(payment of insurance premiums in installments does not equal credit; therefore, late fees are not subject to usury claim; no evidence presented regarding the liquidated damages claim). But see Dikeou v. Dikeou, 928 P.2d 1286 (Colo. 1997) (in commercial loan context, late fee held to be interest which, when added to contract interest rate, did not exceed the usury cap); Seaton v. City of Lexington, 97 S.W.3d 72 (Mo. Ct. App. 2002) (late payment fee designed to ensure prompt payment of municipal sewer bill is not the equivalent of interest charged for the use of money, despite fact that statute authorizing late payments referred to the bearing of "interest"). Even if late fees are considered to be interest, courts may apply the spreading doctrine to hold that the late fees do not make the loan usurious. Torres v. Overby, 2000 Tex. App. LEXIS 2493 (Tex. App. Apr. 17, 2000) . See, e.g., Domizio v. Progressive County Mut. Ins. Co., 54 S.W.3d 867 (Tex. App. 2001) , reh'g denied, (Apr. 4, 2002) (payment of insurance premiums in installments does not equal credit; therefore, late fees are not subject to usury claim; no evidence presented regarding the liquidated damages claim). See also Nolen v. Nucentrix Broadband Networks, 293 F.3d 926 (5th Cir. 2002) , cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1047 (2002) (cable TV provider's late fee of up to 30% per month was not interest and thus not usurious); Alston v. Crown Auto, Inc., 224 F.3d 332 (4th Cir. 2000) ; Mallard v. Forest Heights Water Works, 580 S.E.2d 602 (Ga. Ct. App. 2003) (late payment penalty of 10% of monthly water bill did not constitute interest; Georgia law required a "loan or forbearance of money" as element of usury); Garcia v. Tex. Cable Partners, Ltd. P'ship, 114 S.W.3d 561 (Tex. App. 2003) (cable TV late fee not interest because no use, forbearance, or detention of money involved); Domizio v. Progressive County Mut. Ins. Co., 54 S.W.3d 867 (Tex. App. 2001) .

(n26)Footnote 26. This point was recognized in Begelfer v. Najarian, 409 N.E.2d 167 (Mass. 1980) . See also Scarr v. Boyer, 818 P.2d 381, 383 (Mont. 1991) . "Usury statutes protect borrowers who lack real bargaining power against overreaching by creditors." Default does not alter this public policy and, in fact, increases the need; "a debtor who cannot retire a debt compounded by legal interest certainly lacks the resources to pay usurious interest." Although a late fee provides an incentive for prompt payment when the borrower actually has the ability to make a payment, the notion of incentive loses its value when the borrower has no money.

(n27)Footnote 27. Cf. Opinion of the Kansas Att'y General No. 88-30, Consumer Cred. Guide (CCH) P 95,908 (Mar. 3, 1988) (reasonable late charge assessed by cable television company is not interest, so long as actual efforts to collect are made and delinquent users are not offered alternative options for payment). Most studies show that late charges are, in fact, not regularly billed. See, e.g., Report of Presiding Officer, Trade Regulation Rule on Credit Practices 192 n.16 (FTC 1978).

(n28)Footnote 28. See, e.g., Fisher v. Westinghouse Credit Corp., 760 S.W.2d 802 (Tex. Ct. App. 1988) (late fee computed as interest on past due payments, rather than one-time charge; late fee is a separate agreement tested separately for usury from underlying contract); Rea v. Breakers Ass'n, 674 So. 2d 496 (Miss. 1996) . See also Bowman Plumbing, Heating & Elec. v. Logan, 59 Va. Cir. 446 (Va. Cir. Ct. 2002) (Virginia late payment statute caps fees at 5%).

(n29)Footnote 29. See Reliable Credit Corp. v. Smith, 406 So. 2d 231 (La. Ct. App. 1981) , amended, 418 So. 2d 1311 (La. 1982) (improperly imposed extension fee). See also Bumpus v. Vandeford, Clearinghouse No. 54,570 (N.D. Miss. 2002) (late fee imposed prior to expiration of 15-day statutory period is finance charge); Steves Sash & Door Co. v. Ceco Corp., 751 S.W.2d 473 (Tex. 1988) (charging interest during a grace period when none is due is interest).

(n30)Footnote 30. E.g., Reliable Credit Corp. v. Smith, 418 So. 2d 1311 (La. 1982) ; Wright Ins. Agency v. Scott, 371 So. 2d 1207 (La. Ct. App. 1979) ; Begelfer v. Najarian, 409 N.E.2d 167 (Mass. 1980) ; Hardwick v. Austin Gallery of Oriental Rugs, Inc., 779 S.W.2d 438, 443 (Tex. Ct. App. 1989) ; Veytia v. Seiter, 740 S.W.2d 64 (Tex. Ct. App. 1987) ; Dixon v. Brooks, 604 S.W.2d 330 (Tex. Ct. App. 1980) (writ ref'd n.r.e.).

(n31)Footnote 31. Delaware and South Dakota were the pioneers in this regard. However, other states have followed suit. Nebraska, for example recently deemed credit card charges and fees to be interest for these purposes. Consumer Cred. Guide (CCH) P Neb. 6201. New Hampshire added late fees to its definition of interest Consumer Cred. Guide (CCH) P NH 6251.

(n32)Footnote 32. See Smiley v. Citibank (South Dakota), 517 U.S. 735, 116 S. Ct. 1730, 135 L. Ed. 2d 25 (1996). Contra Sherman v. Citibank (S.D.), N.A., 668 A.2d 1036 (N.J. 1995) , and remanded, 517 U.S. 1241, 116 S. Ct. 2493, 135 L. Ed. 2d 186 (1996) (in light of Smiley); Mazaika v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 653 A.2d 640 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1994) , rev'd on other grounds, 680 A.2d 845 (Pa. 1996) (applying the holding in Smiley).

(n33)Footnote 33. See, e.g., Late Charges are Interest, [National Credit Union Administration] Says, Saying State-Based Objections Preempted, 62 BNA Banking News 745 (Apr. 25, 1994) (Letter from Richard Schulman, 4/11/94). The OCC has recently issued a formal interpretive ruling defining late fees and overlimit fees, among others, to be interest within the meaning of § 85 of the National Bank Act. 12 C.F.R. § 7.4001, 61 Fed. Reg. 4,869 (Feb. 9, 1996).

(n34)Footnote 34. The import of these cases is that a borrower in state A with a $10 late charge limit, may nonetheless be charged a $25 late fee by a card issuer in Delaware.

(n35)Footnote 35. See, e.g., In re Richards, 272 F. Supp. 480 (D. Me. 1967) (credit insurance); Cooprider v. Security Bank, 319 Ark. 75, 890 S.W.2d 240 (1994) (title insurance); Grantham v. First Union Home Equity Bank, 685 So. 2d 748 (Ala. Civ. App. 1996) (interpreting Ala. Code §§ 5-19-1 and 5-19-4(b)); Concord Realty Co. v. Cont'l Funding Corp., 776 P.2d 1114 (Colo. 1989) (en banc) (appraisal fee, inspection fee, credit reports, federal express charges, legal fees at closing); Swanson v. Gulf W. Int'l Corp., 429 So. 2d 817 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1983) (broker's fee).

(n36)Footnote 36. See Family Fed. Sav. & Loan v. Davis (In re Davis), 172 B.R. 437 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1994) ; In re Bryant, 39 B.R. 313 (Bankr. D. Nev. 1984) ; Walker v. Pliss, 34 B.R. 432 (Bankr. D. Or. 1983) ; In re Verdini Enters., 13 B.R. 739 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1981) ; Swanson v. Gulf W. Int'l Corp., 429 So. 2d 817 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1983) ; Ashland Nat'l Bank v. Conley, 231 Ky. 844, 22 S.W.2d 270 (1929) ; Annot., 52 A.L.R.2d 703 (1957) .

(n37)Footnote 37. See Diane Inc. v. Kapnison, 667 P.2d 450 (N.M. 1983) (interpreting N.M. Stat. Ann. § 56-8-7 (1978)). However, such statutes frequently contain broad loopholes. The Nebraska statute governing loan brokers, for example, excludes attorneys, real estate brokers, real estate salespeople, and most lenders. Neb. Rev. Stat. § 45-190 (1983).

(n38)Footnote 38. See, e.g., Matter of Dukes, 24 B.R. 404 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1982) ; North Am. Invs. v. Cape San Blas Joint Venture, 378 So. 2d 287 (Fla. 1978) ; Feemster v. Schurkman, 291 So. 2d 622 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1974) ; Howes v. Curtis, 104 Idaho 563, 661 P.2d 729 (1983) ; Duckworth v. Bernstein, 55 Md. App. 710, 466 A.2d 517 (1983) . See generally Annot., 52 A.L.R.2d 703 (1957) . See also Tavares v. Sprunk (In re Tavares), 298 B.R. 195 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2003) (broker fees explicitly included in calculation of interest rate for purposes of determining whether loan violates Massachusetts criminal usury statute). But see Lovick v. Ritemoney Ltd., 378 F.3d 433 (5th Cir. 2004) (recognizing that $1,500 of $2,000 paid to a broker could be interest under Texas law but finding that a "special" agency relationship only existed between the broker and the lender, which is not enough to transform the broker fee into interest, particularly when the complaint failed to allege that the lender received some benefit from the additional fee and the additional fee paid to the third party "was a subterfuge to evade the usury statute"; holding that the state credit services organization act applies as a more recent law but contains no cap on the amount the entity can charge for arranging a loan; dissent argues that the case should not be dismissed before discovery could be conducted to show if any part of the $1,500 fee made its way into the lender's pocket).

(n39)Footnote 39. See In re Mickler, 50 B.R. 818 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1985) (sham referral fee); Howes v. Curtis, 104 Idaho 563, 661 P.2d 729 (1983) ; United-Bilt Homes, Inc. v. Knapp, 239 Ark. 940, 396 S.W.2d 40 (1965) (credit life insurance and appraisal fees not actually expended); Stubbs v. Security Consumer Disc. Co., 85 N.J. 353, 426 A.2d 1014 (1981) ; National Am. Life Ins. Co. v. Bayou Country Club, 16 Utah 2d 417, 403 P.2d 26 (1965) . See also Kenty v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16645 (S.D. Ohio Apr. 29, 1992) (insurance kickbacks), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 92 F.3d 384 (6th Cir. 1996) .

(n40)Footnote 40. See Hubschman v. Broda, 103 N.J. Super. 494, 247 A.2d 698 (1968) ; Pease v. Taylor, 496 P.2d 757 (Nev. 1972) .

(n41)Footnote 41. Middleton v. Southern Atl. Fin. Servs., Inc., 512 S.E.2d 525 (S.C. Ct. App. 1999) (evidence to contradict the written brokerage agreement disclaiming agency not presented in this case; parol evidence rule may prevent the introduction of oral representations of broker absent claims of fraud).

(n42)Footnote 42. 12 U.S.C. § 2607; Reg. X, 24 C.F.R. § 3500.14.

(n43)Footnote 43. See, e.g., Owens v. Conelly, 77 Ariz. 349, 272 P.2d 345 (1954) ; Greeley Nat'l Bank v. Sloan, 677 P.2d 409 (Colo. Ct. App. 1983) ; Bizzoco v. Chintz, 193 Conn. 304, 476 A.2d 572 (1984) ; Lairsen v. Slutzky, 80 S.W.3d 121 (Tex. App. 2002) (upholding award of attorney fees for breach of contract under Texas Civil Practice Code; both contract and statute permitted imposition of attorney fees). Cf. Quinn v. McCoy, 2002 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 5360 (Cal. Super. Ct. June 14, 2002) (while deed of trust authorized lender to impose attorney fees to enforce loan contract, lender not entitled to attorney fees for successful defense against borrowers' lawsuit for wrongful foreclosure, since such claims sounded in tort). See also Rockstad v. Erikson, 113 P.3d 1215 (Alaska 2005) (court affirmed a judgment for attorney fees awarded to the mortgagee's attorney based on the contract provisions in the note and mortgage for time collecting on the loan due to default and for time spent defending against the mortgagor's claims; court refused to allow mortgagee to collect attorney fees for time spent responding to the homeowner's bankruptcy on the grounds that only the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to award fees if the contract permits). Cf. Shwartz v. American Express Travel Related Serv. Co., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5821 (E.D. La. Apr. 8, 2003) (two credit card attorney fee provisions at issue in this case; court reversed an award of a "reasonable" fee for both accounts where one agreement limited the attorney fee to 15% of the balance and the other agreement allowed a fee for time spent collecting the balance due; court construed this latter provision against the maker and held that the card issuer could only recover for time spent collecting the debt but not for defending consumer's lawsuit; total fee awarded was substantially reduced).

(n44)Footnote 44. In a few cases, creditors which have assessed usurious charges have retroactively attempted to justify them as valid charges for attorneys' fees. This gambit has not held up in court. See Ganus v. Jopes, 470 So. 2d 237 (La. Ct. App. 1985) ; Coppedge v. Colonial Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 721 S.W.2d 933 (Tex. Ct. App. 1986) .

(n45)Footnote 45. See Browne v. Nowlin, 117 Ariz. 73, 570 P.2d 1246 (1977) ; see also Ganus v. Jopes, 470 So. 2d 237 (La. Ct. App. 1985) (dictum). Cf. Cuevas v. Montoya, 48 Wash. App. 871, 740 P.2d 858 (1987) (lender/attorney's own fees to set up a loan were interest). See also Tavares v. Sprunk (In re Tavares), 298 B.R. 195 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2003) (attorney fees included in calculation of interest rate for purposes of determining whether loan violates Massachusetts criminal usury statute).

(n46)Footnote 46. E.g., In re Salzman, 83 B.R. 233 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1988) . See Md. Code Ann., Com. Law § 12-623. On the general question of charging fees for services performed by creditor employees, see Winston v. Personal Fin. Co. of Pine Bluff, 220 Ark. 580, 249 S.W.2d 315 (1952) (fees were interest).

(n47)Footnote 47. This is the rule in Texas. See Imperial Corp. of Am. v. Frenchman's Creek Corp., 453 F.2d 1338 (5th Cir. 1972) (applying Texas law); Texas Commerce Bank v. Goldring, 665 S.W.2d 103 (Tex. 1984) ; Nevels v. Harris, 129 Tex. 190, 102 S.W.2d 1046 (1937) .

(n48)Footnote 48. See, e.g., Turner v. First Union Nat'l Bank, 162 N.J. 75, 740 A.2d 1081 (1999) (imposition of document preparation fee by lender's attorney limited by statute to certain circumstances, though a careful read of the decision reveals that the court's interpretation of the statute eliminates all of the protections in the law).

(n49)Footnote 49. See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 4.6.1.2 (4th ed. 2009). For further discussion of other types of hidden interest, such as requiring a payment on the date of consummation rather than thirty days later, or requiring that the borrower pay a deposit that is held by the lender until the debt is paid off, see Cost of Credit § 7.4.2. See also Williams v. Chartwell Fin. Servs., Ltd., 204 F.3d 748 (7th Cir. 2000) (requiring deposit to get loan, and including deposit in amount financed of loan may violate Truth in Lending Act).

(n50)Footnote 50. See Compton v. Altavista Motors, Inc., 121 F. Supp. 2d 932 (W.D. Va. 2000) (summary judgment denied on whether GAP insurance was voluntary; if required, the premium was an unlawful finance charge under state law).

(n51)Footnote 51. Mitchell v. Trustees of U.S. Real Estate Inv. Trust, 375 N.W.2d 424 (Mich. Ct. App. 1985) .

(n52)Footnote 52. For a description of different types of wraparound transactions, see Arditto, The Wraparound Deed of Trust: An Answer to the Allegation of Usury, 10 Pac. L.J. 923 (1979).

(n53)Footnote 53. See, e.g., Summers v. Consolidated Capital Special Trust, 783 S.W.2d 580 (Tex. 1989) (payoff bid at foreclosure sale of wraparound mortgage should include the wrapped debt even if borrower was exempted from liability on the debt by the mortgage); Greenland Vistas v. Plantation Place, 746 S.W.2d 923 (Tex. Ct. App. 1988) (upon acceleration of wraparound note, permissible to include demand for underlying lien balance and accrued interest along with balance of wrap loan). For example, a 1985 Michigan case recognized that wraparound mortgages executed for refinancing purposes are not subject to federal usury preemption under the Depository Institutions Deregulation and Monetary Control Act of 1980 because they are not secured by first liens as required by the Act. Mitchell v. Trustees of U.S. Real Estate Inv. Trust, 375 N.W.2d 424 (Mich. Ct. App. 1985) . See generally Annot., 36 A.L.R.4th 144 (1985) (validity and effect of wraparound mortgages).

(n54)Footnote 54. For a discussion of wraparound notes under California law, see Arditto, The Wraparound Deed of Trust: An Answer to the Allegation of Usury, 10 Pac. L.J. 923 (1979).

(n55)Footnote 55. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. § 665.077 (1985) (Savings & Loans only); La. Stat. Ann. § 9:3504B (West 1983); Minn. Stat. § 47.20 (1984). The Florida statute applies to savings and loan associations and not to finance companies. In re Hamlett, 63 B.R. 492 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1986) .

(n56)Footnote 56. See Eskridge, One Hundred Years of Ineptitude: The Need For Mortgage Rules Consonant With the Economic and Psychological Dynamics of the Home Sale and Loan Transaction, 70 Va. L. Rev. 1083, 1136 n.167 (1984).

(n57)Footnote 57. Reg. Z, 12 C.F.R. § 226.4(b)(9).

(n58)Footnote 58. Reg. Z, 12 C.F.R. § 226.4(c)(5), as interpreted in Official Staff Commentary § 226.4(c)(5). Prior to the "simplification" of Regulation Z, seller points were treated as finance charge only if they were passed on to the buyer in the sale price. See Official F.R.B. Interpretation 226.406 (10/23/70).

(n59)Footnote 59. For a discussion of agreed rate statutes and their potential effect on seller's points transactions, see § 6.07[1][g] infra.

(n60)Footnote 60. See Metcalf v. Bartrand, 491 P.2d 747 (Alaska 1971) ; Kawauchi v. Tabata, 413 P.2d 221 (Haw. 1966) (equitable mortgage); Thomas v. Klemm, 185 Md. 136, 43 A.2d 193 (1945) (equitable mortgage; usury not an issue); Fales v. Glass, 402 N.E.2d 1100 (Md. Ct. App. 1980) (equitable mortgage, usury not at issue); Wilcox v. Moore, 354 Mich. 499, 93 N.W.2d 288 (1958) (found to be usurious loan with mortgage taken); Boyd v. Layher, 170 Mich. App. 93, 427 N.W.2d 593 (1988) ; McConnell v. Sutherland, 135 Or. App. 477, 898 P.2d 254 (1995) , rev. denied, 322 Or. 489, 909 P.2d 161 (1996) (deed with option to repurchase was an equitable mortgage; issue remained whether loan was subject to statutory usury exemption). See Perry v. Queen, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17120 (M.D. Tenn. Feb. 27, 2006) (transfer of home created an equitable mortgage where the consumer was unsophisticated and not represented by counsel, where the payment made by the "purchaser" was only 10% of the fair market value of the home, and where the mortgage remained in the consumer's name); Wilson v. Bel Fury Investments Group, L.L.C., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35740 (D. Neb. Feb. 6, 2006) ; Brown v. Grant Holding, L.L.C., 394 F. Supp. 2d 1090 (D. Minn. 2005) (court evaluated six factors to determine the existence of an equitable mortgage); Rowland v. Haven Properties, L.L.C., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13353 (N.D. Ill. June 24, 2005) (court refused to dismiss the equitable mortgage claim where a house worth $245,000 was deeded away for only $91,500 and where the homeowner alleged fraud and no intent to sell); Hruby v. Larsen, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42285 (D. Minn. June 30, 2005) (court granted preliminary injunction to maintain status quo; court reviewed elements to prove an equitable mortgage and found that the consumers have a likelihood of success on the merits; court ordered a bond of $1,000 plus monthly payments of $500). Cf. MERS v. Wilson, 2005 WL 1284047 (N.J. Super. Ct. Ch. Div. May 27, 2005) (court reviewed common law rules regarding proving an equitable mortgage; no allegation of usury).

(n61)Footnote 61. Cf. Burnett v. Ala Moana Pawn Shop, 3 F.3d 1261 (9th Cir. 1993) (pawn was really loan subject to Truth in Lending). But see People v. Lee, 447 Mich. 552, 526 N.W.2d 882 (1994) (sale with repurchase option not a loan because no obligation to repay--this was a 4/3 decision in a criminal usury prosecution); Halco Fin. Servs., Inc. v. Foster, 770 S.W.2d 554 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1989) ; see also Mertens v. Division of Consumer Servs., 596 So. 2d 89 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1992) (state challenging auto sale/leaseback/repurchase arrangement as usurious loans with interest rates of 200% to 1000%; decision addresses creditor's Fifth Amendment right to decline to produce documents to state agency).

(n62)Footnote 62. E.g. Ga. Code Ann. § 10-1-393(b)(20)(c). This Georgia statute specifically regulates "foreclosure recovery sales," in which a lender purchases a dwelling from a borrower in default, and the borrower remains in possession of the dwelling after the purchase. The statute requires a written contract with certain disclosures and right to cancel 10 days after the purchase. Cf. Greene v. Team Props., 544 S.E.2d 726 (Ga. Ct. App. 2001) (discussing statute but holding that borrower's claim past statute of limitations.). See also Eicher v. Mid America Fin. Inv. Corp., 702 N.W.2d 792 (Neb. 2005) (foreclosure rescue scam). In addition, six states have enacted laws governing purported sale/leasebacks of homes: Cal. Civ. Code §§ 1695.0-1695.17; Ga. Code Ann. § 10-1-393(b)(20)(A); Ill. S.B. 2349, effective Jan. 1, 2007 (not yet codified); Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. §§ 7-105(A-1), 7-301-321; Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 325N.01-325N.18; Mo. Ann. Stat. §§ 407.935-407.943.

(n63)Footnote 63. 754 F. Supp. 860 (S.D. Ala. 1991) . See also Lynn v. Fin. Solutions Corp. (In re Lynn) 173 B.R. 894 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1994) ; Quick Cash of Clearwater, Inc. v. State Dep't of Agric., 605 So. 2d 898 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1992) . For sample pleadings in auto pawn cases, see National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Law Pleadings No. 3, §§ 4.2, 4.3 (2003 Cumulative CD-Rom and Index Guide).

(n64)Footnote 64. See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 7.5.2.3 (3rd ed. 2005 and Supp.) for discussion of this and other cases on auto pawn transactions. See also SAL Leasing, Inc. v. State ex rel. Napolitano, 198 Ariz. 434, 10 P.3d 1221 (Ct. App. 2000) (court applied six factors to sale/leaseback auto scheme to determine that the transaction was really a loan and subject to state's small loan law).

(n65)Footnote 65. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann § 537.001(in 2000, Florida slashed the permissible interest rate from 20% per month to 30% per year on the first $2,000, 24% per year on the amount between $2,000 and $3,000, and 18% on amounts above $3,000, forcing the industry to abandon the state); Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 368.200-.285, 368.991. Tennessee licensed 214 companies with 894 locations in 2004. Tennessee Dep't of Fin. Inst., Report to the Tennessee General Assembly (Feb. 1, 2006), available at www.tennessee.gov/tdfi/admin/GeneralAssemblyReportTitlePledge.pdf. Tennessee also reported that Alabama had 997 locations, followed by Missouri with 250, Utah with 180, South Carolina with 175, Idaho with 119, New Hampshire with 63 (payday and auto title), and Oregon with 58 offices. In 2005, the New Mexico Attorney General enacted auto title lending regulations under authority conferred by the New Mexico Unfair Practices Act. These regulations were to be effective on February 15, 2006 but have been stayed pending the outcome of an industry lawsuit that challenges the regulations. The regulations likely will severely restrict auto title lending; they declare that it is unconscionable to charge more than 54% per annum, require repayment in installments, require underwriting, among other protections. The regulations are available at www.ago.state.nm.us/divs/cons/small_loan_ruels_regs/small_loan_regs.pdf. See also Nev. Rev. Stat. §§ 646.010 to 646.060; Ohio Rev. Code § 4505.102; S.C. Code Ann. §§ 34-39-110 to 34-39-260; See also Idaho Department of Finance Enforcement Policy #2000-1, Fraudulent and Unconscionable Conduct in Title Loans (defines what conduct relating to ability to repay, disclosures, and sale of the vehicles may be unconscionable), available at http://finance.idaho.gov/form/ConsumerLender/policy2000-1.pdf; Tennessee Attorney Gen. Op. No. 05-11 (July 12, 2005) (finding that auto title lenders must comply with Article 9 of the U.C.C. unless it conflicts with provisions of the Title Pledge Statute), available at www.attorneygeneral.state.tn.us/op/2005/op/op111.pdf.

(n66)Footnote 66. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 37:1801.D; Me. Rev. Stat. § 30-A:3960; Ohio Rev. Stat. §§ 4505.102, 4727.01(A) and 4727.08(E); S.C. Code Ann. § 40-39-10(3). However, South Carolina permits auto title lending not structured as a pawn transaction. See S.C. Code Ann. § 37-3-413.

(n67)Footnote 67. See Malish v. City of San Diego, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 18 (Cal. Ct. App. 2000) (upholding city's right to require pawnbroker to obtain local permit, but striking down parts of ordinance that were inconsistent with state pawnbroker licensing law); Missouri Title Loans v. City of St. Louis Board of Adjustment, 62 S.W.3d 408 (Mo. Ct. App. 2001) (zoning action); Circle D Pawn #2, Inc. v. Norman, 956 P.2d 931 (Okla. Ct. App. 1998) (local law did not conflict with the state act). See also Meredith Fischer and Paige Akin, Board Rules Against Lender: Chesterfield Calls Store Site Wrong, Richmond Times-Dispatch, Jan. 3, 2003, at A12; Dan Kulin, City Considers Restrictions For Payday, Car Loan Firms, Las Vegas Sun, Nov. 5, 2002, at 3.

(n68)Footnote 68. OCC Advisory Letter, No. AL 2000-11 (Nov. 27, 2000), available at www.occ.treas.gov/advlst00.htm.

(n69)Footnote 69. For a discussion of leases as secured sales under the UCC, see § 10.02[1][c][iv] infra. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions §§ 2.1.5, 14.1.1-14.1.3 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.). See also Annot., 4 A.L.R.4th 85 (1981) ("sale" within scope of UCC Article 2).

(n70)Footnote 70. See Ch. 1 supra (re: TILA); Ch. 10, "Repossessions," infra.

(n71)Footnote 71. See 15 U.S.C. § 1602(g); compare Clark v. Rent-It Corp., 685 F.2d 245 (8th Cir. 1982) , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1225, 103 S. Ct. 1232, 75 L. Ed. 2d 466 (1983) ; Green v. Continental Rentals, Clearinghouse No. 50,403 (N.J. Super. Ct. Law Div., Passaic County, Mar. 25, 1994) (RTO agreement a credit sale subject to TIL), with Smith v. ABC Rental Sys., 491 F. Supp. 127 (E.D. La. 1978) , aff'd, 618 F.2d 397 (5th Cir. 1982) . See generally Annot., 59 A.L.R. Fed. 929 (1982) (leases as TILA credit sales). The above cases were generally decided prior to a 1981 amendment to Reg. Z § 226.2(a)(16), which now defines a credit sale to include certain leases "unless terminable without penalty or at any time by the customer." Many RTO contracts are drafted to fall into that loophole, but at least one court has held that if the transactions are used as a means of purchase, rather than true short-term rentals, they may still be credit sales subject to TIL despite that language. See In re Hanley, 105 B.R. 458 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1989) , on motion to alter or amend, 111 B.R. 709 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1990) . Courts differ on whether the fact that a customer forfeits any built-up equity is properly considered as a penalty within the meaning of the Regulation. Compare In re Hanley, 105 B.R. 458 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1989) , on motion to alter or amend, 111 B.R. 709 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1990) ; Starks v. Rent-A-Center, Clearinghouse No. 45,215 (Minn. Dist. Ct. 1990), with Green v. Continental Rentals, Clearinghouse No. 50,403 (N.J. Super. Ct. Law Div., Passaic County, Mar. 25, 1994) (customer had paid $3336 on $2785 worth of goods at time of repossession; court held penalty includes a forfeiture).

(n72)Footnote 72. See Sight & Sound of Ohio, Inc. v. Wright, 36 B.R. 885 (S.D. Ohio 1983) ; Murphy v. McNamara, 36 Conn. Supp. 183 (1979) (RTO agreement was unconscionable sale); Broad v. Curtis Mathes Sales Co., Clearinghouse No. 36,376 (CV-82-1254 Me. Sup. Ct., Feb. 6, 1984). See generally § 10.02 infra. See also National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions § 14.33 (6th ed. 2005).

(n73)Footnote 73. See In re Puckett, 60 B.R. 223 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1986) . See also Michaels v. Ford Motor

Credit Co., 156 B.R. 584 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 1993) (court found that the intent of the parties determined that the agreement was a disguised security agreement even though it was called a "Rental Agreement"). But see In re DWE Screw Prods., Inc., 157 B.R. 326 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1993) . See generally National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice, § 11.8 (8th ed. 2006).

(n74)Footnote 74. See Burney v. Thorn Americas, Inc., 944 F. Supp. 762 (E.D. Wis. 1996) (measure of damages is the difference between the finance charge and a 5% interest rate; finance charge includes everything except the retail price); In re Rose, 94 B.R. 103 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1988) ; Murphy v. McNamara, 36 Conn. Supp. 183 (1979) ; Miller v. Colortyme, Inc., 518 N.W.2d 544 (Minn. 1994) ; Starks v. Rent-A-Center, Clearinghouse No. 45,215 (Minn. Dist. Ct. 1990); Green v. Continental Rentals, Clearinghouse No. 50,403 (N.J. Super. Ct. Law Div., Passaic County, Mar. 25, 1994); Commonwealth of Pennsylvania v. Riverview Leasing, Inc., Clearinghouse No. 50,401, No. 325 M.D. 1993 (Pa. Commw. Ct. Aug. 5, 1994); Chandler v. Riverview Leasing, Inc., Clearinghouse No. 40,628 (Pa. C.P. Northampton County May 15, 1986); State v. Rentavision Corp. of Am., Clearinghouse No. 35,731 (Tenn. Chanc. Ct. 1983); Palacios v. ABC TV & Stereo Retail, 123 Wis. 2d 79, 365 N.W.2d 882 (Ct. App. 1985) ; LeBakken Rent-To-Own v. Warnell, 223 Wis. 2d 582, 589 N.W.2d 425 (Ct. App. 1998) ; Rent-A-Center v. Hall, 181 Wis. 2d 243, 510 N.W.2d 789 (Ct. App. 1993) . But see Givens v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 720 F. Supp. 160 (S.D. Ala. 1988) , aff'd mem., 885 F.2d 879 (11th Cir. 1989) (rental agreement not credit sale under Alabama Consumer Finance Act); Hawkes Television Inc. v. Maine Bureau of Consumer Credit Protection, 462 A.2d 1167 (Me. 1983) ; State v. Action TV Rentals, Inc., 467 A.2d 1000 (Md. 1983) ; see also Remco Enters., Inc. v. Houston, 677 P.2d 567 (Kan. App. 1984) (RTO contract not unconscionable). Note that if an RTO transaction can be shown to be a usurious credit sale at twice the permitted rate or higher, a federal (or state) RICO claim may be appropriate. See § 6.08[7][b] infra.

(n75)Footnote 75. For instance, the Minnesota statute being interpreted in Starks v. Rent-A-Center, Clearinghouse No. 45,215 (Minn. Dist. Ct. 1990), included terminable leases within the definition of credit sale in certain circumstances. See Minn. Stat. § 325G.15 (1989), superseded by Minn. Stat. §§ 325F.82 to 325F.95, which, in turn, was interpreted in Miller v. Colortyme, Inc., 518 N.W.2d 544 (Minn. 1994) , and Fogie v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 867 F. Supp. 1398 (D. Minn. 1993) (RTO contracts are credit sales for all purposes and, thus, are subject to general contract usury ceiling), aff'd sub nom. Fogie v. Thorn Ams., Inc., 95 F.3d 645 (8th Cir. 1996) , cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1166, 117 S. Ct. 1427, 137 L. Ed. 2d 536 (1997) .

(n76)Footnote 76. Further analysis and discussion of these arguments can be found in National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 7.5.3 (3rd ed. and Supp.). The Supreme Court of New Jersey recently affirmed that rent-to-own contracts as structured were closer to sales and violated that state's Retail Installment Sales Act. Perez v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 892 A.2d 1255 (N.J. 2006) .

(n77)Footnote 77. For a fuller discussion of RALs and other fringe loans, see Lynn Drysdale and Kathleen E. Keest, The Two-Tiered Consumer Financial Services Marketplace: The Fringe Banking System and its Challenge to Current Thinking About the Socio-Economic Role of Usury Law in Today's Society, 51 S.C. L. Rev. 589 (2000). See also Chi Chi Wu, Jean Ann Fox & Elizabeth Renuart, Tax Preparers Peddle High Cost Tax Refund Loans: Millions Skimmed from the Working Poor and the U.S. Treasury, National Consumer Law Center and Consumer Federation of America (Jan. 31, 2002), available at www.consumerlaw.org.

(n78)Footnote 78. This rule comes from the longstanding usury distinction between sales and loans and is a good example of the illogic of the distinction.

(n79)Footnote 79. The use of a sham intermediary will not prevent the application of usury laws. See, e.g., Graham & Locke Inv., Inc. v. Madison, 295 S.W.2d 234 (Tex. Civ. App. Dallas 1956) , writ ref'd n.r.e.; Baske v. Russell, 67 Wash. 2d 268, 407 P.2d 434 (1965) . The argument can be made in the tax refund context that the IRS is merely a sham intermediary for the borrower/assignor's payment to the lender/assignee since the refund is technically the borrower's money. At least one court has held that the assignment of a tax refund falls within this exception to usury law, and that the assignment is not a loan because the taxpayer is never obligated to repay anything to the assignee. See Cullen v.

Bragg, 180 Ga. App. 866, 350 S.E.2d 798 (1986) .

(n80)Footnote 80. See State ex rel. Salazar v. The Cash Now Store, Inc., 31 P.3d 161 (Colo. 2001) (tax assignments were loans, court held, because Cash Now advanced money in exchange for right to collect consumer's anticipated tax refund, which was valuable to lender, creating a debt). See also Opinion of the Attorney General of Kentucky, May 3, 1982, Clearinghouse No. 41,261.

(n81)Footnote 81. See, e.g., Tiffany v. Boatman's Instit., 85 U.S. (18 Wall.) 375, 21 L. Ed. 868, 870 (1874) . Cf. Baxter v. Stevens, 54 Wash. App. 456, 773 P.2d 890 (1989) , review denied, 113 Wash. 2d 1029, 784 P.2d 530 (1989) ("sale" of promissory note with recourse guarantee was a loan).

(n82)Footnote 82. But see Cullen v. Bragg, 180 Ga. App. 866, 350 S.E.2d 798 (1986) (neither state usury law nor the TILA applied to refund assignment). For a discussion of Truth in Lending rules on tax refund anticipation loans, see National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending § 4.4.10.2 (6th ed. 2007).

(n83)Footnote 83. See Consent Order, 94 F.T.C. 425 (Sept. 12, 1979) , modified 51 Fed. Reg. 43,587 (Dec. 3, 1986) (Beneficial Finance precluded from using the terms "instant tax refund" or "immediate tax refund" except in immediate conjunction with the word "loan"). For a compilation of enforcement actions filed by state attorney generals based upon this mischaracterization, see JTH Tax, Inc. v. H&R Block E. Tax Servs., 128 F. Supp. 2d 926, 938 (E.D. Va. 2001) , aff'd in part, vacated in part, and remanded in part, 28 Fed. Appx. 207, 2002 U.S. App. LEXIS 477 (4th Cir. 2002) .

(n84)Footnote 84. See Chi Chi Wu, Jean Ann Fox & Elizabeth Renuart, Tax Preparers Peddle High Cost Tax Refund Loans: Millions Skimmed from the Working Poor and the U.S. Treasury, at 11-15, National Consumer Law Center and Consumer Federation of America (Jan. 31, 2002), available at www.consumerlaw.org.

(n85)Footnote 85. See National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending § 4.4.10.2 (6th ed. 2007).

(n86)Footnote 86. See Cades v. H & R Block, 43 F.3d 869 (4th Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1103, 115 S. Ct. 2247, 132 L. Ed. 2d 255 (1995) (H & R Block office itself did not constitute a "branch" office); see also Christiansen v. Beneficial Nat'l Bank, 972 F. Supp. 681 (S.D. Ga. 1997) (same relying upon Cades decision). See also OCC amendment to Interpretive Ruling (7.1012 addressing "messenger services"), 64 Fed. Reg. 60,092 (Nov. 4, 1999) .

(n87)Footnote 87. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-480(d) and (e). The Connecticut RAL cap was struck down as preempted by the National Bank Act. Pacific Capital Bank, N.A. v. Conn., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55627 (D. Conn. Aug. 10, 2006) . The case is currently on appeal to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals.

(n88)Footnote 88. 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 177/1 to 177/99.

(n89)Footnote 88.1. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 22251, 22253.1 (West).

(n90)Footnote 88.2. Minn. Stat. § 270.30; Nev. Rev. Stat. §§ 52.2 to 52.18; N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 53-245 to 53-254; Or. Rev. Stat. 673.605; Va. Code Ann. 6.1-474; Wash. Rev. Code §§ 19.265.010 to 19.265.900; Wis. Stat. §§ 421.301, 422.310.

(n91)Footnote 88.3. San Antonio City Code §§ 16-901 to 16-907; N.Y. City Admin. Code § 20-739; ACORN Press Release, Seattle Passes Anti-RAL Legislation, Sept. 24, 2004.

(n92)Footnote 89. See, e.g., Petersen v. H & R Block Tax Servs., 22 F. Supp. 2d 795 (N.D. Ill. 1998) ; Affatato v. Beneficial Corp., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12447 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 7, 1998) ; Green v. H & R Block, Inc., 355 Md. 488, 735 A.2d 1039 (1999) ; Basile v. H & R Block, Inc., 777 A.2d 95, 2001 Pa. Super. 136 (2001) , appeal denied, 806 A.2d 857 (Pa. 2000) subsequent proceedings at 2004 Pa. Dist. & Cnty. Dec. LEXIS 253 (Pa. Super. Ct. Mar. 1, 2006) (trial court's order to de-certifying the class reversed due to the defendant's failure to appeal the certification order in 1997) (reversing finding on fiduciary relationship); H & R Block v. Haese, 976 S.W.2d 237 (Tex. App. 1998) .

(n93)Footnote 90. Compare Peterson v. H & R Block Tax Servs., 971 F. Supp. 1204 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (motion to dismiss on breach of duty of good faith and fair dealing denied; granted as to breach of fiduciary duty, 174 F.R.D. 78 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (class certification granted on RICO and UDAP claim); Green v. H & R Block, Inc., 355 Md. 488, 735 A.2d 1039 (1999) (tax preparer found to be agent of consumer thus creating fiduciary duty to advise the consumer that it receives payments and other benefits from the lender for facilitating the making of the loan), with Beckett v. H & R Block, 306 Ill. App. 3d 381, 239 Ill. Dec. 736, 714 N.E.2d 1033 (1st Dist. 1999) , reh'g denied, (Aug. 3, 1999) (tax preparer not an agent; no duty to disclose secret profit to consumer); Basile v. H & R Block, Inc., 563 Pa. 359, 761 A.2d 1115 (2000) , appeal denied, 806 A.2d 857 (Pa. 2002) (reversed lower court decision denying summary judgment on breach of fiduciary duty).

(n94)Footnote 91. 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11535 (N.D. Ill. July 21, 2000) (objections to the settlement included allegations that it would only pay pennies on the dollar and that it was a product of collusion between Block, Beneficial, and some "friendly" plaintiffs' attorneys; these claims were rejected by the court).

(n95)Footnote 92. Reynolds v. Beneficial Nat'l Bank, 288 F.3d 277 (7th Cir. 2002) .

(n96)Footnote 93. Reynolds v. Beneficial Nat'l Bank, 260 F. Supp. 2d 680 (N.D. Ill. 2003) .

(n97)Footnote 94. Carnegie v. Household Int'l, Inc., 220 F.R.D. 542 (N.D. Ill. 2004) (in addition, court dismissed the breach of contract claim as to H & R Block, and withdrew class certification for several state claims on the basis that a fifty state legal analysis would be required to resolve them, presenting an intractable class manageability problem; court also reaffirmed a ruling by prior judge enforcing mandatory arbitration clauses against those RAL customers whose contracts included them), aff'd, 376 F.3d 656 (7th Cir. 2004) . In 2005, the district court refused to proceed to a fairness hearing regarding another weak settlement proposal and refused to enjoin lawsuits proceeding in other courts. Carnegie v. Household Int'l, Inc., 371 F. Supp. 2d 954 (N.D. Ill. 2005) ; see also Turner v. Beneficial Nat'l Bank, 405 F. Supp. 2d 929 (N.D. Ill. 2005) (court approved only a fraction of the fee sought by a named plaintiff in the large class case who decided to pursue her own individual case; court had previously determined that the attorney had not adequately represented the class).

(n98)Footnote 94.1. Public Law 109-364 (Passed by Congress:109th Congress (2nd Session)).

(n99)Footnote 95. See State of Colorado, Department of Law 1998 Post-Dated Check Cashers Supervised Lenders' Annual Report; Indiana Department of Financial Institutions, Summary of Payday Lender Examinations Conducted from 7/99 thru 10/99. See also Jean Ann Fox, The Growth of Legal Loan Sharking: A Report on the Payday Loan Industry, Consumer Federation of America (Nov. 1998). See also Thomas v. Money Mart Fin. Servs., Inc. (In re Thomas), 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 29334 (8th Cir. 2005) (court describes payday loans with APRs of almost 704%; holding is case is unrelated to size of APRs--presentment of checks for payment after the due date and after bankruptcy was filed but before actual discharge does not violate the automatic stay).

(n100)Footnote 96. See, e.g., Smith v. Short Term Loans, LLC, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1554 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 9, 2001) (one named plaintiff received 15 payday loans in a 9 month period, while the other plaintiff obtained 11 loans in an 8 month span); GoldX Fin. Servs., Inc. v. Bank of Am., 2001 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 2749 (Cal. Ct. App. Oct. 11, 2001) (payday lender involved in this suit against its bank claimed that the average number of transactions per customers at two of its locations was about 21). See also Indiana Department of Financial Institutions, Summary of Payday Lender Examinations Conducted from 7/99 thru 10/99.

(n101)Footnote 97. See Henry v. Cash Today, Inc., 199 F.R.D. 566 (S.D. Tex. 2000) (class certification granted in cash back ad sale case on TILA, RICO, usury, UDAP, and civil conspiracy claims); Cashback Catalog Sales, Inc. v. Price, 102 F. Supp. 2d 1375 (S.D. Ga. 2000) (catalog sale sham).

(n102)Footnote 98. A notable and increasingly problematic exception applies to national and state banks and similar entities, discussed in § 6.02 supra.

(n103)Footnote 99. These states are: Arkansas; Connecticut; Georgia; Maine; Maryland; Massachusetts; New Jersey; New York; North Carolina (payday loan law expired on Aug. 31, 2001); Pennsylvania; Vermont; Virgin Islands; West Virginia.

The Attorneys General in Florida, Indiana, Maryland, and New York have issued opinions letters finding that payday loans do, indeed, violate the laws of those states. The New York Banking Department has issued a letter warning against payday lending in excess of that state's usury cap.

(n104)Footnote 100. This state is Wisconsin.

(n105)Footnote 101. These states are: Alabama, Arizona, Alaska, California, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and Wyoming. In 2000, the Texas Finance Commission adopted regulations to permit small loan lenders to hold a check; other provisions of the small loan act apply, though the allowable rates are higher than for other small loans. Regulations in Illinois and Oregon have both survived initial challenges by the payday loan industry. See 51 Dev. Corp. v. Vega, 781 N.E.2d 528 (Ill. App. Ct. 2002) (legislation contained a permissible delegation of authority to the state agency; subsequent regulations were not void or issued in violation of state administrative procedures act); Northwest Title Loans v. Div. of Fin., 42 P.3d 313 (Or. Ct. App. 2002) . Delaware, which does not have a usury cap, passed a payday loan law in 2002 that provides very limited protections for payday loan borrowers. South Dakota, another state without a usury cap, passed a similarly limited payday loan law in 2002.

(n106)Footnote 102. These states are: Delaware, Maine, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia.

(n107)Footnote 103. See Cashback Catalog Sales, Inc. v. Price, 102 F. Supp. 2d 1375 (S.D. Ga. 2000) ; Turner v. E-Z Check Cashing, Inc., 35 F. Supp. 2d 1042 (M.D. Tenn. 1999) ; Hamilton v. York, 987 F. Supp. 953 (E.D. Ky. 1997) ; White v. Check Holders, Inc., 996 S.W.2d 496 (Ky. 1999) .

(n108)Footnote 104. See Arrington v. Colleen, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20651 (D. Md. Aug. 7, 2000) (order and memorandum denying lender's motion for summary judgment); Turner v. E-Z Check Cashing, Inc., 35 F. Supp. 2d 1042 (M.D. Tenn. 1999) ; Hamilton v. York, 987 F. Supp. 953 (E.D. Ky. 1997) . The Federal Reserve Board, which promulgates regulations and interpretations under the Truth in Lending Act, amended the definition of credit in the Official Staff Commentary to include payday loans. 65 Fed. Reg. 17,129 (Mar. 31, 2000) .

(n109)Footnote 105. Cashback Catalog Sales, Inc., 102 F. Supp. 2d 1375 (S.D. Ga. 2000) ; Arrington v. Colleen, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20651 (D. Md. Aug. 7, 2000) (order and memorandum denying lender's motion for summary judgment); Hamilton v. York, 987 F. Supp. 953 (E.D. Ky. 1997) . See also Henry v. Cash Today, Inc., 199 F.R.D. 566 (S.D. Tex. 2000) (class certification granted in cash back ad sale case). But see Bellizan v. Easy Money of La., Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18570 (E.D. La. Nov. 9, 2001) (RICO claims dismissed without prejudice).

(n110)Footnote 106. For a discussion of the elements of a RICO claim in the credit transaction context, see § 6.08[7] infra.

(n111)Footnote 107. Jones v. Kunin, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6380 (S.D. Ill. May 1, 2000) (no intent by consumer to defraud when the parties agreed at the time a check is written that there are not sufficient funds to cover it); Hartke v. Illinois Payday Loans, Inc., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14937 (C.D. Ill. Sept. 13, 1999) (in the course of denying the defendants' motion to dismiss, court observes that the Illinois bad check statute does not apply to agreements to hold post-dated checks because the payee knows the check is no good when written).

(n112)Footnote 108. See, e.g., Boyce v. Attorney's Dispatch Serv., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12970 (S.D. Ohio Apr. 27, 1999) (court found "egregious conduct" on the part of a collector of a payday loan which violated the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act; the collector identified himself as a police officer and threatened criminal prosecution); King v. Cashland, Inc., 2000 Ohio App. LEXIS 3943 (Ohio Ct. App. Sept. 1, 2000) (court reversed grant of summary judgment on an invasion of privacy claim based upon payday lender's attempts to collect the debt). See Smith v. Short Term Loans, LLC, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1554 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 14, 2001) (the lender's employee, an attorney, may be liable under the federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act for the content of collection letters sent to the consumer while wearing his attorney hat). See also National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection § 4.2.3 (4th ed. 2000 and Supp.).

(n113)Footnote 109. For a detailed discussion of state credit repair laws, see National Consumer Law Center, Unfair Acts and Practices § 6.15 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n114)Footnote 110. The federal act is discussed in National Consumer Law Center, Unfair Acts and Practices § 6.15 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n115)Footnote 111. Checking the TILA math to determine if the APR, finance charge, amount financed, total of payments, and payment schedule can prove fruitful. See Gilkey v. Central Clearing Co., 202 F.R.D. 515 (E.D. Mich. 2001) (class certified on TILA claims that the finance charge and annual percentage rate did not include the check cashing fee and that additional information detracted from the finance charge disclosure); Smith v. Check-N-Go, Inc., 200 F.3d 511 (7th Cir. 1999) (reinstated a TILA claim based upon the creditor's practice of stapling a receipt over part of the TILA disclosure).

(n116)Footnote 112. For other Truth in Lending claims raised in the payday loan context, see National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending §§ 4.9.4 (6th ed. 2007 and supp.).

(n117)Footnote 113. This and other defenses to arbitration clauses are discussed in § 6.06[6][f] infra. See also Gilkey v. Central Clearing Co., 202 F.R.D. 515 (E.D. Mich. 2001) (class certified on TILA claims that the finance charge and annual percentage rate did not include the check cashing fee and that additional information detracted from the finance charge disclosure); Brown v. Payday Check Advance, Inc., 202 F.3d 987 (7th Cir.) , cert. denied, 531 U.S. 820, 121 S. Ct. 61, 148 L. Ed. 2d 27 (2000) (including itemization of the amount financed in the federal box violates the segregation requirement but statutory damages not available for this violation). For a critique of the holding relating to statutory damages, see National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending § 8.6.5 (2000 Supp.).

(n118)Footnote 113.1. See, e.g., N.C. Gen. Stat. § 53-190(a); In re United Consumer Fin. Servs., Inc., Case No. 06-CM-725 (Kan. State Bank Commissioner Aug. 22, 2006) (consent and settlement agreement), available at www.consumerlaw.org/unreported; Press Release, Massachusetts Office of Consumer Affairs and Business Regulation (Apr. 19, 2007) (consumer alert indicating that no payday lenders are licensed in the state and therefore, none should be doing business with Massachusetts residents by whatever means), available at www.mass.gov/?pageID=pressreleases&agId=Eoca&prModName=ocapressrelease&prFile=07_04_19_paydayalert.xml. Cf. Rascon v. Checkcare Enters., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56433 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 1, 2006) (California court may have personal jurisdiction over a Kentucky payday lender though its activities with its collection agency located in California; lender's motion to dismiss denied). At least one Internet payday lender filed a preemptive strike seeking a declaration that it need not comply with state law. Quik Payday, Inc. v. Stork, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69436 (D. Kan. Sept. 26, 2006) (court found this Internet payday lender has standing to file a § 1983 claim against the bank commissioner alleging a violation of due process for attempting to apply Kansas law against it; lender need not exhaust administrative remedies).

(n119)Footnote 113.2. Pub. L. No. 109-364, § 670, 120 Stat. 2266 (2006). Section 670 is codified as 10 U.S.C. § 987. They have been posted on the National Consumer Law Center's website (wwww.consumerlaw.org) under "Action

Agenda" and "Military Personnel."

(n120)Footnote 113.3. 72 Fed. Reg. 50,585 (Aug. 31, 2007) .

(n121)Footnote 113.4. 32 C.F.R. § 232.3(b)(1)(i).

(n122)Footnote 113.5. 10 U.S.C. § 987(d).

(n123)Footnote 113.6. Arkansas Att'y Gen. Op. No. 2007-264 (Dec. 19, 2007), available at http://ag.arkansas.gov/opinions/docs/2007-264.pdf.

(n124)Footnote 114. See, e.g., Favors v. Stewart, Clearinghouse No. 54,590 (Ga. Sup. Ct. July 9, 2002) (complaint).

(n125)Footnote 115. See, e.g., Sparks v. Stone Street Capital, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13744 (N.D. Tex. July 15, 2002) (class action on behalf of consumers who transferred their interests in structured settlement payments in exchange for money; motion to compel arbitration granted); Rancman v. Interim Settlement Funding Corp., 2001 Ohio 1669 (App. Ct.) (payment collateralized by possible settlement in personal injury litigation), appeal pending.

(n126)Footnote 116. See, e.g., Singer Asset Fin. v. Duboff Family Invs. (In re Duboff), 290 B.R. 652 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2003) (assignment of Illinois lottery prize payments violated Illinois lottery law and thus was void).

(n127)Footnote 117. See, e.g., Rancman v. Interim Settlement Funding Corp., 2001 Ohio 1669 (App. Ct.) , aff'd on other grounds, 789 N.E.2d 217 (Ohio 2003) .

(n128)Footnote 118. See, e.g., Sparks v. Stone Street Capital, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13744 (N.D. Tex. July 15, 2002) (motion to compel arbitration granted); Rancman v. Interim Settlement Funding Corp., 2001 Ohio 1669 (App. Ct.) (lender characterized payment collateralized by possible settlement a "contingent cash advance" and not a loan; court disagreed), appeal pending.

(n129)Footnote 119. But see Rancman v. Interim Settlement Funding Corp., 2001 Ohio 1669 (App. Ct.) (payment collateralized by possible settlement in automobile personal injury litigation was loan when there was no real probability that non-payment would occur), appeal pending.

(n130)Footnote 120. See, e.g., In re Wiggins, 273 B.R. 839 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2001) (income buyer violated Idaho UDAP statute in convincing young accident victim suffering from brain injuries to sell his rights to a structured annuity).

(n131)Footnote 121. With respect to lottery payments, some states may prohibit their assignment by statute or regulation. See, e.g., Singer Asset Fin. v. Duboff Family Invs. (In re Duboff), 290 B.R. 652 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2003) . With respect to a tort claim that has already been settled, many of those settlements result in annuities being paid to the plaintiff that often contain an anti-assignment clause. See, e.g., Liberty Life Assurance Co. v. Stone Street Capital, 93 F. Supp. 2d 630 (D. Md. 2000) (anti-assignment clause of structured settlement was enforceable by insurer that paid annuity); Grieve v. General Am. Life Ins., 58 F. Supp. 2d 319 (D. Vt. 1999) (same). There may be an issue of whether these anti-assignment clauses are prohibited by Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code. See National Consumer Law Center, Cost of Credit § 7.5.8 (4th ed. 2009); and National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 2.2.8 (6th ed. 2005 and supp.).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 6 The Cost of Credit

1-6 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 6.06

§ 6.06 Credit Insurance

[1] Introduction

One of the most remunerative methods for imposing extra costs on a credit transaction is the sale of credit insurance. This chapter will seek to identify some of the potential overcharge claims which may arise in regard to credit insurance, and to identify other theories which also may be used to challenge various common credit insurance practices.

[2] Types of Credit Insurance

[a] Credit Life

Credit life pays off an outstanding obligation in the event of the borrower's death. There are two types of credit life.

[i] Decreasing or Declining Term Credit Life Insurance

This is the most commonly sold type of credit life. "Decreasing term" means that the amount of coverage decreases as the balance on the loan declines because of the installment payments.

[ii] Level Term Credit Life Insurance

In this type of policy, the amount of coverage or benefits payable does not decrease despite the fact that the installment payments reduce the account balance. The benefits payable remain level over the entire term of the policy.

Because the coverage does not decline with the loan balance, level life overinsures the loan even more than gross coverage decreasing insurance; it provides excessive coverage for which the borrower pays. It is more expensive than declining term; premium rates may be over 50% higher. For these reasons, it is illegal to write level term credit life on amortized loans in most states. If it is sold impermissibly, an overcharge claim may be raised. n1

[b] Credit Disability/Accident and Health

The purpose of credit disability insurance is to insure that payments on a loan or credit sale will still be made should sickness or accident cause a significant unanticipated interruption in income. Credit disability is indemnity coverage, which makes the monthly payments while the insured borrower is unable to work due to a disability covered under the policy--a "covered loss."

Two critical terms determine what type of credit disability insurance is offered: "waiting period" and "elimination period." The waiting period is the number of continuous days a person is required to be "disabled" by sickness or accident before the disability comes within the coverage provisions of the policy. The elimination period is the initial number of days in the period of disability for which there are no benefits payable by the policy. Another restriction in some policies is a shifting definition of "total disability," whereby for the first year benefits are available when the insured cannot perform duties of the insured's current occupation, and thereafter benefits only continue if the insured cannot perform duties of any occupation. n1.1

Other restrictions may apply and insurance policies and information provided the consumer should be carefully reviewed. For example, one bank offered a "credit protection plan" (a package of credit insurances) sold in conjunction with credit card accounts. Restrictions related to the hospitalization, sickness, or disability coverage included: the consumer could only collect for the number of months that the consumer paid in; claims could be denied for pre-existing conditions unless the consumer had paid six months of premiums, if the consumer's account was not current or over-limit, if the consumer paid more than the minimum payment to any credit card account other than the bank's, and if the consumer accessed credit from any credit card other than the bank's. n2

[c] Involuntary Unemployment Insurance

This protection is aimed primarily at loss of income caused by lay-offs, though some policies will also make monthly payments on a credit account if, in certain circumstances, the borrower goes out on strike or is fired. Unemployment insurance may be sold separately, or in combination with credit disability coverage.

The benefits of this type of insurance are usually limited, for example, providing protection only for short-term unemployment, paying a limited number of payments, or paying only the minimum monthly payment. n3

In addition, recent products sold in conjunction with credit card accounts may limit coverage to the number of months that the consumer paid in or if the consumer is self-employed and may deny claims if the consumer's account was not current or over-limit, if the consumer paid more than the minimum payment to any credit card account other than the bank's, and if the consumer accessed credit from any credit card other than the bank's. n4 Others may fail to pay the minimum monthly payment due on the credit card. n5

[d] Credit Property

Credit property insurance insures the borrower's property, rather than health or life. The coverage is designed to protect the creditor against loss to the collateral taken as security on the insured loan. However, it is not unknown for credit property insurance to be written on property unrelated to the loan, or for coverage to be written in amounts greater than the loan despite the fact that this practice may be illegal in many states. n6 Credit property insurance is less thoroughly regulated than credit life and A&H, and generally is not rate regulated at all.

[e] Vendor's Single Interest Insurance

Vendor's Single Interest Insurance ("VSI") protects only the creditor's interest in the property. Generally it pays the lesser of the actual loss on the property or the outstanding balance on the loan.

VSI appears on many automobile retail installment contracts as an additional charge of $15 to $50. Sometimes the car dealer, i.e., the vendor, has no relationship with the insurance company. Instead, the assignee purchasing the loan from the dealer has a group policy with an insurance company for the purchase of a policy. The charge for that policy is passed through the dealer to the consumer.

Arguably, the charge is not for "vendor's" insurance because the vendor, i.e., the dealer, did not actually sell any insurance to the consumer. The "VSI" charge, in this instance, may simply be a charge by a third party to accept assignment of the contract. In addition, the consumer may have had no real "choice" about the charge because the business practice between the dealer and the assignee is that every retail installment contract must contain the charge in order to be assigned.

[f] Dual Interest

Dual interest protects the value of the insured property including the borrower's equity, and is not limited by the outstanding balance on the loan.

[g] Motor Vehicle Credit Insurance

As with other types of credit property, credit property insurance on cars can be either VSI or dual interest. It is very difficult for a consumer to accurately compare the cost of credit property insurance on a motor vehicle with ordinary auto insurance. However, the much-less-comprehensive coverage of credit property insurance usually does not result in much cheaper premiums. n7

Auto loans have also been a prime source of problems with force-placed insurance, or collateral protection insurance ("CPI"). n8 Creditors have a legitimate interest in requiring that their collateral is insured against collision, theft and fire. Most auto loan contracts provide that the creditor has the right to purchase property insurance and add the cost to the debt if borrowers let their coverage lapse or otherwise fail to provide it. While this might sound perfectly convenient and unobjectionable for the borrower, the force-placed insurance is generally VSI, leaving the borrower's equity unprotected. More to the point, it is very expensive. The same forces driving other credit insurance abuses drive this, too: the coverage is purchased from affiliated companies; large commissions; and rebates are given to the creditors.

Some of the additional expense of force-placed insurance derives from purchasing default protection for the lender, in addition to insuring the collateral. The premium price for this add-on coverage has been held to constitute interest. n9 A wide range of other abuses have made force-placed insurance the subject of litigation resulting in $300 million settlements. n10

[3] Debt Cancellation and Debt Suspension Agreements

Credit insurance may soon be replaced by debt cancellation or debt suspension agreements in the consumer loan context. One reason for this anticipated shift is that many states do not regulate these products, having decided that they are "banking products" and thus do not constitute "insurance." n11 In the public arena, single-premium credit insurance has fallen out of favor in the mortgage-lending context.

For the consumer, a debt cancellation or suspension agreement functions much like traditional credit insurance. For a fee (akin to a premium), the lender agrees to cancel payment on the consumer's loan in the event of death, serious illness or injury, unemployment, or loss of collateral securing the loan or suspend payments for some of these same events as well as when divorce, family leave from work, military relocation, and even incarceration of a spouse occur. While credit insurance usually involves a third-party insurer, debt cancellation or suspension agreements are between the consumer and the lender.

Although similar in structure, debt cancellation and suspension agreements generally offer far fewer benefits than credit insurance due to differences in covered or triggering events and the types of benefits provided. For example, unlike credit insurance, death benefits under most debt protection products generally apply only in case of accidental death. As a result, only about ten percent of the eligible claims under a credit life insurance policy would result in a payment of benefits under a debt cancellation agreement. Moreover, a debt suspension agreement provides even more limited benefits than those provided by a debt cancellation agreement; instead of canceling payment of interest and principal, it simply waives the monthly finance charge for the covered months. Most credit card credit insurance programs have been replaced by these limited debt suspension agreement programs. n12

Guaranteed Auto Protection ("GAP") agreements are among the most common forms of debt cancellation agreements currently on the market. Under a GAP plan, when a consumer finances the purchase of a car, the creditor agrees to hold the consumer harmless for the difference between the balance on the debt and the amount paid under an automobile physical damage insurance policy in the event that the vehicle is totaled or stolen. n13 Truth in Lending treats debt cancellation contracts, including GAP, the same as credit insurance for purposes of disclosure requirements and finance charge treatment. n14

New regulations issued by the OCC n15 have opened the floodgates for the sale of debt cancellation and suspension agreements (collectively, "DCAs") as banking products rather than insurance. While most of the OCC regulations concerning DCAs became effective on June 16, 2003, implementation of certain key provisions has been indefinitely delayed due to industry concerns. The OCC announced that it is delaying the date for mandatory compliance with regulations requiring creditors to offer a periodic payment option in cases of broker sales ("unaffiliated, non-exclusive agents of a national bank that offer that bank's DCC or DSA in connection with closed-end consumer credit"). n16 Related disclosure requirements have also been suspended. They apply only to national banks. Under Gramm-Leach-Bliley, n17 the regulations preempt state regulation of national banks with regard to DCAs. n18

The OCC's newly adopted regulations codify its long-held view that DCAs are not insurance n19 and provide only minimal substantive consumer protections. The OCC primarily relies on disclosure of the terms of the agreement to protect consumers. n20 Because of Gramm-Leach-Bliley preemption, state provisions that limit fees, require refunds of lump-sum premiums in the event of prepayment, and otherwise treat DCAs as insurance no longer apply to national banks.

[4] Types of Regulation

[a] Sources of Regulation

Most states specifically designate in their insurance codes chapters devoted to credit insurance. The majority of these are based on the Model Credit Life, Accident and Health Insurance Act, developed by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners ("NAIC") in 1960. n21 In 2001, the NAIC finally adopted a credit personal property insurance model act. n22 If enacted by the states, this act will curb some of the abuses in this market, most especially excessive cost of this type of insurance. Another source of insurance legislation dealing with credit insurance, in addition to the state's special chapter on credit insurance, is the state's general group insurance laws. n23

For purposes of examining a debt for insurance-related overcharges, the most important state insurance law provisions regulating credit insurance are those dealing with rate structure and any restrictions on coverage, such as insured amount or term of the insurance. Premium rates are set by statute or regulation, or approved in accordance with formulae set by insurance regulations.

In addition, special usury laws, such as small loan acts, consumer loan acts, industrial loan acts, second mortgage laws or general credit statutes, including retail installment sales acts, may contain important limitations on the sale of credit insurance.

Most importantly for usury purposes, special usury statutes usually establish limitations on the premium cost, often by providing that insurance must be written in compliance with the credit insurance code, n24 or by otherwise referring to the insurance department rate limitations. n25 These statutes often specify, implicitly or explicitly, the conditions which must be met in order for the insurance premiums to be excluded from the finance charge, such as that the insurance must be voluntary, n26 or that the charges must be imposed in compliance with specified statutory provisions. n27 Special usury statutes also may impose disclosure requirements in addition to those of the Truth in Lending Act. n28

UDAP laws should also be considered as a source for establishing the consumer's rights and remedies in these cases. However, care must be taken to assure that the state UDAP statute does not exclude credit or insurance transactions from coverage. n29

In addition to general UDAP statutes, every state has adopted some version of an "unfair insurance trade practices act" ("UNIP"), n30 again based on an NAIC Model UNIP Act. Though UDAP and UNIP statutes will generally be of little value in dealing with usury issues raised by credit insurance, it is important to be aware of them, as they may squarely address some of the marketing abuses often involved in credit insurance sales.

There are also federal causes of action that should be considered in credit insurance cases. Truth in Lending is one such statute. However, it is a disclosure statute which does not substantively regulate the cost or terms of credit insurance. The most important TIL provisions relating to credit insurance set forth the conditions under which the lender may exclude the premium cost from the calculation of the finance charge for TIL disclosure purposes. n31 Where a creditor retains a portion of the credit insurance premium, TIL requires the creditor to disclose that it is receiving such a payment. n32

Additionally, for loans entered into on or after October 1, 2002, single premium credit insurance and debt cancellation coverage are included in the "points and fees" calculation when determining whether the Homeownership and Equity Protection Act (HOEPA) applies. n33 As a result, high-cost loans with substantial single premium credit insurance or debt cancellation coverage are more likely to be covered by HOEPA and therefore subject to additional restrictions, prohibitions and disclosure requirements.

The insurance-related activities of banks and bank holding companies are subject to the requirements of the Bank Holding Company Act and Regulation Y. n34 The Act prohibits tying credit to the purchase of credit insurance from the bank, holding company, or an affiliate. n35 It also limits the right of regulated banks and bank holding companies to underwrite insurance to those circumstances where the underwriter's performance could "reasonably be expected to produce benefits to the public." n36

In 2000, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Office of Thrift Supervision issued joint regulations under this provision of the Act. n37 The effective date was October 1, 2001. n38 The regulations cover prohibited practices, disclosures, restrictions on where insurance activities may take place, and insurance sales personnel licensing requirements and qualifications.

The regulations prohibit any covered person from leading a consumer to believe that an extension of credit is conditional upon either: (1) the purchase of an insurance product or an annuity from the bank or any of its affiliates or (2) an agreement by the consumer not to obtain, or a prohibition on the consumer from obtaining, any insurance product or annuity from an unaffiliated entity. In addition, disclosures regarding insurance products are required. n39

Following publication of the regulations, these agencies issued responses to questions from the American Bankers Insurance Association and the American Bankers Association. These topics covered include: under what circumstance private mortgage insurance and renewals of insurance are covered by the regulations and timing of disclosures when solicitation of the customer to purchase insurance does not occur until after the loan application has been approved. This document is available at www.occ.treas.gov/abaqa8-13.doc.

Finally, insurance premium financing statutes commonly apply to automobile insurance premiums where the insured cannot afford to pay the entire amount in a single installment. However, these statutes may also apply, in some instances, to a lender's sale of extraneous insurance such as are often sold in insurance-packing schemes. Some of these statutes do not apply to traditional lenders, however. n40

In 2000, the Office of Comptroller of the Currency published for comment three requests that the OCC determine that certain state insurance laws are preempted by Gramm-Leach Bliley. n41 The OCC has acted upon only two of these requests, the ones addressing West Virginia and Massachusetts law. The agency opined that some provisions of West Virginia insurance law are preempted and some are not. n42 On the other hand, the OCC found that all of the sections of Massachusetts law at issue are preempted. n43

[b] Substance of Credit Insurance Regulations

[i] Rates

Most states have a prescribed mechanism for establishing authorized rates for credit life and disability insurance. Few states have any rate regulation for credit property or involuntary unemployment insurance. Consequently, this discussion relates primarily to credit life and disability rates.

With respect to credit life, a few states have established maximum rates by statute or regulation. These are generally cast as x cents per $100 of the initial indebtedness per year, e.g., 60cent(s)/$100/yr. n44 The more common approach for both credit life and disability, however, is not an inflexible statutory maximum ceiling, but the more fluid concept of prima facie rates. The generally used method of determining what premium rate would be "reasonable in relation to the benefits" is to adopt a "benchmark loss-ratio," and then to attempt to establish rates expected to produce that benchmark loss-ratio.

One problem with prima facie rates is that they result from a guess as to what will achieve the benchmark loss-ratio, though past experience is supposed to guide the process. The guessing historically has been on the high side.

As the term indicates, the prima facie rate is a presumptive standard of reasonable benefits. An insurer may request that the insurance department grant an "upward deviation," which then allows it to charge a higher premium. Theoretically, the insurer must present actuarial evidence to the department to establish that the prima facie rate is insufficient. Only a few states have mandatory downward deviations if the rates charged do not meet the benchmark loss-ratio. n45

However, in some circumstances, it may be possible to challenge prima facie rates. A state commissioner who has authorized prima facie rates which result in loss-ratios lower than the state's target benchmark loss-ratio may be vulnerable to a mandamus challenge from consumers. This rarely has been done, though consumers were ultimately successful in Ohio and Illinois when this approach was tried. n46

[ii] Non-Rate Regulation

In addition to rates, there are a number of other aspects of the credit insurance transaction which may be governed by insurance, credit, or UNIP statutes. For credit life and disability, the term of coverage may be limited; n47 the NAIC Model Code excludes long-term credit transactions from its coverage. Initial coverage usually is limited to the initial indebtedness, n48 interpreted to mean the total of payments. n49 Many states require that credit life be written on a declining term basis, to reflect the fact that the balance declines as payments are made. n50

The Model Act prohibits charging for a policy the term of which extends more than 15 days beyond the scheduled maturity date of the transaction. n51 If a credit transaction is refinanced, the old insurance must be canceled and required rebates made before writing new insurance, thus prohibiting the practice of "pyramiding" insurance. n52

In 2001, the NAIC adopted a credit personal property insurance model act. n53 States have not yet adopted this model act. The Act's key non-rate provisions include a prohibition against using gross debt in calculating the premium. n54 Insurance premium rebates must be made by the pro rata method. n55 For closed-end loans, the credit insurance cannot exceed the amount of the underlying debt, unless otherwise required by state law, nor can the insurer sell insurance with a term that exceeds the scheduled term of the underlying credit transaction. n56

The credit insurance cannot be sold unless the loan amount exceeds a minimum amount to be set by each adoptive state. n57 The insurance cannot be bundled with other types of insurance and it must be optional and not a condition of obtaining credit approval. n58 Consumers must receive a pre-purchase clear and conspicuous disclosure describing certain rights. n59 The insurer must provide consumers with certificates of insurance that shall contain certain information. n60

In addition, no claim may be denied because the consumer was ineligible for coverage later than ninety days after the initiation of coverage unless the consumer misrepresented a material fact. If a claim is denied because the consumer misrepresented a material fact or was ineligible for coverage within ninety days of the initiation of coverage, the insurer must refund all of the premium paid and the creditor must refund any finance charge paid on the premium. n61

Finally, statutes governing consumer credit and unfair trade practices statutes may further regulate credit insurance coverage, marketing, and disclosure practices. Such statutes may require that credit property insurance be written only on collateral, n62 and that coverage be limited to either the loan amount or the value of the property. n63 Further, there may be a limitation on writing property insurance in connection with loans below a specified amount. n64

[5] Common Abuses and Possible Remedies

[a] Voluntariness

One of the first steps in examining a transaction involving credit insurance is to determine whether the insurance purchase was voluntary. The existence of a signed "voluntary" insurance authorization as required by the TILA does not end the inquiry. Relevant statutes and rules in many states specifically address the voluntariness issue. The UCCC, for example, specifically prohibits compulsory credit life or disability insurance. It incorporates the TIL requirement that the borrower be informed that such purchase is not a factor in obtaining the credit, as well as TIL's cost disclosure and signature requirements. n65

Most states permit creditors to require property insurance on collateral as long as the borrower has a choice of providers. n66 However, it rarely happens that creditors openly admit that they require insurance, and the mere fact that a borrower did not read the insurance authorization form indicating the purchase is voluntary before signing it is unlikely to warrant a finding that the insurance was compulsory. n67 Because credibility likely will be an issue in such cases, it is important to have buttressing evidence. Parol evidence may be admissible to show usury, n68 at least where there are allegations of fraud, illiteracy, or duress. n69 Clients must be questioned to ascertain whether they knew they purchased credit insurance, whether they were orally informed that the insurance was required, or whether the creditor implied that the insurance was necessary. The allegations in a recent case are instructive. n70

A good source for suggestions as to the type of corroborative evidence which may be probative is found in In re USLIFE and other Federal Trade Commission enforcement cases. n71

There may also be non-usury claims of coercion under various federal and state states. State UDAP statutes are one important source. n72 However, either insurance or credit transactions may be specifically excluded from some state UDAP acts. Beyond the conventional notions of coercion and voluntariness, there is also an argument that credit insurance is not voluntary when the insurance is valueless. This argument might apply when the consumer cannot recover any benefits because of ineligibility.

Another possible set of claims to consider are based on antitrust law. A sophisticated analysis is beyond the scope of this volume and, therefore, only a general overview is presented below.

The possibility of an antitrust claim arises when there is explicit or implied n73 coercion in the sale of credit insurance. Tie-in arrangements, in which the sale of one product is tied to the sale of a second product, are generally condemned under the antitrust laws. n74

One of the historic obstacles to using antitrust as a vehicle to challenge credit insurance sales practices has been the McCarran-Ferguson Act, n75 which many mistakenly assume to provide a blanket exclusion from antitrust laws where insurance is at issue. Generally speaking, the Act leaves the "business of insurance" to state regulation and mandates that state law overrides conflicting federal law unless the federal law specifically relates to the business of insurance. n76 McCarran-Ferguson, however, does not provide an insurmountable obstacle to antitrust challenges to insurance practices. The Fifth Circuit has held that Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") investigations of coercive credit insurance sales practices by creditors are not barred by McCarran-Ferguson, because such conduct is not "the business of insurance." n77 In addition, some states have their own versions of anti-trust laws, which may be applicable to insurance tie-ins. McCarran-Ferguson would not be a threshold issue if state antitrust law formed the basis of the claim. n78

In sum, an antitrust challenge to a credit insurance practice should be viable based upon one of the following arguments: (1) the specific practice is not the business of insurance because it arises from a credit relationship, not an insurer-insured relationship; (2) even if the practice falls within the business of insurance, the state's laws do not specifically regulate the practice; or (3) even if the practice is part of the business of insurance, and is specifically regulated by the state, the antitrust claim would not invalidate, impair or supercede the state's regulating law.

[b] Excessive Cost of Credit Insurance

There are at least three ways in which a creditor can overcharge for credit insurance discussed below. The first one is to charge a premium rate higher than that permitted by law or regulation. Generally, this practice is usury.

In most circumstances, the statutory foundation for such a claim is found in the usury law applicable to the credit transaction in question rather than in the credit insurance code. The NAIC Model Act provides that insurers shall not issue a policy "for which the premium rate exceeds that determined by the schedules of such insurer as then on file with the Commissioner," n79 and that the amount then charged to a debtor "shall not exceed the premiums charged by the insurer." n80 However, in most states, the credit insurance code regulates the insurers, not the creditors, and there is usually no direct private remedy granted to insured debtors under the credit insurance codes. n81

In addition, small loan, industrial loan, or consumer loan acts may specifically authorize the imposition of credit insurance premiums only under specified conditions. n82

A second method in which a creditor can overcharge for credit insurance is if the insurance coverage exceeds that permitted by law. As discussed above, writing level life on an installment loan provides excessive coverage because it always insures the full amount of the original loan, and does not reflect the fact that the loan balance declines. Since it does provide this excessive coverage, it is much more expensive than declining term life. n83 Consequently, most states prohibit the writing of level term credit life insurance.

With respect to other types of excess coverage, courts have long recognized that usury may exist when lenders charge borrowers for coverage in an amount "greater than the amount of the loan with a purpose of increasing the proportion of charges to the amount of money lent." n84 Most regulations similarly restrict credit life and disability coverage to the amount and term of the indebtedness. This limitation is found in both the credit insurance codes n85 and often in the special credit regulatory laws. n86

Credit property insurance has been the source of particular abuse regarding excess coverage because it is rarely regulated. In 2001, the NAIC finally adopted a credit personal property insurance model act. n87 If enacted by the states, this act will curb some of the abuses in this market, most especially the excessive cost of this type of insurance. n88 Currently, most credit insurance codes do not address this type of insurance at all.

A number of states' credit statutes, however, place some limitations on the sale of credit property insurance, n89 specifying, for example, that property insurance can only be written on collateral. The UCCC provides that property insurance can be written on property "related to the credit transaction." n90 Thus, property insurance written on non-collateral property should be an excessive charge where a statute limits the specified authorized charges to an inclusive list. n91 The possibility of insurance premiums paying for extra unauthorized types of coverage has arisen in the context of "force-placed" insurance. In automobile-secured loans, for example, borrowers are typically required to furnish proof of insurance (in favor of the creditor) and to maintain it throughout the loan. If the borrower does not, the creditor usually is authorized by the contract to purchase insurance and add the charge to the borrower's balance. A number of cases have been filed in which borrowers allege that the creditor has force-placed insurance with extraneous endorsements. Such extra types of coverage may not be authorized by either statute or contract, are unnecessary to protect the collateral, and the premiums attributable to them would be considered interest. n92

Finally, excess coverage may also be argued in situations where the coverage buys illusory benefits. This may occur, for example, in connection with open-end accounts, where the account balance reflects non-durable purchases, such as lunches at the department store restaurant, tune-ups at the auto-center, or cosmetics. Phantom coverage may also occur where the property insured is worth less than the total of payments.

[c] Insurance Packing

Insurance packing refers to increasing a consumer's debt by padding or "packing" the amount financed through the sale of expensive, unnecessary and often unwanted products, primarily insurance. It should also be noted that insurance packing often goes hand-in-hand with flipping abuses (frequent refinancing) as insurance is one of the elements of the refinancing price escalator. n93 The tradition of pushing credit insurance coverage continues to be alive and well to this day. n93.1

There are many forms of insurance packing, some of which are discussed below.

Insurance packing may occur when unnecessary collateral is taken as security in order to write profitable property insurance. The FTC, FRB, and OTS Credit Practices Rules n94 restrict the right of creditors to take a non-purchase money security interest in household goods. One exception to the Rule is for purchase-money security interests, which are permitted. A second exception arises in the definition of household goods provided in the FTC and related rules. Some items which either tend to have greater value, or are less necessary for daily living, are excluded from the Rule's scope. n95

Another practice was alleged in cases against ITT Financial. A number of suits alleged that ITT Financial or its subsidiaries, usually unbeknownst to its customers, "packed" or loaded various types of expensive optional insurance onto consumer loans along with traditional credit insurance. n96

A third abuse is the sale of credit insurance to borrowers who are ineligible for the insurance coverage under the terms of the policies that they buy. Such sales may be viewed as a pretext for usury because the insurance provides no benefit to borrowers. The sole benefit is to the creditor and insurer and, thus, should be argued to be a pretext for usury, or even fraud. n97

Other appropriate claims involving the sale of insurance with no benefit to the insured includes the straight contract defense of failure of consideration, UDAP, and unconscionability. In its laundry list of factors which are relevant to determining unconscionability, the UCCC lists a sale of services where the seller knows the consumer could not receive substantial benefits from the services sold. n98 Such a sale also should be a breach of fiduciary duty n99 or a breach of the common law duty of disclosure. n100

There are some theories of recovery for these consumers if the feared casualty actually occurs but they were ineligible for the insurance. Since credit insurance is sold only through creditors, never directly by the insurer, the insurer's liability in these circumstances may depend upon whether the creditor/seller is viewed as the insurer's agent, or the borrower's agent, about which there is a divergence of judicial opinion. If the creditor acts as the insurer's agent, its knowledge of disqualifying factors, or misrepresentations, may be attributed to its principal, the insurer. The creditor's potential liability should always be assessed, too, particularly as it can be independent of the insurer's liability. n101

Contract, tort and some statutory claims may be appropriate. In some circumstances, UDAP statutes n102 or even RICO may be used. n103 Some states also have incontestability clauses, limiting the rights of the insurer to contest the validity of the policy in some specified circumstances. n104 It should also be noted that insurance packing often goes hand-in-hand with flipping abuses (frequent refinancing), as insurance is one of the elements of the refinancing price escalator, described further in § 6.04 supra .

[d] Post-Claim Underwriting, Ineligibility

Another abusive practice is the sale of credit insurance to borrowers who are ineligible for the insurance coverage under the terms of the policies that they buy. Unlike ordinary insurance sales, creditors rarely ask borrowers for information relating to their eligibility for benefits under credit insurance policies, such as medical histories. n105 Instead, only after a claim is filed are eligibility factors such as health, age, and employment checked to see if grounds exist for denying coverage. Many policies simply provide that the policy will be canceled and the premium refunded if ineligibility is determined. The result of this arrangement is that creditors and insurance companies keep the premiums paid by ineligible borrowers who never file an insurance claim, while refusing to pay on the same policies if claims are ever filed. n106

Such sales may be viewed as a pretext for usury, because the insurance provides no benefit to borrowers. The sole benefit is to the creditor and insurer. Other appropriate claims involving the sale of insurance with no benefit to the insured includes the straight contract defense of failure of consideration, UDAP and unconscionability, or even fraud. n107

A somewhat related situation arises where the borrower is sold only partial coverage, but where the benefits of such a policy are misrepresented as being full coverage. This practice should give rise to a UDAP claim or a common law fraud claim.

[6] Rebates

The issue of refunding unearned insurance premium charges must be explored in any insured credit transaction. The premium usually pays for coverage for a term concurrent with the scheduled term of the loan. n108 The refund issue may arise when the credit transaction is prepaid, either by prepayment, refinancing, or otherwise, or when the insurance policy is terminated. Termination of the policy may occur on occasions which may or may not coincide with paying off the credit transaction by one of these means.

The NAIC Model Act requires that each credit life or A&H insurance policy provide for a prompt refund or credit "to the person entitled thereto" in the event of termination of insurance prior to the scheduled maturity date of indebtedness.

n109 The Model Act also requires that the insurance be terminated when the account is prepaid by renewal or otherwise. n110 The two provisions together thus mandate a refund any time the debt is prepaid by refinancing or otherwise. This Credit Insurance Code provision is often reiterated in the applicable credit statutes. n111

State Insurance Departments generally will prescribe the method by which a rebate must be calculated, usually authorizing the generous Rule of 78 formula. n112 There may be a minimum amount below which rebates need not be made. n113

An important issue which may arise is whether a credit insurance rebate is required when a debt is in default, accelerated, or reduced to judgment. Some state statutes require that all unearned charges, including insurance, be rebated on prepayment, and further require that acceleration be treated as prepayment. n114 The lender, however, may not credit the account with a refund upon acceleration, arguing the policy will remain in force until the originally scheduled maturity and that the insurance premium is, therefore, an "earned" charge not subject to the rebate requirement. n115

[7] Remedies

[a] Usury

As has been noted throughout this chapter, excess insurance charges may be imposed in a number of ways. Careful attention must be paid to presenting evidence regarding the circumstances: the full extent of the creditor's profit; evidence regarding the borrower's level of sophistication or education; the borrower's impression of implicit or explicit coercion; n116 or the borrower's special relationship of confidence with the lender. Lacking such specific evidence of overreaching, the court may view the premiums as a legitimate charge passed on to a third party, and may also view commissions as compensation for services in connection with the insurance just as any other agent commission is treated. n117

Where the credit insurance is hidden interest, any specific statutory remedy for excessive charge, or the more general array of traditional usury remedies, should be available. n118 (If the statute provides only for administrative enforcement, it may be necessary to argue there is an implied private right of action.) n119

[b] Breach of Fiduciary Duty and Duty to Disclose

Creditors may have a fiduciary duty to borrowers, which they may breach if they impose disadvantageous credit insurance charges. Ordinarily, debtors do not have a fiduciary relationship with creditors, n120 but one may be extrapolated with respect to credit insurance from a number of sources. n121 It is a question of fact whether the creditor owes a fiduciary duty to any given borrower. n122

Even if the facts do not establish a duty which rises to the level of a fiduciary duty, there may nonetheless be a common law "duty to disclose." Fraud or related claims may also be appropriate in some circumstances. n123

[c] UDAP

In addition, UDAP statutes are often well suited to challenge credit insurance abuses. However, it is necessary to review the UDAP statute and case law in a particular jurisdiction carefully because some UDAP statutes exclude credit or insurance transactions from their coverage. n124

Some states also have passed statutes that go beyond general UDAP laws by addressing specific abusive practices in high-cost mortgage lending. Some of these include prohibitions and restrictions regarding credit insurance. For example, the New York high-cost home loan law prohibits the financing of single premium insurance on high-cost home loans. n125 This prohibition applies to credit insurance, any other life or health insurance premiums, and any debt cancellation or suspension agreements. n126 Insurance premiums or other fees calculated and paid on a monthly basis are not considered "financed." n127

[d] Unconscionability

Unconscionability claims may also be raised to challenge credit insurance abuses. A number of states have incorporated unconscionability into their credit statutes. n128 Even absent a statutory reference, unconscionability is a common law concept which should be available in most states. n129

[e] Fraud; Misrepresentation and Concealment

Fraud or related claims may be appropriate in some circumstances. For example, as was discussed previously, knowingly selling credit insurance to a borrower unlikely to be eligible for benefits has been found to be fraudulent under Alabama law. n130

[f] Arbitration Clauses

Over the last few years, mandatory arbitration clauses have become quite common additions to consumer credit contracts. Creditors use these clauses as a shield to prevent consumers from litigating their claims in a judicial forum. Frequently, these provisions require the consumer, but not the creditor, to submit all claims and defenses to arbitration. The creditor reserves the right to file a judicial action to collect on the debt or repossess the security. Consumers always lose their right to a jury trial in arbitration clauses, and creditor exposure to punitive damages awards is dramatically reduced.

Where such provisions exist in contracts, creditors frequently file motions to dismiss or to stay court proceedings pending arbitration before filing responsive pleadings. Consumer advocates must be prepared to fight attempts to arbitrate early in the case.

There are many reasons why arbitration clauses found in consumer credit transactions are suspect. n131 These contracts are always contracts of adhesion, n132 and should be subject to a higher level of judicial scrutiny. n133 Some theories to consider in combating arbitration clauses include lack of mutuality, n134 unconscionability, n135 fraud, and other contract defenses. n136

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Contracts LawDebtor & Creditor RelationsInsurance LawDisability InsuranceGeneral OverviewInsurance LawGeneral Liability InsuranceConflicts of InterestInsurance LawLife InsuranceGeneral OverviewInsurance LawLife InsuranceCredit Life

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 6.06[4][b] infra.

(n2)Footnote 1.1. See Meyer v. CUNA Mut. Group, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72833 (W.D. Pa. Sept. 28, 2007) (interpreting such a provision).

(n3)Footnote 2. See In the Matter of Providian Nat'l Bank, Consent Order #2000-53 (June 28, 2000), available at www.occ.treas.gov/ftp/eas/ea2000-53.pdf.

(n4)Footnote 3. See generally National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 8.3.1.4 (3rd ed. and Supp.).

(n5)Footnote 4. See In the Matter of Providian Nat'l Bank, Consent Order #2000-53 (June 28, 2000) available at www.occ.treas.gov/ftp/eas/ea2000-53.pdf.

(n6)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Hammett v. American Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 203 F.R.D. 690 (S.D. Fla. Nov. 19, 2001) (nationwide class action denied on RICO claim due to reliance issues and on state breach of contract claim due to the possibility of variances in the laws of 50 states).

(n7)Footnote 6. See § 6.06[4][b] infra.

(n8)Footnote 7. The less comprehensive coverage for typical property insurance risks may be supplemented by coverage for credit loss risks; e.g., repossession expenses, premium deficiency, etc. See, e.g., Kenty v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16645 (S.D. Ohio Apr. 29, 1992) , aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 92 F.3d 384 (6th Cir. 1996) ; Kenty v. Transamerica Premium Ins. Co., 650 N.E.2d 863 (Ohio 1995) .

(n9)Footnote 8. This type of insurance has recently crept into the mortgage lending context as well. See, e.g., Kirkland v. Midland Mortgage Co., CV198-083 (S.D. Ga. Jan. 4, 2000) (defendant's motion for reconsideration of denial of summary judgment and grant of class certification denied; motion for certification of interlocutory appeal granted), Clearinghouse No. 52,504 and 52,504A.

(n10)Footnote 9. See, e.g., Kenty v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16645 (S.D. Ohio Apr. 29, 1992) (interest under the National Bank Act), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, 92 F.3d 384 (6th Cir. 1996) (without disturbing the ruling that the excess premium cost would constitute interest, court held that there was no usury because the national bank defendant was entitled to most favored lender status, and thus was entitled to assert the unlimited interest privilege granted Ohio thrifts under Ohio law). See also American Bankers Ins. Co. v. Alexander, 818 So. 2d 1073 (Miss.) , cert. denied, 534 U.S. 944, 122 S. Ct. 324, 151 L. Ed. 2d 242 (2001) (motion to dismiss misrepresentation claim denied; filed-rate doctrine does not prevent a consumer from bringing breach of good faith and fair dealing, breach of fiduciary duty, UDAP, and common law fraud claims based upon allegations that American Bankers consciously ignored its filed rates and that the manner in which the policies were force-placed was calculated to benefit the insurance company through a kickback scheme); Pitts v. American Sec. Ins. Co., 144 N.C. App. 1, 550 S.E.2d 179 (2001) (class certification denial reversed on appeal), aff'd, 356 N.C. 292, 569 S.E.2d 647 (2002) .

(n11)Footnote 10. See Mark A. Chavez, If You Can't Beat Them, Change the Rules: The Industry Response to Force-Placed Insurance Litigation, The Consumer Advocate, Vol. 3, Issue 5 (Nov./Dec. 1997). These cases and force-placed insurance are discussed in more detail in National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 5.3.10 (4th ed. 1997 and Supp.); National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Law Pleadings with Disk, Number One, Ch. 2 (1994).

(n12)Footnote 11. See, e.g., 1994 Md. AG LEXIS 50 (Oct. 17, 1994) (debt cancellation agreements do not constitute contracts of insurance).

(n13)Footnote 12. See Center for Economic Justice, The Impact of Debt Cancellation Contracts on State Insurance Regulation (July 2003), available at www.cej-online.org/cej.

(n14)Footnote 13. For a discussion of GAP plans and hidden finance charges, see National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, §§ 7.4.2, 8.3.2.3 (4th ed. 2009). GAP in connection with negative equity in the car-financing context is discussed in National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, §§ 11.6.3 (4th ed. 2009)

(n15)Footnote 14. See Regulation Z and Official Staff Commentary §§ 226.4(b)(10) and 226.4(d)(3); see also National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending § 3.9.4.7 (6th ed. 2007 and supp.).

(n16)Footnote 15. See 67 Fed. Reg. 58,962 (Sept. 19, 2002) .

(n17)Footnote 16. 68 Fed. Reg. 35,283 (June 13, 2003) .

(n18)Footnote 17. For a discussion of Gramm-Leach-Bliley, see § 6.02 supra.

(n19)Footnote 18. See, e.g., Opinion Letter Regarding Banks Sales of Debt Suspension Agreements and Debt Cancellation Contracts, Clearinghouse No. 54,591 (New York State Insurance Department Apr. 4, 2003). A few states are explicitly retaining the power to regulate DCAs as insurance for some classes of financial institutions. See, e.g., Utah Code Ann. § 7-1-324; Opinion Letter Regarding Regulation of National Banks Offering Debt Cancellation Contracts and Debt Suspension Agreements, Clearinghouse No. 54,593 (Nevada Division of Insurance Apr. 2, 2003).

(n20)Footnote 19. See 67 Fed. Reg. 58,963 (Sept. 19, 2002) .

(n21)Footnote 20. See 67 Fed. Reg. 58,963 (Sept. 19, 2002) .

(n22)Footnote 21. Model Bill to Provide for the Regulation of Credit Life Ins. and Credit Accident and Health Ins., National Association of Ins. Commissioners, Model Regulatory Service, 360-1, 370-1, and 375-1 (NIARS Corporation, 1984 [hereinafter NAIC Model Act]; Alaska Stat. §§ 21.57.010 to 21.57.170; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 20-1601 to 20-1616; Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 23-87-1018 to 23-87-119; Cal. Ins. Code §§ 779.1 to 779.25; Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 10-10-101 to 10-10-116; Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 38-249 to 38-262; Del. Code Ann. tit. 18, §§ 3701 to 3713; Ga. Code §§ 33-31-1 to 33-31-12; Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 431:10B-101 to 431:10B-114; Idaho Rev. Stat. §§ 41-2301 to 41-2316; Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 73, §§ 767.50 to 767.64; Ind. Code §§ 27-8-4-1 to 27-8-4-14; Ky. Rev. Stat. §§ 304.19-010 to 304.19-140; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 24-A, §§ 2851 to 2864; Md. Ann. Code art. 48A, §§ 436-C to 436-O; Mich. Comp. Laws §§ 550.601 to 550.624; Minn. Stat. §§ 62B.01 to 62B.14; Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 385.010 to 385.080; Mont. Code Ann. § 33-21-101 to 33-21-207; Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 44-1701 to 44-1713; Nev. Rev. Stat. §§ 690A.010 to 690A.140; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann §§ 408A:1 to 408A:15; N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 17B:20-1 to 17B:29-13; N.M. Stat. Ann. §§ 59A-25-1 to 59A-25-15; N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 58-341 to 58-357; N.D. Cent. Code §§ 26-1-37-01 to 26-1-37-16; Ohio Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 3918.01 to 3918.99; Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 743.561 to 743.588; Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 40, §§ 63-101 to 63-114; Tex. Ins. Code art. 3.53; Utah Code Ann. §§ 31A-22-801 to 31A-22-809; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 8, §§ 4101 to 4115; Va. Code §§ 38.2-3717 to 38.2-3729; Wash. Rev. Code §§ 48.34.010 to 48.34.120; Wyo. Stat. §§ 26-21-101 to 26-21-114. The NAIC is currently reviewing credit insurance issues.

(n23)Footnote 22. See NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564. The NAIC's 1960 model credit insurance code does not cover credit property insurance.

(n24)Footnote 23. E.g., Iowa Code §§ 509, 515; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 8, §§ 3805, 3806.

(n25)Footnote 24. E.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. (West) § 516.35; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 399-A:11 (lender licensing); Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 8, § 2224(b).

(n26)Footnote 25. E.g., Del. Code Ann. tit. 6, § 4307 (RISA); Ga. Code Ann. § 7-3-14(3) (Ind. Loan); Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9, § 2355(g).

(n27)Footnote 26. E.g., Ala. Code § 5-19-20; Iowa Code § 537.2501(2); La. Rev. Stat. tit. 9, § 3542(A).

(n28)Footnote 27. E.g., Ala. Code § 5-19-1(1); Ga. Code Ann. § 7-3-14(3). See also McCullar v. Universal Underwriters Life Ins. Co., 687 So. 2d 156 (Ala. 1996) (regulatory language requiring that when repayment is in substantially equal installments, the credit insurance can "never exceed approximate unpaid balance of the loan" prohibits gross coverage notwithstanding contrary agency interpretations; question of fact whether creditor's telling consumers that gross amount of insurance was needed to pay off debt in event of death constituted fraud). See also Singleton v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 857 So. 2d 803 (Ala. 2003) (applying McCullar and finding that borrowers failed to establish sale of excess insurance where net coverage was sold and finding that state rate requirements were followed).

(n29)Footnote 28. E.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 36-234; N.D. Cent. Code § 51-13-02; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9, § 2355(f)(4).

(n30)Footnote 29. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 2.3.1 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n31)Footnote 30. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 10.5 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n32)Footnote 31. Calculating the finance charge for TIL purposes is different than calculating interest for purposes of the state usury law. See generally National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 8.5.2.2 (3rd ed. and Supp.). See Ch. 1 supra. For further details of TIL requirements relating to credit insurance disclosures, see National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending § 3.9.4 (6th ed. 2007).

(n33)Footnote 32. 15 U.S.C. § 1638; Reg. Z, 12 C.F.R. § 226.18; Official Staff Commentary § 226.18(c)(1)(iii)-2; see also Guinn v. Hoskins Chevrolet, 836 N.E.2d 681 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) (TILA commentary requires disclosure of fact that creditor is retaining premium upcharge--additional amount retained by creditor--but does not require disclosure of the amount).

(n34)Footnote 33. Reg. Z § 28.1(b)(1)(iv).

(n35)Footnote 34. 12 U.S.C. § 1843(c)(8); 12 C.F.R. § 225.25(b)(8) and (9). See Hinkle, Insurance Activities of National Banks and Bank Holding Companies, 105 Banking L.J. 137 (1988).

(n36)Footnote 35. 12 U.S.C. § 1972.

(n37)Footnote 36. 12 U.S.C. § 1843(c)(8).

(n38)Footnote 37. 65 Fed. Reg. 75,822 (Dec. 4, 2000) .

(n39)Footnote 38. 66 Fed. Reg. 15,345 (Mar. 19, 2001) .

(n40)Footnote 39. 12 C.F.R. § 208.83 (FRB regulations).

(n41)Footnote 40. E.g., Ala. Code §§ 27-40-1; Alaska Stat. §§ 06.40.010; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 20-2001; Idaho Code §§ 28-43-301(20), 28-43-205; Ky. Rev. Stat. § 304.30-010; Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 59A.01

(n42)Footnote 41. 65 Fed. Reg. 35,420 (June 2, 2000) (West Virginia); 65 Fed. Reg. 57,427 (Sept. 22, 2000) (Rhode Island); 65 Fed. Reg. 43,827 (July 14, 2000) (Massachusetts).

(n43)Footnote 42. 66 Fed. Reg. 51,502 (Oct. 9, 2001) . Preempted were provisions: (1) requiring financial institutions to use separate employees for insurance solicitations; (2) restricting the timing of bank employees' referral or solicitation of insurance business from customers who have loan applications pending with the bank; (3) restricting the sharing of information with bank affiliates acquired by a financial institution in the course of a loan transaction to solicit or offer insurance; (4) requiring that financial institutions segregate the place of solicitation or sale of insurance so that it is readily distinguishable from deposit-taking and lending areas. Not preempted were provisions: (1) prohibiting a requirement or implication that the purchase of an insurance product is required as a condition of a loan; (2) prohibiting a financial institution from offering an insurance product in combination with other products unless all of the products are available separately; (3) requiring that, where insurance is required as a condition of credit, the insurance and credit transactions be completed independently and through separate documents.

(n44)Footnote 43. 67 Fed. Reg. 13,405 (Mar. 22, 2002) .

(n45)Footnote 44. E.g., Ky. Rev. Stat. § 304.19-080; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 255, § 126 (West); Mo. Ann. Stat. § 385.070 (Vernon); Tenn. Code Ann. § 56-7-908(a).

(n46)Footnote 45. E.g., Ohio Admin. Code § 3901-1-14(C)(8).

(n47)Footnote 46. Madrigal v. O'Connor, No. 81 L 27570, Clearinghouse No. 41,268 (Cook County Cir. Ct. Mar. 4, 1987); State Ex. Rel. Consumers League v. Ratchford, 457 N.E.2d 878 (Ohio Ct. App. 1982) . In 1988, the Illinois Department of Insurance completed the review process begun as a result of the mandamus in Madrigal, supra. Many policies were disapproved and rates were lowered by 23%. The plaintiffs' attorneys estimated a savings of $22 million a year to consumers.

Though the Ohio case was dismissed on standing grounds, the court did conclude that the insurance department was under a duty to seek a rate reduction. The department subsequently did so.

(n48)Footnote 47. The NAIC Model Act applies only to credit life and disability policies of less than 10 years duration. Longer term insurance is subject to general insurance laws. State versions may vary. Under the revised NAIC Model Act, net coverage would be mandated. NAIC Consumer Credit Insurance Model Act § 4(A)(1994).

(n49)Footnote 48. NAIC Model Act § 4. Under the revised NAIC Model Act, net coverage would be mandated. NAIC Consumer Credit Insurance Model Act § 4(a)(1994).

(n50)Footnote 49. Winkle v. Grand Nat'l Bank, 601 S.W.2d 559, 571 (Ark. 1980) . But cf. McCullar v. Universal Underwriters Life Ins. Co., 1995 Ala. LEXIS 405 (Ala. Sept. 29, 1995) . But see Gall v. Am. Heritage Life Ins. Co., 3 F. Supp. 2d 1344 (S.D. Ala. 1998) (court states it is not bound by plurality in McCullar and, agreeing with the dissent, finds that insurance can be calculated on the total of payments); Liberty Bank & Trust Co., N.A. v. Splane, 959 P.2d 600 (Okla. Civ. App. 1998) (court construes provision in UCCC restricting the amount of the permissible credit insurance to that which does not "exceed the debt" and another provision in Oklahoma insurance law restricting the amount of such insurance to "the approximate unpaid balance of the loan" to allow insurance premiums to be calculated on the total of payments; court specifically rejects the plurality in McCullar).

(n51)Footnote 50. NAIC Model Act § 4A(1). Compare NAIC Consumer Credit Insurance Model Act § 4(A)(1)(1994), which would mandate net debt coverage.

(n52)Footnote 51. NAIC Model Act § 5.

(n53)Footnote 52. NAIC Model Act § 5. See also In the Matter of Assocs. Fin. Life Ins. Co., Case No. 99C-014A (Ga. Office of Insurance and Safety Fire Commissioner, Jan. 31, 2000), Clearinghouse No. 52,508 (when lender sold multiple policies, it incorrectly calculated unearned premium for each insurance product separately and failed to rebate when each rebate was lower than the $10 floor per Ga. Comp. R. & Regs. r. 120-2-27-18, e.g., if each rebate was less than $10 but, combined, exceeded $10, both must be refunded).

(n54)Footnote 53. NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564. The Act does not cover insurance on motor vehicles designed for highway use and mobile homes, insurance written in connection with a credit transaction that is secured by a real estate mortgage or deed of trust, force-placed insurance, non-filing insurance, or insurance for which no identifiable charge is made or collected from the consumer. NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564, at § 2.

(n55)Footnote 54. NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564, at § 4(G).

(n56)Footnote 55. NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564, at § 10.

(n57)Footnote 56. NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564, at §§ 4(B), (C).

(n58)Footnote 57. NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564, at § 4(A).

(n59)Footnote 58. NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564, at §§ 4(F), 5(a)(2).

(n60)Footnote 59. NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564, at §§ 5(A), (B).

(n61)Footnote 60. NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564, at §§ 5(D), (E).

(n62)Footnote 61. NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564, at § 11(D).

(n63)Footnote 62. E.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 6-626 (consumer loans); Iowa Code Ann. §§ 536.27, 536A.23(3), 537.2501(2); Miss. Code Ann. § 75-67-121 (small loans); UCCC § 4-301(1).

(n64)Footnote 63. E.g., 12 C.F.R. § 225.25(b)(8)(B)(ii)(A); Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 6-626(D); 25 S.C. Code Ann. Regs. 69-11.1C(1)(d).

(n65)Footnote 64. E.g., Ala. Code § 5-19-20(d) (no property insurance unless loan amount exclusive of charges is $300 or over and value of property is $300 or more); Colo. Rev. Stat. § 5-4-301 (same provisions, but with amounts of $300 and $630, respectively).

(n66)Footnote 65. UCCC §§ 2-202(2), 3-202(2) (1968); UCCC § 2-501(2) (1974). See also Cope v. American Int'l Group, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8040 (M.D. Ala. Feb. 9, 2006) (alleging that finance company representative told borrower that obtaining credit insurance would improve her credit score and thus would increase her chances of obtaining the desired loan); FTC v. Stewart Fin. Co., Civ. No. 103CV-2648 (N.D. Ga. Nov. 9, 2005) (stipulated final judgment and order) ($10.5 million settlement, liquidation of assets, and court receivership of lender where Commission alleged that a subprime lender and nine related companies sold credit insurance and other add-on products, such as car club memberships, to consumers by telling them that it was required--even where the consumer was not eligible for the insurance or did not own a car--and by representing that the products were free; the lender allegedly targeted Social Security recipients for its scheme and also allegedly failed to rebate unearned premiums, collected illegal fees by deceptively promoting a "direct deposit program," and violated the Credit Practices Rule by taking security for small personal loans), available at www.ftc.gov/os/2005/11/051109stewartstipa103cv2648.pdf.

(n67)Footnote 66. E.g., Ala. Code § 5-19-20(a) & (b); UCCC §§ 2-202(2)(a), 3-202(2)(a) (1968); UCCC § 2-501(2)(a) (1974); UCCC § 4-109 (1968 and 1974). In London v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. , 340 F.3d 1246 (11th Cir. 2003) , the court, which retained supplemental jurisdiction after TILA claims were settled, held that a credit card applicant who obtained related credit insurance had suffered "injury in fact," even though he knew the insurance was not required and the enrollment form stated it was optional. The creditor, however, did not comply with a state law requirement to disclose to an applicant that purchasing the insurance is not a prerequisite to obtaining the loan. The court ruled that the applicant suffered injury per se by paying consideration for an illegal contract.

(n68)Footnote 67. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Lackey, 228 Ark. 101, 305 S.W.2d 858 (1957) . See also Anthony v. Community Loans & Inv. Corp., 559 F.2d 1363 (5th Cir. 1977) .

(n69)Footnote 68. Aclin Ford v. Cordell, 625 S.W.2d 459 (Ark. 1982) . See also Fisher v. Beneficial Fin. Co. of Hoxsie, 383 F. Supp. 895 (D.R.I. 1974) (borrower could introduce evidence that defendant actually required insurance by its conduct). But see Dixon v. S & S Loan Serv. of Waycross, 754 F. Supp. 1567 (S.D. Ga. 1990) .

(n70)Footnote 69. Anthony v. Community Loans & Inv. Corp., 559 F.2d 1363, 1369 (5th Cir. 1977) .

(n71)Footnote 70. Lemelledo v. Beneficial Mgmt. Corp. of Am., 289 N.J. Super. 489, 674 A.2d 582 (App. Div. 1996) , aff'd on other grounds, 150 N.J. 255, 696 A.2d 546 (1997) . See also FTC v. Citigroup, Inc., 239 F. Supp. 2d 1302 (N.D. Ga. 2001) (complaint available at www.ftc.gov/os/2001/03/citigroupcmp.pdf) (in a recently settled enforcement action, in which Citigroup agreed to pay $240 million, the FTC alleged that the Associates trained its employees to add the cost of a "total payment protection" package of credit insurance products to the monthly payment which they quoted to borrowers without explaining that this payment included the premium charges; employees instructed to discuss only the "benefits" of the insurance and not the costs or limitations on coverage); Compton v. Altavista Motors, Inc., 121 F. Supp. 2d 932 (W.D. Va. 2000) (credit insurance "protection plan" form not given to car buyer until after the credit contract was signed; summary judgment to creditor on usury claim due to alleged lack of choice in purchasing the protection plan denied); Fabricant v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 202 F.R.D. 310 (S.D. Fla. 2001) (certifying class in case of retailer selling credit card plan with package of credit life, disability, property, and unemployment insurance without properly advising consumer that the package was optional), subsequent history, Order on Motions for Summary Judgment, Clearinghouse No. 54,563 (S.D. Fla. Mar. 5, 2002) (granting summary judgment on two of plaintiffs' counts and voiding the contracts as unenforceable on public policy grounds); Baron v. Best Buy Co., 75 F. Supp. 2d 1368 (S.D. Fla. 1999) (similar allegations as in Fabricant; motion to compel arbitration clause denied as defendant failed to show that the arbitration forum is a neutral, inexpensive forum to litigate the issues raised); Easterling v. Gulf Guar. Ins. Co., 60 F. Supp. 2d 586 (S.D. Miss. 1999) (case remanded to state court; claims included a challenge to the condition of purchasing credit insurance in order to get the loan); Roberson v. Money Tree, 954 F. Supp. 1519 (M.D. Ala. 1997) (borrowers allege that the lender misrepresented that they would not qualify for credit unless they purchased credit insurance and financed the cost through the loan; merits not reached as court upheld an arbitration clause and stayed case pending arbitration). But see Williams v. Norwest Fin. Ala., Inc., 723 So. 2d 97 (Ala. Civ. App. 1998) (a claim that the lender fraudulently misrepresented that the purchase of credit insurance was required to obtain the loan failed because credit insurance was not sold by the vendor in all of the several loan transactions with the borrower, no employee told the borrower that the insurance was required, (though the "voluntary" disclosure was given as one of the several documents which she was instructed to sign without explanation), and the borrower was relatively sophisticated); Swyters v. Motorola Employees Credit Union, 535 S.E.2d 508 (Ga. App. 2000) (consumer is bound to read contract in absence of illiteracy; summary judgment granted to creditor on whether insurance was required).

(n72)Footnote 71. In re USLIFE Credit Corp. & USLIFE Corp., 91 FTC 984 , Consumer Cred. Guide CCH P 97,938 (1978), modified on other grounds, 92 FTC 353 (1978) , rev'd on other grounds, 599 F.2d 1387 (5th Cir. 1979) .

(n73)Footnote 72. See, e.g., Matter of Tower Loan of Miss., Consumer Cred. Guide Rpt. No. 579, FTC Docket No. 9241 (filed July 5, 1990), in which the FTC alleges that the creditor violated the FTC Unfair and Deceptive Practices Act by obtaining false statements from consumers stating that the purchase of credit insurance was voluntary, when the creditor was, in fact, requiring the purchase and failing to include the premiums in the finance charge in violation of TIL. But see Credithrift of Am., Inc. v. Whitley, 190 Ga. App. 833, 835, 380 S.E.2d 489, 492 (1989) . Court held that creditors' statement that "although they were not required by law to purchase certain insurance ... as a practical matter they would probably not be approved for the loan unless the insurance was purchased" did not constitute fraudulent misrepresentation or a violation of the state fair business practices act. Note: the court's reasoning is viable only if creditors are free under state law to deny credit if consumers refuse to buy insurance. But in many, if not most, states, consumer credit regulation laws do not permit creditors to require credit life or disability insurance as a condition of receiving the loan, in which case decision is inapposite.

(n74)Footnote 73. Though the legal issues are generally the same, the factual issues establishing the claim are more difficult in cases of implicit coercion.

(n75)Footnote 74. As a practical matter, § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 et seq. , would be the applicable statute, as the Clayton Act, though forbidding tying arrangements, does not apply to intangibles such as credit or insurance. Polden, The Antitrust Implications of Credit Insurance Tying Arrangements, 32 Drake L. Rev. 862, 882 n.78 (1982-83). (Much of this discussion is derived from this article.) For an example of this phenomenon, see Fabricant v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 202 F.R.D. 310 (S.D. Fla. 2001) (certifying class in case of retailer selling credit card plan with package of credit life, disability, property, and unemployment insurance without properly advising consumer that the package was optional), subsequent history, Order on Motions for Summary Judgment, Clearinghouse No. 54,563 (S.D. Fla. Mar. 5, 2002) (granting summary judgment on two of plaintiffs' counts and voiding the contracts as unenforceable on public policy grounds), subsequent proceedings, 202 F.R.D. 306 (S.D. Fla. 2001) (class certified on TILA and state law claims), class cert. granted, 202 F.R.D. 310 (S.D. Fla. 2001) (Sears card "credit plan" is sold as a package which automatically includes credit life, disability, property, and unemployment insurance; antitrust claim not raised); Baron v. Best Buy Co., Inc., 75 F. Supp. 2d 1368 (S.D. Fla. 1999) , rev'd, 260 F.3d 625 (11th Cir. 2001) (court reversed denial of motions to compel arbitration) (same, but Best Buy calls the package the "Payment Maker Protection Plan").

(n76)Footnote 75. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1012, 1013. The McCarran-Ferguson exclusion provision reads in its entirety as follows:

> (b) Federal regulation. No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance: 15 USCS §§ 1 et seq. 15 USCS §§ 41 et seq.

5 U.S.C. § 1012(b) (emphasis added).

(n77)Footnote 76. 15 U.S.C. § 1012(b); Barnett Bank, N.A. v. Nelson, 517 U.S. 25, 116 S. Ct. 1103, 134 L. Ed. 2d 237 (1996) ; United States Dep't of Treasury v. Fabe, 508 U.S. 491, 113 S. Ct. 2202, 124 L. Ed. 2d 449 (1993) . Courts have described the test for exclusion in two different ways. The Fifth Circuit has a four part test as follows: A state law preempts a federal statute under the Act if: (1) the federal statute does not "specifically relate[] to the business of insurance;" (2) if the acts challenged are part of the "business of insurance;" (3) if the state has enacted a law "for the purpose of regulating insurance;" and (4) if application of the federal statute would "invalidate, impair, or supersede" the state law. Edwards v. Your Credit, 148 F.3d 427, 433 (5th Cir. 1998) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 1012). See also Highmark, Inc. v. UPMC Health Plan, Inc., 276 F.3d 160 (3d Cir. 2001) (following analysis similar to that of Edwards). The Seventh Circuit uses a broader test expressed in three parts as follows: a state law preempts a federal statute under the Act if: (1) the federal statute at issue does not "specifically relate to the business of insurance;" (2) the state statute was "enacted ... for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance;" and (3) application of the federal statute would "invalidate, impair or supersede" the state law. Autry v. Northwest Premium Servs., 144 F.3d 1037, 1043 (7th Cir. 1998) . See also Standard Sec. Life Ins. Co. v. West, 267 F.3d 821 (8th Cir. 2001) (three step analysis); Moore v. Liberty Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 267 F.3d 1209 (11th Cir. 2001) , cert. denied, 535 U.S. 1018, 122 S. Ct. 1608, 152 L. Ed. 2d 622 (2002) (same); Mayard-Paul v. Mega Life & Health Ins. Co., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22256, at *6 (S.D. Fla. Dec. 21, 2001) (same). The three-part test doesn't address the activity being challenged, but rather allows state law to preempt federal law even if the specific activity at issue does not relate to the business of insurance, so long as a state law governs it.

(n78)Footnote 77. FTC v. Dixie Fin. Co., 695 F.2d 926 (5th Cir. 1983) , cert. denied, 461 U.S. 928, 103 S. Ct. 2088, 77 L. Ed. 2d 299 (1983) . To determine whether particular conduct falls within "the business of insurance," courts have used a three part test derived from three Supreme Court decisions: Union Labor Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 102 S. Ct. 3002, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1982) ; Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 99 S. Ct. 1067, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261 (1979) , cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1160, 105 S. Ct. 912, 83 L. Ed. 2d 925 (1985) and S.E.C. v. National Sec., Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 89 S. Ct. 564, 21 L. Ed. 2d 668 (1969) . This test asks: whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry. See, e.g., O'Connor v. UNUM Life Ins. Co., 146 F.3d 959, 962 (D.C. Cir. 1998) ; Autry v. Northwest Premium Servs., 144

F.3d 1037, 1044 (7th Cir. 1998) ; see also Homestead Mobile Homes, Inc. v. Foremost Corp. of Am., 603 F. Supp. 767 (N.D. Tex. 1985) (where mobile home financing arrangements tied to insurance, conduct not exempt from antitrust as business of insurance. Further, because insurer acted in concert with a non-exempt entity, exemption would have been forfeited in any case); FTC v. Manufacturer's Hanover Consumer Serv., 567 F. Supp. 992 (E.D. Pa. 1983) . See also Standard Sec. Life Ins. Co. v. West, 267 F.3d 821, 823 (8th Cir. 2001) (McCarran-Ferguson barred application of Federal Arbitration Act because state statute prohibiting arbitration clauses in insurance contracts involved the business of insurance); Smith v. PacifiCare Behavioral Health of Cal., Inc., 93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 140, 155 (2d Dist. 2001) , cert. denied, 537 U.S. 818, 123 S. Ct. 92, 154 L. Ed. 2d 23 (2002) (state law requiring specific disclosures in health care service plans' binding arbitration clauses were enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance). See generally Polden, The Antitrust Implications of Credit Insurance Tying Arrangements, 32 Drake Law Rev. 862, 903-05 (1982-1983); Kintner, Bauer & Allen, Application of the Antitrust Laws to the Activities of Insurance Companies, 63 N.C.L. Rev. 431, 461-65 (1985).

(n79)Footnote 78. Note that McCarran-Ferguson may also be raised to defend against consumer's federal claims regarding credit-related insurance practices other than antitrust, such as truth in lending and RICO. It is generally held not to bar such claims at least as to the creditor's conduct. E.g., Kenty v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 92 F.3d 384 (6th Cir. 1996) , aff'd in relevant part, 92 F.3d 384 (6th Cir. 1996) , reh'g, en banc, denied, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 24797 (6th Cir. Sept. 19, 1996) . The Supreme Court broadly defined "impair" in holding that RICO does not conflict with nor frustrate Nevada's Unfair Insurance Practices Act in a case against a health care insurer that failed to pass on discounts it received from service providers on to its consumers. Humana Inc. v. Forsyth, 525 U.S. 299, 119 S. Ct. 710, 142 L. Ed. 2d 753 (1999) .

For a more extensive analysis of possible antitrust claims, see National Consumer Law Center, Cost of Credit § 8.5.2.5.3.

(n80)Footnote 79. NAIC Model Act § 8(A).

(n81)Footnote 80. NAIC Model Act § 8(D).

(n82)Footnote 81. Cope v. Aetna Fin. Co. of Maine, 412 F.2d 635, 640 (1st Cir. 1969) ; Jennings v. Globe Life & Accident Ins. Co., 922 P.2d 622 (Okla. 1996) (court also rejected the creative argument that the Oklahoma version of the UCCC provided a private right of action to enforce violations of regulations promulgated by the Insurance Commissioner; the UCCC is specifically limited to "creditor," not "insurer," violations).

(n83)Footnote 82. E.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 6.626(F); Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 36-234; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 8, § 2224(b).

(n84)Footnote 83. In the event a claim is made, there would be a surplus which should be paid to the borrower's estate.

(n85)Footnote 84. Western Guar. Loan Co. v. Dean, 309 S.W.2d 857, 862 (Tex. Civ. App. 1957) ; Industrial Fin. Serv. Co. v. Riley, 295 S.W.2d 498, 506 (Tex. Civ. App. 1956) . See, e.g., Brown v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 135 Fed. Appx. 647 (5th Cir. 2005) (alleging that amount of coverage on credit life insurance sold in connection with financed vehicle purchase exceeded the financed amount and included coverage for unearned interest in violation of the state motor vehicle sales finance act; claim against insurer rejected because the auto finance company is not a licensing agent of the insurer for lending purposes under the state law).

(n86)Footnote 85. E.g., NAIC Model Code §§ 4(A) (life), 4(B) (A&H), 5 (term).

(n87)Footnote 86. E.g., Ala. Code § 5-18-17 (small loan); § 5-19-20 (Credit Code). See also McCullar v. Universal Underwriters Life Ins. Co., 687 So. 2d 156 (Ala. 1996) (interpreting Alabama law to mandate net coverage, not gross coverage, as agencies had interpreted the law). But see Gall v. American Heritage Life Ins. Co., 3 F. Supp. 2d 1344

(S.D. Ala. 1998) (court states it is not bound by plurality in McCullar and, agreeing with the dissent, finds that insurance can be calculated on the total of payments); Liberty Bank & Trust Co. v. Splane, 959 P.2d 600 (Okla. Civ. App. 1998) (court construes provision in UCCC restricting the amount of the permissible credit insurance to that which does not "exceed the debt" and another provision in Oklahoma insurance law restricting the amount of such insurance to "the approximate unpaid balance of the loan" to allow insurance premiums to be calculated on the total of payments; court specifically rejects the plurality in McCullar). See also Dixon v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7934 (E.D. La. May 31, 2000) (allegations that Louisiana law mandates net coverage, that terms of insurance were not properly disclosed, and that excessive commissions were paid to sell insurance product warrants denial of motion for summary judgment on RICO claim), aff'd without opinion, 252 F.3d 1156 (5th Cir. 2001) , cert. denied, 534 U.S. 952, 122 S. Ct. 349, 151 L. Ed. 2d 263 (2001) .

(n88)Footnote 87. See NAIC Credit Personal Property Insurance Model Act, Clearinghouse No. 53,564.

(n89)Footnote 88. Its key provisions are described in § 6.06[4][b] supra .

(n90)Footnote 89. See e.g., Ga. Ind. Loan Act Regs. § 120-1-11.04(3) and 120-1-14-17(3); Robinson v. Central Loan & Fin. Corp., 609 F.2d 170, 175 (5th Cir. 1980) ; Ala. Code § 5-19-20(d); UCCC § 4-301.

(n91)Footnote 90. UCCC § 4-301(1)(a). See Department of Fin. Inst. v. Beneficial Fin. Co. of Madison, 426 N.E.2d 711, 713 (Ind. Ct. App. 1981) .

(n92)Footnote 91. See § 6.06[4] supra; see also § 6.06[5][c] infra.

(n93)Footnote 92. See, e.g., Kenty v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16645 (S.D. Ohio Apr. 29, 1992) (interest under the National Bank Act), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, Kenty v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 92 F.3d 384 (6th Cir. 1996) ; Boyd v. Society Bank & Trust, Clearinghouse No. 47,939A (Ohio Ct. Com. Pleas), order on motion to dismiss (Oct. 29, 1991) (state usury law); contra Doe v. Norwest Bank Minn., N.A., 107 F.3d 1297 (8th Cir. 1997) , reh'g, en banc, denied, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 11337 (8th Cir. May 12, 1997) .

(n94)Footnote 93. Some of the recent litigation challenges the overreaching from the combined impact of insurance packing and frequent flipping. See, e.g., Emery v. American Gen. Fin., Inc., 71 F.3d 1343 (7th Cir. 1995) .

(n95)Footnote 93.1. See, e.g., Miner v. Beneficial Mortgage Co. of Kan. (In re Miner), 369 B.R. 655 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2007) (describing a series of loan refinancings containing credit insurance and culminating in a one-time, financed fee of almost $10,000 for credit life and credit disability insurance on a loan of almost $75,000; ultimately, the credit insurance application was denied and the premiums were refunded).

(n96)Footnote 94. 16 C.F.R. § 444 (FTC); 12 C.F.R. § 535 (OTS); 12 C.F.R. § 227 (FRB). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 5.3.12 (6th ed. 2004 and Supp.).

(n97)Footnote 95. E.g., VCRs, a second television, artwork, jewelry other than wedding rings. 16 C.F.R. § 444.1(i).

(n98)Footnote 96. For an example of some complaints, see James v. ITT Fin. Servs., Report of Prof. Robert Hartley, submitted in support of Plaintiff's Motion to Certify Class, Oct. 10, 1989, Clearinghouse No. 44, 801X.

(n99)Footnote 97. See § 6.06[7] infra; see also § 6.05[2][c] supra.

