSP's receipt of an acceptable order [see 5 C.F.R. § 1653.5]. The former spouse may roll over her or his payment to an IRA or other tax deferred retirement plan [5 C.F.R. § 1653.5(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Requiring TSP to make a tracing calculation, which must be done manually, may cause delay in payment to the nonemployee. Alternatively, the parties are advised to make their own calculation in advance. For this purpose, the employee should request the TSP to provide copies of all benefit statements issued since the date of the marriage. Commentary by Anne Moss.

The only deferred distribution method available to a former spouse is in the form of a survivor annuity [see 5 U.S.C. § 8435(d); 5 C.F.R. § 1653.2(a)(3)(iii)]. If the court order explicitly awards a survivor annuity, the Board will purchase an annuity from TSP's annuity vendor for the former spouse; monthly payments will be made at the appropriate time. This manner of distribution is rarely used by divorcing spouses.

If an employee dies with funds in his or her TSP account, the funds are payable in the form of a death benefit to the employee's designated beneficiary [5 C.F.R. §§ 1651.1, 1651.2(a)]. If there is no designated beneficiary, the regulations provide for an order of alternative beneficiaries [see 5 C.F.R. § 1651.2(a)]. A former spouse is given no statutory rights as beneficiary of the preretirement death benefit, and TSP will not honor an order requiring the employee to name the nonemployee spouse as beneficiary [see 5 C.F.R. Pt. 1653 (no provision compelling former spouse to be designated beneficiary of death benefit by court order)]. A former spouse may, however, be made a joint annuitant with the employee, and will receive the employee's annuity payments if she or he survives the employee [5 U.S.C. § 8434(a)(2)(E); 5 C.F.R. § 1650.12(a)(4)].

This chapter contains forms for use in marital settlement agreements and other child support agreements to set forth provisions for the payment of spousal support and child support. The Legal Background contains a brief summary of the major considerations involved in drafting provisions related to support, and a discussion of related tax considerations. The Transaction Guide sets out a checklist of spousal and child support provisions. The Forms part contains a variety of forms for child and spousal support.

In In re Marriage Cases, the California Supreme Court held that differential treatment of opposite-sex and same-sex couples in California's marriage statutes violated the California Constitution's guarantees of privacy, due process, and equal protection [In re Marriage Cases (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 757, 784, 847-856, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 183 P.3d 384] . That holding was superseded by the subsequent adoption of Proposition 8, which amended the California Constitution to provide that only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California [see Cal. Const. art. I, § 7.5 (eff. Nov. 5, 2008)]. The Supreme Court upheld Proposition 8 against a constitutional challenge, but in doing so the Court reaffirmed the continuing validity of same-sex marriages entered into before November 5, 2008, the effective date of Proposition 8 [Strauss v. Horton (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 364, 470-474, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591, 207 P.3d 48 (estimating 18,000 same-sex marriages lawfully entered into before Proposition 8 took effect)]. If a form in this chapter is used in the context of a same-sex marriage lawfully entered into before that date, the language in the form should be modified accordingly. For example, the names of the parties may be used instead of terms like "Husband" and "Wife."

The forms set forth in this chapter are intended to be used in conjunction with the complete marital settlement agreements set forth in Ch. 120, Complete Marital Settlement Agreements . The child support provisions in this chapter may be used in any agreement between parents, such as one resolving a parentage determination under the Uniform Parentage Act [see Fam. Code § 7600 et seq.], or any other proceeding in which child support may be ordered. Forms pertaining to child custody and visitation are set forth in Ch. 124, Provisions for Child Custody and Visitation , and forms regarding filing of income tax returns and payment of income taxes, attorney's fees, and costs are set forth in Ch. 125, Provisions for Payment of Income Taxes, Attorney's Fees, and Costs .

For a detailed discussion of support-related matters, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapters 40- 52 (Matthew Bender).

§ 123.10 General Overview of Support Planning

Support agreements between spouses or unmarried parents are generally permitted [see Fam. Code § 3580], subject to Chapter 3 of Division 9 of the Family Code [Fam. Code § 3580 et seq.]. Support planning must take into account not only the subjective goals of the parties concerning support, but also the extent to which a court may order support if the parties fail to agree on the support issues.

In formulating a plan to provide for spousal or child support by agreement, counsel should initially keep in mind the following (nonstatutory) broad-based, practical considerations:

- The specific legal obligation each party has to support the other party [see Fam. Code § 720] and the parties' children [see Fam. Code §§ 3900-3902] in the absence of an agreement for support [see Ch. 100, Control, Custody, and Support of Minors].
- The probable support order that a court would make in the absence of an agreement, and conditions under which a court would approve a support agreement if it were submitted for approval [see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 41, Child Support Orders, and Ch. 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender)].
- The objective factors that the parties should consider in reaching a support agreement, including, for example:
 - The anticipated or agreed-on living arrangements for each party and the parties' children, during and following a marital dissolution.
 - The actual short-term and long-term needs of each party and of the parties' children, in view of the totality of their circumstances.

- The financial ability of each party to be self-supporting and to support the other party and the parties' children, given the health, educational and employment background, and existing and expected financial resources of each party.
- The goals of each party in paying or receiving support, whether these concern obtaining income tax-related benefits or otherwise.

The forms in this chapter are designed to help implement the parties' support plans, and include provisions for long-term support under a variety of circumstances. Provisions are included for support that varies in amount over time, or are based on the happening of particular contingencies, along with provisions to secure the payment of support, and to provide support in alternative forms, such as by providing life insurance coverage, and by paying medical, educational, or other expenses. Also included are provisions concerning spousal support modification.

Income tax considerations may play a substantial role in structuring support payments [see, e.g., I.R.C. §§ 71, 215], and these should be investigated by counsel before drafting support provisions. In this chapter, tax provisions are set forth in several forms, and the important tax effects of particular provisions are briefly summarized in form comments, as appropriate.

Spousal and child support obligations under a marital settlement agreement generally are not dischargeable in bankruptcy. Specifically, the Bankruptcy Code provides that a "domestic support obligation" is not dischargeable [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5)]. A "domestic support obligation" for bankruptcy purposes includes any debt (whether accruing before or after bankruptcy proceedings are commenced), including interest accruing on that debt, that satisfies all of the following conditions [11 U.S.C. § 101(14A)]:

- The debt is owed to or recoverable by (1) the bankruptcy debtor's spouse, former spouse, or child; (2) the parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative of the bankruptcy debtor's child; or (3) a governmental unit.
- The debt is in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support (including assistance provided by a governmental unit) of the bankruptcy debtor's spouse, former spouse, child, or child's parent, regardless of whether the debt is expressly designated as alimony, maintenance, or support [see Shaver v. Shaver (9th Cir. 1986) 736 F.2d 1314, 1315-1316 (whether obligation imposed by marital settlement agreement is actually "in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support," is to be determined by bankruptcy court based on all circumstances; construing former 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5), which contained substantially similar language to that of current 11 U.S.C. § 101(14A))].
- The debt is established or subject to establishment before or after the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, by reason of a separation agreement, divorce decree, property settlement agreement, court order, or determination made in accordance with nonbankruptcy law by a governmental unit.
- The debt has not been assigned to a nongovernmental entity, unless the assignment was voluntarily made by the bankruptcy debtor's spouse, former spouse, child, or child's parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative for the purpose of collecting the debt.

The Bankruptcy Code includes other provisions designed to ensure that a debtor's domestic support obligations are satisfied [see, e.g., 11 U.S.C. §§ 522(c)(1), (f)(1)(A), 547(c)(7), 1129(a)(14), 1208(c)(10), 1225(a)(7), (b)(2)(A), 1228(a), 1307(c)(11), 1322(a)(4), 1325(a)(8), 1328(a)]. For example, unsecured domestic support obligations are given first priority among unsecured debts [11 U.S.C. § 507(a)(1)].

Even if it does not qualify as a "domestic support obligation," a debt owed to a spouse, former spouse, or child of the bankruptcy debtor will not be dischargeable in bankruptcy if it was incurred in the course of a divorce or separation or in connection with a separation agreement, divorce decree or other order of a court of record, or determination made in accordance with state or territorial law by a governmental unit [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(15)].

§ 123.11 Preliminary Financial Disclosures

In order to plan for support, the parties must have a complete knowledge of each other's financial circumstances. As in the case of issues relating to property, this information may be obtained both through informal means, or if necessary, by formal discovery.

Once family law proceedings have commenced, the parties are subject to special disclosure requirements and must exchange preliminary and final declarations of disclosure, together with a current income and expense declaration, on the required Judicial Council forms [see Fam. Code § 2100 et seq.]. For further discussion, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 92, Petitioning for Dissolution or Legal Separation, Ch. 111, Pretrial Procedures (Matthew Bender)].

§ 123.12 Family Support

Family support, as defined by the Family Code, is a type of support payment made under an agreement between the parties, or an order or judgment, that combines child support and spousal support without designating the amount allocated to each [Fam. Code § 92]. Under the Family Code, including the statewide uniform child support guideline, family support agreements are permitted [see Fam. Code § 3586, 4066, 4074]. However, family support is an income-tax shifting device designed to confer alimony tax treatment under Internal Revenue Code Sections 71 and 215 (deductible to payor; income to payee) for payments that might otherwise be treated as child support. As such, the effectiveness of a family support agreement is not affected by the Family Code, but depends entirely on whether it conforms to the requirements of Internal Revenue statutes, regulations, and other IRS rulings.

For further discussion of the effect of the guideline on family support agreements, see § 123.21[2]. For coverage of alimony tax treatment, see §§ 123.30-123.33.

§ 123.13 Use of Forms in This Chapter

The forms in this chapter are provisions that are designed to be used in a marital settlement agreement or other support agreement. The forms assume that the children of the relationship have been identified by name, birthdate, and gender in an introductory provision of the agreement. Because child support agreements are not limited to marital proceedings, the parties in the child support provisions are generally identified in this chapter as "the father" and "the mother." The designations may be changed to "Husband and Wife" or "Petitioner" and "Respondent" to conform to the general form of the agreement. The designations of "Husband and Wife" are used in the spousal support provisions. For examples of complete marital settlement agreements, see Chapter 120.

There is a mandatory Judicial Council form of Stipulation to Establish or Modify Child Support and Order [see Cal. Judicial Council Form FL-350]. Whether this form must be used in lieu of, or in addition to the child support provisions of a complete marital settlement or other support agreement has not been determined. For discussion as to how to incorporate the child support provisions of this chapter into the Judicial Council form, see § 123.21[3]. For an illustrated version of that form, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 224, Dissolution of Marriage: Child Support, § 224.210 (Matthew Bender).

§ 123.20 Parents' Ability to Contract Regarding Child Support

In general, the parents of minor children, or children with respect to whom there is otherwise a support obligation imposed by statute, may enter into an agreement for the support of those children, subject to court approval [see Fam. Code § 3580; In re Marriage of Bereznak & Heminger (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1062, 1067-1070, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 351 (parties' agreement to submit child-support issues to binding arbitration does not prevent judicial review of merits of arbitrator's award)]. The codification of this rule, Fam. Code § 3580, refers to "husband and wife" rather than "parents." This is almost certainly an oversight on the part of the Law Revision Commission in drafting the Family Code, rather than a rule limiting support agreements to married parents in dissolution proceedings. The structure of the Family Code is designed to effect a single standard of child support law regardless of the marital status of the parents [see, e.g., Fam. Code § 3600]. No other child support statute appears to be limited to married parents.

The parents may also provide for the support of children past the age of majority; such an agreement is binding [Fam. Code § 3587]. They cannot, however, contract away the child's right to support from either parent [see Elkind v. Byck (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 453, 457, 67 Cal. Rptr. 404, 439 P.2d 316], nor can they preclude, on a proper showing, a subsequent modification of child support by the terms of their agreement [see Fam. Code §§ 3585, 3651; In re Marriage of Alter (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 718, 726-730, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 849 (court always has power to modify child support order, upward or downward, regardless of parents' agreement to contrary)]. Furthermore, they cannot obtain court approval for a stipulated amount of support that falls below the amount required under the statewide uniform support guideline, unless they make a prescribed declaration attesting to the propriety of the agreed-on amount [see Fam. Code § 4065, discussed in § 123.21].

As noted above, any agreement the parties make with respect to child support is subject to court approval. Child support provisions of an agreement are deemed to be separate and severable from other provisions of the agreement, and all orders for child support based on the agreement are law-imposed and made under the power of the court to order child support [Fam. Code § 3585]. This means essentially that child support agreements are enforceable by all remedies available to enforce a court order, not just by contract remedies [see Tilghman v. Superior Court (1974) 40 Cal. App.

§ 123.21 Support Agreements Under Statewide Uniform Child Support Guideline

[1] Validity and Amount

The statewide uniform child support guideline sets forth a formula [see Fam. Code § 4055(a)] and standards for the computation of child support based on a variety of factors. Application of the formula results in a presumptively correct amount [Fam. Code § 4057(a)]. Courts may not order less than the presumptively correct amount unless a specific rebuttal factor exists [Fam. Code § 4057], but a stipulation of the parties is one such rebuttal factor [Fam. Code § 4057(b)(1)]. Under the guideline, parents may stipulate to a child support amount, subject to the approval of the court, unless prohibited by applicable federal law [Fam. Code § 4065(a)].

However, the court may not approve an agreement for a support amount that falls below the presumptively correct amount unless the parties declare all of the following [Fam. Code § 4065(a)]:

- (1) They are fully informed of their rights concerning child support;
- (2) The order is being agreed to without coercion or duress;
- (3) The agreement is in the best interests of the children involved;
- (4) The needs of the children will be adequately met by the stipulated amount; and
- (5) The right to support has not been assigned to the county under Welfare and Institutions Code Section 11477, and no public assistance application is pending.

Further, if the local child support agency is providing services pursuant to Fam. Code § 17400, a stipulated agreement of child support is not valid unless the agency has joined in the stipulation by signing it. The agency may not stipulate to a child support order below the guideline amount if the children are receiving assistance under the CalWORKs program, if an application for public assistance is pending, or if the parent receiving support has not consented to the order [Fam. Code § 4065(c)]. For related discussion, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2d ed., Ch. 141, Special Remedies for Enforcement of Support (Matthew Bender).

If the parties to an agreement stipulate to an order below the guideline amount, no change of circumstances need be demonstrated to obtain a modification of the child support order to the applicable guideline level or above [Fam. Code § 4065(d)].

For further discussion of the statewide guideline, including the possible difference in interpretation between "guideline amount" and "formula amount," see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2d ed., Chapter 41, Child Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

[2] Treatment of Family Support

Orders and stipulations otherwise in compliance with the statewide guideline may designate as "family support" an unallocated total sum for support of the spouse and any children without specifically labeling all or any portion as "child support," as long as the amount is adjusted to reflect the effect of additional deductibility [see § 123.12]. The amount of the order must be adjusted to maximize the tax benefits for both parents [Fam. Code § 4066]. However, another statute in the guideline requires the court to state in writing or on the record the amount of support that would have been ordered under the guideline's formula whenever the court is ordering an amount for support that differs from the formula amount under the article [Fam. Code § 4056(a)(1)]. This provision is required by federal law [45 C.F.R. § 302.56(g)].

Compliance with this provision may risk losing alimony tax treatment [see §§ 123.12, 123.52] for family support because such tax treatment is not available with regard to the part of any payment that is fixed as child support by the terms of the divorce or separation instrument [I.R.C. § 71(c)(1); Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1(e); cf. I.R.C. § 71(c)(2) (reduction of amount of family support to be paid based on contingency specified in instrument relating to child will result in that part of payment being treated as child support, as discussed in § 123.33 [3])]. The IRS considers any part of family support that has been identified by the court or agreed to by the parties as actually for the support of children, such as the amount found by the court to be due as child support under the guideline's formula, as nondeductible child support. However, there is no apparent risk of losing alimony tax treatment if the allocation is only suggested and not ordered by the court or agreed to by the parties--as when a court, in the context of ruling on a stipulated support order, has merely posed a possible segregation of amounts between child and spousal support without formally setting these forth in the order [Ambrose (Evelyn R.) v. Commissioner, 71 T.C.M. (CCH) 2429, T.C. Memo. 1996-128 (alimony tax treatment upheld); cf. Simpson v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1999-251 (because court order did not specifically fix portion of undesignated monthly payment as child support, entire amount of such payments were treated as alimony, even though monthly amount was less than what could have been ordered under Pennsylvania child support guideline; federal tax court will not look beyond language of the support order and need not examine underlying state law to construe nature of payments)].

PRACTICE TIP:

To minimize the risk, no findings as to the amount of formula support should be included in an agreement for family support. Counsel may also wish to argue that findings are not required under Fam. Code § 4056 with regard to family support. Fam. Code §§ 4066 and 4074 make it clear that family support is available under the guideline. It may be contended that Section 4056 findings are required only if the total amount of support is less than the formula amount; with regard to family support, the total ordered would exceed the formula amount. Commentary by the Publisher's Editorial Staff.

[3] Use of Judicial Council Stipulation Form

A Judicial Council form of Stipulation to Establish or Modify Child Support and Order [Cal. Judicial Council Form FL-350] has been adopted for mandatory use in child support proceedings. Use of this form appears to be necessary in all proceedings in which the parties stipulate to an amount of child support, including a stipulated modification of a previous order. The form contains preprinted language to declare that the agreement rebuts the presumptively correct amount under the statewide guideline [see [1], above], but has additional checkoff boxes to set forth "other" orders and rebuttal factors. For an illustrated version of that form, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 224, Dissolution of Marriage: Child Support, § 224.210 (Matthew Bender).

However, use of the form does not appear to preclude use of a written agreement concerning child support as an attachment or exhibit to the form. In that case, the terms of the agreement concerning support should probably be separately recited on a page or pages attached to the form with reference to the attachment made in the designated checkoff box for "other" orders. Counsel should consult local rules of practice and procedure to ascertain whether the court requires or prefers a particular method of setting forth the terms of the parties' agreement in relation to this form, particularly if a complete marital settlement agreement has been prepared.

§ 123.22 Related Issues for Agreement

[1] Health Care Coverage

The court must require that health insurance coverage for the supported children be maintained by either or both parents if the insurance is available at no cost or at reasonable cost to the parent [Fam. Code § 3751(a)(2); see Fam. Code § 4006]. If the court determines that health insurance coverage is not available at no cost or at a reasonable cost, the court's order for support must require that health insurance coverage be obtained if it becomes available at no cost or at a reasonable cost [Fam. Code § 3751(b)]. "Health insurance coverage" is broadly defined and includes vision care and dental care coverage, whether a part of existing health insurance coverage or issued as a separate policy or plan [see Fam. Code § 3750(a)]. It also includes all kinds of health care delivery systems, including health maintenance organizations (HMO's) [see Fam. Code § 3750(b)]. Health Insurance coverage is rebuttably presumed to be reasonable in cost if it is employment-related group health insurance or other group health insurance, regardless of the service delivery mechanism [Fam. Code § 3751(a)(2)].

The court's order for support must also require the parent who, at the time of the order or subsequently, provides health insurance coverage for the child seek continuation of coverage for the child after attainment of the limiting age for a dependent child, if the child continues to be dependent on the parent and has a physically or mentally disabling injury, illness, or condition [Fam. Code § 3751(c); see Health & Safety Code § 1373; Ins. Code §§ 10277, 10278].

If the coverage is available and the obligated parent fails or refuses to provide it as ordered, a party or the district attorney can apply to the court for a "health insurance coverage assignment order" [Fam. Code §§ 3760(b), 3761(a)]. For further discussion of the requirements of maintaining health coverage, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 41, Child Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

Assuming that the requisite coverage is available, a provision requiring maintenance of coverage for the benefit of the children for whom support is required should be included in an agreement for child support [see § 123.206]. Note that a checkoff box on the Judicial Council form of Stipulation to Establish or Modify Child Support and Order [Cal. Judicial Council Form FL-350; see § 123.21[3]] provides a place in which to indicate a court order to maintain the insurance. Terms of an agreement could be listed in the box for "other" orders or reference to an attached agreement could possibly be made there. An illustrated version of that form is set forth in California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 224, Dissolution of Marriage: Child Support, § 224.210 (Matthew Bender).

A provision of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) requires employer-provided group health plans to provide benefits in accordance with the applicable requirements of any "qualified medical child support order (QMCSO)" [see 29 U.S.C. § 1169(a)(1)]. A child of a plan participant must be enrolled in the plan as a beneficiary if the order complies with the requirements of ERISA [see 29 U.S.C. § 1169(a)(1)(C), (7)(A)]. For a provision requiring a QMCSO, see § 123.206[2].

[2] Effect of Death of Obligor

A parent's child support obligation that is fixed by a court decree or a property settlement agreement does not cease on the parent's death; it survives as a charge against his or her estate [Taylor v. George (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 552, 556, 212 P.2d 505 ; In re Marriage of O'Connell (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 565, 572, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334] . If there is no support order or agreement, it has been held that the estate of a parent is generally not liable for the support of a minor child, other than for a family allowance [Jacobs v. Gerecht (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 808, 811-813, 86 Cal. Rptr. 217 ; but see Fam. Code § 3952 (if parent chargeable with support of child dies, leaving it chargeable to county or state and parent's estate is sufficient for child's support, county or state may bring civil action for child's support)]. Once there is a child support order, it is doubtful that the parties can provide in the agreement for termination by death of a parent's support obligation unless they make other provisions for the child's support [see Taylor v. George (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 552, 212 P.2d 505] .

However, a parent's post-death support obligation may be discharged in a specified manner, such as by a testamentary provision or through the proceeds of life insurance [Taylor v. George (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 552, 558, 212 P.2d 505 ; Estate of Schumacher (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 146, 150-153, 95 Cal. Rptr. 572 ; see In re Marriage of O'Connell (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 565, 571-572, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334] . The court must find that the provision is sufficient to discharge the support obligation before it can deny recovery for the support against the estate [Stein v. Hubbard (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 603, 605, 102 Cal. Rptr. 303 (will's residual clause did not discharge support obligation because estate was not sufficient)].

For forms regarding life insurance requirements, see § 123.215. For further discussion of the effect of death on support obligations, see Ch. 100, Control, Custody, and Support of Minors .

[3] Stay of Service of Earnings Assignment Order

An earnings assignment order must be issued for all child support orders, including, presumably, orders made according to the parties' agreement or stipulation [see Fam. Code § 5230(a)], but service of the assignment on the obligor's employer may be stayed for good cause, as defined by statute [Fam. Code § 5260], or if the parties agree in writing to an "alternative arrangement" to ensure that support will be paid [Fam. Code § 5260(b)(2)].

An alternative arrangement for staying an earnings assignment order requires a written agreement between the parties that provides for payment of the support obligation as ordered other than through the immediate service of the order. Any agreement between the parties that includes the staying of a service of an earnings assignment must include the concurrence of the local child support agency in any case in which support is ordered to be paid through a county officer designated for that purpose. The execution of an agreement pursuant to this requirement does not preclude a party from thereafter seeking an earnings assignment on violation of the agreement [Fam. Code § 5260(b)(2)].

Note that a checkoff box on the Judicial Council form of Stipulation to Establish or Modify Child Support and Order [Cal. Judicial Council Form FL-350; see § 123.21 [3]] provides preprinted language to agree to stay of the earnings assignment, but appears to require inclusion of the details of the "alternative arrangement" the parties have made for payment.

For forms staying service of the earnings assignment order, see § 123.280. For further discussion, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 141, Special Remedies for Enforcement of Support (Matthew Bender).

[4] Waiver of Security Account

A child support security account may be required in all cases unless expressly waived by the obligee [see Fam. Code § 4560(a), (b)]. Such an account is important security for a obligee whose obligor has an irregular source of income and no employer on whom a wage assignment can be served. The account has less value if the obligor's income can be reached by earnings assignment. A waiver could be set forth as part of an agreement for child support. If the Judicial Council form of Stipulation to Establish or Modify Child Support and Order is used, the waiver might be set forth in the checkoff box marked "other" for orders, or apt reference to an attached agreement containing the waiver might be made there [see § 123.21 [3]]. For forms requiring and waiving a child support security deposit account, see § 123.281. For further discussion, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 141, Special Remedies for Enforcement of Support (Matthew Bender).

§ 123.30 Parties' Ability to Contract Regarding Spousal Support

[1] In General

Spouses may validly enter into agreements regarding spousal support, including a waiver of support [see [2], below], in negotiating the terms of their permanent separation or the dissolution of their marriage [Fam. Code § 3580]. The parties' agreement may be set forth in a marital settlement agreement, in a separation agreement [see § 123.230], in a separate written stipulation filed with the court, or in an oral stipulation made in open court.

An agreement of the parties regarding spousal support is subject to judicial review to determine that it is fair and not tainted by fraud, compulsion, collusion, or undue influence. But if there is no reason for questioning the validity or fairness of the agreement, the court may not withhold its approval [Garrett v. Garrett (1968) 258 Cal. App. 2d 407, 416-417] .

The provisions of an agreement for the support of either party are deemed separate and severable from any provisions relating to property, and an order for support based on the agreement is considered law-imposed and made under the power of the court to order support [Fam. Code § 3590]. This rule means essentially that support agreements are enforceable by all remedies available to enforce a court order, not just contract remedies [see Tilghman v. Superior Court (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 599, 611-612, 115 Cal. Rptr. 195] .

[2] Waivers of Support

One or both parties may waive the right to spousal support in a separation or marital settlement agreement [see Estate of Kalal (1981) 121 Cal. App. 3d 841, 851, 175 Cal. Rptr. 582 ; Cochrum v. Cochrum (1958) 162 Cal. App. 2d 825, 831-832, 328 P.2d 1000 ; see also In re Marriage of Paboojian (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 1434, 1437-1439, 235 Cal. Rptr. 65 (postjudgment oral waiver of support)]. However, such a waiver is subject to particular scrutiny because waiver of a right favored in law is not lightly found [see In re Marriage of Moore (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 22, 27, 169 Cal. Rptr. 619] .

Language constituting a waiver must clearly and explicitly manifest that intention [In re Marriage of Moore (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 22, 28, 169 Cal. Rptr. 619] . Waiver must be a voluntary act, knowingly done with sufficient awareness of the relevant circumstances and likely consequences. Contract formation defenses such as fraud, compulsion, or breach of fiduciary duty, may render the agreement invalid [see In re Marriage of Moore (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 22, 27, 169 Cal. Rptr. 619] . Finally, marital settlement agreements may be set aside if the court finds them inequitable even though not induced through fraud or compulsion [In re Marriage of Moore (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 22, 32, 169 Cal. Rptr. 619] . For a provision waiving spousal support, see § 123.231.

[3] Retention of Jurisdiction

In a marriage of long duration [see Fam. Code § 4336(b)], the court retains jurisdiction over spousal support indefinitely unless the parties agree in writing to the contrary or there is a court order terminating support [Fam. Code § 4336(a)]. This rule means that if support has been ordered only for a limited term, it may be subsequently extended beyond that term [see Fam. Code § 4335]. In a marriage of short duration, the burden is reversed; that is, the retention of jurisdiction must affirmatively appear in the language of the order [Fam. Code § 4335]. Therefore, every spousal support agreement should consider the question of retention of jurisdiction and include express language on the point, particularly if the intent is to reverse the otherwise applicable consequences under the statutes.

Jurisdiction over spousal support is a complex subject, considered in detail in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

[4] Provisions for Nonmodification

An agreement or order for spousal support may not be modified or revoked to the extent that a written agreement, or if no written agreement, an oral agreement entered into in open court, specifically provides that the support is not subject to modification (or termination) [Fam. Code §§ 3591(c), 3651(d)]. In other words, the parties may agree that spousal support may not be modified or terminated by court order [see Fam. Code §§ 3591(c), 3651(d)], and the court ordinarily must abide by that agreement [In re Marriage of Carletti (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 989, 995, 126 Cal. Rptr. 1] . However, the parties' agreement will not prevent the court from terminating support if the payee spouse suffers a criminal conviction for an act of domestic violence perpetrated against the payor spouse [see Fam. Code § 4325(a) (conviction of interspousal domestic violence within five years prior to filing of dissolution proceeding, or at any time thereafter, creates rebuttable presumption that no award of spousal support should be made to abusive spouse)]. In such a case, the significant public policy against domestic violence outweighs any interest in enforcement of the nonmodifiable spousal support agreement [In re Marriage of Cauley (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1100, 1105-1108, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 902] .

Provisions regarding the modification and termination of spousal support are set forth in §§ 123.260-123.266.

[5] Provisions Concerning Effect of Death, Remarriage, or Cohabitation

In the absence of a written agreement of the parties, the death of either party or the remarriage of the supported spouse terminates the support obligation of the supporting spouse by operation of law [Fam. Code § 4337; see In re Marriage of Glasser (1984) 181 Cal. App. 3d 149, 153, 226 Cal. Rptr. 229] . In addition, there is a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof that the supported spouse has a decreased need for spousal support if he or she is cohabiting with a person of the opposite sex [Fam. Code § 4323(a); see also In re Marriage of Geraci (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1278, 1299, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 234 (presumption under Fam. Code § 4323 applies in making initial support order as well in modifying order based on changed circumstances)].

However, these legal effects of death, remarriage, and cohabitation may be avoided by a written agreement of the parties [Fam. Code §§ 4323(a), 4337]. For such provisions, see §§ 123.264-123.266. Even if an agreement does not expressly extend support beyond remarriage or death, an extension may be implied if that was the clear intent of the parties [see, e.g., Lucas v. Elliott (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 888, 893-894, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 746 (finding provision in agreement requiring payor to maintain life insurance in amount of present value of support obligation as such an agreement, despite lack of express language continuing support obligation after death); In re Marriage of McGhee (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 408, 414-415, 182 Cal. Rptr. 456 (language of interlocutory agreement and nature of agreement implied extension beyond remarriage)].

There is some division of authority about whether a general nonmodifiability clause avoids termination by operation of law on remarriage under Fam. Code § 4337. One court has held that remarriage does not terminate spousal support if the parties' agreement states that support is not modifiable on any ground and fails to expressly provide an exception for remarriage [see In re Marriage of Sherman (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1132, 1135-1139, 208 Cal. Rptr. 832 ; cf. In re Marriage of Cesnalis (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1272-1274, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 (agreement that spousal support will end before specified duration only if either party dies is reasonably seen as declaration of intent that support should continue beyond remarriage)]. However, another court held that an agreement providing that spousal support was "nonmodifiable for any reason whatsoever" did not preclude automatic termination by operation of law on the remarriage of the supported spouse [see In re Marriage of Glasser (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 149, 151-153, 226 Cal. Rptr. 229]. The cases are perhaps distinguishable in that in the first case, there was evidence, both in the agreement and extrinsic, that nontermination on remarriage was the intent of the parties. For further discussion of termination of support by death or remarriage, and of the effect of cohabitation, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 52, Modification and Termination of Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

PRACTICE TIP:

Because of this conflict in the cases, and because appellate courts carefully scrutinize the language used in spousal support agreements, counsel should always specifically state whether spousal support does or does not terminate on the remarriage of the supported spouse. Commentary by Diana Richmond.

§ 123.31 Temporary Versus Permanent Support

Parties engaged in family law litigation frequently are not able to come to a resolution of permanent support issues at the outset of the litigation, but may be able to agree to a temporary support order pending resolution of other issues in the case. Thus, in drafting provisions for spousal support, counsel should distinguish between the need for temporary support during the course of family law litigation, and the need for a permanent support order.

With respect to support that is ordered by a court, the purpose of a temporary support award is to maintain the status quo of the parties until trial or other settlement of the case, in order to pay creditors and to enable a spouse to live in substantially the same manner to which he or she has been accustomed pending disposition of the case [In re Marriage of Winter (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1926, 1932, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 225 ; see In re Marriage of Smith (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 469, 494 n.16, 274 Cal. Rptr. 911 ; Estate of Fawcett (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 770, 784, 43 Cal. Rptr. 160 ; Whelan v. Whelan (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 690, 692, 197 P.2d 361] . In light of this purpose, an order based solely on the respective incomes of the parties is appropriate [In re Marriage of Winter (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1926, 1932-1933, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 225] . No factual findings under Fam. Code § 4320 are required for an order of temporary spousal support [In re Marriage of Czapar (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1308, 1316, 285 Cal. Rptr. 479] .

In contrast, an order of permanent spousal support requires consideration of numerous factors besides the income of the parties. If temporary support has been ordered, the determination of permanent spousal support at trial must be de novo, based on the circumstances existing at the time of the trial. More or less spousal support than the temporary amount may be ordered as permanent support without a showing of changed circumstances [see In re Marriage of McNaghten (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 845, 849-850, 194 Cal. Rptr. 176] . In determining the amount of a permanent award a court will evaluate the circumstances of the parties in light of the factors set forth in Fam. Code § 4320 [see In re Marriage of Geraci (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1278, 1296-1298, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 234 (court must weigh all factors listed in Fam. Code § 4320, and mere statement that factors favor award of support is insufficient if not accompanied by analysis of factors)]. Note, however, that these factors are to be considered by the court in setting spousal support if there has been no agreement of the parties [In re Marriage of Carletti (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 989, 995, 126 Cal. Rptr. 1 ; In re

§ 123.32 Stay of Service of Earnings Assignment Order

Whenever a court orders a party to pay spousal support, including, presumably, an order based on the parties' agreement, it must include in its order an earnings assignment order directed at the obligor's employer. The earnings assignment order directs the employer to withhold the amount of support from the obligor's earnings and to pay it directly to the obligee [Fam. Code § 5230(a); see Fam. Code § 150 ("support" as used in Family Code includes spousal support)]. For further discussion, see § 123.22[3]. For a form staying service of the wage assignment order, see § 123.280.

§ 123.40 Income Tax Treatment of Child Support

Unlike spousal support, child support is neither income of the payee parent nor deductible by the payor parent. If the payor makes support payments directly to the child, or to a third party (instead of to the other parent) on behalf of the child, the payments are not deductible because they are personal or family expenses for which the Internal Revenue Code does not otherwise allow a deduction [see I.R.C. §§ 71(c)(1), 262(a); Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1(e); Bay (John B.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1994-389]. California income tax treatment of child support is the same as that provided by federal income tax law [Rev. & Tax Code §§ 17201, 17801]. Payments that are in fact for the benefit of children may receive alimony tax treatment if they can properly be characterized as "family support," as discussed in § 123.52[2].

§ 123.41 Dependency Exemption

[1] When Permitted

A taxpayer is permitted a personal exemption deduction for each dependent who is the taxpayer's child or stepchild, who is younger than the taxpayer, and who is either (1) under age 19 at the close of the taxable year, or (2) a student who is under age 24 at the close of that year [I.R.C. §§ 151(c), 152(a)(1), (c), (f)(1)]. A personal exemption deduction is also allowed for certain kidnapped children [I.R.C. §§ 151(c), 152(c), (f)(6)]. A Taxpayer Identification Number (TIN) for each dependent must be included on the taxpayer's return [I.R.C. §§ 151(e), 6109(d), 7701(a)(41); Kocher (J. Erik) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2000-238 (dependency exemptions disallowed when parents refused to obtain and provide Social Security numbers for children)]. To qualify as a dependent, a person must receive over half of his or her support from the taxpayer for the taxable year, and must not have filed a joint return with his or her spouse (other than solely to claim a refund) for the taxable year beginning in the calendar year in which the taxpayer's taxable year begins [I.R.C. § 152(c)(1)(D),(E), (d)(1)(C); see [2], below].

PRACTICE TIP:

Other individuals related to the taxpayer, in addition to children and stepchildren, may be dependents [see I.R.C. § 152(d)]. Technically the requirements for dependency status are phrased in terms of qualifying in "the calendar year in which the taxable year of the taxpayer begins." Individuals are required to use the calendar year as the taxable year unless the IRS permits use of another taxable year in a particular case [see I.R.C. § 441], and virtually no such case has been described in court opinions and IRS rulings. Therefore, references in this discussion are simplified to "the taxable year" for convenience. In a rare case, counsel may need to apply the distinction between calendar year and taxable year.
Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

If the dependent is not a child of the taxpayer, or is a child of the taxpayer but is over the age of 18 and not a qualifying student, the taxpayer is allowed an exemption only if the gross income of the dependent is less than the exemption amount for the taxable year [I.R.C. § 152(d)(1)(B)]. Amounts received that are nontaxable, such as gifts, inheritances, and certain insurance proceeds, are not considered in determining whether the dependent has gross income in excess of the exemption amount [see Treas. Reg. § 1.151-2(a)].

A qualifying student must be an individual who, during each of five months in the taxable year, is a full-time student or is pursuing a full-time course of on-farm training [I.R.C. § 152(f)(2); see Kaechele v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1992-457 (dependency exemptions for grown children of divorced parents are allowable only on basis of financial support, not on basis of custody)]. No exemption may be claimed by a parent for a married child who files a joint return with his or her spouse [I.R.C. § 152(b)(2)].

Special rules apply to parents who are divorced or legally separated, or are separated under a written separation agreement, or live apart at all times during the last six months of the year [see I.R.C. § 152(e)]. For discussion, see [3], below.

[2] Support Requirement

A taxpayer must furnish more than half of the dependent's support for the year in question [I.R.C. § 152(c)(1)(D), (d)(1)(C); Treas. Reg. § 1.152-1(a)(1)]. Also, the dependent must not have filed a joint return with his or her spouse (other than solely to claim a refund) for the taxable year beginning in the calendar year in which the taxpayer's taxable year begins [I.R.C. § 152(c)(1)(E)].

In determining whether the taxpayer provided over half of the support of an individual for a given year, the entire amount of support that the individual received from all sources must be considered, including support that the individual supplied for himself or herself and income that ordinarily is excludable from gross income [Treas. Reg. § 1.152-1(a)(2); see Mares (Guadalupe) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2001-216 (taxpayer who paid substantial share of family's support was denied dependency exemptions for parents and siblings)]. Support includes food, clothing, medical and dental care, education, the fair market value of shelter or lodging, and like items. Thus, in computing the amount expended for support, taxpayers are not limited to the actual expenses of maintaining a house [see Treas. Reg. § 1.152-1(a)(2)(i)], such as electricity, heat, taxes, repairs, and interest payments on a mortgage. Rather, the measure is what the dependent receives, which is the fair rental value of the lodging [see, e.g., Carter v. Commissioner (1974) 62 T.C. 20; Blarek v. Commissioner (1955) 23 T.C. 1037, 1038-1039; Flachner v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1978-417; Rev. Rul. 58-302, 1958-1 C.B. 62]. IRS rulings have indicated that transportation, holiday gifts, church contributions, and expenses for entertainment and recreation are included in support. Although health insurance premium payments are treated as payments for medical expenses, any benefits provided under the policy are not considered support [see, e.g., McGuire v. Commissioner (1981) 77 T.C. 765, 774; Rev. Rul. 64-223, 1964-2 C.B. 50].

Certain items of a nonrecurring nature, such as the cost of a car, furniture, or appliances, may or may not qualify as support, depending on the particular circumstances of each case [see Rev. Rul. 77-282, 1977-2 C.B. 52]. None of the following, however, can be treated as items of support:

- The cost of life insurance premiums paid by the taxpayer on a policy he or she owns that lists the dependent as a beneficiary [see, e.g., Vance v. Commissioner (1961) 36 T.C. 547, 550; Rempert v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1970-226];
- Costs associated with the dependent's use of an automobile owned by the taxpayer, except to the extent that the owner's payment of automobile operating expenses benefits the dependent [Rev. Rul. 77-282, 1977-2 C.B. 52];
- Loans made by the taxpayer to the dependent [Gatling v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1959-224];

- The value of services rendered by the taxpayer to the dependent [see, e.g., Markarian v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 1965) 352 F.2d 870 , cert. denied, 384 U.S. 988 ; Beck v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1970-153] ;
- Liability insurance proceeds paid to a third party for an accident caused by the dependent [Kincheloe v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1971-35] ;
- The cost of tools to make a dependent's assigned chores easier [Rev. Rul. 77-282, 1977-2 C.B. 52], or, because the benefit is deemed too remote to be counted as support, the cost of items purchased to benefit children as they grow older [Gajda v. Commissioner (1965) 44 T.C. 783 , acq., 1966-2 C.B. 4] ;
- The dependent's funeral expenses [Rev. Rul. 65-307, 1965-2 C.B. 40] ;
- The dependent's payment of his or her own income taxes [Rev. Rul. 58-67, 1958-1 C.B. 62] ;
- Expenses incurred for an induced abortion, even if the child is born alive [Rev. Rul. 85-118, 1985-2 C.B. 59] ; or
- The costs associated with exercising visitation with the dependent [Hopkins v. Commissioner (1970) 55 T.C. 538, 541-542 ; Vance v. Commissioner (1961) 36 T.C. 547] .

Payments made by an institution to assist in furthering a child's education may or may not constitute support payments. For example, amounts received as scholarships for study at an educational institution are not considered in determining whether the taxpayer furnishes more than half of the support for the child [Treas. Reg. § 1.152-1(c)]. These scholarships may include payments for tuition, books, travel, meals, and lodging [Commissioner v. Ide (3d Cir. 1964) 335 F.2d 852, 854-855 ; Rev. Rul. 58-338, 1958-2 C.B. 54]. Similarly, room, board, and tuition payments made by the state for developmentally challenged persons qualify as scholarship payments and are not counted toward support if the children qualify as students and the institution qualifies as an educational institution [Rev. Rul. 71-347, 1971-2 C.B. 114 ; Rev. Rul. 64-221, 1964-2 C.B. 46 ; Rev. Rul. 61-186, 1961-2 C.B. 30 ; Rev. Rul. 60-190, 1960-1 C.B. 51]. Student loans, however, generally constitute support even though they are scholarship-related [McCauley v. Commissioner (1971) 56 T.C. 48, 50] .

[3] Children of Divorced or Separated Parents

[a] General Rule--Custodial Parent Entitled to Exemption

Only one taxpayer is entitled to an exemption for a given dependent. Although this limitation is of no concern to married taxpayers filing a joint return, dependency exemptions may be an issue for divorced or separated parents with minor children. To address the issue, I.R.C. § 152(e) reflects the general rule that the custodial parent is considered as providing more than one half of the support for a child during the calendar year. The custodial parent is the parent who has custody for the greater portion of the calendar year [I.R.C. § 152(e)(4)].

This general rule applies if all of the following conditions are satisfied [I.R.C. § 152(e)(1)]:

- A child or stepchild receives over half of his or her support during the taxable year from his or her parents together.
- The child is in the custody of one or both the parents for more than half of the year.
- The parents are divorced or legally separated under a decree of divorce or separate maintenance, or are separated under a written separation agreement, or live apart at all times during the last six months of the year.

In determining whether the parents together have provided more than half of the support of the child, support received from a parent's new spouse is treated as received from the parent [I.R.C. § 152(e)(6); see Schneier v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1984) 735 F.2d 375, 377] .

Legal custody only may be considered in determining whether the child is in the custody of one or both parents for more than half of the year [see Stanford (Sharron Kay W.) v. Commissioner T.C. Memo 1995-78 (dependency exemption allowed to parent who had legal custody only, but who furnished more than half of child's support to unrelated third persons who had actual physical custody)]. A divorced parent does not qualify for a dependency exemption for a child who is in both the legal and physical custody of grandparents [Penny v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1985-590 (Tax Court refused to consider grandparents as parents for purposes of dependency exemption); cf. Stanford (Sharron Kay W.) v. Commissioner T.C. Memo 1995-78] .

The noncustodial parent may claim the dependency exemption if (1) the custodial parent has released the claim to the exemption for the relevant year; (2) a qualifying pre-1985 instrument provides that the noncustodial parent may claim the exemption, and the noncustodial parent pays at least $600 for the support of the child; or (3) more than half of the child's support is provided pursuant to a multiple support agreement [I.R.C. § 152(e)(2),(3),(5); see I.R.C. § 152(d)(3)]. For discussion, see [b], [c], and [4], below.

[b] Custodial Parent's Release of Exemption

The noncustodial parent may claim the dependency exemption for a tax year beginning in a given calendar year if both of the following conditions are met [I.R.C. § 152(e)(2)]:

- The custodial parent signs a written declaration (in the manner and form prescribed by Treasury Regulations) that he or she will not claim the child as a dependent for any taxable year beginning in the calendar year.
- The noncustodial parent attaches the written declaration to his or her return for the taxable year beginning during that calendar year.

PRACTICE TIP:

If the custodial parent has agreed to release the exemption to the noncustodial parent, counsel should ensure that the form or written declaration releasing the claim clearly indicates the specific years to which the release applies. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

EXAMPLE: On January 5, 1990, a custodial parent fills out only Part II of IRS Form 8332, which is labelled "Release of Claim to Exemption for Future Years," stating that she agrees not to claim an exemption for her three children for "all future years." The noncustodial parent attaches this form to his 1989 income tax return. However, he was not entitled to the exemption for 1989 because Part I of the form, which is labelled "Release of Claim to Exemption for Current Year," was uncompleted and left completely blank, and because the form did not specify that it was applicable to the 1989 tax year [Cafarelli v. Commissioner (1994) 67 T.C.M. 3077, T.C. Memo. 1994-265] .

The California Supreme Court has held that the court may order the custodial parent to execute the form to release the right to the dependency exemption to the noncustodial parent over the custodial parent's objection. Allocation of the exemption in order to obtain maximum tax savings to the parents makes more money available for the children. Child support should be increased to offset the cash value of the exemption [Monterey County v. Cornejo (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1271, 1275-1281, 283 Cal. Rptr. 405, 812 P.2d 586] . The case in which the issue was decided was brought by a district attorney under the child support enforcement provisions pertaining to the federally mandated "Title IV-D" program [see former Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 11350, 11350.1, 11475.1; now see Fam. Code § 17400 et seq.], in which the court's jurisdiction is limited to determining paternity and child support [see Fam. Code § 17404; former Welf. & Inst. Code § 11350.1]. However, the court's holding was that allocation of the dependency exemption is a determination that is pertinent to child support, meaning that it may be addressed in any proceeding in which child support is at issue, such as one for dissolution of marriage [Monterey County v. Cornejo (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1271, 1282-1284, 283 Cal. Rptr. 405, 812 P.2d 586 (Court specifically noted parent's right to independent determination of issue under former Family Law Act, now Family Code); see former Welf. & Inst. Code § 11350.1(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

The judicial shifting of dependency exemptions to a payor spouse, along with increased child support, is common. Counsel for the custodial-payee parent should consider offering to sign the exemption over to the payor parent whenever she or he stands to gain more from increased support than will be lost by surrendering the exemption (typically the case with a low-income payee). Conversely, counsel for the payor parent should avoid raising the issue if his or her exposure to increased support will outweigh the benefit of claiming the exemption. Computer software programs that calculate support, including the effect on support of exemption-shifting, are now in wide-spread use by both family law courts and counsel. If the custodial parent has agreed to release the exemption to the noncustodial parent, counsel should ensure that the form or written declaration releasing the claim clearly indicates the specific years to which the release applies. Commentary by the Publisher's Editorial Staff.

PRACTICE TIP: The dependency exemption should be addressed in any settlement agreement or stipulated judgment, particularly if it is to be allocated to the parent with the lesser period of physical custody. When a transfer is to be made, the agreement or stipulation should spell it out clearly and require execution and delivery of a copy of the actual form of waiver that will be submitted to the IRS. Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

PRACTICE TIP: The value of the dependency exemption is important to middle-income and lower-income taxpayers. Counsel representing clients with modest incomes should always compare the value of the exemption to one spouse with the value to the other spouse. To a parent receiving AFDC, the exemption is practically worthless. The exemption should be claimable by the spouse who will benefit more from it. Commentary by Hon. Thomas Murphy.

There is an issue of whether the requirement that the parent claiming the exemption contribute more than half of the child's support [see I.R.C. § 151(a)] can be ignored in transferring the exemption to the noncustodial parent. The custodial parent's voluntary release of the exemption under I.R.C. § 152(e)(2) requires only that she or he agree not to claim the exemption; no affirmation that the other parent has, in fact, provided more than half of the child's support is required [see Valarian (James L.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1996-511 (because custodial parent is treated as having provided over half of support absent written waiver of exemption, and had not waived it, noncustodial parent was denied exemption); see also Roberts (Charles R.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1996-467] . However, if the court compels the parent to transfer the exemption involuntarily, it appears that the court must first find that the noncustodial parent has contributed, or at least will contribute, more than half of the support of the child. An involuntary transfer of the exemption solely to maximize tax savings, without the support requirement having been met, would seem to not be permitted by the Internal Revenue Code.

A form for use as a provision in a marital settlement agreement allocating the dependency exemption to the noncustodial parent is set forth in § 123.216.

[c] When Rules Do Not Apply

The rules regarding the dependency exemption for divorced or separated parents [see [a], [b], above] do not apply if the right to the dependency exemption is governed by a multiple support agreement with respect to the child [I.R.C. § 152(e)(5); see I.R.C. § 152(d)(3)]. See [4], below, for discussion of multiple support agreements.

In addition, the noncustodial parent may claim the exemption if (1) a qualified pre-1985 instrument between the parents provides that the noncustodial parent will be entitled to any deduction allowable under I.R.C. § 151 for the child, and (2) the noncustodial parent provides at least $600 for the support of the child during the relevant calendar year [I.R.C. § 152(e)(3)(A); see I.R.C. § 152(e)(3)(B) (requirements for "qualified pre-1985 instrument")]. For purposes of the $600-support test, amounts expended for the support of the child are treated as received from the noncustodial parent to the extent that he or she provided amounts for support [I.R.C. § 152(e)(3)(A)(ii); see Zion v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1991-119 (custodial parent provided more than half of children's support, but noncustodial parent paid more than $600 per child and was entitled to dependency exemptions granted under pre-1985 settlement agreement)].

The rules are not applicable if the parents are not yet divorced, but are living in separate parts of the family household. Under these circumstances, there is no custodial or noncustodial parent within the rules of I.R.C. § 152(e), and the right to the dependency exemption is determined under I.R.C. §§ 151(c), 152(c) based on which parent has provided more than half of the support for the dependents [see Dawkins v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1991-225 ; contra Sydney v. Commissioner (8th Cir. 1978) 577 F.2d 60] .