(n100)Footnote 98. UCCC § 5-108(4)(b).

(n101)Footnote 99. See § 6.06[7] infra.

(n102)Footnote 100. See Suburban State Bank v. Squires, 145 Wis. 2d 445, 427 N.W.2d 393 (Ct. App. 1988)

(where borrower had heart attack and collected on disability insurance and loan was refinanced, court upheld finding that creditor was negligent in not advising borrower that new disability policy would bar recovery if borrower had another heart attack).

(n103)Footnote 101. For example, the Alabama Supreme Court recently upheld a jury verdict for $2 million punitive damages (after remitter) for fraud against both the creditor and insurer in a recent case involving sale of credit life insurance to a borrower in ill health. Union Sec. Life Ins. Co. v. Crocker, 667 So. 2d 688 (Ala. 1995) , cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1074, 118 S. Ct. 1515, 140 L. Ed. 2d 668 (1998) . Because the amount of punitive damages awarded in this case got caught up in the debate in the United States Supreme Court about the propriety of punitive damages awards in relation to the amount of compensatory damages awarded, the Court vacated the decision in this case, 517 U.S. 1230, 116 S. Ct. 1872, 135 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1996) , upon remand from Supreme Court, 709 So. 2d 1118 (Ala. 1997) (court reduced punitive damages award to $1 million), for further consideration by the Alabama Supreme Court in light of BMW of N. Am., Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559, 116 S. Ct. 1589, 134 L. Ed. 2d 809 (1996) . Cf. Miller v. Dobbs Mobile Bay, Inc., 661 So. 2d 203 (Ala. 1995) .

(n104)Footnote 102. See generally § 6.06[7] infra; National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 10.5.11.2 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n105)Footnote 103. For example, the Third Circuit reversed summary judgment in favor of the insurer and remanded a case where borrowers had alleged that the insurer failed to pay excess disability benefits as provided for in their policies. Schroeder v. Acceleration Life, 972 F.2d 41 (3d Cir. 1992) .

(n106)Footnote 104. E.g., Ala. Code § 27-18-4 (group life).

(n107)Footnote 105. See, e.g., Justus v. Mountain Life Ins. Co., 1999 Tenn. App. LEXIS 702 (Tenn. App. Oct. 15, 1999) (bank employee took no application but represented that a credit life insurance policy was in full force and effect). See generally National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 8.5.5 (4th ed. 2009).

(n108)Footnote 106. See Taylor v. American Bankers Ins. Group, Inc., 267 A.D.2d 178, 700 N.Y.S.2d 458 (N.Y. App. Div. 1999) (class certification granted in case where consumers allege practice of rejecting insurance claims on grounds that customers had not been paying for the appropriate type of insurance after disclosing the nature of the insurance in small, inconspicuous type). See Union Sec. Life Ins. Co. v. Crocker, 709 So. 2d 1118 (Ala. 1997) (punitive damages award for fraud in sale of credit life insurance coverage to plaintiff and her husband when he was known to have disqualifying health problems; award was reduced after U.S. Supreme Court concluded that a higher amount would violate due process, see 517 U.S. 1230 (1996)) ; Lucas v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 170 S.E.2d 856 (Ga. Ct. App. 1969) (jury question existed regarding waiver of exclusion for prior illness where insured questioned auto dealer about whether prior heart condition would limit credit insurance availability). But see Southards v. Cent. Plains Ins. Co., 441 P.2d 808 (Kan. 1968) (plaintiff denied coverage under credit disability policy where he did not know at the time of purchase that he had a certain degenerative disease, although a medical expert could have detected it if the plaintiff would have been examined); S. Branch Valley Nat'l Bank v. Williams, 155 S.E.2d 845 (W. Va. 1967) (credit insurer was not liable under policy where cashier for bank processed insurance application for insured who was ineligible based on age). Another issue that may arise is where a consumer becomes eligible for an insurance claim but the loan is in default. One court found that the claim should be paid because, despite the default, the insurer had not provided notice of cancellation to the borrower according to the contract. Smith v. Liberty Life Ins. Co., 2005 WL 2445430 (W.D. La. Sept. 30, 2005) (where borrower with credit insurance covering accidental death died in auto accident almost two months after receiving a formal notice of default, court found that insurance company was required to pay claim because it had not provided notice of policy cancellation to the borrower).

(n109)Footnote 107. See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 8.5.5.2 (3rd ed. and Supp.).

(n110)Footnote 108. Occasionally, the insurance may be for a shorter term if, for example, the borrower will reach the age of ineligibility prior to the loan maturation date, or if the scheduled loan term is longer than the insurance term allowed under the state credit insurance code. Because of the expense of insurance coverage for long-term loans (and state law restrictions on long-term insurance), an alternative called "truncated life" has been developed recently, which may cover the first 5 years on a 10 year loan, or 1 to 3 years on shorter loans. Fagg, Credit Life and Disability Insurance 19 (1986). Similarly, disability insurance may provide "critical period coverage," which would cover disability occurring any time during the loan term, but would limit monthly payments to a shorter period. For example, two year critical period coverage may be written on a 10-year loan. Truncated disability may also be written, with the coverage period coinciding with the term covered under a truncated life policy. Id. at 27-28 .

(n111)Footnote 109. NAIC Model Act § 8B.

(n112)Footnote 110. NAIC Model Act § 5.

(n113)Footnote 111. E.g., Iowa Code § 537.2510. It may also be incorporated by a general reference in the credit statute to the applicability of the credit insurance code.

(n114)Footnote 112. Even in states where interest rebates must be calculated by the actuarial method, the Rule of 78 may be authorized for credit insurance rebates. Other authorized methods are the pro rata method, an average of the 78 and pro rata methods, or the Rule of Anticipation. See Fagg, Credit Life and Disability Insurance 182-84 (1986).

(n115)Footnote 113. NAIC Model Act § 8B.

(n116)Footnote 114. E.g., Iowa Code § 537.2510(1) and (6).

(n117)Footnote 115. Williams v. Charter Credit Co., 179 Ga. App. 721, 347 S.E.2d 635 (1986) . The Supreme Court of Mississippi has ruled that an undue delay of a premium refund supports an award for punitive damages. Mic Life Ins. Co. v. Hicks, 825 So. 2d 616 (Miss. 2002) (finding that a punitive damages award is appropriate for a two-year delay, but holding that a $1 million award for failure to refund $637.99 is unconstitutionally excessive and that trial and evidentiary errors in this particular case preclude a punitive damage award against the insurer).

(n118)Footnote 116. A number of cases declined to find usury where there was no indication the insurance was more expensive than if purchased elsewhere, or no circumstances of compulsion, duress, or fraud. Compare the Arkansas Supreme Court's analysis in Poole v. Bates, 520 S.W.2d 273 (Ark. 1975) , with its analyses in Robinson v. Rebsamen Ford, Inc., 530 S.W.2d 660 (Ark. 1975) , and Aclin Ford v. Cordell, 625 S.W.2d 459 (Ark. 1982) . See also Coner v. Morris S. Berman Unlimited, 65 Md. App. 514, 501 A.2d 458 (1985) ($25,000 coverage on a small loan not improper where there was no evidence that the excess coverage added cost to the premium).

(n119)Footnote 117. See, e.g., Anthony v. Community Loans & Inv. Corp., 559 F.2d 1363 (5th Cir. 1977) ; Poole v. Bates, 520 S.W.2d 273 (Ark. 1975) .

(n120)Footnote 118. See § 6.08[7] infra.

(n121)Footnote 119. E.g., Bailey v. Defenbaugh & Co. of Cleveland, Inc., 513 F. Supp. 232, 240-41 (N.D. Miss. 1981) ; Transamerica Fin. Corp. v. Superior Court, 158 Ariz. 115, 761 P.2d 1019 (1988) , rev'g Transamerica Fin. Corp. v. Superior Court, 155 Ariz. 327, 746 P.2d 497 (Ct. App. 1987) ; Tew v. Dixieland Fin., Inc., 527 So. 2d 665 (Miss. 1988) . But see Dixon v. S & S Loan Serv. of Waycross, 754 F. Supp. 1567 (S.D. Ga. 1990) (federal court holds no implied private right of action under Ga. Comp. R. & Regs. § 120, implementing the Georgia Industrial Loan Act). See also § 6.08[7] infra.

(n122)Footnote 120. See Hutson v. Wenatchee Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 22 Wash. App. 91, 588 P.2d 1192, 1198 (1979) .

(n123)Footnote 121. See In re Dickson, 432 F. Supp. 752 (W.D.N.C. 1977) (creditors which are part of bank holding company have fiduciary obligation when selling credit life insurance to borrowers; duty violated by selling insurance at inflated premiums, receiving, and failing to disclose commission); Stone v. Davis, 66 Ohio St. 2d 74, 20 Ohio Op. 3d 64, 419 N.E.2d 1094 (1981) , cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1081, 102 S. Ct. 634, 70 L. Ed. 2d 614 (1981) (court found fiduciary relationship in "trust and confidence" which borrower placed in creditor); Tomaszewski v. McKeon Ford, Inc., 240 N.J. Super. 404, 573 A.2d 501 (1990) (fiduciary duty found where creditor gave advice to borrower). See also Harris v. Ill. Vehicle Premium Fin. Co., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13763 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 7, 2000) ; Hobson v. Lincoln Ins. Agency, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13314 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 7, 2000) (breach of fiduciary duty and UDAP claims survived motions to dismiss where insurance premium finance company and insurance company were connected and failed to disclose this fact to the consumer).

(n124)Footnote 122. Browder v. Hanley-Dawson Cadillac, 62 Ill. App. 3d 623, 379 N.E.2d 1206, 1210-11 (1978) .

(n125)Footnote 123. See, e.g., Union Sec. Life Ins. Co. v. Crocker, 667 So. 2d 688 (Ala. 1995) , on other grounds, 517 U.S. 1230, 116 S. Ct. 1872, 135 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1996) , upon remand from Supreme Court, 709 So. 2d 1118 (Ala. 1997) .

(n126)Footnote 124. See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, §§ 2.2.1, 2.3.1 (7th ed. 2008).

(n127)Footnote 125. N.Y. Banking Law § 6-1. For a discussion of similar laws, see National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 2.3.3.7 (3rd ed. and Supp.).

(n128)Footnote 126. N.Y. Banking Law § 6-1.

(n129)Footnote 127. N.Y. Banking Law § 6-1.

(n130)Footnote 128. E.g., UCCC §§ 4-106, 5-108.

(n131)Footnote 129. E.g., Besta v. Beneficial Loan Co., 855 F.2d 532, 535 (8th Cir. 1988) (a bargain is unconscionable "if it is such as no man in his senses and not under delusion would make on the one hand, and as no honest and fair man would accept on the other"); Williams v. Walker-Thomas Furn. Co., 350 F.2d 445 (D.C. Cir. 1965) ; Henningsen v. Bloomfield Motors, Inc., 32 N.J. 358, 161 A.2d 69 (1960) .

(n132)Footnote 130. See Union Sec. Life Ins. Co. v. Crocker, 667 So. 2d 688 (Ala. 1995) , on other grounds, 517 U.S. 1230, 116 S. Ct. 1872, 135 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1996) , upon remand from Supreme Court, 709 So. 2d 1118 (Ala. 1997) . Note that general claims of fraud regarding the terms of the insurance often will face the argument that a plaintiff has a duty to read the contract and cannot rely on oral representations regarding a written contract. See, e.g., Ross v. Citifinancial, 344 F.3d 458 (5th Cir. 2003) . The Alabama Supreme Court held that in evaluating the factual question of whether the premium calculation method was fraudulently suppressed, a claim will fail where the method for calculating the premiums is contained in the loan documents signed by the borrowers. See Singleton v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 857 So. 2d 803 (Ala. 2003) . Moreover, where plaintiffs brought a purported class action alleging a common course of conduct in the sale of gross, rather than net, coverage of credit insurance, the Alabama Supreme Court found that a class cannot be certified for claims of negligent supervision/hiring that led to fraudulent suppression because the allegations of oral misrepresentations do not allow for common questions of law and fact to predominate. Voyager v. Whitson, 867 So. 2d 1065 (Ala. 2003) .

(n133)Footnote 131. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, §§ 12.6.8 (7th ed. 2008). See also Mark E. Budnitz, Arbitration of Disputes Between Consumers and Financial Institutions: A Serious Threat to Consumer Protection, 10 Ohio St. J. on Disp. Resol. 267 (1995); Michael D. Donovan, David A. Searles, Preserving Judicial Recourse for Consumers: How to Combat Overreaching Arbitration Clauses, 10 Loy. Consumer L. Rep. 269 (1998).

(n134)Footnote 132. Lackey v. Green Tree Fin. Corp., 330 S.C. 388, 498 S.E.2d 898 (Ct. App. 1998) (despite finding the mobile home purchase contract one of adhesion, court found lack of mutuality regarding remedies available to the parties alone insufficient to preclude arbitration); Med Ctr. Cars, Inc. v. Smith, 727 So. 2d 9 (Ala. 1998) (consumer must show facts to support finding that contract was presented on a "take it or leave it" basis).

(n135)Footnote 133. Carnival Cruise Lines, Inc. v. Shute, 499 U.S. 585, 111 S. Ct. 1522, 113 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1991) , superseded by statute as stated in Yang v. M/V Minas Leo, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 2235 (9th Cir. Cal. Jan. 26, 1996) .

(n136)Footnote 134. Med Ctr. Cars, Inc. v. Smith, 727 So. 2d 9 (Ala. 1998) (arbitration clause only appeared in the buyer's order and contained a provision stating that the clause was the "complete and exclusive" agreement; accordingly, arbitration could not be invoked by the dealer when the buyer's order was between the consumer and the manufacturer; also, arbitration clause not binding on consumer when the contract was not signed by the dealer and the contract stated it was not valid unless accepted by the seller); Jones v. Money Tree, 686 So. 2d 1166 (Ala. 1996) (court refused to compel arbitration sought by insurer against borrower who sued the lender and insurer since the insurance contract did not include an arbitration clause; the only arbitration clause existed in the loan document). But see Roberson v. Money Tree of Ala., Inc., 954 F. Supp. 1519 (M.D. Ala. 1997) (court held that credit insurance company could enforce arbitration clause in loan document even though the insurance company was not a party to the loan because borrowers alleged that the lender and the insurance company cooperated in a fraudulent scheme to sell them unnecessary insurance through various suppressions and misrepresentations; thus, borrower's claims against each defendant were founded upon and intertwined with the underlying contact obligations).

(n137)Footnote 135. Harris v. Green Tree Fin. Corp., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20792 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 16, 1997) (in home improvement financing scheme, one-sided arbitration clause which, essentially, bound only the consumer to mandatory arbitration held unconscionable), rev'd, remanded, 183 F.3d 173, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14799 (3d Cir. 1999) ; Patterson v. ITT Consumer Fin. Corp., 14 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563 (1993) , cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1176, 114 S. Ct. 1217, 127 L. Ed. 2d 563 (1994) ; Williams v. Aetna Fin. Co., 83 Ohio St. 3d 464, 700 N.E.2d 859 (1998) , cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1051, 119 S. Ct. 1357, 143 L. Ed. 2d 518 (1999) ; Arnold v. United Cos. Lending Corp., 204 W. Va. 229, 511 S.E.2d 854 (1998) .

(n138)Footnote 136. See Badie v. Bank of Am., 67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 (1st Dist. 1998) , rev. denied, 1999 Cal. LEXIS 1198 (Cal. Feb. 24, 1999) (credit card issuer cannot impose binding arbitration on its cardholders via a bill-stuffer that eliminates the fundamental right to a jury trial even where original agreement stated that "all terms subject to change"); see also National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Arbitration Agreements (5th ed. 2007); National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, §§ 12.6.8 (7th ed. 2008).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 6 The Cost of Credit

1-6 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 6.07

§ 6.07 The Statute: Determining the Applicable Statute and Principles of Statutory Construction

[1] Which Usury Statute Applies?

The first step in analyzing whether a consumer has a claim for violation of a statute regulating credit charges is to determine which statute is applicable. As was discussed earlier, most states have several different usury statutes, so an understanding of the state's regulatory scheme is critical to assure that the transaction is being assessed by the correct standards.

The following characteristics and issues are important in determining the scope of a special usury statute.

[a] Is the Loan for Consumer or Business Purposes?

It is often necessary to examine the purpose of the credit as usury laws frequently distinguish business loans from consumer credit, allowing higher interest rates or completely eliminating usury ceilings for business transactions. For example, the Uniform Consumer Credit Code applies only to credit extended "primarily for a personal, family, household, or agricultural purpose," n1 so the statute does not reach business transactions. More frequently, business loans are treated as a specific exception to a general usury law which would cover business transactions but for the exclusion.

It is also important to examine the statute carefully to determine whether the business purpose exemption displaces all of the otherwise applicable usury statute, or merely certain specific portions of it. Even if the general usury statute contains an exception for business loans, there may still be an applicable criminal usury ceiling, typically in the state criminal code. n2 In California, a loan to a borrower who has assets over $2 million is exempt from the state constitution's usury ceiling if the borrower has a preexisting relationship with the lender or the lender and the borrower are financially sophisticated. n3

Given the number of cases involving corporate or business usury exemptions, surprisingly few opinions discuss in any detail the difference between a business purpose and a personal or individual purpose. n4 The issue is generally viewed as a question of fact which will vary from case to case. n5

[b] Distinctions Based on the Type of Credit

In addition to the common distinction between consumer purpose and business purpose, a number of other distinctions among types of credit may be relevant to determining which usury statute is applicable. The most common distinctions are between open-end (revolving) and closed-end credit, and between loans and installment credit sales. n6

[c] Distinctions Based on the Type of Creditor

Some statutes use a standard relating to either the frequency with which one engages in lending (e.g., applying to one who "regularly extends credit,") n7 or whether one is in the business of making loans. Of course, lending is an integral part of their business for most depository lenders, such as banks and credit unions, so this requirement will typically only present an issue with some non-depository lenders, usually individuals. n8 On the other hand, a court may consider a lender to be "in the business" if he makes only a single loan, at least if done as a business proposition as opposed to a personal accommodation for the borrower. n9

When the creditor is a state bank, credit union, or other depository lender, the special usury statute setting forth the legal standards against which an individual contract is to be measured may be the one applicable to the type of credit involved, such as installment sales or revolving credit, rather than the statute regulating that type of creditor.

National banks, federal savings and loan associations, and federal credit unions, although federally regulated, are also subject to state law, including usury statutes, unless the state law directly conflicts with the federal regulations, in which case the state law is preempted. n10

Under limited circumstances, some state lenders may be treated as federal lenders and may follow federal regulations to the exclusion of state law. Specifically, most housing creditors may invoke Office of Thrift Supervision n11 regulations when they are issuing variable rate or balloon mortgages. n12 Furthermore, state parity laws sometimes grant state depository lenders the right to issue loans on the same terms as federal depository lenders. n13

Non-depository creditors are subject to a state's general usury law unless the creditor has situated itself to take advantage of a specific usury statute which may allow the charging of higher interest rates or otherwise provide the creditor with special advantages.

State laws also sanction specific non-depository institutions established for the purpose of making consumer credit available. The primary examples of this type of lender are finance companies operating under small loan acts, industrial loan acts, or consumer finance acts. The advantage of the often more lucrative rate ceilings available under these laws may be enjoyed only if the company has obtained a license and subjected itself to regulation and supervision. n14 The state licensing statutes which regulate such non-depository creditors are therefore critical in evaluating an individual transaction with such a creditor. n15 Transactions with lenders who are not licensed, but should be, may be void even in the absence of a special statutory provision to that effect. n16 In addition, a court may be willing to require an unlicensed entity to refund any money the consumer has already paid, on an unjust enrichment theory. n17 The fact that a lender has a license does not mean that any loan it makes can take advantage of the higher usury ceiling in the licensing statute. If a licensee makes a loan that does not conform to the requirements of the licensing law, the loan will be subject to the general usury ceiling. n18

In the early 1990s, a special breed of small loan company developed a technique to evade state regulation. These lenders targeted personnel at state military bases, but they would lend only to personnel who were not legal residents of the state where the base was located. Since many state credit laws apply their protections only to residents of the state, these lenders argued that those laws did not apply to their loans.

The loan products that these specialty lenders offer typically have a term of less than a year. An APR in the 30% to 40% range is probably most common, but some are close to 100%, and there may be significant credit insurance charges that are not included in the APR calculation.

In 2006, Congress enacted a new law, the Military Lending Act, that attempted to address this loophole in state lending laws. n18.1 The new law prohibits different treatment under state law of service members and dependents.

The law gave the Department of Defense (DOD) the authority to issue implementing regulations, but the draft regulations could undercut the different treatment provision and its statutory protection for service members. The draft regulations issued in April 2007 n18.2 define the "consumer credit" covered by the Act to include only credit that falls into narrow definitions of payday loans, auto title loans, and refund anticipation loans. The military small loan companies generally fall outside of these categories because they are not secured in the fashion necessary to meet the regulatory definitions, and also have (or soon will have) a term longer than 91 days.

The new law took effect on October 1, 2007. The Secretary of Defense expected to issue final regulations prior to that date. n18.3

If the regulations change so that the military small loans are covered, or if the different treatment provision is interpreted to apply to all loans, the new law would nullify the state regulators' opinion letters that exempted creditors from complying with state laws in their dealings with non-resident military personnel.

[d] Distinctions Based on Loan Size; Loan-Splitting and Loan-Packing to Evade Regulation

Creditors' attempts to claim that loans are too large to be covered by special usury statutes have raised two major questions in litigation: first, what loan fees may be counted as principal for purposes of reaching the threshold loan size needed for the exemption; and, second, when can several smaller loans be claimed as one large loan which qualifies for an exemption.

The practice of adding fees to the face amount of a loan note in order to reach the minimum loan size needed for a usury exemption is sometimes known as "packing" or "padding" the principal. n19 To some extent, packing the loan principal is legal because most states recognize reasonable third party fees, such as credit insurance premiums, and sometimes limited fees for lender services as valid non-interest expenses, which a lender may properly finance as part of the loan principal. n20 However, if a lender includes fees which qualify as interest payments in the face amount of the note, then that note no longer represents the size of the loan for purposes of determining whether the threshold loan size for the usury exemption has been reached. n21 In addition to padding a loan with extra charges, a lender may also do so by requiring or encouraging the borrower to consolidate other debts, or by the added incremental costs that come with soliciting a borrower for frequent refinancings. To the extent such practices work to the disadvantage of borrowers, there may be grounds for challenging these types of loan padding practices under non-usury theories, such as unconscionability or state UDAP statutes. n22

A second question created by statutes that raise or eliminate usury ceilings for loans which exceed a certain size is whether several small loans, which do not individually reach the statutory threshold, may be treated as one loan to which the higher ceiling applies. This question depends on the specific language of the relevant usury statute, but most such statutes seem to apply a transactional approach. In other words, if a borrower and lender signed a contract under which the lender agreed to advance, in several installments, an aggregate sum in excess of the statutory threshold, this series of advances will generally be treated as a single loan, based on a single transaction. n23

Lenders may also engage in loan splitting in order to avoid giving the borrower meaningful information about the cost and terms of the loan. Most borrowers will, for example, be unable to calculate a composite interest rate for two loans issued on the same day. This issue has arisen in the Truth in Lending context, n24 but can also arise in the context of state credit statutes that require credit terms to be disclosed in a single document. In the Truth in Lending context, the test courts have applied is whether "the debtor wants, requests, and expects to get a single loan consummated in a single transaction, but the lender instead documents and makes disclosures for the loan as if it were two separate transactions." n25

Loan-splitting is also attractive to lenders who are operating under a statute that allows per-loan fees. For example, a payday loan law may allow a minimum finance charge of a certain dollar amount regardless of the size of the loan. Splitting a loan into two smaller loans allows the lender to double these fees without extending any additional credit. n26

[e] Distinctions Based on Security Taken

The existence of any security in a credit transaction and the identity of that security is, in most states, a subject that is intertwined with the identification of the particular credit statute that regulates the transaction. In many situations, the existence of a particular security will dictate which special usury statute will apply.

[f] Criminal Usury Statutes

With particularly high rate credit, it may warrant checking whether the state has a criminal usury ceiling which may be applicable. Some states, when deregulating their civil usury statutes, nonetheless retained their criminal usury ceilings, n27 which may be invoked to challenge high cost credit.

[g] Usury in "Deregulated" States

In the late 1970s and early 1980s, numerous state legislatures decided to remove interest ceilings on some or all types of credit transactions. However, even in deregulated states, there usually remain benchmarks, which, if a creditor violates, provide a consumer with possible claims or defenses. This section will discuss one such possible benchmark which may be breached--the credit agreement itself.

During deregulation, many states altered only that portion of the usury statute which set a numerical interest rate ceiling, often modifying to permit any "agreed rate." n28 The most obvious way that a creditor could violate an "agreed rate" usury statute would be to assess charges to which the borrower had not agreed.

A more subtle approach is for lenders to actually charge an above-market interest rate, while stating a lower rate. One way to accomplish this is to inflate the loan principal through the inclusion of various "fees," such as points, service charges, commitment or other fees, or sham closing costs.

The understatement of interest rates in a deregulated state is basically a disclosure problem, n29 and, at least in consumer transactions, it is theoretically addressed by TILA because points and some other fees are generally "finance charges" which must be included in the computation of the TILA's annual percentage rate (APR) disclosure. n30 However, the TILA does not apply to all credit transactions, and, even when it does apply, its disclosures can still be minimized by an unscrupulous lender.

Another answer to an understated interest rate accomplished through the use of one-time fees may lie in the apparently emasculated usury statute. The usury statute sets the usury ceiling at a rate agreed upon by the parties and, under both normal usage and statutory definition, a rate is a percentage figure, not a total charge. n31 The rate stated on the face of the loan note will be lower than the effective interest rate if the lender has charged hidden interest fees, such as points or other charges. Since the rate stated on the face of the note is arguably the only rate to which the parties have agreed, then this rate is the usury ceiling for the transaction. By charging a higher effective rate, the lender has exceeded the usury ceiling, and the frequently serious sanctions that the legislature left on the books when it "deregulated" the usury statute can be invoked. n32

[h] Choice of Laws in Interstate Transactions

When conflicts of law arise in consumer credit cases, consumer attorneys must emphasize to courts the public policy reasons for applying a particular state's usury statute. There are special public policy arguments that support application of a particular state's consumer usury law even when that argument may not apply to application of a commercial usury law. n33

In some situations, contacts with state residents through the Internet can meet the "minimum contacts" jurisdictional test. Courts have generally found that where a defendant uses a website to transact business by entering into contracts and exchanging files, the minimum contacts test is satisfied. n34 Passive websites that do no more than post advertisements that are accessible to people in the forum state are usually found to be insufficient to give the forum state jurisdiction. n35

[i] Electronic Credit Transactions

Another developing issue in consumer credit is paperless lending. While electronic credit transactions offer new convenience for borrowers, they also create new opportunities for fraud. Either federal or state law, or both, may apply to these transactions. n36

Congress gave an impetus to electronic transactions by passing the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act ("E-Sign"), n37 effective October 1, 2000. General jurisdiction may be established either by showing that state residents in fact interacted with the website or that the website actively sought to encourage residents to access it. n38 It provides that neither a signature nor a contract can be denied legal effect, validity, or enforceability solely because it is in electronic form. n39 It also provides that "if a statute, regulation, or other rule of law requires that information relating to a transaction or transactions in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce be provided or made available to a consumer in writing," the information can be provided electronically, as long as certain conditions are met. n40

The new statute applies not only to transactions that the consumer initiates electronically, but also to traditional paper transactions. It authorizes creditors to provide information electronically in transactions that are otherwise conducted entirely on paper, as long as the new statute's requirements are satisfied. For consumer transactions, the key requirement is that the consumer must consent in a very specific way to receive electronic disclosures. n41

Many state credit laws require that the credit contract be in writing. Because of E-Sign, a contract cannot be invalidated solely because it is electronic rather than written, or solely because it was electronically signed. n42 These same credit laws also typically require that the consumer be given a copy of the written contract. E-Sign will override the requirement that delivery of the information be in written rather than electronic format, but only if the consumer follows E-Sign's specific electronic consent procedures and the transaction meets the other requirements of E-Sign. Even if the consumer consents, however, E-Sign does not authorize electronic provision of certain important notices such as foreclosure or utility termination notices. E-Sign also establishes important consumer protections regarding document integrity, so that consumers will be able to retain electronic documents and produce them accurately for later reference. n43

The federal statute allows states to supersede some of its provisions, including its key consumer protection provisions, by passing the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act ("UETA") n44 or other state laws that are technologically neutral and consistent with the federal statute. n45 By 2002, over three-quarters of the states had adopted some form of UETA. n46

Like E-Sign, UETA provides that contracts, other records, and signatures cannot be denied legal effect because they are in electronic form. n47 It also echoes E-Sign in providing that electronic documents and electronic signatures satisfy state laws that require writings. n48 But UETA is different in many ways from the federal statute. First, it does not require E-Sign's specific consent procedures. It merely requires that the parties agree to conduct transactions by electronic means. n49 Second, UETA does not make exceptions for important documents like foreclosure notices. Third, UETA allows oral records for all purposes, n50 and its document integrity requirements are significantly weaker than E-Sign's. States that displace E-Sign by enacting UETA have the option of preserving these consumer protections, however. n51

Except for laws that require physical signatures or written documents, both E-Sign and UETA leave state consumer protection and credit statutes unchanged. E-Sign provides that it does not "limit, alter, or otherwise affect any requirement imposed by a statute, regulation, or rule of law relating to the rights and obligations of persons under such statute, regulation, or rule of law other than a requirement that contracts or other records be written, signed, or in nonelectronic form." n52 UETA does not have such a specific savings clause, but states "[a] transaction subject to this Act is also subject to other applicable substantive law." n53 Neither E-Sign n54 nor UETA n55 requires the use or acceptance of electronic contracts or signatures.

Neither the federal statute nor UETA applies to a contract or other record (electronic document) "to the extent that it is governed by" Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code, n56 but the 1999 revision to Article 9, which all states have adopted, has its own provisions allowing electronic documents in secured transactions. n57

When confronting an electronic credit transaction, the key questions for the consumer's attorney are:

- Did the consumer actually agree to the terms of the electronic contract?

- Does the electronic document that the creditor produces accurately reflect the terms of the transaction? If the consumer contests the creditor's version of the terms of the transaction, can the creditor prove that it met E-Sign's or UETA's document integrity requirements?

- If state or federal law requires the contract, credit disclosures or later documents to be provided in writing to the consumer, do the electronic documents satisfy this requirement? If not, then the consumer has the right to whatever remedies the state or federal law provides.

- Can the creditor prove delivery of any documents that it claims were delivered electronically? n58

A number of other issues may arise in electronic credit transactions, including which law applies, whether the contract was in a format that allowed retention and accurate reproduction for later reference by the consumer, and did the consumer actually have the equipment to keep it? n59

[2] Statutory Construction

[a] Applying General Rules of Interpretation

Usury is a statutory offense rather than an infraction of common law, and principles of statutory construction come into play in the many cases where the controlling usury statutes are vague or ambiguous. n60

The fact that specific usury ceilings did not exist at common law can be misleading: To some it suggests that the interest restrictions contained in modern usury statutes are novel restrictions on previously unregulated lending and, thus, these restrictions should be narrowly construed because they would be in derogation of common law. In fact, at early common law, it was forbidden to charge any interest at all, and common law recognized an action to recover usury (i.e., interest) paid.

Thus, usury statutes are actually in derogation of common law only to the extent that they allow the charging of interest, not to the extent that they restrict interest charges. Therefore, when applying the rule that statutes in derogation of common law should be strictly construed, one must conclude that it is the right to charge interest in modern usury statutes which should be strictly construed. Conversely, restrictions on that right should be broadly interpreted. n61

The conflict between the broad construction of remedial statutes and the narrow construction of penal statutes also may cloud statutory construction issues. Specifically, usury statutes are remedial to the extent that they seek to protect necessitous debtors from the exploitation of avaricious lenders n62 and to compensate debtors for the damages they have incurred through the payment of usurious interest. The remedial purposes indicate that ambiguous provisions should be broadly construed to protect the consumer in usury statutes. n63 Moreover, consumer credit regulatory statutes may specify that they are to be construed broadly to effectuate their ends, and such specific statutory directive must supersede any contrary common law. n64

On the other hand, many usury statutes go beyond compensating the victims of usury and impose penalties and forfeitures upon creditors who are guilty of usury. n65 These remedies are penal, and their presence suggests that usury statutes should be strictly construed. n66

The result of these conflicts often is a legal deadlock which effectively leaves the court free to construe usury statutes as it wishes, and usury decisions which involve any degree of statutory construction frequently seem based as much on the equities of the case or the predisposition of the court as on any compelling logical reason for choosing one rule of construction over another. n67

[b] Retroactive Amendment of Usury Statutes

After the dramatic changes in usury law during the 1970s and 1980s, many creditors whose conduct violated existing usury statutes claimed that subsequent amendments to those statutes retroactively validated the theretofore illicit practices. Many courts accepted this argument n68 even though the retroactive application of laws in general runs contrary to principles of American jurisprudence. n69

As affirmed by the U.S. Supreme Court in Ewell v. Daggs, n70 it is fairly clear that the retroactive repeal of a usury statute or the retroactive increase of a usury ceiling does not unconstitutionally infringe on a borrower's rights. However, modifications of usury laws are not universally given retroactive effect.

If a usury statute expressly states in a savings clause that its application should be prospective only, or that it should not affect pending litigation, then that statute clearly should not be given retroactive effect, although the precise scope of such savings clauses is often disputed. n71 However, the presence of a savings clause is not a prerequisite to finding that a legislature intended to amend a usury statute prospectively. n72

When the legislative intent regarding the effective date of a usury statute is not clear, a few courts have given the relevant statute only prospective effect, n73 despite the statement in Ewell that retrospective effect should be presumed under these circumstances. n74 Advocates should check their state constitutions and state laws to determine whether, as a matter of state law, there are any limitations to the state legislature's ability to apply a statutory change retroactively.

The analysis previously presented in this section has presumed that statutory modifications have raised or eliminated usury limitations, thus legalizing previously usurious transactions. It is, of course, possible for an amended usury statute to prohibit transactions which had previously been legal. n75 Under such circumstances, it is clear that usury statutes do not have retroactive effect because retroactive application would impair the existing contractual obligation. n76

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Banking LawNational BanksInterest & UsuryGeneral OverviewBanking LawNational BanksInterest & UsuryUsury LitigationContracts LawDebtor & Creditor Relations

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. UCCC §§ 2.104, 2.106, 3.104 (1968 Model Code); UCCC §§ 1.301(12), 1.301(14), 1.301(15) (1974 Model Code). See also Borowski v. Falleder, 296 A.D.2d 301, 744 N.Y.S.2d 177 (2002) (loan to individual in personal capacity is not business loan even if borrower owned a business and put the loan to corporate use); Edwards v. Alabama Farm Bureau Mut. Casualty Ins. Co., 453 So. 2d 746 (Ala. Ct. App. 1983) (definition of consumer credit transaction under Alabama "Mini-Code"). See generally Hall v. Owen County State Bank, 175 Ind. App. 150, 370 N.E.2d 918 (1978) ; Bill Brown Mfg. Inc. v. Crane, 589 P.2d 708 (Okla. Ct. App. 1978) . See, e.g., Smith v. Eisen, 97 Ark. App. 130, 245 S.W.3d 160, 2006 Ark. App. LEXIS 858 (Ark. Ct. App. Dec. 13, 2006) (sale-repurchase agreement for home was loan); Pinchuck v. Canzoneri, 920 So. 2d 713 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2006) ; Decision Point, Inc. v. Reece & Nichols Realtors, Inc., 144 P.3d 706 (Kan. 2006) (loans were for consumer purposes where they were used for medical expenses, household expenses, and gambling).

(n2)Footnote 2. Hufnagel v. George, 135 F. Supp. 2d 406 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (New York's 25% criminal usury ceiling applied to large business loan that was otherwise exempt from civil usury statute); Tower Funding, Ltd. v. David Berry Realty, Inc., 755 N.Y.S.2d 413 (App. Div. 2003) (defense of criminal usury may be asserted even by a corporation).

(n3)Footnote 3. Cal. Corp. Code § 25118. See Raceway Props., L.L.C. v. LSOF Carlsbad Land L.P., 157 Fed. Appx. 959 (9th Cir. 2005) (unpublished, citation limited) (finding borrower to be financially sophisticated).

(n4)Footnote 4. In addition to the usury cases cited infra in this section, cases decided under the Truth in Lending Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1601 et seq. , may provide persuasive authority for the definition of "consumer" credit. (Note, however, that the current TILA excludes credit extended for agricultural purposes from its definition, unlike many state usury laws.) See, e.g., Tower v. Moss, 635 F.2d 1161 (5th Cir. 1980) (home improvement transaction primarily for consumer purpose although home had been leased for nominal rent); Gallegos v. Stokes, 593 F.2d 372 (10th Cir. 1979) (purchase of truck primarily for personal use where borrower also intended to use truck for business but did not have an on-going business nor the prospect of establishing one). See § 1.03[1][a] supra.

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Jansen v. Nu-West, Inc., 2000 Wash. App. LEXIS 1993 (Wash. App. Aug. 17, 2000) (if borrower's oral representations are different from the written representations, jury must decide the facts).

(n6)Footnote 6. In some circumstances, there may be a higher ceiling for credit sales than for certain loans, which creates an incentive to disguise the transaction as a credit sale. See De La Rosa v. Western Funding, Inc., 24 P.3d 637 (Colo. Ct. App. 2001) .

(n7)Footnote 7. E.g., Ala. Code § 5-19-1(3), interpreted in In re Crotzer, 147 B.R. 252 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1992) (creditor who extended real estate secured credit 26 times during the year prior to transaction and 24 times during the year of transaction, as shown by county records, fell within that definition); Iowa Code § 537.1301 (14)(a)(1) ("regularly engaged in the business of making loans").

(n8)Footnote 8. The legal or contractual usury statute, however, may apply.

(n9)Footnote 9. See, e.g., Gottesfeld v. Kaminski, 216 N.J. Super. 679, 524 A.2d 872, 875 (App. Div. 1987) (that is apparently the test used). But see Rivera v. Schlick, 887 A.2d 492 (D.C. 2005) (lender was not in business of lending money so not covered by loan shark law even though he made three loans, where they were all part of a single real estate rehabilitation endeavor by a former business partner).

(n10)Footnote 10. See generally § 6.02 supra.

(n11)Footnote 11. Prior to August 9, 1989, the regulations were those of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. That agency was abolished and its functions transferred to the newly created OTS.

(n12)Footnote 12. See § 6.02[7] supra. Some balloon mortgages may also be subject to the Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act. See Ch. 2 supra.

(n13)Footnote 13. See § 6.02[10] supra.

(n14)Footnote 14. See, e.g., Ala. Code § 5-19-22; Farmer v. Hypo Holdings, Inc., 675 So. 2d 387 (Ala. 1996) (a mere assignee of a loan which makes no direct loans in Alabama or any other state is exempt from licensing requirements because it did not meet the definition of a creditor; the original creditor need not be licensed because the transaction was a "consumer credit sale" and not a "consumer loan"). See also RCDI Constr. v. Spaceplan/Architecture, Planning & Interiors, P.A., 148 F. Supp. 2d 607 (W.D.N.C. 2001) (contract with unlicensed construction firm is unenforceable), aff'd on other grounds, 29 Fed. Appx. 120, 2002 U.S. App. LEXIS 640 (4th Cir. 2002) . (It is evident that advocates must review the pigeonholes in the relevant state statute to determine if licensing is required given the nature of the transaction.) Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1321.02; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit 8, § 2201; UCCC § 3.502 (1968); UCCC § 2.301 (1974). Further, unlicensed lenders cannot take advantage of higher-rate special usury statutes by use of a contractual clause providing that the parties agree that the transaction will be subject to such a statute. Floyd v. Baton Rouge Sash & Door Co., 502 So. 2d 1073 (La. 1987) . See generally National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 9.2.4.5 (3rd ed. and Supp.).

(n15)Footnote 15. Some states have schemes which will require reference to both the licensing statute governing the creditor and the special usury statute governing the type of credit. In Iowa, for example, when making a consumer loan, a finance company must comply with both the Iowa Regulated Loan Act, Ch. 536, and the Iowa Consumer Credit Code, Ch. 537. See Iowa Code § 536.13(7). See also Schmidt v. Beneficial Fin. Co., 400 A.2d 1124 (Md. Ct. App. 1979) .

The special licensing statutes also supplant general usury statutes where there is a conflict. Benoit v. United Cos. Mortg., 504 So. 2d 196 (Miss. 1987) .

(n16)Footnote 16. Beneficial Hawaii, Inc. v. Kida, 30 P.3d 895 (Haw. 2001) (loan arranged by unlicensed broker is void and unenforceable pursuant to Hawaii statute; holder may have equitable lien but only in amount of consideration it paid for the obligation); Rancman v. Interim Settlement Funding Corp., 2001 Ohio App. LEXIS 4818 (Oct. 31, 2001) (loan made by unlicensed lender void under Small Loan Act); Fabricant v. Sears Roebuck, Clearinghouse No. 54563B (S.D. Fla. Mar. 5, 2002) (citing Restatement; failure to obtain license to sell credit insurance makes contract void). See also Mincks Agri Ctr., Inc. v. Bell Farms, Inc., 611 N.W.2d 270 (Iowa 2000) .

(n17)Footnote 17. Kowalski v. Cedars of Portsmouth Condo. Ass'n, 769 A.2d 344 (N.H. 2001) (unlicensed real estate broker).

(n18)Footnote 18. Agapitov v. Lerner, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 837 (Ct. App. 2003) .

(n19)Footnote 18.1. 10 U.S.C. § 987(d)(2). The law was an amendment to the John Warner National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2007, but it is commonly referred to as the Talent/Nelson Military Lending Act.

(n20)Footnote 18.2. 72 Fed. Reg. 18,157 (Apr. 11, 2007) .

(n21)Footnote 18.3. Department of Defense, Notice with Request for Comments, 71 Fed. Reg. 70,512 (Dec. 5, 2006) .

(n22)Footnote 19. In a state with a small loan law but no general interest ceiling, the incentives for a less than scrupulous lender to pack loan principal can be powerful. First, by inflating the principal amount, the lender does not actually lend as much money as it would normally have to lend to escape the small loan limits, so its risk is reduced and it can lend more elsewhere. Second, except under careful examination, the loan appears to be free from the small loan law, so the lender can apparently charge whatever interest rate it wants. Third, if the inflated principal exceeds $25,000 and is not secured by the borrower's home, the loan appears to be free from Truth in Lending disclosures, except, again, under careful examination. Finally, inflating loan principal enables the lender to understate the rate it is actually charging.

(n23)Footnote 20. See § 6.05[3] supra.

(n24)Footnote 21. See Aetna Fin. Co. v. Darwin, 38 Wash. App. 921, 691 P.2d 581 (1984) (textbook case of packing principal); Sparkman & McLean Income Fund v. Wald, 10 Wash. App. 765, 520 P.2d 173 (1974) .

(n25)Footnote 22. See § 6.09 infra.

(n26)Footnote 23. See Citizens & Southern S. DeKalb Bank v. Watkins, 236 Ga. 759, 225 S.E.2d 266 (1976) (stating rule). See also Mohr, Inc. v. Bank of Cal., 443 F. Supp. 370 (D. Or. 1978) , aff'd, 622 F.2d 594 (9th Cir. 1980) (line of credit); Negaard v. Miller Constr. Co., 396 N.W.2d 833 (Minn. Ct. App. 1986) (debts aggregated in construction contract). See also Rockstad v. Erickson, 113 P.3d 1215 (Alaska 2005) (loan was single loan where it was represented by a single promissory note, regardless of whether lender paid proceeds by two checks or treated transaction as two loans).

(n27)Footnote 24. See National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending, § 4.9.2.2 (6th ed. 2007 and supp.).

(n28)Footnote 25. See Rendler v. Corus Bank, 154 F. Supp. 2d 1365 (N.D. Ill. 2001) , aff'd, 272 F.3d 992 (7th Cir. 2001) ; MorEquity v. Naeem, 118 F. Supp. 2d 885, 894-95 (N.D. Ill. 2000) .

(n29)Footnote 26. See Bellizan v. Easy Money of La., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13419 (E.D. La. July 19, 2002) (denying summary judgment to payday lender whose loan-splitting allegedly violated payday loan statute).

(n30)Footnote 27. See, e.g., Georgia, 5% per month (Ga. Code Ann. § 7-4-18); New York, 25% (Penal Law § 190.40; Gen. Oblig. Law § 5-521(3)); New Jersey, 30% (N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2C:21-19(a)). See, e.g., Florida, 25% (Fla. Stat. § 687.071(2) (statute also prescribes a civil penalty for violating criminal usury statute)). See also People v. Farrell, 218 A.D.2d 749, 630 N.Y.S.2d 791 (1995) (criminal usury conviction upheld; terms at issue 3% weekly), appeal denied, 87 N.Y.2d 846, 638 N.Y.S.2d 604, 661 N.E.2d 1386 (1995) . Massachusetts has a criminal usury statute, but it allows lenders to exceed the cap if they register with the Massachusetts Attorney General before making the loan. See Cannarozzi v. Fiumara, 371 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2004) (notifying attorney general at time of refinancing was sufficient even to invoke exemption for new loan even though original loan also exceeded cap); Clean Harbors, Inc. v. John Hancock Life Ins. Co., 833 N.E.2d 611 (Mass. App. Ct. 2005) (filing with attorney general a few hours after making the loan is a violation, but may be de minimis).

(n31)Footnote 28. Another formula would limit the contract rate to ten percent unless the parties agree to a higher rate. Under many such statutes the agreement must be in writing. Oral agreements for a higher rate (in this example, for more than 10% interest) would then be usurious or, at least, unenforceable. See In re Bradford Realty, Inc., 55 B.R. 218 (Bankr. D.N.H. 1985) (oral agreement unenforceable); Northwestern Equip., Inc. v. Badinger, 403 N.W.2d 8 (N.D. 1987) (written agreement met by merely mailing unsigned invoices to borrower; statute specifically provided that, as between merchants, that constituted a written agreement unless the borrower objected to it in writing).

(n32)Footnote 29. See Chroniak v. Golden Inv. Corp., 983 F.2d 1140 (1st Cir. 1993) (specifying only dollar amount of interest where statute required disclosure of rate of interest and set cap at agreed upon rate of interest violates that statute and also is a UDAP violation; court notes that full disclosure of interest rates takes on added significance with the elimination of usury ceilings). Id. at 1147 . Cf. Fidelity Fin. Servs. v. Hicks, 574 N.E.2d 15 (Ill. App. Ct. 1991) (in ruling that statute deregulating interest rates did not implicitly repeal a statutory limitation on points, court notes possibility of misuse of points to gouge consumers, undercut legitimate competition, and discriminate against disfavored borrowers).

(n33)Footnote 30. Some other types of hidden interest, such as brokers' fees, closing attorneys' fees, or inflated closing costs, however, are often excluded from the calculation of the TIL APR as well, as they are not categorically considered a finance charge, as are points. (In some factual circumstances, though, they are.) For a discussion of how finance charges may be hidden in TILA disclosures, see generally Ch. 1, § 1.05[2][f] (TILA) supra.

(n34)Footnote 31. Chroniak v. Golden Inv. Corp., 983 F.2d 1140 (1st Cir. 1993) .

(n35)Footnote 32. Other possible challenges are discussed in § 6.09 infra.

(n36)Footnote 33. See State ex rel. Meierhenry v. Spiegel, Inc., 277 N.W.2d 298 (S.D. 1979) , appeal dismissed, 444 U.S. 804, 100 S. Ct. 25, 62 L. Ed. 2d 17 (1979) (stronger public policy concerns in consumer transactions). For additional analysis of this issue, see National Consumer Law Center, Cost of Credit § 9.2.9.

(n37)Footnote 34. See, e.g., Zippo Mfg. Co. v. Zippo Dot Com, Inc., 952 F. Supp. 1119 (W.D. Pa. 1997) (sale of services to forum state residents by credit card through website gave forum state jurisdiction over trademark infringement case); Obabueki v. IBM, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11810 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 14, 2001) (jurisdiction established by website that allowed users to download applications and request pre-employment screening searches via the Internet).

(n38)Footnote 35. See, e.g., Search Force, Inc. v. Data Force Int'l, Inc., 112 F. Supp. 2d 771 (S.D. Ind. 2000) (job postings on sites like Monster.com and Dice.com are analogous to passive ads); Uncle Sam's Safari Outfitters, Inc. v. Uncle Sam's Army Navy Outfitters-Manhattan, Inc., 96 F. Supp. 2d 919 (E.D. Mo. 2000) ; GTE New Media Servs. Inc. v. Bellsouth Corp., 199 F.3d 1343 (D.C. Cir. 2000) (maintaining a website that is accessible to residents of the jurisdiction is insufficient); Bird v. Parsons, 2002 U.S. App. LEXIS 9543 (6th Cir. May 21, 2002) (doing business over Internet with residents of forum statute sufficient for specific jurisdiction although not for general jurisdiction); Arnold v. Goldstar Fin. Sys., Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15564 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 22, 2002) (acceptance of payment on webpage is "roughly analogous to [defendant] setting up a twenty-four hour storefront [in the forum state]").

(n39)Footnote 36. Electronic transactions of all sorts are examined in detail in Ch. 9 of National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law (2d ed. 2002).

(n40)Footnote 37. Pub. L. No. 106-229, 114 Stat. 464 (June 30, 2000), codified at 15 U.S.C. §§ 7001 et seq.

(n41)Footnote 38. Biometics v. New Womyn, 112 F. Supp. 2d 869 (E.D. Mo. 2000) (jurisdiction established where website contained a "sales rep. locator" feature with a box labeled "Missouri" for the user to check off).

(n42)Footnote 39. 15 U.S.C. § 7001(a).

(n43)Footnote 40. 15 U.S.C. § 7001(c).

(n44)Footnote 41. See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 9.2.10.4 (4th ed. 2009).

(n45)Footnote 42. 15 U.S.C. § 7001(a).

(n46)Footnote 43. See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 9.2.10.6 (4th ed. 2009); National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law Ch. 11 (3rd ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n47)Footnote 44. UETA can be found in the pocket part to Part 1 of 7A Uniform Laws Annotated. The text of UETA is also posted on the website of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, www.nccusl.org, along with a list of the states that have adopted it.

(n48)Footnote 45. 15 U.S.C. § 7002(a).

(n49)Footnote 46. The complex question of whether a state's adoption of UETA has superseded portions of E-Sign is discussed in detail in National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law § 9.2 (4th ed. 2009).

(n50)Footnote 47. UETA § 7.

(n51)Footnote 48. UETA § 7.

(n52)Footnote 49. UETA § 5(b).

(n53)Footnote 50. UETA § 2 cmt. 6, 7.

(n54)Footnote 51. See National Consumer Law Center, Cost of Credit § 9.2.10.2.5 (discussion of states that have adopted UETA after E-Sign's passage); National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law § 9.2 (4th ed. 2009).

(n55)Footnote 52. 15 U.S.C. § 7001(b)(1). See Comments of Sen. Leahy, 106th Cong., 2d Sess., 146 Cong. Rec. S. 5221 (June 15, 2000) ("the bill does not limit any legal requirement or prohibition other than those involving the writing, signature, or paper form of a contract").

(n56)Footnote 53. UETA § 3(d).

(n57)Footnote 54. 15 U.S.C. § 7001(b)(2); see Prudential Ins. Co. v. Prusky, 413 F. Supp. 2d 489 (E.D. Pa. 2005) .

(n58)Footnote 55. UETA § 5(a).

(n59)Footnote 56. 15 U.S.C. § 7003(a)(3); UETA § 3(b).

(n60)Footnote 57. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions §§ 3.2.3, 10.4.8 (6th ed. 2005 and supp.).

(n61)Footnote 58. See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 9.2.10.5 (4th ed. 2009).

(n62)Footnote 59. See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 9.2.10.6 (4th ed. 2009). See 15 U.S.C. § 7001(e) (electronic documents may be denied legal effect if they are not in a form that is capable of being retained and accurately reproduced by all parties); UETA § 8(a) (electronic documents must be capable of being retained by recipient). Even though UETA does not have a specific requirement regarding accurate reproduction of electronic documents, without such procedures a seller would have difficulty laying a foundation for introduction of the document into evidence.

(n63)Footnote 60. Note that statutory construction is only an issue when some ambiguity exists for a court to construe. If statutory language is clear, it must be applied as written. See Rhodes v. Hartford, 201 Conn. 89, 513 A.2d 124 (1986) . See also In re Jordan, 91 B.R. 673 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1988) (statute governing late charge ambiguous as to whether allowed 11/2% calculated on full delinquent balance or 11/2% calculated on only delinquent installment; court looked to general principles of statutory and contract law to interpret).

(n64)Footnote 61. See generally Dennis v. Bradbury, 236 F. Supp. 683 (D. Colo. 1964) , aff'd, 368 F.2d 905 (10th Cir. 1966) ; Whitworth & Yancy v. Adams, 5 Rand. 333, 26 Va. 333 (1827) . Note, Interest Rates and the Law: A History of Usury, 1981 Ariz. St. L.J. 61; Horach, A Survey of the General Usury Laws, 8 Law and Contemp. Probs. 7 (1941).

(n65)Footnote 62. See, e.g., Watkins v. Miss. Bar, 589 So. 2d 660 (Miss. 1991) (central purpose of usury law is to protect borrowers from overreaching creditors); Scarr v. Boyer, 818 P.2d 381, 383 (Mont. 1991) ("Usury statutes protect borrowers who lack real bargaining power against overreaching by creditors"); Schneider v. Phelps, 41 N.Y.2d 238, 359 N.E.2d 1361, 1365 (1977) ; Nelson v. Associates Fin. Servs. Co., 253 Mich. App. 580, 659 N.W.2d 635 (Mich. Ct. App. 2002) (purpose of restrictions on prepayment penalties is to protect loan customers from being locked in to high interest rates). See generally Steven W. Bender, Rate Regulation at the Crossroads of Usury and Unconscionability: The Case for Regulating Abusive and Commercial Interest Rates Under the Unconscionability Standard, 31 Houston L. Rev. 721 (1994).

(n66)Footnote 63. For cases adopting liberal construction of usury statutes because of their remedial purposes, see, e.g., GMAC v. Mid-West Chevrolet Co., 66 F.2d 1 (10th Cir. 1933) ; In re Feldman, 259 F. Supp. 218 (D. Conn. 1966) ; State v. Weiner, 42 Del. 62, 28 A.2d 16 (1942) ; Fin. Co. v. Catterton, 161 Md. 650, 158 A. 16 (1932) (small loan law); Williams v. Standard Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 76 Md. App. 452, 545 A.2d 708 (1988) (Maryland usury statute interpreted as remedial and not penal for purpose of applying statute of limitations). Perez v. Rent-A-Center, 892 A.2d 1255, 1268 (N.J. 2006) (RISA must be liberally construed). See also Pakay v. Davis, 367 Ark. 421, 241 S.W.3d 257, 2006 Ark. LEXIS 512 (Ark. Oct. 12, 2006) (applying general rule that provisions of state constitution should be liberally construed; giving continued effect to constitutional usury cap by substituting different FRB rate for one that FRB discontinued).

(n67)Footnote 64. E.g., Iowa Code § 537.1102. See generally 17 Am. Jur. 2d Consumer Protection § 270 (state credit construed to effectuate purpose and courts strict in requiring compliance).

(n68)Footnote 65. See, e.g., Seidel v. 18 East 17th St. Owners, Inc., 79 N.Y.2d 735, 598 N.E.2d 7, 9 (1992) (New York's severe penalty of voiding the loan reflects legislative view that severe "consequences are necessary to deter the evils of usury").

(n69)Footnote 66. For cases adopting strict construction of usury laws because of their penal nature, see, e.g., Thrift v. Hubbard, 44 F.3d 348 (5th Cir. 1995) , reh'g denied, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 6443 (5th Cir. Mar. 16, 1995) ; Allied Chem. Corp. v. Jack MacKay, 695 F.2d 854 (5th Cir. 1983) ; Morosani v. First Nat'l Bank of Atlanta, 539 F. Supp. 1171 (N.D. Ga. 1982) ; Indian Springs State Bank v. Kelley's Auto Supply, Inc., 9 Kan. App. 2d 211, 675 P.2d 379 (1984) ; Ranson v. C.A. Snyder, 222 Miss. 248, 75 So. 2d 738 (1954) ; Crisman v. Corbin, 169 Or. 332, 128 P.2d 959 (1942) ; Maners v. Lexington County Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 275 S.C. 31, 267 S.E.2d 422 (1980) ; Standard Sav. Ass'n v. Greater New Canaan Missionary Baptist Church, 786 S.W.2d 774 (Tex. Ct. App. 1990) .

(n70)Footnote 67. See, e.g., Amaro v. Capital One Bank, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8373 (N.D. Ill. May 19, 1998) (in construing Virginia law in the exportation context, an Illinois court opted for the position argued by the bank, i.e., the provision in Virginia law relating to revolving accounts which permitted banks to charge any "charges and fees" as agreed to by the parties applied; in contrast, another provision specifically involving late fees (the issue in the lawsuit) which arguably applied to all credit transactions and limited the fee to 5% of the late installment, though providing greater consumer protection, was rejected).

(n71)Footnote 68. But see Merritt v. Knox, 380 S.E.2d 160, 162 (N.C. Ct. App. 1989) ("majority rule" is that "changes in the legal rate will not be applied retroactively"); Arguelles v. Kaplan, 736 S.W.2d 782 (Tex. Ct. App. 1987) (settled rule that question of usury is determined at inception of contract; subsequent change in permissible rate will not validate it). But see Dua v. Comcast Cable, 805 A.2d 1061 (Md. 2002) (retroactive authorization of late fees on cable TV bills abrogated a vested right so it violates state constitution).

(n72)Footnote 69. Ex post facto laws are expressly prohibited by the U.S. Constitution. U.S. Const. art. 1, § 10, cl. 1. However, it is recognized that the ex post facto prohibition applies only to criminal statutes, See generally Annot., 53 L. Ed. 2d 1146 (1978) (Supreme Court's views on scope of ex post facto clause), and that Congress or the states may adopt civil statutes with retrospective effect so long as other constitutional limitations are respected. Most notably for the purposes of usury amendments, retrospective statutes may not impair the obligation of existing contracts, U.S. Const. art. 1, § 10, cl. 1, and may not deny due process. U.S. Const. amends. 5, 14.

(n73)Footnote 70. 108 U.S. 143, 2 S. Ct. 408, 27 L. Ed. 682 (1883) .

(n74)Footnote 71. See Mickler v. Maranatha Realty Assoc., 20 B.R. 346 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1982) ; Credit Alliance Corp. v. Timmco Equip. Co., 507 So. 2d 657 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1987) (statute amending usury penalty expressly operative prospectively); Hamon v. St. Petersburg Bank & Trust Co., 379 So. 2d 1300 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1980) , rev'd on other grounds, 414 So. 2d 1071 (Fla. 1982) ; Farmland Enters. v. Schuemann, 212 Neb. 342, 322 N.W.2d 665 (1982) ; Hazen v. Cook, 55 Or. App. 66, 637 P.2d 195 (1981) .

(n75)Footnote 72. See Southern Guar. Corp. v. Doyle, 353 S.E.2d 510 (Ga. 1987) (amendment given prospective effect despite absence of savings clause); Norstar Bank v. Pickard & Anderson, 547 N.Y.S.2d 734 (1989) (no savings clause in amendment, but general provision in statute prohibits interest rate exceeding that authorized at time loan was made and thus limits amendment to prospective effect unless amendment expressly states otherwise); Hardwick v. Austin Gallery of Oriental Rugs, Inc., 779 S.W.2d 438 (Tex. Ct. App. 1989) (intended prospectivity found present by implication in statutory exception providing that increased interest rate would apply to renewals and extensions; only if increase were prospective would this exception be necessary; court also refused to apply new rate even though "charge" in issue occurred after date of amendment).

(n76)Footnote 73. See Mapes v. Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc., 584 F. Supp. 508 (D. Nev. 1984) (applying Nevada law); Walker v. Pliss, 34 B.R. 432 (Bankr. D. Or. 1983) (applying Oregon law); Broussard v. Crochet Broussard & Co., 477 So. 2d 166 (La. Ct. App. 1985) ; U.S. Life Title Ins. Co. v. Brents, 676 S.W.2d 839 (Mo. Ct. App. 1984) ; Hazen v. Cook, 55 Or. App. 66, 637 P.2d 195 (1981) (statutory increase in interest ceiling was not retroactive, but forfeiture of loan principal to the state was penal and was repealed retroactively).

(n77)Footnote 74. Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U.S. 143, 2 S. Ct. 408, 27 L. Ed. 682 (1883) .

(n78)Footnote 75. Also, previously unregulated transactions can be brought under regulation, but statutes accomplishing this normally do not have retroactive reach. See, e.g., Givens v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 720 F. Supp. 160 (S.D. Ala. 1988) , aff'd mem., 885 F.2d 879 (11th Cir. 1989) (Alabama Rental Purchase Agreements Act).

(n79)Footnote 76. See Hoyne v. Prudential Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 711 S.W.2d 899 (Mo. Ct. App. 1986) ; Garrett v. Citizens Sav. Ass'n, 636 S.W.2d 104 (Mo. Ct. App. 1982) ; Weinstein v. Investors S&L Ass'n, 154 N.J. Super. 164, 381 A.2d 53 (1977) .

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 6 The Cost of Credit

1-6 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 6.08

§ 6.08 The Trial: The Right to a Jury Trial; Elements of a Prima Facie Case; Creditor Defenses and Borrowers' Remedies

[1] Right to Jury Trial

The right to a trial by jury in a state court is not addressed by the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution and is, therefore, a matter of state law, at least in civil cases. n1

The right to a jury in usury cases is seldom litigated because in the average usury case the presence of the right is obvious. Usury is usually raised as a debtor defense or counterclaim in the creditor's action on a debt. n2 Such a creditor action is a suit seeking the recovery of money damages for breach of contract, which is the epitome of an action recognized at common law. n3 The debtor can thus request a jury by right as the defendant in the creditor's suit.

Obtaining a jury is similarly seldom a problem in affirmative usury actions. The one circumstance in which a debtor may have trouble obtaining a jury to hear a usury claim exists when the creditor is attempting to foreclose on property given as security for the debt and the debtor is raising usury as a defense to the foreclosure. n4 Even when there is a right to a jury trial, some issues may be questions of law. For example, a Washington court has held that it is for the jury to decide what the borrower told the lender about the purpose of a loan, but whether these facts make it a business loan is a question of law for the court. n5

[2] Elements of a Prima Facie Case

[a] Loan or Forbearance

The first element of almost all usury violations is the existence of a "loan" or "forbearance" of money. Although the definition of these terms may vary from statute to statute, a loan may generally be thought of as a temporary transfer of money or its equivalent from a creditor to a debtor or to a third party on the debtor's behalf. n6 A forbearance, on the other hand, is an agreement between an existing debtor and creditor under which the debtor gives consideration (i.e., pays interest) in return for the creditor's agreement to refrain from demanding immediate payment of a pre-existing debt which has come due. n7 forbearances means that many transactions which are not normally considered extensions of credit may become subject to usury limitations.

Most usury statutes treat loans and forbearances interchangeably. n8 The fact that most usury statutes cover

Absent specific statutory guidance, the chief uncertainty about the definition of a loan is whether this term includes credit extended in connection with the installment sale of goods or services. This is called the time price differential. Some courts have held that it does not. n9 Other courts have deemed credit sales to be within the general coverage of the usury laws but subject to an exception.

In jurisdictions where the time price doctrine remains in force, a buyer's attorney should closely examine any credit sale transaction to be certain that the exception actually applies. However, this exception no longer applies to consumer credit transactions in most jurisdictions. In Arkansas, where the usury ceiling is found in the state constitution, the courts have the role of determining whether a transaction is a loan; the legislature does not have the authority to define a type of transaction as a non-loan. n10 A payment plan for delinquent taxes and water and sewer charges is a forbearance. n11

[b] Obligation to Repay Principal

The second element of a traditional usury case is the debtor's absolute obligation to repay the principal amount of the money transferred to him or her.

In the average consumer credit case, proving the existence of an absolute obligation to repay principal is not a problem as the obligation is stated on the face of the note or credit contract and can be established by the introduction of these documents into evidence. In the occasional cases where creditors attempt to evade laws regulating credit and credit charges by constructing a transaction in a way in which this element appears to be missing, courts typically will look behind the facade to determine the true nature of the agreement.

Some makers of refund anticipation loans like to characterize the transaction as the sale of a chose in action rather than a loan. These businesses claim that they are relying for payment upon the right to receive the refund, and the borrower/seller is only liable if the IRS refuses to pay the refund in the requested amount. The Colorado Supreme Court has rejected this argument, holding that the taxpayer's obligation to repay the lender if the tax refund did not come through as anticipated was sufficient to make the transaction a loan under the UCCC. n12 While the court stressed the differences between the UCCC and other states' definitions of "loan," its reasoning should be persuasive in other states, as the court debunked the claim that the transaction was merely the sale of a chose in action. n13

Terming the obligation to repay a refund anticipation loan contingent is unjustified in any event. There is no uncertainty in the amount of the payment. Neither repayment itself nor the amount of the repayment is contingent upon a future event. Similarly, other courts have followed the maxim that substance prevails over form and have seen through alleged contingencies to recognize the underlying absolute obligation of the borrower to repay. n14 Some courts have held that purchase of a stake in litigation does not involve usury where there is no repayment obligation if the suit is unsuccessful. n15 A loan will not be considered contingent unless the lender, by the terms of the loan, is subjected to some greater hazard than that the borrower will fail to repay the loan or that the security will depreciate in value. n16

[c] Interest Overcharge

The heart of every usury case is an overcharge of interest. Logically, this element of proof can be divided into three parts:

a) The creditor exacted or attempted to exact payments from the debtor.

b) The payments were "interest" under the relevant usury statute.

c) The total of payments exceeded the statutory limit. n17

The precise wording of usury statutes varies, n18 but generally creditors may not "contract for," "collect," "exact," "receive," or "charge" payments in excess of those specifically permitted by statute.

Usurious payments may not always be revealed by the contract itself. For example, the lender might require the borrower to pay fees not mentioned by the contract. n19

Once the payments charged or received by a creditor have been identified, the next question is which of those payments constitute "interest" or an excess charge under the relevant statute. Most obviously, the creditor may simply calculate the interest erroneously. n20

But beyond the obvious charge for the use of money, the definition of "interest" sometimes is a complicated issue which varies from statute to statute. Nevertheless, most statutes classify all payments made by a borrower as either principal, interest, or non-interest fees in the following manner.

First, non-interest fees are charges, such as insurance premiums or late fees, which are most often expressly excluded from interest by statute. n21 However, such charges are often subject to separate regulation by consumer credit regulatory statutes, n22 and may be among the types of charges for which statutory liability may attach if limits are exceeded. n23 Next, "principal" generally includes loan proceeds given to the borrower or paid on the borrower's behalf and often may include any non-interest fees which the lender pays on the borrower's behalf. n24 Finally, "interest" is any payment not attributable to the repayment of principal or to non-interest fees. n25

Once the amount of interest charged or collected in connection with a contract has been determined, the last step to proving an interest overcharge is to show that the interest assessed by the creditor is excessive. Since most usury ceilings are expressed as rates, the easiest way to demonstrate an overcharge is normally to calculate the highest permissible interest charge under the controlling statutory rate formula, given the principal amount properly determined n26 and the length of time the loan or credit has been outstanding n27 or was scheduled to be outstanding. n28

Keep in mind that it is necessary to make the interest overcharge determination by establishing the maximum that the particular creditor in question can charge for that particular kind of transaction, n29 and that no preemption questions are involved. n30

[d] Intent

Some statutes, particularly those regulating charges in consumer credit transactions, may have no intent requirement. n31 Apart from those statutes, typically the final element of a usury claim is the usurious intent of the lender.

In almost all states, n32 if usury appears on the face of a credit contract, the requisite usurious intent is merely the intent of the lender to charge the interest rate which, in fact, was contracted for. This intent may be presumed from the contract. n33

A lender's only defense to usury on the face of the contract is to rebut the presumption of usurious intent by demonstrating that a bona fide error occurred in the preparation of the contract and that the lender, therefore, did not intend to charge the stated rate. The defense of mistake or bona fide error is a narrow one which must be proven by the lender. n34

In situations where a contract is not usurious on its face, the courts apply a broad spectrum of approaches to determine the existence of usurious intent. Three overall approaches seem to exist.

First, in at least one state, the courts draw no distinction between facially usurious contracts and other forms of usury, and look only at the lender's objective intent to make the loan. n35 A second, and most common approach to cases where usury is not facially apparent is to deny the borrower the presumption of intent otherwise granted, and to regard the existence of intent as a question of fact. n36

The third approach to usury which is not apparent on the face of the contract, taken by only a small minority of courts, is to require proof that the lender subjectively intended to evade the usury laws by structuring the contract as it did. n37

[3] Burden of Proof

Courts generally presume the validity of contracts, and a party which claims that a contract is usurious therefore carries the burden of proving the usury, whether the claim is being asserted as an independent cause of action or as an affirmative defense. n38 The major exception to this rule is that once a facially usurious interest rate has been demonstrated by the debtor, the burden may shift to the creditor to rebut the allegation of usury. n39

The precise standard of proof by which usury must be demonstrated varies significantly from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. n40

[4] Contract Construction

Construction of a credit contract only becomes an issue if the contract is ambiguous on some relevant point. A contract which unambiguously calls for usurious payments cannot be cured by a forgiving "interpretation." n41 Indeed even if the contract was usurious due to mutual mistake, a creditor may not be able to salvage it by seeking reformation. n42

There are essentially two ways for debtors to combat the tendency of courts to construe contracts in favor of creditors, both of which depend on a recognition of the fact that creditors write consumer credit contracts. First, because of this fact, a consumer's attorney should not rely on the contract alone to prove a usury case if there is any conceivable ambiguity in the contract terms. Instead, remembering that a court should consider all the facts and circumstances around a transaction when considering usury, a debtor's attorney should attempt to build a record showing the intent of the parties at the time the transaction was consummated and, if a form contract is at issue, the manner in which the creditor has applied the disputed contract provision in other transactions.

The second method of dealing with unfavorable rules of contract construction is to attack them head-on, at least insofar as they apply to consumer credit contracts. It is widely recognized that contracts should be construed against their drafter, n43 and consumer credit contracts are not only written by creditors, they are almost uniformly contracts of adhesion which are offered to the consumer on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. n44 Recognizing the one-sidedness of this situation, some courts have held that a presumption of legality does not apply to consumer credit contracts. n45 Other courts, observing that ambiguous contract language can mislead consumers about their rights and dissuade them from asserting their rights, have suggested that consumer credit contracts should be construed as the average consumer would interpret them. n46

[5] Creditor Defenses

[a] Defenses of Assignees and Holders in Due Course

The holder in due course doctrine permits those who purchase "negotiable instruments" n47 to protect themselves from claims of any other parties, and to free themselves from many, but not all, defenses to payment on the instrument. n48

Holder doctrine, however, is not absolute, and not all assignees can successfully assert it in response to a consumer's claims and defenses. Most importantly for consumer advocates, the holder rule has been severely restricted for many common consumer transactions, as the uneven bargaining power and unequal sophistication in these transactions meant the operation of the rule unfairly inflicted great hardships. n49 Thus, many state consumer credit statutes limit its impact, as does the FTC Preservation of Claims and Defenses Rule in the context of consumer retail sales. State legislatures and case law may also protect consumers.

The meaning of "holder" takes on a new dimension as electronic transactions increase. The UETA n50 envisions electronic promissory notes, termed "transferrable records," the rights to which could be transferred just as paper notes are assigned. In addition, Congress included provisions for electronic promissory notes in the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act "E-Sign"), n51 although only for promissory notes secured by real property. Revised Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code, which all states have adopted, also allows electronic "chattel paper," a term that includes the typical motor vehicle installment sales contract or lease. n52 The development of transferrable electronic promissory notes faces a number of technological hurdles, however. n53 There must be a way to identify the original, so that electronic copies cannot be passed as originals. Second, the technology must allow the holder of the electronic document to record an assignment of the document, but must prevent non-holders from doing so. Third, there must be a way to transfer control over the electronic document to an assignee. The drafters' comments to UETA indicate that this technology had not been developed at the time UETA was drafted. n54 Nonetheless, Congress included UETA's provisions for electronic promissory notes in the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act, n55 although only for promissory notes secured by real property. The advent of electronic promissory notes may introduce new uncertainty for debtors and courts about who actually is the holder of a note, n56 but otherwise the holder in due course analysis will be unaffected. n57

Most importantly, in 1975 the FTC issued a Trade Regulation Rule, pursuant to the Federal Trade Commission Act, which declared that it was an "unfair or deceptive act or practice" under the Act for a seller to enter a consumer credit contract which failed to contain the following language:

> "NOTICE
>
> "Any holder of this consumer credit contract is subject to all claims and defenses which the debtor could assert against the seller of goods or services obtained pursuant hereto or with the proceeds hereof. Recovery hereunder by the debtor shall not exceed amounts paid by the debtor hereunder." n58

The Rule requires sellers to include this language in all instruments created in consumer credit sales financed directly by a seller of goods or services. The Rule also requires sellers to arrange for the language to be included in instruments embodying a debt that arises from a "purchase money loan" with a third party creditor. The Rule defines "purchase money loan" as any loan used to purchase goods or services if the seller either refers the consumer to the lender or is affiliated with the lender by "common control, contract, or business arrangement." n59

The effect of the FTC Rule is quite dramatic. The Rule eliminates contract clauses which waived a consumer's right to assert defenses against an assignee, and which had previously been permitted by the UCC. n60

The insertion of the FTC notice provision in an "instrument," such as a credit contract or a note, has a second effect which is both more subtle and more far-reaching; it removes the instrument from the definition of a "negotiable instrument" under the UCC because negotiable instruments must contain an unconditional promise to pay, and the FTC notice imposes conditions on payment. n61 Consequently, no holder of an instrument containing the FTC notice can become a holder in due course, regardless of the manner in which it takes the instrument, because only a holder of a negotiable instrument can be a holder in due course. n62

Assignees and holders in due course may nonetheless continue to give consumers problems in some credit transactions. First, some contracts, particularly purchase money loans which purport to be independent third-party loans, do not include the FTC notice. Holders of such instruments may potentially gain holder in due course status even while the seller is liable for unfair or deceptive practices under the FTC Act or state UDAP statutes. n63 The revised version of UCC Article 9, now in effect in all states, addresses this problem by reading the FTC Holder Notice into any consumer contract that should have included it. n64 This provision does not apply to negotiable instruments such as promissory notes, but the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws has approved revisions to Article 3 that imply the Holder Notice into any promissory note whenever that notice should have been inserted into the note. n65 This provision, if adopted by the states, will apply to direct loans where the seller refers the consumer to the lender and the consumer then signs a note with the lender. Even without these UCC amendments, a number of courts have found grounds to read the Holder Notice into contracts and notes that should have included it. n66 Second, the FTC rule only applies to sales-related consumer contracts, and not to traditional straight loans. n67 The UCC rules of assignment and negotiability therefore remain relevant in a significant number of consumer credit transactions. n68

If a note or other writing evincing the obligation does not qualify as a negotiable instrument, or if its holder for some reason does not qualify as a holder in due course, the holder takes the obligation subject to all claims and defenses to which the original payee was subject. n69 Consequently, if the transaction is not subject to one of the consumer exceptions, advocates facing a claim of holder in due course must examine the transaction carefully to determine whether all UCC prerequisites are met.

One of the preconditions is that the assignee be a "holder" of a "negotiable instrument." That is, it must have in its possession an "instrument ... drawn, issued or indorsed to him or to his order or to bearer or in blank." n70

The requirements for negotiability of the instrument are set out in UCC section 3-104(1): (a) it must be "signed by the maker or drawer; (b) contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a sum certain in money and no other promise ... (c) be payable on demand or at a definite time; and (d) be payable to order or to bearer." Checks and promissory notes are typical examples of a negotiable instrument. Negotiability must be determinable from the face of the documents. n71

Assuming these prerequisites are met, the assignee still must establish that it qualifies for holder in due course status, i.e., a person who acquires a negotiable instrument for value, in good faith, and without notice that it is overdue, that it has been dishonored, that any defense exists to payment on the instrument, or that any other party has a claim to it. n72 Often negotiable instruments are transferred more than once. For example, the original payee may negotiate the instrument to an entity that qualifies as a holder in due course, and then the holder may transfer that instrument to a second entity. Under the UCC, the second entity acquires the rights of a holder in due course even if it would not qualify as a holder in due course on its own. n73 For example, if the second entity knew of a defense to the instrument before it acquired it, it would still acquire the rights of a holder in due course. n74 There is an important exception, however, if the second entity engaged in fraud or illegality affecting the instrument. n75 "A person who is party to fraud or illegality affecting the instrument is not permitted to wash the instrument clean by passing it into the hands of a holder in due course and then repurchasing it." n76 Achieving holder-in-due-course status protects the holder against many, but not all, of the obligor's defenses. Defenses which can be asserted against a holder in due course include infancy, the lack of the maker's capacity to execute the instrument, duress, the illegality of the transaction, misrepresentation of the essential character or terms of the contract, "fraud that induced the obligor to sign the instrument with neither knowledge nor reasonable opportunity to learn of its character or its essential terms," and bankruptcy. Usury can be a defense to a holder in due course in some cases.

If the payee transfers the instrument to a holder who does not qualify as a holder in due course, that does not shield the next transferee unless that transferee independently qualifies as a holder in due course. In other words, that transferee becomes a holder in due course only if it takes the instrument in good faith, for value, and without notice, and the form of the instrument and the manner of its transfer meet the requirements of Article 3. There are also certain defenses which can be raised, even against holders in due course, including usury in some cases and fraud in the factum. n77

Common law theories of participation, ratification, and acceptance of benefits with knowledge of the fraud can also make a lender liable for the acts of the originator. n78 To the extent that these theories require proof of intent and knowledge, it is sufficient to show willful blindness, i.e. that the defendant had limited information but failed to inquire further because of fear of what the inquiry would show. n79

Discovery may reveal irregularities in the loan file that should have put the holder on notice of the potential defenses. n79.1 In addition, the history of dealings between the loan originator and the current holder may be sufficient to establish notice. For example, the holder may have forced the loan originator to repurchase previous loans or may have received complaints from other consumers.

Conversely, there is another situation in which the UCC limits the liability even of third party holders who may not qualify for holder in due course status. The assignee of a credit sale contract or lease which does not qualify as a "negotiable instrument" may nevertheless acquire the same rights as a holder in due course if the contract contains a provision waiving the right of the buyer or lessee to assert defenses against assignees, and if the assignee takes the contract for value, in good faith, and without notice of any claims or defenses. n80 However, this waiver provision applies only to defenses which could not be asserted against a holder in due course, and it is expressly subject to any special rules regarding waivers that may apply to consumer transactions under other provisions of state law.

If a debtor does sign a note which qualifies as a negotiable instrument under the UCC, or a credit contract which contains a waiver of assignee liability and state law allows such waivers, there are two ways in which claims relating to credit overcharges may nevertheless be asserted against an assignee under UCC law. First, if an assignee takes an instrument in bad faith or with notice of defenses to the instrument, then that assignee cannot either qualify as a holder in due course under UCC section 3-302 or otherwise obtain the rights of a holder in due course under section 9-206, and is subject to any claim or defense.

Another way usury or fraud can be asserted against an assignee is under UCC section 3-305, which defines the rights of a holder in due course and which specifies that even a holder in due course is subject to the defense of the "illegality of the transaction, as renders the obligation of the [debtor] a nullity ... ." n81

Although there is some questionable authority to the contrary, n82 and although a few states have special rules, n83 it seems clear that a usury violation or a fraud which renders an obligation void under state law is an "illegality" which renders the obligation a "nullity" under the UCC and may thus be asserted as a defense against a holder in due course of the obligation. n84

[b] Standing to Assert Usury

Noting that usury statutes are designed to protect needy borrowers rather than to penalize lenders, courts have widely viewed usury as a claim that is personal to the borrower. n85 It is fairly clear that any maker or obligor on a note has standing to assert usury. Thus, a co-signer can plead usury. n86 Furthermore, a person whose interest in the litigation derives from the borrower may be able to assert usury on the borrower's behalf, but the extent to which such derivative rights exist can vary significantly with the plaintiff and the state. n87

Most cases where creditors dispute a plaintiff's standing to assert usury involve guarantors or sureties to a debt, and while a few opinions to the contrary exist, n88 the large majority of courts hold that guarantors and sureties do not have standing to assert usury. n89 However, some statutes absolutely bar the lender from recovering any interest if the loan is usurious. Even if a guarantor does not have standing to assert an affirmative claim for usury remedies, this language may allow the guarantor to prevent the lender from recovering the usurious interest. n89.1

A last party whose standing to assert usury may be questioned is the assignee of a credit buyer--i.e., the person who purchases used goods and who, in so doing, assumes the original buyer's rights and obligations under the original credit contract. Several courts have held that usury claims may not be assigned. n90 Other courts, however, have developed somewhat more even-handed rules. n91

[c] Estoppel and Waiver

Estoppel is a loosely defined equitable doctrine under which a party may be barred from asserting legal or factual claims in court for any one of numerous reasons, including fraud, misrepresentation, previous judicial rulings (i.e. "collateral estoppel"), or waiver. In what is probably the most common application of the doctrine in usury cases, a party may be estopped from denying the truth of facts that it previously asserted if the party seeking the estoppel reasonably relied, to its detriment, on the earlier assertion. n92 However, a review of the relevant decisions demonstrates that the doctrine is inapplicable to most consumer usury cases. n93

A borrower who has already made payments on a usurious loan may have to contend with an ancient, sporadically-recognized defense, the voluntary payment doctrine. The doctrine developed in tax cases, and was created to prevent those who had paid illegally imposed taxes from recouping their payments from the tax collector. n94 The basis for the doctrine lies in the fiscal concerns of a government that may need to be certain of the amount of funds available for disbursement. The doctrine protects it from having to refund collected taxes that it may have already spent in a previous year. n95 To justify the doctrine, courts have employed the fiction that every person is supposed to know and understand the law and the limits it places on taxing authorities, and therefore a person who voluntarily makes a demanded but unauthorized payment may not later use ignorance of the law to justify a refund. n96

Though lenders have asserted the voluntary payment defense in usury cases, the majority of jurisdictions addressing the issue have refused to apply it in those circumstances. n97 Even where the voluntary payment doctrine is accepted in other contexts, courts have recognized that strong policy reasons argue against applying it in usury cases. First of all, allowing the defendant to retain the usurious interest would thoroughly undermine the purpose of usury laws, which seek to protect borrowers from overreaching lenders. n98 By allowing borrowers to recover the illegal interest they have paid, the state encourages the enforcement of the usury laws and the development of the policies under girding them. Second, the voluntary payment rule fails to recognize the imbalance of power between most lenders and their borrowers. In rejecting the doctrine, one Georgia court noted that the usurer is an "oppressor" and the debtor a "victim," thus payment of the usury was by definition involuntary. n99 In a few states, statutes have abrogated the common law doctrine. n100 In addition, the doctrine does not apply where there is a statutory right to recover. n101 Some courts may also distinguish between criminal usury, with its stiffer penalties, and civil usury. n102

Nonetheless, a number of jurisdictions have applied the voluntary payment doctrine to bar a consumer from recovering usurious interest paid to a lender. n103 Even where accepted, however, the defense has nuances that may help an overcharged borrower defeat its use by a lender. For example, while a payment made under a mistake of law is considered voluntary, one made under a mistake of fact is considered involuntary. n104 Under this reasoning, a borrower may recover an overpayment of interest made due to a mistaken calculation, but may not recover a payment of usury. n105 Other courts have distinguished cases where the loan has been only partially paid from those where the loan has been completely paid, allowing a borrower to recover usurious interest in the former, but not the latter. n106 However, payments considered involuntary, such as a payment made only after judgment was rendered against a borrower, may be recovered. n107 As with the tax version, compulsion precludes application of the doctrine. n108

[d] Res Judicata

Closely related to the defense of equitable estoppel is the doctrine of res judicata, which prohibits the relitigation of issues previously decided by the courts.

Direct attack upon a judgment often occurs in the case of default judgments where the borrower never appeared and, therefore, asserted no defenses at all. Borrowers who have acquiesced n109 in the entry of default judgments on their debt, only to realize later that they might have asserted a usury defense, occasionally attempt to have the default judgments set aside. The success of such efforts varies significantly from state to state depending on the grounds recognized as sufficient for setting aside judgments. n110 In addition, a direct attack upon creditor conduct in charging interest or fees in excess of that allowed by contract or state law can be successful. Consumers may seek injunctive relief to stop such behavior, as well as money damages, without disturbing the judgments themselves. n111

The second situation in which res judicata affects usury claims arises from the ability of a borrower in most states to assert usury either as a defense to the lender's action or as an independent cause of action for statutory penalties.

As a general rule, a defendant who could raise a claim as a counterclaim, but who fails to do so, is precluded from raising that claim subsequently in two situations: (1) The counterclaim is required to be imposed by a compulsory counterclaim statute or rule of court; or (2) the relationship between the counterclaim and the plaintiff's claim is such that the successful prosecution of the second action would nullify the initial judgment or would impair rights established in the initial action. n112 Compulsory counterclaim statutes, to the extent that they exist, vary significantly from state to state and are not thoroughly treated here.

In the absence of a controlling compulsory counterclaim statute, most decisions hold that a judgment for a creditor in a foreclosure action or an action on a note necessarily affirms the validity of a debt and would be undermined if subsequent usury claims were permitted. Consequently, usury is generally viewed as a "common law compulsory counterclaim" which is barred by res judicata if not asserted when a creditor's action on a debt is litigated. n113

However, note that a judgment operates as res judicata only on issues actually or necessarily decided by the court, n114 and when a debtor and creditor have executed a series of notes, several courts have held that a judgment on one note need not preclude the assertion of usury against the remaining notes, n115 even if they are only extensions of the note on which judgment had been given. n116

[e] Statutes of Limitations

Usury, like other causes of action, is subject to statutes of limitations. The length of time allotted varies from state to state, but typically ranges from one to three years after the usury action accrues. n117

[f] De Minimis Violations

The de minimis defense to usury is the argument that penalties should not be assessed for trivial usury violations. This defense is rejected in some states on the ground that its recognition by the courts in the face of mandatory statutory penalties would constitute judicial legislation beyond the courts' authority. n118 Nevertheless, the de minimis defense is recognized in other states. n119

[g] Industry Custom and Usage

A less commonly raised usury defense is the argument that long-standing and widely accepted financial industry practices should not be deemed usurious or otherwise illegal. However, courts have universally held that industry practice is no defense to usury. n120

[h] Usury Saving Clauses

Many credit contracts contain boilerplate "saving clauses" which, in one form or another, recite that the parties to the contract intend to comply with applicable usury laws, and that the contract should not be interpreted as providing for usurious interest rates. Saving clauses frequently specify that any charge above the usury ceiling should be deemed a mistake, and that the overcharge should either be refunded to the borrower or be credited against the outstanding principal balance.

Because of the potential which saving clauses hold for undermining usury laws, courts have given them only limited effect. n121 Creditors cannot rebut usurious intent or otherwise avoid usury statutes simply by rebating excessive charges that the debtor has already paid. n122 The one situation in which saving clauses may carry some weight is in ambiguous contracts which can plausibly be interpreted as either usurious or non-usurious.

[i] Correction of Error as a Defense

Allowing a creditor a period of time after notice to avoid liability by correcting the error is a common feature of usury statutes. n123

Texas provides a lender a statutory defense if it corrects the violation, including paying interest on the overcharge at the contract rate, within sixty days after discovering it and gives written notice of the violation to the obligor before the obligor gives written notice of the violation or files an action alleging the violation. n124 Sending a demand letter asking only for the non-usurious portion of the obligation, without explicitly releasing the usurious portion, is probably insufficient. n125 In addition, the creditor's notice to the obligor must acknowledge the specific usury violation. n126 Another Texas provision allows a lender another 60 days to correct the error after receiving notice of the violation. n127 Responding to the obligor's notice by arguing that there was no usury violation is insufficient. n128 The Minnesota MVRISA was amended in 1996 to allow dealers a 120-day period to cure violations of the requirement to provide the buyer with a signed copy of the contract. Sending the buyer a letter stating that the buyer can request a copy is insufficient. n129 One bankruptcy court declined to dismiss a usury claim on the grounds that the borrower failed to send a statutorily required pre-suit notice where the parties had already been through pre-trial mediation that served the same purpose. n129.1

[j] The Enforceability of Arbitration Agreements

[i] General

An increasingly common occurrence is for a loan agreement to include a binding arbitration agreement, which the lender hopes will protect it from class actions, claims for punitive damages, intrusive discovery requests, and juries. This section considers several issues of special relevance to a consumer challenging a requirement that a usury or related claim go to arbitration. n130

The general rule is that the Federal Arbitration Act ("FAA") n131 supports the enforceability of an agreement to arbitrate disputes. State law limiting the enforceability of such agreements is preempted, n132 with certain exceptions. n133 But the FAA does not favor arbitration of disputes where there is no agreement to arbitrate. The consumer need not arbitrate a matter if the arbitration agreement does not apply to the lender or to the promissory note, if the arbitration clause is found in a void agreement, if the arbitration clause is unconscionable, if the arbitration clause was never agreed to, or if the lender has waived that clause.

[ii] Usurious, Illegal and Unlicensed Loan Agreements

If the contract containing the arbitration clause is found to be void, the arbitration clause is void as well. n134 A contract can be void either because a state usury or other statute specifies that violation of the statute makes the contract void, or because state law generally holds that illegal contracts are void.

If a contract is illegal or criminal in nature, courts will not enforce an agreement to arbitrate disputes under that contract. n135

A usurious contract thus can be void on two different bases. One is that the state usury statute specifically so states. If a usurious contract is void, the agreement and the arbitration clause therein cannot be enforced. n136 The other is that it is illegal and/or criminal and is thus void. Courts have decided that the issue of whether a contract is usurious, and the arbitration agreement thus void, is to be determined by the court, not the arbitrator. n137

The Sixth Circuit appears to distinguish between void ab initio and contracts later declared void. While a consumer cannot be bound by a contract that never really existed, that is void ab initio, a consumer can be bound by a contract that he intended to enter, but later discovered that certain terms of the contact may violate state usury law, thus voiding the contract. n138 More is required to void an arbitration clause than an allegation of statutory violation. There must be a failure to assent to the documents or a failure of signatory power. n139

While the Sixth Circuit view may not be accepted by most courts, most courts will distinguish between void and voidable. If a contract is void by operation of law, the arbitration agreement is void. But if the law allows the consumer to seek to rescind a contract on certain grounds, then the contract is voidable, but not void, and the arbitrator must make that determination. n140 Nevertheless, a number of recent decisions have even sent an arbitrator cases where the consumer argued that the usury violation made the contract void ab initio. n141

In addition, states often require merchants or lenders to become licensed, and find that operation of that business without a license makes any resulting contracts void. n142 If a contract is void for this reason, the arbitration clause is also void. n143 The determination as to whether a lender or other merchant's contracts are void for want of a license is to be determined by the court, not an arbitrator. n144

[iii] Cancellation: Spot Delivery and Rescission

A common situation in consumer sales where an agreement is void involves a "yo-yo" or "spot delivery" sale, where a car is sold conditioned on the dealer being able to obtain financing for the purchase. If the deal falls through and the dealer cancels the retail installment sales agreement, then no part of the agreement remains effective, including the binding arbitration agreement contained therein. The consumer can bring a claim against the dealer who has backed out of the deal, and the consumer is not bound by the arbitration clause. n145

If a consumer contract can be cancelled under a three-day cooling-off period provision, then cancellation of the contract cancels the arbitration provision. Cancellation does not involve legal action or a dispute under the contract. The consumer has the absolute right to send a notice, and the contract is thus automatically cancelled. If state law finds a contract in violation of the cooling-off period provision is void, then violation of the provision also voids the arbitration agreement. n146

Similarly, Truth in Lending provides a right to rescind certain credit agreements. n147 The consumer sends a notice to the creditor, and the transaction is thus cancelled. If the transaction is cancelled, then the arbitration agreement is void. Any litigation as to the consumer's right to rescind or the creditor's failure to follow steps after rescission is not governed by the arbitration agreement because the transaction including the agreement has already been cancelled. A number of courts rule otherwise, that the arbitrator and not the court must consider whether a transaction has been rescinded under Truth in Lending. n148 But these courts confuse common law claims for rescission, where the court is asked to rescind a transaction, with statutory entitlements under Truth in Lending and state cooling-off statutes where the transaction is never fully consummated by operation of the consumer's letter, and the action before the court involves a contract that was never effective. For example, several of the courts that rule otherwise n149 rely on a court of appeals decision that involves a common law rescission claim. n150

[A] Does Agreement Apply to Lender, Co-Signer, and to Promissory Note?

"Arbitration is a matter of contract and a party cannot be required to submit to arbitration any dispute which he has not agreed so to submit." n151 If the parties did not agree to arbitrate certain claims, then the consumer cannot be forced to arbitrate those claims, even if it would be more efficient to do so.

Consumers are not bound by arbitration agreements they did not sign, even if their spouse or other related party signed the agreement. n152 Nothing in the FAA authorizes a court to compel arbitration of parties not covered by the agreement. n153 "It goes without saying that a contract cannot bind a nonparty." n154

Nevertheless, courts may find an arbitration provision enforceable when the plaintiffs are third party beneficiaries of consumers who did in fact sign the arbitration agreement. n155 To find a third party beneficiary status, at a minimum, the consumer's claim must seek the benefit of the agreement that contains the arbitration clause. n156 Thus, where a consumer that has not signed the agreement brings a tort claim that does not rely on the agreement, no third party beneficiary status is created, and the consumer is not bound by the arbitration agreement. n157

Likewise, consumers should be able to avoid arbitrating a dispute with a lender, broker, insurer or other entity where that entity is not a party to the arbitration clause or is not listed in the arbitration clause as a party to the agreement. n158 Arbitration is a matter of contract and a consumer is entitled to know, by looking at the terms of the arbitration agreement, what potential parties are covered by the agreement.

Nevertheless, there are situations where a court will find that consumers are bound to arbitrate claims against certain individuals or entities who were not explicitly listed in the original arbitration agreement. Courts sometimes find that a party not mentioned in the arbitration agreement can still enforce the agreement based on equitable estoppel. n159 Equitable estoppel may be found to apply only where the consumer sues a party not enumerated in the arbitration clause, and the consumer is relying on the terms of the agreement containing the arbitration clause in asserting claims against that party. n160 Even then, finding equitable estoppel is in the court's discretion. n161

In general, assignees n162 and individual employees of the corporate signatory n163 may be able to enforce an arbitration agreement. On the other hand, a credit insurer, n164 forced-placed insurer n165 or service contract company n166 will have difficulty piggy-backing on the dealer's arbitration clause.

Issues of coverage may arise where an arbitration clause is contained in only one, or some, but not all, of a series of documents. For example, motor vehicle sales finance statutes and retail installment sales acts often require that the installment sale be evidenced by a writing that contains all the agreements of the parties with reference to the subject matter of the sale. n167 If a car dealer places the arbitration agreement in the sales order or other preliminary document, but not in the installment sales agreement, then the arbitration agreement is not part of the final transaction, and is not binding on the consumer. n168

This is even the case where the arbitration clause in the sales order explicitly states it applies to the installment sales agreement. State installment sales acts typically either explicitly or implicitly require that the parties execute a single, comprehensive installment agreement, without side agreements or riders. n169

[B] Unconscionability

Unconscionability is one of the most important challenges to an arbitration agreement. There are literally over a hundred cases each year discussing whether an arbitration clause is unconscionable, and these cases are collected in NCLC's Consumer Arbitration Agreements § 4.3 (4th ed. 2004 and Supp.). This subsection lays out the broad parameters of an unconscionability challenge, without specific case citations.

While there are exceptions, in general, state courts are more open to an unconscionability challenge than federal courts. Unconscionability is a matter of state law, and courts should look at that state's general standards as to unconscionability. They should then look at the facts of the particular case before them to see if those facts lead to an unconscionability finding. This is more important than whether a court in another state found an arbitration agreement unconscionable or not based on the different facts of that case.

Nevertheless, it appears quite often that courts will look for evidence of both procedural and substantive unconscionability. It is thus important to introduce evidence of both types of unconscionability. For example, procedural unconscionability could be shown by the fact that other similar lenders require arbitration (showing lack of choice), the lender's unwillingness to negotiate this clause, the small print and confusing language of the arbitration clause, and other factors that show this requirement was not negotiated among equals, in good faith.

A number of factors might lead to a finding of substantive unconscionability:

- That the consumer's action must be arbitrated, while actions the lender might initiate need not be arbitrated;
- The arbitration clause limiting the consumer's causes of action or remedies, such as limits on multiple, consequential, or punitive damages or attorney fees;
- The arbitration clause prohibiting class arbitration;
- The arbitration clause shortening the statute of limitations;
- The arbitration clause prohibiting public dissemination of information about the dispute;
- The arbitration process requiring unaffordable payments from the consumer to pay the arbitrator or for other fees; and
- Bias in the arbitration service provider.

Although any one of these might be enough for a court to find substantive unconscionability, the consumer should allege all aspects of the clause that make it unconscionable. The court can either throw out the whole arbitration requirement or reform it to delete the offending provisions. The more provisions that are found unconscionable, the more likely the court will throw out the whole arbitration agreement.

[C] Special Rules for Insurance Transactions

While the FAA preempts state law that limits the enforceability of arbitration agreements, there is an important exception for insurance transactions. The federal McCarran-Ferguson Act prohibits federal regulation of insurance practices to the extent that they would invalidate, impair or supersede state law enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, unless the federal law explicitly relates to the business of insurance. n170 The FAA does not explicitly relate to the business of insurance. n171 Consequently, if a state statute regulating insurance limits the enforceability of an arbitration provision, the FAA conflicts with the state statute, and therefore state law, not the FAA, determines whether the arbitration provision is enforceable. n172

In order for this exception to apply, first the state law must be enacted for the purpose of regulating insurance. A number of state statutes limit the enforceability of arbitration, but do not mention insurance specifically. Instead, these are laws of general application that apply to insurance and most other forms of commerce. For example, Alabama law states that agreements to submit controversies to arbitration cannot be enforced, but does not mention insurance. n173 The Alabama courts find that the statute is not one regulating the business of insurance, so as to supersede the FAA under McCarran-Ferguson. n174 On the other hand, a statute need not be enacted solely for the purpose of regulating insurance. For example, a number of states have enacted the Uniform Arbitration Act, but have explicitly stated that the provision concerning the enforceability of arbitration agreements does not apply to insurance or certain lines of insurance. n175 Such an exemption is a state enactment for the purpose of regulating insurance. n176

It is not enough, however, that a state enact statutes regulating the business of insurance. These statutes must also restrict the enforceability of arbitration agreements. If they do not, there is no conflict with the FAA, and the FAA continues to apply. n177 State insurance law does not preempt the field, but only supersedes federal law that is inconsistent with it. n178 A number of states clearly restrict the enforceability of arbitration agreements concerning certain lines of insurance. For example, a number of states have amended their enactment of the Uniform Arbitration Act to specify that arbitration agreements are enforceable except as to insurance claims. n179

[iv] Bill Stuffers and Unilateral Change in Terms

In quite a few cases, the fine print that contains an arbitration clause is not sent to consumers until well after a contract is consummated. This must be distinguished from the situation where the product is delivered to the consumer, contingent on the consumer accepting the terms sent with the product, one of which is the arbitration agreement.

An arbitration clause is not enforceable where it is unilaterally presented to the consumer after the agreement has been reached. An arbitration clause is a material term that cannot be unilaterally added by one party after two parties have agreed upon terms for a binding contract. n180

In the last few years, a great many credit card issuers have attempted to create a binding arbitration agreement by inserting a notice to that effect in a monthly billing statement, stating either that this is a change of terms, as authorized in the master agreement, or that the fact that the consumer continues to use the credit card is evidence the consumer agrees to the change in terms. Some of these arbitration clauses, by their very terms, only apply to consumers who do use the credit card after that date.

The more common question is whether a consumer who does not really pay attention to all the material and fine print stuffed in with the billing statement, and who continues to use the card is bound by an arbitration clause created through a bill stuffer. Some courts have enforced arbitration clauses that were sent out to consumers as bill stuffers, n181 but the current trend appears to be otherwise. n182

To evade the recent holdings that bill-stuffers may not be effective to add an arbitration clause, some credit card issuers have re-written their change of terms provisions to purportedly authorize the lender to add any new term to the contract as well as change any existing terms. There is a serious question, however, as to whether a bank can enforce a contract against a consumer that essentially says "we can change our agreement or add terms to it in the future without any limitation whatsoever and you agree at the outset of those changes without knowing what they will be." n183 The credit card industry has also pushed for protective state legislation to legalize bill stuffers arbitration agreements. n184

There are other issues to explore when a creditor attempts to add an arbitration clause by bill stuffer. For example, did the company follow its own procedure in changing the terms? If a credit card agreement specifies a procedure for the card issuer to change terms, it must follow that procedure for the change to be effective. In at least one case, the court found that insufficient evidence was submitted to show that the contract had been properly amended. n185

The company must reasonably inform the consumer of the change in terms. If a jurisdiction embraces a standard along the lines of the voluntary, knowing and intelligent requirement, consumers who did not notice or know about an arbitration clause may be able to argue powerfully that they did not agree to arbitrate their claims. At least one court refused to enforce the change where the company could not establish that the notice was actually mailed. n186

Even if the bill stuffer was actually received, very few consumers may ever detect the notice of the arbitration clause (particularly if is buried among a number of advertisements, or if they are written in impenetrable legalese). The preeminent example of this is Ting v. AT&T, where the effect of AT&T's arbitration agreement was enjoined, where the consumers conducted extensive discovery, hired experts, and presented a compelling case that AT&T's bill stuffer was intended by AT&T not to be read and was not in fact read or understood by the overwhelming percentage of customers.

n187

[v] Lender's Collection Action as Waiver

A lender's right to compel arbitration may be waived, where the lender has taken actions that are inconsistent with the right to arbitrate and where these actions have caused prejudice to the consumer. n188 A creditor who sues a consumer on a contract may waive its right to compel arbitration of the consumer's claims. n189

[vi] Non-Mutual Remedies as Unconscionable

Lenders often insert non-mutual arbitration clauses: the consumer must arbitrate claims, but the lender can resort to judicial or non-judicial remedies. For example, the arbitration provision may require the consumer's disputes to go to binding arbitration, but reserve the right for the creditor to engage in self-help repossession or foreclosure without first submitting the dispute to binding arbitration. Other provisions allow the creditor to file a judicial collection action even though consumers must arbitrate their disputes.

A number of cases find unconscionable arbitration agreements that contain such one-sided clauses, coupled with the typical procedural aspects of a consumer negotiation. n190 A number of courts, on the other hand, particularly in Alabama, have found this not to be enough to make an arbitration clause unconscionable. n191

In response to case law finding lack of mutuality to be unconscionable, creditors may draft their arbitration provisions to give the appearance of binding both sides to arbitrate. The practical effect of the clause though is not to bind the creditor.

For example an arbitration clause may state that any multi-party claims, such as class actions, are to be sent to arbitration. No creditor collection actions are ever brought as a class, but consumer claims often are. Courts are willing to look beneath the surface of an arbitration agreement to determine if in fact the merchant as a practical matter will arbitrate its disputes, or whether the arbitration provision allows the merchant to avoid the impact of the requirement. n192

[vii] Other Challenges to Agreement's Enforceability n193

Other challenges to the enforceability of a consumer arbitration agreement include:

- That the transaction is not in interstate commerce and state law restricts arbitration agreements;
- That the agreement specifies it will be governed by a state's laws, and that state's laws restrict arbitration agreements;
- That the agreement to arbitrate was not knowingly, willingly, and intelligently given, or the agreement to arbitrate is ambiguous or equivocal;
- That the agreement is not signed;
- That the arbitration clause is procedurally unconscionable or that substantive terms are unconscionable, such as limitations on remedies, bias by the arbitrator or arbitration mechanism, excessive fees and costs, inconvenient arbitration venue, loser pay rules;
- Fraud in the factum in the creation of the whole contract or fraud in the inducement as to the arbitration clause;

- Under defenses under state contract law or state statutory law applying to any contract; or

- Where the arbitration agreement conflicts with a federal statute or prevents the effective vindication of federal statutory rights.

[viii] Class Arbitration

Consumers invariably are better off bringing individual claims in court instead of before an arbitrator--particularly since the dealer has selected the arbitration service provider. But the same may not be true of a classwide arbitration. Corporations appear to fear class arbitration more than class actions, and consumers may have more success getting a case certified before an arbitrator than a judge.

The U.S. Supreme Court has held that, where the availability of class arbitration is ambiguous, it is for the arbitrator to decide whether the arbitration can go forward on a classwide basis. n193.1 Unless a clause unambiguously prohibits class arbitration, the consumer can bring the arbitration on a classwide basis, and it is up to the arbitrator whether to allow it to proceed on that basis. Arbitrators are increasingly allowing cases to move forward on that basis, and defendants find themselves in the uncomfortable position of forcing consumers into a procedure that the defendants want to avoid at any cost.

As a result, corporations are amending their arbitration agreements to ban class arbitration. The fact that the current version of an arbitration agreement prohibits class arbitration does not mean that an earlier version did; thus class arbitration may still be possible on behalf of those who signed the earlier version of the agreement.

Moreover, where the arbitration agreement explicitly bans classwide arbitration, the consumer can seek to throw out the whole arbitration clause as unconscionable. A large number of courts in recent years have struck down such bans as unconscionable, but an almost equal number have upheld them. n193.2 It will be important in any unconscionability challenge to demonstrate how individual arbitration is not practical. A number of courts have found this to be the case, in the context of credit cards or wireless charges where the amount at stake for each class member is small. n193.3 It is imperative to show that this is still the case in credit contexts where individual recoveries are larger. Where a court finds the ban on class arbitration to be unconscionable, it can either strike the ban (thus allowing the consumer to seek classwide arbitration) or throw out the whole arbitration clause (allowing the consumer to seek a class action in court).

[ix] Individual Arbitration Seeking Punitive Damages

While not as potent an approach as class arbitration, an individual arbitration seeking punitive damages poses real risks for the defendant. Unlike a court action, there is very limited judicial review of a large punitive damages award. n193.4 A private arbitration does not involve state action, so that a defendant will have difficulty pursuing a due process challenge to a large punitive damages award. n193.5 While consumer attorneys find most arbitrators to have a pro-corporation bias, and are unlikely to award punitive damages, the defendant is rolling the dice, because any large award will likely stand--while the defendant has several avenues of judicial relief to respond to a large punitive damages award made by a jury.

Unless the arbitration clause or arbitration service provider rules prohibit recovery of punitive damages, the consumer should be able to seek them in arbitration. The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that the arbitration agreement controls whether punitive damages are available, and that silence or ambiguity will be interpreted in favor of allowing such damages. n193.6 Consequently, check the language of the arbitration clause and also examine the rules of any arbitration mechanism referred to in the arbitration clause. Currently, the three major arbitration mechanisms (the American Arbitration Association (AAA), the National Arbitration Forum (NAF), and Judicial Arbitration and Mediation Services (JAMS)) all appear to allow punitive damage awards, n193.7 so it is particularly important to examine the arbitration agreement itself to see if any limitations on damages are specified there. Even where state law prohibits an arbitrator from awarding punitive damages, n193.8 the Federal Arbitration Act may preempt these limits, particularly as the Supreme Court has indicated that the arbitration agreement controls the issue. n193.9

If the arbitration agreement either explicitly or implicitly prohibits recovery of punitive damages, the defendant runs the risk that the agreement will be unenforceable and the consumer can sue in court. A number of cases find unconscionable an arbitration agreement that more generally limits the consumer's damage remedy or that specifically limits the consumer's right to punitive damages. n193.10 The chances of the arbitration clause being thrown out are increased where a federal statute authorizes recovery of punitive damages, because then the limitation on punitive damages may not only make the arbitration requirement unconscionable, but also make it conflict with federal statutory rights. n193.11 For example, the Credit Repair Organizations Act, the Fair Credit Reporting Act, and the Equal Credit Opportunity Act all authorize recovery of punitive damages.

[6] Special Defenses of Federal Receivers: D'Oench and Related Doctrines.

[a] D'Oench and 12 U.S.C. Section 1823.

Below is a summary of the special defenses available to the federal agencies responsible for insuring banks and thrifts. n194

In 1942, in D'Oench, Duhme & Co. v. FDIC, n195 the United States Supreme Court crafted a federal common law doctrine of equitable estoppel to prevent borrowers from asserting "secret side agreements" with bank officers as a defense against obligations being administered by the FDIC. n196 The doctrine, based on public policy grounds, sought to provide the FDIC with some immunity against claims arising out of the failed banks' past misconduct in order to allow the FDIC to more easily assess the strength of the bank's assets.

Eight years after the D'Oench decision, the Federal Deposit Insurance Act of 1950 ("FDIA") included a section, 12 U.S.C. section 1823(e), which added a new dimension to the limited immunity afforded by the equitable estoppel doctrine created in D'Oench. n197 Only an "agreement" which meets the four conditions of section 1823(e) is enforceable against the FDIC when it relates to an asset acquired by the FDIC in its corporate (as opposed to receiver) capacity. n198

The courts have taken an extremely broad view of what constitutes an agreement under D'Oench and section 1823(e). In the last few years, however, the courts have begun to pull back a little and examine the D'Oench cases with more of an eye toward the equities. n199 It is also important to note that although the D'Oench doctrine and the requirements of section 1823(e) are closely intertwined, they are not identical.

[b] Federal Holder in Due Course Doctrine

As the cost of the 1980s bank crisis mounted and litigation ballooned, the protective policies of D'Oench and section 1823 were pushed even further, with the creation of "super holder in due course" or "federal holder in due course" n200 status for FDIC and Resolution Trust Corporation ("RTC"). More recently, there is moderating precedent to the cases reading the federal holder status broadly. n201 It may be that the O'Melveny decision has settled the question of federal holder in due course once and for all. If not, there remain other arguments which can be made by consumer advocates faced with this issue.

Beyond policy arguments, the present body of D'Oench-related law offers sound arguments as to why the FTC holder notice should make consumer claims and defenses enforceable against the FDIC. First, because the Rule works by requiring that it be included in the note, effectively making it a written contractual provision, it should be considered a "bilateral agreement," imposing duties on the bank. D'Oench does not protect the FDIC or RTC from breach of contract claims arising from written agreements. n202 Second, the effect of inserting the holder notice is to render an instrument non-negotiable, n203 and the Fifth Circuit at least has held that the federal holder in due course doctrine does not apply to non-negotiable instruments. n204 At least one court has apparently permitted recovery in a home improvement case against the RTC based on the FTC notice, and further ruled that the borrower was entitled to a recovery of payments made even though the RTC and its co-defendant did not receive the payments. n205

As the bank crisis of the 1980s comes under control and begins to fade into the past, some courts are expressing more concern about past misapplications of the D'Oench doctrine. Consequently, some common consumer claims have survived, or seem likely to survive, D'Oench and related defenses. n206

Finally, as a general rule, D'Oench and related doctrines will not protect the FDIC or RTC from claims or defenses arising out of its own conduct. n207 There is also a broader developing question in the growing area of FDIC accountability: whether the Federal Tort Claims Act n208 ("FTCA") affords a remedy for "negligent operation of the receivership" by the FDIC or RTC. n209 Note that pursuant to FIRREA, all parties asserting claims against failed institutions must participate in a mandatory administrative claims review process. n210 The requirements for this process are stringent and the failure to properly submit claims can result in a claim being barred altogether, so it is imperative that any consumer attorney confronting the possibility of a claim against a failed bank look closely at the statutory requirements. n211

[7] Remedies for Illegal Overcharges; Traditional Usury Remedies

[a] State Remedies

[i] Remedies at Law

The remedies available to victims of illegal overcharges are primarily determined by individual state statutes. However, there are also other sources to consider.

Some licensing statutes, such as small loan laws or consumer loan laws metamorphosing from small loan laws, may not include specific provisions for individual remedies, nor may other statutes limiting the right to impose certain charges. However, the consumer may argue that such statutes create an implied private right of action. n212

Generally speaking, illegal contracts are unenforceable as a matter of common law, but whether a particular usurious contract fits into this category depends on the nature of the violation and public policy considerations. n213 Civil voidness penalties have been read into statutes for contracts violating their criminal provisions. n214 Usury cases have extended this principle even to the situation in which the criminal violation in question had no express civil penalty, but other types of criminal violations did. n215 Or a court, finding a contract to be illegal due to a violation of a criminal usury statute, may order that interest and other charges be forfeited. n216

A number of practical issues often arise in determining how to handle payments made by a borrower after bringing a successful usury-based claim. First, very often a statute will declare a usurious loan void as to all or part of the interest, while leaving the principal obligation intact. n217 Under such statutes, the widely- accepted rule is that all payments already made on the contract, unless the parties have specifically agreed otherwise, n218 will be applied to the principal debt until that debt has been paid off. n219

A second critical question which often arises when a loan is declared usurious is: What happens to the money already paid to the creditor? The answer will depend partly on whether the statute voids the entire obligation or merely the interest. If only interest is forfeited, it is fairly clear, as mentioned previously, that all payments made under the contract will be credited to the principal debt until that debt is satisfied, unless the parties have specifically attributed some of those payments to interest. Less clear is what happens if the loan is completely void so that no principal debt technically ever existed, if payments exceed the amount of the principal originally extended to the borrower, or if the payments were expressly deemed to be interest payments by the parties.

Some statutes, which declare usurious loans to be completely void, spell out the debtor's right to recover payments made, in which case the problem is solved. n220 A federal court in Michigan allowed buyers to recover finance charges from a dealer under this type of statutory provision even though the dealer had sold and assigned the credit contracts to finance companies. n221 The court reasoned that the finance company's payment to the dealer was based at least in part on the present value of the interest payments the buyers were expected to make, so the dealer had received a benefit from those finance charges.

However, it can be difficult without such statutory or judicial authority to argue that payments to principal or interest may be recovered simply because the obligation is declared "void" by statute. The problem is multifaceted. First, strictly speaking, if a contract is "void," a court will generally refuse to recognize its existence and will leave the parties where it finds them. n222 This suggests that while a lender could not sue the debtor on the purported debt, neither could the debtor recover payments back without specific statutory authorization, although courts have sometimes rejected this reasoning because of the intent of usury statutes to protect borrowers. n223 Second, courts frequently reason that even though a statute declares a usurious debt to be "void," the debt is actually voidable at the option of the debtor. n224 This position has led some courts to hold that a borrower can waive the usury by "voluntary" payment, n225 and having so waived his rights, may not recover the payments. n226 Third, some usury statutes are structured so that usury remedies are exclusively defensive. For example, a statute might declare a usurious loan "void," but then proceed to provide merely that the creditor may not collect on the debt. n227

One implication could be that no debtor recovery is available except by recoupment in a creditor's action. However, it is possible to argue that such statutes create an implied private right of action to enforce the borrower's rights under the usury statute, and, in the absence of clear statutory language making it solely defensive, the consumer's advocate should explore that option. A New Hampshire trial court has also concluded that a borrower can sue affirmatively to recover finance charges and other charges that the usury statute bars the creditor from collecting. n228 The court reasoned that it would be illogical to require a buyer to stop making payments, and wait to be sued, in order to take advantage of this right.

A significant exception to the rule against the debtor's recovery of payments made, apart from statutes which specifically provide a recovery remedy, is that many states recognize a common law action for the recovery of the usurious portion of interest payments made on a contract. n229

Consumer attorneys should be careful to plead a common law action, if available in their jurisdiction, separately in their complaint or counterclaim so that it will not be deemed waived.

Beyond providing restitution to a borrower who has proved usury, usually in the form of a credit for or recovery of usurious interest paid, usury statutes often impose penalties on the creditor involved. The penalties frequently take the form of an award to the borrower of double or triple either the interest or the usurious portion of the interest paid on the contract. n230

[ii] Equitable Remedies

Although most usury and other overcharge remedies exist under statutes or common law, there are circumstances when a debtor's appropriate remedy for usury is in equity. The most common occasion is when the creditor is attempting to foreclose upon security, often the borrower's home, given in conjunction with the usurious loan. Borrowers who want to enjoin foreclosures must typically invoke the court's equitable powers to do so.

Seeking equitable remedies for usury can present serious problems for borrowers. The main obstacle is the rule that a party seeking equity must do equity which, in the case of a borrower facing foreclosure of a usurious mortgage, means tendering the principal balance owed on the debt, n231 sometimes with legal interest, n232 and sometimes with amounts expended by the lender to maintain the security. n233

Tender may be avoided if a statute declares the underlying debt to be void or if the payments already made on the contract exceed the principal originally lent, because in either case the principal balance owed is zero. n234 Yet, if principal is still owed, the debtor will have the difficult task of producing a large sum of money quickly.

A second problem with equitable usury remedies is that the debtor may be unable to obtain in a foreclosure proceeding all the offsets or penalties which might be available in a creditor's action on the debt.

A final equitable issue that may arise in usury cases is the question of reformation. Creditors have sometimes sought to avoid usury penalties by requesting that usurious contracts be reformed to non-usurious rates. Such reformation has occasionally been granted on grounds of mutual mistake of the parties or on grounds of fraud by the borrower. n235 Another basis for a reformation-like remedy is any usury savings clause by which the lender agrees to refund any excess interest. While typically consumers seek to avoid the effect of these clauses so they can recover usury penalties, such a clause can form the basis of a contract claim if no other remedy is available. n235.1 However, outside of these narrow circumstances, courts have viewed statutory usury remedies as mandatory and have refused to resort to equity. n236

[b] Federal Remedies

[i] National Bank Act; DIDA; Excess Charges on High Cost Mortgages

The National Bank Act establishes the remedy for a usurious loan issued by a national bank: the lender forfeits the entire contract interest, and the borrower may recover a penalty of twice the interest paid within two years of the action. n237 Similar, but not identical remedies, apply to state banks, state and federal savings and loan institutions, and state and federal credit unions which are claiming federal preemption of state usury laws under the alternative ceiling provisions of the DIDA. n238 If the alternative ceiling exceeds the interest rate allowed by the state, and the state ceiling is thereby preempted, but the lender charges a rate even higher than allowed by the DIDA alternative ceiling, then the lender forfeits the entire contract interest and the borrower may recover twice the amount of the interest paid within two years of the commencement of the action. If the state interest ceiling exceeds the DIDA alternative ceiling, or, if for some other reason, such as a state opt-out, the alternative ceiling preemption does not apply, the wording of DIDA suggests that state usury remedies control.

A separate set of federal remedies is available in the case of charges contracted for or imposed on certain high cost mortgages in violation of the Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act of 1994. n239

[ii] RICO

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) n240 provides powerful civil remedies, n241 including attorney's fees and treble damages, to victims of a broadly defined range of "racketeering activity" or to those who have been subjected to the collection of an "unlawful debt," which is defined as any usurious debt bearing interest of at least twice the "enforceable rate." n242

In order to state a claim under RICO, a plaintiff must allege either the conduct of an "enterprise" through a "pattern" of "racketeering activity" n243 or the conduct of an enterprise through the collection of an "unlawful debt." n244 In H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., n245 the Supreme Court held that the concept of "pattern" has two separate properties that must be established: relationship and continuity. n246 The relationship property is met if the acts have "the same or similar purposes, results, participants, victims, or methods of commission, or are otherwise interrelated." n247 As for continuity, although the Court declined to express a specific test, it roughed out the requirement by providing that a plaintiff could meet the requirement by showing either closed-ended or open-ended continuity. n248 Closed-ended continuity could be shown "by proving a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time." n249 Alternatively, a plaintiff could show "open-ended" continuity by proving a threat of continued racketeering activity. n250

Several RICO cases involving allegedly fraudulent creditor overcharges have been litigated. n251

Many states have state RICO statutes, which should also be considered. n252 Some of them may also offer treble damages for collection of an unlawful debt. n253

[iii] Class Actions

Usury cases are well-suited to class action treatment. n254 Lenders who overcharge typically do so systematically, so there are common issues of law and fact. Often each borrower is entitled to a relatively small recovery, such as double the amount of the overcharge. A primary purpose of class actions is to provide a way to recover damage awards that are too small to make individual suits economically feasible. n255

Usury class actions produce other benefits as well. As the California Supreme Court has noted, such actions often produce "several salutary by-products, including a therapeutic effect upon those sellers who indulge in fraudulent practices, aid to legitimate business enterprises by curtailing illegitimate competition, and avoidance to the judicial process of the burden of multiple litigation involving identical claims." n256

Individual issues are likely to be minimal in a usury class action. Some usury statutes apply only to non-business loans, but, since in most cases the purpose of the loan is determined by the written representations the borrower made to the lender, this can easily be determined from the lender's records. If there are individual factual questions about the purpose of the loan, they can be resolved through the claims process or by bifurcating the proceedings. n257 Damages can usually be determined from the lender's own records. n258 For nationwide class actions, however, the court will either have to find a basis for applying the law of a single state, or conclude that variations among the states' laws are not so significant as to make the class action unmanageable. n259

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawNational BanksInterest & UsuryGeneral OverviewBanking LawNational BanksInterest & UsuryUsury LitigationContracts LawDebtor & Creditor RelationsContracts LawDefensesGeneral OverviewContracts LawDefensesUsury

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Woods v. Holy Cross Hosp., 591 F.2d 1164, 1171 (5th Cir. 1979) ; Wartman v. Branch 7, Civil Div., County Court, 510 F.2d 130 (7th Cir. 1975) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Some state usury laws may only be raised defensively. See, e.g., Kan. Stat. Ann. § 16-207(a); George v. Capital S. Mortgage Invs., Inc., 265 Kan. 431, 961 P.2d 32 (1998) . Kansas recognizes an affirmative claim for usury, however, under its common law. Id.

(n3)Footnote 3. See generally Dairy Queen v. Wood, 369 U.S. 469, 82 S. Ct. 894, 8 L. Ed. 2d 44 (1962) (action to collect debt for breach of contract); Raedeke v. Gibraltor Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 10 Cal. 3d 665, 111 Cal. Rptr. 693, 517 P.2d 1157 (1974) ; Whitfield v. Cornelius, 554 S.W.2d 870 (Ky. Ct. App. 1977) , writ vacated, 563 S.W.2d 9 (Ky. 1978) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Rowell v. Kaplan, 103 R.I. 60, 235 A.2d 91 (1967) ; see generally Annot., 17 A.L.R.3d 1321 (1968) (right in equity suit to jury trial of legal counterclaim).

(n5)Footnote 5. Jansen v. Nu-West, Inc., 2000 Wash. App. LEXIS 1993 (Wash. App. Aug. 17, 2000) . Cf. Bryer v. Green-Venable, 2001 Cal. App. LEXIS 3238 (Dec. 12, 2001) (unpublished, citation limited) (question whether a transaction is usurious is mixed question of law and fact).

(n6)Footnote 6. See generally Kenty v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 92 F.3d 384 (6th Cir. 1996) (financing force-placed insurance premium was a loan), reh'g, en banc, denied, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 24797 (6th Cir. Sept. 19, 1996) ; Turner v. E-Z Check Cashing, Inc., 35 F. Supp. 2d 1042 (M.D. Tenn. 1999) (deferred presentment of check constitutes a loan); Hamilton v. York, 987 F. Supp. 953 (E.D. Ky. 1997) (same); Cazenovia Coll. v. Renshaw (In re Renshaw), 229 B.R. 552 (B.A.P. 2d Cir. 1999) , aff'd, 222 F.3d 82 (2d Cir. 2000) (unpaid balance of tuition, room, and board a credit sale and not a loan even though the college charged a 19.2% per year "service charge"; therefore dischargeable by debtor in Chapter 7 bankruptcy proceeding); Eikenberry v. Adirondack Spring Water Co., 65 N.Y.2d 125, 490 N.Y.S.2d 484, 480 N.E.2d 70 (1985) (distinguishing loan and forbearance); Miro v. Allied Fin. Co., 650 S.W.2d 938 (Tex. Ct. App. 1983) (no loan when loan instrument cancelled shortly after signing and never funded). Statutes which regulate charges for the "use" of money are generally addressing loans. See Tygrett v. Univ. Gardens Home Ass'n, 687 S.W.2d 481 (Tex. Ct. App. 1985) . Aple Auto Cash Express, Inc. v. State ex rel. Oklahoma Dep't of Consumer Credit, 78 P.3d 1231 (Okla. 2003) (sale-leaseback). Decision Point, Inc. v. Reece & Nichols Realtors, Inc., 144 P.3d 706 (Kan. 2006) (applying U.C.C.C. definition of loan as "creation of debt by the lender's payment of or agreement to pay money to the debtor"; advancing money to real estate agents in return for their agreement to repay it either through assignment of specific anticipated commissions or repurchase of the account creates loans); Opella v. Opella, 896 A.2d 714 (R.I. 2006) (finding intra-family transfer to be loan rather than gift; fact that father kept meticulous records of payments to son is persuasive).

Finding no loan or credit: Rivera v. AT&T Corp., 141 F. Supp. 2d 719 (S.D. Tex. 2001) (late payment of cable TV bill not a loan even though equipment was "loaned" to subscribers); Hoxie Implement Co. v. Baker, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 6472 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 21, 2001) , pet. for review denied, (Mar. 21, 2002) (demand for money allegedly due as a result of nonpayment of debt was not usury where jury found that no debt was actually owed); Benchmark Land Dev., Inc. v. Wooley, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8390 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 20, 2001) , pet. for review denied, (Mar. 14, 2002) (agreement to repay unauthorized transfers of funds would not be loan). See also Carey v. Lincoln Loan Co., 165 Or. App. 657, 998 P.2d 724 (2000) (installment land contract is not a loan as defined by statute that limits restrictions on prepayment); Betts v. Advance Am., 213 F.R.D. 466 (M.D. Fla. 2003) (payday loan); In re Hoberg, 300 B.R. 752 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2003) (husband's obligation to pay money to satisfy spousal support and division of property claims not loan or forbearance); Carter v. Four Seasons Funding Corp., 97 S.W.3d 387 (Ark. 2003) (sale of accounts receivable by sophisticated business entity not a loan even though buyer had recourse against seller if accounts proved uncollectable); Mackey v. Bristol W. Ins. Servs., 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 536 (Ct. App. 2003) (financing of auto insurance policy not a credit transaction when insured was under no obligation to pay for full term, but could cancel after paying for any number of months).

(n7)Footnote 7. See generally Henson v. Columbus Bank & Trust Co., 770 F.2d 1566 (11th Cir. 1985) (refraining from calling a demand note is not a forbearance); Smith Mach. Co. v. Jenkins, 654 F.2d 693 (10th Cir. 1981) (detention, not forbearance); Sunburst Bank v. Keith, 648 So. 2d 1147 (Miss. 1995) (oral agreements to extend loan term accompanied by payment of foreclosure fee were forbearance agreements); Eikenberry v. Adirondack Spring Water Co., 65 N.Y.2d 125, 490 N.Y.S.2d 484, 480 N.E.2d 70 (1985) (agreement was a forbearance); Lowell & Austin, Inc. v. Traux, 507 A.2d 949 (Vt. 1985) (no forbearance); Carper v. Kanawha Banking & Trust Co., 207 S.E.2d 897 (W. Va. 1974) (no reversible error in usury verdict where debtor's attorney claimed usurious "loan" in opening argument, but later proved usurious "forbearance").

(n8)Footnote 8. Edwards v. Alabama Farm Bureau Mut. Casualty Ins. Co., 509 So. 2d 232 (Ala. Civ. App. 1986) , cert. quashed, 509 So. 2d 241 (1987) (no distinction between treatment of loan and forbearance in Alabama Mini-Code).

(n9)Footnote 9. See, e.g., Computer Sales Corp. v. Rousonelos Farms, Inc., 190 Ill. App. 3d 338, 546 N.E.2d 761

(1989) ; Citipostal, Inc. v. Unistar Leasing, 283 A.D.2d 916, 724 N.Y.S.2d 555 (4th Dep't 2001) (neither a credit sale nor a lease constitutes a loan or forbearance). Cf. Bell v. Muller, 118 P.3d 405 (Wash. Ct. App. 2005) (amended usury statute excludes retail installment sales from its coverage), amended on other grounds, Bell v. Muller, 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 3111 (Wash. Ct. App. Dec. 8, 2005) . But cf. Perez v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 892 A.2d 1255 (N.J. 2006) (holding that interest and time-price differential are indistinguishable).

(n10)Footnote 10. Luebbers v. Money Store, Inc., 40 S.W.3d 745 (Ark. 2001) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Pollice v. National Tax Funding, 225 F.3d 379, 396-97 (3d Cir. 2000) . Compare Sheehy v. Franchise Tax Bd., 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 760 (App. 2000) (no agreement to forbear collection of unpaid taxes, so usury laws did not apply); Alaskan Fireplace, Inc. v. Everett, 266 Wis. 2d 694, 667 N.W.2d 378 (2003) (Wis. Ct. App. 2003) (not a credit transaction when seller did not grant buyers the right to defer payment, but imposed 1.5% monthly late charge as means of dissuading late payment), review denied 266 Wis. 2d 64, 671 N.W.2d 851 (Wis. 2003) .

(n12)Footnote 12. State ex rel. Salazar v. The Cash Now Store, Inc., 31 P.3d 161 (Colo. 2001) .

(n13)Footnote 13. State ex rel. Salazar v. The Cash Now Store, Inc., 31 P.3d 161, 167 (Colo. 2001) (noting that the lender demonstrates that it does not view the refund as a chose in action because the borrower owes it a sum of money whether the refund of "chose" is valuable to the lender or not).

(n14)Footnote 14. See, e.g., Britz v. Kinsvater, 351 P.2d 986 (Ariz. 1960) ; Seargeant v. Smith, 163 P.2d 680 (Ariz. 1945) . See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 10.5.3 (3rd ed. and Supp.).

(n15)Footnote 15. Dopp v. Yari, 927 F. Supp. 814 (D.N.J. 1996) . See also Kraft v. Mason, 668 So. 2d 679 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996) (no usury where borrower had duty to repay principal, but the usurious interest was contingent on litigation success). See also Anglo-Dutch Petroleum Int'l, Inc. v. Haskell, 193 S.W.3d 87 (Tex. App. 2006) (loan that was only to be paid back at the successful completion of litigation created no absolute obligation to repay and was not therefore usurious); Goffney v. O'Quinn, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9593 (Tex. App. Oct. 28, 2004) (unpublished, citation limited) (contingency contracts between attorneys and clients for repayment of litigation expenses upon successful completion of case do not create an absolute obligation to repay and so are not usurious).

(n16)Footnote 16. Britz v. Kinsvater, 351 P.2d 986 (Ariz. 1960) .

(n17)Footnote 17. Some statutes, however, may impose liability for imposing any charge in excess of that authorized, irrespective of whether the overall yield to the creditor would breach an applicable ceiling.

(n18)Footnote 18. For example, the Uniform Small Loan Law, 7th Draft § 13(c) (June 1, 1942), provides that amounts beyond those allowed may not be "directly or indirectly charged, contracted for, or received." The UCCC § 5.201(3) (1974 Act) provides consumer remedies when a creditor has "contracted for or received" excess charges or has refused to give the consumer a valid refund within a reasonable time after demand.

(n19)Footnote 19. In re McCorhill Pub., Inc., 86 B.R. 783, 793-94 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1988) .

(n20)Footnote 20. See generally National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, Ch. 4 (3rd ed. and Supp.)

(n21)Footnote 21. Third party fees may also be treated as non-interest expenses by judicial interpretation of general usury laws. See § 6.05[3] supra.

(n22)Footnote 22. Non-interest charges may be the subject of separate regulation, even if the interest rate itself is deregulated. E.g., Mayo v. Key Fin. Servs., Inc., 1994 Mass. Super. LEXIS 549 (June 22, 1994) (interpreting Mass. Gen.

Laws Ch.183, § 63), aff'd, as modified, on other issues, 678 N.E.2d 1311 (Mass. 1997) ; Torres v. Overby, 2000 Tex. App. LEXIS 2493 (Apr. 17, 2000) (unpublished, citation limited) (late fees are contingent additional charges treated as interest under the usury laws, although not under the common law definition). Similarly, real estate closing fees may be limited to actual or reasonable and necessary fees. Va. Code Ann. § 6.1-330.70-72. See also Alston v. Crown Auto, Inc., 224 F.3d 332 (4th Cir. 2000) (excessive late fees do not make loan usurious, but penalties in late fee statute apply); S & A Indus., Inc. v. Bank Atlanta, 543 S.E.2d 743 (Ga. Ct. App. 2000) (concurring opinion for half of equally divided court) (late charge is considered a fee under criminal usury statutes but did not exceed limits). See, e.g., Rieser v. Todd (In re Chari), 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 2895 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio Sept. 2, 2005) (fees were interest even though termed loan commitment fees where they were consideration for the loan; extension fees also interest to extent they exceeded reasonable late fees).

(n23)Footnote 23. E.g., Garrison v. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n of S.C., 402 S.E.2d 24 (Va. 1991) (risk management fee not listed among permissible charges and, therefore, was an illegal charge; only "actual" appraisal cost authorized, excess constituted interest). Cf. May v. Key Fin. Servs., Inc., Clearinghouse No. 49,969 (Mass. Super Ct. June 22, 1994) (implied private right of action for violation of statute limiting points; assertable by a suitable common law remedy; borrowers choose to assert common law restitution).

(n24)Footnote 24. "Principal" or "amount financed" is often statutorily defined. Observe that the principal amount of a loan in this functional sense may not be the face amount of the note signed by the borrower because lenders often include charges such as "points"--which really are compensation to the creditor--in the face amount of the note. Applicable law often sanctions this.

(n25)Footnote 25. E.g., Yazzie v. Ray Vicker's Special Cars, Inc., 12 F. Supp. 2d 1230 (D.N.M. 1998) (pawn service fee exceeded legal limit); Fryer v. Easy Money Title Pawn, Inc., 183 B.R. 322 , reconsid. denied, 183 B.R. 654 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1995) (pawnbroker's 23% per month "service charge" was not to reimburse it for any specific expenses, and was, therefore, interest); Dunnam v. Burns, 901 S.W.2d 628 (Tex. Ct. App. 1995) (additional sum to be repaid with principal was interest, even though not denominated as such). But see Nicholas v. Deposit Guar. Nat'l Bank, 182 F.R.D. 226 (S.D. Miss. 1998) (NSF fee held not to be interest under Mississippi law because it was not charged in connection with a credit transaction).

(n26)Footnote 26. See § 6.05 supra.

(n27)Footnote 27. But see § 6.03 supra, where early termination is at issue.

(n28)Footnote 28. For common interest calculation formulae, such as simple interest, add-on interest, or discount interest, parties can frequently stipulate to the accuracy of a published rate chart which will show the permissible finance charge for any given principal amount (or amount financed) and rate. A common source is The Cost of Personal Borrowing in the United States, published by the Financial Publishing Company, Boston, MA. Requests for admission might also be used. See Ogier v. Johnson (In re Healing Touch, Inc.), 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 1399 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. May 6, 2005) (court calculated interest rate by "taking the total amount of interest charged under the loan and dividing by the number of months in the loan" and then comparing that to the permissible rate); Wellman v. Bank One, 2005 Mich. App. LEXIS 2238 (Mich. Ct. App. Sept. 20, 2005) (court calculates simple interest rate, lender had to know rate was usurious) (unpublished, citation limited). Cf. In re Williams, 330 B.R. 534 (Bankr. M.D. La. 2005) (court relied on lender's testimony that rate calculated correctly in absence of evidence from borrowers); Rivera v. Schlick, 887 A.2d 492 (D.C. 2005) (borrower failed to prove interest rate or provide information from which the court could calculate the interest rate; conclusory allegations of interest rate insufficient); Perez v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 892 A.2d 1255 (N.J. 2006) (citing borrowers' expert witness on the interest rate of the rent-to-own contracts).

(n29)Footnote 29. See generally § 6.07[1] supra.

(n30)Footnote 30. See § 6.02 supra.

(n31)Footnote 31. See, e.g., In re Swartz, 37 B.R. 776 (Bankr. D.R.I. 1984) (small loans); Beneficial Fin. Co. v. Administrator of Loan Laws, 260 Md. 430, 272 A.2d 649 (1971) (no intent requirement under Small Loan Act); Duckworth v. Bernstein, 466 A.2d 517 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 1983) (no intent requirement under second mortgage law unless treble damages sought); Thelen v. Ducharme, 151 Mich. App. 441, 390 N.W.2d 264 (1986) ; Commercial Credit Equip. Corp. v. West, 677 S.W.2d 669 (Tex. Ct. App. 1984 writ ref'd n.r.e.) .

(n32)Footnote 32. An exception is Florida which generally requires a showing of "corrupt intent." See, e.g., North Am. Mortgage Invs. v. Cape San Blas Joint Venture, 378 So. 2d 287 (Fla. 1979) (corrupt intent demonstrated); Dixon v. Sharp, 276 So. 2d 817 (Fla. 1973) (discussion of corrupt intent); Gergora v. Goldstein Professional Ass'n Defined Benefits Plan Pension & Trust, 500 So. 2d 695 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1987) (no corrupt intent). "Corrupt intent" is also required in North Carolina but, as interpreted by the courts of that state, only the intent to charge a rate in excess of the statutory limit need be shown. See Swindell v. Overton, 342 S.E.2d 391 (N.C. Ct. App. 1986) .

New Mexico has also now adopted the "corrupt intent" rule. See, e.g., Maulsby v. Magnuson, 107 N.M. 223, 755 P.2d 67 (1988) (the court overturned Hays v. Hudson, 85 N.M. 512, 514 P.2d 31 (1973)) .

(n33)Footnote 33. See Fogie v. Thorn Americas, Inc., 95 F.3d 645 (8th Cir. 1996) , cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1166, 117 S. Ct. 1427, 137 L. Ed. 2d 536 (1997) (applying Minnesota law); Henson v. Columbus Bank & Trust Co., 770 F.2d 1566 (11th Cir. 1985) ; Duderwicz v. Sweetwater Sav. Ass'n, 595 F.2d 1008 (5th Cir. 1979) (applying Georgia law); In re McCorhill Pub., Inc., 86 B.R. 783 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1988) (New York law). See also Brodie v. Schmutz (In re Venture Mortgage Fund), 282 F.3d 185 (2d Cir. 2001) (loan is usurious if lender intends to take and receive interest in excess of that allowed by law even though lender has no specific intent to violate usury laws; loans made by victims to Ponzi scheme operator because of promised high returns are void); SAL Leasing, Inc. v. State ex rel. Napolitano, 10 P.3d 1221 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2000) (unlawful intent is shown by mere fact of intentionally doing what is forbidden by statute); Robinson v. Poferl, 2000 Minn. App. LEXIS 58 (Minn. Ct. App. Jan. 25, 2000) .

(n34)Footnote 34. See, e.g., Cochran v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n of Houston, 586 S.W.2d 849 (Tex. 1979) ; Commerce Crowdus & Canton, Ltd. v. DKS Constr., Inc., 776 S.W.2d 615, 618-19 (Tex. Ct. App. 1989) (" 'bona fide error' defense is only available when the evidence shows that the charge of usury results from the ignorance of a material fact or from other unintentional mishaps in office practice or routine which may be fairly characterized as 'clerical' errors").

(n35)Footnote 35. See Alamo Lumber Co. v. Gold, 661 S.W.2d 926 (Tex. 1983) .

(n36)Footnote 36. See, e.g., Greglon Indus., Inc. v. Bowman, 572 A.2d 369 (Conn. Ct. App. 1990) ; Dang v. F & S Land Dev. Co., 618 P.2d 276 (Haw. 1980) ; A&M Dev. v. Sherwood & Roberts, Inc., 457 P.2d 439 (Idaho 1969) ; Freitas v. Geddes Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 63 N.Y.2d 254, 471 N.E.2d 436, 481 N.Y.S.2d 665 (1984) (plurality opinion); Norstar Bank v. Pickard & Anderson, 547 N.Y.S.2d 734 (App. Div. 1989) ; W. Auto Supply v. Vick, 277 S.E.2d 360 (N.C. 1981) , reaff'd on reh'g, 283 S.E.2d 101 (1981) .

(n37)Footnote 37. See, e.g., Handi Inv. Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 550 F.2d 543 (9th Cir. 1977) (applying California law); McDermott v. Strauss, 678 S.W.2d 334 (Ark. 1984) .

(n38)Footnote 38. See, e.g., OMP v. Security Pac. Bus. Fin. Inc., 716 F. Supp. 239 (N.D. Miss. 1989) ("no 'presumption of usury' under Mississippi law: one claiming usury must furnish clear, positive, and certain proof of usury"); In re Borum, 60 B.R. 516 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1986) (burden of proof on debtor when contract not usurious on its face). See generally Annot., 51 A.L.R.2d 1087 (1957) . See also Transmedia Rest. Co. v. 33 East 61st St. Rest. Corp., 710 N.Y.S.2d 756 (Sup. Ct. 2000) ("strong presumption against the finding of usury").

(n39)Footnote 39. See Grotjohn Precise Connexiones Int'l, S.A. v. JEM Fin., Inc., 12 S.W.3d 859 (Tex. App. 2000) (if loan is usurious on its face, lender has burden of proving bona fide error).

(n40)Footnote 40. See Bellagio Ins., Ltd. v. Digital Broad. Corp., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4629 (W.D. Va. Mar. 23, 2005) (under either New York or Virginia law, burden of proof by "clear and convincing" or "clear and cogent" evidence on debtor); Hickman v. Courtney, 361 Ark. 5 (2005) (debtor has burden of proof by "clear and convincing" evidence); Comstock v. Steinbergh, 18 Mass. L. Rep. 573 (Mass. Super. Ct. 2004) (debtor has burden); Hochman v. LaRea, 789 N.Y.S.2d 300 (N.Y. App. Div. 2005) (debtor has "heavy burden" of showing usury by "clear and convincing" evidence). See also Pierce v. Emigrant Mortg. Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22397 (D. Conn. Sept. 29, 2005) (burden of proving that mortgage was bona fide and therefore qualified for mortgage exception for usury statute on defendant lender).

(n41)Footnote 41. See, e.g., Giventer v. Arnow, 37 N.Y.2d 305, 372 N.Y.S.2d 63 (1975) ; Matter of Estate of Dane, 55 A.D.2d 224, 390 N.Y.S.2d (1976) . See also C.I.O.S. Foundation v. Berkston Ins., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2337 (N.D. Miss. Jan. 28, 2000) (where usurious contract was unambiguous, parol evidence was not admissible).

(n42)Footnote 42. See Olson v. Porter, 539 N.W.2d 523 (Mich. Ct. App. 1995) . Cf. Robinson v. Poferl, 2000 Minn. App. LEXIS 58 (Jan. 25, 2000) (unpublished, citation limited) (taking reasonable precautions to avoid usury, such as consulting qualified third party, can negate intent; not shown where lender did not retain own attorney and refused to reform loan after borrower discovered the usury).

(n43)Footnote 43. Zwayer v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 279 Ill. App. 3d 906, 216 Ill. Dec. 585, 665 N.E.2d 843 (1996) (court held the contract was ambiguous and should be construed against the maker where it contained a clause allowing the use of the Rule of 78s to rebate upon prepayment, but was silent if acceleration occurred), appeal denied, 168 Ill. 2d 629, 219 Ill. Dec. 578, 671 N.E.2d 745 (1996) .

(n44)Footnote 44. For a discussion of the interpretation of adhesive contracts, see Drennan v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank, 28 Cal. 3d 764, 170 Cal. Rptr. 904, 621 P.2d 1318 , cert. denied, 454 U.S. 833, 102 S. Ct. 132, 70 L. Ed. 2d 112 (1981) .

(n45)Footnote 45. Cf. Gonzalez v. Gainan's Chevrolet City, Inc., 690 S.W.2d 885 (Tex. 1985) (no presumption of legality for contracts under Consumer Credit Code except in cases alleging usury).

(n46)Footnote 46. See Matter of Sprouse, 577 F.2d 989 (5th Cir. 1978) .

(n47)Footnote 47. Checks and promissory notes are classic examples of instruments which generally fall within the UCC definition of a "negotiable instrument." UCC § 3-104.

(n48)Footnote 48. UCC § 3-305. Defenses which can be asserted against a holder in due course include the lack of the maker's capacity to execute the instrument, e.g., Shepard v. First Am. Mortgage Co., 347 S.E.2d 118 (S.C. Ct. App. 1986) , the illegality of the instrument, misrepresentation of the essential character or terms of the contract, American Plan Corp. v. Woods, 16 Ohio App. 1, 45 Ohio Op. 2d 2, 240 N.E.2d 886 (1968) , and bankruptcy. As is discussed in this section, usury can be a defense too as to holder in due course. For a discussion of fraud as a defense to a holder in due course, see generally Annot., 78 A.L.R.3d 1020 (1977) ; § 6.09[6] infra .

(n49)Footnote 49. See, e.g., Leasing Serv. Corp. v. River City Constr., 743 F.2d 871 (11th Cir. 1984) .

(n50)Footnote 50. UETA § 16. UETA is published at 7A U.L.A. Pt. 1 (Supp.). The text of UETA can also be found on the website of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, www.nccusl.org. By the end of 2000, UETA had been adopted in 24 states.

(n51)Footnote 51. 15 U.S.C. § 7021. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law Ch. 9 (2d ed. 2002 and Supp.).

(n52)Footnote 52. U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(11), (31). See ANSI X9.103-2004, Motor Vehicle Retail Sale and

Lease--Electronic Contracting, available at webstore.ansi.org.

(n53)Footnote 53. UETA § 16.

(n54)Footnote 54. UETA § 3 cmt. 6, § 16 cmt. 1.

(n55)Footnote 55. 15 U.S.C. § 7021, effective Oct. 27, 2000 (90 days after the enactment date of June 30, 2000). See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 9.2.10 (4th ed. 2009) and National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending § 4.2.9 (6th ed. 2007 and supp.) for further discussion of this statute.

(n56)Footnote 56. See 15 U.S.C. § 7021(f) and UETA § 16(f), which require the person in control of a transferrable record to provide the obligor "reasonable proof" of control.

(n57)Footnote 57. See 15 U.S.C. § 7021(d), (e), and UETA § 16(d), (e), both of which refer to the UCC for rules governing the rights of holders and obligors.

(n58)Footnote 58. See 16 C.F.R. § 433.2 (1986).

(n59)Footnote 59. See 16 C.F.R. § 433.1(d) (1986).

(n60)Footnote 60. Cf. Heastie v. Community Bank, 727 F. Supp. 1133 (N.D. Ill. 1989) . For an interpretation of the final sentence of the FTC notice which limits a debtor's recovery under the FTC Rule, see Home Sav. Ass'n v. Guerra, 720 S.W.2d 636 (Tex. Ct. App. 1986) .

(n61)Footnote 61. See UCC § 3-104(1)(b).

(n62)Footnote 62. UCC §§ 3-102(1)(e), 3-302. See Mahaffey v. Investor's Nat'l Sec. Co., 747 P.2d 890 (Nev. 1987) (home improvement contract with FTC holder rule notice precluded assignee from asserting holder in due course; liable for defenses arising out of contractor's conduct, including fraudulent inducement and failure of consideration). See also Carper v. Kanawha Banking & Trust Co., 207 S.E.2d 897 (W. Va. 1974) (conditional sales contract was not negotiable instrument).

(n63)Footnote 63. See Capital Bank & Trust Co. v. Lacey, 393 So. 2d 668 (La. 1980) . For a discussion of consumer remedies for creditor violations of FTC Rules, see National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 6.6 (5th ed. 2001 and Supp.). That section contains a detailed discussion of assignee liability, including the argument that consumer credit contracts impliedly incorporate all applicable laws, including the FTC notice, even where it is not explicitly included. Id.

(n64)Footnote 64. UCC §§ 9-403, 9-404.

(n65)Footnote 65. Rev. UCC § 3-305(e).

(n66)Footnote 66. See, e.g., Associates Home Equity Servs., Inc. v. Troup, 343 N.J. Super. 254, 778 A.2d 529 (App. Div. 2001) . But see Crisomia v. Parkway Mortgage, Inc., 2001 Bankr. LEXIS 1469 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Aug. 21, 2001) . See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 6.6.5.4.2 (5th ed. 2001 and Supp.).

(n67)Footnote 67. Cf. Barnes v. Michigan Nat'l Bank Corp., 159 Mich. App. 433, 407 N.W.2d 23 (Mich. Ct. App. 1987) (state MVSFA did not apply to direct loan entered into between bank and borrower to finance vehicle purchase where no recourse by bank against dealer or other relationship between bank and dealer).

This loophole has been somewhat limited in the context of certain high cost home equity loans. See Ch. 2 supra.

(n68)Footnote 68. See Ch. 2 supra.

(n69)Footnote 69. UCC § 3-306.

(n70)Footnote 70. UCC § 1-201(20). UCC § 3-302 describes a holder in due course as one who takes an "instrument" under certain conditions. An "instrument" is defined as a "negotiable instrument." UCC § 3-102(1)(e). (Advocates should note that, in addition to the FTC Holder Rule, this provision also may protect consumers from holder in due course defenses in many retail installment sales, as many Retail Installment Sales Acts prohibit the use of negotiable instruments in creating the credit agreement.) Again, as noted above, no holder of an instrument containing the FTC notice can become a holder in due course, regardless of the manner in which it takes the instrument, because only a holder of a negotiable instrument can be a holder in due course. UCC §§ 3-102(1)(e), 3-302.

(n71)Footnote 71. Taylor v. Roeder, 360 S.E.2d 191, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 652, 655 (Va. 1987) .

(n72)Footnote 72. UCC § 3-302.

(n73)Footnote 73. UCC § 3-203.

(n74)Footnote 74. Official Comments 2, 4 to UCC § 3-203.

(n75)Footnote 75. UCC § 3-203(b).

(n76)Footnote 76. Official Comment 2 to UCC § 3-203; see Triffin v. Somerset Valley Bank, 777 A.2d 993 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 2001) (buyer of forged check from holder in due course entitled to assert rights of holder).

(n77)Footnote 77. See also § 6.09[6] infra; National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, §§ 11.7.2.5 (7th ed. 2008).

(n78)Footnote 78. Maberry v. Said, 927 F. Supp. 1456, 1461-63 (D. Kan. 1996) .

(n79)Footnote 79. United States v. Cunningham, 83 F.3d 218 (8th Cir. 1996) (affirming criminal fraud conviction); United States v. Camuti, 78 F.3d 738 (1st Cir. 1996) (affirming mail fraud conviction); Louis Vuitton S.A. v. Lee, 875 F.2d 584, 590 (7th Cir. 1989) (trademark infringement by selling counterfeit goods); Bosco v. Serhant, 836 F.2d 271, 276 (7th Cir. 1987) (brokerage's liability in securities fraud case), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1056, 108 S. Ct. 2824, 100 L. Ed. 2d 925 (1988) .

(n80)Footnote 79.1. See U.C.C. §§ 3-302(a)(1) (holder is not holder in due course if instrument is so irregular or incomplete as to call into question its authenticity), 1-202(a)(3) (definition of "notice").

(n81)Footnote 80. UCC § 9-206.

(n82)Footnote 81. See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 11.7.2 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n83)Footnote 82. See Beatty v. Franklin Inv. Co., 319 F.2d 712 (D.C. Cir. 1963) (NIL decision); Katz v. Simcha Co., 251 Md. 227, 246 A.2d 555 (1968) (dictum, citing Beatty, supra); see also Hatton v. Money Lenders & Assocs., Ltd., 127 Ill. App. 3d 577, 469 N.E.2d 360 (Ill. App. Ct. 1984) (summary judgment awarded to note holder once good faith and absence of notice of usury defense established; no discussion of possibility that usury is defense against a holder in due course).

(n84)Footnote 83. See Michigan Nat'l Bank v. Mattingly, 212 S.E.2d 754 (W. Va. 1975) ; Carper v. Kanawha Banking & Trust Co., 207 S.E.2d 897 (W. Va. 1974) (West Virginia usury statute amended to preclude recovery from holder in due course).

(n85)Footnote 84. See, e.g., Bank of N.C. v. Rock Island Bank, 630 F.2d 1243 (7th Cir. 1980) ; Andrews v. Martin, 436 S.W.2d 285 (Ark. 1969) ; Fuller v. Universal Acceptance Corp., 264 A.2d 506 (D.C. 1970) ; Lucas v. Beco Homes, Inc., 494 S.W.2d 417 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973) ; Westervelt v. Gateway Fin. Serv., 190 N.J. Super. 615, 464 A.2d 1203 (Super. Ct. Ch. Div. 1983) ; Robinson v. Rudy, 666 S.W.2d 507 (Tex. Ct. App. 1984 writ. ref'd n.r.e.) ; Michigan Nat'l Bank v. Mattingly, 212 S.E.2d 754 (W. Va. 1975) (transaction prior to statutory amendment). See also National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 6.6.5.5 (4th ed. 1997 and Supp.).

(n86)Footnote 85. See, e.g., Midwest Fed. Sav. v. West Bend Mut. Ins., 407 N.W.2d 690 (Minn. Ct. App. 1987) (insurance company could not assert usury claim both because claim was personal to the borrower-insureds and because the usury defense is unavailable to corporations); La Barre v. Gold, 520 So. 2d 1327 (Miss. 1988) . See also All Seasons Window & Door Mfg. v. Red Dot Corp., 181 S.W.3d 490 (Tex. App. 2005) (company for whose use funds were advanced cannot claim usury since only its president was a party to the contract). Cf. Wombold v. Assocs. Fin. Servs. Co. of Mont., Inc., 104 P.3d 1080 (Mont. 2004) (finding implied private right of action under Montana's Consumer Loan Act, since enacted to benefit borrowers).

(n87)Footnote 86. See Bizzoco v. Chintz, 193 Conn. 304, 476 A.2d 572 (1984) ; Fidelcor Mortgage Co. v. Tyroff, 250 Ga. 900, 302 S.E.2d 96 (1983) (individual co-maker had standing to assert usury but lost claim because of business purpose usury exception); Ciminelli v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 624 S.W.2d 903 (Tex. 1981) ; Miller v. First State Bank of Bedford, 551 S.W.2d 89 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977) ,, 563 S.W.2d 572 (Tex. 1978) ; Williams v. Security Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 120 Wis. 2d 480, 355 N.W.2d 370 (Ct. App. 1984) .

(n88)Footnote 87. See, e.g., Seidel v. 18 East 17th St. Owners, 598 N.E.2d 7 (N.Y. 1992) (original borrower's corporate transferee was essentially same people, and transfer occurred as a result of building's conversion to a co-op, not a sale to an independent third party; transferee, therefore, could assert usury). See, e.g., Family Fed. Sav. & Loan v. Davis (In re Davis), 172 B.R. 437 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1994) ("purchaser of equity of redemption in real estate who is in privity of estate or contract with the mortgagor and grantor can plead usury" (D.C. law)). See, e.g., Eisenstein v. DiPrimio, 2000 Ga. App. LEXIS 1140 (Ga. Ct. App. Sept. 15, 2000) (law firm had standing to claim usury as defense when its client's creditor sought to impose constructive trust over money in client trust account). See also Sheehan v. Richardson, 315 B.R. 226 (D.R.I. 2004) (trustee has standing to pursue assigned claim); In re Colad Group, Inc., 324 B.R. 208 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 2005) (debtor's waiver of defense of usury does not bind the bankruptcy estate).

(n89)Footnote 88. See Martin v. Ajax Constr. Co., 124 Cal. App. 2d 425, 269 P.2d 132 (1954) .

(n90)Footnote 89. See, e.g., Superior Funding Corp. v. Big Apple Capital Corp., 738 F. Supp. 1468 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (guarantor of corporate debt cannot assert usury as defense); Bizzoco v. Chintz, 193 Conn. 304, 476 A.2d 572 (1984) ; Snyder v. Woxo, Inc., 185 Neb. 545, 177 N.W.2d 281 (1970) . See generally Annot., 63 A.L.R.2d 924 (1959) .

But see Johnson v. Ronamy Consumer Credit Corp., 515 A.2d 682 (Del. 1986) (second mortgage statute covered guarantors); First Nat'l Consumer Disc. Co. v. Fuller, 419 A.2d 940 (Del. 1980) (same); Skeen v. Slavik, 555 S.W.2d 516 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977) (corporation's guarantor, who later executes personal note to lender assuming the debt of the corporation, may assert usury).

(n91)Footnote 89.1. Washburn v. Makedonsky, 718 N.W.2d 842 (Mich. Ct. App. 2006) .

(n92)Footnote 90. See General Elec. Credit Corp. v. Best Refrigerated Express, Inc., 222 Neb. 499, 385 N.W.2d 81 (1986) ; Rader v. Burnett, 175 Neb. 663, 122 N.W.2d 747 (1963) ; Eposti v. Rivers Bros. Inc., 207 Cal. 570, 279 P. 423 (1929) .

(n93)Footnote 91. A New York decision, for example, allowed an assignee to claim usury after tendering the principal and legal interest to the creditor. Moore v. Plaza Commercial Corp., 9 A.D.2d 223, 192 N.Y.S.2d 770 (N.Y. App. Div. 1959) , aff'd, 202 N.Y.S.2d 321, 168 N.E.2d 390 (N.Y. 1960) ; see also Benser v. Independence Bank, 735

S.W.2d 566 (Tex. Ct. App. 1987) .

(n94)Footnote 92. The precise statement of the rule varies from court to court. Compare Murphy v. Hagan, 275 S.C. 334, 271 S.E.2d 311 (S.C. 1980) , with First State Bank of Bedford v. Miller, 551 S.W.2d 89 (Tex. App. 1977) , on other grounds and aff'd as modified, 563 S.W.2d 572 (Tex. 1978) . See also Olson v. Froslee, 2000 Minn. App. LEXIS 795 (Aug. 1, 2000) (unpublished, citation limited) (recognizing estoppel defense if borrower knows of usury, but finding it not shown here).

(n95)Footnote 93. See, e.g., Seidel v. 18 East 17th St. Owners, 598 N.E.2d 7 (N.Y. 1992) ; Lenart v. Ragsdale, 148 Mich. App. 571, 385 N.W.2d 282 (Mich. Ct. App. 1986) ; Lucas v. Beco Homes, Inc., 494 S.W.2d 417 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973) . See also Russo v. Carey, 706 N.Y.S.2d 760 (App. Div. 2000) (lender could raise defense of estoppel where he and borrower were friends, borrower prepared note and set interest rate, and some evidence suggested that borrower deliberately inserted usurious interest rate to avoid repayment); Hornblower & Weeks, Inc. v. Blue Marlin Breweries, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13748 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 21, 2000) (borrower not estopped from raising criminal usury as defense even if it knew loan was usurious and its agent prepared documents); In re Venture Mortg. Fund, L.P., 245 B.R. 460 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2000) , aff'd, 282 F.3d 185 (2d. Cir. 2002) (lender must show special relationship with borrower, a representation by borrower that the transaction is legal, intent to induce reliance, actual reliance, and injury; not shown here); Hufnagel v. George, 135 F. Supp. 2d 406 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (no estoppel without special relationship, which is limited to attorney-client, fiduciary, trustee, or long-standing relationship or its equivalent; borrower's suggestion of interest rate is not a defense). But see Keezing v. Rodriguez, 765 N.Y.S.2d 196 (Sup. Ct. 2003) (reducing interest to legal rate but refusing to void loan when debtor initiated and structured the transaction and prepared the documents). Van Carr Enters., Inc. v. Hamco, Inc., 365 Ark. 625, 232 S.W.3d 427, 2006 Ark. LEXIS 198 (Ark. Mar. 16, 2006) (no estoppel even though borrower's principal transcribed the parties' agreement, where there was testimony that he did not discuss state usury rate and did not know if contract was usurious).

(n96)Footnote 94. See, e.g., City of Little Rock v. Cash, 644 S.W.2d 229 (Ark. 1982) (applying doctrine), cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1111 (1983) ; Sullivan v. Board of Comm'rs of Oak Lawn Park Dist., 743 N.E.2d 1057 (Ill. Ct. App. 2001) (applying doctrine); Louisville & N. Ry. Co. v. Hopkins County, 9 S.W. 497 (Ky. Ct. App. 1888) (applying doctrine); Quaker Oats Co. v. Stanton, 96 S.W.3d 133 (Mo. Ct. App. 2003) (applying doctrine); Shenango Furnace Co. v. Fairfield Township, 78 A. 937 (Pa. 1911) (applying doctrine); City of Laredo v. South Tex. Nat'l Bank, 775 S.W.2d 729 (Tex. App. 1989) (doctrine did not apply to taxes paid into court registry pursuant to an agreement between the taxing authority and the taxed); G. Heileman Brewing Co. v. City of LaCrosse, 312 N.W.2d 875 (Wis. Ct. App. 1981) (applying doctrine). See generally BMG Direct Mktg. v. Peake, 178 S.W.3d 763, 768-771 (Tex. 2005) (discussing history of the voluntary payment doctrine; asserting that it has only been applied "infrequently" to illegal taxes); King v. First Capital Fin. Servs. Corp., 828 N.E.2d 1155, 1170-74 (Ill. 2005) (discussing history of voluntary payment doctrine in Illinois).

(n97)Footnote 95. Quaker Oats Co. v. Stanton, 96 S.W.3d 133, 143 (Mo. Ct. App. 2003) (taxing authority needs to have certainty so that collector can disburse collected taxes); Putnam v. Time Warner Cable of Southeastern Wis., Ltd., 649 N.W.2d 626, 637 (Wis. 2002) (government needs to have stability and certainty over funds that have been transferred without dispute).

(n98)Footnote 96. See, e.g., City of Little Rock v. Cash, 644 S.W.2d 229, 232 (Ark. 1982) , cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1111 (1983) ; Yates v. Royal Ins. Co., 65 N.E. 726, 727 (Ill. 1902) .

(n99)Footnote 97. See, e.g., La Barr v. Tombstone Territorial Mint, 580 P.2d 744 (Ariz. Ct. App.) (rejecting in pari delicto argument), opinion adopted by 582 P.2d 639 (Ariz. 1978) ; Stock v. Meek, 221 P.2d 15 (Cal. 1950) ; Baruch Inv. Co. v. Huntoon, 65 Cal. Rptr. 131 (Ct. App. 1967) ; Richlin v. Schleimer, 7 P.2d 711 (Cal. Ct. App. 1932) ; Babcock v. Olhasso, 293 P. 141 (Cal. Ct. App. 1930) ; Morgan v. Shepherd, 154 S.E. 780 (Ga. 1930) ; Young v. Barker, 342 P.2d 150, 159 (Kan. 1959) (arguing that it would be futile to declare usury to be criminal while allowing the lender to keep the "fruits of [its] crime").

(n100)Footnote 98. See, e.g., Baruch Inv. Co. v. Huntoon, 65 Cal. Rptr. 131 (Ct. App. 1967) (noting that usury laws are designed to protect society); Stock v. Meek, 221 P.2d 15, 20 (Cal. 1950) (rejecting in pari delicto reasoning on grounds that applying voluntary payment doctrine would vitiate the usury law).

(n101)Footnote 99. Morgan v. Shepherd, 154 S.E. 780, 783 (Ga. 1930) ; see also Chakford v. Sturm, 65 So. 2d 864, 865 (Fla. 1953) (describing statute as regarding lender as oppressor and borrower as oppressed).

(n102)Footnote 100. See, e.g., Chakford v. Sturm, 65 So. 2d 864 (Fla. 1953) (under Fla. Stat. Ann. § 687.03, immaterial that usurious interest was paid voluntarily); Ostiguy v. A.F. Franke Constr., Inc., 347 P.2d 1049 (Wash. 1959) (citing Wash. Rev. Code § 19.52.030).

(n103)Footnote 101. BMG Direct Mktg. v. Peake, 178 S.W.3d 763, 776 n.9 (Tex. 2005) . Cf. Gonzalez v. Codilis & Assocs., P.C., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5463 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 31, 2004) (FDCPA preempts voluntary payment doctrine).

(n104)Footnote 102. Wellman v. Bank One, 2005 Mich. App. LEXIS 2238 (Mich. Ct. App. Sept. 20, 2005) (unpublished, citation limited).

(n105)Footnote 103. See, e.g., Matter of Goehring, 23 B.R. 323 (Bankr. D. Mich. 1982) ; Lincoln Nat'l Bank v. Kaufman, 406 F. Supp. 448 (D. Mich. 1976) ; Bell v. Barnes, 190 So. 273 (Ala. 1939) ; Bizzoco v. Chinitz, 476 A.2d 572 (Conn. 1984) (based on Conn. Gen. Stat. § 37-2); Christian v. Filbert, 249 Ill. App. 230 (1928) ; Bebee v. Grettenberger, 266 N.W.2d 829 (Mich. Ct. App. 1978) ; Wright v. First Nat'l Bank of Monroe, 297 N.W. 505 (Mich. 1941) ; Farmers' Bank & Trust Co. v. Redwine, 167 S.E. 687 (N.C. 1933) . These cases should be distinguished from decisions that bar plaintiffs from asserting a cause of action to recover illegal interest on the grounds that it may only be used defensively. See, e.g., Alabama Cash Credit Corp. v. Bartlett, 144 So. 808 (Ala. 1932) (statute only prohibits requirement to pay usury and does not allow plaintiff to sue to recover usurious interest already paid). BMG Direct Mktg., Inc. v. Peake, 178 S.W.3d 763 (Tex. 2005) (voluntary payment doctrine applies where debtor pays late charge with knowledge of its amount and the circumstances in which it is imposed, even though debtor does not know whether amount so exceeds creditor's damages that it is illegal as a penalty).

(n106)Footnote 104. See e.g. Luebke v. Moser, 598 N.E.2d 760 (Ohio Ct. App. 1991) (allowing defense where plaintiff paid usurious interest due to a mistake of law).

(n107)Footnote 105. Bell v. Barnes, 190 So. 273, 275 (Ala. 1939) .

(n108)Footnote 106. See e.g. Lincoln Nat'l Bank v. Kaufman, 406 F. Supp. 448 (D. Mich. 1976) (allowing plaintiff to recover prepaid interest where loan had not yet been fully repaid); Matter of Goehring, 23 B.R. 323, 325-26 (Bankr. D. Mich. 1982) (allowing debtor to recoup interest paid on unfulfilled note, but barring claim based on fully paid note, on grounds payment was "voluntary"); Waldorf v. Zinberg, 307 N.W.2d 749 (Mich. Ct. App. 1981) (defendant must apply collected usurious interest against principal due on matured loan); Bebee v. Grettenberger, 266 N.W.2d 829 (Mich. Ct. App. 1978) ; Sienkiewicz v. Leonard Mortgage Co., 229 N.W.2d 352 (Mich. Ct. App. 1975) .

(n109)Footnote 107. Thelen v. Ducharme, 390 N.W.2d 264 (Mich. Ct. App. 1986) .

(n110)Footnote 108. See, e.g., Richter v. Burdock, 100 N.E. 1063 (Ill. 1913) (finding that compulsion existed when note was assigned to an innocent.

(n111)Footnote 109. This discussion assumes that proper service was made upon the borrower. Obviously, in the absence of service, default judgments may be challenged on jurisdictional or due process grounds, but this topic is beyond the scope of this chapter.

(n112)Footnote 110. For general statements of these grounds outside of the context of usury, see, e.g., Citizens Nat'l Bank of Univ. City v. Gehl, 567 S.W.2d 423 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978) (moving party must show reasonable diligence);

Household Fin. Co. v. Avery, 476 S.W.2d 165 (Mo. Ct. App. 1972) (lender could not reopen judgment).

(n113)Footnote 111. See Fielder v. Credit Acceptance Corp., 10 F. Supp. 2d 1101 (W.D. Mo. 1998) (court rejected argument that it lacked jurisdiction to rectify such creditor conduct, and held that res judicata did not bar the consumers' affirmative attack because the issue of excessive post-maturity interest charges and official fees was not raised in the prior state court proceedings), partial summ. judgment granted, in part, partial summ. judgment denied, in part, 19 F. Supp. 2d 966 (W.D. Mo. 1998) , vacated, remanded, mot. denied, 188 F.3d 1031 (8th Cir. 1999) .

(n114)Footnote 112. Restatement, Judgments 2d § 22 (1982). See also Circle v. Jim Walter Homes, 654 F.2d 688 (10th Cir. 1981) .

(n115)Footnote 113. See, e.g., Circle v. Jim Walter Homes, 654 F.2d 688 (10th Cir. 1981) (citing cases); Andrews v. Reidy, 60 P.2d 832 (Cal. 1936) ; Madden v. Harlandale Bank, 574 S.W.2d 590 (Tex. Ct. App. 1978 writ ref'd n.r.e.) . See generally Annot., 98 A.L.R. 1027 (1935) . Some authority to the contrary does exist, but much of it seems questionable in light of its age, later case law, or special circumstances. See Flint v. Kimbrough, 45 N.M. 342, 115 P.2d 84 (N.M. 1941) (court in the underlying foreclosure action had not obtained personal jurisdiction over the borrower); Murphy v. Fidelity Inv. Co., 161 Okla. 48, 17 P.2d 472 (1932) ; Weaver v. White, 164 S.W.2d 48 (Tex. Civ. App. 1942) (questionable authority after Madden v. Harlandale Bank, 574 S.W.2d 590 (Tex. Ct. App. 1978 writ ref'd n.r.e.)) ; McDonald v. Smith, 53 Vt. 33 (1880) . But see Fielder v. Credit Acceptance Corp., 10 F. Supp. 2d 1101 , partial summ. judgment granted, in part, partial summ. judgment denied, in part, 19 F. Supp. 2d 966 (W.D. Mo. 1998) , vacated, remanded, mot. denied, 188 F.3d 1031 (8th Cir. 1999) (res judicata did not bar consumers' affirmative attack because issue of excessive post-maturity interest charges and official fees was not raised in the prior state court proceedings).

(n116)Footnote 114. See Henson v. Columbus Bank & Trust Co., 770 F.2d 1566 (11th Cir. 1985) (state court usury decision based solely on statute of limitations does not subsequently bar federal court's consideration of merits of the same usury claim).

(n117)Footnote 115. See Alston v. Goodwin, 343 P.2d 993 (Cal. Ct. App. 1959) ; Yager v. Rubymar Corp., 216 N.Y.S.2d 577 (Sup. Ct. Spec. Term 1961) (interpreting New Jersey law). See also Heine v. Albin Gustafson Co., 118 Misc. 2d 593, 461 N.Y.S.2d 934 (Sup. Ct. 1983) . Cf. Sunbelt Sav., FSB. v. Barr, 824 S.W.2d 600 (Tex. Ct. App. 1991) (a note and a guaranty are separate transactions; prior suit against individual in his capacity as guarantor was not res judicata as to suit against him as a partner on the partnership's note).

(n118)Footnote 116. See Yager v. Rubymar Corp., 216 N.Y.S.2d 577 (Sup. Ct. Spec. Term 1961) (interpreting New Jersey law).

(n119)Footnote 117. See, e.g., Scott v. Forest Lake Chrysler-Plymouth Dodge, 637 N.W.2d 587 (Minn. Ct. App. 2002) (two year statute for penalty applies to MVRISA claim); Trapp v. Hancuh, 1997 Minn. App. LEXIS 779 (Minn. Ct. App. July 15, 1997) (unpublished, citation limited) (two year statute for actions upon a statute for a penalty applies). But see Beltz v. Dings, 27 Kan. App. 2d 507, 6 P.3d 424 (2000) (cause of action for usury accrues with each payment made on a continuing contract). But see Miller v. Pac. Shore Funding, 92 Fed. Appx. 933, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 1270 (4th Cir. Jan. 28, 2004) (table) (statute of limitations for challenge to closing costs runs from day of closing because they are legally enforceable then, even if they are financed).

(n120)Footnote 118. See, e.g., Matter of Ferris, 42 B.R. 374 (S.D. Ga 1984) , rev'd on other grounds, 764 F.2d 1475 (11th Cir. 1985) ($16.56 overcharge was not de minimis); Georgia Inv. Corp. v. Norman, 231 Ga. 821, 204 S.E.2d 740 (1974) ($1.00 notary fee not de minimis); In re Swartz, 37 B.R. 776 (Bankr. D.R.I. 1984) ; Dickey v. Bank of Clarksdale, 183 Miss. 748, 184 So. 314 (1938) (overcharges between $0.50 and $1).

(n121)Footnote 119. The de minimis defense has regularly been recognized in Texas in cases of small overcharges. Compare Ceco Corp. v. Steve's Sash & Door Co., 714 S.W.2d 322 (Tex. Ct. App. 1986) ($245.69 was not de minimis on total contract price of $71,702.95), with Yates Ford v. Ramierez, 692 S.W.2d 51 (Tex. 1985) ; Cf. In re Cadillac

Wildwood Dev. Corp., 138 B.R. 854 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1992) ($3 overcharge on closing costs was "mistake of fact" needing correction, but was not a usurious overcharge). See also Buendia v. Advanta Mortgage Corp.-USA, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7136 (Tex. App. Aug. 21, 2003) (unpublished) ($2.36 overcharge is de minimus). Cf. Clean Harbors, Inc. v. John Hancock Life Ins. Co., 833 N.E.2d 611 (Mass. App. Ct.) (failure to notify attorney general of rate until the afternoon when loans funded in the morning, although a violation of the statute, will not support a finding of usury).

(n122)Footnote 120. See, e.g., Cohen v. District of Columbia Nat'l Bank, 382 F. Supp. 270 (D.D.C. 1974) (custom of ignoring declining balance in interest calculation); Perlman v. First Nat'l Bank of Chicago, 15 Ill. App. 3d 784, 305 N.E.2d 236 (Ill. App. Ct. 1973) , appeal dismissed, 331 N.E.2d 65 (Ill. 1975) (360-day year); Beneficial Fin. Co. v. Administrator of Loan Laws, 260 Md. 430, 272 A.2d 649 (1971) (alleged custom of correcting errors discovered in lender's books without imposing penalty); Dickey v. Bank of Clarksdale, 183 Miss. 748, 184 So. 314 (1938) (custom of imposing service charge on small loans); Cowgill v. Jones, 99 Mo. App. 390, 73 S.W. 995 (Mo. Ct. App. 1903) (sales commissions); Kollman v. Hunnicutt, 385 S.W.2d 600 (Tex. Civ. App. Fort Worth 1964) (car dealer floor plan financing); Harmon v. Lehmann, 85 Ala. 379, 5 So. 197 (1888) (sales commission). See also Barclay Kitchen, Inc. v. California Bank, 25 Cal. Rptr. 383 (2d Dist. 1962) (bank deposits).

(n123)Footnote 121. See, e.g., Jersey Palm-Gross, Inc. v. Paper, 658 So. 2d 531 (Fla. 1995) . Court rejected use of savings clause as absolute bar to usury claim; rather, it is one factor to be considered in overall determination of creditor's intent. Other factors listed as illustrative: how narrow the margin; whether it is a complex transaction in which a mathematical error was made; whether the usury was contingent; and lender's knowledge of the urgency of borrower's need. The finding of usury was upheld. See also Mims v. Fid. Funding, Inc., 307 B.R. 849 (N.D. Tex. 2002) (savings clause did not save contract that was usurious on its face; hypothetical possibility that conditions for charging usurious fees would not occur did not make savings clause effective). See, e.g., Rieser v. Todd (In re Chari), 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 2895 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio Sept. 2, 2005) (giving no effect of savings clause where transaction was usurious on its face). Cf. Lieberman v. Emigrant Mortg. Co., 436 F. Supp. 2d 357 (D. Conn. 2006) (existence of savings clause gives borrower a contract remedy for refund of unconscionable interest).

(n124)Footnote 122. See Duderwicz v. Sweetwater Sav. Ass'n, 595 F.2d 1008 (5th Cir. 1979) (cancellation of usurious escrow account); Kissell Co. v. Gressley, 591 F.2d 47 (9th Cir. 1979) (acceleration due to lender's misconduct; savings clause given no effect); Armstrong v. Steppes Apts. Ltd., 57 S.W.3d 37 (Tex. App. 2001) , cert. denied, 536 U.S. 951, 122 S. Ct. 2645, 153 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2002) .

(n125)Footnote 123. See, e.g., Vickers v. Interstate Dodge, 882 So. 2d 1236, 1244 (La. App. 2004) (creditor cannot complain of penalty for technical violation when it failed to correct the error after receiving notice); Scott v. Forest Lake Chrysler-Plymouth Dodge, 637 N.W.2d 587 (Minn. App. 2002) .

(n126)Footnote 124. Tex. Fin. Code Ann. § 305.103(a). See In re CPDC, Inc., 337 F.3d 436 (5th Cir. 2003) (sixty days run from lender's subjective discovery that lender has violated usury prohibition); Strasburger Enterprises, Inc. v. TDGT Ltd. P'ship, 110 S.W.3d 566 (Tex. App. 2003) (no defense when complaint that did not seek usurious interest was delivered to debtor only after creditor received usury notice). See Sotelo v. Interstate Fin. Corp., 224 S.W.3d 517 (Tex. App. 2007) (lender has 60 days after notice to correct the usury; notice sent while suit was abated is treated same as pre-suit notice).

(n127)Footnote 125. Anderson v. Chainani (In re Kemper), 263 B.R. 773 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2001) .

(n128)Footnote 126. Anderson v. Chainani (In re Kemper), 263 B.R. 773 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2001) . See also Pagel v. Whatley, 82 S.W.3d 571 (Tex. App. 2002) (attachment to complaint acknowledging possibility of usury violation was sufficient where debtor first raised usury issue after receiving complaint).

(n129)Footnote 127. Tex. Fin. Code Ann. § 305.006(c). See also Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1317.08 (similar provision allowing refund within 10 days after receiving notice).

(n130)Footnote 128. Anderson v. Chainani (In re Kemper), 263 B.R. 773 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2001) .

(n131)Footnote 129. Scott v. Forest Lake Chrysler-Plymouth Dodge, 637 N.W.2d 587 (Minn. Ct. App. 2002) .

(n132)Footnote 129.1. Rieser v. Todd (In re Chari), 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 2895 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio Sept. 2, 2005) .

(n133)Footnote 130. National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Arbitration Agreements (5th ed. 2007), examines the enforceability of such agreements in detail.

(n134)Footnote 131. 9 U.S.C. § 1.

(n135)Footnote 132. Doctor's Assocs., Inc. v. Casarotto, 517 U.S. 681, 116 S. Ct. 1652, 134 L. Ed. 2d 902 (1996) ; Perry v. Thomas, 482 U.S. 483, 107 S. Ct. 2520, 96 L. Ed. 2d 426 (1987) .

(n136)Footnote 133. See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 10.3 (3rd ed. and Supp.).

(n137)Footnote 134. Alabama Catalog Sales v. Gloria Harris M.Q., Inc., 794 So. 2d 312 (Ala. 2000) .

(n138)Footnote 135. Party Yards, Inc. v. Templeton, 751 So. 2d 121 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2000) ; FastFunding The Co., Inc. v. Betts, 758 So. 2d 1143 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2000) (payday lending case).

(n139)Footnote 136. Alabama Catalog Sales v. Gloria Harris M.Q., Inc., 794 So. 2d 312 (Ala. 2000) (payday lending); FastFunding The Co., Inc. v. Betts, 758 So. 2d 1143 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2000) (payday lending case).

(n140)Footnote 137. Williams v. Showmethemoney, Inc., Clearinghouse No. 52,500 (Ark. Cir. Ct. Aug. 26, 1999) (payday lending case), aff'd on other grounds, 27 S.W.3d 361 (Ark. 2000) ; Party Yards, Inc. v. Templeton, 751 So. 2d 121 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2000) .

(n141)Footnote 138. Burden v. Check Into Cash of Ky., LLC, 267 F.3d 483 (6th Cir. 2001) , cert. denied, 535 U.S. 970, 122 S. Ct. 1436, 152 L. Ed. 2d 380 (2002) .

(n142)Footnote 139. Burden v. Check Into Cash of Ky., LLC, 267 F.3d 483 (6th Cir. 2001) , cert. denied, 535 U.S. 970, 122 S. Ct. 1436, 152 L. Ed. 2d 380 (2002) .

(n143)Footnote 140. See Sphere Drake Ins. v. All Am. Ins. Co., 256 F.3d 587 (7th Cir. 2001) (holding that, if a contract is void and wholly unenforceable, an arbitration clause within that contract will not be enforced; if a contract is merely voidable, such as a contract induced by fraud, the arbitration clause will be enforced), rev'd, 307 F.3d 617 (7th Cir. 2002) , cert. denied, 538 U.S. 961, 123 S. Ct. 1754, 155 L. Ed. 2d 512 (2003) ; Haga v. Martin Homes, Inc., 1999 Ohio App. LEXIS 1740 (Ohio Ct. App. Apr. 19, 1999) . Cf. In re FirstMerit Bank, 52 S.W.3d 749 (Tex. 2001) (that the consumer has revoked acceptance of a purchase does not void the arbitration agreement; revocation of acceptance does not automatically void a sales agreement).

(n144)Footnote 141. Bess v. Check Express, 2002 U.S. App. LEXIS 12118 (11th Cir. June 19, 2002) ; Burden v. Check Into Cash of Ky., LLC, 267 F.3d 483 (6th Cir. 2001) ; Conner v. Instant Cash Advance, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2583 (S.D. Ind. Feb. 20, 2003) ; Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v. Cardegna, 824 So. 2d 228 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2002) .

(n145)Footnote 142. See Southern Metal Treating Co. v. Goodner, 271 Ala. 510 (1960) ; see also National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation and Legal Challenges 9.2.4.5.2 (2d ed. and Supp.).

(n146)Footnote 143. See Camaro Trading Co. v. Nissei Sangyo America, LTD., 577 So. 2d 1274 (Ala. 1991) ; Island House Developers v. AMAC Constr. Co., 686 So. 2d 1377 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1997) . See also Ackel v. Ackel, 696 So. 2d 140 (La. Ct. App. 1997) (whether contract is void as against public policy is not arbitrable), writ denied, 703

So. 2d 1310 (La. 1997) .

(n147)Footnote 144. Harris v. Montgomery Catalog Sales, Clearinghouse No. 52,505 (Ala. Cir. Ct. May 21, 1999) (payday lending).

(n148)Footnote 145. Ex parte Payne, 741 So. 2d 398 (Ala. 1999) .

(n149)Footnote 146. Cheatham v. Air Sys. Eng'g Co., Clearinghouse No. 51,969 (Cal. Super. Ct. Apr. 30, 1997).

(n150)Footnote 147. See National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending Ch. 6 (4th ed. 1999 and Supp.).

(n151)Footnote 148. See Fluehmann v. Associates Fin. Servs., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5755 (D. Mass. Mar. 29, 2002) ; Large v. Conseco Fin. Servicing Corp., 167 F. Supp. 2d 203 (D.R.I. 2001) , aff'd, 292 F.3d 49 (1st Cir. 2002) ; Livingston v. Associates Fin., Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8678 (N.D. Ill. June 22, 2001) ; Phillips v. Associates Home Equity Servs., 179 F. Supp. 2d 840 (N.D. Ill. 2001) ; Dorsey v. H.C.P. Sales, Inc., 46 F. Supp. 2d 804 (N.D. Ill. 1999) .

(n152)Footnote 149. See Fluehmann v. Associates Fin. Servs., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5755 (D. Mass. Mar. 29, 2002) ; Livingston v. Associates Fin., Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8678 (N.D. Ill. June 22, 2001) ; Dorsey v. H.C.P. Sales, Inc., 46 F. Supp. 2d 804 (N.D. Ill. 1999) .

(n153)Footnote 150. Sweet Dreams Unlimited, Inc. v. Dial-a-Mattress Int'l, Ltd., 1 F.3d 639 (7th Cir. 1993) .

(n154)Footnote 151. AT&T Technologies, Inc. v. Communications Workers of Am., 475 U.S. 643, 648, 106 S. Ct. 1415, 1418, 89 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1986) .

(n155)Footnote 152. See Fleetwood Enters. v. Gaskamp, 2002 U.S. App. LEXIS 933 (5th Cir. Jan. 24, 2002) , reh'g, en banc, denied, supplemented, remanded, 303 F.3d 570 (5th Cir. 2002) ; Oakwood Mobile Homes, Inc. v. Godsey, 824 So. 2d 713 (Ala. 2001) ; Equifirst Corp. v. Ware, 808 So. 2d 1 (Ala. 2001) ; Med Ctr. Cars, Inc. v. Smith, 727 So. 2d 9 (Ala. 1998) ; Ex parte Dickinson, 711 So. 2d 984 (Ala. 1998) , reh'g overruled, 1998 Ala. LEXIS 96 (Ala. Mar. 20, 1998) , ops. combined at 711 So. 2d 984 (Ala. 1998) ; Pacheco v. Allen, 55 P.3d 141 (Colo. Ct. App. 2001) , cert. granted, 2002 Colo. LEXIS 839 (Colo. Sept. 23, 2002) ; see also Kaplan v. First Options, 19 F.3d 1503 (3d Cir. 1994) , aff'd, 514 U.S. 938, 115 S. Ct. 1920, 131 L. Ed. 2d 985 (1995) ; Liberty Communications, Inc. v. MCI Telecommunications Corp., 733 So. 2d 571 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1999) (individual signed in corporate capacity and thus clause not binding on individual).

(n156)Footnote 153. EEOC v. Waffle House, Inc., 534 U.S. 279, 122 S. Ct. 754, 151 L. Ed. 2d 755 (2002) .

(n157)Footnote 154. EEOC v. Waffle House, Inc., 534 U.S. 279, 122 S. Ct. 754, 151 L. Ed. 2d 755 (2002) .

(n158)Footnote 155. Ballard Servs. v. Conner, 807 So. 2d 519 (Ala. 2001) ; Colonial Sales-Lease-Rental, Inc. v. Target Auction & Land Co., 735 So. 2d 1161 (Ala. 1999) ; Westendorf v. Gateway 2000, Inc., 2000 Del. Ch. LEXIS 54 (Del. Ch. Mar. 16, 2000) , aff'd, 763 A.2d 92 (Del. 2000) ; Terminix Int'l Co., LP v. Ponzio, 693 So. 2d 104 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1997) ; In re FirstMerit Bank, N.A., 52 S.W.3d 749 (Tex. 2001) ; Nationwide of Bryan v. Dyer, 969 S.W.2d 518 (Tex. App. 1998) . But see Kaplan v. First Options, 19 F.3d 1503 (3d Cir. 1994) , aff'd, 514 U.S. 938, 115 S. Ct. 1920, 131 L. Ed. 2d 985 (1995) .

(n159)Footnote 156. See, e.g., Fluehmann v. Associates Fin. Servs., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5755 (D. Mass. Mar. 29, 2002) ; Ballard Servs. v. Conner, 807 So. 2d 519 (Ala. 2001) ; In re FirstMerit Bank, N.A., 52 S.W.3d 749 (Tex. 2001) .

(n160)Footnote 157. Oakwood Mobile Homes, Inc. v. Godsey, 824 So. 2d 13 (Ala. 2001) ; Equifirst Corp. v. Ware, 808 So. 2d 1 (Ala. 2001) .

(n161)Footnote 158. Jim Burke Auto., Inc. v. McGrue, 826 So. 2d 122 (Ala. 2002) ; Monsanto Co. v. Benton Farm, 813 So. 2d 867 (Ala. 2001) ; Parkway Dodge, Inc. v. Yarbrough, 779 So. 2d 1205 (Ala. 2000) .

(n162)Footnote 159. See Choctaw Generation L.P. v. American Home Assurance Co., 271 F.3d 403 (2d Cir. 2001) ; MS Dealer Serv. Corp. v. Franklin, 177 F.3d 942 (11th Cir. 1999) , remanded with instructions to grant motion to compel arbitration, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10662 (N.D. Ala. July 9, 1999) ; Goodwin v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 970 F. Supp. 1007 (M.D. Ala. 1997) (FMCC can enforce arbitration agreement found in dealership's installment sales agreements when FMCC is the intended and actual assignee); Boyd v. Homes of Legend, 981 F. Supp. 1423 (M.D. Ala. 1997) , remanded on jurisdictional grounds, 188 F.3d 1294 (11th Cir. 1999) ; Roberson v. Money Tree, 954 F. Supp. 1519 (M.D. Ala. 1997) (forced-placed insurer can benefit from arbitration provision); Staples v. Money Tree, 936 F. Supp. 856 (M.D. Ala. 1996) ; Usina Costa Pinto S.A. Acucar E Alcool v. Louis Dreyfus Sugar Co., 933 F. Supp. 1170 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) ; Ex parte Napier, 723 So. 2d 49 (Ala. 1998) ; Ex parte Isbell, 708 So. 2d 571 (Ala. 1997) ; Nissan Motor Acceptance Corp. v. Ross, 703 So. 2d 324 (Ala. 1997) (assignee steps into shoes of assignor); Ex parte Gray, 686 So. 2d 250 (Ala. 1996) (salesman can enforce arbitration agreement entered into by dealership employing the salesperson); Ex parte Gates, 675 So. 2d 371 (Ala. 1996) . But see Boyd v. Homes of Legend, Inc., 981 F. Supp. 1423 (M.D. Ala. 1997) (finding estoppel theory inapplicable to the facts of the case), remanded on jurisdictional grounds, 188 F.3d 1294 (11th Cir. 1999) ; Knepp v. Credit Acceptance Corp. (In re Knepp), 229 B.R. 821 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1999) .

(n163)Footnote 160. Price Plaintiffs v. Humana Ins. Co. (In re Humana Inc. Managed Care Litig.), 285 F.3d 971 (11th Cir. 2002) , rev'd, remanded sub nom. PacifiCare Health Sys. v. Book, 538 U.S. 401, 123 S. Ct. 1531, 155 L. Ed. 2d 578 (2003) ; Choctaw Generation L.P. v. American Home Assurance Co., 271 F.3d 403 (2d Cir. 2001) ; MS Dealer Serv. Corp. v. Franklin, 177 F.3d 942 (11th Cir. 1999) , remanded with instructions to grant motion to compel arbitration, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10662 (N.D. Ala. July 9, 1999) ; Sunkist Soft Drinks v. Sunkist Growers, 10 F.3d 753 (11th Cir. 1993) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 869, 115 S. Ct. 190, 130 L. Ed. 2d 123 (1994) .

(n164)Footnote 161. Hill v. GE Power Sys., 282 F.3d 343 (5th Cir. 2002) .

(n165)Footnote 162. Goodwin v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 970 F. Supp. 1007 (M.D. Ala. 1997) ; Universal Underwriters Life Ins. Co. v. Dutton, 736 So. 2d 564 (Ala. 1999) ; Nissan Motor Acceptance Corp. v. Ross, 703 So. 2d 324 (Ala. 1997) . Cf. Green Tree Fin. Corp. v. Channell, 825 So. 2d 90 (Ala. 2002) (where assignee could not take advantage of arbitration clause in one document between consumer and dealer, it could still take advantage of arbitration clause found in the installment sales agreement).

(n166)Footnote 163. Monsanto Co. v. Benton Farm, 813 So. 2d 867 (Ala. 2001) ; Ex parte Gray, 686 So. 2d 250 (Ala. 1996) (salesman can enforce arbitration agreement entered into by dealership employing the salesperson).

(n167)Footnote 164. Knepp v. Credit Acceptance Corp. (In re Knepp), 229 B.R. 821 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1999) ; Universal Underwriters Life Ins. Co. v. Dutton, 736 So. 2d 564 (Ala. 1999) ; First Family Fin. Servs. v. Rogers, 736 So. 2d 553 (Ala. 1999) . But see Staples v. Money Tree, 936 F. Supp. 856 (M.D. Ala. 1996) ; Ex parte Napier, 723 So. 2d 49 (Ala. 1998) (seller of physical damage insurance on mobile home).

(n168)Footnote 165. Ex parte Jones, 686 So. 2d 1166 (Ala. 1996) . But see Roberson v. Money Tree, 954 F. Supp. 1519 (M.D. Ala. 1997) .

(n169)Footnote 166. But see MS Dealer Serv. Corp. v. Franklin, 177 F.3d 942 (11th Cir. 1999) (claims against service contract company are based on the contract containing arbitration clause and are based on interdependent misconduct between dealer signing contract and service contract company), remanded with instructions to grant motion to compel arbitration, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10662 (N.D. Ala. July 9, 1999) .

(n170)Footnote 167. See, e.g., Mich. Comp. Laws § 566.302; Mich. Comp. Laws § 492.112(a).

(n171)Footnote 168. Rugumbwa v. Betten Motor Sales, 136 F. Supp. 2d 729 (W.D. Mich. 2001) .

(n172)Footnote 169. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 2985.8 (leasing); Kroupa v. Sunrise Ford, 77 Cal. App. 4th 835, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 (2d Dist. 1999) , review denied, request denied, 2000 Cal. LEXIS 1894 (Cal. 2000) ; Wash. Rev. Code § 63.14.040; Commonwealth v. Metro Chrysler-Plymouth Jeep-Eagle, Inc., Clearinghouse No. 52,028 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 1997); Kenworthy v. Bolin, 17 Wash. App. 650, 564 P.2d 835 (1977) . See also Ohio Rev. Code § 1317.02. But see Sharlow v. Wally McCarthy Pontiac-GMC Trucks-Hyundai, Inc., 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 15627 (8th Cir. July 6, 2000) (unpublished, citation limited) (following Scott); Scott v. Forest Lake Chrysler-Plymouth-Dodge, 611 N.W.2d 346 (Minn. 2000) (contingency clause need not be included in retail installment contract despite single document rule), appeal after remand, remanded, 637 N.W.2d 587 (Minn. Ct. App. 2002) .

(n173)Footnote 170. 15 U.S.C. § 1012(b); see also United States Dep't of Treasury v. Fabe, 508 U.S. 491, 113 S. Ct. 2202, 124 L. Ed. 2d 449 (1993) .

(n174)Footnote 171. See Standard Sec. Life Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. West, 267 F.3d 821, 823 (8th Cir. 2001) (noting agreement of parties that FAA does not specifically relate to business of insurance); American Bankers Ins. Co. v. Crawford, 757 So. 2d 1125 (Ala. 1999) .

(n175)Footnote 172. Standard Sec. Life Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. West, 267 F.3d 821 (8th Cir. 2001) ; Quackenbush v. Allstate Ins. Co., 121 F.3d 1372 (9th Cir. 1997) (insurance statute prohibiting insurance liquidator from being compelled to arbitrate disputes prevails over FAA); Stephens v. American Int'l Ins. Co., 66 F.3d 41 (2d Cir. 1995) ; Mutual Reinsurance Bureau v. Great Plains Mut. Ins. Co., 969 F.2d 931 (10th Cir.) , cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1001, 113 S. Ct. 604, 121 L. Ed. 2d 540 (1992) ; Smith v. PacifiCare Behavioral Health of Cal., Inc., 93 Cal. App. 4th 139, 158, 161-62, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 140, 154, 156-57 (2d Dist. 2001) , cert. denied, 537 U.S. 818, 123 S. Ct. 92, 154 L. Ed. 2d 23 (2002) ; Balaban-Zilke v. Cigna Healthcare of Cal., Inc., 2003 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 5198 (Cal. Ct. App. May 28, 2003) cert. denied 540 U.S. 1110, 124 S. Ct. 1077, 157 L. Ed. 2d 897 (2004) ; Ciccarelli v. Blue Cross of Cal., 2003 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 660 (Cal. Ct. App. Jan. 22, 2003) ; Imbler v. PacifiCare of Cal., Inc., 103 Cal. App. 4th 567, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 715 (2002) ; Pagarigan v. Super. Ct., 102 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124 (2001) .

(n176)Footnote 173. Ala. Code § 8-1-41. For the most recent Supreme Court discussion about whether a statute "regulates the 'business of insurance,' " see UNUM Life Ins. Co. of Am. v. Ward, 526 U.S. 358, 119 S. Ct. 1380, 143 L. Ed. 2d 462 (1999) .

(n177)Footnote 174. American Bankers Ins. Co. v. Crawford, 757 So. 2d 1125 (Ala. 1999) ; see also Clayton v. Woodmen of the World Life Ins. Soc'y, 981 F. Supp. 1447 (M.D. Ala. 1997) ; Celtic Life Ins. Co. v. McLendon, 814 So. 2d 222 (Ala. 2001) . See also Triton Lines, Inc. v. S.S. Mut. Underwriting Ass'n, 707 F. Supp. 277, 279 (S.D. Tex. 1989) (dealing with interrelationship of Texas insurance code and state UDAP statute); Hart v. Orion Ins. Co., 453 F.2d 1358 (10th Cir. 1971) ; Hamilton Life Ins. Co. v. Republic Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 408 F.2d 606 (2d Cir. 1969) . But see Knepp v. Credit Acceptance Corp. (In re Knepp), 229 B.R. 821 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1999) .

(n178)Footnote 175. Ark. Code Ann. § 16-108-201; Ga. Code Ann. § 9-9-1 (arbitration statute significantly different than the Uniform Arbitration Act); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 5-401; Mo. Stat. § 435.350; Mont. Code Ann. § 27-5-111; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 25-2601; Okla. Stat. Rev. tit 15, § 802.

(n179)Footnote 176. Standard Sec. Life Ins. Co. v. West, 267 F.3d 821 (8th Cir. 2001) ; Mutual Reinsurance Bureau v. Great Plains Mut. Ins. Co., 969 F.2d 931 (10th Cir.) , cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1001, 113 S. Ct. 604, 121 L. Ed. 2d 540 (1992) ; Friday v. Trinity Universal, 262 Kan. 347, 939 P.2d 869 (1997) .

(n180)Footnote 177. See Miller v. National Fid. Life Ins. Co., 588 F.2d 185 (5th Cir. 1979) (no law in Georgia insurance code is impaired by the Federal Arbitration Act).

(n181)Footnote 178. Humana Inc. v. Forsyth, 525 U.S. 299, 119 S. Ct. 710, 142 L. Ed. 2d 753 (1999) .

(n182)Footnote 179. Ark. Code Ann. § 16-108-201; Ga. Code Ann. § 9-9-1 (arbitration statute significantly different than the Uniform Arbitration Act); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 5-401; Mo. Stat. § 435.350; Mont. Code Ann. § 27-5-111; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 25-2601; Okla. Stat. Rev. tit 15, § 802.

(n183)Footnote 180. Diskin v. J.P. Stevens & Co., 836 F.2d 47 (1st Cir. 1987) ; Coastal Indus., Inc. v. Automatic Steam Prods. Corp., 654 F.2d 375 (5th Cir. 1981) ; Supak & Sons Mfg. Co. v. Pervel Indus., Inc., 593 F.2d 135 (4th Cir. 1979) ; N&D Fashions, Inc. v. DHJ Indus., Inc., 548 F.2d 722 (8th Cir. 1976) .

(n184)Footnote 181. See, e.g., Hill v. Gateway 2000, Inc., 105 F.3d 1147 (7th Cir. 1997) , cert. denied, 522 U.S. 808, 118 S. Ct. 47, 139 L. Ed. 2d 13 (1997) (arbitration agreement binding where consumer orders a product over the telephone, product can be returned within thirty days if not opened, and product arrives with an arbitration agreement included in the papers inside the box); Marsh v. First USA Bank, N.A., 103 F. Supp. 2d 909 (N.D. Tex. 2000) .

(n185)Footnote 182. Badie v. Bank of Am., 67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 (1998) (finding that a "bill-stuffer"-imposed change in terms that takes away the right to a jury trial is fundamentally different from change in interest rate, late charges, or other card terms); Union Planters Bank, N.A. v. Watson, 2000 Ala. LEXIS 546 (Ala. Dec. 15, 2000) , reh'g granted, op. withdrawn, substituted op., 794 So. 2d 1094 (Ala. 2001) (cited Badie approvingly; held (based on the agreement's language) that arbitration clause would apply only if the cardholders affirmatively manifested their consent by signing a card). The consumer's complaint and two trial briefs from Badie are included in hard copy and on a WordPerfect disk in National Consumer Law Center's Consumer Law Pleadings With Disk, Number One, Ch. 1 (1994). See also Hurley State Bank v. French, No. 97-C-1645-W (N.D. Ala. Sept. 10, 1997) (stuffer arbitration agreement is unenforceable); Navarro-Rice v. First USA Bank, Civ. No. 97009-06901 (Or. Cir. Ct. 1998) (arbitration agreement requiring cardholders to choose between arbitration and closing their accounts enjoined when mailed out to card holders after class action instituted); Myers v. MBNA Am. & N. Am. Capitol Corp., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11900 (D. Mont. Mar. 28, 2001) ; Long v. Fidelity Water Sys., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7827 (N.D. Cal. May 24, 2000)) .

(n186)Footnote 183. See also Avedon Eng'g, Inc. v. Seatex, 126 F.3d 1279 (10th Cir. 1997) (state law determines whether an unsigned statement requiring binding arbitration should be incorporated into the signed contract between the two parties); Hurley State Bank v. French, No. 97-C-1645-W (N.D. Ala. Sept. 10, 1997) (stuffer arbitration agreement is unenforceable); Navarro-Rice v. First USA Bank, Civ. No. 97009-06901 (Or. Cir. Ct. 1998) (arbitration agreement enjoined where mailed out to card holders after class action instituted requiring choice between arbitration and closing their accounts).

(n187)Footnote 184. See 1999 Del. Laws Ch. 15 (Apr. 9, 1999). See also 1999 Utah Laws Ch. 180 (defining a change and term and authorizing use of bill stuffers to change terms).

(n188)Footnote 185. Blue Cross & Blue Shield v. Woodruff, 803 So. 2d 519 (Ala. 2001) .

(n189)Footnote 186. Kennedy v. Conseco Fin Corp., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17704 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 29, 2000) .

(n190)Footnote 187. 182 F. Supp. 2d 902 (N.D. Cal. 2002) , aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 319 F.3d 1126 (9th Cir. 2003) .

(n191)Footnote 188. See, e.g., United Computer Sys., Inc. v. AT & T Corp., 298 F.3d 756 (9th Cir. 2002) ; Chappel v. Laboratory Corp. of Am., 232 F.3d 719, 724 (9th Cir. 2000) ; Barker v. Golf U.S.A., Inc., 154 F.3d 788, 793 (8th Cir. 1998) ; PPG Indus., Inc. v. Webster Auto Parts, Inc., 128 F.3d 103, 107 (2d Cir. 1997) . The Seventh Circuit, however, has rejected the prejudice requirement for finding waiver, focusing entirely on the actions and intentions of the party against whom waiver is sought. Grumhaus v. Comerica Sec., Inc., 223 F.3d 648, 652 (7th Cir. 2000) ("the central question is whether the party against whom the waiver is to be found intended its selection and not whether either party would be prejudiced by the forum change.").

(n192)Footnote 189. Worldsource Coil Coating, Inc. v. McGraw Constr. Co., Inc., 946 F.2d 473, 477 (6th Cir.

1991) (applying Illinois law, and finding waiver of right to arbitrate based on moving party's filing of a state court action seeking preliminary and permanent injunctions and compensatory and punitive damages); Palm Harbor Homes, Inc. v. Crawford, 689 So. 2d 3 (Ala. 1997) (manufacturer waives right to arbitrate breach of warranty claims by substantially invoking litigation process); Checksmart v. Morgan, 2003 Ohio 163 (Ct. App. 2003) . But see Louis Dreyfus Negoce S.A. v. Blystad Shipping & Trading, Inc., 252 F.3d 218, 229 (2d Cir.) , cert. denied, 534 U.S. 1020, 122 S. Ct. 546, 151 L. Ed. 2d 423 (2001) (finding no waiver when party filed suit eight days before commencing arbitration and no litigation activity took place beyond parties' initial assertion of claims); Williams v. HealthAlliance Hosps., Inc., 158 F. Supp. 2d 156, 161 (D. Mass. 2001) (finding no waiver when plaintiff sought arbitration before filing litigation complaint and complaint included arbitration request if agreement were found to be applicable).

(n193)Footnote 190. Nicholson v. Labor Ready, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23494 (N.D. Cal. 1997) ; Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychare Servs., Inc., 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 (2000) ; Pinedo v. Premium Tobacco Stores, Inc., 85 Cal. App. 4th 774, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 435 (2d Dist. 2000) (arbitration clause held to be unconscionable, in part because it only addressed claims that would normally be raised by employees and not employers); Arnold v. United Cos. Lending Corp., 511 S.E.2d 854 (W. Va. 1998) .

(n194)Footnote 191. Bess v. Check Express, 294 F.3d 1298, 1301 (11th Cir. 2002) (fact that lender may litigate while borrower must arbitrate does not by itself render clause unconscionable); Harris v. Green Tree Fin. Corp, 183 F.3d 173 (3d Cir. 1999) (inequality of bargaining power not reason enough to invalidate arbitration agreement); Torrance v. Aames Funding Corp., 242 F. Supp. 2d 862 (D. Or. 2002) (reserving foreclosure claims for court justified on the basis of business realities; clause struck down on other unconscionability grounds); Pridgen v. Green Tree Fin. Servs. Corp., 88 F. Supp. 2d 655 (S.D. Miss. 2000) ; Goodwin v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 970 F. Supp. 1007 (M.D. Ala. 1997) ; Ex parte Perry, 744 So. 2d 859 (Ala. 1999) ; Green Tree Fin. Corp. v. Wampler, 749 So. 2d 409 (Ala. 1999) ; Green Tree Fin. Corp. v. Vintson, 753 So. 2d 497 (Ala. 1999) ; Pick v. Discover Fin. Servs., Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15777, at *15-16 (D. Del. Sept. 28, 2001) ("mutuality is not a requirement of a valid arbitration clause, provided that the underlying contract is supported by consideration"); Hale v. First USA Bank, N.A., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8045 (S.D.N.Y June 12, 2001) ; Conseco Fin. Servicing Corp. v. Wilder, 47 S.W.3d 335 (Ky. Ct. App. 2001) ("there is no inherent reason to require that the parties have equal arbitration rights").

(n195)Footnote 192. See Pitchford v. Oakwood Mobile Homes, Inc., 124 F. Supp. 2d 958 (W.D. Va. 2000) . But see Zawikowski v. Beneficial Nat'l Bank, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 514 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 7, 1999) (finding no problems as to non-mutuality because the consumer still has the right to invoke arbitration).

(n196)Footnote 193. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Arbitration Agreements (5th ed. 2007 and supp.).

(n197)Footnote 193.1. Green Tree v. Bazzle, 539 U.S. 444 (2003) .

(n198)Footnote 193.2. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Arbitration Agreements § 4.3.2 (5th ed. 2007 and supp.).

(n199)Footnote 193.3. Id.

(n200)Footnote 193.4. Id. § 9.6 (Supp.).

(n201)Footnote 193.5. Id.

(n202)Footnote 193.6. Mastrobuono v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, 514 U.S. 52, 115 S. Ct. 1212, 131 L. Ed. 2d 76 (1995) .

(n203)Footnote 193.7. The AAA rules are found at www.adr.org, the NAF rules at www.arbitration-forum.com, and the JAMS rules at http://JAMSadr.com. The AAA's Consumer Due Process Protocol, Principle 14 states that punitive damages are available in an arbitration proceeding. On the other hand, NAF Rule 37B states that the award can not exceed the amount requested in the claim, thus apparently requiring a consumer seeking $11,000 in actual damages and $250,000 in punitive damages to list such amounts in the claim and to pay NAF a filing fee based on a $261,000 claim: quite expensive indeed.

(n204)Footnote 193.8. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Arbitration Agreements § 4.3.2.4 (5th ed. 2007 and supp.).

(n205)Footnote 193.9. Id.

(n206)Footnote 193.10. Id.

(n207)Footnote 193.11. National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Arbitration Agreements § 4.3 (5th ed. 2007 and supp.).

(n208)Footnote 194. These special defenses may be asserted by the RTC and the FSLIC as well as the FDIC. The Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) is appointed receiver by the Office of Thrift Supervision created by the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA), Pub. L. No. 101-73, 103 Stat. 183. Among other things, FIRREA serves to clarify and amend certain sections of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, which includes 12 U.S.C. § 1823(e). Section 1821(d)(a) of FIRREA provides that "[a]ny agreement which does not meet the requirements set forth in [section 1823(e)] shall not form the basis of, or substantially comprise, a claim against the receiver or the corporation." As a result of FIRREA, duties of the former Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC) have been transferred either to the FDIC or Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC). Assignees of these agencies are also protected.

For a more extensive discussion, see National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses. § 10.7 (4th ed. 2009)

(n209)Footnote 195. 315 U.S. 447, 62 S. Ct. 676, 86 L. Ed. 956 (1942) .

(n210)Footnote 196. D'Oench applies only to claims raised by borrowers, not depositors. Fletcher Village Condo. Ass'n v. FDIC, 864 F. Supp. 259 (D. Mass. 1994) . D'Oench also does not apply to agreements between the receiver and a party other than a borrower. See, e.g., Maryland Nat'l Bank v. RTC, 895 F. Supp. 762 (D. Md. 1995) .

(n211)Footnote 197. Federal Deposit Insurance Act of 1950, § 2(13)(e), codified at 12 U.S.C. § 1823(e). Section 1823(e) is often referred to as a "codification" of the holding in D'Oench. It is not a codification, but requires a separate legal analysis. To the extent § 1823(e) is a codification, it merely codifies the positive duty of the FDIC to honor agreements between debtors and banks. There is no debate of § 1823(e) in its legislative history. 96 Cong. Rec. 10, 731-32 (1950).

(n212)Footnote 198. The fact that a lawsuit was initiated against the bank before its failure and that pleadings would have been part of the bank's records is insufficient to circumvent D'Oench. It is not enough that bank records give notice of a potential defense to the obligation. Randolph v. RTC, 995 F.2d 611 (5th Cir. 1993) (if pleadings qualified as bank records under D'Oench, regulators would have to speculate as to the outcome of pending lawsuits).

(n213)Footnote 199. See, e.g., John v. RTC, 39 F.3d 773 (7th Cir. 1994) (D'Oench not "limitless, per se guarantee of victory"); E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. FDIC, 32 F.3d 592 (D.C. Cir. 1994) , reh'g denied, 45 F.3d 458 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (only if disclosure could have made a difference does D'Oench "logically bar recovery for failure to disclose"). This trend has been helped along immeasurably by the Supreme Court's decision in O'Melveny & Myers v. FDIC, 512 U.S. 79, 114 S. Ct. 2048, 129 L. Ed. 2d 67 (1994) , which held that FIRREA is a comprehensive statute which does not provide for extension though federal common law. See also Cinco Enters., Inc. v. Benso, 1999 Okla. LEXIS 93 (Okla. Sept. 28, 1999) (unpublished) (the court cited evidence that showed that it was the guarantor's and bank's intention that the guaranty would cover only one note, and other evidence indicating that the guaranty was never relied on for antecedent debts); FDIC v. Deglau, 207 F.3d 153 (3d Cir. 2000) (suggesting that a conflict of interest defense, arising from the representation of an attorney to the original transaction who allegedly induced them to sign the guaranty, would not be barred by § 1823(e) because it is not the sort of issue that would be the subject of bank records). But see Beal Bank, SSB v. Lucks, 791 A.2d 752 (Del. Ch. 2000) (deferring issue to trial). See EMC Mortg. Corp. v. Davis, 167 S.W.3d 406, 417 (Tex. App. 2005) (where note ambiguous on its face, section 1823(e) did not bar consideration of additional documents to construe the note's balloon payment provision because those documents did not tend to diminish the mortgagee's interest in the note, but rather helped define that interest).

(n214)Footnote 200. Holder in due course is defined in UCC § 3-302(a)(2) as > "the holder of an instrument [where] ...

>
> "(2) the holder took the instrument for value, (ii) in good faith, (iii) without notice that the instrument is overdue or has been dishonored ... (iv) without notice that any party has a defense or claim in recoupment ..."

(emphasis added).

(n215)Footnote 201. In O'Melveny & Meyers v. FDIC, 512 U.S. 79, 114 S. Ct. 2048, 129 L. Ed. 2d 67 (1994) , Justice Scalia roundly rejected the idea of a federal common law supplementing FIRREA and refused to displace state law merely because the FDIC was involved. The lower courts that have taken note of the O'Melveny decision have concluded that FIRREA implicitly excludes defenses based on federal common law which are not specifically mentioned in the statute. See, e.g., Ledo Fin. Corp. v. Summers, 122 F.3d 825 (9th Cir. 1997) (D'Oench doctrine not applicable in light of O'Melveny, but court declines to decide whether D'Oench overruled); Murphy v. FDIC, 61 F.3d 34 (D.C. Cir. 1995) ; DiVall Insured Income Fund Ltd. P'ship v. Boatmen's First Nat'l Bank, 69 F.3d 1398 (8th Cir. 1995) ; Nashville Lodging Co. v. RTC, 59 F.2d 236 (D.C. Cir. 1995) . But see Young v. FDIC, 103 F.3d 1180 (4th Cir.) , cert. denied, 522 U.S. 928, 118 S. Ct. 329, 139 L. Ed. 2d 255 (1997) (D'Oench remains separate and independent ground for decision); Rankin v. Toberoff, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9714 (S.D.N.Y. June 30, 1998) (concluding that D'Oench survives O'Melveny in Second Circuit). See also FDIC v. Deglau, 207 F.3d 153 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that O'Melveny overruled D'Oench); DiMuzio v. RTC, 68 F.3d 777, 780 n.2 (3d Cir. 1995) (suggesting that D'Oench may no longer exist as a separate bar to defenses).

(n216)Footnote 202. See also Allied Elevator v. East Tex. State Bank, 965 F.2d 34 (5th Cir. 1992) (D'Oench inapplicable to breach of contract claim for bank's failure to procure credit life insurance requested in writing on the note).

(n217)Footnote 203. See § 6.08[5] supra.

(n218)Footnote 204. See, e.g., FSLIC v. Mackie, 962 F.2d 1144, 1151 (5th Cir. 1992) ; see also FDIC v. Aetna Casualty & Sur. Co., 947 F.2d 196 (6th Cir. 1991) (D'Oench is inapplicable to insurance contracts which are conditional agreements and not negotiable instruments).

(n219)Footnote 205. RTC v. Cook, 840 S.W.2d 42 (Tex. Ct. App. 1992) .

(n220)Footnote 206. For a sampling of claims and defenses making inroads, see National Consumer Law Center, Cost of Credit § 10.7.5.

(n221)Footnote 207. FDIC v. Blue Rock Shopping Ctr., 766 F.2d 744 (3d Cir. 1985) (D'Oench and § 1823(e) do not protect the FDIC from the consequences of its own conduct). Maryland Nat'l Bank v. RTC, 895 F. Supp. 762 (D. Md. 1995) (RTC cannot use D'Oench to contest enforceability of settlement agreement between the plaintiff and itself);

Kuehl v. Numerica Fin. Corp., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17259 (D.N.H. Nov. 23, 1994) (unpublished) (claim for misapplication of proceeds after FDIC stepped in is not barred); Cadle Co. v. Wallach Concrete, Inc., 897 P.2d 1104 (N.M. 1995) (claim based on FDIC's breach of duty of good faith and commercial reasonableness not barred).

(n222)Footnote 208. 28 U.S.C. §§ 2680

(n223)Footnote 209. The U.S. Supreme Court in United States v. Gaubert, 885 F.2d 1284 (5th Cir. 1989) , and remanded, 499 U.S. 315, 111 S. Ct. 1267, 113 L. Ed. 2d 335 (1991) , found that a discretionary function exception shields FHLBB decisions upon takeover. (It should be noted, however, that as Justice Scalia observed in Gaubert, the lack of a factual record in this case made it quite difficult to find that the particular activities involved were properly shielded by DFE immunity. Since the Court could do little more than speculate about the nature of the FHLBB's alleged negligent decision-making, a properly developed factual record could produce a different result.) See also FDIC v. Healey, 991 F. Supp. 53 (D. Conn. 1998) (finding that DFE immunity would bar any claims based upon an act or omission in the execution of FIRREA); First Nat'l Ins. Co. of Am. v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 1060 (S.D. Cal. 1997) .

(n224)Footnote 210. 12 U.S.C. § 1821(d). See RTC v. Kolea, 866 F. Supp. 197 (E.D. Pa. 1994) , for a good discussion of the case law in this area.

(n225)Footnote 211. Several courts have found that affirmative defenses are not subject to the claims process. Bolduc v. Beal Bank, 167 F.3d 667 (1st Cir. 1999) (borrower's challenge to foreclosure action not a FIRREA "claim" subject to exhaustion); RTC v. Love, 36 F.3d 972 (10th Cir. 1994) (defense to action for deficiency after foreclosure not "claim" or "action" as used in § 1821(d)(13)(D)); National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. City Sav., F.S.B., 28 F.3d 376 (3d Cir. 1994) (distinguishes between affirmative defense and counterclaim which would be barred).

(n226)Footnote 212. Bailey v. Defenbaugh & Co., 513 F. Supp. 232 (N.D. Miss. 1981) ; Transamerica Fin. Corp. v. Superior Court, 158 Ariz. 115, 761 P.2d 1019 (1988) , rev'g 155 Ariz. 327, 746 P.2d 497 (Ct. App. 1987) (consumer loan act voiding usurious loans implied a right of action to seek that remedy). But see Taylor v. Citizens Fed. Sav. & Loan, 846 F.2d 1320 (11th Cir. 1988) (no private right of action to enforce FHLBB regulations promulgated pursuant to Home Owner's Loan Act of 1933, 12 U.S.C. § 1461); Doubet v. USA Fin. Servs., Inc., 714 F. Supp. 980 (C.D. Ill. 1987) ; Miller v. Pacific Shore Funding, 224 F. Supp. 2d 977 (D. Md. 2002) (no private cause of action to enforce provision of licensing statute that limits lender's operations to certain locations); Staley v. Americorp Credit Corp., 164 F. Supp. 2d 578 (D. Md. 2001) (no private cause of action to enforce requirement that lender may operate only out of specific location); Luckett v. Alpha Constr. & Dev., Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17623 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 22, 2001) (no private right of action under Ill. Residential Loan Act where there was no evidence of legislative intent to create private remedy and court found criminal penalty sufficient for enforcement). See also Wombold v. Assocs. Fin. Servs. Co. of Mont., Inc., 104 P.3d 1080 (Mont. 2004) (finding implied private right of action under Montana's Consumer Loan Act, since enacted to benefit borrowers); Patchell v. Option One Mortgage Corp. (In re Patchell), 334 B.R. 492 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2005) (loan may be avoided or rescinded, even though no civil penalties available).

(n227)Footnote 213. See Lloyd Capital Corp. v. Pat Henchar, Inc., 544 N.Y.S.2d 178 (App. Div. 1989) (violation of SBA regulations insufficient to render contract unenforceable), aff'd, 603 N.E.2d 246 (N.Y. 1992) . See generally § 6.08[7][a][ii] infra.

(n228)Footnote 214. 2B Singer, Sutherland Statutory Construction § 55.07 (5th ed. 1992).

(n229)Footnote 215. Walker v. Peoples Fin. & Thrift Co., 46 Ariz. 224, 49 P.2d 1005 (Ariz. 1935) ; G. Nicotera Loan Corp. v. Gallagher, 115 Conn. 102, 160 A. 426 (1932) ; Hartsfield Co. v. Robertson, 48 Ga. App. 735, 173 S.E. 201 (Ga. Ct. App. 1934) ; Burque v. Brodeur, 85 N.H. 310, 158 A. 127 (1932) .

(n230)Footnote 216. Moore v. Comfed Sav. Bank, 908 F.2d 834 (11th Cir. 1990) ; Norris v. Sigler Daisy Corp., 392 S.E.2d 242 (Ga. 1990) . See also Schuran, Inc. v. Walnut Hill Assocs., 606 A.2d 885 (N.J. Super. Ct. 1991) (criminal usury statute silent as to penalty; court held it made only excessive interest illegal, not contract, thus, court severed illegal interest provision and permitted recovery of loan principal).

(n231)Footnote 217. E.g., In re Vehm Eng'g Corp., 521 F.2d 186 (9th Cir. 1975) ; Speare v. Consolidated Assets Corp., 367 F.2d 208 (2d Cir. 1966) ; Patterson v. Green, 474 So. 2d 725 (Ala. Ct. App. 1985) ; Thomas Lakes Owners Assoc. v. Riley, 612 N.W.2d 529 (Neb. App. 2000) (obligation to pay interest is void, and creditor cannot replace usurious interest with interest at legal rate); Daenzer v. Wayland Ford, Inc., 193 F. Supp. 2d 1030 (W.D. Mich. 2002) (finance charges void where seller does not give copy of contract to buyer at time buyer signs, but civil penalties under separate Motor Vehicle Sales Finance Act apply only if seller has sought prohibited charges); Route 50 Auto Sales, Inc. v. Muncy, 771 N.E.2d 635 (Ill. App. Ct. 2002) (credit seller whose contract did not include items required by MVRISA cannot recover interest, late charges, or repossession fees, but debt for principal is not void); Thomas Lakes Owners Assoc. v. Riley, 612 N.W.2d 529 (Neb. Ct. App. 2000) (obligation to pay interest is void, and creditor cannot replace usurious interest with interest at legal rate). See also First Bus. Credit Co. v. Graboyes (In re Grayboyes), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6671 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 22, 2006) (where interest capped by statute, interest reduced to statutory rate cap); Walters v. PDI Mgmt. Servs., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19570 (S.D. Ind. June 14, 2004) (same); Van Carr Enters. v. Hamco, Inc., 2006 Ark. LEXIS 198 (Ark. Mar. 16, 2006) (loan void only as to unpaid interest); Meklir v. J.C. Penney Co., 2005 Mich. App. LEXIS 1608 (Mich. Ct. App. July 5, 2005) (unpublished, citation limited) (loan void as to interest, late fees, and attorney fees); Badalamento v. Blonde, 57 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 186 (Mich. Ct. App. 2005) (unpublished, citation limited) (interest void on loan).

(n232)Footnote 218. Compare Cherry v. Berg, 508 S.W.2d 869 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974) (usurious bonus designated by parties as interest), with In re Vehm Eng'g Corp., 521 F.2d 186 (9th Cir. 1975) (payments under usurious agreement, although denominated as interest, will be deemed payment on principal); Baruch Inv. Co. v. Huntoon, 257 Cal. App. 2d 485, 65 Cal. Rptr. 131 (1967) (no actual application to interest shown).

(n233)Footnote 219. See, e.g., In re Vehm Eng'g Corp., 521 F.2d 186 (9th Cir. 1975) (California law); Speare v. Consolidated Assets Corp., 367 F.2d 208 (2d Cir. 1966) (New Jersey law); Westman v. Dye, 214 Cal. 28, 4 P.2d 134 (1931) ; Tauber v. Johnson, 8 Ill. App. 3d 789, 291 N.E.2d 180 (Ill. App. Ct. 1972) (decision under MVRISA); In re Castillian Apartments, Inc., 281 N.C. 709, 190 S.E.2d 161 (1972) ; Packer v. Wardwell, 88 Or. App. 236, 744 P.2d 1312 (Ct. App. 1987) ; In re Bogan, 281 F. Supp. 242 (W.D. Tenn. 1968) (Tennessee law).

(n234)Footnote 220. See, e.g., UCCC § 5.202(2) (1968 Model Code); Edwards v. Alabama Farm Bureau Mut. Casualty Ins. Co., 509 So. 2d 232 (Ala. Civ. App. 1986) , cert. quashed, 509 So. 2d 241 (1987) (loan by unlicensed lender voided under Alabama Mini-Code; borrower also entitled to refund of payments made). Some versions of the uniform small loan act have denied the creditor the right to "retain" payments, so a refund is obviously required. See Young v. Barker, 185 Kan. 246, 342 P.2d 150 (1959) (Kansas has since adopted a version of the UCCC). See also Ganus v. Jopes, 470 So. 2d. 237 (La. Ct. App. 1985) (statutory "forfeiture" required return of all interest payments); Chandlee v. Tharp, 161 Miss. 623, 137 So. 540 (1931) (usury ceiling is 8%; payment to principal recoverable if contract rate exceeds 20%); Ferrari v. Howard, 2002 Ohio App. LEXIS 3632 (July 11, 2002) (unpublished) (interpreting former version of retail installment sales act; when violation was willful, consumer has no further obligation on the contract, need not return the collateral, and is entitled to refund of all payments). See also Robertson v. Strickland (In re Robertson), 333 B.R. 894 (Bankr. M. D. Fla. 2005) (under Florida law, entire principal obligation is voided); North Carolina ex rel. Cooper v. NCCS Loans, Inc., 624 S.E.2d 371 (N.C. Ct. App. 2005) (North Carolina law requires voiding usurious loan and return of all payments); Malespin v. AB, 10 Misc. 3d 1057A (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 2005) (under New York law, entire loan is void and borrower can "walk away" from the loan with no obligation and recover amounts paid).

(n235)Footnote 221. Daenzer v. Wayland Ford, Inc., 210 F.R.D. 202 (W.D. Mich. 2002) .

(n236)Footnote 222. See Szerdahelyi v. Harris, 67 N.Y.2d 42, 499 N.Y.S.2d 650, 490 N.E.2d 517 (1986) (voiding is neither penalty nor forfeiture).

(n237)Footnote 223. See In re Harrington, 6 B.R. 655 (Bankr. D.R.I. 1980) ; Kuykendall v. Malernee, 516 P.2d

558 (Okla. Ct. App. 1973) .

(n238)Footnote 224. Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U.S. 143, 2 S. Ct. 408, 27 L. Ed. 682 (1883) (interpreting Texas statute); Wakefield v. Goldstein, 644 F.2d 707 (8th Cir. 1981) (Arkansas law); Chandlee v. Tharp, 161 Miss. 623, 137 So. 540 (1931) .

(n239)Footnote 225. The precise distinction between the voluntary and involuntary payment of usury is far from obvious. It is apparently a question of fact. See Conrad v. Home & Auto Loan Co., Inc., 53 A.D.2d 48, 385 N.Y.S.2d 979 (1976) (remand for factual determination). See also Thelen v. Ducharme, 151 Mich. App. 441, 390 N.W.2d 264 (Mich. Ct. App. 1986) (payment by borrowers after judgment rendered against them is not voluntary payment which would waive usury); Sienkiewicz v. Leonard Mortgage Co., 59 Mich. App. 154, 229 N.W.2d 352 (Mich. Ct. App. 1975) (issue of voluntariness not properly raised).

(n240)Footnote 226. See, e.g., Wakefield v. Goldstein, 644 F.2d 707 (8th Cir. 1981) ; Bizzoco v. Chintz, 193 Conn. 304, 476 A.2d 572 (1984) ; Waldorf v. Zinberg, 106 Mich. App. 159, 307 N.W.2d 749 (Mich Ct. App. 1981) ; Sienkiewicz v. Leonard Mortgage Co., 59 Mich. App. 154, 229 N.W.2d 352 (Mich Ct. App. 1975) . Other courts have held that usury voluntarily paid is nevertheless recoverable. See Kline v. Robinson, 428 P.2d 190 (Nev. 1967) ; Siefkes v. Clark Title Co., 215 N.W.2d 648 (S.D. 1974) . It is frequently unclear whether the opinions addressing the recovery of usurious interest paid are based on statutory interpretation or on the common law as it stands in the relevant jurisdiction.

(n241)Footnote 227. See Olsen v. Porter, 213 Mich. App. 25, 539 N.W.2d 523 (Mich Ct. App. 1995) (Michigan law requiring prior interest paid be applied to principal applies only in defense to creditor's action to enforce usurious contract; creditor's action to reform the contract was not enforcement action, so remedy unavailable to borrowers). Michigan Mobile Homeowners Ass'n v. Bank of Commonwealth, 56 Mich. App. 206, 223 N.W.2d 725 (Mich Ct. App. 1974) (discussing former Michigan law). Cf. Bank of Guam v. Demapan, 839 F.2d 1344 (9th Cir. 1988) (where statute merely limits the amount of interest a lender can recover when suing on the contract and does not otherwise provide for voiding the contract or punishing the lender, court will not enforce the contract for the excess; but borrower cannot recover interest paid).

(n242)Footnote 228. Couture v. G.W.M., Inc., 2002 WL 31962752 (N.H. Super. Ct. Dec. 3, 2002).

(n243)Footnote 229. See Dennis v. Bradbury, 236 F. Supp. 683 (D. Colo. 1964) , aff'd, 368 F.2d 905 (10th Cir. 1966) ; Westman v. Dye, 214 Cal. 28, 4 P.2d 134 (1931) ; Commercial Credit Equip. Corp. v. West, 677 S.W.2d 669 (Tex. Ct. App. 1984 n.r.e.) (recovery extends to legal interest as well as usurious interest paid); Flannery v. Bishop, 81 Wash. 2d 696, 504 P.2d 778 (1972) . But see Marker v. Pacific Mezzanine Fund, 309 F.3d 744 (10th Cir. 2002) (provision for forfeiture of interest does not create right to recover interest already paid); Anderson v. Chainani (In re Kemper), 263 B.R. 773, 781 n.15 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2001) (noting Texas legislature's 1999 abolition of common law remedies for usury).

(n244)Footnote 230. See, e.g., Skinner v. Cen-Pen Corp., 414 S.E.2d 824 (Va. 1992) (Va. Code § 6.1-330.46 interpreted to allow recovery of twice all interest paid within limitations period); Trapp v. Hancuh, 530 N.W.2d 879 (Minn. Ct. App. 1995) (interpreting Minn. Stat. § 334.011 subd.2 [small business/agricultural loans], providing for forfeiture of all interest plus recovery of twice interest actually paid); Williams v. Seeley (In re Williams), 227 B.R. 83 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1998) (Virginia's secondary mortgage loan law provides for the recovery of the total amount of interest paid in excess of that permitted, plus twice the total amount of interest paid during the two years immediately preceding the filing of the action plus court costs and attorney fees); Skinner v. Cen-Pen Corp., 243 Va. 279, 414 S.E.2d 824 (1992) (Va. Code § 6.1-330.46 interpreted to allow recovery of twice all interest paid within limitations period).

(n245)Footnote 231. Speare v. Consolidated Assets Corp., 367 F.2d 208 (2d Cir. 1966) (applying New Jersey law); Metcalf v. Bartrand, 491 P.2d 747 (Alaska 1971) ; Winnett v. Roberts, 179 Cal. App. 3d 909, 225 Cal. Rptr. 82 (1986) (proper tender made; foreclosure sale set aside); Feemster v. Schurkman, 291 So. 2d 622 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App.

1974) . But see Williams v. Macchio, 69 Misc. 2d 94, 329 N.Y.S.2d 405 (Sup. Ct. 1972) (no tender necessary when usurious contract signed under duress).

(n246)Footnote 232. See Kawauchi v. Tabata, 413 P.2d 221 (Haw. 1966) (emphasizing the equities in this particular case); Bohlinger v. American Credit Co., 594 S.W.2d 710 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1979) .

(n247)Footnote 233. Compare Barco Auto Leasing Corp. v. House, 202 Conn. 106, 520 A.2d 162 (1987) (creditor which violated Retail Installment Sales Financing Act was not entitled to offset for fair rental value of automobile when buyer rescinds contract), and Kuykendall v. Malernee, 516 P.2d 558 (Okla. Ct. App. 1973) (payment for excise taxes and expenses on automobile not recoverable), with Metcalf v. Bartrand, 491 P.2d 747 (Alaska 1971) (tender must include amount paid for real estate tax); Feemster v. Schurkman, 291 So. 2d 622 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1974) (lender can recover expenses related to prior lease and first mortgage).

(n248)Footnote 234. See I.D.S. Homes Corp. v. Lucas, 228 Ga. 521, 186 S.E.2d 745 (1972) (borrower must tender amount admittedly due; complete failure of consideration could obviate tender in proper case); Bjornstad v. Perry, 92 Idaho 402, 443 P.2d 999 (1968) (recovery by borrowers exceeds remaining principal due); Pisano v. Rand, 30 A.D.2d 173, 291 N.Y.S.2d 82 (1968) (mortgage was void).

(n249)Footnote 235. See Turney v. Roberts, 255 Ark. 503, 501 S.W.2d 601 (1973) ; Beach Assocs., Inc. v. Fauser, 9 Mass. App. 386, 401 N.E.2d 858 (1980) . Cf. Clean Harbors, Inc. v. John Hancock Life Ins. Co., 833 N.E.2d 611 (Mass. App. Ct. 2005) (Massachusetts law permits judge to fashion equitable remedies for usury). See generally Annot., 74 A.L.R.3d 1239 (1976) (reformation of usurious contracts). Reformation due to fraud or misrepresentation of the borrower is similar to a creditor's defense of estoppel. See § 6.08[5][c] supra.

(n250)Footnote 235.1. See Lieberman v. Emigrant Mortg. Co., 436 F. Supp. 2d 357, 365 (D. Conn. 2006) .

(n251)Footnote 236. See Bjornstad v. Perry, 92 Idaho 402, 443 P.2d 999 (1968) (court cannot reform contract after action to enforce contract is brought and usury defense is raised); Szerdahelyi v. Harris, 67 N.Y.2d 42, 499 N.Y.S.2d 650, 490 N.E.2d 517 (1986) (loan is void despite tender of excess interest to borrower); Matter of Dane's Estate, 390 N.Y.S.2d 249 (1976) (cannot invoke equity when statute mandates penalty); cf. Missouri-Kansas-Texas R.R. Co. v. Fiberglass Insulators, 707 S.W.2d 943 (Tex. Ct. App. 1986) (in face of statute setting interest rate when contract states no specific rate, court cannot invoke equitable powers to grant lender a higher prejudgment rate on its recovery, and a demand for higher rate would be usurious; extensive discussion of Texas cases on point).

(n252)Footnote 237. 12 U.S.C. § 86. For cases interpreting the Nat'l Bank Act remedies, see, e.g., McCollum v. Hamilton Nat'l Bank, 303 U.S. 245, 58 S. Ct. 568, 82 L. Ed. 819 (1938) ; American Timber & Trading v. First Nat'l Bank of Ore., 690 F.2d 781 (9th Cir. 1982) (subclass recovers double interest paid on usurious loans, but prejudgment interest denied); First Nat'l Bank in Mena v. Nowlin, 509 F.2d 872 (8th Cir. 1975) (state remedies preempted); Bokum v. First Nat'l Bank, 740 P.2d 693 (N.M. 1987) (National Bank Act claim disallowed where not filed within two years). For a discussion of usury preemption under the National Bank Act, see § 6.02[2] supra.

(n253)Footnote 238. The remedy provisions are found at 12 U.S.C §§ 1463g(b) (thrifts); 1785(g) (credit unions); 1813d (state banks). For a discussion of DIDA preemption, see § 6.02[4] supra.

(n254)Footnote 239. Subtit. B of Title I, Riegle Community Development and Regulatory Improvement Act of 1994, (H.R. 3474) Pub. L. No. 103-325, 108 Stat. 2160 (Sept. 23, 1994). See generally § 6.09 infra.

(n255)Footnote 240. 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961 et seq. The RICO Act is reprinted in Vol. 1B infra. For a detailed analysis of RICO, see § 4.07 supra. Some states have adopted their own RICO statutes which may be even more favorable to consumers. See In re Giorgio, 62 B.R. 853 (Bankr. D.R.I. 1986) ("unlawful debt" is any debt which is unenforceable in whole or in part due to usury); In re Marill Alarm Sys., Inc., 68 B.R. 399 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1986) (usury in sham consulting fees triggers state RICO statute).

(n256)Footnote 241. See 18 U.S.C. § 1964.

(n257)Footnote 242. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(6). See U.S. v. Megale, 363 F. Supp. 2d 359, 364 (D. Conn. 2005) (indictment that charged defendant with making a loan of $2,500 at a rate of $100 per week in interest sufficiently charged collection of an unlawful debt where allowable interest under state law would have been approximately $5.77 per week).

(n258)Footnote 243. See Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 3285, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 358-59 (1985) . See also National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 9.2.3.4 (5th ed. 2001 and Supp.) (detailed discussion of pattern).

(n259)Footnote 244. See, e.g., Durante Bros. & Sons, Inc. v. Flushing Nat'l Bank, 755 F.2d 239 (2d Cir.) , cert. denied, 473 U.S. 906, 105 S. Ct. 3530, 87 L. Ed. 2d 654 (1985) , on remand 652 F. Supp. 101 (E.D.N.Y. 1986) (overruled as to "racketeering injury" requirement by implication of Sedima, supra note 233), on remand, 652 F. Supp. 101 (E.D.N.Y. 1986) .

(n260)Footnote 245. Id.

(n261)Footnote 246. Id. at 239 .

(n262)Footnote 247. Id. at 240 (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 3575(e)).

(n263)Footnote 248. Id. at 241 .

(n264)Footnote 249. Id. at 242 . Predicate acts committed over just a few weeks or months would not satisfy closed-ended continuity, in such a case the plaintiff would have to show "open-ended" continuity to meet the continuity property of the pattern element.

(n265)Footnote 250. Id. at 242 .

(n266)Footnote 251. See American Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago v. Haroco, Inc., 473 U.S. 606, 105 S. Ct. 3291, 87 L. Ed. 2d 437 (1985) , aff'g 747 F.2d 384 (7th Cir. 1984) (fraudulent overcharging stated RICO claim); Leff v. Olympic Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, Case No. 86-3026, 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5589 (N.D. Ill. June 19, 1987) (RICO claim stated by mortgagor for alleged overcharge for tax and insurance escrow). See also Dixon v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7934 (E.D. La. May 31, 2000) (unpublished), aff'd without op., 252 F.3d 1356 (5th Cir. 2001) , cert. denied, 534 U.S. 952, 122 S. Ct. 349, 151 L. Ed. 2d 263 (2001) (allegations that auto dealer failed to disclose commissions on credit life insurance sales could present predicate act of mail fraud sufficient to avoid dismissal of RICO claim). See generally National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation and Legal Challenges § 10.8.3.2 (2d ed. and Supp.). But see Bellizan v. Easy Money of La., Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13419 (E.D. La. July 19, 2002) (because "overlapping" loans made by payday lender did not violate state laws prohibiting "rollover" or "renewal" loans, plaintiff failed to establish that defendant collected an unlawful debt); Porter v. ACE Cash Express, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15996 (E.D. La. Oct. 26, 2000) (because term of loans made to plaintiff exceeded those defined by state payday loan act by 5 days, they fell outside its interest limitations; since loans were not usurious under state law they did not meet RICO's definition of an unlawful debt, action dismissed), aff'd, 277 F.3d 1372 (5th Cir. 2001) (table). See also Raceway Props., L.L.C. v. LSOF Carlsbad Land L.P., 157 Fed. Appx. 959, 964 (9th Cir. Oct. 31, 2005) (refusing to dismiss RICO claim based on alleged bait-and-switch lending scheme); Beard v. Worldwide Mortg. Corp., 354 F. Supp. 2d 789, 800-08 (W.D. Tenn. 2005) (denying motion to dismiss § 1962(c) claim against a title company and an attorney based on an alleged predatory lending scheme).

(n267)Footnote 252. E.g., George A. Fuller Co. v. Carpet Servs., Inc., 823 S.W.2d 603, 604 (Tex. 1992) ; Sumrall v. Navistar Fin. Corp., 818 S.W.2d 548, 559 (Tex. Ct. App. 1991) .

(n268)Footnote 253. See, e.g., In re Marill Alarm Sys., Inc., 68 B.R. 399 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1986) , aff'd, 81 B.R. 119 (S.D. Fla. 1987) (when sham "consulting fees" to third party were considered interest, actual interest rates paid were 74%-95%; resultant violation of criminal usury statute or criminal fraud statute constituted violation of Florida RICO statute).

(n269)Footnote 254. Violette v. P.A. Days, Inc., 214 F.R.D. 207 (S.D. Ohio 2003) (certifying class on claim that interest charge exceeded RISA limits); Car Now Acceptance Co. v. Block, No. 427973 (Ohio C.P. Nov. 25, 2002) (unpublished), aff'd, 2003 Ohio 3964, 2003 Ohio App. LEXIS 3533 (Ct. App. July 14, 2003) ; Tomlin v. Dylan Mortg. Inc., 2002 NCBC LEXIS 4 (N.C. Super. Ct. Feb. 1, 2002) (certifying class on usury claim).

(n270)Footnote 255. See, e.g., Linder v. Thrifty Oil Co., 2 P.3d 27, 38 (Cal. 2000) (class action challenging surcharge imposed on customers who paid with credit card).

(n271)Footnote 256. Id. (quoting Vasquez v. Superior Court, 484 P.2d 964 (Cal. 1971)) .

(n272)Footnote 257. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(4)(A); 2 Newberg on Class Actions, §§ 9.53, 9.64 (3d ed. 1992).

(n273)Footnote 258. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Class Actions, § 9.5.2.6 (6th ed. 2006 and supp.).

(n274)Footnote 259. See Washington Mut. Bank v. Superior Court, 15 P.3d 1071 (Cal. 2001) . See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 13.5.5 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 6 The Cost of Credit

1-6 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 6.09

§ 6.09 Challenging Overreaching Credit: Common Law Claims and Other Relevant Statutes

[1] Statutes Relating to Real Estate Secured Credit

[a] RESPA

HUD published proposed changes to Regulation X on July 29, 2002. n1 These regulations would have disclosed yield spread premiums and important loan terms on good faith estimates and settlement statements beyond what is currently required. The forms would have also been streamlined in other ways. Further, HUD outlined a whole new shopping tool called a "Guaranteed Mortgage Package Agreement," designed to give shoppers in competitive markets the ability to obtain guaranteed quotes before significant fees attach. This agreement and a revamped settlement statement would have substituted the good faith estimate and the "normal" HUD-1, if lenders chose to offer this product. If so, HUD proposed that those lenders would be exempt from the anti-kickback provision of RESPA. These revisions were quite controversial. Industry objections and an FTC report evaluating the clarity of these suggested disclosures n2 likely were factors in the withdrawal of this proposal in March, 2004. n3 The regulations may be retooled and proposed again in the future.

The express purpose of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) n4 is to protect consumers from unnecessarily high settlement charges and certain abusive practices that have developed in the residential real estate industry.

While RESPA initially applied only to loans secured by a first lien on residential real property of one to four units, n5 in 1992 it was amended to include all such loans secured by subordinate liens as well. n6 In addition, RESPA's scope is limited to "federally related mortgage loans," which are defined as those made by federally-insured depository lenders (other than for temporary financing, such as a construction loan), HUD-related loans, loans intended to be sold on the secondary market to FNMA, GNMA or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, or to creditors who make or invest more than $1 million a year in residentially secured loans. n7 Thus, most home equity loans, as well as refinancings and the like, are now subject to RESPA requirements. Mobile home purchase loans and construction loans are usually covered by RESPA. However, any loan secured by vacant land is excluded unless a structure or manufactured home will be constructed or placed on the real property using the loan proceeds within two years from the date of settlement. n8 Further, "[i]f a loan for a structure or manufactured home to be placed on vacant or unimproved property will be secured by a lien on that property, the transaction is covered. ..." n9

An exception to RESPA coverage that may prove troublesome is that which applies to secondary market transactions. n10 A bona fide secondary market transaction is one where a mortgage lender makes loans for its own portfolio and finances these loans from its own or borrowed funds. The lender will usually hold the loan for varying periods of time with the option of selling its loans on the open market. In contrast, a table-funded transaction, which is subject to RESPA, is one where the nominal "lender" is actually originating the loan for another entity whose money is used to fund the loan. The loan will be transferred within a relatively short period of time to the ultimate lender. HUD admonishes, though, that the substance, not the form, of the transaction should be reviewed. n11

Disputes about RESPA coverage under this exception usually cannot be resolved at the summary judgment stage. However, the Eighth Circuit recently did just that, dismissing the borrower's case. n12 The majority looked primarily at the source of the nominal lender's funding in making the loan, characterizing the monies as the lender's own. The dissent, however, pointed to prior agreements with Norwest under which such loans would be quickly transferred to a trust for Norwest, which would then wire funds to the nominal lender's bank which provided the alleged "line of credit." Given these facts, the dissent characterized the transaction as "a pure circumvention" of RESPA. n13

RESPA requirements begin to play a role early in the home mortgage process. No later than three business days after application, the consumer must be given a "good faith estimate" of settlement costs. n14 In November 2008, HUD released amendments to Regulation X, most of which are effective January 1, 2010, that significantly alter RESPA disclosure requirements. n14.1 The new rules, among other things, standardize the good faith estimates, limit increases on most fees, unless circumstances change, and revamp settlement statements. Under the new rules, the loan originator--defined to mean a broker or a lender n14.2--must issue a GFE to the borrower in the form prescribed by HUD within three days of application. This is the first time HUD has mandated that a specific form be used for the GFE. n14.3 Actual costs (not ranges) must be quoted. No fees may be charged, other than a credit report fee, before the application is provided. n14.4 The GFE is generally binding on lenders for ten business days. Of course, where the time between application and closing is less than three days, the RESPA statement may be just one more of the many papers presented at consummation to the borrower, who does not have the time to review and absorb the information. Even where disclosure is made in a timely fashion, it may not have meaning for some consumers. However, information in these disclosures still may prove useful long after closing of a covered transaction. For instance, it could aid practitioners in determining whether protection under the Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act of 1994 is triggered. n15 Also, equity-skimming generally would be easier to detect. n16 Typically, the settlement agent would be required to use a HUD-1 (or HUD-1A for refinancings and junior liens) settlement statement for this purpose. This form itemizes every charge associated with the transaction, such as points and all the usual closing costs, including real estate agents' and brokers' fees. n17 A review of the HUD-1 provided at settlement will reveal whether the estimate of the costs was at all close to the actual charges. If not, the consumer may have been baited with better terms then switched into a disadvantageous loan, thus raising fraud and UDAP claims. In addition to this settlement statement, a booklet explaining these costs must be given. n18 Also required, where a so-called "controlled business arrangement" is involved, is a statement disclosing the lender's relationship to any such required provider of settlement services; n19 and if an application is received by a mortgage broker who is not an exclusive agent of the lender, the broker also must provide a good faith estimate within three business days.