[4] Multiple Support Agreements

If no single person contributes more than half of the support of an individual, but over half of the individual's support is received from persons each of whom would have been permitted to claim the individual as a dependent had the person contributed more than half of the support, all such persons may agree to give the dependency exemption to any one of them who contributes at least 10 percent of the dependent's support [I.R.C. § 152(d)(3)]. Although this arrangement is referred to as a "multiple support agreement," there is no requirement of a written agreement other than a declaration on IRS Form 2120.

This rule applies only in those cases in which no single person provided more than half of the support of the dependent. Thus, if after divorce or separation one parent provides more than half of a child's support, a multiple support agreement cannot be used to shift the exemption to the other parent or to anyone else. If one parent provides more than half of the child's support, however, the special rules for divorced or separated parents apply, and the custodial parent receives the deduction unless he or she waives it in favor of the noncustodial parent [I.R.C. § 152(e); see [3][b], above]. If both parents together provide more than half of the support of a child, but neither alone supplies more than half of the child's support, the special rules for divorced or separated parents apply [see I.R.C. § 152(e)(1)(A)], and a multiple support agreement is available as well. Thus, the custodial parent may release the exemption to the noncustodial parent [I.R.C. § 152(e)(2)], or, under the multiple support agreement rules, both parents may transfer the exemption to any person, including the noncustodial parent, who provides more than 10 percent of the child's support [I.R.C. § 152(d)(3), (e)(5)]. If the parents together do not supply half of the child's support, and no other person provides over half of the child's support, a multiple support agreement is the only way that any person, including either parent, who supplies more than 10 percent of the child's support can take the dependency exemption.

[5] Related Tax Credits

A special tax credit is available for each qualifying child of a taxpayer under age 17 [see I.R.C. § 24(a)]. To qualify, a child must be under age 17 and must qualify as a dependent of the taxpayer [I.R.C. §§ 24(c)(1), 152(c) ("qualifying child" for dependency exemption must be child or descendant of taxpayer, or brother, sister, stepbrother, or stepsister of taxpayer or descendant of any such relative, and must meet other specified conditions)]. A child does not qualify, however, if he or she is not a citizen or national of the United States and resides outside the United States [I.R.C. §

24(c)(2)]. The amount of the credit per qualifying child is $1,000 [I.R.C. § 24(a)]. The child tax credit is refundable (whether or not the taxpayer pays any federal income tax) to the extent of 15 percent of the taxpayer's earned income in excess of $10,000 [I.R.C. § 24(d)(1)]. The $10,000 amount is indexed for inflation beginning after 2001 [I.R.C. § 24(d)(3); see I.R.C. § 24(d)(4) ($10,000 amount replaced by $8,500 for any taxable year beginning in 2008)]. Families with three or more children are allowed a refundable credit for the amount by which the taxpayer's social security taxes exceed the taxpayer's earned income credit [see I.R.C. § 32], if that amount is greater than the refundable credit based on the taxpayer's earned income in excess of the $10,000 amount indexed as described in the preceding sentence [I.R.C. § 24(d)(1)(B)]. The refundable portion of the child tax credit does not constitute income and is not treated as resources for purposes of determining eligibility or the amount or nature of benefits or assistance under any Federal program or any State or local program financed with Federal funds [Pub. Law 107-16, § 203]. The child tax credit is allowed to the extent of the full amount of the individual's regular income tax and alternative minimum tax [I.R.C. § 24(b)(3)].

In addition, an earned income credit is available to a taxpayer with a qualifying child who has either earned income (such as wages or self-employment income) or an adjusted gross income that falls below a threshold income level [I.R.C. § 32]. To qualify, a child must meet requirements pertaining to relationship, age, and residency, and the taxpayer's tax return must include identifying information for the child [I.R.C. §§ 32(c)(3), 152(c)].

There is also a credit for post-secondary education to cover certain tuition [I.R.C. § 25A]. Coverdell Education Savings Accounts [I.R.C. § 530] and qualified tuition programs [I.R.C. § 529] can also be useful in providing for educational benefits. These measures are beyond the scope of this chapter, but may figure into the overall planning needed by divorcing couples with respect to the education of their children.

§ 123.42 Deduction for Medical Expenses

A taxpayer may deduct his or her medical expenses, including those of a dependent child, to the extent that they exceed 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income [I.R.C. § 213(a)]. In the case of divorced or separated parents, if (1) both parents together provide more than half of the child's support during the taxable year and (2) the child is in the custody of one or both of the parents for six months of the year, the child is deemed to be a dependent of both parents for purposes of the medical expense deduction [I.R.C. §§ 152(e), 213(d)(5)]. Therefore, despite the fact that only one parent is entitled to a dependency exemption for a child, each parent may include the child's medical expenses that he or she has paid in determining whether the 7.5 percent threshold has been met. The same rule applies to the income exclusion for medical expenses paid by an employer for a dependent child [see I.R.C. § 105(b)].

If the above requirements are not met, only the individual who supplies more than half of the child's support may consider the child as a dependent (if otherwise qualifying by affinity with the child) and be entitled to a medical expense deduction for amounts expended on medical care for the child [I.R.C. §§ 152(c), 213(a)]. Further, if the dependency exemption is determined under a multiple support agreement [see § 123.41[4]], only the taxpayer entitled to the dependency exemption is entitled to the deduction or exclusion [I.R.C. §§ 105(b), 152(d)(3), 213(a)].

§ 123.43 Child Care Credit

A parent who pays child care expenses that enable him or her to be gainfully employed, and whose child is a qualifying individual, is allowed a tax credit for a percentage of the amount paid [I.R.C. § 21(a)(1)].

A child who is under the age of 13 is a qualifying individual if the child is a dependent of the taxpayer [I.R.C. § 21(b)(1)(A); see I.R.C. § 152(a)(1)]. Other dependents who are physically or mentally incapable of caring for themselves, and who have the same principal place of abode as the taxpayer for more than half of the taxable year, are also qualifying individuals [I.R.C. § 21(b)(1)(B),(C)]. However, because this standard requires a physical or mental defect [see Treas. Reg. § 1.21-1(b)(4)], it does not appear to include a child age 13 or older who the parent believes is not yet able to stay home without child care.

The credit may be up to 35 percent of a limited amount of employment-related expenses [I.R.C. § 21(a)(2)]. The percentage is reduced, but not below 20 percent, by 1 percentage point for each $2,000 (or fraction thereof) by which the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for the taxable year exceeds $15,000 [I.R.C. § 21(a)(2)]. Eligible employment-related expenses are limited to $3,000 if there is one qualifying individual or $6,000 if there are two or more qualifying individuals. Thus, the maximum credit is $1,050 (35 percent of $3,000) if there is one qualifying individual and $2,100 (35 percent of $6,000) if there are two or more qualifying individuals [I.R.C. § 21(c)]. The applicable dollar limit of otherwise eligible employment-related expenses is reduced by any amount excluded from income under an employer-provided dependent care assistance program [I.R.C. § 21(c); see I.R.C. § 129]. An earned income limitation also applies to limit the expenses that are eligible for the credit. For an unmarried individual, the expenses eligible for the credit cannot exceed that individual's earned income for the year. For a married individual, the expenses eligible for the credit cannot exceed the lesser of that individual's earned income or the earned income of the spouse for the year [I.R.C. § 21(d)(1)]. For this purpose, a spouse who is a full-time student or incapable of caring for himself [see I.R.C. § 21(b)(1)(C)] is deemed to be gainfully employed and to have earned income for that month of $250 if there is one qualifying individual and $500 if there is more than one qualifying individual [I.R.C. § 21(d)(2)].

Unlike the dependency exemption [see § 123.41[3]], the child care credit is not transferable to the noncustodial parent, even if he or she is the one who is paying all or most of the child care expenses [I.R.C. § 21(e)(5); see I.R.C. § 152(e)(4)(A) (defining custodial parent as one who has custody for greater portion of calendar year); see also 1.21-1(b)(5)(ii)]. Thus, the right to claim a child care credit for a child remains with the custodial parent even if the dependency exemption is released to the noncustodial parent [I.R.C. § 21(e)(5); see § 123.41[3][b]].

PRACTICE TIP:

Under California's statewide uniform child support guideline, the court must order child care costs related to employment or training for employment to be paid as additional child support [Fam. Code § 4062(a)(1)]. The costs are to be divided evenly between the parents unless either parent requests a different apportionment [Fam. Code § 4061(a)]. Thus, a higher-earning noncustodial parent will be required to pay at least half of child care costs without being able to claim the child care credit. If the court determines that a 50-50 apportionment of child care costs is inappropriate, it must apportion them according to a formula based on the parents' respective incomes, thereby allocating even a higher share to the higher earner [see Fam. Code § 4061(b)]. While a proportionate allocation is certainly appropriate in cases involving great disparity in parental income, the fact that only the custodial parent may claim the child care credit is an argument for not making a different apportionment in cases in which the disparity is not so great. Commentary by the Publisher's Editorial Staff.

For further discussion of the child support guideline and the child care add-on, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 41, Child Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

The credit is available to a married taxpayer only if the taxpayer and his or her spouse file a joint return [I.R.C. § 21(e)(2)]. However, an individual who is legally separated from his or her spouse under a decree of divorce or legal separation is not considered as married [I.R.C. § 21(e)(3)]. In the absence of such a decree, a married taxpayer who files a separate return may claim the child care credit if he or she (1) lived apart from his or her spouse for the last six months of the taxable year, (2) maintained a household that was the child's principal place of abode for more than half of the taxable year, and (3) furnished over half the cost of maintaining the household during the taxable year [I.R.C. § 21(e)(4)].

§ 123.44 Head of Household Filing Status

[1] Status as Head of Household; Qualifying Persons

The tax rates that apply to the liability of a person who qualifies as a head of household are more favorable than the rates for a person who files as a single person [compare I.R.C. § 1(b) with I.R.C. § 1(c)]. A head of household is a taxpayer who, at the close of the taxable year, is not married (but see [4], below), is not a surviving spouse, and who maintains a household that constitutes the principal place of abode of one or more qualifying persons [I.R.C. § 2(b)(1); Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(b)(1)].

Qualifying persons include the taxpayer's child or stepchild, descendants of a child, and any other person for whom the taxpayer may take a dependency deduction [I.R.C. § 2(b)(1)(A); Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(b)(3)]. Qualifying persons also include the taxpayer's parent if the taxpayer would be entitled to a dependency exemption for the parent [I.R.C. § 2(b)(1)(B); Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(b)(4)]. Under no circumstances, may the same person be used to qualify more than one person as a head of household for the same taxable year [Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(b)(2)].

A taxpayer who was a nonresident alien at any time during the taxable year may not be considered to be a head of household [I.R.C. § 2(b)(3)(A)]. Also, head-of-household status is unavailable if the person claimed as a dependent is unrelated to the taxpayer or is deemed a dependent under a multiple support agreement [I.R.C. § 2(b)(3)(B); see I.R.C. § 152(d)(2)(H), (3); see § 123.41[4] (multiple support agreements)].

[2] Cohabitation Requirements

In order for a taxpayer to be considered as maintaining a household for a child for purposes of the filing status, the household must actually constitute the home of the taxpayer. It is not sufficient that the taxpayer maintain the household without being its occupant [Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(c)(1); see Stanford (Sharron Kay Wirges) T.C. Memo 1995-78 ; McDonald (Lillie B.) T.C. Memo 1991-242 (taxpayer who maintained separate principal residences for self and son did not qualify for head of household status)]. Apparently it need not be the taxpayer's sole or principal place of abode, as long as there is a substantial period of cohabitation with the child [see Smith v. Commissioner (9th Cir. [T.C.] 1964) 332 F.2d 671, 673, reversing 40 T.C. 591 (1963); see also Grace v. Commissioner (5th Cir. [T.C.] 1969) 421 F.2d 165, 166, aff'd, 51 T.C. 685 (1969); Muse v. United States (4th Cir. 1970) 434 F.2d 349, 352-353]. There is no cohabitation requirement if the qualifying person is the taxpayer's parent [I.R.C. § 2(b)(1)(B); Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(b)(1), (c)(1)].

The household must constitute the principal place of abode of the child for more than one half of the taxable year [I.R.C. § 2(b)(1)(A)]. Thus, unlike the dependency exemption [see § 123.41[3][b]], head-of-household filing status is not a tax benefit that may be transferred by the custodial parent to the noncustodial parent based on the payment of more than half of a child's support [see Grace v. Commissioner (5th Cir. [T.C.] 1969) 421 F.2d 165, 166; see also [3], below]. Note that Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(c)(1) requires that the taxpayer and his or her child must occupy the home for the entire taxable year. However, the regulation has not been revised in light of the amendments made to I.R.C. § 2 by Pub. Law 98-369 (DEFRA), § 423(c)(2), which changed the cohabitation requirement from the entire year to more than half of the year. DEFRA applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984.

Temporary absences from the household due to special circumstances do not disqualify the taxpayer under the cohabitation requirement. A custody agreement under which a child is absent from the taxpayer's home for less than six months of the year is considered a temporary absence due to special circumstances [Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(c)(1)].

In order to establish a temporary absence, the taxpayer or child must be reasonably expected to return to the household, and the taxpayer must continue to maintain the household in anticipation of the return [Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(c)(1); see Addison (Beverly P) T.C. Memo 1992-349 (mother did not meet requirements for head-of-household filing status because daughter's absence from home to attend school was not deemed temporary)]. For example, a taxpayer will not be denied head of household status if the qualifying person is temporarily maintained in a mental institution and the household is held open for his or her return [W.J. Hein (1957) 28 T.C. 826, 835]. Head of household status will be denied a parent whose child leaves the family household and establishes a separate residence for more than half the year [see Prendergast v. C.I.R. (9th Cir. [T.C.] 1973) 483 F.2d 970, 971 (decided under prior law requiring taxpayer's home to be child's principal place of residence for entire year)].

The fact that the person for whom the abode is furnished is born or dies within the taxable year will not prevent the taxpayer from qualifying as a head of household if the household constitutes the principal place of abode for the dependent for the remaining or preceding part of the taxable year [Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(c)(1)].

[3] Costs of Maintaining Household

A taxpayer will be considered as maintaining a household only if he or she pays more than one half of the cost of the household for the taxable year [I.R.C. § 2(b)(1)]. Cost "includes property taxes, mortgage interest, rent, utility charges, upkeep and repairs, property insurance, and food consumed on the premises. Maintenance costs do not include such items as clothing, education, medical treatment, vacations, life insurance, and transportation [Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(d)].

The cost of maintaining the household must be distinguished from the costs of supporting the child or other qualifying person. In the case of divorced parents, there is no requirement that the parent claiming head-of-household status pay more than half of the support for the child, as long as he or she pays over half the cost of maintaining the household [Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(b)(3)(i)]. A custodial parent may release the dependency exemption for a child to a noncustodial parent who pays more than half of the child's support, but still claim head-of-household status [I.R.C. § 2(b)(1)(A)(i); see I.R.C. § 152(e)(2), discussed in § 123.41[3][b]].

[4] Rights of Certain Married Persons to Head of Household Filing Status

Head-of-household status ordinarily is limited to single persons [I.R.C. § 2(b)(1); compare I.R.C. § 1(b) with I.R.C. § 1(d) (tax rates of head of household and married individuals filing separately)]. However, an individual who is legally separated from his or her spouse under a decree of divorce or of separate maintenance is not considered as married [I.R.C. § 2(b)(2)(A)].

In addition, a married taxpayer who is living apart from his or her spouse is not deemed married, and therefore is eligible to file as a head of household if he or she otherwise qualifies, provided the individual meets all of the following requirements [I.R.C. §§ 2(c), 7703(b); Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 17021.5, 17042; see Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(e)]:

1. Files a separate income tax return;
2. Maintains as his or her home a household that is, for more than half of the taxable year, the principal place of abode of a dependent child or stepchild [see I.R.C. § 152(f)(1); [2], above];
3. Is entitled to a dependency deduction for the child or stepchild;
4. Furnishes more than half of the cost of maintaining the household [see [3], above]; and
5. Does not have, for the last six months of the taxable year, his or her spouse as a member of the household.

Although spouses can be living separate and apart under California law and yet reside under the same roof, the Tax Court refuses to follow this approach, holding instead that a married taxpayer living in the same household with his or her spouse while obtaining a divorce is not eligible to file as a head of household [Hopkins v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1992-326 (head of household status denied taxpayer who occasionally allowed former spouse to sleep in living room because of former spouse's inability to secure housing for himself); Dawkins v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1991-225 (filing status of divorcing taxpayer who lived in separate quarters under same roof with spouse was "married filing separate," not "head of household")]. As a result, because the Ninth Circuit has not specifically addressed this issue, the current rule is that both spouses cannot live under the same roof and be deemed living separate and apart [see Hopkins v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1992-326 ; but see Sydney v. Commissioner (8th Cir. 1978) 577 F.2d 60, 62 (in case involving tax treatment of support payments, Eighth Circuit rejected this strict standard for "separated and living apart")].

The taxpayer's spouse will be considered a member of the household during a period in which the spouse is absent from the household temporarily. For example, the spouse will be considered a household member during periods that he or she is away from the household due to illness, educational activities, business, vacation, or military service [Treas. Reg. § 1.143-1(b)(5) (regulation does not reflect change in requirement regarding former spouse's residence from entire taxable year to last six months of taxable year)].

§ 123.45 Gift and Estate Tax Consequences of Child Support

[1] Gift Tax

Payments made to satisfy a child support obligation do not constitute taxable gifts [see Commissioner v. Converse (2d Cir. 1947) 163 F.2d 131 ; Hooker v. Commissioner (1948) 10 T.C. 388 , aff'd, (5th Cir. 1949) 174 F.2d 863 ; see also Rev. Rul. 68-379, 1968-2 C.B. 414]. Payments made in excess of reasonable support obligations, however, or payments to adult children to whom the payor owes no obligation of support, constitute taxable gifts [see Rosenthal v. Commissioner (2d Cir. 1953) 205 F.2d 505 ; Spruance v. Commissioner (1973) 60 T.C. 141, 150-153 , aff'd without op., (3d Cir. 1974) 505 F.2d 731] .

Under the Internal Revenue Code, specified support payments are exempted from gift taxation. Payments that provide reasonable allowance for support for the transferor's issue during their minority are not gifts if the transfers are made under a written marital settlement agreement entered into between the parents within two years before or one year after the final decree of divorce. The agreement need not be approved by the divorce decree [I.R.C. § 2516]. This rule applies only to the children of the marriage being dissolved but includes legally adopted children [Treas. Reg. § 25.2516-2]. Furthermore, an unlimited exclusion from gift tax applies to all direct payments made for an individual's medical or tuition expenses [I.R.C. § 2503(e)].

[2] Estate Tax

Payments made to support a child are not subject to federal estate tax. Claims for the support of children are deductible from the decedent's gross estate to the extent of the decedent's support obligation [see I.R.C. § 2053]. The deduction from the gross estate should not exceed the amount that the decedent was obligated to pay, but failed to pay, during his or her life [see Estate of Satz v. Commissioner (1982) 78 T.C. 1172 ; see also Rev. Rul. 71-67, 1971-1 C.B. 271]. For discussion of the liability of a parent's estate for child support on the basis of a preexisting court order for support or a settlement agreement, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure,

Ch. 40, Duty to Support Children and Jurisdiction to Order Support, § 40.09[3].

§ 123.50 Background and Purpose of Current Law

[1] Federal Law

Payments that qualify as alimony or separate maintenance payments are deductible by the payor-spouse [I.R.C. § 215] and includible in the income of the payee-spouse [I.R.C. § 71]. Thus, the payor-spouse is treated as a conduit of income to the payee-spouse, unless the payments are made pursuant to an agreement that expressly designates that they are not to be deductible or includible as alimony [see Richardson v. Commissioner (1995) 70 T.C.M. 1390 ; see also Keegan (Kirk A., Jr.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1997-359 ; Daugharty (John F.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1997-349].

This tax treatment of qualifying payments has remained unchanged for many years, but the requirements for qualification were fundamentally revised in 1984 and were amended in 1986 [see Tax Reform Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-369, § 422(a), as amended by Tax Reform Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-514, §§ 1843(b), 1881 (eliminating retroactively, to operative date of Tax Reform Act of 1984, rule that instrument must expressly provide for termination of obligation on death); see also [3], below, for discussion]. Current and prior law distinguish spousal support from both child support and payments made in consequence of a division of property. The law allows alimony tax treatment only for true spousal support and attempts to define alimony in a way that conforms to general notions of what types of payments constitute alimony [H.R. Rep. No. 432, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 1494-1497 (1984); see § 123.51]. Payments not meeting the objective test of current law will fail to qualify for alimony tax treatment regardless of whether they were intended by both spouses to constitute spousal support.

PRACTICE TIP:

Many of these cases arise when the I.R.S. matches the payor's and payee's returns, and finds one deducting the payment while the other omits it from income. Commentary by Susan Jeffries.

PRACTICE TIP: An obligation that qualifies as alimony or spousal support for purposes of income tax deductibility generally will also qualify as a "domestic support obligation," which is not dischargeable in bankruptcy [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5)]. A "domestic support obligation" for bankruptcy purposes includes any debt payable to a bankruptcy debtor's spouse or former spouse "in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support" of that spouse, former spouse, child, or child's parent under a separation agreement, divorce decree, or property settlement agreement [11 U.S.C. § 101(14A) ("domestic support obligation" does not include obligation assigned to nongovernmental entity unless voluntarily assigned for purpose of collecting that debt)]. Whether an obligation imposed by a marital settlement agreement is actually "in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support," and therefore should not be discharged in bankruptcy, will be determined by the bankruptcy court based on all of the circumstances of the parties [see Shaver v. Shaver (9th Cir. 1986) 736 F.2d 1314, 1315-1316 (construing former 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5), which contained substantially similar language to that of current 11 U.S.C. § 101(14A))]. The Bankruptcy Code's policy against discharge of the debtor's domestic support obligations "departs from the general policy of absolution, or 'fresh start,' that is embodied in the federal Bankruptcy Act. It enforces an overriding public policy favoring the enforcement of familial obligations" [Shaver v. Shaver (9th Cir. 1986) 736 F.2d 1314, 1315-1316] . Therefore, when a property division has been categorized by the spouses at the time of dissolution as "support" (to enable the obligor to claim a tax deduction), and the judgment or marital settlement agreement expressly provides that the "support" obligation will be nonmodifiable, the spouses should anticipate the possibility of the obligor's bankruptcy. The obligee, in the event of the obligor's bankruptcy, may argue that the payment provisions are nondischargeable as being in the nature of "spousal support." To avoid unintended consequences, the spouses should frankly state, in the settlement agreement, their intent as to whether the payments are to be deemed for bankruptcy purposes as in the nature of support (and thus nondischargeable). Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

The requirements for alimony tax treatment imposed as a result of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 generally apply only to divorce or separation instruments executed after 1984. Counsel should be aware, however, that any amendment or change in the terms of a pre-1985 divorce or separation instrument may bring it under current law. For example, in one private letter ruling issued before enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, the IRS indicated that alimony treatment might be lost if the amended agreement failed to state that liability for spousal support would cease on the death of the payee spouse [Letter Rul. 8624125 (Mar. 20, 1986); but see Tax Reform Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-514, §§ 1843(b), 1881 (eliminating retroactively, to operative date of Tax Reform Act of 1984, rule that instrument must expressly provide for termination of obligation on death); see also § 123.51 for discussion].

PRACTICE TIP:

The payments must terminate upon the death of the payee; otherwise the obligor is not entitled to a deduction. While the decree or agreement need not state this crucial element, it is safer always to state it expressly in any tax-sensitive agreement providing for alimony. Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

[2] California Law

California's income tax treatment of spousal support specifically incorporates the federal tax treatment of alimony [Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 17081, 17201(b); see I.R.C. §§ 71, 215 (inclusion of alimony in gross income; itemized deduction for alimony payments)].

[3] Effective Dates

Current federal law applies to payments made under dissolution or separation instruments signed, filed, and executed after 1984. If a decree of dissolution or legal separation entered after 1984 incorporates or adopts without change the terms of the alimony or separate maintenance payments under a dissolution or separation instrument executed before 1985, the decree is treated as entered before 1985. A change in the amount of alimony or separate maintenance payments or the period over which the payments are to continue, or the addition or deletion of any contingencies or conditions relating to such payments, is a change of terms [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(e), Q&A 26].

EXAMPLE:

In November 1984, H and W executed a written separation agreement. In February 1985, a decree of dissolution was entered in substitution of the written separation agreement. The decree did not change the terms of the spousal support obligation from H to W. Generally, the decree is treated as entered before 1985, and prior law governs whether the payments qualify for alimony tax treatment. However, if the amounts or the period of the spousal support payments are not specified in the written separation agreement, or if the decree changed the amount or terms of the payments, the decree is considered as entered after 1984, and the payments are governed by current law [see Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(e), Q&A 26].

Current federal law also applies to instruments executed or entered into (or treated as executed or entered into) before 1985 that are modified after 1984, if the modification expressly provides that Internal Revenue Code Section 71, as amended by the Tax Reform Act of 1984, is to apply to the instrument as modified [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(e), Q&A 26; see Letter Rul. 8634040 (Aug. 22, 1986)]. One court has held that an "express reference" is not limited to a "formulaic recitation of buzzwords" (for example, the law's formal statutory title). Any clear indication that the "new law" would apply is sufficient [Christoph v. United States (S.D. Ga 1995) 931 F. Supp. 1564 (nunc pro tunc "clarification" to invoke new law was upheld, but a retroactive "modification" would not likely be upheld if it affected rights of federal government)].

One private letter ruling indicates that the IRS may take a relatively narrow view of the circumstances under which a modification after 1984 of a pre-1985 divorce decree will subject the decree to post-1984 tax law. In that ruling, the IRS stated that such a modification would not subject a pre-1985 decree to post-1984 tax law unless the modification expressly states that post-1984 law is to apply [Letter Rul. 8634040 (Aug. 22, 1986); see Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(e), Q&A 26; see also Libman v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1990-629 (pre-1984 award of unallocated family support retained alimony treatment when 1988 modification for "child support" lacked express statement that post-1984 law applied)]. The IRS reasoned that, for purposes of applying the term "divorce or separation instrument" [see I.R.C. § 71(b)(2)] in ascertaining which tax laws apply, the underlying decree (or instrument) that establishes the obligation of paying support, rather than a modification decree, is determinative [Letter Rul. 8634040 (Aug. 22, 1986)].

§ 123.51 Requirements for Alimony Tax Treatment

[1] Qualified Payments

The Internal Revenue Code uses the term "alimony or separate maintenance payment" to characterize a payment that qualifies for alimony tax treatment, that is, one that is deductible by the payor and includible in the payee's gross income [I.R.C. §§ 71(a), 215(a)]. A payment qualifies as an alimony or separate maintenance payment if all of the requirements specified in [2]-[6], below, are met. Notwithstanding these requirements, however, payments do not qualify if the spouses file a joint return for the taxable year in which the payments are made [see I.R.C. § 71(e)]. For discussion of filing joint returns generally, see Ch. 125.

In general, state court adjudications that retroactively designate divorce-related payments as alimony or child support are ignored for purposes of federal tax liability [see, e.g., Engelhardt v. Commissioner (1972) 58 T.C. 641, acq., 1978-1 C.B. 1]. An exception to this rule may be made, however, when the retroactive order is entered to correct a decree that mistakenly failed to reflect the true intention of the court at the time the decree was entered. In such cases, a nunc pro tunc order may be honored for federal tax purposes if it is held to have clarified the true intent of the original decree [Johnson v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1989-415 ; see Christoph v. United States (S.D. Ga 1995) 931 F. Supp. 1564].

Some types of expenditures have been found ineligible for alimony tax treatment. For example, expenses incurred by a father to discover the whereabouts of his child and former spouse were held not to be deductible alimony [Marian v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1985-554]. Although the case was decided under prior law, because current law retains the requirement that alimony payments must be made pursuant to a divorce decree or written separation instrument [see [3], below], the result should not be changed under current law.

If a lump-sum payment is made in settlement of both past and future support obligations, an allocation must be made between both types for income tax purposes. In the absence of an unequivocal allocation between these components, the lump sum is to be treated as paid in settlement of arrearages to the extent that they exist, with the balance allocated to the satisfaction of future obligations. The amount allocated to arrearages retains the tax character that would have applied to timely payments made under the divorce or separation instrument. The tax character of the amount allocated to future obligations must be determined separately [Bernard v. Commissioner (1986) 87 T.C. 1029] .

[2] Payment in Cash

The payment must be made in cash [I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)]. Checks and money orders payable on demand qualify. Transfers of services or property (including debt instruments of a third party or an annuity contract), execution of a debt instrument by the payor, or the use of the payor's property do not qualify as alimony or separate maintenance payments [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(a)(5), (6), (b), Q&A 5; cf. Daley v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1991-555 (in case involving indirect alimony under pre-1985 law, rent-free use of house by taxpayer's former spouse was not deductible as alimony when evidence indicated use was intended either as child support or was in lieu of interest payments owing to former spouse)].

[3] Received Under Instrument

The payment must be received [see I.R.C. § 71(a); see also Feldman v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1991-153 (payee spouse not taxed on alimony overpayments received but ordered refunded to payor spouse under divorce decree); Coleman v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1988-442 (payee spouses using cash method of accounting taxed on alimony arrearages in year of receipt, not year originally due)] by or on behalf of a spouse or former spouse [I.R.C. § 71(d); see I.R.C. § 71(a)] under a "divorce or separation instrument" [I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(A)] that does not expressly designate the payment as one that is (1) not includible in the payee's gross income and (2) not allowable as a deduction from the payor's gross income [see I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(B); Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(a), Q&A 2; see also I.R.C. § 71(b)(2)(A) (qualified divorce and separation instruments); Ewell v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1996-253 ; 71 T.C.M. 3134 ; Richardson v. Commissioner (1995) 70 T.C.M. 1390 ; cf. Harris v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1991-375 (in noncommunity property state, husband was taxable on withdrawals from IRA even though they were used to pay former wife's income taxes pursuant to divorce decree; decree as not otherwise satisfying alimony income-shifting rules, and husband as not required to transfer his interest in IRA to wife in lieu of portion of his obligation to pay her taxes); see § 123.54].

The term "divorce or separation instrument" means a decree of divorce or separate maintenance, a written instrument incident to such a decree, a written separation agreement, or a decree requiring a spouse to make payments for the support and maintenance of the other spouse (for example, a decree awarding temporary spousal support) [I.R.C. § 71(b)(2); see Estate of Felt v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1987-465 (effect of foreign divorce); cf. Landreth (Barbara A.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1997-169 (judge's handwritten docket sheet entry constituted "decree" for purposes of alimony tax treatment)]. The IRS has privately ruled that a written transcription of an oral stipulation made in court qualifies as a written instrument [Letter Rul. 8821069 (Mar. 1, 1988)]. Similarly, the Tax Court has held that a letter from one spouse's attorney containing a proposed spousal and child support offer, signed and returned by the other spouse, constituted a written separation agreement for purposes of federal tax law [see Azenaro v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1989-224 (applying former I.R.C. § 71(a)(2)); see also I.R.C. § 71(b)(2)(B)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Occasionally, especially in the early stages of a dissolution, the supporting spouse voluntarily makes substantial temporary support payments to the other spouse. Counsel should advise the paying spouse that voluntary payments will not qualify for income tax treatment as alimony. The spouses may be willing to execute a written agreement for temporary support, and in that case, the payments will be treated as alimony. However, the paying spouse then will be bound to make the payments as agreed. Also, the agreement may provide a guideline for a court order setting or modifying support. Commentary

by Ira H. Lurvey.

PRACTICE TIP:

It is also a good idea to obtain an order for pendente lite spousal support. In addition to unequivocally setting a specific commencement date for the prejudgment, separation-period spousal support, the IRS will treat such a stipulated order as presumptively valid; therefore, the order will avoid any questions that might be raised by a marital settlement agreement purporting to set pendente lite spousal support, particularly if such a document has been inartfully drafted by the parties [see Ewell v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1996-253 ; 71 T.C.M. 3134 ; Richardson v. Commissioner (1995) 70 T.C.M. 1390] . Further, the stipulated order removes any incentive the parties might otherwise have to prepare a marital settlement agreement immediately before the tax filing deadline, or to involve counsel or a tax preparer in the preparation or submission of an agreement that backdates the commencement of support payments. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

The label that the parties attach to payments required under their marital termination agreement is not controlling. Therefore, merely stating in the agreement that a particular payment is to be treated as alimony will be ignored by the IRS if the payment does not meet the requirements for alimony tax treatment [Heffron v. Commissioner T.C. Memo 1995-253 (payment of debts did not qualify as alimony, despite parties' label, because obligation did not cease on death or remarriage of supported spouse)]. Nor is the particular meaning of the term "alimony" under state law relevant if it is different from its meaning under federal tax law [Hoover v. Commissioner T.C. Memo 1995-183] .

If a state court rewords the provisions of a separation agreement in its divorce decree, the separation agreement may be superseded by the decree for purposes of determining whether payments properly constitute child support or alimony. In one case, for example, a divorce court reworded provisions of a separation agreement providing for family support (combined child and spousal support; see § 123.52[2]) to specify particular amounts for each type of support. The Tax Court held that the divorce decree superseded the agreement because the spouses intended that the agreement be merged into the decree, thereby making the child support amount nondeductible. The court noted, however, that even if no merger had occurred, the decree still would supersede the agreement because alimony tax treatment is precluded for amounts fixed as child support in a divorce or separation instrument, and fixing the amounts for child support in the decree "overrides the lack of specificity in the separation agreement" [Platt v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1985-592 ; see I.R.C. § 71(c)(1)]. For discussion of the limitations under current law imposed on deducting combined child and spousal support, see § 123.52.

PRACTICE TIP:

The critical step here, it would seem, is to be sure that the court does not rewrite or otherwise materially modify an agreement between the spouses addressing particular tax consequences that one or both of the spouses had in mind when making the agreement. Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

PRACTICE TIP: The risk of the final decree overriding the tax benefits contemplated in a pretrial agreement between the parties generally is not a problem. If the parties have provided for specific tax consequences of support in a marital settlement agreement or pretrial stipulated order, they will usually agree to a final decree containing consistent terms. The danger, if any, will more often lie with attorney oversights in consistency in drafting. If the dissolution matter proceeds to trial as a contested matter, however, counsel should be prepared to emphasize to the court the adverse tax consequences that will result from the rendering of a decree that departs from previous specific support agreements between the parties. In this regard, it is important to call the court's attention to the fact that family support remains an option under the statewide uniform child support guideline, and the court should not feel compelled by the guideline [see Fam. Code § 4066] to designate a specific amount for child support. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

Payments made to a supported spouse in anticipation that a court will retroactively order them do not qualify for alimony tax treatment. An amendment to a state court decree cannot be given retroactive effect for tax purposes unless the amendment merely corrects computational or clerical errors in the original order, or is a "nunc pro tunc" order that merely clarifies the intent of the court in the original order [Letter Rul. 8645072 (Nov. 7, 1986); Christoph v. United States (S.D. Ga 1995) 931 F. Supp. 1564; Johnson v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1989-415 ; see Zurn v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1996-386 (Tax Court honored state court order that retroactively ("nunc pro tunc") changed alimony award from $1.00, to $1,000, per month)]. In contrast, payments made according to the terms of a temporary support order that has been stayed may be subject to alimony tax treatment, depending on the legal effect of a stay on the support order in the jurisdiction involved [see LaBow v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1987-191 (stay did not render judgment ineffective under Connecticut law); see also Richardson v. Commissioner (1995) 70 T.C.M. 1390 (agreement that is unenforceable or invalidated does not change deductibility or inclusion of prior payments that otherwise qualify as alimony)].

Voluntary payments made under an oral agreement that is never incorporated into a divorce decree or reduced to writing do not qualify for alimony tax treatment, and neither income tax returns nor checks written to the supported spouse will suffice to constitute the necessary written agreement [see O'Donnell v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1991-74] . Further, a unilateral written statement that a person is willing to pay a certain sum as spousal support does not constitute a divorce or separation instrument. An agreement between the parties must be reduced to writing and signed by both parties [Mercurio v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1995-312] . Overpayments of amounts required by the written instrument are not deductible [see Ritchie v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1989-426] , and voluntary increases that maintain support at a fixed percentage of the payor's income are not deductible if the written instrument requires a lower dollar amount [see Ellis v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1990-456] .

[4] Payments to Third Parties

Payments to third parties qualify as alimony payments made on behalf of the payee-spouse if they are made under the terms of the divorce or separation instrument, or if they are made under a written request, consent, or ratification by the payee-spouse. The request, consent, or ratification must state that the parties intend the payment to be treated as an alimony or separate maintenance payment subject to Internal Revenue Code Section 71 [but see Heffron v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1995-253 (statement alone is insufficient if payment does not otherwise meet requirements of federal tax law)]. It must be received by the payor-spouse before the filing date of the payor's first tax return for the taxable year in which payment is made. To qualify, payment actually must be "on behalf" of the payee-spouse. For example, cash payments of the payee-spouse's rent, mortgage, tax, or tuition liabilities qualify [see §§ 123.242, 123.243]. Premiums paid by the payor-spouse for term or life insurance on the payor's life under the terms of a divorce or separation instrument also qualify as payments on behalf of the payee-spouse to the extent that the payee-spouse is the owner of the policy [see § 123.246]. Payments to maintain property owned by the payor-spouse and used by the payee-spouse (including mortgage payments, real estate taxes, and insurance premiums) are not properly deemed payments on behalf of a spouse [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q&A 6, 7; see Letter Rul. 8710089 (Mar. 11, 1987)(payments under temporary support order qualify for alimony tax treatment only to extent not used to maintain payor-spouse's property); see § 123.243].

However, the payor can deduct mortgage interest and taxes paid on jointly held property if paid with separate property even if he or she has a right to reimbursement [Ewell v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1996-253 ; 71 T.C.M. 3134] . Further, it should be made clear that the obligation to make the payments terminates on the death or remarriage of the spouse on whose behalf they are to be made [see Heffron v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1995-253 ; see also Ewell v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1996-253 ; 71 T.C.M. 3134 ; Israel v. Commissioner (1995) 70 T.C.M. 1037 ; [6], below].

[5] Spouses Not Members of Same Household[a] Legal Separation

In the case of an individual legally separated from his or her spouse under a decree of divorce or separate maintenance, the payment qualifies for alimony tax treatment only if the payor and payee are not members of the same household at the time the payment is made [I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(C)]. For purposes of this requirement, a dwelling unit formerly shared by both spouses is not considered as two separate households even if the separated spouses physically separate themselves within the dwelling unit. The separated spouses are not treated as members of the same household if one spouse is preparing to depart from the household of the other spouse on the date the payment is made, however, and he or she does depart no more than one month after that date [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q&A 9].

[b] Temporary Spousal Support

A payment of temporary spousal support under a written separation agreement or temporary support order qualifies for alimony tax treatment regardless of whether the spouses occupy the same household if the spouses are not legally separated under a decree of divorce or separate maintenance [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q&A 9; cf. Coltman v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1991-127 (under pre-1985 law, divorcing spouses must live in separate residences to qualify for alimony tax treatment)].

[6] No Liability After Payee-Spouse's Death

To qualify payments for alimony treatment, no liability to make any payments, whether in cash or property, must exist after the death of the payee-spouse [I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(D); see Sroufe v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1995-256 (alimony tax treatment denied because payments were required to be guaranteed and secured by payor, meaning that he would have been required to continue payments to payee's estate after her death); Stokes v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1994-456 (taxpayer denied alimony tax treatment because payments could have extended beyond wife's death and language in agreement showed specific intent that payments continue after wife's death)]. If the payor-spouse is required to make payments after the death of the payee-spouse, none of the payments (whether made before or after the death of the payee) can be treated as alimony [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q&A 10].

Termination of spousal support on the death of the supported spouse is achieved by operation of law in California unless the parties agree to the contrary [Fam. Code § 4337]. Under provisions of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 that were eliminated retroactively in the Tax Reform Act of 1986 [see Pub. L. No. 99-514, § 1881; see also 1987-1 C.B. 421, Notice 87-9; see § 123.51], the divorce or separation instrument was required to expressly state that the liability to pay support would terminate on the death of the recipient, otherwise the payment would not be deductible as alimony [Former I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(D), before amendment by Tax Reform Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-514, § 1843(b); see Letter Rul. 8551012 (Sept. 19, 1985)]. This requirement having been eliminated retroactive to the operative date of the Tax Reform Act of 1984, the failure to include such a provision in an instrument does not affect the deductibility of support payments [I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(D)]. Nevertheless, the provision may be added merely to clarify that all support obligations will terminate on the recipient's death and that the payments, therefore, are deductible [see I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(D)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Although not required under current law, inclusion in a written agreement or decree of a provision expressly stating that liability to pay support terminates on the payee's death safeguards the payor's right to deduction of support payments if the law changes in the future and issues of retroactivity arise.
Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

The requirement that liability for payment must terminate on the supported spouse's death establishes an objective test to distinguish spousal support from child support or property settlement payments, which are not contingent on the survival of the payee-spouse. To prevent violation of this rule, no liability to make payments must survive after the death of the payee-spouse as a substitute for pre-death payments that otherwise would qualify as alimony or separate maintenance payments. If liability to make substitute payments exists, none of the otherwise qualifying payments can be treated as alimony [see I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(D); Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q&A 13]. The divorce or separation instrument need not state, however, that no liability to make substitute payments exists [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q&A 13]. The determination as to whether post-death payments constitute substitute payments, and the amount of the pre-death payments for which they are a substitute, will depend on all of the facts and circumstances in each case [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q&A 14].

EXAMPLE:

Under the terms of a divorce decree, H is obligated to make annual spousal support payments to W of $30,000, terminating either on the expiration of six years or the death of W. W maintains custody of the couple's minor children. The decree provides that on the death of W, if there are minor children remaining, H will be obligated to make annual payments of $10,000 to a trust, the income and corpus of which are to be used for the benefit of the children until the youngest attains the age of majority.

H's liability to make $10,000 annual payments to the trust after W's death is a substitute for $10,000 of each $30,000 annual pre-death payment. In effect, the circumstances indicate that $10,000 of each annual pre-death payment is intended for child support rather than spousal support. Thus, only $20,000 of each $30,000 annual payment qualifies for alimony tax treatment [see Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q&A 14, Example 1].

EXAMPLE: Under the terms of a divorce decree, H is obligated to make annual spousal support payments to W of $30,000, terminating after 15 years or on the death of W. The divorce decree provides that if W dies before the expiration of the 15-year period, H will pay to W's estate the difference between the total amount that H would have paid had W survived and the amount actually paid. For example, if W dies at the end of the tenth year in which payments are made, H must pay $$150,000 = $450,000 - $300,000$ to W's estate.

H's liability to make a lump-sum payment to W's estate after her death is a substitute for the full amount of each $30,000 annual pre-death payment. In effect, the circumstances indicate that the annual payments are installment payments in satisfaction of W's property rights rather than spousal support. None of the annual payments can be treated as alimony. The result is the same if the lump sum payable at W's death is discounted by an appropriate interest factor to account for the prepayment [see Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q&A 14, Example 2].

Legislative history indicates that amounts payable under a life insurance contract on the life of the payee-spouse are not properly treated as a liability that would affect the status of other payments made by the payor-spouse [H.R. Rep. No. 432, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 1494-1497 (1984)].

§ 123.52 Alimony Compared to Other Payments

[1] Child Support

Alimony tax treatment does not apply to any part of any payment that under the divorce or separation instrument is payable for the support of the children of the payor-spouse [I.R.C. § 71(c)(1); Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1(e)]. Child support is neither deductible by the payor nor includible in the gross income of the payee. If any payment is less than the amount specified for child and spousal support in the divorce or separation instrument, only the amount of the payment in excess of the amount payable for child support may receive alimony tax treatment. For example, if the divorce decree specifies that $500 a month is to be paid for child support and $1,000 a month is to be paid for spousal support, and if only $1,200 is paid in a given month, then $500 is treated as child support and $700 may qualify for alimony tax treatment. If only $400 is paid, the entire amount is child support, and none of the payment is deductible by the payor [see I.R.C. § 71(c)(3); see also Blair v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1988-581 (reduced monthly payments to former spouse treated as child support despite contrary oral agreement)].

[2] Family Support

[a] Current and Prior Law Contrasted

"Family support" is a provision in an agreement between the spouses for the payment of combined child and spousal support without designating the amount to be paid for each [Fam. Code § 92; see Fam. Code § 3586]. The primary purpose behind a family support agreement is to obtain alimony tax treatment for payments that are, in fact, child support [see [1], above].

In construing prior law, the Supreme Court held that a payment was not to be treated as child support unless explicitly so designated in the divorce or separation instrument [Commissioner v. Lester (1961) 366 U.S. 299, 81 S. Ct. 1343, 6 L. Ed 2d 306 ; see, e.g., Walstatter v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1992-152 ; Libman v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo.

1990-629 (payee spouse required to treat pre-1984 award of "unallocated family support" as alimony despite 1988 modification referencing "child support"). Under this rule, taxpayers were able to disguise child support payments as spousal support and could obtain alimony tax treatment for all payments while providing for a cut-back in spousal support on the death or emancipation of a child. This treatment was attractive if the payor-spouse, as usually was the case, was subject to higher tax rates than the payee-spouse.

Current law greatly restricts, but does not completely eliminate, this potentially advantageous tax treatment of family support [see I.R.C. § 71(c)(2); see also [b]-[e], below]. Now, if an amount specified in the divorce or separation instrument will be reduced on the happening of a contingency relating to a child, such as attainment of a specified age, marriage, death, leaving school, or similar contingency, an amount equal to the amount of the reduction must be treated as fixed for child support [I.R.C. § 71(c)(2)(A); cf. Murphy (Ronald J.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1996-258 (payments of "family support" did not qualify for alimony tax treatment when payments might have continued after death of former wife)]. Although the intent is not specifically set forth in the statute, it is clear that only contingencies relating to a child of the payor-spouse, rather than a child of the payee alone, are intended [see Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(c), Q&A 16; cf. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1(e)].

EXAMPLE:

A divorce decree provides for spousal support payments of $1,500 a month. On the death or emancipation of the couple's minor child, however, the payments are to be reduced to $1,000 a month. The difference of $500 a month is treated as fixed for child support, and only $1,000 a month may qualify for alimony tax treatment [see I.R.C. § 71(c)(2)].

[b] Under Statewide Uniform Child Support Guideline

Under the statewide uniform child support guideline, orders and stipulations otherwise in compliance with the guideline may designate as "family support" an unallocated total sum for support of the spouse and any children without specifically labeling all or any portion as "child support," as long as the amount is adjusted to reflect the effect of additional deductibility. The amount of the order must be adjusted to maximize the tax benefits for both parents [Fam. Code § 4066; see Fam. Code § 4074]. For further discussion of family support under the guideline, see § 123.21[2].

[c] When Contingency Relates to Child

A contingency relates to a child of the payor-spouse if it depends on any event relating to that child, regardless of whether the event is certain or likely to occur. Such events include the child's attaining a specified age or income level, dying, marrying, leaving school, leaving the spouse's household, and gaining employment [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(c), Q&A 17].

The IRS has privately ruled that reductions for each week that a child has uninterrupted visitation with the noncustodial parent constitute reductions on the happening of a contingency relating to a child. As a result, the reduction in payments reduced the amount treated as alimony. Although the agreement did not allocate a portion of the fixed payments as child support, a provision that payments not be reduced by a specific amount for each week that the children visited with the noncustodial parent led the IRS to conclude that the total amount of the weekly reduction constituted child support, not deductible by the noncustodial parent nor taxable to the custodial parent [Letter Rul. 8746085 (Aug. 21, 1987)].

[d] Presumptions Regarding Reductions

A reduction in payments is treated as fixed for child support if the reduction will occur at a time that clearly can be associated with a contingency relating to a child [I.R.C. § 71(c)(2)(B)]. A reduction is presumed clearly associated with the happening of a contingency relating to a child of the payor under either of the following circumstances [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(c), Q&A 18].

- The payments are to be reduced no more than six months before or after the date the child is to attain the age of 18, 21, or the local age of majority.

- The payments are to be reduced on two or more occasions that occur no more than one year before or after a different child of the payor-spouse attains a certain age between the ages of 18 and 24, inclusive. The certain age must be the same for each child but need not be a whole number of years.

In all other situations, reductions will not be treated as clearly associated with the happening of a contingency relating to a child of the payor [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(c), Q&A 18; see Letter Rul. 9625050 (termination on "expected retirement date"); Letter Rul. 8820052 (Feb. 19, 1988)(alimony treatment allowed when presumptions are avoided)]. Even a dissolution judgment order allowing reduction of spousal support in an amount equal to any increase in court-ordered child support is not a contingency relating to the payor's child that precludes alimony tax treatment of spousal support payments under the order [Heller v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1994-463].

EXAMPLE:

H and W are divorced on July 1, 1992, when their children, C (born July 15, 1977) and D (born September 23, 1979) are 14 and 12, respectively. Under the divorce decree, H is to make alimony payments of $2,000 a month to W. The payments are to be reduced to $1,500 a month on January 1, 1998, and to $1,000 a month on January 1, 2002. On January 1, 1998, C will be 20 years, 5 months and 17 days old. On January 1, 2002, D will be 22 years, 3 months and 9 days old. Each of the reductions is to occur no more than one year before or after a different child of H attains the age of 21 years and 4 months. (Actually, the reductions are to occur no more than one year before or after C and D attain any of the ages 21 years, 3 months and 9 days through 21 years 5 months and 17 days.) Therefore, the reductions are presumed to be clearly associated with a contingency relating to C and D. Unless the presumption is rebutted, $1,000 a month must be treated as fixed for child support and will not receive alimony tax treatment [see Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(c), Q&A 18].

In contrast, in cases in which an original child support order was lacking, an amount fixed for spousal support under a marital settlement agreement remains fully deductible even though the agreement requires that the amount to be paid must be reduced if the supported spouse obtains a later order for a "contingency relating to a child" within the meaning of Internal Revenue Code Section 71(c). If a child support order were obtained under those circumstances, however, only the reduced spousal support, rather than the child support, would remain deductible [Letter Rul. 8633040 (Aug. 15, 1986)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Family support is an income tax planning tool that should be considered in all dissolutions. Child support can still be disguised as spousal support as long as everyone follows the rules. When parents are in different tax brackets, a family support order almost always increases the "pot" of net income. The benefits are available to taxpayers at all income levels, as long as everyone involved in the case (the spouses, the attorneys, and the court) can work together. Commentary by Hon. Thomas Murphy.

[e] Rebuttal of Presumptions

Either the IRS or the taxpayers may rebut the presumptions by showing that the time at which the payments are to be reduced was determined independently of any contingencies relating to the children of the payor. Thus, for example, the presumption may be rebutted by showing that spousal support payments are to be made for a period customarily provided in the local jurisdiction, such as a period equal to half of the duration of the marriage [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(c), Q&A 18; see ill v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1996-179 (payments were alimony as I.R.S. proved that termination date was determined independently)].

[3] Property Settlement Payments

Payments made by one spouse to another in settlement of property rights, unlike alimony payments, are not tax deductible to the payor [I.R.C. §§ 71, 215]. The characterization of payments as either alimony or property settlement is a question of federal, not state law. However, state law regarding property and support, and a state court's intent in ordering the payment, are relevant in making the determination [Prater v. C.I.R. (10th Cir. 1995) 55 F.3d 527, 529-530] .

In deciding whether payments are alimony or property settlement payments, the Tax Court in Shirley Jean Beard delineated the following factors [Beard v. Commissioner (1981) 77 T.C. 1275, 1284-1285] :

- (1) whether the parties intended the payments to divide assets;
- (2) whether the payee spouse relinquished property rights to receive the payments;
- (3) whether the payment amount is fixed and not contingent on events such as the payee's death or remarriage; and
- (4) whether the payments together with other property awarded to the payee spouse equal, more or less, one-half of the property acquired by the spouses during the marriage.

Although the case was decided under the versions of Internal Revenue Code Sections 71 and 215 before the Tax Reform Act of 1984, later Tax Court decisions have continued to consider at least some, if not most, of these factors in determining whether payments are alimony or nondeductible as property settlement payments [see, e.g., Walstatter v. Commissioner (1992) T.C. Memo 1992-152 (payment terms were more akin to property settlement than support despite judgment's characterization of payments as alimony); cf. Spector v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1996-298 (payments to ex-wife labelled as "alimony" were allocated between alimony and property settlement on basis of all facts and circumstances); Prater v. C.I.R. (10th Cir. 1995) 55 F.3d 527, 529 (similar, but not identical list of factors in 10th Circuit)].

§ 123.53 Rules to Prevent Front-Loading of Payments

[1] Purpose

The anti-front-loading rules are designed to prevent support payments from being structured in such a way that large payments are received in the first few years and greatly decreased thereafter. In the past property settlement payments were sometimes combined with support payments in this manner. The larger payments were designed to compensate the payee-spouse for a division of property and, by treating the property settlement payments as alimony, produce an overall tax advantage as between the two spouses.

Because there are other non-tax-reduction reasons for front-loading payments to a payee spouse, the anti-front-loading rules provide a safe harbor test for the decrease in alimony/support payments that may be made over the first three years. If payments decrease more than the safe harbor amount then the payor spouse must take the excess into income in the third post-separation year, and the payee spouse is allowed a deduction for the same amount [I.R.C. § 71(f)]. The safe harbor must be followed, however, because payor spouses who deduct alimony payments can be subjected to substantial penalties for understatement of tax if their payments are later found to be ineligible for alimony tax treatment [see Magnus v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1990-596 (25-percent penalty under former I.R.C. § 6661 for lump-sum payment not qualified under pre-1984 rules)].

[2] Post-Separation Years Defined

The "first post-separation year" is the first calendar year in which the payor spouse paid to the payee spouse alimony or separate maintenance payments to which Internal Revenue Code Section 71 applies. The second and third post-separation years are defined as the first and second succeeding calendar years, respectively [I.R.C. § 71(f)(6)].

[3] Excess Alimony Payments

Excess alimony payments in the first and second post-separation years will trigger recapture of alimony deductions in the third post-separation year [I.R.C. § 71(f)(1)]. For the first post-separation year, the excess payments are the amount, if any, by which the first-year payments exceed $15,000 plus the average of the following [I.R.C. § 71(f)(3)]: (1) the total payments made in the second post-separation year reduced by any excess payments for that year [I.R.C. § 71(f)(3)(B)(i)(I)]; and (2) the total payments made in the third post-separation year. Excess payments for the second post-separation year are the amount, if any, by which the total of second-year payments exceeds the sum of (1) $15,000 plus (2) the total third-year payments [I.R.C. § 71(f)(4)].

For the algebraically inclined: where Y1 = total year one spousal support payments; Y2 = year two; Y3 = year three; Y1x = year one excess; Y2x = year two excess; and R = amount recaptured, the computations may be expressed as follows:

$$\begin{aligned} R &= Y2x + Y1x \\ Y2x &= Y2 - (Y3 + 15,000) \\ Y1x &= \frac{(Y2 - Y2x) + Y3}{2} + 15,000 \end{aligned}$$

[4] Recapture Rule

Recapture is required if there are excess alimony payments. Excess alimony deductions must be recaptured and included in the payor spouse's gross income for the taxable year beginning in the third post-separation year [I.R.C. § 71(f)(1)(A), (2)]. The payee spouse is allowed a deduction for the amount of the excess payments in computing adjusted gross income for the taxable year beginning in the third post-separation year [I.R.C. § 71(f)(1)(B)].

EXAMPLE:

A payor spouse pays $50,000 in alimony in the first year and none in the second and third years. Although no second-year excess exists, the first-year excess must be recaptured. The excess amount included in the payor spouse's gross income for the third year is $35,000 = ($50,000 - 0) - $15,000. A corresponding deduction is allowed to the payee spouse for the same year [see H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 841, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. II-849 (1986); see also I.R.C. § 71(f)].

EXAMPLE: A payor spouse pays no support in the first year, $35,000 in the second year, and $10,000 in the third year. The payor spouse has no first-year excess. The payor spouse must include the second-year excess of $10,000 = ($35,000 - $10,000) - $15,000 in gross income for the third year [see H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 841, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. II-849 (1986); see also I.R.C. § 71(f)].

EXAMPLE: A payor spouse pays $50,000 support in the first year, $20,000 in the second year, and nothing in the third year. The payments generate both first-year and second-year excesses. In the second year, the amount of excess is $5,000 = ($20,000 - 0) - $15,000. To determine the first-year excess, the $5,000 second-year excess must be subtracted from the payor's $20,000 second-year payment, yielding $15,000. Thus, the average of the adjusted second-year payments and the third-year payments is $7,500 = ($15,000 + 0) / 2. The first-year excess is $27,500 = ($50,000 - $7,500) - $15,000. In the third year, the payor spouse must include $32,500 in gross income, namely, the $5,000 second-year excess amount plus the $27,500 first-year excess amount [see H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 841, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. II-849 (1986); see also I.R.C. § 71(f)].

[5] Exceptions to Recapture

There are three exceptions to the recapture rule. First, the recapture rule does not apply to payments made under a decree awarding temporary spousal support [I.R.C. § 71(f)(5)(B)]. Second, recapture is not required if payments cease because of the death of the payor or payee or because of the remarriage of the payee-spouse before the close of the third post-separation computation year [I.R.C. § 71(f)(5)(A); Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(d), Q&A 25].

EXAMPLE:

Under a divorce decree, W is required to make payments of $30,000 to H in each of the years 1990 through 1995. W makes a $30,000 payment in 1990 and a $15,000 payment in 1991. H remarries in 1991 and W's spousal support obligation ceases. The recapture rule does not apply for 1991 or any subsequent year [see I.R.C. § 71(f)(5)(A); Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(d), Q&A 25]. The duration of spousal support imposed by the decree is not significant for purposes of applying this exception to the recapture rule. The duration would be significant, however, in determining whether the decree met the requirements for alimony tax treatment under prior law, which imposed a "minimum-term" rule [see former I.R.C. § 71(f)(1); see [4], above].

The third exception to the recapture rule applies to payments made pursuant to a continuing liability to pay a fixed portion of the income from a business or property, or from compensation for unemployment or self-employment. Recapture does not apply to the extent that payments are made pursuant to such a fluctuating measure of liability beyond the payor-spouse's control [I.R.C. § 71(f)(5)(C)].

[6] Unplanned Events Triggering Recapture

The exceptions noted in [5], above, are the only recognized exceptions to the recapture rule. Regulations issued under prior law suggested that recapture may be triggered by a decline in payments for any other reason, including the payor's failure to make timely payments, a modification of the divorce or separation instrument, a reduction in the support needs of the payee, or a reduction in the ability of the payor to provide support [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(d), Q&A 25]. As a result of changes by the Tax Reform Act of 1986, however, which eliminated the "minimum-term" rule [see [4], above] and made other changes to the recapture rule [see [5], above], it is not clear whether all of the events suggested in the regulations would still trigger recapture.

PRACTICE TIP:

Counsel would do well to advise clients that recapture is a continuing possibility, even if recapture could not occur under the arrangement originally worked out in the divorce or separation instrument. When there may be a significant recapture problem if support is reduced, the payor asking for a modification may want to consider some other form of relief that minimizes or eliminates the problem of recapture. Counsel should be aware of the recapture rules and deal with them from the outset in planning what, if any, modification the payor should seek. Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

§ 123.54 Election to Forgo Alimony Tax Treatment

The spouses may designate in the divorce or separation instrument that payments that otherwise would qualify for alimony tax treatment are nondeductible by the payor and excludible from the gross income of the payee [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q&A 8; see I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(B)]. If the spouses have executed a written separation agreement, any writing signed by both spouses that expressly designates otherwise qualifying alimony or separate maintenance payments as nondeductible and excludible, and that refers to the written separation agreement, is sufficient to elect out of alimony tax treatment. If the spouses are subject to temporary spousal support orders, the designation must be made in the original or a subsequent temporary order. A copy of the instrument containing the designation of payments as nondeductible and excludible must be attached to the payee's first filed tax return for each year in which the designation applies [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q&A 8; see Richardson v. Commissioner (1995) 70 T.C.M. 1390].

§ 123.55 Payor Must Include Payee's TIN

The payor-spouse must include the payee's social security number on his or her tax return for the taxable year in which payment is made. Failure to comply with this requirement does not cause the deduction to be lost but does subject the payor to a $50 penalty. The penalty is waived, however, if the failure to comply was due to reasonable cause rather than willful neglect. A similar penalty is imposed on any spouse who fails to provide his or her tax identification number to the payor for reporting purposes [I.R.C. § 215(c); Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.215-1T, Q&A 1; see I.R.C. §§ 6723, 6724(a); former I.R.C. § 6676, repealed by Pub. L. No. 101-239, § 7711(b)(1)].

PRACTICE TIP:

The IRS began an Alimony Compliance Pilot Program in 1987, to identify taxpayers who have claimed alimony deductions but have failed to report the social security numbers of the recipients. A database is to be established to compare amounts deducted by payors to the amounts not reported by recipients.

§ 123.56 Income Tax Treatment of Spousal and Child Support Under California Law

California personal income tax law incorporates federal law [see § 123.50 [2]] in that qualifying spousal support/alimony payments are deductible by the payor-spouse and includible in the income of the payee-spouse [see Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 17081, 17201(b); I.R.C. §§ 71, 215; see also former Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 17090(b), 17201, 17205]. Until passage of 1987 legislation, California had not adopted the federal requirements for determining whether a particular payment qualifies for alimony tax treatment [see former Rev. & Tax. Code § 17090(a), repealed by Stats. 1987, ch. 1138]. Instead, California followed rules essentially the same as those that existed under federal law before the 1984 and 1986 amendments to Internal Revenue Code Section 71 [compare former Rev. & Tax. Code § 17090(b)-(e) with I.R.C. § 71, before amendment by Pub. L. No. 98-369, § 422].

California also incorporates federal law in that alimony tax treatment is not allowed to that part of a payment that is payable for the support of the children of the payor spouse [see I.R.C. § 71(c)(1); Rev. & Tax. Code § 17081; former Rev. & Tax. Code § 17090(c) (applying to "decree, instrument, or agreement")]. California law also incorporates Internal Revenue Code Section 71(c), including its specialized treatment of reductions in support related to contingencies associated with children [Rev. & Tax. Code § 17081; see § 123.52[2]].

§ 123.57 Alimony Trusts

[1] Nature and Purpose

A trust can be used to ensure that spousal support payments are made on time. In the absence of special rules applicable to alimony trusts, the supporting spouse would be required, under the grantor trust rules, to include in gross income the trust income paid to the supported spouse, because that income is used to satisfy the support obligation of the supporting spouse [I.R.C. §§ 677, 678; Treas. Reg. § 1.682(a)-1(a)(3)]. If the spouses are divorced or separated under a decree of divorce or separate maintenance or a written separation agreement, however, trust income that the supported spouse is entitled to receive is includible in his or her income, and not in the income of the supporting spouse, regardless of the grantor trust rules [I.R.C. § 682(a); cf. I.R.C. § 672(e)(2) (person legally separated from spouse under decree of divorce or separate maintenance not considered married for purpose of applying "spousal attribution" provisions of grantor trust rules)]. The supported spouse is treated as a beneficiary of the trust, subject to the rules generally applicable to trust beneficiaries [I.R.C. § 682(b)]. Thus, the supported spouse is taxable only on distributions from the trust made out of the trust's distributable net income and not out of trust corpus [I.R.C. §§ 652(a), 662(a)]. The tax character of the trust income distributed (for example, as capital gains, or tax-exempt income, and so forth) is retained in the hands of supported spouse [I.R.C. §§ 652(b), 662(b)]. No deduction is allowed to the supporting spouse for trust distributions included in the income of the supported spouse, because these amounts are not included in the supporting spouse's income in the first place and, therefore, do not need to be deducted [I.R.C. § 215(d); see Treas. Reg. § 1.682(a)-1(a)(3)].

A transfer of property to create the trust, in contrast to income derived from the trust, should be examined with an eye toward whether gain or loss must be recognized on the transfer. In general, transfers of property into an alimony trust [see I.R.C. § 682] may be made without recognition of gain or loss [see I.R.C. § 1041(a)], except to the extent that the sum of the liabilities assumed and the liabilities to which the property is subject exceeds the total adjusted basis in the property [see I.R.C. § 1041(e)] and as long as the property transferred in trust is not an installment obligation [I.R.C. §§ 453B(g), 1041(a)]. For a general discussion of the tax treatment of transfers of property between spouses, see Chapter 121, § 121.30.

[2] When Amount Fixed as Payable for Child Support

The tax treatment afforded alimony trusts is not available to the extent that the decree, written separation agreement, or trust instrument fixes an amount of the trust income as payable for child support. If trust income is less than the amount necessary to pay both spousal and child support, all income is first allocated to child support [I.R.C. § 682(a)]. Thus, trust income fixed for child support is taxable to the supporting parent under the grantor trust rules, as under the regular alimony rules [see § 123.52].

PRACTICE TIP:

Under the regular alimony rules as amended in 1984, the amount deemed to be fixed for child support includes any amount otherwise qualifying as alimony that will be reduced on the happening of a contingency related to a child [I.R.C. § 71(c)(2)]. Before enactment of that amendment, it was possible to achieve alimony tax treatment for child support by combining it with spousal support as a single obligation and causing the payments to be reduced on the death or emancipation of the child [see § 123.52]. The 1984 amendment to the alimony rules was not added to the alimony trust rules. As a result, it is unclear whether prior law still governs in this area. If it does, it appears that amounts received from a trust for child support are taxable to the supported spouse rather than the supporting spouse if they are not specifically designated as child support, even if they are to be eliminated upon the death or emancipation of the child. No reported decision, however, has interpreted the trust provisions in this manner after the 1984 amendment. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

[3] Effect and Applicable Date

The establishment of an alimony trust appears to permit the spouses to avoid the rules and requirements governing spousal support paid outside of a trust [see §§ 123.51, 123.52]. For example, there is no requirement that payments must terminate on the death of the payee-spouse or that payments must be made in cash [I.R.C. §§ 71(b), 682(a)]. In addition, no front-loading rules apply to alimony trusts [see I.R.C. §§ 71(f), 682(a); see § 123.53]. The sole requirement for alimony trust treatment is that the spouses be divorced or separated under a decree or written separation agreement [I.R.C. § 682(a)]. Current law applies to divorce or separation instruments executed after 1984 and also to instruments executed before 1985 if modified after 1984 to expressly provide for the applicability of current law [see § 123.51].

PRACTICE TIP:

It is not clear why there is a separate rule for dealing with alimony trusts. On the face of it, the same policies applicable to individual taxpayers should apply to trusts. Yet, since trusts apparently have escaped some of the more stringent tests now applied to individual taxpayers, trusts seem to fare better. When sufficient assets are available to establish an alimony trust, therefore, it may be wise to consider its use. Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

[4] Relevance of Prior Law

Prior law continues to govern arrangements under earlier instruments. Only two types of alimony trusts were recognized under prior law--Section 71 trusts and Section 682 trusts. The boundary line between these two trusts was unclear, but the regulations state that Internal Revenue Code Section 71 applied to a trust if the payments from the trust qualified for alimony tax treatment under then-current law [see § 123.57]. Section 682 trusts were those whose payments did not qualify for alimony tax treatment under Section 71. The regulations also indicate that Section 682 governed preexisting trusts that were created for another purpose but were used to fund support obligations at the time of divorce or separation. Section 71 trusts, on the other hand, were those created to fund spousal support [see Treas. Reg. § 1.682(a)-1(a)(2)].

The proper tax treatment of these two types of trusts also was unsettled. The IRS takes the position that all payments received from a Section 71 trust are taxable as ordinary income to the recipient spouse, regardless of whether they are made out of trust income or out of corpus [Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1(c)(3)]. Under Internal Revenue Code Section 682(b), however, which formerly specifically stated its application to both Section 71 trusts and Section 682 trusts, the recipient spouse is treated as a beneficiary of the trust and thus is taxable only to the extent that trust distributions are made out of distributable net income [see I.R.C. §§ 652(a), 662(a)]. Furthermore, the tax character of trust income is passed through to the recipient, as a trust beneficiary. Thus, for example, tax-exempt trust income remains tax-exempt in the hands of the recipient spouse [Ellis v. United States (6th Cir. 1969) 416 F.2d 894 ; see I.R.C. §§ 652(b), 662(b)].

§ 123.58 Estate and Gift Tax Consequences of Spousal Support

[1] Gift Tax

Payments made in satisfaction of support rights, whether in the form of periodic payments or as a lump sum, do not constitute taxable gifts. A taxable gift results, however, to the extent that the payments exceed the value of the support rights [Jones v. Commissioner (1943) 1 T.C. 1207 ; Rev. Rul. 68-379, 1968-2 C.B. 414]. If the spouses are still married at the time of the payment, the entire amount is exempted from gift tax if made in a form qualifying for the unlimited marital deduction, regardless of whether the amount of the payment exceeds the value of the support rights relinquished [see I.R.C. § 2523(a)], subject to special rules concerning disallowance of the deduction when the recipient spouse is not a United States citizen [see I.R.C. § 2523(i)].

The interests of all transferees must be valued for gift tax purposes, however, when one spouse gives up his or her support rights in exchange for a transfer benefiting that spouse and other adults. The value of the support rights offsets the value of what the spouse receives, but any value in excess of the support rights is deemed a gift. The taxation of any transfer to an adult other than the spouse is not ordinarily affected by the released support rights [Rev. Rul. 77-314, 1977-2 C.B. 349].

EXAMPLE:

H and W executed a separation agreement and were divorced three years later. W released support rights worth $50,000 in exchange for H's placing $100,000 in trust when the divorce became final. W had a life income interest worth $60,000, while the remainder, worth $40,000, belonged to an adult child. H is deemed to have made (1) a gift to W of $10,000 = $60,000 - $50,000 and (2) a gift to the child of $40,000 [see Rev. Rul. 77-314, 1977-2 C.B. 349].

If the value of the spouse's support rights exceeds the value of what the spouse receives, however, the excess may serve as consideration for the transfer to persons other than the spouse. The donor spouse must show that the other spouse specifically released the support rights to have the donor make the transfer to a third party. If the spouse releasing support rights actively bargained for the transfer, the value of the transferor's gift to the third party is reduced by the amount of the support rights that were released. The spouse releasing support rights, however, is deemed to have made a gift to the third party to the extent that support rights are released for that party's benefit [Rev. Rul. 79-363, 1979-2 C.B. 345 ; Rev. Rul. 77-314, 1977-2 C.B. 349]. If the spouse releasing marital rights did not intend to benefit a third party, the release of support rights is not deemed consideration for a transfer to the third party. If one spouse accepts less than the value of his or her support rights from the other spouse, a gift to the donor spouse results [Rev. Rul. 77-314, 1977-2 C.B. 349]. An exchange of support rights in violation of public policy results in the transfer of property being deemed a gift [Ellis v. Commissioner (1968) 51 T.C. 182 , aff'd, (9th Cir. 1971) 437 F.2d 442].

[2] Estate Tax

The same rule of nontaxability that applies for purposes of the gift tax [see [1], above] applies also for purposes of the estate tax. Claims for support of the surviving spouse or former spouse are deductible from the decedent's gross estate [see I.R.C. § 2053(a)(3)]. Because the obligation of support exists only during the payor's life, however, the deduction is allowed only to the extent that payments made during life were less in the aggregate than what the payee-spouse was entitled to receive under state law [Rev. Rul. 71-67, 1971-1 C.B. 271 ; see Estate of Fenton v. Commissioner (1978) 70 T.C. 263 ; Rev. Rul. 68-379, 1968-2 C.B. 414]. Similarly, when a payment is made out of an estate to a former spouse for support rights, consideration for the payment exists only to the extent that the former spouse forwent support payments during his or her life. Thus, a deduction from the gross estate is allowed only to the extent of forgone support payments [Estate of Scholl v. Commissioner (1987) 88 T.C. 1265 (payment to decedent's former wife); cf. Estate of Nesselrodt v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1986-286 (divorce decree provided for payment of decedent's obligation in installments; only present value of installments on date of death was allowed as deduction even though estate paid out full amount of all future payments)].

When payments required to be made under the terms of a divorce decree are to continue until the death or remarriage of the former spouse, the amount of the deduction is computed by using actuarial tables based on the probability of death [Estate of Maresi v. Commissioner (1946) 6 T.C. 582 , aff'd, (2d Cir. 1946) 156 F.2d 929]. When support payments required under a separation agreement are to be paid in part by a trust set up by the decedent, the amount of the deduction is the value of the remaining payments actuarially computed less the value of the trust assets [Sherman v. United States (5th Cir. 1974) 492 F.2d 1045].

All amounts passing to the surviving spouse in a form qualifying for the unlimited marital deduction are deductible from the decedent's gross estate if the spouses are still married at the time of death [see I.R.C. §§ 2056(d), 2056A]. Special rules disallow the marital deduction for gifts to surviving spouses who are not United States citizens, unless a prescribed trust is used. The gift tax marital deduction for transfers of benefits under a joint and survivor annuity has been extended to include such gifts to noncitizen spouses [I.R.C. § 2056(d)].

§ 123.200 Basic Provision for Periodic Payment of Child Support

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is the basic provision requiring one parent to make periodic payments of child support to the other. This provisions will be used in nearly all support agreements. The most common payment period is monthly, although some shorter period may be used to correspond to the obligor's pay period, particularly if an earnings assignment order will be served and used to obtain direct payment from the obligor's employer.

Use of a periodic-payments clause, alone, in a support agreement may not pass judicial scrutiny unless the basis for the amount of support to be paid can be determined and compared with the amount that would be due under the statewide uniform child support guideline [see Fam. Code § 4055]. Therefore, the selected provision should be supplemented with the appropriate information and data [see §§ 123.201-123.205], although it might be set forth in the court's findings as required by Family Code Section 4056, rather than in the agreement itself.

This form contains optional language designed to terminate the support payments on the happening of specified events that will terminate the duty of support. For alternative and additional termination provisions, see § 123.212.

§ 123.201 Amount of Child Support Under Statewide Uniform Guideline Formula

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, sets forth the amount of child support as computed under the formula of the statewide uniform child support guideline [see Fam. Code § 4055(a)], and the numerical components used in the formula to obtain the number [see Fam. Code § 4055(b)]. This form is not required in all agreements. However, the court may not approve an agreement for an amount of support below the formula amount unless the parties have included provisions complying with Family Code § 4065 [see § 123.202]. Further, the court is required to make written findings regarding the amount that would have been ordered under the formula if the amount actually ordered differs from the formula amount [Fam. Code § 4056(a)(1)]. Therefore, the parties may wish to include this provision in their agreement. Alternatively, the parties may wish to attach a computer printout of the numbers generated by running a child support computer software program [see Fam. Code § 3830]. This form should not be used with regard to family support [see §§ 123.12, 123.21[2]].

The variables in the formula are the net monthly income of both parents (variables HN and TN) [see Fam. Code §§ 4055(b)(1)(C), (E); 4058, 4059], the K factor, or percentage of parental income to be allocated to child support [see Fam. Code § 4055(b)(1)(B), (3)], and the H factor, or approximate percentage of time that the higher earning parent has primary physical responsibility for the children [see Fam. Code § 4055(b)(1)(D); see DaSilva v. DaSilva (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1030, 1033-1035, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 59 (for purposes of calculating "H" factor, time child is not physically with either parent may be credited to parent who is primarily responsible for child during that time)]. If neither parent has primary physical responsibility for the child--for example, if an adult child has moved away to college--the formula, by its own terms, is inapplicable [Edwards v. Edwards (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 136, 143-144, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 458]. The formula, and these factors, are considered in detail in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 41, Child Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

An additional factor under the guideline is the multi-child multiplier [see Fam. Code § 4055(b)(4)]. For a form that involves allocation of support among more than one child under the guideline, see § 123.211.

Amount of Support Under Statewide Guideline Formula

_____. The parties affirm that the amount of support that would be due for their child under the statewide uniform child support guideline formula is $ _____ per month, payable by _____ [e.g., Mother] to _____ [e.g., Father]. This amount has been computed based on the following numerical data:

1. Formula variable HN, the

2. Formula variable TN, the parties total net monthly disposable income, is $

_____ ;

3. Formula variable H, the approximate percentage of time that the _____ [higher earner parent, e.g., mother will have/has primary physical responsibility for the children is _____ percent;

4. Formula variable K, the percentage of parental income allocated to child support, is _____ percent;

§ 123.202 Stipulation to Child Support Below Guideline Formula Amount

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, includes the language required by Family Code Section 4065 if the parties are stipulating to an amount of child support below the amount computed under the statewide uniform child support guideline formula [see § 123.11[1]]. In such a case, this form is required even if the form in § 123.201 setting forth the amount of support as computed under the formula is not included in the agreement.

If the parties are agreeing to below formula support, they may still be stipulating to support under the guideline if they agree that one of the rebuttal factors in Family Code § 4057(b) applies, and that support should be lower for this reason. In such a case, the parties should combine this form with the appropriate form in § 123.204 regarding rebuttal factors.

Declaration for Below Formula Child Support

_____. The parties recognize that the amount of child support required under this agreement is less than the amount that would be payable under the statewide uniform child support formula. In this regard, the parties declare all of the following:

- (1) Both parties are fully informed of their rights concerning child support;
- (2) Each freely assents to the child support provisions of this Agreement without coercion or duress;
- (3) The Agreement is in the best interests of the children involved;

(4) The needs of the children will be adequately met by the stipulated amount; and

(5) The right to support has not been assigned to the county under Welfare and Institutions Code Section 11477, and no public assistance application is pending.

34-123 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 123.203

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.

§ 123.203 Computation of Net Income

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in § 123.203[2] and [3] illustrate some of the ways in which the parties may be able to stipulate as to how net monthly disposable income is to be computed under the statewide uniform child support guideline [see Fam. Code § 4055(b)(1)(C), (E)]. These provisions are useful to set forth the circumstances on which the agreement and resulting child support order are based, so that it may be more easily determined in the future whether there has been a change of circumstances supporting modification. Also, some such provisions can be used to resolve potential future disputes as to how net income is to be computed. The form in § 123.203[4] sets forth the resulting gross and net monthly income figures for both parents.

The guideline sets forth rules for what is to be included in gross income [see Fam. Code § 4058], and what deductions are allowed to determine net income [see Fam. Code § 4059; see also Fam. Code §§ 4070-4073 (hardship deduction)]. Parents probably cannot stipulate to ignore these rules entirely; for example, a stipulation that bonus and overtime income will not be considered would probably not be approved by the court because it would deprive the child of his or her right to support commensurate with the parents' standard of living. However, there are a number of different ways in which the parties may stipulate as to how these rules are to operate.

One possibility is simply to stipulate that a particular source of income or allowable deduction exists and its amount. The first alternative form in both § 123.203[2] and [3] exemplify this kind of provision.

Another possibility is to stipulate with regard to a matter that is discretionary under the guideline or cases interpreting the guideline. For example, whether the cash value of employment benefits or self-employment benefits will or will not be considered as income is left to the discretion of the court by the guideline [see Fam. Code § 4058(a)(3)]. Allowance of job-related expenses as a deduction from income is similarly discretionary [see Fam. Code § 4059(f)]. Also, the court has discretion to treat recurrent gifts as income for purposes of calculating child support [In re Marriage of Alter

(2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 718, 736-737, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 849 (trial court properly treated monthly $6,000 gifts received by obligor parent from his mother as income for purposes of calculating obligor's child support obligation)].

A third possibility is to stipulate as to a matter that is not specifically addressed in the guideline or in cases interpreting the guideline [see, e.g., Asfaw v. Woldberhan (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1407, 1417, 1425-1426, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 323 (depreciation of rental property, although not expressly mentioned in Fam. Code §§ 4058 and 4059, is not deductible from spouse's annual gross income for purposes of calculating child support)]. While the guideline considers income from whatever source derived [see Fam. Code § 4058(a)], it may not be clear what is income and what is an employment benefit. For example, earnings that are sheltered in a voluntary deferred-income device, such as an IRA (individual retirement account), an employer program under Internal Revenue Code Section 401(k), or a tax-deferred annuity might be treated as either [cf. Fam. Code § 4059(b) (FICA deduction allowed or equivalent amount for person not subject to FICA)]. Earnings that are not actually received by the parent are obviously not available for the support of children; on the other hand, such a voluntary plan is subject to potential abuse to shelter income not only from taxes but also from child support if allowed as a deduction from income. One of the alternative forms in § 123.203[2] allows each party to shelter up to a fixed percent of gross income in a deferred-earnings financial device, such as an IRA, a 401k plan, a tax-deferred annuity, or other such device.

As another example, the parties may wish to make a stipulation regarding the proceeds of a spouse's pending or completed personal-injury claim against a third party. In the absence of an agreement between the spouses, the entirety of an unallocated personal-injury settlement or award, whether payable as a lump sum or in periodic annuity payments, will not be treated as income for purposes of computing child support. In contrast, if the personal-injury verdict or settlement is apportioned among the various elements of damages, or if the spouse seeking an allocation presents sufficient evidence to support a rational apportionment, the portion of the verdict or settlement that represents compensation for lost income and earning capacity may be considered income available for the payment of child support [In re Marriage of Rothrock (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 223, 230-235, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 881 ; In re Marriage of Heiner (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1514, 1520-1526, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 730] . Presumably, an agreement between the spouses allocating the proceeds of the personal-injury claim would constitute sufficient evidence to support a rational apportionment of an otherwise unallocated damages award.

Such a voluntary tax shelter should be distinguished from the deduction allowed for Social Security (FICA) or for amounts used to secure retirement or disability benefits for a parent whose employment is not within the Social Security System. This deduction is allowed under the guideline up to the amount allowed under FICA [see Fam. Code § 4059(b)]. Often, such excluded employment is subject to its own mandatory retirement plan.

[Existence of item of income affirmed:]

_____ [e.g., Mother] affirms that she/he is receiving income in the form of _____ [e.g., spousal support from a prior spouse] in the amount of $_____ per month. This income has been included in determining the amount of child support provided for in this agreement. [Recovery on personal-injury claim:]

_____ [e.g., Father] has received an unallocated lump sum of $_____ pursuant to _____ [e.g., final judgment on or settlement of] a personal-injury claim in _____ [identify personal-injury case by title, court, and docket number]. § 123.204 Rebuttal Factors Under Guideline

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[6], below, affirm that the various rebuttal factors under the statewide uniform child support guideline apply to either increase or decrease support. Under the guideline, the amount of support computed under the guideline's formula is presumptively the amount that should be ordered by the court [see Fam. Code § 4057(a)]. This evidence may then be rebutted by evidence that one of the rebuttal factors set forth in Family Code Section 4057(b) is applicable to the parents' situation.

The first rebuttal factor is the fact that the parents have agreed to a different amount without expressly directing the reasons for the agreement [Fam. Code § 4057(b)(1); see Fam. Code § 4065]. This factor must be addressed by use of the form in § 123.202. The forms in this section address the other rebuttal factors.

Another rebuttal factor is for cases in which the children have special medical or other needs that could require child support greater than the formula amount [Fam. Code § 4057(b)(5)(C)]. Note that a different statute in the guideline permits additional child support amounts for costs related to the educational or other special needs of the children [Fam. Code § 4062(b)(1)]. Form [4], below, provides for special medical needs as a rebuttal factor, and the form in § 123.205[5] provides for special educational needs as an additional child support amount. However, there does not appear to be any real substantive difference between a rebuttal factor for higher support and an additional child support amount. Therefore, any special need may be characterized as either, and either kind of form may be used in the case of a child with a special need.

Another rebuttal factor broadly addresses "special circumstances in the particular case." Certain such special circumstances are enumerated, although the list is not meant to be exclusive [see Fam. Code § 4057(b)(5)]. One court called on to construe this provision has done so broadly, approving consideration of high consumer debt as a special circumstance [see County of Lake v. Antoni (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1102, 1105-1106, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 804].

[2] Deferred Sale of HomeRebuttal Factors Under Guideline--Deferred Sale of Home

Rebuttal Factor; Deferred Sale of Home

_____. The amount of child support provided for in this Agreement is less than the presumptively correct amount under the statewide uniform child support guideline's formula [as set forth in paragraph ____] because the sale of the family home has been deferred under Family Code Section 3800 et seq. and the _____ [payee parent, e.g., Mother] and the child will continue to reside in the home. The amount of support has been reduced by $_____ per [e.g., month], which amount does not exceed the amount by which the fair rental value of the residence [$_____] exceeds the total of the mortgage payments, property taxes, and homeowners' insurance [$_____].

[3] Extraordinarily High IncomeRebuttal Factors Under Guideline--Extraordinarily High Income

Rebuttal Factor; Extraordinarily High Income

_____. The amount of child support provided for in this Agreement is less than the presumptively correct amount under the statewide uniform child support guideline's formula [as set forth in paragraph ____] because the _____ [payor parent, e.g., father] has extraordinarily high income, and the amount determined under the formula would exceed the reasonable needs of the child.

[4] Shared Physical Custody; Disparate Costs of HousingRebuttal Factors Under Guideline--Shared Physical Custody; Disparate Costs of Housing

Rebuttal Factor; Disparate Costs of Housing

_____. The amount of child support provided for in this Agreement is [less than or more than] the presumptively correct amount under the statewide uniform child support guideline's formula [as set forth in paragraph ____] because the parties have substantially equal periods of primary physical responsibility for the children, but substantially different costs of housing. [As set forth in paragraph ____ of this Agreement,] Father has primary physical responsibility for the child approximately [number should be reasonably close to 50] percent of the time, and Mother has primary physical responsibility for the child approximately [100 minus father's percent] percent of the time. Father's [specify housing costs, e.g., payments for mortgage, property taxes, insurance, and home maintenance] are approximately $_____ per [e.g., month], which is approximately ____ percent of his net income. Mother's [specify housing costs, e.g., rental payments] are approximately $_____ per [e.g., month], which is approximately ____ percent of her net income. Each parent affirms that the other's housing costs are reasonable in light of the needs of the child.

[5] Special Medical NeedsRebuttal Factors Under Guideline--Special Medical Needs

Rebuttal Factor; Special Medical Needs

_____. The amount of child support provided for in this agreement is more than the presumptively correct amount under the statewide uniform child support guideline's formula [as set forth in paragraph ____] because _____ [name of child] has special medical needs that require additional expenses. These medical needs are _____. [specify, e.g., the need for trained professional nursing care due to his epileptic condition between the hours of 3:00 p.m., when school is out, until 5:30 p.m. every day, when the mother is available to provide this care]. [Add if desired: The current monthly cost required to meet this need is $_____.]

Rebuttal Factor; Special Circumstances

_____. The amount of child support provided for in this Agreement is [less than or more than] the presumptively correct amount under the statewide uniform child support guideline's formula [as set forth in paragraph ____] because _____ [specify special circumstance in case not otherwise provided for in guideline, e.g., the father must make monthly payments of approximately $_____ per month on his credit cards and revolving charge accounts for reasonable costs incurred in providing for the reasonable needs of his household].

PART IV. FORMS
A. Child Support Provisions

34-123 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 123.205

§ 123.205 Additional Child Support Amounts Under Guideline

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms set forth in [2]-[6], below, are provisions for the allocation of additional child support amounts provided for under the statewide uniform child support guideline [see Fam. Code § 4062]. Fam. Code § 4062 sets forth four categories of expenses that the court must or may order as additional child support amounts. The parties, of course, may agree to treat other expenses as additional child support.

Fam. Code § 4061(a) provides for an equal sharing of these amounts between parents unless a parent requests a different apportionment and presents evidence demonstrating that a different apportionment would be more appropriate [see In re Marriage of Fini (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 1033, 1039-1040, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 749 (whether to make different apportionment is within discretion of court, at least if parents' respective incomes are not greatly divergent)]. If this burden is met, Fam. Code § 4061(b) essentially provides for apportionment according to the respective incomes of the parents, after the basic child support obligation under the guideline's formula has been computed. There would seem to be no reason why an equal apportionment of any additional costs should be appropriate if the parents have significantly different incomes. The form in [2], below is a stipulation that the percentage allocation under the guideline is to apply, rather than equal division.

Designation of an expense as additional child support should be undertaken with caution. The result may be to convert a conventional debt into a "domestic support obligation," which is not dischargeable in bankruptcy [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5); see also 11 U.S.C. § 101(14A) ("domestic support obligation" includes debt in nature of alimony, maintenance, or support of bankruptcy debtor's spouse, former spouse, child, or child's parent under separation agreement, divorce decree, or property settlement agreement)].

This concern is particularly acute with regard to uninsured health care costs, which are a mandatory child support add-on to the extent that they are "reasonable" [see for in [4], below]. A child might incur catastrophic uninsured health care costs, which might be rendered nondischargeable in bankruptcy with regard to either parent by this provision of the child support guideline. For this reason, the clause makes labelling payments toward uninsured medical costs as additional child support optional. Payment of medical expenses, uninsured and otherwise, is discussed in more detail in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 41, Child Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

The medical expense income tax deduction may also be a consideration in allocating the cost of uninsured medical expenses [see I.R.C. § 213]. For discussion, see § 123.40[2].

Forms [3]-[6] include optional language allowing for payment directly to providers. At least with regard to uninsured medical expenses, the court would seem to have the authority to order payment directly to the provider [see Fam. Code § 4063(b)]. 1994 legislation repealed a provision that expressly allowed direct payment to providers of all child-support add-ons under Fam. Code § 4062 [see Stats. 1994, ch. 466, § 2, repealing former Fam. Code § 4063 and replacing it with new version limited to medical expenses]. Whether this repealer was intended to prohibit the payment of child support in the form of direct payments to providers is not clear. The court in a dissolution proceeding has general authority to order either parent to pay an obligation, or any portion thereof, directly to a creditor if the court determines that the payment would benefit a minor child of the parties [Fam. Code § 2023; see Fam. Code § 2000 (provision limited to proceedings for dissolution of marriage, legal separation, and nullity of marriage)]. The general provision would allow direct-payment orders under the court's jurisdiction to divide community debts, but would not necessarily provide for a child support credit for payments made to providers, such as for child care, on an ongoing basis. Nevertheless, nothing prohibits the parties from agreeing to such a manner of payment of support.

Allocation of Additional Child-Related Costs

_____. The parties agree that the costs of _____ [specify, e.g., child care] shall be allocated between them according to their respective net incomes as set forth in Family Code Section 4061(b)-(d), rather than equally. Under their current circumstances, the costs are allocated _____ percent to Father and _____ percent to Mother. § 123.206 Health Care Coverage

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[5], below, represent various provisions for use in allocating the cost of health care coverage for the children of the relationship. In any child support proceeding, the court must consider the parties' health insurance coverage [Fam. Code § 4006]. Health insurance coverage must be ordered to be maintained for a dependent child by either or both parents if it is available at no cost or at reasonable cost to a parent. Health insurance coverage is rebuttably presumed to be reasonable in cost if it is employment-related group health insurance or other group health insurance, regardless of the service delivery mechanism [see Fam. Code § 3751(a)(2)]. If the court determines that health insurance coverage is not available at no cost or at a reasonable cost, the court's order for support must require that health insurance coverage be obtained if it becomes available at no cost or at a reasonable cost [Fam. Code § 3751(b)]. The court's order for support must also require the parent who, at the time of the order or subsequently, provides health insurance coverage for the child seek continuation of coverage for the child after attainment of the limiting age for a dependent child, if the child continues to be dependent on the parent and has a physically or mentally disabling injury, illness, or condition [Fam. Code § 3751(c); see Health & Safety Code § 1373; Ins. Code §§ 10277, 10278].

Assuming that the requisite coverage is available, a provision requiring maintenance of coverage for the benefit of the children for whom support is required should be included in an agreement for child support. The cost of coverage is treated as a deduction from income under the statewide uniform child support guideline [see Fam. Code § 4059(d)]. Health insurance coverage is broadly defined under the Family Code [see Fam. Code § 3750; § 123.22[1]]. It includes vision care and dental care coverage, whether a part of existing health insurance coverage or issued as a separate policy or plan [see Fam. Code § 3750(a)]. It also includes all kinds of health care delivery systems, including health maintenance organizations (HMO's) [see Fam. Code § 3750(b)].

Form [2] requires that the child be enrolled in one or both parents' employer-provided health coverage plans. The court is then to issue a "qualified medical child support order" (QMCSO) under ERISA (the Employee Retirement Income Security Act), which will require the plan to enroll the child as a beneficiary in the plan [see 29 U.S.C. § 1169(a)].

Health care coverage is discussed in more detail, and a form for a QMCSO is provided, in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 41, Child Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

§ 123.207 Child Support as Percent of Obligor's Income

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a child support provision in which child support is fixed as a percentage of the income of the supporting parent, with a guaranteed minimum amount set at that percent of current income. It may be used instead of a fixed amount of support as provided in § 123.200.

This type of provision is designed to keep pace with changes in the supporting spouse's ability to pay child support without the need for future modification proceedings. The parents may select any percentage of their choosing; however, the statewide uniform child support guideline sets forth the statutory percentages at different income levels [see Fam. Code § 4055(a), (b)(1)(B), (3) (formula variable K represents percent of both parents' income to be allocated for child support)].

Under the guideline, any change in either parent's income will produce a change in the amount of child support under the guideline's formula [see Fam. Code § 4055(a), (b)(1)(E) (formula variable TN represents sum of both parents' net incomes)]. Therefore, this kind of provision would only conform to the guideline as long as the obligee parent's income does not change, which will be the case only if he or she has no or very minimal income. It will also conform only as long as the parties time-share arrangement does not change, as any significant increase or decrease in the time that the obligor parent spends with the child will also produce a change in the support due under the formula [see Fam. Code § 4055(a), (b)(1)(D) (formula variable H represents higher earner's physical custodial time)]. Of course the court always has the power to modify child support, so this provision may be used subject to potential modification should the obligee parent's income or the parents' time share arrangement change significantly in the future [see Fam. Code § 3651(a); In re Marriage of Alter (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 718, 726-730, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 849 (court always has power to modify child support order, upward or downward, regardless of parents' agreement to contrary)].

Another disadvantage of this type of form is that it is probably impossible for an enforceable earnings assignment order to be issued to the obligor parent's employer [see Fam. Code § 5230(a) (whenever court orders party to pay amount for child support, earnings assignment order must be issued)]. Therefore, its use is most appropriate for a self-employed obligor with fluctuating income. Earnings assignments are discussed in detail in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 141, Special Remedies for Enforcement of Support (Matthew Bender).

§ 123.208 Cost-of-Living Increase

The form in [2], below, is a provision for a cost-of-living increase. Its purpose is to allow for future increases in support without modification proceedings.

A cost-of-living clause is based on the view that child-support is need-based. Under the statewide uniform child support guideline, need is not the focus. Rather, child support is viewed more as the child's entitlement to a certain percentage of parental income, regardless of the cost of living [see Fam. Code § 4053]. If income goes up, then support should go up, regardless of whether the child (or the payee parent) can establish increased needs. Conversely, the mere fact that the cost of living has risen does not support an increase in support absent a concomitant increase in the parent's ability to pay. Nevertheless, the parties may wish to agree to such a clause if parental income is adequate and predictable, particularly if the payor parent is reasonably likely to receive cost-of-living increases in earnings.

§ 123.209 Percent Increase in Support Based on Obligor's Income

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a child support provision that requires a percentage increase in child support whenever there is an increase in the annual income of the obligor parent. This provision avoids frequent requests to the court for modification because of changed circumstances.

This provision is similar to setting support as a fixed percentage of income [see § 123.207]. However, it begins with a fixed amount due periodically and merely provides for an additional percent of increased income. Therefore, it is to be used in conjunction with, and not instead of, the provision in § 123.200.

It is, however, subject to difficulties under the statewide uniform child support guideline if there are substantial changes in either the obligee parent's income or the parents' time-share arrangement [see Fam. Code § 4055(a), (b)(1)(D), (E)]. For discussion, see § 123.207[1].

The base fixed amount is undoubtedly subject to enforcement by earnings assignment, but it is unlikely that an earnings assignment order can be structured to provide for percent increase [see Fam. Code § 5230(a), see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 141, Special Remedies for Enforcement of Support (Matthew Bender)].

§ 123.210 No Current Child Support Order Appropriate

The form in [2], below, is a provision stating that no child support order is appropriate in light of the current situation of the parties and the children. The use of such a provision will be rare, and parents who agree to such a provision should expect heightened judicial scrutiny of their agreement before it is approved by the court. Any such provision should be supported with extremely detailed Income Declarations [see Cal. Judicial Council Form FL-150]. For an illustrated version of that form, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 221, Dissolution of Marriage Procedure § 221.332 (Matthew Bender).

The statewide uniform child support guideline operates off of two primary factors; parental income, and custodial time-share [see Fam. Code § 4055]. If both of these factors are equal, that is, if both parents have approximately equal net incomes as defined by the guideline [see Fam. Code §§ 4058, 4059], and they have approximately equal periods of actual physical custody, then the guideline's formula will not generate a child support obligation to be paid by one parent to the other. Similarly, the formula will produce no child support obligation as long as the higher earner's custodial time equals his or her percent of total net income. For example, if the higher earning parent has 60 percent of total parental net income and primary physical responsibility for the children 60 percent of the time, CS (child support) will be zero under the formula. This dynamic of the guideline is explained in detail in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 41, Child Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

Note that the guideline may produce a child support amount even if the noncustodial parent has no income. If the custodial parent has some income, then the guideline will produce a child support amount to be paid by the custodial parent to the noncustodial parent unless the noncustodial parent has no time-share [see Fam. Code § 4055(b)(5)]. In such a case, the parties may wish to use this provision to express their intent that the custodial parent need not pay any support to the noncustodial parent. Such a provision is likely to obtain court approval unless the economic circumstances of the parties are greatly divergent, the noncustodial parent needs financial assistance to exercise visitation, and the noncustodial parent is acting in good faith. An example in which support would be expected is if the higher earner is the primary custodial parent while the other is pursuing education or job training.

If neither parent has primary physical responsibility for the child--for example, if an adult child has moved away to college--the statewide uniform child support guideline, by its own terms, is inapplicable [Edwards v. Edwards (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 136, 143-144, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 458] .

No Current Child Support Order Appropriate

Child Support

_____. Based on the custodial time-sharing arrangements as set forth in this Agreement, and the current financial status of the parties, neither party shall be obligated, at this time, to pay child support to the other party. Mother shall pay all of the regular expenses for the child while the child is in her custody, and Father shall pay all of the regular expenses for the child while the child is in his custody. The Court shall reserve jurisdiction to make an appropriate child support order in the future on proper application by either party.

§ 123.211 Allocation of Support Among Two or More Children

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, gives effect to the statutory method of allocating child support if there is more than one child who is to be supported under the agreement and resulting court order. Absent such an allocation, the obligor parent cannot, without court modification, proportionately reduce support payments as each child reaches the age of majority [Spivey v. Furtado (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 259, 262-263, 51 Cal. Rptr. 362] .

Under the statewide uniform child support guideline, unless the court orders otherwise, the amount of support for the youngest child is the amount of support for one child, and the amount for the next youngest child is the difference between that amount and the amount for two children. There are then to be similar allocations for additional children [Fam. Code § 4055(b)(8)].

The reason for this manner of allocation is that, as a general rule, certain costs, such as housing and utilities, do not vary proportionately with the number of children. For example, housing for two children is not twice as expensive as housing for one. Therefore, under the statewide uniform child support guideline, support for two children is not twice the amount of support for one. The guideline includes a multi-child multiplier table for up to 10 children [see Fam. Code § 4055(b)(4)].

Consequently, when the oldest child reaches the age of majority or otherwise is no longer entitled to child support [see Fam. Code §§ 3900, 3901], support should not be reduced by the fraction corresponding to the number of children supported by the order (for example, an order supporting two children should not be reduced by half). Rather, the order should be reduced only by the incremental percentage decrease in the multi-child multiplier (e.g., if four children are supported by the order and the oldest turns 18, support should be reduced by the amount by which 2.3 times the one-child amount exceeds two times that amount) [see Fam. Code § 4055(b)(4)].

 PART IV. FORMS

34-123 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 123.212

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.

§ 123.212 Termination of Child Support Payments

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[4], below, are provisions that determine when the child support payments otherwise provided for in the agreement are to terminate. Use of both forms is recommended in most cases.

As long as there is a duty of support, the parents cannot agree between themselves to terminate support entirely [see Fam. Code § 3651(a); In re Marriage of Lackey (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 698, 705, 191 Cal. Rptr. 309 ; § 123.20]. Thus, for example, parents cannot agree to terminate support when a child reaches age 16 [see Fam. Code § 3900 (parental duty to support minor children)].