HUD has not issued any formal policy statements regarding the cost disclosures with the exception of the instructions accompanying Regulation X. n20 In 2000, one of HUD's assistant general counsels, responded to a list of questions and answers from the Massachusetts Bankers Association relating to disclosures on the HUD-1 form. This letter did not receive public attention until the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency circulated it to the chief executive officers of all of the national banks in the country. n21

One of HUD's most interesting revelations relates to whether the actual dollar amount of the commission earned by the settlement agent or closing attorney for issuing a title insurance policy must be disclosed on the HUD-1. HUD unequivocally states that the commission must be listed. n22 The agency goes further and opines that line 1107

(attorney fees) or, alternatively, line 1113 (blank) on the HUD-1 must show the amount of the commission and the services provided for that fee. (Note that if the services listed are compensated for elsewhere on the HUD-1, the commission may be an illegal kickback under RESPA.) n23

No remedies are specifically prescribed for a violation of this section, but failure to comply might be argued as a violation of a state unfair and deceptive acts and practices statute. n24

RESPA, in addition, contains provisions mandating servicers to tell consumers about the possibility that the mortgage loans which they sign may be transferred and when a transfer is imminent. n25 Importantly, the note holder or servicer cannot assess a late fee or treat a payment as late during the 60-day period after the servicing has been transferred if the consumer pays the old servicer before the due date. n26 This particular section of RESPA also places a substantive duty upon servicers to pay the taxes, insurance, and other escrowed monies to the appropriate recipients. There is a private right of action to enforce these provisions. n27 This section also contains a mechanism for consumers to obtain answers about their accounts and to obtain corrections to their accounts where appropriate. An individual consumer may recover actual damages, costs, and reasonable attorney's fees under this section. n28

RESPA also limits the amount of money a lender can require the borrower to deposit into an escrow account to pay "taxes, insurance premiums, or other charges with respect to the property." n29

Another important provision, which gets at the heart of the problem of undisclosed arrangements involving hidden fees for referral of borrowers, is the prohibition against kickbacks and unearned fees. n30 The private remedy for a violation of this provision is treble damages and attorney's fees.

[i] Prohibition Against Kickbacks and Unearned Fees

RESPA recognizes that disclosure alone is inadequate security against a sophisticated industry whose consumers tend to be inexperienced in complicated financial transactions, and can easily be overwhelmed by the mere volume of legalistic documents plunked down before them at closing. An even more important provision, which gets at the heart of the problem of undisclosed arrangements involving hidden fees for referral of borrowers, is the prohibition against kickbacks and unearned fees. n31 The private remedy for a violation of this provision is treble damages and attorneys fees.

Under RESPA, no person shall give and no person shall accept any fee, kickback, or other thing of value n32 pursuant to any oral or written agreement or understanding for the referral of a settlement service in the scope of loans described above. n33 Regulation X explicitly provides that the referral of settlement services is not compensable, thus making it a violation for a company to pay any other company or the employees of any other company for the referral of settlement services. n34 Furthermore, the regulation provides that there shall be no splitting of any charges made or received for the rendering of a settlement service in connection with a covered loan other than for services actually performed. n35 Examples of specific situations which do and not violate these rules can be found in Appendix B to Regulation X. One court held that a referral arrangement between a large-volume institutional seller of real property and a provider of escrow and title services did not violate RESPA based upon an "economies of scale" analysis. n36 These entities negotiated lower-than-normal rates that the title company would charge the seller for basic escrow services and for owner's title insurance. The court determined that there was little or no conclusive proof that the fees depended upon a certain volume of business, though it was clear that some volume of business was anticipated. More importantly for the court, however, was the lack of evidence that the discounts were "abnormally low," distinguishing an example described by HUD in Appendix B to Regulation X where HUD determined that RESPA was violated. The Ninth Circuit affirmed. n37 sufficiently pleaded a claim under section 2607(a) where a third-party creditor referred plaintiffs to lender for the purpose of refinancing her home. In exchange for the referral, lender promised the third-party creditor that it would condition the refinancing on the payment of the creditor from the proceeds of the loan. Plaintiff, however, did not allege that she was overcharged for the settlement services. After a lengthy discussion of the history and purpose of RESPA, the court determined that the plaintiff did not need to allege an overcharge to state a claim under section 2607(a).

Many different types of referral arrangements, including lender-paid brokers fees, may violate the prohibitions of section 2607(a). For example, in Kahrer v. Ameriquest Mortgage Co., n38 the court held that the class plaintiff

A potential exemption from RESPA liability exists for referral fees or the splitting of charges: if the payment is for goods or services actually rendered, the fee is legal. n39 There is limited guidance in the statute and in Regulation X as to what this means, but it is clear that mere referrals are not compensable. n40 Regulation X does require that the payment bear a reasonable relationship to the market value of the goods furnished or services provided. n41 However, this leaves an opening for settlement service providers and others to create imaginary services merely to justify receipt of fees. n42 By the same token, prohibited payments may also be obtained for noncompensable services by billing consumers a blanket fee for eclectic tasks grouped under an ambiguous title such as "document preparation." n43 Other exceptions to the kickback and referral prohibitions include: payments to attorneys for services actually rendered or by a title company to its duly appointed agent for services actually performed in the issuance of a title insurance policy; n44 payments made pursuant to cooperative brokerage and referral arrangements or agreements between real estate agents and brokers. n45

In addition, payments or fees split between "affiliated" businesses may be exempt from the section 2607 prohibitions if certain disclosures are made at specific times to the borrower, the entity making the referral has not required the use of the services from the affiliated business (there are some exceptions), and the only thing of value received from the arrangement, other than specified types of payments, is a return on the ownership or franchise interest. n46 HUD recently issued a policy statement regarding the standard to apply in determining whether lender-paid broker fees are legal. n47

[A] Lender-Paid Broker Fees

HUD estimates that mortgage brokers handle about half of all home mortgage loans, or about 3 million mortgages per year totaling $333 billion. n48

Lender kickbacks to brokers for bringing them business are often paid in one of two ways: by a "yield spread premium" or "volume-based compensation." A yield spread premium is a fee from a mortgage lender to a mortgage broker, paid when the broker arranges a consumer mortgage loan where the interest rate on the loan is inflated to an amount higher than the "par" rate to cover the cost of the fee. The par interest rate is the base rate at which the lender will make a loan to a borrower on a given day. Some lenders also compensate brokers based upon the volume of loans which brokers steer their way.

These payments to brokers can drive up the cost of mortgage loans and create reverse competition where brokers have incentives to steer borrowers to lenders that pay brokers the most rather than to lenders who give borrowers the most favorable terms. This problem is exacerbated for low-income borrowers (over 39% of all families below the federal poverty level own their homes) n49 because they have or perceive themselves to have fewer credit choices, and brokers often engage in steering with legal impunity.

Since the early 1990s, when lender payments to brokers began to surface, there have been numerous challenges to these payments as illegal kickbacks under RESPA. n50 The likelihood that the "premium" or "compensation" is a prohibited kickback is stronger the more the borrower pays directly to the broker. n51

[B] HUD Policy Statement on Lender-Paid Broker Fees

HUD recently published a much-anticipated policy statement dealing with the legality of lender-paid broker fees. n52

At the outset, HUD makes clear that it does not consider yield spread premiums to be per se legal or illegal.

The policy enunciates a two-part test for legality of fees. In determining whether a lender payment to a broker is permissible under RESPA, the first question is whether goods or services were actually performed or facilities were actually provided for the compensation paid. n53 The policy statement provides a list of compensable services normally performed in the origination of the loan. n54 Though the list is not dispositive, HUD will be generally satisfied that sufficient work was performed to justify compensation if a broker took information from the borrower, filled out an application, and then performed at least five additional items on the list. n55

Next, the analysis turns to whether the payments are reasonably related to the value of the goods, facilities, or services actually provided. In answering this question, HUD believes that the total compensation to the broker should be scrutinized. "Total compensation" includes direct fees paid by the borrower and indirect fees by the lender or other parties, including volume-based compensation. Further, the total of payments > must be commensurate with the amount normally charged for similar services, goods or facilities. This analysis requires careful consideration of fees paid in relation to price structures and practices in similar transactions and in similar markets. n56

If the fee bears no reasonable relationship to the market value of the goods, facilities, or services, the excess may be evidence of a referral or unearned fee. n57*64 Fed. Reg. 10,086* HUD defines "goods" to include appraisals, credit reports, and other documents. For the first time, however, the agency makes clear that the mortgage loan itself cannot be regarded as a "good." "Facilities" may encompass a reasonable portion of the broker's retail or store-front operation. n58

Separate from the issue of the legality of the fees, HUD urges, though does not require, clearer disclosures of lender-paid fees. The agency opines that, at a minimum, all fees to the mortgage broker (from whatever source) should be clearly labeled and properly estimated on the good faith estimate form. n59 Codes like "YSP POC" are inadequate. Instead, HUD suggests that lenders describe a yield spread payment in the following way: "Mortgage broker fee from lender to XYZ Corp. (P.O.C.)." Otherwise, one goal of RESPA, to make mortgage transactions understandable to the consumer, is undermined.

Although the HUD statement provides that percentage-based fees be included in the "total compensation," this prong of the analysis only arises if the compensation at issue was paid for the goods, facilities, or services provided.

The brokerage industry sees the HUD statement as affirming its position, i.e., that one simply adds up the value of the services, goods, and facilities provided on one side of the page and compares it to the total amount of compensation paid directly or indirectly to the broker from whatever source, on the other. n60 Using this method, lenders and brokers can try to avoid the more careful scrutiny that the statute requires.

Even under the industry interpretation, though, lender paid fees should be suspect for several reasons. First, advocates should review the services performed by the broker which must be itemized and clearly labeled on the Good Faith Estimate and HUD-1 Settlement Statement. n61 It is less likely that a broker can claim that fees are paid for services, goods, or facilities that are not properly disclosed to its customer.

Second, on the "value of the services provided" side of the equation, "value" should be measured in specific dollar amounts for each good, service, or facility provided. The reasonable value cannot include percentages of the loan amount because the value of a particular service would then be tied to the value of the loan, not the local market. n62

Third, advocates should compare several loans involving the same broker and lender. If the same services are provided in each transaction but the total compensation for each loan is a different dollar amount, the compensation received by the broker cannot be related to the reasonable value of the goods, services, or facilities actually provided. Instead, the differences must be related to the value of the referral itself.

Fourth, if the lender-paid portion of the total compensation is always calculated as a percentage of the loan amount, regardless of the amount of the borrower-paid fees, it is likely that the total compensation is not reasonably related to the goods, services, or facilities actually provided. n63 Rather, the lender-paid portion must be related to the referral itself.

Fifth, fees and payments should be analyzed to see if the lender payment duplicates direct compensation paid by the borrower for the services actually rendered. n64 If so, then section 2607 has been violated.

Finally, volume-based compensation, by definition, is paid to a broker because of the number of loans that it refers to the lender. "Total compensation" must include any volume-based payment. One of two things should occur when the lender makes such a payment. If the volume-based payment results in a reduction of borrower-paid fees, the total may be reasonably related to the value of what the broker provided. However, if there is no corresponding reduction in the borrower-paid fees, the total compensation, by definition, will never be reasonably related to the value of the good, services, or facilities (because the volume-based payment will unreasonably inflate the total fees paid).

Though HUD hoped the Policy statement would clarify the law, it has instead fueled a judicial debate over its meaning. Several courts have used it to deny consumer motions for class certification and a few have granted summary judgment against the consumers on the merits. n65 One court has denied the lender's motion for summary judgment. n66

Following these court decisions, HUD's General Counsel released a letter dated December 17, 1999 responding about the Policy Statement. n67 HUD clearly and unequivocally repeated that, in the first instance, the broker services must have been performed for (i.e., in exchange for) the yield spread premium.

In 2001, the Eleventh Circuit released a second decision in the Culpepper case, becoming the first appellate court to apply the 1999 HUD policy statement in determining whether a class should be certified in a case challenging the legality of the yield-spread premium payments. n68 The panel agreed that, in the first instance, the goods, services, or facilities must be performed or furnished for (i.e., in exchange for) the lender-paid fee. In this case, the agreement between the lender and broker did not make payment of the premium contingent upon the performance of any services, and the payment was calculated in the same way on each loan (a percentage of the rate "upcharge"). Because services were not performed for the fee, there was no need to evaluate the value of the services in comparison to the amount of the fee, and the court affirmed the class certification.

This decision did not end the matter. The industry reacted strongly to Culpepper II and pushed HUD to step in and "clarify" its policy statement. n69 HUD accepted the invitation and issued its second policy statement on the subject on October 18, 2001. n70 The agency explicitly repudiated the decision in Culpepper II. n71 HUD articulated the standard thusly: the total compensation paid to the broker from any source (not just the lender-paid fee) must be for goods, services, or facilities. n72 Arguably, if the broker provided any goods, services, or facilities for any payment made or to be made to it, the first prong of the test is met. Of course, the broker will have done something in brokering each loan, so meeting the first prong may become pro forma. As far as class actions were concerned, HUD unequivocally opined that it is necessary to look at each transaction individually.

Several court decisions quickly endorsed the new HUD standard. n73 In one such case, Glover v. Standard Federal Bank, n74 the Eighth Circuit ruled that the 2001 HUD statement was controlling authority, entitled to deference, and reversed a grant of class certification. n75

Is the Eighth Circuit correct in its deference analysis? This court focused primarily on the substance of the policy, paying little or no attention to the procedural prerequisites necessary to trigger deference. A careful analysis of Supreme Court deference standards casts doubts on the both procedural and substantive viability of HUD's actions. n76 The 2001 statement was not ordered by Congress, nor did HUD follow the usual publication and comment procedure. Moreover, the statute is not ambiguous: section 2607(c) states that the payment to any person of bona fide salary or compensation or other payment for goods, services, or facilities actually provided is not prohibited. It seems that Congress intended that the payment at issue be in exchange for the services, a position adopted by the court in Culpepper II.

[C] Broker Kickback Practice Issues

Figuring out whether a yield spread premium has been paid to a broker can be tricky. While the premium must be disclosed on the second page of the HUD-1 settlement statement, the description can be quite cryptic. For example, some settlement statements will list "(P.O.C. ysp--$1,500)."

Under the new rules, n77 effective January 2010, yield spread premiums and other payments from lenders to brokers will be disclosed on HUD-1 Line 802 and GFE Line 2 as a "credit" to borrowers. Unfortunately, this disclosure does not appear clearer than the current practice of listing fees as "Y.S.P. P.O.C." In addition, by calling the yield spread premium a "credit," HUD assumes that the lender's payment to the broker necessarily provides borrowers with lower settlement or origination costs.

If nothing remotely like this appears on the settlement statement, the broker can be asked if it received such a payment prior to filing a case. The settlement officer can be approached to provide copies of the checks distributed at the settlement that may yield this information.

Advocates should expect lenders to immediately file motions to dismiss and for summary judgment. Consequently, the consumer's attorney should serve discovery demands as soon as possible. n78 Some courts have seemed unwilling to dismiss cases where there has been no opportunity for discovery given the speed at which the request for dismissal was filed and where factual development could prove crucial. n79

It is important to sue both the broker and the lender. While the lender may successfully eliminate itself from the case through a motion to dismiss or for summary judgment, the broker may not, since the borrower may have independent claims against the broker under other legal theories. In addition to alleging violations of RESPA, advocates should include breach of fiduciary duty, fraud, misrepresentation, RICO, TILA, and state UDAP and usury claims where appropriate.

In the past few years, more often than not, class certification has been denied in yield spread premium cases, though the tide has recently turned a bit. Courts have generally denied class status on the ground that the factual determination as to whether the fee bore any reasonable relationship to the value of the goods or services provided was suitable for trial only on an individual basis. n80 These courts, by and large, ignored the fact that, by definition, the amount of the fee at issue bore no relationship to the work performed, the fact that often the defendants could not even prove the threshold requirement, i.e., that the premium was paid for any good, facilities, or services, and the fact that the rates and premiums offered by the lenders were uniformly set on a daily basis.

The courts of late, however, have been more thoughtful in their approach to class certification. Classes have recently been approved on the ground that section 2607(c) requires the court to first assess whether the fee represented payment for goods, facilities, or services performed. n81 Only in the event that the fee was paid for goods, facilities, or services can the court reach the issue of its reasonableness. n82 In one case, the court held that consumers could prove on a class-wide basis that a broker did not furnish the legitimate goods or services required to earn the yield spread premium: the lender/broker loan correspondent agreement unequivocally stated that the broker would be compensated by the customer, not the lender, and while the level of service to the customer did not change, the yield spread premium increased as the interest rate increased. In addition, the lender calculated the fee based on the net asset value of the loan and the value of the servicing rights, not on the value of services performed. n83 In another case, the broker provided no goods to the lender as it never owned the loan in the first instance. Further, the size of the premium varied exclusively according to the difference between the par interest rate and the rate at which the mortgage closed, without reference to the kind or degree of services performed. n84

Individual affirmative cases n85 or defenses to foreclosure continue to be viable avenues to attack this industry practice. The statute provides for damages of three times the amount of the illegal charge, attorney's fees, and costs. n86 The statutory damages may be sufficient to offset any alleged delinquency in a foreclosure proceeding.

[D] Steering by Seller to Title Insurance Company

As discussed previously, the payment of referral fees and the splitting of fees for the provision of settlement services are generally prohibited under RESPA. Congress went further in the context of steering that occurs between sellers of real property, particularly large development corporations, and title insurance companies. It specifically prohibited a seller of property to be purchased with the assistance of a covered mortgage loan from directly or indirectly requiring that the buyer purchase title insurance from a particular title company, regardless of whether any referral fees are paid. n87

"Requiring the use" of a particular title company to purchase the insurance is defined by Regulation X. n88 The general definition includes the > situation in which a person must use a particular provider of a settlement service in order to have access to some distinct service or property, and the person will pay for the settlement service of the particular provider or will pay a charge attributable, in whole or in part, to the settlement service.

Excluded from this definition is the offering of a package, discounts, or rebates to consumers for the purchase of multiple settlement services so long as the package or discounts are optional to the purchaser. Sham discounts, e.g., a discount that is made up by higher costs elsewhere in the settlement process, will not meet this exemption. n89

Any seller who violates this prohibition is liable to the buyer in an amount equal to three times all charges made for such title insurance. n90 The measure of damages is three times the entire fee, not three times the amount by which the fee for the insurance issued by the required title company exceeds that available to the buyer from another source. Claims under section 2608 must be brought within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation. n91 Though section 2608 does not specifically provide for the payment of attorney's fees and costs to the prevailing party, Regulation X makes a violation of section 2608 a per se violation of section 2607 (the anti-kickback section of RESPA). n92 Since section 2607 contains a fee-shifting provision, consumers can argue that fees are recoverable under section 2607. n93

Though there are no reported decisions regarding the merits of a section 2608 claim, one court recently granted class certification in a case where the seller development company inserted a clause in the agreement of sale authorizing the seller to place title insurance with a particular title insurance company whose name was or would be inserted into a blank in the clause. n94 The court had little trouble finding that the commonality requirement was met despite the defendants' claim that different oral representations were made to purchasers, and that some purchasers might have had the "blank" filled in with the name of a title company and others might not.

[E] Other Kickback Issues

[1] Loan Padding

Virtually every mortgage transaction involves an array of "settlement services" which have the potential to generate costs for the borrower. Those services include, but are not limited to, title services, preparation of closing documents, rendering of credit reports or appraisals, property surveys and inspections, in addition to real estate agent, loan broker and attorney services, loan origination, and processing. n95 Brokers, agents, and lenders play an especially powerful role because of their presence from beginning to end of the process. They have ample opportunity for financial abuse of unwary and vulnerable customers who rely on their experience, judgment, and advice when making important decisions.

As mortgage brokers, and, in some areas, closing attorneys, have become major players in many of the seedier second mortgage scams, the prohibition against kickbacks and unearned fees may be of considerable benefit to consumers. Many of these scams involve "loan padding," where the loan includes excessive and sometimes exorbitant fees for a full array of closing services, many of which are unnecessary. Regulation X gives HUD the authority to investigate high cost loans to see if they are padded by kickbacks or referral fees. While "high prices standing alone are not proof of a RESPA violation," if there is no "reasonable relationship to the market value of the goods or services provided," the excess may be "unearned" and therefore a RESPA violation. n96 While articulated for HUD enforcement purposes, this test should serve equally well in private litigation.

[2] Fee Splitting

Fee splitting involves payment of charges to one party for referral of business to another, where the first party performs no other services justifying the fee; the fee is then split with the party to whom the business was referred. This practice is prohibited by RESPA section 2607 where at least two parties share in the benefit of a service charge, which is considered an unearned fee. n97

Where a charge is duplicative or unnecessary, but is not a kickback or split with another party, advocates can successfully mount an attack under the Truth in Lending Act if the fee is not included in the finance charge and is not authorized under Regulation Z n98 or through state UDAP statutes. n99 Motions to compel arbitration have reared their heads in the RESPA context. n100 One court ordered arbitration between not only the lender and borrower but also with the non-signatory broker where the borrower alleged that the misconduct by the lender and broker was "substantially interdependent and concerted." n101

[F] Potential Loopholes

There are at least three ways to be exempted from coverage by RESPA, and probably others as well. One possible loophole is that RESPA does not cover loans that are intended to be sold to creditors who make or invest less than $1 million per year in residentially secured loans. n102 As a result, unscrupulous brokers need only market and sell their loans to small-scale creditors who do not exceed the threshold and who may be just as unsuspecting and vulnerable as some consumers.

The second, regarding referral fees and the splitting of charges, is described in § 6.09[1][a][i][E][2] supra .

The final exemption creating potential for abuse is for qualified computer loan origination ("CLO") services. n103 A CLO system is a computer system that (1) provides prospective borrowers with information about rates and terms of federally related mortgage loans; (2) collects, assembles, and transmits information about the borrower, the property, and other relevant information on a potential mortgage loan for evaluation by lenders; and (3) responds to the borrower with information such as loan terms, rates, and payment schedules for various loan products that would be available to the borrower. n104 Regulation X lists numerous criteria for qualified CLO services, and requires that certain disclosures be made. However, this is a fairly new development in the mortgage lending industry, and the effectiveness of the regulation in protecting consumers from further overreaching practices remains to be proven.

RESPA includes an express provision relating to the preemption of inconsistent state laws. n105 If the state law provides greater protections than RESPA, then the law is not preempted. n106 In one recent case, the denial of the lender's motion to dismiss a RESPA complaint raising issues of inflated settlement costs and fee-padding as violations of the state UDAP act and state common law torts, prompted the lender to request a writ of mandamus from an appellate court to vacate the trial court's decision. n107

[G] Electronic Provision of Information Required by RESPA

E-Sign, n108 effective October 1, 2000, allows lenders to replace written documents with electronic documents in certain circumstances. If a statute, regulation, or other rule of law requires that information relating to a transaction be provided to the consumer in writing, then the information may be provided electronically if:

- Certain disclosures are made to the consumer; n109

- The consumer consents electronically, or confirms his or her consent electronically, in a manner that reasonably indicates that he or she can access information electronically in the format used by the provider of the information; n110 and

- The electronic document is in a form that is capable of being retained and accurately reproduced for later reference by all parties or persons who are entitled to retain it. n111

These requirements apply whenever a lender wants to use an electronic document to replace a document that RESPA requires to be in writing. n112

Requirements in RESPA that information be provided in writing are overridden only if the lender complies with E-Sign's requirements. If the lender did not comply, then the consumer should be entitled to whatever penalty RESPA would provide if the information had not been provided. n113

[H] Implications for Practice

As the discussion indicates, of these highlighted provisions, n114 only one has specific statutory remedies. But the failure to comply with any provision may well fall within the scope of a state UDAP statute which applies to the credit transaction at issue. n115 For example, failure to give the required settlement statement which could have alerted a consumer to exorbitant closing costs or brokers fees in time to seek credit elsewhere could be considered either a per se UDAP violation, a violation of applicable law n116 or, more generally, a deceptive practice such as omission of critical information. n117

As with Truth in Lending, RESPA provides consumers with important information. The itemized settlement statement required by RESPA, in fact, helps close one of TIL's loopholes. Since TIL does not mandate that consumers be given an itemization of the amount financed, n118 some overreaching second mortgage lenders were formerly able to conceal exorbitant costs and other forms of loan padding by providing consumers only with a statement setting forth a lump sum. Consumers may now consult the required list of fees charged at settlement to determine if padding and duplication occur.

Moreover, RESPA's limitation on unearned charges and kickbacks, which carries the possibility of a maximum $10,000 fine as well as the treble damages private remedy, gives advocates a handle on at least some of the loan padding techniques used by unscrupulous lenders. The Act's authorization for an award of attorneys fees to the "prevailing party," n119 however, may be significant deterrent to private enforcement.

The statute of limitations for RESPA's private remedies is one year. n120 At least two courts have held that the statute of limitations is not jurisdictional, which subjects it to a tolling argument. n121 If a violation of the statute is being challenged as a UDAP violation, however, the UDAP statute of limitations should be the applicable one.

[b] Other Statutes

Other statutes to consider include HOEPA and fair lending and civil rights statutes. n122 UDAP statutes are another important remedy as has been discussed throughout this chapter.

The Equal Credit Opportunity Act prohibits discrimination in any aspect of credit on the basis of age, race, or national origin, among other grounds. n123 The federal Fair Housing Act and its state counterparts prohibit discrimination on the basis of race in housing related financing, including home equity loans and home improvement financing. n124 Both of these acts also allow homeowners with predatory loans to pursue relief against actors higher up in the food chain than the original lender.

The Civil Rights Act provides that the same right to contract, purchase, and hold property available to white citizens must also be extended to all citizens. n125 These statutes may be invoked in the lending context when, e.g., a homeowner is targeted for less favorable terms on the basis of race. n126

In addition, RICO may be implicated in cases involving overreaching. Mail and wire fraud are perhaps the most commonly invoked predicate acts in stating a RICO claim, n127 and some questionable practices may fall within that rubric. The increasing problem of consumers paying higher interest rates due to divided loyalties of loan arrangers has also been challenged under RICO's mail fraud provisions, with differing results. n128 Credit-related insurance, too, has received some RICO attention. n129 Where the consumer can allege a civil conspiracy between the mortgage broker and lender and fraud in the selling of mortgage loans on terms different from those represented, a RICO claim may be stated, at least under the Ohio RICO statute. n130

[c] State High-Cost Mortgage Statutes

In May 2006, Ohio passed a broad state predatory lending law. n131 It adopts a 5% points and fees trigger for most loans (and expanded the law to cover open-end loans and reverse mortgages, but not purchase money loans), limits or prohibits prepayment penalties in many instances, and mandates counseling for loans with a debt-to-income ratio over 50%. It also applies the state's UDAP law to mortgage brokers, loan officers, and non-depository lending institutions, creates a bright-line list of unconscionable acts or practices (such as failing to consider a borrower's ability to repay), prohibits appraiser coercion, requires certain enhanced disclosures about loan terms and enhanced licensing requirements, clamps down on title agents and title company referrals, and enumerates broad broker and lender duties, but it shields assignees from most liability.

Minnesota amended its Minnesota Residential Mortgage Originator and Servicer Licensing Act, effective August 1, 2007. n132 Without imposing any financial thresholds, the amendments to the Mortgage Act prohibit residential mortgage originators and servicers from making, providing, or arranging for a residential mortgage loan without: verifying the borrower's reasonable ability to repay; charging prepayment penalties on subprime loans; refinancing a loan without a tangible net benefit; failing to properly disclose the amounts of taxes and insurance; or making, providing, or arranging for a negatively amortizing residential mortgage loan, other than a reverse mortgage loan. The amendments also impose an agency relationship between a mortgage broker and borrower, and impose a duty on mortgage brokers to act in the best interests of the borrower and in good faith.

In July 2006, Rhode Island also passed a strong law. n133 The law, which applies to both open- and closed-end loans, has a 5% points and fees trigger for most loans (and includes most yield spread premium charges and prepayment penalties in that trigger), and for covered loans requires a net tangible benefit for many refinancings, bans mandatory arbitration, limits payment shock in adjustable rate loans, requires originators to reasonably ensure that the borrower can afford to repay the loan for loans with a debt-to-income ratio at or above 50%, caps points and fees, and bans prepayment penalties. Holders are shielded from assignee liability if they take certain steps to exclude purchase of high-cost loans.

Tennessee passed a law in May 2006 that adopts the HOEPA thresholds and imposes numerous obligations for covered loans including a requirement that originators reasonably ensure that the borrower can afford to repay the loan for loans with a debt-to-income ratio at or above 50%, a limit or ban on certain prepayment penalties, a requirement to provide two free payoff statements every 12 months, limits on late fees and limits on the financing of points and fees. n134

[2] Unconscionability

Unconscionability case law has developed through several different vehicles: Common law, n135 UCC section 2-302, non-UCC statutory unconscionability provisions, n136 and some UDAP statutes where unfairness or deception standards meld into unconscionability standards. n137 However, since there is considerable overlap, n138 case law as to what type of conduct or contract terms may be unconscionable should be helpful irrespective of which of the above vehicles was used. Advocates should not be deterred from relying on case law decided under an unconscionability statute in another state simply because their state has not codified the doctrine.

There are two forms of unconscionability: Procedural and substantive. n139 Procedural unconscionability involves the bargaining process when the contract was made. n140 Substantive unconscionability focuses on the content of the contract. n141

The most typical type of procedural unconscionability involves oppression or surprise in the bargaining process. n142 Oppression occurs when there is a disparity in bargaining power between the parties. n143 Oppressive contracts involve no negotiation over the terms of the agreement. n144 For example, a form contract in which one party has no choice in the matter and cannot obtain better terms elsewhere might be oppressive. n145 Surprise occurs when creditors hide contract terms from the consumer in fine print or unusually complex clauses. n146

Procedural unconscionability alone usually is not sufficient to invalidate a term of a contract. n147 The consumer advocate must normally also show substantive unconscionability.

A court will find substantive unconscionability if the contract unfairly and unjustifiably "reallocates the risks of the bargain in an objectively unreasonable or unexpected manner." n148 Thorough investigation and command of the facts of the case are critical to an unconscionability claim under statute or common law. n149

The remedy for unconscionability is usually limited to a defense against the enforcement of the unconscionable contract or terms and may not support an affirmative claim for restitutionary damages. n150 State codifications of unconscionability may offer other relief though. n151

[3] Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

The duty of good faith and fair dealing between parties to a contract is based both in common law n152 and the UCC. n153

One kind of contract enforcement issue arguably subject to the duty is when the credit terms in a contract include a balloon payment, which the creditor knew the borrower would be unlikely to meet. n154 At the loan's maturity, the borrower must then refinance or face foreclosure. While ordinarily a creditor's decision as to whether to extend credit is not subject to the duty, the creditor may be subject to some mandatory obligation to refinance such a loan, in which case the refinancing decision would be subject to the duty of good faith and fair dealing. n155 In a few circumstances, the mandate may be by virtue of statute. n156

Another area where the doctrine may be useful relates to the creditor's decision to accelerate and foreclose on collateral, which has also been held to be subject to the duty of good faith and fair dealing. n157

NOTE:

Some of the recent amendments to state statutes of frauds designed to limit lender liability may affect > claims based on oral promises not to accelerate. The borrower, of course, is equally subject to the duty of good faith. n158 Similarly, the duty may have been breached where the lender consistently overstated the payoff amount and improperly capitalized certain costs that should have been assessed as separate fees, all of which prevented the consumer from paying off the mortgage and led to foreclosure. n159

Unilaterally refusing to accept mortgage payments from the homeowner's tenant, raising the monthly payments to cover an escrow shortfall without notice to the homeowner, and continuing a course of action that forced the homeowner into foreclosure constitutes a breach of this duty. n160

Charging fees at the time of payoff or default that are not authorized by statute or the loan documents may be conduct that violates this duty, though consumers have more often alleged breach of contract and UDAP claims in this context. n161

Creditor behavior which thwarts the consumer's ability to file for and obtain payments to the creditor under a credit disability policy may also state a cause of action under this theory. n162 Similarly, insurance companies have a duty to deal fairly and act in good faith with those whom they insure. This duty is breached where, in the credit insurance context or otherwise, it deliberately and willfully engages in a pattern of canceling insurance policies as soon as claims are filed without determining whether it has good cause to do so. n163

A lender's practice of force-placing mortgage hazard insurance that is several times more expensive than the homeowner's policy and receiving kickbacks from the insurance company may also state a claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. n164 One court found a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing as a result of the servicer's inability, or unwillingness, to account for and properly credit payments made by the borrower and the bankruptcy trustee. n165

[4] Fiduciary or Quasi-Fiduciary Duty

The existence of a fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary duty at the least gives rise to a duty of fair and honest disclosure of all facts which might be presumed to influence the consumer in regard to his or her actions, n166 including those favorable to the creditor or a third party and adverse to the borrower's interest. n167

When there is a duty to disclose, failure to do so should give rise to a tort action for nondisclosure, n168 or the silence may qualify as misrepresentation. n169 A principal has the right to repudiate a contract made by one individual acting as the agent of both parties in violation of his fiduciary duty. n170 The principal also may have a claim for damages, including return of commission. n171

[5] Intentional Interference With a Contractual Relationship

Under this tort, lenders who reward brokers for bringing borrowers to them may be required to share the blame for the brokers' breach of duty. n172

The elements of this tort are: the existence of a contractual relationship; the defendant's knowledge of the contract; the intent to interfere; and the plaintiff suffers damages. n173 Buyers who asserted this tort in relation to force-placed insurance with alleged excess coverage and inflated premiums survived a motion to dismiss. n174

[6] Fraud and Misrepresentation

One of the more striking developments in recent years is the effort to reach behind shoddy contractors, brokers, and predatory second mortgage companies to the financiers who enable them to operate by providing them their financial lifeline. The vicarious liability of the lender for a seller's wrongs under the FTC holder rule is discussed elsewhere, as is the expanded liability under the Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act. See Chapter 2 supra. However, recovery against the financiers under both provisions is limited. Hence, to impose liability for damages sufficient to act as a deterrent, such as punitive damages for fraud, a borrower would need to establish that the initial party acted as the financier's agent, that the lender participated directly in the fraud, n175 that the lender aided and abetted the tortfeasor, n176 or that there were some other special circumstances which required a lender to disclose to the borrower information it knew about the seller and failed to reveal. n177 Some of the cases find liability against the lender based on either agency or conspiracy. n178 Finally, a theory of lender liability not often used in the credit context is aiding and abetting. This theory is separate and distinct from a civil conspiracy theory. n179 While civil conspiracy involves a tortious act in concert with another or pursuant to a common design, aiding and abetting involves knowledge that another's conduct constitutes a breach of duty and providing substantial assistance or encouragement to the other. n180 In other words, conspiracy involves an agreement, explicit or by conduct, to participate in a wrongful activity. Aiding and abetting, on the other hand, focuses on whether the lender gave "substantial assistance" to someone who engaged in wrongful conduct. Whether or not the lender agreed to join the wrongful conduct is irrelevant to liability under this theory. n181 A lender may also be liable for the fraud of its employees. n182

Advocates should be wary of a thorny problem that can arise when arguing agency theory or joint collusion to defraud on the part of two apparently separate entities. Arbitration clauses, which work to deprive consumers of important rights including the right to trial by jury, may exist in loan documents, broker agreements, home improvement contracts or credit insurance agreements. Even a non-signatory to a document containing an arbitration clause may successfully invoke arbitration where the borrower's claims against the defendants involve agency or are intimately founded upon and intertwined with the underlying contact obligations. n183

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionReal Estate Settlement ProceduresGeneral OverviewBanking LawFederal ActsGeneral OverviewBanking LawNational BanksInterest & UsuryGeneral OverviewBanking LawNational BanksInterest & UsuryUsury LitigationContracts LawDebtor & Creditor Relations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 67 Fed. Reg. 49,134 (July 29, 2002) .

(n2)Footnote 2. James M. Lacko & Janis K. Pappalardo, The Effect of Mortgage Broker Compensation Disclosures on Consumer and Competition: A Controlled Experiment, Federal Trade Commission (Feb. 2004), available at www.ftc.gov/os/2004/01/030123mortgagefullrpt.pdf.

(n3)Footnote 3. Letter from Acting Secretary Alphonso Jackson (Mar. 22, 2004), available at www.hud.gov/news/letter.pdf.

(n4)Footnote 4. 12 U.S.C. §§ 2601

(n5)Footnote 5. 12 U.S.C. § 2602(1)(A).

(n6)Footnote 6. Pub. L. No. 102-550, § 908 (Oct. 28, 1992). See also 59 Fed. Reg. 6,506, 6,511 (Feb. 10, 1994) .

(n7)Footnote 7. 12 U.S.C. § 2602(1)(B). In the latter category, "creditors" are defined by reference to the Truth in Lending definition. See 15 U.S.C. § 1602(f); see also § 1.03[1][b] supra.

(n8)Footnote 8. Reg. X, 24 C.F.R. § 3500.5(a)(4).

(n9)Footnote 9. Reg. X, 24 C.F.R. § 3500.5(a)(4).

(n10)Footnote 10. Reg. X § 500.5(a)(7).

(n11)Footnote 11. Reg. X § 500.5(a)(7).

(n12)Footnote 12. Chandler v. Norwest Bank Minn., N.A., 137 F.3d 1053 (8th Cir.) , cert. denied, 525 U.S. 922, 119 S. Ct. 278, 142 L. Ed. 2d 229 (1998) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Chandler v. Norwest Bank Minn., N.A., 137 F.3d at 1058 .

(n14)Footnote 14. 12 U.S.C. § 2603; Reg. X § 3500.7. If a mortgage broker, rather than a lender, gets the application, the broker must provide the good faith estimate. However, no estimate is required for home equity lines of credit, since Regulation Z already provides for extensive disclosures in such transactions. See 15 U.S.C. § 1637a; see Ch. 1 supra.

(n15)Footnote 14.1. 73 Fed. Reg. 68,204 (Nov. 17, 2008) . For further discussion of the new requirements, see National Consumer Law Center, Cost of Credit, § 12.2.1.3.3 (4th ed. 2009).

(n16)Footnote 14.2. 73 Fed. Reg. 68,239 (Nov. 17, 2008) , codified at 24 C.F.R. § 3500.2.

(n17)Footnote 14.3. The original disclosure regime required the lender to provide a standardized information booklet and the HUD-1, the latter to be given to the borrower not later than seven days after loan commitment. 40 Fed. Reg. 22,448 (May 22, 1975) . There was no GFE at that time. The rule effective until January, 2010 states that the Appendix contains a "suggested format" for the GFE. 24 C.F.R. § 3500.7(a). GFEs have varied significantly in appearance among lenders.

(n18)Footnote 14.4. Some states prohibit the charging of any fee at application. HUD's permission of a credit report fee should be read as "where not otherwise prohibited by law," given HUD's assertion that the rule "does not preempt State law." 73 Fed. Reg. 68,238.

(n19)Footnote 15. Reg. X, 24 C.F.R. pt. 3500, app. A. (See also HUD's website for frequently asked questions and answers about RESPA at http://www.hud.gov/offices/hsg/sfh/res/resconsu.cfm.

(n20)Footnote 16. See National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending Ch. 9 (6th ed. 2007 and supp.).

(n21)Footnote 17. 12 U.S.C. § 2602(3); Reg. X § 3500.2(a)(16). See, e.g., Briggs v. Countrywide Funding Corp., 931 F. Supp. 1545 (M.D. Ala. 1996) (yield-spread premium to broker at issue; court denied lender's motion to dismiss, holding RESPA requires disclosure of yield-spread premium, and it preempts Alabama state law to the extent it does not require its disclosure; a variety of state law claims pled, including fraudulent concealment, improper interference with brokerage contract and inducement to breach fiduciary duties, RICO), vacated on other grounds, 949 F. Supp. 812 (M.D. Ala. 1996) ; Weatherman v. Gary-Wheaton Bank of Fox Valley, N.A., 239 Ill. Dec. 12, 713 N.E.2d 543 (1999) (recording fees may be aggregated on one line of good faith estimate, in contrast to the HUD-1 used at settlement; dissent argues that a gross estimate of all recording fees is not adequate where the recording fees relate to different transactions, i.e., the recordation of the new mortgage versus the release of the old). But cf. Bloom v. Martin, 77 F.3d 318 (9th Cir. 1996) (RESPA's disclosure requirements do not apply to demand and reconveyance fees).

(n22)Footnote 18. 12 U.S.C. § 2604; Reg. X § 3500.6 (not required for refinancings).

(n23)Footnote 19. Reg. X § 3500.15.

(n24)Footnote 20. See Reg. X, 24 C.F.R. § 3500.

(n25)Footnote 21. At the time of its circulation by the OCC on May 31, 2000, the letter was available on the Internet. Now, however, it is only referenced on the website of the OCC. See www.occ.treas.gov/ftp/advisory/2000-5.doc. It is reprinted in full in National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation and Legal Challenges, App. C.3.5.

(n26)Footnote 22. HUD points to the Instructions contained in Appendix A to Regulation X. Appendix A states that the HUD-1 must "itemize all charges imposed upon the borrower and the seller by the lender and all sales commissions, whether to be paid at settlement or outside of settlement, and any other charges which either the Borrower or the Seller will pay for at settlement."

(n27)Footnote 23. 12 U.S.C. § 2607(c) (this section exempts payments by a title company to its agent from the kickback prohibitions but only if the payment was for services actually performed in the making of the loan; so, if the other charges paid to the closing agent include all the services the agent actually preformed, the commission could violate RESPA). For a discussion of payments that are legal and illegal under RESPA, see National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses. § 12.2.1 (3d ed. and supp.).

(n28)Footnote 24. See, e.g., Brophy v. Chase Manhattan Mortgage Co., 947 F. Supp. 879 (E.D. Pa. 1996) (although Truth in Lending claim was dismissed, borrower could pursue state law claims in state court on issue of whether disparities between good faith estimate and HUD-1 settlement statement violated Pennsylvania's UDAP statute); Weatherman v. Gary-Wheaton Bank, N.A., 286 Ill. App. 3d 48, 221 Ill. Dec. 685, 676 N.E.2d 206 (Ill. App. Ct. 1996) , vacated and remanded on procedural grounds, 173 Ill. 2d 548, 226 Ill. Dec. 140, 684 N.E.2d 1343 (1997) (RESPA requires an itemization of recording fees; gross estimate of recording fees in circumstances of this case is not adequate; good discussion of fact that since RESPA created a duty to disclose, failure to itemize in the good faith estimate may violate the state UDAP statute); National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 3.2.7 (6th ed. 2004 and supp.).

(n29)Footnote 25. 12 U.S.C. § 2605. HUD has also promulgated regulations under § 2605 and created form notices. Regulation X, 24 C.F.R. § 3500 and Appendices. Certain governmental agencies, e.g., the RTC and FDIC, or governmentally sponsored entities, e.g., Fannie Mae, Ginnie Mae, and others, are exempt from coverage in certain circumstances. § 2605(i)(2). Section 2605(a) was considerably shortened in 1996 by the Omnibus Consolidated Appropriations Act, 1997. Pub. L. No. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009 (Sept. 30, 1996).

(n30)Footnote 26. 12 U.S.C. § 2605(d); 24 C.F.R. § 3500.21(d)(5).

(n31)Footnote 27. 12 U.S.C. § 2605(f).

(n32)Footnote 28. 12 U.S.C. § 2605(f)(1); Reg. X § 3500.21(f)(1). This section of RESPA is discussed in more detail in National Consumer Law Center, Foreclosures, § 5.2 (2005).

(n33)Footnote 29. 12 U.S.C. § 2609. See also 58 Fed. Reg. 5,520 (Jan. 21, 1993) . In addition, under the Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act of 1994, prepaid payments, which a lender sometimes withholds from loan proceeds and keeps in an escrow account for future payments on the loan, are limited to two.

(n34)Footnote 30. 12 U.S.C. § 2607; Reg. X, 24 C.F.R. § 3500.14. HUD has issued a proposed rule that clarifies when under RESPA a lender must disclose fees paid to brokers. 62 Fed. Reg. 53,912 (Oct. 16, 1997) .

(n35)Footnote 31. 12 U.S.C. § 2607; Reg. X, 24 C.F.R. § 3500.14.

(n36)Footnote 32. "Thing of value" is broadly defined. See Aiea Lani Corp. v. Hawaii Escrow & Title, Inc., 64 Haw. 638, 647 P.2d 257 (1982) (discount to developer on construction loan title insurance for referring individual subdivision closings to defendant constituted a "thing of value" within meaning of RESPA).

(n37)Footnote 33. Reg. X, § 3500.14(b). In an odd context, a court held that it is an illegal kickback for a lender to charge a closing agent a higher fee for the use of its offices at settlement for loans it closed for that lender than for loans it closes for other lenders. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Dearborn Title Corp., 939 F. Supp. 611 (N.D. Ill. 1996) , aff'd in part, 118 F.3d 1157 (7th Cir. 1997) , upon remand, 22 F. Supp. 2d 820 (N.D. Ill. 1998) . This case may be limited to its facts since there was no showing that the consumer paid a higher settlement cost as a result. The issue arose when the title insurance company sued the closing agent for fraudulently mishandling money held in escrow. The kickback issue arose as a defense (interesting defense) to the title insurance company's attempts to attach monies that the closing agent had paid to the lender.

(n38)Footnote 34. Reg. X, § 3500.14(b).

(n39)Footnote 35. Reg. X, § 3500.14(c). Herein lies a potential loophole that leaves room for a party to assert the performance of some bogus service to justify payment or receipt of a fee.

(n40)Footnote 36. Lane v. Residential Funding Corp., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10717 (N.D. Cal. June 6, 2000) .

(n41)Footnote 37. Lane v. Residential Funding Corp., 323 F.3d 739 (9th Cir. 2003) .

(n42)Footnote 38. Kahrer v. Ameriquest Mortgage Co., 418 F. Supp. 2d 748 (W.D. Pa. 2006) .

(n43)Footnote 39. 12 U.S.C. § 2607(c); Reg. X, § 3500.14(c) and (g).

(n44)Footnote 40. Reg. X, § 3500.14(b). "Referral" is defined at § 3500.14(f).

(n45)Footnote 41. 24 C.F.R. § 3500.14(g)(2).

(n46)Footnote 42. See United States v. Grissom, 814 F.2d 577 (10th Cir. 1987) (president of savings and loan being prosecuted for embezzlement tried unsuccessfully to invoke a defense under RESPA that his appropriation of part of an origination fee paid by a borrower was really compensation for his actual service to the borrower in arranging the loan); see also United States v. Gannon, 684 F.2d 433 , cert. denied, 454 U.S. 940, 102 S. Ct. 475, 70 L. Ed. 2d 248 (1981) (counterman for county recorder received a salary for processing land registration and transfer documents, a service for which a statutory fee was imposed; no other services were provided in official or unofficial capacity justifying amounts accepted which exceeded statutory fee).

(n47)Footnote 43. Cf. Texas St. Bar Prof. Ethics Comm., Opinion 490 (10/20/93), 61 BNA Banking Report 903 (12/6/93) (state ethics committee held that bank's plan to charge loan applicants a separate fee for its salaried in-house counsel's preparation of loan documents violated professional ethics rules against lawyer's fee-splitting where bank retained the fee; however, a blanket document preparation fee covering all bank personnel and overhead would not).

(n48)Footnote 44. See Title Insurance Practices in Florida, RESPA Statement of Policy 1996-4, 61 Fed. Reg. 49,398 (Sept. 19, 1996) (HUD issued this policy statement indicating that the payments in this context must be for core title services).

(n49)Footnote 45. 24 U.S.C. § 2607(c)(1)(3).

(n50)Footnote 46. 24 U.S.C. § 2607(c)(4); Reg. X, 24 C.F.R. § 3500.14(b).

(n51)Footnote 47. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,079 (Mar. 1, 1999) .

(n52)Footnote 48. See News Release of September 17, 1997, available at www.hud.gov/fha/res/respa_hm.hmtl, accompanying HUD's announcement of changes to Regulation X regarding broker fees proposed in 62 Fed. Reg. 53,912 (Oct. 16, 1997) . This regulation was never finalized. Instead, HUD released a policy statement on Mar. 1, 1999.

(n53)Footnote 49. American Housing Survey for Selected Metropolitan Areas, 1991-1994.

(n54)Footnote 50. Culpepper v. Inland Mortgage Corp., 132 F.3d 692 , reh'g, en banc, denied, 144 F.3d 717 (11th Cir. Ala. 1998) ; Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Dearborn Title Corp., 118 F.3d 1157,1162 (7th Cir. 1997) ; DeLeon v. Beneficial Constr. Co, 998 F. Supp. 859 (N.D. Ill. 1998) ; Barbosa v. Target Mortgage Co., 968 F. Supp. 1548 (S.D. Fla. 1997) ; Dubose v. First Sec. Sav. Bank, 974 F. Supp. 1426 (N.D. Ala. 1997) , superseded by statute as stated in Golan v. Ohio Sav. Bank, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16452 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 14, 1999) ; Hastings v. Fidelity Mortgage Decisions Corp., 984 F. Supp. 600 (N.D. Ill. 1997) ; Mentecki v. Saxon Mortgage Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1374 (E.D. Va. Jan. 31, 1997) ; Briggs v. Countrywide Funding Corp., 931 F. Supp. 1545 (M.D. Ala. 1996) , vacated on other grounds, 949 F. Supp. 812 (M.D. Ala. 1996) .

(n55)Footnote 51. See, e.g., Mulligan v. Choice Mortgage Corp. USA, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13248 (D.N.H. Aug. 11, 1998) (broker collected $4,570 from the homeowners and another $3,720 from the lender); Mentecki v. Saxon Mortgage Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1374 (E.D. Va. Jan. 31, 1997) (borrowers paid broker for several specified services in addition to almost $13,000 for origination fee, while lender kicked in over $2,000).

(n56)Footnote 52. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,079 (Mar. 1, 1999) . The Policy Statement is effective immediately.

(n57)Footnote 53. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,084.

(n58)Footnote 54. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,085. HUD includes in this list the provision of disclosures as a compensable service. However, RESPA expressly prohibits a lender from charging a fee "for or on account of the preparation and submission" of TILA and RESPA good faith estimates. 12 U.S.C. § 2610. Since the lender/broker cannot charge a fee, preparing and providing these disclosures cannot be a service that is "compensable" for purposes of justifying a yield spread premium.

(n59)Footnote 55. If the services provided were only "counseling-type" activities, the agency will look to see that meaningful counseling--not steering--occurred. The report includes criteria HUD would use to make that determination. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,085. Significantly, HUD opines that the loan itself is not a good thereby disposing of the industry's argument that the loan itself justifies the yield spread premium. Id.

(n60)Footnote 56. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,086.

(n61)Footnote 57. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,086.

(n62)Footnote 58. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,085.

(n63)Footnote 59. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,086-87.

(n64)Footnote 60. See E. Robert Levy, HUD Policy Statement Helps Resolve Lender Paid Mortgage Broker Fee Issues, New England Mortgage Report, Mar. 1999, at 8.

(n65)Footnote 61. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,086-87.

(n66)Footnote 62. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,085.

(n67)Footnote 63. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,084. ("[H]igher interest rates alone cannot justify higher total fees to mortgage brokers.")

(n68)Footnote 64. 64 Fed. Reg. 10,086.4

(n69)Footnote 65. Golon v. Ohio Sav. Bank, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16452 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 15, 1999) (class certification denied); Brancheau v. Residential Mortg. & Mercantile Bank of St. Louis, 187 F.R.D. 591 (D. Minn. 1999) (decertification of the class, defendant's motion for summary judgment granted); McCrillis v. WMC Mortg. Corp., 133 F. Supp. 2d 470 (S.D. Miss. 2000) (summary judgment for lender granted); In re Old Kent Mortg. Co. Yield Spread Premium Litig., 191 F.R.D. 155 (D. Minn. 2000) (motion to strike class certification granted).

(n70)Footnote 66. Marbury v. Colonial Mortg. Co., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1632 (M.D. Ala. Jan. 12, 2001) (defendant's contention that yield spread premium was paid for release of servicing rights does not support its claim that the premium represents goods, services, or facilities; servicing rights do not equal "goods" because they do not arise until after loan is closed; class certification stayed pending appeals in other cases before 11th Circuit). See also Culpepper v. Inland Mortgage Corp., 189 F.R.D. 668 (N.D. Ala. 1999) , aff'd sub nom. Culpepper v. Irwin Mortg. Corp., 253 F.3d 1324 (11th Cir. 2001) , cert. denied, 534 U.S. 1118, 122 S. Ct. 930, 151 L. Ed. 2d 893 (2002) ; Dujanovic v. MortgageAmerica, Inc., 185 F.R.D. 660 (N.D. Ala. 1999) (granting class certification).

(n71)Footnote 67. The full text of the letter is contained in National Consumer Law Center, Cost of Credit, App. C.3.4.1.

(n72)Footnote 68. Culpepper v. Irwin Mortgage Corp., 253 F.3d 1324 (11th Cir. 2001) , cert. denied, 534 U.S. 1118, 122 S. Ct. 930, 151 L. Ed. 2d 893 (2002) . The first Culpepper decision, Culpepper I, is at Culpepper v. Inland Mortgage Corp., 189 F.R.D. 668 (N.D. Ala. 1999) .

(n73)Footnote 69. See letter from the Consumer Mortgage Coalition to HUD Secretary Martinez of Sept. 25, 2001, available at www.houselaw.net/alerts/092801a.pdf.

(n74)Footnote 70. 66 Fed. Reg. 53,052 (Oct. 10, 2001) . Consumer representatives responded with grave concerns to the new policy. See, e.g., Margot Saunders, No Shades of Gray--HUD's New Statement of Policy Hurts Homeowners and Will Cost Millions, available at www.consumerlaw.org, click on predatory lending.

(n75)Footnote 71. 66 Fed. Reg. 53,054-55.

(n76)Footnote 72. 66 Fed. Reg. 53,055.

(n77)Footnote 73. Glover v. Standard Fed. Bank, 283 F.3d 953 (8th Cir.) , cert. denied, 537 U.S. 943, 537 U.S. 943, 154 L. Ed. 2d 251 (2002) ; Geraci v. Homestreet Bank, 203 F. Supp. 2d 1211 (W.D. Wash. 2002) (lender's motion for judgment on the pleadings granted where the homeowner failed to allege that the yield spread premium did not bear a reasonable relationship to the value of the goods or services provided; the decision was issued after Glover was decided but did not rely upon Glover); LaCasse v. Washington Mut., Inc., 198 F. Supp. 2d 1255 (W.D. Wash. 2002) (class certification denied); Empalmado v. First Franklin Fin. Corp., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1929 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 5, 2002) (reconsideration of class certification denial denied); Michalowski v. Flagstar Bank, FSB, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1245 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 24, 2002) (lender motion to dismiss case denied because the legality of a yield spread premium is highly dependent on the facts of each case; court cites to the 2002 policy statement); Vargas v. Universal Mortg. Corp., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19635 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 29, 2001) (class certification denied under the 2001 policy statement); Bjustrom v. Trust One Mortg., 178 F. Supp. 2d 1183 (W.D. Wash. 2001) (summary judgment for lender granted), aff'd in part, remanded in part, 322 F.3d 1201 (9th Cir. 2003) .

(n78)Footnote 74. 283 F.3d 953 (8th Cir.) , cert. denied, 537 U.S. 943 ; 123 S. Ct. 344, 154 L. Ed. 2d 251 (2002) .

(n79)Footnote 75. In Culpepper II, on the other hand, the Eleventh Circuit found ambiguity in the 1999 policy statement and interpreted it in a way it believed was consistent with § 2607.

(n80)Footnote 76. See Christensen v. Harris County, 529 U.S. 576, 587, 120 S. Ct. 1655, 1662-63, 146 L. Ed. 2d 621, 631-32 (2000) .

(n81)Footnote 77. See National Consumer Law Center, Cost of Credit, § 12.2.1.3, (4th ed. 2009) (discussion of the old and new disclosure requirements under RESPA and Regulation X).

(n82)Footnote 78. Much of the relevant information consists of: the rate sheet used for the loan in question; the identity of other lenders, if any, that the broker approached to place the loan in question; the rate sheets of those other lenders for the time period in question; the discussions and written agreements, if any, between the broker and the homeowners (and between the lender and the homeowners) about payment for services rendered by the broker and whether the homeowner wished to pay the higher interest rate; if the broker is the table-funded lender, the purchase agreement between it and the funding lender; any written or oral agreements/discussions between the broker and the lender; what specific services the broker performed for the borrower and the amount of time it took to perform each; the underwriting criteria of the lender and that of any other lender with whom the broker tried to place the loan; whether the loan would have been made by the lender at par rate; number of loans made by the lender at par, below par, and above par; and the amount of fees paid to the broker by the borrower in each such loan (whether designated as "broker fees" or not on the HUD-1 settlement statement); the method by which the yield spread premium was calculated.

(n83)Footnote 79. See, e.g., Hastings v. Fidelity Mortgage Decisions Corp., 984 F. Supp. 600 (N.D. Ill. 1997) .

(n84)Footnote 80. See, e.g., Taylor v. Flagstar Bank, FSB, 181 F.R.D. 509 (M.D. Ala. 1998) ; Hinton v. First Am. Mortgage, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2712 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 3, 1998) ; Conomos v. Chase Manhattan Mortgage Corp., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3135 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 17, 1998) ; Marinaccio v. Barnett Banks, Inc., 176 F.R.D. 104 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) ; Moniz v. Crossland Mortgage Corp., 175 F.R.D. 1 (D. Mass. 1997) . All of these cases were superseded by statute as stated in Golon v. Ohio Sav. Bank, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16452 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 14, 1999) .

(n85)Footnote 81. Brancheau v. Residential Mortgage, 182 F.R.D. 579 (D. Minn. 1998) , recons. granted, vacated, in part, summ. judgment granted, claim dismissed, 187 F.R.D. 591 (D. Minn. 1999) ; Mulligan v. Choice Mortgage Corp. USA, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13248 (D.N.H. Aug. 11, 1998) ; see also Culpepper, 132 F.3d at 697 (wherein court remanded case instructing the lower court to review class certification in light of the opinion on the merits).

(n86)Footnote 82. The earlier court decisions got these steps reversed. By doing so, the courts immediately got hung up on the issue of the reasonableness of the fee, an intensely factual standard. But see Taylor v. Flagstar Bank, FSB, 181 F.R.D. 509 (M.D. Ala. 1998) (court properly recognized that the payment must be compensation for some good, facility, or service provided by the broker; it then suggested, however, that the lender could defend on the ground that the premiums were additional payment for services it rendered for which the borrower also paid a fee, thus forcing the court to make individualized determinations for each class member), superseded by statute as stated in Golon v. Ohio Sav. Bank, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16452 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 14, 1999) .

(n87)Footnote 83. Brancheau v. Residential Mortgage, 182 F.R.D. 579 (D. Minn. 1998) , recons. granted, vacated, in part, summ. judgment granted, claim dismissed, 187 F.R.D. 591 (D. Minn. 1999) .

(n88)Footnote 84. Mulligan v. Choice Mortgage Corp. USA, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13248 (D.N.H. Aug. 11, 1998) .

(n89)Footnote 85. Be aware that the statute of limitations is one year from the date the violation occurred. 12 U.S.C. § 2614. RESPA violations, however, may be raised at any time by way of recoupment.

(n90)Footnote 86. 12 U.S.C. § 2607(d)(2).

(n91)Footnote 87. 12 U.S.C. § 2608(a).

(n92)Footnote 88. 24 C.F.R. § 3500.2(b).

(n93)Footnote 89. 24 C.F.R. § 3500.2(b); 24 C.F.R. § 3500.16.

(n94)Footnote 90. 12 U.S.C. § 2608(b).

(n95)Footnote 91. 12 U.S.C. § 2614.

(n96)Footnote 92. 24 C.F.R. § 3500.19(c).

(n97)Footnote 93. See 12 U.S.C. § 2607(d)(5); see also Weisberg v. Toll Bros., Inc., 617 F. Supp. 539 (E.D. Pa. 1985) (court awarded attorneys fees upon settlement of a § 2608 class action but did not discuss any authority for the award since, by agreement, the motion for fees was unopposed).

(n98)Footnote 94. Rendler v. Gambone Bros. Dev. Co., 182 F.R.D. 152 (E.D. Pa. 1998) .

(n99)Footnote 95. Loan origination and processing is a "settlement service" as a result of both the 1992 Reg. X changes, 57 Fed. Reg. 49,601, and the 1992 statutory amendment. Pub. L. No. 102-550, § 908(a).

(n100)Footnote 96. Reg. X, § 3500.14(g)(3). But see Durr v. Intercounty Title Co., 826 F. Supp. 259 (N.D. Ill. 1993) , aff'd, 14 F.3d 1183 (7th Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 811, 115 S. Ct. 63, 130 L. Ed. 2d 20 (1994) (court viewed class action for alleged RESPA violations in overcharging for recording of deeds and mortgages as the plaintiff attorney's attempt to "turn this petty dispute into a big-ticket lawsuit"); Duggan v. Independent Mortgage Corp., 670 F. Supp. 652 (E.D. Va. 1987) (broker's failure to lock in agreed upon interest rate even after receiving and accepting fee for that purpose was not an offense within the meaning of RESPA's unearned fee provision).

(n101)Footnote 97. See Mercado v. Calumet Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 763 F.2d 269 (7th Cir. 1985) ; Willis v. Quality Mortgage USA, Inc., 5 F. Supp. 2d 1306 (M.D. Ala. 1998) .

(n102)Footnote 98. National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending, Chapter 3 (6th ed. 2007 and supp.).

(n103)Footnote 99. National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 3.2.7 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n104)Footnote 100. National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Arbitration Agreements (5th ed. 2007).

(n105)Footnote 101. Blount v. National Lending Corp., 108 F. Supp. 2d 666 (S.D. Miss. 2000) .

(n106)Footnote 102. 12 U.S.C. § 2602(1)(B).

(n107)Footnote 103. Reg. X, § 3500.14(g)(3). See 57 Fed. Reg. 49,600, 49,603 (Nov. 2, 1992), for the background on this so-called CLO rule.

(n108)Footnote 104. Reg. X, § 3500.2; 59 Fed. Reg. 37,360, 37,374 (July 21, 1994) .

(n109)Footnote 105. 12 U.S.C. § 2616.

(n110)Footnote 106. See 24 C.F.R. § 3500.13.

(n111)Footnote 107. Washington Mut. Bank v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. App. 4th 773, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 560 (2d Dist. 1999) (HOLA preempts certain claims based on state law).

(n112)Footnote 108. Pub. L. No. 106-229, 114 Stat. 464 (June 30, 2000), codified at 15 U.S.C. §§ 7001 et seq.

(n113)Footnote 109. 15 U.S.C. § 7001(c)(1)(B), (C)(1). See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, §§ 9.2.10, 12.1.10 (4th ed. 2009), for a more detailed discussion of these requirements.

(n114)Footnote 110. 15 U.S.C. § 7001(c)(1)(C)(ii). See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 12.1.10 (4th ed. 2009), for further discussion of this requirement.

(n115)Footnote 111. 15 U.S.C. § 7001(e).

(n116)Footnote 112. 15 U.S.C. § 7002 allows states to supersede E-Sign's effect on state law by passing the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act or a similar statute that is consistent with E-Sign. A state's enactment of superseding legislation would not, however, affect the application of E-Sign to federal statutes such as RESPA. See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 12.2.1.9 (3rd ed. 2005) for further discussion of this issue.

(n117)Footnote 113. See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 12.2.1 (4th ed. 2009).

(n118)Footnote 114. The Act contains other provisions which are less relevant to the most common second mortgage scams, but may occasionally be important. For example, there are requirements that lenders disclose whether the servicing of the loan may be transferred, a provision that includes damages for violations. 12 U.S.C. § 2605.

(n119)Footnote 115. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, §§ 2.2.1, 2.3.3 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.); Washington Mut. Bank v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. App. 4th 773, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 560 (2d Dist. 1999) , further proceedings, 24 Cal. 4th 906, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320, 15 P.3d 1071 (2001) (nationwide class certification reversed and remanded due to the trial court's failure to adjudicate the effect of a choice of law provision in the mortgage), further proceedings, 95 Cal. App. 4th 606, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 765 (2d Dist. 2002) (HOLA preempts certain claims based on state law).

(n120)Footnote 116. National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, §§ 3.2.7 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n121)Footnote 117. National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, §§ 4.2.14 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n122)Footnote 118. Reg. Z, 12 C.F.R. § 226.18(c)(2); National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending, § 4.7.3 (6th ed. 2007).

(n123)Footnote 119. Reg. X, § 3500.19(b)(4); 12 U.S.C. § 2607(d)(5).

(n124)Footnote 120. Reg. X, § 3500.19(d). For attorneys generally, it is a 3-year statute of limitations. Id.

(n125)Footnote 121. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Dearborn Title Corp., 118 F.3d 1157 (7th Cir. 1997) , upon remand, 22 F. Supp. 2d 820 (N.D. Ill. 1998) (applying the equitable tolling doctrine, court found that Lawyers Title failed to act with due diligence to discover its cause of action; statute of limitations, therefore, not tolled); Kerby v. Mortgage Funding Corp., 992 F. Supp. 787 (D. Md. 1998) . See also Salois v. Dime Sav. Bank, FSB, 128 F.3d 20 (1st Cir. 1997) (court assumes equitable tolling doctrine applies but finds that law documents contained all of the information necessary to determine bases of claims; inquiry notice satisfied); Pedraza v. United Guar. Corp., 114 F. Supp. 2d 1347 (S.D. Ga. 2000) (equitable tolling doctrine recognized but tolling can only occur for three years; plaintiff did not adequately plead facts to support equitable tolling claim; complaint dismissed without prejudice).

(n126)Footnote 122. For a discussion of HOEPA, see Ch. 2 supra. For a discussion of fair lending and civil rights statutes, see Ch. 5, "Credit Discrimination," supra.

(n127)Footnote 123. 15 U.S.C. § 1691, Regulation B, 12 C.F.R. § 202.2(l), Official Staff Commentary, 12 C.F.R. § 202.2(l).

(n128)Footnote 124. U.S.C. § 3605, 24 C.F.R. § 100.115. State fair lending laws are compiled in National Consumer Law Center, Credit Discrimination, Appx. F (4th ed. and supp.). See also National Consumer Law Center,

The Cost of Credit: Regulations, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 12.3 (4th ed. 2009).

(n129)Footnote 125. 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981 et seq.

(n130)Footnote 126. See, e.g., Steele v. Bronstein, Clearinghouse No. 53,510, Civil Action No. 98-1940 (RMU) (D.D.C. June 30, 2000) (memorandum opinion) (in this case, however, the homeowner could only show that she was targeted on the basis of the neighborhood where she lived which had a high concentration of African-Americans and because she was a female head-of-household; case remanded to D.C. superior court on UDAP and local human rights act claims); Matthews v. New Century Mortg. Corp., 185 F. Supp. 2d 874 (S.D. Ohio 2002) (reverse redlining claim under § 3605 of the FHA and the Ohio state law equivalent survive motion to dismiss; ECOA claims withstand motion to dismiss as well because consumer need only allege that she was discriminated against in the terms of her credit for a prohibited reason). See also National Consumer Law Center, Credit Discrimination, Chapters 7 and 8 (4th ed. and supp.).

(n131)Footnote 127. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(B). See also Beard v. Worldwide Mortg. Corp., 354 F. Supp. 2d 789, 800-08 (W.D. Tenn. 2005) (denying motion to dismiss § 1962(c) claim against a title company and an attorney based on an alleged predatory lending scheme).

(n132)Footnote 128. See, e.g., Perino v. Mercury Fin. Co., 912 F. Supp. 313 (N.D. Ill. 1995) . Compare Johnson v. Mercury Fin., Clearinghouse No. 50, 407, Case No. CV 93-952 (Ala. Cir. Ct. jury verdict Aug. 1994). See also Balderos v. City Chevrolet, Buick, Geo, Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4398 (N.D. Ill. March 31, 1998) , aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, 214 F.3d 849 (7th Cir. 2000) (auto dealer's Truth in Lending Act violations accomplished through wire and mail communications did not, on their own, raise wire and mail fraud allegations sufficient to avoid dismissal of RICO claim).

(n133)Footnote 129. See, e.g., Kenty v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 67 F.3d 1257 (6th Cir. 1995) . See also Hobson v. Lincoln Ins. Agency, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13314 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 7, 2000) (RICO claims were dismissed but with leave to amend in these cases where insurance premium finance company and the insurance company were connected and failed to disclose this fact to the consumer), further proceedings, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 476 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 18, 2001) (RICO claim dismissed again after opportunity to amend); Dixon v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7934 (E.D. La. May 31, 2000) , further proceedings, 137 F. Supp. 2d 702 (E.D. La. 2000) , aff'd without op., 252 F.3d 1156 (5th Cir.) , cert. denied, 534 U.S. 952, 122 S. Ct. 349, 151 L. Ed. 2d 263 (2001) (RICO claims ultimately dismissed because consumers did not rely upon the misrepresentations; allegations that auto dealer failed to disclose commissions on credit life insurance sales could present predicate act of mail fraud sufficient to avoid dismissal of RICO claim).

(n134)Footnote 130. Matthews v. New Century Mortgage Corp., 185 F. Supp. 2d 874 (S.D. Ohio 2002) .

(n135)Footnote 131. Ohio Rev. Code §§ 1345.01 to 1345.03 (2006).

(n136)Footnote 132. Minn. Stat. §§ 58.02, 58.13, 58.137, 58.15, 58.16 (2007).

(n137)Footnote 133. R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-25.2-1 (2006).

(n138)Footnote 134. Tenn. Code Ann. § 45-20-101 (2006).

(n139)Footnote 135. For brief discussions of common law origins of unconscionability, see National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Warranty Law, § 11.2 (3d ed. and supp.), and Spanogle, Analyzing Unconscionability Problems, 117 U. Pa. Rev. 931, 936-41 (1968-69).

(n140)Footnote 136. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 1670.5; Iowa Code § 537.5108; Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-14-117(c). California has enacted several statutes that must be reviewed in determining whether a contract provision is unconscionable, depending on the context. For example, Cal. Civ. Code § 1668 provides that it is against public policy for a contract to exempt anyone from responsibility for her own fraud or willful injury to the person or property of another or violation of law, whether wilful or negligent. Further, the unconscionability of an arbitration clause may be measured against Cal. Civ. Code § 1281.2 (California's arbitration statute). See also Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc., 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 (1997) .

(n141)Footnote 137. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 4.4 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n142)Footnote 138. See, e.g., UCCC § 5.108 cmts. P 1, 3; Perdue v. Crocker Nat'l Bank, 702 P.2d 503, 511 n.10 , appeal dismissed, 475 U.S. 1001, 106 S. Ct. 1170, 89 L. Ed. 2d 290 (1986) . For a more complete discussion of unconscionability, see National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Warranty Law § 11.2 (3d ed. 2006 and supp.).

(n143)Footnote 139. See generally A&M Produce v. FMC Corp., 135 Cal. App. 3d 473 (1982) ; National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Warranty Law § 11.2 (2d ed. 2001 and Supp.); Steven W. Bender, Rate Regulation at the Crossroads of Usury and Unconscionability: The Case for Regulating Abusive and Commercial Interest Rates Under the Unconscionability Standard, 31 Houston L. Rev. 721 (1994); Leff, Unconscionability and the Code--The Emperor's New Clause, 115 U. Pa. L. Rev. 485 (1967); Note, Reviving the Law of Substantive Unconscionability, Applying the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing to Excessively Priced Consumer Credit Contracts, 33 UCLA L. Rev. 940, 944 (1986).

(n144)Footnote 140. Note, Reviving the Law of Substantive Unconscionability, Applying the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing to Excessively Priced Consumer Credit Contracts, 33 UCLA L. Rev. 940, 944 (1986); Leff, Unconscionability and the Code--The Emperor's New Clause, 115 U. Pa. L. Rev. 485, 539 (1967) ("bargaining naughtiness").

(n145)Footnote 141. Note, Reviving the Law of Substantive Unconscionability, Applying the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing to Excessively Priced Consumer Credit Contracts, 33 UCLA L. Rev. 940, 946 (1986); Leff, Unconscionability and the Code--The Emperor's New Clause, 115 U. Pa. L. Rev. 485, 509 (1967).

(n146)Footnote 142. Note, Reviving the Law of Substantive Unconscionability, Applying the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing to Excessively Priced Consumer Credit Contracts, 33 UCLA L. Rev. 940, 944 (1986). For an explanation of "oppression" and "surprise," see A&M Produce v. FMC Corp., 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 486 (1982) (" 'Oppression' arises from an inequality of bargaining power which results in no real negotiation and absence of meaningful choice ... . 'Surprise' involves the extent to which the supposedly agreed-upon terms of the bargain are hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed terms."). Sosa v. Paulos, 924 P.2d 357 (Utah 1996) .

(n147)Footnote 143. Speidel, Unconscionability, Assent and Consumer Protection, 31 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359 (1970). See also Williams v. E.F. Hutton Mortgage Corp., 555 So. 2d 158 (Ala. 1989) (gross inequality of bargaining power). Cf. Marshall v. Mercury Fin. Co., 550 So. 2d 1026 (Ala. Civ. App. 1989) (unconscionability is an extraordinary remedy reserved for parties who are uneducated and unsophisticated; plaintiff who had college education and understood transaction did not establish claim of unconscionability).

(n148)Footnote 144. A&M Produce v. FMC Corp., 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 486 (1982) . Cf. OMP v. Security Pac. Bus. Fin., Inc., 716 F. Supp. 239 (N.D. Miss. 1989) (transaction involved arms-length negotiations between commercial parties and was "not a case involving a contract of adhesion forced upon an unwilling and powerless consumer"). California has liberalized this standard somewhat. Even if the party raising unconscionability is well-educated and highly paid, procedural responsibility will be found where there was no realistic opportunity to modify the terms of the contract, which was a generic contract and presented after employment began. Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc., 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138 (1997) ; see also Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc., 28 Cal. 3d 807, 171 Cal. Rptr. 604, 623

P.2d 165 (Cal. 1981) .

(n149)Footnote 145. See Kripke, Gesture and Reality in Consumer Credit Reform, 44 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 1, 7 (1969) ("The ghetto shopper is not a comparison shopper and does not have access to the lowest prices.").

(n150)Footnote 146. A&M Produce v. FMC Corp., 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 486 (1982) . See also Williams v. E.F. Hutton Mortgage Corp., 555 So. 2d 158 (Ala. 1989) . See also Knapp v. American Gen. Fin. Inc., 111 F. Supp. 2d 758 (S.D. W. Va. 2000) (though the contract terms may have been clear, the lender misrepresented the contents of the documents to consumers who could not read).

(n151)Footnote 147. A&M Produce v. FMC Corp., 135 Cal. App. 3d 473 (1982) . See also In re Allen, 174 B.R. 293 (Bankr. D. Or. 1994) (RTO transaction not unconscionable; noting Oregon courts typically generally use a balancing approach, using both procedural and substantive unconscionability); National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Warranty Law, § 11.2.4.3 (3d ed. and supp.). But see Maxwell v. Fidelity Fin. Servs., Inc., 184 Ariz. 82, 907 P.2d 51 (1995) (Arizona court adopts the rule that a claim of unconscionability can be established with a showing of substantive unconscionability alone, especially in cases involving either price-cost disparity or limitation of remedies. "If only procedural irregularities are present, it may be more appropriate to analyze the claims under the doctrines of fraud, misrepresentation, duress, and mistake, although such irregularities can make a case of procedural unconscionability." Id. at 59 .). See also Taylor v. Bob O'Connor Ford, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11486 (N.D. Ill. June 29, 2000) (allegations of lack of education and sophistication alone is not enough to state an unconscionability claim in auto packing case).

(n152)Footnote 148. Williams v. First Gov't Mortg. & Invs. Corp., 974 F. Supp. 17 (D.D.C. 1997) ; A&M Produce v. FMC Corp., 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 487 (1982) ; Sosa v. Paulos, 924 P.2d 357 (Utah 1996) (clause in arbitration paragraph in a medical malpractice contract was found to be substantively unconscionable where it required the patient to pay all costs incurred by the physician to defend the arbitration, and all costs of the arbitration itself if the arbitrator awarded the patient less than one half of the amount she sought). But cf. Shadoan v. World Savings & Loan Ass'n, 268 Cal. Rptr. 207 (Ct. App. 1990) (using unconscionability standard to evaluate a UDAP claim, court held that contract combining a unilateral call provision and a prepayment penalty did not impermissibly reallocate risk; court notes that "significantly" the prepayment penalty would not attach if the lender exercised its call option).

(n153)Footnote 149. The fact intensive nature of the unconscionability inquiry should preclude summary judgment unless there are no factual disputes. See Herrod v. First Republic Mortgage Corp., Inc., 625 S.E.2d 373 (W. Va. 2005) . See also Cazares v. Pacific Shore Funding, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1081 (C.D. Cal. Jan. 3, 2006) ("determination of whether contract is unconscionable requires consideration of facts beyond scope of a motion to dismiss").

(n154)Footnote 150. Cowin Equip. Co. v. General Motors Corp., 734 F.2d 1581 (11th Cir. 1984) ; Williams v. E.F. Hutton Mortgage Corp., 555 So. 2d 158 (Ala. 1989) ; Best v. United States Nat'l Bank of Oregon, 78 Or. App. 1, 714 P.2d 1049, 1 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 6 (1986) , on other grounds, 303 Or. 557, 739 P.2d 554, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 8 (1987) . See generally Steven W. Bender, Rate Regulation at the Crossroads of Usury and Unconscionability: The Case for Regulating Abusive and Commercial Interest Rates Under the Unconscionability Standard, 31 Houston L. Rev. 721 (1994).

(n155)Footnote 151. See, e.g., D.C. Code § 28-3904(r); Iowa Code § 537.5108 (court may refuse to enforce unconscionable agreement, in whole or in part; consumer may be awarded actual damages and attorneys' fees).

(n156)Footnote 152. Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 205 (1979). See also In re Peterson, 93 B.R. 323 (Bankr. D. Vt. 1988) . But see Johnstone v. Bank of Am., N.A., 173 F. Supp. 2d 809 (N.D. Ill. 2001) (does not recognize an independent cause of action for the breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing, relying on Voyles); Voyles v. Sandia Mortg. Co., 196 Ill. 2d 288, 256 Ill. Dec. 289, 751 N.E.2d 1126 (2001) , reh'g denied, (June 29, 2001) (Illinois does not recognize an independent cause of action for the breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing); Citibank

(S.D.), N.A. v. Gifesman, 63 Conn. App. 188, 773 A.2d 993 (2001) (the implied duty cannot be applied to achieve a result contrary to the clear expressed contract terms, unless those terms are contrary to public policy). Compare Perdue v. Crocker Nat'l Bank, 38 Cal. 3d 913, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 (1985) , appeal dismissed, 475 U.S. 1001, 106 S. Ct. 1170, 89 L. Ed. 2d 290 (1986) (both unconscionability and duty of good faith implicated in the bank's imposing NSF charges), with Best v. United States Nat'l Bank, 303 Or. 557, 739 P.2d 554 (1987) (unconscionability doctrine not applicable to bank's NSF charges, because the specific fee was not part of agreement; duty of good faith and fair dealing was applicable).

NOTE: In sorting through the conflicting cases on duty of good faith in lender liability cases, it is important to note the distinction between those sounding in tort and those sounding in contract. Tort liability for breach of the covenant of good faith probably requires a showing of some special relationship beyond that of lender and customer, such as special circumstances giving rise to a fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary relationship or other indicia of a heightened duty. See § 6.09[4] infra; cf. Wallis v. Superior Court, 160 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 207 Cal. Rep. 123 (1984) . The contractual obligation, in contrast, is firmly established and applies to every contract, see, e.g., Price v. Wells Fargo Bank, 213 Cal. App. 3d 465, 261 Cal. Rptr. 735, 741 (1989) .

(n157)Footnote 153. UCC § 1-203.

(n158)Footnote 154. Note that this conduct may violate unconscionability standards, as well.

(n159)Footnote 155. See, e.g., Flagship Nat'l Bank v. Gray Distrib. Sys., Inc., 485 So. 2d 1336, 1 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 601, 606 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1986) .

(n160)Footnote 156. See, e.g., UCCC §§ 2-405, 3-402 (1968); § 3-308 (1974); Ala. Code § 5-19-7; Ky. Rev. Stat. § 367.390; and some RISA statutes, e.g., 6 Del. Code Ann. § 4326. (Note that, even if such statutes apply to home equity lending, in some circumstances they may be preempted by federal law. See generally § 6.02 supra.)

(n161)Footnote 157. See, e.g., Duffield v. First Interstate Bank, 13 F.3d 1403 (10th Cir. 1993) , cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1205, 114 S. Ct. 2674, 129 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1994) . See also Littlejohn v. Parrish, 839 N.E.2d 49 (Ohio Ct. App. 2005) (reversing summary judgment in favor of mortgagee who refused to permit prepayment of loan and finding good faith and fair dealing requires not only honesty but also reasonableness in the enforcement of the contract) with Cable & Assoc. Ins. Agency v. Commercial Nat'l Bank, 875 A.2d 361 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2005) (lender not required to surrender rights granted by statute or conferred by contract; no breach where lender refused to release security interest to allow borrower to secure additional credit); Farm Credit Servs. of America v. Dougan, 704 N.W.2d 24 (S.D. 2005) (use of remedies expressly provided for in contract--foreclosure--does not give rise to breach of duty).

(n162)Footnote 158. Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n of Am. v. Butler, 626 F. Supp. 1229 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) ; Liebergesell v. Evans, 93 Wash. 2d 881, 613 P.2d 1170 (1980) .

(n163)Footnote 159. Chedick v. Nash, 151 F.2d 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (court recognized the tort of promissory fraud, i.e., misrepresentation of present intent to perform an act in the future; the act here was the duty to act in good faith).

(n164)Footnote 160. Voyles v. Sandia Mortg. Corp., 724 N.E.2d 1276 (Ill. App. 2000) (recognized this tort in Illinois in "egregious" cases).

(n165)Footnote 161. See National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 12.8 (4th ed. 2009).

(n166)Footnote 162. See, e.g., Chandler v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., 68 Ohio App. 2d 30, 19 Ohio Op. 3d 90, 426 N.E.2d 521 (Ohio Ct. App. 1980) .

(n167)Footnote 163. For a good example listing the types of proof obtained by a deceased consumer's spouse, see Vining v. Enterprise Fin. Group, Inc., 148 F.3d 1206 (10th Cir. 1998) .

(n168)Footnote 164. Washington Mut. Bank v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. App. 4th 299, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 564 (4th Dist. 1999) (nationwide class action certified; no ruling on merits of claim).

(n169)Footnote 165. In re Nosek, 2006 Bankr. LEXIS 1279 (Bankr. D. Mass. June 30, 2006) . The court awarded the plaintiff $250,000 in emotional distress damages for the breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. On appeal, the district court held (incorrectly) that the plaintiff's common law claims were preempted by the Bankruptcy Code. Ameriquest v. Nosek, 354 B.R. 331 (D. Mass. 2006) . On remand, the bankruptcy court held the defendant liable for the same conduct under § 105 of the Bankruptcy Code and awarded $250,000 in emotional distress damages and $500,000 in punitive damages. In re Nosek, 363 B.R. 643, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 769 (Bankr. D. Mass. Mar. 6, 2007) .

(n170)Footnote 166. Stewart v. Phoenix Nat'l Bank, 49 Ariz. 34, 64 P.2d 101, 106 (1937) ; see also Capital Bank v. MVB, Inc., 644 So. 2d 515 (Dist. Ct. App. 1994) , rev. denied, mot. denied, mandamus denied, 659 So. 2d 1086 (Fla. 1995) ; Sallee v. Fort Knox Nat'l Bank, N.A. (In re Sallee), 286 F.3d 878 (6th Cir.) , cert. denied, 537 U.S. 949, 123 S. Ct. 415, 154 L. Ed. 2d 294 (2002) (ordinarily no fiduciary duty on bank to act in the borrower's interest; fraud claim actionable, however, where the bank kept one appraisal secret while revealing another as duty to disclose arises from a partial disclosure of information where a party to the contract has superior knowledge; case involved business loans); Citibank (S.D.), N.A. v. Gifesman, 63 Conn. App. 188, 773 A.2d 993 (2001) ; Geiger v. Crestar Bank, 778 A.2d 1085 (D.C. 2001) (relationship between bank and depositor is governed by the written agreement; ordinarily no fiduciary duty owed by the bank); Lattier-Holmes v. Peoples State Bank, 796 So. 2d 176 (La. App. 2001) , cert. denied, 537 U.S. 897, 123 S. Ct. 197, 154 L. Ed. 2d 167 (2002) (same). See also Sutton v. Viking Oldsmobile Nissan, Inc., 2001 Minn. App. LEXIS 866 (Minn. Ct. App. July 31, 2001) , review denied, 2001 Minn. LEXIS 724 (Minn. Oct. 24, 2001) (no fiduciary duty between consumer and car dealer). Irvin v. American Gen. Fin., Inc., 2005 Ohio 3523 (Ohio Ct. App. 2005) (whether special circumstances exist giving rise to fiduciary relationship between lender and borrower question of fact precluding dismissal). Cf. Fridenmaker v. Valley Nat. Bank, 534 P.2d 1064 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1975) (mortgagor's consultation with competent counsel militates against finding that confidential relationship existed); Mans v. Peoples Bank of Imboden, 10 S.W.3d 885 (Ark. 2000) (husband's 23-year relationship with bank and widow's lack of sophistication insufficient to create fiduciary duty such that bank had duty to inform widow of lapse in credit life insurance policy). Frye v. American Gen. Fin., Inc., 307 F. Supp. 2d 836 (S.D. Miss. 2004) (acknowledging special circumstances may give rise to fiduciary duty between lender and borrower; such circumstances not sufficiently alleged). But see Jenkins v. Hyundai Motor Fin. Co., 389 F. Supp. 2d 961 (S.D. Ohio 2005) ("touting" and "selling" credit disability insurance not sufficient to create fiduciary duty).

(n171)Footnote 167. Barrett v. Bank of Am., 229 Cal. Rptr. 16 (Ct. App. 1986) .

(n172)Footnote 168. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 551.

(n173)Footnote 169. First Nat'l Bank v. Brown, 181 N.W.2d 178, 182 (Iowa 1970) (if the misrepresentation amounts to fraud in the inducement "whether innocent or not," that may give the defrauded party the right to avoid the contract in an action in equity). But see Basile v. H & R Block, Inc., 761 A.2d 1115 (Pa. 2000) (tax preparer not an agent of customer in tax refund loan transaction, but see the dissents), further proceedings, 777 A.2d 95 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2001) (tax preparer can create a confidential relationship with its customers, where, as in this case, the tax preparer and customer are in different positions of knowledge and where the tax preparer cultivated customer trust through an extended and extensive media ad campaign, the focal point of which was the tax preparer's expertise in tax matters and the trustworthy character of its services; trial court reversed and remanded).

(n174)Footnote 170. Frey v. Fraser Yachts, 29 F.3d 1153, 1159 (7th Cir. 1994) .

(n175)Footnote 171. Frey v. Fraser Yachts, 29 F.3d 1153, 1159 (7th Cir. 1994) .

(n176)Footnote 172. A lender may also be liable to return money or property it received in consequence of another's breach of fiduciary duty, particularly if there was bad faith on the lender's part. See, e.g., Briggs v. Countrywide Funding Corp., 931 F. Supp. 1545 (M.D. Ala. 1996) (denying lender's motion to dismiss variety of claims challenging yield-spread premiums, including improper interference with brokerage contract and that offer of the yield-spread premium induced the broker to breach its fiduciary duty), vacated on other grounds, 949 F. Supp. 812 (M.D. Ala. 1996) . Cf. Trenton Trust Co. v. W. Sur. Co., 599 S.W.2d 481 (Va. 1980) .

(n177)Footnote 173. See, e.g., Optivision, Inc. v. Syracuse Shopping Ctr. Assoc., 472 F. Supp. 665, 684 (N.D.N.Y. 1979) . See also Thrift v. Hubbard, 44 F.3d 348 (5th Cir. 1995) (stating elements under Texas law), reh'g denied, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 6443 (5th Cir. Mar. 16, 1995) ; Kenty v. Transamerica Premium Ins. Co., 650 N.E.2d 863 (Ohio 1995) , reh'g, en banc, denied, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 24797 (6th Cir. Sept. 19, 1996) .

(n178)Footnote 174. Kenty v. Transamerica Premium Ins. Co., 650 N.E. 2d 863 (Ohio 1995) .

(n179)Footnote 175. See, e.g., Hays v. Bankers Trust Co. of Cal., 46 F. Supp. 2d 490 (S.D. W. Va. 1999) (denial of lender's motion for summary judgment based solely upon inconsistent disclosures); George v. Capital S. Mortgage Invs., Inc., 265 Kan. 431, 961 P.2d 32 (1998) (lender and broker held liable for fraud and usury under joint venture theory); Williams v. Aetna Fin. Co., 83 Ohio St. 3d 464, 700 N.E.2d 859 (1998) , cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1051, 119 S. Ct. 1357, 143 L. Ed. 2d 518 (1999) (civil conspiracy); Union Mortgage Co. v. Barlow, 595 So. 2d 1335 (Ala. 1992) , cert. denied, 506 U.S. 906, 113 S. Ct. 301, 121 L. Ed. 2d 224 (1992) .

(n180)Footnote 176. See Halberstam v. Welch, 705 F.2d 472 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (case involved civil liability of a live-in companion for murder committed during a burglary; good discussion of the differences and similarities between liability as a conspirator and as an aider and abettor).

(n181)Footnote 177. Richfield Bank & Trust Co. v. Sjogren, 309 Minn. 362, 244 N.W.2d 648 (1976) (commercial case where lender knew the seller was insolvent and failed to warn its customer); Hays v. Bankers Trust Co., 46 F. Supp. 2d 490 (S.D. W. Va. 1999) (lender's motion for summary judgment denied based solely upon inconsistent disclosures on face of commitment letter and the actual terms of the loan provided at closing); George v. Capital S. Mortg. Invs., 265 Kan. 431, 961 P.2d 32 (1998) (lender, broker, and middle-man held liable for fraud and usury under joint venture theory); Williams v. Aetna Fin. Co., 83 Ohio St. 3d 464, 700 N.E.2d 859 (1998) , cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1051, 119 S. Ct. 1357, 143 L. Ed. 2d 518 (1999) (court held lender liable for acts of home improvement contractor under civil conspiracy claim where lender allowed home improvement contractor to have access to loan money that was necessary to further his fraudulent actions, lender selected "authorized" contractor, and readily made loans to his customers despite knowledge of complaints about, and problems with, the contractor); Union Mortg. Co. v. Barlow, 595 So. 2d 1335 (Ala.) , cert. denied, 506 U.S. 906, 113 S. Ct. 301, 121 L. Ed. 2d 224 (1992) ; see also United Cos. Fin. Corp. v. Brown, 584 So. 2d 470 (Ala. 1991) (financer steered borrowers to contractor who failed to perform work and released escrow funds knowing work was not done; compensatory and punitive damages awarded); Lockhart v. Lovett, Clearinghouse No. 50,406 (Cir. Ct., Miss., complaint filed Feb. 17, 1993) (a jury verdict in excess of $1.5 million was rendered in Aug. 1994, against the finance company financing a contractor's home improvement sales contracts). But see Miller Planning Corp. v. Wells, 253 A.D.2d 859, 678 N.Y.S.2d 340 (2d Dep't 1998) (no evidence that lender had a relationship with the contractor or that lender participated in or had knowledge of the home improvement contractor's scheme).

(n182)Footnote 178. For a discussion and listing of these cases, see National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 12.10.1 (4th ed. 2009).

(n183)Footnote 179. See Halberstam v. Welch, 705 F.2d 472 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (discusses the similarities and differences between these theories).

(n184)Footnote 180. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876 (1979).

(n185)Footnote 181. Halberstam v. Welch, 705 F.2d 472 (D.C. Cir. 1983) .

(n186)Footnote 182. Schunk v. United Fin. Mortg. Corp., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5685 (D. Kan. Apr. 11, 2001) (lender's motion to dismiss denied where lender's employee allegedly forged the customer's initials on a document at the direction of the lender's vice-president; lender can be liable for tortious conduct of it employees); Holley v. Gurnee Volkswagen & Oldsmobile, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7274 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 4, 2001) (car salesperson acted as agent of car dealer; car dealer is liable for acts of fraud of salesperson, at least at motion to dismiss stage); Inter Mountain Mortg., Inc. v. Sulimen, 78 Cal. App. 4th 1434, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790 (4th Dist. 2000) (the theory of respondeat superior and liability of the employer of the tortfeasor is flushed out in this case which deals with the lender suing the mortgage broker for the fraud of its employee).

(n187)Footnote 183. See, e.g., Roberson v. Money Tree of Ala., Inc., 954 F. Supp. 1545 (M.D. Ala. 1997) ; Staples v. Money Tree, Inc., 936 F. Supp. 856 (M.D. Ala. 1996). Contra Jones v. Money Tree, 686 So. 2d 1166 (Ala. 1996) (court strictly applied contract law by holding that since the insurer was a non-signatory to the loan documents containing the arbitration clause, it had no right to invoke arbitration).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual 7.syn

§ 7.syn Synopsis to Chapter 7: Rent-to-Own Transactions

§ 7.01 Rent-to-Own Appliance Contracts Described

§ 7.02 Legal Status of RTO Contracts

§ 7.03 RTO Repossessions Generally

§ 7.04 Arguments That RTO Transactions Are Intended for Security Under UCC § 1-201(37).

§ 7.05 Does State Credit Legislation Apply to RTO Transactions?

§ 7.06 Applicability of State Credit Legislation to RTO Where RTO Not Explicitly Exempted

§ 7.07 Application of Federal Consumer Leasing Act and Truth in Lending to RTO

[1] Application of Article 2A

§ 7.08 Applicability of Other Federal Consumer Protection Laws

§ 7.09 Limitations on Seizure of RTO Goods

§ 7.10 Discriminatory Treatment Claims

§ 7.11 Right of Reinstatement

§ 7.12 RTO Company and Consumer Liability After Repossession

§ 7.13 Importance of UDAP Approach

§ 7.14 Deceptive RTO Inducements, Sales and Warranty Practices

§ 7.15 Disclosure of RTO Transaction's Effective Annual Percentage Rate

§ 7.16 Applicability of Three-Day Cooling-Off Period to RTO Transactions

§ 7.17 UCC Article 2A Unconscionability as Alternative to UDAP.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.01

§ 7.01 Rent-to-Own Appliance Contracts Described

"Rent-to-Own" ("RTO") businesses are essentially appliance and furniture retailers which arrange lease agreements rather than typical installment sales contracts for those customers who cannot purchase goods with cash or who are unsophisticated about money management. These lease agreements contain several special features. First, the lease agreements contain purchase options which typically enable the lessees to obtain title to the goods in question by making a nominal payment at the end of a stated period, such as 18 months. Second, the leases are short term, so that "rental payments" are due weekly or monthly. Third, the leases are "at will." In other words, the leases theoretically need not be renewed at the end of each weekly or monthly term. n1

The RTO industry aims its marketing efforts at low-income consumers by advertising in minority media, buses, and in public housing projects, and by suggesting it has many features attractive to low-income consumers: quick delivery, weekly payments, no or small down payments, quick repair service, no credit checks, and no harm to one's credit rating if the transaction is canceled. Most RTO customers enter into these transactions with the expectation of buying an appliance and are seldom interested in the rental aspect of the contract. n2 This attitude is encouraged by RTO dealers who emphasize the purchase option in their marketing even while they are minimizing its importance in the written contract. Of course, if and when a transaction is challenged in court, a RTO dealer will point to the rental provisions of the contract and claim that statutes which control traditional retail installment sales are irrelevant to RTO agreements.

The chief problem with RTO contracts is not only that these supposed leases are used to mask installment sales, but also that these sales are made at astronomic and undisclosed effective interest rates. Under most RTO contracts, the customer will pay between $1000 and $2400 for a TV, stereo, or other major appliance worth as little as $200 retail, if used, and seldom more than $600 retail, if new. This means that a low-income RTO customer may pay 1 1/2 to 12 times what a cash customer would pay in a traditional retail store for the same appliance. Seldom is there any disclosure of the age of a used appliance being sold.

The finance charge and interest rate or annual percentage rate ("APR") of an RTO contract depends on the retail cash value of the appliance (especially whether new or used) and the timing, amount, and number of payments.

For example, in the Boston area, a 19-inch brand name, new color TV with standard features sells for less than $300. A 25-inch table model, color television sells for less than $500 and a 25-inch console television sells for less than $600.

Therefore, if an RTO customer leases a new 19-inch color TV (worth $300) for $16.00 per week for 52 weeks, the APR would be about 254%. However, if the customer leased a used 19-inch color TV (worth about $200 or less) for the same payment terms, the APR could be 408% or more.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)General OverviewContracts LawSecured TransactionsInstallment ContractsGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. For a recent comprehensive discussion of Rent-to-Own [hereinafter RTO] issues, see Susan Lorde Martin & Nancy White Huckins, Consumer Advocates vs. the Rent-to-Own Industry: Reaching a Reasonable Accommodation, 34 Am. Bus. L.J. 385 (1997). For detailed description of a rent-to-own contract, see Sight & Sound of Ohio, Inc. v. Wright, 36 B.R. 885 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1983) . See also A Study of Appliance Rental Practices: Appliance Rentals and Purchases by Low-Income Consumers, 20 Clearinghouse Rev. 1515 (Apr. 1987).

(n2)Footnote 2. The industry often says that less than one-quarter of its customers purchase the "rented" goods, but its method of deriving that statistic is suspect. Discovery obtained in one class action against a major RTO company showed that 66% of one year's inventory was sold, and between 73% and 77% of the company's revenues came from sales, not rentals. See Ramp, Renting-To-Own in the United States, 24 Clearinghouse Rev. 797 (Dec. 1990). Data obtained from RTO dealer's databases from different chains in several states confirm that 75% or more of the dealer's gross revenue is derived from customers who purchase goods. For example, RTO Enterprises Inc., Canada's largest rent-to-own company, reports that approximately 85% of RTO's revenues are generated through the rent-to-own program and approximately 87% of all rent-to-own customers purchase the merchandise at the end of the rental term. See www.stockdepot.com/buylowsellhigh/rto.html for RTO Enterprises Inc. But see Michael H. Anderson & Raymond Jackson, A Reconsideration of Rent-to-Own, 35 J. Cons. Affairs 295 (2001) (authors argue that the total cost, potential lost equity, and the APR is not a good measure of the true value to the consumer of a RTO transaction; instead, the benefits to the consumer should be measured by the value of: delivery; set up; maintenance; repair; immediate product availability without a formal credit check and without a security deposit or down payment; payments by cash or check on a weekly or monthly basis; ability to secure insurance against damage or theft; termination of the agreement at any time without further financial liability or damage to credit history).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.02

§ 7.02 Legal Status of RTO Contracts

Rent-to-own (RTO) transactions have generally won widespread, but not universal, exemption from UCC Article 9. This exemption is surprising because the very name rent-to-own and consumer expectations are that these are sales transactions, with the RTO company reserving the right to seize the goods if the consumer defaults.

Article 9 does not govern RTO transactions primarily because special RTO statutes have been enacted in many states that specifically exempt RTO transactions from Article 9. In addition, the 1987 amendments to the definition of security interest in UCC § 1-201(37) [revised U.C.C. §§ 1-201(b)(35), 1-203], now adopted by all fifty states and the District of Columbia, make it more difficult to argue that a RTO transaction involves a security interest. Instead of Article 9, Article 2A applies to RTO contracts, except in a few states that have enacted a specific exemption. n1 Similarly, RTO transactions may be held to constitute security agreements rather than true leases under the Bankruptcy Code, thereby giving bankrupt consumers greater rights than normal lessees. n2 Leases under which the lessee agrees to pay a sum equal to or exceeding the value of goods, and under which the lessee acquires an option to purchase for nominal consideration, may be credit sales requiring Truth in Lending ("TIL") disclosures. n3 Last, but not least, RTO agreements may be subject to usury limitations under state installment sales acts ("RISAs"). n4 The Supreme Court of New Jersey recently affirmed that rent-to-own contracts as structured were closer to sales and violated that state's Retail Installment Sales Act. n5

For the past twenty years, legal service attorneys, state attorneys general, and other consumer advocates have made these arguments with mixed success. n6 During this same period, the RTO industry has aggressively (and successfully in most cases) lobbied state legislatures and the Congress for a statutory exemption from consumer protection statutes, from annual percentage rate disclosure requirements, and from usury rate limitations. In nearly every state, there are now RTO statutes which were carefully drafted by the industry to insulate dealers from claims of consumer abuse. n7

The specific exemption of RTO transactions from other state and federal laws is the essential feature of these RTO statutes. All of the RTO laws provide that transactions that comply with their provisions are not "credit sales." Many statutes explicitly exempt RTOs from the state's home solicitation sales laws and from UCC Article 9 security interest definitions.

Although there are variations, nearly all RTO statutes require certain disclosures in the contract, including: the number and timing of the payments necessary to acquire ownership of the property; a statement declaring that the consumer will not own the property until the consumer has made the total payment necessary to acquire ownership; the cash price of the property (most commonly defined as whatever price the lessor sets); and a statement as to whether the property is new or used. n8 Although many state statutes provide that these disclosures must be made clearly and conspicuously, none require that the information be given on a separate document or separately segregated. The mandated disclosures, therefore, often appear scattered throughout the contract. State statutes generally do not mandate in-store price tag disclosures.

All RTO statutes contain "consumer remedy" provisions, but these must be read carefully. For example, Florida provides for statutory damages with attorney's fees and costs. Dealers, however, are only liable if they were notified of the violation in writing and failed to correct it within thirty days. n9 In Maryland, dealers escape liability if they can show that the error was unintentional, resulted from a bona fide error notwithstanding the maintenance of procedures reasonably adopted to avoid that type of error, and that the error was corrected within thirty days of discovering or receiving notice of the error. n10 Some states provide for a mandatory minimum recovery of, say, $100, which is not permitted if the case is filed as a class action. n11 Other states statutes do not include a minimum statutory award. n12

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 14.3.3.4 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n2)Footnote 2. See In re Minton, 271 B.R. 335 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2001) (RTO agreements were true leases and not conditional sales because they fit the definition of "rental-purchase agreements" under Arkansas law.); In re Puckett, 60 B.R. 223 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1986) . See also Michaels v. Ford Motor Credit Co. (In re Michaels), 156 B.R. 584 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 1993) (court found that the intent of the parties determined that the agreement was a disguised security agreement even though it was called a "Rental Agreement"); National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice § 11.8 (9th ed. 2009) (rent-to-own transactions in bankruptcy).

(n3)Footnote 3. See 15 U.S.C. § 1602(g). Compare Clark v. Rent-It Corp., 685 F.2d 245 (8th Cir. 1982) , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1225, 103 S. Ct. 1232 (1983) , with Ortiz v. Rental Mgmt., Inc., 65 F.3d 335 (3d Cir. 1995) . See generally Annot., 59 A.L.R. Fed. 929 (1982) (leases as Truth in Lending Act [hereinafter TILA] credit sales).

(n4)Footnote 4. Anoushian v. Rent-Rite, 2002 Phila. Ct. Com. Pl. LEXIS 98 (Pa. Commw. Ct. May 10, 2002) (Pennsylvania Retail Installment Sales Act, not RTO statute, governed lease agreement with option to purchase). Anoushian was legislatively overruled in 2003, see KFJ Enters., LLC v. Rembert (In re Rembert), 293 B.R. 664 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2003) , and abrogated by Griffin v. Rent-A-Center, 843 A.2d 393 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2004) (2003 amendments were a clarification, which the court applied retroactively.) See LeBakken Rent-to-Own v. Warnell, 589 N.W.2d 425 (Wis. Ct. App. 1998) ; Rent-A-Center, Inc. v. Hall, 510 N.W.2d 789 (Wis. Ct. App. 1993) . Cf. Fogie v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 1995 WL 649575 (D. Minn. 1995) (RTO contracts are credit sales for all purposes, and are subject to general contract usury ceiling), aff'd sub nom. Fogie v. Thorn Ams., Inc., 95 F.3d 645 (8th Cir. 1996) . See also Burney v. Thorn Ams., Inc., 944 F. Supp. 762 (D. Minn. 1996) (measure of damages is the difference between the finance charge and a 5% interest rate; finance charge includes everything except the retail price).

(n5)Footnote 5. Perez v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 892 A.2d 1255 (N.J. 2006) .

(n6)Footnote 6. The most recent successful cases are primarily from three states: Wisconsin, New Jersey, and Minnesota. See Fogie v. Thorn Ams., Inc., 95 F.3d 645 (8th Cir. 1996) , cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1166, 117 S. Ct. 1427, 137 L. Ed. 2d 536 (1997) ; Miller v. Colortyme, Inc., 518 N.W.2d 544 (Minn. 1994) , pet. denied, 1994 Minn. LEXIS 623 (Minn. Aug. 1, 1994) ; Robinson v. Thorn Ams., Inc., Case No. L-003697-94, Clearinghouse No. 52,047 (N.J. Super. Ct. Dec. 19, 1997); Rent-A-Center, Inc. v. Hall, 181 Wis. 2d 243, 510 N.W.2d 789 (Ct. App. 1993) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Susan Lorde Martin & Nancy White Huckins, Consumer Advocates vs. the Rent-to-Own Industry: Reaching a Reasonable Accommodation, 34 Am. Bus. L.J. 385, 396-400 (1997). See also National Consumer Law Center, Cost of Credit § 7.5.3.5 (3rd ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n8)Footnote 8. The disclosure of an effective interest rate is never required, although consumers have tried to convince a court that it should be disclosed under New York law, despite its silence. Colon v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 716 N.Y.S.2d 7 (App. Div. 2000) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Fla. Stat. § 559.9239.

(n10)Footnote 10. Md. Code Ann., Com. Law II § 12-1110(c).

(n11)Footnote 11. See, e.g., Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 367.983(1)(b).

(n12)Footnote 12. See, e.g., Iowa Code § 537.3621.

74 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.03

§ 7.03 RTO Repossessions Generally

If RTO transactions are found to be secured transactions covered by UCC Article 9, then RTO repossessions would be governed by UCC principles. RTO companies typically do not comply with these standards, and thus would be subject to UCC section 9-507(1) [Revised UCC section 9-625] actual or statutory damage awards. n1 Because the Article 9 violations would be systematic, the RTO company would be exposed to significant class action liability.

Nevertheless, most states have enacted RTO statutes that specify that Article 9 does not apply to RTO transactions. n2 Other states have also enacted specific RTO statutes, but these statutes do not explicitly exempt RTO transactions from Article 9. The mere passage of RTO legislation, where that legislation does not explicitly override Article 9's applicability, should not be interpreted as a legislative intent to exclude RTO transactions from Article 9's coverage. n3 In the states where there is no explicit exclusion, the issue will be whether Article 9 by its own terms applies to RTO transactions. Article 9 applies to security interests, no matter their form, and UCC section 1-201(37) [Revised UCC section 1-203] defines when a transaction involves a security interest.

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (known as the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act before its amendment in 2003) prohibits RTO companies from using self-help to retake the leased items if the buyer paid a deposit or installment prior to entering active duty. n4 The rental company has the right to seek a court order to retake the goods, but the Act has various protections for servicemembers in litigation. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewContracts LawSecured TransactionsDefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. There is no precedent to show how to calculate U.C.C. § 9-507(1) [Revised UCC § 9-625] statutory damages of the finance charge plus 10% of the cash price in RTO cases. Consumers will want to argue that the cash price is the fair market value of the item when purchased, and that the difference between that amount and the total of payments over the scheduled lease term is the finance charge. RTO companies may argue that some of that differential is not a finance charge, e.g., arguing that RTO products come with a full replacement warranty, in-home delivery, etc. But even then, any amount taken out of the finance charge must be added into the cash price for purposes of calculating statutory damages.

(n2)Footnote 2. See In re Trusty, 189 B.R. 977 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1995) (RTO agreements are neither leases nor secured transactions, but executory contracts under Alabama law); In re Osborne, 170 B.R. 367 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1994) ; In re Morris, 150 B.R. 446, 20 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 663 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1992) ; In re Taylor, 130 B.R. 849 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1991) . See also In re Knowles, 253 B.R. 412 (Bankr. E.D. Ky. 2000) ; In re Stellman, 237 B.R. 759 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1999) (RTO contracts do not create security interests).

(n3)Footnote 3. See In re Smith, 2000 Bankr. LEXIS 1772 (Bankr. E.D. Va. Oct. 31, 2000) (U.C.C. § 1-201(37) makes RTO transaction a sale despite RTO statute); In re Burton, 128 B.R. 807 , aff'd, 128 B.R. 870 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1989) .

(n4)Footnote 4. 50 U.S.C. app. § 532(a).

(n5)Footnote 5. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 6.3.5.1 (6th ed. and Supp.).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.04

§ 7.04 Arguments That RTO Transactions Are Intended for Security Under UCC § 1-201(37).

In fifteen jurisdictions, the state RTO statute does not exclude RTO transactions from Article 9, and the 1987 version of UCC section 1-201(37) [Revised UCC section 1-203] determines whether the transaction is intended for security. n1 The new definition of security interest departs from the original by stating that where a transaction is terminable by the lessee, the right to purchase the goods for nominal consideration does not, in and of itself, make a transaction one intended for security. Thus, many courts will find RTO transactions not to be intended for security under this new definition. n2

An analysis of sections 1-201(37) [Revised UCC section 1-203] and 2A-103(j) provides several arguments as to why many RTO transactions are intended for security.

The key to this analysis is the concept found in Article 2A that a terminable lease may start out as a "true lease," but later become one intended for security. The fourth paragraph of the comment to UCC section 2A-103(j) states: "However, with each renewal of the lease the facts and circumstances at the time of each renewal must be examined to determine if that conclusion remains accurate, as it is possible that a transaction that first creates a lease, later creates a security interest." As a consequence, the factors found in section 1-201(37) [Revised UCC section 1-203] must be applied not just when a lease is created, but at every point in the lease.

UCC section 1-201(37) [Revised UCC section 1-203] sets out several standards for when a lease is automatically intended for security, if the lease is not subject to termination during the lease's term. While RTO contracts are terminable at the end of each payment period (i.e., after each week or month), the lessee cannot terminate the lease during a week or month, but only at the end of the week or month. Thus, these standards are to be applied to the RTO transaction as if the transaction's term is only one week or one month.

Under UCC section 1-201(37) [Revised UCC section 1-203], a security interest is created if the lessee is "bound" to renew the lease. The fourth paragraph of the comment to UCC section 2A-103(j) makes it clear that "economic duress or coercion" as well as a legal obligation could make a lessee "bound." Thus, where a consumer is well into an RTO transaction and has built up substantial "equity," what may have started as a lease not intended for security could become a security interest because the economic realties would dictate that the weekly or monthly lease be renewed each week or month. n3

Moreover, even if none of the standards that automatically make a lease one intended for security apply, the issue under section 1-201(37) [Revised UCC section 1-203] is still determined by the facts of each case. Courts can find a RTO contract intended for security because of the weight of all the facts--the RTO advertising, the consumer's expectations, the pricing structure, the nominal purchase option, the consumer's obligation to pay sales tax, the risk of damage being placed on the consumer, and the fact that the total of payments would far exceed the property's value and any reasonable interest payment. n4 The parties' intent is still a primary factor. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Alaska, District of Columbia, Georgia, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, Texas, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

In South Carolina, the original version of U.C.C. § 1-201(37) is in effect and South Carolina bankruptcy courts have found that Article 9 applies to RTO transactions. S.C. Rentals, Inc. v. Arthur, 187 B.R. 502 (Bankr. D.S.C. 1995) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See In re Jarrells, 205 B.R. 974, 31 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 657 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1997) ; In re Johnson, 203 B.R. 498 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1996) ; In re Bowman, 194 B.R. 227 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 1995) ; In re Allen, 174 B.R. 293, 26 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1156 (Bankr. D. Or. 1994) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See In re Bailey, 103 B.R. 886 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1988) (RTO transaction might have been found to be lease had debtor presented evidence that number of renewals made continued renewal and purchase only economically feasible option). See also In re Allen, 174 B.R. 293 (Bankr. D. Or. 1994) (court examines facts and circumstances at time of renewal, but finds a lease because consumer made only 1 weekly payment of $70 before filing for bankruptcy).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Green v. Continental Rentals, 678 A.2d 759, 30 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1039 (N.J. Super. Ct. Law Div. 1994) ; Rent-A-Center, Inc. v. Hall, 181 Wis. 2d 243, 510 N.W.2d 789 (Ct. App. 1993) . Cf. In re Zaleha, 159 B.R. 581 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1993) (interpreting new version in context of car lease, but discussing forfeiture of built-up equity).

(n5)Footnote 5. Mr. C's Rent To Own v. Jarrells (In re Jarrells), 205 B.R. 994 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1997) .

76 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.05

§ 7.05 Does State Credit Legislation Apply to RTO Transactions?

As with UCC Article 9, if state retail installment sales acts or other state credit legislation were to apply to RTO transactions, then most RTO companies would be in violation of such statutes. Then RTO repossession practices would lead to actual and, in many cases, significant statutory damage awards. Moreover, RTO companies would also be subject to substantial class action liability because their violation of the state consumer credit legislation would be on a systematic basis.

Whether state credit legislation applies to RTO transactions is generally a unique determination for each individual state. The first step is to consider a state's RTO legislation that, in many cases, provides an explicit exemption for RTO transactions from a state's consumer credit legislation. n1

Nevertheless, such provisions should be examined carefully to make sure that they specifically override the relevant piece of state legislation. Passage of the RTO legislation in and of itself does not preempt such legislation. n2

Another place to search for an exemption for RTO transactions from the scope of consumer credit legislation is in the consumer credit legislation itself. Some state credit laws explicitly exempt RTO transactions or regulate RTO transactions separately, setting out different (and generally minimal) requirements for RTO transactions, in effect creating a RTO statute within the state credit legislation.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See KFJ Enters., LLC v. Rembert (In re Rembert), 293 B.R. 664 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2003) (Pennsylvania's RTO law exempts RTO transactions from state retail installment sales act).

(n2)Footnote 2. Miller v. Colortyme, Inc., 518 N.W.2d 544 (Minn. 1994) . See In re Shelby, 127 B.R. 682, 15

U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 584 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1991) . See also National Consumer Law Center, Cost of Credit, § 7.5.3.2 (2d ed. 2000 and Supp.). The most recent successful cases are primarily from three states, Wisconsin, New Jersey, and Minnesota. See Fogie v. Thorn Ams., 95 F.3d 645 (8th Cir. 1996) ; Perez v. Rent-A-Center, 892 A.2d 1255 (N.J. 2006) ; Robinson v. Thorn Ams., Inc., Case No. L-003697-94, Clearinghouse No. 52,047 (N.J. Super. Ct. Dec. 19, 1997); Rent-A-Center, Inc. v. Hall, 181 Wis. 2d 243, 510 N.W.2d 789 (Wis. Ct. App. 1993) . In addition, a Vermont court upheld a state attorney general rule requiring RTO companies to disclose the effective annual percentage rate of their RTO transaction. See Thorn Ams., Inc. v. Vermont Attorney General, Clearinghouse No. 51,957 (Vt. Super. Ct. Mar. 7, 1997).

77 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.06

§ 7.06 Applicability of State Credit Legislation to RTO Where RTO Not Explicitly Exempted

In many states, neither a RTO statute nor the state credit legislation will explicitly exempt RTO transactions from the credit statute. In those states, there is a good case for the proposition that the credit legislation does apply to RTO transactions. n1 Since the exact wording of the credit statute's scope is very important in these cases, advocates must parse the applicable language carefully. n2

In examining the scope of state credit statutes, it is important to distinguish between RTO transactions and short term, true rental transactions which many state credit statutes were drafted to exclude. That is, a distinction must be drawn between rent-to-own and rent-to-rent.

A particular problem in arguing that RTO agreements should be controlled by state credit laws is that, on their face, RTO leases do not create a debt which the consumer is legally obligated to repay. In theory, RTO purchasers can return their goods at any time and will owe the RTO dealer nothing. n3 This apparent fact has prevented courts in several cases from invoking installment sales acts, although the cases are split. n4

When faced with a state credit statute which does not clearly include or exclude RTO contracts, consumer advocates should emphasize that the nature of a transaction is controlled by the intent of the parties. n5 RTO advertising, the inability of RTO customers to pay cash, and the nature of the goods leased demonstrate that the parties to RTO contracts intend the sale, rather than the lease, of merchandise. n6

In addition, RTO transactions are not really terminable, since RTO customers are clearly compelled to continue making weekly "rental" payments by the economic characteristics of the transaction even if not by the contract language. n7 The New Jersey Supreme Court held that the consumer's right to cancel the lease at any time was irrelevant because the statute defined a retail installment sale to include any transaction in which the bailee or lessee had the option of becoming the owner of the goods. n8 A consumer quickly builds equity in the "leased" property under an RTO contract and must continue to pay in order to protect that equity. Furthermore, consumers will go to great lengths to avoid losing goods, such as refrigerators or beds, which are necessities of day-to-day life.

Moreover, a fundamental aspect of usury law, including this state credit legislation, is that a court must examine the substance of a transaction, rather than its form, in order to decide whether usury is present. n9 RTO contracts involve effective interest rates vastly exceeding most statutory limits. To uphold such contracts is to place their form above the clear intent of installment sales acts, and almost every state has a few usury opinions stating such formalism should be rejected.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Burney v. Thorn Americas, Inc., 944 F. Supp. 762 (E.D. Wis. 1996) ; Starks v. Rent-A-Center, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20099 (D. Minn. May 15, 1990) ; In re Rigg, 198 B.R. 681 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1996) ; In re Rose, 94 B.R. 103 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1988) ; Murphy v. McNamara, 36 Conn. Supp. 183, 416 A.2d 170, 27 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 911 (1979) ; Miller v. Colortyme, Inc., 518 N.W.2d 544 (Minn. 1994) , on remand, Clearinghouse No. 47,957 (Minn. Dist. Ct. 1995) (summary judgment for consumers); Perez v. Rent-A-Center, 892 A.2d 1255 (N.J. 2006) ; Robinson v. Thorn Americas, Inc., Clearinghouse No. 52,047, No. L-3697-94 (N.J. Super. Ct. Law Div. Oct. 26, 1995); Green v. Cont'l Rentals, 292 N.J. Super. 241, 678 A.2d 759, 30 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1039 (Super. Ct. Law Div. 1994) ; Commonwealth v. Riverview Leasing, Inc., 648 A.2d 580 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 1995) (decision predates state's adoption of RTO law); Chandler v. Riverview Leasing, Inc., Clearinghouse No. 40,628 (Pa. C.P. May 15, 1986) (decision predates state's adoption of RTO law); State v. Rentavision Corp. of Am., Clearinghouse No. 35,731 (Tenn. Ch. Ct. 1983); LeBakken Rent-to-Own v. Warnell, 223 Wis. 2d 582, 589 N.W.2d 425 (Ct. App. 1998) (RTO transaction is "consumer credit sale" subject to Wisconsin Consumer Act even if it includes early purchase option; creditor was liable for costs and attorney fees for filing replevin action without complying with Act); Rent-A-Center, Inc. v. Hall, 181 Wis. 2d 243, 510 N.W.2d 789 (Ct. App. 1993) (RTO transactions are "consumer credit sales" subject to Wisconsin Consumer Act); Palacios v. ABC TV & Stereo Retail, 123 Wis. 2d 79, 365 N.W.2d 882 (Ct. App. 1985) . But see Givens v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 720 F. Supp. 160 (S.D. Ala. 1988) (mem.) (rental agreement not credit sale under Alabama Consumer Finance Act), aff'd, 885 F.2d 879 (11th Cir. 1989) (table); Hawkes Television Inc. v. Maine Bureau of Consumer Credit Protection, 462 A.2d 1167 (Me. 1983) ; State v. Action TV Rentals, Inc., 467 A.2d 1000 (Md. 1983) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fogie v. Rent-A-Center, 1995 WL 649575 (D. Minn. 1995), aff'd sub nom. Fogie v. Thorn Ams., Inc., 95 F.3d 645 (8th Cir. 1996) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., Crumley v. Berry, 298 Ark. 112, 766 S.W.2d 7, 9 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 448 (1989) (over strong dissent, court finds a true lease if lessee has right to terminate, though recognizes that there may be some exceptions).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Burney v. Thorn Ams., Inc., 944 F. Supp. 762 (D. Minn. 1996) ; Miller v. Colortyme, Inc., 518 N.W.2d 544 (Minn. 1994) . See also Fogie v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 1995 WL 649575 (D. Minn. 1995), aff'd sub nom. Fogie v. Thorn Ams., Inc., 95 F.3d 645 (8th Cir. 1996) ; Palacios v. ABC TV & Stereo Rental, 123 Wis. 2d 79, 365 N.W.2d 882 (Wis. Ct. App. 1985) .

(n5)Footnote 5. E.g., Hervey v. R.I. Locomotive Works, 93 U.S. 664, 23 L. Ed. 1003 (1876) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See In re Puckett, 60 B.R. 223 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1986) ; Sight & Sound of Ohio, Inc. v. Wright, 36 B.R. 885 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1983) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See In re Puckett, 60 B.R. 223, 239-40 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1986) ; Green v. Continental Rentals, 678 A.2d 759, 30 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1039 (N.J. Super. Ct. 1994) ; Rent-A-Center v. Hall, 181 Wisc. 2d 243, 510 N.W.2d 789 (Ct. App. 1993) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Perez v. Rent-A-Center, 892 A.2d 1255, 1267 (N.J. 2006) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See McGalliard v. Liberty Leasing Co. of Alaska, 534 P.2d 528 (Alaska 1975) ; see generally Annot., 94 A.L.R. 3d 640 (1979) (application of usury laws to "leases"); see Ch. 6 supra.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.07

§ 7.07 Application of Federal Consumer Leasing Act and Truth in Lending to RTO

The Federal Consumer Leasing Act ("CLA") does not apply to RTO transactions, and it may be that TIL does not apply either. n1

The CLA applies only to leases greater than four months in duration. n2 Because a RTO transaction is terminable without penalty before four months have expired, most courts have held that such a lease is not covered by the Act. n3

Even if a court were to find that an RTO transaction is not really terminable without penalty before four months have expired, the CLA would not apply. The CLA does not apply to transactions covered by TIL, n4 and, if a court were to find a RTO transaction not terminable without a penalty, then TIL would apply to the RTO transaction. TIL applies to non-terminable leases where lease payments exceed the value of the property and the consumer can become the owner for nominal consideration. n5 That is, courts would only find the CLA to apply to RTO transactions under the same theory where they would also find TIL to apply, and, in situations where they both apply, the CLA states that only TIL applies.

While only TIL could apply to RTO transactions, it is uncertain whether even TIL applies. n6 TIL Regulation Z states that a covered credit sale includes certain leases unless terminable without penalty at any time by the consumer. n7 Courts have differed as to whether the forfeiture of the consumer's built up equity in a RTO transaction is a penalty within the meaning of Regulation Z. n8 Another theory to find TIL coverage is to find that the RTO transaction is in fact used as a means of purchase, and not to lease the product. n9

If TIL does apply to RTO transactions, then the RTO company must make certain disclosures. Failure to do so will lead to actual and statutory damages and attorney fees, with the possibility of class action liability. n10

[1] Application of Article 2A

UCC Article 2A regulates leases in forty-nine states and the District of Columbia. n11 A few states have RTO statutes which state that RTO transactions are not governed by Article 2A, n12 but in most states RTO transactions are subject to Article 2A. While Article 2A is generally less protective of consumers than Article 9, it does:

- Prohibit unconscionable contracts and clauses and, if the lease is a consumer lease, allow the court to grant "any appropriate relief" and attorney fees; n13
- Create implied warranties in lease trans actions; n14
- Prohibit unreasonable liquidated damages clauses; n15 and
- Prohibit breach of the peace in self-help repossession. n16

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionConsumer LeasingGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionTruth in LendingGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. The Consumer Leasing Act and the Truth in Lending Act are reprinted in Vol. 1A infra. See Smith v. ABC Rental Sys., Inc. 618 F.2d 397 (5th Cir. 1980) ; Givens v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 720 F. Supp. 160 (S.D. Ala. 1988) , aff'd without op., 885 F.2d 879 (11th Cir. 1989) .

(n2)Footnote 2. 15 U.S.C. § 1667(1).

(n3)Footnote 3. In re Hanley, 105 B.R. 458 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1989) .

(n4)Footnote 4. 15 U.S.C. § 1667(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. 15 U.S.C. § 1602(g).

(n6)Footnote 6. Compare Clark v. Rent-It Corp., 685 F.2d 245 (8th Cir. 1982) , with Ortiz v. Rental Mgmt., Inc., 65 F.3d 335 (3rd Cir. 1995) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Reg. Z § 226.2(a)(16). See, e.g., In re Martin, 64 B.R. 1 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1984) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Compare In re Hanley, 105 B.R. 458 (Bankr. C.D. Ill 1989) , on motion to alter or amend, 111 B.R. 709 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1990) (rejecting that argument), with Green v. Continental Rentals, 678 A.2d 759, 30 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1039 (N.J. Super. Ct. 1994) (court found that "the 'penalty' required by Regulation Z, then, may properly be considered to include any forfeiture incurred when a rent-to-own customer loses equity accured [sic] by reason of rental payments made prior to repossession").

Regulation Z is reprinted in Vol. 1A infra.

(n9)Footnote 9. In re Hanley, 105 B.R. 458 (1989) , on motion to alter or amend, 111 B.R. 709 (1990) , rev'd, 135 B.R. 311 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1990) . See National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending, § 2.5.4 (6th ed. 2007 and Supp.), for more detail on those theories.

(n10)Footnote 10. See 15 U.S.C. § 1640(a); Susan Lorde Martin & Nancy White Huckins, Consumer Advocates vs. the Rent-to-Own Industry: Reaching a Reasonable Accommodation, 34 Am. Bus. L.J. 385, 388-90 (1997).

(n11)Footnote 11. See National Consumer Law Center. Consumer Warranty Law, Ch. 21 (3d ed. and Supp.).

(n12)Footnote 12. See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481M-3(a)(2); Mont. Code Ann. § 30-19-104(1)(c); N.M. Stat. § 57-26-3

(RTO transactions are not covered by the "provisions of the U.C.C.").

(n13)Footnote 13. U.C.C. § 2A-108.

(n14)Footnote 14. U.C.C. §§ 2A-210 to 2A-213; see National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Warranty Law, § 21.3 (3d ed. 2006 and supp.).

(n15)Footnote 15. U.C.C. § 2A-504.

(n16)Footnote 16. U.C.C. § 2A-525(3).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.08

§ 7.08 Applicability of Other Federal Consumer Protection Laws

Since no credit is extended in RTO transactions, several other federal consumer statutes may not be applicable. This includes the Equal Credit Opportunity Act and the Fair Credit Reporting Act. The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act is not applicable either, so long as the rental agency is collecting on its own debts and has not referred them to a third party collector.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Credit ReportingGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.09

§ 7.09 Limitations on Seizure of RTO Goods

Almost all RTO goods, such as televisions, stereos, furniture, and appliances, remain inside the consumer's residence. This poses significant limitations on the repossession of RTO goods because the seizure invariably requires the RTO company to enter the consumer's home to seize the property, and this entry without the consumer's permission is generally illegal, even if Article 9 does not apply to the transaction.

UCC Article 2A regulates leases in 48 jurisdictions, and Article 2A prohibits seizures that breach the peace. n1 Case law for interpreting breach of the peace under Article 9 should apply in its entirety to the same concept under Article 2A. Thus, any entry into the consumer's residence without permission breaches the peace, even if the door to the residence has been left wide open. Similarly, any seizure over the consumer's objection breaches the peace.

This obviously poses problems for RTO companies who must obtain the consumer's permission to seize the goods. One RTO tactic is the "switch-out." A RTO representative will tell the customer that the appliance is being picked up for necessary repairs or maintenance or is being upgraded, when, in fact, it is being repossessed. Courts differ as to whether such repossession by trickery breaches the peace, but the conduct should be a deceptive trade practice in any event. n2 Article 2A also provides the court with the authority to grant appropriate relief and attorney fees where unconscionable conduct has occurred in the collection of a claim arising from a lease. n3

The same analysis applies to an RTO representative misrepresenting himself as a law enforcement official. Courts may differ as to whether this breaches the peace, but it should be a deceptive trade practice, n4 and the practice should be unconscionable.

RTO firms may threaten consumers that if they do not consent to a repossession, the RTO company will prosecute them under the state lease larceny statute. This statute criminalizes the failure to return rented property. But RTO contracts may not fall within the scope of lease larceny statutes, n5 and failure to allow entry of repossessors into one's home may not violate such statutes in any event. Moreover, an RTO company may have no intent to prosecute its customers under the lease larceny statute. In all three of these situations, the threat is deceptive and should violate the state deceptive practices statute, and, perhaps, state or federal debt collection statutes as well.

Another RTO tactic is to obtain, in advance in the RTO contract, the consumer's consent to the entry into the consumer's residence or to the breach of the peace. But RTO legislation in approximately 40 states explicitly prohibits contract terms agreeing to a breach of the peace n6 and about half the state RTO statutes even more explicitly prohibit contract terms authorizing the RTO company to enter the consumer's residence to reclaim the goods. n7 In addition, such provisions are likely to run afoul of Article 2A's unconscionability provision, so that a court may find the provision unenforceable and award the consumer attorney fees and other relief. n8 In any event, such provisions in an RTO contract are most likely unenforceable as against public policy.

Additional outrageous examples of RTO repossession tactics include: employees breaking and entering into a customer's home, and not only repossessing the RTO merchandise but stealing the customer's other possessions; n9 and filing criminal charges when the customer does not return RTO merchandise. n10

Unauthorized entry and other breaches of the peace may lead to an action for punitive damages. n11 There could be several legal bases for finding the breach to be a tort, leading to the punitive damages award--the RTO company's breach of a statutory duty is a tort, the breach of the peace is a tort, n12 or the seizure is a conversion because seizure is only authorized if there is no breach of the peace.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewContracts LawSecured TransactionsDefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. U.C.C. § 2A-525(3).

(n2)Footnote 2. See State v. Action TV Rentals, Inc., 467 A.2d 1000 (Md. 1983) (posing as law enforcement official found to be a deceptive trade practice).

(n3)Footnote 3. U.C.C. § 2A-108(2).

(n4)Footnote 4. State v. Action TV Rentals, Inc., 467 A.2d 1000 (Md. 1983) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See State v. Ell, 813 S.W.2d 26 (Mo. Ct. App. 1991) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. § 559.9234(2); Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 50-681 to 50-690; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 367.976 to 367.985, 367.990.

(n7)Footnote 7. See, e.g., Idaho Code §§ 28-36-101 to 28-36-111; Ind. Code §§ 24-7-1-1 to 24-7-9-7; Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 69-2101 to 69-2115; Wash. Rev. Code § 63.19.050.

(n8)Footnote 8. U.C.C. § 2A-108.

(n9)Footnote 9. Partridge v. Harvey, 805 So. 2d 668 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Bragg v. Rent to Own, 570 S.E.2d 671 (Ga. Ct. App. 2002) (customer sued RTO company for malicious prosecution and intentional infliction of emotional distress in obtaining an arrest warrant against him; tort claims were permitted to go to trial but trial court then directed verdict for RTO company on the basis that the company was not responsible for actions of employee); State v. Cox, 2002 WL 1083897 (Ohio App. Dist. Ct. May 14, 2002). The filing of a criminal charge may give rise to tort claims against the RTO business.

(n11)Footnote 11. Kimble v. Universal TV Rental, Inc., 65 Ohio Misc. 17, 19 Ohio Op. 3d 172, 417 N.E.2d 597 (1980) ($4,000 punitive damages awarded for repossession by forced entry into consumer's home). See also Mercer v. D.E.F., Inc., 48 B.R. 562 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1985) ($8000 actual and punitive damages awarded for a frightening RTO repossession violating bankruptcy automatic stay).

(n12)Footnote 12. Kimble v. Universal TV Rental, Inc., 65 Ohio Misc. 17, 19 Ohio Op. 3d 172, 417 N.E.2d 597 (1980) .

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.10

§ 7.10 Discriminatory Treatment Claims

There is some evidence that RTO dealers treat delinquent customers differently based on their race. n1 African-American customers may experience more rapid repossession and are less likely to have late fees waived than white customers. n2 The Equal Credit Opportunity Act arguably applies to RTO transactions. n3 If so, RTO dealers cannot treat customers differently post-default based on prohibited reasons. n4 Actual and punitive damages are available under the Act as well as attorney's fees and costs. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionEqual Credit OpportunityGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Testimony of David Ramp regarding S.R. 1566, 1956, United States Senate Banking Committee, May 13, 1994, Clearinghouse No. 49,965.

(n2)Footnote 2. See Testimony of David Ramp regarding S.R. 1566, 1956, United States Senate Banking Committee, May 13, 1994, Clearinghouse No. 49,965.

(n3)Footnote 3. See National Consumer Law Center, Credit Discrimination, § 2.2.2.2.5 (5th ed. 2009).

(n4)Footnote 4. See National Consumer Law Center, Credit Discrimination, § 9.2.4 (5th ed. 2009).

(n5)Footnote 5. See National Consumer Law Center, Credit Discrimination, Ch. 11 (5th ed. 2009).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.11

§ 7.11 Right of Reinstatement

Article 2A provides for no right to cure or to reinstate, but RTO legislation in effect in most states provides a right to reinstate. Some might question why a consumer would ever want to reinstate an RTO contract because they so often offer consumers such bad deals. In addition, critics contend that the right to reinstate is just a gimmick to allow RTO companies to assess additional late charges and to assist in the seizure of the property (if the consumer consents to the entry, the consumer has extra time to reinstate the contract). But if a consumer only has a few remaining payments on the RTO contract, it is often better to reinstate the contract and retain the goods, rather than lose all the consumer's built up equity.

Under rights of reinstatement found in RTO statutes, typically the consumer must pay all past rental payments and late charges, a pick-up and redelivery fee, and sometimes even a reinstatement fee. Then the contract is reinstated where it was before the breach.

Statutes differ as to how long the consumer has to reinstate, but often the time period is very short unless the consumer has consented to the seizure of the property, in which case the consumer may have a month or two to reinstate. Where the consumer has paid more than 60% or a similar percentage of the payments, the reinstatement period may even be longer after a voluntary surrender.

The failure to honor a reinstatement leads to remedies under the RTO statute. n1 These often include actual and statutory damages and, in some states, attorney fees.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Leases (Article 2A)General OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Davis v. Rent-A-Center of Am., Inc., 150 Misc. 2d 403, 568 N.Y.S.2d 529 (City Ct. 1991) (RTO firm's failure to offer comparable substitute furniture upon the consumer's request to reinstate the RTO contract led to the consumer's recovery of damages under the N.Y. RTO statute). See also Barnett v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1696 (Conn. Super. Ct. May 24, 2005) (finding, on disputed facts, that RTO company complied with reinstatement requirements of RTO law).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.12

§ 7.12 RTO Company and Consumer Liability After Repossession

Once the RTO appliance or other good is repossessed, the RTO firm retains the appliance (although no notice to that effect is sent to the consumer), and most likely rents the same appliance to a new customer, perhaps on the same rental terms. The question then arises as to what liability the consumer has to the RTO company and whether the RTO company which has kept the consumer's built up equity has to return anything to the consumer, assuming Article 9 does not apply.

The consumer will be liable for back-due RTO payments and for certain late charges and repossession expenses, to the extent that such charges are not limited in an RTO statute. An RTO company may not enforce a demand for charges that are not bona fide or reasonable.

Legitimate repossession and late charges and back payments are all that the consumer should owe. There can be no charges related to future payments because the RTO contract will state that the contract is terminable at will. If the RTO company seeks a penalty for the early termination, then the whole nature of the contract is altered (the transaction is no longer terminable at will), and Article 9, TIL, and state credit statutes may apply.

While the consumer's liability is limited in an RTO contract, the RTO company will not pay out any surplus, back rental payments, or other amount to the consumer after repossession, no matter how few months are left in the agreement. The RTO companies will claim that the lease is week-to-week or month-to-month, with no right to any refund upon cancellation.

The consumer's position, on the other hand, is that the consumer's rental payment goes toward rent and also toward building up the consumer's equity in the RTO property. The fact that the consumer can obtain the property for nominal consideration well before the end of the property's useful life means that rental payments must have included amounts allocated to pay for the property at the end of the lease term. This is confirmed by the astronomically high rental payments that RTO companies charge, several times what a cash customer would pay in a traditional retail store for the same appliance.

Assuming a consumer convinces the court that the consumer has built up equity, the consumer must still present the court with a legal theory requiring the RTO company to return this equity to the consumer. Article 2A and RTO statutes do not require the return of built-up equity, and Article 9 (that requires creditors to return any surplus) will not apply to RTO transactions in most states.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)General OverviewContracts LawSecured TransactionsDefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.13

§ 7.13 Importance of UDAP Approach

The consumer's best approach to many RTO practices may be a claim under a state unfair and deceptive practices ("UDAP") statute. The Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") has ruled that it is an unfair trade practice to use a contract provision whereby a defaulting consumer forfeits both ownership in the property and all installment payments. n1 This FTC authority should be direct precedent for a state UDAP claim against the RTO company.

In addition, the consumer should allege as a related UDAP claim any misrepresentations made by the RTO company in the original RTO transaction. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionUnfair & Deceptive Credit PracticesContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See AMREP Corp., 102 F.T.C. 1362 (1983) , aff'd, 768 F.2d 1171 (10th Cir. 1985) ; Horizon Corp., 97 F.T.C. 464 (1981) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 5.6.4 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.). See also Perez v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 892 A.2d 1255 (N.J. 2006) (UDAP act applied to RTO contracts even though the retail installment sales act covered the transaction).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.14

§ 7.14 Deceptive RTO Inducements, Sales and Warranty Practices

UDAP claims are an effective approach for dealing with the following RTO abuses:

- Advertising low-priced appliances, and then switching the consumer to a higher priced alternative.
- Engaging in high-pressure door-to-door sales.
- Misrepresenting easy credit terms, low payments, or that there will be no credit checks.
- Misrepresenting prices as bargains or the extent of savings compared to the RTO retailer's previous prices or competitors' prices.
- Failing to disclose a cash retail price if there is a possibility that the goods will ever be sold. n1
- Failing to disclose the true purchase price over the total lease term. n2
- Charging a total of payments that is several times the regular retail price of an item, or charging an implicit interest rate far in excess of the comparable limits on an installment sale. n3
- Describing the transaction as a lease when it, in fact, is a contract for sale. n4
- Lowballing, i.e, adding previously undisclosed delivery, documentary or other extra charges after the price has been agreed upon.
- Renting used appliances as new, misrepresenting an appliance's prior use, or not disclosing that appliances are used. n5
- Misrepresenting that most RTO participants end up owning the appliance where this is not the case, particularly where the RTO company strictly enforces the contract clauses to discourage ownership.

- Misrepresenting the steps necessary to exercise the purchase option.

- Referral sales, i.e., promising consumers a rebate if friends or neighbors referred by the consumer also lease merchandise from the lessor.

- Violating the state retail installment sales act, TIL, or other state or federal credit legislation. n6

- Delivering defective products, failing to repair as promised, or failing to live up to warranties.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)General OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. State v. Colortyme, Inc., Clearinghouse No. 50,404 (Wis. Cir. Ct. May 25, 1994) (consent judgment).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Murphy v. McNamara, 36 Conn. Supp. 183, 416 A.2d 170, 27 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 911 (Conn. Super. Ct. 1979) ; Mass. Regs. Code tit. 940, § 6.11(2).

(n3)Footnote 3. Green v. Continental Rentals, 292 N.J. Super. 241 (Ct. 1996) ; Colon v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 716 N.Y.S.2d 7 (App. Div. 2000) (denying summary judgment to the RTO company and case sent to jury on the issue of whether the state's UDAP act was violated due to an overly inflated cash price).

(n4)Footnote 4. Barco Auto Leasing Corp. v. House, Clearinghouse No. 40,641 (Conn. Super. Ct. Oct. 26, 1983).

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Mass. Regs. Code tit. 940, § 6.11(3), which requires disclosure in advertising if goods leased with an option to purchase are in fact used. But cf. State v. Action TV Rentals, Inc., 297 Md. 531, 467 A.2d 1000 (1983) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Barco Auto Leasing Corp. v. House, Clearinghouse No. 40,641 (Conn. Super. Ct. Oct. 26, 1983).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.15

§ 7.15 Disclosure of RTO Transaction's Effective Annual Percentage Rate

A fundamental problem with RTO transactions is that the effective interest rate or annual percentage rate in the transaction is often 100%, 200%, or more, but this number is never disclosed to consumers.

A Vermont Attorney General Rule requiring RTO companies to disclose the cash price of the rented item and the effective annual percentage rate of their RTO transactions has recently been upheld. n1

RTO companies in Vermont unsuccessfully sought a preliminary injunction preventing the Rule from going into effect. n2 The RTO companies have not appealed this decision. The Vermont Attorney General's office has sent out letters to RTO sellers in Vermont informing them that the Rule is now in effect.

While Vermont is unique in requiring the state attorney general to enact a rule dealing with RTO disclosures, the majority of state UDAP statutes give the state attorney general authority to enact regulations defining unfair and deceptive practices. The failure to disclose important information in an RTO transaction can certainly be such an unfair or deceptive practice.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)General OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Vermont Consumer Fraud Rule (CF) 115, Clearinghouse No. 51,958 (effective Jan. 1, 1997).

(n2)Footnote 2. Thorn Ams., Inc. v. Vermont Attorney General, Clearinghouse No. 51,957 (Vt. Super. Ct. Mar. 7, 1997).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.16

§ 7.16 Applicability of Three-Day Cooling-Off Period to RTO Transactions

An often overlooked way to challenge an RTO transaction is to argue that the RTO retailer should have complied with either the FTC Rule concerning a "Cooling-Off Period for Door-to-Door Sales" n1 or with any analogous state statute. Such coverage should be investigated because some major RTO companies solicit customers door-to-door or by telephone and consummate business in the residence.

RTO and other rental transactions are clearly covered by the FTC Rule. A door-to-door transaction covered by the FTC Rule is:

> "A sale, lease, or rental of consumer goods or services with a purchase price of $25 or more, whether under single or multiple contracts, in which the seller or his representative personally solicits the sale, including those in response to or following an invitation by the buyer, and the buyer's agreement or offer to purchase is made at a place other than the place of business of the seller." (emphasis added) n2

The Rule's Statement of Basis and Purpose explains that the Rule was redrafted to make it clear that leases were covered so that door-to-door sellers could not escape the Rule provisions by leasing their goods instead of selling them. n3

The exemption for sales under $25 is to exclude "sales by milkmen, laundrymen, and other route salesmen ... ." n4 Moreover, the Rule's $25 minimum also applies to the total of multiple contracts "to insure that the rule would apply to transactions in which the seller writes up a number of invoices or contracts none of which show a price of $10 or more, but when taken together the total price exceeds that amount." n5

If the entire transaction is done on the telephone and there is no personal contact between the buyer and seller prior to the delivery of the goods, the rule does not apply.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawConsumer ProtectionHome SolicitationBanking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)General OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease

Contracts

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. 16 C.F.R. § 429.

(n2)Footnote 2. 16 C.F.R. § 429.0(a).

(n3)Footnote 3. See 37 Fed. Reg. 22,945 (Oct. 26, 1972) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See 37 Fed. Reg. 22,945 (Oct. 26, 1972) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Statement of Basis and Purpose, 37 Fed. Reg. 22,945 (Oct. 26, 1982) .

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 7 Rent-to-Own Transactions

1-7 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 7.17

§ 7.17 UCC Article 2A Unconscionability as Alternative to UDAP.

Another viable legal theory for many of the same RTO practices that a UDAP statute can reach is an unconscionability claim under UCC Article 2A on Leases. UCC section 2A-108, "Unconscionability," allows courts to refuse to enforce unconscionable provisions in the RTO agreement, and also to grant appropriate relief where an RTO transaction is induced by unconscionable conduct or where unconscionable conduct has occurred in the RTO collection activities. n1 The court must award prevailing consumers their attorneys' fees. Fees are available to a prevailing lessor only if the lessee knew the action was groundless.

A UCC section 2A-108 claim will have the following advantages over a UDAP claim:

- Post-Sale Transactions. Some UDAP statutes do not apply to practices occurring after the transaction has been finalized, such as collection tactics. UCC section 2A-108 specifically applies to those transactions.

- Non-Deceptive Abuses. Most UDAP statutes prohibit unfair or unconscionable practices, but some state statutes only prohibit deceptive practices or a specific laundry list of deceptive practices. In those states, UCC section 2A-108's unconscionability standard is superior where the lessor's practice is abusive, but not deceptive.

- Statute of Limitations. Some UDAP statutes have a short limitations period. UCC section 2A-506 specifies a four-year period for actions for default under a lease contract.

- Equitable Relief. Not all UDAP statutes authorize equitable relief (and a few may not even authorize a damage recovery). UCC section 2A-108 authorizes a court to grant "appropriate relief."

- Attorney Fees. Some UDAP statutes do not authorize attorney fees, many do not mandate fees for consumers, while a few authorize fees for either party. UCC section 2A-108 mandates fees for a consumer, but authorizes fees for the lessor only if the consumer knew the action was groundless.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Sales (Article 2)Contract TermsUnconscionable AgreementsCommercial Law (UCC)Leases (Article 2A)General OverviewContracts LawDefensesUnconscionabilityGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsLease AgreementsPersonalty LeasesInstallment Lease Contracts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Cari Rentals v. Hall, Clearinghouse No. 49,940 (Iowa Dist. Ct. 1993).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 8 Fair Debt Collection

1A-8 Consumer Credit Law Manual 8.syn

§ 8.syn Synopsis to Chapter 8: Fair Debt Collection

§ 8.01 Overview of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

[1] Scope, Purpose, and Effective Date

[2] Sources of Law and Research Aids

[a] The Language of the Act

[b] Federal Trade Commission Informal Staff Letters

[c] FTC Staff Commentary on FDCPA

[d] Federal Trade Commission Formal Advisory Opinion

§ 8.02 Persons and Transactions Covered by the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

[1] Persons Who Must Comply as Debt Collectors

[a] Any Person Whose Principal Business Is Collecting Debts Is a "Debt Collector".

[b] Any Person Who Regularly Collects Debts Owed to Another Is a "Debt Collector".

[c] Creditors Using False Names Are "Debt Collectors"

[d] Repossession and Foreclosure Companies Are Treated as "Debt Collectors" Under Some Circumstances

[e] Flat Rate Collectors or Others Supplying Forms That Misrepresent Extent That They or Another Is Involved in Collecting a Debt Violate the Act

[i] Extent of Participation in the Collection Process

[ii] Lawyers Must Review File Before Signing Collection Letter

[f] Lawyers Regularly Collecting Consumer Debts Must Now Comply With All FDCPA Provisions

[i] 1986 Attorney Amendment

[ii] Scope of FDCPA Attorney Coverage

[iii] Issues Unique to Attorney Debt Collectors

[A] Venue Provision

[B] Communications With Third Parties

[C] Notice of Validation Rights

[D] Other Pitfalls to Avoid

[iv] Attorney Liable for Allowing Signature to Appear on Collection Letters Without Reviewing File

[v] Second Circuit Allows Lawyer to Dun and Disclose Before Reviewing Claim

[vi] FDCPA and Lawyers' Ethical Obligations Intertwine

[A] Lawyers' Collection Letters Must Avoid False Threat of Suit

[B] Interstate Collection Letters Must Avoid Misrepresenting Lawyer's Authority to Sue

[C] Representing Only Part of the Effects of Suit Is Deceptive

[D] Intermingling Activities of Collection Agency and Attorney May Be Unlawful

[g] FDCPA Applies to Debt Buyers

[2] New Coverage of Collection of Federal Income Taxes by Collection Agencies

[3] Persons Specifically Excluded From the Term "Debt Collector."

[a] Creditors' Employees Collecting in the Name of the Creditor Are Specifically Excluded

[b] A Commonly Owned or Affiliated Corporate Collector Collecting Only for Its Affiliates Is Specifically Excluded if It Is Not Principally a Debt Collector

[c] State and Federal Officials Performing Their Duties Are Specifically Excluded

[d] Process Servers Are Specifically Excluded

[e] Bona Fide Nonprofit Consumer Credit Counselors Are Specifically Excluded

[f] Persons Collecting Debts as Part of Bona Fide Fiduciary or Escrow Arrangements Are Specifically Excluded

[g] An Extender of Credit Collecting on Behalf of Another a Debt It Originally Extended Is Specifically Excluded

[h] Persons Collecting Debts Not in Default When Obtained Are Specifically Excluded

[i] The Enforcer of a Security Interest in an Account Used as Collateral for a Commercial Loan Is Specifically Excluded

[j] Check Collection Companies Disguised as District Attorneys

[4] Transactions Covered by the Act

[a] The Act Covers Only Debts Allegedly Owed by a Natural Person

[b] Consumer Debts, Not Commercial, Are Covered

[i] A Broad Range of Consumer Debts Are Covered

[ii] Coverage of Noncontractual Obligations Questioned

[5] FDCPA Protection of Persons Other Than Consumers

[6] Collection Activities Covered by the FDCPA

[a] "Communications" Covered by the FDCPA

[b] Litigation Activities Covered by the FDCPA

§ 8.03 Consumer Protections and Rights Under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

[1] General Principles of Construction of the Act

[2] FDCPA Limits a Collector's Communications With a Consumer

[a] Consumers' Privacy and Relationships Protected

[b] Contacts at Unusual or Inconvenient Times or Places Prohibited

[c] Collector May Not Contact a Consumer It Knows to Be Represented by an Attorney

[d] Contacts at Workplace Are Restricted

[e] Informing Most Other People of the Consumer's Indebtedness Is Prohibited

[i] Collector May Contact Certain Nondebtors

[ii] Contacts in Other Situations

[f] Obtaining Location Information About a Consumer From Other Persons Is Strictly Regulated

[g] Consumers May Waive, by Direct Prior Consent, Protections From Collection Contacts

[h] Right to Stop Collection Contacts

[3] Conduct Serving to Harass, Oppress, or Abuse Is Prohibited

[a] Harassing, Oppressive, and Abusive Conduct Generally Prohibited

[b] Collectors May Not Use or Threaten Violence or Criminal Conduct

[c] Collectors May Not Use Obscene, Profane, or Abusive Language

[d] Publishing a List of Allegedly Defaulting Debtors Is Prohibited

[i] Certain Credit Reporting Permitted

[e] Advertising a Debt for Sale to Coerce Payment Is Prohibited

[f] Repeated or Continuous Telephone Calls Intended to Annoy, Abuse, or Harass Are Prohibited

[g] Collector's Employee Must Provide Meaningful Disclosure of Identity When Telephoning

[i] Care Must Be Exercised When Leaving Messages

[4] False, Deceptive, or Misleading Representations and Collection Methods Are Prohibited by 15 U.S.C. § 1692e

[a] Objective Standard of Deception Is Applied to Protect the "Least Sophisticated"

[b] Threat of Suit May Be Deceptive

[i] Misrepresenting Imminence of Suit, or Intent or Authority to Sue

[c] Other Threats and Statements May Be Deceptive

[i] Other Deceptive Threats

[ii] Other Deceptive Statements

[iii] Filing a Time-Barred Suit Is Deceptive

[d] Collectors May Not Falsely Imply an Affiliation With the Government

[e] Collectors May Not Falsely Represent the Character, Amount, or Legal Status of Any Debt

[f] Collectors May Not Falsely Represent the Services They Have Rendered or the Compensation to Which They Are Entitled

[g] Falsely Implying That a Person Is an Attorney or That a Communication Comes From an Attorney Is Prohibited

[h] Implying That Nonpayment Will Result in Arrest, Imprisonment, Garnishment, Attachment, Seizure, or Sale if Such Action Is Unlawful or Unintended Is Prohibited

[i] Threatening Unlawful or Unintended Action Is Prohibited

[i] False Threats

[j] Falsely Implying That Transfer of a Debt Will Preclude a Consumer's Claim or Defense or Will Subject the Consumer to a Practice Prohibited by the Act Is Prohibited

[k] Misrepresenting That the Consumer Committed a Crime or Engaged in Other Misconduct in Order to Disgrace the Consumer Is Prohibited

[l] Communicating or Threatening to Communicate False Credit Information Is Prohibited

[m] Using or Distributing Written Material Giving a False Impression of Its Source, Authorization, or Approval Is Prohibited

[n] False Representations or Deceptive Means to Collect or Attempt to Collect a Debt or to Obtain Information About a Consumer Is Prohibited

[o] Collector Must Disclose That a Communication Is to Collect a Debt and That Information Received Will Be Used for That Purpose

[i] Phone Calls, the Debt Collection Warning, and Other FDCPA Requirements

[p] Falsely Implying That Accounts Have Been Transferred to Innocent Purchasers for Value Is Prohibited

[q] Falsely Implying That Documents Are Legal Process Is Prohibited

[r] Using Any Business Name Other Than the True Name of the Collector's Business Is Prohibited

[s] Falsely Implying That Documents Are Not Legal Process Is Prohibited

[t] Falsely Implying That a Collector Operates or Is Employed by a Credit Reporting Agency Is Prohibited

[5] Use of Unfair or Unconscionable Collection Means Is Prohibited

[a] General Prohibition; Construing "Unfair" and "Unconscionable"

[b] Collecting Any Amount Not Permitted by Law Is Prohibited

[c] Restrictions on Soliciting, Accepting, and Depositing Postdated Checks

[d] Causing Expenses to a Person by Concealing the Collection Purpose of a Communication Is Prohibited

[e] Repossession or Threats of Repossession Are Prohibited When There Is No Right or Intent to Repossess or When the Property Is Exempt From Repossession

[f] Using a Postcard to Communicate With a Consumer Regarding a Debt Is Prohibited

[g] All Language and Symbols on Envelopes Used for Collection Are Prohibited Except for the Collector's Address and Name if the Name Does Not Indicate the Collector's Business

[6] Validation of a Debt

[a] Congress Considered Debt Validation Significant

[b] The FDCPA Regulates the Content, Placement, and Provision of the Validation Rights Notice

[i] Placement and Provision of Validation Rights Notice

[A] Placement of the Validation Rights Notice

[B] Providing Validation Rights Notices to Consumers

[1] Overview

[2] Providing the Notice Before Formal Pleadings

[3] Providing the Notice After Initiating Debt Collection with Formal Pleadings

[4] Exception for Certain Legal Notices

[ii] Content of Validation Notice

[iii] Collection Activities May Not Obscure the Validation Notice

[iv] Additions to Validation Notice to Avoid Deception or Confusion

[c] Verification of a Debt

[i] Consumers Should Request Verification in Writing

[ii] A Debt Collector Verifies a Debt by Providing Information That Is Responsive to the Consumer's Request

[iii] Debt Collector Must Cease Collecting From Time of Receipt of Verification Request Until Debt Verified

[d] Failure by a Consumer to Exercise Validation Rights May Not Be Taken as an Admission of Liability

[7] Consumer May Direct Application of Payments When a Collector Holds Multiple Accounts

[8] Restrictions Against Bringing Suits in Inconvenient Forums

[a] Suit Must Be Filed Where Consumer Resides or Signed Contract or Where Property Located

[b] Enforcing a Judgment in a Jurisdiction Where the Consumer Does Not Reside or Did Not Sign the Contract

§ 8.04 Availability of a Private Fair Debt Collection Practices Act Cause of Action

[1] Private Remedy Is Primary Enforcement Mechanism

[2] Cases and Parties Must Be Carefully Evaluated

[a] FDCPA Awards Increasing

[b] A Wide Range of Parties Plaintiff May Be Named Under the Act

[c] A Wide Range of Parties Defendant May Be Named Under the Act

[d] Parties to a Private FDCPA Action Are Entitled to a Trial by Jury

[3] Actual Damages Are Available to Any Person Injured by a Violation of the Act

[a] "Actual Damages" Are Defined Broadly by the Courts

[b] Some Proof of Actual Damages Must Be Offered

[c] Class Actions for Actual Damages May Be Maintained

[i] Common Questions Required for Class Actions

[ii] Manageability of Class Action

[4] Statutory Damages

[a] Statutory Damages Up to $1,000 Are Available in an Individual Action

[b] A Court Must Grant Statutory Damages When a Violation Contravenes the Purposes of the Act and Some Basis Is Provided for Statutory Damages

[c] In Determining Statutory Damages, Courts Must Consider the Intent, Frequency, Persistence, and Nature of the Noncompliance

[i] Enhancing Statutory Damages

[ii] Factors Reducing Statutory Damage

[d] An Award of Statutory Damages Is Not Necessarily Related to an Award of Actual Damages

[e] Multiple Statutory Damages

[i] Each Person Affected by Violation of the FDCPA May Be Entitled to Recover a Separate Statutory Award for Each Violation

[ii] Multiple Statutory Damages for Multiple Violations

[iii] Multiple Statutory Damages for Multiple Victims

[5] Punitive Damages

[a] Punitive Damages May Be Recovered in Addition to Actual or Statutory Damages in a Supplemental State Claim

[b] Punitive Damages in Supplemental State Claim

[c] Punitive Damages Under the FDCPA

[6] FDCPA Provides Statutory Damages in Class Actions

[a] Rule 23 and FDCPA Requirements for FDCPA Class Statutory Damages

[b] Increasing Class Recovery of Statutory Damages

[c] Factors Determining Amount of Class Statutory Damages

[7] Proof of Debt Collector's Intent Is Not Required

[8] Successful Plaintiffs Are Entitled to Awards of Costs and Reasonable Attorney Fees

[a] Attorney Fee Awards

[i] Truth in Lending Act and Civil Rights Precedents

[ii] Who Is Entitled to the Fee Award: The Attorney or the Client?

[iii] Individuals Appearing Pro Se

[iv] Calculating the Attorney Fee Award

[A] Determining Entitlement to an Award and the Lodestar

[B] Determining the Allowable Hours

[C] Establishing the Hourly Rate

[v] Fee Applications

[vi] Appealing Attorney Fee Awards

[A] Attorney May Pursue Appeal on Adequacy of Attorney Fee Award

[B] Fourth and Seventh Circuit Courts of Appeal Differ on Approach to FDCPA Attorney Fee Awards

[b] Tactical and Ethical Factors in Negotiating Settlement Containing Attorney Fees

[9] Declaratory or Injunctive Relief in Individual and Class Actions

[10] FDCPA Provides a One-Year Statute of Limitations for Private Actions

[11] Jurisdiction Over Violations of the FDCPA

[a] State and Federal Courts Have Concurrent Jurisdiction Over Private Civil Actions Under the FDCPA

[b] Personal Jurisdiction and Venue May Be Obtained Over Out-of-State Collectors

[i] U.S. District Court Venue

[c] State Law Claims Closely Related to an FDCPA Claim May Be Joined in Federal Suits

[d] Federal Courts May Permit Joinder of Parties Subject to a State Law Claim Closely Related to an FDCPA Claim

[12] Federal Agencies Responsible for Administrative Enforcement of the FDCPA

[a] Administrative Enforcement

[b] FTC Informal Staff Letters and Formal Advisory Opinions

[13] Relation of the FDCPA to State Laws

[a] FDCPA Preempts Inconsistent State Law Provisions

[b] FTC Must Exempt States With Substantially Similar, Adequately Enforced Laws

§ 8.05 Debt Collector's Defenses and Counterclaims Under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

[1] Only the Defenses Provided by the Act Are Available

[2] A Debt Collector May Recover Attorney Fees Upon Showing That an FDCPA Suit Was Brought to Harass the Collector

[3] Frivolous FDCPA Demand Letter Sparks Sanctions Award to Debt Collector

[4] Federal Courts Usually Refuse Supplemental Jurisdiction Over a Debt Collector's Counterclaim to Collect the Underlying Debt

[5] A Debt Collector Is Not Liable for Unintentional Violations Resulting From Bona Fide Error if the Collector Maintained Procedures to Avoid Such Errors

[6] Res Judicata or Estoppel May Bar an FDCPA Action That Should Have Been Raised as a Compulsory Counterclaim to an Already Adjudged Action on the Underlying Debt

[7] Other Rules May Bar FDCPA Claims in Specific Situations

[8] Good Faith Conformity With a Formal FTC Advisory Opinion Later Ruled Invalid Is a Defense to an FDCPA Suit

[9] Offers of Judgment

§ 8.06 Federal Trade Commission Debt Collection Law: Using FTC Law and Remedies

[1] FTC Decisions as Precedents for Actions Under the Federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act and State Laws

[2] FTC Requires Creditor to Oversee Its Collection Agencies' FDCPA Compliance

[3] Filing Complaints About Debt Collectors' Practices With the FTC

[4] FTC Decisions on Debt Collection Abuses

[a] Threats Misrepresenting a Collector's Intention to Take Legal Action Are Prohibited by the FTC Act

[b] It Is Deceptive for Collectors to Design Their Dunning Letters to Appear to Be Telegrams

[c] Misrepresenting the Existence of a Debt or the Amount Due Is Prohibited by the FTC Act

[d] The Use of Harassing or Abusive Telephone Calls or Letters Is an Unfair Practice Violating the FTC Act

[e] Contacting or Threatening to Contact Third Parties Is Unfair and Deceptive

[f] Filing Collection Suits in Courts Distant From the Consumer's Residence Is an Unfair Practice Prohibited by the FTC Act

[g] Misrepresenting the Adverse Impact of Nonpayment Upon a Consumer's Creditworthiness Is Prohibited by the FTC Act

[h] Misrepresenting a Fictitious Collection Agency as an Entity Separate From the Collector Is Deception Prohibited by the FTC Act

[i] Misrepresenting That a Claim Has Been or Will Be Transferred to an Attorney or Separate Department of a Collector Is Prohibited by the FTC Act

[j] Misrepresenting a Collector's Affiliation With the Government Is Prohibited by the FTC Act

[k] Using Subterfuge to Obtain a Consumer's Current Address or Place of Employment Is Prohibited

[l] Collection Letters That Simulate Legal Process Are Prohibited by the FTC Act

[m] Advertising "Easy Credit" While Using Rigorous Collection Methods Against Delinquent Consumers Is Deceptive

[5] FTC Informal Guides and Prospective Regulations

[a] Creditors and Other Collectors Should Look to the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act for Standards to Comply With the FTC Act

[b] FTC Credit Practices Rule Restricts Six Creditor Remedies

[i] Scope of the Rule

[ii] Private Remedies for FTC Credit Practices Rule Violations

[iii] Security Interests in Household Goods

[iv] Challenging Other Creditor Remedies

§ 8.07 Regulation of Federal Administrative Agencies' Collection Practices

[1] Congress Strengthens Federal Government's Debt Collection Powers

[2] Prelitigation Activities Governed by the Federal Claims Collection Act, the Debt Collection Act, and the Joint Regulations

[a] Overview

[i] The Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996

[b] The Federal Agency Must Make Proper Written Demand for Payment

[c] Release of Information to Credit Reporting Agencies

[d] Contracts With Private Debt Collection Agencies, Credit Reporting Agencies, and Collection Lawyers

[e] Interest Charges for Late Payment

[f] Collections Against Federal Employees

[g] Installment Plans and Other Settlements

[h] Intercept of Consumer's Federal Income Tax Refunds

[3] Department of Education: Student Loans

[4] Debtor Remedies for Illegal Agency Collection Practices

[a] Collection of Taxes by Private Debt Collection Agencies

[5] Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act

[a] Civil Procedure and Exemptions for Collection of Federal Government's Claims

[b] Prejudgment and Postjudgment Remedies

[c] Property Exempt From Seizure

[d] Distant Filings of Collection Suits Possible

§ 8.08 Other Federal Laws Affecting Debt Collection

[1] Fraudulent or Defamatory Use of Mails

[2] Collecting for Unordered Merchandise May Be Illegal

[3] Telephone Harassment

[4] Truth in Lending Disclosures

[5] Extortionate Collection Methods

[6] The Fair Credit Reporting Act

[7] UCC Article 3 and the Electronic Funds Transfers Act

[a] Preauthorized Drafts and UCC Article 3

[b] Electronic Funds Transfers

[c] Electronic Fund Transfers and NACHA Rules

[d] Other Remedies for Unauthorized Withdrawals

[8] Discrimination in Choice of Collection Tactics on the Basis of Consumer's Race, Religion, Sex, or Age

[9] Bankruptcy

[10] Special Regulations Affecting Military Personnel and Veterans

[a] Increasing Protections for Military Personnel

[b] Servicemembers Civil Relief Act

[c] Veteran's Home Loan Debt Collections

[11] Other Federal Restrictions on Debt Collection

§ 8.09 Other State Remedies

[1] Identity Theft

[2] Consumer Protections Under State Debt Collection Statutes and Regulations

[a] Overview

[b] Validity of State Debt Collection Statutes Upheld

[c] State Debt Collection Statutes' Coverage

[d] State Debt Collection Statutes' Protections

[i] Privacy

[ii] Abusive Collection Activities Prohibited

[iii] Unfair and Deceptive Debt Collection Activities Prohibited

[e] State Debt Collection Statutes' Remedies

[3] General State Consumer Protection Statutes Prohibiting Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices (UDAP)

[a] UDAP Coverage of Debt Collection Activities

[b] Deceptive Debt Collection Activities

[c] Unfair and Unconscionable Debt Collection Activities Under UDAP Statutes

[d] UDAP Remedies for Debt Collection Violations

[4] State Credit Repair Organization Statutes

[a] Introduction

[b] Coverage

[c] Substantive Prohibitions

[d] Private Remedies

[5] Unauthorized and Unethical Practice of Law by Creditors, Lawyers, and Collection Agencies

[a] Unauthorized Practice of Law by Creditors

[b] Unethical Practice of Law by Lawyers

[c] Unauthorized Practice of Law by Collection Agencies

[d] Remedies for Unauthorized Practice of Law

[6] State Criminal Statutes

[a] Other State Causes of Action

[7] Tort Remedies

[8] Consumer Protection Defenses to Medical Bills

[9] Enjoining Abusive Debt Collection Practices

[10] State Restrictions on the Recovery of Collection Expenses

[a] Overview

[b] Charging Collection Fees Proportional to Debt and Other Excessive Fees Penalize Consumers

[c] State Legislation Limiting Recovery of Collection Expenses

[d] Case Law: Noncontractual Collection Fees

[e] Case Law: Contractual Collection Fees

[i] General

[11] Threats to Criminally Prosecute Consumer Under Bad Check Laws

[12] Arbitration and Use of Alternative Dispute Mechanism to Collect Debts

[a] Creditors Increasingly Using Arbitration to Collect Consumer Debts

[b] Validity and Scope of Arbitration Clauses

[c] Arbitration Is Unenforceable Where It Violates State Collection or Credit Law

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 8 Fair Debt Collection

1-8 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 8.01

§ 8.01 Overview of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

[1] Scope, Purpose, and Effective Date

The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act of 1978 n1 ("the Act" or "FDCPA") promotes ethical business practices by debt collectors. n2 The FDCPA offers some of the strongest protections provided by any federal or state law regulating the activities of debt collectors. The Act was the result of compromises that resulted in its bipartisan support and support by both the major debt collection trade associations involved and consumer organizations.

Although the Act is limited in coverage, mainly to debt collection agencies and lawyers, its influence is significant. The Act should affect the development of case law dealing with torts that may be committed in the course of abusive collection efforts. The Act's detailed provisions and the developing case law construing those provisions are likely to be used for guidance by state courts in states with debt collection statutes that contain similar standards.

The FDCPA restricts debt collectors' collection efforts and choice of venue. The FDCPA applies to debt collector's activities in 49 states; Maine's substantially similar law applies to collection activities in Maine. n3 The term "debt collector" is defined by several tiers of definition within the FDCPA; it generally includes debt collection agencies, creditors using false names or collecting for other creditors, collection attorneys, purchasers of delinquent debts, repossession companies, and suppliers or designers of deceptive forms, n4 but generally excludes creditors collecting their own debts.

The FDCPA establishes general standards of proscribed conduct, defines and restricts abusive collection acts (in detail), and provides specific rights for consumers. General standards of proscribed conduct protect a consumer from invasion of privacy, harassment, abuse, false or deceptive representations, and unfair or unconscionable collection methods. n5 Specific debt collection acts prohibited include late night or repetitive phone calls and false threats of legal action.

The Act gives a consumer the right to require by letter that a collector stop all collection contacts. It requires a collector to deal with a consumer's attorney when the consumer has one. It gives a consumer the right to require a collector to verify the existence, legality, or amount of a disputed debt that it is attempting to collect. Debt collectors must provide two types of notices to consumers under the FDCPA. The courts require strict adherence to the Act's explicit terms to accomplish the remedial and preventative goals of Congress. n6

The Act became effective on March 20, 1978. The first substantive amendment to the FDCPA in 1986 repealed an exemption for most attorneys and broadened the Act's coverage to apply to attorneys who regularly collect consumer debts for creditors or collection agencies. The second amendment, passed in 1996, altered the debt collection notice.The third amendment, passed in 2006, altered some of the rules for giving debt verification notices and provided a potential exemption for district attorneys' closely supervised check collection agencies.

The FDCPA's constitutionality has been upheld. n7

[2] Sources of Law and Research Aids

[a] The Language of the Act

The language of the FDCPA, sometimes overlooked by courts and lawyers, is the clearest expression of congressional will, and should be the first point of reference in any action under the Act. n8

[b] Federal Trade Commission Informal Staff Letters

The Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") staff advises debt collectors, attorneys, and consumers of its policies and interpretations of the Act. Because the FTC is the primary enforcement agency under the Act, n9 its advice is entitled to some weight and deference. This advice is frequently presented in informal staff letters discussing the Act's requirements and their application to current industry practices. While the courts frequently cite the informal staff letters, they are not bound by them. n10

[c] FTC Staff Commentary on FDCPA

In 1988, the Federal Trade Commission hatched a final version of its Staff Commentary on the FDCPA. n11 The Commentary, which is not binding on the FTC, the public or the courts, n12 was intended to replace several hundred FTC letters. For the most part, the final Commentary embodies the original 1986 proposed Commentary n13 and staff positions developed in subsequent informal FTC staff letters since the 1986 proposal. n14

The major weakness of the Commentary is its superficiality. It often lacks any rationale for its positions, and where it does provide some rationale, it is much less analytical than other sources of FDCPA law--the statute, legislative history, case law and FTC informal staff letters. Because of this, it is likely to have less persuasive value to courts than other sources of FDCPA law, but lawyers litigating FDCPA cases must address the positions taken in the Commentary. The Commentary also fails to acknowledge where its positions conflict with court decisions or the plain language of the FDCPA. It has not been internally updated to reflect current FTC interpretations and policies.

[d] Federal Trade Commission Formal Advisory Opinion

In 2000, the FTC issued its first formal advisory opinion on the FDCPA, responding to the request of the American Collectors Association. The advisory opinion addressed two issues. First, the Commission advised that collectors may undertake collection activities during the thirty-day period during which a consumer may request the collector to validate debt as long as the collection activities do not overshadow or are not inconsistent with the notice of validation rights. Second, it advised that the FDCPA does not preempt any state laws that do not allow the FDCPA validation notice to be included in the summons when it is the first collection communication with the consumer because there is no conflict as the FDCPA allows the validation notice to be sent separately within five days of the initial collection communication with the consumer. n15

The FDCPA provides that an act done in good faith conformity with an advisory opinion of the FTC is insulated from FDCPA liability. n16 The FTC has a formal procedure for issuing formal advisory opinions. n17

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionCommunicationsBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionLiabilityBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionUnfair PracticesReal Property LawLandlord & TenantTenant's Remedies & RightsFair Debt Collection Practices Act

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692-1692 o, reprinted in Vol. 1B infra.

(n2)Footnote 2. For complete coverage of the Act, along with Official Federal Trade Commission [hereinafter FTC] staff commentary and informal FTC letters, case summaries, sample documents and pleadings, etc., see National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection (6th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n3)Footnote 3. Maine was granted an exemption from the Fair Debt Collections Practices Act [hereinafter FDCPA] by the FTC pursuant to the FTC's authority under 15 U.S.C. § 1692 o. 60 Fed. Reg. 66,972 (Dec. 27, 1995) (effective Mar. 26, 1996).

(n4)Footnote 4. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(4), (6).

(n5)Footnote 5. Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) ("The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act prohibits debt collectors' from making false or misleading representations and from engaging in various abusive and unfair practices"). See also Griffith, Fair Debt Collection Practices Act: Some Problems In Interpretation, 27 Willamette L. Rev. 237 (1991).

(n6)Footnote 6. Frey v. Gangwish, 970 F.2d 1516 (6th Cir. 1992) (the FDCPA is "an extraordinarily broad statute" and must be enforced "as Congress has written it"). See also Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) . See also Deere v. Javitch, Block & Rathbone, L.L.P., 413 F. Supp. 2d 886 (S.D. Ohio 2006) ("The Sixth Circuit has described the statute as 'extraordinarily broad' and its terms must be literally enforced.").

(n7)Footnote 7. United States v. Cent. Adjustment Bureau, Inc., 823 F.2d 880 (5th Cir. 1987) . See also Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) (effect must be given to the plain meaning of the statute).

(n9)Footnote 9. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692l(a), 1692m.

(n10)Footnote 10. See Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) (no deference to FTC staff commentary position that was "outside of the range of reasonable interpretation of the Act's express language").

(n11)Footnote 11. 53 Fed. Reg. 50097 (Dec. 13, 1988) .

(n12)Footnote 12. 53 Fed. Reg., 50101 (Dec. 13, 1988) See Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) , aff'd, Jenkins v. Heintz, 124 F.3d 824, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 22745 (7th Cir. Ill. 1997) (FTC staff's Commentary is not binding on the Commission or the public and is not entitled to deference when it conflicts with the FDCPA's plain language); Scott v. Jones, 964 F.2d 314 (4th Cir. 1992) (court may not defer to an FTC informal staff letter to the defendant nor to the FTC staff's FDCPA commentary when that would defeat express congressional language in the FDCPA); Carroll v. Wolpoff & Abramson, 961 F.2d 459 (4th Cir. 1992) , cert. denied, Wolpoff & Abramson v. Carroll, 506 U.S. 905 (1992) (the court will not abide by the FTC's advisory opinion where it contradicted the statute's unambiguous statement). See also Shapiro & Meinhold v. Zartman, 823 P.2d 120 (Colo. 1992) , aff'g Zartman v. Shapiro & Meinhold, 811 P.2d 409 (Colo. Ct. App. 1990) (contrary FTC staff letters and commentary ignored by court); Goldfarb, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Jan. 16, 1987) (FTC may not promulgate regulations. The proposed FTC Official Staff Commentary will not be binding on the FTC, the public or the courts. It reflects the staff's enforcement policy.).

(n13)Footnote 13. 51 Fed. Reg. 8019 (Mar. 7, 1986) . See FTC Proposes Staff Commentary on FDCPA, 4 NCLC REPORTS, Debt Collection & Repo Ed. 41 (Mar./Apr. 1986).

(n14)Footnote 14. E.g., FTC Staff Rapidly Expanding Its Litigation Loophole to the FDCPA, 5 NCLC REPORTS, Debt Collection & Repo Ed. 9 (Nov./Dec. 1986); Are Tort Claims Arising From A Car Accident Covered By The FDCPA? 5 NCLC REPORTS, Debt Collection & Repo Ed. 26 (July/Aug. 1987).

(n15)Footnote 15. Mezines, FTC Advisory Opinion (Mar. 31, 2000), available at http://www.ftc.gov/os/2000/04/fdcpaadvisoryopinion.htm.

(n16)Footnote 16. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(e).

(n17)Footnote 17. 16 C.F.R. § 1.1 (2000).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 8 Fair Debt Collection

1-8 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 8.02

§ 8.02 Persons and Transactions Covered by the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

Coverage by the FDCPA is largely determined by the definition of "debt collector." n1 That definition is lengthy and incorporates three other terms, also defined in the Act--"consumer," "debt," and "creditor." n2 This makes coverage questions the most complex area of the FDCPA.

The Act generally applies to collection agencies, attorneys, creditors using a false name, creditors collecting for another person, certain activities of repossession companies, suppliers or designers of deceptive forms, purchasers of debt after default, debt poolers (for profit), and check "guarantee" services.

The Act may not require compliance of any person who does not "regularly" engage in debt collection. The Act applies only to "debts" which arise out of consumer not business transactions.

Generally excluded are creditors (collecting their own debts)--retail stores, banks, finance companies, etc.; assignees (before default)--car finance companies, banks, etc.; government employees, business debts, and nonprofit credit counseling services.

A purchaser of a debt in default is a debt collector under the FDCPA, not an exempt creditor. n3 When the FDCPA does not apply, the state laws discussed in Section 8.09, infra, are likely to provide a remedy, and are sometimes stronger than the FDCPA.

[1] Persons Who Must Comply as Debt Collectors

[a] Any Person Whose Principal Business Is Collecting Debts Is a "Debt Collector".

The term "debt collector" means any person who uses any instrumentality of interstate commerce or the mails in any business the principal purpose of which is the collection of any debts. n4

This phrase and the one following it provide the general language defining members of the class "debt collector," the term triggering most provisions of the Act. Since nearly all collectors use a telephone or the mails in their business, the limiting requirement of this part of the definition is that the collector's principal business purpose must be to collect consumer obligations.

Under the foregoing definition, most debt collection agencies and their employees are covered by the FDCPA, whether or not they own the debts they collect. Collection lawyers may be covered by this phrase as well as the following phrase in the Act. A collection agency's collection law firm is a debt collector, and the collection agency may be liable for the firm's FDCPA violations. n5 The definition may cover flat-rate debt collectors (companies hired by a creditor for a flat fee simply to mail debtors letters requesting payment directly to the creditor) and credit counselors who, for a profit, arrange for payment of consumers' debts. It may cover a check guarantee service.

[b] Any Person Who Regularly Collects Debts Owed to Another Is a "Debt Collector".

The term "debt collector" means any person who regularly collects or attempts to collect, directly or indirectly, debts owed or due or asserted to be owed or due another. n6

The persons covered by this language overlap to a great extent those covered by the preceding phrase defining "debt collector." Many collectors are brought in, however, who are not covered by the preceding phrase. These include collectors who partly engage in a business other than collecting debts (e.g., extending credit, practice of law or credit reporting). n7 Ownership of the debt is not necessarily determinative of coverage. n8

[c] Creditors Using False Names Are "Debt Collectors" n9

Creditors are generally exempt from FDCPA coverage. n10 This sentence of the FDCPA makes a creditor subject to the Act when it uses a name other than its own which suggests the involvement of a third-party collector, poses as a collection agency, or uses a third party's name in its collection efforts. The creditor may also become subject to the Act with its in-house lawyer who collects on letterhead suggesting that it is from a separate law office. n11 A creditor does not run afoul of this provision by referring a customer to its internal loan counseling department. n12

[d] Repossession and Foreclosure Companies Are Treated as "Debt Collectors" Under Some Circumstances

For the purpose of section 1692f(6) of this title, n13 such term ["debt collector'] also includes any person who uses any instrumentality of interstate commerce or the mails in any business the principal purpose of which is the enforcement of security interests. n14 This sentence contained in the definition of "debt collector" subjects repossession companies and others whose principal business is enforcing security interests to the FDCPA's proscription n15 of specific unfair or unconscionable means of enforcing security interests.

Because the 15 U.S.C. section 1692f(6) proscriptions only apply if nonjudicial means are being used, security interest enforcers are constrained by this phrase only if they resort to self-help repossession, nonjudicial foreclosure, or other out-of-court enforcement tactics as opposed to replevin or similar judicial proceedings. n16

Some courts have split on the application of other provisions of the FDCPA to non-judicial n17 and judicial foreclosure. n18

In 2006 the Fourth and Fifth Circuits independently came to the conclusion that foreclosure lawyers may come under the general definition of debt collector subject to all of the FDCPA requirements. In Wilson v. Draper & Goldberg, P.L.L.C., n19 the Fourth Circuit held that the FDCPA applies to lawyers conducting a deed of trust foreclosure, at least when the lawyers tell the debtor how much must be paid to reinstate the mortgage. The court rejected all three of the foreclosure lawyers' arguments: (1) because they were engaging in a foreclosure, no "debt" as defined by the Act was involved; (2) they were exempt as "fiduciaries;" and (3) as enforcers of a security interest, they were only required to comply with the requirements of 15 U.S.C. § 1692f(6). A dissenting opinion argued that the debt collectors should have fallen within the exemption for fiduciaries.

The court found two bases to reject the argument that there was no debt involved. First, the court rejected several decisions n20 that held that merely enforcing a security interest did not involve an obligation to pay money; to the contrary, following the Third Circuit's reasoning in Piper v. Portnoff Law Assocs. that the FDCPA may apply to in rem proceedings, the court held that the underlying mortgage was a qualifying transaction involving the loan of money. Second, the court pointed out that the collection attorneys in any event had sought payment of money in this case by writing the homeowner stating how much was to be paid to reinstate the mortgage.

The Fifth Circuit reached the same result in Kaltenbach v. Richards, a pro se case, without referring to the Fourth Circuit decision. n21 The Fifth Circuit looked at the breadth of FDCPA definition of debt collector and held that the complaint's allegation that the foreclosure attorney was a "debt collector" engaged in "collection activities" sufficed to state a claim against the foreclosure attorney for failing to provide the notice of debt validation rights. The foreclosure attorney argued that the last sentence of the definition of debt collector limited its compliance obligation to only the requirements of section 1692f(6). The Fifth Circuit rejected that construction and deferred to the Federal Trade Commission's interpretation that an enforcer of security interests could be subject to all the requirements of the FDCPA, not just section 1692f(6). n22 The Fifth Circuit pointed out that any other interpretation would make the FDCPA's convenient venue requirement for foreclosure in section 1692i superfluous, violating an important principal of statutory construction.

Finally, the Fifth Circuit noted that the focus of the key definition of "debt collector" is "regular" collection activities, not the specific foreclosure activities, of the foreclosing attorney. If the foreclosure attorney regularly seeks or obtains payments from the consumer, it would be subject to all the requirements of the FDCPA, even if it was not seeking payment at the time of the FDCPA violation in the particular case.

The overwhelming majority of foreclosures result in payment of the mortgage through refinancing or the homeowner's sale of the home before the foreclosure sale, or the reinstatement of the mortgage after payments, rather than foreclosure of the mortgage. n23 This strongly suggests that foreclosure attorneys are regularly collecting debts while they pursue foreclosure.

[e] Flat Rate Collectors or Others Supplying Forms That Misrepresent Extent That They or Another Is Involved in Collecting a Debt Violate the Act

This section n24 is the only proscription of the Act not limited to "debt collectors." Even individuals specifically excluded from the FDCPA definition of "debt collector," e.g., creditors, are liable for violations of this section.

[i] Extent of Participation in the Collection Process

There is no set minimum level of sufficient participation in the collection of a debt to take a flat-rate or any other collector outside the proscription of section 1692j.

[ii] Lawyers Must Review File Before Signing Collection Letter

By implication, a letter on a lawyer's letterhead would imply greater participation than a letter on a collection agency's letterhead because of the stronger remedies usually pursued by attorneys. If an attorney, for example, supplied form letters to a creditor or collection agency and did not otherwise participate in the collection efforts in the manner implied by the letters, he or she violates this section. n25

[f] Lawyers Regularly Collecting Consumer Debts Must Now Comply With All FDCPA Provisions

[i] 1986 Attorney Amendment

An attorney who regularly collects consumer debts is subject to all provisions of the FDCPA. n26 Even in-house counsel collecting a debt for his or her employer may be covered if he or she sends collection letters that are designed to make the debtor believe that a private attorney has intervened. n27

[ii] Scope of FDCPA Attorney Coverage

The definition of "debt collector" includes any attorney "who regularly collects or attempts to collect, directly or indirectly, [consumer] debts owed or due or asserted to be owed or due another." n28 The key to the breadth of this definition is the concept of engaging in collection activities "regularly." An attorney meets the "regularly" test if the attorney engages in debt collection in more than isolated instances, if it is a minor but regular part of the attorney's practice, or if the attorney collects debts more than a few times in a year. An attorney who very seldom collects debts is not covered. n29

The Second Circuit found in Goldstein n30 that a lawyer issuing 145 notices demanding delinquent rent in a twelve-month period as part of an ongoing relationship with a landlord was "regularly" collecting debt as required to be covered by the FDCPA despite the collection work constituting less than .5% of his revenues. The court reviewed five factors: the number, frequency, and pattern of collection communications; staff and systems assigned to collections work; and an ongoing relationship with the creditor. n31 The court also noted that a law firm's marketing of collection services would also weigh in favor of finding regularity.

The Goldstein decision is significant as it joins the Fifth Circuit n32 in rejecting a line of decisions that focuses on the law firm's debt collection cases or revenues as a portion of its total cases or revenues, rather than looking at the whole picture including the number of collection cases handled. n33 Other courts find ninety collection cases in five months or four percent n34 of the caseload sufficient to meet the regularity test but not just twenty-three n35 or thirty-five n36 collection cases in one year or so.

The FDCPA's legislative history elaborates on what was meant by "regularly": "The requirement that debt collection be done regularly would exclude a person who collects a debt for another in an isolated instance, but would include those who collect for others in the regular course of business." n37

In contrast, the Sixth Circuit held that a collection lawyer must be substantially involved in debt collection work to be covered by the FDCPA. The Sixth Circuit inferred that the removal from the FDCPA of a broad exemption for attorneys in 1986 raised the threshold from "more than isolated instances of collection" and "in the regular course of business" to a requirement of "substantial" attorney debt collection for coverage to take effect. n38

[iii] Issues Unique to Attorney Debt Collectors

[A] Venue Provision

The venue provision requires that debt collectors bring suit only in the district where the consumer signed the contract upon which the suit is based or where the consumer resides. n39 Actions to enforce an interest in real property may be brought only where the property is located. n40 Any less protective state law venue provision is preempted. n41

[B] Communications With Third Parties

The Act's limitations on communication with third parties raise special issues in the context of discovery and post-judgment proceedings. However, the FDCPA contemplates the need to deal with third parties during litigation. n42

[C] Notice of Validation Rights

As a result of amendments to the FDCPA years apart, the initial notice of validation rights and of the debt collection purpose n43 need not be made until later if the first communication by a collection attorney to a consumer is a formal pleading. In that situation the notice of the consumer's debt validation rights must be sent in the initial communication after any formal pleading. This is likely to be in the collection attorney's conversations with the consumer about the validity of the claim against the consumer or regarding payment of the claim or judgment. Because the later event triggering the debt validation notice may not be readily anticipated by the debt collector's system, it may be safer to provide the debt validation and the debt collection warning in a pre-suit demand letter encouraging the airing of disputes before suit. This helps assure that the collection suit is the collection device of last, rather than first, resort.

[D] Other Pitfalls to Avoid

Most of the practices forbidden by the FDCPA have long been prohibited by ethical standards applicable to attorneys. Violation of these ethical standards may now lead to the consumer's recovery of FDCPA actual and statutory damages and attorney fees.

Collection attorneys should avoid these other common trouble areas:

- Threatening to sue when there is no intention or ability to do so;
- Misrepresenting the source of the collection letter or the attorney's involvement (by allowing a collection agency to send out a demand letter over the name of an attorney); n44
- Imposing specious deadlines;
- Misleading representations as to the effect of litigation;
- Filing suit other than in the court permitted by 15 U.S.C. section 1692.

[iv] Attorney Liable for Allowing Signature to Appear on Collection Letters Without Reviewing File

15 U.S.C. section 1692e(3) prohibits misrepresenting that "any communication is from an attorney." Where an attorney exercised no control or supervision over a debt collection letter, the appearance of his name and signature on a letter would violate 15 U.S.C. sections 1692e and 1692e(10). n45

A Seventh Circuit decision revisits the issue of how much involvement is sufficient for a collection lawyer to sign his name to a collection letter without misrepresenting that he is involved as a lawyer in the collection of the debt. The decision builds on prior decisions of the court, and finds a lawyer's cursory information about individual GM credit cards insufficient to make a legal judgment that there was a legitimate claim to pursue. The court found that the collection attorney did not make a "considered, professional judgment" that individual consumers were delinquent and were candidates for legal action or that the dunning letter should be sent to them. Factors showing lack of attorney involvement were:

- The creditor made the decision about which consumers should receive the letters.
- The creditor did not provide sufficient information about the account for the collection lawyer to reach an independent, professional judgment about liability and collectibility.
- The use of the same form letter in every case and the great volume of accounts to which it was sent reinforced the finding that there was no use of professional judgment.
- The collection lawyer's role in dealing with responses to the letter was not more than ministerially referring most of them back to creditor. He had no authority to negotiate payments or settle the debt.

- The collection lawyer's flat fee of $2.45 per letter suggested that he was not being paid by the creditor for his legal judgment but rather for the marquee value of his name.

- The collection lawyer was not ever authorized to file suit for the creditor. n46

[v] Second Circuit Allows Lawyer to Dun and Disclose Before Reviewing Claim

In a decision that will give a big boost to the amount of junk mail consumers get, the Second Circuit, in Greco v. Trauner, Cohen & Thomas, n47 allowed a lawyer to send mass-mailed duns before making any evaluation of the legal merits of a claim as long as the lawyer clearly discloses to the consumer that the lawyer has not reviewed the claim. The court reasoned that even an unsophisticated consumer would not be misled where the collector's disclosure was clear and there was nothing in the letter to suggest the sender was actually acting in the capacity of a lawyer.

With no struggle, the court distinguished its prior decisions in Clomon n48 and Miller n49 finding deception when a lawyer sent a dun without being involved in evaluating the legality of the claim. The court was able to build on hedging language in the Miller decision:

> [T]he use of an attorney's signature implies--at least in the absence of language to the contrary--that the attorney signing the letter formed an opinion about how to manage the case of the debtor to whom the letter was sent. n50

The court distinguished Clomon and Miller based on the disclaimer, the lack of any language in the letter conflicting with the disclaimer, and the lack of any signature on the letter. The Clomon and Miller dunning letters contained strong requests for payment, facsimile signatures, and no disclaimers. In this case there was a clear disclosure, only a request the consumer call the law firm, the debt validation rights notice, and the law firm's name typed on the signature line.

[vi] FDCPA and Lawyers' Ethical Obligations Intertwine

Concepts of unfairness for FDCPA purposes can be established by the American Bar Association's Code of Professional Responsibility or the state bar association's equivalent and its predecessors. ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility DR 7-104(A)(2) permits a lawyer to advise a self-represented person adverse to the lawyer's client to seek her own counsel and to make certain other related statements. These statements may include, where appropriate: identification of general legal issues that the self-represented person should address with a lawyer; undisputed statements of fact or law such as the position of the lawyer's client on a contested issue; and references to court-sponsored programs designed to assist a self-represented litigant. A lawyer may at any time explain or clarify the lawyer's role to the self-represented litigant and advise that person to obtain counsel. The lawyer must volunteer this information if she knows or should know that a self-represented person misunderstands the lawyer's role in the matter.

[A] Lawyers' Collection Letters Must Avoid False Threat of Suit

There can be little doubt that a letter from an attorney inherently conveys the impression that litigation is imminent. This impression is false if the attorney does not in fact have the authority and intention to promptly bring suit. In that case, this can be an ethical violation.

A collection letter may mislead even further by implying that a lawsuit has already been filed against the debtor. An American Bar Association ethical opinion condemned a collection letter that simulated legal process because, "unless carefully read, [it] will create the false impression that suit has been filed." n51

The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act prohibits false or misleading representations, but also prohibits false or misleading implications. n52

[B] Interstate Collection Letters Must Avoid Misrepresenting Lawyer's Authority to Sue

A lawyer who sends a collection letter into a state in which he or she is not admitted to practice, without disclosing that fact, may violate the FDCPA. n53 The failure to disclose the states in which the lawyer is admitted to practice is a deceptive omission.

[C] Representing Only Part of the Effects of Suit Is Deceptive

A demand letter can be deceptive if it fails to mention that post-judgment remedies include exemptions and due process protections: a judgment debtor is entitled to notice, and some of his or her property is safeguarded by exemption statutes. Without these qualifications, the mention of post-judgment remedies in an attorney's letter is misleading, can cause undue concern, and violates the FDCPA. n54

[D] Intermingling Activities of Collection Agency and Attorney May Be Unlawful

Collection agencies and lawyers that work together must take care that their roles are kept separate. Consumers should not be confused about whether a collection letter is from the attorney or the collection agency. Misrepresentation of the source of a document is specifically prohibited by the FDCPA. n55 The FDCPA also specifically prohibits the false representation or implication "that any communication is from an attorney." n56

The FTC takes the position that it is deceptive for a collection agency to send a letter under an attorney's letterhead without the attorney's supervision. n57 This has also been found to be an ethical violation.

[g] FDCPA Applies to Debt Buyers

The FDCPA covers debt buyers who engage in debt collection activities. n58 In Federal Trade Comm'n v. Check Investors, Inc., n59 the Third Circuit held that it is immaterial that the defendants actually owned the debt they were trying to collect; that did not make them creditors under the Act. The focus must be on "whether a debt was in default when acquired to determine the status of 'creditor' vs. 'debt collector.' " n60 This reinforces the case law on the FDCPA's applicability to the growing number of debt buyers. One court held that the debt buyer's parent company was also a debt collector since the facts showed that the parent was "thoroughly enmeshed in the debt collection business" and "a significant participant in the debt collection process. n61 The seminal decision on the coverage of debt buyers is Kimber v. Federal Fin. Corp. n62 The coverage of a debt buyer that delegates all of the actual debt collection work depends on the nature and level of its involvement with the collection entity.

[2] New Coverage of Collection of Federal Income Taxes by Collection Agencies

In 2004 Congress extended new protections to taxpayers when it enacted a new law that allows the Internal Revenue Service to hire private debt collection agencies to collect federal tax debts from financially distressed families. n63 The new law provides that "[t]he provisions of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act shall apply to any qualified tax collection contract." n64 The FDCPA does not apply, however, to the extent superseded by (1) the FDCPA-like prohibitions already in the tax code, (2) tax code restrictions on contact with third parties, and (3) "any other provision" of the tax code. n65 In other words, private tax collectors must comply with the FDCPA except where the tax code specifies conflicting duties.

As part of this new law, Congress specifically created a private cause of action against a debt collector who recklessly, intentionally, or negligently disregards any provision of the tax code or any regulation under it. n66 The taxpayer has the right to bring suit in federal court for "actual, direct economic damages," with a cap of $1,000,000 ($100,000 in the case of negligence), plus costs. n67 Unlike suits where the misdeeds are committed by IRS employees, the plaintiff need not exhaust administrative remedies. However, the new law insulates the IRS from any misconduct by the private collection, permitting suit to be brought against the private tax collector only, not against the United States. n68

It is also clear that private collectors are liable for common law torts committed in the course of collecting tax debts. The new law explicitly provides that the civil remedy it creates "shall not be an exclusive remedy." n69 It also appears that the taxpayer should be able to assert a claim under the FDCPA against the collector. While the new law says that the FDCPA shall apply to the contract, the legislative history shows that Congress meant by this language that provisions of the FDCPA "apply to the private debt collection company." n70 It is reasonable to interpret the new law as applying the FDCPA in full, including its private cause of action, to private tax collectors. The enactment of this language also suggests that Congress disagrees with the courts that have construed the term "debt" in the FDCPA narrowly as not to applying to tax debts. n71 The IRS expects to have private debt collectors collecting account in early 2007.

[3] Persons Specifically Excluded From the Term "Debt Collector."

Because "debt collector" is the principal triggering term for all but one n72 of the FDCPA's requirements, the ten exclusions from the term shield exempted individuals from most provisions of the Act.

[a] Creditors' Employees Collecting in the Name of the Creditor Are Specifically Excluded

This section n73 excludes from most FDCPA requirements a creditor's in-house collectors who use the creditor's true business name. n74 Creditors lose their exemption if they use a false name that indicates a separate debt collector is involved. n75 Even if they used the creditor's true business name, however, they may be covered if their collection contacts were designed to make the debtor believe that an independent collector had intervened. n76 By implication, creditor corporations collecting their own debts in their own name are also excluded because they can only act through their employees and officers. While a creditor may be responsible for its collection agencies' violations of state law, the weight of authority is that the FDCPA does not impose vicarious liability on FDCPA exempt creditors for their collection agencies' FDCPA violations. n77

[b] A Commonly Owned or Affiliated Corporate Collector Collecting Only for Its Affiliates Is Specifically Excluded if It Is Not Principally a Debt Collector

This exception n78 applies to debts transferred from one corporate affiliate or commonly owned organization to another, so long as the transferee is not principally a debt collector and collects transferred debts only for corporate affiliates. n79 One finance company branch, for example, may transfer a debt to a corporate affiliate in another city or state because the consumer owing the debt has moved, without falling outside this exclusion.

This section does not exclude from coverage unaffiliated companies transferring debts n80 or companies whose principal business is debt collection, regardless of their affiliation with the transferring entities. Nor does the exclusion apply where the transferee failed to disclose its relationship to the original creditor, leading the consumer to believe that a third party was now pursuing collection of the debt.

[c] State and Federal Officials Performing Their Duties Are Specifically Excluded

The exclusion n81 applies only to local government, state, n82 or federal employees and only if their attempts to collect particular debts are within their official duties. It does not apply to a private collection agency hired to collect debts for a state or federal agency. n83

A collection agency running a criminal bad check diversion program was denied its motion for summary judgment claiming exemption. n84

[d] Process Servers Are Specifically Excluded

This exclusion n85 applies, for example, to a sheriff serving a subpoena upon a witness to appear in an action for debt. It only applies while the process server is actually serving process in connection with a suit on a debt.

[e] Bona Fide Nonprofit Consumer Credit Counselors Are Specifically Excluded

Most cities have nonprofit counseling services or adjustment bureaus established and maintained by major credit extenders. These organizations commonly accept referrals of financially distressed consumers and help consumers arrange out-of-court plans to pay their creditors in an orderly fashion. To qualify for the exclusion, the counseling agency must be nonprofit, must engage in such service in good faith, and must receive and distribute payments, as well as provide financial counseling. n86

[f] Persons Collecting Debts as Part of Bona Fide Fiduciary or Escrow Arrangements Are Specifically Excluded

This section n87 excludes the above-named activities when practiced by bank trust departments, escrow companies, and other bona fide fiduciaries. Two decisions held a student loan guarantee agency was exempt under this provision because of the federal requirements for the agency's handling of reserve funds in a fiduciary manner. n88 In the Fourth Circuit, foreclosure attorneys argued that, because they were the substitute trustee of the deed of trust, n89 they were exempt as a fiduciary under 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(F)(i). The court held that the defendant did not fall within the FDCPA fiduciary exemption since "actions to foreclose on a property pursuant to a deed of trust are not 'incidental' to its fiduciary obligation. Rather, they are central to it." n90

[g] An Extender of Credit Collecting on Behalf of Another a Debt It Originally Extended Is Specifically Excluded

This section n91 excludes from the general coverage of the Act a credit extender's collection (in its own name) of a debt that it originally extended and then sold or assigned to another creditor while remaining responsible for some or all aspects of collection.

[h] Persons Collecting Debts Not in Default When Obtained Are Specifically Excluded n92

The Senate report emphasized the application of this section to "mortgage service companies and others who service outstanding debts for others, so long as the debts were not in default when taken for servicing. ..." n93 This exempts servicers of mortgages, n94 student loans, n95 rental agreements, n96 utility bills, n97 medical debts, n98 and other consumer transactions n99 if they obtained the debt before default.

This exemption was not available to a check authorization/guarantee service which was owed the debt only as the result of the payee merchant assigning the debt already in default pursuant to a contract for check authorization/warranty services. n100

[i] The Enforcer of a Security Interest in an Account Used as Collateral for a Commercial Loan Is Specifically Excluded

Retailers and lenders sometimes use consumer accounts receivable as collateral for their own commercial financing. Upon default by the retailer or lender, the secured party may collect the payments due on the retailer's or lender's consumer accounts receivable. In such situations, the secured party may not be considered a debt collector by virtue of this section. n101

[j] Check Collection Companies Disguised as District Attorneys

In 2006 Congress amended the FDCPA, legalizing in some circumstances district attorneys' profitable contracts with check collection agencies that operate invisibly in the name of the local district attorney. n102 So-called check diversion collection agencies, such as American Corrective Counseling Services, n103 are a new type of collection firm that collect dishonored checks for merchants in the name of the local district attorney by scaring consumers with the threat of criminal prosecution and jail time. This method of operation violates the FDCPA n104 unless the company is operating within the terms of the 2006 amendment. Typically these firms tell consumers that they can avoid prosecution if the consumers pay them very high fees to enroll in a financial responsibility class. The fees may exceed a small check by more than $150.

This shady business is likely to move into more neighborhoods, subjecting financially strapped families to threats of criminal prosecution and jail plus an additional very high collection fee if they cannot cover promptly a dishonored check.

The FDCPA exemption for check collections would not apply unless:

- The district attorney's office establishes the collection program and supervises and controls the check collection agency;
- The collection agency complies with the state penal laws and its contract with the district attorney;
- The collection agency does not exercise prosecutorial discretion;
- The district attorney determines that probable cause exists for a bad check prosecution;
- The check writer has failed to pay the check after demand for payment of the amount of the check;
- The district attorney makes a second determination of probable cause if the consumer disputes liability for the check based on identity theft, forgery or fraud;
- The collection agency does not impose fees greater than authorized by the district attorney.

Furthermore, the exemption would not apply to checks where:

- The check was postdated in connection with a payday or similar loan;
- There was a stop payment order issued in good faith and with reasonable cause;
- The check was dishonored because of an adjustment by the bank of the account on which it was drawn without notice to the issuer of the check;
- The check was for partial payment of a preexisting debt where partial payment had been accepted;
- The check writer was incompetent or not of legal age; or
- The check was to pay for an illegal transaction.

Where the check collection company falls outside the exemption, they will be subject to the FDCPA and are likely to be in violation because of the way they operate in the name of the district attorney and often charge fees in excess of those permitted by state law. Some consumers have pursued a civil rights claim in cases involving these companies. n105

[4] Transactions Covered by the Act

[a] The Act Covers Only Debts Allegedly Owed by a Natural Person

Artificial entities, such as corporations, cannot be consumers. n106 The Act does not limit its protections to residents or citizens of the United States.

[b] Consumer Debts, Not Commercial, Are Covered

This definition n107 limits the Act to coverage of the collection of consumer debts--those for personal, family, or household purposes; commercial debts are not within the definition. n108 The term "debt" includes consumer installment credit, such as small loans and retail installment sales, and other types of credit. The use of the loan proceeds is determinative of whether the loan is a "debt" within the coverage of the Act. n109 If the purpose for which the goods or services were acquired changes, the original purpose is determinative. n110 A court found that the FDCPA did not apply where an employee had received benefits under an employee benefit plan that may give rise to a reimbursement obligation but did not respond to the plan's inquiries about reimbursement, so that the insurer was forced to sue. n111

[i] A Broad Range of Consumer Debts Are Covered

The decisions generally construe the term broadly enough to include dishonored checks, n112 rent, n113 medical bills, n114 utility bills, n115 insurance bills and claims, n116 student loans, n117 campground memberships, n118 credit cards, n119 condominium fees, n120 and judgments. The weight of authority excludes the following transactions from the term "debt": taxes; child support; shoplifting civil claims; fines; car accidents; and torts. n121

The term "primarily for personal, family, or household use" was borrowed from the Truth in Lending Act ("TILA"). n122 It was intended to exclude transactions primarily for business purposes. n123

[ii] Coverage of Noncontractual Obligations Questioned

It seems reasonable to construe the term "debt" to include tax and other noncontractual obligations (such as tort claims) that are incurred by individuals and not in connection with conducting business. Some courts, however, have taken a different view, finding for example that tax assessments were not covered "debts," n124 that child support payments assigned to the state were not "debts," n125 and that a bank's efforts to recover an over-credited deposit amount is not a "debt." n126 Damages from a holding-over tenant were held not to involve a debt as there was no claim based on a lease or for rent. n126.1 A federal law passed in 2004 applies FDCPA protections to collection agencies collecting federal tax debts for the IRS. n127 On the other hand, the Seventh Circuit has interpreted the statute broadly, noting that there is no exception in the FDCPA even for consumers who may have fraudulently written a bad check, and it would not create one. n128

Given the possibilities for broad or narrow construction of the word "transaction," and, hence, the term "debt," the proper question is what best serves the congressional purpose for the FDCPA. It is clear that the primary function of the term "debt" was to exclude business transactions. The purposes of the FDCPA are remedial: to eliminate collection abuses, redress injuries inadequately protected by prior law, and encourage fair debt collection methods. n129

[5] FDCPA Protection of Persons Other Than Consumers

The FDCPA protects consumers--persons obligated or allegedly obligated to pay any debt--from violations of the Act. In addition, the private remedies provided by the Act are available to "any person." n130 Many of the protections afforded to "any person" are not limited by the terms "consumer" and "debt," n131 but apply to employers, creditors, relatives, friends, and neighbors affected by violations connected with consumer transactions. Including nonconsumers within the coverage of the FDCPA furthers its purpose of eliminating abusive debt collection practices. n132 So a son had standing to assert FDCPA claims against the credit union's collection attorney, where the credit union illegally seized the son's money from a joint account with his father to pay his father's debt. n132.1

Actual damages are not required for standing under the FDCPA as the attempt to recover unlawful fees was made actionable by Congress without a requirement of actual damages to recover statutory damages. n133 The FDCPA applies whether or not the plaintiff owes the subject debt or any other debt or obligation. n134 The focus of the FDCPA is on the conduct of the debt collector, not on the conduct of the consumer. n135

[6] Collection Activities Covered by the FDCPA

The FDCPA was broadly written to cover all direct or indirect actions and attempts to collect consumer debt. n136 For example, the debt collector may be held liable for statements made to the consumer's attorney. n137 Sending false information about a delinquent payment to a credit reporting agency is debt collection conduct. n138 The FDCPA may apply to a debt collector's response to a consumer's inquiry. n139 Activities of a debt collector that are totally unrelated to collecting debts are not covered by the FDCPA. An FDCPA claim was upheld in a D.C. Circuit decision despite the lack of a direct communication between a lawyer and the son of the debtor. The FDCPA could be invoked by an "indirect" communication, such as illegally seizing the son's money, and because the FDCPA applies to "allegedly" obligated persons as well as actual debtors. n139.1

[a] "Communications" Covered by the FDCPA

The term "communication" means the conveying of information regarding a debt directly or indirectly to any person through any medium. n140

A broader interpretation of the term "communication" is required to give all provisions of the FDCPA effect. As long as the collector is directly or indirectly attempting to collect a debt, any interchange of information to accomplish the collection of that debt must be construed as a "communication." No other construction is consistent with the purposes of the other provisions of FDCPA. The FTC advises that a summons and complaint that refer to the debt is a communication covered by the Act. n141 However, there is a recent split of appellate decisions on this issue, neither of which cited the current FTC position. n142

[b] Litigation Activities Covered by the FDCPA

Litigation activities by debt collectors are covered by the FDCPA. n143 A split on this issue by the Seventh and Eleventh Circuits may create some uncertainty. The Seventh Circuit in Thomas v. Law Firm of Simpson & Cybak n144 held that the 15 U.S.C. § 1692g(a) obligation to send the consumer a validation notice was triggered by the collection lawyer filing a summons and complaint against the consumer when the summons and complaint was the initial communication with the consumer. The split 6-4 decision disagrees with the Eleventh Circuit's contrary decision in Vega v. McKay. n145

The FDCPA provides consumers with an informal way to dispute a debt or find out who the original creditor was. The FDCPA debt validation provision requires the debt collector to give the consumer notice of this right in the "initial communication" or separately within five days of that communication. The collection firm argued that the broad definition of the term "communication" in the FDCPA should be narrowly construed to not include a summons and complaint. The Seventh Circuit followed the plain language of the FDCPA and kept an enormous loophole from developing in that Circuit. While there is some disagreement, a violation of the FDCPA may occur in a letter to the attorney representing a consumer. n146

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt

CollectionCommunicationsBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionLiabilityBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionUnfair PracticesReal Property LawLandlord & TenantTenant's Remedies & RightsFair Debt Collection Practices Act

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6). See Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) .

(n2)Footnote 2. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(3), (4), (5).

(n3)Footnote 3. Schlosser v. Fairbanks Capital Corp., 323 F.3d 534, 536 (7th Cir. 2003) .

(n4)Footnote 4. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6) (Supp. II 1979). See also Scally v. Hilco Receivables, L.L.C., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13122 (N.D. Ill. June 23, 2005) (debt buyer would qualify as debt collector had it acted through retained counsel).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Ditty v. CheckRite, Ltd., 973 F. Supp. 1320 (D. Utah 1997) . See also Kimber v. Federal Fin. Corp., 668 F. Supp. 1480 (M.D. Ala. 1987) .

(n6)Footnote 6. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6). See, e.g., Oppong v. First Union Mortg. Corp., 407 F. Supp. 2d 658 (E.D. Pa. 2005) (Wells Fargo was debt collector under "regularity" prong of FDCPA, where it obtained 356 defaulted mortgages in course of its business of acquiring over 550,000 mortgages in year; court reasoned that it was frequency with which mortgage servicer collected defaulted mortgages that was determinative).

(n7)Footnote 7. Crossley v. Lieberman, 868 F.2d 566 (3d Cir. 1989) (attorney routinely collecting consumer debts was a debt collector). See Durkin v. Equifax Check Servs., Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20742 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 28, 2002) (defendant check authorization/guarantee service regularly engaged in the business of collecting debts where it collected over a million checks per year, although that number constituted less than 1% of the checks processed, because the initial focus of "regularity of debt collection depends on sheer volume," standard met here.); Campion v. Credit Bureau Servs., Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20233 (E.D. Wash. Sept. 19, 2000) (corporate debt collector was liable for the misconduct of its attorney and its employees). See also Russell v. Standard Fed. Bank, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12334 (E.D. Mich. June 19, 2002) (FDCPA claim dismissed where plaintiff failed to provide the court with sufficient information as to whether defendant law firm collected debts regularly or how it violated the Act.). See Berndt v. Fairfield Resorts, Inc., 337 F. Supp. 2d 1120 (W.D. Wis. 2004) (timeshare resort management association was a debt collector because it regularly collected debts by sending 4700 payment notices a year, some on delinquent accounts, for amounts owed to a homeowner's association, even though the letters amounted to less than one percent of its management activities). See Wesley v. Calvary Inv., L.L.C., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27391 (E.D. Pa. May 9, 2006) (data furnisher/debt collector may be subject to both FCRA and FDCPA). See also Roybal v. Equifax, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22380 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 14, 2006) (credit reporting agency did not collect debts either directly or indirectly on behalf of themselves or others).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Ransom v. Telecredit Serv. Corp., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22738, at 13 (D. Md. Feb. 5, 1992) (exception to the creditor exclusion in § 1692a(4), which applies to "any person to the extent that he receives an assignment or transfer of a debt in default solely for the purpose of facilitating collection of such debt for another," applied to a computerized check authorization service that regularly attempted to collect on dishonored checks purchased from its subscribers because the debts were in default when purchased and debts originally belonged to another.). See also Kimber v. Federal Fin. Corp., 668 F. Supp. 1480, 1485 (M.D. Ala. 1987) ; Winterstein v. Crosscheck, Inc., 149 F. Supp. 2d 466 (N.D. Ill. 2001) (court rejected check guarantee service's arguments that it was not a debt collector).

(n9)Footnote 9. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6). But see Vincent v. Money Store, 402 F. Supp. 2d 501 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 7, 2005) (court granted defendant summary judgment where consumer's evidence failed to establish that creditor/defendant used alias through its sham employment of outside counsel to collect debts); Mazzei v. Money Store, 349 F. Supp. 2d 651 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (same).

(n10)Footnote 10. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(A) and (G).

(n11)Footnote 11. See Laws v. Cheslock, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3416 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 8, 1999) ; Young v. Citicorp Retail Servs., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22669 (D. Conn. May 20, 1997) , aff'd, Young v. Citicorp Retail Servs., 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 20268 (2d Cir. Conn. June 29, 1998) ; Zhang v. Haven-Scott Assocs., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8738 (E.D. Pa. June 21, 1996) .

(n12)Footnote 12. See Gorham-Dimaggio v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34237 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 30, 2005) .

(n13)Footnote 13. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6).

(n14)Footnote 14. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)

(n15)Footnote 15. 15 U.S.C. § 1692f(6).

(n16)Footnote 16. See Rosado v. Taylor, 324 F. Supp. 2d 917 (N.D. Ind. 2004) (FDCPA does not apply to a foreclosure action even if the foreclosure attorney seeks attorney fees, but it does apply to a §§ 1692e(11) and 1692g notice sent by the foreclosing attorney). See also Thomson v. Professional Foreclosure Corp., 86 Fed. Appx. 352 (9th Cir. 2004) (not for publication) (affirmed the district court's dismissal on the basis that the defendants were subject only to § 1692f(6) as enforcers of security interests). See also McDaniel v. South & Assocs., P.C., 325 F. Supp. 2d 1210 (D. Kan. 2004) (collection lawyer violated FDCPA by initiating judicial foreclosure action seeking a money judgment as well as foreclosure after receiving a timely validation request but before responding to it).

(n17)Footnote 17. Compare Pettway v. Harmon Law Offices, P.C., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21341 (D. Mass. Sept. 27, 2005) ("Harmon acted as a debt collector when it solicited borrowers to pay off the underlying mortgages;" fact that it was also pursuing foreclosure did not insulate it from FDCPA liability) with Barbanti v. Quality Loan Serv. Corp., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 676 (E.D. Wash. Jan. 3, 2007) (enforcement of security interest through non-judicial forfeiture does not constitute collection of debt for purposes of FDCPA); Chomilo v. Shapiro, Nordmeyer & Zielke, L.L.P., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67826 (D. Minn. Sept. 12, 2007) (law firm that was retained to institute non-judicial foreclosure on the consumer's property was not a debt collector subject to the entirety of the FDCPA but was instead an enforcer of a security interest subject only to § 1692f(6)). See also Kondratick v. Beneficial Consumer Discount Co., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4754 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 8, 2006) (denying summary judgment including FDCPA claims where determination of whether Beneficial's failure to stop its foreclosure when it entered into ambiguous mortgage reinstatement agreement with state homeowner assistance program was breach of reinstatement agreement raised questions for trier of fact); Fong v. Prof'l Foreclosure Corp., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31643 (W.D. Wash. Nov. 22, 2005) (summary judgment granted to trustee who commenced foreclosure on property pursuant to deed of trust as trustee was not debt collector as defined by FDCPA as it was enforcing security interest and not collecting money); Gonzalez v. Northwest Tr. Servs., Inc., 2005 WL 2297097 (D. Or. Sept. 20, 2005) (on unopposed motion for summary judgment against pro se plaintiff, court followed Hulse line of cases and held that defendant who pursued foreclosure alone, without seeking payment of money, was not "debt collector"); Miller v. Northwest Trs. Servs., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43770 (E.D. Wash. July 20, 2005) (mortgage companies and their trustees that engaged in foreclosure are not "debt collectors" under 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6) because they are not seeking payment of money); Schuh v. Druckman & Sinel, L.L.P, 602 F. Supp. 2d 454 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (foreclosing attorney covered).

(n18)Footnote 18. See Ray v. Int'l Bank, Inc., 2005 WL 2305017 (D. Colo. Sept. 21, 2005) (court denied attorney defendant's motion to dismiss, holding that his initiation of foreclosure proceedings and service of foreclosure documents constituted collection of debt, rejecting contrary Hulse line of cases, and explaining as follows: "Although foreclosure proceedings do not seek or result in a money judgment, they are an attempt to collect on a debt through realization of the value of property which the debtor has pledged to secure the loan. Through foreclosure, the debt can be partially or fully satisfied.").

(n19)Footnote 19. 443 F.3d 373 (4th Cir. 2006) .

(n20)Footnote 20. Hulse v. Ocwen Fed. Bank, F.S.B., 195 F. Supp. 2d 1188 (2002) ; Heinemann v. Jim Walter Homes, Inc., 47 F. Supp. 2d 716, 722 (N.D. W. Va. 1998) , affd , 173 F.3d 850 (4th Cir. 1999) (unpublished) (noting that a foreclosure's purpose is a collateral sale to obtain money, following the Colorado Supreme Court's decision in Shapiro & Meinhold v. Zartman, 823 P.2d 120, 124 (Colo. 1992)) .

(n21)Footnote 21. 464 F.3d 524 (5th Cir. 2006) .

(n22)Footnote 22. FTC Staff Commentary on the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, 53 Fed. Reg. 50,097 (Dec. 13, 1988) .

(n23)Footnote 23. See, e.g., Pettway v. Harmon Law Offices, P.C., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21341 (D. Mass. Sept. 27, 2005) .

(n24)Footnote 24. 15 U.S.C. § 1692j. See Rumpler v. Phillips & Cohen Assocs., Ltd., 219 F. Supp. 2d 251 (E.D.N.Y. 2002) (complaint that alleged the debt was referred to a third party debt collector for collection and did not allege any other facts to support a § 1692j claim was insufficient to establish that the collector was a flat-rater under § 1692j. The use of the title "Esq." did not create the impression that the collector was an attorney where he was collecting under the title "Executive Vice President." The court described flat-rating as a letter sent by a creditor which appears to come from a third party collector.).

(n25)Footnote 25. Taylor v. Perrin, Landry, deLaunay & Durand, 103 F.3d 1232 (5th Cir. 1997) (creditor was a "debt collector" even though it was collecting its own debt because it used a lawyer's letterhead and facsimile signature on its dunning letters, falsely indicating that a third person was collecting the debt). See also Newman v. CheckRite Cal., Inc., 912 F. Supp. 1354 (E.D. Cal. 1995) (lawyers collecting debts for a check collection agency were covered by the Act and that coverage was not an unconstitutional interference with the state judiciary's supervision of lawyers); Littles v. Lieberman, 90 B.R. 700 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1988) (lawyer who gave his form letter to a creditor for mailing to specific debtors was liable under 15 U.S.C. § 1692j when the creditor sent it to another debtor). See, e.g., Nielsen v. Dickerson, 307 F.3d 623 (7th Cir. 2002) (in case where the court found that the collection attorney did not make a "considered, professional judgment" that individual consumers were delinquent and were candidates for legal action or that the dunning letter should be sent to them, the collection letter was not genuinely from the attorney in the professional sense, and he violated § 1692j).

(n26)Footnote 26. Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) ("In ordinary English, a lawyer who regularly tries to obtain payment of consumer debts through legal proceedings is a lawyer who regularly attempts 'to collect' those consumer debts."); Addison v. Braud, 105 F.3d 223 (5th Cir. 1997) . A limited attorney exemption in the FDCPA was eliminated by Congress in 1986.

(n27)Footnote 27. Dorsey v. Morgan, 760 F. Supp. 509 (D. Md. 1991) ; Britton v. Weiss, 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14610 (N.D.N.Y. Dec. 7, 1989) (N.Y. Telephone's in-house attorney included employer's name in address, but failed to indicate that N.Y.T. was his employer and did not use familiar blue bell logo).

(n28)Footnote 28. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6). Romea v. Heiberger & Assocs., 988 F. Supp. 712, 714-15 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) , motion granted, 988 F. Supp. 715 (S.D.N.Y.) , aff'd, 163 F.3d 111 (2d Cir. 1998) (law firm regularly sending notices demanding payment of residential rent arrears was engaged in "communication" for the purpose of collecting a "debt" within the meaning of the FDCPA).

(n29)Footnote 29. See Goldstein v. Hutton, Ingram, Yuzek, Gainen, Carroll & Bertolotti, 155 F. Supp. 2d 60

(S.D.N.Y. 2001) (where law firm's income from collections was 0.5% of its total annual income, it was not a debt collector within the FDCPA); Patrissi Landscaping, Inc. v. Jacunski, 2005 Conn. Super. 308 (Conn. Super. Ct. 2005) (court overruled fact-finder's conclusion that collection attorney regularly collected debts since only evidence was single collection case). See also Corbett v. Wolfgang, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80917 (S.D. Ohio Nov. 6, 2006) (attorney did not regularly collect where evidence showed that he had filed 29 foreclosure cases during course of the year, that debt collection was less than 1% of his cases and his revenues, and that he performed that collection work for only four of his 200 clients).

(n30)Footnote 30. Goldstein v. Hutton, Ingram, Yuzek, Gainen, Carroll & Bertolotti, 374 F.3d 56 (2d Cir. 2004) .

(n31)Footnote 31. Id. at 62-63 .

(n32)Footnote 32. See Garrett v. Derbes, 110 F.3d 317 (5th Cir. 1997) (attorney who collected against 639 different individuals in a nine-month period satisfied the requirement that he "regularly" collected debts for another although those 639 cases only represented.5% of his practice).

(n33)Footnote 33. See Camara v. Fleury, 285 F. Supp. 2d 90 (D. Mass. 2003) (where consumer failed to submit any evidence to the contrary, law firm's affidavit that only 4.57% of its practice consisted of consumer debt collection sufficiently supported holding that the attorney and his firm were not "debt collectors"); Argentieri v. Fisher Landscapes, Inc., 15 F. Supp. 2d 55 (D. Mass. 1998) , later op., 27 F. Supp. 2d 84 (D. Mass. 1998) (attorney who spent only 0.4% of his time in debt collection matters was not acting regularly and therefore is not a "debt collector" as defined).

(n34)Footnote 34. See Cashman v. Ricigliano, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17027 (D. Conn. Aug. 25, 2004) (defendants were debt collectors because they send 90 letters in five months pursuant to a written agreement with a collection agency, set up a special address and telephone line for the collection efforts; and sued some 53 consumers); Cacace v. Lucas, 775 F. Supp. 502 (D. Conn. 1990) (attorney who represented four collection agencies, filed over 150 collection suits in a two-year period, and sent one particular collection letter over 125 times in a 14-month period was a debt collector even though debt collection was merely incidental to his primary law practice).

(n35)Footnote 35. Stojanovski v. Strobl & Manoogian, 783 F. Supp. 319 (E.D. Mich. 1992) (law firm which collected debts only 4% of the time was a "debt collector" because such activity was regular and brought law firm within § 1692a(6)).

(n36)Footnote 36. Mladenovich v. Cannonito, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 985 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 30, 1998) (attorney sent twenty-three collection letters on behalf of two clients, and that number was insufficient to establish that he "regularly" collected debts).

(n37)Footnote 37. See Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, S. Rep. No. 95-382, on the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, at 3 (1977).

(n38)Footnote 38. See Eby v. Reb Realty, Inc., 495 F.2d 646 (9th Cir. 1974) . Later, the FRB enacted numerical thresholds for coverage of creditors. National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending § 2.3.3 (5th ed. 2003 and Supp.).

(n39)Footnote 39. 15 U.S.C. § 1692i.

(n40)Footnote 40. Shapiro & Meinhold v. Zartman, 823 P.2d 120 (Colo. 1992) (attorney collector, who brought foreclosure action in a county other than that where the real estate was situated, violated 15 U.S.C. § 1692i(a)(1) even though state statute allowed such venue).

(n41)Footnote 41. 15 U.S.C. § 1692n.

(n42)Footnote 42. See § 8.03[2] infra.

(n43)Footnote 43. See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 4.2.8.5.4(6th ed. 2008).

(n44)Footnote 44. See In re Scheck, 171 A.D.2d 33, 574 N.Y.S.2d 372 (1991) (allowing collection employees to act in a lawyer's name and violate the FDCPA were considered in a one year suspension of lawyer for violating N.Y. Code of Professional Responsibility).

(n45)Footnote 45. Russey v. Rankin, 911 F. Supp. 1449 (D.N.M. 1995) . Accord Miller v. Wolpoff & Abramson, L.L.P., 321 F.3d 292 (2d Cir. 2003) (court suggested that merely being told by the creditor that a debt was overdue, without the entire payment history and with only the last few creditor notes to the file, was insufficient for a lawyer to make a meaningful determination of whether it was due and its amount).

(n46)Footnote 46. Nielsen v. Dickerson, 307 F.3d 623 (7th Cir. 2002) .

(n47)Footnote 47. Greco v. Trauner, Cohen & Thomas, L.L.P., 412 F.3d 360 (2d Cir. 2005) .

(n48)Footnote 48. Clomon v. Jackson, 988 F.2d 1314 (2d Cir. 1993) .

(n49)Footnote 49. Miller v. Wolpoff & Abramson, L.L.P., 321 F.3d 292 (2d Cir. 2003) .

(n50)Footnote 50. Id. at 300 .

(n51)Footnote 51. ABA Formal Opinion 178 (Feb. 19, 1938), Opinions on Professional Ethics [Am. Bar Found.] 448 (1967).

(n52)Footnote 52. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e.

(n53)Footnote 53. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(5). See Newman v. CheckRite Cal., Inc., 912 F. Supp. 1354 (E.D. Cal. 1995) (threats of suit were deceptive to least sophisticated consumers where they were made by counsel not yet licensed to practice law, by other counsel not licensed in the state where the threats were made, and there was no arrangement for in-state counsel when the threats were made). But see Sturdevant v. Jolas, 942 F. Supp. 426 (D. Wis. 1996) (opposite view based on possibility of obtaining local counsel).

(n54)Footnote 54. Bice v. Merchants Adjustment Serv., Clearinghouse No. 41,265 (S.D. Ala. 1985).

(n55)Footnote 55. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(9). See also In re Zenner, 348 S.C. 499, 560 S.E.2d 406 (S.C. 2002) (attorney sanctioned for loaning his name to lay collection agency that engaged in unauthorized practice of law and abusive debt collection).

(n56)Footnote 56. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(3).

(n57)Footnote 57. See Newman v. Checkrite Cal., Inc., 912 F. Supp. 1354 (E.D. Cal. 1995) .

(n58)Footnote 58. See Federal Trade Comm'n v. Check Investors, Inc., 502 F.3d 159 (3d Cir. 2007) ; Schlosser v. Fairbanks Capital Corp., 323 F.3d 534, 536 (7th Cir. 2003) ; Larsen v. JBC Legal Group, P.C., 533 F. Supp. 2d 290, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10488 (E.D.N.Y. Feb. 12, 2008) ; Kimber v. Federal Fin. Corp., 668 F. Supp. 1480, 1484 (M.D. Ala. 1987) .

(n59)Footnote 59. 502 F.3d 159 (3d Cir. 2007) .

(n60)Footnote 60. Id. at 168-169 .

(n61)Footnote 61. Hernandez v. Midland Credit Mgmt., Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16054 (N.D. Ill. Mar 6, 2007)

.

(n62)Footnote 62. 668 F. Supp. 1480, 1484 (M.D. Ala. 1987) .

(n63)Footnote 63. Pub. Law No. 108-357, § 881 (Oct. 22, 2004).

(n64)Footnote 64. 26 U.S.C. § 6304(e).

(n65)Footnote 65. Id., cross-referencing 26 U.S.C. §§ 6304, 7602(c).

(n66)Footnote 66. 26 U.S.C. §§ 7433A, 7433(a).

(n67)Footnote 67. 26 U.S.C. § 7433, incorporated by reference in § 7433A(a).

(n68)Footnote 68. 26 U.S.C. § 7433A(b)(1), (4). See also 26 U.S.C. § 6306(d) (no federal liability for acts or omissions of private tax collectors).

(n69)Footnote 69. 26 U.S.C. § 7433A(b)(3). Cf. 26 U.S.C. § 7433(a) (cause of action created for collection abuses by IRS employee is exclusive remedy for recovering damages resulting from such action).

(n70)Footnote 70. Conference Report 108-755 (Oct. 7, 2004).

(n71)Footnote 71. See § 4.4.2.3, infra.

(n72)Footnote 72. 15 U.S.C. § 1692j.

(n73)Footnote 73. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(A).

(n74)Footnote 74. See Thomasson v. Bank One, La., N.A., 137 F. Supp. 2d 721 (E.D. La. 2001) ; Shevach v. American Fitness Franchise Corp., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2899 (S.D.N.Y Mar. 14, 2001) .

(n75)Footnote 75. Nielsen v. Dickerson, 307 F.3d 623 (7th Cir. 2002) (creditor lost its FDCPA creditor exemption because it directed the mailing of the letters that created the false impression that the collection attorney was involved as an attorney, when he was not); Smith v. Continental Cmty. Bank & Trust Co., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11193 (N.D. Ill. June 24, 2002) (police and security officers' motion to dismiss was granted because consumer failed to allege that the officers were debt collectors but alleged them to be employees of the bank and therefore exempt).

(n76)Footnote 76. Dorsey v. Morgan, 760 F. Supp. 509 (D. Md. 1991) (asserting his status as an employee of the creditor will not shield an attorney from coverage by FDCPA where he sent dunning letters to consumers which appear to be from outside counsel). See also Cordova v. Larson, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23982 (D. Conn. 1997) (where there were genuine issues of material fact as to whether an attorney, who was an employee of the creditor and sent a dunning letter, was principally engaged in the collection of debts or whether the attorney was exempt from the FDCPA because he was using stationery that would create the false impression he was from an independent law office).

(n77)Footnote 77. See Doherty v. Citibank N.A., 375 F. Supp. 2d 158 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) ; Kolari v. New York-Presbyterian Hosp. 382 F. Supp. 2d 562 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) . See also Wadlington v. Credit Acceptance Corp., 76 F.3d 103, 108 (6th Cir. 1996) (assignee before default creditor not vicariously liable for its collection attorney's alleged FDCPA violation).

(n78)Footnote 78. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(B) (Supp. II 1979).

(n79)Footnote 79. See Daros v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 2001 U.S. App. LEXIS 21471 (2d Cir. Oct. 1, 2001) (not for publication) (neither bank nor affiliated credit card company was a debt collector for the purposes of the FDCPA);

Aubert v. American Gen. Fin., Inc., 137 F.3d 976 (7th Cir. 1998) (a corporate affiliate is excluded from FDCPA coverage if (1) the affiliate collects only for entities to which it is related, and (2) the principal business of the affiliate is not debt collection); Backuswalcott v. Common Ground Cmty. HDFC, Inc., 104 F. Supp. 2d 363 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (defendant was the managing agent and nonprofit sole shareholder of a general partnership owning 1% of a homeless hotel; defendant was exempt under the affiliate exemption; factors included that debt collection was not defendant's most significant activity, nor its single largest or most important activity; the good will of the tenants was important to defendant, which provided many social services); Friedman v. May Dep't Stores Co., 990 F. Supp. 571 (N.D. Ill. 1998) ("common ownership" exemption applies only if subsidiary or affiliate acting as debt collector does so solely for the entity to which it is related or affiliated and its principal business is not debt collection); Kegley v. Miles Mgmt. Corp., Case No. 92 C 3438, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18401 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 2, 1992) (entity, which primarily managed the operation and lease of real estate, but also collected debts arising from the leases, and which was owned by the owner of the real estate, was exempt from the definition of "debt collector" pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(B)).

(n80)Footnote 80. See, e.g., Challen v. Town & Country Charge, 545 F. Supp. 1014 (N.D. Ill. 1982) (allegation that bank collects debts owed to VISA, U.S.A. was sufficient to withstand motion to dismiss the bank as not being a debt collector under FDCPA).

(n81)Footnote 81. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(C). See Hillman v. Secretary of the Treasury, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4544 (W.D. Mich. Mar. 29, 2000) (pro se complaint was dismissed because the Internal Revenue Service [hereinafter IRS] was not subject to the FDCPA.); Fleeger v. Bell, 95 F. Supp. 2d 1126 (D. Nev. 2000) (district attorneys attempting to collect the markers pursuant to state bad check statutes were exempt from the FDCPA as officers of a state performing official duties), aff'd, 2001 U.S. App. LEXIS 25491 (9th Cir. 2001) .

(n82)Footnote 82. The term "state" is broadly defined to also include territories, possessions, etc. and political subdivisions of states. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(8).

(n83)Footnote 83. See Pollice v. National Tax Funding, L.P., 225 F.3d 379 (3d Cir. 2000) (§ 1692a(6)(c) exemption for government employees did not extend to a collection agency hired by the government to collect water bills); Gradisher v. Check Enforcement Unit, Inc., 133 F. Supp. 2d 988 (independent contractor was not entitled to an exemption as a government employee), class certification granted, in part, 203 F.R.D. 271 (W.D. Mich. 2001) . See Albanese v. Portnoff Law Assocs., Ltd., 301 F. Supp. 2d 389 (E.D. Pa. 2004) (law firm that contracted with municipalities to collect government debt was not within the government officer and employee exemption); Israel v. Everson, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28255 (S.D. Iowa Oct. 14, 2005) (IRS exempt); Weiss v. Weinberger, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11876 (N.D. Ind. June 9, 2005) (receiver appointed by federal court is officer of court and exempt). See also §§ 8.02[1.1] supra, regarding federal law passed in 2004 that applies FDCPA protections to collection agencies collecting federal tax debts for the IRS. See 26 U.S.C. § 6304(e).

(n84)Footnote 84. See Liles v. American Corrective Counseling Servs., 131 F. Supp. 2d 1114 (S.D. Iowa 2001) (factual issues prevented a determination of whether a check collection agency was a debt collector. The collector was not a creditor's employee, an officer of the state, and admitted it was collecting debts, not just administering a bad check criminal diversion program.).

(n85)Footnote 85. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(D); Flamm v. Sarner & Assocs., P.C., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22255 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 6, 2002) (person who went beyond being merely a messenger in serving legal process and engaged in prohibited abusive or harassing activities to force an individual to repay a debt was no longer exempt under the legal process server exception and was a covered "debt collector" as defined by the FDCPA). See also Flamm v. Sarner & Assocs., P.C., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 308 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 3, 2006) (where court had found process server was debt collector because he went beyond merely serving process, whether lawyers were vicariously liable for independent contractor's actions was jury question).

(n86)Footnote 86. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(E).

(n87)Footnote 87. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(F)(i).

(n88)Footnote 88. Pelfrey v. Educational Credit Mgmt. Corp., 71 F. Supp. 2d 1161 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1999) , aff'd, 208 F.3d 945 (11th Cir. 2000) ; Montgomery Educ. Credit Mgmt. Corp., 238 B.R. 806 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1999) . See Seals v. National Student Loan Program, 2004 WL 3314948 (N.D. W. Va. Aug. 16, 2004) (student loan guaranty agency was exempt under fiduciary obligation exception to FDCPA).

(n89)Footnote 89. Wilson v. Draper & Goldberg, P.L.L.C., 443 F.3d 373 (4th Cir. 2006) .

(n90)Footnote 90. Id. at 377 .

(n91)Footnote 91. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(F)(ii).

(n92)Footnote 92. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(F)(iii).

(n93)Footnote 93. Walker v. Michael W. Colton Trust, 33 F. Supp. 2d 585 (E.D. Mich. 1999) (a pre-default assignee was not a debt collector as it was exempt under § 1692a(6)(F)(iii)); Fischer v. Unipac Serv. Corp., 519 N.W.2d 793 (Iowa 1994) . See Orent v. Credit Bureau of Greater Lansing, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17683 (W.D. Mich. Oct. 23, 2001) (where debt was not in default at the time of assignment, assignee was not a debt collector); Osheyack v. Garcia, 2001 Fla. LEXIS 1573 (Fla. June 13, 2001) (local telephone company that billed and collected charges for long distance carrier was not debt collector since it acquired debt and commenced its collection activity prior to default).

(n94)Footnote 94. See Brumberger v. Sallie Mae Servicing Corp., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5235 (E.D. La. Mar. 28, 2003) , aff'd, Brumberger v. Sallie Mae Servicing Corp., 84 Fed. Appx. 458, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 151 (2004) .

(n95)Footnote 95. See Skerry v. Massachusetts Higher Educ. Assistance Corp., 73 F. Supp. 2d 47 (D. Mass 1999) (student loan guarantor was not "debt collector" where delinquent loan was never defaulted by the guarantor; finding FTC informal opinions and staff commentaries unpersuasive, court adopted the Federal Family Education Loan Program definition of "default" because the debt was a student loan); Jones v. Intuition, Inc., 12 F. Supp. 2d 775 (W.D. Tenn. 1998) ; Coppola v. Connecticut Student Loan Foundation, 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3415 (D. Conn. Mar. 22 1989) ; National Consumer Law Center, Student Loan Law (2d ed. 2002 and Supp.). Brumberger v. Sallie Mae Servicing Corp., 84 Fed. Appx. 458 (5th Cir. 2004) , (not for publication), aff'd, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 151 (5th Cir. Jan. 7, 2004) (dismissed as did not allege that his debt was in default when Sallie Mae began servicing his loan).

(n96)Footnote 96. See Franceschi v. Mautner-Glick Corp., 22 F. Supp. 2d 250 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) . See also Sheehan, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Aug. 31, 1992) (management company for timeshare condominiums exempt).

(n97)Footnote 97. See Whitaker v. Ameritech Corp., 129 F.3d 952 (7th Cir. 1997) (phone bills); In re Mayer, 199 B.R. 616 (E.D. La. 1996) (phone); Osheyack v. Garcia, 814 So. 2d 440 (Fla. 2001) (phone).

(n98)Footnote 98. See Hamilton v. Trover Solutions, Inc., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8296 (E.D. La. May 12, 2003) , aff'd, Hamilton v. Trover Solutions, Inc., 104 Fed. Appx. 942, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 13764 (2004) (agency which received subrogation to recover medical expenses prior to default was not subject to the FDCPA). Silver, FTC Informal Staff Letter (July 13, 1987); Barker, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Oct. 22, 1987) (phone company); Gold, FTC Informal Staff Letter (May 7, 1986).

(n99)Footnote 99. See Kvassay v. Hasty, 236 F. Supp. 2d 1240 (D. Kan. 2002) (lawyers "obtained" checks which armored car service had lost; Stark v. Hasty, 236 F. Supp. 2d 1214 (D. Kan. 2002) (companion case to Kvassay; same result); Orent v. Credit Bureau, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17683 (W.D. Mich. Oct. 23, 2001) (debt acquired through merger); Shapiro, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Dec. 20, 1999); Shapiro, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Oct. 1, 1997) (company hired to do marketing, credit extension, and servicing also may be exempt under a de facto employee rationale Cardonick). See Williams v. Edelman, 408 F. Supp. 2d 1261 (S.D. Fla. 2006) (entity that serviced condominium debt before it fell into default was not "debt collector" as defined by FDCPA).

(n100)Footnote 100. Durkin v. Equifax Check Servs., Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20742 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 28, 2002) .

(n101)Footnote 101. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(F)(iv). See Friedman v. Textron Fin. Corp., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11968 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 11, 1997) (secured party in a commercial transaction who arranged a consumer account that was used as collateral following default on loan from the commercial lender to the original creditor was excluded from definition of "debt collector" pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(F)(iv)).

(n102)Footnote 102. Pub. L. No. 109-351 § 818, 120 Stat. 2004 (Oct. 13, 2006).

(n103)Footnote 103. See www.accs-inc.com.

(n104)Footnote 104. E.g., Gradisher v. Check Enforcement Unit, Inc., 210 F. Supp. 2d 907 (W.D. Mich. 2002) (although debt collector was independent contractor with county, its notices purporting to be from sheriff's department gave false impression that they were from sheriff in violation of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692e(9) and 1692e(14)).

(n105)Footnote 105. See Schwarm v. Craighead, 233 F.R.D. 655 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 7, 2006) .

(n106)Footnote 106. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(3).

(n107)Footnote 107. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(5).

(n108)Footnote 108. See Beaton v. Reynolds, Ridings, Vogt & Morgan, P.L.L.C., 986 F. Supp. 1360 (W.D. Okla. 1998) ; M. Fabrikant & Sons v. Fuller, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19843 (N.D. Tex. Dec. 14, 1998) ; Garza v. Bancorp Group, Inc., 955 F. Supp. 68 (S.D. Tex. 1996) ; Allen v. BRT Util. Corp., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22441 (D. Conn. Oct. 24, 1996) . See also Slenk v. Transworld Sys., 236 F.3d 1072 (9th Cir. 2001) (Summary judgment was inappropriate and reversed where there was conflicting evidence on whether a backhoe was purchased and used strictly for the building of the buyer's own home or whether it was bought for his construction business. A sole proprietor's purchase would not be for a consumer purpose covered by the FDCPA. If a loan was made for a business purpose, it would not become a consumer loan by virtue of the debt collector's dunning calls to the home of the collector.).

(n109)Footnote 109. See Edwards v. Beatty, 2001 U.S. App. LEXIS 20788 (9th Cir. Sept. 20, 2001) (not for publication) (dismissal was affirmed where pro se plaintiff failed to offer evidence to support claim that commercial debt was converted into a consumer debt by defendant's collection activities, i.e., phoning him at home); Broadnax v. Greene Credit Serv., 106 F.3d 400 (6th Cir. 1997) (unpublished), reported in full, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 776 (6th Cir. Jan. 15, 1997) ; Bloom v. I.C. Sys., Inc., 972 F.2d 1067 (9th Cir. 1992) (attention was focused on the actual purpose of the loan; neither the lender's motives--lender was personal friend of borrower--nor the stated purpose of the loan was dispositive); Moore v. Principal Credit Corp., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6917 (N.D. Miss. Mar. 30, 1998) . Moss v. Cavalry Inv., L.L.C., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24990 (N.D. Tex. Sept. 20, 2004) (underlying use of credit card for personal purposes created an issue of fact where card was used for both business and consumer purchases and application indicated it was for business purposes).

(n110)Footnote 110. Miller v. McCalla, Raymer, Padrick, Cobb, Nichols, & Clark, L.L.C., 214 F.3d 872 , reh'g en banc denied, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 18232 (7th Cir. July 26, 2000) (debt for a house purchased as the buyer's residence and then rented when the buyer moved was a consumer debt originally; the subsequent use of the collateral would not alter the applicability of the FDCPA.).

(n111)Footnote 111. Garner v. Augustine, Kern & Levens, Ltd., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1573 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 16, 1994) .

(n112)Footnote 112. Gary v. Goldman & Co., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 416 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 14, 2002) (a dishonored check was a debt under the FDCPA); Bass v. Stolper, Koritzinsky, Brewster & Neider, S.C., 111 F.3d 1322 (7th Cir. 1997) ; Gradisher v. Check Enforcement Unit, Inc., 133 F. Supp. 2d 988 , class certification granted, in part, 203 F.R.D. 271 (W.D. Mich. 2001) ; Rosales v. National City Corp., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23923 (D. Mass. Aug. 31, 1997) (check on which payment was stopped was a "debt."); Narwick v. Wexler, 901 F. Supp. 1275 (N.D. Ill. 1995) . See Price v. Surety Acceptance Corp., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22418 (D. Ariz. Aug. 13, 1999) (checks were debts). Armstrong v. Rose Law Firm, P.A., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4039 (D. Minn. Mar. 7, 2002) (FDCPA contains no fraud exception that would exclude the dishonored check); Wiegand v. JNR Adjustment Co., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7292 (D. Minn. Apr. 22, 2002) . See also Winterstein v. Crosscheck, Inc., 149 F. Supp. 2d 466 (N.D. Ill. 2001) (court rejected check guarantee service's arguments that it was not debt collector; it was not a creditor because check had been presented to creditor and forwarded to guarantee service after default; agreement assigning check before default exalted form over substance). But see Krevsky v. Equifax Check Servs., Inc., 85 F. Supp. 2d 479 (M.D. Pa. 2000) (dishonored check was not a debt under the FDCPA because payment by check was tantamount to paying with cash and did not involve the extension of credit).

(n113)Footnote 113. E.g., Romea v. Heiberger & Assocs., 163 F.3d 111 (2d Cir. 1998) ; Emanuel v. American Credit Exch., 870 F.2d 805 (2d Cir. 1989) ; Wenrich v. Robert E. Cole, P.C., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18687 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 22, 2000) (claim for rent for a residential apartment was a debt covered by the FDCPA). But see Arrey v. Beaux Arts II, LLC, 101 F. Supp. 2d 225, 227 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (tenant pro se removed an eviction action to federal court because three-day eviction notice allegedly violated the FDCPA; the action was remanded: "[B]oth the removal and the contention that the alleged violation of the Act constitutes a defense to the nonpayment proceeding are utterly frivolous."); Hodges v. Feinstein, Raiss, Kelin & Booker, L.L.C., 383 N.J. Super. 596, 893 A.2d 21 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. Mar. 8, 2006) (eviction for nonpayment of rent); Baer v. Harmon Law Offices, P.C., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3014 (D. Mass. Jan. 14, 2009) (notice to quit and vacate premises that did not reference a preexisting financial obligation, and that sought to have the tenant vacate the premises and damages for holding over, rather than rent, was not an attempt to collect a debt, and was not covered by the FDCPA). See also Hodges v. Feinstein, Raiss, Kelin & Booker, L.L.C., 383 N.J. Super. 596, 893 A.2d 21 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. Mar. 8, 2006) (law firm that regularly engaged in summary eviction proceedings was subject to FDCPA; law firm sought eviction based on nonpayment of costs and attorney fees that did not constitute rent and could not be basis for eviction).