The parties can, however, provide that the particular amount of child support provided for in their agreement will no longer be due (and thus not accruing arrearages in the event of nonpayment) under certain conditions. Family Code Section 4007 (discussed below) produces this result with regard to certain specified terminating events. In other cases, an express provision in the agreement or a modification proceeding is required to terminate the obligation to pay support under the existing order [see Lehrer v. Lehrer (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 276, 279-280, 133 Cal. Rptr. 709 ; but see In re Marriage of Okum (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 176, 182, 240 Cal. Rptr. 458 (equitable defense allows arrearages to be reduced to reflect de facto change in custody)].

Under Family Code Section 4007, a parent's obligation to pay child support under a court order for support "during the child's minority, or until the child is married or otherwise emancipated" terminates on the happening of the contingency [Fam. Code § 4007(a)]. In the original support order (and agreement), the court (and the parties) may require the obligee to notify the obligor (or his or her attorney of record) of the happening of the event [see Fam. Code § 4007(a)]. If the notice is not given, the obligee must refund any money received that accrued after the happening of the event. However, the overpayments must first be applied to any arrearages [Fam. Code § 4007(b)].

Family Code Section 4007, while it cannot be ignored, contains some traps for the unwary drafter. By specifying minority, marriage, and emancipation as contingencies causing automatic termination, it is both over-inclusive and imprecise with regard to conditions that terminate the duty of support by operation of law. First, the duty of support does not automatically terminate when a child turns 18 [see Fam. Code § 3901 (extending duty of support past age 18 to complete high school)]. Even if the agreement and order specify that the obligor is to pay support until the child reaches the age of majority, the obligation to make the payments provided in the order continues as long as the statutory extension of the duty of support applies [Politzer v. Himmelsbach (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 295, 297-299, 260 Cal. Rptr. 450] .

Second, "emancipation" is a term with various components, not all of which have the same effect. Emancipation under the Emancipation of Minors Law [Fam. Code § 7000 et seq.] terminates the parental duty of support by operation of law [Fam. Code § 7050(a)]. However, statutory emancipation occurs only under three situations; marriage, active duty in the armed forces, and entry of a judgment of emancipation [Fam. Code § 7002]. A minor may become "emancipated" for some purposes in other ways, such as by moving into an apartment, obtaining employment, and paying some or all of his or her living expenses, without triggering an automatic termination of the duty of support under the Emancipation of Minors Law. In these cases involving emancipation by conduct or agreement, which turn on their particular facts, a provision in a support agreement and order that support is to terminate on emancipation is insufficient to terminate the payments required under the order until there has been a judicial determination that such emancipation has, in fact, occurred [see Lehrer v. Lehrer (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 276, 279-280, 133 Cal. Rptr. 709 ; In re Marriage of Hancock (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 264, 266-267, 107 Cal. Rptr. 897] . Emancipation of minors is considered in Volume 17, Chapter 100, Control, Custody, and Support of Minors.

The actual major area of concern to the drafter involves a de facto material change in the actual physical custody of the child, whether through emancipation or otherwise. Usually, if a child support agreement and order is based on a particular custodial arrangement in which the obligee parent's home is the child's primary residence, child support should be adjusted if the child moves out. This is the case whether the child moves into his or her own residence, moves in with the obligor parent, or goes to live with some third party. These situations, in turn, should be distinguished from some less significant adjustment in the parents' time share arrangement, under which one of the parties should be expected to initiate modification discussions and proceedings if he or she feels that the amount of child support is no longer appropriate.

The form in [2], below, avoids these possible misconceptions of the effect of Family Code Section 4007 by simply tying the obligation to make the child support payments to the duty of support. The form in [3], below, terminates the obligation to make the child support payments if the child no longer lives with the obligee parent. It should be used to supplement Form [2].

Two courts have held that a child support order does not terminate by operation of law on the death of the payee-custodial parent, and that the payor parent must obtain a judicial modification or termination of the order to avoid accruing liability for arrearages under it [see In re Marriage of McCann (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 102, 106, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 639 In re Marriage of Gregory (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 112, 115-117, 281 Cal. Rptr. 188] . Therefore, it would seem that every child support order should now provide for automatic termination on the death of the payee parent. The form in [4], below, is such a provision.

Termination of support provisions should also be addressed separately from extension of the duty of support. Parents may agree to provide additional support after the child is no longer a minor [Fam. Code § 3587; see Fam. Code § 3901(b)]. Provisions to extend the duty of support to provide for college are common. For these forms, see § 123.213. The duration of the duty of support is considered in Volume 17, Chapter 100, Control, Custody, and Support of Minors.

§ 123.213 Extension of Child Support Beyond Age of Majority for Higher Education

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[6], below, are various provisions that extend the duty of child support or the obligation to make the payments provided in the agreement, or both, beyond a child's 18th birthday for higher education. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the court has the authority to approve a stipulated agreement by the parents to pay for the support of an adult child or for the continuation of child support after a child attains the age of 18 years, and to make a support order to effectuate the agreement [Fam. Code § 3587; see Fam. Code § 3901(b)].

No provision in the agreement is required to extend the duty of support to allow a child to finish high school. By statute, the duty of support continues as to an unmarried child who has attained the age of 18 years, is a full-time high school student, and who is not self-supporting, until the child completes the 12th grade or attains the age of 19 years, whichever occurs first [Fam. Code § 3901(a); Politzer v. Himmelsbach (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 295, 297-299, 260 Cal. Rptr. 450]. However, any extension of the duty of support for higher education must be by agreement; a court may not unilaterally extend the duty to require a parent to pay college expenses [see Jones v. Jones (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1016-1017, 225 Cal. Rptr. 95]. Such a provision may be treated as a nondischargeable support obligation for purposes of federal bankruptcy laws, even if the parties do not expressly refer to the payment of the college expenses as "support," because of the bankruptcy court's authority to construe the parties' intentions [see In re Seixas (9th Cir. B.A.P. 1999) 239 B.R. 398, 403-404].

There are several possible approaches to providing support for adult children for educational purposes exemplified in the forms below. The appropriate approach depends on the age of the child and the parents' economic situation. Each approach involves selecting specific conditions related to choice of schools, years of study, curriculum, progress toward graduation, and any other conditions that the parents may wish to impose on their children.

First, the agreement may simply provide that the child support payments are to continue beyond majority under the specified conditions [Form [2]]. This approach is probably only appropriate if the child will continue living with the obligee parent.

Second, the agreement may require one or both parents to pay all, or specified percentages, of a child's costs associated with higher education, regardless of the amount [Form [3]]. This approach is only appropriate in higher income situations. A related approach is to require a parent who has extraordinarily high income to set aside funds for higher education during the children's minority [Form [4]]. Extraordinarily high income is a rebuttal factor allowing for less support than the amount computed under the statewide uniform child support guideline [Fam. Code § 4057(b)(3); see § 123.204[3]], but the parents may agree to set the surplus aside for the children's education. The fund may simply be a savings account, or a more sophisticated deferred-income device such as a trust or annuity. For appropriate forms to establish a trust, see Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms.

Finally, the parents may simply agree to extend the duty of support as long as designated conditions related to education are met without stipulating anything with regard to amount [Form [5]]. The question of how much support each parent is to pay will be based on the parents' circumstances when the child turns 18. This approach is appropriate for very young children.

Careful attention to drafting is important, and combining more than one of the various approaches is not recommended. In one case, the agreement contained ambiguous language that appeared to continue the obligor parent's duty of support [see In re Marriage of Smith & Maescher (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 100, 104, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133]. The language could have been construed as continuing the obligation to make the specific support payments to the other parent required by the agreement. However, the court rejected this construction because the agreement also contained other language placing a very general duty on the parent to pay for the children's college education [see In re Marriage of Smith & Maescher (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 100, 108-110, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133].

Forms [3]-[5] make the children express third-party beneficiaries of the higher education provision. The particular parental obligations that are created are then enforceable by the child against an obligor parent as long as the conditions are met [In re Marriage of Smith & Maescher (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 100, 105-106, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133]. The parties may prefer not to make the child a third party beneficiary and to permit enforcement only by themselves because they may take a stricter view than the child as to whether the performance conditions toward the educational objective are being met. In such a case, express language denying the child third-party beneficiary status should be included.

[2] Continuation of Current Support Payments

Continuation of Current Support Payments for Higher Education

Continued Support for Higher Education

_____. The child support payments for each child provided for in this Agreement shall continue past the child's 18th birthday for as long as the child continues to reside with _____ [obligee parent, e.g., Mother] and the following conditions are met: _____ [specify conditions related to higher education, job training, or other career development program, e.g., the child is a full-time student at an accredited public or private community college, college, or university and is enrolled and making satisfactory progress in a program of courses leading to an associate or undergraduate degree]. The obligation to make these continued payments shall terminate automatically should any of the above-stated conditions no longer be met, without the need for judicial proceedings or order of court. In any event, the obligation shall terminate _____ [specify terminating time or event related to reasonable projected completion of course of studies, e.g., no later than the child's 23rd birthday]. _____ [obligee parent, e.g., Mother] shall notify _____ [obligor parent, e.g., Father] of the happening of any condition that terminates this continuing obligation. The amount of support shall/shall not be modifiable beyond the child's 18th birthday based on changed circumstances of either party.

[3] Obligation to Pay All Costs of Higher EducationObligation to Pay All Costs of Higher Education

Costs of Higher Education

[One parent to pay all costs:]

_____. _____ [e.g., Father] shall pay all of each child's costs of higher education, even though the child has reached the age of majority, provided that the following conditions are met: _____ [specify conditions related to higher education, job training, or other career development program, e.g., the child is a full-time student at an accredited California public community college, college, or university and is enrolled and making satisfactory progress in a program of courses leading to an associate or undergraduate degree]. Payments may be made directly to the child, or by direct payment to providers, including the college or university, at the option of _____ [e.g., Father]. _____ [e.g., Father's] obligation to pay these expenses shall terminate automatically should any of the above-stated conditions no longer be met, without the need for judicial proceedings or order of court. In any event, the obligation shall terminate _____ [specify terminating time or event related to reasonable projected completion of course of studies, e.g., no later than the child's 23rd birthday]. _____ [e.g., Father's] obligation under this Paragraph shall/shall not be modifiable after the child's 18th birthday based on a change of circumstances. The parties agree that _____ [each child shall be a designated third-party beneficiary of this Paragraph, and entitled to enforce its provisions as long as the specified conditions are met or no child shall be a designated third-party beneficiary of this Paragraph who is entitled to enforce its provisions].

[OR, parents to share costs by percentages:]

_____. The parties shall pay all of each child's costs of higher education as set forth below, provided that the following conditions are met: _____ [specify conditions related to higher education, job training, or other career development program, e.g., the child is a full-time student at an accredited California public community college, college, or university and is enrolled and making satisfactory progress in a program of courses leading to an associate or undergraduate degree]. These percentages shall be adjusted from time to time as required to reflect any change in either party's net income. Costs covered under this Paragraph include [specify, e.g., tuition, housing, books, fees, and a reasonable allowance for living expenses and transportation]. Payments may be made directly to the child, or to providers, including the college or university, at the option of each parent individually. In any event, the obligations shall terminate _____ [specify terminating time or event related to reasonable projected completion of course of studies, e.g., no later than the child's 23rd birthday]. The parties agree that _____ [each child shall be a designated third-party beneficiary of this Paragraph, and entitled to enforce its provisions as long as the specified conditions are met or no child shall be a designated third-party beneficiary of this Paragraph who is entitled to enforce its provisions].

[OR, one parent to pay designated amount to other, who shall then pay all costs:]

_____. The parties shall pay all of each child's costs of higher education as set forth below, even though the child has reached the age of majority, provided that the following conditions are met: _____[specify conditions related to higher education, job training, or other career development program, e.g., the child is a full-time student at an accredited California public community college, college, or university and is enrolled and making satisfactory progress in a program of courses leading to an associate or undergraduate degree]. _____[e.g., Mother] shall pay the sum of $_____ per month to _____[e.g., Father], who shall then be responsible for payment of all of costs. Costs covered under this Paragraph include [specify, e.g., tuition, housing, books, fees, and a reasonable allowance for living expenses and transportation]. _____[e.g., Father's] payments may be made directly to the child, or by direct payment to providers, including the college or university, at his/her option. § 123.214 Extension of Support Beyond Age of Majority for Incapacitated Child

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, extends support with regard to an adult child who is incapacitated from earning a living and without sufficient means. There is a parental duty to support such a child, whether or not the parents so agree [see Fam. Code § 3910(a); see Ch. 100, Control, Custody, and Support of Minors]. However, an express provision is probably required to automatically impose an obligation with regard to such an adult child [see Fam. Code § 3587; § 123.213 [1]], even though in a different context, it has been held that a statutory duty of support beyond age 18 is self-operative to extend an existing support obligation without the need for a hearing [see Politzer v. Himmelsbach (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 295, 299, 260 Cal. Rptr. 450] . The need to determine that a child meets the statutory requirements probably precludes a court from extending the duty of support automatically past the child's 18th birthday unless the parents agree that support or the duty of support is to continue.

The form, below, acknowledges that the child meets the statutory definition, and that the duty of support will continue with regard to the child. It then continues the support payments provided in the agreement for the child indefinitely past the child's 18th birthdate. This approach is appropriate as long as the child is living with the other parent. Any of the approaches illustrated in § 123.213 with regard to extending the duty of support for higher education may also be adapted for use with regard to an incapacitated child.

The living arrangements and the ability of the child to manage his or her own finances should be considered. It may be necessary to appoint a conservator of the person and the estate of the adult child under Probate Code Section 1800 et seq. The effect of any such provision of the adult child's entitlement to any public benefits should also be considered.

§ 123.215 Maintenance of Life Insurance

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[4], below, are life insurance clauses that are designed to meet the obligor's support obligation should he or she die before all of the children have reached the age of majority [see § 123.22[2]]. Form [2], below, provides for maintenance of one or more existing life insurance policies. Existing policies may have particular economic value that should be preserved because of the potential difficulty for the insured parent to obtain equivalent replacement coverage as he or she grows older. The forms in [3], below, require one or both parents to obtain and maintain life insurance coverage.

As a child approaches the age of majority, the parent is obligated for fewer years of support. The parents may agree to decrease the amount of insurance proceeds that the child will receive on the parent's death. Form [4] permits the supporting parent to name a second beneficiary, such as a subsequent spouse or child, and to transfer a percentage of the death benefit to that person each year.

For provisions related to health insurance coverage, see § 123.206.

[2] Maintenance of Existing Life Insurance Policies

Maintenance of Existing Life Insurance Policies

Maintenance of Life Insurance for Benefit of Children

_____. As security for his/her duty of support to the children, _____ [obligor parent, e.g., Mother] shall maintain in full force and effect by timely payment of premiums the current life insurance policies listed below, and shall designate _____ [the children of the parties or other parent, e.g., Father or other person such as guardian or trustee] as the primary beneficiary/beneficiaries of the policies.

[illegible]

The obligation to maintain these policies shall continue until such time as all obligations of child support terminate under Paragraph _____ of this Agreement. The policies may be term life insurance policies as long as the total terms for automatic renewal exceed the duration of the support obligation. _____ [e.g., Father] shall provide evidence of the continuing effectiveness of the policies and of the beneficiary designation to _____ [e.g., Mother] on reasonable request. _____ [e.g., Father] shall not borrow against the policies so as to reduce the death benefit actually payable to or on behalf of the children during the time that the obligation to maintain these policies continues. If _____ [e.g., Father] fails to maintain any policy as required, the death benefit payable on the policy shall be a charge against his/her estate.

[OR, both parents to obtain life insurance]

_____. Both parents shall purchase and maintain in full force and effect by timely payment of premiums one or more life insurance policies on his or her life. _____ [The children of the parties or The other parent or other person such as guardian or trustee] shall be the designated primary beneficiary/beneficiaries of the policies. The total value of the death benefits of all policies to be procured and maintained by Father shall be $_____; the total value of the death benefits of all policies to be procured and maintained by Mother shall be $_____.

The obligation to maintain these policies shall continue until such time as all obligations of child support terminate under Paragraph _____ of this Agreement. The policies may be term life insurance policies as long as the total terms for automatic renewal exceed the duration of the support obligation. Each party shall provide evidence of the continuing effectiveness of the policies and of the beneficiary designation to the other party on reasonable request. Neither party shall borrow against the policies so as to reduce the death benefit actually payable to or on behalf of the children during the time that the obligation to maintain these policies continues. If either party fails to maintain any policy as required, the death benefit payable on the policy shall be a charge against his or her estate.

[4] Annual Transfer of Right to Proceeds to Other Beneficiary

Annual Transfer of Right to Proceeds to Other Beneficiary

[Add the following optional provision, if desired:]

_____. _____ [Parent required to maintain life insurance, e.g., Father] shall have the right to change the designation of primary beneficiary entitled to receive the death benefits payable on all life insurance policies required under this Agreement with regard to _____ percent of the benefit per year, beginning _____ [specify, e.g., January 1 of the first year following the date of the execution of this Agreement]. This provision shall not be construed as reducing the face amount payable at any time unless _____ [e.g., Father] has executed change-of-beneficiary designations acceptable to the insurance company involved. The annual percents that may be released to another beneficiary may be accumulated and released in multiple year amounts rather than annually at the election of _____ [e.g., Father].

§ 123.216 Dependency Exemption

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, specifies which parent will be entitled to claim the supported children as dependents on his or her federal and state income tax returns. There is no requirement that the right to claim tax exemptions for children be assigned in a decree of marital dissolution or a marital settlement agreement. The parent who has custody for greater portion of calendar year is entitled to claim the dependency exemption [I.R.C. § 152(e)(1), (4)(A)]. However, the custodial parent may release the right to claim the exemption to the noncustodial parent [I.R.C. § 152(e)(2)].

In order for the noncustodial parent to claim the dependency exemption, the custodial parent must execute a declaration, on Internal Revenue Service Form 8332, declaring that the custodial parent will not claim the child as a dependent for the tax year in question [I.R.C. § 152(e)(2)(A)].

The California Supreme Court has held that a family law court may order the custodial parent to execute the form to release the right to the dependency exemption to the noncustodial parent over the custodial parent's objection in order to obtain maximum tax savings to the parents, and thus, more money available for the children. Child support should be increased to offset the cash value of the exemption [Monterey County v. Cornejo (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1271, 1275-1281, 283 Cal. Rptr. 405, 812 P.2d 586] .

PRACTICE TIP:

The judicial shifting of dependency exemptions to a payor spouse, along with increased child support, is common. Counsel for the custodial-payee parent should consider offering to sign the exemption over to the payor parent whenever she or he stands to gain more from increased support than will be lost by surrendering the exemption (typically the case with a low-income payee). Conversely, counsel for the payor parent should avoid raising the issue if his or her exposure to increased support will outweigh the benefit of claiming the exemption. Computer software programs that calculate support, including the effect on support of exemption-shifting, are now in wide-spread use by both family law courts and counsel. If the custodial parent has agreed to release the exemption to the noncustodial parent, counsel should ensure that the form or written declaration releasing the claim clearly indicates the specific years to which the release applies.

EXAMPLE: On January 5, 2000, a custodial parent fills out only Part II of IRS Form 8332, which is labeled "Release of Claim to Exemption for Future Years," stating that she agrees not to claim an exemption for her three children for "all future years." The noncustodial parent attaches this form to his 1999 income tax return. However, he was not entitled to the exemption for 1999 because Part I of the form, which is labeled "Release of Claim to Exemption for Current Year," was uncompleted and left completely blank, and because the form did not specify that it was applicable to the 1999 tax year [Nancy L. Cafarelli, T.C.M. 1994-265 (CCH)].

Different rules apply for determining dependency under a multiple support agreement [see I.R.C. § 152(d)(3), (e)(5)], and with regard to pre-1985 instruments [see I.R.C. § 152(e)(3)]. For further discussion of the tax consequences of child support payments, see §§ 123.40-123.42.

_____. _____ [Obligor parent, e.g., Father] shall be entitled to claim the dependency exemption for _____ [names of children] on his/her federal and state income tax returns for _____ [specify period of time, e.g., for all taxable years beginning _____ (date)], provided that he/she has paid by the end of the year all amounts of child support required by this Agreement or by any subsequent support order. _____ [obligee parent, e.g., Mother] shall execute the waiver of the dependency exemption (IRS Form 8332, any successor form, and any corresponding state forms) and deliver the executed waiver to _____ [e.g., Father] no later than _____ days after the end of the year. Any party who claims a dependency exemption in violation of this Paragraph shall indemnify the other for all costs incurred by the other arising from the violation, including any increased taxes assessed against the other party, attorney fees, and accountant fees required to remedy the violation.

§ 123.217 Adjustment of Support for Periods When Obligor Parent Has Physical Custody

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2] and [3], below, are alternative provisions for reduction or abatement of child support during periods when the obligor parent has the primary physical custody of the child. In most cases, such a provision is unnecessary because the obligor parent's time-share is addressed by the "H" factor in the statewide uniform child support guideline formula. This factor represents the approximate percentage of the time that the higher-earning parent has primary physical responsibility for the child [see Fam. Code § 4055(b)(1)(D); see DaSilva v. DaSilva (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1030, 1033-1035, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 59 (for purposes of calculating "H" factor, time child is not physically with either parent may be credited to parent who is primarily responsible for child during that time)]. Therefore, no adjustment or abatement will be required for any child support amount that has been derived from the formula as long as "H" has been appropriately valued.

However, if the parents' time-share arrangement calls for extended periods of physical custody, for example, if one parent has the children during the school year and the other all summer, the parties may wish to agree to separate child support provisions for each period of time. One way is to compute the amount under the formula for the longer period (e.g., the school year) without considering the shorter period (e.g., the summer) as within the H factor, and then reduce or abate the amount of support for those periods during which the children are living with the obligor parent.

In most cases, a reduction is probably more appropriate than a total abatement. The primary custodial parent's child-related expenses do not entirely disappear simply because the children are temporarily absent. Principally, the cost of housing is not reduced, so child support should not be abated or reduced below an amount that will allow the primary custodian to make rent or mortgage payments.

A nonabatement provision is probably unnecessary as nonabatement is implicit in any case in which the H factor has reduced support to reflect the obligor's custodial time. It would also be unusual for support not to be reduced at all for extended periods, such as an entire summer, when the obligor has physical custody, if the period was not included as part of the H factor.

§ 123.219 Payment of Child Support Through Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO)

[1] Comment

The form below is a provision for use in a marital settlement agreement to obtain child support payments directly from the payor's interest in an employee benefit plan governed by ERISA [see 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq. (Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974)], such as a pension or a 401k plan. It requires the entry of a Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO), which is a court order directed to the plan and specifying payments that are to be made to the employee-participant's spouse or children, referred to as alternate payees [see I.R.C. § 414(p); chs. 122, Judgment of Dissolution or Legal Separation. Under the 1984 Retirement Equity Act (REA), the assignment of pension interests is not limited to property divisions, but can also include alimony and child support obligations [I.R.C. § 414(p)(1)(B)(i)].

Several issues arise when the division of a pension is approached as an alimony or child support arrangement. The fact that it is an alimony or support division does not make the funds available any sooner than if it were a property division. Thus, if a pension is not in "pay status" or presently transferable to the payee, the payee will not have present use of the funds. If the pension is in pay status, then the assignment of a portion of the payments being made, subject to a QDRO, enables the recipient to receive the payments directly from the plan, much in the same manner as a wage garnishment.

For clauses for use to divide property interests in employee benefits, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 122, Judgment of Dissolution or Legal Separation. (Matthew Bender).

Payment of Child Support by Qualified Domestic Relations Order

_____. The parties have ascertained that the child support due under Paragraph _____ of this Agreement may be paid directly from _____ [supporting parent, e.g., Father's] share of the benefits provided by _____ [name of employee benefit plan] (the Plan). The parties agree to cooperate in obtaining a Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO) providing for the payments to be made periodically by the Plan to [e.g., Wife] on behalf of the children. [e.g., Husband] understands that this distribution will be taxable income to him/her [add if desired and agrees that the sums to be distributed by the plan shall (within the limit of the available funds) be increased by an amount sufficient to satisfy the Plans mandatory federal and state income tax withholding obligations, if any, with respect to the payments]. The direct payments of support provided above shall have no effect on the determination of the community interest in the Plan.

This provision shall have no affect on any support arrearage that may have accrued before the date as of which payments under the QDRO are commenced.

For purposes of any applicable limit on wage assignment by QDRO, the amount to be distributed under a QDRO as support shall be deemed not to exceed _____ percent of [e.g., Husband's] disposable earnings, taking all other sources of income into account.

§ 123.220 Payment of Child Support Through Trust

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, provides for the creation of a trust for the payment of child support. Child support trusts are not common, but might be appropriate in the case of a payor parent with extraordinarily high income, but whose high earning potential is likely to be limited to a short term, for example, a professional athlete. In such a case, a current transfer of property in trust sufficient to generate enough income to pay appropriate child support throughout the minority of the children might be the best way to ensure that a reasonable standard of living will be maintained.

Unlike alimony or spousal support, amounts payable for the support of children of the payor are not included in the payee parent's taxable income or deductible to the payor [I.R.C. §§ 71(c), 215].

The same is true with regard to payments made from trust income that the terms of a decree, separation agreement, or trust instrument fix as payable for the support of the children of the payor [I.R.C. § 682(a); see § 123.247]. With regard to direct payments, unallocated payments for the support of both an ex spouse and children may be qualified for alimony tax treatment as family support [I.R.C. § 71(c)(2); Fam. Code §§ 92, 4066; see §§ 123.12, 123.21[2], 123.292]. It is not clear whether a "family support" trust can be structured to make the payee parent taxable on unallocated distributions of income for the support of both an ex spouse and children. It may be argued that as long as no amount is fixed as for child support in any decree, agreement, or instrument, tax treatment under Internal Revenue Code Section 682 should be available [see I.R.C. § 682(a)].

§ 123.230 Acknowledgment of Separation and Provisions Regarding Temporary Spousal Support

[1] Comment--Use of Form

Set forth in [2], below, are provisions for temporary spousal support. Although it is not common, it is possible that the parties are still not ready to agree to a permanent support order by the time that they are otherwise ready to execute their settlement agreement. For further discussion of temporary spousal support, see § 123.31.

These provisions protect the supported spouse from any claim that the other's duty of support was suspended under Family Code Section 4302, which provides that a person is not liable for support of the person's spouse when the person is living separate from the spouse by agreement unless support is stipulated in the agreement. In the first set of alternative paragraphs, the supported spouse agrees to hold the supporting spouse harmless for his or her debts incurred during the period of separation in exchange for periodic payments of support. The second set of alternative paragraphs provide for no current support order, but clarify that by so agreeing, the parties do not intend to permanently waive their right to support from each other. The operation of the statute will achieve the same result in the absence of the clarifying language, but it is always preferred to directly express the intent of the parties [see London Guarantee & Acci. Co. v. Industrial Acci. Com., (1919) 181 Cal. 460, 466467, 184 P. 864]. For further discussion, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 23, Debt Liability and Division and Related Reimbursement Issues (Matthew Bender).

Acknowledgment of Separation and Provisions Regarding Temporary Spousal Support

Temporary Spousal Support

[EITHER, if temporary support will be paid:]

During the period of separation, [e.g., Husband] shall pay to [e.g., Wife] the sum of $_____ monthly for her/his support. Payments shall be made on or before the [e.g., fifth] day of the month, beginning _____[date]. This obligation shall continue until further agreement of the parties or order of the court.

These payments shall be considered as complete satisfaction of [e.g., Husband's] duty to support [e.g., Wife]. Each party agrees to indemnify and hold the other harmless from any liability to third persons for debts and obligations incurred solely by the party during the period of separation.

These payments of temporary support shall be without prejudice to either party to seek any appropriate order or judgment regarding spousal support, including an order or judgment denying spousal support and permanently terminating jurisdiction to award spousal support, in any subsequent legal proceeding related to the marriage of the parties.

[OR, if no temporary support will be paid:]

During the period of separation, the parties' mutual duty to support each other shall be suspended, and neither shall have any right to receive support from the other. The duties of support shall remain suspended until further agreement of the parties or order of the court.

Each party agrees to indemnify and hold the other harmless from any liability to third persons for debts and obligations incurred solely by the party during the period of separation.

This mutual suspension of the duty of support shall be without prejudice to either party to seek any appropriate order or judgment regarding spousal support, including an order or judgment denying spousal support and permanently terminating jurisdiction to award spousal support, in any subsequent legal proceeding related to the marriage of the parties.

§ 123.231 Waivers of Spousal Support; Jurisdiction Terminated

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2] and [3], below, are alternate provisions for the waiver of spousal support by either or both parties to a marital settlement agreement, including permanent waivers of retention of jurisdiction. Form [2] is a provision for one party to permanently waive the right to support from the other. Form [3] provides for mutual waivers of each party's right to support from the other. In a marriage of long duration, such a provision could probably be ordered only on the agreement of the parties. Family Code Section 4336 appears to require indefinite retention of the court's jurisdiction over support in a long-term marriage, except on written agreement of the parties to the contrary [see Fam. Code § 4336(a)].

For a general discussion of waivers of support, see § 123.30[2].

[2] Waiver by One Party

Waivers of Spousal Support; Jurisdiction Terminated--Waiver by One Party

Waiver of Spousal Support

_____. [e.g., Wife] waives the right ever to obtain spousal support from [e.g., Husband]. [e.g., Wife] understands that by waiving spousal support, she/he will never be able to return to court to request spousal support ever again, regardless of any change of circumstances that may occur. This waiver is knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily made. The court's jurisdiction to order spousal support to be paid by [e.g., Husband] to [e.g., Wife] at any time is terminated.

[3] Mutual Waivers

Waiver of Spousal Support

_____. Each party waives the right to ever obtain spousal support from the other. Each understands that by waiving spousal support, he or she will never be able to return to court to request spousal support ever again, regardless of any change of circumstances that may occur. This waiver is knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily made. The court's jurisdiction to order spousal support to be paid by either party to the other at any time is terminated.

§ 123.232 Reservation of Jurisdiction Only

The form in [2], below, is a provision that retains jurisdiction to order spousal support in the future even though the parties agree that under the current circumstances, no spousal support is appropriate. They have agreed that neither is entitled to support under the standards of Family Code Section 4320.

The rule has been that if no spousal support is ordered, jurisdiction is lost unless retained expressly in the order or by agreement [see Cochran v. Cochran (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 339, 344, 91 Cal. Rptr. 630]. However, it appears that in a marriage of long duration under Family Code Section 4336, jurisdiction is retained indefinitely without the need for any express language in the judgment. But because of some uncertainty over the construction of this statute, it is recommended that express language reserving jurisdiction be included regardless of the length of the marriage, if the agreement of the parties is that jurisdiction should be reserved. Jurisdiction to order spousal support is considered in detail in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

Traditionally, a token amount, such as $1.00 per year, was ordered for the purpose of reserving jurisdiction if the court or the parties felt that one party might be in need of support at a later date [see In re Marriage of Forcum (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 599, 605, 193 Cal. Rptr. 596; In re Marriage of Boseman (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 372, 378, 107 Cal. Rptr. 232]. However, jurisdiction may be retained by a simple recitation in the order without making a token award [see, e.g., In re Marriage of Liss (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1426, 1428, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 397; In re Marriage of Wells (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1434, 1436, 254 Cal. Rptr. 185]. Such a recitation has the advantage of clarifying that jurisdiction is being retained to order support to either party in the future, not just to the party to whom the dollar is awarded.

Reservation of Jurisdiction Only

Jurisdiction Over Spousal Support

[To reserve jurisdiction to order support to both parties:]

_____. The parties agree that while no spousal support shall be currently paid by either to the other, the court shall retain jurisdiction to award spousal support to either party in the future _____ [specify duration, e.g., until the party's death, remarriage, or further order of this court].

[To reserve jurisdiction to order support for one party only:]

_____. Although no spousal support order in favor of [e.g., Wife] is currently necessary or appropriate, the court shall retain jurisdiction to award spousal support to him/her in the future _____ [specify duration, e.g., until the party's death, remarriage, or further order of this court].

§ 123.233 Specific Amount Payable Periodically for Indefinite Period

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The forms in [2], below, set forth provisions for the payment of spousal support in a specific amount at different particular intervals. They illustrate the most frequently used method of providing for spousal support: periodic payments terminating only on death of either spouse or the remarriage of the supported spouse under Family Code Section 4337 [see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 52, Modification and Termination of Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender)]. There are four alternatives regarding the time of payment: monthly, semi-monthly, biweekly, and weekly. For alternative provisions for termination that avoid some of the statutory effects of Section 4337, see §§ 123.264 and 123.265.

An order for support without a termination date contains within it a reservation of jurisdiction regardless of the length of the marriage [see Dahlstet v. Dahlstet (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 174, 178, 77 Cal. Rptr. 45 ; see also Fam. Code § 4336 (court retains jurisdiction indefinitely if marriage is of long duration)]. Because no specific language of nonmodifiability is included, this order is subject to future modification or termination on changed circumstances. Any such termination or modification generally will not affect amounts that may have accrued before the date of the filing of the notice of motion or order to show cause to modify or terminate [Fam. Code §§ 3591(a), (b), 3651(a), (c)]. However, a supporting spouse who has been activated to United States military duty or National Guard service and deployed outside California may instead file and serve a notice of activation and request to modify the support order; in such a case, unless the court for good cause orders otherwise, any modification will be retroactive to the date of service of the notice of activation or the date of deployment, whichever is latest [Fam. Code § 3651(c)(2),(g)(2)(B); see Fam. Code § 3653(c)].

For further discussion of spousal support orders in general, see § 123.30 and Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

34-123 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 123.234AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.§ 123.234 Support for Limited Period; Jurisdiction Retained Indefinitely[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a spousal support provision for support for a limited period that includes specific language retaining jurisdiction indefinitely. The express language retaining jurisdiction is required to accomplish this result in a short-term marriage [see Fam. Code § 4335]. The language is probably not necessary to retain jurisdiction in a marriage of long duration under Family Code Section 4336. But because of some uncertainty as to the meaning and construction of that statute, this language should probably be included in all cases in which an open-ended reservation of jurisdiction is appropriate [see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender)]. For similar orders that retain jurisdiction only for a limited time, see §§ 123.235 and 123.236.

The parties should include appropriate language as to whether support will terminate under Family Code Section 4337 by operation of law before the stated termination date on the death of either party or the remarriage of the supported spouse [see §§ 123.264, 123.265]. An agreement for support for a fixed period may be construed as an agreement that the statute will not operate if the terminating event happens before the end of the period.

§ 123.235 Richmond Order; Support for Limited Period With Limited Reservation of Jurisdiction

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a provision agreeing to a so-called "Richmond order" [see In re Marriage of Richmond (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 352, 164 Cal. Rptr. 381]. A Richmond order is one that sets spousal support for a presumptively fixed period based on evidence that the supported spouse will be self-supporting by the end of the period, but retains jurisdiction to modify the amount and to extend the term as long as the supported spouse acts before the date of termination [In re Marriage of Prietsch & Calhoun (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 645, 665-666, 235 Cal. Rptr. 587]. The effect of the order is to shift the burden to the supported spouse to show cause to extend the order [In re Marriage of Stallworth (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 742, 755, 237 Cal. Rptr. 829; In re Marriage of Prietsch & Calhoun (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 645, 665-666, 235 Cal. Rptr. 587]. The failure to achieve self-sufficiency by the expected date can constitute the change of circumstances necessary to support extension of the spousal support obligation [In re Marriage of Pekar (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 367, 369-372, 218 Cal. Rptr. 823].

A Richmond order differs from the limited-term/reserved jurisdiction provision set forth in § 123.234 in that, under a Richmond order, jurisdiction is reserved only until the termination date. If that date passes without the supported spouse having moved to extend the term, jurisdiction is terminated and the court has no further power to extend or order spousal support [see In re Marriage of Prietsch & Calhoun (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 645, 665, 235 Cal. Rptr. 587; In re Marriage of Segel (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 1030, 1040-1041, 223 Cal. Rptr. 430]. In the provision in § 123.234, jurisdiction is reserved indefinitely, so that the court may reinstate support after the period expires, even if the supported spouse has taken no action by that date to seek additional support.

It is important to specify that jurisdiction may be extended as long as the proceedings are initiated before the termination date. Otherwise, the court's order extending jurisdiction must be entered before the termination date or jurisdiction is lost [see In re Marriage of Carter (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 1024, 1030, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 (jurisdiction was to terminate on July 1; party moved to extend on June 17, but matter was not heard until September 29. Court's ruling that jurisdiction terminated on July 1 and it had no jurisdiction to order spousal support on September 29 was affirmed based on lack of proper Richmond order language)].

The parties should include appropriate language as to whether support will terminate under Fam. Code § 4337 by operation of law before the stated termination date on the death of either party or the remarriage of the supported spouse [see §§ 123.264, 123.265]. An agreement for support for a fixed period may be construed as an agreement that the statute will not operate if the terminating event happens before the end of the period. For further discussion of Richmond orders, including possible limitations on their use, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 51, Spousal Support Orders ; Ch. 52, Modification and Termination of Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender) [see Fam. Code §§ 4320(l), 4330(b) (concerning goal that parties become self-supporting and need for admonition to that effect by court)]. For a form that sets forth the circumstances of the parties in reaching a support agreement, see § 123.293.

§ 123.236 Fixed Amount for Limited Period; No Reservation of Jurisdiction to Extend Duration of Support

The form in [2], below, is a provision for support for a limited term in which the court will not retain jurisdiction to extend support beyond the stated termination date. This provision is most appropriate in a short-term marriage [see In re Marriage of Wilson (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 913, 918-919, 247 Cal. Rptr. 522]. It would not be imposed in a long-term marriage absent an agreement of the parties [see In re Marriage of Christie (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 849, 859, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 135; Fam. Code § 4336]. Nevertheless, it is possible to validly include such a provision in an agreement involving a long-term marriage, although in such a marriage, the rules of construction in favor of retaining jurisdiction over spousal support make it a risky proposition [see In re Marriage of Brown (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 785, 787-791, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 506; see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., ch. 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender)]. The payor-spouse should always be advised that there is some possibility that regardless of what language is used, a court will find it insufficient to terminate jurisdiction.

Unless the parties agree that the amount of support is to be nonmodifiable [see § 123.260], the court will have jurisdiction to modify the amount of support until the termination date. However, under this provision, the court will have no jurisdiction to extend the duration beyond that date, even if the supported spouse moves before that date to extend the duration [see In re Marriage of Zlatnik (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1286, 1291, 243 Cal. Rptr. 454; In re Marriage of Foreman (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 129, 133-134, 228 Cal. Rptr. 4].

The parties should include appropriate language as to whether support will terminate under Family Code Section 4337 by operation of law before the stated termination date on the death of either party or the remarriage of the supported spouse [see §§ 123.264, 123.265]. An agreement for support for a fixed period may be construed as an agreement that the statute will not operate if the terminating event happens before the end of the period.

§ 123.237 Support for Contingent Period of Time

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a provision for spousal support for a contingent period of time until the happening of some event. The event should be one other than the death of either party or the remarriage of the supported spouse, which are events that terminate support by operation of law absent an agreement to the contrary [see Fam. Code § 4337].

In an order to pay support for a contingent period of time, liability terminates on the occurrence of that contingency. The order should contain a requirement that the supported spouse notify the supporting spouse of the happening of the contingency [Fam. Code § 4334(a); see § 123.294]. If proper notice is not given, the supported spouse must refund all overpayments after first applying such overpayments to any support payments that are in default [Fam. Code § 4334(b)].

The parties should also address whether the amount of support is to be nonmodifiable [see § 123.260], whether support is to terminate on the death of either party or the remarriage of the supported spouse before the happening of the contingency [see §§ 123.264, 123.265], and whether the court will have jurisdiction to eliminate the contingency limitation.

§ 123.238 Substantive Step-Down or Step-Up in Amount

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, may be used as either a step-down or step-up spousal support order; that is, one that requires payment of a specified amount for a fixed period and specified lesser or greater amounts thereafter for an additional period or periods.

Such an order must address the question of jurisdiction at the end of the last term specified in the order. Jurisdiction may either be terminated without further recourse on that date or retained indefinitely after the date passes, or terminated on that date unless the supported spouse moves to extend duration before that date [see Richmond Order in § 123.235]. Whether the amounts of the various levels of payments are subject to future modification should also be addressed [see In re Marriage of Jones (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 505, 509-511, 271 Cal. Rptr. 761 (step-down order is not per se nonmodifiable)], as should the question of whether support should terminate on the death of either party or the remarriage of the supported spouse before the last date on which payments are due [see Fam. Code § 4337]. Nonmodifiability must be by agreement and expressed in the order [Fam. Code §§ 3591(c), 3651(d)]. Otherwise, the order is subject to future modification and termination [Fam. Code §§ 3591(a), 3651(a)].

For further discussion of step-down spousal support orders, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

[Either: to terminate duration jurisdiction:]

[OR: to provide for indefinite retention of duration jurisdiction:]

Jurisdiction to extend the duration of spousal support is retained indefinitely, and payments may be ordered beyond the date of the last payment stated above on a proper showing made to the court.

[OR: to provide for Richmond extension of duration jurisdiction:]

§ 123.239 Amount as Percentage of Income

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a provision making spousal support a percentage of the supporting spouse's income, rather than a fixed dollar amount. Support based on a percentage of income may be appropriate if the payor's income is subject to fluctuations (such as real estate sales, or other commissions).

The form may also be appropriate under some circumstances if the payor's income is due to increase substantially because he or she is about to obtain a professional degree and a highly compensated position. Although there is no basic right of one former spouse to share in the increased wealth of the other after dissolution [In re Marriage of Hopwood (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1604, 1607-1608, 263 Cal. Rptr. 401 ; see Modglin v. Modglin (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 411, 417, 54 Cal. Rptr. 582 (Fleming, J., concurring)], there are situations in which such a sharing is appropriate and likely to be ordered by the court. One situation is if the supported spouse contributed to the attainment of an education, training, a career position, or a license by the supporting party [Fam. Code § 4320(b)]. Another is if the amount of support that the supporting spouse can pay at the time of separation is insufficient to meet the reasonable needs of the supported spouse as measured by the standard of living attained during marriage [see In re Marriage of Hoffmeister (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 351, 363-364, 236 Cal. Rptr. 543 (" Hoffmeister II"); In re Marriage of Hoffmeister (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 1163, 1172-1175, 208 Cal. Rptr. 345 ("Hoffmeister I")]. On these facts, the parties may agree to a support order that provides for a percentage of the supporting spouse's future income.

Use of this form will require the parties to be in regular contact in order to exchange financial information, and this may not be desirable or feasible if there is substantial friction between them. Additionally, the supporting spouse may not want to inform the other of his or her future earnings, and may resist supplying the required information. Therefore, it is recommended that basing support on a percentage of income be used only if the parties are acting in good faith and likely to cooperate. The alternative is to use a substantive step-up provision with support amounts increasing to reflect the payor's anticipated increased ability to pay [see § 123.238].

This provision must contain specific language as to what is considered income to which the percentage applies, particularly in the case of a self-employed payor. Forms for use in defining income with regard to child support are set forth in § 123.203, and may be adapted for use in defining income for spousal support purposes. Appropriate duration, jurisdiction, and modification provisions should also be included. For related provisions setting a fixed dollar amount of support and providing for a percentage of future income, see § 123.240.

Jurisdiction to extend the duration of spousal support is retained indefinitely, and payments may be ordered beyond the date of the last payment stated above on a proper showing made to the court.

Jurisdiction to extend the duration of spousal support is retained on a proper showing made to the court in proceedings initiated on or before the date of the last payment stated above. If support or jurisdiction over support is not extended beyond that date by motion or order to show cause brought on or before that date, the court's jurisdiction over spousal

The form in [2], below, provides for additional spousal support as a percentage of future income. It may be used in conjunction with a basic order for a fixed amount of support payable periodically [see § 123.233]. A spousal support order may be fashioned to provide for payment of a percentage of future income, the receipt of which or the amount of which is uncertain at the time when the order is made. For example, if the supporting spouse customarily receives periodic and substantial employment bonuses. In such a case, a percentage of the bonuses, when received, may be made payable to the supported spouse as additional support [In re Marriage of Smith Ostler (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 33, 41-42, 46-50, 272 Cal. Rptr. 560] .

The form in [2], below, is an alternative spousal support payment provision requiring the supporting spouse to make a single lump sum payment. A lump-sum payment is appropriate if the parties wish to settle any obligation for support with a single payment and avoid an ongoing relationship. Lump-sum payments, however, will subject the parties to additional federal and state tax liability for "excess front loading," which is designed to prevent the parties from disguising sums that are actually in settlement of their property rights as alimony [see § 123.53]. Therefore, lump-sum spousal support should not be considered unless the parties are willing to accept the tax consequences of front-loading.

§ 123.242 Direct Payment to Creditors

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[4], below, are various provisions for payment of spousal support in the form of payment to a creditor of the supported spouse [see Fam. Code § 2023(a)]. Form [2] is for use to require the supporting spouse to pay an existing debt of the supported spouse. Form [3] requires the supporting spouse to pay the educational expenses of the supported spouse, and Form [4] requires payment of extraordinary uninsured medical expenses. Any of these provisions may be adapted to provide for reimbursement to the supported spouse rather than direct payment to creditors.

Even in the absence of an agreement, the court, on a determination that payment of an obligation of a party would benefit either party or a child, may order one party to pay the obligation directly to the creditor [Fam. Code § 2023(a)]. The creditor will have no right to enforce the order directly against the spouse making the payment; but the creditor's rights are in no way affected by the order [Fam. Code § 2023(b)]. Ordering direct payment protects the supporting spouse by assuring that the debt is paid [see In re Marriage of Higgason (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 476, 488, 110 Cal. Rptr. 897, 516 P.2d 289, overruled, 17 Cal. 3d 342, 131 Cal. Rptr. 3 (disapproved on another point in In re Marriage of Dawley (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 342, 352, 131 Cal. Rptr. 3, 551 P.2d 323)].

Direct payments to creditors for the benefit of the supported spouse can be structured as part of the supporting spouse's spousal support obligation [In re Marriage of Smith (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 725, 748, 145 Cal. Rptr. 205] . If all of the applicable requirements are met, payments to a third party on behalf of a spouse may properly be characterized as spousal support and given alimony tax treatment [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q-6, Q-7; see I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(A)]. For further discussion of alimony tax treatment, see § 123.51 [see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender)].

Provision may be made for either overdue or future obligations [see In re Marriage of Chala (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1000, 155 Cal. Rptr. 605] . With regard to periodic obligations to fall due in the future, the payments to creditors plus payments directly to spouse should constitute a reasonable total spousal support amount [In re Marriage of Chala (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1002, 155 Cal. Rptr. 605 ; see In re Marriage of Garcia (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 885, 892, 274 Cal. Rptr. 194 (payment of continuing debt to third party is form of spousal support if related to living expenses); In re Marriage of Smith (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 725, 748, 145 Cal. Rptr. 205] .

Characterizing direct payment of past obligations incurred during marriage (community obligations) as spousal support is not recommended. Such a provision constitutes part of the division of the parties' community estate, as well as a provision for spousal support, and may be inappropriate [see In re Marriage of Brown (1976) 15 Cal. 3d 838, 848, 126 Cal. Rptr. 633, 544 P.2d 561 ; see also In re Marriage of Marx (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 552, 557-558, 159 Cal. Rptr. 215 ; In re Marriage of Chala (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1003, 155 Cal. Rptr. 605] . Because the parties are entitled to an equal division of the net community estate (community assets minus community obligations) [see In re Marriage of Fonstein (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 738, 748, 131 Cal. Rptr. 873, 552 P.2d 1169] , any direct payment of community debts must be in lieu of part or all of a reasonable spousal support obligation, rather than in addition to it [see In re Marriage of Marx (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 552, 558, 159 Cal. Rptr. 215] . Further, alimony tax treatment will be denied unless there is no liability to make the payment for any period after the death of the payee spouse [I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(D)], which is usually not the intent of the payee spouse with regard to an existing community debt [see In re Marriage of Marx (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 552, 558-559, 159 Cal. Rptr. 215 ; see also Fam. Code § 4337].

An additional tax-related problem with payment of existing debt (either community or separate) is that it may constitute excessive front-loading of alimony in the first years of divorce and be subject to the recapture rules [see I.R.C. § 71(f)]. For further discussion, see § 123.53[2] [see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender)].

§ 123.243 Payment of Mortgage Obligation

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, provides for the supporting spouse to pay a monthly amount equal to the amount of the supported spouse's monthly mortgage payment. Spousal support will be reduced by that amount on the sale or retirement of the mortgage on the parties' former dwelling. It is designed for marital settlement agreements in which the supported spouse acquires the family dwelling as part of the equal division of the community property, or is granted the exclusive right to occupy it until it is sold or some other specified event occurs, usually the children attaining the age of majority. The mortgage payment may be made directly to the mortgagee, or included within the monthly payment to the supported spouse.

If the supporting spouse does not retain an interest in the former marital residence, the mortgage payments may be structured to receive alimony tax treatment under the Internal Revenue Code, meaning that the amount will be income to the supported spouse and deductible to the supporting spouse [I.R.C. §§ 71(b)(1), (e), 215; Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), A-6]. The payments must meet all of the other definitions of alimony, including the requirement that the obligation to make the mortgage payment terminate on the death of the supported spouse [see I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(D)]. If the supporting spouse retains an interest in the former residence, the mortgage payments will not be given alimony treatment [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), A-6]. In this case, having retained ownership, the supporting spouse is not so much providing support to the payee as preserving his or her own investment or property interest.

The form in [2], below, is a provision for use in a marital settlement agreement to obtain spousal support payments directly from the payor's interest in an employee benefit plan governed by ERISA [see 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq. (Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974)], such as a pension or a 401k plan. It requires the entry of a Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO), which is a court order directed to the plan and specifying payments that are to be made to the employee-participant's spouse or children, referred to as alternate payees [see I.R.C. § 414(p); ch. 122]. Under the 1984 Retirement Equity Act (REA), the assignment of pension interests is not limited to property divisions, but can also include alimony and child support obligations [I.R.C. § 414(p)(1)(B)(i)].

For further discussion, see the Comment to § 123.219. For discussion of ERISA and QDRO's, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 213, Employee Benefits Provisions in Marital Settlement Agreements (Matthew Bender).

[2] FORMPayment of Spousal Support by Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO)

Payment of Spousal Support by QDRO

The parties have ascertained that the spousal/family support due under Paragraph _____ of this Agreement may be paid directly from [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband's] share of the benefits provided by _____ [name of employee benefit plan] (the Plan). The parties agree to cooperate in obtaining a Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO) providing for the payments to be made periodically by the Plan to [supported spouse, e.g., Wife] as alternate payee. The parties understand that this distribution will be made by the Plan with pre-tax dollars, that it is neither income to nor deductible by [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband], and that it is reportable by the plan as taxable income to [supported spouse, e.g., Wife] to the extent not rolled over to another eligible retirement plan or Individual Retirement Account. The direct payments of support provided above shall have no effect on the determination of the community interest in the Plan.

[Include if attorney fees are to be included.]

The periodic payments for support shall be increased by $_____ per month to be applied toward payment of attorney fees owed by [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband] to [supported spouse, e.g., Wife]. These fees are in the nature of, and awardable as spousal/family support. This component of the periodic payments shall terminate once a total of $_____ has been paid from the Plan on account of attorney fees.

For purposes of any applicable limit on wage assignment by QDRO, the amount to be distributed under a QDRO as support shall be deemed not to exceed _____ percent of [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband's] disposable earnings, taking all other sources of income into account.

This provision shall have no effect on any support arrearage that may have accrued before the date as of which payments under the QDRO are commenced.

§ 123.245 Health Care Coverage Provisions

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[4], below, are various provisions regarding health care coverage for the supported spouse. Form [2] requires the supporting spouse to incur the entire cost of procuring health care coverage for the supported spouse. Form [3] is a waiver of any obligation of one spouse to procure health care coverage for the other.

Form [4] is for use under COBRA [the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985; Pub. L. 99-272]. Most employer-provided health care plans terminate dependent coverage for a former spouse once a divorce is final. However, COBRA requires the employer to offer continuing coverage to "qualified beneficiaries," such as a former spouse, on the occurrence of a "qualifying event," such as dissolution of marriage [29 U.S.C. §§ 1161, 1163(3), 1167(3)(a)(i)]. Continuation coverage must be offered for a period of 36 months [29 U.S.C. § 1162(2)(A)(iv)], and the employer may require payment of a premium for any period of continuation [29 U.S.C. § 1162(3)].

The first paragraph of Form [4] requires the supporting spouse to maintain employer-provided health care coverage until the decree of dissolution is final. If the spouse's coverage terminates before that time, it may be impossible for her or him to elect continuing coverage under COBRA [see 29 U.S.C. § 1167(3)(a) (COBRA coverage requires that person be covered under plan on day before qualifying event)]. The second paragraph requires the supporting spouse to assist in making an election for COBRA coverage and allocates the payment of premiums. COBRA is extremely complex and is considered in detail in Bacon, Prater & Tucker, Employee Benefit Guide (Matthew Bender).

Any health care coverage provision should be carefully drafted to define the scope of the obligation. There are many new and different health care delivery systems available, such as health maintenance organizations (HMO's), so that the use of the term "insurance" is no longer recommended [see Fam. Code § 3750 (health care coverage definitions regarding child support)]. Whether dental, vision, and prescription medication plans are to be included within the obligation should also be considered. Further, any limitations on the financial obligation should be carefully considered.

An open-ended obligation may become an impossible burden to the supporting spouse due to the continually rising costs of coverage. Conversely, a monetary limit on the supporting spouse's obligation may mean that the coverage will no longer be required because the cost will soon exceed the limit.

Payment of health coverage costs is a form of spousal support, and the obligation to make the payments will terminate by operation of law on the death of the supported spouse unless the agreement expressly continues the payments. A general nonmodification clause will not be sufficient to continue the obligation [In re Marriage of Benjamins (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 423, 433, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313 ; see Fam. Code § 4337].

Supporting Spouse to Provide Health Care Coverage

Payment of Health Care Coverage

_____. As additional spousal support, [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband] shall pay the actual costs of obtaining appropriate health care coverage for [supported spouse, e.g., Wife]. "Health care coverage" means a plan or plans providing for the delivery of health care services by insurance coverage, a fee for service, health maintenance organization, preferred provider organization, or any other type of health care delivery system. It includes prescription medications, vision care and dental care. [E.g., Husband] may elect to pay all costs required under this Paragraph directly to each plan providing health care coverage or to reimburse [e.g., Wife] at his/her option. Payment shall be made within _____ days of receiving a notice of premium or other amount due from [e.g., Wife]. The selection of appropriate health care coverage shall be made by [Husband or Wife]. [Add if desired: The annual cost of all health care coverage required under this Paragraph shall not exceed $_____.]

[3] Mutual Waivers

Waivers of Health Care Coverage

Waivers of Health Care Coverage

Neither party shall be obligated to procure, pay for, or otherwise maintain any plan or policy of health care coverage or insurance for the benefit of the other party.

[4] COBRA: Maintenance of Coverages, Election, and Payment of Premiums

COBRA: Maintenance of Health Care Coverages, Election, and Payment of Premiums

COBRA: Maintenance of Health Care Coverage

The parties affirm that on account of their marriage, [supported spouse, e.g., Wife] is a covered family member under the following health care plans provided by [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband's] employment: [specify all medical, dental, vision, prescription medicines, and other plans through which coverage was provided to supported spouse]. These coverages are dependent on the existence of the marital relationship and will terminate on the termination of their marriage. [E.g., Husband] shall maintain [e.g., Wife's] coverage under all of the above plans, and shall pay all costs associated with this maintenance, until the termination of the parties' marriage.

COBRA: Election and Payment of Premium

Immediately on entry of the judgment of dissolution of the parties' marriage, [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband] shall notify his/her employer and all employer-provided health care plan administrators of the fact and date of judgment. [

E.g., Husband] shall obtain all forms and other documents and information necessary, and shall provide all requested assistance, to allow [e.g., Wife] to elect continuation coverage under all such plans under the requirements of 29 United States Code Section 1161 (COBRA). [specify, e.g., Husband] will pay the cost of all premiums assessed with regard to continuation health care coverages under COBRA.

§ 123.246 Provisions for Support After Death of Supporting Spouse

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[4], below, are spousal support provisions intended to continue support after the death of the supporting spouse [see Fam. Code § 4360; In re Marriage of O'Connell (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 565, 572, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334 ; cf. Fam. Code § 4337 (support generally terminates on death of supporting spouse)]. In structuring spousal support, the court may order the supporting spouse to purchase an annuity [see [2], below], maintain life insurance [see [3], below], or establish a trust [see [4], below] for the benefit of the supported spouse so that the supported spouse will not be left without means for support if spousal support is otherwise terminated by the death of the supporting spouse [Fam. Code § 4360(a)]. Unless the agreement specifies the contrary, the court may modify or terminate the obligation at any time before the death of the supporting spouse [Fam. Code § 4360(b)].

Payments of premiums by a spouse for life insurance on the payor's life made under the terms of a divorce decree or separation agreement may qualify for alimony tax treatment as payments on behalf of the payee spouse to the extent that the payee spouse is the owner of the policy [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(b), Q-6]. Therefore, the premium payments are deductible by the supporting spouse and includable in the income of the supported spouse only if the supported spouse is made the owner of the policy [see I.R.C. §§ 71(a), 215(a)]. While maintenance of life insurance is considered a form of spousal support under California law, the fact that it is so designated in the agreement is not dispositive for federal tax purposes; the requirements of tax law must be met [see In re Marriage of Benjamins (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 423, 430-431 n.2, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313]. If alimony tax treatment is not desired, the supporting spouse may be the owner of the policy. For further discussion of the tax treatment of alimony payments, see § 123.51 [see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender)].

For further discussion of provisions for support beyond the death of the supporting spouse and life insurance provisions, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 51,

This trust shall be initially funded with property worth not less than $_____. The trust instrument shall provide for distributions of principal and income to [e.g., Wife] for her/his support to commence on the death of [e.g., Husband].

The court shall/shall not have jurisdiction to modify or terminate the obligation imposed by this Paragraph at any time before the death of [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband]. This obligation shall/shall not be terminated should [e.g., Wife] remarry during [e.g., Husband's] lifetime.

On the death of [e.g., Wife], the trust shall terminate and _____[specify disposition, e.g., the remaining trust property shall be distributed to the children of the marriage in equal shares]. § 123.247 Alimony Trust

[1] Comment

The establishment of a trust to provide support for a dependent spouse has long been sanctioned by the law. Support trusts originally were devised as a way to circumvent the common law's dislike for separation agreements. As the law began to recognize separation agreements, it became acceptable for parties to incorporate into their agreements provisions establishing trusts [see, e.g., Brown v. Brown (1927) 83 Cal. App. 74, 256 P. 595 ; Simmons v. Briggs (1924) 69 Cal. App. 447, 231 P. 604] . Today, although alimony trusts are not common, one might be used in the case of a payor with a high earning capacity that is not likely to continue long term, for example, a professional athlete. There are also special tax rules for payments from a trust to a former spouse, discussed below, that might make them preferable to direct payments of spousal support in some cases [see I.R.C. 682].

Taxation of spousal support paid by trust is governed by Internal Revenue Code Section 682 and not by the alimony tax treatment rules of Internal Revenue Code Sections 71 and 215 [see H. Rep. 98-432, Pt. 2, p. 1492]. The rules for taxation of alimony trusts were revised in the Tax Reform Act of 1984, P.L. 98-369, by deleting all references to payments from trust in §§ 71 and 215 [P.L. 98-369 § 422]. The changes are applicable to divorce or separation instruments executed after 1984, and to instruments executed before but modified after 1985, if the modification expressly provides that the amendments made by T.R.A. 1984 are to apply [P.L. 98-369 § 422(e)]. Previously, trusts for the payment of alimony created in contemplation of dissolution of marriage were governed by I.R.C. § 71. Regulations under both Sections 71 and 682 still reflect this prior law [see Treas. Reg. §§ 1.71-1(c)(3), 1.682(a)-1(a)(2)].

Under Internal Revenue Code Section 682, distributions of income from a trust to a former spouse are income to the recipient and are not income to the payor regardless of the otherwise applicable rules for trust taxation. Despite references in Section 682 to "Husband" and "Wife", the statute is to be read as gender neutral [I.R.C. § 682(c); see I.R.C. 7701(a)(17) ("Husband" and "Wife" to be read as interchangeable)]. Because the amount of the payments are excludable from the payor's income, there is no deduction for the payor under Internal Revenue Code Section 215 [see

Treas. Reg. § 1.682(a)-1(a)(4) (Example 1)].

The payee spouse is considered a beneficiary of the trust for purposes of computing the taxable income of the trust or of the spouse [I.R.C. § 682(b)]. Consequently, trust income is not taxable to the beneficiary as alimony, but is taxable in the same manner that it is taxable to the trust. If the trust income is tax exempt, the beneficiary reports it as tax-exempt income rather than alimony. Thus, the supported spouse can be given tax-free support by funding the trust with tax-exempt assets, such as municipal bonds. Further, the beneficiary is taxable only on distributions of income; payments from principal do not result in any tax liability to her or him [I.R.C. § 682(a) (distributions of income)]. If she or he received spousal support payments directly, the entire amount would be taxable regardless of the source. Other limitations on alimony tax treatment under Internal Revenue Code Section 71 also may not be applicable, such as the requirement that all payments terminate on the death of the supported spouse [see I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(D)], and the frontloading and recapture rules [see I.R.C. § 71(f); Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender)].

For further discussion of alimony trusts under Section 682, see Modern Estate Planning (Matthew Bender), Chapters 6A and 11. For forms for revocable trusts, see Chapter 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms.

[2] FORM

- c. _____ [e.g., Husband] shall contribute all amounts as the Trustee may request, from time to time, to maintain an adequate principal fund to generate income sufficient to make the required payments. the payment of the costs of the Trust and the fees of the Trustee.

e. _____ [e.g., Husband] shall not terminate the Trust before the time set forth above without the written consent of _____ [e.g., Wife].

f. The court [shall or shall not] retain jurisdiction over spousal support for the purpose of amending the terms of the Trust or terminating the Trust before it would otherwise terminate as set forth above.

g. On the death of _____ [e.g., Wife], the Trust shall _____ [specify remainder interest, e.g., terminate and the trust property shall revert to Husband].

_____ [e.g., Husband] shall provide _____ [e.g., Wife] with a copy of the executed Trust deed or instrument.

Until the Trust is created and the Trustee makes the first payment to _____ [e.g., Wife], _____ [e.g., Husband] shall be liable to make the payments required as set forth above directly to _____ [e.g., Wife].

The failure of _____ [e.g., Husband] to establish the Trust shall constitute a material breach of this Agreement, and _____ [e.g., Wife] may then rescind this Agreement or seek other available remedies.

§ 123.260 Nonmodifiable Amount

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a provision to make the amount of spousal support nonmodifiable. In general, a support order may be modified or terminated at any time unless the parties have agreed to the contrary [see Fam. Code §§ 3591, 3651; but see In re Marriage of Cauley (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1100, 1105-1108, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 902 (under Fam. Code § 4325(a), parties' agreement for nonmodifiable support will not prevent court from terminating support if payee spouse is convicted of domestic violence offense perpetrated against payor spouse)].

Modification of amount should be considered in conjunction with retention of jurisdiction to extend the duration of support if it is otherwise to terminate on a given date [see §§ 123.234-123.236]. Commonly, one party will agree to pay a nonmodifiable amount of support in exchange for a definite termination of support after a given period of time. However, the parties might agree that support should be both for an open-ended period of time [see § 123.233] and also nonmodifiable, or for a limited period subject to extension [see §§ 123.235, 123.236], but nonmodifiable as to amount during the period stated.

Modification should also be considered in conjunction with whether support should terminate by operation of law or be continued by agreement on the death of either party or on the remarriage of the supported spouse [see Fam. Code § 4337; §§ 123.264, 123.265]. One court construed nonmodification provisions in the parties' agreement as overriding the statute and continuing support beyond the remarriage of the supported spouse; there was ample evidence in the case that that was, in fact, the intent of the parties [see In re Marriage of Sherman (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1132, 1134-1139, 208 Cal. Rptr. 832; but see In re Marriage of Benjamins (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 423, 432-433, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313 (opposite result; nonmodifiable clause does not extend duty to pay medical insurance premiums beyond death of supported-insured spouse); In re Marriage of Glasser (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 149, 152-153, 226 Cal. Rptr. 229 (opposite result; offer of proof of extrinsic evidence of intent not allowed)]. For this reason, it is recommended that a nonmodifiable clause be followed by language reaffirming that support is to terminate by operation of law under Fam.

Code § 4337, if that is the intent of the parties. For further discussion, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

The effect of cohabitation and Fam. Code § 4323 should also be considered [see § 123.266]. It has also been held that support may not be reduced on account of the supported spouse's cohabitation if the agreement provided that it is not modifiable on any ground [see In re Marriage of Sasson (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 140, 147, 180 Cal. Rptr. 815] .

If support is made nonmodifiable by agreement, it also cannot be "terminated" in the sense of being modified down to $0 [In re Marriage of Bennett (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 1022, 1025-1026, 193 Cal. Rptr. 113] . Such a modification is not necessarily a termination of support; it is a different matter from termination of jurisdiction and termination by operation of law [see In re Marriage of Benjamins (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 423, 433, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313] , and the drafter must consider the intent of the parties on all three issues. For further discussion of termination of support, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 52, Modification and Termination of Spousal Support Orders , Part C (Matthew Bender).

§ 123.261 Conditional Nonmodifiability

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a provision that makes spousal support nonmodifiable unless a particular condition occurs. If an agreement provides that it may only be modified under certain circumstances, the agreement will not be modifiable by the court under any other circumstances [see In re Marriage of Sasson (1982) 129 Cal. Subsequent Modification

_____. The amount of the periodic payments of spousal support provided for in this Agreement shall not be subject to modification or termination unless _____[set forth condition, e.g., Husband is involuntarily terminated from his current employment]. § 123.262 Event Does Not Constitute Change of Circumstances

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a variation on a nonmodification clause. It specifies that the occurrence of a particular event will not constitute a change of circumstances allowing for a modification of spousal support. Ordinarily, the court may modify spousal support based on changed circumstances unless the parties have agreed to the contrary [see Fam. Code §§ 3591(c), 3651]. For example, the parties may wish to specify that the court should not treat the termination of child support as a basis for increasing spousal support [see Fam. Code § 4326 (until 2011, termination of child support pursuant to Fam. Code 3901(a) on child's completion of 12th grade or attainment of age 19 may be treated as change of circumstances justifying modification of spousal support)]. Also, a provision that a particular event does not constitute a change of circumstances may be used to tie together the property division and support provisions of the agreement [In re Marriage of Rabkin (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d. 1071, 1078-1082, 225 Cal. Rptr. 219 (agreement provided that sale of marital residence could not constitute substantial change of circumstances on which to base motion for change in spousal support)].

The occurrence of this event shall not constitute a change of circumstances justifying future modification or termination of the amount of support. [Add if appropriate: However, the nonoccurrence of this event shall constitute such a change of circumstances.]

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.

§ 123.263 Modification Only by Written Agreement

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is an alternative modification provision for use if spousal support is to be nonmodifiable unless the parties agree to the contrary in writing. This approach reverses the statutory operation, which ordinarily makes support modifiable unless the parties agree to the contrary [see Fam. Code §§ 3591, 3651; but see In re Marriage of Cauley (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1100, 1105-1108, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 902 (under Fam. Code § 4325(a), parties' agreement for nonmodifiable support will not prevent court from terminating support if payee spouse is convicted of domestic violence offense perpetrated against payor spouse)]. For further discussion, [see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender)].

[2] FORM

Modification Only by Written Agreement

Modification of Spousal Support

_____. The amount of the periodic payments of spousal support provided for in this Agreement shall not be modifiable except by the subsequent written agreement of the parties. Any such agreement may be submitted to the court and an order entered directing modification of spousal support payments in accordance with the terms of that agreement. Neither party shall otherwise apply directly to any court for modification of the amount of support.

§ 123.264 Nontermination on Remarriage

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a provision in a support agreement that provides that support will continue even if the supported spouse remarries. Use of this provision will avoid termination that will otherwise occur by operation of law on the remarriage of the supported spouse [see Fam. Code § 4337 (absent agreement, remarriage of supported spouse terminates support)]. It has been held that such express language is required to negate the operation of the statute [see In re Marriage of Glasser (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 149, 152-153, 226 Cal. Rptr. 229]. Although there is authority to the effect that a general nonmodifiable clause [see § 123.242] is sufficient [see In re Marriage of Sherman (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1132, 1134-1139, 208 Cal. Rptr. 832], use of this form will resolve any ambiguity. For further discussion, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapter 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

PRACTICE TIP:

Sometimes, in order to provide an incentive to remarry, the supporting spouse will offer to pay spousal support for some limited period, for example, one or two years, after the supported spouse's remarriage. The form, below, can easily be adapted to so provide. Commentary by Diana Richmond.

§ 123.265 Nontermination on Death of Supporting Spouse

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2] and [3], below, are provisions to continue support after the death of the supporting spouse. In the absence of such a provision, support terminates by operation of law on the death of either spouse [Fam. Code § 4337]. Family Code Section 4337 raises the possibility of an agreement to extend support beyond the death of the supported party [see In re Marriage of Benjamins (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 423, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313 (nonmodification clause insufficient to extend obligation to pay medical insurance premiums beyond death of supported-insured spouse)]. However, any such requirement will mean that the payments are not considered as alimony for purposes of obtaining alimony tax treatment [I.R.C. § 71(b)(1)(D); see § 123.51[6][a]].

Form [2] provides that support will continue after the death of the supporting spouse and is payable from his or her estate. The more common approach to continuing support after the death of the supporting spouse is to include a life insurance provision under Family Code Section 4360 [see § 123.243]. Form [3] is for use in conjunction with such a provision. It clarifies that the obligation of support terminates on the supporting spouse's death, but that the life insurance provision is enforceable against the supporting spouse's estate if he or she does not obtain the required coverage during his or her lifetime [see Tintocalis v. Tintocalis (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1590, 1594-1596 ; Lucas v. Elliott (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 888, 893-894, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 746] .

Termination of Support; Enforceability of Life Insurance

The payments of spousal support provided for in this Agreement, and the court's jurisdiction to order spousal support, shall terminate on the death of either party or on the remarriage of [supported spouse, e.g., Wife]. However, the requirement that [supporting spouse, e.g., Husband] procure life insurance as set forth in Paragraph _____ of this Agreement shall be an enforceable obligation and claim against his/her estate, should he/she predecease [e.g., Wife] and fail to have procured the required life insurance coverage.

§ 123.266 Effect of Subsequent Cohabitation

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[4], below, address the effect of the supported spouse's subsequent cohabitation on the support obligation. Form [2] provides that the support obligation set forth in the agreement will not be affected should the supported spouse begin cohabiting with a person of the opposite sex. Use of this provision will avoid the operation of Family Code Section 4323(a), which provides for a rebuttable presumption of decreased need for support if the supported spouse is cohabiting. One court has held that this presumption is overcome by a clause in the agreement that support is not modifiable on any ground [see In re Marriage of Sasson (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 140, 147, 180 Cal. Rptr. 815 ; see also § 123.260]. However, the safer practice is to include a specific provision in the agreement directed to the statute.

Form [3] provides that spousal support will terminate should the supported spouse cohabit with a person of the opposite sex. Such a provision has been judicially recommended [see In re Marriage of Sasson (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 140, 150, 180 Cal. Rptr. 815 (concurring opinion of Hanson, J.)], but requires careful drafting to identify exactly the conduct that will lead to termination of support. Otherwise, a supported spouse might lose her support payments by sharing a home with a sibling of the opposite sex.

Note that while the statutory presumption is limited to opposite sex cohabitation, the parties may agree to broaden their agreement and base it on economic factors rather than sexual conduct. The better view is to focus on the effect of cohabitation on need, rather than on conduct. In this regard, the parties may agree to terminate (or not terminate) support based on any form of cohabitation, regardless of the gender of the cohabitants and regardless of the sexual relationship between them. Form [4] is such a provision.

[2] Cohabitation to Have No Effect

Cohabitation to Have No Effect

Effect of Subsequent Cohabitation

_____. The spousal support payments provided for in this Agreement shall not be subject to future modification or termination should [supported spouse, e.g., Wife] begin cohabiting with a person of the opposite sex. This paragraph constitutes a writing within the meaning of Family Code Section 4323, which section shall not apply to the support obligation created by this Agreement.

[3] Termination of Support on Cohabitation

Termination of Support on Cohabitation

Effect of Subsequent Cohabitation

_____. The spousal support payments provided for in this Agreement, and the court's jurisdiction to order spousal support, shall terminate forever should [supported spouse, e.g., Wife] begin cohabiting with a person of the opposite sex. For purposes of this Paragraph, cohabitation will occur _____ [specify conditions, e.g., when Wife has been living for a period of six consecutive months with a man with whom she is engaging in sexual relations].

[4] Shared Residency as Change of Circumstances

Shared Residency as Change of Circumstances

Effect of Subsequent Shared Residency

The spousal support payments provided for in this Agreement shall not automatically terminate or be reduced should [supported spouse, e.g., Wife] begin cohabiting with a person of the opposite sex. However, if [e.g., Wife] shares a residence with any person in the future, regardless of the gender of that person and regardless of the existence of or lack of a sexual relationship between them, that shared residency may constitute a change of circumstances supporting a reduction or termination of spousal support and termination of jurisdiction to order spousal support. Any such modification or termination of spousal support shall be based on the effect of the shared residency on [e.g., Wife's] need for support.

§ 123.280 Stay of Service of Earnings Assignment Order

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2] and [3], below, are provisions to stay service of the mandatory earnings assignment order. An earnings assignment order must be issued for all support orders, including, presumably, orders made according to the parties' agreement or stipulation [see Fam. Code § 5230(a)]; §§ 123.22[3], 123.32], but service of the assignment on the obligor's employer may be stayed for good cause, as defined by statute [see Fam. Code § 5260], or if the parties agree in writing to an "alternative arrangement" to ensure that support will be paid [Fam. Code § 5260(b)(2)].

An alternative arrangement for staying an earnings assignment order requires a written agreement between the parties that provides for payment of the support obligation as ordered other than through the immediate service of the order. Any agreement between the parties that includes the staying of a service of an earnings assignment must include the concurrence of the district attorney in any case in which support is ordered to be paid through a county officer designated for that purpose. The execution of an agreement under this requirement does not preclude a party from thereafter seeking an earnings assignment on violation of the agreement [Fam. Code § 5260(b)(2)].

There is nothing in Family Code § 5260(b)(2) to suggest any limitation on what is a sufficient alternative arrangement. Presumably, a mere statement that the obligor will make payment by check or money order sent through regular mail is sufficient [Form [2]]. Form [3] provides for payment by directly electronic transfer from the obligor's account to the obligee's account.

The parties, therefore, agree that immediate service of the earnings assignment order shall be stayed.

Either party may change his or her bank and account number on reasonable notice to the other. _____[e.g., Father] accepts this manner of payment as a sufficient alternative arrangement to service of the mandatory earnings assignment order on _____[e.g., Mother's] employer. The forms in [2] and [3], below, are provisions regarding the statutory child support security deposit [see Fam. Code § 4560; § 123.22[4]]. Form [2] requires that a security deposit account be established; Form [3] waives such an account.

Family Code Section 4560(b) states, "Unless expressly waived by the child support obligee, the court may order the establishment of a child support trust account ..." This language would appear to make the account discretionary; nevertheless, if the parties agree that it is unnecessary, it is recommended that an express waiver provision be included in their agreement.

§ 123.283 Support Trust as Security for Support Payments

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, provides for a trust to serve as security for the payment of support by the obligor parent or spouse. The trust will terminate when all of the obligor's duties of child and spousal support terminate, at which time, the trust property is to be returned to the obligor. Alternatively, the trust corpus could be reduced as support obligations with regard to particular persons (children or spouse) terminate.

Forms for dispositive provisions when the trust is to continue for the benefit of the children are included in Ch. 70, Complete Revocable Trust Forms. For a discussion of the tax consequences and forms for support trusts, see Rabkin & Johnson, Current Legal Forms, Chapter 10.

§ 123.290 Verification of Income

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[3], below, are provisions by which a party may verify the income of the other party. Form [2] provides for verification by exchange of tax returns. Form [3] provides for exchange of statements of earnings from employment.

Verification of future changes in the income of either party can be important because change in income may be a changed circumstance justifying an increase or decrease in the amount ordered. This is always the case with regard to child support [see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 42, Modification of Child Support Orders (Matthew Bender)]. Tax returns are subject to discovery in any child support proceeding [Fam. Code § 3552].

Ordinarily, spousal support is modifiable based on future changes in income unless the parties agree to the contrary [see Fam. Code §§ 3591, 3651; but see In re Marriage of Cauley (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1100, 1105-1108, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 902 (under Fam. Code § 4325(a), parties' agreement for nonmodifiable support will not prevent court from terminating support if payee spouse is convicted of domestic violence offense perpetrated against payor spouse)]. Therefore, verification of income is appropriate unless support is to be nonmodifiable.

Verification is especially appropriate to the extent that support is to be based on a percentage of the payor's income [see §§ 123.209, 123.239, 123.240] because changes in income actually affect the amount of support due, not just the question of modification.

In the case of parties whose income comes primarily or exclusively from wages or earnings through employment, exchange of statements of earnings may be sufficient (Form [3]), although a tax return may show other sources of income of which the other party is unaware.

[2] Exchange of Tax ReturnsVerification of Income--Exchange of Tax Returns*Exchange of Tax Returns

_____. No later than _____ [e.g., May 1] of each year, the parties shall exchange copies of their federal and state income tax returns for the preceding taxable year. The copies shall be exact photocopy reproductions of the returns as signed and filed with the Internal Revenue Service and the Franchise Tax Board by the parties.

[3] Exchange of Statements of EarningsVerification of Income--Exchange of Statements of Earnings*Exchange of Statements of Earnings

_____. Each party shall provide the other, on reasonable request, with a copy of any statement of earnings issued to the party by any employer of the party. A request made within six months of a prior request shall not be considered reasonable unless there are specific facts that lead a party to believe that the other has experienced a material increase in income. A party who alleges that he or she has suffered a material decrease in income shall immediately provide the other with a statement of earnings verifying the decrease.

§ 123.291 Tax Treatment of Spousal Support Payments

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[4], below, are several marital settlement agreement provisions covering the tax treatment of payments made for the support of a spouse. They may be used by the parties to expressly state their intent that the payments be afforded alimony tax treatment; that is, the amount is income to the supported spouse and deductible to the supporting spouse [see I.R.C. §§ 71, 215], as well as to maximize the likelihood that the IRS will accept that intent. The taxation of spousal support is considered in §§ 123.50-123.58 [see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender)].

The form in [2], below, is a provision confirming the parties' understanding of the tax consequences of their agreement by providing that the support payments will be deductible by the payor and included in the gross income of the payee. The form in [3], below, is a "hold harmless" provision by which the supported spouse indemnifies the supporting spouse from any income tax liability from his or her failure to report spousal support as income.

The forms in [4], below, are two possible approaches if the IRS denies alimony tax treatment for payments that the parties intend to be characterized as spousal support. The spousal support provisions may either become void and subject to further negotiation between the parties, or the amount of the payments may be reduced by a specified percent.

§ 123.292 Family Support

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a provision for family support, which combines child support and spousal support without designating the amount allocated to each [Fam. Code § 92; see Fam. Code §§ 3586, 4066, 4074]. Family support is an income-tax shifting device designed to receive alimony tax treatment under I.R.C. §§ 71 and 215 (deductible to payor; income to payee) for payments that might otherwise be treated as child support. As such, the effectiveness of a family support agreement depends entirely on whether it conforms to the requirements of Internal Revenue statutes, regulations, and other IRS rulings.

Alimony tax treatment is not available with regard to the part of any payment that is fixed as child support by the terms of the divorce or separation instrument [I.R.C. § 71(c)(1); Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1(e)]. If any amount of the support specified will be reduced on the happening of a contingency specified in the agreement related to a child, such as attaining a specified age, marrying, dying, or leaving school, or at a time that can clearly be associated with such a contingency, the amount of the reduction will be treated as child support and will not receive alimony tax treatment [I.R.C. § 71(c)(2); see Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T(c)]. Therefore, no part of family support may terminate when child support payments otherwise would be expected to terminate [see § 123.212]. A possible approach to structuring family support is to provide for a step down in support [see § 123.238] at periodic intervals unrelated to the age of the children.

For discussion of the effect of the statewide uniform child support guideline on family support agreements, see § 123.21 [2]. For detailed discussion of alimony tax treatment, see § 123.51 [see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 160, Tax Effects of Dissolution (Matthew Bender)].

§ 123.293 Statements of Current Circumstances For Spousal Support

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, has statements that set forth the current circumstances of the parties that underlie the spousal support provisions of the agreement. They are not intended to present an all-inclusive list of all factors that must be considered in support of the terms agreed to; rather, they are examples of some of the most common issues involved in determining spousal support.

The purpose of provisions such as these is to give guidance to the court in modification proceedings. Only if there is a clear record of the facts and circumstances on which the original support provisions were based can a reviewing court determine whether there has been a material change of circumstances justifying a modification of support [see In re Marriage of Laube (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1222, 1226, 251 Cal. Rptr. 745]. The failure to make an adequate record supporting the order can be fatal to success on appeal, because it means that the support order appealed from will be presumed correct with all presumptions indulged to support it on matters on which the record is silent [In re Marriage of Laube (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1222, 1226, 251 Cal. Rptr. 745]. In lieu of including them in the agreement, statements such as these may be cast as findings supporting the court's order giving effect to the agreement [Fam. Code § 4332 (court required to make specific finding regarding standard of living during marriage and may make other factual determination)]. For consideration of and forms for findings, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 51, Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

Statements regarding the factors under Fam. Code § 4320 that are critical in determining spousal support should be set forth as findings or in the agreement [see In re Marriage of Geraci (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1278, 1296-1298, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 234 (court must weigh all factors listed in Fam. Code § 4320, and mere statement that factors favor award of support is insufficient if not accompanied by analysis of factors); In re Marriage of Fenton (1982) 134 Cal. App. 3d 451, 457-458, 184 Cal. Rptr. 597 (remanding for reconsideration and appropriate findings); but see In re Marriage of Lucero (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 836, 845, 173 Cal. Rptr. 680 (court not required to make separate findings regarding each factor in statute)]. Certain other issues have been noted by reviewing courts as particularly important to clarify at the time of the original order. If the amount of support agreed to is insufficient to meet the supported spouse's needs at the marital standard of living, the order should so specify [In re Marriage of Smith (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 469, 491-493, 274 Cal. Rptr. 911] . Such a statement is crucial to the power of the court to increase support in the future based solely on the supporting spouse's increased income [In re Marriage of Hoffmeister (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 351, 363-364, 236 Cal. Rptr. 543] . For further discussion, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 52, Modification and Termination of Spousal Support Orders (Matthew Bender).

If the agreement is structured based on a particular expectation, for example, that the supported spouse will become self-sufficient by a particular time, the expectation should be set forth in a finding or in the agreement. This will assist a future court in determining whether to modify or terminate support based on either the fulfillment or failure of the expectation [see In re Marriage of Biderman (1992) 5 Cal. App. 4th 409, 413-414, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791 ; see also Fam. Code §§ 4320(l), 4330(b) (concerning goal that parties become self-supporting and need for admonition to that effect by court)]. For a related discussion, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 52 (Matthew Bender).

Statements of Current Circumstances For Spousal Support

Facts and Circumstances Regarding Spousal Support

_____. The parties affirm that the following facts are true as of the date of this Agreement, and that the spousal support provisions of this Agreement are made in consideration of these facts:

1. The parties were married on _____ [date] and separated on _____ [date]. The duration of the marriage is _____ years, _____ months. Therefore, this [is or is not] a marriage of long duration within the meaning of Family Code Section 4336. [If marriage is of long duration This Agreement is/is not intended to avoid the otherwise applicable effects of that statute regarding indefinite retention of jurisdiction over spousal support in a marriage of long duration.]
2. Husband is _____ years old and Wife is _____ years old.
_____. [Specify facts concerning factors affecting appropriateness and amount of spousal support, e.g., Both are in good health. The children of the marriage are in high school, and both parties may engage in gainful employment without unduly interfering with the interests of the children. From 1974 through 1979, Wife was employed outside of the home and provided Husband's sole support so that he could obtain a professional degree in Optometry].
3. Wife is currently _____ [employed or self-employed or unemployed [add if employed or self-employed as a _____ (job title) by _____ (employer) at _____ (employer or business address)]. Her gross monthly income from all sources is $ _____ and his monthly expenses are $ _____.
4. Husband is currently _____ [employed or self-employed or unemployed [add if employed or self-employed as a _____ (job title) by _____ (employer) at _____ (employer or business address)]. His gross monthly income from all sources is $ _____ and his monthly expenses are $ _____.

[Include if support will be based on actual earnings rather than earning capacity]

5. The parties' current incomes, as set forth above, are a reasonable reflection of their earning capacities, and the spousal support provisions of this Agreement are based on their actual earnings, not on their earning capacity.

6. The marital standard of living was _____ [describe generally, e.g., middle class; comfortable, but not lavish]. Total marital net monthly income at the time of separation was approximately $ _____. _____ [Supporting spouse, e.g., Husband's] current income [is or is not] sufficient to maintain both parties separately at the marital standard of living.

7. _____ [Specify facts concerning supported spouse's ability to support himself or herself, e.g., Wife has a bachelor of arts degree from the University of California, but was unemployed during the marriage until 1991 to devote time to domestic duties. Since 1991, Wife has worked part time as a graphic designer]. _____ [supported spouse, e.g., Wife's] current net monthly income is insufficient to support [herself or himself] at the marital standard of living.

8. _____ [Supported spouse, e.g., Wife's] reasonable needs to maintain [herself or himself] at the marital standard of living, considering the cost of living as of the date of this Agreement, require approximately $ _____ per month of total net disposable income]. The support provided for in this Agreement, together with Wife's reasonably anticipated income, [is or is not] sufficient to meet [her or his] reasonable needs.

9. _____ [Specify facts regarding underlying assumptions on which support provisions are based, e.g., Support for a limited term, as set forth in this Agreement, is based on Wife's intention to attend community college to obtain additional training as a computer programmer, which she anticipates will allow her to become self-supporting in approximately two years].

10. [Include if supported spouse will be expected to become self-supporting at some time in future, at which time, support payments will terminate _____ (Supported spouse, e.g., Wife) understands and acknowledges the goal of becoming self-supporting within a reasonable time period, that [she or he] must make reasonable, good faith efforts to become self-supporting within a reasonable time period, and that a failure to make such efforts may be a factor a court will consider in modifying or terminating support, as provided in California Family Code Sections 4320 and 4330.]

§ 123.294 Notice of Occurrence of Contingencies

[1] Comment

The form in [2], below, requires both parties to give notice to the other on the occurrence of any contingency that affects the duty to pay support, or the amount of support. In an order to pay spousal support for a contingent period of time, liability terminates on the occurrence of that contingency [Fam. Code § 4334(a); see § 123.237]. If proper notice is not given, the supported spouse must refund all overpayments after first applying overpayments to any support payments that are in default [Fam. Code § 4334(b)].

There is a similar statutory rule with regard to child support [see Fam. Code § 4007]. For further discussion of this statute, see § 123.212[1].

§ 123.295 Provision for Nondischargeability of Support Obligations in Bankruptcy

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, may be used to set forth the parties' agreement and understanding that the payor spouse's support obligations under the marital settlement agreement will not be dischargeable in bankruptcy.

An express provision of this type is not a prerequisite to nondischargeability of a domestic support obligation [see 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14A), 523(a)(5)]. However, it may be useful to clarify the parties' intent that the support obligations created in their marital settlement agreement be treated as a nondischargeable domestic support obligation in the event of the payor spouse's subsequent bankruptcy [see Sloan v. Mitchell (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 47, 51, 104 Cal. Rptr. 418 (whether obligation is intended as support is determined by intent of parties, as expressed in their agreement)].

The Bankruptcy Code provides that a "domestic support obligation" is not dischargeable in bankruptcy [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5)]. A "domestic support obligation" for bankruptcy purposes includes any debt (whether accruing before or after bankruptcy proceedings are commenced), including interest accruing on that debt, that satisfies all of the following conditions [11 U.S.C. § 101(14A)]:

- The debt is owed to or recoverable by (1) the bankruptcy debtor's spouse, former spouse, or child; (2) the parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative of the bankruptcy debtor's child; or (3) a governmental unit.
- The debt is in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support (including assistance provided by a governmental unit) of the bankruptcy debtor's spouse, former spouse, child, or child's parent, regardless of whether the debt is expressly designated as alimony, maintenance, or support [see Shaver v. Shaver (9th Cir. 1986) 736 F.2d 1314, 1315-1316 (whether obligation imposed by marital settlement agreement is actually "in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support," is to be determined by bankruptcy court based on all circumstances; construing former 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5), which contained substantially similar language to that of current 11 U.S.C. § 101(14A)).

- The debt is established or subject to establishment before or after the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, by reason of a separation agreement, divorce decree, property settlement agreement, court order, or determination made in accordance with nonbankruptcy law by a governmental unit.

- The debt has not been assigned to a nongovernmental entity, unless the assignment was voluntarily made by the bankruptcy debtor's spouse, former spouse, child, or child's parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative for the purpose of collecting the debt.

Even if it does not qualify as a "domestic support obligation," a debt owed to a spouse, former spouse, or child of the bankruptcy debtor will not be dischargeable in bankruptcy if it was incurred in the course of a divorce or separation or in connection with a separation agreement, divorce decree or other order of a court of record, or determination made in accordance with state or territorial law by a governmental unit [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(15)].

This chapter contains forms for use in marital settlement agreements and other custody agreements to set forth provisions for child custody and visitation. The Legal Background contains a brief summary of the major considerations involved in drafting provisions related to custody. The Transaction Guide sets forth a drafting guide to assist in the selection of appropriate provisions. The Forms include provisions governing custody and visitation by parents and nonparents, as well as related general provisions.

In In re Marriage Cases, the California Supreme Court held that differential treatment of opposite-sex and same-sex couples in California's marriage statutes violated the California Constitution's guarantees of privacy, due process, and equal protection [In re Marriage Cases (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 757, 784, 847-856, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 183 P.3d 384] . That holding was superseded by the subsequent adoption of Proposition 8, which amended the California Constitution to provide that only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California [see Cal. Const. art. I, § 7.5 (eff. Nov. 5, 2008)]. The Supreme Court upheld Proposition 8 against a constitutional challenge, but in doing so the Court reaffirmed the continuing validity of same-sex marriages entered into before November 5, 2008, the effective date of Proposition 8 [Strauss v. Horton (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 364, 470-474, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591, 207 P.3d 48 (estimating 18,000 same-sex marriages lawfully entered into before Proposition 8 took effect)]. If a form in this chapter is used in the context of a same-sex marriage lawfully entered into before that date, the language in the form should be modified accordingly. For example, the names of the parties may be used instead of terms like "Husband" and "Wife."

The forms set forth in this chapter are intended to be used in conjunction with the complete forms of marital settlement agreement set forth in Chapter 120. Coverage of provisions for spousal and child support is set forth in Chapter 123, and coverage of provisions for payment of income taxes, attorney's fees, and costs is the subject of Chapter 125. For more extensive coverage of the parent-child relationship, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, Chapters 30- 35 (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

§ 124.10 Validity of Parties' Agreements on Custody and Visitation

[1] In General

In general, parents of minor children may validly enter into agreements regarding the legal and physical custody of those children, subject to the approval of a court having jurisdiction to determine custody issues. However, parental agreements regarding custody of their children are not binding on the court. Rather, the best interests of the child control custody determinations, regardless of the parents' agreement [In re Marriage of Weiss (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 106, 109-111, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 339, cert. denied, 136 L. Ed 2d 399; Adoption of Matthew B. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1239, 1258-1259, 284 Cal. Rptr. 18; Stewart v. Stewart (1955) 130 Cal. App. 2d 186, 193, 278 P.2d 441]. Thus, courts will not approve arrangements that would result in the placement of a child in a situation of physical or emotional harm, or otherwise be deleterious to what might objectively be considered the child's best interests.

Nevertheless, in most cases parental agreements will be approved by the court. Ordinarily, it is preferable that the parents come to some resolution of custody themselves rather than litigate the issue for determination by the court, and courts will frequently observe the parties' wishes regarding their custody arrangements, assuming that the arrangements appear to be in the best interests of the children involved.

Parties cannot as such confer jurisdiction on the court to entertain their custody matter; the court must have jurisdiction under the provisions of applicable statutes [see Fam. Code § 2010; see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 32, Jurisdiction to Determine Custody and Visitation (Matthew Bender)]. Likewise, agreements between parents that attempt to divest the court of continuing jurisdiction over child custody are void and unenforceable regardless of any possible estoppel argument [In re Marriage of Goodarzirad (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 1020, 1026, 230 Cal. Rptr. 203 (stipulation to give up custody rights and agree to termination of parental rights in exchange for forbearance on child support)]. A court acts in excess of its jurisdiction if it approves such a stipulation [In re Marriage of Goodarzirad (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 1020, 1030, 230 Cal. Rptr. 203]; see also In re Marriage of Jackson (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 980, 990-994, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 365 (judgment terminating parental rights is voidable if entered by court solely on basis of parties' stipulation and without judicial determination of child's best interests).

Custody issues may arise in various contexts, including, for example, disputes between unmarried parents, disputes during marriage, and more commonly, in the context of traditional family law proceedings (dissolution, separation, and annulment). They may also take place in parentage, guardianship, domestic violence and adoption proceedings [see Fam. Code § 3021 (proceedings to which Family Code custody provisions apply)] and in juvenile court dependency proceedings [see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 328, Juvenile Courts: Dependency Proceedings (Matthew Bender)]. Thus, while the provisions for agreements contained in this chapter focus on the traditional family law setting, counsel should keep in mind that there may be other situations in which the various forms are applicable.

In addition, note that many agreements on custody are reached through the participation of court mediators [see Fam. Code § 3160 et seq.] or private mediators. While this chapter does not concern mediation proceedings, counsel should keep in mind that the forms set forth herein may have application both in composing a complete marital settlement agreement with parties who agreed from the outset regarding custody matters, as well as parties who reached agreement after mediation.

[2] Effect of Agreement for Temporary Custody

In any proceeding in which child custody is at issue [see Fam. Code § 3021], a petition for a temporary custody order may be included with the initial filing or may be filed at any time after the initial filing [Fam. Code § 3060]. The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act Declaration [Fam. Code § 3429] must be included [see Fam. Code § 3060].

If the parties have agreed to or reached an understanding on the custody or temporary custody of their children, a copy of the agreement (or a declaration as to their understanding) must be attached to the petition or moving papers. As promptly as possible after filing, the court must, except in exceptional circumstances, enter an order granting temporary custody in conformity with the agreement or understanding, or in accordance with any stipulation of the parties [Fam. Code § 3061]. For discussion of the effect of the temporary custody order on the permanent custody determination, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure 2d ed., Ch. 33, Custody and Visitation Orders (Matthew Bender).

[3] Effect of Agreement for Joint Custody

As discussed in § 124.10[1], because the primary factor in deciding custody and visitation matters is the best interests of the child [see Fam. Code §§ 3011, 3040(a)], stipulations or agreements between parents that attempt to decide the permanent custody of their minor children or divest the court of jurisdiction to make or modify that decision are not binding on the court [Van der Vliet v. Van der Vliet (1927) 200 Cal. 721, 722, 254 P. 945 ; In re Marriage of Goodarzirad (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 1020, 1026, 230 Cal. Rptr. 203] . However, if the parents have agreed to an order of joint custody or agree to such an order in open court, there is a presumption affecting the burden of proof that joint custody is in the best interests of the child. This presumption is subject to the statutory considerations governing determination of the best interests of the child [Fam. Code § 3080; see Fam. Code § 3011].

In making an order of joint legal custody, the court must specify the circumstances under which both parents must consent in order to exercise legal control of the child and the consequences of the failure to obtain mutual consent in those circumstances. In all other circumstances, either parent acting alone may exercise legal control of the child. However, an order of joint legal custody may not be construed to permit an action that is inconsistent with the physical custody order unless that action is expressly authorized by the court [Fam. Code § 3083].

In making an order of joint physical custody, the court must specify the rights of each parent to physical control of the child in sufficient detail to enable a parent deprived of that control to implement laws for relief of child snatching and kidnapping [Fam. Code § 3084].

CHAPTER 124 PROVISIONS FOR CHILD CUSTODY AND VISITATION
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

34-124 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 124.11

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.

§ 124.11 Terminology

There is an evolving practice of avoiding the use of certain terms in custody agreements and orders that have become associated with "winners" and "losers" in custody disputes, and that have specific gender association. The courts have taken the leadership in this practice, through the judges themselves, through mediation arms, such as Family Court Services, and through investigators, counselors, and evaluators. The family law bar is also moving strongly in this direction.

The term "award" is to be avoided. The courts now make custody "orders" and "grant" custody to a particular person. If at all possible, the parents are encouraged to agree to a "shared physical custody" plan or arrangement in which each parent has periods of "primary physical responsibility" for the child. Under a shared physical custody arrangement, it is unnecessary to label one parent as "custodial" and the other as "noncustodial." The arrangement may involve any particular percentage "time-share" that is appropriate, of which 50-50 is just one possibility. Therefore, it is not necessary to label the plan as one of "joint" or "sole" physical custody [cf. Fam. Code § 3004 (joint physical custody means that each parent has significant periods of physical custody)]. Further, the time that the parent with the lesser time-share spends with the child does not have to be labelled as "visitation."

The forms in this chapter conform to this terminology to the extent possible. Nevertheless, there are some situations that can only be characterized under the traditional nomenclature of "custodial parent" and "visitation." When necessary, these terms are still used in the chapter.

§ 124.100 Custody and Visitation Provisions

NOTE:

The forms in this chapter are provisions that are designed to be used in a marital settlement agreement or other custody agreement in the case of unmarried parents. The forms assume that the children of the relationship have been identified by name, birthdate, and gender in an introductory provision of the agreement. Because parent-child agreements are not limited to marital proceedings, the parties are generally identified in this chapter as "the father" and "the mother." The designations may be changed to "Husband and Wife" or "Petitioner" and "Respondent" to conform to the general form of the agreement. For examples of complete marital settlement agreements, as well as checklists of additional provisions that may be included in a marital settlement agreement, see Ch. 120, Complete Marital Settlement Agreements.

1. Include following information:

- a. Whether legal custody will be joint or sole, and if sole, which parent will have legal custody [see § 124.200].

(4) Any restrictions on visitation rights [see § 124.222].

d. Transportation arrangements for implementing shared physical custody plan [see § 124.224].

(1) Type of transportation between parents' homes or other location where physical custodial rights will be exercised.

(2) Who will pay transportation expenses.

(3) Where child will be picked up and dropped off.

§ 124.200 Legal Custody

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[10], below, are various marital settlement agreement provisions related to legal custody. Legal custody refers to the right and responsibility to make the decisions relating to the health, education, and welfare of the child [see Fam. Code §§ 3003, 3006]. If both parents have those rights, they have joint legal custody [Fam. Code § 3003]; if only one parent has the rights, that parent has sole legal custody [Fam. Code § 3006]. The court may grant joint legal custody without granting joint physical custody [Fam. Code § 3085].

The parties should select either form [2] (sole legal custody) or form [3] (joint legal custody), according to their agreement. They should then select any of the more specific provisions from forms [4]-[10] to carry out any specific agreements about various components of legal custody.

In making an order for joint legal custody, the court must specify the circumstances under which the consent of both parents is required to be obtained in order to exercise legal control of the child and the consequences of the failure to obtain mutual consent. In all other circumstances, either joint legal custodian-parent, acting alone, may exercise legal control of the child [Fam. Code § 3083]. Therefore, if the parents want different authority for different aspects of joint custody (for example, religion, schools, medical treatment), they should include specific provisions as to those aspects from the forms, below.