(n114)Footnote 114. E.g., Adams v. Law Offices of Stuckert & Yates, 926 F. Supp. 521 (E.D. Pa. 1996) .

(n115)Footnote 115. E.g., Pollice v. National Tax Funding, L.P., 225 F.3d 379 (3d Cir. 2000) (municipal water and sewer bills were debts covered by the FDCPA; the dicta in Zimmerman that a debt must involve credit was not controlling); Clay v. Melchionne, 2000 WL 1838368 (D. Conn. 2000) (water usage fee owed to a municipality was a "debt"); Allen v. BRT Util. Corp., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22441 (D. Conn. Oct. 24, 1996) . E.g., Piper v. Portnoff Law Assocs., Ltd., 396 F.3d 227 (3d Cir. 2005) (FDCPA applied to collection of municipal water bill by attorneys who also pursued municipal liens. The court noted that water service was voluntary and involved a pro tanto exchange of water for money, and rejected the argument that there was an in rem exemption in the FDCPA.); Albanese v. Portnoff Law Assocs., Ltd., 301 F. Supp. 2d 389 (E.D. Pa. 2004) (FDCPA applies to in rem collection proceedings to impose lien for municipal services on real property); Keauhou Master Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. County of Hawaii, 104 Haw. 214, 87 P.3d 883 (2004) (sewer debts covered).

(n116)Footnote 116. Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) .

(n117)Footnote 117. Brannan v. United Student Aid Funds, Inc., 94 F.3d 1260 (9th Cir. 1996) , cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1106, 117 S. Ct. 2484, 138 L. Ed. 2d 992 (1997) ; Juras v. Aman Collection Serv., Inc., 829 F.2d 739 (9th Cir. 1987) .

(n118)Footnote 118. Dorsey v. Morgan, 760 F. Supp. 509 (D. Md. 1991) .

(n119)Footnote 119. Epstein v. Beck & McDonald, Clearinghouse No. 50,284 (N.D. Tex. 1994) (debt may not be presumed not to be debt for personal purposes simply because of its large amount (over $300,000 on over 40 credit card accounts); motion to dismiss FDCPA claim dismissed).

(n120)Footnote 120. Newman v. Boehm, Pearlstein & Bright, Ltd., 119 F.3d 477 (7th Cir. 1997) , reh'g denied, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 24820 (7th Cir. Sept. 12, 1997) . See, e.g., Riter v. Moss & Bloomberg, Ltd., 932 F. Supp. 210 (N.D. Ill. 1996) , rev'd, remanded, 119 F.3d 477 (7th Cir. 1997) . See also Herbert v. Monterey Fin. Servs., Inc., 863 F. Supp. 76 (D. Conn. 1994) (vacation time-share was a debt covered by the FDCPA). See also Fuller v. Becker & Poliakoff, P.A., 192 F. Supp. 2d 1361 (M.D. Fla. 2002) (delinquent maintenance assessments under a property owners' association contract were debts). See Agan v. Katzman & Korr, P.A., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4158 (S.D. Fla. Mar. 16, 2004) (condominium assessments covered). See also Berndt v. Fairfield Resorts, Inc. 337 F. Supp. 2d 1120 (W.D. Wis. 2004) (timeshare resort maintenance assessment covered.).

(n121)Footnote 121. See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 4.4.2.3 (5th ed. 2004 and Supp.).

(n122)Footnote 122. 15 U.S.C. § 1602(h).

(n123)Footnote 123. Bloom v. I.C. Sys., Inc., 972 F.2d 1067 (9th Cir. 1992) (particular attention was focused on the actual purpose of the loan in determining whether it fit the definition of "debt"; neither the lender's motives--lender was borrower's personal friend--nor the manner of memorialization of the loan was dispositive); See 15 U.S.C. § 1602(h). See also Broadnax v. Greene Credit Serv., 106 F.3d 400 (6th Cir. 1997) (unpublished), reported in full, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 776 (6th Cir. Jan. 15, 1997) ; Allen v. BRT Util. Corp., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22441 (D. Conn. Oct. 24, 1996) ; National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending (5th ed. and Supp.).

(n124)Footnote 124. See Staub v. Harris, 626 F.2d 275 (3d Cir. 1980) . See also Israel v. Everson, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28255 (S.D. Iowa Oct. 14, 2005) (IRS claim for back taxes was not "debt").

(n125)Footnote 125. See Mabe v. G.C. Servs. Ltd. P'ship, 32 F.3d 86 (4th Cir. 1994) .

(n126)Footnote 126. Arnold v. Truemper, 833 F. Supp. 678 (N.D. Ill. 1993) . See also FTC Official Staff Commentary § 803(5); Palmer, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Aug. 27, 1992) (law firms pursuit of civil damages arising from shoplifting violation was a tort action and thus not covered by FDCPA); Dunn, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Aug. 17, 1992) (tort claims and tort judgments were not "debts" covered by the FDCPA); Kaplan, FTC Informal Staff Letter (May 18, 1987).

(n127)Footnote 126.1. See Baer v. Harmon Law Offices, P.C., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3014 (D. Mass. Jan. 14, 2009) (notice to quit and vacate premises that did not reference a preexisting financial obligation, and that sought to have the tenant vacate the premises and damages for holding over, rather than rent, was not an attempt to collect a debt, and was not covered by the FDCPA).

(n128)Footnote 127. See 26 U.S.C. § 6304(e).

(n129)Footnote 128. Keele v. Wexler, 149 F.3d 589 (7th Cir. 1998) (while the FDCPA may apply to consensual transactions, there is no express FDCPA exception for transactions that are not consensual because the consumer entered into them with the intent to defraud the other party; the court would not create a fraud exception where Congress did not create one). See also Wiegand v. JNR Adjustment Co., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7292 (D. Minn. Apr. 22, 2002) (attempting to collect the amounts of stolen, forged checks from the checking account owner who reversed payment on them was attempting to collect a "debt" within the FDCPA, notwithstanding the underlying theft and the purported absence of a consensual transaction between the merchant and the putative debtor).

(n130)Footnote 129. 15 U.S.C. § 1692.

(n131)Footnote 130. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k. See Wright v. Financial Serv. of Norwalk, Inc., 996 F.2d 820 (6th Cir.

1993) , aff'd en banc, 22 F.3d 647 (6th Cir. 1994) (executrix, deceased's daughter, stood in the shoes of the debtor, had authority to open and read letters addressed to the debtor, and had standing to bring actions under the FDCPA); Wenrich v. Robert E. Cole, P.C., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18687 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 22, 2000) (some protections of the FDCPA extended to "any person," including parents alleged to be obligated on the claim, if they were contacted by the collector to pay the debt); Sibersky v. Borah, Goldstein, Altschuler & Schwartz, P.C., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14043 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 22, 2000) (husband who was not a consumer could pursue FDCPA claims under sections not restricted to consumers, such as a § 1692e(5) claim, but claim for violation of the notice requirements, which applied only to consumers, was dismissed); Flowers v. Accelerated Bureau of Collections, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3354 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 13, 1997) (consumer's spouse may bring FDCPA claim if debt collection efforts that would violate the Act were targeted at her; husband to which a collection call was targeted had standing to sue where the threats to sue and garnish his wages were received by his wife); Dutton v. Wolhar, 809 F. Supp. 1130 (D. Del. 1992) (protections not limited to "consumers"); Dolan v. Schreiber & Assocs., P.C., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6005 (magistrate recommendation), adopted, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5998 (D. Mass. Mar. 29, 2002) (alleged unlawful threat to attach the debtor's property stated a claim on behalf of a nondebtor co-owner of the property, since the threat had consequences for the nondebtor whose interest in the property could be harmed). But see Kropelnicki v. Siegel, 290 F.3d 118 (2d Cir. 2002) (consumer had no standing to claim that the contents of the letter violated the FDCPA because the letter was addressed to her daughter and was, therefore, not a communication with her).

(n132)Footnote 131. See, e.g., 15 U.S.C. § 1692d.

(n133)Footnote 132. 15 U.S.C. § 1692(e).

(n134)Footnote 132.1. Muir v. Navy Fed. Credit Union, 529 F.3d 1100 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (court found the son had "prudential" standing by being within the zone of FDCPA protections).

(n135)Footnote 133. See Robey v. Shapiro, Marianos & Cejda, L.L.C., 434 F.3d 1208 (10th Cir. 2006) (Art. III constitutional standing satisfied).

(n136)Footnote 134. See McCartney v. First City Bank, 970 F.2d 45, 46 (5th Cir. 1992) ; Baker v. G.C. Servs. Corp., 677 F.2d 775, 777 (9th Cir. 1982) .

(n137)Footnote 135. See Keele v. Wexler, 149 F.3d 589 (7th Cir. 1998) .

(n138)Footnote 136. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6). See Hayes v. GC Servs., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12045 (W.D. Va. June 19, 1995) (collection agency which made brief reminder phone calls to HUD mortgage holders who were one month late in payments was engaged in debt collection); see also Knight v. Schulman, 102 F. Supp. 2d 867 (S.D. Ohio 1996) (letter acknowledging payment was not a communication to collect a debt). But see Santoro v. CTC Foreclosure Serv. Corp., 12 Fed. Appx. 476 (9th Cir. 2001) (unpublished) (ignoring logic and plain meaning rule, court held FDCPA did not apply to letter sent by "foreclosure service" discussing creditor's workout policies and legal notice of foreclosure because they were not duns sent in connection with the collection of a debt); Buckley v. Bass & Assocs., 249 F.3d 678 (7th Cir. 2001) (letter seeking information about consumer's bankruptcy filing was not effort to collect a debt, so defendant need not comply with "initial communication" requirements of § 1692g).

(n139)Footnote 137. See Van Westrienen v. Americontinental Collection Corp., 94 F. Supp. 2d 1087 (D. Or. 2000) . But see Young v. Manley, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13035 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 6, 2000) (The defendant law firm sent a letter to plaintiff's bankruptcy attorney threatening a nondischargeability proceeding based on the amount of credit card charges incurred just before bankruptcy. The letter contained neither of the required FDCPA notices. The consumer's attorney was not a "consumer" within the FDCPA and did not need its protections; a collector was, indeed, required to communicate with the attorney who represented the debtor.).

Kropelnicki v. Siegel, 290 F.3d 118 (2d Cir. 2002) (stating in dicta, "[W]e assume the attorney, rather than the FDCPA, will protect the consumer from a debt collector's fraudulent or harassing behavior. However, this is not an issue on which we need to rule today."); Diesi v. Shapiro, 330 F. Supp. 2d 1002 (C.D. Ill. 2004) (followed dicta in Kropelnicki and dismissed consumers' claim that mortgage servicer inflated mortgage balance in statement to her lawyer helping consumer prevent foreclosure); Zaborac v. Phillips & Cohen Assoc., Ltd., 330 F. Supp. 2d 962, 966 (N.D. Ill. 2004) ; Tromba v. M.R.S. Assoc., Inc., 323 F. Supp. 2d 424, 428 (E.D.N.Y. 2004) . See also Phillips v. North Am. Capital Corp., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7000 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 30, 1999) ("[f]urthermore, plaintiff has no standing to bring this claim. While the FDCPA prohibits certain communications with a 'consumer,' the statute does not prohibit such communications with a consumer's attorney. The underlying rationale of the statute--protecting unsophisticated consumers--does not support a ban on communications with consumers' attorneys, who presumably have a higher level of sophistication.").

(n140)Footnote 138. See Blanks v. Ford Motor Credit, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 269 (N.D. Tex. Jan. 7, 2005) ; Sullivan v. Equifax, Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7884 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 19, 2002) .

(n141)Footnote 139. See, e.g., Pettway v. Harmon Law Offices, P.C., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21341 (D. Mass. Sept. 27, 2005) ("Harmon's payoff and reinstatement letters state an amount owing which includes unearned fees and costs and asks the debtor to '[p]lease make your certified check ... payable to HARMON LAW OFFICES.' These letters clearly fall within FDCPA's definition of a debt collection communication, whether or not they are prompted by the borrower, and regardless of the fact that a misleading letter was preceded by one that was not."); Spencer v. Hendersen-Webb, 81 F. Supp. 2d 582 (D. Md. 1999) (debt collector's fax of bill to father of consumer's boyfriend in response to his request for information on debt was deemed to be an attempt to collect debt since debt collector believed father was consumer's attorney and that information would reach consumer indirectly; court determined that fax was debt collector's initial communication and thus failure to provide validation notice in connection with fax violated FDCPA; therefore, debt collector violated § 1692g(b) making offer and by failing to cease collection until debt was verified); Weinberg v. Arcventures, Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9415 (N.D. Ill. July 3, 1996) (genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether collection agency's letter to debtor's daughter was an attempt to get daughter to pay debt she did not owe or was sent to daughter, an attorney, as legal representative of her mother; letter was sent in response to request by daughter, an attorney, for verification of her mother's debt). But see Geiger v. Creditors Interchange, Inc., 59 Fed. Appx. 803 (6th Cir. 2003) (not for publication) (second letter that was sent in response to consumer's accusation that collector had violated FDCPA did not convey information regarding debt itself, was not "communication" as defined by § 1692a(2), and therefore did not require § 1692e(11) disclosure); Wexler v. Bank of Am. Auto Fin. Corp., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12491 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 23, 2000) (letter, in response to Wexler's communication, that did not seek payment but was merely warning seeking to avert any collection consequences of nonpayment was not collection activity covered by FDCPA; plaintiff Wexler was defendant in prior FDCPA suits).

(n142)Footnote 139.1. Muir v. Navy Fed. Credit Union, 529 F.3d 1100 (D.C. Cir. 2008) .

(n143)Footnote 140. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(2).

(n144)Footnote 141. Mezines, FTC Formal Advisory Opinion (Mar. 31, 2000). But see McKnight v. Benitez, 176 F. Supp. 2d 1301 (M.D. Fla. 2001) (neither summons, complaint, or other papers served on consumer in conjunction with initiation of lawsuit is a "communication" under FDCPA; plaintiff's claim that papers failed to comply with § 1692g dismissed); Frye v. Bowman, Heintz, Boscia & Vician, P.C., 193 F. Supp. 2d 1070 (S.D. Ind. 2002) (court surveyed dispute of authority about whether a summons was a communication to collect a debt, but did not decide because a "communication" was not essential to the alleged violations).

(n145)Footnote 142. Compare Vega v. McKay, 351 F.3d 1334 (11th Cir. 2003) (summons not a communication) with Thomas v. Law Firm of Simpson & Cybak, 354 F.3d 696 (7th Cir. 2004) (not for publication), vacated, 358 F.3d 446 (7th Cir. 2004) (summons was a communication). See also Gibson v. Grupo de Ariel, L.L.C., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 539 (N.D. Tex. Jan. 9, 2006) (FDCPA claim can be premised on flawed legal proceedings because FDCPA prohibits fraudulent, deceptive or misleading representations, including those made in judicial or governmental proceedings);

Anderson v. Frederick J. Hanna & Assocs., 361 F. Supp. 2d 1379 (N.D. Ga. 2005) (debt collector's argument that lawsuit to collect debt was not "collection activity" was patently frivolous).

(n146)Footnote 143. Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) ("The Act does apply to lawyers engaged in litigation."); see also Romea v. Heiberger & Assocs., 163 F.3d 111 (2d Cir. 1998) (state mandated 3-day demand for payment of past-due rent and eviction notice sent by an attorney is covered); Tomas v. Bass & Moglowski, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21533 (W.D. Wis. June 29, 1999) (filing a complaint and other aspects of litigation were actions in connection with the collection of a debt); Mezines, FTC Formal Advisory Opinion (Mar. 21, 2000) ("In light of Heintz, the Commission concludes that, if an attorney debt collector serves on a consumer a court document 'conveying information regarding a debt,' that court document is a 'communication' for purposes of the FDCPA."). But cf. Dempsey, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Sept. 13, 1996) (while summary eviction proceedings may not be covered, under Heintz, dunning letters in connection with the litigation are covered).

(n147)Footnote 144. 392 F.3d 914 (7th Cir. 2004) . See also In re Gunter, 334 B.R. 900 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2005) (summons and complaint are "communications" within FDCPA).

(n148)Footnote 145. Vega v. McKay, 351 F.3d 1334 (11th Cir. 2003) .

(n149)Footnote 146. Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) ; Paulemon v. Tobin, 30 F.3d 307 (2d Cir. 1994) ; Clark's Jewelers v. Humble, 823 P.2d 818 (Kan. Ct. App. 1991) (debt collector violated § 1692g(b) where it failed to provide verification of the debt but continued to send dunning letters in care of consumers' attorney). See also Frey v. Gangwish, 970 F.2d 1516, 1521 (6th Cir. 1992) (dissenting opinion) (conveying information to an attorney is equivalent to conveying it to the attorney's client). But cf. Kropelnicki v. Siegel, 290 F.3d 118, 128 (2d Cir. 2002) (dicta: "Where an attorney is interposed as an intermediary between a debt collector and a consumer, we assume the attorney, rather than the FDCPA, will protect the consumer from a debt collector's fraudulent or harassing behavior."); Dikeman v. National Educators, Inc., 81 F.3d 949 (10th Cir. 1996) (the § 1692e(11) disclosures were not required to avoid deception in a communication to the consumer's attorney verifying the amount of debt in response to the consumer attorney's request for verification because the debt collection purpose of the letter would be apparent to the attorney. The jury had found the debt had not been verified when the verification given was inadequate because it overstated the collector's claim, but the jury excused the violation as a bona fide error because it was not an attempt to collect a debt but was designed to comply with the U.C.C.).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 8 Fair Debt Collection

1-8 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 8.03

§ 8.03 Consumer Protections and Rights Under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Actn1

[1] General Principles of Construction of the Act

To accomplish the consumer protection purpose of the FDCPA, the courts apply a least sophisticated consumer standard to analyze the protections of the Act. n2 The FDCPA is a "strict liability" statute. n3 As a result, a debt collector is responsible for a deviation from some of the FDCPA's requirements without regard to intent or knowledge or the willfulness of the violation.

The Supreme Court held that the congressional intent should be implemented by giving effect to the plain meaning in ordinary English of the Act. n4 The FDCPA is a remedial statute and should be liberally construed. n5

[2] FDCPA Limits a Collector's Communications With a Consumer

[a] Consumers' Privacy and Relationships Protected

The FDCPA restricts the times and places a debt collector may contact a consumer, limits third-party contacts, and prohibits contacting a consumer represented by an attorney. n6 These restrictions, along with others, n7 protect the consumer's right to privacy and the security of the consumer's relationships with third parties, including attorneys, co-workers, and employers. The Act also gives a consumer the right to require a collector to stop communicating with the consumer about a debt.

[b] Contacts at Unusual or Inconvenient Times or Places Prohibited n8

Generally no contact is allowed before 8 a.m. or after 9 p.m. This definitely covers telephone calls and personal visits. Places such as a neighbor's home, a hospital, or a funeral parlor are inconvenient or unusual places to contact a consumer about a debt and are thus prohibited. The collector has a burden of reasonable inquiry to determine the times or places that are unusual or inconvenient for a particular consumer. The consumer need not use legally precise language to indicate the inconvenience to the debt collector. n9

[c] Collector May Not Contact a Consumer It Knows to Be Represented by an Attorney

15 U.S.C. section 1692c(a)(2) prohibits consumer contacts by a collector who knows the consumer is represented by an attorney with respect to the debt. n10 According to the FTC staff, the creditor's knowledge that the consumer is represented by an attorney is not to be imputed to the collector. n11 The Eighth Circuit has weighed in agreeing that the plain language of the FDCPA does not allow the creditor's knowledge of the representation to be imputed to the collection agency. n12 But courts have disagreed. n13 One court held that the debt collector's confirmation that they will cease collection because of the consumer's legal representation is permissible because it is not a "communication" as defined by section 1692a(2), if there is not request for payment. n14

[d] Contacts at Workplace Are Restricted

Generally, collectors cannot contact a debtor at their place of employment if the debt collector knows or has reason to know that the consumer's employer prohibits the consumer from receiving such communication. n15

[e] Informing Most Other People of the Consumer's Indebtedness Is Prohibited

Generally, a collector may not communicate, in connection with the collection of any debt, with any person other than the consumer, his attorney, a consumer reporting agency if otherwise permitted by law, the creditor, the attorney of the creditor, or the attorney of the debt collector. n16 This means that contacting friends, neighbors, relatives, or an employer is usually prohibited. A debt buyer may not provide debtors' contact information to a creditor card issuer with the goal of having the credit card account pay off the debt. n17 A debt collector who leaves a message on a family's shared answering machine or voicemail risks communicating with an unobligated family member violating this provision.

[i] Collector May Contact Certain Nondebtors

The collector may contact only a select few nonconsumers in connection with the consumer's debt: the consumer's attorney; n18 a credit reporting agency; the creditor; the creditor's or collector's attorney; the consumer's spouse; n19 parent, if the consumer is a minor; n20 guardian, executor, or administrator; n21 and codebtors. n22 The only exceptions permit the collector to contact third parties in order to learn the consumer's residential address and phone number or his or her work address. n23 Even when obtaining this limited information, n24 however, the collector may not state that the consumer owes any money and cannot use the collection company's name unless it is requested. n25

A collector may also contact a third party if reasonably necessary to effect a postjudgment judicial remedy such as a garnishee in a garnishment action. n26

[ii] Contacts in Other Situations

Because other people may see an envelope addressed to the consumer, the collector may not use a name or other information on the envelope indicating that its contents pertain to debt collection. n27

When a collector contacts a consumer or permissible third party, 15 U.S.C. section 1692e(11) requires that the person be told that the collector is collecting a debt and that any information provided will be used for that purpose (unless the collector is only trying to obtain location information). n28 A debt collector should not leave messages with third parties to have the debtor return their call n29 or prerecorded calls or messages on a telephone answering device that may be shared to avoid violating this provision. n30

A debt collector who leaves a message on a consumer's telephone answering device runs the risk of violating the FDCPA unless the answering device is used exclusively by the debtor or the consumer has consented directly to the debt collector to leaving messages on that answering machine. n31 The leading case on this issue is Foti, n32 which held that a debt collector must leave the section 1692e(11) disclosure in a voicemail that the caller is a debt collector, a statement that may not be made to third parties under section 1692c(b), thus prohibiting a debt collector from leaving messages with most third parties. This also puts debt collectors at risk for leaving messages on voicemail systems that may be shared with third parties the debt collector may not contact like the debtor's children or roommate. In the absence of an individual voice mailbox for the consumer, a debt collector reaching an answering device must hang up and call back later or write the consumer to avoid the risk of an unlawful third party communication.

The FDCPA, 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(11), requires the debt collector to disclose in the initial communication that it is collecting a debt and any information provided by the consumer will be used to collect the debt. In subsequent communications it requires disclosure that it is a debt collector. Those disclosures must not be made to third parties. Nevertheless, some debt collectors leave voicemail messages for consumers without that disclosure and argue that they did not violate the disclosure requirement because their message was not a "communication" defined by the FDCPA because they did not mention the debt. However, two courts recently rejected that argument and required the section 1692e(11) disclosure in voicemails left for a consumer. n33 Both decisions rejected the debt collectors' argument noting the broad language Congress used in defining the word "communication" n34 and pointing out that the debt collectors' interpretation would render superfluous another provision of the FDCPA, 15 U.S.C. § 1692b, also protecting consumers' privacy.

[f] Obtaining Location Information About a Consumer From Other Persons Is Strictly Regulated

15 U.S.C. sections 1692a(7) and 1692b establish a narrow, limited exception to the general prohibition of third party contacts to obtain location information. Once the collector has either the consumer's home address and phone number or work address, its future activities do not fall within this exception.

This section closely regulates the content and form of permissible contacts in order to avoid having the third party learn that the consumer owes a debt. The debt collector's employees must use their own individual names n35 or, in some jurisdictions, a consistently used and recorded alias. The employee may reveal the collector's trade name only upon request and then must reveal the true legal name. n36 When contacting the third party, the collector may state only that "he is confirming or correcting location information concerning the consumer"; n37 the collector may not state that the consumer owes a debt. n38 The collector may not seek additional information like the consumer's employment status, salary or date of hire. n39

The collector may not use postcards to obtain location information. n40 It may not use any name, language, or symbol in any communication or on any envelope indicating that it is in the collection business or indicating the communication relates to debt collection. n41

Normally, the collector may contact a third party for location information only once.

[g] Consumers May Waive, by Direct Prior Consent, Protections From Collection Contacts

By direct prior consent, a consumer may waive the protections of 15 U.S.C. section 1692c(a) and (b), thereby allowing a collector to communicate with the consumer at inconvenient or unusual times or places, n42 when represented by an attorney, n43 or at his or her place of employment. n44 The consumer may also give prior consent to the collector to make third party contacts. n45 Since the consumer must give prior consent directly to the debt collector, a waiver included in the creditor's contract is not effective.

[h] Right to Stop Collection Contacts

15 U.S.C. section 1692c(c) requires a debt collector to halt its routine collection efforts upon receiving either a written request from a consumer to cease collection efforts or a written refusal to pay the debt. n46 After receiving the notice, the collector may contact the consumer only to advise that its collection efforts are being terminated and that it (or the creditor) intends to invoke specified remedies. The consumer need not exercise this right in any manner, so long as notification is in writing. Notification is effective when the collector receives it. n47 If the consumer has requested verification of the debt pursuant to section 1692g as well as cessation of communications, one court has held that the debt collector may provide the requested verification. n48

[3] Conduct Serving to Harass, Oppress, or Abuse Is Prohibited

[a] Harassing, Oppressive, and Abusive Conduct Generally Prohibited

The Act prohibits any conduct the natural consequence of which is to harass, oppress, or abuse any person in connection with the collection of a debt. n49 The term "harass" is not defined in the Act, but examples of actionable harassment are provided by the prohibitions in the subsections of 15 U.S.C. section 1692d. This left room for courts to determine that various other behaviors by collectors violated the Act. n50

[b] Collectors May Not Use or Threaten Violence or Criminal Conduct

The use or threat of use of violence or other criminal means to harm the physical person, reputation, or property of any person violates the Act and creates a private cause of action and federal jurisdiction for actual or threatened violations of federal, state, and local criminal laws, many of which are seldom governmentally enforced. n51

[c] Collectors May Not Use Obscene, Profane, or Abusive Language

The Act prohibits the use of obscene or profane language or language the natural consequence of which is to abuse the hearer or reader. n52

[d] Publishing a List of Allegedly Defaulting Debtors Is Prohibited

The publication of a list of consumers who allegedly refuse to pay debts, except to a consumer reporting agency or to specified other persons violates the Act, n53 is prohibited as is the posting of "dead beat lists" or "shame lists" in the window of a collection agency or publishing such lists in local newspapers.

[i] Certain Credit Reporting Permitted

The Fair Credit Reporting Act ("FCRA") n54 lists specific circumstances under which a credit reporting agency may provide a third party with a consumer report, n55 generally where there is a legitimate business interest.

[e] Advertising a Debt for Sale to Coerce Payment Is Prohibited

A creditor is prohibited from advertising a consumer's debt as for sale in order to coerce payment from the consumer. n56

[f] Repeated or Continuous Telephone Calls Intended to Annoy, Abuse, or Harass Are Prohibited

Repeated or continuous phone calls to a consumer, which are intended to annoy, abuse, or harass the consumer, are prohibited. n57

[g] Collector's Employee Must Provide Meaningful Disclosure of Identity When Telephoning

This provision n58 prohibits anonymous phone calls by collectors by requiring collection employees to disclose their own name and the company for which they work. The use of aliases by collection employees is a controversial subject on which the FTC staff and the courts have offered contradictory opinions. n59 Use of a fake Caller ID name would not be considered the use of an alias and may violate this provision. n60

[i] Care Must Be Exercised When Leaving Messages

A debt collector must be careful not to disclose its identity as a debt collector to a third party to whom the debt collector is prohibited from communicating by 15 U.S.C. section 1692c(b). n61

[4] False, Deceptive, or Misleading Representations and Collection Methods Are Prohibited by 15 U.S.C. § 1692e

[a] Objective Standard of Deception Is Applied to Protect the "Least Sophisticated"

Proof of actual deception is neither required nor relevant to the determination of a collector's liability. n62

[b] Threat of Suit May Be Deceptive

[i] Misrepresenting Imminence of Suit, or Intent or Authority to Sue

Collection letters and conversations frequently contain deceptive threats of suit violating the Act if suit is not really imminent, intended, or possible. n63

Westlaw has a database that can help expose some of a collector's litigation policies, and this information may be useful to prove FDCPA claims. n64

Statements that the collector "may," "can," or "could" pursue suit have given some courts some difficulty. The issue raised by those statements is whether the least sophisticated consumers would reasonably imply a threat of suit from such a statement and whether that threat is deceptive. n65 The use of a law firm's letterhead may not be a threat of legal action in itself but is a persuasive factor when combined with the other language used by the collector. n66 The consumer bears the burden of proving the lack of intent to sue and must be prepared with some evidence to rebut an assertion that the debt collector intended to sue. n67

[c] Other Threats and Statements May Be Deceptive

[i] Other Deceptive Threats

Threats of activities other than suit may be deceptive. The following threats have been found deceptive: referral to the creditor for legal action; referral to an attorney; referral to a credit reporting agency or other harm to the consumer's credit rating; drastic action or unspecified action; contacting third parties; adding unauthorized charges to the collector's claim falsely implying the charges were owed; mentioning postjudgment remedies before suit is filed; and misrepresenting that payment would improve the consumer's credit rating. n68

[ii] Other Deceptive Statements

Statements that are not threats may be deceptive and violate 15 U.S.C. section 1692e.

[iii] Filing a Time-Barred Suit Is Deceptive

It is unfair under the FDCPA to file a time-barred collection suit against a consumer and deceptive to threaten to file such a suit. n69 Where the collector requests payment on a time-barred debt without threatening suit, the courts have found the request not to be deceptive because most statutes of limitation bar the remedy of suit but do not extinguish the debt. n70 The courts reached this result despite the collector's suppression of the fact that the debt was time barred and that a payment could restart the statute of limitations. On the other hand, where a state's statute of limitations extinguished the debt, it was deceptive to seek its payment. n71 Seeking admissions that would undermine the consumer raising the statute of limitations as a defense would be abusive and unfair. n72

[d] Collectors May Not Falsely Imply an Affiliation With the Government

This provision n73 is intended, among other things, to prohibit a collector from impersonating a government official, such as a law enforcement officer. Collection companies may not use off-duty uniformed police officers to collect debts nor use an actual or simulated state seal. It also prohibits using collection names that imply governmental affiliation or the use of certain symbols, e.g., a police badge, judge, or scales of justice, in a dunning letter.

[e] Collectors May Not Falsely Represent the Character, Amount, or Legal Status of Any Debt

It is a violation of the Act to falsely represent that a debt exists, the amount of the debt, or the legal status, such as that a judgment has been obtained if one has not. n74 Making confusing statements about the amount to pay off the debt may be deceptive. n75

[f] Collectors May Not Falsely Represent the Services They Have Rendered or the Compensation to Which They Are Entitled

This provision n76 prohibits such practices as falsely representing that a consumer is subject to collection charges that are in fact illegal, including a complaint seeking attorney's fees to which an attorney was not entitled. n77

[g] Falsely Implying That a Person Is an Attorney or That a Communication Comes From an Attorney Is Prohibited

This provision n78 prohibits a collector from actually or implicitly impersonating an attorney. A collection agency that mails form letters carrying an attorney's letterhead and signature violates this provision. n79

The Second Circuit allowed a major exception to this line of cases when it determined that a law firm's disclaimer would overcome the deceptiveness of a lawyer mass mailing collection letters without reviewing the underlying claim. The court held a dunning letter on a collection law firm's letterhead was not deceptive where there was no attorney review of the claim and the letter stated: "At this time, no attorney with this firm has personally reviewed the particular circumstances of your account. However, if you fail to contact this office, our client may consider additional remedies to recover the balance due." n80 The court explained: "Put another way, our prior precedents demonstrate that an attorney can, in fact, send a debt collection letter without being meaningfully involved as an attorney within the collection process, so long as that letter includes disclaimers that should make clear even to the 'least sophisticated consumer' that the law firm or attorney sending the letter is not, at the time of the letter's transmission, acting as an attorney." n81

In Rosenau v. Unifund Corp., n82 the Third Circuit found an FDCPA deception violation where a collection letter indicated it was from the debt buyer's "Legal Department," and the unit sending the letter was not supervised or staffed by any lawyers. None of Unifund's three in-house lawyers worked with the "Legal Department." Moreover, no lawyer or anyone else reviewed the consumer files before the collection letters were sent. Unifund mailed about 2000 of the letters each day, threatening the debt's referral to a collection lawyer.

[h] Implying That Nonpayment Will Result in Arrest, Imprisonment, Garnishment, Attachment, Seizure, or Sale if Such Action Is Unlawful or Unintended Is Prohibited

This provision is intended to protect the consumer from false threats or implications--for example, that the consumer will be arrested or that his or her property will be seized. n83

[i] Threatening Unlawful or Unintended Action Is Prohibited

This important provision prohibits the use of threats that the collector does not intend to carry out or that are illegal. n84

[i] False Threats

This provision prohibits both explicit and veiled threats of unintended legal action as well as other false threats. n85 The debt collector's statement about reporting an FCRA obsolete debt to a credit reporting agency may be deceptive. n86

[j] Falsely Implying That Transfer of a Debt Will Preclude a Consumer's Claim or Defense or Will Subject the Consumer to a Practice Prohibited by the Act Is Prohibited

This provision n87 was designed to prohibit a covered creditor or a collector from making direct or implied false threats to transfer a consumer's account to another, harsher collector.

[k] Misrepresenting That the Consumer Committed a Crime or Engaged in Other Misconduct in Order to Disgrace the Consumer Is Prohibited

This would cover false accusations of fraud or nonpayment of debts and should be seen through the eyes of the "least sophisticated debtor." n88

[l] Communicating or Threatening to Communicate False Credit Information Is Prohibited

This provision prohibits threats to tell another person without elaboration that a consumer refuses to pay a debt when either the consumer is unobligated or the debt is disputed. n89

[m] Using or Distributing Written Material Giving a False Impression of Its Source, Authorization, or Approval Is Prohibited

This provision n90 prohibits such common debt collection abuses as simulating legal process and using bogus legal documents. n91

[n] False Representations or Deceptive Means to Collect or Attempt to Collect a Debt or to Obtain Information About a Consumer Is Prohibited

This is a "catch-all" provision. n92 A false statement that the debt collector is licensed when it is not violates the FDCPA. n93

[o] Collector Must Disclose That a Communication Is to Collect a Debt and That Information Received Will Be Used for That Purpose

This section n94 requires a notice in the initial written communication with a consumer (if it is not a pleading) that the debt collector is collecting a debt and that any information obtained will be used for debt collection purposes. If the initial communication is oral, the notice must be included in the oral communication as well as the initial written communication. If the initial communications are formal pleadings, the notice is not required until a nonpleading communication occurs.

As a result of a 1996 amendment, a debt collection notice is no longer required in subsequent communications, but there must be a statement in subsequent communications which are not formal pleadings that the communication is from a debt collector. n95

[i] Phone Calls, the Debt Collection Warning, and Other FDCPA Requirements

A collector must not disclose the debt collection purpose of a phone call to most third parties when leaving messages for the consumer. The collector must, however, disclose the collection purpose to the consumer when the consumer returns the phone call if it is the initial communication. n96 In subsequent communications, the collector must state that the caller is a debt collector when speaking to the consumer, but not when leaving a message with a third party. n97

The 1996 amendment to this provision adopted the FTC staff position that the notice is not required in formal legal proceedings. n98

[p] Falsely Implying That Accounts Have Been Transferred to Innocent Purchasers for Value Is Prohibited

This provision n99 prohibits a debt collector from misrepresenting that it is an innocent purchaser not subject to the consumer's claims and defenses against the creditor; 15 U.S.C. section 1692e(6)(A) more clearly prohibits such misrepresentations.

[q] Falsely Implying That Documents Are Legal Process Is Prohibited

A collection letter closely resembling the format, words, and type size and style of a court summons or complaint simulates legal process and is prohibited. n100

Use of simulated process by a collector renders actual legal process less recognizable and noteworthy to consumers, increasing the likelihood of default judgments. The use of deceptive means undermines the dignity of the courts, is unfair to consumers, and gives deceptive collectors an unjust advantage over competitors.

[r] Using Any Business Name Other Than the True Name of the Collector's Business Is Prohibited

This section n101 requires that the collection employee reveal his or her employer's true business name when the business name is requested by the person contacted.

When a collection employee telephones a person whom he or she is permitted to contact, 15 U.S.C. section 1692d(6) requires a "meaningful disclosure of the caller's identity." To comply with 15 U.S.C. section 1692e(14), this disclosure must include identification of the collector's true business name.

The requirement that a true business name be used is fundamental to providing for accountability of firms regulated by the FDCPA. n102

State law is generally the source for determining the true name of a debt collection business, since state law, if any law, may provide for licensing debt collectors, n103 regulate the use of corporate, trade and fictitious names and provide a means of registration n104 of organizations' names. This provision also prohibits a collector using another's name, n105 such as law enforcement agency's n106 or an attorney.

[s] Falsely Implying That Documents Are Not Legal Process Is Prohibited

This provision n107 prohibits a collector from representing that a consumer need only send in payments, upon being sued, when in fact legal inaction will result in a default judgment. n108

[t] Falsely Implying That a Collector Operates or Is Employed by a Credit Reporting Agency Is Prohibited

A collection agency cannot misrepresent itself as a consumer reporting agency. n109 A court and the FTC staff have concluded that the use of a name including "creditor's bureau" was sufficiently different than using "credit bureau," which is synonymous with credit reporting agency, that it was not confusing or deceptive. n110

[5] Use of Unfair or Unconscionable Collection Means Is Prohibited

[a] General Prohibition; Construing "Unfair" and "Unconscionable"

A debt collector may not use unfair or unconscionable means to collect or attempt to collect any debt. n111 This general prohibition covers unfair or unconscionable collection acts falling outside the specific acts or practices prohibited in the various subsections to this section. The unsophisticated consumer analytical standard is appropriate for cases under this provision.

"Unconscionable" is a term of art borrowed from equity and the common law. It is codified in Uniform Commercial Code ("UCC") sections 2-302 and 2-719(3), in Uniform Consumer Credit Code ("UCCC") section 6.111(c), and in many state consumer protection statutes. n112 Section 1692f does not require the element of knowledge or intent. n113

[b] Collecting Any Amount Not Permitted by Law Is Prohibited

This provision prohibits "collecting more than is legally owing." n114 It covers both the collection of an entire debt not lawfully owed and the addition of illegal charges, such as noncontractual collection charges, service charges, attorney's fees, late fees, etc.

Creditor's and collector's charges are commonly regulated by usury and credit statutes. n115 Garnishment of the debtor's wages in violation of the bankruptcy automatic stay violates 15 U.S.C. § 1692f(1). n116 A claim may also be stated against a bank for falsely claiming to hold the consumer's mortgage. n117

[c] Restrictions on Soliciting, Accepting, and Depositing Postdated Checks

These subsections n118 restrict when a collector may solicit, accept, or deposit a postdated check. A postdated check may not be deposited by a collector before the date on the check. n119 A collector is prohibited from soliciting a postdated check in order to threaten or institute criminal prosecution. A collector's acceptance of a postdated check violates the Act unless it gives the consumer who wrote the check three to ten business days notice prior to depositing the check. n120

[d] Causing Expenses to a Person by Concealing the Collection Purpose of a Communication Is Prohibited

This provision n121 protects a consumer from incurring charges for collection communications when he or she has no reason to know the communications' purpose.

This provision prohibits a collector from placing a collect telephone call or telegram to a consumer without having notified the consumer to expect it and without having announced its collection purpose. A similar consideration would apply to calling a consumer's cell phone as the consumer is likely to be charged a toll on incoming calls. The consumer would have to be alerted to call beforehand for the call not to violate the Act.

[e] Repossession or Threats of Repossession Are Prohibited When There Is No Right or Intent to Repossess or When the Property Is Exempt From Repossession

This provision prohibits threats to dispossess property or actual dispossession of property in the absence of an enforceable security interest or when the property is exempt from dispossession. n122

[f] Using a Postcard to Communicate With a Consumer Regarding a Debt Is Prohibited

This section n123 protects a consumer's privacy by prohibiting "communicating information about a debt by postcard."

[g] All Language and Symbols on Envelopes Used for Collection Are Prohibited Except for the Collector's Address and Name if the Name Does Not Indicate the Collector's Business

Using symbols on an envelope that indicate a debt collection purpose is prohibited by this provision. n124 If a debt collector's name contains a variant of the word "debt" or "collect," the collector may not use its name in the return address or elsewhere on its collection envelopes. Noncollection names may appear on the envelope. The Fifth n125 and Eighth n126 Circuits have stated that they do not consider this provision to prohibit benign messages on envelopes unless threatening or embarrassing.

[6] Validation of a Debt

[a] Congress Considered Debt Validation Significant

The Act gives consumers the right to obtain verification of a debt from the collector. n127 This is intended to minimize instances of mistaken identity of a debtor or mistakes over the amount or existence of a debt. It is an informal method of dispute resolution that conserves tax dollars and judicial resources. It is a strict liability provision; an unintentional violation of the validation requirements violates the Act. n128

Another federal statute, the Servicer Act, may provide even greater rights to a consumer to determine the charges and payments on their mortgage. n129 The Fair Credit Reporting Act may also provide strong remedies for disputes that involve an inaccurate credit report. n130

[b] The FDCPA Regulates the Content, Placement, and Provision of the Validation Rights Notice

The Act requires that:

> (a) Within five days after the initial communication with a consumer in connection with the collection of any debt, a debt collector shall, unless the following information is contained in the initial communication or the consumer has paid the debt, send the consumer a written notice containing--
>
> (1) the amount of the debt;
>
> (2) the name of the creditor to whom the debt is owed;
>
> (3) a statement that unless the consumer, within thirty days after receipt of the notice, disputes the validity of the debt, or any portion thereof, the debt will be assumed to be valid by the debt collector;
>
> (4) a statement that if the consumer notifies the debt collector in writing within the thirty-day period that the debt, or any portion thereof, is disputed, the debt collector will obtain verification of the debt or a copy of a judgment against the consumer and a copy of such verification or judgment will be mailed to the consumer by the debt collector; and
>
> (5) a statement that, upon the consumer's written request within the thirty-day period, the debt collector will provide the consumer with the name and address of the original creditor, if different from the current creditor. n131

[i] Placement and Provision of Validation Rights Notice

[A] Placement of the Validation Rights Notice

The notice must be large enough to be easily read and sufficiently prominent to be noticed, even by the least sophisticated debtor. And the notice must not be undermined by inconsistent and contradictory language which eviscerated its message. n132

[B] Providing Validation Rights Notices to Consumers

[1] Overview

The validation rights notice need not be provided until there is a "communication" from the debt collector to the consumer. n133 Notice of validation rights may be sent with or separately from the initial communication. n134 When not provided with the initial communication or when the first contact is not a formal pleading, the validation notice must be given within five days of the initial contact. n135 A 2006 amendment to the FDCPA provided a new exception: a formal legal pleading is not a communication triggering the obligation to provide the debt validation rights notice, postponing the requirement of providing of the notice. n136 Most courts require that each new debt collector must send a debt validation notice, and others make exceptions for lawyers hired by a collection agency that had sent the notice. n137 If the consumer is represented by an attorney, the Fourth Circuit noted the notice should be sent to the attorney, n138 while another case found there was no communication with the consumer necessitating a validation rights notice when the letters all went to the consumer's attorney. n139 If the consumer requests at the same time the validation of the debt and that the debt collector cease debt collection activities, the debt collector should honor both requests by providing the validation of the debt and not requesting payment except by legal action. n140

[2] Providing the Notice Before Formal Pleadings

The FTC staff indicated that a validation notice written on a separate sheet of paper, but sent with the initial communication, technically violated this section because it was not "contained in the initial communication." n141 The first court to look at this issue disagreed and found that the debt validation notice on a separate page sent to plaintiff in the same envelope as a collection letter was effectively provided because there was no concealment of the notice where it was the same size as the collection letter, was marked "Notice," was addressed to plaintiff, and named the creditor and amount of the debt. n142 The Tenth Circuit held in an unpublished decision that the validation notice provided on a separate page in the same envelope as a summons and foreclosure complaint was not obscured by the summons and complaint. n143

According to at least one district court, nothing prohibits a debt collector from sending subsequent validation notices even if the thirty-day period in the initial notice has expired. n144 Another court considering a subsequent, partial debt validation rights notice sent by the collector, held that the consumer was entitled to the rights embodied in the notice. n145

The FTC staff has indicated that a creditor may send a validation notice on behalf of a collection agency if the notice makes clear that the creditor is acting on behalf of the collection agency. n146 If an attorney is hired as a collection agency's agent, he or she must provide the validation notice. n147

Notice should be sent after judgment if that is when a collector begins to collect a debt. n148 A credit reporting agency must provide the notice if it acts as a debt collector. n149 A creditor must provide the notice when the creditor is covered by the Act. n150 The notice requirements of 15 U.S.C. § 1692g cannot be avoided by "verifying" the debt in advance of a request. n151 FTC staff believes the notice need not be given to a consumer's attorney (who may be unaware of validation rights), n152 but the safer course is to provide the notice to a consumer's attorney. n153

A collector must send a separate validation notice for each debt it seeks to collect from a consumer. n154 A collection agency may not evade the notice requirements of the FDCPA by sending its letters in the creditor's name. n155 A repossession company that was a debt collector covered by the FDCPA n156 may need to provide a validation notice.

n157 A collector who fails to properly provide the validation notice violates the FDCPA. n158 The burden is on the consumer to establish the violation. n159 The consumer need not dispute the validity of the debt to recover for a validation notice violation. n160

One court held that a collection attorney, who before he learned of the bankruptcy mailed a collection letter to a chapter 13 debtor, was prohibited by the automatic stay under the Bankruptcy Code from subsequently mailing a validation notice under 15 U.S.C. § 1692g and was not liable for his FDCPA violation. n161

The consumer bears the burden of proving that the validation notice was not sent. The consumer's testimony that she did not receive the notice may be considered evidence of the failure of the collector to mail it. n162 However, where the debt collector's records show that the validation rights notice was returned to the collector as undeliverable, the consumer rebutted the mailbox rule by testifying that he had not lived for five years at the address to which the validation rights notice was mailed and prevailed on the claim that the debt collector subsequently failed to send the notice to the current address. n163

[3] Providing the Notice After Initiating Debt Collection with Formal Pleadings

A 2006 amendment to the FDCPA provided this new language to section 1692g:

> (d) LEGAL PLEADINGS.--A communication in the form of a formal pleading in a civil action shall not be treated as an initial communication for purposes of subsection (a). n164

A formal legal pleading is not a communication triggering the obligation to provide the debt validation rights notice, postponing the requirement to provide the notice. n165 This amendment overruled in part the FTC's only formal FDCPA advisory opinion n166 and holdings in Second and Seventh Circuit decisions. n167 While the amendment should put an end to the confusing practice of some debt collectors to provide the debt validation rights notice in or with a summons and complaint, it may raise some legal uncertainty. For example, the term, "formal pleading" is not defined. Its ordinary meaning would apply to complaints, answers, and counterclaims. n168 This should mean that the notice must be provided at the discovery stage or motion stage of the litigation unless settlement discussions trigger the notification requirement before that. It is common for consumers to call debt collectors upon receipt of a debt collection complaint to discuss their options. This call would trigger the requirement that the notice be provided.

[4] Exception for Certain Legal Notices

A 2006 amendment to 15 U.S.C. § 1692g states:

> (e) NOTICE PROVISIONS.--The sending or delivery of any form or notice which does not relate to the collection of a debt and is expressly required by the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, title V of Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act, or any provision of Federal or State law relating to notice of data security breach or privacy, or any regulation prescribed under any such provision of law, shall not be treated as an initial communication in connection with debt collection for purposes of this section. n169

The most likely tax code notice is a 1099 notice of discharge of indebtedness income. The notices are not exempt if they are sent with a request for payment.

[ii] Content of Validation Notice

An incomplete statement of the 15 U.S.C. section 1692g(a)(1) through (5) rights violates the Act. n170 And a photocopy of 15 U.S.C. section 1692g is not a clear notice of the consumer's validation right since the language of the statute was not written to be understandable to unsophisticated consumers. The language of the validation notice must be substantively the same as the statutory language and must not impose additional burdens on the consumer. The validation notice should be placed and written so as to effectively communicate validation rights to unsophisticated consumers. Additionally, the collector's address should be contained in the communication in which the validation notice is given. The validation notice should not state that the consumer must use a writing to raise a dispute that overcomes the § 1692g(3) assumption that the debt is valid. The consumer is entitled to dispute a debt orally to overcome a collector's assumption that a debt is valid, although only a written dispute of the debt triggers the collector's duty to provide verification of the debt. n171 The notice must include the name of the creditor, n172 and the amount of the debt, as well as the debt collector's address, the right to the name of the original creditor, and an explanation of the procedure for exercising the right.

[iii] Collection Activities May Not Obscure the Validation Notice

A controversial issue is what debt collection activities are permitted during the period in which the consumer may request verification of the debt or the original creditor's name and address.

The FDCPA provides little support for the idea that a consumer has a right to be free from all collection activities even before he or she requests validation of the debt or requests the collector to cease collection contacts pursuant to 15 U.S.C. section 1692c(c). n173 However, the FDCPA may be violated by a threat to file suit or a credit report within the thirty-day period made so strongly as to suggest that the collector will not cease collection efforts while validating the debt pursuant to the consumer's request. One court has required collectors in Oklahoma to refrain from taking a default judgment during the thirty-day validation period to avoid a state law conflict with the FDCPA. n174 Courts have found a collector's demand for payment within a short time frame, e.g., five days, misleading when made in same letter as the notice, or in another letter sent in close proximity to the notice that the consumer has thirty days to request validation of the collector's claim. n175 The FDCPA does not require the debt collector to inform the consumer of the obligation to stop collection until the requested verification has been provided, n176 although they may disclose that requirement. n177

In its first formal advisory opinion on the FDCPA, the FTC determined that collection activities may continue during the thirty-day period that validation may be requested. n178 With the regard to this issue, the FTC reasoned:

> The Commission continues to believe that the thirty-day time frame set forth in Section 809 is a dispute period within which the consumer may insist that the collector verify the debt, and not a grace period within which collection efforts are prohibited. In response to the ACA's question, therefore, the Commission opines that Section 809(b) does permit a collection agency to either demand payment or take legal action during the thirty-day period for disputing a debt when a consumer from whom the collection agency is attempting to collect a debt has not notified the collection agency that the debt is disputed. The collection agency must ensure, however, that its collection activity does not overshadow and is not inconsistent with the disclosure of the consumer's right to dispute the debt specified by Section 809(a).

The FTC's opinion is in accord with the weight of judicial authority on this issue. n179 The consumer must dispute the debt in writing before the debt collector is required to stop its collection efforts and not resume collection until it has verified the debt. On the other hand, the debt collector must not engage in activities during the thirty-day period that may undermine the effectiveness of the validation notice. So the collector should not threaten collection activities in a way that could confuse the consumer about the right to obtain verification of the debt.

The FDCPA provides that an act done in good faith conformity with an advisory opinion of the FTC is insulated from FDCPA liability. n180 This is in contrast with the hundreds of FTC Informal Staff Letters on the FDCPA that are not binding on the FTC or the courts and do not provide a defense. n181

Any debt collection activities during the validation period should not contradict, obscure or confuse an unsophisticated consumer about the legal right to obtain verification of the debt to such an extent that the notice provided of the consumer's legal right to obtain validation is ineffectively conveyed. n182

[iv] Additions to Validation Notice to Avoid Deception or Confusion

Two appellate decisions have suggested additional language should be added to validation rights notices to avoid confusion or deception when the debt collector is demanding payment or threatening suit or the consumer's credit rating during the period the consumer has the right to the debt validation process. In Savino v. Computer Credit, Inc., the collection agent's violation of the FDCPA "consisted of its decision to ask for immediate payment without also explaining that its demand did not override the consumer's rights under Section 1692g to seek validation of the debt." n183 The court explained that CCI could have both sought immediate payment and complied with the Act simply by inserting into the text of its letter transitional language that referred the addressee to the validation notice. n184

In a Seventh Circuit case, Judge Posner announced a "safe haven" debt validation notice for the Seventh Circuit that unfortunately has a number of errors in it along with its good ideas. n185

Judge Posner's decision is troubling in that it provides a flawed, model validation notice and dunning letter that the court described as a "safe haven" for debt collectors in the Seventh Circuit. While the model letter has many salutary features, it fails to clearly inform the consumer that a dispute of a part of the debt, e.g., a mysterious service charge or the method by which the current balance was determined, triggers the obligation of the collector to validate that part of the debt. Such an omission would violate the FDCPA, at least in other circuits. In addition to clarifying that the collector would suspend or terminate collections if requested to validate a disputed debt, the Posner letter breaks up the notice of other aspects of the validation into simpler sentences increasing its readability for unsophisticated consumers. It also places the validation notice on the front of the letter following the description of the collector's intended collection activities so that it is clearer that the validation process will be followed if it is requested and the intended collection activities will be suspended or terminated.

[c] Verification of a Debt

15 U.S.C. section 1692g(b) provides:

> If the consumer notifies the debt collector in writing within the thirty-day period described in subsection (a) that the debt, or any portion thereof, is disputed, or that the consumer requests the name and address of the original creditor, the debt collector shall cease collection of the debt, or any disputed portion thereof, until the debt collector obtains verification of the debt or a copy of a judgment, or the name and address of the original creditor, and a copy of such verification or judgment, or name and address of the original creditor, is mailed to the consumer by the debt collector.

[i] Consumers Should Request Verification in Writing

The 30-day period during which a consumer may request verification of a debt runs from the date of receipt of the notice of validation rights by the consumer and is not extended by the collector's subsequent action.

A collector cannot impose requirements for a request for verification beyond those contained in the FDCPA. A consumer's statement that, "I dispute the debt" is sufficient to dispute the validity of a debt under FDCPA. A debt collector may not use a validation notice that requires more. In Castro v. ARS National Services, Inc., n186 a district court in New York held that a debt collector violated the FDCPA n187 by including language in its validation notice that the least sophisticated consumer could read as imposing requirements beyond those set out in the FDCPA.

In Castro, the debt collector sent a validation letter to the consumer stating that she could notify its office by telephone that the debt or a portion of the debt was disputed. The court took issue with a list of six types of documents that the debt collector listed as suitable for dispute purposes. According to the collection letter, suitable dispute documentation included the following:

- A copy of the front and back of the processed payment;
- A final billing statement (with the original account number referenced) showing a zero balance;
- A dated letter from the original creditor advising the balance is zero;
- A letter from the original creditor or credit bureau agency stating the debt has been removed form their records; or
- Legal document(s) showing a discharge bankruptcy.

The court found that, by listing the examples, the least sophisticated consumer could reasonably conclude that some form of documentation was necessary to dispute the debt. The court further found that providing a list of "suitable" documentation suggested that some types of documentation might be "unsuitable." Since all that is required under the FDCPA is a writing stating that all or a portion of a debt is disputed, a consumer need only send a letter n188 stating, "I dispute the debt" in order to dispute a debt. Because the letter could hamper a consumer's effort to communicate a dispute of a debt, the court held that the letter deprived the consumer of the statutory protection given to those who notify a debt collector that the validity of a debt is contested.

[ii] A Debt Collector Verifies a Debt by Providing Information That Is Responsive to the Consumer's Request

The FDCPA does not define "verification." Verification requirements vary depending upon the reason for the dispute over the alleged debt. Simply repeating the second- or third-hand information in the debt collector's file was insufficient validation under the FDCPA. n189

The FTC staff has generally refused requests to provide a definitive position on what information is sufficient to verify a debt under 15 U.S.C. § 1692g, given the variety of possible transactions and disputes. n190 However, it has indicated that where the dispute involved the mistaken identity of the debtor, a copy of the note and mortgage along with a statement of principal, interest and other charges may be sufficient. n191 However, simply providing a copy of the original signed contract may not be sufficient for other disputes, since it does not include any information about payments made or interest or fees charged. n192

Where the amount of the debt was disputed, the collector must verify the amount. n193 Where the balance of the debt is disputed, monthly statements of the amount owed may be probative and verify the debt. n194 Responding to a consumer's request to validate a debt pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1692g with incomplete information may be deceptive and unfair. n195 Verification regarding a car deficiency claim that included a retail installment contract, a loan application, and a notice of sale and an accounting of the sale was sufficient. n196 Copies of original billing statements that verified that the amount demanded and showed the dates on which charges were incurred, together with a supporting "Affidavit of Claim and Certification of Amount Due," were sufficient verification. n197 A debt collector properly validated the account by informing the consumer that it had acquired the account from Discover Card, and providing the account application with the consumer's signature, and the relevant account statements in response to her request for verification that it was her debt. n198 One court held that billing statements alone were sufficient. n199

A debt collector would violate another provision of the Act by charging a fee for verification. n200 If the debt collector has reason to know the consumer is represented, the verification should be sent to the consumer's lawyer. n201 The Seventh and the Ninth Circuits disagree on whether the debt collector's verification to the consumer's lawyer must comply with the FDCPA. n202

[iii] Debt Collector Must Cease Collecting From Time of Receipt of Verification Request Until Debt Verified

The collector must cease collection activities on the date it receives the request for verification, n203 and will be held liable if it continues to communicate with the debtor. n204 The collector may not resume collection activities, or file suit, until it mails verification to the consumer, even if the consumer was already aware of the basis of the claim. n205

In its first formal advisory opinion on the FDCPA, the FTC has advised that collectors may undertake collection activities during the thirty-day period during which a consumer may request the collector to validate debt as long as the collection activities do not overshadow or are not inconsistent with the notice of validation rights. n206

The Eleventh Circuit has joined the Seventh Circuit holding that a debt validation request during a suit requires the collector to put the collection suit on hold. The Eleventh Circuit n207 summarily adopted the opinion of a Florida federal district court that a debt validation notice was confusing and not effective. The notice was placed on page 8 of a 16 page package which began with a summons in a foreclosure action informing the consumer of dire consequences if the consumer did not file an answer in the suit in thirty days. n208 The lower courts had looked to the Seventh Circuit decision by Judge Posner in Bartlett v. Heibl, n209 which recognized the confusion created by the threat to bring suit during the period that the consumer could request validation of the debt, because the consumer's validation request would force a suspension of collection efforts until validation of the debt was provided. More recently the Eleventh Circuit acknowledged that the FDCPA prohibited the debt collector from taking further steps to collect the debt until it had validated the debt once the consumer requested debt validation. However, the court found that the debt collector had no obligation to stop the clerk from recording the previously filed lien against the condominium after receiving the consumer's request for validation. n210

Subsequently, in the Thomas case, Judge Posner may have backtracked from his Bartlett position when he provided this validation notice language to collection lawyers who planned to file suit during the period for the consumer to request validation: "As a lawyer, I may file papers in the suit according to the court's rules and the judge's instructions." n211 However, it is not clear what this sentence means. It could simply mean that the collection attorney may plan to file suit before the expiration of the period for the consumer to request validation of the debt.

The FDCPA provides that an act done in good faith conformity with an advisory opinion of the FTC is insulated from FDCPA liability. n212 Recent amendments to the FCRA require that a dispute of any debt be reported to a credit reporting agency when the furnisher knows of the dispute. n213

If the debt collector verifies the debt, it is required by section 1692g(b) to mail the verification to the consumer. A debt collector's record that the verification was mailed to the consumer creates a presumption that it was mailed. n214 The consumer may rebut that presumption by evidence that it was sent to the wrong address. n215

[d] Failure by a Consumer to Exercise Validation Rights May Not Be Taken as an Admission of Liability

The failure of a consumer to dispute the validity of a debt under this section may not be construed by any court as an admission of liability by the consumer. n216

[7] Consumer May Direct Application of Payments When a Collector Holds Multiple Accounts

This provision n217 gives a consumer the right to decide how to allocate payments among multiple debts being collected by the same collector. A consumer in this situation may thus choose to give preference, for example, to a secured debt over an unsecured debt. The section also requires that a collector apply a consumer's payments to debts not disputed by the consumer.

[8] Restrictions Against Bringing Suits in Inconvenient Forums

[a] Suit Must Be Filed Where Consumer Resides or Signed Contract or Where Property Located

This section n218 prohibits a debt collector, including attorneys, from taking legal action to collect a consumer obligation in a "judicial district or similar legal entity" other than where the consumer resides or signed the contract n219 or, in the cases of real estate, where the property is located. n220

When suit is filed in state court, state court geographical boundaries, rather than federal districts, are determinative of appropriate venue. n221 When the court has multiple divisions within a district, the division is the appropriate guide for determining venue. n222

[b] Enforcing a Judgment in a Jurisdiction Where the Consumer Does Not Reside or Did Not Sign the Contract

Until Congress or the FTC acts more definitively, debt collectors may not safely file attachment or garnishment actions except in the districts where the consumer resides or signed the contract, except to enforce a real estate security interest. n223 Where there was no signed contract, suit may be brought only where the consumer resides.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionCommunicationsBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionLiabilityBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionUnfair PracticesReal Property LawLandlord & TenantTenant's Remedies & RightsFair Debt Collection Practices Act

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 15 U.S.C. § 1692-1692 o. For additional analysis of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act and related statutes, see National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection (6th ed. 2008).

(n2)Footnote 2. Russell v. Equifax A.R.S., 74 F.3d 30, 35 (2d Cir. 1996); Taylor v. Perrin, Landry, de Launay & Durand, 103 F.3d 1232 (5th Cir. 1997) ; Thomas v. National Bus. Assistants, Inc., 1984 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24876 (D. Conn. Oct. 5, 1984) (inconspicuous and grossly overshadowed notice did not notify recipients of their validation of debts rights, incorporating the "least sophisticated" consumer standard). See also Sims v. GC Servs. L.P., 445 F.3d 959 (7th Cir. 2006) (Seventh Circuit added additional gloss by noting that a letter cannot be confusing as a matter of law unless a significant fraction of unsophisticated consumers would be confused).

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., Bentley v. Great Lakes Collection Bureau, 6 F.3d 60 (2d Cir. 1993) ; Kaplan v. Assetcare, Inc., 88 F. Supp. 2d 1355 (S.D. Fla. 2000) (FDCPA is strict liability statute, knowledge or intent need not be pled); Irwin v. Mascott, 94 F. Supp. 2d 1052 (N.D. Cal. 2000) (since the FDCPA is a strict liability statute, no showing of intent was necessary to establish liability); Borcherding-Dittloff v. Transworld Sys., Inc. 58 F. Supp. 2d 1006 (W.D. Wis. 1999) (argument that no harm was done was unavailing because FDCPA is a strict liability statute). Randolph v. IMBS, Inc., 368 F.3d 726 (7th Cir. 2004) (no knowledge required for claims under §§ 1692e(a)(1) and 1692f, unlike § 1692c(a)(2)); Becker v. Montgomery, Lynch, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24992 (N.D. Ohio Feb. 26, 2003) ; Johnson v. Equifax Risk Mgmt. Servs., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4245 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 17, 2004) (that the consumer failed to object at the time to the offending dun "is beside the point, as the FDCPA strictly imposes liability for violations of the statute, without regard to whether the consumer was actually confused."). But see Cooper v. Litton Loan Servicing (In re Cooper), 253 B.R. 286 (Bankr. N.D. Fla. 2000) (lawyer who filed a proof of claim in consumer's bankruptcy in good faith, without knowledge of an error by creditor in calculating claim was not in violation of FDCPA and consumer was limited to bankruptcy remedies; attorneys may reasonably rely in good faith on information provided by creditor, and are not liable for filing a claim which is ultimately unsuccessful). See Padilla v. Payco Gen. Am. Credits, Inc., 161 F. Supp. 2d 264 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) ; Micare v. Foster & Garbus, 132 F. Supp. 2d 77 (N.D.N.Y. 2001) ; Clark v. Capital Credit & Collection Servs., Inc., 460 F.3d 1162, 1176 (9th Cir. 2006) ("We are convinced that this reading of the FDCPA is more in harmony with the remedial nature of the statute, which requires us to interpret it liberally;" collection agency and its lawyer are strictly liable for falsely stating amount of debt under § 1692e(2)(A) without regard to intent or knowledge of mistake; § 1692k(c) bona fide error defense might shield collectors but they were not entitled to summary judgment where there was evidence that mistakes in medical bills of particular health care provider had come to their attention and consumer was entitled to more discovery on reasonableness of collectors' procedures to avoid such errors).

(n4)Footnote 4. Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Picht v. Hawks, 77 F. Supp. 2d 1041, 1043 (D. Minn. 1999) (FDCPA "... remedial, strict liability statute which was intended to be applied in a liberal manner."); accord Ross v. Commercial Fin. Serv. Inc., 31 F. Supp. 2d 1077, 1079 (N.D. Ill. 1999) ; Harrison v. NBD, Inc., 968 F. Supp. 837, 844 (E.D.N.Y. 1997) (court declined an expanded construction of the FDCPA while recognizing "... the FDCPA is a remedial statute which should be liberally construed."); Cirkot v. Diversified Fin. Sys., Inc., 839 F. Supp. 941, 944 (D. Conn. 1993) .

(n6)Footnote 6. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c.

(n7)Footnote 7. E.g., 15 U.S.C. § 1692b (acquisition of location information); 15 U.S.C. § 1692c (communication with third parties); 15 U.S.C. § 1692d(5) (repeated phone calls).

(n8)Footnote 8. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(a)(1).

(n9)Footnote 9. Horkey v. J.V.D.B. & Assocs., Inc., 333 F.3d 769 (7th Cir. 2003) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Florence v. National Sys., 1983 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20344 (N.D. Ga. Oct. 14, 1983) . See Herbert v. Monterey Fin. Servs., Inc., 863 F. Supp. 76 (D. Conn. 1994) (sending a dunning letter five days after receiving notice that the consumer was represented violated the FDCPA); see also Burger v. Risk Mgmt. Alternatives, 94 F. Supp. 2d 291 (N.D.N.Y. 2000) (plaintiff alleged that defendant communicated with him knowing of his representation by counsel; complaint would not be dismissed because of failure to articulate whether he meant actual or constructive knowledge); Simmons v. Miller & Steeno, P.C., 2002 WL 31898324 (E.D. Mo. Dec. 30, 2002) (collector's letter to the consumer after learning that the consumer was represented by counsel violated the FDCPA). See Harding v. Regent, 347 F. Supp. 2d 334 (N.D. Tex. Nov. 23, 2004) ; Zaborac v. Mutual Hosp. Serv., Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23324 (S.D. Ind. Oct. 7, 2004) . See also Eads v. Wolpoff & Abramson, L.L.P., 538 F. Supp. 2d 981 (W.D. Tex. 2008) (consumer stated a legally cognizable claim against the collection law firm by alleging it violated 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692b(6) and 1692c(a) by serving a state court motion on the consumer when it knew the consumer was represented); Bianchi v. The Bureaus, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15976 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 27, 2008) (collector violated 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(a)(2) when it telephoned the consumer more than two months after she had filed for bankruptcy and it was evident that a certificate of service with plaintiff's attorney information was available in the court giving rise to the presumption that the bankruptcy notice with all information had been mailed to the collector and he had received it).

(n11)Footnote 11. FTC Official Staff Commentary § 807(a) 3; Zubalsky, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Jan. 8, 1980).

(n12)Footnote 12. Schmitt v. FMA Alliance, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 2026 (8th Cir. Feb. 9, 2005) . See also, Randolph v. IMBS, Inc., 368 F.3d 726 (7th Cir. 2004) (collection agency's letter to the debtor who was represented by counsel did not violate the FDCPA where the collector did not know of the representation).

(n13)Footnote 13. See Micare v. Foster & Garbus, 132 F. Supp. 2d 77 (N.D.N.Y. 2001) (unless debt collector had a procedure in place by which it asked creditors whether debtor was represented by counsel and creditor suppressed the information, creditor's knowledge may be imputed to debt collector); Alexander v. Unlimited Progress Corp., 2003 U.S.

Dist. LEXIS 5560 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 21, 2003) , vacated, Randolph v. IMBS, Inc., 368 F.3d 726, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 9295 (7th Cir. Ill. 2004) . But see Hubbard v. National Bond & Collection Assoc., Inc., 126 B.R. 422 (Bankr. D. Del. 1991) (consumer must demonstrate actual knowledge by debt collector), aff'd without op., 947 F.2d 935 (3d Cir. 1991) .

(n14)Footnote 14. See Salsbury v. Trac A Chec, Inc., 365 F. Supp. 2d 939 (C.D. Ill. Apr. 18, 2005) (collector's telephone call to consumer made after consumer had filed bankruptcy; collector did not mention debt during call, which was placed simply to inform consumer that collector had verified attorney's representation and would not be contacting consumer again; call was not communication "in connection with the collection" of debt and therefore did not violate § 1692c(a)(2)).

(n15)Footnote 15. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(a)(3). Horkey v. J.V.D.B. & Assocs., Inc, 333 F.3d 769 (7th Cir. 2003) (protections of Section 1692c(a)(3) may be invoked simply by the consumer's statement that she could not talk at work and that she would return the call from her home. This statement was sufficient to place the collector on notice that the employer did not allow such collection calls). See also Chiverton v. Fed. Fin. Group, Inc., 399 F. Supp. 2d 96 (D. Conn. Sept. 30, 2005) (debt buyer violated § 1692c(a)(1) and (3) by repeatedly calling after consumer expressly requested collector not to do so because he was not permitted to receive personal calls at work).

(n16)Footnote 16. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(b). See Stewart v. Salzman, 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16865 (D. Conn. Nov. 2, 1987) (attorney debt collector may not contact sister of debtor even though sister telephoned attorney).

(n17)Footnote 17. See Hernandez v. Midland Credit Mgmt., Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16054 (N.D. Ill. Mar 6, 2007) . See also Balogun v. Midland Credit Mgmt., Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74845 (S.D. Ind. Oct. 5, 2007) (certifying a class where a collection letter was alleged to evidence a violation § 1692c(b) by sharing information about the consumer's debt with a credit card issuer).

(n18)Footnote 18. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(d).

(n19)Footnote 19. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(d).

(n20)Footnote 20. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(d).

(n21)Footnote 21. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(d).

(n22)Footnote 22. See Pearce v. Rapid Check Collection, 738 F. Supp. 334 (D.S.D. 1990) (no violation to contact bank on which dishonored check was drawn because collector believed the bank may be an obligor on check).

(n23)Footnote 23. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692a(7), 1692b.

(n24)Footnote 24. Termed "location information." 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(7).

(n25)Footnote 25. 15 U.S.C. § 1692b(1), (2).

(n26)Footnote 26. See Zanayed v. Gertler & Gertler, Ltd., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5827 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 17, 2000) (15 U.S.C. § 1692c(b) clearly excludes communications which are necessary to "effectuate a postjudgment judicial remedy"--in this instance, a wage deduction summons to the employer of a judgment debtor).

(n27)Footnote 27. FTC Official Staff Commentary § 805(b) 4.

(n28)Footnote 28. 15 U.S.C. § 1692b(1) and (2).

(n29)Footnote 29. See Belin v. Litton Loan Serv., L.P., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47953 (M.D. Fla. July 14, 2006) (claim stated against collector requested mother to have debtor return his calls, and left only his company name and phone number; this was indirect communication to the mother to collect debt).

(n30)Footnote 30. See Leyse v. Corporate Collection Servs., Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67719 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 18, 2006) ("CCS has been cornered between a rock and a hard place, not because of any contradictory provisions of the FDCPA, but because the method they have selected to collect debts [prerecorded calls] has put them there."); Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Check Enforcement, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34349 (D.N.J. July 18, 2005) (collector violated Act by harassing unobligated family members and by leaving messages on answering machines that children and parents could hear).

(n31)Footnote 31. See West v. Nationwide Credit, Inc., 998 F. Supp. 642 (W.D.N.C. 1998) (debt collector that left message with neighbor for consumer to return the call violated 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(b), even though it did not mention that debt was owed). See also Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Check Enforcement, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34349 (D.N.J. July 18, 2005) (collector violated Act by harassing unobligated family members and by leaving messages on answering machines that children and parents could hear); Blair v. ShermanAcquisition, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25106 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 13, 2004) ; Henderson v. Eaton, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13243 (E.D. La. Aug. 23, 2001) (citing the West v. Nationwide Credit, Inc. holding with approval). But cf. Horkey v. J.V.D.B. & Assocs., Inc., 179 F. Supp. 2d 861, 868 (N.D. Ill. 2002) , aff'd on other grounds, 333 F.3d 769 (7th Cir. 2003) (holding that there can be no liability under § 1692c(b) where there is no discussion of the debt).

(n32)Footnote 32. Foti v. NCO Fin. Sys., Inc., 424 F. Supp. 2d 643 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) . See also Belin v. Litton Loan Servicing, L.P., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47953 (M.D. Fla. July 14, 2006) ; Hosseinzadeh v. M.R.S. Assocs., Inc., 387 F. Supp. 2d 1104 (C.D. Cal. 2005) .

(n33)Footnote 33. Foti v. NCO Fin. Sys., Inc., 424 F. Supp. 2d 643, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13857 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 25, 2006) (prerecorded message left on consumer's voicemail was communication, even though it did not mention debt: "Good day, we are calling from NCO Financial Systems regarding a personal business matter that requires your immediate attention. Please call back 1-866-701-1275 once again please call back, toll-free, 1-866-701-1275, this is not a solicitation."); Hosseinzadeh v. M.R.S. Assocs., Inc., 387 F. Supp. 2d 1104 (C.D. Cal. 2005) (messages debt collector left on consumer's answering machine not asking for payment or mentioning debt, but which stated that there was important matter regarding which consumer should contact named person were each "communication" as defined by FDCPA; accordingly, failure of collector to disclose that messages were from debt collector violated § 1692e(11)). See also Joseph v. J.J. Mac Intyre Cos., L.L.C., 281 F. Supp. 2d 1156 (N.D. Cal. 2003) (summary judgment for collection agency denied where debt collector left recorded message leaving individual's name and debt collector's number; jury must decide whether 15 U.S.C. § 1692d(6) was violated); Wright v. Credit Bureau, Inc., 548 F. Supp. 591, 597 , on reconsideration, 555 F. Supp. 1005 (N.D. Ga. 1983) ("The 'meaningful disclosure' required by section 1692d(6) has been made if an individual debt collector who is employed by a debt collection company accurately discloses the name of her employer and the nature of her business and conceals no more than her real name.").

(n34)Footnote 34. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(2) ("The term 'communication' means the conveying of information regarding a debt directly or indirectly to any person through any medium.").

(n35)Footnote 35. 15 U.S.C. § 1692b(1).

(n36)Footnote 36. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692b(1), 1692e(14) (use of true name).

(n37)Footnote 37. 15 U.S.C. § 1692b(1). See also Charest, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Sept. 13, 1996) (asking for consumer to call an 800-number about "an important matter" violated 15 U.S.C. § 1692b when the purpose was to confirm or correct location information: the consumer's home telephone number).

(n38)Footnote 38. 15 U.S.C. § 1692b(2).

(n39)Footnote 39. See Shaver v. Trauner, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19647 (C.D. Ill. May 29, 1998) (motion to dismiss denied where simultaneously with the initial demand letter, the attorney faxed consumer's employer seeking information about his employment such as his date of hire, his position, whether he was a full- or part-time employee, whether he was salaried or on commission, and the address of the employer's payroll department).

(n40)Footnote 40. 15 U.S.C. § 1692b(4).

(n41)Footnote 41. 15 U.S.C. § 1692b(5).

(n42)Footnote 42. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(a)(1).

(n43)Footnote 43. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(a)(2).

(n44)Footnote 44. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(a)(3).

(n45)Footnote 45. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(b). See Stewart v. Salzman, 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16865 (D. Conn. Nov. 2, 1987) (consent to the conversation could not be implied).

(n46)Footnote 46. See Herbert v. Monterey Fin. Servs., Inc., 863 F. Supp. 76 (D. Conn. 1994) (phone call, after receiving a letter from the consumer's attorney stating the consumer refused to pay the debt, violated the FDCPA).

(n47)Footnote 47. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(c) (last sentence).

(n48)Footnote 48. Clark v. Capital Credit & Collection Servs., Inc., 460 F.3d 1162 (9th Cir. 2006) . See also Cohen v. Beachside Two-I Homeowners' Ass'n, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44978 (D. Minn. June 29, 2006) (collection attorneys may verify debt after cease notice and respond to settlement offer made by the pro se consumer in the cease letter). See Johnson v. Equifax Risk Mgmt. Servs., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4245 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 17, 2004) (consumer's written demand to the collector that it verify the debt pursuant to § 1692g and otherwise cease all other communication effectively invoked the § 1692c(c)'s cease communication remedy and did not improperly attempt to "have it both ways," and the collector's subsequent communications other than to provide verification, comprised of an additional dun and affidavits of forgery for the consumer to sign, violated § 1692c(c)). See also Clark v. Capital Credit & Collection Servs., L.L.C., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11349 (D. Or. Jan. 23, 2004) (collector may respond to a request for verification, and initiate suit, even after the consumer requests that letters and phone calls cease); Harvey v. Great Seneca Fin. Corp., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37002 (S.D. Ohio July 18, 2005) (court held that consumer's allegation that defendant debt collector filed state court collection lawsuit without means of proving debt could not be abusive because "filing a lawsuit to attempt to collect a debt is not the kind of conduct that was intended to be covered by section 1692d").

(n49)Footnote 49. 15 U.S.C. § 1692d.

(n50)Footnote 50. See Hart v. Universal Fid. L.P., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6203 (N.D. Ga. Jan. 26, 2007) (allegations that debt collector "called plaintiff a 'thief', told plaintiff, among other things, that she had 'stolen,' told plaintiff to 'get a job' to pay the debt, stated a false amount that was being collected, demanded full payment within forty-eight hours, and stated that Universal Fidelity was 'getting ready to file a judgment' " stated claim under FDCPA for abusive, deceptive, or unfair debt collection); Belin v. Litton Loan Serv., L.P., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47953 (M.D. Fla. July 14, 2006) (allegations that collector telephoned third party multiple times, was rude, and then abruptly hung up stated claim for harassment or abuse prohibited by § 1692d). But see Thomas v. LDG Fin. Servs., Inc., 463 F. Supp. 2d 1370, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95272 (N.D. Ga. Nov. 28, 2006) (complaint failed to state claim under 15 U.S.C. § 1692d for conversations arising from telephone calls that included some shouting and threats). See Fox v. Citicorp Credit Servs., 15 F.3d 1507 (9th Cir. 1994) (consumer's allegations that debt collector improperly threatened to garnish their wages and continued to call them at their place of employment after being requested not to call stated claim); Cirkot v. Diversified Fin. Sys., 839 F. Supp. 941, 947 (D. Conn. 1993) (collector's hand-written note warning, "My special agents will remain in your area to collect. Believe me," was a threatening, harassing, and abusive attempt to collect a debt); Grassley v. Debt Collectors, Inc., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22782 (D. Or. Dec. 14, 1992) (collector's threat to have debtor "picked up" was violation).

(n51)Footnote 51. 15 U.S.C. § 1692d(1).

(n52)Footnote 52. 15 U.S.C. § 1692d(2).

(n53)Footnote 53. 15 U.S.C. § 1692d(3).

(n54)Footnote 54. 15 U.S.C. § 1681b(3).

(n55)Footnote 55. 15 U.S.C. § 1681b(3). See Ch. 16, "Fair Credit Reporting Act," § 16.02[5] infra .

(n56)Footnote 56. 15 U.S.C. § 1692d(4).

(n57)Footnote 57. 15 U.S.C. § 1692d(5). See also Joseph v. J.J. Mac Intyre Cos., L.L.C., 281 F. Supp. 2d 1156 (N.D. Cal. 2002) (collection agency's motion for summary judgment on claim that it made repeated phone calls that were therefore harassing denied where evidence showed over 200 calls during a nineteen month period, including calls following the consumer's express request that all calls cease and calls made immediately after the consumer hung up on the collector. Whether a collector's series of telephone calls constitute illegal harassment depends on both the volume and pattern of the calls. Defendant had no defense to the evidence that its repeated phone calls were harassing based on the fact that it was collecting multiple debts from the consumer.). See e.g. Clark v. Quick Collect, Inc., 2005 WL 1586862 (D. Or. June 30, 2005) (summary judgment denied to collector where it had called multiple times without leaving messages. "Whether there is actionable harassment or annoyance turns on the volume of calls made and on the pattern of calls" within § 1692d.); Chiverton v. Fed. Fin. Group, Inc., 399 F. Supp. 2d 96 (D. Conn. 2005) (debt buyer violated § 1692d(5) by repeatedly calling to collect paid debt after consumer had hung up phone); Hosseinzadeh v. M.R.S. Assocs., Inc., 387 F. Supp. 2d 1104 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 3, 2005) (content and context of series of 6 telephone messages from debt collector left on consumer's answering machine made issue of whether messages were harassing, unfair, or deceptive question of fact for jury).

(n58)Footnote 58. 15 U.S.C. § 1692d(6).

(n59)Footnote 59. Compare United States v. Century Adjustment Bureau, Inc., 823 F.2d 880 (5th Cir. 1987) (use of assumed name authorized), Gostony v. Diem Corp., 320 F. Supp. 2d 932 (D. Ariz. 2003) (use of pseudonym by a debt collector was not a violation). with Supan v. Medical Bureau of Econ., Inc., 785 F. Supp. 304 (D. Conn. 1991) (magistrate's opinion) (collector violated FDCPA by misrepresenting that the names on its letters were those of its employees when they were actually of nonexistent persons); Kreiger, FTC Informal Staff Letter (undated) (use of aliases by phone violates the first sentence of 15 U.S.C. § 1692e and possibly 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(10)). See also Youngblood v. GC Servs. Ltd. P'ship, 186 F. Supp. 2d 695 (W.D. Tex. 2002) (given name of the employee from whose desk the letter was sent was immaterial, and the use of a professional name or desk name was not a violation of § 1692e).

(n60)Footnote 60. See Knoll v. Intellirisk Mgmt., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77467 (D. Minn. Oct. 16, 2006) (debt collector used the false name as the Caller ID).

(n61)Footnote 61. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(11) requires the collector also to disclose the collection purpose and that information provided by the consumer will be used for debt collection.

(n62)Footnote 62. A discussion of the courts' early disagreement on the applicable standard can be found in Annot., What Constitutes False, Deceptive, or Misleading Representation or Means in Connection with Collection of Debt Proscribed by Provisions of Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (15 U.S.C. § 1692e 15 U.S.C. § 1692e), 67 A.L.R. Fed. 974 (1984) . See Gammon v. GC Servs. Ltd. P'ship, 27 F.3d 1254 (7th Cir. 1995) (applied "unsophisticated consumer standard"); Clomon v. Jackson, 988 F.2d 1314 (2d Cir. 1993) ; Bentley v. Great Lakes Collection Bureau, 6 F.3d 60 (2d Cir. 1993) ; Berrios v. Sprint Corp., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22833 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 10, 1998) . See also Spinarski v. Credit Bureau, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22547 (D.N.M. Sept. 19, 1996) (purpose of the "least sophisticated" consumer standard was to protect "the consumer who is uninformed, naive, or trusting, with consideration given to an objective element of reasonableness which shields complying debt collectors from liability for unrealistic or peculiar interpretations of collection letters"). But see Francisco v. Doctors & Merchs. Credit Serv., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12234 (N.D. Ill. 1998) (some evidence of actual deception was required before a literally true but potentially misleading statement could be held to violate § 1692e).

(n63)Footnote 63. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692e and 1692e(10) and, depending on the circumstances, 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(4), (5) and (10). See Herbert v. Monterey Fin. Servs., Inc., 863 F. Supp. 76, 80 (D. Conn. 1994) (requesting "settlement prior to possible legal action" by a collection agency with no authority to sue or retain counsel was deceptive). United States v. National Fin. Servs., Inc., 820 F. Supp. 228 (D. Md. 1993) , aff'd, 98 F.3d 131 (4th Cir. 1996) . But see Madonna v. Academy Collection Serv., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13315 (D. Conn. Aug. 12, 1997) (threat of legal action was not false or deceptive where creditor sued sometimes under similar circumstances and litigation had not been ruled out with regard to the particular consumer, though probability of suit was very low).

(n64)Footnote 64. Currently the Westlaw path for the database is Databases--Public Information--Civil Litigation--Illinois or --Lawsuits.

(n65)Footnote 65. See Lamb v. M & M Assoc., Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13773 (S.D. Ohio Sept. 1, 1998) (collection letter that informed consumer that she could be sued if debt remained unpaid, that she could be served with a summons and complaint, and that suit could be filed within the 30 day period to request validation could be interpreted by the least sophisticated consumer as threatening legal action). But see Owsley v. Coldata, Inc., 104 Fed. Appx. 994 (5th Cir. July 29, 2004) (not for publication) (statement in dunning letter that account was "scheduled to be returned to [her] creditor who may [inter alia] ... secure advice of counsel regarding appropriate steps to be taken to enforce payment.", although suggesting that collector had counsel on retainer and that stakes might be raised in the future, would not lead recipient to believe that legal action was imminent; letter did not imply that lawsuit was imminent or that collector had any say in whether legal action would be taken).

(n66)Footnote 66. See Gervais v. Riddle & Assoc., P.C., 363 F. Supp. 2d 345 (D. Conn. 2005) .

(n67)Footnote 67. E.g., Wilhelm v. Credico, Inc., 426 F. Supp. 2d 1030 (D.N.D. 2006) .

(n68)Footnote 68. For a fuller discussion of the cases finding these threats to be deceptive, see National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 5.5.2.9 (5th ed. and Supp.)

(n69)Footnote 69. Kimber v. Federal Fin. Corp., 668 F. Supp. 1480 (M.D. Ala. 1987) . See also Stepney v. Outsourcing Solutions, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18264 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 4, 1997) (collector's attempts to collect time-barred debts violated the FDCPA); Norris v. Miller, 926 F. Supp. 776 (N.D. Ill. 1996) ; Martinez v. Albuquerque Collection Servs., 867 F. Supp. 1495 (D.N.M. 1994) (attempts to collect time-barred debts violated FDCPA); Canterbury v. Columbia Gas, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21740 (S.D. Ohio Sept. 25, 2001) (threatening pursuit of legal means, referral to an attorney, and firm collection action on a time barred debt was deceptive as an unsophisticated consumer would infer that suit was threatened.). But see Simmons v. Miller, 970 F. Supp. 661 (S.D. Ind. 1997) (no intentional violation of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692d, 1692e, 1692e(2)(A) or 1692f(1) where a claim on a NSF check was filed more than three years but less than six years after the check was written and it was not clear that a six-year, rather than a three-year, statute of limitations applied); Peter v. GC Servs. L.P., 310 F.3d 344 (5th Cir. 2002) (language, "SHOULD YOU FAIL TO PAY THIS ACCOUNT IN FULL, GC SERVICES WILL REVIEW YOUR ACCOUNT AND MAKE RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION FOR THE MOST EFFECTIVE COLLECTION METHOD ALLOWABLE UNDER FEDERAL LAW" did not violate § 1692e).

(n70)Footnote 70. See Freyermuth v. Credit Bureau Servs., 248 F.3d 767 (8th Cir. 2001) (effort to collect time-barred checks did not violate the FDCPA when it was not accompanied by a threat of suit); Walker v. Cash Flow Consultants, Inc., 200 F.R.D. 613 (N.D. Ill. 2001) (attempting to collect a time-barred debt was not an FDCPA violation absent an express or implied threat of litigation where state law barred the remedy but did not extinguish the debt); Reese v. Arrow Fin. Servs., LLC, 202 F.R.D. 83 (D. Conn. 2001) .

(n71)Footnote 71. Klewer v. Cavalry Invs., LLC, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1778 (W.D. Wis. Jan. 30, 2002) (Wisconsin's six-year statute of limitations for contract, Wis. Stat. § 893.43, had run effectively extinguishing the debt according to Wisconsin decisions, not just the judicial remedies available to collect the debt as in most states. Thus, the collection letter misrepresented the legal status of the debt in violation of the FDCPA.).

(n72)Footnote 72. See McCollough v. Johnson, Rodenberg & Lauinger, 610 F. Supp. 2d 1247 (D. Mont. 2009) (debt collector violated the FDCPA by using the courts to attempt to collect a time-barred debt).

(n73)Footnote 73. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(1).

(n74)Footnote 74. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(2)(A). See Kojetin v. C U Recovery, Inc., 212 F.3d 1318 (8th Cir. 2000) (imposition of percentage-based collection fee violated FDCPA where state law prohibited percentage-based fee and required that any such fee must be based on actual costs of collection); Heard v. Bonneville Billing & Collections, 216 F.3d 1087 , reported in full at 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 14625 (10th Cir. 2000) (check collector violated the FDCPA and an unfair and deceptive acts and practices [hereinafter UDAP] statute by persisting to collect on bad checks against the check writer's mother after the collector was informed that she was not the signer nor any longer on the joint account); Jones v. Kunin, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6380 (S.D. Ill. May 1, 2000) (court denied the motion to dismiss a complaint which alleged that a collection letter was deceptive where it stated that the consumers were liable under a fraudulent check statute because the statute did not apply to the postdated payday loan checks the consumers wrote; a postdated check implies there are insufficient funds in the account); Grassley v. Debt Collectors, Inc., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22782 (D. Or. Dec. 14, 1992) (unrebutted testimony, that collector told debtor's wife that she was obligated for her husband's debt when she was not, established violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(2)(A)). Porter v. Fairbanks Capital Corp., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8636 (N.D. Ill. May 20, 2003) (misrepresentation of the character of a debt may occur when the collector labels the charge in a confusing way; complaint stated a claim for relief under § 1692e for demanding payment for attorney fees to reinstate the loan under the heading "recoverable corporate advances" when the same document contained a heading "legal fees" reading zero); Scott v. Riddle, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22161 (D. Utah Dec. 1, 2000) (seeking penalties under a shoplifting statute inapplicable to bad checks misrepresented the character, amount, and legal status of a debt); Bernstein v. Howe, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5284 (S.D. Ind. Mar. 31, 2003) (demanding a specific amount "plus interest and attorneys fees" violated § 1692e(2)(a) because no attorney fees were actually owed at the time of the letter. At most, attorneys fees may be awarded in the future). See also Shula v. Lawent, 359 F.3d 489 (7th Cir. 2004) (where no judgment for costs had been entered against consumer, attorney's letter demanding payment of costs was false and misleading in violation of § 1692e, as well as § 1692f(1)); Goins v. JBC & Assocs., P.C., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18413 (D. Conn. Sept. 3, 2004) (check collector's pre-suit demand for maximum civil penalty that court might award in future collection suit violated FDCPA, since that was not the current amount of debt required by § 1692g;); Axtell v. Collections U.S.A. Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23019 (D. Ariz. Oct. 22, 2002) (where entitlement to fees in underlying agreement only permitted fees to "prevailing party" in any "legal action to enforce compliance," collector's demand for payment of sum for attorney fees incurred prior to and outside of litigation was unlawful). Cf. Bennett v. Arrow Fin. Servs., Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6617 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 15, 2004) (because plaintiff submitted no evidence that the interest charged was unauthorized, that claim failed). But see Collins v. Sparacio, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4362 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 19, 2004) (prayer in collection suit for unspecified amount for court costs was not confusing statement of the amount of the debt since the amount of the court costs that might be awarded was not knowable when suit was filed). See also National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 5.5.4 (5th ed. 2004) for further discussion of other types of misrepresentation prohibited by this section.

(n75)Footnote 75. See Nichols v. Northland Groups, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15037 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 31, 2006) (Northland's settlement offer would mislead and confuse unsophisticated consumer as it stated specific sum for which it would settle its claim and then made statement suggesting that amount would vary with the addition of interest). But cf. Ruth v. M.R.S. Assocs., Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28868 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 4, 2006) (disclosure that interest may accrue on unpaid balances was truism and not deceptive or misleading).

(n76)Footnote 76. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(2)(B).

(n77)Footnote 77. See Strange v. Wexler, 796 F. Supp. 1117 (N.D. Ill. 1992) ; West v. Costen, 558 F. Supp. 564 (W.D. Va. 1983) (collector and its employees violated § 1692e(2)(A) and (B) by attempting to collect an illegal $15 service charge on bad checks). But cf. Van Westrienen v. Americontinental Collection Corp., 94 F. Supp. 2d 1087 (D. Or. 2000) (where the debt collector threatened the consumer with attorneys fees which may have been available under law but without explaining the steps to recover such fees, it violated § 1692e(10) but not § 1692e(2)).

(n78)Footnote 78. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(3).

(n79)Footnote 79. Young v. Citicorp Retail Servs., 159 F.3d 1349 (2d Cir. 1998) (unpublished disposition), reported in full, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 20268 (2d Cir. 1998) (oversight of the computer system was not sufficient to establish that a collection letter was issued from an attorney who did not review the consumer's file but signed a high volume of collection letters; a large number of computer-generated letters purporting to be from an attorney violated 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692e(3) and (10)); Masuda v. Thomas Richards & Co., 759 F. Supp. 1456 (C.D. Cal. 1991) (collector's practice of sending form letter signed by an independent attorney who had no knowledge of the debt and who had not consulted with the collector is unfair in violation of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692f and 1692e(3)). See also § 8.02[1][f][iv] supra. But see Zaborac v. Phillips and Cohen Assocs., Ltd., 330 F. Supp. 2d 962 (N.D. Ill. 2004) (use of the word "associates" in business name did not denote law firm); Tromba v. M.R.S. Assocs., Inc., 323 F. Supp. 2d 424 (E.D.N.Y. 2004) (court viewed FDCPA as a harsh statute and "harbors grave doubts as to whether any reasonable trier of fact, even under the least sophisticated consumer standard, could conclude that 'Senior Legal Associate' was equivalent with 'attorney at law' or 'lawyer'").

(n80)Footnote 80. Greco v. Trauner, Cohen & Thomas, L.L.P., 412 F.3d 360, 363 (2d Cir. 2005) .

(n81)Footnote 81. Id. at 364 .

(n82)Footnote 82. 539 F.3d 218 (3d Cir. 2008) (rejecting argument that it was per se deceptive to use the label "Legal Department" without the presence of lawyers).

(n83)Footnote 83. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(4). See Tenuto v. Transworld Sys., Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1764 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 2, 2002) (in class action where consumers alleged that the collection agency sent a form letter deceptively suggesting that the recipient's wages could be garnished if the debt was not paid and the creditor chose to pursue judicial action, settlement was approved); Kort v. Diversified Collection Servs., Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11701 (N.D. Ill. July 31, 2001) (complaint stated claim for relief where student loan collector's letter plausibly suggested to unsophisticated consumer that garnishment could be initiated with less than 30-days notice required by applicable federal regulations), class certification granted, in part, denied, in part, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20988 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 17, 2001) . See also Weiss v. Collection Ctr., 2003 ND 128, 667 N.W.2d 567 (2003) (least sophisticated consumer could interpret a letter advising that the debt collector had sought information from the motor vehicle department regarding his vehicle as a threat to repossess it); Oglesby v. Rotche, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15687 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 4, 1993) (letter stating "once judgment has been entered, it is our intent to proceed with the court ordered attachment and garnishment of all wages, property, and other financial assets, all at additional expense to you" violated 15 U.S.C. § 1692e by (1) misrepresenting the breadth of garnishment and attachment and (2) despite the phrase "once judgment has been entered," implying that garnishment of all wages and attachment of property was unavoidable once court action had been initiated).

(n84)Footnote 84. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(5). See Duffy v. Landberg, 215 F.3d 871 (8th Cir. 2000) (demanding a $100 civil penalty for small bounced checks was deceptive and unfair violating § 1692e, e(5) and f where the state law allowed a penalty up to $100 and provided that a smaller penalty was available if the consumer settled the claim before it reached the court; referring to the imposition of attorney fees when state law did not authorize them for small checks violated § 1692e(5)); Tenuto v. Transworld Sys., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14344 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 29, 2000) (class certification granted as to persons sent letters threatening wage garnishment, not normally not available in Pennsylvania). See also Picht v. Jon R. Hawks, Ltd., 236 F.3d 446 (8th Cir. 2001) (attorney debt collector's use of state pre-judgment garnishment statute violated state law and therefore FDCPA). See also Blair v. Sherman Acquisition, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25106 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 13, 2004) (if Gramm-Leach-Bliley notice was communication in an effort to collect a debt, requiring consumers to affirmatively notify Sherman that they do not want their information shared is a misstatement of consumers' Gramm-Leach-Bliley privacy rights that violated § 1692e(5)&(10)); Maxwell v. Arrow Fin. Servs., L.L.C., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5462 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 31, 2004) (court certified class where evidence showed that more than 500 persons received form letter that stated that payment of debts which were more than seven years old would result in collector informing credit bureaus that debts were fully paid, thus allegedly suggesting that non-payment would result in reporting obsolete debts in violation of the Fair Credit Reporting Act).

(n85)Footnote 85. See Weber v. Goodman, 9 F. Supp. 2d 163 (E.D.N.Y. 1998) (creditor violated § 1692e by creating misleading impression that a third party was collecting debt when the third party was not meaningfully involved in collection process); Herbert v. Monterey Fin. Servs., Inc., 863 F. Supp. 76 (D. Conn. 1994) (threat of "final demand" in the first of a series of dunning letters was deceptive because it was false).

(n86)Footnote 86. See Gonzalez v. Arrow Fin. Servs., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19712 (S.D. Cal. July 25, 2005) (debt collector violated § 1692e(5) & (10), notwithstanding disclaimer "if we are reporting account"; court stated "least sophisticated debtor could likely believe his debt is reportable just because the letters indicate the credit bureaus will be notified").

(n87)Footnote 87. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(6).

(n88)Footnote 88. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(7). See Gradisher v. Check Enforcement Unit, Inc., 210 F. Supp. 2d 907 (W.D. Mich. 2002) (notices which stated "Failure to Make Payment Can Result in a Warrant for Your Arrest" would lead even a sophisticated debtor to conclude that the sheriff's department had determined that the debtor committed a crime and arrest or criminal prosecution was certain to occur if the debt was not paid violating 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(4) and (5)). But see Goswami v. Am. Collections Enter., 280 F. Supp. 2d 624 (S.D. Tex. 2003) ("Settlement Offer & Amnesty Period" did not imply that nonpayment would result in criminal or other government prosecution).

(n89)Footnote 89. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(8). See Perez v. Telecheck Servs., Inc., 208 F. Supp. 2d 1153 (D. Nev. 2002) (collector's communication to Walmart that Perez had an outstanding unpaid check when that was contested by Perez stated a claim under 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(8). The defendant was a debt collector and the alleged conduct was proscribed by the FDCPA.); see also Sullivan v. Equifax, Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7884 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 19, 2002) (allegations that the debt collector knowingly reported false information about the debt to the credit bureau after it knew that the consumer disputed the debt and failed to inform the credit bureau that the debt was "disputed" stated a claim under the FDCPA).

(n90)Footnote 90. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(9).

(n91)Footnote 91. An attorney who owned both a law firm and a collection agency that were intertwined violated this provision by allowing mass mailings of letters to be sent on his law firm letterhead and over his facsimile signature. The lawyer had insufficient involvement in the cases to avoid the deceptive implication that he was involved in the account as a lawyer because he did not review debtor files, did not decide which letters to send and did not see particular letters before they were sent. "The attorney letter implies that the attorney has reached a considered, professional judgment that the debtor is delinquent and is a candidate for legal action." This was not the case. Avila v. Rubin, 84 F.3d 222, 229 (7th Cir. 1996) .

(n92)Footnote 92. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(10). See Florence v. National Sys., 1983 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20344 (N.D. Ga. Oct. 14, 1983) ; United States v. First Fed. Credit Control Inc., 1982 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17964 (N.D. Ohio Mar. 11, 1982) . See also Pleasant v. Risk Management Alternatives, Inc., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 890 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 23, 2003) (plaintiff's complaint alleged that the collection agency's "one time" settlement offer of 1/2 the debt balance if paid in a few weeks, was not, in fact, a "one time" offer at all stating a claim under 15 U.S.C. § 1692e); Silva v. National Telewire Corp., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13986 (D.N.H. Sept. 22, 2000) (class of upwards of 300 certified on letter which allegedly created false sense of urgency). See Nielsen v. United Creditors Alliance Corp., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13267 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 19, 1999) (consumer alleged that the statement "take advantage of this opportunity to repair your credit" was false in violation of this section because a settlement of a debt would not "repair" one's credit).

(n93)Footnote 93. See Krueger v. Ellis, Crosby and Assocs., Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96981 (D. Conn. Nov. 9, 2006) (defendant violated FDCPA by not having state license to collect).

(n94)Footnote 94. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(11) (as amended 1996). See Knight v. Schulman, 102 F. Supp. 2d 867 (S.D. Ohio 1996) (letter identifying amount of debt, enclosing copy of real estate lien, and notifying debtor of title search in preparation for foreclosure was a communication made to collect a debt, but letter acknowledging receipt of payment and notifying debtor of dismissal of suit and release of judgment was not). See also Young v. Manley, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13035 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 6, 2000) (defendant law firm sent a letter to plaintiff's bankruptcy attorney threatening a nondischargeability proceeding based on the amount of credit card charges incurred just before bankruptcy; court held letter was n ot collection effort because it was sent to debtor's attorney); Buckley v. Bass & Assocs., P.C., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10306, at 10 (N.D. Ill. July 14, 2000) (letter inquiring about bankruptcy status, with no demand for payment, and not giving the § 1692e(11) or § 1692g notices was not an effort to collect a debt. "[T]he inclusion of the language plaintiff claims is required under the FDCPA was forbidden by the Bankruptcy Code."), aff'd, 249 F.3d 678 (7th Cir. 2001) . See generally Degonzague v. Weiss, Neuren & Neuren, 89 F. Supp. 2d 282 (N.D.N.Y. 2000) (collector's letter, which clearly stated that the "above-captioned matter" had been referred to this office for immediate attention by People's Bank in an attempt to collect a debt and any information obtained would be used for that purpose, satisfied § 1692e(11)).

(n95)Footnote 95. For discussion of the 1996 amendment, see National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 5.5.14.1 (5th ed. and Supp.)

(n96)Footnote 96. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(11).

(n97)Footnote 97. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(b).

(n98)Footnote 98. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(11).

(n99)Footnote 99. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(12). See Hartman v. Asset Acceptance Corp., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24845 (S.D. Ohio Sept. 29, 2004) (FDCPA claims that affidavit misrepresented that debt buyer was a holder in due in state collection action on purchased Mastercard account violated § 1692e(2) and (12) but not §§ 1692e(6)(A) and 1692d).

(n100)Footnote 100. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(13).

(n101)Footnote 101. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(14). See Hartman v. Meridian Fin. Servs., Inc., 191 F. Supp. 2d 1031 (W.D. Wis. 2002) (third party debt collector's communication with consumers in the name of the creditor was a false representation in violation of § 1692e).

(n102)Footnote 102. Cf. Moore v. National Account Systems, Inc.,1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18137 (D. Conn. Nov. 13, 1991) (magistrate's opinion) (parent corporation, Payco American Corp., not legally responsible for the unlicensed activities of its subsidiary corporation without proof of the parent's participation in the collection or dominance of the subsidiary).

(n103)Footnote 103. See Kizer v. American Credit & Collection, Clearinghouse No. 45,928 (D. Conn. 1991) (licensed trade name, required to be used by Connecticut statute, was the collector's "true" name required by 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(14)); Moore v. National Account Systems, Inc., 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18137 (D. Conn. Nov. 13, 1991) (magistrate's opinion) (collector's use of the name National Business Division when its Connecticut collector's license permitted it to collect only in the name of National Account Systems, Inc. violated 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692e and 1692e(10), prohibiting deception generally and requiring the use of a true name).

(n104)Footnote 104. See Orenbuch v. N. Shore Health Sys., 250 F. Supp. 2d 145 (E.D.N.Y. 2003) (debt collector who utilized the name by which it was known to the public and was registered with the Department of State used its "true name" and did not violate 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(14). The FDCPA does not require disclosure of the debt collector's corporate affiliation.). See also Johnson v. Statewide Collections, 778 P.2d 93 (Wyo. 1989) (collection agency did not violate the FDCPA by using a part of its registered business name rather than its true corporate name).

(n105)Footnote 105. See Hartman v. Meridian Fin. Servs., 191 F. Supp. 2d 1031 (W.D. Wis. 2002) (third party debt collector's communication with consumers in the name of the creditor); Bergstrom, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Nov. 17, 1995); Zager, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Nov. 10, 1992) (law firm sending letters on hospital's letterhead); Knobel, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Oct. 5, 1987) (a collector sending letters in the creditor's name). Cf. Everst v. Credit Prot. Ass'n, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14692 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 22, 2003) (where Communications and Cable of Chicago, Inc. consistently acted in the names A. T. & T. Broadband or other names licensed to it by its parent corporation, there was no misrepresentation of the involvement of a third party collector or use of a name that was not the collector's true name.). But see Johnson v. NCB Collection Servs., 799 F. Supp. 1298 (D. Conn. 1992) (settled upon collector's payment of $4000 for consumer to withdraw appeal); Anthes v. Transworld Sys., Inc., 765 F. Supp. 162 (D. Del. 1991) (letter sent by outside attorney retained by debt collector was neither impersonation of attorney, nor use of a name other than its own).

(n106)Footnote 106. Gradisher v. Check Enforcement Unit, Inc., 210 F. Supp. 2d 907 (W.D. Mich. 2002) (although the debt collector was an independent contractor with the county, its notices purporting to be from the sheriff's department gave the false impression that they were from the sheriff in violation of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692e(9) and e(14)).

(n107)Footnote 107. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(15).

(n108)Footnote 108. See Lawson v. Management Adjustment Bureau, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7275 (N.D. Ill. May 8, 1997) (student loan administrative garnishment notice, which included broadly stated reasons why a debtor could not request a wage-garnishment hearing (e.g., the school was unsatisfactory), could deter a debtor from pursuing a hearing in which she might be able to provide a valid reason why her wages should not be garnished, and, therefore, debtor's complaint stated a claim under § 1692e(2)(A), (6) & (10)).

(n109)Footnote 109. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(16).

(n110)Footnote 110. See Pettit v. Retrieval Masters Creditors Bureau, Inc., 211 F.3d 1057 , reh'g denied, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 12848 (7th Cir. June 7, 2000) (use of the name "Retrieval Masters Creditors Bureau, Inc." in a letter that stated its debt collection purpose did not create the false impression in the mind of a careful, unsophisticated consumer that the collector was a credit bureau; survey evidence on the issue might have raised an issue of fact avoiding summary judgment); Dankowski, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Mar. 6, 2000). See also Shrestha v. State Credit Adjustment Bureau, Inc., 117 F. Supp. 2d 142 (D. Conn. 2000) (collector's name was not misleading about it being a credit bureau, particularly in view of its written disclaimer stating that it was a debt collector and not a credit reporting agency).

(n111)Footnote 111. 15 U.S.C. § 1692f.

(n112)Footnote 112. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 4.4 (7th ed. 2008).

(n113)Footnote 113. Turner v. J.V.D.B. & Assocs., Inc., 330 F.3d 991 (7th Cir. 2003) .

(n114)Footnote 114. 15 U.S.C. § 1692f(1). See Duffy v. Landberg, 215 F.3d 871 (8th Cir. 2000) (demanding a $100 civil penalty for small bounced checks was deceptive and unfair violating § 1692e, e(5), and f where the state law allowed a penalty up to $100 and provided that it was available if the consumer settled the claim before it reached the court; referring to the imposition of attorney fees when state law did not authorize them for small checks violated § 1692e(5); attempts to collect very small interest overcharges violated the plain language of § 1692f(1)); Ballard v. Equifax Check Servs., 158 F. Supp. 2d 1163 (E.D. Cal. 2001) (service charge added by collector to dishonored check which was not authorized by state law or contract creating debt violated 15 U.S.C. § 1692e and § 1692f and California Unfair Business Practices Act); Hart v. GMAC (In re Hart), 246 B.R. 709 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2000) (loan servicer's unilateral adjustment of the consumer's mortgage payments and misrepresentation that the adjustment was required by the creditor violated 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692e(5) and 1692f(1)); see also Shula v. Lawent, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24542 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 23, 2002) (Illinois statutes make court costs "recoverable," but where the debt collector failed to request a court order imposing such costs, demand for payment of those amounts was not "permitted by law" and violated 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692f(1) and 1692e.); Johnson v. Riddle, 305 F.3d 1107 (10th Cir. 2002) (Utah shoplifting penalty which the collector sought was not an amount permitted by law; Utah Supreme Court had held that specific statutes, such as the dishonored check statute, trumped general statutes, such as in the shoplifting statute, and it was clear from the text of the Utah statutory law that shoplifting penalties were unavailable in the collection of dishonored checks.); Lee v. CBC Co., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21993 (S.D. Ohio Sept. 26, 1996) (whether the consumer consented to $25 bad check charge raised a question of fact for trial where the consumer stated she did not see the merchant's sign providing for the charge but was aware that other merchants collected such charges). See Palmer v. Stassinos, 348 F. Supp. 2d 1070 (N.D. Cal. 2004) (remedies under the state's comprehensive check recovery statute providing for fees and treble damages were the exclusive remedies allowed for writing a dishonored check and therefore did not allow the collector to also assess interest under generally applicable law; therefore, consumer's allegation that the collector attempted to collect interest in violation of state law stated an FDCPA claim); Connor v. Howe, 344 F. Supp. 2d 1164 (S.D. Ind. 2004) (attorney, who attempted to collect a payday loan which was void due to the excessive interest charged, violated § 1692f(1) by attempting to collect an amount of interest which was not permitted by law). See Neild v. Wolpoff & Abramson, 453 F. Supp. 2d 918 (E.D. Va. 2006) (consumer's claims that she was charged by defendant for items not specifically contained in underlying agreement stated a cause of action for violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1692f and 1692f(1)); Foster v. D.B.S. Collection Agency, 463 F. Supp. 2d 783 (S.D. Ohio 2006) (because defendants did not have legal capacity to bring suit, they violated § 1692f(1) by seeking court costs, fees, and interest).

(n115)Footnote 115. See Ch. 6, "The Cost of Credit," supra. See Pollice v. National Tax Funding, L.P., 225 F.3d 379 (3d Cir. 2000) (interest and late charges imposed by the collection agency exceeded a state limitation of 10% and violated § 1692f(1)). See Nance v. Ulferts, 282 F. Supp. 2d 912 (N.D. Ind. Aug. 19, 2003) (attempting to collect usurious interest and treble check charges inapplicable to a payday loan violated §§ 1692e, 1692e(2)(A), 1692f, and 1692f(1)).

(n116)Footnote 116. See Spagner v. Latham, Stall, Wagner, Steel & Lehman, P.C., 2005 WL 1950364 (W.D. Okla. Aug. 15, 2005).

(n117)Footnote 117. See Cole v. Noonan & Lieberman, Ltd., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26045 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 26, 2005) .

(n118)Footnote 118. 15 U.S.C. § 1692f(2), (3), (4).

(n119)Footnote 119. 15 U.S.C. § 1692f(4).

(n120)Footnote 120. 15 U.S.C. § 1692f(2).

(n121)Footnote 121. 15 U.S.C. § 1692f(5).

(n122)Footnote 122. 15 U.S.C. § 1692f(6). But see Plummer v. Gordon, 193 F. Supp. 2d 460 (D. Conn. 2002)

(despite repossessor's agreement to hold the car for the consumer, it did not violate the FDCPA by turning it over to the creditor, since the creditor's lien was valid); Akerlund v. TCF Nat'l Bank, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22816 (D. Minn. June 11, 2001) (repossession company did not violate FDCPA because the creditor still had the present right of repossession, even though company breached the peace by criminal trespass in the course of repossession).

(n123)Footnote 123. 15 U.S.C. § 1692f(7).

(n124)Footnote 124. 15 U.S.C. § 1692f(8). See Peter v. GC Servs. L.P., 310 F.3d 344 (5th Cir. 2002) (use of the U.S. Department of Education's name and address as the return address on the envelope, as well as a statement that the envelope was not to be used for private communication, violated §§ 1692e(14) and 1692f(8)).

(n125)Footnote 125. See Goswami v. American Collections Enterprise, Inc., 377 F.3d 488 (5th Cir. 2004) (FDCPA did not bar the innocuous "priority letter" markings on a collection envelope. Nothing about the marking "priority letter" intimated that the contents of the envelope related to collection of delinquent debts, and thus the language was neither threatening nor embarrassing. The court purported to find ambiguity in 15 U.S.C. § 1692f only by completely ignoring the clear and plain language of the second sentence of that section: "the following conduct is a violation of this section ... ." It did not cite its decision in Peter v. GC Servs. L.P., 310 F.3d 344 (5th Cir. 2002) , which avoided the issue of a benign language exception.).

(n126)Footnote 126. Strand v. Diversified Collection Serv., Inc. [rule] F.3d [rule], 380 F.3d 316 (8th Cir. Aug. 12, 2004) (avoiding what it perceived as an absurd result by applying the plain language of the FDCPA, the court held that § 1692f(8) permitted such benign language on the envelop as the collection agency's initials, "DCS," corporate logo, and the statements, "PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL" and "IMMEDIATE REPLY REQUESTED" as these words did not indicate the letter was to collect a debt).

(n127)Footnote 127. 15 U.S.C. § 1692g.

(n128)Footnote 128. See Booth v. Collection Experts, Inc., 969 F. Supp. 1161 (E.D. Wis. 1997) .

(n129)Footnote 129. 12 U.S.C. § 2605(e). See National Consumer Law Center, Foreclosures, § 5.2 (2005).

(n130)Footnote 130. See Ch. 16 infra. See also National Consumer Law Center, Fair Credit Reporting Ch. 6 (6th ed. 2006 and Supp.).

(n131)Footnote 131. 15 U.S.C. § 1692g(a).

(n132)Footnote 132. Avila v. Rubin, 84 F.3d 222 (7th Cir. 1996) . See also Law Office of David J. Stern, P.A. v. Martinez, 271 B.R. 696 (S.D. Fla. 2001) , aff'd, 311 F.3d 1272 (11th Cir. 2002) (validation notice was confusing where it was inserted as page 8 of a 16 page foreclosure suit package); Colmon v. Payco-G.A.C., Inc., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22733 (D. Conn. Jan. 22, 1992) (even though a notice may contain the requisite statutory language, the strident demand of communication for payment through the use of format, type size, juxtaposition of provisions, conspicuousness, color and background may negate and overshadow the effective communication of the debtor's rights). See also Jacobson v. Healthcare Fin. Serv., Inc., 516 F.3d 85 (2d Cir. 2008) (language unlawfully overshadowed or contradicted the debt validation rights notice when it would make the least sophisticated consumer uncertain as to his/her rights, regardless of whether the plaintiff was actually confused).

(n133)Footnote 133. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692g(a), 1692a(2). See, e.g., Robinson v. TSYS Total Debt Mgmt., Inc., 447 F. Supp. 2d 502 (D. Md. 2006) (collector's request for collection probability score from credit reporting agency did not trigger requirement to provide validation rights notice because it was not communication with consumer); Acosta v. Campbell, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4088 (M.D. Fla. Jan. 18, 2006) (FDCPA does not impose on debt collector obligation to disclose to consumer right to dispute debt prior to filing suit).

(n134)Footnote 134. Cranmer, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Apr. 25, 1989) (validation notice should be sent with, or within five days, of mortgage servicing company's notice to consumers of its acquisition of obtaining loan servicing); Rahe, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Aug. 6, 1980).

(n135)Footnote 135. See Cirkot v. Diversified Sys., Inc., 839 F. Supp. 941 (D. Conn. 1993) . See also Phillips v. North Am. Capital Corp., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7000 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 30, 1999) (oral demand for immediate payment, which preceded validation notice by no more than five days, did not violate the FDCPA).

(n136)Footnote 136. 15 U.S.C. § 1692g(d) added by Pub. L. No. 109-351 § 802, 120 Stat. 2006 (Oct. 16, 2006).

(n137)Footnote 137. See Turner v. Shenandoah Legal Group, P.C., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39341 (E.D. Va. June 12, 2006) (collection attorney required to provide validation rights notice although it may have been provided by earlier debt collector); Horkey v. J.V.D.B. & Assocs., 179 F. Supp. 2d 861 (N.D. Ill. 2002) (provision of validation notice by collector's attorney did not excuse collection agency from providing debt validation notice, as attorney's notice did not refer to the agency), aff'd, 333 F.3d 769 (7th Cir. 2003) ; Tipping-Lipshie v. Riddle, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2477 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 1, 2000) (initial communication from each collector must contain notice); FTC Official Staff Commentary § 809(a), 7. But see Nichols v. Byrd, 435 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44628 (D. Nev. June 13, 2006) ; Senftle v. Landau, 390 F. Supp. 2d 463 (D. Md. 2005) (when collection agency had provided validation rights notice, collection law firm that subsequently collected debt was not required to send its own validation rights notice).

(n138)Footnote 138. Chaudhry v. Gallerizzo, 174 F.3d 394 (4th Cir. 1999) .

(n139)Footnote 139. See Baiser v. Braje & Nelson, L.L.P., 2006 WL 1285143 (N.D. Ind. May 5, 2006).

(n140)Footnote 140. See Clark v. Capital Credit & Collection Services, Inc., 460 F.3d 1162 (9th Cir. 2006) .

(n141)Footnote 141. Mezines, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Mar. 4, 1980). See also Sylvester v. Laks, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21777 (N.D. Ohio Aug. 1, 1991) (follow-up letter violated § 1692e(11) notice requirement because 1692e(11) notice on separate paper should have been referred to in dunning letter).

(n142)Footnote 142. Cavallaro v. Law Office of Shapiro & Kriesman, 933 F. Supp. 1148 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) .

(n143)Footnote 143. Ferree v. Marianos, 129 F.3d 130 (10th Cir. 1997) (unpublished).

(n144)Footnote 144. DiRosa v. North Shore Agency, 56 F. Supp. 2d 1039 (N.D. Ill. 1999) ; Trull v. GC Servs. Ltd. P'ship, 961 F. Supp. 1199 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (validation notice received twice in letters less than 30 days apart, where each notice informed debtor that 30-day validation period commenced upon receipt of initial notice, would not confuse unsophisticated consumer into believing that validation period had been extended).

(n145)Footnote 145. Holsinger v. Wolpoff & Abramson, L.L.P., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55406 (N.D. Cal. July 27, 2006) (unpublished) (failure of second notice to state amount of debt would not be violation). See also Arend v. Total Recovery Servs., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50479 (E.D.N.Y. July 24, 2006) (it was not false or deceptive for debt collector to offer consumer additional time to exercise his right to obtain verification of debt).

(n146)Footnote 146. FTC Official Staff Commentary § 809(a), 1; FTC Informal Staff Letter (Mar. 7, 1979). See also Connelly, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Dec. 10, 1980) (company that merely supplies collection forms to creditor was not communicating with debtor and was not required to provide notice). But cf. Fuhr, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Jan. 9, 1987) (when required, attorney must furnish notice even if creditor had sent similar information).

(n147)Footnote 147. Frey v. Gangwish, 970 F.2d 1516 (6th Cir. 1992) ; Sampson v. Banchek, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21815 (N.D. Ohio Jan. 8, 1991) (attorney violated validation notice requirement when he failed to send the notice after a phone call regarding a debt); FTC Official Staff Commentary § 809, 1; Udell, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Jan. 20, 1987); Goldfarb, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Jan. 16, 1987); Cathcart, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Aug. 6, 1981).

(n148)Footnote 148. Frey v. Gangwish, 970 F.2d 1516 (6th Cir. 1992) ; Goldfarb, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Nov. 23, 1988).

(n149)Footnote 149. Sutton, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Oct. 23, 1986).

(n150)Footnote 150. Grammatico v. Sterling, Inc., Clearinghouse No. 47,976 (N.D.N.Y. 1991); Raff, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Sept. 11, 1986).

(n151)Footnote 151. Xiao-lin, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Aug. 3, 1987).

(n152)Footnote 152. Goldfarb, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Nov. 23, 1988).

(n153)Footnote 153. See Spencer v. Hendersen-Webb, 81 F. Supp. 2d 582 (D. Md. 1999) (debt collector's fax of bill to father of consumer's boyfriend in response to request for information was attempt to collect debt since collector believed he was consumer's attorney and that information would reach consumer indirectly; fax was initial communication and thus failure to provide validation notice violated FDCPA).

(n154)Footnote 154. Gradisher v. Check Enforcement Unit, Inc., 210 F. Supp. 2d 907 (W.D. Mich. 2002) (debt collector violated 15 U.S.C. § 1692g(a) by failing to provide validation notice to the debtor); Hartman v. Meridian Fin. Servs., Inc., 191 F. Supp. 2d 1031 (W.D. Wis. 2002) (third party debt collector's initial communications with consumers in name of creditor failed to contain validation notice, violating § 1692g).

(n155)Footnote 155. See Dowling v. Kucker Kraus & Bruh, L.L.P., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11000 (S.D.N.Y. June 6, 2005) (debt collectors could not evade notice requirements of FDCPA merely by having creditor sign demand for rent that collector prepared and mailed).

(n156)Footnote 156. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6).

(n157)Footnote 157. See Rios v. River City Adjustors, Inc., Clearinghouse No. 36,823 (W.D. Mich. 1984) (stipulated settlement and dismissal) (repossession company settled FDCPA and state claims without admitting wrongdoing; complaint alleged that company violated FDCPA by failing to provide validation notice and by communicating with consumer known to be represented by lawyer in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(a)(2)).

(n158)Footnote 158. Shula v. Lawent, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24542 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 23, 2002) , aff'd, 359 F.3d 489 (7th Cir. 2004) (collector's letter demanding payment of court costs was required to include statutory validation notice pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1692g). See also Beal, FTC Informal Staff Letter (May 22, 1987). But see Schnitzspahn v. F.A.B., Inc., 156 F.3d 1232 (6th Cir. 1998) (unpublished) (text at 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 17658) (summarily finding no FDCPA violations: defendant's debt validation notice contained all information required by § 1692g).

(n159)Footnote 159. See Mahon v. Credit Bureau, 171 F.3d 1197 (9th Cir. 1999) (debt collector must prove only that § 1692g notice was sent, not received by consumer; absent any evidence other than consumer's bare denial of receipt, common law mailbox rule controlled); McGinley v. Law Office of Shapiro & Kreisman, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10765 (N.D. Ill. June 24, 2003) (summary judgment granted to debt collector on consumer's claim that debt collector failed to send validation notice, where consumer's only evidence was that he did not receive notice, and debt collector produced electronic records showing that it was in fact mailed to consumer).