The parents may, perhaps, agree that only one of them will have the authority of legal custody, but that in a particular matter, that authority will be restricted by the agreement. For example, they might agree that the child will only be reared in a particular religion, but in all other aspects, only one parent will have the decision-making authority. In such a case, they may elect to identify their plan as sole legal custody [see [2], below] and include a specific religion restriction clause [see [4], below]. If they elect to identify the plan as joint legal custody because the authority of the parent has been restricted [see Fam. Code § 3006], they should then specify that in all other matters, the indicated parent has the sole decision-making authority.

With respect to an agreement on religious upbringing, counsel should keep in mind that such a provision may well be unenforceable, in light of the principle that a parent will not be enjoined from involving a child with that parent's religious activities in the absence of a clear, affirmative showing of harm to the child [In re Marriage of Weiss (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 106, 109, 111, 117, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 339, cert. denied, 136 L. Ed. 2d 399 (premarital agreement purporting to govern religious upbringing of child held unenforceable, as discussed in § 111.51)]. Therefore, if the clause set forth in [4], below, is used to articulate the parties' desires and intentions regarding the religious upbringing of their child, counsel should inform the client that there are likely enforcement problems.

Joint legal custody only works as long as the parents can agree. Each should understand that a stalemate will ultimately require the court to terminate joint legal custody and select one parent as the sole legal custodian. For this reason, they should consider alternate provisions for resolving any matter on which they cannot agree. Agreeing to mediation or designating a named mediator is one possible approach.

For discussion of the statutory prohibitions against awarding custody to persons convicted of certain felonies [see Fam. Code § 3030], see § 124.222[1].

For discussion of the factors that a court will consider in making a custody order, including matters that are within the scope of legal custody, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 33, Custody and Visitation Orders (Matthew Bender).

[4] Religious Training

CAUTION:

One appellate court has held that a premarital agreement on religious upbringing is not enforceable [see [1], above; § 111.51]. This ruling potentially applies to the clause that follows. While the parties may wish to memorialize their intentions on religious upbringing, they should be informed of the likely enforcement problems.

CHAPTER 124 PROVISIONS FOR CHILD CUSTODY AND VISITATION
PART IV. FORMS
A. Custody Provisions

34-124 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 124.201

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.

§ 124.201 Shared Physical Custody

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[8], below, are for use to set forth the actual physical custodial plan of the parties. These forms are drafted in the terminology of "shared physical custody" rather than in the traditional form of sole or joint physical custody [see § 124.11].

A shared physical custody plan may be, but need not be, what has been traditionally called joint physical custody. By statute, joint physical custody means that each of the parents has significant periods of physical custody [Fam. Code § 3004; cf. Fam. Code § 3007 (sole physical custody means that child lives with and is under supervision of one parent, subject to other parent's right of visitation)]. In contrast, a shared physical custody plan may involve any percentage sharing of physical custody. Even a minimal visitation right may be characterized as shared physical custody in which one parent has primary physical responsibility for the children for something like 5 percent of the time. The term "primary physical responsibility for" was introduced into the statutes through the statewide uniform child support guideline, which avoids considering parents as "custodial" or "noncustodial" and makes the time-share a variable in the child support formula [see Fam. Code § 4055(a), (b)(1)(D)]. Under the formula, there is no line between sole custody and joint custody; rather child support varies according to the parents' time-sharing plan.

The form in [2], below, specifies the particular times when each parent will have physical custody of the children. Form [3] provides for alternating periods of actual physical custody, such as weekly or monthly. The length of the appropriate period depends on the proximity of the parents' residences, whether they live in the same school district, and the age of the children. Form [4] gives one parent physical custody during the school year and the other physical custody during designated school vacation periods. This kind of arrangement minimizes disruption to the children's schooling, and the parents need not live near each other for it to work. The form in [5] specifies particular times when one parent will have physical custody and gives the other parent physical custody at all other times. This form may be used to express a more traditional primary custody with visitation arrangement in the terminology of shared physical custody. Forms [2] through [5] all provide for the transfer of the children from one home to the other at the beginning and end of each custodial period [see also § 124.224].

The form in [6], below, provides for one parent's visitation during the custodial period of the other. Visitation rights should usually be provided if the respective custodial periods are lengthy, such as if one parent has the school year and the other the summer. Also, the parties may want to specify visitation rights for holidays that might fall within the other parent's custodial time.

The form in [7], below, designates one parent as the primary caretaker of the child and one home as the primary home of the child for determining eligibility for public assistance [see Fam. Code § 3086]. In non-AFDC cases, such a provision might be necessary if there is some benefit that the parties wish the children to receive that depends on residency, for example, attendance in a particular school district. If there is no such benefit, there is no real need to designate either parent as primary, and efforts to do so may prove counterproductive in helping the parties reach agreement.

The form in [8], below, sets forth the parents' time-sharing plan in percents for purposes of the statewide uniform child support guideline. The guideline's formula requires that the custodial arrangement be quantified in terms of percents for the approximate time that each parent has primary physical responsibility for the children. The percents must total 100 percent [see Fam. Code § 4055(a), (b)(1)(D)].

§ 124.202 Traditional Physical Custody Arrangements

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2], below, express the parents' custodial agreement in the traditional terms of sole or joint physical custody. Although the use of these terms is diminishing [see § 124.11], they still have statutory meaning [see Fam. Code §§ 3004, 3007].

Form [2] provides that one parent will have sole physical custody while the other has visitation rights. Sole physical custody means that a child will reside with and under the supervision of one parent, subject to the other parent's visitation rights [see Fam. Code § 3007]. The appropriate visitation provisions from Subpart 2 should be included [see § 124.220 et seq.].

Form [3] provides that the parents will have joint physical custody, which means that each parent will have significant periods of physical custody [see Fam. Code § 3004]. Therefore, appropriate time-sharing provisions in § 124.201 should be included. By statute, an order of joint physical custody must specify the rights of each parent to physical control of the child in sufficient detail to enable a parent deprived of that control to implement laws for relief of child snatching and kidnapping [Fam. Code § 3084]. The components of form [3] that express the parties' actual time-share arrangement should meet this specificity requirement.

§ 124.203 Split Physical Custody

The form in [2], below is a provision for split physical custody, an arrangement by which each parent receives the primary physical custody of one of the children of the marriage. This form is cast in the preferred language of a shared-custody plan for each child [see §§ 124.11, 124.201]. However, the form may be modified to give the primary parent the sole physical custody of a child and the other parent a right of visitation with that child [see §§ 124.202; 124.220 et seq.].

Generally, split custody is not favored; it is preferable to keep siblings together [In re Marriage of Heath (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 444, 449-451, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 760 (sibling bond should be preserved whenever possible); but see In re Marriage of Steiner (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 519, 529, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 671 (keeping siblings together is weighty but not dispositive factor, and trial court must also consider for each child which parent, as primary custodian, will best facilitate child's good relationship with other parent)]. However, older children may each have an informed preference to live with a different parent [see Fam. Code § 3042 (court must consider preference of child of sufficient age and reasoning capacity); see also In re Marriage of Rosson (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 1094, 1103, 224 Cal. Rptr. 250] . Unless the agreement discloses that split custody is the preference of the children and that they are old enough to make reasoned decisions, the parties may expect some heightened judicial scrutiny of the agreement.

The parents should also address the legal custody of each child. They may wish to retain joint legal custody, or grant each parent the sole legal custody of the child for whom that parent assumes primary physical responsibility. The appropriate provisions from § 124.200 should be selected for each child.

For purposes of child support under the statewide uniform child support guideline in a case of split custody, the formula uses the average of the approximate percentages of time that the higher earner parent has primary physical responsibility for each child [see Fam. Code § 4055(b)(1)(D); see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., ch. 41, Child Support Orders (Matthew Bender)].

Mother shall have primary physical responsibility for [name of first child, e.g., John] at the following times: [specify]; and Father shall have primary physical responsibility for [e.g., John] at the following times: [specify]. For purposes of the statewide uniform guideline, Mother shall be deemed to have primary physical responsibility for [e.g., John] _____ percent of the time, and Father shall be deemed to have primary physical responsibility for [e.g., John] _____ percent of the time.

Father shall have primary physical responsibility for [name of second child, e.g., Mary] at the following times: [specify]; and Mother shall have primary physical responsibility for [e.g., Mary] at the following times: [specify]. The parties recognize that the children have achieved a sufficient level of emotional and intellectual maturity to have a voice in the matter of their physical custody. This custodial plan has been agreed to in accordance with the best interests of the children and their own preferences.

[Add other provisions regarding shared custody from § 124.201 as desired for each child.]

§ 124.204 Custody to Nonparent

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below is a custody provision that grants the custody of the children of the parties to a nonparent. Such a provision will be rarely used, but there are instances in which neither parent will be able to assume responsibility for the care and control of the children. In such a case, they may be able to agree on an appropriate relative or other third person to take primary physical custody.

This provision provides that the nonparent custodian will be joined as a party to the proceeding for dissolution of marriage, and is a third-party beneficiary of the marital settlement agreement with respect to the provisions in the agreement relating to child custody [see Fam. Code § 2021; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.154, 5.158]. The parties may or may not want to agree to formalize the arrangement further by consenting to the appointment of the custodial nonparent as the legal guardian of the person of the children [see Prob. Code § 1500 et seq.]. Letters of guardianship will give the custodian clear indicia of custodial authority sufficient to obtain law enforcement assistance in retaining the child pending further court orders. However, law enforcement authorities will probably also enforce a court order granting the nonparent custody according to the parents' agreement [see Bookstein v. Bookstein (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 219, 223, 86 Cal. Rptr. 495 (appearance at proceedings by nonparent custodian counsel's signature on child custody stipulation held sufficient to render order enforceable as to all parties)]. In representing the nonparent, it is advised to petition for letters of guardianship regardless of the terms of the parents' agreement. Custody disputes between parents and nonparents are considered in detail in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 33, Custody and Visitation Orders (Matthew Bender).

In agreeing to give custody to a third party, the parents must understand that neither may be able to automatically obtain custody of the children in the future on demand. Although there is both a statutory and a constitutionally based parental preference for custody [see Fam. Code § 3040(a)(1); Stanley v. Illinois (1972) 405 U.S. 645, 649-659, 92 S. Ct. 1208, 31 L. Ed. 2d 551], the preference is defeated by a finding that granting custody to a parent would be detrimental to the child, which must be supported by clear and convincing evidence [see Fam. Code § 3041(a),(b)]. The requisite clear and convincing proof of detriment may consist of a showing that the child has been in a stable home with a nonparent who has assumed the role of parent for a substantial period of time, a showing that may be made by a preponderance of the evidence [Fam. Code § 3041(c),(d); see H.S. v. N.S. (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 1131, 1137-1143, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 470 (upholding Fam. Code § 3041 against constitutional challenge)]. Thus, courts are inclined to find that it is detrimental to remove a child from a custodial home where he or she is well adjusted and well cared for, regardless of the improvement of the conditions of a parent [see In re Volkland (1977) 74 Cal. App. 3d 674, 679-680, 141 Cal. Rptr. 625 ; In re Reyna (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 288, 302-303, 126 Cal. Rptr. 138 ; see also Guardianship of Marino (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 952, 956-961, 106 Cal. Rptr. 655] .

If a voluntary guardianship is established, it may be terminated if the court finds that it is in the child's best interests to terminate the guardianship [Prob. Code § 1601]. However, the burden in a guardianship termination proceeding is on the parent to show his or her overall fitness sufficient to overcome the inherent trauma of removing the child from a successful caregiver [Guardianship of Simpson (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 914, 921, 930-933, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389 ; Guardianship of Cassandra H. (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1228, 1236, 1238-1240, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 668 (standard of Prob. Code 1601 requires review of totality of evidence bearing on natural parent's fitness)].

Appropriate visitation provisions from the forms in Subpart 2 should be selected for each parent [see § 124.220 et seq.]. Special consideration should be given to whether the factors that make it impossible for a parent to have custody also indicate that unspecified "reasonable" visitation is also inappropriate. For example, a parent may have unsuitable living arrangements, in which case it might be appropriate to prohibit overnight visitation. It may also be appropriate to prohibit either parent from removing the children from the state during visitation time [see § 124.240[4]].

Custody to Nonparent

Child Custody and Parental Visitation

_____. The parties have concluded that neither of them is able to exercise proper care and custody of the children at this time. Therefore, they both agree that [name of custodian] ("Custodian") shall have the legal and physical custody and control of the children, with the right and responsibility to make all decisions relating to their health, education, and welfare, subject to the parties' rights of reasonable visitation as set forth below.

The Custodian shall be joined as a party to the parents' pending proceedings for dissolution of marriage. Further, the parties affirm that the Custodian is an intended third-party beneficiary of this Paragraph of this agreement, and is entitled to enforce its custody provisions by all lawful means. [The parties further agree to consent to the appointment of the Custodian as the guardian of the person (and estate) of the children in proceedings to be initiated by the Custodian in the Probate Division of the Superior Court of _____ County.]

The parties affirm that each has been advised [by his or her counsel] that by so agreeing they are creating a legal right to the custody of their children in the Custodian. They further affirm that although they recognize that this custody agreement is subject to future modification, they understand that neither is automatically entitled to the custody of the children on demand at any time in the future, and that a court may continue to grant custody of the children to the Custodian if it finds that granting custody to a parent would be detrimental to the children and that continuing custody with the Custodian is required to serve the best interests of the children. [Further, they understand that a voluntarily established legal guardianship may be terminated only if a court determines that it is no longer necessary that the children have a guardian or that it is in the children's best interests to terminate the guardianship.]

Custodian's Consent to Terms of Agreement

I, [name of custodian], am the person designated to receive custody of the children under Paragraph _____ of this agreement. I agree to accept the custody of the minor children of the parties and to give my best efforts for their care, custody, maintenance, and welfare. I agree to allow and to cooperate with visitation by the parents as set forth in this agreement.

§ 124.220 Unspecified "Reasonable" Visitation

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The in [2], below, form provides for unspecified reasonable visitation with the children of the parties. It is for use if the parents have agreed to formulate their custody plan in the traditional terms of a sole physical custodial parent and a noncustodial parent with visitation rights [see § 124.202[2]]. For a provision that treats visitation as simply a time-sharing component of the parents' shared custody plan, see § 124.201[5].

An unspecified right of visitation is appropriate if the parents are able to communicate and cooperate, and feel that it is unnecessary to restrict the visitation rights of the noncustodial parent. This approach provides for flexibility, and allows the parents and children the opportunity to share time in a more natural and spontaneous manner.

Such a provision should be included with caution, however. A provision for reasonable but unspecified visitation cannot be enforced. If the parents subsequently cannot agree on the exercise of visitation rights, a further proceeding for modification will be required to establish a specific visitation schedule. Nevertheless, a flexible visitation arrangement based on adult communication and cooperation is usually in the best interests of the children, and if there is a reasonable possibility that the parents will be able to cooperate with each other, they should be given the opportunity to try. They should, however, be advised of the consequences, including the expenditure of additional attorney's fees for modification, if the plan does not work.

Visitation is a parental right, and will be ordered by the court unless it is shown that it would be detrimental to the best interests of the child [see Fam. Code § 3100(a); see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., ch. 32, Jurisdiction to Determine Custody and Visitation, and ch. 33, Custody and Visitation Orders (Matthew Bender)].

§ 124.221 Visitation According to Specific Schedule

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms set forth in [2]-[13], below are a series of provisions illustrating various components of a schedule for specific visitation rights for the noncustodial parent. These forms are worded for use by parents who have agreed to formulate their custody plan in the traditional terms of a sole physical custodial parent and a noncustodial parent with visitation rights [see § 124.202[2]]. However, they may be reworded for use in a shared physical custody plan in which visitation is treated as simply a time-sharing component of the plan [see § 124.201[5]] by changing "shall be entitled to exercise visitation with" to "shall have physical responsibility for."

If it appears that the parents are unlikely to cooperate and communicate regarding visitation, or if enforceability is the primary concern, it will be necessary to establish a specific schedule. The variations on scheduled visitation are as numerous as there are different fact situations to accommodate. It is best to be as specific as possible, setting forth exact pick up and return times for the noncustodial parent. Moreover, it is best to keep the schedule as simple and regular as possible. Sometimes parties and their counsel, in an effort to reach a compromise agreement, end up with a schedule that is far too complex to be practical. Schedules that have too many alternatives and variables are also difficult to enforce.

Counsel for the custodial parent should impress on the client the legal enforceability of the visitation agreement and the need for compliance and cooperation. Often the custodial parent holds the mistaken belief that the noncustodial parent may exercise visitation during the designated times only as long as the child wants to go or the family has no conflicting plans. The custodial parent must realize that visitation during the periods set aside for that purpose is a legal right, and that other plans and activities must give way to this right.

 PART IV. FORMS
 B. Visitation Provisions

34-124 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 124.222

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.

§ 124.222 Supervised Visitation

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a provision restricting visitation with the children to situations in which a third party is present. This provision might be appropriate in cases involving domestic violence, or if there is a reasonable concern about child abduction. It may be used to restrict the visitation rights of either parent, or the rights of a grandparent, stepparent, or other (nonparent) who is granted visitation rights [see § 214.225].

If a domestic violence protective order is in place [see Fam. Code § 6218], the court must consider whether visitation should be limited to situations in which a third person is present [Fam. Code § 3100(b); see Fam. Code § 3022(b) (corroboration of reports of abuse); see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure 2d ed., Ch. 96, Injunctive Relief Against Domestic Violence (Matthew Bender)]. In making its decision, the court must consider the nature of the acts from which the parent was enjoined and the amount of time that has elapsed since the protective order was issued. A parent may submit to the court the name of a person that he or she deems suitable to be present during visitation [Fam. Code § 3100(b)].

If the court orders visitation in a case in which domestic violence is alleged and an emergency protective order, protective order, or other restraining order has been issued, the visitation order must specify the time, day, place, and manner of transfer of the child, so as to limit the child's exposure to potential domestic conflict or violence and to ensure the safety of all family members. If a criminal protective order has been issued [see Penal Code § 136.2], the visitation order must refer to and acknowledge the precedence of enforcement of any criminal protective order [Fam. Code § 3100(c)].

A court may not grant unsupervised visitation, or physical or legal custody, to a person who is required to register as a sex offender [see Penal Code § 290 et seq.] for an offense in which the victim was a minor, or who has been convicted of certain offenses against any child [see Penal Code § 273a (child endangerment and infliction of unjustifiable physical pain or mental suffering), Penal Code § 273d (cruel or inhuman corporal punishment resulting in traumatic condition), Penal Code § 647.6 (child molestation)], unless the court finds that there is no significant risk to the child and states its reasons in writing or on the record [Fam. Code § 3030(a)(1)]. The child may not be placed in a home in which that person resides, nor permitted to have unsupervised visitation with that person, unless the court states the reasons for its findings in writing or on the record [Fam. Code § 3030(a)(1)]. Similarly, a court may not grant unsupervised visitation, or physical or legal custody, to a person if anyone residing in that person's household is required to register as a sex offender [see Penal Code § 290 et seq.] for a felony offense in which the victim was a minor, unless the court finds that there is no significant risk to the child and states its reasons in writing or on the record [Fam. Code § 3030(a)(2)]. The child may not be placed in a home in which that person resides, nor permitted to have unsupervised visitation with that person, unless the court states the reasons for its findings in writing or on the record [Fam. Code § 3030(a)(2)]. For these purposes, the fact that a child is permitted unsupervised contact with a person who is required to register as a sex offender for a felony offense in which the victim was a minor is prima facie evidence that the child is at significant risk. When making a determination regarding significant risk to the child, this prima facie evidence creates a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence. However, this presumption will not apply if there are factors mitigating against its application, such as whether the other party seeking visitation or custody is also required to register as a sex offender for a felony in which the victim was a minor [Fam. Code § 3030(a)(3)].

Further, a court may not grant any visitation with, or custody of, a child to a person who has been convicted of rape [see Penal Code § 261], if the child was conceived as a result of that violation [Fam. Code § 3030(b)].

Finally, a court may not grant unsupervised visitation or custody to a person who has been convicted of the first-degree murder [see Penal Code § 189] of the other parent of the child, unless the court finds that there is no risk to the child's health, safety, and welfare, and states the reasons for its finding in writing or on the record. In making its finding, the court may consider, among other things, the following [Fam. Code § 3030(c)]:

- The wishes of the child, if the child is of sufficient age and capacity to reason so as to form an intelligent preference.
- Credible evidence that the convicted parent was a victim of abuse [see Fam. Code § 6203] committed by the deceased parent. This evidence may include, but is not limited to, written reports by law enforcement agencies, child protective services or other social welfare agencies, courts, medical facilities, or other public agencies or private nonprofit organizations providing services to victims of domestic abuse.
- Testimony of an expert witness that the convicted parent experienced intimate partner battering [see Evid. Code § 1107].

Unless and until a custody or visitation order is issued, the convicted parent may not visit or have custody of the child without the consent of the child's custodian or legal guardian [Fam. Code § 3030(c)].

If the foregoing circumstances do not exist, the public policy favoring children's frequent and continuing contact with both parents, as limited by the supervening policy of assuring a child's health, safety, and welfare [Fam. Code § 3020], limits the courts' authority to impose conditions not directly related to the child's best interests on the exercise of parental visitation rights [see In re Marriage of Oldfield (1979) 94 Cal. App. 3d 259, 261-262, 156 Cal. Rptr. 224 (no abuse of discretion to order noncustodial parent to pick up and deliver children at grandparents' home when there had been one previous altercation between parents)]. For further discussion of the standards, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure 2d ed., Ch. 33, Custody and Visitation Orders (Matthew Bender).

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.§ 124.223 Increasing Visitation as Children Grow Older*[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, sets forth several steps providing a gradual transition from limited to increased visitation rights for the noncustodial parent. In some cases, a parent may be incapable of caring properly for infants and very small children, or may be unwilling to do so. In those cases, the parties may be able to agree to limit that parent's visitation rights while the child is very young, and to increase visitation as the child grows older. By the time the child is old enough so that there are no perceived limitations on the noncustodial parent's capacity to provide proper care during the visitation period, a full visitation schedule may be instituted. This form uses a child's entry into kindergarten, usually at age 5, as that point.

§ 124.224 Pickup, Return, and Travel

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[5], below, are provisions regarding the transfer of physical responsibility from one parent to the other. All custody provisions should address the transfer of responsibility at the beginning and the end of any period in which the children will be moving from one parent to the other. These provisions allow for all combinations of responsibilities between the sending and receiving parents, including delivering the children to school in the morning after overnight visitation.

These forms are drafted in the traditional language of a "custodial" parent and a "noncustodial" parent with visitation rights. They may be adapted for use in shared physical custody plans [see §§ 124.11, 124.201] by substituting "transfer of physical responsibility" for "period of visitation" and using terms such as "delivering" and "receiving" parents.

§ 124.225 Visitation for Nonparents

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[4], below provide for visitation rights for nonparents. Nonparents, of course, may be granted any of the specific visitation schedule times that might be granted to parents [see § 124.221]. However, nonparents commonly receive shorter and less frequent visitation periods, unless the nonparent will be exercising essentially a parental role. If visitation is for an extended period, such as for an entire summer, the child support provisions should also be addressed for the period. Some reduction of support is appropriate, although because the obligee parent's rent or mortgage payments are obviously not suspended, a total elimination of support for the period is usually not appropriate.

In most circumstances it is preferable to expect grandparents and other relatives to spend time with the children while the related parent is exercising rights to custody or visitation. However, the Family Code gives the court the discretion to grant visitation to any person having an interest in the welfare of the child [Fam. Code § 3100(a)]. Specific statutes provide visitation rights for grandparents [Fam. Code §§ 3103, 3104], stepparents [Fam. Code § 3101], and relatives of a deceased parent [Fam. Code § 3102]. These statutes are discussed in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Chapters 32, Jurisdiction to Determine Custody and Visitation and 33, Custody and Visitation Orders (Matthew Bender).

Although parents may provide for visitation for any nonparent in their agreement, custody and visitation agreements cannot be enforced by contract remedies [see Curiale v. Reagan (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1597, 1600, 272 Cal. Rptr. 520]. There is no nonstatutory vehicle by which a nonparent can obtain visitation rights with a child [see White v. Jacobs (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 122, 124, 243 Cal. Rptr. 597; see also In re Marriage of Lewis & Goetz (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 514, 518, 250 Cal. Rptr. 30 (stepparent); Curiale v. Reagan (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1597, 1600, 272 Cal. Rptr. 520 (parent's lesbian partner)]. Therefore, if the parents rescind their agreement on visitation, the nonparent would have to seek an enforceable visitation order within the scope of one of the specific statutes. If, however, the visitation agreement is included in a court order, it is enforceable, but is subject to termination or modification, as with any other custody or visitation order [Bookstein v. Bookstein (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 219, 222-223, 86 Cal. Rptr. 495 ; see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., ch. 35, Modification of Custody Orders and Change of Child's Residence (Matthew Bender)].

Visitation rights granted to a stepparent or a grandparent must not conflict with the visitation or custody rights of a parent who is not a party to the proceeding [Fam. Code §§ 3101(c), 3103(e)]. Therefore, in an agreement terminating the marriage of a parent and stepparent of a child, any visitation granted to the stepparent cannot conflict with the other birth parent's custodial or visitation time.

One court has held that a trial court's application of Fam. Code § 3101 was unconstitutional, in that it violated the parent's substantive due process right to the care, custody and control of his child by failing to apply a presumption that a parent's decision regarding visitation is in the best interest of the child. The court did not conclude, however, that the statute was facially unconstitutional [In re Marriage of W. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 68, 74-75, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 461] .

After the entry of a judgment dissolving the marriage and awarding custody of the child, Fam. Code § 3104 specifies the procedure and prerequisites for a grandparent to seek an order granting reasonable visitation [In re Marriage of Harris (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 210, 219-223, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 842, 96 P.3d 141] . In such a case, if one parent has been granted sole custody and objects to visitation by the grandparent, the statute creates a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof that grandparent visitation is not in the child's best interest [Fam. Code § 3104(f)]. The California Supreme Court has held that Fam. Code § 3104 may constitutionally be applied to grant visitation to paternal grandparents with the approval of the father but over the objection of the mother, who had been awarded sole custody of the child, so long as the trial court considers the statute's rebuttable presumption that grandparent visitation is not in the child's best interest [In re Marriage of Harris (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 210, 223-230, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 842, 96 P.3d 141] .

§ 124.240 Change of Residence and Removal of Child From State

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2]-[4], below, illustrate provisions regarding the right of one or both parents to change residences or to otherwise remove the children from the state. The form in [4], below, limits the amount of time that the custodial parent may take the child out of California in a situation that does not involve a change of residence. If any ex parte custody order is issued, the court must also restrain the person granted custody from removing the child from the state [Fam. Code § 3063].

Advance notice of any proposed change of residence may be required [Fam. Code § 3024]. The form in [2], below, requires a parent who intends to move to give timely notice to the other parent.

As a general rule, a parent entitled to the custody of a child may change the residence of the child, subject to the power of the court to restrain a removal that would prejudice the rights or welfare of the child [Fam. Code § 7501(a)]. The forms in [3], below, address limitations on one or both parents to change residences. The first alternative limits both parents from changing residences to a place that is more than a specified number of miles away from the other parent's home without the consent of the other or a court order. This alternative may be used with either primary physical custody or shared or joint physical custody plans. The second alternative places this limitation only on the parent with primary physical custody. The third alternative allows either parent to change residences without restriction, but recognizes that any proposed change of residence is a material change of circumstances that will require a modification of custody to give primary physical custody to one of them or the other. The fourth alternative states that any change of residence within a limited area is allowed and is not a change of circumstances.

Even a parent with sole legal and physical custody may be restrained from changing the child's residence, if the court determines that the change would be detrimental to the child's welfare [Fam. Code § 7501(a); In re Marriage of Brown & Yana (2006) 37 Cal. 4th 947, 955-959, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 610, 127 P.3d 28] . However, in In re Marriage of Burgess, the California Supreme Court construed Fam. Code § 7501 to severely limit the right of a noncustodial parent to prevent the custodial parent from changing his or her residence and that of the child [In re Marriage of Burgess (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 25, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 444, 913 P.2d 473 (custodial parent is entitled to change child's residence unless move is detrimental to child); see Fam. Code § 7501(b) (reaffirming holding of Burgess); see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 35, Modification of Custody Orders and Change of Child's Residence (Matthew Bender)]. Therefore, any of the above change-of-residence clauses may be unenforceable to the extent that they operate to limit the primary custodial parent's right to move as articulated in Burgess. However, Burgess did not address the right of the parties to alter its otherwise applicable result by limiting a parent's right to move in their agreement. Therefore, the question of whether the parties may accomplish by agreement what they could not otherwise ask the court to do is open and unresolved.

In a 2004 decision, In re Marriage of LaMusga, the California Supreme Court lessened the severe burden impliedly placed on the noncustodial parent by its decision in Burgess, and clarified that a noncustodial parent does not have a burden of establishing that a change of custody is essential to prevent detriment to the children from the planned move [In re Marriage of LaMusga (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1072, 1078, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 356, 88 P.3d 81 (appellate court misapplied Burgess in stating that custodial parent with good faith reason to move cannot be prevented, directly or indirectly, from exercising right to change child's residence, unless noncustodial parent makes substantial showing that change of custody is essential to prevent detriment to child)]. Instead, a noncustodial parent who opposes a proposed move has an initial burden of showing that the move would cause detriment to the children, requiring a reevaluation of the children's custody. The likely impact of the proposed move on the noncustodial parent's relationship with the children is a relevant factor in determining whether the move would cause detriment to the children. When considered in light of all relevant factors, it may be sufficient to justify a change in custody [In re Marriage of LaMusga (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1072, 1078, 1101, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 356, 88 P.3d 81 (factors court should consider); In re Marriage of Melville (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 601, 611-613, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 685 (applying Burgess and LaMusga; when custodial parent decides to move, court has discretion to order change in custody if substantial evidence establishes that relocating would cause detriment to child)]. In making this determination, the court need not conduct an evidentiary hearing if the noncustodial parent's allegation or showing that the planned move would be detrimental to the child is insubstantial in light of all the circumstances of case (or is otherwise legally insufficient) [In re Marriage of Brown & Yana (2006) 37 Cal. 4th 947, 959-963, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 610, 127 P.3d 28] .

The limitations of Burgess do not apply in a case of true shared custody, in which each parent has substantial physical custody [In re Marriage of Burgess (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 25, 32, 40 n.12, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 444, 913 P.2d 473 ; see Niko v. Foreman (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 344, 363-364, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 398 (when parents have joint physical custody and one parent plans to move, trial court has wide discretion to choose parenting plan that is in best interest of child); In re Marriage of Edlund & Hales (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th, 1454, 1466, 78 Cal. Rptr. 671 (actual time-share is controlling, not label that parties attach to arrangement in their agreement or order)]. Therefore, the forms in [3], below, are not made unenforceable by Burgess in the case of joint or shared physical custody. However, there may be more concerns with a provision that attempts to actually prohibit a joint custodial parent from moving than with one that simply recognizes that the move constitutes a change of circumstances, and the court will have to decide whether to give primary physical custody to the move-away parent or the stay-behind parent.

[2] Notice of Change of Residence

Notice of Change of Residence

Notice of Change of Residence

_____. A party who intends to change residences to a place more than _____ miles from his or her current home shall give written notice of the intended move to the other party. Notice shall be given no less than _____ [e.g., 45] days before the contemplated move, by mail, return receipt requested, postage prepaid to the last known address of the party to be notified. A copy of the notice shall also be sent to the party's counsel.

[3] Change of Residence Restricted

Change of Residence Restricted

Change of Residence

[Both parents restricted:]

_____. The parties recognize that it is in the best interest of their children that both parties maintain frequent and continuous contact with them, and that it may be detrimental to the children for either to change his or her residence to a place where contact with the other will be significantly decreased. Therefore, neither party shall change the residence where the children live during the time when that party has primary physical responsibility for the children to a location that is more than _____ miles from the residence of the other. Therefore, neither parent shall change his or her residence without the prior written consent of the other parent or an order of the court.

[OR custodial parent's change of children's residence restricted:]

_____. The parties recognize that it is in the best interest of their children that both parties maintain frequent and continuous contact with them, and that it may be detrimental to the children for _____ [custodial parent, e.g., Mother] to change _____ [her or his] residence to a place where contact with _____ [noncustodial parent, e.g., Father] will be significantly decreased. Therefore, _____ [custodial parent, e.g., Mother] shall not change the residence of the children to a location that is more than _____ miles from the residence of _____ [noncustodial parent, e.g., Father] without the prior written consent of _____ [e.g., Father] or an order of the court.

[OR: restraint on move prohibited, but modification of custody permitted:]

_____. Neither party may be restrained from changing his or her residence or from removing the children from the state or changing the children's residence solely to ensure and facilitate the custody and visitation rights and schedule provided for in this Agreement. However, the party who is not changing residences may petition the court for any modification of custody and visitation orders as may be in the best interests of the children, including a change granting that parent the primary physical custody of the children so that they may remain in their current community.

[OR: change of residence permitted within specified area without constituting change of circumstances:]

_____. _____ [Either parent or the custodial parent, e.g., Mother] shall have the right to change _____ [her or his] residence, and that of the children, to any place within _____ [specify area, e.g., the nine-county region that constitutes the San Francisco Bay Area], and any such change of residence, alone, shall not constitute a change of circumstances sufficient to support a motion for modification of the custody provisions of this Agreement. However, any change of residence [by either parent] outside of this area shall be deemed a material change of circumstances sufficient to support a modification of this Agreement and any custody and visitation orders issued on it. The parties recognize that any such modification will be subject to mandatory mediation.

[4] Taking Children Outside of State

Taking Children Outside of StateRemoval of Children From State

_____. Neither party shall remove any of the children from the state of California [add if desired: for a period of more than _____ days] for any reason without the prior written permission of the other parent or a court order permitting the removal of the children. Neither parent shall unreasonably or arbitrarily withhold his or her permission if the other wishes to take any child out of California for legitimate vacation, educational, or recreational purposes and with the clear intent to return to the state after a limited period of time.

§ 124.241 Notice of Whereabouts

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, requires each parent to keep the other informed of his or her whereabouts and those of the children. It is broader than a change-of-residence provision [see § 124.240], in that it requires specific information to be provided. On the other hand, it is not a substitute for a change-of-residence provision in that it does not specify any specific number of days of advance notice, nor any consequences to arise from an intended relocation to another geographical area. This provision is most likely to be useful to keep track of a parent who is unlikely to be spending much time with the children. For related provisions related to child support, see Chapter 123.

§ 124.242 Children's Surnames

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a provision affirming the surnames of the children and prohibiting a parent from changing the surnames of the children, either legally or for purposes of usage. The form in [3], below, requires that a child's surname be changed. Legal change of name must be by petition under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1275 et seq., which requires notice to any nonpetitioning parent [Code Civ. Proc. § 1277(a)]. For further discussion of the statutory procedures for a change of name, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice(Matthew Bender), Name, Change of [see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., ch. 30, The Parent-Child Relationship (Matthew Bender) (standards for court's ruling on contested change-of-name motion in family law proceeding)].

§ 124.243 Right to Telephone Contact With Children

[1] Comment--Use of Forms

The forms in [2] and [3], below, are provisions regarding the right to speak with the children by phone when they are in the actual physical custody of the other parent. In cases in which the level of antipathy between the parents is very high, it may be necessary to provide specifically for the right of the noncustodial parent to speak to the children by telephone on a regular basis. That right is generally presumed, but not always specifically set forth. Form [2] provides for unspecified reasonable access, and Form [3] provides for restrictions. A provision should be included regarding long-distance charges if these charges will be incurred.

[2] Reasonable Telephone Contact

Right to Telephone Contact With Children--Reasonable Telephone Contact

Telephone Contact

_____. Each parent, when that parent has the actual physical custody of the children, shall permit reasonable telephone contact between the other parent and the children. The parent shall permit the children to both receive calls from and make calls to the other parent at any reasonable time and for any reasonable length of time. [Add if applicable: All long-distance telephone charges that are incurred shall be paid by _____ (specify how changes are to be paid, e.g., the parent making a call to or receiving a call from the children).]

[3] Restricted Telephone Contact

Right to Telephone Contact With Children--Restricted Telephone Contact

Telephone Contact

_____. Each parent, when that parent has the actual physical custody of the children, shall permit reasonable telephone contact between the other parent and the children, but not more often than [e.g., once each week] and for no longer a period of time than _____ minutes. Telephone contact shall not occur earlier than [e.g., 8:00 a.m.] or later than [e.g., 8:00 p.m.]. [Add if applicable: All long-distance telephone charges that are incurred shall be paid by _____ (specify how charges are to be paid, e.g., the parent making a call to or receiving a call from the children).]

§ 124.244 Encouragement of Love and Affection and Prohibition of Disparagement

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form in [2], below, is a provision that is designed to encourage the parties to foster a healthy relationship between the children and the other parent, and to prohibit the parties from speaking ill of each other in the presence of the children. The importance of refraining from disparagement should be emphasized to the parties in the context of discussing the terms of a separation agreement. The inclusion of this provision is useful as a way of expressing this important concern.

[2] FORM

Encouragement of Love and Affection and Prohibition of Disparagement

Disparagement Prohibited

_____. Each parent shall exercise, in the utmost of good faith, his or her best efforts at all times to encourage and foster the maximum relations of love and affection between the children and the other parent. Neither parent shall, in any way, impede, obstruct or interfere with the exercise by the other of his or her right of companionship with the children, and neither of them, at any time, shall, in any manner, disparage or criticize the other parent, or allow any other person to do so, to, or in the presence of, the children.

§ 124.245 Anti-Abduction Provisions

[1] Comment--Use of Form

Every custody or visitation order must contain all of the following [Fam. Code § 3048(a)]:

- The basis for the court's exercise of jurisdiction [see Fam. Code § 3421];
- The manner in which notice and opportunity to be heard were given;
- A clear description of the custody and visitation rights of each party;
- A provision stating that a violation of the order may subject the party in violation to civil or criminal penalties; and
- Identification of the country of habitual residence of the child or children.

If there are facts that indicate there is a risk of abduction of a child [see Fam. Code § 3048(b) (factors to be considered in making determination)], the court may include provisions in the custody order to facilitate use of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act (UCCJEA) [Fam. Code § 3400 et seq.] and the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction [42 U.S.C. § 11601 et seq.]. These provisions might include (1) identifying California as the home state of the child or otherwise defining the basis for the California court's exercise of jurisdiction under the UCCJEA; (2) identifying the United States as the country of habitual residence of the child under the Hague Convention; (3) defining custody rights under the Hague Convention; and (4) obtaining the express agreement of the parties that the United States is the country of habitual residence of the child or that California or the United States is the most appropriate forum for addressing custody and visitation orders [Fam. Code § 3048(b)(2)(J)].

The form in [2], below, addresses these statutory provisions in the context of a marital settlement agreement. The manner in which notice and opportunity to be heard is given is not of concern in an agreement; the custody and visitation rights of the parties will be set forth in other paragraphs. However, setting forth the jurisdictional basis under the UCCJEA and the country of habitual residence of the children under the Hague Convention may prove to be useful in the future, regardless of whether there is any current concern over child abduction [see, e.g., In re Marriage of Nurie (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 478, 506-508, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 200 (California court that dissolved marriage had initial home-state jurisdiction under UCCJEA and never lost jurisdiction, so that its custody order remained valid, and subsequent foreign custody decree was not enforceable in California)].

[2] FORM

Anti-Abduction Provisions

Interstate and International Child Custody Jurisdiction

The basis for a California court to exercise initial child custody jurisdiction under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act is that _____ [California is the home state of the _____ (child/children), as "home state" is defined in the UCCJEA, Family Code Sections 3402(g) and 3421(a)(1) or the _____ (child has/children have) no home state or _____, the home state of the _____ (child/children), has declined to exercise jurisdiction because California is the more appropriate forum, and the _____ (child/children) and at least one party to this Agreement have a significant connection with California other than mere physical presence, and substantial evidence is available in California concerning the _____ (child/children)'s care, protection, training, and personal relationships or all courts otherwise having jurisdiction under the UCCJEA have declined to exercise jurisdiction on the ground that a California court is the more appropriate forum to determine the custody of the _____ (child/children) or no court of any other state has jurisdiction under the UCCJEA]. The United States is the country of habitual residence of the _____ [child/children] under the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. The parties agree that California is the most appropriate state forum, and that the United States is the most appropriate national forum, for addressing custody and visitation orders. The parties understand that a violation of the child custody provisions of this Agreement may subject the party in violation to civil or criminal penalties or both.

This chapter contains forms for use in marital settlement agreements to set forth provisions for the filing of the parties' income tax returns and the payment of their income taxes, as well as for the payment of attorneys' fees and costs incurred by the parties during dissolution proceedings. The Legal Background contains a brief summary of the factors involved in drafting provisions related to these matters, as well as related tax considerations. The Transaction Guide sets out a checklist of alternative provisions for use in this context, and the Forms illustrate those alternatives. The forms set forth in this chapter are intended to be used in conjunction with the complete forms of marital settlement agreement set forth in Ch. 120, Complete Marital Settlement Agreements.

In In re Marriage Cases, the California Supreme Court held that differential treatment of opposite-sex and same-sex couples in California's marriage statutes violated the California Constitution's guarantees of privacy, due process, and equal protection [In re Marriage Cases (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 757, 784, 847-856, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 183 P.3d 384]. That holding was superseded by the subsequent adoption of Proposition 8, which amended the California Constitution to provide that only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California [see Cal. Const. art. I, § 7.5 (eff. Nov. 5, 2008)]. The Supreme Court upheld Proposition 8 against a constitutional challenge, but in doing so the Court reaffirmed the continuing validity of same-sex marriages entered into before November 5, 2008, the effective date of Proposition 8 [Strauss v. Horton (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 364, 470-474, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591, 207 P.3d 48 (estimating 18,000 same-sex marriages lawfully entered into before Proposition 8 took effect)]. If a form in this chapter is used in the context of a same-sex marriage lawfully entered into before that date, the language in the form should be modified accordingly. For example, the names of the parties may be used instead of terms like "Husband" and "Wife."

The chapter does not discuss the potential tax consequences of property division, property transfers, and support payments. For coverage of those tax considerations, see Ch. 121, Provisions for Division of Property, and Ch. 123, Spousal and Child Support Provisions. Agreements for attorneys' fees in general are covered in Chapter 86A, Agreements for Legal Services. For additional coverage in the context of family law proceedings, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice And Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 61, Attorney Fee Agreements, and Ch. 62, Awards of Attorney's Fees in Family Law Proceedings (Matthew Bender).

Responsibility for the payment of taxes is set forth by state and federal statute, but the parties may allocate responsibility for the payment of taxes as between themselves by agreement.

The forms in this chapter permit the parties to agree to a variety of matters, including the filing of joint and separate income tax returns, payment of prior tax deficiencies, and allocation of refunds. Provisions for allocating a dependency exemption are discussed in Ch. 123, Spousal and Child Support Provisions.

§ 125.11 Agreements on Attorneys' Fees, Costs, and Related Matters

Whether a court will order the payment of attorneys' fees and costs in connection with a particular proceeding is largely regulated by statute [see Fam. Code §§ 270 et seq., 2030 et seq.; see generally Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 62, Awards of Attorney's Fees in Family Law Proceedings (Matthew Bender)]. However, the parties may instead allocate responsibility for the payment of attorneys' fees and costs by agreement [see generally Code Civ. Proc. § 1021].

The forms in this chapter permit the parties to agree to a variety of matters, including provisions for payment of one spouse's fees and costs by the other spouse, payment by each spouse of his or her own attorneys' fees and costs, payment by one spouse of attorneys' fees and costs as additional support, allocation of payment by particular property, encumbrance of community property to secure payment, and provision for payment in future litigation.

§ 125.20 Right to File Joint Returns

[1] General Rules

[a] Marriage Requirement

Spouses are entitled to file joint returns [I.R.C. § 6013(a)] if they are married as of the end of the taxable (calendar) year, except that, if a spouse dies during the taxable year, the date of the spouse's death will be used to determine marital status for filing purposes [I.R.C. § 7703(a)(1)]. Problems may arise in determining the right to file a joint return when spouses have taken action to terminate their marriage, to live separately under a judgment of legal separation, and in other cases. Therefore, the determination of marital status plays an important role in evaluating whether filing a joint return is appropriate. General rules for determining marital status are discussed in [b], below. Special rules concerning final judgments of dissolution of marriage, legal separation, and nullity of marriage are discussed in [2]-[4], below.

[b] Determination of Marital Status

[i] Federal Law

The determination of whether a particular individual is married or single for income tax purposes generally is made by reference to state law [Calhoun (Robert), T.C. Memo. 1992-246] . However, for purposes of federal law, including federal tax law, "marriage" refers only to opposite-sex unions [1 U.S.C. § 7].

An individual who is legally separated from his or her spouse under a judgment of dissolution or legal separation is not considered as married for income tax purposes [I.R.C. § 7703(a)(2)]. In certain cases, spouses living apart are not considered as married [I.R.C. § 7703(b)]; but see Patterson v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1989-193 (legally married taxpayer not permitted to file as single taxpayer, despite prohibition of divorce by taxpayer's religion; treatment of estranged spouse as unmarried person for tax purposes does not necessarily entitle other spouse to same treatment)]. A taxpayer is not considered as married as of the close of the taxable year, and is not permitted to file a joint return, if at any time during the taxable year the taxpayer's spouse was a nonresident alien [I.R.C. § 6013(a)(1)].

Note that a taxpayer's marital status not only determines whether a joint return may be filed but also is decisive in determining whether the gross income filing requirement has been met [see I.R.C. § 6012], how many personal exemptions may be claimed [see I.R.C. §§ 151-153], whether the spouse's medical deductions may be claimed [see I.R.C. § 213], and other tax related consequences. In addition, each spouse is liable for tax on half of the community income even though the dissolution becomes final and separate returns must be filed. This liability is further discussed in § 125.21.

[ii] California Law

In general, for purposes of filing a California personal income tax return, marital status is to be determined in accordance with Internal Revenue Code Section 7703 [see Rev. & Tax. Code § 17021.5; 18 Cal. Code Reg. § 18402(a)], keeping in mind that federal law must look to state (California) law concerning marriage in assessing whether an individual is married or single [see Calhoun (Robert), T.C. Memo. 1992-246]. Like federal law, California law defines "marriage" as referring only to opposite-sex unions [see 1 U.S.C. § 7 (for purposes of federal law, including federal tax law, "marriage" refers only to opposite-sex unions); Cal. Const. art. I, § 7.5 (only marriage between man and woman is valid or recognized in California); Strauss v. Horton (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 364, 463-469, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591, 207 P.3d 48 (upholding validity of Cal. Const. art. I, § 7.5)]. However, registered domestic partners have the same right as spouses to file joint California tax returns [Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 17024.5(h)(2)(B), 18521; Stats. 2006, ch. 802, § 1(d) (expressing legislative intent that same-sex registered domestic partners be permitted to file state income tax returns jointly or separately on terms similar to those governing spouses); see Strauss v. Horton (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 364, 412, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591, 207 P.3d 48 ("In sum, although Proposition 8 [Cal. Const. art. I, § 7.5] changes the state Constitution ... to provide that restricting the family designation of 'marriage' to opposite-sex couples only, and withholding that designation from same-sex couples, no longer violates the state Constitution, in all other respects same-sex couples retain the same substantive protections embodied in the state constitutional rights of privacy and due process as those accorded to opposite-sex couples and the same broad protections under the state equal protection clause that are set forth in the majority opinion in [In re] Marriage Cases, including the general principle that sexual orientation constitutes a suspect classification and that statutes according differential treatment on the basis of sexual orientation are constitutionally permissible only if they satisfy the strict scrutiny standard of review.")].

California law imposes special requirements concerning the filing of joint returns when one of the taxpayers is a nonresident or part-time resident of the state during the taxable year [see Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 17045, 17046, 18521, 18522, 19006]. Also, California law permits registered domestic partners to file their state income-tax returns jointly or separately on terms similar to those governing spouses [Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 17024.5(h)(2)(B), 18521], even though federal law does not provide for the same treatment of registered domestic partners' federal tax returns [I.R.C. §§ 1(a), 7703].

PRACTICE TIP:

It is often necessary to explain to a client the difference between living separate and apart and being legally separated. When spouses simply are separated awaiting a judgment of legal separation or dissolution of their marriage, even though their separation has legal effects (that is, earnings received after separation are the separate property of the receiving spouse) [Fam. Code § 771], the spouses nevertheless are not divorced or legally separated and therefore may file joint federal and state income tax returns. Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

[c] Effect of Parties' Intent to Make Joint Return

Whether an income tax return is a joint return depends on the intent of the spouses. Intent may become a key issue particularly if only one of the spouses signs the return (for the signing spouse or for both spouses), or when a spouse claims that a signature was made by mistake, under duress, without knowledge of the contents of the return, or was forged [see, e.g., Stanley (Diane) (1983) 81 T.C. 634, 637-638 ; Douglas (J.) (1956) 27 T.C. 306, 312-314 , aff'd, 256 F.2d 4 (5th Cir. 1958)] . An extensive treatment of the intent issue is beyond the scope of this work, and therefore only the following general principles are discussed.

Although the federal tax regulations generally require that joint returns be signed by both spouses, the presence or absence of a signature is not determinative of the validity of a joint return, and the parties' intent in making the return must be examined. For example, a "filing spouse" may have implied authority to file a joint return on behalf of a nonsigning spouse if the nonsigner's signature has been a mere formality or the parties have filed a joint return for many years [Estate of Quirk v. C.I.R. (1995) T.C. Memo 1995-234 ; see Treas. Reg. 1.6013-1(a)(2); see also Treas. Reg. 1.6013-1(a)(5) (permitting authorized agent to sign return, when accompanied by required form)]. Similarly, a joint return may be binding on a nonsigning spouse if the facts show that both parties intended to file a joint return [see Noonan (Daniel C.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 1997-22 (ex-wife who refused to sign joint return was held to have consented to filing jointly when she was obligated to do so under binding agreement); Ashworth v. C.I.R. (1990) 60 T.C.M. 454 ; Parker v. C.I.R. (1978) 37 T.C.M. 144 , contra Levitt v. C.I.R. (1993) 66 T.C.M. 40] .

In addition, although the burden of proof rests on the spouse seeking to disavow a joint return, the courts generally are willing to disregard a spouse's signature if the other evidence indicates that a joint return was not intended [Sharwell v. Commissioner (6th Cir. 1969) 419 F.2d 1057 ; Warmack v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1992-431 ; see Hoyle (Lawrence T., Jr.) T.C. Memo. 1994-592 (although husband signed both his own and wife's names to tax return and testified he believed he had her consent to do so, there was insufficient evidence of wife's intent to hold that joint return had properly been intended)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Apparently the IRS will accept a joint return signed by only one spouse, particularly when there is an accompanying statement to the effect that the spouses are in the midst of a marital dissolution and the signature of the other spouse cannot readily be obtained. The spouse refusing to sign may suppose that there will some benefit under the innocent spouse rule, but a good deal more than the absence of a signature is considered by the IRS in determining whether a spouse was "innocent." As a general rule, the spouse wanting to file jointly should make a record of having delivered the return for signature and having provided ready access to all supporting financial books and records so the other spouse can make his or her own independent investigation of the surrounding facts. When one spouse does not want to be covered by a joint return, a court order should be obtained precluding the other spouse from filing a joint return, and each spouse should proceed to file a return as "married filing separately." Commentary by Ira H. Lurvey.

[2] Final Decree of Divorce

In California, the judgment of dissolution is equivalent to the final judgment of divorce [see Fam. Code § 2300], and terminates the right to file a joint return [I.R.C. §§ 6013(d)(2), 7703(a)(2)]. A final judgment of divorce, for purposes of filing a joint return, includes a judgment that is on appeal as of the end of the taxable year [Sullivan v. Commissioner (1957) 29 T.C. 71 , aff'd (4th Cir. 1958) 256 F.2d 664].

However, note that entry of an interlocutory judgment of dissolution does not terminate the right to file jointly, as it is not sufficient to terminate the parties' marital status. This concept remains of at least limited importance in California, because, while interlocutory dissolution judgments have been abolished, there may remain some spouses who obtained an interlocutory judgment under former law but who never applied for and obtained the final judgment [Treas. Reg. 1.6013-4(a); Commissioner of Int. Rev. v. Ostler (9th Cir. 1956) 237 F.2d 501 ; Rev. Rul. 75-536, 1975-2 C.B. 462 ; see McDonald (Bill) T.C. Memo 1994-607] . With respect to parties who only obtained an interlocutory judgment, an attempt to retroactively enter a final judgment through the use of a nunc pro tunc order is technically possible, but such an order will be recognized for tax purposes only if it is consistent with underlying state law. The Tax Court has, in effect, taken the position that it may look behind a California trial court's entry of a nunc pro tunc order to determine whether the order is contrary to or consistent with state law when the issue is raised [see McDonald (Bill) T.C. Memo. 1994-607 (nunc pro tunc order was not consistent with California law)].

[3] Legal Separation

The fact that the taxpayer and his or her spouse became legally separated or had their marriage dissolved at any time after the close of the taxable year does not deprive them of their right to file a joint return for that taxable year [Treas. Reg. § 1.6013-4(a); see 18 Cal. Code Reg. § 18410 et seq.]. Nevertheless, the entry of a judgment of legal separation [see Fam. Code §§ 2310, 2333, 2334, 2345, 2347] terminates the right to file a joint return for the current taxable year [see I.R.C. §§ 6013(d)(2), 7703(a)(2); Rev. & Tax. Code § 17021.5; 18 Cal. Code Reg. § 18402(a); see also Klementowski v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1986-145]. Spouses who are not legally separated under a court judgment of legal separation, even though they are living apart under a written separation agreement, are considered as married for tax purposes [see, e.g., Ashby v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1984-121; Donigan v. Commissioner (1977) 68 T.C. 632]. Furthermore, the Tax Court holds that an order granting exclusive possession of spouses' residence to one of the spouses, without more, does not meet the statutory requirements of a legal separation accomplished by a decree of divorce or separate maintenance [Klementowski v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1986-145]. The mere fact that spouses have not lived together during the course of the taxable year does not prohibit them from making a joint return [Treas. Reg. § 1.6013-4(a)]. Physical separation of the spouses during the taxable year, however, coupled with other factors, may qualify a spouse to file as a "head of household" [see I.R.C. § 2(b); see also § 125.22].

[4] Judgment of Nullity

A judgment of nullity based on the fact that the marriage was void [Fam. Code §§ 2200, 2201] terminates the right to file a joint return for the taxable year in which the judgment is entered. A judgment of nullity may relate back to rescind any joint returns made for previous taxable years, because the marriage was never valid; and amended separate returns must be filed for these years [Rev. Rul. 76-255, 1976-2 C.B. 40; Wilson v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1976-285]. However, this rule may not apply when the rights of third parties (including the IRS) are adversely affected [Shackelford v. C.I.R., T.C. Memo. 1995-484 (laches prevents retroactive application)].

A judgment of nullity based on the fact the marriage was voidable [Fam. Code § 2210] terminates the right to file a joint return for the taxable year in which the judgment is entered but does not operate retroactively because the marriage was only voidable and thus valid until the judgment [Estate of Gregorson (1911) 160 Cal. 21, 26-27; see Estate of LeMont (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 437, 439, 86 Cal. Rptr. 810; see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 12, Nullity of Marriage (Matthew Bender)].

[5] Liability for Tax

[a] Joint and Several Liability

[i] Assessments Against One or Both Spouses

If spouses file a joint return, each spouse is jointly and severally liable for the tax due, even if only one spouse had income [I.R.C. § 6013(d)(3); Treas. Reg. § 1.6013-4(b); cf. Carrick v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1991-502 (wife who did not actually sign joint returns prepared by husband held not to have joined in them; no evidence existed of tacit consent to join in returns)]. The full amount of tax, penalties, and interest may be assessed against either spouse [Furnish v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1958) 262 F.2d 727, 731]. An allocation and indemnification clause in a couple's marital settlement agreement, under which one spouse promises to indemnify the other for all tax liabilities, will not prevent the IRS from collecting a deficiency from the supposedly indemnified spouse, because the IRS is not a party to the agreement [Alioto (Angelina G.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1994-51 ; but see Karp v. U.S. (1994) 868 F. Supp. 235 (if IRS officially knows of agreement and includes it in its settlement agreement, it can be bound)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Although an indemnification clause does not bind the IRS, because it is not a party to the agreement, such a provision is nonetheless a good idea and may actually have potential enforcement power. Note that the I.R.S. has announced a policy of notifying both spouses when a collection action is brought against one of them [I.R.S. Notice 9619, 1996-14 I.R.B. 28]. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

One spouse may be relieved from joint and several liability, however, when the innocent spouse rule is applicable [see [6], below] or when the civil fraud penalty is imposed [I.R.C. § 6663(c); see Kaye v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1995-345]. Nevertheless, the fact that the IRS designates a party as an "innocent spouse" will not preclude a state family law court from enforcing a preexisting provision of an agreement and judgment requiring both spouses to equally share tax obligations, because the IRS's designation does not preempt state law efforts to impose liability for federal income taxes [In re Marriage of Hargrave (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1313, 1320-1321, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 474 ; see [6] [f], below].

Under California law only, the joint liability of one spouse with respect to income earned by or subject to the exclusive management of the other spouse may be revised by the Franchise Tax Board or by a court in a dissolution proceeding [Rev. & Tax. Code § 19006; see Murchison v. Murchison (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 600, 33 Cal. Rptr. 285].

An assessment against one spouse does not prevent assessment against the other [Bloomfield v. Commissioner (1969) 52 T.C. 745 ; Dolan v. Commissioner (1965) 44 T.C. 420, 426]. Thus, the IRS may assess an entire deficiency against one spouse even after paying a refund to the other spouse [Bloomfield v. Commissioner (1969) 52 T.C. 745, 751-752 ; see Gordon v. United States (11th Cir. 1985) 757 F.2d 1157, 1159-1160]. This assessment power, however, does not extend to the civil fraud penalty for underpayment of tax unless the government can prove that some part of the underpayment was due to fraud on that spouse's part [I.R.C. 6663(c); Treas. Reg. § 301.6653-1(f); see Meier v. Commissioner (1988) 91 T.C. 273 ; Turner v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1988-339]. This exception to joint and several liability applies only to the addition of tax for fraud and does not prevent a spouse from being held liable for the tax deficiency itself if the spouse is otherwise unable to meet the requirements of the innocent spouse rule [see Hicks Co. v. Commissioner (1971) 56 T.C. 982, 1030 , aff'd on another issue, 470 F.2d 87 (1st Cir. 1972) ; Keene v. Commissioner (1979) 38 T.C.M. 553, T.C. Memo. 1979-121 ; see also [6], below (innocent spouse rule)]. In addition, even though a return may be fraudulent only with respect to one spouse, the unlimited period for assessment and collection of tax applies to both spouses [Hicks Co. v. Commissioner (1971) 56 T.C. 982, 1030 , aff'd on another issue, 470 F.2d 87 (1st Cir. 1972) ; see I.R.C. § 6501(c)]. Thus, the nonfraudulent spouse still may be jointly and severally liable for the tax owed because of omissions of income [Furnish v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1958) 262 F.2d 727, 731-732 ; United States v. Diehl (S.D. Tex. 1978) 460 F. Supp. 1282, 1287-1288 , aff'd per curiam, 586 F.2d 1080 (5th Cir. 1978)].

One appellate court held a divorced spouse jointly and severally liable for a tax deficiency ultimately attributable to her former spouse's separate tax obligation [Gordon v. United States (11th Cir. 1985) 757 F.2d 1157, 1158-1161]. In that case, the IRS applied the spouses' joint refund for two taxable years to the husband's outstanding separate tax liability and assessed a deficiency against both taxpayers for those taxable years. On review, the court upheld the IRS's actions as proper, holding that the IRS had followed mandatory procedures in its collection method and ruling that, because the taxpayer had signed a joint return for the deficiency years, she therefore was jointly and severally liable for the deficiency [Gordon v. United States (11th Cir. 1985) 757 F.2d 1157, 1160-1161].

Disclosure of tax return information to a former spouse as part of an audit of both former spouses is not prohibited by the Internal Revenue Code [I.R.C. § 6103(h)(4); Duquette, Inc. (Norman E.) v. Commissioner (U.S. Dist. Ct., D.C.

2000) 110 F. Supp. 2d 16, 19-22 (tax information disclosed to former wife, used in property settlement proceedings)). Although a broad range of tax information is confidential [see I.R.C. § 6103], disclosure of such information is permissible in a tax administration proceeding if the treatment of an item reflected on a return is directly related to the resolution of an issue in the proceeding [I.R.C. § 6103(h)(4); Duquette, Inc. (Norman E.) v. Commissioner (U.S. Dist. Ct., D.C. 2000) 110 F. Supp. 2d 16, 21 (audit of former spouses' personal tax returns was integrally related to audit of closely held corporation that had been solely owned by spouses)].

[ii] Standing to Sue for Refund

An issue related to joint and several liability is the question of standing to sue for a tax refund. This issue may pose problems, particularly when a spouse has acquired property in a divorce context that is subject to a tax lien as a result of deficiencies assessed against the other spouse. Although parties may not generally challenge the tax liabilities of others, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that a spouse who, under protest, pays taxes owed by the other (former) spouse in order to remove a lien from the paying spouse's property, has standing to sue for a refund [United States v. Williams (1995) 514 U.S. 527, 115 S. Ct. 1611, 131 L. Ed. 2d 608, aff'g, Williams v. U.S. (9th Cir. 1994) 24 F.3d 1143; see 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(1)].

In addition, one court has held that a spouse who is made responsible for payment of any deficiency by a marital settlement agreement has the authority to engage counsel to settle the joint tax liability [Dahl v. Commissioner (1995) T.C. Memo 1995-179, aff'd, 85 F.3d 643 (11th Cir. 1996)] .

[iii] Offsetting Interests

With respect to satisfying a tax liability by offsetting another interest, note that a spouse's community property interest in a joint income tax refund may be used to offset the other spouse's separate premarital tax liability if the state law permits all community assets to be reached to satisfy premarital debts [Rev. Rul. 85-70, 1985-1 C.B. 361]. Under California law, the community property generally is liable for a debt incurred by either spouse before or during marriage [see Fam. Code § 910(a)]. The nondebtor spouse's community property earnings are not liable for the other spouse's premarital debts, however, as long as the earnings are held in a deposit account in which the debtor spouse has no right of withdrawal and are not commingled with other community property, except for property insignificant in amount [Fam. Code § 911; see Com. Code § 9102(a)(29) ("deposit account" defined)]. In addition, for this purpose, "during marriage" does not include the period during which the spouses are living separate and apart before a judgment of dissolution or legal separation is entered [Fam. Code § 910]. The same result should be reached if the parties have a valid premarital agreement that characterizes each party's income during marriage as separate property.

[b] Failure to File

Failure to file a return does not preclude spouses from filing a joint return even after expiration of the three-year limitation period [Rev. Rul. 72-539, 1972-2 C.B. 634; see I.R.C. § 6013(b)(2) (limitation period); but see Durovic v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 1973) 487 F.2d 36, 41-42 (determination of deficiency as if separate returns had been filed served as election to file separate returns that triggered three-year limitation period, even though taxpayers never filed separate returns)]. If separate deficiency notices have been issued to each spouse, however, the spouses may not thereafter elect to file a joint return [Thompson v. Commissioner (1982) 78 T.C. 558, 561; Dritz v. Commissioner (1969) T.C. Memo. 1969-175, 28 T.C.M. 874, 879-880, aff'd per curiam, 427 F.2d 1176 (5th Cir. 1970); but see Phillips v. Commissioner (D.C. Cir. 1988) 851 F.2d 1492, 1496, 1498 (three-year limitation period for filing joint return did not apply when taxpayer had not already filed separate return)]. Failure to file a joint return precludes the application of joint rates to the spouses' taxable income [Anderson v. Commissioner (1973) 32 T.C.M. 762, T.C. Memo. 1973-155; see Letter Rul. 7825086 (Mar. 27, 1978); but see Stone v. Commissioner (1954) 22 T.C. 893, 901, acq. 1954-2 C.B. 5 (taxpayers' failure to file return for particular taxable year did not preclude imposition of joint liability when manifest intent was to file joint return)]. The Tax Court, however, reversing long-established authority, holds that a taxpayer may elect joint tax rates even after the IRS has filed a "substitute return" on his or her behalf [Millsap v. Commissioner (1988) 91 T.C. 926 , acq. in result 1991-2 C.B. 1].

Individual liability has been upheld even in cases in which the spouses filed joint returns for the taxable years before and after the year for which no return was filed [Simms v. Commissioner (1968) T.C. Memo. 1968-298 , aff'd, 422 F.2d 340 (4th Cir. 1970)] . Joint and several liability may be imposed, however, if the spouses in effect have authorized the computation of the deficiency as if a joint return had been made [United States v. Martin (E.D. Mo. 1967) 274 F. Supp. 1002, 1005 , aff'd, 411 F.2d 1164 (8th Cir. 1969) ; but see Estate of Quirk v. C.I.R. (1995) T.C. Memo. 1995-234]. Spouses may be deemed to have filed a joint return, and thus be jointly and severally liable, if they jointly file certain forms such as a waiver of restrictions (IRS Form 870) [1974-1 C.B. 330]. A spouse is jointly and severally liable even though that spouse gains no benefit from filing the form [see Fine v. Commissioner (1978) 70 T.C. 684, 690] .

[c] Notice of Separation to IRS

Separated spouses should notify the IRS that they are separated and living apart. Many problems can arise when the IRS is not kept informed of the separated taxpayers' filing status and current address. Thus, for example, although separate joint deficiency notices must be sent to each spouse if the IRS has notice that spouses maintain separate addresses, even if it only knows one of the addresses [Kirk v. Commissioner (1991) T.C. Memo. 1991-504 ; see Abeles v. Commissioner (1988) 91 T.C. 1019] , the Tax Court has dismissed an action as untimely filed despite the taxpayer's delayed receipt of a tax deficiency notice that had been forwarded to a former spouse in the United Kingdom [Wisdom v. Commissioner (1991) T.C. Memo. 1991-327 ; see I.R.C. § 6213 (taxpayer ordinarily has 90 days after receiving deficiency notice to petition Tax Court)]. In a similar case, the Tax Court held that a former wife's failure to notify the IRS of her new address precluded her from complaining that she had not received a copy of a joint deficiency notice in time to file a petition with the Tax Court [Kirk v. Commissioner (1991) T.C. Memo. 1991-504 ; see I.R.C. § 6213].

[6] innocent spouse Relief

[a] Overview of Current and Former Law

[i] Current Law

The innocent spouse provisions of the Internal Revenue Code are intended to ameliorate some of the hard, practical consequences of the joint income tax return. In filing jointly, the spouses merge their incomes and deductions, and no attempt is made to attribute tax items to one spouse rather than the other. A natural consequence is that both spouses are made jointly and severally liable for the payment of the tax [I.R.C. § 6013(d)]. But problems arise when a tax deficiency is subsequently determined for the taxable year, whether due to the omission of taxable income or to the disallowance of a deduction or credit. As these adjustments should have been made on the original joint return, they are not attributed to either of the individual spouses. The additional tax becomes part of the amount for which both spouses are jointly and severally liable.

If the spouses are still married (or at least not legally separated) at the time the deficiency is established, there will generally be no unfairness in collecting the tax from both spouses. The spouses are yet in a marital property relationship. But if the spouses are divorced or legally separated, it may be unfair to impose joint and several liability for tax liabilities arising during the marriage, perhaps many years before. The innocent spouse provisions of current and prior law have sought to define the circumstances under which a spouse (or, more typically, an ex-spouse) may be relieved of joint and several liability. The key word is "innocent." Relief is premised on the idea that a spouse should be relieved of liabilities that are attributable to the other spouse if the spouse seeking relief played no part in creating the tax deficiency and did not know of it.

The current innocent spouse provision is found in I.R.C. § 6015. That section provides for two overlapping types of relief. One type, contained in subsection (b), applies to all taxpayers, regardless of whether they are still married and living with the spouse with whom they filed the joint return [see [b], below]. A second, and more liberal provision, is available to a taxpayer who is divorced, separated from, or not sharing the same household with, the other spouse. This type of relief, under I.R.C. § 6015(c) provides an election to limit liability to each spouse's allocated share of the deficiency [see [c], below].

It is important to understand that state community property law is irrelevant to innocent spouse relief [I.R.C. § 6015(a)]. When a joint return is filed, all income, both community and separate, is lumped together without distinction. When a taxpayer seeks relief under Section 6015, the determination of whether a tax liability is attributable or allocable to the other spouse is made without regard to community property law. Thus the earnings of one spouse are allocated to that spouse, regardless of the fact that they would constitute community property under state law.

Note that, in addition to relief provided under I.R.C. § 6015(b) and (c), I.R.C. § 6015(f) provides for general equitable relief. Under that provision, if, taking into account all the facts and circumstances, it is inequitable to hold the individual liable for any unpaid tax or any deficiency (or portion of either), and relief is not available under I.R.C. § 6015(b) or (c), the Internal Revenue Service is authorized to relieve the individual of liability [I.R.C. § 6015(f); see Mitchell (Herbert L.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2000-332 (equitable relief denied when spouse was aware of and significantly benefited from omitted income)].

The current provisions, which were initiated through enactment of the Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 [Pub. L. No. 105-206], became operative as follows. In general, the amendments made by the Act apply to any liability for tax arising after the date of its enactment (July 22, 1998), and any liability for tax arising on or before that date but remaining unpaid as of that date. However, under a special provision, the two-year period set forth in I.R.C. § 6015(b)(1)(E) [see [b], below] or I.R.C. § 6015(c)(3)(B) [see [c], below] will not expire before a date that is two years after the date of the first collection activity after the date of the enactment of the Act [Pub. L. No. 105-206, § 3201(g)].

Note that in January 2001, the I.R.S. issued proposed regulations governing innocent spouse relief under I.R.C. § 6015 [Prop. I.R.S. Regs. 1.6015-0-1.6015-9 (Reg.-106446-1998), pub. at 66 FR 3888 (January 17, 2001)] .

[ii] Former Law Contrasted innocent spouse relief has existed for many years, and has been periodically revised to address perceived inadequacies. The present version of the statute, in particular, can only be understood in the light of its antecedents. Originally, the law applied only to cases in which one spouse omitted income from the tax return that the other spouse knew nothing about, but the law as it stood before the I.R.S. Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 [Pub. L. No. 105-206] was more expansive, and fairly complex.

Former I.R.C. § 6013(e), the innocent spouse provision prior to the 1998 Act, provided relief from joint and several liability in the following situations:

1. A joint return was filed;
2. There was a substantial understatement of tax attributable to grossly erroneous items of the other spouse on the return;
3. The spouse seeking relief established that, in signing the return, he or she did not know (or have reason to know) of the substantial understatement; and
4. Under all the circumstances, it would be inequitable to hold the spouse liable for the tax deficiency.

A "substantial understatement" was defined by a dollar amount or percentage of adjusted gross income (AGI) that eliminated controversy over small sums, and this requirement was rarely a barrier to relief. The requirement that the deficiency be attributable to "grossly erroneous" items, however, has been a considerable source of trouble. Such items included all forms of omitted income, but only such disallowed deductions and credits that had "no basis in law or fact." Congress was unclear concerning what unlawful deductions or credits should provide the basis for innocent spouse relief. At one extreme, purely fraudulent deductions taken by one spouse were clearly covered. But most disallowed deductions had some legal premise, however weak, and courts were often reluctant to permit a spouse to disavow liability for run-of-the-mill disallowed tax deductions that seemed to involve little or no fraud [see Dillon v. Commissioner (1998) T.C. Memo. 1998-5].

The largest problem area in former Section 6013(e) was in the "lack-of-knowledge" requirement. A spouse could hardly claim to be innocent of misreported items of which he or she had knowledge. But it was often unclear how to treat a spouse who had knowledge of the underlying economic facts behind a tax decision, but no knowledge that the decision was unlawful. For example, a spouse might well know of a tax shelter investment, and even know that deductions had been claimed, but not know that the deductions were illegal. Another aspect of the "knowledge" problem has been in the requirement that the spouse seeking relief did not have reason to know of the deficiency, even if he or she did not have actual knowledge. This requirement was intended to cull out culpable negligence, and to preserve a minimum sense of responsibility in signing a joint income tax return. But it has proved troublesome and inconsistent in application because it often turns on a court's assessment of the sophistication of the spouse seeking relief [see Infelise v. Commissioner (1998) T.C. Memo. 1998-191].

The 1998 Act repealed I.R.C. § 6013(e) and replaced it with two provisions found in new I.R.C. § 6015. A revised version of the traditional innocent spouse provision was placed in subsection (b), and this provision applies to all taxpayers seeking relief from joint return liability [I.R.C. § 6015(b)]. Subsection (c) applies only to a taxpayer who is divorced or legally separated from the person with whom he or she filed a joint return [I.R.C. § 6015(c)].

Because subsection (c) is considerably more lenient than subsection (b), and because the overwhelming majority of persons seeking innocent spouse relief are divorced or separated, it is not clear how often subsection (b) will apply in practice. The prior statute made no formal distinction between taxpayers who were still married and living with the fraudulent spouse and those who were divorced or legally separated. But marital status found its way into the statute obliquely, through the requirement that relief be justified on equitable grounds. innocent spouse relief was generally intended to protect taxpayers who have broken their economic ties with the fraudulent spouse, and taxpayers who remained married had difficulty asserting the unfairness of joint liability. The 1998 Act acknowledges that divorce or legal separation is a factor in providing expanded relief under subsection (c), yet it still provides more basic relief to all taxpayers. Thus it is arguable that the new statute intends greater protection for taxpayers who are still married to fraudulent spouses than was available under prior law.

[b] Relief for All Joint Filers

I.R.C. § 6015(b) provides for relief to all taxpayers who filed a joint return, regardless of their current marital or household status. To qualify for relief under this section--which includes relief from liability for tax (including interest, penalties, and other amounts) to the extent that liability is attributable to an understatement of tax--the following requirements must be met [I.R.C. § 6015(b)(1)]:

1. A joint return has been made for the taxable year;
2. The return contains an understatement of tax attributable to erroneous items of one individual filing the return;
3. The other individual filing the joint return establishes that in signing it, he or she did not know, and had no reason to know, that there was an understatement;

4. Taking into account all the facts and circumstances, it is inequitable to hold that other individual liable for the deficiency in tax that is attributable to the understatement; and

5. That other individual elects the benefits of I.R.C. § 6015 not later than a date that is two years after the date that the IRS has begun collection activities with respect to him or her.

A special apportionment provision permits an individual who would be relieved from liability but for the "knowledge" requirement of item 3, above [I.R.C. § 6015(b)(1)(C)], to limit the amount of his or her liability by establishing that in signing the return he or she did not know, and had no reason to know, the extent of the understatement. In that case, the individual will be relieved of liability for tax (including interest, penalties, and other amounts) to the extent that the liability is attributable to the portion of the understatement of which that individual did not know and had no reason to know [I.R.C. § 6015(b)(2)].

This language largely tracks the provisions of former I.R.C. § 6013(e), and to the extent that it does, prior case law should presumably still govern. The deficiency must, obviously, not be attributable to the spouse seeking relief [see Marzullo v. Commissioner (1997) T.C. Memo 1997-261]. As under prior law, the spouse claiming relief must demonstrate lack of knowledge (or constructive knowledge), and relief must be equitable under the circumstances.

Actual knowledge of the impropriety of the tax return always forecloses relief, but the courts have been inconsistent in the treatment of taxpayers who knew of the underlying economic facts, but not of their proper tax effect. There is important authority for the proposition that knowledge of the transaction alone is sufficient to deny relief [Purcell v. Commissioner (6th Cir. 1987), 826 F.2d 470 ; Quinn v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 1975) 524 F.2d 617]. However, other decisions have granted relief when the spouse knew of the transaction--such as the payment of an item that was claimed as a deduction--but did not understand the impropriety of its treatment by the other spouse on the joint tax return [Price v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1989) 887 F.2d 959 ; Guth v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1990) 897 F.2d 441]. A taxpayer with actual knowledge of a claimed deduction must lack actual knowledge of the factual circumstances that made the item at issue nondeductible [King (Kathy A.) v. Commissioner, 116 T.C. 198 (2001) (spouse unaware that husband lacked profit motive for cattle-raising activity); see I.R.C. § 6015(c)(3)(C)]. Also, a taxpayer with actual knowledge of income but with only a superficial knowledge of a spouse's complex business transactions and the amount of financial gain [Martin (Evelyn M.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2000-346], or a taxpayer unaware that a spouse has not accounted for all income [Charlton (Fredie L.) v. Commissioner, 114 T.C. 333, 341-342 (2000)] may be granted relief. By contrast, a taxpayer who is aware of omitted income but unaware of applicable tax laws [Cheshire (Kathryn) v. Commissioner, 115 T.C. 183 (2000)] or who merely avoids reviewing or "turns a blind eye" to facts on a joint tax return [Von Kalinowski (Julian O.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2001-21] will be denied relief. Nevertheless, even when there was actual knowledge of the impropriety of the tax return, the Tax Court has granted innocent spouse relief in compelling circumstances, such as when a battered wife was too frightened to question her husband about their return [Aude v. Commissioner (1997) T.C. Memo. 1997-478].

When a taxpayer lacks actual knowledge, he or she must not have had "reason to know" of the deficiency. The following factors are generally consulted in making this determination [Laird v. Commissioner (1994) T.C. Memo. 1994-564] :

1. The presence of unusual or lavish expenditures;
2. Whether the couple's standard of living improved significantly;
3. Participation in business affairs or bookkeeping by the party claiming innocent spouse status;

4. The culpable spouse's openness or refusal to be forthright concerning the couple's income and business transactions; and
5. The level of education, business knowledge, and experience of the party claiming innocent spouse status.

In determining whether, under all the facts and circumstances, it is inequitable to impose joint and several liability, certain factors have been given special weight under prior law. The most important is whether the spouse claiming relief significantly benefited from the understatement of tax [Ebeling v. Commissioner (1994) T.C. Memo. 1994-277 ; Walker v. Commissioner (1985) T.C. Memo. 1985-278] . But the significance of the benefit is measured against the taxpayer's normal standard of living, and thus more affluent taxpayers are more likely to obtain relief than less affluent ones [Hinds v. Commissioner (1988) T.C. Memo. 1988-426] . The courts have also weighed the probable future hardship to the spouse if relief is not granted, and have found such hardship even when a spouse, now divorced, received a fair distribution of the marital assets [Dillon v. Commissioner (1998) T.C. Memo. 1998-5] .

I.R.C. § 6015(b) departed from prior law in eliminating any requirement that the understatement of tax be "substantial," and thus relief is available without regard to the dollar amount of the deficiency [see former I.R.C. § 6013(e)(3),(4)].

A much more important change, however, was the removal of the former requirement that the tax items at issue be "grossly" erroneous, having "no basis in law or fact" [see former I.R.C. § 6013(e); Friedman v. Commissioner (2d Cir. 1995) 53 F.3d 523] . The practical impact of this revision in the courts is uncertain. For example, assume that (as is very common) a husband takes a tax position on the advice of an accountant for which there was significant legal support. If this position is ultimately rejected in the Tax Court, the wife (or ex-wife) may attempt to disavow liability simply on the basis that the "erroneous" deduction was attributable to the husband. The statute would seem to allow relief in cases in which there is no serious claim of fraud toward either against the spouse or the fisc, and perhaps only honest error. The courts may choose to place greater emphasis on the requirement that relief be equitable in order to prevent dilution of the principle of joint and several liability when both spouses benefited financially from a disallowed deduction or credit [Von Kalinowski (Julian O.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2001-21 (educated wife had constructive knowledge of husband's tax shelter losses)].

Prior law was confusing on the issue of whether innocent spouse relief was available when the spouse knew something of the deficiency, but not of its magnitude. The language of the statute could be read to eliminate relief when a spouse had knowledge to any extent, although at least one court had decided otherwise [Wiksell v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1996) 90 F.3d 1459] . The new statute explicitly provides that, when the spouse is unaware of the extent of the understatement, relief is available as to the portion of the understatement of which he or she was without knowledge [I.R.C. § 6015(b)(2)].

[c] Separate Liability Election for Divorced or Separated Taxpayers

[i] Generally

I.R.C. § 6015(c), applicable only to taxpayers who are no longer married to or living with the other joint filer, is significantly more liberal than I.R.C. § 6015(b) [see [b], above]. It provides for what amounts to an election to revoke joint return status with respect to tax deficiencies determined after separation or divorce. Subject to limited exception, subsection (c) limits a taxpayer's liability on the joint return to his or her "portion" of the deficiency, which is determined under I.R.C. § 6015(d) [see [ii], below].

A person who elects the application of subsection(c) bears the burden of proof with respect to establishing the portion of the deficiency allocable to that person, except as provided in I.R.C. § 6015(c)(3)(A)(ii), or I.R.C. § 6015(c)(3)(C)--which, respectively, concern persons who were not members of the same household during the 12 months preceding the filing of the election, and certain deficiencies not covered by the election (discussed below) [I.R.C. § 6015(c)(2)].

The threshold issue is whether a taxpayer can elect relief. An individual is eligible to elect the application of I.R.C. § 6015(c) in the following situations [I.R.C. § 6015(c)(3)(A)(i)]:

1. At the time the election is filed, the individual is no longer married to, or is legally separated from, the person with whom he or she filed the joint return to which the election relates; or
2. The individual was not a member of the same household as the person with whom the joint return was filed at any time during the 12-month period ending on the date the election is filed.

However, the election may nonetheless be voided by a fraudulent transfer of assets between individuals. Statute provides that if the Internal Revenue Service demonstrates that assets were transferred between individuals filing a joint return as part of a fraudulent scheme by them, an election under I.R.C. § 6015(c) by either individual will be invalid and joint and several liability will apply to the joint return [I.R.C. § 6015(c)(3)(A)(ii)]. The intention is to prevent spouses from colluding to defraud the public fisc by transferring assets to a spouse who then seeks innocent spouse relief.

With respect to timing of the election, the statute provides that an election for any taxable year must be made not later than two years after the date on which the Internal Revenue Service has begun collection activities with respect to the individual making the election [I.R.C. § 6015(c)(3)(B)].

The only significant barrier to relief applies to a taxpayer who, at the time he or she signed the return, had actual knowledge of the tax item giving rise to the deficiency. The statute, significantly, places the burden on the Internal Revenue Service to demonstrate that the individual making an election had actual knowledge at the time he or she signed the return of any item giving rise to a deficiency (or portion of it) that is not allocable to that individual under I.R.C. § 6015(d) [see [ii], below]. If this is shown, the election will not apply to the deficiency (or portion) [I.R.C. § 6015(c)(3)(C); Culver (Michael G.) v. Commissioner, 116 T.C. 189 (2001) (burden on I.R.S. to prove by preponderance of evidence that husband had actual knowledge of wife's embezzlement activities)].

Nevertheless, even a taxpayer with actual knowledge may still obtain relief if he or she can establish that the return was signed under duress [I.R.C. § 6015(c)(3)(C); see Aude v. Commissioner (1997) T.C. Memo. 1997-478 (construing prior law)].

Note that the "actual knowledge" standard is much more liberal than the "reason to know" standard in subsection (b) and in prior law. If a taxpayer did not know of the other spouse's understatements, it does not matter whether he or she was negligent or reckless in failing to notice the problem. The courts often see cases in which a wife signs a joint return reporting little or no income for a year in which the couple spent considerable amounts of money. Under prior law, a court could readily find that the wife "had reason to know" that the tax return was false or fraudulent, and thus avoid the issue of whether she had actual knowledge [see [b], above]. Unlike subsection (b), the subsection (c) separate liability election does not contain an equity standard that a court might use to protect the public fisc [but see I.R.C. § 6015(f); cf. Mitchell (Herbert L.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2000-332 (equitable relief denied when spouse with actual knowledge significantly benefited from omitted income)].

I.R.C. § 6015(c)(4) provides that the portion of any deficiency for which an individual making an election is otherwise liable will be increased by the value of any "disqualified asset" transferred to the individual, but the election is not invalidated, and only the value of the transferred assets is excluded from the amount of the deficiency covered by the election [I.R.C. § 6015(c)(4)]. In general, a "disqualified asset" is any property or right to property transferred to an individual making the election by the other individual filing the joint return if the principal purpose of the transfer was the avoidance of tax or payment of tax. For this purpose, any transfer that is made after a date that is one year before the date on which the first letter of proposed deficiency that allows the taxpayer an opportunity for administrative review in the Internal Revenue Service Office of Appeals is sent will be presumed to have as its principal purpose the avoidance of tax or payment of tax. However, this presumption will not apply to any transfer pursuant to a decree of divorce or separate maintenance or a written instrument incident to such a decree, or to any transfer that an individual establishes did not have as its principal purpose the avoidance of tax or payment of tax [I.R.C. § 6015(c)(4)].

[ii] Allocation of Deficiency

I.R.C. § 6015(c) limits an electing taxpayer's liability to the portion of the joint return deficiency "properly allocable to the individual under subsection (d)" [I.R.C. § 6015(c)(1)]. As explained further hereafter, the statutory allocation is achieved by dividing the items of omitted income or disallowed deductions that generated the deficiency between the spouses, and then dividing the tax liability in the same proportion [I.R.C. § 6015(d)(1)]. The fact that the division is based on items of income and deduction explains the special rule for tax credits and taxes other than the income tax or minimum tax, which are allocated separately [I.R.C. § 6015(d)(2)].

Under I.R.C. § 6015(d), the portion of any deficiency on a joint return allocated to an individual is the amount that bears the same ratio to the deficiency as the net amount of items taken into account in computing the deficiency and allocable to the individual under paragraph (3) of that section bears to the net amount of all items taken into account in computing the deficiency [I.R.C. § 6015(d)(1)].

If a deficiency (in whole or in part) is attributable to (1) the disallowance of a credit, or (2) any tax (other than tax imposed by I.R.C. § 1 or 55) required to be included with the joint return, and that item is allocated to one person under I.R.C. § 6015(d)(3), the deficiency will be allocated to that person. Any item of that nature will not be taken into account under I.R.C. § 6015(d)(1)--the general deficiency apportionment discussed in the first paragraph above [I.R.C. § 6015(d)(2)].

Statutory law sets forth an allocation of items giving rise to the deficiency. Subject to two exceptions discussed hereafter, any item giving rise to a deficiency on a joint return must be allocated to the individuals filing the return in the same manner as it would have been allocated if the individuals had filed separate returns for the taxable year [I.R.C. § 6015(d)(3)(A)]. Note that community property laws are disregarded [see [a], above], which would otherwise require each spouse to report half of all community income and deductions on separate returns [I.R.C. § 6015(a)]. Wage income is allocated to the spouse performing the job and receiving the Form W-2. Business and investment income (including capital gains) is allocated in the same proportion as the ownership of the business or investment that produces the income. If the ownership of the business or investment is held by both spouses as joint tenants, it is expected that any income is allocated equally to each spouse, in the absence of clear and convincing evidence supporting a different allocation. The allocation of business deductions is expected to follow the ownership of the business. Personal deductions are expected to be allocated equally between the spouses, unless the evidence shows that a different allocation is appropriate--such as the situation in which an overvalued charitable deduction is made with the sole property of one of the spouses [S. Rep. No. 105-174].

There are, however, exceptions to the general allocation rule discussed above. First, an item otherwise allocable to any individual under I.R.C. § 6015(d)(3)(A) must be allocated to the other individual filing the joint return to the extent the item gave rise to a tax benefit on the joint return to the other individual [I.R.C. § 6015(d)(3)(B); see In re Shafman (Jeremy B.) (U.S. Bankr. Ct., N. Dist. W.Va. 2001) 267 B.R. 709 (bankruptcy court granted relief under I.R.C. § 6015(c) except for innocent spouse's own wages and tips)]. Second, the Internal Revenue Service may provide for an allocation of any item in a manner not prescribed by I.R.C. § 6015(d)(3)(A) if the Internal Revenue Service establishes that the allocation is appropriate due to the fraud of one or both individuals [I.R.C. § 6015(d)(3)(A)].

Under I.R.C. § 6015(d), limitations on separate returns are disregarded. Accordingly, if a deduction or credit is disallowed in its entirety solely because a separate return is filed, that disallowance must be disregarded and the item computed as if a joint return had been filed and then allocated between the spouses appropriately [I.R.C. § 6015(d)(4)].

In addition, if the liability of a taxpayer's child is included on a joint return, that liability must be disregarded in computing the separate liability of either spouse and that liability must be allocated appropriately between the spouses [I.R.C. § 6015(d)(5)].

[d] Tax Court Review

The election procedures for both innocent spouse relief under I.R.C. § 6015(b) and the separate liability election under I.R.C. § 6015(c) anticipate a determination by the I.R.S. If the election is denied, the taxpayer may petition the Tax Court for review. The petition must be filed 90 days following the date on which the denial is mailed or (if earlier) six months after the election is filed [I.R.C. § 6015(e)(1)]. The Tax Court is given jurisdiction to decide the applicability of relief. But, the Tax Court loses jurisdiction if the year at issue is the subject of a tax refund suit in the other federal courts [I.R.C. § 6015(e)(3)(C)].

If a spouse or ex-spouse seeks innocent spouse relief from the I.R.S. outside a deficiency proceeding, the other ("nonelecting") spouse may participate in any administrative proceedings and seek judicial review of any grant of relief [I.R.C. § 6015(e); see also Corson (Thomas) v. Commissioner, 114 T.C. 354, 364-365 (2000) (in deficiency proceeding, participation by nonelecting spouse); Hale Exemption Trust v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2001-89 (in deficiency proceeding, participation by estate representative of deceased spouse)]. The Tax Court is required to establish rules that provide an individual who has filed a joint return but who has not made the election adequate notice and an opportunity to join the proceeding as a party [I.R.C. § 6015(e)(4)].

An individual who has participated meaningfully in a court proceeding may not elect relief under I.R.C. § 6015(b) or (c) for the same taxable year after the decision of the court becomes final [Vetrano (Michael) v. Commissioner, 116 T.C. 272 (2001) (former wife could not withdraw innocent spouse claims from court consideration without prejudice); see I.R.C. § 6015(g)(2)].

[e] California Law

The California personal income tax law contains an innocent spouse provision similar to the federal provision in effect prior to 1998 [see Rev. & Tax. Code § 18533; see also [a], above]. In addition, the Franchise Tax Board may relieve a spouse of liability for nonpayment of taxes (including interest and penalties) for any year for which a joint return is filed. The spouse must establish that he or she did not know, and had no reason to know, of the nonpayment at the time the return was filed [Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 18533(b)(2), 19006(c)(2)].

A spouse cannot be relieved of liability for tax on income earned by, or subject to the exclusive management of, that spouse. The liability of a spouse for the tax, penalties, and interest due for the taxable year must be in the same ratio to the total tax, penalties, and interest due for the taxable year as the income earned by or subject to the management and control of the spouse is to the total gross income reportable on the return [Rev. & Tax. Code § 19006(c)(1)(A)]. A spouse cannot be relieved of liability below the amount actually paid on the liability before a grant of relief, including credits from other taxable years available to be applied against the liability [Rev. & Tax. Code § 19006(c)(1)(B)].

The FTB must wait at least 30 days after notifying the other spouse before revising the liability of the innocent spouse. The FTB must decide whether, under all the facts and circumstances, it would be inequitable to hold the spouse requesting relief liable [Rev. & Tax. Code § 19006(c)(4)].

[f] Family Court Enforcement of Tax Liabilities Despite Federal "Innocent Spouse" Treatment

Despite the treatment of a party as an "innocent spouse" under federal law, a state family law court is not precluded from enforcing a preexisting provision of an agreement and judgment that requires both spouses to equally share tax obligations. Federal recognition of a party as an "innocent spouse" is an administrative determination--typically involving an administrative hearing or informal negotiations--and is not a formal adjudication of rights and duties as between the spouses. The federal statute that permits innocent spouse relief [see I.R.C. § 6015] does not preempt a state court's ability to impose federal tax liability on an innocent spouse [In re Marriage of Hargrave (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1313, 1320-1321, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 474] . Courts have observed that the "federal government has no interest in how states allocate tax liability between divorcing spouses, as long as they do not attempt to interfere with IRS collection efforts." The important federal interest, in those courts' view, is the right of the IRS to obtain direct payment of federal taxes from the party of its choosing, rather than in determining how state court's allocate liability between the spouses [In re Marriage of Hargrave (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1313, 1321, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 474 ; see Ravetti v. United States (9th Cir. 1994) 37 F.3d 1393, 1395-1396] .

§ 125.21 Married Taxpayers Filing Separately

[1] Separate Returns Are Allowed

Spouses may file separate income tax returns and be subject to the rate schedules for married persons filing separately [I.R.C. § 1(d)]. The use of separate returns almost always results in a higher total tax than a joint return, and precludes eligibility for the earned income credit [Becker v. C.I.R. (1995) T.C. Memo. 1995-177]. Thus, separate returns typically are used only when a spouse seeks to avoid joint and several tax liability, as when the spouses are separated. If separate returns are used in a community property state, the general rule is that each spouse must report half of the community income and all of his or her separate income [Poe v. Seaborn (1930) 282 U.S. 101, 51 S. Ct. 58, 75 L. Ed. 239 ; Mischel (Francis Z.) v. Commissioner (1997) T.C. Memo. 1997-350].

The Tax Court has held that wife filing separate income tax returns was taxable on half of her husband's community property income, notwithstanding the wife's claimed oral transmutation agreement under which the spouses allegedly agreed to keep their respective incomes separate. The Tax Court rejected the transmutation argument because the spouses had obviously commingled their funds and did not maintain separate bank accounts [Edelson v. Colmmissioner (1993) T.C. Memo. 1993-511 ; see also Vincent v. Commissioner (1994) T.C. Memo. 1994-345 (wife liable for tax on one-half reported income of husband's business because wife did not prove validity of written interspousal agreement treating business income as husband's separate property)].

PRACTICE TIP:

The Tax Court apparently will respect a genuine and substantiated transmutation agreement effective under state law. Such an agreement, however, should be in writing. Thus, if each spouse formally agrees that the income of the other spouse is that spouse's separate property, a spouse apparently can file a separate return without being taxed on half of the other spouse's income as community property. This may be advantageous if the other spouse is a tax protestor and the spouse seeks to avoid liability for IRS deficiency claims based on the other spouse's income. However, in many cases the tax benefit may be outweighed, in the event of dissolution, by the spouse's having relinquished claims to the other spouse's income and to assets that may have been purchased with the that income. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

The earnings of either spouse or the income from community property (including gains and losses from any sales or exchanges) are divided equally between the spouses. Income from separate property is taxable to the owner spouse alone. Quasi-community property is separate property during marriage; therefore, the income from quasi-community property is separate income for tax purposes [see Estate of Shicca v. Commissioner (1960) 35 T.C. 96]. For discussion of characterization of property as community or separate, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2d ed., Ch. 20, Community Property: General Characterization and Division Principles (Matthew Bender).

In short, federal tax law follows state-created property rights in determining what income is taxable to each spouse filing a separate return. This rule may represent a hardship when, despite each spouse's legal right to half of the community income, one spouse is taxed on community income to which he or she has no practical access. In recognition of this problem, the Internal Revenue Code provides that, in specified instances, community income can be treated as separate income for income tax purposes. Community income may be recharacterized as separate income when the spouses are separated for the entire year [I.R.C. § 66(a); see [2], below], when one spouse does not notify the other spouse of the existence of community income [I.R.C. § 66(b); see [3], below], or when it is inequitable to one of the spouses to treat income as community property [I.R.C. § 66(c); see [4], below].

If either spouse is a nonresident alien, the community income of the spouses is recharacterized as separate income for income tax purposes according to special rules [I.R.C. § 879(a); see [4][d], below]. In addition, the earnings of a child are taxable to the child alone, regardless of whether the earnings belong to the parents under state law [I.R.C. § 73].

PRACTICE TIP:

A joint return filed early can be changed to a separate filing if the separate return is filed before the last filing date for either spouse. A joint return filed after the last filing date cannot be changed. A separate return can be changed to a joint return at any time within three years of the last date to file a separate return (without extensions). If one spouse has a risky financial record, file a separate return, with an agreement to amend the filing to a joint return (if this is otherwise permissible) after an audit or other protection is in place. Commentary by Susan Jeffries.

[2] Spouses Living Apart

[a] Requirements for Separate Property Tax Treatment

Under California law, the earnings of a spouse while living separate and apart from the other spouse are the separate property of the earning spouse [Fam. Code § 771]. This provision applies only when the spouses have separated with no present intention of resuming the marital relationship [In re Marriage of Imperato (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 432, 119 Cal. Rptr. 590 ; see In re Marriage of Manfer (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 925, 929-930, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 785 (date of separation occurs when either party does not intend to resume the marriage and his or her actions bespeak finality of marital relationship)]. Thus, when spouses separate without intending a final break in the marital relationship, the earnings of each spouse continue to be treated as community property. If the earnings of separated spouses are treated as separate property under California law, they are treated as separate property for both federal and California income tax purposes.

However, community income of separated or abandoned spouses may be recharacterized as separate income for federal income tax purposes. If statutory recharacterization requirements are met, each spouse files a separate return reporting only his or her separate income as recharacterized. To qualify for separate property tax treatment of community income, the taxpayers must meet all of the following requirements [I.R.C. § 66(a)]:

- (1) Be married to each other at any time during the year;
- (2) Live apart at all times during the year;
- (3) Not file a joint return with each other for the year; and
- (4) Have earned income that is community income for the year, no portion of which income is transferred directly or indirectly between the taxpayers before the close of the year.

For purposes of the no-transfer requirement, the legislative history indicates that de minimis transfers of earned income between spouses are to be disregarded. Also, payments to, or for the benefit of, the spouses' dependent children are not to be considered indirect transfers to the recipient spouse solely because the payments satisfy the recipient spouse's child support obligations [H.R. Rep. No. 1278, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 7 (1980); see Federal Tax Information on Community Property, IRS Pub. 555]. Legislative history also indicates that Congress conceived of Internal Revenue Code Section 66(a) as a protection for abandoned spouses [H.R. Rep. No. 1278, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 7 (1980)]. Its application is much broader, however, and the statute applies to separated spouses in general. For example, it could apply when spouses are separated for work reasons.

Earned income is defined as wages, salaries, or professional fees, together with other amounts received as compensation for personal services actually rendered. Earned income does not include compensation for personal services rendered by the taxpayer to a corporation if the compensation represents a distribution of earnings and profits rather than a reasonable allowance for services actually rendered. If the taxpayer is engaged in a trade or business in which both personal services and capital are material income-producing factors, a reasonable allowance as compensation for the personal services of the taxpayer, not to exceed 30 percent of his or her share of the net profits of the trade or business, is considered earned income [I.R.C. §§ 66(d)(1), 911(b), (d)(2); see I.R.C. § 911(b), before amendment by Pub. L. No. 97-34, § 111(a)].

[b] Mechanics of Separate Property Treatment

Provided the requirements discussed in [a], above, are met, the community income of the spouses is recharacterized as follows [I.R.C. §§ 66(a), 879(a); Treas. Reg. § 1.879-1(a)]:

- Earned income, other than trade or business income and a partner's distributive share of partnership income, is treated as the separate income of the spouse who rendered the personal services [I.R.C. § 879(a)(1)].
- Community income and deductions derived from a trade or business, other than a trade or business carried on by a partnership, are treated as the gross income and deductions of the spouse carrying on the trade or business or, if such trade or business is jointly operated, treated as the gross income and deductions of each spouse on the basis of their respective distributive share of the gross income and deductions [I.R.C. §§ 879(a)(2), 1402(a)(5)(A)].
- Any portion of a partner's distributive share of ordinary income and loss that is considered community income under state law is treated as the separate income and loss of the partner spouse [I.R.C. §§ 879(a)(2), 1402(a)(5)(B)].
- Community income not described above that is derived from the separate property of one spouse is treated as the separate income of that spouse [I.R.C. § 879(a)(3)].

No other community income is recharacterized for federal tax purposes [I.R.C. § 879(a)(4)].