(n160)Footnote 160. Baker v. G.C. Servs. Corp., 677 F.2d 775 (9th Cir. 1982) .

(n161)Footnote 161. Maloy v. Phillips, 197 B.R. 721 (M.D. Ga. 1996) . See also Buckley v. Bass & Assocs., P.C.,

249 F.3d 678 (7th Cir. 2001) (letter inquiring about bankruptcy status, with no demand for payment, and not giving the §§ 1692e(11) or 1692g notices was not an effort to collect a debt; "the inclusion of the language plaintiff claims was required under the FDCPA was forbidden by the Bankruptcy Code.").

(n162)Footnote 162. See Beuter v. Canyon State Prof'l Servs., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12281 (D. Ariz. June 13, 2005) (disputed issues of fact precluded summary judgment where consumer denied she received initial dun containing validation notice and collector submitted only conclusory statement that it had sent initial dun without any evidence of ordinary business practices through which dun was purportedly sent).

(n163)Footnote 163. Johnson v. Midland Credit Mgmt. Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60133 N.D. Ohio Aug. 24, 2006).

(n164)Footnote 164. 15 U.S.C. § 1692g(d).

(n165)Footnote 165. Pub. L. No. 109-351, § 802(a), 120 Stat. 2006 (Oct. 13, 2006).

(n166)Footnote 166. Mezines, F.T.C. Formal Advisory Opinion (Mar. 31, 2000).

(n167)Footnote 167. Goldman v. Cohen, 445 F.3d 152 (2d Cir. 2006) ; Thomas v. Law Firm of Simpson & Cybak, 392 F.3d 914 (7th Cir. 2004) .

(n168)Footnote 168. See Black's Law Dictionary (8th ed. 2004), "pleading."

(n169)Footnote 169. Added by Pub. L. No. 109-351, § 802(b), 120 Stat. 2006 (Oct. 13, 2006).

(n170)Footnote 170. Grief v. Wilson, Elser, Moskowitz, Edelman & Dicker, LLP, 217 F. Supp. 2d 336 (E.D.N.Y. 2002) (failure of the collector's initial notice to state that any request for verification of the debt or the identity of the original creditor must be in writing violated the verification disclosure requirements; statement in the initial dun that the amount of the debt was the underlying balance plus a sum for "attorneys' fees up to" a stated dollar amount presented the least sophisticated consumer with "a variety of amounts of the debt" and therefore failed to disclose the specific amount of the debt owing, in violation of § 1692g(a)(1)); McCabe v. Crawford & Co., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17997 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 25, 2002) (claim was stated where the collector's letter failed to inform the consumer that a dispute must be "in writing;" claim was stated where the collector's letter failed to inform the consumer that he may dispute "any portion" of the debt. The court granted plaintiff's motion for class certification pursuant to Rule 23(a) and (b)(3).).

(n171)Footnote 171. See Camacho v. Bridgeport Fin. Inc., 430 F.3d 1078 (9th Cir. 2005) (collectors who send out a debt verification notice cannot require that the consumer dispute the debt only in writing; instead, the consumer's oral notification is sufficient to overcome the debt collector's assumption that the debt is valid, although a written request is required to obtain validation of the debt or a response to the dispute); Ong v. American Collections Enter., Inc., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 409 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 15, 1999) (collection agency's letter to consumer violated § 1692g(a)(3), requiring that consumer notify collection agency in writing that he disputes validity of the debt). See also Spearman v. Tom Wood Pontiac-GMC, Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24389 (S.D. Ind. Nov. 4, 2002) (court parts with the Third Circuit position in Graziano in the current split on whether a proper § 1692g notice may require that any dispute must be in writing and holds in a comprehensive analysis that the validation notice must disclose the consumer's right to dispute orally.); In re Risk Mgmt. Alternatives, Inc., 208 F.R.D. 493 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (court declined to follow Graziano v. Harrison, 950 F.2d 107 (3d Cir. 1991) , and held that a jury must determine whether the least sophisticated consumer could believe that any challenge to the debt must be in writing.). One court has held that a debt collector is not required to provide debtors with a telephone number in order to assist debtors in disputing the debt orally. Nasca v. GC Servs., Ltd., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16992 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 12, 2002) .

(n172)Footnote 172. See Sparkman v. Zwicker & Assocs., P.C., 374 F. Supp. 2d 293 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (collector failed to clearly identify current creditor). Cf. Dikun v. Streich, 369 F. Supp. 2d 781 (E.D. Va. 2005) (debt collector's identification of its creditor in its initial dun by name that differed slightly from creditor's actual name was not inaccurate as tested by least sophisticated consumer standard).

(n173)Footnote 173. But see Rabideau v. Management Adjustment Bureau, 805 F. Supp. 1086 (W.D.N.Y. 1992) (statement that immediate payment would avoid further contact contradicts the validation notice because it would mislead the consumer to believe payment was the only way to avoid future contact).

(n174)Footnote 174. Mendus v. Morgan & Assocs., 994 P.2d 83 (Okla. Civ. App. 1999) . See also Shaver v. Trauner, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19647 (C.D. Ill. May 29, 1998) (motion to dismiss denied where the attorney's letter allegedly violated the validation notice requirement by including "the Federal Trade Commission has stated that the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act does not preclude institution of a legal action prior to the expiration of the aforementioned thirty-day period. Legal action may be instituted forthwith in the absence of payment or satisfactory payment arrangements.").

(n175)Footnote 175. See Johnson v. Revenue Mgmt. Corp., 169 F.3d 1057 (7th Cir. 1999) ; Rhoades v. West Virginia Credit Bureau Reporting Servs., 96 F. Supp. 2d 528, 532 (S.D. W. Va. 2000) (dun which demanded "immediate payment," said "[p]ay the full amount today," and "[c]all us today" in large type overshadowed and contradicted "tiny-type rendering of the validation notice."). But see Kramsky v. Mark L. Nichter, P.C., 166 F. Supp. 2d 912, 913 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (validation notice was not overshadowed by language that law firm "has been engaged to proceed against you because of your failure to make payment," that it "will not permit this debt to be ignored," and that "[i]t would definitely be in your best interest to satisfy in full your outstanding balance"); Kramsky v. Trans-Continental Credit, 166 F. Supp. 2d 908, 910 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (validation notice was not contradicted or overshadowed by: "This past due statement reflects a balance due the above stated creditor. This account has been referred to collection and we must ask that you remit the balance shown in full using the enclosed envelope.").

(n176)Footnote 176. See Peter v. GC Servs. L.P., 310 F.3d 344 (5th Cir. 2002) .

(n177)Footnote 177. See Bartlett v. Heibl, 128 F.3d 497 (7th Cir. 1997) .

(n178)Footnote 178. Mezines, FTC Advisory Opinion (Mar. 31, 2000), available at http://www.ftc.gov/os/2000/04/fdcpaadvisoryopinion.htm.

(n179)Footnote 179. See Sprouse v. City Credits Co., 126 F. Supp. 2d 1083 (S.D. Ohio 2000) (only if the consumer disputes debt is collector barred from filing suit under § 1692g; since consumer did not so dispute, collector was free to file suit within the 30-day validation period.). But see Spears v. Brennan, 745 N.E.2d 862 (Ind. App. 2001) (scheduling a hearing date in small claims court and obtaining a default judgment within the 30-day validation period infringed on the consumer's right to have the complete 30 days in which to dispute the debt), reh'g denied, 2001 Ind. App. LEXIS 1171 (Ind. Ct. App. June 28, 2001) .

(n180)Footnote 180. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(e).

(n181)Footnote 181. See § 8.01[2][b] supra.

(n182)Footnote 182. See, e.g., Bartlett v. Heibl, 128 F.3d 497 (7th Cir. 1997) , reh'g, en banc, denied, 104 F.3d 1534 (7th Cir. 1997) . See also Renick v. Dun & Bradstreet Receivable Mgmt. Servs., 290 F.3d 1055 (9th Cir. 2002) (FDCPA thirty-day validation notice was not overshadowed by collector's letter stating "send your payment today" and "PROMPT PAYMENT was REQUESTED" because it was in the same font as the surrounding text, was not emphasized in any other way, was in the nature of a request rather than a demand, and carried no sense of urgency); see also Taylor v. Cavalry Inv., LLC, 210 F. Supp. 2d 1001 (N.D. Ill. 2002) (collector's initial dun which recited the required § 1692g verification language and also instructed the consumer to "act now to satisfy this debt" did not violate the FDCPA since the latter statement was not accompanied by any threat of action and did not demand payment with a threat of action if the debt was not satisfied in a certain amount of time). Bernstein v. Howe, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS

5284 (S.D. Ind. Mar. 31, 2003) (payment arrangements should be made by a date prior to the expiration of the thirty-day validation period not violation); Taylor v. Cavalry Invest., L.L.C., 210 F. Supp. 2d 1001 (N.D. Ill. 2002) ("act now to satisfy this debt" did not violate the FDCPA); Young v. Meyer & Njus, P.A., 183 F.R.D. 231 (N.D. Ill. 1998) (by "return mail" did not mean immediate payment); Keen v. Omnibus Int'l, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12619 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 7, 1998) (notify us in writing immediately if the debt invalid or discharged in bankruptcy did not contradict or overshadow); Wollert v. Client Servs., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12241 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 3, 1998) (not contradicted nor overshadowed by call our office immediately); Gammon v. Belzer, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5170 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 9, 1997) (immediate attention to this matter is in your best interest); Vasquez v. Gertler & Gertler, Ltd., 987 F. Supp. 652 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (request for immediate attention by payment or contacting the collection attorney); Burns v. Accelerated Bureau of Collections, Inc., 828 F. Supp. 475 (E.D. Mich. 1993) . See Palmer v. Stassinos, 348 F. Supp. 2d 1070 (N.D. Cal. 2004) (debt collector was not required to suspend debt collection activities, including pursuing litigation options, during the period for requesting validation.). But cf. Palmer v. Stassinos, 348 F. Supp. 2d 1070 (N.D. Cal. 2004) (threat of litigation made within the validation period did not cause a debtor confusion regarding her right to validate the amount of debt where there was no statement that could be construed to shorten the 30-day validation period); Gostony v. Diem Corp., 320 F. Supp. 2d 932 (D. Ariz. 2003) (suggestion, twenty days into dispute period, that the consumer consult with an attorney, and threat of litigation, did not contradict validation notice or create a false sense of urgency). See also Foti v. NCO Fin. Sys., Inc., 424 F. Supp. 2d 643, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13857 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 25, 2006) (denying collector's motion to dismiss claim that collector's telephone calls overshadowed or contradicted § 1692g disclosures since allegations that collector repeatedly demanded payment and threatened continuous demands for payment absent immediate payment during 30-day validation period stated claim for relief).

(n183)Footnote 183. 164 F.3d 81, 86 (2d Cir. 1998) .

(n184)Footnote 184. Id.

(n185)Footnote 185. See Bartlett v. Heibl, 128 F.3d 497, 501-502 (7th Cir. 1997) .

(n186)Footnote 186. 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2618 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 8, 2000) . See also Mendez v. M.R.S. Assocs., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13705 (N.D. Ill. June 27, 2005) (consumer's motion for summary judgment was granted where collector's letter instructed consumer to contact sender and "explain nature of dispute" because that statement erroneously suggested that consumer must have specific reason in order to demand verification of debt).

(n187)Footnote 187. 15 U.S.C. § 1692.

(n188)Footnote 188. In dicta, the court stated that a consumer could also orally dispute the validity of a debt.

(n189)Footnote 189. See Semper v. JBC Legal Group, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33591 (W.D. Wash. Sept. 6, 2005) . See also Clark v. Capital Credit & Collection Servs., Inc., 460 F.3d 1162 (9th Cir. 2006) ; Chaudhry v. Gallerizzo, 174 F.3d 394, 406 (4th Cir. 1999) .

(n190)Footnote 190. Erickson v. Johnson, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6979 (D. Minn. Feb. 22, 2006) (where debt collector provided statements of account sent to plaintiff and his spouse, and canceled checks drawn on marital joint account, verification was "minimally sufficient" since FDCPA does not require investigation and does not require collector to ascertain legality of the debt; where plaintiff did not request verification of attorney fee component of amount demanded, collector had no obligation to verify it; dismissing verification claims).

(n191)Footnote 191. Bingham, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Jan. 12, 1987). But cf. Xiao-lin, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Aug. 3, 1987) (a verification of a deficiency claim from a mortgage foreclosure would be an itemization of the amount due; the verification should address the facts of the dispute raised by the consumer).

(n192)Footnote 192. Bingham, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Jan. 12, 1987) (no mention of the credit application which would contain identification information). See also FTC Official Staff Commentary § 809(a), 8 (providing proof of debt in initial communication not sufficient to verify debt since consumer may dispute his or her identity as the debtor), discussed in § 3.2.6, supra, reprinted at Appx. C, infra .

(n193)Footnote 193. Spears v. Brennan, 745 N.E.2d 862 (Ind. Ct. App. 2001) (providing a copy of the original signed contract was not a sufficient verification to a general § 1692g dispute, since it did not show basic necessary information such as accounting of payments made and interest and fees charged; therefore, attorney collector's continuing to collect the debt by procuring a default judgment after the dispute and inadequate verification violated § 1692g(b)).

(n194)Footnote 194. Glover, FTC Informal Staff Letter (June 23, 1986) (15 U.S.C. § 1692g requires a statement of the amount of the debt and, upon request disputing the amount, a verification of the debt). See Bey v. Daimler Chrysler Servs., L.L.C., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8261 (D.N.J. Feb. 15, 2006) (verification that was higher than amount initially demanded did not violate FDCPA, since higher amount was merely interim accrued attorney fees).

(n195)Footnote 195. See Bascom v. Dubin, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5349 (W.D.N.Y. Jan. 25, 2007) (bank's collection attorney adequately provided verification of debt where he provided plaintiffs copies of original billing statements that showed that amount being demanded was what was claimed to be owed and that showed dates on which charges were incurred, together with current bank's supporting "Affidavit of Claim and Certification of Amount Due").

(n196)Footnote 196. Young v. Meyer & Njus, P.A., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11469 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 6, 1997) (refusing to dismiss allegation that 15 U.S.C.§§ 1692e and 1692f were violated by an attorney who verified complaint based on the review of a computer print-out from the creditor which provided insufficient information to prove the debt at trial).

(n197)Footnote 197. See Blome v. Johnson, Rodenburg & Lauinger, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91000 (D. Mont. Dec. 11, 2007) .

(n198)Footnote 198. See Bascom v. Dubin, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5349 (W.D.N.Y. Jan. 25, 2007) .

(n199)Footnote 199. See Palisades Collection, L.L.C. v. Besthorne, 2007 N.J. Super. Unpub. LEXIS 1334 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. Feb. 20, 2007) .

(n200)Footnote 200. Matthews, FTC Informal Staff Letter (May 17, 1993); Krisor, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Mar. 3, 1992).

(n201)Footnote 201. See § 8.03[2][c].

(n202)Footnote 202. Evory v. Nat'l Action Fin. Servs., Inc., 505 F.3d 769 (7th Cir. 2007) ("[w]e conclude that any written notice sent to the lawyer must contain the information that would be required by the Act if the notice were sent to the consumer directly." (citing National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Credit Law Manual § 8.02[5][b] (2004); Cf. Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995). Contra Guerro v. RJM Acquisitions L.L.C., 499 F.3d 926 (9th Cir. 2007) .

(n203)Footnote 203. Clark's Jewelers v. Humble, 823 P.2d 818 (Kan. Ct. App. 1991) (debt collector violated § 1692g(b) where it failed to provide verification of the debt, but continued to send dunning letters in care of consumers' attorney). See also Cass, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Dec. 23, 1997) (may not report debt to credit reporting agency after a dispute during the validation period until the debt is verified).

(n204)Footnote 204. Spencer v. Hendersen-Webb, Inc., 81 F. Supp. 2d 582 (D. Md. 1999) (offer to settle was deemed an effort to collect the debt; therefore, collector violated § 1692g(b) by making the offer and by failing to cease collection until debt was verified); Johnson v. Statewide Collections, Inc., 778 P.2d 93 (Wyo. 1989) .

(n205)Footnote 205. See In re Young, 280 B.R. 864 (Bankr. S.D. Ala. 2001) (consumer awarded $1000 where the collector violated § 1692g(b) by taking an administrative garnishment without responding to a debt dispute letter); Taylor v. Fink, Case No. 93 C 4941, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16821 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 23, 1994) . See also Castle, FTC Informal Staff Letter (June 13, 1995) (debt collector may not attempt to reduce a disputed claim to judgment without providing the verification required by 15 U.S.C. § 1692g(b)). See Zaborac v. Mutual Hosp. Serv., Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22816 (S.D. Ind. Oct. 7, 2004) (once the consumer's attorney has requested verification of the debt, the collector has two choices: (1) provide verification to the attorney or (2) cease attempts to collect the debt. The collector may continue settlement negotiations initiated by the consumer's attorney.).

(n206)Footnote 206. Mezines, FTC Advisory Opinion (Mar. 31, 2000), available at http://www.ftc.gov/os/2000/04/fdcpaadvisoryopinion.htm.

(n207)Footnote 207. Law Offices of David Stern, P.A. v. Martinez, 311 F.3d 1272 (11th Cir. 2002) .

(n208)Footnote 208. In re Martinez, 271 B.R. 696 (S.D. Fla. Dec. 28, 2001) , aff'g 266 B.R. 523 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. May 30, 2001) .

(n209)Footnote 209. 128 F.3d 497 (7th Cir. 1997) .

(n210)Footnote 210. Shimek v. Forbes, 374 F.3d 1011 (11th Cir. 2004) .

(n211)Footnote 211. Thomas v. Law Firm of Simpson & Cybak, 392 F.3d 914, 920 (7th Cir. 2004) .

(n212)Footnote 212. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(e).

(n213)Footnote 213. See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Credit Reporting Ch. 6 (6th ed. 2006).

(n214)Footnote 214. See Mahon v. Credit Bureau, 171 F.3d 1197 (9th Cir. 1999) .

(n215)Footnote 215. See Campbell v. Credit Bureau Sys., Inc., 2009 WL 211046 (E.D. Ky. Jan. 27, 2009) (pro se consumer adequately rebutted the debt collectors' affidavits that they had mailed a debt verification notice with his affidavit that he was changing addresses at the time of the mailing; debt collectors' affidavits failed to say the notices were not returned by the post office).

(N216)Footnote 216. 15 U.S.C. § 1692g(c).

(n217)Footnote 217. 15 U.S.C. § 1692h.

(n218)Footnote 218. 15 U.S.C. § 1692i.

(n219)Footnote 219. Fox v. Citicorp Credit Servs., Inc., 15 F.3d 1507 (9th Cir. 1994) ; Scott v. Jones, 964 F.2d 314 (4th Cir. 1992) ; Crawford v. Credit Collection Servs., 898 F. Supp. 699 (D.S.D. 1995) . See also Addison v. Braud, 105 F.3d 223 (5th Cir. 1997) (attorney who failed to bring action in the judicial district where the debtors resided or had signed the promissory note violated 15 U.S.C. § 1692i), amended, reh'g denied, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 5570 (5th Cir. Mar. 21, 1997) ; Wadlington v. Credit Acceptance Corp., 76 F.3d 103 (6th Cir. 1996) (attorneys who filed suit on behalf of a financier were debt collectors and subject to liability under the FDCPA for filing suit in venue not permitted by 15 U.S.C. § 1692i(a)(2), but court remanded on issue of whether venue protection was waived by the sales contract).

(n220)Footnote 220. Shapiro & Meinhold v. Zartman, 823 P.2d 120 (Colo. 1992) , aff'g Zartman v. Shapiro & Meinhold, 811 P.2d 409 (Colo. Ct. App. 1990) .

(n221)Footnote 221. Newsom v. Friedman, 76 F.3d 813 (7th Cir. 1996) (the term "judicial district or similar legal entity" meant the trial court of original jurisdiction, not the subdivisions of the trial court); Fox v. Citicorp Credit Servs., Inc., 15 F.3d 1507 (9th Cir. 1994) (state provided a formal transfer mechanism between courts in different counties, thus, county was the "judicial district or similar legal entity"); Blakemore v. Pekay, 895 F. Supp. 972 (N.D. Ill. 1995) ; Crawford v. Credit Collection Servs., 898 F. Supp. 699 (D.S.D. 1995) ; Dutton v. Wolhar, 809 F. Supp. 1130 (D. Del. 1992) .

(n222)Footnote 222. Dutton v. Wolhar, 809 F. Supp. 1130 (D. Del. 1992) (although the State of Delaware provided for statewide jurisdiction of civil actions, suit must be brought by an attorney collector in the county in which the consumer resided or where the contract was signed to avoid violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1692i(2)).

(n223)Footnote 223. Fox v. Citicorp Credit Servs., Inc., 15 F.3d 1507 (9th Cir. 1994) (application for a writ of garnishment is a "legal action on a debt" covered by 15 U.S.C. § 1692i restrictions). See 15 U.S.C. § 1692i(a)(1). See also Dale v. Johnson, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20277 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 12, 1997) (pro se) (claim under 15 U.S.C. § 1692i--that the court action to enforce an arbitration award should have been instituted in another county--should have been raised in the state court proceeding and not in federal court).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 8 Fair Debt Collection

1-8 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 8.04

§ 8.04 Availability of a Private Fair Debt Collection Practices Act Cause of Action

[1] Private Remedy Is Primary Enforcement Mechanism

A debt collector who violates the FDCPA while collecting a consumer debt is usually subject to suit by "any person" affected by the violation. The Act grants federal and state jurisdiction, and the successful plaintiff may recover actual damages, statutory damages, attorney fees, costs, and, perhaps, punitive damages and injunctive relief. A plaintiff may also maintain a class action, if the requirements of the Act and the applicable state or federal procedural rules for class action are met. Congress intended private action to be the main vehicle for enforcing the Act. Thus consumers enforcing compliance with the Act are acting as "private attorneys general." n1

[2] Cases and Parties Must Be Carefully Evaluated

[a] FDCPA Awards Increasing

A survey of FDCPA cases indicates that actual damages awarded averaged $1,000 to $3355, statutory damages averaged $850 to $1632, and attorney fees averaged $3948 to $6334. The high award of actual damages was $15,500, statutory damages was $27,000, and attorney fees was $40,000. Comparing recent awards to the earliest FDCPA awards, there appears to be a decided upward trend in the size of the awards.

There is a growing number of class actions under the FDCPA.

[b] A Wide Range of Parties Plaintiff May Be Named Under the Act

There are abundant possibilities for multiple plaintiffs in private actions under the Act because the private right of action is available not only to "consumers," but also to "any person" affected by a violation; most provisions of the Act protect everyone, not just consumers, affected by violations occurring during the collection of consumer debts. Therefore, friends, relatives, neighbors, a debtor's executor or an employer, even though not obligated or alleged to be obligated on a debt, might be properly joined as plaintiffs in an action under the Act. n2 The equities of a case may be improved with the joinder as plaintiffs of nondebtors whose claims may create additional sympathy.

[c] A Wide Range of Parties Defendant May Be Named Under the Act

There are also numerous possibilities for multiple defendants in private actions under the Act. The definition of "debt collector" includes a debt collector's employees who violate the Act, as well as their attorney. n3

If a forms supplier designs a letter giving the false impression that the designer or another third party, such as a government agency, is involved in collecting the debt, the forms supplier is liable for violating 15 U.S.C. section 1692j.

Corporate officers may be named as defendants where they are involved in establishing or carrying out the violative policies of the corporation. n4 If a law partner is liable under the FDCPA, the partnership may also be liable under state partnership principles. n5

By piercing the corporate veil, the owner of a collection agency may be held liable for FDCPA violations committed by agency employees. n6 A franchisor may be liable for those acts of its franchisee debt collector which it controls. A state claim is usually the best course regarding creditor's debt collection activities.

[d] Parties to a Private FDCPA Action Are Entitled to a Trial by Jury

The Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees the right to a jury trial in FDCPA private actions. n7 Since an FDCPA action is similar to types of actions recognized at common law and Congress did not address the issue, the Seventh Amendment guarantees the right to a jury trial to any party in an FDCPA action.

[3] Actual Damages Are Available to Any Person Injured by a Violation of the Act

This provision n8 establishes a cause of action for actual damages sustained by any person as a result of a failure of a collector to comply with any provision of the FDCPA.

[a] "Actual Damages" Are Defined Broadly by the Courts

Actual damages commonly include pecuniary losses, such as lost wages, the cost of obtaining an unlisted telephone number, and physical injuries, such as heart attacks, ulcers, vomiting, and insomnia. In addition, the courts commonly allow recovery of damages for emotional distress n9 and relational injuries under the FDCPA.

[b] Some Proof of Actual Damages Must Be Offered

Nonpecuniary damages must be based on evidence. n10

The FDCPA does not establish a legal limitation on compensable injuries that were caused in fact by a violation of the Act. The words "sustained ... as a result of" in 15 U.S.C. section 1692k(a)(1) imply that only causation in fact (a showing that the injury suffered was in fact caused by the violation proved) must be established by direct connection to the violation.

When seeking summary judgment on liability involving multiple violations, consumer's counsel generally seek partial summary judgment on liability only postponing a decision on damages. This conserves court and litigation resources by dealing with only those damage claims supported by the summary judgment. Damages may be the subject of a later motion for summary judgment or trial. n11

[c] Class Actions for Actual Damages May Be Maintained

[i] Common Questions Required for Class Actions

Some violations of the FDCPA raise common questions of fact and law as to liability; these questions must predominate over individual questions of liability. This predominance is a major requirement for class actions seeking damages, whether actual or statutory. n12 Predominance is present when, for example, one of the routine form letters sent by a collector violates the Act (e.g., because it falsely threatens legal action or simulates legal process), and this violation is the only one for which recovery is sought.

Commonality, predominance, and typicality are more problematic when a collector's practices or policies vary from consumer to consumer.

Predominance of common questions may be shown by evidence that the named plaintiff's injury resulted from the collector's routine business policy, pattern, or practice. A collector with many employees may have training materials or instructions for new employees. A collector that has many branch offices may have an operations manual or instructions for its local managers. Former employees of the collector, having little reason to protect the collector from liability, may provide evidence of its business practice.

Typicality of the named plaintiff's claim is largely an issue of standing. n13 The named plaintiff's claim must be typical of the claims of the class, and the named plaintiff must have standing to assert the claim.

[ii] Manageability of Class Action

The manageability of the class, required by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure Rule ("FRCP") 23(c)(3) and similar state laws, is another likely issue. The most common manageability problem is the need for individual proofs of damages caused by a common violation. This need arises because most FDCPA violations produce different kinds and amounts of actual damages, depending upon the circumstances and susceptibility of each victim.

Individual proofs of damages do not preclude a class action, although they do pose administrative difficulties. n14

Counsel should consider an FDCPA class action for damages when:

- The common factual and legal questions regarding liability predominate over individual questions;

- One of the management tools for dealing with individual proofs of damages is appropriate to the case or individual proofs of damages are unnecessary; and

- The victim's attorney has adequate resources to commit to the case. If there are manageability or resource problems with a class action for actual damages, counsel might consider a class action limited to statutory damages or injunctive relief.

[4] Statutory Damages

[a] Statutory Damages Up to $1,000 Are Available in an Individual Action

These provisions n15 permit courts to award any person affected by noncompliance statutory damages of up to $1,000. To the extent that these parallel provisions of the TILA n16 (after which this provision was modeled), cases decided under that Act may be helpful in construing these provisions.

[b] A Court Must Grant Statutory Damages When a Violation Contravenes the Purposes of the Act and Some Basis Is Provided for Statutory Damages

Generally, statutory damages are not discretionary: "A debt collector who violates the Act is liable for ... any additional damages the court deems appropriate, not exceeding $1,000. In assessing damages, the court must take into account the nature of the violation, the degree of willfulness, and the debt collectors persistence." n17

The legislative history also suggests that individual statutory damages need not be awarded or may be nominal in amount (less than $100) only if the violation is technical (that is, only if it does not affect the Act's purposes). Where the statutory factors of frequency, persistence, nature of violation, and intent are not demonstrated, statutory damages may be denied. Recovery of actual damages is not a prerequisite to an award of statutory damages. n18 Even in the rare case where no actual or statutory damages are awarded, attorney fees and costs are mandatory if the plaintiff has proven a violation of the FDCPA. n19

[c] In Determining Statutory Damages, Courts Must Consider the Intent, Frequency, Persistence, and Nature of the Noncompliance

This section n20 requires courts to consider these four factors in determining the amount of statutory liability in individual action. It also permits the courts to consider other relevant factors. Three of the required factors were borrowed from the class action provisions of the TILA n21 and the punitive damages provisions of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act ("ECOA"). n22 The "nature of such noncompliance" n23 is a factor unique to the FDCPA.

[i] Enhancing Statutory Damages

The courts award higher amounts when they view the violation as aggravated or egregious n24 and lower amounts when the violation is considered less serious. n25

Factors which courts have mentioned or which appear to play a role in increasing statutory awards are:

- The collector's intent to do the act which violated the FDCPA or to evade the FDCPA's protections;
- The collector's intent that its illegal action injure the consumer;
- The collector's sophistication, giving it reason to know the FDCPA's requirements;
- The clarity of the requirements the collector violated;
- The collector's persistent denial of its violative act;
- A failure to bring its action within compliance despite ample time to do so;
- Prior violations and liability of the collector for the same illegal act;
- Multiple violations;
- Multiple consumers affected by the same type of violations;
- Multiple debts whose collection involved the same violation;
- Repetition of the illegal act;
- The importance attached to deterrence by the court;
- Publicity or potential publicity connected with the violation;
- The consumer's injury;

- Egregiousness of the violation; and
- The existence of collector's liability insurance.

Minimum statutory damages often may be awarded where the only violation is the failure to provide statutorily required notices and no consumer injury is alleged.

[ii] Factors Reducing Statutory Damage

Additional factors mentioned by the courts as reducing the amount of statutory awards include:

- A single violation;
- The technical nature of the violation;
- Cessation of the violation when first brought to the collector's attention;
- A collector's seeking to comply by obtaining legal advice;
- Lack of persistent, frequent violations;
- The lack of consumer injury;
- The absence of intent to deceive or harass the consumer;
- The recent passage of the statutory requirement; and
- Seeking less than maximum statutory damages.

[d] An Award of Statutory Damages Is Not Necessarily Related to an Award of Actual Damages

An award of actual damages is not a prerequisite to the recovery of FDCPA statutory damages. n26

[e] Multiple Statutory Damages

[i] Each Person Affected by Violation of the FDCPA May Be Entitled to Recover a Separate Statutory Award for Each Violation

Generally, awards of damages under FDCPA are limited to $1,000 per action, not $1,000 per communication or per violation. n27

[ii] Multiple Statutory Damages for Multiple Violations

Years after the passage of the Act, there is still no definitive law, except in the Sixth and Eleventh Circuits, on whether the FDCPA maximum statutory damages of $1,000 applies to each violation, contact, injured person, debt, or suit. The major reasons are that multiple maximum FDCPA statutory damages are seldom sought and that some courts award less than the maximum for multiple, less egregious violations. Other courts allow multiple, maximum statutory damages on the basis of multiple injured persons. However, many courts in dictum indicate that the maximum statutory damages apply to each suit. n28

[iii] Multiple Statutory Damages for Multiple Victims

Judicial limitation of the $1,000 maximum statutory damages to each consumer in each FDCPA suit produces anomalous results. Some courts have limited the recovery of statutory damages to a maximum of $1,000 regardless of the circumstances, while others have avoided deciding this issue.

The limitation to only $1,000 statutory damages to each plaintiff in each suit regardless of the number of violations and violators also contravenes the express congressional purpose of improving consumer redress and eliminating abusive collection practices. n29 The legislative history of 15 U.S.C. section 1692k(a) is entirely consistent with allowing each consumer to recover up to $1,000 in statutory damages against each debt collector for each violation of the FDCPA.

It only makes sense, given this legislative history and purpose, that a debt collector who engages in a series of serious FDCPA violations be subject to greater potential sanctions than one who commits fewer, less serious violations. This can best be accomplished by tying the $1,000 maximum to each violation and violator rather than to each consumer, suit or debt. Since the FDCPA gives the courts discretion in setting the amount of statutory damages, the danger of awards disproportionate to the degree of collector culpability is minimized.

Courts should respond to congressional intent and the explicit purposes of the FDCPA by granting each consumer a separate statutory damage award for each violation of the Act.

[5] Punitive Damages

[a] Punitive Damages May Be Recovered in Addition to Actual or Statutory Damages in a Supplemental State Claim

The FDCPA does not specifically mention the availability of punitive damages in appropriate cases for FDCPA violations. In many states, the easier approach is simply to seek punitive damages in a tort or state statutory claim n30 as a supplemental claim or separate claim from the FDCPA claim.

[b] Punitive Damages in Supplemental State Claim

Punitive damages have been awarded by courts for violation of a state's debt collection laws or of a state's consumer protection statute. n31 A consumer may also recover both three times actual damages on a UDAP claim and statutory damages under the FDCPA. n32

[c] Punitive Damages Under the FDCPA

While a good argument may be made for awarding punitive damages under the FDCPA, the first court to address the issue in detail rejected the availability of FDCPA punitive damages. n33 In the absence of specific federal statutory guidance, federal courts may determine that it is within their authority to award punitive damages in appropriate cases. There is no evidence of congressional intent to prohibit punitive damages and permitting punitive damages furthers the purposes of the FDCPA.

Congress intended the FDCPA to eliminate abusive collection practices. n34 Awards of punitive damages in egregious cases further this purpose by making an example of violators, thus deterring emulation of their practices by other collectors.

However, punitive damages, in addition to a statutory award, may be inappropriate in a class action under the Act as a form of double recovery.

[6] FDCPA Provides Statutory Damages in Class Actions

[a] Rule 23 and FDCPA Requirements for FDCPA Class Statutory Damages

Particularly where the FDCPA action arises from the collector's standardized forms or practices, n35 class action treatment is appropriate. n36 These provisions, along with Rule 23 of the FRCP, provide for class actions seeking statutory damages. Under the FDCPA, each named plaintiff in a class action is entitled to the same statutory award as in an individual action; the maximum recovery for class is the lesser of $500,000 or one percent of the net worth of the debt collector.

Rule 23 of the FRCP must be met for a case to proceed as a class action. Failure to meet any of the four requirements of Rule 23(a), i.e., numerosity, commonality, typicality, or representativeness, will result in denial of certification. n37 At the urging of defendants courts have recently exercised their discretion to bifurcate class certification from the merits and ordered the class certification stayed until resolution of liability, which plaintiffs asserted would require them to develop expensive expert testimony earlier than planned. n38

[b] Increasing Class Recovery of Statutory Damages

One method of increasing a class' recovery in a manner consistent with the FDCPA's net worth limitation is to increase the number of defendants to include an owner-operator or parent corporation.

Another problem in recovering one percent of the debt collector's net worth is accurately determining the collector's net worth. If the debt collector's shares of stock are traded publicly, some indication of the collector's net worth may be determined from financial reports prepared for investors. In some states, financial information on a particular debt collector may be available from a state regulator or licensor. The courts have been reluctant to consider a collector's fair market value, preferring book value, to determine net worth. n39 Discovery of "net worth" of debt collector is appropriate in FDCPA class action. n40

[c] Factors Determining Amount of Class Statutory Damages

Once a court determines the maximum amount of class statutory damages, it must consider the six factors listed in the FDCPA to determine whether the maximum recovery or some lesser amount is appropriate. These factors are:

- The frequency of the debt collector's noncompliance;
- The persistence of its noncompliance;
- The nature of its noncompliance;
- The debt collector's resources;
- The number of persons adversely affected; and
- The extent to which the debt collector's noncompliance was intentional. n41

The trier of fact determining these issues may be either a judge or a jury. It may also consider other factors in arriving at a suitable award, but is not required to do so. Courts may consider such factors as the amount recovered by each class member and the defendant's failure to comply with the Act despite prior suits.

The six required factors are similar to those used in determining punitive damages (malice or intent, outrageousness of the conduct, and resources of the defendant). Courts will probably not award punitive damages to a class on top of statutory damages.

FDCPA class actions seeking statutory awards must also conform to the requirements of Rule 23(a) and (b)(3) of the FRCP.

[7] Proof of Debt Collector's Intent Is Not Required

The FDCPA, like the TILA, is a strict liability statute (that is, a statute that imposes liability for any failure to comply, without regard to the violator's intent). n42 However, "the extent to which the debt collector's noncompliance was intentional" is one factor to be considered in setting the amount of statutory (but not actual) damages in both class and individual actions. n43 The debt collector can defend itself from liability for violations only by showing that they were unintentional, that they resulted from good faith error, and that the debt collector maintained procedures reasonably adapted to avoid such errors. n44

[8] Successful Plaintiffs Are Entitled to Awards of Costs and Reasonable Attorney Fees

This provision n45 establishes an entitlement to awards of costs and reasonable attorney fees to prevailing plaintiffs. The Seventh Circuit explained: "The reason for mandatory fees is that Congress chose a 'private attorney general' approach to assume enforcement of the FDCPA." n46 However, the Fourth and Fifth Circuits have indicated that the consumer's attorney fee may be greatly reduced where there is little success n47 or no award of FDCPA damages. n48

[a] Attorney Fee Awards

[i] Truth in Lending Act and Civil Rights Precedents

The FDCPA attorney fee provision is identical to that found in the TILA, n49 so the numerous Truth in Lending ("TIL") cases should be important in interpreting attorney fees under the FDCPA. In addition, federal court decisions interpreting the Civil Rights Attorney's Fees Award Act n50 and other federal laws providing attorney fees for prevailing plaintiffs are frequently relevant. n51

[ii] Who Is Entitled to the Fee Award: The Attorney or the Client?

The FDCPA, like the TILA, states that the creditor "is liable to such person [i.e., the consumer] in an amount equal to the sum of ... [the damage award and the] attorney's fee." n52 Thus fees are usually paid directly to the consumer and not the consumer's attorney, allowing the consumer and his or her attorney to determine the attorney's compensation. n53

[iii] Individuals Appearing Pro Se

Courts award no fees for work done by pro se litigants, irrespective of whether that litigant is an attorney. n54

[iv] Calculating the Attorney Fee Award

[A] Determining Entitlement to an Award and the Lodestar

While the award of attorney's fees to a successful FDCPA litigant is mandatory, the amount of court-awarded attorney fees is in the trial court's discretion, and an appellate court will only review the amount for an abuse of discretion or a misapplication of the law. n55 The U.S. Supreme Court and the circuit courts have developed standards for calculating these awards, and failure to follow these standards or even failure to show clearly that these standards were followed may be an abuse of discretion.

In calculating fees, courts begin with a "lodestar." The lodestar is the number of allowable hours times an hourly rate.

There is a strong presumption that the lodestar amount represents an adequate and appropriate fee award. n56

With the exception of delay in receiving award proceeds, upward adjustments to the lodestar are largely unavailable. n57 The lodestar may still be adjusted downward in cases of meager success on significant fee-shifting issues, discrepancies in billing documentation, overreaching on hours or rates claimed, or similar doubts regarding attorney credibility and billing judgment. n58 While most of this publication's discussion of attorney fees focuses on the lodestar method of awarding attorney fees, it is important to note that many courts use a common fund approach to awarding attorney fees in class actions. Stressing the freedom of clients to contract with the attorneys, the Supreme Court held that a $406,000 contingent fee (40% of the total recovery) that exceeded the $117,000 lodestar fee determined by the court was permissible and not inconsistent with the federal civil rights statute's fee shifting policies. n59 While the Supreme Court did not rule on ethical issues, other courts have allowed a contingent fee in a claim involving a fee shifting statute. n60 Some courts have approved of the fee agreement providing the greater of the loadstar award or a percentage contingent fee but have disallowed fee agreements for both a contingency and the loadstar award. n61

Where the consumer action involves a class action with recovery of attorney fees from a common fund, the normal percentage used is twenty to thirty percent, n62 with forty to fifty percent being the upper limit. n63 Smaller percentages are on occasion used in cases involving large funds. n64

[B] Determining the Allowable Hours

The allowable hours are those hours claimed and documented by the attorney that were reasonably expended. Excessive, non-productive or duplicative time will not be allowed, just as an attorney in private practice should not bill such time to his or her client. n65 An expert's affidavit on the reasonableness of the hours may be useful to the court determination of the reasonableness of the hours expended. n66

The total number of hours spent on the case will also be reduced where the consumer failed to prevail on non-FDCPA claims that were unrelated to the successful FDCPA claim where these claims are based on different facts and legal theories so that work on one claim does not help the attorney prepare for the other. n67 But where there is a common core of facts or where the legal theories are related, fees will be awarded.

[C] Establishing the Hourly Rate

Once the number of allowable hours are determined for each attorney and paralegal, an hourly rate must be determined for each advocate. That hourly rate is based on the prevailing rate in the community for that level of legal skill and experience. n68 Rates of $300 to 400 per hour were reasonable in 2002 for a lawyer with a great deal of experience handing FDCPA cases. n69

[v] Fee Applications

The FRCP require motions for attorney fees and expenses to be filed and served no later than 14 days after judgment. n70 However, all that is required in this time period is notice to the court and to the opponent that fees will be sought and a fair estimate of the total fees and expenses claimed. A detailed record of hours and rates, affidavits, time records, fee surveys, and other supporting evidence and briefs may be submitted following the motion for fees, "in due course."

[vi] Appealing Attorney Fee Awards

[A] Attorney May Pursue Appeal on Adequacy of Attorney Fee Award

If the action is successful, but the attorney fee award is inadequate, this issue alone may be appealed. n71 This is the case even if the consumer does not wish to pursue the award; the attorney has standing to pursue the appeal. An appeal of a low award needs to be carefully considered because the lower court's decision is reversed only for an abuse of discretion. n72 However, if the lower court failed to state the valid legal reasons for the reduction from the lodestar, the decision will be remanded for an explanation. n73 Time spent on such a successful appeal, and also spent before the trial court justifying fees, should also be included in the attorney fee award.

[B] Fourth and Seventh Circuit Courts of Appeal Differ on Approach to FDCPA Attorney Fee Awards

In two cases involving the appropriate measure and standard of review of consumer's FDCPA attorney fees where the collection attorney omitted the 15 U.S.C. section 1692e(11) debtor warning, the Fourth and Seventh Circuit went in different directions. The Seventh Circuit reversed the district court, which had reduced the lodestar to $10,132.50 by using an hourly rate of $150 instead of the requested rates of $275 and $225 for the consumer's two counsel. The Appellate Court remanded, requiring the requested rate be used to calculate the attorney fees. n74

The Fourth Circuit affirmed the district court's award of $500 in attorney fees n75 in a case which had previously been reviewed by the Fourth Circuit, and in which the U.S. Supreme Court had denied certiorari. n76 The consumer's attorney had sought an award of $9783.63 in fees. In contrast to the decision of the Seventh Circuit in Tolentino, the Fourth Circuit paid scant attention to the congressional intent to encourage private enforcement. Rather, it found that other factors should be given significant weight: deference to the discretion of the district court and the low level of success. n77

[b] Tactical and Ethical Factors in Negotiating Settlement Containing Attorney Fees

Obtaining a settlement which satisfactorily resolves both the merits and the attorney fee award requires close attention.

The safest route, if the collector's attorney is flexible, is to settle the substantive claims with an explicit provision that the issue of the consumer's attorney fees will be specifically reserved for the court or for subsequent negotiations between the parties. However, some adversaries may be unwilling to agree to such terms without significant concessions, as fees in FDCPA cases may constitute the greater part of the overall liability for the collector.

It is dangerous to leave the settlement agreement silent on the issue of attorney fees, and then to go into court post-settlement seeking attorney fees. Although the Third and Ninth Circuits find no waiver of attorney fees implicit in the settlement's silence on this topic, n78 other circuits take the opposite view. n79

Evans v. Jeff D. n80 thus suggests that, if there are special reasons to avoid simultaneous negotiation of the merits and fees, the plaintiff's attorney could seek the court's assistance before any settlement, not after.

[9] Declaratory or Injunctive Relief in Individual and Class Actions

Consumers have obtained class injunctive relief for FDCPA violations in the form of consent decrees, despite significant case law holding that no private injunctive relief is available under the FDCPA.

Declaratory relief is available under the FDCPA. n81 The basis for declaratory relief is found at 28 U.S.C. sections 2201 and 2202.

The FDCPA is silent on the availability of injunctive relief in private actions enforcing the Act. The FTC, the principal enforcement agency, is empowered to pursue violations by means of cease and desist orders and injunctions. n82

The prudent cause of action may be to seek declaratory relief under the FDCPA and to request injunctive relief pursuant to a pendent state statute. n83 The Third Circuit found private injunctions were not available under the FDCPA and went on to state that FDCPA declaratory relief was not available either. n84

The Ninth Circuit affirmed a judgment of contempt against a check collection agency in Irwin v. Mascott, n85 awarding $10,000 in sanctions and an additional amount of attorney fees for the consumers. The decision illustrates the advantage of a state supplemental claim for injunctive relief to assure a small debt collector's future compliance with the law where the small collector's illegal debt collection methods seemed entrenched and its resources were very limited. n86

The consumers had brought a class action against the check collector some years before. n87 The consumers had won partial summary judgment including prevailing on FDCPA claims and a supplemental state claim for restitution and injunctive relief. n88 Subsequently the parties agreed to settle the case, including injunctive relief, with substantial damages distributed to the class and substantial attorney fees to their counsel. The settlement was approved by the court. When it became apparent that the defendant was not complying with the injunction, the consumers sought civil contempt sanctions and additional attorney fees.

The core claim that was later the subject of the contempt proceeding involved the collection fees sought by the collector. The collector generally sought to recover dishonored checks. It routinely sought interest which was not permitted by state law. It sought postal expenses in excess of the actual postal expense permitted by state law. It sought treble the check amount without complying with the state requirements of first demanding the amount of the check in a certified letter. The court also found that labeling an amount significantly in excess of the face amount of the check as the "Assignment amount" or the "Claim amount" was deceptive violating the FDCPA. n89 These deceptive collection fee practices also violated California law, and the consumers obtained restitution of those fees under state law. n90 Declaratory and injunctive relief was granted for both the state and FDCPA violations. n91

Consent decrees have sometimes included prophylactic measures to prevent violations of the FDCPA. As such, these may apply more detailed requirements to the collector than the usual reading of the FDCPA.

Declaratory or injunctive remedies for class relief are desirable when the collector's violations are part of a pattern or practice affecting a large number of people. Class action requirements for declaratory or injunctive relief are considerably less than those for damages. The problems encountered in proving and distributing damages or identifying class members are not raised by class actions seeking declaratory or injunctive relief. n92

The named plaintiff must be subject to the same substantial, immediate threat of irreparable injury as the class seeking the injunction.

[10] FDCPA Provides a One-Year Statute of Limitations for Private Actions

For many victims of FDCPA violations, such as recipients of abusive phone calls, the one year period n93 for bringing suit is not a problem because they generally complain to a lawyer at the time of the abuse or not at all. n94 Victims of other violations may not initially be aware of the violations' existence. These include consumers falsely threatened with suit or with being reported to a credit reporting agency, and consumers not provided with a validation notice. n95 In such cases, the ordinary rule in fraud cases, that the limitation period should not commence until the consumer should have known of the violation, should arguably apply.

A time-barred claim may, nevertheless, be useful for establishing a pattern of abuse. n96 While some courts have held that the statute of limitations may be tolled, for instance, by the filing of a subsequently dismissed class action, by the plaintiff refraining from commencing suit at the defendant's inducement, or by the defendant fraudulently concealing the violation, n97 decisions that the FDCPA limitations period is jurisdictional lead them to reject equitable tolling rules. n98

The Eighth Circuit held that the FDCPA statute of limitations is jurisdictional and that the Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(a) counting rule should be disregarded for purpose of deciding whether to count the day of the violation for calculating the one-year limitation period. n99 Courts have held that the one-year limitation period in the FDCPA is not subject to waiver or tolling. n100

The Seventh Circuit rejects the notion that the FDCPA statute of limitations is jurisdictional and can be raised for the first time on appeal. n101 The Sixth Circuit recently held in an unreported decision that each monthly report by a debt buyer to a credit reporting agency is a separate act that could violate the FDCPA and start a new statute of limitations period. n102 The Sixth Circuit noted that section 1692g requires the debt buyer to cease collecting the debt until it verified the debt. Each subsequent communication before the debt was verified was a separate violation of the FDCPA for purposes of the statute of limitations. Each monthly report to the consumer reporting agency gave rise to separate violations of the FDCPA. The fact that some of the violations were time-barred did not mean the same type of violations arising from the more recent reports were time-barred. Each credit report was an opportunity for a new set of discrete violations.

[11] Jurisdiction Over Violations of the FDCPA

[a] State and Federal Courts Have Concurrent Jurisdiction Over Private Civil Actions Under the FDCPA

This provision n103 establishes concurrent jurisdiction in United States district courts and in competent state courts over FDCPA actions, regardless of the amount of money in controversy.

State courts that are competent to hear claims analogous to FDCPA claims, such as tort claims, cannot refuse to hear an FDCPA claim simply because it is based on a federal statute. A defendant may, however, remove an FDCPA suit from state court to federal court if the federal courts would have original jurisdiction over it. n104 Bankruptcy courts may have jurisdiction over an FDCPA claim listed as an asset of the estate.

[b] Personal Jurisdiction and Venue May Be Obtained Over Out-of-State Collectors

A state long-arm statute subjects nonresident individuals or corporations to the in personam jurisdiction of local courts on the basis of their having performed some act affecting the state. Federal procedure uses the long-arm statute of the forum state, n105 which may allow fairly extensive service on nonresidents. Long-arm statutes commonly allow jurisdiction over anyone who engages in "the transaction of any business within this State" or "the commission of a tortious act within this State" related to the cause of action. Collecting debts from state residents qualifies as transacting business within the state.

[i] U.S. District Court Venue

Proper venue over a suit by a consumer against a corporate defendant is likely to arise in conjunction with long-arm jurisdiction issues. Venue is generally proper where the consumer received a dunning message alleged to violate the FDCPA.

[c] State Law Claims Closely Related to an FDCPA Claim May Be Joined in Federal Suits

Supplemental jurisdiction, defined in United Mine Workers v. Gibb, n106 allows a federal court considering a federal claim to hear a closely related state claim that lacks an independent basis for federal jurisdiction. Thus, a federal court considering a substantial federal claim should exercise its power to assume supplemental jurisdiction over a closely related state claim requiring little or no additional commitment of court resources and raising no novel issues of state law or policy.

Courts will probably allow supplemental jurisdiction over claims arising from provisions of debt collection statutes that parallel those of the FDCPA and that are based on closely related FTC and state tort law. A supplemental state claim may provide greater relief to a consumer than the FDCPA claim.

The likelihood that a federal court will exercise its power to hear a supplemental state claim is ultimately a function of two variables: the extent to which evidence of the state claim intertwines with evidence of the federal claim and the quantity of judicial resources required to handle the supplemental state claim. When a district court has dismissed all federal claims within a complaint, and diversity jurisdiction did not exist over the remaining state statutory and/or common law claims, the court had discretion to retain, dismiss, or remand the remaining state law claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. section 1367. n107

[d] Federal Courts May Permit Joinder of Parties Subject to a State Law Claim Closely Related to an FDCPA Claim

Supplemental party jurisdiction might allow the consumer to join a creditor in a state claim closely related to an FDCPA claim, but the doctrine gives the same basis to decline to exercise it. n108

[12] Federal Agencies Responsible for Administrative Enforcement of the FDCPA

[a] Administrative Enforcement

The FTC is the primary administrative enforcer of the FDCPA because it oversees debt collection agencies, finance companies, retailers, certain mortgage companies, state-chartered savings banks, and state credit unions. A court may treat an FDCPA violation as a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. n109 This enables the FTC to issue an administrative cease and desist order or to obtain a consent decree for a violation of the FDCPA. A court may also treat an FDCPA violation as a violation of an FTC trade regulation rule, permitting the FTC to go to a federal district court to obtain restitution, damages, n110 or a civil penalty of up to $10,000 for each knowing violation. n111 Various federal financial agencies enforce the FDCPA among the financial institutions they regulate. n112

[b] FTC Informal Staff Letters and Formal Advisory Opinions

Since the FDCPA became law, the FTC Division of Credit Practices has written hundreds of public informal staff letters interpreting the Act's application to particular people and collection practices. The letters respond to questions from both industry and consumers, but are not binding.

[13] Relation of the FDCPA to State Laws

[a] FDCPA Preempts Inconsistent State Law Provisions

The FDCPA does not preempt state laws providing greater protection to consumers than it provides. n113 Thus, the FDCPA establishes federal minimum standards for debt collectors that state law may supplement or increase. n114 Tort actions for debt collection abuse are not preempted by the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. The only judge to have found that a state debt collection harassment tort claim was preempted by the FDCPA n115 later overruled himself n116 and found there was no preemption, after his earlier decision was criticized and not followed. n117 Tort actions for debt collection harassment are frequently pursued because they offer the consistent, more protective remedy of punitive damages in egregious cases. The FDCPA was intended "... to promote consistent State action to protect consumers against debt collection abuses." n118

[b] FTC Must Exempt States With Substantially Similar, Adequately Enforced Laws

To date, only the state of Maine has been granted n119 an FDCPA exemption. n120

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Banking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionCommunicationsBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionLiabilityBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionUnfair PracticesReal Property LawLandlord & TenantTenant's Remedies & RightsFair Debt Collection Practices Act

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Jacobson v. Healthcare Fin. Serv., Inc., 516 F.3d 85, 91, 96 (2d Cir. 2008) ("FDCPA permits and encourages parties who have suffered no loss to bring civil actions for statutory violations. Jacobson's subjective reaction to the letter, therefore, is neither here nor there."); Nelson v. Select Fin. Servs., Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42637 (E.D. Pa. June 9, 2006) ; Diamond v. Corcoran, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22793 (W.D. Mich. Aug. 3, 1992) ; Phillips v. Amana Collection Serv., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13558 (W.D.N.Y. Aug. 25, 1992) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Heard v. Bonneville Billing & Collections, 216 F.3d 1087 , reported in full at 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 14625 (10th Cir. 2000) (check collector violated the FDCPA and a UDAP statute by persisting to collect on bad checks against the check writer's mother after the collector was informed that she was not the signer nor any longer on the joint account; but the consumer's mother failed to show harm to herself and therefore lacked standing to assert the collector's receiving part of its attorney fee violated FDCPA or UDAP based on ethical rules prohibiting a lawyer from splitting a fee with a nonlawyer).

(n3)Footnote 3. Martinez v. Albuquerque Collection Servs., 867 F. Supp. 1495 (D.N.M. 1994) ; Littles v. Lieberman, 90 B.R. 700 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1988) (collection lawyer was jointly and severally liable with collection agency since his violation was separate; the release of the agency did not release the lawyer). See also Flamm v. Sarner & Assocs., P.C., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22255 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 6, 2002) (attorney debt collector who hired a process server, who was exempt from FDCPA coverage, may be liable for the abusive and harassing misconduct of that process server). See also Albanese v. Portnoff Law Assocs., Ltd., 301 F. Supp. 2d 389 (E.D. Pa. 2004) (law firm's president, with duties of supervision and overall responsibility, and the attorney who signed the letters could both be liable under the FDCPA); Cashman v. Ricigliano, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17027 (D. Conn. Aug. 25, 2004) (partnership may be sued under the FDCPA since it is responsible for the acts of its partners). But see Perovich v. Humphrey, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16949 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 23, 1997) (complaint suggested that all corporate executive officers were personally liable for all corporate actions, and that was simply not the law; consumers failed to allege any facts in their complaint indicating that the collector's officers personally violated the FDCPA, requiring dismissal of the claim against the officers); Friedman v. Anvan Corp., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15977 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 25, 1997) (complaint stated a claim against a corporate signer of a dunning letter even though that corporation was not further identified; individual signing for that corporation was only a representative, and the claim against him was dismissed for that reason). See Thinesen v. JBC Legal Group, P.C., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21637 (D. Minn. Sept. 26, 2005) (allegations that defendant collection agency employees were persons responsible for agency's illegal collection efforts stated claim for relief against those employees individually).

(n4)Footnote 4. Brujis v. Shaw, 876 F. Supp. 975 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (California corporate officers were subject to Illinois long-arm statute because they allegedly committed, in the name of collection agency, tortious acts against Illinois residents in violation of FDCPA). See Newman v. CheckRite Cal., Inc., 912 F. Supp. 1354 (E.D. Cal. 1995) (managing officer of the check collection agency was personally responsible for the FDCPA violations of his employees under California corporation law and as a debt collector indirectly collecting a debt under the FDCPA). See also Williams v. Collection Team, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24101 (S.D. Fla. Oct. 31, 1997) (motion to dismiss the case as to collection agency's officers denied, based on allegation that they were "at all material times, aware of, and/or had ultimate responsibility for, and/or created or approved the various letters, or the basic forms used for the various letters, sent by Collection Team"); Pikes v. Riddle, 38 F. Supp. 2d 639 (N.D. Ill. 1998) (corporate officer personally involved in the debt collection practices of his company was a "debt collector" within the FDCPA); Gottlieb v. Green Oil, Inc., 1998 WL 468849 (S.D. Fla. 1998) (magistrate judge recommended that complaint not be dismissed against president of Advanced Recovery Associates who signed letter; officers and employees of the debt collector may be jointly and severally liable with the agency); Slater v. Credit Sciences, Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8497 (N.D. Ill. May 28, 1998) (complaint which alleged the direct participation of the president of a corporate debt collector in the collection efforts stated a claim for relief against him).

(n5)Footnote 5. Miller v. McCalla, Raymer, Padrick, Cobb, Nichols, & Clark, L.L.C., 214 F.3d 872 (7th Cir. 2000) . See also Peter v. GC Servs. L.P., 310 F.3d 344 (5th Cir. 2002) (general partners were liable for all obligations of the partnership; thus, GC Financial and DLS Enterprises were liable for the FDCPA violations of GC Services).

(n6)Footnote 6. Avila v. Van Ru Credit Corp., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1502 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 6, 1995) , aff'd on other grounds sub nom. Avila v. Rubin, 84 F.3d 222 (7th Cir. 1996) . See also Pope v. Vogel, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2868 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 4, 1998) (person who was the sole stockholder of out-of-state collection business as well as its sole officer, one of two employees, and who directed the specific operations of the business that collected the debt in the forum state had sufficient contacts with forum state for the court to exercise personal jurisdiction, and was a "debt collector" by virtue of his indirect efforts to collect the debt); but cf. Stepney v. Outsourcing Solutions, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18264 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 4, 1997) (complaint against parent corporation was dismissed where it was devoid of allegations to support a finding that it so completely dominated the collector's practices as to constitute a single economic enterprise allowing the piercing of the corporate veil; the consumer alleged only the parent's financial interest in the subsidiary's collection activities and its approval of the practice of purchasing and attempting to collect old debts); Ernst v. Jesse L. Riddle, P.C., 964 F. Supp. 213 (M.D. La. 1997) (an officer of a corporate debt collector may only be held liable if sufficient facts are established to pierce the corporate veil); Byes v. Accelerated Cash Flow, Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7523 (E.D. La. May 23, 1996) (claims against owner and an executive in the collection agency were dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction where the consumer failed to allege that either had participated in the FDCPA violation, or that the corporation was an "alter ego" of the owner; there was no evidence that the corporation was undercapitalized or lacked assets to satisfy a possible judgment).

(n7)Footnote 7. Kobs v. Arrow Serv. Bureau, Inc., 134 F.3d 893 (7th Cir. 1998) .

(n8)Footnote 8. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(a)(1).

(n9)Footnote 9. Vidrine v. American Prof'l Credit, Inc., 477 S.E.2d 602 (Ga. Ct. App. 1996) . See Hart v. GMAC Mortgage Co. (In re Hart), 246 B.R. 709 (Bankr. D. Mass. Mar. 27, 2000) (consumer was entitled to $3000 damages for emotional distress caused by the FDCPA violation); Grassley v. Debt Collectors, Inc., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22782 (D. Or. Dec. 14, 1992) ; Florence v. National Sys., 1983 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20344 (N.D. Ga. Oct. 14, 1983) ; McHugh v. Check Investors, Inc., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9065 (W.D. Va. May 21, 2003) . See generally National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 6.3.2 (5th ed. 2004). Lee v. Javitch, Block & Rathbone, L.L.C., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34166 (S.D. Ohio Apr. 25, 2008) (upholding jury's award of emotional distress damages; emotional distress damages for FDCPA violation do not require proof of the elements of intentional infliction of emotional distress). Cf. Baruch v. Healthcare Receivable Mgmt., Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80429 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 30, 2007) (consumer's description of anxiety, sleeplessness, and depression was credible considering the duration and persistence of harassment; but claim that emotional distress caused or aggravated physical illness fails in absence of evidence of doctor visits or prescriptions, or expert testimony as to causation).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Bish v. Credit Control Sys. Inc., 1991 WL 165035 (W.D.N.Y. 1991) (default judgment) (request for $500 actual damages denied where no evidence whatsoever offered of actual damages); Smith v. Law Offices of Mitchell N. Kay, 124 B.R. 182 (Bankr. D. Del. 1991) (proof of elements of state tort law for intentional infliction of emotional distress, e.g., physical injury, severity, outrageous conduct, etc., was unnecessary to establish FDCPA actual damages for stress-related injury); see also Bartlett v. Heibl, 128 F.3d 497 (7th Cir. 1997) (consumer's admission that he did not read the collection letter violating 15 U.S.C. § 1692g did not affect his claim for statutory damages but would have defeated a claim for actual damages had they been sought), reh'g, en banc, denied, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 33970 (7th Cir. Wis. Dec. 1, 1997) ; O'Connor v. Check Rite, 973 F. Supp. 1010 (D. Colo. 1997) (because no damages arising from a 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(b) violation could be shown, judgment in the amount of $0.01 was entered against the defendant).

(n11)Footnote 11. See Johnson v. Equifax Risk Mgmt. Servs., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4245 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 17, 2004) (amount of statutory damages is best decided at trial and not on summary judgment).

(n12)Footnote 12. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3); Newberg & Conte, Newberg on Class Actions §§ 21.11-21.13 (3d ed. 1992); 5 Moore's Federal Practice--Civil § 23.23 (3d ed.).

(n13)Footnote 13. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Class Actions: A Practical Litigation Guide § 9.2 (6th ed. 2006).

(n14)Footnote 14. See Newberg & Conte, Newberg on Class Actions § 21.15 (3d ed. 1992).

(n15)Footnote 15. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(a)(2)(A).

(n16)Footnote 16. Truth in Lending Act [hereinafter TILA] § 130(1), (2)(A), 15 U.S.C. § 1640(1), (2)(A).

(n17)Footnote 17. S. Rep. No. 95-382, at 5. See also Hartman v. Meridian Fin. Servs., Inc., 191 F. Supp. 2d 1031 (W.D. Wis. 2002) (FDCPA was a strict liability statute, and proof of one violation was sufficient to support summary judgment; however, the number of separate violations was a factor in determining statutory damages, thus requiring adjudication of remaining theories of liability). See King v. International Data Servs. (IDS), 100 Fed. Appx. 681 (9th Cir. 2004) (not for publication) (district court did not abuse its discretion in awarding maximum statutory damages). See also Mann v. Acclaim Fin. Servs., Inc., 348 F. Supp. 2d 923 (S.D. Ohio 2004) (court awarded the maximum statutory damages of $1000 pursuant to the FDCPA and $200 pursuant to the Ohio Consumer Sales Practices Act (OCSPA) for dun that overshadowed the notice of validation rights).

(n18)Footnote 18. See Hill v. Priority Fin. Servs., Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16900 (S.D. Ind. Sept. 28, 2001) (consumers may be entitled to statutory damages under the FDCPA regardless of actual harm), related proceeding, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7812 (S.D. Ind. Mar. 26, 2003) .

(n19)Footnote 19. Emanuel v. American Credit Exch., 870 F.2d 805 (2d Cir. 1989) ; Pipiles v. Credit Bureau of Lockport, Inc., 886 F.2d 22 (2d Cir. 1989) . But see Johnson v. Eaton, 80 F.3d 148 (5th Cir. 1996) .

(n20)Footnote 20. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(b)(1).

(n21)Footnote 21. TILA § 130(a)(3), 15 U.S.C. § 1640(a)(3). See § 1.10[4] supra.

(n22)Footnote 22. Equal Credit Opportunity Act [hereinafter ECOA] § 706(b), 15 U.S.C. § 1691e(b). See Ch. 5, "Credit Discrimination," § 5.11[3] supra .

(n23)Footnote 23. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(b)(1).

(n24)Footnote 24. E.g., Watkins v. Peterson Enters., 57 F. Supp. 2d 1102 (E.D. Wash. 1999) (consumers were entitled to full statutory damages where collection agency improperly included costs of unsuccessful writs of garnishment in debt demanded); Miele v. Sid Bailey, Inc., 192 B.R. 611 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (maximum award of $1,000 statutory damages was warranted because of the collection agency's numerous communications with the consumer after being advised by the consumer and his counsel that the debt had been discharged in bankruptcy; $1,153.43 actual and $60,000 punitive (for a state law claim) damages also awarded); Masuda v. Thomas Richards & Co., 759 F. Supp. 1456 (C.D. Cal. 1991) ($1,000 awarded for misrepresenting lawyer's involvement and an ineffective debt validation notice). See Jones v. Vest, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19026 (E.D. Va. Dec. 27, 2000) (three prior FDCPA claims against the collector in only four years indicated that its noncompliance was frequent and persistent requiring $1,000 statutory damages); Chapman v. ACB Bus. Servs., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23743 (S.D. W. Va. Feb. 13, 1997) (letter purporting to demand full payment within 72 hours and which contradicted and overshadowed validation notice in small print on the reverse side warranted statutory damages of $1,000 as well as statutory damages under a state consumer statute). See Berndt v. Fairfield Resorts, Inc. 337 F. Supp. 2d 1120 (W.D. Wis. 2004) (proof of one violation is sufficient to show liability, but the court may consider the number of violations in assessing statutory damages); Becker v. Montgomery, Lynch, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24992 (N.D. Ohio Feb. 26, 2003) (court awarded full statutory damages for embarrassing language).

(n25)Footnote 25. E.g., Baker v. G.C. Servs. Corp., 677 F.2d 775 (9th Cir. 1982) ($100.00 awarded). See Laster v. Cole, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3771 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 20, 2000) ($100 awarded to each of two plaintiffs, absent evidence that the violation was intentional, frequent, persistent, or abusive). See also Berndt v. Fairfield Resorts, Inc. 337 F. Supp. 2d 1120 (W.D. Wis. 2004) (after the collector is determined to be liable, its unintentional errors may be relevant to reducing the amount of statutory damages).

(n26)Footnote 26. See Harper v. Better Bus. Servs., Inc., 961 F.2d 1561 (11th Cir. 1992) ; Baker v. G.C. Servs. Corp., 677 F.2d 775 (9th Cir. 1982) ; Sibersky v. Borah, Goldstein, Altschuler & Schwartz, P.C., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14043 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 22, 2000) (an FDCPA complaint need not allege actual damages).

(n27)Footnote 27. Harper v. Better Bus. Servs., Inc., 961 F.2d 1561 (11th Cir. 1992) ; Wright v. Financial Serv. of Norwalk, Inc., 22 F.3d 647 (6th Cir. 1994) .

(n28)Footnote 28. See also Barber v. National Revenue Corp., 932 F. Supp. 1153 (W.D. Wis. 1996) (statutory damages under 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(a)(2)(A) were limited to $1,000 per proceeding rather than for each statutory violation); Dewey v. Associated Collectors, Inc., 927 F. Supp. 1172 (W.D. Wis. 1996) (court found that, under 15 U.S.C. § 1692k, plaintiffs were limited to the statutory damages per proceeding instead of per violation); White v. Bruck, 927 F. Supp. 1168 (W.D. Wis. 1996) (statutory damages under 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(a)(2)(A) were limited to $1,000 per proceeding, rather than $1,000 per statutory violation). See Dowling v. Kucker Kraus & Bruh, L.L.P., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11000 (S.D.N.Y. June 6, 2005) (maximum statutory damages is limited to $1000 per plaintiff per proceeding; that maximum did not increase with multiple defendants; court awarded $1100, $550 per plaintiff). Cf. Ganske v. Checkrite, Ltd., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4345 (W.D. Wis. Jan. 6, 1997) (each defendant who independently violated FDCPA is liable for separate award of maximum $1000 statutory damages even if they are sued by consumer in same case).

(n29)Footnote 29. 15 U.S.C. § 1692(b) and (e).

(n30)Footnote 30. See, e.g., Boyce v. Attorney's Dispatch Serv., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12970 (S.D. Ohio Apr. 27, 1999) (court declined to award punitive damages under FCDPA, ruling that they were not expressly authorized under the Act and would be duplicative of statutory damages; court did award each plaintiff $5000 in punitive damages under Ohio law); Miele v. Sid Bailey, Inc., 192 B.R. 611 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (maximum award of $1,000 statutory damages was warranted because of the collection agency's numerous communications with consumer after being advised by consumer and his counsel that the debt had been discharged in bankruptcy; actual and punitive state law damages also awarded); Kuhn v. Account Control Tech., Inc., 865 F. Supp. 1443 (D. Nev. 1994) (punitive damages were available for collector's unreasonable intrusion upon consumer's seclusion).

(n31)Footnote 31. See Barker v. Tomlinson, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37050 (M.D. Fla. June 7, 2006) (awarded damages in amount of $22,000 under Florida Consumer Collection Practices Act (FCCPA) and FDCPA, including: statutory damages of $1000 under FCCPA, statutory damages of $1000 under FDCPA, actual damages of $10,000 under both FCCPA and FDCPA, and punitive damages of $10,000 under FCCPA); In re Lisenby, 2006 Bankr. LEXIS 428 (Bankr. M.D. Ala. Mar. 22, 2006) (where violation of both bankruptcy automatic stay and FDCPA for continuing to withdraw funds from consumer's bank account after they were notified of the bankruptcy filing, consumer awarded actual damages of $287.50, $1000 punitive damages for violation of the automatic stay, $1000 additional FDCPA damages, plus fees and costs).

(n32)Footnote 32. Malone v. Hecker, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86910 (D. Mass. Nov. 27, 2007) .

(n33)Footnote 33. Thomas v. Pierce, Hamilton, & Stern, Inc., 967 F. Supp. 507 (N.D. Ga. 1997) .

(n34)Footnote 34. 15 U.S.C. § 1692(c).

(n35)Footnote 35. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(a)(2)(B).

(n36)Footnote 36. See Mace v. Van Ru Credit Corp., 109 F.3d 338 (7th Cir. 1997) ; Harrison v. Great Springwaters of Am., Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23267 (E.D.N.Y. June 18, 1997) ; Avila v. Van Ru Credit Corp., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1502 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 6, 1995) , sub nom. Avila v. Rubin, 84 F.3d 222 (7th Cir. 1996) .

(n37)Footnote 37. See Keele v. Wexler, 149 F.3d 589 (7th Cir. 1998) (because the injury under the FDCPA was the receipt of the letter threatening suit if an illegal $12.50 collection fee was not paid to the collection law firm, the consumer met the commonality and typicality requirements to represent the class of consumers receiving the letter and seeking actual damages in the amount of the fee, regardless of whether she had paid the fee which she alleged she paid involuntarily); Littledove v. JBC & Assocs., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 139 (E.D. Cal. Jan. 10, 2001) (Rule 23b(2) and (3) classes certified under the FDCPA and state consumer protection laws against check collector who sent form collection letters seeking excessive fees; individual questions of the consumer purpose of their check or the amount of excessive fees paid did not predominate); Sanders v. OSI Educ. Servs., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12578 (N.D. Ill. 2001) (evidence that at least 91 persons qualified as class members met numerosity requirement; defendant's standardized conduct met commonality and typicality requirements; defendant's claim to the contrary involved inquiry into plaintiff's method of proof, an inquiry that was not allowed at class certification stage); Connor v. Automated Accounts, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10458 (E.D. Wash. Aug. 10, 2001) (class action alleging that collector sent initial dun demanding payment in 15 days in violation of § 1692g certified as a (b)(3) but not as a (b)(2) class over collector's objections that named plaintiff incurred no actual damages and that class members could not be determined to have incurred consumer versus commercial debts); Fuller v. Becker & Poliakoff, P.A., 197 F.R.D. 697 (M.D. Fla. 2000) (showing allegedly deceptive dunning letters were sent to 200 families satisfied numerosity, commonality and typicality requirements). See, e.g., Byes v. Telecheck Recovery Servs., Inc., 173 F.R.D. 421 (E.D. La. 1997) ; Hall v. National Recovery Sys., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11992 (M.D. Fla. Aug. 9, 1996) (class certification denied for lack of typicality); Villareal v. Snow, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 660 (N.D. Ill. Jan 16, 1996) . See also Wilkerson v. Bowman, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4719 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 27, 2001) (whether form collection letter violated FDCPA was common question of law and fact. Where there is genuine question of whether debts are for business or consumer purposes, class members can be asked a single question to determine their eligibility for class membership.); In re Risk Mgmt. Alternatives, Inc., 208 F.R.D. 493 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (court certified a class action defined as "All persons to whom Defendant and its agents sent initial communications in the form of the April 9, 2001 letter mailed to plaintiff Gerda Schaake, or otherwise containing the identical subject language, in an attempt to collect a consumer debt, as reflected by Defendant's records, on or after May 23, 2000." "Suits brought under the FDCPA such as this case regularly satisfy the superiority requirement of Rule 23.").

(n38)Footnote 38. Stavroff v. Midland Credit Mgmt., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11640 (N.D. Ind. June 8, 2005) ; Sheets v. Nat'l Action Fin. Servs., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8439 (N.D. Ind. May 9, 2005) .

(n39)Footnote 39. See Sanders v. Jackson, 209 F.3d 998 (7th Cir. 2000) (to calculate FDCPA class statutory damages, the debt collector's net worth should be determined by book value, not the fair market value; goodwill was not part of net worth; conclusion was based on the ordinary meaning of the term net worth, generally accepted accounting principles, the protection of debt collectors from insolvency, construction of analogous statutes, and the deterrence provided by FDCPA fee shifting and actual damages).

(n40)Footnote 40. Scott v. Universal Fid. Corp., 42 F. Supp. 2d 837 (N.D. Ill. 1999) (court overruled defendants' objections to plaintiff's motion to compel defendants to answer discovery requests related to the net worth of defendants); see also Mailloux v. Arrow Fin. Servs., LLC, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3314 (E.D.N.Y. Feb. 21, 2002)

(plaintiff in class action was entitled to discover defendant's tax returns and other financial information relevant to statutory damage determination of the defendant's net worth, notwithstanding defendant's offer to provide an affidavit of net worth, since the plaintiff was entitled to examine the underlying data to test the defendant's calculations. Motion to compel granted.).

(n41)Footnote 41. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(b)(2).

(n42)Footnote 42. See Baker v. G.C. Servs. Corp., 677 F.2d 775 (9th Cir. 1982) .

(n43)Footnote 43. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(b).

(n44)Footnote 44. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(c).

(n45)Footnote 45. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(a)(3).

(n46)Footnote 46. Tolentino v. Friedman, 46 F.3d 645, 651 (7th Cir. 1995) . See also Riter v. Moss & Bloomberg, Ltd., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14470 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 26, 2000) . See also Jacobson v. Healthcare Fin. Serv., Inc., 516 F.3d 85 (2d Cir. 2008) (attorney fees to the prevailing consumer is mandatory: "In this way, the FDCPA enlists the efforts of sophisticated consumers like Jacobson as 'private attorneys general' to aid their less sophisticated counterparts, who are unlikely themselves to bring suit under the Act, but who are assumed by the Act to benefit from the deterrent effect of civil actions brought by others").

(n47)Footnote 47. Carroll v. Wolpoff & Abramson, 53 F.3d 626 (4th Cir. 1995) .

(n48)Footnote 48. Johnson v. Eaton, 80 F.3d 148 (5th Cir. 1996) .

(n49)Footnote 49. Compare 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(a)(3), with 15 U.S.C. § 1640(a)(3).

(n50)Footnote 50. 42 U.S.C. § 1988.

(n51)Footnote 51. See, e.g., Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 103 S. Ct. 1933, 76 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1983) ; DeJesus v. Banco Popular, 918 F.2d 232 (1st Cir. 1990) (successful plaintiff entitled under TILA to award of attorney fees, and only amount of award is left to trial court's determination).

(n52)Footnote 52. Compare 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(a)(3), with 15 U.S.C. § 1640(a)(3).

(n53)Footnote 53. See generally National Consumer Law Center, Materials for Fourth Annual National Consumer Rights Litigation Conference (1995) (retainer agreements in consumer cases).

(n54)Footnote 54. See Kay v. Ehrler, 499 U.S. 432, 111 S. Ct. 1435, 113 L. Ed. 2d 486 (1991) (civil rights claim); In re Vasquez, 221 B.R. 222 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1998) (successful pro se attorney plaintiff not entitled to award of attorney fees).

(n55)Footnote 55. Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 103 S. Ct. 1933, 76 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1983) .

(n56)Footnote 56. Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 103 S. Ct. 1933, 76 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1983) ; see also Tenuto v. Transworld Sys., Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1764 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 31, 2002) (attorney fee of $140,950 or 35% of total settlement fund minus administrative costs was reasonable where lodestar was between $131,000 and $146,518).

(n57)Footnote 57. See Pennsylvania v. Delaware Valley Citizen's Council for Clean Air, 483 U.S. 711, 727-28, 107 S. Ct. 3078, 97 L. Ed. 2d 585 (1987) (Delaware II); Vandzura v. C & S Adjusters, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1254 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 6, 1997) .

(n58)Footnote 58. See Laster v. Cole, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8672 (E.D.N.Y. June 23, 2000) (where counsel admitted that he overstated his hours for preparing for summary judgment by three hours, his fee would be reduced by that amount, any multiplier for success was denied, and he was ordered to show why the court should not sanction him in that amount for falsely certifying his hours; fee was also reduced by amount paid by client); Gary Smith, Federal Statutory Attorney Fees: Common Issues and Recent Cases, 28 Clearinghouse Rev. 744, 756 (Nov. 1994) (recent cases indicate an increasing judicial impatience with excessive, outrageous, or inadequately supported fee claims). See also Dechert ex rel. Estate of Oyler v. The Cadle Co., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25837 (S.D. Ind. Nov. 10, 2004) (plaintiff was awarded fees at the market rate in the local community. Despite substantial reduction, the court awarded some $54,000 in fees on a $1000 statutory recovery).

(n59)Footnote 59. Venegas v. Mitchell, 495 U.S. 82, 110 S. Ct. 1679, 109 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1990) .

(n60)Footnote 60. See, e.g., Cambridge Trust Co. v. Hanify & King, P.C., 721 N.E.2d 1 (Mass. 1999) (in a fee disagreement between a commercial client with a UDAP claim and its lawyer, the court upheld the lawyer's claim that it was ethically and contractually entitled to a fee of about 30% of the combined compensatory damages ($2,032,301) and the lodestar fee award ($409,200) less some expenses and credits. The client argued that was excessive). See also State ex rel. Oklahoma Bar Ass'n v. Weeks, 1998 OK 83, 83, 969 P.2d 347, 354 (Okla. Jul 14, 1998) (dual recovery of both a lodestar and proportional contingent fee unreasonable).

(n61)Footnote 61. See, e.g., Laster v. Cole, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8672 (E.D.N.Y. June 23, 2000) ($200 per hour was a reasonable rate and $5490 a reasonable fee for the case, but the retainer agreement that the client would pay 50% of the recovery to the attorney provided double payment and the attorney fee was reduced by the $100 the consumer was to pay out of the recovery). But see Gobert v. Williams, 323 F.3d 1099 (5th Cir. 2003) (permitted dual recovery where result of employment discrimination case was extraordinary).

(n62)Footnote 62. In Paul, Johnson, Alston & Hunt v. Graulty, 886 F.2d 268, 272 (9th Cir. 1989) , the Ninth Circuit held that a trial court could use the "percentage" method as well as the "lodestar," and that "[w]e note with approval that one court has concluded that the 'bench mark' percentage for the fee award should be 25 percent." In Bebchick v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Comm'n, 805 F.2d 396, 406-407 (D.C. Cir. 1986) , the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals held that "[w]here the fees, as here, will come out of a 'common fund,' 'a reasonable fee is based on a percentage of the fund bestowed on the class.' " [Citation omitted.] The court held that 25% was "a reasonable percentage for otherwise uncompensated attorneys."

(n63)Footnote 63. Both "lodestar" and "percentage" cases have awarded fees in the higher range. See, e.g., In re Ampicillin Antitrust Litigation, 526 F. Supp. 494 (D.D.C. 1981) (45%); Clark v. Cameron-Brown Co., 1981 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12824, [1981] Fed. Sec. L. Rptr. (CCH) P 98.014 (M.D.N.C. Apr. 6, 1981) (30% of $3 million settlement fund) (lodestar).

(n64)Footnote 64. In Brown v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 838 F.2d 451, 454, 456 (10th Cir. 1988) , cert. denied, 488 U.S. 822 (1988) , the Tenth Circuit approved a trial court's award of a flat 16.5% of a $75 million "common fund" class action recovery, giving weight to "the amount involved and the results obtained."

(n65)Footnote 65. See Davis v. City & County of San Francisco, 976 F.2d 1536, 1544 (9th Cir. 1992) ; Jones v. Vest, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19026 (E.D. Va. Dec. 27, 2000) (seventy-six attorney hours and eleven paralegal hours investigating, negotiating and obtaining summary judgment was reasonable in an FDCPA case; attorney fee award of $17,766.49 allowed); Riter v. Moss & Bloomberg, Ltd., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14470 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 26, 2000) (five hours was a reasonable time to spend to draft a five-page complaint that was similar to one filed before); Norton v. Wilshire Credit Corp., 36 F. Supp. 2d 216 (D.N.J. 1999) . See also Dechert ex rel. Estate of Oyler v. The Cadle Co., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25837 (S.D. Ind. Nov. 10, 2004) (fees were reduced for duplication, "given that this was a matter arising under a strict liability statute and given that there are an ample number of local practitioners well versed and experienced in the FDCPA ... ."); Gervais v. O'Connell, Harris & Assocs., Inc., 297 F. Supp. 2d 435 (D. Conn. 2003)

(twenty-seven hours was a reasonable amount of time to obtain a default judgment in a case involving punitive and actual damages; $5000 in attorney fees awarded for 27 hours at $200); Caputo v. Professional Recovery Servs., Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12478 (D. Kan. June 9, 2004) (court adjusted prevailing plaintiff's fee request in the exercise of discretion and awarded over $87,000 in fees to plaintiff on an offer of judgment of $15,000.); Shula v. Lawent, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17662 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 2, 2004) (consumer's attorneys were awarded reasonable fees for their work on their successful defense of the defendant's appeal. The award for the appellate work was $15,350 ($12,375 covering the 55 hours reasonably expended by one attorney, plus $2975 covering the 8.5 hours reasonably expended his co-counsel in a case considered rather simple by the court). $32,165 in fees were awarded before the appeal.).

(n66)Footnote 66. See Dunaway v. JBC & Assocs., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37885 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 19, 2005) .

(n67)Footnote 67. See Cooper v. Sunshine Recoveries, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8938 (S.D.N.Y. June 27, 2001) (elimination of the time spent on unsuccessful class claims was warranted); Cook v. VFS, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15621 (S.D. Ohio Sept. 27, 2000) (court declined to reduce fee application merely because plaintiff did not prevail on all claims; however, it applied a 50% reduction to the time distinctly spent on a losing issue); Jackson v. Bellsouth Telecomms., Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7674 (N.D. Ill. June 1, 2000) (fee application of $12,500 reduced more by than half, by reducing hourly rate, eliminating time spent on meritless venue dispute, and eliminating other hours); Vandzura v. C & S Adjusters, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1254 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 10, 1997) . Mann v. Acclaim Fin. Servs., Inc., 348 F. Supp. 2d 923 (S.D. Ohio 2004) (where the consumer achieved only partial success, the court reduced the award of attorney fees by one-third).

(n68)Footnote 68. Blum v. Stenson, 465 U.S. 886, 104 S. Ct. 1541, 79 L. Ed. 2d 891 (1984) ; Hollis v. Roberts, 984 F.2d 1159 (11th Cir. 1993) ; Purnell v. Kovitz, Shifrin & Waitzman, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13239 (N.D. Ill. 1996) (consumer was successful in settling his FDCPA claim and was entitled to attorneys fees of $19,867.50 based on the "lodestar" method; rates of $180 to $240 per hour were reasonable for the consumer's counsel, but some hours were trimmed by the court); Edwards v. National Bus. Factors, Inc., 897 F. Supp. 458 (D. Nev. 1995) ($175 per hour). See Norton v. Wilshire Credit Corp., 36 F. Supp. 2d 216 (D.N.J. 1999) (consumer's counsel sought fees and costs of $67,697.56 and was awarded $57,206.34 at his current rate of $215 per hour; counsel's rate was $200 at the beginning of the case but the entire award was based on the current rate to compensate for the delay in payment); Arevalo v. National Credit Sys., Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12098 (N.D. Ill. July 29, 1998) . See also Bass v. Stolper, Koritzinsky, Brewster & Neider, S.C., 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 41397 (7th Cir. June 6, 1997) ($275 per hour was a reasonable fee for an attorney specializing in consumer law with a national reputation and experience); Jones v. Vest, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19026 (E.D. Va. Dec. 27, 2000) (consumer attorney's 24 years' experience in public interest law justified the rate of $200 per hour).

(n69)Footnote 69. Gradisher v. Check Enforcement Unit, Inc., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 753 (W.D. Mich. Jan. 22, 2003) (although an hourly rate of $400 was approved by another court for one counsel, the court believed the $300 rate originally sought was more in line with local rates; fees in the amount of $69,872.00 (out of a $92,401 lodestar) and expenses in the amount of $7808.44 were awarded in case where consumers prevailed on summary judgment but decertified their class action when it became apparent that the debt collector's net worth for calculating class damages was negligible).

(n70)Footnote 70. Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d)(2)(B).

(n71)Footnote 71. Carroll v. Wolpoff & Abramson, 53 F.3d 626 (4th Cir. 1995) .

(n72)Footnote 72. See, e.g., Savino v. Computer Credit, Inc., 164 F.3d 81 (2d Cir. 1998) .

(n73)Footnote 73. Savino v. Computer Credit, Inc., 164 F.3d 81 (2d Cir. 1998) .

(n74)Footnote 74. Tolentino v. Friedman, 46 F.3d 645, 651 (7th Cir. 1995) . See also Norton v. Wilshire Credit Corp., 36 F. Supp. 2d 216 (D.N.J. 1999) . In an FDCPA jury trial, plaintiff won $5800 on a 15 U.S.C. § 1692g claim, and defendant won $1651.53 on its counterclaim for the debt. Plaintiff's counsel sought fees and costs of $67,697.56, and was awarded $57,206.34 at his current rate of $215 per hour. The court rejected the argument that there must be proportionality between the damages and the fee.

(n75)Footnote 75. Carroll v. Wolpoff & Abramson, 53 F.3d 626 (4th Cir. 1995) .

(n76)Footnote 76. Carroll v. Wolpoff & Abramson, 961 F.2d 459 (4th Cir. 1992) , cert. denied, 506 U.S. 905, 113 S. Ct. 298, 121 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1992) .

(n77)Footnote 77. Carroll v. Wolpoff & Abramson, 53 F.3d 626 (4th Cir. 1996) .

(n78)Footnote 78. Holland v. Roeser, 37 F.3d 501, 503 (9th Cir. 1994) ; Muckleshoot Tribe v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 875 F.2d 695 (9th Cir. 1989) ; Ashley v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 794 F.2d 128 (3d Cir. 1986) .

(n79)Footnote 79. Bell v. Schexnayder, 36 F.3d 447, 450 (5th Cir. 1994) ; Elmore v. Shuler, 787 F.2d 601, 252 U.S. App. D.C. 45 (1986) ; Young v. Powell, 729 F.2d 563 (8th Cir. 1984) ; Jennings v. Metropolitan Gov't of Nashville, 715 F.2d 1111 (6th Cir. 1983) .

(n80)Footnote 80. 475 U.S. 717, 106 S. Ct. 1531, 89 L. Ed. 2d 747 (1986) .

(n81)Footnote 81. Ballard v. Equifax Check Servs., 27 F. Supp. 2d 1201 (E.D. Cal. 1998) (the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a), permits the court to enter declaratory judgment notwithstanding the absence of corresponding injunctive relief); Young v. Meyer & Njus, P.A., 183 F.R.D. 231 (N.D. Ill. 1998) (motion by defendant to decertify class, who had previously stipulated to class certification, was denied because the requirements for Rule 23(b)(2) class certification had been met). But cf. Sibley v. Diversified Collection Servs., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9969 (N.D. Tex. June 30, 1998) (class certification pursuant to Rule 23(b)(2) of a proposed FDCPA national class was denied because declaratory relief did not predominate; the declaratory relief was for declaring defendant's act violative of the FDCPA, not for an injunctive-like purpose, and the lawsuit sought actual damages); Gammon v. GC Servs. Ltd. P'ship, 162 F.R.D. 313 (N.D. Ill. 1995) ; Sparkman v. Zwicker & Assocs., P.C., 374 F. Supp. 2d 293 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (neither injunctive nor declaratory relief is available to private litigants under FDCPA); Petrolito v. Arrow Fin. Servs., L.L.C., 221 F.R.D. 303 (D. Conn. 2004) .

(n82)Footnote 82. See 15 U.S.C. § 1692l(a) (incorporating FTC powers under FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-77 (1976)). See also United States v. Trans Cont'l Affiliates, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 388 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 8, 1997) .

(n83)Footnote 83. See, e.g., Asch v. Teller, Levit & Silvertrust, P.C., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24048 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 24, 2004) (in 2003, the court found that defendant's practice of not crediting payments when received falsely represented the amount of the debtors' payment obligations by reporting a balance that was inflated by interest overcharges. The collector used those false representations to collect additional amounts which the debtors should not have had to pay. Since defendant had not adequately corrected its practices, an injunction issued under state law in favor of the class.).

(n84)Footnote 84. Weiss v. Regal Collections, 385 F.3d 337 (3d Cir. Sept. 29, 2004) .

(n85)Footnote 85. 370 F.3d 924 (9th Cir. 2004) .

(n86)Footnote 86. See Irwin v. Mascott, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3285 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 27, 2001) (collector's insurance limited to $2 million).

(n87)Footnote 87. Irwin v. Mascott, 96 F. Supp. 2d 968 (N.D. Cal. 1999) (class certified).

(n88)Footnote 88. Irwin v. Mascott, 112 F. Supp. 2d 937 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 31, 2000) .

(n89)Footnote 89. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(2).

(n90)Footnote 90. 112 F. Supp. 2d 937, 955 /-/56.

(n91)Footnote 91. Id. at 956 /-/57.

(n92)Footnote 92. See Wilson v. Transworld Sys., Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10891 (M.D. Fla. Mar. 29, 2002) (because of "profound difficulties in defining and identifying the constituent members of the class, or possible subclasses, for purposes of an action for damages," and because allowing declaratory and injunctive relief was a superior remedy, the putative damages class was not certified but an injunctive class was certified). But see Rogers v. Wexler, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5457 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 28, 2002) (where the only remaining issue was whether the attorney's fee request was bona fide and reasonable, the consumer did not meet the predominance requirement of Rule 23(b)(3), and her motion for class certification was denied); but cf. Goldberg v. Winston & Morrone, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3521 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 25, 1997) (finding that the FDCPA suit primarily sought damages, not declaratory relief, the court denied certification of a Rule 23(b)(2) class).

(n93)Footnote 93. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(d).

(n94)Footnote 94. See Richmond v. Malad, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10505 (S.D. Ind. July 6, 2001) (consumer's claims based on defendants' filing of state court collection action more than one year before filing of FDCPA suit were time barred; claims based on defendants' failure to provide validation notice within five days of its initial collection communication, i.e., the filing of state court collection action, however, were not time barred where FDCPA suit was filed more than one year but less than one year and five days from filing of that state court collection action); Evanauskas v. Strumpf, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14326 (D. Conn. June 27, 2001) (consumer's claims founded on alleged violations arising from defendants' filing of state court collection action more than one year before filing of FDCPA suit were time barred.). But cf. Naas v. Stolman, 130 F.3d 892 (9th Cir. 1997) (FDCPA claim filed more than one year after the filing of a state collection suit was barred by the statute of limitations where the FDCPA claim arose from the filing of the state claim and the period was not extended by a state appeal); Chisolm v. Charlie Falk Auto Wholesalers Inc., 851 F. Supp. 739 (E.D. Va. 1994) (the court had no jurisdiction to hear the consumer's FDCPA action which was filed more than one year after the date the violation occurred); Maydwell v. Yoffe, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13442 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 28, 2001) (pro se plaintiff's complaint was time barred and dismissed); Heim v. California Fed. Bank FSB, 2001 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2355 (Conn. Super. Ct. Aug. 15, 2001) (pro se complaint dismissed as barred by the statute of limitations for failure to allege any activity that occurred less than one year prior to filing of suit).

(n95)Footnote 95. James v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 842 F. Supp. 1202 (D. Minn. 1994) (where repossession occurred on June 29, 1992, but FDCPA action was not filed until July 7, 1993, suit was not brought within the one year statute of limitations). See also Naas v. Stolman, 130 F.3d 892 (9th Cir. 1997) (complaint alleging FDCPA violation through collector's misconduct in initiating collection suit was barred by statute of limitations, which began to run on the date the collection suit was filed); Friedman v. Anvan Corp., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13579 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 27, 1998) (for the purpose of determining the beginning of the statute of limitations period, the FDCPA violation occurred when the debt collector mailed letter); Calka v. Kucker, Kraus & Bruh, LLP, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11868 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 3, 1998) (FDCPA action filed more than one year after the collection action alleged to violate FDCPA was barred by the one year statute of limitations even though an amended complaint and motion for summary judgment containing the same violation had been filed by the debt collector within the one year).

(n96)Footnote 96. See Pittman v. J.J. Mac Intyre Co, 969 F. Supp. 609 (D. Nev. 1997) . Consumer's cause of action under the FDCPA was based only on those three communications by the defendant which occurred within one year of filing her original complaint. While the statute of limitations rendered those specific communications between the defendant and the plaintiff prior to that date inactionable, evidence of the prior communications was relevant to establishing whether the calls occurring within the limitations period were part of an abusive or harassing pattern violating 15 U.S.C. § 1692d.

(n97)Footnote 97. American Pipe & Constr. Co. v. Utah, 414 U.S. 538, 558-59, 94 S. Ct. 756, 38 L. Ed. 2d 713, 1974-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74862 (1974) .

(n98)Footnote 98. See Mattson v. U.S. W. Communications, Inc., 967 F.2d 259, 262 (8th Cir. 1992) ; Zhang v. Haven-Scott Assocs., Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8738 (E.D. Pa. June 21, 1996) (FDCPA claim was barred by the statute of limitations, which was considered jurisdictional); Chisolm v. Charlie Falk Auto Wholesalers, Inc., 851 F. Supp. 739, 749 (E.D. Va. 1994) (tolling for fraudulent concealment not permitted), vacated, remanded sub nom. Chisolm v. TranSouth Fin. Corp., 95 F.3d 331 (4th Cir. 1996) ; Friedman v. HHL Fin. Serv., Inc., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10362 (N.D. Ill. July 29, 1993) .

(n99)Footnote 99. Mattson v. U.S. W. Communications, Inc., 967 F.2d 259, 262 (8th Cir. 1992) ,followed, Friedman v. HHL Fin. Serv., Inc., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10362 (N.D. Ill. July 29, 1993) . See also Johnson v. Riddle, 305 F.3d 1107 (10th Cir. 2002) (consumer's claim of FDCPA violation arising from a collector's lawsuit did not occur until she was served with the collection action; the day of the FDCPA violation was not counted in calculating the statute of limitations; the one-year statute of limitations began to run on the day following the event violating the FDCPA).

(n100)Footnote 100. See Sujing Zhang v. Haven-Scott Assocs., Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8738 (E.D. Pa. June 21, 1996) ; Chisolm v. Charlie Falk Auto Wholesalers, Inc, 851 F. Supp. 739, 749 (E.D. Va. 1994) , vacated, remanded sub nom. Chisolm v. TranSouth Fin. Corp., 95 F.3d 331 (4th Cir. 1996) . See also Andrews v. TRW, Inc., 534 U.S. 19, 122 S. Ct. 441, 151 L. Ed. 2d 339 (2001) (discovery rule rejected for FCRA claim). But see Garrett v. Empire Cooler Serv., Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11369 (N.D. Ill. June 21, 2004) (because the FDCPA's limitation period is not jurisdictional and the pro se plaintiff's mental and physical illnesses prevented him, despite all due diligence, from obtaining vital information bearing on the existence of his claim, the court permitted equitable tolling of the otherwise time-barred claim).

(n101)Footnote 101. Marshall-Mosby v. Corporate Receivables, Inc., 205 F.3d 323 (7th Cir. 2000) . See also Hooper v. Capital Credit & Collection Servs., Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19687 (D. Or. Jan. 16, 2004) (one-year statute of limitations is procedural, not jurisdictional, so suit filed on anniversary of date letter was sent was timely).

(n102)Footnote 102. Purnell v. Arrow Fin. Servs., L.L.C., 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 25488 (6th Cir. Dec. 16, 2008) (unpublished).

(n103)Footnote 103. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(d).

(n104)Footnote 104. 28 U.S.C. § 1441. See McGilvray v. Hallmark Fin. Group, Inc., 891 F. Supp. 265 (E.D. Va. 1995) (although FDCPA authorized filing FDCPA claims in state courts, collector's removal of the action to federal court was proper). See also Dale v. Johnson, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20277 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 12, 1997) (pro se) (court held, without an analysis of contrary authority, that a 15 U.S.C. § 1692i claim--that the court action to enforce an arbitration award should have been instituted in another county--should have been raised in the state court proceeding and not in federal court).

(n105)Footnote 105. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(7), (e). See also Purco Fleet Servs., Inc. v. Dept. of Fin., 90 P.3d 346 (Idaho 2004) (long-arm statute applied to out-of-state collector collecting claims in the state).

(n106)Footnote 106. 383 U.S. 715, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1966) (referred to this aspect of supplemental jurisdiction as pendent jurisdiction).

(n107)Footnote 107. Dawson v. DovenMuehle Mortgage, Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5688 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 28, 2002) .

(n108)Footnote 108. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c).

(n109)Footnote 109. See FTC v. Shaffner, 626 F.2d 32 (7th Cir. 1980) ("the Act ... authorized the FTC ... to use all of its functions and powers to enforce the Act").

(n110)Footnote 110. 15 U.S.C. § 57a(b).

(n111)Footnote 111. 15 U.S.C. § 45(m)(1)(A).

(n112)Footnote 112. 15 U.S.C. § 1692l(b). The following lists the financial institutions and the corresponding federal regulatory agencies: banks (Comptroller of the Currency, Federal Reserve Board, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and Office of Thrift Supervision); federally chartered credit unions (National Credit Union Administration); interstate shippers and movers and airline companies (Secretary of Transportation); certain agricultural creditors (U.S. Department of Agriculture).

(n113)Footnote 113. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692n, 1692(e).

(n114)Footnote 114. See Sibley v. Firstcollect, Inc., 913 F. Supp. 469 (M.D. La. 1995) (state collection license requirement offered consumers greater protection and was thus expressly not preempted by 15 U.S.C. § 1692n); Citibank (S.D.) N.A. v. Jones, 184 Misc. 2d 63, 706 N.Y.S.2d 301 (Dist. Ct. 2000) (FDCPA did not preempt the common law doctrine of account stated, which recognized an agreement between parties to prior transactions as to the account items and the balance due; § 1692g(c) did preclude a court finding that an account had been stated for failure of a consumer to dispute the validity of debt in response to a communication from a third party debt collector). See also Irwin v. Mascott, 94 F. Supp. 2d 1052 (N.D. Cal. 2000) (court must deny on preemption grounds debt collector's motion to add third-party malpractice claim against collector's legal counsel because the FDCPA preempts the state regulation of attorneys where the two conflict, and there was no express or implied right of contribution or indemnity under the FDCPA); Mezines, FTC Advisory Opinion (Mar. 31, 2000), available at http://www.ftc.gov/os/2000/04/fdcpaadvisoryopinion.htm (FDCPA does not preempt state laws that keep the FDCPA validation notice out of the summons because the FDCPA allows the validation notice to be separately sent). See also Gonzalez v. Codilis & Assocs., P.C., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5463 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 31, 2004) (because the state law voluntary-payment doctrine provided less protection to consumers than the FDCPA, it was preempted by § 1692n where the debt collector alleged it as a defense to an FDCPA overcharge claim).

(n115)Footnote 115. Thrasher v. Cardholder Servs., 74 F. Supp. 2d 691 (S.D. Miss. 1999) .

(n116)Footnote 116. Virgil v. Reorganized M.W. Co., 156 F. Supp. 2d 624 (S.D. Miss. 2001) .

(n117)Footnote 117. Binion v. Franklin Collection Servs., 147 F. Supp. 2d 519 (S.D. Miss. 2001) . See also Albright v. Allied Intern. Credit Corp., 2003 WL 22350928 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 25, 2003) (FDCPA does not preempt state tort law claims, and is not inconsistent with them.); Hage v. General Serv. Bureau, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14443 (D. Neb. Aug. 5, 2002) (consumer protection statute not preempted by FDCPA). See also Albanese v. Portnoff Law Assocs., Ltd., 301 F. Supp. 2d 389 (E.D. Pa. 2004) ; United States v. Sullivan, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6288 (N.D. Tex. Apr. 28, 1998) (FDCPA did not preempt state debt collection statute that was more protective of the rights of consumers); Sibley v. Firstcollect, Inc., 913 F. Supp. 469 (M.D. La. 1995) (state collection license requirement offered consumers greater protection and was thus expressly not preempted by 15 U.S.C. § 1692n). See also Irwin v. Mascott, 186 F.R.D. 567 (N.D. Cal. 1999) (FDCPA did not preempt state laws that provided consumers with greater protection in form of injunctive relief available for period of four years); Premier Capital, Inc. v. Grossman, 2000 Conn. Super. LEXIS 3137 (Conn. Super. Ct. Nov. 22, 2000) (notice required by state law making demand for payment was effective even if notice failed to inform the debtors of their rights under the FDCPA), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, remanded, 789 A.2d 565 (Conn. App. 2002) . But see Thrasher v. Cardholder Servs., 74 F. Supp. 2d 691 (S.D. Miss. 1999) (remand to state court denied; court held plaintiff's common law claims of intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress were preempted by FDCPA under doctrine of conflict preemption), overruled, Virgil v. Reorganized M.W. Co., 156 F. Supp. 2d 624 (S.D. Miss. 2001) .

(n118)Footnote 118. 15 U.S.C. § 1692(e).

(n119)Footnote 119. 15 U.S.C. § 1692 o. Each of the major bills leading to the FDCPA contained a similar provision.

(n120)Footnote 120. 60 Fed. Reg. 66,972 (Dec. 27, 1995) .

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 8 Fair Debt Collection

1-8 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 8.05

§ 8.05 Debt Collector's Defenses and Counterclaims Under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

[1] Only the Defenses Provided by the Act Are Available

Specific defenses available to FDCPA claims are provided by the Act. Nevertheless, defendants have frequently sought to invent new defenses to FDCPA claims, such as the "technicality" of their FDCPA noncompliance or the plaintiff's attorney's frequent representation of consumers with an FDCPA claim. The courts have refused to imply such defenses under this Act or under other titles of the Federal Consumer Protection Act. n1 However, it is clear that some courts are not favorably predisposed to FDCPA actions that appear on their face as claims not involving important federal policy or actual injury. The Seventh Circuit, for example, affirmed the dismissal of an FDCPA claim in part because the violation was not intentional. n2 Where the consumer's claim lacks merit, the consumer can expect a motion or a countersuit for sanctions or damages including the defendant's attorney fees. n3 Approval of the collector's forms or practices by a state official is not a defense to an FDCPA claim. n4 Actual damages are not required for standing under the FDCPA as the attempt to recover unlawful fees was made actionable by Congress without a requirement of actual damages to recover statutory damages. n5

[2] A Debt Collector May Recover Attorney Fees Upon Showing That an FDCPA Suit Was Brought to Harass the Collector

This language n6 provides for the discretionary awarding of attorney fees to a defendant in an FDCPA case if the court finds that the action was brought in bad faith and for the purpose of harassment. n7 This rule is more stringent than the federal common law rule that generally permits awarding attorney fees to the prevailing party when "the losing party has acted in bad faith, vexatiously, wantonly, or for oppressive reasons. ... " n8 The FDCPA standard is also much more stringent than the Equal Employment Opportunity Act standard, which provides fees to a "prevailing party."

A defendant who claims attorney fees under FDCPA has the heavy burden of proving the plaintiff's subjective bad faith or malice and the plaintiff's harassing purpose in instituting the FDCPA action. The defendant must first prevail against the consumer's FDCPA claim claiming attorney fees. n9 To prove malice, the defendant must show not only that the plaintiff had no basis for believing that the defendant violated the Act, but also that the plaintiff did not entertain a subjective belief that such acts occurred. The defendant must then show that the plaintiff brought suit to harass the collector. n10 Finally, the award of fees to the defendant in a particular case must be consistent with the policies of the FDCPA and its attorney fee provision. The Ninth n11 and Seventh Circuits n12 have awarded Rule 11 attorney fees to a collection lawyer without discussing the more stringent requirements of the FDCPA provision. A number of district courts have followed suit. n13

[3] Frivolous FDCPA Demand Letter Sparks Sanctions Award to Debt Collector

A consumer's demand letter asserting a violation of the FDCPA ended up costing the consumer's attorney $18,037 in sanctions for the debt collector's attorney fees. n14 The consumer attorney sent the debt collector an FDCPA demand letter claiming that its dunning language overshadowed the notice of the consumer's debt validation rights demanding $1000 damages and $2000 attorney fees.

The debt collector's attorney responded with a letter asserting that the FDCPA claim was frivolous because the debt collector's validation rights notice used the safe haven language established by Judge Posner in the Bartlett case, n15 demanding $500 for its attorney fees, and threatening to pursue its remedies. Some weeks later the debt collector filed suit against the consumer seeking a declaratory judgment that its debt validation notice fit within the Bartlett safe haven. The consumer opposed the debt collector's claim, filed a counterclaim against the debt collector for its false threat of a collection suit in its initial dunning letter, and a third-party claim against the debt collector's attorney for his letter seeking $500 attorney fees.

The debt collector obtained its declaratory judgment and then filed a motion for sanctions against the consumer's attorney under 28 U.S.C. § 1927, which makes lawyers liable for vexatious multiplying of proceedings. The debt collector was granted sanctions.

The Seventh Circuit affirmed, pointing out that the consumer's attorney could have avoided the sanctions by either notifying the debt collector that it was withdrawing the meritless FDCPA claim before suit or by not opposing the declaratory judgment. The Seventh Circuit rejected the consumer's claim that the debt collector could not seek sanctions because it had initiated the declaratory judgment action when the consumer would have abandoned her FDCPA claim. The Seventh Circuit also awarded sanctions to the debt collector's attorney, reversing the district court. Hopefully this case reflects unusual facts and will not spark a new defense strategy in FDCPA cases.

[4] Federal Courts Usually Refuse Supplemental Jurisdiction Over a Debt Collector's Counterclaim to Collect the Underlying Debt

In many states, debt collection agencies are prohibited from filing suit by unauthorized practice of law statutes. n16 In these states, the state statute precludes debt collector counterclaims for the debt in any FDCPA action if the defendant is a collection agency; the courts thus never encounter the question of whether such a counterclaim is within a federal court's supplemental jurisdiction.

In states that interpret their laws to permit suits by debt collectors, a debt collector may file a counterclaim for the underlying debt. Federal courts usually have not taken supplemental jurisdiction n17 over such a counterclaim. Formerly, this was because the counterclaim was not so related to the FDCPA claim to be within the court's pendent (now supplemental) jurisdiction and was required to be dismissed. n18 The courts generally found that the collection claims did not involve the same controversy, the same evidence, or federal law and policy. Furthermore, the counterclaim would impede the expeditious enforcement of the policies of the FDCPA and chill the raising of FDCPA claims. More recently, however, a court found that it could exercise supplemental jurisdiction over debt counterclaims against the consumer and the potential consumer class, but declined to use its discretion to exercise expanded jurisdiction because of the chilling effect this would have on the exercise of FDCPA claims and because of the impact it would have on administrative workflow of the federal court. n19

[5] A Debt Collector Is Not Liable for Unintentional Violations Resulting From Bona Fide Error if the Collector Maintained Procedures to Avoid Such Errors

This narrow provision n20 provides a complete defense to a debt collector's violation of the FDCPA. The language of this provision appears to have been borrowed from nearly identical language in the TIL Act, which also is narrowly construed. n21 To establish a defense under this provision, a debt collector must plead and prove by a preponderance of evidence n22 that:

- The error was unintentional;
- The error was made in good faith;
- The error resulted from a clerical mistake, not a mistaken interpretation of law; and
- The collector maintained procedures reasonably adapted to check for and avoid such errors. n23

Until recently, courts generally rejected bona fide error defenses. n24 In recent years, however, debt collectors have become more adept at presenting the defense and some courts have broadened the defense.

The Tenth Circuit in its second decision in the case of Johnson v. Riddle, n25 provided its analysis of the elements to establish the bona fide error defense. The defendant has the burden of proof that the violation was (1) unintentional, (2) a bona fide error, and (3) made despite the maintenance of procedures reasonably adapted to avoid the specific error. The first test is subjective; the second and third tests are objective. The debt collector must show that the violation was unintentional, not that the underlying act itself was unintentional, by showing lack of subjective intent to violate the FDCPA. The extent to which a defendant should have objectively realized that its actions were in violation of law may be inferentially probative of the subjective intentional nature of that violation. Whether the debt collector's mistake was bona fide will often turn on the debt collector's due diligence practices. The debt collector must actually maintain procedures, that is, employ or implement procedures to prevent errors, and the procedures employed or implemented must be specific procedures designed to avoid the error at issue. Where a mistake of law is involved, such procedures might include researching the relevant case law, bringing test cases, or seeking guidance from an objective third party. Where it is a close question as to whether the collector satisfies the bona fide error defense, the trier of fact makes the determination.

The Seventh Circuit has indicated in dicta that it would apply the bona fide error defense to errors of law. n26 The Seventh Circuit has also found that an attorney's procedures were not reasonable when the procedures included review of legal summaries prepared by the American Creditor Association and the Debt Bar Association, submission of form letters to the ACA, and regularly reading excerpts of the relevant Wisconsin statutes. The court concluded:

> "AFNI never consulted an attorney in Wisconsin on state law issues, nor did it ask a Wisconsin governmental agency whether it was entitled to charge a collection fee as the owner of the debt ... . In the end, AFNI is not arguing that it relied on an informed, but mistaken, legal opinion. It is saying that its ignorance of the law should be excused because it attempted to keep itself informed about the law through the various trade association communications. This is not enough, in our view, to support the bona fide error defense. n27

[6] Res Judicata or Estoppel May Bar an FDCPA Action That Should Have Been Raised as a Compulsory Counterclaim to an Already Adjudged Action on the Underlying Debt

Two rules of judicial economy may combine to bar certain FDCPA claims. The first is the doctrine of res judicata, which prevents a party from relitigating any matter of fact or law that was or should have been adjudicated in a prior proceeding. n28 This doctrine supports judicial economy by avoiding repetitious adjudications of identical matters in different suits. The second is the compulsory counterclaim rule, which is found in the FRCP n29 and in many state procedural codes.

Compulsory counterclaim rules require joinder of counterclaims bearing a close logical or evidentiary relationship to the main claim.

In the context of the FDCPA, the two rules determine whether an earlier judgment on the underlying debt bars an FDCPA claim that may have been a compulsory counterclaim to the prior action. n30

[7] Other Rules May Bar FDCPA Claims in Specific Situations

Another barrier to subsequent FDCPA suits, the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, was explained in an FDCPA decision: n31

> Under the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, lower federal courts do not have subject matter jurisdiction over claims seeking review of state court judgments. See Rooker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413, 415-16, 44 S. Ct. 149, 68 L. Ed. 362 (1923) ; District of Columbia Court of Appeals v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 482-86, 103 S. Ct. 1303, 75 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1983) . The doctrine applies not only to claims that were actually raised before the state court, but also to claims that are inextricably intertwined with state court determinations. See Feldman, 460 U.S. at 482 n.16 .

In 2005, a unanimous Supreme Court in Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Arabia, Inc. n32 provided fresh analysis of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine. The Exxon Mobil decision clarifies that Rooker-Feldman does not apply where a federal action is filed before a state judgment is entered. If a concurrent state court action results in a judgment while the federal action is pending, the federal court looks to the state's law on preclusion of claims to determine if any part of the federal action may proceed. All but one of the courts to look at the preclusion issue have held that an FDCPA claim was not a compulsory counterclaim to a state collection action, largely because completely different evidence is involved in the two claims. n33

Rooker-Feldman limits federal court jurisdiction over a suit attacking a state court judgment by a party to that action. The Court explained that the doctrine does not displace concurrent state and federal court jurisdiction where it exists, e.g., in the case of FDCPA claims. While a federal court might abstain or stay its proceeding on the basis of comity, Rooker-Feldman does not deny the federal court jurisdiction if the action is brought before the state court enters final judgment.

If there is state court judgment before the federal action is instituted, the federal court lacks jurisdiction if the federal action attacks the state judgment. The standard from Feldman was that there was no jurisdiction if the issues in the federal action were "inextricably intertwined" with the decision of the state court. n34 In Exxon Mobil the Court explained that the district court does not have jurisdiction "to overturn an injurious state-court judgment" n35 or over later federal action "complaining of an injury caused by a state court judgment and seeking review and rejection of that judgment." n36

The Court also noted that Rooker-Feldman is the product of statute, not a constitutional doctrine. "Congress, if so minded, may explicitly empower district courts to oversee certain state court judgments and has done so, most notably, in authorizing federal habeas review of state prisoners' petitions." n37 This exception to Rooker-Feldman also applies to the FDCPA because many of its provisions were written to apply to or exempt state court debt collection suits. The prohibition of debt collectors filing suit in distant forums, n38 exempting process servers, n39 contacting third parties, n40 the pleading exception to the debt collector notice, n41 or misleading the consumer about the need to take steps to avoid a default judgment n42 all contemplate the FDCPA applying to prior collection litigation or requiring an exemption for prior debt collection litigation. Further, the Court in Heintz v. Jenkins n43 clarifies that the FDCPA applies to misconduct in the course of litigation such as misrepresenting the amount owed.

The Tenth Circuit has held that when the state court decision at issue was a default judgment, Rooker-Feldman did not apply. n44 Similarly, claims regarding a post-judgment collection letter would not be barred by the Rooker-Feldman doctrine. n45 When a state court would allow a new proceeding to set aside or reverse the judgment, Rooker-Feldman may not bar that action in federal court. n46

The Seventh Circuit upheld a Rooker-Feldman defense in a post-Exxon case arising out of attorney fees awarded in connection with medical debt collections actions in small claims court. n47 The FDCPA plaintiffs claimed that the debt collector's attorneys had made deceptive representations and requests to the small claims court in seeking fees to which they were not entitled. The Seventh Circuit found that these claims were not independent of the state court judgment for the attorney fees. n48 The plaintiffs were "the types of plaintiffs that Exxon Mobil anticipates and guards against: state court losers, who, in effect, are challenging state court judgments." n49 The court also rejected the plaintiffs' argument that Rooker-Feldman did not apply because the plaintiffs did not have a reasonable opportunity to litigate their FDCPA claims in state small claims court. The result may have been different if the plaintiffs had merely sought statutory damages and not actual damages in the amount of the state court judgments.

In addition, claims arising from Bankruptcy proceedings may have to be raised in bankruptcy court. n50

[8] Good Faith Conformity With a Formal FTC Advisory Opinion Later Ruled Invalid Is a Defense to an FDCPA Suit

In order to assert successfully the defense permitted by this provision, a debt collector must show that its violation of the FDCPA was committed in good faith reliance on an FTC advisory opinion. n51 "Advisory opinion of the Commission" is a term of art in FTC practice and procedure; a debt collector must follow specific FTC procedures to obtain an advisory opinion. n52 The FTC has issued only one formal advisory opinion since the Act took effect. n53 Informal FTC staff letters are not "advisory opinions" and cannot serve as the basis for a defense under this provision. n54 The FTC staff has compiled a commentary to the FDCPA, but this also is not an "advisory opinion."

[9] Offers of Judgment

Encouraged by isolated victories in the lower courts, n55 debt collectors are regularly filing offers of judgments under Rule 68 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to named plaintiffs soon after the filing of FDCPA class actions and moving to dismiss the action as moot. Most decisions have rejected this tactic as inconsistent with the class action device. n56 Class counsel in FDCPA suits should anticipate this strategy by starting their discovery on class issues promptly, particularly numerosity, so that they are prepared to file their motion to certify the class immediately after the defendant files an offer of judgment. Only one of the recent FDCPA cases on this issue found that a motion to certify the class did not have to be filed during the ten-day period after the filing of the offer of judgment as long as the motion to certify was filed as soon as practicable after the filing of the class complaint. n57 The unfavorable decisions are also notable for failing to deal with Supreme Court precedent favoring the maintenance of the class action in this situation. n58

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionCommunicationsBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionLiabilityBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionUnfair PracticesReal Property LawLandlord & TenantTenant's Remedies & RightsFair Debt Collection Practices Act

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Nunez v. Etan Indus., Inc., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 245 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 6, 1999) ; Ditty v. Check Rite, Ltd., 182 F.R.D. 639 (D. Utah 1998) ; Crawford v. Equifax Payment Servs., Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15719 (N.D.

Ill. Sept. 30, 1998) ; Phillips v. Amana Collection Servs., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13558 (W.D.N.Y. Aug. 25, 1992) . See also Irwin v. Mascott, 94 F. Supp. 2d 1052 (N.D. Cal. 2000) (denial of debt collector's motion to serve third-party malpractice complaint against its legal counsel was appropriate because the FDCPA was a strict liability statute, a plaintiff was not required to establish intentional conduct on the part of the debt collector, there was no affirmative defense of reliance on counsel under the FDCPA, and there was no express or implied right of action for either contribution or indemnity under the FDCPA). Counsel for consumers can respond to the "technicality" argument by pointing out the care that Congress took in crafting each protection of the FDCPA, the important consumer protection goals of the asserted technical provision, and the requirement that the courts enforce the plain language of the Act and not substitute their judgment for Congress's.

(n2)Footnote 2. See Jenkins v. Heintz, 124 F.3d 824 (7th Cir. 1997) , cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1022, 118 S. Ct. 1304, 140 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1998) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Eagan v. Williams, 709 A.2d 1057 (R.I. 1998) ; Ziobron v. Crawford, 667 N.E.2d 202 (Ind. Ct. App. 1996) , reh'g denied (Aug. 29, 1996). See also Cooper v. Litton Loan Serv. (In re Cooper), 253 B.R. 295 (Bankr. N.D. Fla. 2000) (sanctions of $5000 granted to creditor's attorney against the consumers' attorney under Bankr. R. 9011 for the costs of defending against a groundless FDCPA claim). But see Emanuel v. American Credit Exch., 870 F.2d 805 (2d Cir. 1989) ; Boyce v. Computer Credit, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14879 (S.D. Ohio Sept. 2, 1997) (motion for sanctions was dismissed where it was based on an attack on consumer's counsel bringing numerous FDCPA suits against various debt collectors and not on the factual and legal merits of the consumer's claims; the collector's counsel was admonished not to make ad hominem attacks in the future in that court).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Simeon Mgmt. Corp. v. FTC, 579 F.2d 1137, 1978-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P62282 (9th Cir. 1978) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Robey v. Shapiro, Marianos & Cejda, L.L.C., 434 F.3d 1208 (10th Cir. 2006) (Constitutional Art. III standing satisfied).

(n6)Footnote 6. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(a)(3).

(n7)Footnote 7. Torres v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 914 F.2d 260 (7th Cir. 1990) , reported in full, 1990 U.S. App. LEXIS 16116 (7th Cir. Sept. 12, 1990) , aff'g Civ. Action No. 88 C-2030 (N.D. Ill. 1989) (district court did not abuse its discretion in ordering Fed. R. Civ. R. 11 sanctions for meritless FDCPA claim). See Chevy Chase F.S.B. v. Lane, 277 A.D.2d 545, 716 N.Y.S.2d 110 (3d Dep't 2000) (trial court's sanctions against attorney in asserting baseless TILA and FDCPA defenses to credit card collection action was supported by record and therefore was not an abuse of discretion); Clayton v. Bryan, 753 So. 2d 632 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2000) (a debt collector could not recover his attorney fees under a state offer of judgment statute because it was preempted by the FDCPA which only authorizes fees to the defendant when the plaintiff's case was brought in bad faith and for the purpose of harassment); White v. Myers, 2001 Tenn. App. LEXIS 814 (Tenn. Ct. App. Oct. 31, 2001) (trial court did not abuse its discretion in imposing Rule 11 sanctions against consumer's attorney for bringing frivolous FDCPA case against opposing counsel from mortgage foreclosure dispute where defendant did not engage in debt collection at all and consumer's attorney failed to investigate law or facts prior to filing suit). See also Conley v. KCA Fin. Servs., Inc., 145 Or. App. 567, 931 P.2d 808 (1997) (awarding attorney fees to the creditor and its collection agency was improper as there was no finding that the FDCPA action was brought by consumers in bad faith and for the purpose of harassment).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Alyeska Pipeline Serv. v. Wilderness Soc'y, 421 U.S. 240, 258-59, 95 S. Ct. 1612, 44 L. Ed. 2d 141 (1975) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Horkey v. J.V.D.B. & Assocs., Inc., 333 F.3d 769 (7th Cir. 2003) ; Blum v. Lawent, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16050 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 8, 2003) (collector who defeated one of three claimed violations of the FDCPA is not entitled to attorney fees under § 1692k(a)(3)). See Gonzalez v. Lawent, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18241 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 10, 2004) (debt collector's motion for attorney fees was premature where the collector had prevailed on one issue but other issues remained unresolved, since a finding of bad faith and harassment must be based on the entire lawsuit and cannot be granted if the consumer prevails on a single claim). See also Dechert ex rel. Estate of Oyler v. The Cadle Co., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25837 (S.D. Ind. Nov. 10, 2004) (court had no authority to grant attorney fees to defendant where the consumer prevailed on her FDCPA claims, despite plaintiff's loss of class certification on appeal and unsuccessful sanctions motions.).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Degrosiellier v. Solomon & Solomon, P.C., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15254 (N.D.N.Y. Sept. 27, 2001) (collector's motion for award of attorney fees denied based on absence of proof that consumer commenced action in bad faith or for purpose of harassment); Csugi v. Monterey Fin. Servs., Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21255 (D. Conn. Oct. 30, 2001) (§ 1691k does not permit award of costs to prevailing defendant unless defendant shows that plaintiff brought the action in bad faith and for purpose of harassment); Riebe v. Juergensmeyer & Assocs., 979 F. Supp. 1218 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (collector's motion for award of attorney fees denied where consumer, though the losing party, did not bring action in bad faith to harass in view of unique nature of the claim and the current debate as to the scope of FDCPA coverage and the definition of the term "debt"); Villarreal v. Snow, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2852 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (creditor's motion for an award of attorney fees pursuant to the FDCPA and the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act was denied because there was no improper purpose or bad faith in bringing the claims). See also Clayton v. Bryan, 753 So. 2d 632 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2000) (only where there was an express finding of bad faith and purpose of harassment may attorney fees be awarded to the prevailing defendant under the FDCPA; Florida offer of judgment statute providing for fee award was preempted by FDCPA attorney fee provisions; court refused to award defendant's attorney fees for defending an unsuccessful FDCPA action); Jones v. Weiss, 95 F. Supp. 2d 105 (N.D.N.Y. 2000) (inadequate evidence that FDCPA suit was instituted only to harass).