[3] Spouse Not Notified of Community Income

The IRS may disallow the benefits of state community property laws to any taxpayer with respect to any income if the taxpayer acted as if solely entitled to the income and failed to notify his or her spouse of the nature and amount of the income before the due date, including extensions, for filing the return for the taxable year in which the income was derived [I.R.C. § 66(b); see Drummer v. Commissioner (1994) T.C. Memo. 1994-214 (rule cannot be used to preclude liability by spouse living separately and apart for taxes on share of community income)]. Thus, a taxpayer who fails to notify his or her spouse of his or her earnings may be required by the IRS to report all of those earnings (rather than half) as separate income if separate returns are filed. This statute apparently is directed at instances in which unreported income is uncovered by the IRS, and the spouse to whom it is attributable tries to cause half to be taxed to the other spouse.

[4] Recharacterization of Community Income

[a] Allowed for Relief From Liability

If certain conditions are satisfied, a taxpayer is permitted to recharacterize community income as separate income for federal tax purposes [I.R.C. § 66(c)]. Thus, if the taxpayer is unaware of certain community income and fails to report half of it on a separate return, the reporting will be upheld if requirements are met for the recharacterization of community income.

Special recharacterization rules apply to the community income of certain nonresident aliens and their spouses [see [d], below].

[b] Recharacterization Requirements

A taxpayer meeting statutory requirements [see I.R.C. § 66(c)] need not report his or her share of certain items of community income, and those items will be included in the income of his or her spouse. The following requirements must be met [see, e.g., Dooley v. Commissioner (1992) T.C. Memo. 1992-39] .

- (1) The taxpayer must not file a joint return for the taxable year in question [I.R.C. § 66(c)(1)].
- (2) The taxpayer must not include in gross income for the taxable year a properly includible item of community income that, in accordance with the rules contained in Internal Revenue Code Section 879(a), would be treated as income of the other spouse [I.R.C. § 66(c)(2)].
- (3) The taxpayer must establish that he or she did not know of, and had no reason to know of, the items of community income to be recharacterized [I.R.C. § 66(c)(3)].
- (4) It must be inequitable to include the items of community income in the taxpayer's gross income, taking into account all of the facts and circumstances [I.R.C. § 66(c)(4)].

Thus, although a taxpayer initiates the process by failing to include the items of community income in his or her gross income, this action is subject to the IRS determination that recharacterization is equitable and that the taxpayer had no reason to know of the income [see I.R.C. § 66(c)].

A spouse's lack of knowledge about community income has been difficult to prove in claiming relief under the statute [see I.R.C. § 66(c)(3)]. For example, a wife who filed a separate return was held to be required to report half of her husband's community property earnings, even though he placed his earned income in a savings account with his mother and transferred funds from that account to another account he shared with the wife. The wife knew of his earned income, but did not initially know about the separate account. The Tax Court denied relief under I.R.C. § 66(c) because she knew the husband was earning income, which was community property under state law. It noted that she suffered no hardship because the husband used the funds for community expenses [Bozek v. Commissioner (1986) T.C. Memo. 1986-37] .

Similarly, the Tax Court denied relief to a former wife who taught at the same university as her former husband, filed joint returns with him for several years, and knew that his income was the family's main source of support. No reasonable view of the evidence would support a finding that she did not know, or have reason to know, of her former husband's income for the years in question. Thus, the court held that it would not be inequitable to subject her to tax on the income because the husband's salary had been used to support her and their three children [Baldwin v. Commissioner (1986) T.C. Memo. 1986-342] .

Relief also was denied to a former husband when he and his former wife were separated for a portion of the taxable year, and he did not have direct access to the wife's income tax return, but he knew that she had earned income [see Warner v. Commissioner (1987) T.C. Memo. 1987-219] . Similarly, in another case, a former wife was aware that her former husband was involved in real estate transactions during the taxable year and that these activities generated income from commissions or fees. The Tax Court denied her relief regarding income from those transactions, even though she was unable to ascertain the exact amount of commissions or fees involved. She was granted relief, however, for certain interest income from certificates of deposit purchased with the proceeds of his real estate transactions because she neither knew, nor had reason to know, of this income [see Roberts v. Commissioner (1987) T.C. Memo. 1987-391] . In yet another case, the Tax Court held that a wife could not obtain tax relief under the income recharacterization provisions when she knew of the existence of disputed income from her husband's dental laboratory, even though she was unaware that it legally constituted community income [Thatcher v. Commissioner (1988) T.C. Memo. 1988-537 ; cf. McGee v. Commissioner (1991) T.C. Memo. 1991-510 (relief denied: wife knew of husband's earned income from dental practice, but argued she had no idea of how much)].

Legislative history indicates that, in determining whether a recharacterization is equitable, the IRS may consider whether the taxpayer benefited from the income and whether the defense was promptly raised so as to prevent the limitation period from running on the other spouse [H.R. Rep. No. 432, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 1501-1503 (1984)]. Further, if this determination is made, the IRS must cause the income to be included by the taxpayer's spouse and invoke a deficiency assessment if the spouse has not already reported all of the recharacterized income [I.R.C. § 66(c)].

Apart from the general requirements for recharacterization of income discussed above, the Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 added a special provision to relieve a spouse from liability on equitable grounds. It provides that, if, taking into account all the facts and circumstances, it is inequitable to hold the individual liable for any unpaid tax or any deficiency (or any portion of either) attributable to any item for which relief is not available under (I.R.C. § 66(c)), the I.R.S. may relieve that individual of the liability [I.R.C. § 66(c) (as amended by Pub. L. No. 105-206, § 3201(b))].

[c] Community Income Subject to Recharacterization

The community income items subject to recharacterization as separate income of the other spouse are those items that would have been treated as separate income of the other spouse if Internal Revenue Code Section 66(a), relating to spouses living apart, had applied [I.R.C. §§ 66(c)(2), 879(a); Treas. Reg. § 1.879-1(a); see [2], above]. Thus, the earned income of the other spouse, other than trade or business income and a partner's distributive share of partnership income, is treated as the separate income of that spouse [I.R.C. § 879(a)(1)]. Community income and deductions derived from a trade or business, other than a trade or business carried on by a partnership, are treated as the gross income and deductions of the spouse carrying on the trade or business or, if such trade or business is jointly operated, treated as the gross income and deductions of each spouse on the basis of their respective distributive share of the gross income and deductions [I.R.C. §§ 879(a)(2), 1402(a)(5)(A)].

If a spouse is a partner, partnership income and loss that is considered community income or loss under state law may be treated as the separate income of the partner spouse. Any other community income, not described above, that is derived from the separate property of the other spouse may be treated as the separate income of that spouse [I.R.C. § 879(a)(3)].

[d] Nonresident Aliens

If a spouse is a nonresident alien, the community income is recharacterized for federal income tax purposes according to the following rules [I.R.C. § 879(a); Treas. Reg. § 1.879-1(a)]. Earned income, other than trade or business income and a partner's distributive share of partnership income, is treated as the separate income of the spouse who rendered the personal services [I.R.C. § 879(a)(1)]. Community income and deductions derived from a trade or business, other than a trade or business carried on by a partnership, are treated as the gross income and deductions of the spouse carrying on the trade or business or, if such trade or business is jointly operated, treated as the gross income and deductions of each spouse on the basis of their respective distributive share of the gross income and deductions [I.R.C. §§ 879(a)(2), 1402(a)(5)(A)].

Any portion of a partner's distributive share of partnership ordinary income or loss that is considered community income or loss under state law is treated as the separate income or loss of the partner spouse [I.R.C. §§ 879(a)(2), 1402(a)(5)(B)]. Community income, not described above, that is derived from the separate property of one of the spouses is treated as the separate income of that spouse. No other community income is recharacterized for federal tax purposes [I.R.C. § 879(a)(4)].

The recharacterization rules do not apply for any taxable year for which an election to treat a nonresident alien as a resident is in effect [I.R.C. §§ 879(b), 6013(g), (h)].

§ 125.22 Right of Certain Separated Persons to File as Head of Household

Head-of-household status ordinarily is confined to single persons [I.R.C. § 2(b)(1)]. A married taxpayer living apart from his or her spouse, however, is not deemed married and therefore is eligible to file as a head of household if he or she otherwise qualifies, provided the individual meets all of the following requirements [I.R.C. §§ 2(c), 7703(b); Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 17021.5, 17042]:

- (1) Files a separate income tax return;
- (2) Maintains as his or her home a household that is, for more than half of the taxable year, the principal place of abode of a dependent child or stepchild [compare Treas. Reg. § 1.2-2(c)(1)] (temporary absences from household because of special circumstances may be disregarded; absence for education can be disregarded if it is reasonable to assume dependent will return to household) with Chappell (Michael T.) v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2001-146 (head of household status denied when separated husband's home had only one bed and nowhere for child to sleep, work, and play); Addison v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1992-349 (mother did not meet requirements for head-of-household filing status because daughter's absence from home to attend school was not deemed temporary)];
- (3) Is entitled to a dependency deduction for the child or stepchild;
- (4) Furnishes more than half of the cost of maintaining the household; and
- (5) Does not have, for the last six months of the taxable year, his or her spouse as a member of the household.

Although spouses can be living separate and apart under California law and yet reside under the same roof, the Tax Court refuses to follow this approach, holding instead that a married taxpayer living in the same household with his or her spouse while obtaining a divorce is not eligible to file as a head of household [Hopkins v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1992-326 (head of household status denied taxpayer who occasionally allowed former spouse to sleep in living room because of former spouse's inability to secure housing for himself); Dawkins v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1991-225 (filing status of divorcing taxpayer who lived in separate quarters under same roof with spouse was "married filing separate," not "head of household")]. As a result, because the Ninth Circuit has not specifically addressed this issue, the current rule is that both spouses cannot live under the same roof and be deemed living separate and apart [see Hopkins v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1992-326 ; see also Jackson v. Commissioner (1996) 71 T.C.M. 2022 (taxpayer's home may not constitute "separate household" if it lacks kitchen and telephone privileges)].

Filing as "head of household" in such circumstances will result in lower taxes than filing as "married filing separately" [compare I.R.C. § 1(b) with I.R.C. § 1(d)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Caution: the I.R.S. regularly matches returns of alimony payors and payees. A deficiency notice may be sent to both parties if the payor reports a deduction while the payee fails to include the payments in income. Commentary by Susan Jeffries.

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Deductibility of Attorneys' Fees

34-125 California Legal Forms--Transaction Guide § 125.30

AUTHOR: Editorial Consultants: Kathryn Kirkland, Esq., Ira Lurvey, Esq., and Diana Richmond, Esq.

§ 125.30 General Rules

[1] Nondeductibility in General; Exceptions

As a general rule, attorney's fees or other costs paid in connection with a dissolution, judgment of nullity, separation, or decree for support are not deductible by either spouse [Treas. Reg. § 1.262-1(b)(7); Wolfson v. Commissioner (1966) 47 T.C. 290, 294]. A deduction does exist for expenses, including legal expenses, incurred for the production or collection of income or for expenses incurred for the management, conservation, or maintenance of income-producing property, and this deduction may be applicable to legal fees involving dissolutions, judgments of nullity, separations, or decrees for support [see I.R.C. § 212(1), (2); see Jasko v. Commissioner (1996), 107 T.C. 30 (legal fees incurred to recover fire insurance proceeds on family home were not deductible, as property was not held for income-producing purposes)]. This deduction is limited to expenses in a taxpayer's profit-seeking or business activities. Personal expenses are not deductible [United States v. Gilmore (1963) 372 U.S. 39, 83 S. Ct. 623, 9 L. Ed. 2d 570; United States v. Patrick (1963) 372 U.S. 53, 83 S. Ct. 618, 9 L. Ed. 2d 580].

The characterization of expenses as personal or business depends upon whether the expense arose in connection with the taxpayer's profit-seeking activities and not upon the consequences that might result to the taxpayer's income producing property [United States v. Gilmore (1963) 372 U.S. 39, 83 S. Ct. 623, 9 L. Ed. 2d 570]. Because legal expenses relating to dissolution or separation arise from the marital relationship, they are deemed to be personal expenses rather than expenses relating to profit-seeking activities [United States v. Patrick (1963) 372 U.S. 53, 83 S. Ct. 618, 9 L. Ed. 2d 580].

Two exceptions exist to the general rule that legal expenses or attorney's fees paid in connection with a dissolution, judgment of nullity, or separation are not deductible expenses. Legal expenses or attorney's fees paid in connection with a dissolution, judgment of nullity, or separation may be deductible when the legal fees or expenses actually were incurred for the production of income [see § 125.31] or when they were incurred for tax advice [see § 125.32]. To qualify for a deduction under one of these exceptions, the taxpayer has the burden of establishing his or her right to the deduction [Rose v. Commissioner (6th Cir. 1972) 459 F.2d 28, 29 , cert. denied 409 U.S. 879].

The amount that can be deducted is limited. As one of the miscellaneous itemized deductions, the deduction for attorney's fees is allowed only to the extent that the aggregate of all miscellaneous itemized deductions claimed exceeds 2 percent of adjusted gross income [see I.R.C. § 67(a), (b)].

[2] Attorneys' Fees Paid by Other Spouse

The deduction permitted for expenses for the production of income or for tax advice is personal to the spouse seeking the production of income or the tax advice. Thus, when one spouse incurs attorney's fees in a dissolution or separation proceeding to produce income or for tax advice, and the other spouse either agrees to pay the fees or is ordered by the court to do so, the expenses are not deductible [see I.R.C. § 212; Treas. Reg. § 1.212-1; Carpenter v. United States (Ct. Cl. 1964) 338 F.2d 366, 368 (tax advice)].

Payments to the other spouse that qualify for alimony tax treatment, however, are deductible by the payor spouse and includible in the income of the payee spouse [I.R.C. §§ 71, 215]. If the payments are used by the payee spouse to pay deductible legal expenses, they are deductible by that spouse, subject to the limitations discussed in [1], above. In addition, payments may qualify for alimony tax treatment if they are made to a third party on behalf of the payee spouse. Thus, for example, direct payments made by a payor spouse to the payee spouse's attorney for fees incurred by the payee spouse are deductible. If the direct payment is not required by the terms of the divorce or separation agreement, however, the payee spouse must give the payor a written request, consent, or ratification to obtain alimony tax treatment stating that the parties intend the payment to be treated as an alimony or separate maintenance payment to the payee spouse. The request, consent, or ratification must be received by the payor spouse before the date he or she is to file his or her first return for the taxable year in which the payment was made. The direct payment is treated as though it were paid to the payee spouse, who then pays it to the attorney. Thus, the payment is deductible by the payor spouse, includible in the income of the payee spouse, and then deductible by the payee spouse to the extent that the payment of attorney's fees is deductible [Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.71-1T, Q&A 6, 7]. For further discussion, see Chapter 123, § 123.31.

PRACTICE TIP:

In many cases, a settlement hinges on how the nonearning spouse's attorney's fees will be paid. The tax treatment of "spousal support" and "attorney's fees incurred for the production of income" (or for tax advice) may afford an acceptable compromise. Awarding spousal support in an amount and for a period sufficient to cover the supported spouse's attorney's fees can work to everyone's advantage. The payor spouse can deduct the payments as spousal support, and the payee spouse can deduct his or her attorney's fees (that he or she pays directly) as expenses incurred for the production of income. Commentary by Hon. Thomas Murphy.

[3] Allocation of Attorneys' Fees

Before the taxpayer may qualify for a deduction for attorney's fees, he or she has the burden of allocating or proving those fees attributable to the production of income or obtaining tax advice [see Treas. Reg. § 1.262-1(b)(7); Rev. Rul. 72-545, 1972-2 C.B. 179 ; see also Jasko v. Commissioner (1996), 107 T.C. 30 ; Mirsky v. Commissioner (1971) 56 T.C. 664, 677] . Thus, when an attorney charges fees for obtaining spousal support or other forms of income for the client, or for giving tax advice, it is important that the attorney provide a breakdown of fees charged and carefully itemize the number of hours and expenses incurred, both in his or her own records and in the client's bill. If the attorney provides such a breakdown, the client should have adequate proof to enable him or her to claim the deduction for attorney's fees. When the bill for attorney's fees is not specifically itemized and the attorney cannot give any specific information as to the number of hours worked on the support issues or giving tax advice, it may be difficult to determine the amount of the fee allocable to those matters. Such a failure, however, does not preclude an allocation. Rather, an allocation may be made by looking to the record as a whole and examining documents such as the bill for fees and the attorney's ledger sheets that deal with the taxpayer's account [see Van Sickle v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1986-538 ; Goldaper v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1977-343 ; see also Munn v. United States (Ct. Cl. 1972) 455 F.2d 1028, 1035] .

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

§ 125.31 Attorneys' Fees Incurred for Production of Income

[1] Production of Spousal Support

Attorney's fees paid in connection with a dissolution, judgment of nullity, legal separation, or decree for support that are properly attributable to the production or collection of spousal support payments includible in the gross income of the recipient spouse [see I.R.C. § 71; see also Ch. 123] are deductible as an expense for the production of income [Treas. Reg. § 1.262-1(b)(7); Wild v. Commissioner (1964) 42 T.C. 706, 709-711, acq. 1967-2 C.B. 4]. Even legal expenses that are incurred in obtaining temporary support or support arrearages are deductible, as long as the support will be included in the recipient's gross income when it is obtained [Wolfson v. Commissioner (1966) 47 T.C. 290, 294-296; Dalton v. Commissioner (1960) 34 T.C. 879, 884-885].

Only expenses attributable to the production of spousal support included in the recipient's gross income qualify for deduction. If the entire amount incurred cannot be attributed to spousal support, the taxpayer has the burden of allocating the portion of attorney's fees spent on the production of spousal support [see Mirsky v. Commissioner (1971) 56 T.C. 664, 677]. The evidence necessary to satisfy the taxpayer's burden varies from case to case [see Munn v. United States (Ct. Cl. 1972) 455 F.2d 1028, 1035; see also Merians v. Commissioner (1973) 60 T.C. 187, acq. 1973-2 C.B. 2 (any bill for legal or accounting services should be itemized to reflect portion for deductible or tax-related services)]. If, however, there are sufficient facts in the record as a whole, it is possible that an allocation may be inferred despite the taxpayer's failure to provide a breakdown of legal fees incurred [see Porter v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1966-79, aff'd (6th Cir. 1968) 388 F.2d 670]. For discussion of limitations on the amount of fees, see § 125.30[1].

[2] Production of Income Other Than Spousal Support

Attorney's fees incurred during dissolution or separation attributable to the production of income other than spousal support may be deductible. A deduction for attorney's fees incurred for the production of income in connection with a profit-seeking activity is not precluded merely because the fees arose as part of a dissolution or separation proceeding [Hahn v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1976-113; see Van Sickel v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1986-538; see also § 125.30]. Thus, for example, in a dissolution proceeding in which legal expenses were incurred by the wife to establish her right to possession of, or participation in, the income of property she jointly owned with her husband, the costs were deductible. These expenses, however, were carefully distinguished from expenses incurred to establish ownership of property [Hahn v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1976-113].

See § 125.33 for discussion of the deductibility of attorney's fees when the primary issue to be resolved is ownership of property. For discussion of limitations on the amount of fees deductible, see § 125.30[1].

[3] Resisting Other Spouse's Claims for Income

Legal expenses incurred by one spouse in resisting the other spouse's income demands, as opposed to expenses incurred for the actual production or collection of income, are not deductible. Resisting the other spouse's money demands in a dissolution or separation proceeding does not create legal expenses that are deductible as expenses for the management, conservation, or maintenance of property within the meaning of the statute [see Wild v. Commissioner (1964) 42 T.C. 706, 710, acq. 1967-2 C.B. 4].

[4] Attorneys' Fees Relating to Child Support

Attorney's fees incurred in connection with demands for child support are not deductible as an expense for the production of income. The deduction is limited to expenses related to the production of income that must be included in the spouse's income [see Treas. Reg. § 1.212-1(a)(1)].

Similarly, attorney's fees incurred in resisting demands for child support are not deductible. Resisting money demands in a dissolution or separation proceeding does not create legal expenses that are deductible as expenses for the management, conservation, or maintenance of property within the meaning of the statute [see Wild v. Commissioner (1964) 42 T.C. 706, 710, acq. 1967-2 C.B. 4].

§ 125.32 Attorneys' Fees Incurred for Tax Advice

Legal expenses incurred in connection with the determination, collection, or refund of any tax are deductible [I.R.C. § 212(3); Treas. Reg. § 1.212-1(a)(1)(iii)]. This deduction applies not only to expenses relating to a contest of tax liability or preparation of tax returns for a single year but also to expenses relating to tax advice obtained for tax planning purposes [Carpenter v. United States (Ct. Cl. 1964) 338 F.2d 366, 369]. The deduction clearly extends to tax advice regarding dissolution, judgments of nullity, or separation. Thus, legal advice regarding issues such as the tax consequences of a property settlement agreement or proposed property transfer or division between spouses, the consequences of various forms of spousal and child support payments, and the right to claim a dependency exemption for a child, all are deductible [see Rev. Rul. 72-545, 1972-2 C.B. 179].

For discussion of the limitations placed on the amount of the deduction, see § 125.30[1].

PRACTICE TIP:

To be in compliance with California law [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(b)], attorneys should be generating monthly statements that specifically and accurately describe the activities for which the client is billed. Providing the small degree of extra specificity required to categorize attorney fees will give the client a clear record of attorney fees that are deductible (for example, fees for tax advice). Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

PRACTICE TIP:

Counsel should be wary of clients' requests (often coming near April 15th) to modify or allocate billed time so as to reflect tax advice. Such a request should alert counsel to the possibility that tax problems were not adequately considered. In any event, it is always advisable to ensure that billing practices honestly reflect the work that was done. Commentary by Hon. Thomas Murphy.

§ 125.33 Attorneys' Fees Incurred for Division of Property

Legal expenses arising from dissolution or separation that are attributable to division of property or claims regarding the existence of community property and the spouses' rights in it are not deductible by either spouse as expenses incurred either for the production of income or for the management, conservation, or maintenance of property held for the production of income [see, e.g., Melat v. Commissioner (1993) 65 T.C.M. 2868 (legal fees for valuing law partnership interest)]. Rather, these expenses arise from the marital relationship and therefore are considered to be personal and not related to business or profit-seeking activities [United States v. Gilmore (1963) 372 U.S. 39, 83 S. Ct. 623, 9 L. Ed. 2d 570] . Thus, to the extent that they relate to the issue of obtaining or relinquishing ownership in property because of a marital interest in the property, the fees are not deductible [Neill v. Commissioner (1964) 42 T.C. 793, 798-799 ; Hahn v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1976-113] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Although legal fees spent on acquiring property through dissolution of a marriage are not deductible, they do constitute capital expenditures [Hahn v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1976-113] . As capital expenditures, the fees may be added to the taxpayer's basis in the acquired asset [George v. United States (Ct. Cl. 1970) 434 F.2d 1336, 1338-1340] . Similarly, expenses incurred in protecting title to a capital investment have been held to constitute capital expenditures [see Berger v. Commissioner (1954) 13 T.C.M. 177 , aff'd per curiam (2d Cir. 1956) 234 F.2d 959] . Therefore, it could be argued that legal fees spent protecting the title to property should be allowed as an addition to the taxpayer's basis in the property. Commentary by Publisher's Editorial Staff.

§ 125.200 Provision for Filing Joint Income Tax Return

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, is a provision in a marital settlement agreement under which the separating spouses agree to file a joint income tax return. It should be used when the separating spouses agree to file a joint income tax return for the tax year or years after separation, but before the final judgment of dissolution is entered [I.R.C. § 6013(d)(2); Treas. Reg. § 1.6013-4(a)]. There are two primary tax factors to consider in determining whether the separating spouses should agree to file jointly during the separation period between the execution of a marital settlement agreement and the year in which the final judgment of dissolution is entered. First, the couple should weigh the benefit of receiving lower tax rates applicable to a joint filing [see I.R.C. § 1(a), (d)], against being held jointly and severally liable for any deficiencies on the joint return [see I.R.C. § 6013(d)(3)]. Second, a joint filing precludes deduction of any spousal support payments [see I.R.C. §§ 71(e), 215(a)]. For further discussion of rules regarding filing status, see §§ 125.20-125.22.

This form provides alternative ways in which spouses may agree to allocate potential liability for taxes on joint returns [see alternative subparagraphs (e)]. For instance, a husband and wife may agree that one spouse, usually the supporting spouse, will be responsible for paying all taxes due on the returns. Alternatively, the spouses may agree that each is to pay a certain percentage of the tax liability. A third alternative provided below is to have each spouse agree to pay his or her proportionate share of the tax liability. The allocation of liability may also be apportioned by limiting one spouse's obligation to the amount he or she would have paid under a separate return with the other spouse paying the balance of the tax. In deciding which alternative is most appropriate for the particular circumstances, the spouse's individual needs should be taken into account. Notwithstanding which alternative the parties choose for allocating tax liability, however, the Internal Revenue Service is not bound by the spouses' agreement and the parties are jointly and severally liable for any deficiencies on the return [see I.R.C. § 6013(d)(3); Angelina G. Alioto, T.C. Memo. 1994-51].

Each party's respective liability for the total tax liability for each year for which a joint return is filed under this Agreement shall be determined in the same proportion as the two separate tax liabilities bear to each other. For this purpose, the total tax owed by the parties for each year shall first be determined without considering any amounts withheld from either party's income or paid by either party as estimated taxes. After each party's proportionate liability for the total tax is determined, the actual amount paid by each party through withholding or estimated tax payments shall be deducted to determine that party's liability for the amount owing or share of any refund due.

[OR, if one spouse to pay amount he or she would have paid under separate return]

(f) Husband's/Wife's liability for income taxes owing in connection with each joint return shall not exceed the taxes that he/she would have owed had a separate return been filed. § 125.201 Provision for Filing Separate Income Tax Returns

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, is a provision in a marital settlement agreement for filing separate income tax returns. It states that the separating spouses, while still married, agree to file separate income tax returns for the tax years before the year in which a final judgment dissolving the marriage is entered. While separate or joint returns may be filed for all tax years before the year in which a final divorce decree is entered, separate returns must be filed for the year in which the spouses' divorce becomes final [I.R.C. § 6013(d)(2); Treas. Reg. § 1.6013-4(a)].

There are two primary tax factors to consider in determining whether the separating spouses should agree to file separate returns while still married, but separated. First, the couple should consider that, while joint filings result in lower tax rates, a separate filing will not expose the spouses to joint and several liability for deficiencies on the separate returns [see I.R.C. § 6013(d)(3)]. Second, separate filings ensure the deductibility of spousal support payments for the payor spouse, assuming that the other requirements for deductibility are also satisfied [see I.R.C. §§ 71(e), 215(a)]. If the separating spouses agree to file a joint return for the tax years for which the law permits them to file jointly, the provisions in § 125.200 may be included in the agreement.

Because spouses must include certain information regarding community income in their separate returns [see [b], below], this form also contains provisions that each spouse will provide documentation that the other may need to file his or her separate return, that each spouse acknowledges the portion of the parties' income that is community income, and that each spouse agrees to include half that community income in that spouse's separate return.

Additionally, when separate returns are filed, each spouse is responsible for paying the taxes on his or her own return. If appropriate, however, the spouses may agree that one spouse, usually the supporting spouse, will pay all or part of the other spouse's taxes due on his or her separate return. In the latter situation, the alternatives in § 125.200 for allocating tax liability on joint returns can be adapted for inclusion in this form.

For further discussion of filing status requirements and liability of spouses filing separate income tax returns, see §§ 125.20-125.22.

[b] Community Property Consequences Associated With Filing Separately

A married person's earnings are considered community property until the spouses are living separate and apart from each other or are legally separated [see Fam. Code § 760, 771, 772; In re Marriage of Manfer (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 925, 929-930, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 785 (date of separation occurs when either party does not intend to resume the marriage and his or her actions bespeak finality of marital relationship)]. The interests of each spouse in community property during the continuance of the marriage are present, existing, and equal interests [Fam. Code § 751]. Because of this interest in community property, each spouse must report one half of the community income when the spouses file separate returns [United States v. Malcolm (1931) 282 U.S. 792, 794, 51 S. Ct. 184, 75 L. Ed. 714] . If one spouse is required to report half the community income on his or her separate return, the other spouse is taxable only on the other half [United States v. Mitchell (1971) 403 U.S. 190, 196, 91 S. Ct. 1763, 29 L. Ed. 2d 406] .

[c] Allocation of Deductions

As each spouse must include one half of the community income in his or her returns, each spouse is also entitled to use half of the deductions with respect to that income. Further, each spouse may claim as a credit against the tax payable, one half of the tax withheld on the other spouse's salary [Gilmore v. United States (Ct. Cl. 1961) 290 F.2d 942, 948 , rev'd on other grounds, 372 U.S. 39, 83 S. Ct. 623, 9 L. Ed. 2d 570 (1963)] .

[2] FORM

Provision for Filing Separate Income Tax Returns

Separate Tax Returns

_____. (a) The parties shall each file separate state and federal income tax returns for the calendar year(s) ending December 31, _____ [specify each tax year or years before the year a final judgment of dissolution is entered]. Each party acknowledges that all income received by either party for services rendered before the date of separation is community income, as is all income or losses earned by community assets through the effective date of this Agreement. Each party shall report one half of the community income or losses on his or her separate federal and state income tax returns for the proper calendar year.

(b) Each party will cooperate fully with the other party by providing all information that the other party may need to report one half of the community income or loss and the deductions and credits pertaining to that income or loss (including but not limited to, W-2 statements from all employers, statements of income from any other source, and statements of itemized deductions and tax credits). Each will provide this information no later than _____ [period of time] before the filing deadline with the Internal Revenue Service and the Franchise Tax Board.

(c) If either party fails to fully cooperate in the other party's preparation and filing of the separate returns, the noncooperating party shall pay any additional tax liability, late penalties, interest, attorney's or accountants' fees and any other fees or costs incurred by the other party as a result of the failure to cooperate.

(d) [Each party or Husband or Wife] shall pay all costs associated with the preparation of [his or her or all] separate returns.

§ 125.202 Provision for Payment of Prior Tax Deficiencies

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, contains provisions for the payment of any potential tax liability that either party or the parties jointly may have to any taxing authority, to past joint income tax returns. Existing tax liabilities should be addressed in the division of community obligations. Chapter 121 includes provisions allocating existing tax liabilities as a part of the division of community obligations.

This clause provides three alternatives for allocating liability for tax deficiencies. One spouse may agree to pay all deficiencies subsequently assessed; or the spouses may agree to pay any subsequently assessed deficiencies equally; or the spouses may agree to each pay a specified percentage of any assessed deficiencies.

The clause also contains provisions requiring one party to notify the other party of any deficiency notices received from the Internal Revenue Service or Franchise Tax Board.

[b] Spouses' Liability on Joint Returns

Both spouses are jointly and severally liable for all tax deficiencies on joint returns [I.R.C. § 6013(d)(3)]. Although provisions that allocate the responsibility for paying prior tax deficiencies are not binding on the Internal Revenue Service [Angelina G. Alioto, T.C. Memo 1994-51], allocating potential tax liability on previous joint returns in the marital settlement agreement puts the spouses on notice of their respective obligations to each other for these taxes if the Internal Revenue Service or Franchise Tax Board audits prior joint returns and assesses additional deficiencies.

A spouse or former spouse may be relieved from liability for deficiencies attributable to the other spouse if he or she fits within the "innocent spouse" provisions of the Internal Revenue Code [see I.R.C. § 6015].

Note, however, that relief from joint and several liability under federal law does not, in itself, override a spouse's obligation to pay taxes under a judgment or order that requires the spouse to pay all or part of prior tax deficiencies. Thus, the other spouse may be compelled by the IRS to pay the entire deficiency, and yet seek reimbursement from the spouse who obtained relief [In re Marriage of Hargrave (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1313, 1320-1321, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 474 ; see Ravetti v. U.S. (9th Cir. 1994) 37 F.3d 1393, 1395-1396] . The second and third alternatives contain an optional provision to avoid this result. If selected, a finding of innocent spouse status will override the party's responsibility for payment of a tax deficiency.

[2] FORM

Provision for Payment of Prior Tax Deficiencies

[EITHER if one party will pay all tax deficiencies]

Tax Deficiencies Assumed by Husband/Wife

_____. (a) Husband/Wife shall be solely responsible for paying all assessments, liabilities, deficiencies, penalties, interest, and expenses (including, but not limited to, accounting and legal fees) to any federal, state, or local taxing authorities arising out of any review of the parties' personal income tax returns for any period when the parties filed joint returns. Husband/Wife shall pay Wife's/Husband's reasonable attorney fees and otherwise indemnify and hold her/him harmless in connection with any proceeding brought by any taxing authority to collect any tax such liability.

[OR if parties will share all tax deficiencies equally]

Sharing of Liability for Tax Deficiencies

(a) Each party shall pay 50 percent of all assessments, liabilities, deficiencies, penalties, interest, and expenses (including, but not limited to, accounting and legal fees) to any federal, state, or local taxing authorities arising out of any review of the parties' personal income tax returns for any period for which the parties filed joint returns. The parties shall equally share the cost of any attorney fees and costs incurred in connection with any proceeding brought by any taxing authority to collect any such tax liability. Each party shall indemnify and hold the other party harmless for any tax liability incurred in such a proceeding in excess of the other party's 50 percent share of the liability. [However, should a party obtain relief from joint and several liability under Internal Revenue Code Section 6015, that party shall have no liability under this Paragraph with respect to the amount of the tax deficiency for which relief was obtained.]

[OR if parties will share tax deficiencies in specified percents]

Sharing of Liability for Tax Deficiencies

(a) Husband shall pay _____ percent and Wife shall pay _____ percent of all assessments, liabilities, deficiencies, penalties, interest, and expenses (including, but not limited to, accounting and legal fees) to any federal, state, or local taxing authorities arising out of any review of the parties' personal income tax returns for any period for which the parties filed joint returns. The parties shall share, in the same percentages, the cost of any attorney fees and costs incurred in connection with any proceeding brought by any taxing authority to collect any such tax liability. Each party shall indemnify and hold the other party harmless for any tax liability incurred in such a proceeding in excess of the other party's percent share of the liability. [However, should a party obtain relief from joint and several liability under Internal Revenue Code Section 6015, that party shall have no liability under this Paragraph with respect to the amount of the tax deficiency for which relief was obtained.]

[CONTINUE]

(b) Each party shall forward to the other party a copy of any tax deficiency notice or other correspondence or documentation received from any federal, state, or local taxing authority relating to any joint income tax returns. Each party agrees to cooperate fully with the other and to execute any document reasonably requested by the other, and to furnish information and testimony with respect to any tax liability asserted by taxing authorities on any joint return.

§ 125.203 Provision Allocating Tax Refund

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, is a provision for the allocation of tax refunds. The tax provisions of a marital settlement agreement should allocate any existing tax refunds that the separating spouses may presently possess and any potential refunds that could subsequently be awarded under any joint returns that the spouses have or will file. Specific expected refunds should be addressed in the division of the parties' community property.

Unless the parties agree otherwise, the allocation of refunds should ordinarily correspond to the allocation of tax liability [see §§ 125.200 (allocating tax liability on joint returns after separation), 125.202 (allocating tax liability on prior returns filed jointly)]. That is, if one spouse agrees to be solely responsible for deficiencies on a particular joint return, it may be appropriate to allocate any refunds for that return to that spouse. The spouses may also consider dividing the refund according to the same proportion that taxes were paid on the return for which the refund applies.

§ 125.210 Provision for Payment of One Spouse's Attorneys' Fees and Costs by Other Spouse

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The following form is a provision in a marital settlement agreement under which one spouse agrees to pay all of the other spouse's attorneys' fees and costs incurred during dissolution proceedings. The form can also be adapted for use when one spouse agrees to pay only part of the other spouse's legal expenses.

In the absence of an agreement regarding fees, a spouse may seek a court order requiring the other spouse to pay legal fees and costs incurred during the dissolution proceeding that are reasonably necessary for the supported spouse to present his or her case. Whether the supported spouse's motion for fees and costs will be successful depends on a number of factors, the most important of those factors being whether the applicant's need for the fee award to properly present his or her case and the other spouse's ability to pay the fees ordered [see Fam. Code §§ 270, 2030 et seq.]. For full discussion of attorney's fee orders in dissolution proceedings, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, CALIFORNIA FAMILY LAW PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, 2nd ed., Ch. 62, Awards of Attorney's Fees in Family Law Proceedings (Matthew Bender).

This form provides only for the payment of attorneys' fees and costs incurred up to the time that a judgment of dissolution is entered. For a provision regarding payment of attorneys' fees and costs in the event that future litigation is necessary to enforce the agreement, see § 125.216.

This form provides for payment of the other spouse's fees in a lump sum [see subparagraph (a)]. For an alternative provision for payment of attorneys' fees on an installment basis, see § 125.212.

[b] Tax Considerations

The parties may find it advantageous to omit a provision requiring the supporting spouse to pay the supported spouse's attorneys' fees and instead increase the periodic spousal support payments to the party whose attorneys' fees are to be paid, and have that spouse pay his or her attorney from the increased support payments [see § 125.213]. The parties may prefer this alternative because although payments for attorneys' fees are generally not tax deductible by either spouse [Treas. Reg. § 1.262-1(b)(7); Wolfson v. Commissioner (1966) 47 T.C. 290, 294], except to the extent the fees are incurred for production of income [Treas. Reg. § 1.262-1(b)(7)], or tax advice [Treas. Reg. § 1.212-1(a)(1)(iii)], spousal support payments can be deducted [see I.R.C. §§ 71, 215]. For a further analysis of the tax consequences involved when paying attorneys' fees in a marital dissolution proceeding, see §§ 125.30-125.33.

Payment of attorney fees and costs shall be made [specify time for payment, e.g., within 30 days after the effective date of this Agreement].

(b) Full payment by Husband/Wife shall fully release him/her from all liability to Wife/Husband and to his/her attorneys for legal fees and costs associated with the negotiation, preparation, and execution of this Agreement and with regard to the proceeding for dissolution of marriage/legal separation.

This form provides only for the payment of attorneys' fees and costs up to the time that a judgment of dissolution is entered. § 125.212 Provision for Payment of Attorneys' Fees and Costs on Installment Basis

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, provides for one party's payment of the other party's attorneys' fees and costs on an installment basis. This form may be used as an alternative to § 125.210, which provides for a lump-sum payment.

The provision in § 125.213 should be used in lieu of this provision if the payment of attorneys' fees is intended to be a form of additional spousal or child support.

To encourage the prompt payment of each installment, the form provides for the payment of interest on delinquent payments and the acceleration of maturity for the unpaid balance if a particular payment is late in whole or in part for a specified number of days. When this form is used, counsel should consider including a provision concerning the payment of attorneys' fees and costs in future litigation to enforce the agreement [see § 125.216].

§ 125.213 Provision for Payment of Attorneys' Fees and Costs as Additional Spousal Support

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, is a provision in a marital settlement agreement for the payment of attorneys' fees and costs as additional spousal or family support. The stipulated sum is paid in full satisfaction of any legal obligation for the attorney fees and litigation costs of the supported spouse.

For the paying spouse, an advantage to paying attorneys' fees as additional spousal support is that such support payments are generally tax deductible, while payments for attorneys' fees and costs are generally not deductible [see I.R.C. §§ 71, 215; Treas. Reg. § 1.262-1(b)(7)]. If the parties intend the additional payment to be tax deductible to the supporting spouse, the marital settlement agreement should contain provisions that qualify the additional payments as alimony or separate maintenance under the Internal Revenue Code [see I.R.C. § 71]. For further discussion of tax consequences of attorneys' fees and spousal support, see § 125.30[2].

When this form is used in a marital settlement agreement, counsel should also consider including the additional provision in § 125.216 regarding attorneys' fees and costs in future litigation.

[b] Discharge of Fee Obligation in Bankruptcy

From the standpoint of the supported spouse and his or her attorney, an important reason to consider a provision making the fee obligation a form of additional spousal (or family) support is to prevent the paying spouse from discharging the fee obligation in bankruptcy. Generally, a "domestic support obligation" is not dischargeable in bankruptcy [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(5)]. In this context, a "domestic support obligation" includes any debt in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support (whether or not designated as such) owed by a bankruptcy debtor to his or her spouse or former spouse under a separation agreement, divorce decree, or property settlement agreement [11 U.S.C. § 101(14A)]; see Sloan v. Mitchell (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 47, 51, 104 Cal. Rptr. 418 (whether obligation is intended as support is determined by intent of parties, as expressed in their agreement)]. However, an obligation in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support will not be treated as a "domestic support obligation" if the supported spouse assigns the right to receive payments to a nongovernmental entity, unless the assignment is made for the purpose of collecting the debt. For this reason, the form set forth in [2], below, provides that any payment of fees and costs directly to the attorney shall be deemed an assignment by the supported spouse for the purpose of collecting the debt.

Also nondischargeable in bankruptcy is a debt to a spouse or former spouse of the bankruptcy debtor that does not qualify as a "domestic support obligation," if the debt is incurred by the debtor in the course of a divorce or separation or in connection with a separation agreement, divorce decree or other order of a court of record [11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(15)]. Accordingly, if a marital settlement agreement obligates one spouse to make payments directly to the other spouse as reimbursement for attorneys' fees and costs incurred in connection with the dissolution or the settlement agreement, those payments will not be dischargeable in bankruptcy. It is an open question whether an assignment of the right to receive such payments will result in the dischargeability of the debt [see 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(15) (providing for nondischargeability of such debt if owed to debtor's spouse, former, spouse, or child)].

Should obligations for spousal support be discharged in bankruptcy, the court can, as it deems just, still make all proper orders for spousal support, considering the circumstances of the respective parties and the amount of any obligations under a property settlement agreement that are discharged [Fam. Code § 3592]. For further discussion of the dischargeability in bankruptcy of an obligation to pay attorneys' fees and support payments in connection with a marital dissolution proceeding, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, CALIFORNIA FAMILY LAW PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, 2nd ed., Ch. 140, General Enforcement Principles and Remedies (Matthew Bender), and COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY (Matthew Bender 15th ed.), § 523.15.

§ 125.214 Provision for Payment of Attorneys' Fees and Costs From Community Personal Property

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a provision in a marital settlement agreement stating that the spouses will pay attorneys' fees and costs incurred by both of them from a specified source of community assets.

If the spouses cannot agree on a specific item or items of community property from which to pay the legal expenses, this form can be modified to provide that the attorneys' fees and costs incurred are to be paid out of community property generally. When this form is used, counsel should consider using the additional provision in § 125.216 regarding attorneys' fees and costs in future litigation.

For a provision that permits one spouse to encumber community real property to pay his or her attorneys' fees, see § 125.215.

[b] Effect of Attorneys' Fees Award on Division of Community Property

If the spouses cannot or will not agree to pay their attorneys' fees and costs from community property, the court may order payment of attorneys' fees and costs from any type of property, whether community or separate, principal or income [Fam. Code § 2032(c)]. A fee award ordered by the court does not affect the spouses' community property rights and should be paid independently from the division of community property. However, under appropriate circumstances, the spouses may request that the award be treated as a community debt, allowing the court to consider the obligation as it would any other community debt and order it paid from community assets before the equal division of the property [In re Marriage of Jafeman (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 244, 266-267, 105 Cal. Rptr. 483 ; In re Marriage of Barnert (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 413, 428, 149 Cal. Rptr. 616 ; Wong v. Superior Court (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 541, 547, 54 Cal. Rptr. 782] . Furthermore, if one spouse pays his or her own attorneys' fees by withdrawing funds from community assets before the division of the property, and the case is one in which equal division is required, the court can order that the other spouse receive a credit so that the division is equal [Gilb v. Gilb (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 379, 386, 339 P.2d 176 ; see Fam. Code §§ 2550, 2600, 2623(b), 2626].

For full discussion of division of responsibility for community and separate liabilities, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, CALIFORNIA FAMILY LAW PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, 2nd ed., Chapter 23, Debt Liability and Division and Related Reimbursement Issues (Matthew Bender).

From these funds, the following amounts shall be paid:

_____ to

_____ [name], the attorney for Wife.

_____ to

_____ [name], the attorney for Husband.

(b) The funds for attorney fees and costs shall come from [specify source of community property being used to pay legal expenses as specified above], which was the community property of the parties. § 125.215 Provision Permitting One Spouse to Encumber Community Real Property for Payment of Attorneys' Fees

[1] Comment--Use of Form

The form set forth in [2], below, is a provision for a marital settlement agreement that acknowledges the right of one spouse to encumber specific community real property for the payment of his or her attorneys' fees in a family law proceeding, and acts as an authorization for such encumbrance up to a specific amount, without the objection of the other party.

By statute, a spouse has the unilateral right to encumber his or her interest in community real property to secure the payment of attorneys' fees to retain counsel in a dissolution, legal separation, or nullity proceeding [see Fam. Code § 2033(a)]. The other spouse has the right to file an ex-parte objection to the attorney's fee lien [see Fam. Code § 2033(c)]. By including this provision in the marital settlement agreement, the other spouse waives his or her right to object to the attorney's fee lien. For further discussion of family law attorney's real property liens, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, CALIFORNIA FAMILY LAW PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, 2nd ed., Ch. 61, Attorney Fee Agreements (Matthew Bender).

(b) The community real property that may be encumbered is described as follows: [include sufficient identifying information, e.g., complete address, legal description, and Assessor's Parcel number]. The parties agree that the fair market value of this real property is approximately $ _____, and that encumbrances on the property as of the date of this agreement are [as follows: _____ (list all encumbrances) or as listed on the preliminary title report for the property dated _____, which is incorporated by reference in this Agreement and attached to it as Exhibit ____].

(c) No other community real property, except that described above, may be encumbered by either party.

(d) Wife/Husband shall not exercise her/his statutory right under Family Code Section 2033(c) to object to the family law attorney's real property lien described in subparagraph (a), provided the lien filed by Husband/Wife meets all requirements set forth above, including the maximum dollar amount of the lien. Further, the parties acknowledge that this lien will not result in an unequal division of community property between the parties and is just under the circumstances existing between the parties.

§ 125.216 Provision Allocating Payment of Attorneys' Fees and Costs in Future Litigation to Enforce Agreement

[1] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form is a provision in a marital settlement agreement allocating the payment of attorneys' fees and costs incurred during any future litigation that may be brought by one of the spouses to enforce a provision or provisions of the settlement agreement. A provision providing for the payment of fees and costs in future litigation should normally be included in a marital settlement agreement.

This form provides that attorneys' fees and costs incurred as the result of future litigation will be awarded to the party prevailing in the future litigation [see [b], below]. It states in part that the party seeking to enforce the original agreement must give the other party notice of the future litigation and a chance to cure the underlying reasons for the additional litigation. This provision has the effect of encouraging compliance with the original terms of the agreement, as well as promoting efforts at out-of-court resolution of the parties' differences. Additionally, this form contains language stating that the statutory definition of "prevailing party" under Civil Code Section 1717 will apply.

Note that this form assumes that at least some of its provisions will be contractually enforceable, which may not be the case to the extent that its provisions are merged in the judgment. Thus, use of the form assumes that at least some provisions will not be merged. For discussion of merger of marital settlement agreements into the judgment of dissolution, see Chapter 120.

[b] Payment of Future Fees and Costs to Prevailing Party

A provision for the payment of attorneys' fees and costs to the prevailing party in an action to enforce a marital settlement agreement is valid and binding [see Campbell v. Campbell (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 77, 83, 2 Cal. Rptr. 710; see also Tanner v. Tanner (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 419, 422, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 204]. Unless the agreement specifies that both parties were represented by counsel in the negotiation and execution of the contract, the fees and costs provision will be construed as applying to the entire agreement [Civ. Code § 1717(a)].

In any action on a contract, when the contract specifically provides that attorneys' fees and costs incurred to enforce the contract shall be awarded to one of the parties to the contract, or to the prevailing party, the party determined to be the prevailing party is entitled to reasonable attorneys' fees and costs, regardless of whether he or she is the party specified in the contract. Such a provision for attorneys' fees and costs cannot be waived by the parties, and any attempted waiver is void [Civ. Code § 1717(a)].

The court must determine who is the party prevailing on the contract, whether or not the suit proceeds to final judgment. The "party prevailing on the contract" is defined as the party who received a greater relief in the action [Civ. Code § 1717(b)(1)]. If the defendant alleges in the answer that he or she tendered to the plaintiff the full amount to which the plaintiff was entitled, and deposits that amount with the court and the allegation is found to be true, the defendant will be deemed to be the party prevailing on the contract. If such a deposit has been made by the defendant, the court must, on application of any party to the action, order the deposit to be invested in an insured, interest-bearing account. Interest on the account must be allocated to the parties in the same proportion as the original funds are allocated [Civ. Code § 1717(b)].

A court may exercise its duty to determine which party is prevailing by determining that there is no prevailing party [Civ. Code § 1717(b)(1)]. If the action is voluntarily dismissed, or dismissed pursuant to a settlement, there will be no prevailing party entitled to an attorneys' fees award [Civ. Code § 1717(b)(2)].

In an action seeking relief in addition to that based on the contract, if the party prevailing on the contract has damages not based on the contract awarded against him or her, the amounts awarded to him or her on the contract must, under Civil Code Section 1717, be deducted from any damages awarded in favor of the party who did not prevail on the contract. If the amount awarded under Civil Code Section 1717 exceeds the amount of damages awarded the party not prevailing on the contract, judgment may be entered in favor of the party prevailing on the contract for the net amount [Civ. Code § 1717(c)].

[2] FORM

Provision Allocating Payment of Attorneys' Fees and Costs in Future Litigation to Enforce Agreement

Payment of Future Fees and Costs to Prevailing Party

_____. (a) If either party to this Agreement brings an action or proceeding to enforce any provision of this Agreement, or to enforce any judgment or order made by a court in connection with this Agreement, the prevailing party in that action or proceeding shall be entitled to reasonable attorney fees and other reasonably necessary costs from the other party. The definition of "prevailing party" shall be the same as that set forth in Civil Code Section 1717(b).

(b) A party intending to bring an action or proceeding to enforce this Agreement shall not be entitled to recover attorney fees and costs under this provision unless he or she first gives the other party at least [specify amount of notice moving party must give, e.g., 30 days] written notice before filing the action or proceeding. The written notice shall specify (1) whether the subsequent action or proceeding is to enforce the original terms of the Agreement, (2) the reasons why the moving party believes the subsequent action or proceeding is necessary, (3) whether there is any action that the other party may take to avoid the necessity for the subsequent action or proceeding, and (4) a period of time within which the other party may avoid the action or proceeding by taking the specified action. The first party shall not be entitled to attorney fees and costs if the other party takes the specified action within the time specified in the notice.