(n11)Footnote 11. See Terran v. Kaplan, 109 F.3d 1428 (9th Cir. 1997) (collector had to defend an FDCPA claim for which there had been an inadequate investigation).

(n12)Footnote 12. See Huff v. Dobbins, Fraker, Tennant, Joy & Perlstein, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 12055 (7th Cir. June 2, 1999) (consumer's attorney (who was her daughter) abused legal process by repeated, vague, unclear filings and persistent re-argument of already litigated issues; abuse of process was grounds for Rule 11 sanctions).

(n13)Footnote 13. See Savino v. Computer Credit, 164 F.3d 81 (2d Cir. 1998) ; Argentieri v. Fisher Landscapes, 15 F. Supp. 2d 55 , later opinion, 27 F. Supp. 2d 84 (D. Mass. 1998) (consumer's attorney held liable for Rule 11 sanctions for not withdrawing FDCPA complaint after collectors' corrective action).

(n14)Footnote 14. Riddle & Assoc., P.C. v. Kelly, 414 F.3d 832 (7th Cir. 2005) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Bartlett v. Heibl, 128 F.3d 497, 501 (7th Cir. 1997) .

(n16)Footnote 16. See also Kolker v. Sanchez, Clearinghouse No. 46,774 (D.N.M. 1991) (attorney, who filed suit in name of collection agency rather than in name of true creditor, engaged in the unauthorized practice of law in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1692e); Kolker v. Duke City Collection Agency, 750 F. Supp. 468 (D.N.M. 1990) .

(n17)Footnote 17. 28 U.S.C. § 1367. See generally 16 Moore's Federal Practice--Civil Ch. 106 (3d ed.). See Evans v. American Credit Sys., Inc., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22433 (D. Neb. Dec. 10, 2003) (court dismissed the defendant's counterclaim to collect the underlying debt because it was permissive and therefore lacked an independent basis for federal jurisdiction). But cf. Gervais v. Riddle & Assocs., P.C., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5557 (D. Conn. Mar. 23, 2004) (court held that the consumer failed to provide any support for his premature motion to strike the collector's counterclaim for declaratory relief that its collection efforts were all lawful and did not violate the federal and state laws that the complaint alleged were violated).

(n18)Footnote 18. Hart v. Clayton-Parker & Assocs., Inc., 869 F. Supp. 774 (D. Ariz. 1994) ; see also Berrios v. Sprint Corp., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6579 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 16, 1998) (court noted that all reported decisions have found that a defendant's counterclaims for payment of an overdue debt are distinct from and not logically related to a plaintiff's FDCPA claim based on improper debt collection practices). But cf. Krutchkoff v. Fleet Bank, 960 F. Supp. 541 (D. Conn. 1996) (FDCPA does not apply to a bank seeking to collect on its own line of credit; court granted bank its cross-claim for the amount due on the account, costs and attorney fees).

(n19)Footnote 19. See Ballard v. Equifax Check Servs., Inc., 186 F.R.D. 589 (E.D. Cal. 1999) . See also Cabrera v. Courtesy Auto, Inc., 192 F. Supp. 2d 1012 (D. Neb. 2002) (analogizing to an FDCPA case, creditor's counterclaim for the underlying debt in TILA case was permissive, not compulsory, and court dismissed it because it did not have an independent jurisdictional basis); Crawford v. Equifax Payment Servs., Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14095 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 1, 1998) (defendants' counterclaims to collect on dishonored checks could be heard under the court's supplemental jurisdiction because there was a loose connection between two claims; however, due to the chilling effect on FDCPA claims and the burden which would be placed on the court by such counterclaims, the court declined to exercise jurisdiction over the counterclaims; a setoff of the alleged debt against the FDCPA claim was allowed).

(n20)Footnote 20. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(c).

(n21)Footnote 21. Cf. 15 U.S.C. § 1640(c).

(n22)Footnote 22. Clark's Jewelers v. Humble, 823 P.2d 818 (Kan. Ct. App. 1991) (debt collector failed to demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence a bona fide error defense).

(n23)Footnote 23. Fox v. Citicorp Credit Servs., Inc., 15 F.3d 1507 (9th Cir. 1994) . See Picht v. Jon R. Hawks, Ltd., 236 F.3d 446 (8th Cir. 2001) ; Wilkerson v. Bowman, 200 F.R.D. 605 (N.D. Ill. 2001) (bona fide error defense not available to collector who failed to state amount of debt as required by § 1692g even though the collector's policy was to not collect more than amount stated; mistaken view of obligations imposed by FDCPA would not support bona fide error defense); Campion v. Credit Bureau Servs., Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20233 (E.D. Wash. Sept. 19, 2000) (defendant's misapprehension of applicable state law was not a result of an official interpretation of state law and therefore was only an error of law that did not amount to bona fide error defense); Gill v. Kostroff, 82 F. Supp. 2d 1354 (M.D. Fla. 2000) (whether defendant attorney had reasonable procedures to avoid suing wrong consumer in wrong venue was issue of fact for the jury); Sutton v. Law Offices of Alexander L. Lawrence, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22761 (D. Del. June 17, 1992) (bona fide error defense did not apply where defendant law office failed to provide any evidence that the requisite disclosure under § 1692e(11) or § 1692(g) were normally included in correspondence directed at debtors); Hubbard v. National Bond & Collection Assocs., 126 B.R. 422, 427 (D. Del. 1991) , aff'd, 947 F.2d 935 (3d Cir. 1991) ("bona fide error" defense was an affirmative defense applicable where debt collector's violation arose from an unintentional clerical error despite maintaining reasonable preventative measures). See also Nielsen v. Dickerson, 307 F.3d 623 (7th Cir. 2002) (held that the FDCPA's bona fide error defense was not available to a creditor which claimed it had relied on its collection lawyer's opinion that his letters complied with the FDCPA, because creditor was on notice, by Avila, that its conduct violated FDCPA principles); Johnson v. Riddle, 305 F.3d 1107 (10th Cir. 2002) ; Frye v. Bowman, Heintz, Boscia & Vician, P.C., 193 F. Supp. 2d 1070 (S.D. Ind. 2002) ; Shapiro v. Haenn, 222 F. Supp. 2d 29 (D. Me. 2002) ; Hill v. Priority Fin. Servs., Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16900 (S.D. Ind. Sept. 28, 2001) (bona fide error defense does not shield those who simply misunderstand obligations imposed by the FDCPA), related proceeding, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7812 (S.D. Ind. Mar. 26, 2003) . See also Alexander v. Unlimited Progress Corp., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5560 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 21, 2003) (though debt collector alleged that the creditor had not informed it of the consumer's bankruptcy or about the fact that she was represented by counsel, the court held that the creditor's knowledge could be imputed to the debt collector, and rejected the bona fide error defense, finding that the debt collector here maintained no procedures to avoid contacting debtors who are represented by counsel). Dunaway v. JBC & Assocs., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37885 (E.D. Mich. June 20, 2005) (collection agency's assertion of bona fide error defense for its collector's abusive and deceptive telephone calls was rejected as matter of law since there was no evidence that collector acted unintentionally); Hernandez v. Affiliated Group, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2557 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 12, 2006) (defendant had a bona fide error defense based on a coding glitch in a mail merge letter, resulting in misplacement, not elimination, of required information, and coding error was genuinely unintentional). But see Hyman v. Tate, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4822 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 24, 2003) . See also McDaniel v. South & Assocs., P.C., 325 F. Supp. 2d 1210 (D. Kan. 2004) (whether collector's computerized case management system was reasonably adapted to avoid collection action after notice of dispute, and whether continued collection was a clerical error, were questions of fact for the jury); Hooper v. Capital Credit & Collection Servs., Inc., 2004 WL 825619 (D. Or. Apr. 13, 2004) (consumer's motion for summary judgment was denied where debt collector presented sufficient evidence of bona fide error defense to create material issues of fact); Johnson v. Equifax Risk Mgmt. Servs., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4245 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 17, 2004) (despite the collector's uncontroverted affidavits that violations occurred notwithstanding maintenance of reasonable procedures to avoid them, the court refused on summary judgment to sustain the bona fide error defense on grounds that "procedures were clearly inadequate given the numerous errors and violations of the FDCPA" and instead consigned the issue to trial as a disputed fact). See McCollough v. Johnson, Rodenberg & Lauinger, 610 F. Supp. 2d 1247 (D. Mont. 2009) (bona fide error defense does not protect a debt collector whose reliance on its creditor's representations is unreasonable).

(n24)Footnote 24. But see Jenkins v. Heintz, 124 F.3d 824 (7th Cir. 1997) , cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1022, 118 S. Ct. 1304, 140 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1998) ; Smith v. Transworld Sys., Inc., 953 F.2d 1025 (6th Cir. 1992) (collector's assertion of bona fide error defense upheld where collector sent letter to consumer after receiving request to cease communication because the court found collector did not intend to violate act); Danielson v. Hicks, 1996 WL 767290 (D. Minn. 1996) (bona fide error established based on new computer system). See also Shula v. Lawent, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24542 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 23, 2002) (although the collector failed to plead the bona fide error defense, use of a former lawyer's letterhead was not a violation of the FDCPA where the consumer failed to demonstrate any prejudice or harm suffered as a result of the erroneous substitution).

(n25)Footnote 25. 443 F.3d 723 (10th Cir. 2006) .

(n26)Footnote 26. See Nichols v. Northland Groups, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15037 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 31, 2006) .

(n27)Footnote 27. Seeger v. AFNI, Inc., 548 F.3d 1107, 1114 (7th Cir. 2008) .

(n28)Footnote 28. See 18 Moore's Federal Practice--Civil P 131.10 (3d ed.). See, e.g., Whitaker v. Ameritech Corp., 129 F.3d 952 (7th Cir. 1997) , reh'g denied, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 500 (7th Cir. Ill. Jan. 9, 1998) ; Metzenbaum v. Huntington Nat'l Bank, 124 F.3d 198 (6th Cir. 1997) (unpublished decision), reported in full, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 25335 (6th Cir. Ohio Sept. 17, 1997) ; Rosendale v. Citibank, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4700 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 12, 1996) (pro se) (FDCPA claim dismissed on grounds of res judicata because it had already been decided on the merits in a state action); Cornett v. Bank of New York, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5140 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 17, 1992) (pro se plaintiff's FDCPA and other claims, which had been previously litigated in small claims court, were dismissed on the basis of res judicata).

(n29)Footnote 29. Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a).

(n30)Footnote 30. See McDuffy v. DeGeorge Alliance, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4879, at 27 n.15 (D. Del. Mar. 31, 2000) (plaintiffs' FDCPA claims were litigated in an earlier state court decision on the merits and were precluded by res judicata). Sheahy v. Primus Automotive Financial Services, Inc., 284 F. Supp. 2d 278 (D. Md. 2003) (plaintiff's FDCPA and other claims regarding the voluntary repossession of a motor vehicle were dismissed based on res judicata where the state court had previously entered default judgment, the claims could have been raised there, and allowing the claims would have the effect of nullifying the prior judgment). See also Cousins v. Duane St. Assocs., 2001 U.S. App. LEXIS 5645 (2d Cir. Apr. 2, 2001) (unpublished) (FDCPA claims not barred as res judicata since they could not have been asserted defensively in state landlord-tenant proceeding.); Spears v. Brennan, 745 N.E.2d 862 (Ind. Ct. App. 2001) (FDCPA claim does not arise out of transaction creating the debt and was not a compulsory counterclaim), reh'g denied, 2001 Ind. App. LEXIS 1171 (Ind. Ct. App. June 28, 2001) . Clabault v. Shodeen Mgmt., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1536 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 6, 2006) (consumer's current federal FDCPA claims were not barred by res judicata since state court action to collect debt and FDCPA action for unlawful collection activity were different causes of action, contrary to rule that res judicata requires that there two cases share "an identity of cause of action"); Watson v. Auto Advisors, Inc., 822 N.E.2d 1017 (Ind. Ct. App. 2005) (FDCPA claim was not precluded by judgment on debt in a suit in which FDCPA claim could have been but was not required to be brought). But see Egge v. Healthspan Servs. Co., 115 F. Supp. 2d 1126 (D. Minn. 2000) (state debt collection suit did not bar, on res judicata grounds, claim that defendant violated the FDCPA by threatening to collect usurious interest; FDCPA claim was not a mandatory counterclaim in state court and did not arise from the underlying debt, but from a different transaction, its collection).

(n31)Footnote 31. Long v. Shorebank Dev. Corp., 182 F.3d 548, 554-55 (7th Cir. 1999) (tenant whose state court eviction was allegedly procured by fraud by collector was not precluded by Rooker-Feldman doctrine from pursuing FDCPA damages for resulting loss of her job, loss of custody of her daughter, and 6 months of homelessness. "The counts in Long's complaint alleging violations of the FDCPA are independent from the eviction, order and, therefore, Rooker-Feldman does not apply to these claims."). See also Ellis v. Cac Fin. Corp., 2001 U.S. App. LEXIS 4961 (10th Cir. Mar. 26, 2001) (unpublished) (Rooker-Feldman doctrine prevented pro se FDCPA claim in federal court arising out of collector's alleged fraud and perjury in the preceding state court action on the debt); Hill v. Priority Fin. Servs., Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16900 (S.D. Ind. Sept. 28, 2001) (challenge to court awarded attorney fees must be addressed to applicable trial court, not fashioned as an FDCPA claim, because such a challenge represents a collateral attack on the state court judgment), related proceeding, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7812 (S.D. Ind. Mar. 26, 2003) . But see Brooks v. Auto Sales & Servs. Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8059 (S.D. Ind. June 15, 2001) (Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not preclude pro se consumer's claim that attorney sought excessive attorney fees in state court action which had gone to judgment, because FDCPA claim arose before judgment was entered; consumer was not estopped from litigating issue because there was no showing that validity of fee amount was actually litigated in state court action). See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection § 7.4.4 (6th ed. 2008) for further discussion of Rooker-Feldman doctrine.

(n32)Footnote 32. 125 S. Ct. 1517 (Mar. 30, 2005) .

(n33)Footnote 33. See § 8.05[5], supra.

(n34)Footnote 34. Exxon Mobil at 1523 .

(n35)Footnote 35. Id. at 1521-22 .

(n36)Footnote 36. Id. at 1526 .

(n37)Footnote 37. Id. at p.7, n.8 (citation omitted).

(n38)Footnote 38. 15 U.S.C. § 1692i.

(n39)Footnote 39. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(D).

(n40)Footnote 40. 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(a).

(n41)Footnote 41. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(11).

(n42)Footnote 42. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(15).

(n43)Footnote 43. 514 U.S. 291, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995) .

(n44)Footnote 44. Johnson v. Riddle, 305 F.3d 1107 (10th Cir. 2002) (Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not apply to consumer's FDCPA claim because she was not a party to the default judgment in state court and collection action against her had been dismissed).

(n45)Footnote 45. See Kropelnicki v. Siegel, 290 F.3d 118 (2d Cir. 2002) (claims regarding post-judgment letter are not barred by Rooker-Feldman because they are not inextricably intertwined with the state court determination, since consumer did not have the opportunity to litigate them in debt collection action); Resler v. Messerli & Kramer, P.A., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1741 (D. Minn. Jan. 23, 2003) (FDCPA claim that the state court garnishment notice did not contain state required disclosure of exemptions did not affect the state judgment and was not barred).

(n46)Footnote 46. See Fontana Empire Ctr. v. City of Fontana, 307 F.3d 987 (9th Cir. 2002) . See also Todd v. Weltman, Weinberg & Reis, Co., L.P.A., 348 F. Supp. 2d 903 (S.D. Ohio 2004) (neither Rooker-Feldman nor issue- or claim-preclusion barred FDCPA claims based on the defendant collection attorneys' false oath in their affidavits in support of state court garnishments misrepresenting the state of the debtors' non-exempt assets, when in fact the attorneys had no information or knowledge whatsoever concerning the matter, since the FDCPA case was based on the attorneys making false representations to that court, not the substance of any underlying state court ruling).

(n47)Footnote 47. Kelley v. Med-1 Solutions, L.L.C., 548 F.3d 600 (7th Cir. 2008) .

(n48)Footnote 48. Id. at 605 .

(n49)Footnote 49. Id. at 606 , 607.

(n50)Footnote 50. Gray-Mapp v. Sherman, 100 F. Supp. 2d 810, 814 (N.D. Ill. 1999) (debtor's FDCP claim could not be based on a proof of claim filed during bankruptcy proceeding because "[n]othing in either the Bankruptcy Code or the FDCPA suggests that a debtor should be permitted to bypass the procedural safeguards in the Code in favor of asserting potentially more lucrative claims under the FDCPA."). See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collections, §§ 2.2.5 (6th ed. and supp.).

(n51)Footnote 51. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(e).

(n52)Footnote 52. 16 C.F.R. §§ 1.1-1.4(1996).

(n53)Footnote 53. See § 8.01[2][c] supra.

(n54)Footnote 54. Scott v. Jones, 964 F.2d 314 (4th Cir. 1992) .

(n55)Footnote 55. See, e.g., Letellier v. First Credit Servs., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10288 (N.D. Ill. July 19, 2001) (case moot where motion for class certification not filed for almost two months after offer of judgment made); Person v. Stupar, Schuster & Cooper, S.C., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18203 (E.D. Wis. July 6, 2001) (offer of judgment to named plaintiff mooted class action where no motion to certify the class had been filed; acceptance of offer of $1000 statutory damages to named plaintiff could not be accepted as an offer of $1000 to each member of the class). For further discussion of offers of judgment, see National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 2.4.13 (5th ed. 2004). and National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Law Pleadings (2001 Cumulative CD-Rom and Index Guide) (memorandum of law on this issue).

(n56)Footnote 56. See Parker v. Risk Mgmt. Alternatives, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18061 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2001) , class certification granted, 206 F.R.D. 211 (N.D. Ill. 2002) ; Whitten v. ARS Nat'l Servs., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15472 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 27, 2001) , summ. judg. granted, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9385 (N.D. Ill. May 23, 2002) .

(n57)Footnote 57. Liles v. American Corrective Counseling Servs., Inc., 201 F.R.D. 452 (S.D. Iowa 2001) .

(n58)Footnote 58. E.g., Deposit Guaranty Nat'l Bank v. Roper, 445 U.S. 326 (1980) ; United States Parole Comm'n v. Geraghty, 445 U.S. 388 (1980) .

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 8 Fair Debt Collection

1-8 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 8.06

§ 8.06 Federal Trade Commission Debt Collection Law: Using FTC Law and Remedies

[1] FTC Decisions as Precedents for Actions Under the Federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act and State Laws

The FTC has been active for many decades in bringing administrative actions against debt collectors using "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" prohibited by the FTC Act. n1 The FTC formerly published its decisions and orders (but not decisions issued by the courts) in FTC Decisions, but hard copy publication ceased in 2003. The volumes are now available on-line at www.ftc.gov/os/decisions/index.shtm. The FTC website permits full-text searches of these decisions. FTC actions against debt collection abuses are summarized in the Commerce Clearinghouse Trade Regulation Reporter, the Antitrust and Trade Regulation Report of the Bureau of National Affairs, Inc., the Federal Register, and sometimes in the CCH Consumer Credit Guide. Recent actions are also posted on the FTC's website, n2 which includes a search feature for locating actions against specific defendants or that use specific words. The FTC also has one trade regulation rule--the Credit Practices Rule n3 --that specifically affects debt collection by restricting certain creditor remedies.

Most FTC decisions are "consent orders," agreements by respondents not to engage in the practice listed in the orders, without admitting any wrongdoing. While the precedential value of a consent order is probably less than that of a more fully litigated case, all initial complaints and consent orders are officially approved by the Commission, subject to public comment, and reflect the policy and interpretative positions of the FTC.

FTC decisions are useful to consumer lawyers in a variety of ways. Many of the proscriptions in the FDCPA were modeled on FTC decisions proscribing the same types of conduct. Another major use of FTC precedent is in interpreting the terms of state consumer protection acts that broadly proscribe unfair or deceptive acts and practices. Often the statutory language of such acts or local case law specifically refers to interpretations of the FTC Act as authority for interpreting the local law.

FTC precedents may also be useful in tort actions and actions under other state statutes.

[2] FTC Requires Creditor to Oversee Its Collection Agencies' FDCPA Compliance

The FTC gave final approval to a consent agreement with the American Family Publishers ("AFP")--one of the largest sellers of magazine subscriptions in the United States--settling charges that it violated the FTC Act when it hired collection firms and knowingly approved or assisted their use of deceptive debt collection practices. n4 This consent decree is the first decision extending an obligation to a creditor to oversee its collection agencies' FDCPA compliance.

The consent order requires AFP to instruct any debt collector it retains, engages, or employs to comply fully with all the provisions of the FDCPA.

[3] Filing Complaints About Debt Collectors' Practices With the FTC

When dealing with the FTC's Washington, D.C. headquarters, the Office of Credit Practices should be contacted. n5 When filing a complaint with a regional FTC office, it is best to determine in advance the name of a staff attorney or paralegal who is interested in FDCPA or FTC debt collection enforcement and to deal directly with that person.

[4] FTC Decisions on Debt Collection Abuses

The following cases of debt collection abuse have been found to violate the FTC Act and to warrant FTC cease and desist orders (or consent decrees where specifically noted) prohibiting future similar deception or unfair practices. Many of the cases involved other prohibited misconduct, omitted from discussion here. The list of practices set forth is not exhaustive, but provides a framework for measuring the legality of debt collector conduct.

[a] Threats Misrepresenting a Collector's Intention to Take Legal Action Are Prohibited by the FTC Act

Debt collectors make frequent threats that they will bring suit, refer the matter to an attorney, garnish wages, or repossess furniture. These have been found deceptive in numerous FTC decisions. n6

Such threats of legal action violate the FTC Act if they are deceptive. They may be deceptive for any of a variety of reasons. One reason may be that the collector does not intend to pursue legal action against the consumer to whom the threat is sent.

Even the threat of legal action by a collector who sometimes does pursue such action may be deceptive in certain situations, such as legal action was not intended in the particular case or the legal action was not as imminent as the threat implied. n7

A false threat to refer a claim to an attorney is deceptive and prohibited by the FTC Act.

[b] It Is Deceptive for Collectors to Design Their Dunning Letters to Appear to Be Telegrams

The FTC has found it to be deceptive and violative of the FTC Act for a collector to send dunning letters which simulate the appearance of telegrams because such letters misrepresent the nature, importance, cost, purpose, and urgency of the communication. n8

[c] Misrepresenting the Existence of a Debt or the Amount Due Is Prohibited by the FTC Act

FTC decisions dealing with firms mailing unsolicited merchandise to consumers have developed the principle that it is deceptive to misrepresent the existence or nature of a consumer's obligation. n9

[d] The Use of Harassing or Abusive Telephone Calls or Letters Is an Unfair Practice Violating the FTC Act

In one case, a door-to-door magazine subscription seller agreed not to "harass or intimidate" consumers by telephone calls and other communications in collecting debts. n10 Other collectors have agreed not to harass customers by using repeated phone calls, abusive language, and telephone calls at late hours. n11

[e] Contacting or Threatening to Contact Third Parties Is Unfair and Deceptive

Several FTC cases have resulted in agreements by collectors not to misrepresent that they will contact consumer's employers in connection with their collection efforts. n12 Several FTC decisions prohibit third-party contacts altogether. n13

[f] Filing Collection Suits in Courts Distant From the Consumer's Residence Is an Unfair Practice Prohibited by the FTC Act

The FTC moved against several companies that engaged in the practice of suing their delinquent customers in forums distant from the customers' residences. The FTC found this practice "unfair," and the finding was upheld on appeal. n14

[g] Misrepresenting the Adverse Impact of Nonpayment Upon a Consumer's Creditworthiness Is Prohibited by the FTC Act

Creditors and debt collection agencies sometimes threaten consumers with adverse credit reports if debts are not paid. Reporting a debt to a credit bureau is "a powerful tool designed, in part, to wrench compliance with payment terms. ..." n15 Such threats, when not carried out, are deceptive. Debt buyers often buy up debts that are so old that they cannot be listed on the consumer's credit report. n16 It is deceptive for a debt buyer to threaten to hurt a consumer's credit rating by reporting such a debt. n17

[h] Misrepresenting a Fictitious Collection Agency as an Entity Separate From the Collector Is Deception Prohibited by the FTC Act

Misrepresentations that accounts are being collected by a separate collection agency that is, in fact, fictitious or that accounts will be referred to a collection agency when they will not be so referred are the subject of numerous FTC consent orders. n18

[i] Misrepresenting That a Claim Has Been or Will Be Transferred to an Attorney or Separate Department of a Collector Is Prohibited by the FTC Act

Collectors sometimes attempt to mislead consumers into believing that their collection efforts have entered into a more serious stage by misrepresenting that their claims have been transferred to attorneys or to the legal or other department of the collector's company. Letters misrepresenting that the account has been transferred to an attorney usually include an attorney's letterhead and often contain explicit threats of legal action. They are deceptive when the decision to send the letters is made without the attorney's supervision. n19

[j] Misrepresenting a Collector's Affiliation With the Government Is Prohibited by the FTC Act

Collectors sometimes fashion collection letters or communications to give consumers the impression that they are affiliated with or a part of the government. This violates the FTC Act. n20

[k] Using Subterfuge to Obtain a Consumer's Current Address or Place of Employment Is Prohibited

The FTC has brought a great many actions against companies that use ruses designed to trick consumers into providing current addresses or places of employment. n21

[l] Collection Letters That Simulate Legal Process Are Prohibited by the FTC Act

Collectors sometimes fashion their collection letters so that they appear to be some type of legal process. Such practices may deceive consumers regarding the urgency, seriousness, authority, or source of the collection letters and undermine respect for the courts and the law.

There have been a number of FTC cases in which companies were ordered not to use collection forms simulating legal process. n22

[m] Advertising "Easy Credit" While Using Rigorous Collection Methods Against Delinquent Consumers Is Deceptive

Rigorous enforcement of credit claims against consumers makes a creditor's advertisement of "easy credit" false and deceptive. n23

[5] FTC Informal Guides and Prospective Regulations

[a] Creditors and Other Collectors Should Look to the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act for Standards to Comply With the FTC Act

In 1995, the FTC repealed its informal "Guides Against Debt Collection Deception" n24 because they had been superseded and subsumed by the FDCPA. n25

[b] FTC Credit Practices Rule Restricts Six Creditor Remedies

[i] Scope of the Rule

The FTC's Trade Regulation Rule Concerning Credit Practices (16 C.F.R. Part 444) restricts six creditor remedies. n26 The FTC Rule thus prohibits the following six practices:

- Confessions of judgment, cognovits, and other waivers of the right to notice and opportunity to be heard in the event of suit (this provision does not apply to executory process in Louisiana);

- The debtor's waiver of protections concerning property exempt from attachment or execution, such as waiver of a homestead exemption (this provision does not prohibit security interests in exempt property);

- Assignment of wages or other earnings before judgment;

- Non-purchase money security interests in household goods, but creditors can still take security interests in works of art, items acquired as antiques, jewelry (except wedding rings), and electronic entertainment equipment (except one television and one radio); n27

- Pyramiding late charges by assessing more than one delinquency charge for one late payment (pyramiding late charges for a missed payment is not prohibited); and

- The failure to provide co-signers with a specified warning indicating the potential obligations of a cosigner.

The best source for understanding the FTC's Credit Practices Rule are the FTC's Statement of Basis and Purpose for the Rule. n28

The FTC Rule applies to finance companies, retailers, and other creditors within the FTC's jurisdiction. The FTC Rule does not apply to most banks which parallel rules issued by the Office of Thrift Supervision n29 and the Federal Reserve Board. n30 Credit unions are covered by a comparable rule enacted by the National Credit Union

Administration. n31

[ii] Private Remedies for FTC Credit Practices Rule Violations

There is generally no direct private right of action for a violation of an FTC Rule. However, it seems clear that a consumer can challenge an FTC Credit Practices Rule violation under the almost 40 state unfair and deceptive acts and practices ("UDAP") statutes that prohibit "unfair" and/or "unconscionable" practices.

Even in states where the UDAP statute prohibits only "deceptive" practices, it may be deceptive for a creditor to violate the Rule because including illegal provisions in a credit agreement misrepresents the consumer's legal rights.

[iii] Security Interests in Household Goods

Finance companies now wishing to take consumer goods as collateral can no longer identify the property as "all household goods," but must identify each specific item. Many creditors will use a preprinted form listing the types of collateral falling outside the FTC Rule's definition of "household goods," and then just check appropriate items. For example, a creditor might check "jewelry," "stereo," and "tools." But a valid security agreement must identify collateral with particularity so a sheriff or other party knows precisely what property to seize. n32

[iv] Challenging Other Creditor Remedies

The Statement of Basis and Purpose is also significant because it provides an "unfairness" approach which can apply to many kinds of adhesive consumer credit provisions, and not just the six creditor remedies prohibited by the Rule. The FTC defines an unfair practice as one that (1) causes substantial injury; (2) not outweighed by any countervailing benefits to consumers or competition; and (3) that consumers themselves could not reasonably have avoided. n33

Additionally, a number of creditor remedies have been found unconscionable under the UCC section 2-302. These unconscionable creditor remedies include cross-collateral or waiver-of-defense clauses, attorney fee provisions, consent to breach of the peace on self-help repossession, waiver of interest in repossessed personal property unless the creditor is notified, and authorizing venue or jurisdiction in distant forums. Practices found unconscionable under the UCC can be argued to be unfair or unconscionable pursuant to a UDAP statute.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionCommunicationsBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionLiabilityBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionUnfair PracticesReal Property LawLandlord & TenantTenant's Remedies & RightsFair Debt Collection Practices Act

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. www.ftc.gov. Lexis and Westlaw databases include selected judicial decisions under the FTC Act, litigated decisions issued by the Commission itself, and FTC announcements of consent decrees and orders. The FTC website, www.ftc.gov, has a search function that enables the user to find complaints, consent orders, and decisions involving particular collectors.

(n3)Footnote 3. 16 C.F.R. § 444.

(n4)Footnote 4. 58 Fed. Reg. 8762 (Feb. 17, 1993) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Division of Credit Practices, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C. 20580, (202) 326-3224.

(n6)Footnote 6. See U.S. v. United Recovery Sys., Inc., (S.D. Tex. Apr. 17, 2002) (FDCPA consent decree) (prohibiting threats unless action is legal and collector or creditor intends to take it); United States v. Allied Publishers Service, Inc., 45 Antitrust & Trade Reg. Rep. (BNA) 329 (E.D. Cal. 1983) (consent order) (magazine subscription seller agreed not to misrepresent its intent to institute legal proceedings). See also Cooke, 9 F.T.C. 283 (1925) (false threats of suit by vocational school scam); FTC v. Check Investors, Inc., Civ. No. 03-2115 (JWB) (D.N.J. Aug. 14, 2003), available at www.ftc.gov/opa/2003/05/nccfinal.htm (complaint and preliminary injunction under FDCPA and FTC Act against collector that threatened imminent arrest and civil suit).

(n7)Footnote 7. Trans World Accounts, Inc. v. FTC, 594 F.2d 212, 1979-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P62583 (9th Cir. 1979) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Trans World Accounts, Inc. v. FTC, 594 F.2d 212, 1979-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P62583 (9th Cir. 1979) (collection agency mailed deceptive letters in yellow window envelopes with the word "TELEGRAM" printed in large black type over the window and on the reverse side; the notice inside was a yellow printed form with the word "TELEGRAM" printed on it; collector later used the deceptive word "Trans-O-Gram" in blue and white envelope and computer type).

(n9)Footnote 9. United States v. Bally's Health & Tennis Corp., 5 Trade Reg. Rep. (CCH) P 23,588 (D.D.C. 1994) (proposed consent decree) (health club chain harassed customers for payment although they canceled their contracts; health club also procured unauthorized charges on consumer's credit cards and bank accounts). See also, U.S. v. Fairbanks Capital Corp., Civil No. 03-12219 (D. Mass. Nov. 12, 2003), available at www.ftc.gov/opa/2003/11/fairbanks.htm (consent order prohibiting mortgage servicer from misrepresenting amount consumer owes or that fees are allowed; also prohibits charging for demand letters and restricts other default charges); FTC v. AKOA, Inc., 5 Trade Reg. Rep. (CCH) P 24,408 (C.D. Cal. 1998) (consent decree) (aggressively pursuing collection after sending unordered merchandise); Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Check Enforcement, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34349 (D.N.J. July 18, 2005) (collector violated FTC Act by inflating amount of dishonored check claim).

(n10)Footnote 10. Hearst Corp., 82 F.T.C. 218, 230 (1973) (consent order).

(n11)Footnote 11. Avco Fin. Servs., Inc., 104 F.T.C. 485 (1984) (consent order).

(n12)Footnote 12. Royal Furniture Co., 93 F.T.C. 422 (1979) (consent order) (furniture retailer agreed not to communicate or threaten to communicate with consumer's employer except to obtain location information or confirm earnings).

(n13)Footnote 13. Avco Fin. Servs., Inc., 104 F.T.C. 485 (1984) (consent order) (lender agreed not to contact employer where the employer objected to or prohibited such contact; and not to contact others, except the consumer's attorney, other creditors or collection agencies, or third parties for the purpose of obtaining location information, determining assets, or pursuant to court order); Aldens, Inc., 98 F.T.C. 790 (1981) (consent order) (agreed to promise in its contracts not to contact or threaten to contact unobligated third parties except the consumer's attorney, to obtain location information, or to place the debt for collection). See also In re Applied Card Systems, Inc., 2004 WL 1942064 (F.T.C. Aug. 25, 2004) (complaint and proposed consent order), www.ftc.gov/os/caselist/0323040/04/041008do032340.pdf (F.T.C. Oct. 6, 2004) (final consent order) (prohibiting harassment of third parties with abusive or obscene language or repeated calls).

(n14)Footnote 14. Spiegel, Inc. v. FTC, 540 F.2d 287, 1976-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P61006 (7th Cir. 1976) . J.C. Penney Co., 109 F.T.C. 54 (1987) (consent order); Marathon Oil Co., 92 F.T.C. 422 (1978) (consent order) (credit card seller of oil and other consumer products agreed not to sue its customers except in the judicial district where the individual customer currently resided or signed the contract; all pending suits not in such forums were to be terminated and credit reporting agencies were to be notified); S.S. Kresge Co., 90 F.T.C. 222 (1977) (consent order) (collection agencies, attorneys, and other agents of this retailer were alleged to have brought collection suits in distant forums; Kresge agreed not to bring such suits, to terminate any such suits pending, and to vacate any default judgments taken in unreasonably distant forums); Montgomery Ward Co., 84 F.T.C. 1337 (1974) (consent order) (this retailer agreed not to sue its customers except in an appropriate court in the county nearest their current residence or their residence at the time the contract was signed). See also FTC v. Leasecomm Corp., Civ. No. 03-11034RFK (D. Mass. May 29, 2003), available at www.ftc.gov/os/2003/05/leasecommstip.htm.)

(n15)Footnote 15. Miranda Rivera v. Bank One, 145 F.R.D. 614 (D.P.R. 1993) ; accord In re Sommersdorf, 139 B.R. 700, 701 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1991) .

(n16)Footnote 16. 15 U.S.C. § 1681c. See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Credit Reporting § 5.2 (6th ed. 2006).

(n17)Footnote 17. Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Capital Acquisitions & Mgmt. Corp., Civil Action No. 04-C-7781 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 11, 2005) (amended complaint), (N.D. Ill. Nov. 30, 2006) (consent order against corporate defendants), (N.D. Ill. Jan. 24, 2007) (consent order against individual defendant).

(n18)Footnote 18. Hearst Corp., 82 F.T.C. 218 (1973) (consent order); Edison Sewing Mach. & Vacuum Cleaner Co., 71 F.T.C. 319 (1967) (consent order); Annot., Use of Fictitious Collection Agency to Coerce Payment as Unfair or Deceptive Practice Prohibited by Sect. 5 of Federal Trade Commission Act, 25 A.L.R. Fed. 390 (1975) . See also FTC v. Capital City Mortg. Corp., Civil Action No. 98CV-237 (D.D.C. May 14, 2004), available at www.ftc.gov/os/caselist/capitalcitymortgage/040514condecree.pdf (consent decree barring company's former general counsel from participating in any debt collection business; complaint alleged that he sent letters falsely claiming to be from a third party collector).

(n19)Footnote 19. Grolier, Inc., 91 F.T.C. 315 (1979) .

(n20)Footnote 20. Royal Furniture Co., 93 F.T.C. 422 (1979) (consent order) (retailer's collectors misrepresented themselves as New York City marshals, sheriffs, attorneys, or other state and local officials). See also Crouch, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Sept. 10, 1996) (name "Credit Bureau of Connecticut," without exculpatory language in its letter, could mislead consumer into believing affiliation with State of Connecticut existed); but cf. Chesworth, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Sept. 16, 1997) (name "Law Enforcement Systems, Inc." permitted). See also Slough v. FTC, 396 F.2d 870, 1968 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72500 (5th Cir.) , cert. denied, 393 U.S. 980 (1968) (collector also mailed its forms seeking location information from mail drops in appropriate state capitals and used official-sounding titles, such as "County Agent"; it made no difference that owner of the firm changed his first name from "Earl" to "State"); Bennett v. FTC, 200 F.2d 362, 1952 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67372 (D.C. Cir. 1952) (using name "National Service Bureau" and title "Disbursement Officer" with a District of Columbia mailing address, the sender created the impression that it was connected with the Veterans Administration or the U.S. government).

(n21)Footnote 21. See United States v. Allied Publishers Serv., Inc., 45 Antitrust & Trade Reg. Rep. (BNA) 329 (E.D. Cal. 1983) (consent decree) (magazine subscription seller agreed not to misrepresent the purpose of an inquiry to secure information of a consumer's location).

(n22)Footnote 22. Neighborhood Periodical Club, Inc., 81 F.T.C. 93 (1972) (consent order).

(n23)Footnote 23. Tashof v. FTC, 437 F.2d 707, 1971 Trade Cas. (CCH) P73417 (D.C. Cir. 1970) .

(n24)Footnote 24. 16 C.F.R. § 237 (1991), 32 Fed. Reg. 15,539 (Nov. 8, 1967), as amended at 33 Fed. Reg. 5661 (Apr. 12, 1968) .

(n25)Footnote 25. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692-1692 o.

(n26)Footnote 26. The Rule and the accompanying Statement of Basis and Purpose may be found at 49 Fed. Reg. 7740 (Mar. 1, 1984) . National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 6.11 (7th ed. 2008).

(n27)Footnote 27. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions § 3.4.2 (6th ed. 2005) for a discussion of this prohibition.

(n28)Footnote 28. 49 Fed. Reg. 7740 (Mar. 1, 1984) . See also Ch. 4, "Unfair and Deceptive Credit Practices," § 4.04[1][i] supra .

(n29)Footnote 29. 12 C.F.R. § 535.

(n30)Footnote 30. 12 C.F.R. § 227.

(n31)Footnote 31. See 12 C.F.R. § 706.

(n32)Footnote 32. See Ch. 10, "Repossessions," § 10.02 infra .

(n33)Footnote 33. See § 4.04[1][i] supra.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 8 Fair Debt Collection

1-8 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 8.07

§ 8.07 Regulation of Federal Administrative Agencies' Collection Practices

[1] Congress Strengthens Federal Government's Debt Collection Powers

Throughout the 1980s, Congress passed numerous laws to strengthen the tools available to the United States when it has a claim against a person.

Each federal agency is responsible for its own prelitigation collection efforts. Those efforts are governed by two statutes--the Federal Claims Collection Act n1 and the Debt Collection Act, umbrella federal regulations called the Joint Regulations, n2 and the agency's own debt collection regulations, implementing those laws. In addition, the agency's authorizing statutes may expand or contract its debt collection powers. Suits to collect federal claims are governed by the Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act, n3 as well as the FRCP.

Commercial credit reporting agencies and debt collection agencies and attorneys hired by the federal administrative agencies remain subject to the consumer protection laws that generally apply to them. Consumer claims against the federal administrative agencies for the abusive debt collection tactics of their federal employees may be made as a civil rights or Federal Tort Claims Act claim.

[2] Prelitigation Activities Governed by the Federal Claims Collection Act, the Debt Collection Act, and the Joint Regulations

[a] Overview

The extra-judicial collection of debts by United States administrative agencies has been governed since 1966 by the Federal Claims Collection Act. n4 The Act mandates that federal agencies must attempt to collect overdue obligations, and the Act permits agencies to settle, abandon or suspend claims when appropriate. The Federal Claims Collection Act calls for the collection of debts to be carried out under guidelines promulgated jointly by the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury (the Joint Regulations), n5 which detail the procedure to be followed by an agency in its collection efforts.

The Debt Collection Act of 1982 toughens the debt collection and debt prevention procedures available to federal agencies. In particular, the Debt Collection Act permits the release to commercial credit reporting agencies of obligors' names, addresses and amounts owing, n6 and gives agencies access to the Internal Revenue Service records of overdue tax claims for existing obligors and prospective borrowers. n7 Later amendments allowed agencies to hire collection agencies, n8 intercept consumers' federal tax refunds, or other sums owed by the government to consumers, and hire private collection attorneys. n9

[i] The Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996

In 1996, Congress further strengthened the debt collection powers of federal agencies in ways likely to weigh heavily on some low-income households. The Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996: n10

- Permits administrative offset against formerly exempt Social Security and Veterans Benefits. n11 An annual amount of $9000 of benefits are exempt.

- Allows wage garnishment of up to 15% of earnings, "notwithstanding state law." The CCPA limitation of 30 times minimum wage should apply. An employer may not terminate an employee because of a federal agency's garnishment and may be subject to punitive damages for doing so. n12

- Denies federal loans, loan insurance, or guarantees to debtors delinquent on federal, non-tax and non-disaster, claims. This subsection may be waived by an agency head, as to an individual debtor, or a class of claims. n13

- Mandates a computer match to locate federal employees who owe debts to federal agencies.

The provision which permits agencies to compromise debts and suspend or end collection if the debtor lacks "present or prospective ability to pay" or if the cost of collection is likely to exceed the recovery was not altered by the 1996 legislation.

[b] The Federal Agency Must Make Proper Written Demand for Payment

Until 2000, the Joint Regulations required federal agencies, in most cases, to make three written demands for payment before taking further action against the debtor, other than charging interest. n14 That requirement has now been reduced to a single demand letter. n15 The demand letter must inform the debtor of the basis for the indebtedness, the debtor's right to seek review within the agency, the standards for imposing interest, penalties, or administrative costs, the date by which payment should be made to avoid late charges and enforced collection (usually thirty days from mailing), and the name, address, and phone number of a contact person or office within the agency. n16 The Joint Regulations specify that agencies should take steps to insure that all demand letters are mailed on the same day they are dated, n17 thus insuring the consumer the maximum time to respond before the deadline. In addition, agencies are directed to respond promptly to communications from the debtor. n18 The agency can also sue or take other action before sending a written demand when a statute of limitations is about to run or prompt action is necessary to protect the government's interest for other reasons. n19

Notice to the debtor is also required if the agency or the Treasury Department is going to offset the debt against a payment owed to the debtor. n20 The pre-offset notice can be combined with the initial demand letter. n21

[c] Release of Information to Credit Reporting Agencies

The Debt Collection Act amended the Federal Claims Collection Act to authorize federal agencies to disclose debtor information to credit reporting agencies. n22 This authority does not apply to tax debts, debts arising under the Social Security Act (other than certain overpayments), or debts for tariffs. n23 Information which may be released is limited to the name, address and social security number of the obligor, the amount of the claim, and the agency involved.

[d] Contracts With Private Debt Collection Agencies, Credit Reporting Agencies, and Collection Lawyers

Federal agencies can contract with a private collection agency to collect debts owed the federal agency, n24 but the federal agency cannot relinquish control of the final determination of the claim. n25

The private collection attorneys retained must comply with the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act and may not claim any exemption from that Act. n26

[e] Interest Charges for Late Payment

The Debt Collection Act requires federal agencies to charge interest on overdue claims at a minimum rate of the annual average investment rate for Treasury tax and loan accounts. n27 Also, interest, penalties, and collection costs may be waived, in whole or in part, if it is determined that the charges "would be against equity and good conscience or not in the best interests of the United States." n28 The interest rate is to be a fixed rate, determined when the agency first notifies the debtor of the amount due. n29

[f] Collections Against Federal Employees

Federal agencies can collect on debts owed them by any federal employee through an offset against the employee's pay or other compensation. n30 As of 2003, the Treasury Department was processing offsets against salaries paid by the Agriculture, Defense, and Interior Departments and the Postal Service, and was planning to add other agencies in future years. n31 In late 2003, the General Services Administration adopted a new rule establishing procedures for offsets against salaries it pays. n32

Salary offset is limited to 15% of the employee's disposable income unless the employee agrees otherwise in writing. n33 The regulation takes the position that the 15% limitation on salary offset does not apply to final and lump sum payments to employees leaving federal service n34 The 1996 Debt Collection Improvement Act mandates a computer match to identify federal employees who owe debts to the federal government for the purpose of offsetting the debts against their earnings. n35 The agency that holds the debt must give the employee, at least, a thirty-day advance written notice, stating the nature and amount of the debt, that the agency plans to use salary offset, that the employee may inspect and copy the agency's record of the debt, that the employee may obtain a review of the debt within the agency, and that the employee may enter into a written contract with the agency to repay the debt. n36

According to a report to Congress, the Treasury Department began phasing in federal salary payment offsets only in 1991. n37 By the end of 2002, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior were participating, and the U.S. Postal Service and the Department of Defense were expected to begin participating soon.

[g] Installment Plans and Other Settlements

The Joint Regulations allow federal agencies to try to reach a compromise with obligors who are financially unable to pay claims. n38 Installment repayment plans are specifically authorized, if the debtor documents an inability to pay in a lump sum. n39

[h] Intercept of Consumer's Federal Income Tax Refunds

31 U.S.C. section 3720A allows federal agencies that are owed past-due, legally enforceable debts (other than any Social Security overpayments and past-due support) to refer borrowers' names to the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") for interception of their tax refunds. n40 The statute provides n41 that before a tax intercept the creditor agency must:

- Notify the borrower that the agency intends to take such action; n42

- Give the consumer at least 60 days to present evidence that the debt is not "past due" or "legally enforceable";

- Consider any evidence and determine that an amount is "past due" and "legally enforceable"; and

- Satisfy relevant treasury regulations. n43

In addition, an agency may not participate in the tax intercept program unless it has adopted its own set of regulations. n44

Consumers may be able to attack a tax intercept or other administrative offset when the statutory and regulatory preconditions to intercept have not been met, due process requirements have been violated, or the debt is not legally enforceable. n45 The Joint Regulations provide that "the failure of an agency to comply with the provisions of this chapter shall not be available as a defense to any debtor." n46 However, this regulation can be interpreted to mean that failure to comply with the regulations is not a defense to the underlying debt, but can still be a basis for quashing the particular collection method. n47 Even if the regulation is interpreted to bar raising noncompliance with the Joint Regulations as a defense to the offset itself, it should be remembered that many agencies have their own regulations about offset procedures. Failure of the creditor agency to follow its own regulations may be a defense. n48 In addition, many of the steps required by the Joint Regulations are duplicated in the statute, and failure to follow the steps that the statute requires before offset should be a defense to the offset. Further, to the extent that the regulations set forth due process requirements failure to comply with them or to follow other procedures that would afford due process would be a defense to the offset. n49 Especially difficult problems are presented when a debtor has filed bankruptcy and claimed the tax refund as exempt. If the IRS is seeking to set off a tax debt against a refund, the interaction of the Tax Code and the Bankruptcy Code raises complex questions beyond the scope of this manual. n50

[3] Department of Education: Student Loans

When collection agencies or attorneys are collecting a student loan, the student is protected by the FDCPA n51 and may have remedies under Department of Education regulations. n52 Congress had granted the Department of Education additional debt collection powers which may raise any number of issues, e.g., administrative wage garnishment, exemption from statutes of limitations, and authority to collect reasonable collection fees. Wage garnishments to collect student loans are limited to 15% of the debtor's disposable wages if the Department is initiating garnishment and 10% if a guaranty agency is garnishing, notwithstanding the general authority in the Debt Collection Procedure Act for a 25% garnishment. n53 Until 2003, the Department of Education operated its administrative wage garnishment program under the authority of the Higher Education Act. n54 In 2003, it issued new rules allowing the Department's wage garnishment program to operate instead pursuant to the Debt Collection Improvement Act (DCIA) n55 which allows garnishment of up to 15% of a borrower's wages, rather than the 10% allowed by the Higher Education Act. n56 At least one court has found authority to reduce the garnishment below 10% in cases of hardship. n57 Student loans are also denied discharge in bankruptcy except upon showing of undue hardship. n58 The Department also has authority to offset Social Security and other federal benefits to collect student loan debts. n59 The statute allowing offset n60 states that it does not apply to claims that have been outstanding for more than ten years. The Supreme Court, in Lockhart v. United States, held that there was no statute of limitations on the offset of Social Security benefits to pay a student loan. n61 The Department has taken the position that the general abrogation of statutes of limitations for student loan collections in 20 U.S.C. section 1091a(a) means that it can offset Social Security benefits even for student loan debts that have been outstanding longer than ten years. This argument ignores the Social Security anti-alienation statute, 42 U.S.C. section 407(b), which states that it can only be overridden by a statute that makes express reference to it. In decisions issued only a few weeks apart, the Eighth and Ninth Circuits came to different conclusions on this issue. Neither court provided much analysis. The Eighth Circuit ruled in favor of the borrower, thus affirming the reasoning of the lower court. n62 The Ninth Circuit came to the opposite conclusion. n63 The Supreme Court resolved this issue in Lockhart v. United States. n64

[4] Debtor Remedies for Illegal Agency Collection Practices

The Joint Regulations expressly prohibit raising agency misconduct as a defense to a claim. In addition, debt collection by United States officers and employees is excluded from the protection of the FDCPA, n65 but there are a number of judicial remedies available to those illegally harassed for debts they owe to federal agencies. In Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics, n66 the Supreme Court determined that a federal employee otherwise entitled to qualified immunity from suit loses this defense in the face of unreasonable conduct. Under the Bivens doctrine, consumers may, for example, sue IRS agents for violations of their Fourth or Fifth Amendment rights. n67 Faced with a flurry of " Bivens suits," the Supreme Court has narrowed the doctrine's scope. It has held that a Bivens remedy does not lie (1) where Congress has provided an equally effective alternative remedy and declared it to be a substitute for recovery under the Constitution, and (2) where, in the absence of affirmative action by Congress, "special factors counsel hesitation." n68 Consumers unable to assert Bivens claims may nonetheless pursue monetary and, in some cases, injunctive relief against federal actors when their due process rights under specific federal laws have been violated. If the debtor seeks review of a tax refund intercept, federal tax law prevents federal courts from exercising jurisdiction over the Treasury Department. n69 That statute, however, does not preclude federal court jurisdiction over the agency to which the offset was paid. n70

Other potential remedies may be available to consumers under the Privacy Act, n71 the Administrative Procedures Act, n72 and the Federal Tort Claims Act. n73

[a] Collection of Taxes by Private Debt Collection Agencies

In late 2004, Congress enacted a new law that allows the Internal Revenue Service to outsource the collection of federal tax debts to private debt collection agencies. n74 Pursuant to this law, the IRS may enter into "qualified tax collection contracts" with private agencies. The law allows the IRS to pay private collectors up to 25% of the amount of tax debt collected. n75

An important issue in the outsourcing of federal tax debts is whether private tax collectors will safeguard the confidentiality of taxpayer information. Another issue is the competence of private collectors in dealing with tax issues. Many tax debtors do not realize that there are a host of remedies and options available to consumers who owe federal tax debts. These include the ability to negotiate the amount of the debt or seek a temporary suspension of collection due to financial hardship. n76

The new law does include some safeguards. The only activities that the law authorizes private debt collectors to perform are locating and contacting taxpayers, requesting full payment or offering installment agreements lasting up to five years, and obtaining financial information about the taxpayer. n77

Additional safeguards include strict limits on the activities that a private collector can subcontract out. n78 In addition, any amount collected from a taxpayer will be fully credited toward the taxpayer's tax debt; in other words, collection fees will not be deducted from the amount paid by the taxpayer. n79

Any contract between IRS and a private collection agency must prohibit the collector from committing any act or omission that IRS employees are prohibited from committing in the performance of similar duties. n80 Existing law imposes certain FDCPA-like restrictions on IRS employees when they are collecting tax debts: they cannot communicate at inconvenient times and places; contact represented debtors (with certain exceptions); or call the debtor at work if they know the debtor's employer prohibits such calls; and various types of harassment and abuse are also prohibited. n81

In addition, the new law provides that "[t]he provisions of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act shall apply to any qualified tax collection contract." n82 The FDCPA does not apply, however, to the extent superseded by (1) the FDCPA-like prohibitions already in the tax code, (2) tax code restrictions on contact with third parties, and (3) "any other provision" of the tax code. n83 In other words, private tax collectors must comply with the FDCPA except where the tax code specifies conflicting duties.

As part of this new law, Congress specifically created a private cause of action against a debt collector who recklessly, intentionally, or negligently disregards any provision of the tax code or any regulation under it. n84 The taxpayer has the right to bring suit in federal court for "actual, direct economic damages," with a cap of $1,000,000 ($100,000 in the case of negligence), plus costs. n85 Unlike suits where the misdeeds are committed by IRS employees, the plaintiff need not exhaust administrative remedies. However, the new law insulates the IRS from any misconduct by the private collector, permitting suit to be brought against the private tax collector only, not against the United States. n86

It is also clear that private collectors are liable for common law torts committed in the course of collecting tax debts. The new law explicitly provides that the civil remedy it creates "shall not be an exclusive remedy." n87

[5] Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act

[a] Civil Procedure and Exemptions for Collection of Federal Government's Claims

In 1990, Congress passed the FDCPA. n88 Congress intended the Act to create a new statutory framework for the judicial enforcement of most debts owed to the U.S. government. The sponsors believed this would facilitate the collection of U.S. government debts and serve to reduce the federal budget deficit. n89

Rather than defer to state judicial remedies, as does Fed. R. Civ. P. 64, the FDCPA establishes a federal judicial collection scheme that, in large part, preempts and replaces state law when the United States is collecting a debt it originated or guaranteed. n90

[b] Prejudgment and Postjudgment Remedies

The FDCPA establishes both prejudgment and postjudgment remedies. The prejudgment remedies are only available upon a showing of extraordinary circumstances. The prejudgment remedies are attachment, receivership, garnishment (of nonearnings), and sequestration of income from property. n91

The subchapter on postjudgment remedies provides for judgment liens, notice of exempt property rights, execution of judgments, installment payment orders against self-employed persons or persons concealing substantial earnings, and garnishment, including garnishment of earnings. n92

[c] Property Exempt From Seizure

The law provides debtors with a choice between the federal exemptions provided in the Bankruptcy Code n93 or the combination of state exemptions and non-Bankruptcy Act federal exemptions. n94

[d] Distant Filings of Collection Suits Possible

Perhaps the most draconian measure in the FDCPA is the establishment of nationwide service of process, n95 with the resulting specter that the federal government could sue in a forum thousands of miles from the alleged debtor's current residence. This provision, however, is somewhat ameliorated by the defendant's right to transfer the case to the district where he or she resides n96 and the requirement that the debtor be given notice of the right to transfer. n97 In United States v. Sutton n98 a Connecticut district court noted that the analysis of personal jurisdiction in a nationwide service of process case is not governed by the minimum contacts test set forth in International Shoe Co. v. Washington, n99 but rather by the five-factor "reasonableness" test enunciated in Asahi Metal Indus. Co. v. Superior Court. n100 Applying the Asahi test and noting that "dismissals resulting from the application of the reasonableness test should be few and far between," the district court found jurisdiction reasonable despite the fact that the 64-year-old New Hampshire defendant lived five hours away from the Connecticut courthouse. n101

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionGeneral OverviewGovernmentsFederal GovernmentGeneral OverviewGovernmentsFederal GovernmentClaims By & Against

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 31 U.S.C. §§ 3711-3719.

(n2)Footnote 2. 31 C.F.R. pts. 900-904. The notice of the adoption of these rules states that they supersede the rules found at 4 C.F.R. pts. 101-105, and that the Secretary of the Treasury, rather than the Comptroller General, is the co-promulgator of the new rules. See 65 Fed. Reg. 70,390 (Nov. 22, 2000) .

(n3)Footnote 3. 28 U.S.C. §§ 3001-3308.

(n4)Footnote 4. 31 U.S.C. §§ 3711-3719.

(n5)Footnote 5. 31 C.F.R. pts. 900-904. The notice of the adoption of these rules states that they supersede the rules found at 4 C.F.R. pts. 101-105, and that the Secretary of the Treasury, rather than the Comptroller General, is the co-promulgator of the new rules. See 65 Fed. Reg. 70,390 (Nov. 22, 2000) .

(n6)Footnote 6. 31 U.S.C. § 3711(f).

(n7)Footnote 7. 26 U.S.C. § 6103(l).

(n8)Footnote 8. See 31 U.S.C. § 3718.

(n9)Footnote 9. 31 U.S.C. § 3718.

(n10)Footnote 10. Pub. L. No. 104-134, ch. 10.

(n11)Footnote 11. 31 U.S.C. § 3716(c)(3)(A)(i).

(n12)Footnote 12. 31 U.S.C. § 3720D(e).

(n13)Footnote 13. 31 U.S.C. § 3720B.

(n14)Footnote 14. 4 C.F.R. § 102.2(a), superseded by 31 C.F.R. pts. 900-904, as published at 65 Fed. Reg. 70,390 (Nov. 22, 2000) .

(n15)Footnote 15. 31 C.F.R. § 901.2(a), as published at 65 Fed. Reg. 70,390 (Nov. 22, 2000) ("Generally, one demand letter should suffice," although agencies have discretion to determine the number of demand letters).

(n16)Footnote 16. 31 C.F.R. § 901.2(b).

(n17)Footnote 17. 31 C.F.R. § 901.2(c).

(n18)Footnote 18. 31 C.F.R. § 901.2(e). It may also be appropriate for the debtor to make a Freedom of Information Act request to obtain information about the claimed debt. 5 U.S.C. § 552.

(n19)Footnote 19. 31 C.F.R. § 901.2(a). See also United States v. Golden Elevator, 868 F. Supp. 1063 (C.D. Ill.

1994) .

(n20)Footnote 20. National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, Ch. 11 (1st ed. 2008). See also Amoco Prod. Co. v. Fry, 118 F.3d 812 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (temporary withholding of sum owed by government, during four years of litigation to determine amount of mutual debts, was not an administrative offset; agency not required to follow procedures of Debt Collection Act, though due process required). See also Omegbu v. United States Dep't of Treasury, 118 Fed. Appx. 989 (7th Cir. 2004) (procedure for offsetting Social Security Disability for student loan satisfied due process; one letter to last known address, stating that debt would be referred for offset, and disclosing right to hearing; six years later, debtor approved for SSDI and informed that 15% would be offset).

(n21)Footnote 21. 31 C.F.R. § 901.3(b)(4)(iv).

(n22)Footnote 22. 31 U.S.C. § 3711(f).

(n23)Footnote 23. 31 C.F.R. § 901.12(a).

(n24)Footnote 24. 31 U.S.C. § 3718.

(n25)Footnote 25. 31 U.S.C. § 3718(a)(1).

(n26)Footnote 26. 31 U.S.C. § 3718(b)(1)(B)(6).

(n27)Footnote 27. 31 U.S.C. § 37.

(n28)Footnote 28. 4 C.F.R. § 102.13(g) ("equity and good conscience" is construed analogously to the term in 4 C.F.R. § 91.5(c)); 5 U.S.C. § 5584 (debt result of administrative error with no fault, fraud, misrepresentation, or lack of good faith by debtor). But see Titan Wheel Corp. v. U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, 291 F. Supp. 2d 899, 933 (S.D. Iowa 2003) (upholding agency's discretion not to waive interest), aff'd without op., 113 Fed. Appx. 734 (8th Cir. 2004) .

(n29)Footnote 29. 31 U.S.C. § 3717(c). See Precision Pine & Timber, Inc. v. United States, 75 Fed. Cl. 80 (Fed. Cl. Dec. 22, 2006) .

(n30)Footnote 30. 5 U.S.C. § 5514. See also Doko Farms v. United States, 956 F.2d 1136 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (government could use administrative offset to collect on claims (here, alleged overpayment of cotton subsidies) even though a suit on those claims was barred by the statute of limitations).

(n31)Footnote 31. U.S. Dept. of the Treasury, Office of Legislative and Public Affairs, Fact Sheet: Delinquent Debt Collection, Fiscal Year 2003 (available at fms.treas.gov).

(n32)Footnote 32. 41 C.F.R. §§ 105-56.024 to 105-56.033, adopted by 68 Fed. Reg. 68750 (Dec. 10, 2003) .

(n33)Footnote 33. 5 U.S.C. § 5514(a)(1).

(n34)Footnote 34. C.F.R. § 285.7(a)(6).

(n35)Footnote 35. 5 U.S.C. § 5514.

(n36)Footnote 36. U.S.C. § 5514(a)(2); 31 C.F.R. § 285.7(d)(iv); 5 C.F.R. § 550.1104(d) (specifying details that agencies must include in their notices).

(n37)Footnote 37. Testimony of Commissioner Richard L. Gregg, Fiscal Management Service--U.S. Department of the Treasury, Federal Debt Collection--Significant Progress Made During the Last Year (Nov. 13, 2002), available at http://fms.treas.gov/news/reports/testimony-nov13-2002.html.

(n38)Footnote 38. 31 C.F.R. pt. 902. See also 31 U.S.C. § 3711(a)(2).

(n39)Footnote 39. 31 C.F.R. § 901.8(a).

(n40)Footnote 40. 31 U.S.C. § 3716 provides for "administrative offset," which is the withholding of money payable by the United States, to or on behalf of a person, to satisfy a debt owed the United States by that person.

(n41)Footnote 41. 31 U.S.C. § 3720A(a)(b).

(n42)Footnote 42. But see In re Shortt, 277 B.R. 683 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2002) (notice of intent to set off tax refund, sent to debtors' last known address, sufficient even though never received; debtors had not notified creditor of address change). See also In re Huff, 317 B.R. 679 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 2004) (notice failed to meet requirements of 31 U.S.C. § 3720A; bankruptcy court denied set-off of tax refund for Rural Housing Mortgage loan; new notice, and new 60-day period to contest, required for each tax year in which offset was sought).

(n43)Footnote 43. 26 C.F.R. § 301.6402-6.

(n44)Footnote 44. 26 C.F.R. § 301.6402-6. See U.S. Dep't of Agriculture v. Huff (In re Huff), 343 B.R. 136, 142 (W.D. Pa. 2006) .

(n45)Footnote 45. For a discussion of claims and defenses available against tax intercept actions to offset debts, see M. Rigg, Intercept of Tax Refunds to Offset Debts Owed Federal Agencies: Part II, 20 Clearinghouse Rev. 702 (Oct. 1986). See Blake v. Cisneros, 837 F. Supp. 834 (S.D. Tex. 1993) . See also Davis v. N.C. Dep't of Human Resources, 349 N.C. 208, 505 S.E.2d 77 (1998) . Interception of federal tax refund was improper where father was not "delinquent" on his child support payments within meaning of the federal tax intercept statute. Father was current on payments ordered by court following adjudication of paternity, and was also making payments toward a public assistance reimbursement debt which accrued prior to the paternity adjudication. State tax refund could be intercepted if Department obtained opinion of Attorney General that the court-ordered support plan was inadequate for collection of the arrears. See also Abbe v. Bochert, 2001 Ohio App. LEXIS 2618 (Ohio Ct. App. June 13, 2001) (if obligor current on payments of current support and court-ordered installments of arrearage, no amount past due, despite existence of debt, and tax refund offset cannot be authorized, but pro se litigant failed to preserve issue for review).

(n46)Footnote 46. 31 C.F.R. § 900.8.

(n47)Footnote 47. See Ramirez v. Dept. of the Army, 86 M.S.P.B. 211 (2000) (creditor agency cannot deduct debt from retirement pay until it has complied with its own regulations by completing hearing requested by debtor).

(n48)Footnote 48. See Id.; But cf. Brannum v. Gaddy, 2003 U.S. App. LEXIS 1900 (D.C. Cir. Feb. 3, 2003) (agency's failure to follow statutory notice requirements exactly not a defense, where debtor received actual notice); Lewis v. Glickman, 104 F. Supp. 2d 1311 (D. Kan. 2000) (flawed preliminary hearing not prejudicial where debtor subsequently had full evidentiary hearing and administrative appeal; agency's violation of own rule re stay not prejudicial where its right to offset was ultimately upheld), aff'd, 2002 U.S. App. LEXIS 13269 (10th Cir. July 3, 2002) (unpublished, citation limited).

(n49)Footnote 49. See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 13.2.8.3 (5th ed. 2004).

(n50)Footnote 50. See, e.g., United States v. Luongo, 255 B.R. 424 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2000) (IRS may set off tax refund against earlier tax liability even if old debt has been discharged in bankruptcy), aff'd, 259 F.3d 323 (5th Cir. 2001) ; Unites States v. Munson, 248 B.R. 343 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2000) (IRS allowed to set off refund against old debt, even though refund was claimed as exempt); Ramirez v. Minnesota Dep't of Revenue, 266 B.R. 441 (Bankr. D. Minn.

2001) (state DOR could set off prepetition tax liability against prepetition tax refund, even if tax obligation discharged in bankruptcy); United States v. Holden, 258 B.R. 323 (Bankr. D. Vt. 2000) (IRS violated automatic stay, and was in contempt of bankruptcy court order when it froze chapter 13 debtor's $2000 post-petition tax refund for $200 pre-petition tax debt, which would be paid in chapter 13 plan; right of setoff does not allow IRS to coerce payment of prepetition debt by withholding payment of post-petition debt to debtor); United States v. Killen (In re Killen), 249 B.R. 585 (Bankr. D. Conn. 2000) (no offset of tax refund for HUD loan where tax refund claimed exempt); In re Bourne, 262 B.R. 745 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2001) (setoff allowed); In re Martinez, 258 B.R. 364 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2000) (setoff allowed; detailed discussion of cases on both sides of question); Stewart v. Army & Air Force Exch. Serv., 253 B.R. 51 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 2000) (no violation of automatic stay to hold tax refund pending determination of right to setoff). See further National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection § 13.3.7.1, 13.3.8 (4th ed. and supp.)

(n51)Footnote 51. See 31 U.S.C. § 3718(a)(2). The Department of Education and the student loan lender are exempt under different provisions of the FDCPA, 15 U.S.C § 1692a(6)(C) and (A) respectively.

(n52)Footnote 52. See, e.g., Ch. 12, "Student Loans and Trade School Abuses," §§ 12.06[2] (the closed school discharge), 12.06[3] (false certification discharge), 12.08 (student's claims against the school), 12.05[1] (deferrals), 12.05[3] (loan consolidation) infra. See also National Consumer Law Center, Student Loan Law § 6.2 (closed school discharge), § 6.3 (false certification discharge), § 6.4 (unpaid refund discharge), § 6.6 (disability discharge), § 8.2 (loan consolidation), Ch. 9 (borrower's claims against the school) (3d ed. 2006).

(n53)Footnote 53. 20 U.S.C. § 1095a (HEA authority for wage garnishment should still apply when guaranty agencies are garnishing wages); 31 U.S.C. § 3720D(b)(1) (Debt Collection Improvement Act authorizing 15% garnishment should apply when the Department of Education is garnishing). See National Consumer Law Center, Student Loan Law § 5.3 (3d ed. 2006). See also United States v. George, 144 F. Supp. 2d 161 (E.D.N.Y. 2001) ; United States v. Reid, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2187 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 21, 2000) ; Green v. Kentucky Higher Education Assistance Authority, 78 F. Supp. 2d 1259 (S.D. Ala. 1999) .

(n54)Footnote 54. 20 U.S.C. § 1095a.

(n55)Footnote 55. 68 Fed. Reg. 8142 (Feb. 19, 2003) .

(n56)Footnote 56. 31 U.S.C. § 3720D(b)(1). See National Consumer Law Center, Student Loan Law § 5.3 (3d ed. 2006 and Supp.).

(n57)Footnote 57. United States v. Reid, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2187 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 21, 2000) , motion to vacate judgment denied, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17444 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 31, 2000) .

(n58)Footnote 58. 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(8). See Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice, § 14.4.3.8 (8th ed. 2006).

(n59)Footnote 59. See National Consumer Law Center, Student Loan Law § 5.4 (3d ed. 2006 and Supp.).

(n60)Footnote 60. 31 U.S.C. § 3716(e)(1).

(n61)Footnote 61. 126 S. Ct. 699 (2005) .

(n62)Footnote 62. Lee v. Paige, 276 F. Supp. 2d 980 (W.D. Mo. 2003) , aff'd, 376 F.3d 1179 (8th Cir. 2004) (finding that the ten-year limit does apply). See also Guillermety v. Secretary of Educ., 241 F. Supp. 2d 727 (E.D. Mich. 2002) (ten-year limit applies).

(n63)Footnote 63. Lockhart v. U.S., 376 F.3d 1027 (9th Cir. 2004) . In December 2004, the borrower in this case filed for certiorari with the U.S. Supreme Court.

(n64)Footnote 64. 126 S. Ct. 699 (2005) .

(n65)Footnote 65. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(C).

(n66)Footnote 66. 403 U.S. 388, 91 S. Ct. 1999, 29 L. Ed. 2d 619 (1971) , on remand, 456 F.2d 1339 (2d Cir. 1972) .

(n67)Footnote 67. See, e.g., National Commodity & Barter Ass'n v. Archer, 31 F.3d 1521, 1527 (10th Cir. 1994) .

(n68)Footnote 68. Carlson v. Green, 446 U.S. 14, 18-19, 100 S. Ct. 1468, 64 L. Ed. 2d 15 (1980) .

(n69)Footnote 69. 26 U.S.C. § 6402(f). See Albert v. OSI Educ. Servs., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3821 (D. Minn. Mar. 11, 2004) .

(n70)Footnote 70. 26 U.S.C. § 6402(f).

(n71)Footnote 71. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g).

(n72)Footnote 72. 5 U.S.C. § 704.

(n73)Footnote 73. 28 U.S.C. §§ 2671-2680, as amended by the Federal Employees Liability Reform and Tort Compensation Act of 1988 (FELRTCA, or the Westfall Act), Pub. L. No. 100-694, 102 Stat. 4564 (1988). See National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, Ch. 11.2.12.5 (1st ed. 2008), for further discussion of each of these claims.

(n74)Footnote 74. Pub. Law No. 108-357, § 881 (Oct. 22, 2004).

(n75)Footnote 75. 26 U.S.C. § 6306(c).

(n76)Footnote 76. For a discussion of the remedies and options available to consumers who owe federal tax debts, see NCLC Guide to Surviving Debt, Ch. 19 (2005).

(n77)Footnote 77. 26 U.S.C. § 6306(b).

(n78)Footnote 78. 26 U.S.C. § 6306(b)(3), (4).

(n79)Footnote 79. 26 U.S.C. § 6306(c).

(n80)Footnote 80. 26 U.S.C. § 6306(b)(2).

(n81)Footnote 81. 26 U.S.C. § 6304.

(n82)Footnote 82. 26 U.S.C. § 6304(e).

(n83)Footnote 83. Id., cross-referencing 26 U.S.C. §§ 6304, 7602(c).

(n84)Footnote 84. 26 U.S.C. §§ 7433A, 7433(a).

(n85)Footnote 85. 26 U.S.C. § 7433, incorporated by reference in § 7433A(a).

(n86)Footnote 86. 26 U.S.C. § 7433A(b)(1), (4). See also 26 U.S.C. § 6306(d) (no federal liability for acts or omissions of private tax collectors).

(n87)Footnote 87. 26 U.S.C. § 7433A(b)(3). Cf. to 26 U.S.C. § 7433(a) (cause of action created for collection abuses by IRS employee is exclusive remedy for recovering damages resulting from such action).

(n88)Footnote 88. Title XXXVI of Pub. L. No. 101-647, 104 Stat. 4933-4966, 28 U.S.C. §§ 3001-3308. See also

Schueler v. Rayjas Enters., Inc., 847 F. Supp. 1147 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) .

(n89)Footnote 89. H.R. Rep. No. 736, 101st Cong., 2d Sess. 23, reprinted in 1990 U.S.C.C.A.N. 6630, 6631.

(n90)Footnote 90. 28 U.S.C. § 3001(a), (b). See Markham v. Fay, 74 F.3d 1347 (1st Cir. 1996) .

(n91)Footnote 91. 28 U.S.C. §§ 3102-3105.

(n92)Footnote 92. 28 U.S.C. §§ 3201-3205.

(n93)Footnote 93. 11 U.S.C. § 522(d). See Collier Consumer Bankruptcy Practice Guide Ch. 13 (Matthew Bender 1997).

(n94)Footnote 94. 28 U.S.C. § 3014.

(n95)Footnote 95. 28 U.S.C. § 3004(b).

(n96)Footnote 96. 28 U.S.C. § 3004(b)(2).

(n97)Footnote 97. 28 U.S.C. §§ 3101(d), 3201(b).

(n98)Footnote 98. 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1349 (D. Conn. Jan. 10, 2005) .

(n99)Footnote 99. 326 U.S. 310 (1945) .

(n100)Footnote 100. 480 U.S. 102, 113-14, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 (1987) (the five factors of Asahi are: (1) the burden that the exercise of jurisdiction will impose on the defendant; (2) the interests of the forum state in adjudicating the case; (3) the plaintiff's interest in obtaining convenient and effective relief; (4) the interstate judicial system's interest in obtaining the most efficient resolution of the controversy; and (5) the shared interest of the states in furthering substantive social policies).

(n101)Footnote 101. 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1349 (D. Conn. Jan. 10, 2005) (citations omitted).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 8 Fair Debt Collection

1-8 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 8.08

§ 8.08 Other Federal Laws Affecting Debt Collection

[1] Fraudulent or Defamatory Use of Mails

Some state debt collection statutes specifically incorporate prohibitions established in the federal postal laws. n1 The mail fraud statute n2 may apply when a collector uses a fraudulent scheme to collect a debt and uses the mails in some way. n3 This statute has been broadly interpreted to prohibit deceitful statements, half-truths, and the concealment of material facts in mailed items. It arguably prohibits letters threatening to seize, sell, or garnish the debtor's property, when no such action has or will be taken.

[2] Collecting for Unordered Merchandise May Be Illegal

A section of the Postal Reorganization Act ("PRA") n4 prohibits billing or dunning for unordered, mailed merchandise (unless mailed by a charitable organization soliciting contributions). It provides that the recipient of unordered, mailed merchandise has a right to treat it as a gift. The mailing of unordered merchandise is declared to be a violation of the FTC Act n5 and, thus, actionable under many state unfair and deceptive trade practices statutes. n6

[3] Telephone Harassment

Under the Federal Communications Act ("FCC") Act, interstate telephone companies file proposed tariff regulations with the FCC; n7 when approved by the FCC, these become binding on the companies and their subscribers. Tariff regulations have generally prohibited the use of the telephone "in a manner reasonably expected to frighten, abuse, torment or harass another," for calls that unreasonably interfere with the use of telephone service by one or more customers, or for calls having an unlawful purpose. Given this broad regulatory language, many types of debt collection calls may be illegal as violative of the tariff. State tariffs often contain similar prohibitions. Enforcement of these violations would ordinarily be done by complaining to the telephone company and, if no relief was forthcoming, to the regulatory body.

The Communications Act of 1934, as amended by the Federal Telecommunications Act of 1996, n8 prohibits interstate or foreign communications (e.g., phone calls, and e-mail n9), for anyone:

- Making a telephone call or using a telecommunications device, without disclosing his or her identity, with intent to annoy, abuse, threaten, or harass any person at the number called or who receives the communications (e.g., e-mail);

- Causing the telephone of another to ring repeatedly, with intent to harass any person at the number called;

- Making repeated calls or repeatedly initiating communication with a telecommunications device (e.g., e-mail) in which the ensuing conversation or communication serves only to harass any person at the called number or who receives the communication; or

- Knowingly permitting any telecommunications facility under his or her control to be used for any of the above purposes. with the intent that it be used for such activity. n10

The caller or the sender of e-mail (or other telecommunications contact) can be fined in accordance with Title 18 and be imprisoned for up to two years. n11 Statutes duplicating or expanding these criminal prohibitions can be found in nearly every state. Consumers may not have a private cause of action under these criminal statutes against collectors and creditors, but violations of these criminal statutes will constitute torts and violations of the FDCPA and state UDAP and debt collection laws. n12

For many years, local- and long-distance service has been regulated by tariffs setting forth the rates and terms of service. Interstate long-distance companies filed tariffs with the FCC while companies providing in-state phone service (including local phone service and in-state long-distance) file with the state public utility commissions ("PUC"), which, once approved by the FCC or PUC, become binding on the company and its subscribers. n13

This tariff requirement has changed for interstate long-distance service. As of July 31, 2001, interstate long-distance companies are no longer required or allowed to file tariffs with the FCC. n14 Instead, pursuant to the authority granted by Congress in the Telecommunications Act of 1996, n15 the rates and terms of service are to be governed by the contract between the company and the customer. Companies are required to make these contracts available for consumers to inspect, and if the company has a website it must post changes to the rates immediately. n16

Some states may follow the FCC's lead and "detariff" the telephone service that they regulate. State PUCs that retain tariff requirements do not have the authority to require interstate service providers to file tariffs, however, so they cannot replace the FCC's role for those companies.

For in-state harassing calls in states that have not detariffed, and for abuses in interstate calls that occurred before the federal detariffing, the FCC or the state PUC has authority to enforce the tariffs filed with it. The FCC has documented collectors' telephone abuses, n17 and the federal tariffs have generally included protections against such abuses. Tariff regulations have generally prohibited the use of the telephone "in a manner reasonably expected to frighten, abuse, torment or harass another," n18 for calls that unreasonably interfere with the use of telephone service by one or more customers, or for calls having an unlawful purpose.

Tape recording a collector's harassing telephone has been used as a way to develop evidence against a collector. Consumers who do so, however, should examine whether they may be violating state criminal eavesdropping statutes that prohibit the electronic recording of a telephone conversation without consent of both conversing parties. n19 In states where the caller's consent to have his or her conversation electronically recorded is required by criminal eavesdropping laws, a consumer has little to lose in requesting consent. A lawyer may not ethically participate in a tape recording without the consent of all parties to the conversation. n20

Tariff regulations similar to the FCC's may be imposed at the state level. Local telephone companies often incorporate the FCC-required standards in their own tariff regulations, which are filed with state utility authorities and, in effect, become the terms of the relationship between the phone company and its consumers.

There is a private cause of action against interstate phone companies for violation of certain provisions of the Federal Communications Act and the FCC tariffs, and for negligence or breach of the telephone contract. n21 The statute allows the consumer to choose either the courts or the FCC as a forum, but after proceeding in one forum the consumer cannot pursue the claim later in the other forum. n22 Even if the consumer exercises the option to file in court, the court may hold that the FCC has primary jurisdiction and defer to it. n23 Consumers can file complaints with the FCC n24 through the FCC's web site. n25

Tariff regulations also provide criminal sanctions and empower the telephone companies to suspend temporarily, discontinue, or refuse phone service to violators. Consumers may request the companies to exercise these powers against collectors who abusively employ their telephone service. Tariff regulations may also provide a useful basis for an action under the broad standards in federal and state consumer protection laws.

Even though interstate long-distance providers will no longer file tariffs with the FCC, the FCC retains general enforcement authority over them. In its decision to forbear from requiring these companies to file tariffs, the FCC reaffirmed its pledge to use its complaint process to enforce statutory and regulatory safeguards "against carriers that attempt to take unfair advantage of American consumers." n26

Another issue that may arise is the use of the caller ID service that allows a subscriber to view automatically the telephone numbers from which incoming telephone calls are placed, including unlisted numbers. n27 This technology is particularly troublesome for a consumer who may wish to preserve the privacy of his or her telephone number and location.

The FCC responded to this problem by requiring carriers to provide calling parties with a method of blocking caller ID. A caller who wishes to conceal his or her number should dial 67 (1167 for rotary phones) before dialing the number. FCC rules require carriers to advise customers of this option, and to honor the request for privacy. n28 In many states, telephone companies also offer line blocking, which blocks caller ID for all calls from that line.

Consumers should be aware of a major loophole in this rule. Line blocking or 67 will not protect the privacy of callers who dial an 800, 888, 887, or 866 number. n29 Because the called party pays for the call, carriers may provide calling parties' numbers for billing purposes. Telephone companies are also required to notify subscribers that 67 or line blocking does not protect caller privacy for calls to 800 or 888 numbers. n30

A service set up by Western Union for collection agencies and creditors to capitalize on this privacy loophole has been held to be covered by the FDCPA. n31 Under its scheme, Western Union sent a message asking the consumer to call it. Then, it used Caller ID technology to obtain the consumer's unlisted telephone number for its client, the collection agency or creditor. The Ninth Circuit agreed with FTC staff that this activity, which amounted to an indirect attempt to collect a debt, was covered by the FDCPA. n32 The circuit court also noted Western Union's probable violation of the FCC regulations governing automatic number identification. n33

Consumers who wish to preserve the privacy of their phone numbers should use pay phones for calls to creditors' toll-free numbers. If dunning phone calls to unpublished numbers follow consumers' use of a creditor's 800 number, the consumers' attorney should consider whether the creditor or the telephone company has violated the FCC rules governing automatic number identification.

[4] Truth in Lending Disclosures

The TIL laws may require a debt collector to provide the consumer with a new TIL disclosure statement if the two agree on a new debt payment schedule (known as a "workout agreement") or the amount financed or the finance charges are increased. The Federal Reserve Board ("FRB") has taken the position, binding on the courts, n34 that a TIL disclosure statement must be provided to the consumer before consummation of a written, prelitigation workout agreement, allowing the consumer to pay the obligation if the annual percentage rate, amount financed, or finance charges are increased. n35 If a debt collector fails to provide a required TIL disclosure statement, the debt collector is subject to TIL civil liability of twice the finance charge (but not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 in any individual action) and attorney fees. n36

[5] Extortionate Collection Methods

The Federal Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") n37 is a broad statute prohibiting specific types of illegal conduct by an enterprise, including excessive collection conduct.

[6] The Fair Credit Reporting Act

The FCRA n38 is a comprehensive regulatory act that should be consulted whenever a consumer is adversely affected by improper or inaccurate information on file with a credit bureau or reporting agency or is threatened with such reports being filed. The FCRA gives a consumer the right to be informed of the substance of his or her file at a credit reporting agency and the right to know who sent and received the information. n39 In addition, the Fair and Accurate Credit Transactions Act of 2003 (FACTA), n40 which was enacted in 2003 as an amendment to the Fair Credit Reporting Act, imposes special duties upon collectors and those who furnish information to credit reporting agencies in cases of debts arising from fraud or identity theft. Using these rights, a consumer can verify whether the collector made a report to a credit reporting agency as threatened.

[7] UCC Article 3 and the Electronic Funds Transfers Act

Sometimes debt collectors withdraw payments directly from a bank account belonging to the debtor or a friend or family member of the debtor. Typically the collector claims that the account owner gave oral authorization for the withdrawal in a telephone call.

What law governs the withdrawal depends on how the collector processes it. If the collector prepares and submits a paper check (a "preauthorized draft" or "demand draft"), the UCC governs. This is the more typical procedure. But if the collector withdraws money from the account by means of an electronic fund transfer, the Electronic Funds Transfers Act ("EFTA") applies. n41

[a] Preauthorized Drafts and UCC Article 3

To obtain money from a consumer's account by a preauthorized draft, the collector prepares a paper check, signs the account holder's name to it, and submits it to the account holder's bank. The UCC has a very loose definition of signature n42 and provides that drawers can authorize another party to sign for them as their agents. n43

If a collector submits a preauthorized draft without the account holder's authorization, the UCC provides that the account holder is not liable on the draft as long as he or she has examined the bank statements or checks with reasonable promptness and notified the bank promptly. n44 If the collector has placed the account holder's signature on more than one draft without authorization, however, the account holder is liable on all but the first draft unless he or she examined the account statement and reported the problem to the bank within thirty days after the bank mailed out the statement. n45

Even if the account holder has authorized the draft, the UCC provides the consumer the right to stop payment. n46

[b] Electronic Funds Transfers

In the alternative to a preauthorized draft, money can be withdrawn from a person's bank account by an electronic fund transfer. Transfers to and from accounts established primarily for personal, family, or household purposes n47 are governed by the federal Electronic Fund Transfers Act (EFTA). n48

To obtain an electronic fund transfer, the creditor or collector does not submit a check to the account holder's bank. Instead, the account holder authorizes the financial institution to transfer money to the creditor or collector, either by telephone or by debit card. n49 A consumer can also initiate an electronic fund transfer by giving a merchant a check that the merchant uses to capture routing, account, and serial numbers, usually then returning the check to the consumer. n50

For periodic recurring transfers, EFTA requires the account holder's authorization to be in writing, n51 though an electronic signature is acceptable. n52 A recent amendment removed the former prohibition of obtaining authorization by means of tape recording and deferred to the E-Sign Act's interpretation of whether a tape recorded telephone authorization is an electronic signature. n53 The authorization must be identifiable as such to the consumer and the terms must be clear and readily understandable. n54 The consumer must be given a copy of the authorization. n55

EFTA limits a consumer's liability for an unauthorized electronic fund transfer to $50, n56 as long as the consumer reports the unauthorized transfer within sixty days of transmittal of the monthly statement n57 and as long as the consumer did not receive any benefit from the transfer. n58 The consumer also has the right to stop payment of one or more of a series of electronic fund transfers by notifying the financial institution orally or in writing at any time up to three business days prior to the scheduled date of the transfer. n59

Any person who violates EFTA is liable to the consumer in the amount of actual damages, statutory damages of $100 to $1000, costs, and attorney fees. n60 There are specific provisions for statutory damages in class actions. n61 Like the FDCPA, the EFTA gives defendants several defenses such as bona fide error, n62 and it also excuses any errors that were resolved pursuant to the financial institution's error resolution procedure. n63

While EFTA primarily imposes duties on financial institutions, it also requires the payee of a series of electronic fund transfers to give the consumer a copy of the authorization that he or she signed and in some circumstances to give the consumer advance notice of the amount that will be withdrawn. n64 The payee can be subject to liability under EFTA if it violates one of these duties. n65

[c] Electronic Fund Transfers and NACHA Rules

Virtually all financial institutions are members of the Automated Clearing House (ACH) network, and electronic transactions must comply with the rules of that network, called the National Automated Clearing House Association (NACHA) rules. For more detail on the ACH network and NACHA rules, see National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law (3rd ed. and Supp.). Some key aspects of these rules are described in this section.

NACHA rules vary depending on the type of electronic funds transfer. Most likely a debt collector's use of a consumer's account information to initiate an electronic transfer would be considered a "TEL" transaction, which is the NACHA terminology for a Telephone Initiated Entry. This refers to situations where consumers authorize debits from their accounts orally over the telephone. n66

NACHA rules permit a telephone entry only when the consumer has initiated the telephone call or when there is an existing relationship between the merchant and the consumer. TEL entries can only be made for single transfers; these are one time transfers that are initiated by the merchant (in this case a collector acting as an agent for the merchant) in accordance with the consumer's authorization. n67

The collector is required either to tape record the telephone authorization or provide the consumer with a written notice confirming the order prior to the settlement date. n68 The authorization must include the date on or after which the debit to the consumer's account will take place, the amount of the debit, the merchant's name, a telephone number that the consumer can call if she has questions, the date of the authorization, and a statement by the collector that the authorization is for a single entry ACH debit, that is, a one time debit to the consumer's account.

In order to prevent fraud and control risk, n69 effective June 13, 2003, the NACHA rules were amended to give NACHA "the right to request" the merchant's bank to provide detailed information about businesses n70 making TEL entries where NACHA believes the return rate for those businesses exceeds 2.5%. n71

If the consumer claims a debit was unauthorized, the consumer's bank must promptly recredit the consumer's account. n72 Consumers must report unauthorized transfers within fifteen days from when the consumer's bank provides information about the disputed entry. The consumer's notice must be in writing and under penalty of perjury, n73 while under Regulation E the notice can be oral and need not be under the penalty of perjury. n74

Under the NACHA rules, an unauthorized debit entry is defined to include three situations: n75 where the collector did not properly obtain the consumer's authorization; n76 where the debit is in a greater amount than authorized; or where the debit was initiated for settlement earlier than the consumer authorized.

[d] Other Remedies for Unauthorized Withdrawals

A collector who withdraws money from an account without the account holder's authorization should be liable for a deceptive or unfair practice under the state UDAP statute. An unauthorized withdrawal should also be considered the use of a false representation or deceptive means to collect a debt, prohibited by the FDCPA. n77

[8] Discrimination in Choice of Collection Tactics on the Basis of Consumer's Race, Religion, Sex, or Age

If discriminatory collection tactics are used against protected persons, such as African-Americans or Native Americans, the collector may be violating several federal laws. If the collector is a "debt collector" as defined by the FDCPA (usually limited in its application to debt collection agencies), the invidious discrimination should be treated as an "abuse" n78 or an "unfair or unconscionable" n79 means of collecting a debt.

The ECOA n80 provides that it "shall be unlawful for any creditor to discriminate against any applicant, with respect to any aspect of a credit transaction" on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, marital status, age, receipt of public assistance, or exercise of rights under the Consumer Credit Protection Act. n81 The Act's broad language can be construed to prohibit discriminatory collection tactics by a creditor. n82 The FRB regulations promulgated under the ECOA merely repeat this prohibition. n83 The ECOA provides a private action for actual and punitive damages, attorney fees to a successful plaintiff, and federal court jurisdiction. n84

An action under section 1983 of the Civil Rights Act n85 may be available when a collector uses a public official to assist in collecting a debt. To succeed on a section 1983 claim, the plaintiff must show that he or she was denied a federally secured right by a defendant acting under color of state law. n86

[9] Bankruptcy

The U.S. Bankruptcy Code has been extensively amended and renumbered by Public Law 109-8, popularly known as the Bankruptcy Reform Act. Changes become fully effective October 17, 2005. This section retains the existing Bankruptcy Code numbering, but notes several changes relating to the amendments. For more detailed information on these changes, see the forthcoming NCLC's Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice (2005 Supplement). Until the supplement is available, see NCLC's guide to the bankruptcy amendments, to be released in September, 2005, or NCLC

REPORTS Consumer Bankruptcy and Foreclosures Edition (Jan.-Feb. 2005 and Mar.-Apr. 2005.)

The 1978 Bankruptcy Code provides for an automatic stay of all collection efforts at the time of filing a petition for bankruptcy n87 and a similar injunction at the time of discharge of debts. n88 Actions taken in violation of the stay, whether or not the collector has notice, are void and may result in charges of contempt or damages. n89 Courts are divided on whether actions which violate the discharge injunction give rise to a private cause of action which can be asserted outside of bankruptcy court. n90 Upon completion of the bankruptcy case, the automatic stay is replaced by the discharge order. The discharge operates as an injunction that is enforceable in a contempt proceeding, punishable by awards of damages and attorney fees. n91 Although some courts have held otherwise, the discharge provisions may also be enforced through equitable relief available under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a). n92

[10] Special Regulations Affecting Military Personnel and Veterans

[a] Increasing Protections for Military Personnel

In early 1994, a statute authorized garnishment of federal employee pay checks. n93 That law provided that the Consumer Credit Protection Act protection, and many more protective state exemptions, are available to federal employees. n94 Regulations by the several branches of government and the military were authorized to implement this new debt collection tool, n95 which adopt some of the protections provided to consumers by other laws.

[b] Servicemembers Civil Relief Act

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA) n96 limits collection tactics and enforcement of claims against active duty military personnel.. Among its most significant protections are protections against default judgments, n97 tolling of statutes of limitations, n98 a reduction of the interest rate on pre-active duty obligations to 6%, n99 prohibitions against self-help repossession and non-judicial foreclosure, n100 restrictions on eviction from residential premises, n101 and the right to terminate residential or vehicle leases. n102 This law should be reviewed in detail whenever a current or former member of the military, or a dependent, is represented in a debt collection matter. A number of states have similar laws. n103

The Act was originally adopted in 1940 as the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act. In 1991, Congress amended it to provide extra protections for military personnel called to active duty during the Desert Storm campaign. n104 In 2003, Congress rewrote the law completely and renamed it the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act. n105 While the new law preserves most of the features of the existing law, it expands some protections, modernizes the language, updates the caps on coverage of certain types of obligations, and applies existing protections to new situations. It also requires the military services to give written notice to servicemembers of the protections provided by the Act (previously notice did not have to be written). n106

The Act prohibits issuing an adverse credit report, denying, revoking, or changing the terms of a credit transaction, or taking certain other specified adverse actions because of the assertion of rights under the Act. n107 Waivers of the protections relating to modification, termination, or cancellation of contracts, leases, bailments, or mortgage debts, or to repossession, retention, foreclosure, sale, or forfeiture of property, are ineffective unless made by a written agreement signed during or after active duty. n108 In addition to the protections against enforcement of debts and obligations discussed in this subsection, the Act contains a variety of protections relating to taxes, life and health insurance, professional liability insurance, powers of attorney, and other topics.

The Act must be liberally construed to protect members of the armed forces. n109 Since the rewritten law preserves the substance of many existing provisions, decisions under the former law remain relevant. An excellent and detailed JAG Corps manual analyzing the pre-2003 version of the Act may be found on-line. n110 The ABA also has an on-line collection of materials on the Act, n111 including a judge's guide with sample stay motions. n112

[c] Veteran's Home Loan Debt Collections

Federal laws provide for the reduction of veterans' liability on veterans' home loans. This may provide some protections from collection. 38 U.S.C. section 3713 authorizes the Department of Veterans Affairs ("VA") to release from liability a veteran, who has financed his or her home purchase with a VA-guaranteed loan, when the veteran sells the home to a third party buyer who agrees to assume the veteran's VA loan.

[11] Other Federal Restrictions on Debt Collection

Antitrust laws may also limit collection practices.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionTruth in LendingGeneral OverviewCommunications LawFederal ActsCommunications ActGeneral OverviewGovernmentsFederal GovernmentU.S. Postal Service

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. The FDCPA also makes the threat of illegal conduct and criminal debt collection conduct actionable. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692d(1), 1692e(5). States remain free to forbid mailings which, although they conform to federal requirements, are nonetheless deceptive. See, e.g., Syndicated Publ'ns, Inc. v. Montgomery County, 921 F. Supp. 1442 (D. Md. 1996) .

(n2)Footnote 2. 18 U.S.C. § 1341.

(n3)Footnote 3. See United States v. Federal Record Serv. Corp., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7719 (S.D.N.Y. May 21, 1999) (creation of false impression of governmental affiliation by means of paper, print styles, format and language is mail fraud despite printed disclaimer; failure to disclose material fact that defendant's service was available free from Social Security Administration was also violation).

(n4)Footnote 4. 39 U.S.C. § 3009.

(n5)Footnote 5. 15 U.S.C. § 45.

(n6)Footnote 6. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 5.7.2 (7th ed. 2008).

(n7)Footnote 7. 47 U.S.C. § 203.

(n8)Footnote 8. 47 U.S.C § 223(a)(1)(C)-(E).

(n9)Footnote 9. See, e.g., United States v. Cope, 24 Fed. Appx. 414 (6th Cir. 2001) (affirming sentence of 24 months in jail, $1300 fine and $2100 in restitution under 47 U.S.C. § 223(a)(1)(C) for defendant who used victim's account to send annoying and harassing e-mail).

(n10)Footnote 10. 47 U.S.C. § 223(a)(2).

(n11)Footnote 11. 47 U.S.C. § 223(a)(1) and U.S. Sentencing Guidelines, § 2A6.1 in 18 U.S.C., re: Threatening or Harassing Communications.

(n12)Footnote 12. See Moore v. Principal Credit Corp., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6917 (N.D. Miss. 1998) (no private cause of action was available for telephone harassment under either state or federal criminal laws, but debtors stated claims under FDCPA and for intentional infliction of emotional distress).

(n13)Footnote 13. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 2.3.1.4 (7th ed. 2008) for a discussion of the filed rate doctrine.

(n14)Footnote 14. Policy and Rules Concerning the Interstate, Interexchange Marketplace, Implementation of 254(g) of the Communications Act of 1934, CC Docket No. 96-61, Second Report and Order, 11 F.C.C. Rcd. 20730 , 61 Fed. Reg. 59,340 (1996) (Detariffing Order); Policy and Rules Concerning the Interstate, Interexchange Marketplace, Implementation of Section 254(g) of the Communications Act of 1934, CC Docket No. 96-61, Order on Reconsideration, 12 F.C.C.R. 15014 (1997); Policy and Rules Concerning the Interstate, Interexchange Marketplace, Implementation of Section 254(g) of the Communications Act of 1934, CC Docket No. 96-61, Second Order on Reconsideration and Erratum, 14 F.C.C. Rcd. 6004 (1999) ; Common Carrier Bureau Extends Transition Period for Detariffing Consumer Domestic Long Distance Services, CC Docket No. 96-61, Public Notice, DA 01-282.

(n15)Footnote 15. 47 U.S.C. § 160 (forbearance authority granted in § 10 of the Telecommunications Act of 1996). See Policy and Rules Concerning the Interstate, Interexchange Marketplace, Implementation of 254(g) of the Communications Act of 1934, 61 Fed. Reg. 59,340, 59,352 (Nov. 22, 1996) , for a discussion of the statutory authority for detariffing.

(n16)Footnote 16. 47 C.F.R. § 42.10.

(n17)Footnote 17. See Federal Communications Comm'n [hereinafter FCC], Release No. 70-609, 35 Fed. Reg. 9873 (June 16, 1970) . See also Maller v. New England Tel. & Tel. Co., 44 F.C.C.2d 614 (1973) (FCC ordered telephone company either to obtain assurances from collector that its abusive telephone practices had ceased and that reasonable steps would be taken to assure that no abusive telephone calls would be made to anyone in the future, or to suspend the collector's telephone service, after complaint by consumer who had taped collector's harassment; taping conversation without beep tone did not violate the telephone company's tariffs, recording was admissible evidence (if not prohibited by state law)).

(n18)Footnote 18. AT&T Tariff, FCC Nos. 159, 263 (issued Nov. 12, 1968, revised Aug. 16, 1971), reprinted in the Debt Collection Practices Act: Hearings on H.R. 11969 Before the Subcomm. on Consumer Affairs of the House Comm. on Banking, Currency and Housing, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 279 (1976). See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 9.6.4.5 (7th ed. 2008) (telemarketing fraud). See also 47 U.S.C. § 223(a) (prohibiting certain harassing conduct).

(n19)Footnote 19. E.g., Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 272, § 99.

(n20)Footnote 20. See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 2.4.1 (6th ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n21)Footnote 21. See 47 U.S.C. § 207; Ivy Broadcasting Co. v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co., 391 F.2d 486 (2d Cir. 1968) ; MCI Telecomms. Corp. v. Mr. K's Foods, Inc., 1989 WL 10939 (S.D.N.Y. 1989). See also MCI Communications Corp. v. Russell, 861 F. Supp. 280, 281 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (in dicta stated FCC-approved tariffs require "that debts due be collected with an [sic] view to fairness to both debtor and creditor"; MCI required to introduce bills before default judgment may be entered). But cf. Maydak v. Bonded Credit Co., 892 F. Supp. 1304 (D. Or. 1995) (consumer claims under the Federal Communications Act lie against carrier but not its collection agency), aff'd, 96 F.3d 1332 (9th Cir. 1996) .

(n22)Footnote 22. 47 U.S.C. § 207.

(n23)Footnote 23. Lee v. Contel Cellular of the South, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19636 (S.D. Ala. Nov. 21, 1996) .

(n24)Footnote 24. 47 U.S.C. § 208.

(n25)Footnote 25. www.fcc.gov/cib/ccformpage.html. For more information on filing a complaint with the FCC go to www.fcc.gov/cib/consumerfacts/howtofile.html.

(n26)Footnote 26. Policy and Rules Concerning the Interstate, Interexchange Marketplace, Implementation of 254(g) of the Communications Act of 1934, CC Docket No. 96-61, Second Report and Order, 11 FCC Rcd. 20730 , 61 Fed. Reg. 59,340 (1996) (Detariffing Order) PP 5, 38.

(n27)Footnote 27. Caller I.D.: Whose Privacy Needs Protection?, 43 NACAA News 1 (Washington, D.C.: National Ass'n of Consumer Agency Administrators Mar. 1990).

(n28)Footnote 28. 47 C.F.R. §§ 64.1600/-/64.1603.

(n29)Footnote 29. 47 C.F.R. § 64.1601(b). Note that the FCC may also add 866 and 855 as toll-free exchanges in the future.

(n30)Footnote 30. 47 C.F.R. § 64.1603.

(n31)Footnote 31. Romine v. Diversified Collection Servs., Inc., 155 F.3d 1142 (9th Cir. 1998) . Accord Silva v. National Telewire Corp., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 338 (D.N.H. Jan. 3, 2000) (where Telewire sent a letter stating that a high priority voice telegram was waiting, and captured phone number when debtor called to receive telegram, this went beyond "mere information gathering or message delivery" and "created a sense of urgency" so as to make Telewire a debt collector within the meaning of the FDCPA). See also Lockemy v. Comprehensive Collection Servs., Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18887 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 17, 1998) (where defendant did not request debtors receiving its "Priority Gram" to contact defendant, and did not obtain information from debtors, it was not a debt collector).

(n32)Footnote 32. LeVine, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Mar. 20, 1998) ("Telewire Electronic Message" sent to consumer- debtors serves a collection function); Stanley, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Sept. 13, 1996) ("Telegram Notification" sent to consumer-debtors serves a collection function). See also Bergstrom, FTC Informal Staff Letter (Nov. 17, 1995) (to the extent that letter which proposes to obtain alleged debtors' telephone numbers to pass on to collection agencies serves a collection function, albeit indirectly, company sending letter would be covered by FDCPA).

(n33)Footnote 33. Romine v. Diversified Collection Servs., 155 F.3d 1142, 1148-49 (9th Cir. 1998) .

(n34)Footnote 34. Milhollin v. Ford Motor Co., 444 U.S. 555, 100 S. Ct. 790, 63 L. Ed. 2d 22 (1980) .

(n35)Footnote 35. The new amount financed may include earned finance charges and charge continuation of credit insurance without triggering the new disclosure requirement. 12 C.F.R. § 226.20(a)(4).

(n36)Footnote 36. See Ch. 1, "Truth In Lending," § 1.10 supra .

(n37)Footnote 37. 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968, reprinted in Vol. 1B infra.

(n38)Footnote 38. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1681-1681u, reprinted in Vol. 1B infra. See generally National Consumer Law Center, Fair Credit Reporting (6th ed. 2006 and Supp.).

(n39)Footnote 39. 15 U.S.C. § 1681g. See Ch. 16, "Fair Credit Reporting," §§ 16.03, 16.04 infra .

(n40)Footnote 40. Fair and Accurate Credit Transactions Act of 2003, Pub. L. No. 108-159 (Dec. 4, 2003). NCLC's complete analysis of FACTA is available at www.consumerlaw.org/initiatives/facta/nclc_analysis.html.

(n41)Footnote 41. See generally National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law (3rd ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n42)Footnote 42. U.C.C. §§ 1-201(39), 3-401(b).

(n43)Footnote 43. U.C.C. §§ 3-401(a), 3-402, 4-401(a). See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law § 1.4.1 (3rd ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n44)Footnote 44. U.C.C. § 4-406(c).

(n45)Footnote 45. U.C.C. § 4-406(d).

(n46)Footnote 46. U.C.C. § 4-403. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law § 1.6.1 (2d ed. 2002).

(n47)Footnote 47. See 15 U.S.C. § 1693a(2) (definition of "account").

(n48)Footnote 48. 15 U.S.C. § 1693. The Act, the regulations under it, and the Official Staff Interpretations relating to it are reproduced in National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law, App. D (2d ed. 2002).

(n49)Footnote 49. See Official Staff Interpretations Regarding Regulation E, §§ 205.3(b)-1(iii), (vi), 205.3(c)(6).

(n50)Footnote 50. See Official Staff Interpretations Regarding Regulation E, §§ 205.3(b)-1(v).

(n51)Footnote 51. 15 U.S.C. § 1693e(a).

(n52)Footnote 52. FRB Official Staff Interpretation Regarding Regulation E, § 205.10(b)-5.

(n53)Footnote 53. 71 Fed. Reg. 1638, 1649-1650 (Jan. 10, 2006) .

(n54)Footnote 54. FRB Official Staff Interpretation Regarding Regulation E, § 205.10(b)-6.

(n55)Footnote 55. 12 C.F.R. § 205.10(b).

(n56)Footnote 56. The cap is higher if the unauthorized fund transfer resulted from loss or theft of a card or other means of access that the consumer did not report promptly. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law § 4.5 (2d ed. 2002).

(n57)Footnote 57. 15 U.S.C. § 1693g(a).

(n58)Footnote 58. 15 U.S.C. § 1693a(11) (definition of "unauthorized electronic fund transfer").

(n59)Footnote 59. 15 U.S.C. § 1693e(a). See Broxton-King v. La Salle Bank, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14653 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 19, 2001) (denying motion to dismiss where bank refused to stop payment because consumer had failed to pay prior overdraft fee).

(n60)Footnote 60. 15 U.S.C. § 1693m(a).

(n61)Footnote 61. 15 U.S.C. § 1693m(a)(2)(B), (b)(2).

(n62)Footnote 62. 15 U.S.C. § 1693m(c), (d), (e).

(n63)Footnote 63. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1693m(a), 1693f.

(n64)Footnote 64. 15 U.S.C. § 1693e.

(n65)Footnote 65. FRB Official Staff Interpretations Regarding Regulation E, § 205.10(b)-2 (third party payee commits violation by failing to obtain authorization for preauthorized transfers in writing or failing to give a copy to the consumer).

(n66)Footnote 66. ACH Rules 2.1.5 and 13.1.58.

(n67)Footnote 67. ACH Rule 13.1.57.

(n68)Footnote 68. The settlement date is the date an entry is reflected on the books of the Federal Reserve Bank. ACH Rule 13.1.55. See ACH Rules, App. Two, at OR 78.

(n69)Footnote 69. Notice of Amendment to the 2003 ACH Rules (Supp. #1, Mar. 2003).

(n70)Footnote 70. The rules apply whether the business uses a bank directly or through a third party service provider. OR 2.11.3.

(n71)Footnote 71. OR 2.11.3.

(n72)Footnote 72. ACH Rule 7.6.1. The rules discussed in this section do not apply to ARC, POP, or RCK entries. See also National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law (2d ed. 2002 and Supp.).

(n73)Footnote 73. ACH Rule 7.6.5.

(n74)Footnote 74. Under Reg. E, the notice can be either oral or in writing, although if it is oral, the bank may require a written confirmation of the oral notice within 10 business days of the oral notice. Reg. E § 205.11(b)(2).

(n75)Footnote 75. ACH Rule 7.6.6.

(n76)Footnote 76. ACH Rule 2.1.2 contains those requirements. See Part 1.4.1.

(n77)Footnote 77. 15 U.S.C. § 1692e(10).

(n78)Footnote 78. 15 U.S.C. § 1692d.

(n79)Footnote 79. 15 U.S.C. § 1692f.

(n80)Footnote 80. 15 U.S.C. § 1691.

(n81)Footnote 81. 15 U.S.C. § 1691a (emphasis added).

(n82)Footnote 82. Sharp v. Chartwell Fin. Servs., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3143 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 28, 2000) (collector's use of racial and gender-based epithets during collection phone calls held actionable); FDIC v. Allen, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17565 (W.D. Okla. Nov. 3, 1988) . Accord Roseman v. Premier Fin. Servs., L.P., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13836 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 3, 1997) .

(n83)Footnote 83. FRB Reg. B, 12 C.F.R. § 202.4.

(n84)Footnote 84. 15 U.S.C. § 1691e. See Ch. 5, "Credit Discrimination," § 5.11 supra .

(n85)Footnote 85. 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

(n86)Footnote 86. Owens v. Swan, 962 F. Supp. 1436 (D. Utah 1997) , citing Flagg Bros., Inc. v. Brooks, 436 U.S. 149, 98 S. Ct. 1729, 56 L. Ed. 185 (1978) . See also Audio Odyssey, Ltd. v. Brenton First Nat'l Bank, 245 F.3d 721 (storeowner stated claim for Fourth Amendment violations where deputies locked up store, although replevin writ authorized seizure only of movable property), related proceeding, 255 F.3d 512 (2001) , reinstated on reh'g, 286 F.3d 498 (8th Cir. 2002) , cert. denied, 154 L. Ed. 2d 359 (U.S. 2002) ; Taunt v. Barman (In re Barman), 252 B.R. 403 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2000) (Fourth Amendment applies to inspection by bankruptcy trustee). Cf. National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collections, § 9.12 (6th ed. and supp.) for a full discussion of 1983 claims and other constitutional torts.

(n87)Footnote 87. 11 U.S.C. § 362(a)(6).

(n88)Footnote 88. 11 U.S.C. § 524(a)(2).

(n89)Footnote 89. See Collier Consumer Bankruptcy Practice Guide Ch. 8 (Matthew Bender); Collier Consumer Bankruptcy Forms Pt. CS6, §§ CS6.31, CS6.32 (Matthew Bender); National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice § 9.6 (7th ed. 2004). Section 342 of the Bankruptcy Code, as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 and effective for cases filed on or after October 17, 2005, contains new requirements for notice to creditors, and provides that a monetary penalty may not be imposed on a creditor if effective notice is not given by the debtor. See also, National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 2.2.5 (5th ed. 2004), for discussion of relationship between Bankruptcy Code and claims brought under state and federal debt collection statutes.

(n90)Footnote 90. Compare Pertuso v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 233 F.3d 417 (6th Cir. 2000) (holding that there is no private right of action other than contempt), with Bessette v. Avco Fin. Servs., Inc., 230 F.3d 439 (1st Cir. 2000) (holding that there is class action remedy for violation of discharge injunction), amended, reh'g denied, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 33737 , cert. denied, mot. granted, 532 U.S. 1048 (2001) . See also Bolen v. Bass & Assocs., P.C., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16964 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 18, 2001) (consumer may not proceed under FDCPA for violation of Bankruptcy Code § 524(c) because only remedy was to seek contempt sanctions in bankruptcy court); Vogt v. Dynamic Recovery Servs., 257 B.R. 65 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2000) (FDCPA claim for violating bankruptcy discharge dismissed without prejudice as outside bankruptcy court's jurisdiction five years after discharge was granted; demand by creditor for payment, as condition to dropping debt from debtor's credit report, was not an "act" to extract payment); DuBois v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5138 (D. Minn. Jan. 19, 2001) (consumers' motion to refer their claim under FDCPA and Bankruptcy Code to bankruptcy court was denied as named plaintiffs' discharge was more than four years old), subs. appeal, 276 F.3d 1019 (8th Cir. 2002) ; Howell v. Ocwen Fed. Bank, FSB, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15710 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 27, 2001) (since alleged FDCPA violations occurred during course of bankruptcy, court ruled that matter should be dealt with by bankruptcy court using remedies allowed by Bankruptcy Code, rather than the FDCPA; decision surveys case law regarding the FDCPA's interplay with bankruptcy). See also Diamante v. Solomon & Solomon, P.C., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14818 (N.D.N.Y. Sept. 18, 2001) (state and FDCPA claims arising from freezing of bank account in effort to collect discharged debt preempted by bankruptcy law); Tate v. NationsBanc Mortg. Corp. (In re Tate), 253 B.R. 653 (Bankr. W.D.N.C. 2000) (federal bankruptcy law preempts UDAP and state debt collection statute claims based on creditor's addition of attorney fees to Chapter 13 proof of claim). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collections, § 2.2 (6th ed. and supp.).

(n91)Footnote 91. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice § 14.5.1.4 (8th ed. 2006 and Supp.).

(n92)Footnote 92. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice § 14.5 (8th ed. 2006 and Supp.); R. Van Meter v. American State Bank, 89 B.R. 32, 1988-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68318 (W.D. Ark. 1988) (repayment agreement not a voluntary payment under 11 U.S.C. § 524(f) where creditor bank required borrower to obtain an additional advance to repay a discharged debt as a condition to the bank's approval of a home mortgage loan); In re Esposito, 119 B.R. 305 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1990) (where creditor promised debtors post-petition that it would reinstate business relation and sell debtor's equipment on open account if debtors paid $8000 toward discharged debt but then failed to sell debtors the equipment after they paid, creditor was required to repay $8000 and attorney fees); In re Bowling, 116 B.R. 659 (Bankr. S.D. Ind. 1990) (where post-discharge transaction was not deemed a "voluntary payment" of the discharged debt but rather an agreement to reaffirm the debt, debtors could recover attorney fees for violation of Bankruptcy Code).

(n93)Footnote 93. 5 U.S.C. § 5520a (allows garnishment of federal employees' wages including employees of executive, judicial and legislative agencies, members of Congress and military personnel).

(n94)Footnote 94. 15 U.S.C. § 5520a(b).

(n95)Footnote 95. 32 C.F.R. §§ 112-113 (1995).

(n96)Footnote 96. 50 U.S.C. app. §§ 501-596.

(n97)Footnote 97. 50 U.S.C. app. §§ 521, 522. See also National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, Ch. 7 (1st ed. 2008).

(n98)Footnote 98. 50 U.S.C. app. § 526. See also National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, Ch. 7.6 (1st ed. 2008).

(n99)Footnote 99. 50 U.S.C. app.§ 527. See also National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, Ch. 7.7 (1st ed. 2008).

(n100)Footnote 100. 50 U.S.C. app.§ 532. See also National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, § 7.8 (1st ed. 2008).

(n101)Footnote 101. 50 U.S.C. app.§ 531. See also National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, § 7.11.1 (1st ed. 2008).

(n102)Footnote 102. 50 U.S.C. app. § 535. See also National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, § 7.11.2 (1st ed. 2008).

(n103)Footnote 103. See, e.g., N.Y. Military Law § 300 et seq.

(n104)Footnote 104. Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act Amendments of 1991, Pub. L. No. 102-12, 105 Stat. 34 (Mar. 18, 1991).

(n105)Footnote 105. Pub. L. 108-189, 117 Stat. 2835 (Dec. 19, 2003).

(n106)Footnote 106. § 105 (50 U.S.C. app. § 515) (compare to former 50 U.S.C. app. § 515).

(n107)Footnote 107. § 108 (50 U.S.C. app. § 518). See Cathey v. First Republic Bank, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13150 (W.D. La. July 6, 2001) (provision of former version of Act barring changes in credit terms does not forbid new loan to cover cost overruns which occur while commercial borrower is serving abroad).

(n108)Footnote 108. § 107 (50 U.S.C. app. § 517).

(n109)Footnote 109. Boone v. Lightner, 319 U.S. 561 (1943) ; Engstrom v. First National Bank, 47 F.3d 1459, 1462 (5th Cir. 1995) ; Antioch Co. v. Scrapbook Borders, Inc., 210 F.R.D. 645 (D. Minn. 2002) ; Cathey v. First Republic Bank, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13150, at *12 (W.D. La. July 6, 2001) ("Any doubts that arise as to the scope and application of the Act should be resolved in favor of the military person"); In re Burrell, 230 B.R. 309 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 1999) ; Murdock v. Murdock, 338 S.C. 322, 526 S.E.2d 241 (App. 1999) . But cf. Chace v. Lopez, 89 S.W.3d 788 (Tex. App. 2002) (Act to be liberally construed but cannot be stretched to prohibit prejudgment interest on tort claim where nothing in Act addresses this topic).

(n110)Footnote 110. www.jagcnet.army.mil/TJAGSA (Publication JA 260).

(n111)Footnote 111. www.abanet.org/family/military.

(n112)Footnote 112. Mark E. Sullivan, A Judge's Guide to the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 8 Fair Debt Collection

1-8 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 8.09

§ 8.09 Other State Remedies

There are a variety of other state laws that can come into play in fighting abusive debt collectors. n1 While there are some patterns, each state has a somewhat unique legal framework that bears close analysis. The FDCPA contains broad non-preemption language, which applies to "the laws of any state with respect to debt collection." n2 This language makes it clear that the FDCPA is intended only to set minimum standards; states are free to provide greater protection to the consumer. A collector may nonetheless raise the issue whether the non-preemption language protects a common law cause of action. One court has held that common law claims are preempted, n3 but a better-reasoned opinion holds that they are not. n4

[1] Identity Theft

Victims of identity theft, an increasingly common crime, are often vigorously dunned for debts they do not owe, despite their efforts to clear their records. Their credit is often ruined by false reports to credit bureaus, and they may even be subject to criminal prosecution. These consumers may have several tort causes of action available to them. The key question will be, given the increasing frequency of this crime, what investigation should a reasonable creditor make before dunning a consumer, referring a claim to a collector, reporting a debt to a credit bureau or instituting a criminal prosecution? n5 Failure to reasonably investigate will be probative on the issues of malice, recklessness, lack of probable cause, and reckless disregard for truth--elements of several of the causes of action discussed in this chapter. A consumer may also have a cause of action for negligence against the creditor who let the thief get away with the deception.

[2] Consumer Protections Under State Debt Collection Statutes and Regulations

[a] Overview

State debt collection statutes may provide the primary consumer remedy for debt collection abuse in many instances, particularly as to creditors who are not covered by the Federal FDCPA. In some states, statutory damages and court-awarded attorney fees for successful consumers are available.

All but eight states have statutes specifically dealing with abuses by debt collectors.

Although state debt collection statutes are varied, certain common forms exist, such as setting standards for licensing and regulating collection agencies, consumer protection laws, and/or criminal penalties against misconduct, such as simulating legal process. Eleven states have more than one type of statute; twenty-six states license some debt collectors; twenty-five state debt collection statutes provide an express private right of action for consumers. A private right of action is implied under some of the other statutes.

[b] Validity of State Debt Collection Statutes Upheld

Although cases are few, these laws have been upheld by courts. n6

[c] State Debt Collection Statutes' Coverage

Some debt collection statutes apply only to collection agencies, while others also include creditors collecting their own debts. Debt collection statutes are frequently limited in their coverage to "debt," "credit," or "consumer" transactions. Some "consumer" laws, such as state debt collection statutes, may protect tenants as well. While landlords are often "creditors" who are immune from liability under the Federal FDCPA, 15 U.S.C. sections 1692a(4) and (6)(A), they may be subject to debt collection and other state consumer protection statutes. Landlord's servicing agents, e.g., attorneys, collection agencies, and realty companies, may be subject to FDCPA liability. n7 One court allowed a state debt collection act claim to go forward against a "settlement service" that dunned a consumer who was being sued by a record company for copyright infringement by file sharing. n8

Some state debt collection statutes may apply to business as well as consumer transactions. Some debt collection statutes cover out-of-state debt collectors who collect debts from residents of the legislating states; the constitutionality of such provisions has been upheld. n9 Consumers being dunned by an out-of-state collector may also be protected by the debt collection laws of the collector's home state. n10 State debt collection statutes may also apply different substantive standards than the FDCPA. One court, for example, has held that the Oregon debt collection statute does not apply the FDCPA's "least sophisticated consumer" standard. n11 Government entities are generally exempted from state debt collection laws, either by statutory provision, or by sovereign immunity, but collection agencies hired to collect government debts do not receive this exemption. n12 Some states have special provisions covering private child support collectors. Illinois, for example, excuses compliance with some but not all of the limitations that apply to other collectors. n13 The debt collection provisions of the Colorado Uniform Consumer Credit Code explicitly exempt the collection of student loans. n14

On the other hand, the coverage of some UDAP statutes is patchy. Some exclude certain types of creditors such as banks or utility companies. Some UDAP statutes also have special preconditions to suit or create special statutory defenses.

[d] State Debt Collection Statutes' Protections

[i] Privacy

Some debt collection statutes protect privacy by prohibiting undue publicity of a consumer's debt. Employer contacts are prohibited by some statutes' protecting the consumer's job as well as privacy. n15 Where state statutes provide a cause of action for damage to reputation resulting from a creditor's inaccurate or incomplete reporting to a credit reporting agency, state law is preempted by the FCRA, which requires a showing of malice--that is, a knowing falsehood or reckless disregard for truth. n16 A prohibition on contacting a represented consumer may be violated by contacting the consumer to reaffirm a debt discharged in bankruptcy. n17

[ii] Abusive Collection Activities Prohibited

Abusive debt collection conduct is proscribed by many state debt collection statutes and has been addressed by several courts. n18

[iii] Unfair and Deceptive Debt Collection Activities Prohibited

Deceptive debt collection tactics have been the subject of frequent decisions under state debt collection statutes. Presumably, the standards developed under the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, and UDAP statutes will be applied under these provisions. n19

Many statutes prohibit unfair collection activities. n20 UDAP statutes offer various advantages over other debt collection claims. They generally cover creditors as well as collectors. Most have attractive remedies such as treble damages, statutory damages, and attorney fees. UDAP statutes usually have more relaxed proof requirements than tort claims. Many offer a longer statute of limitations than the FDCPA. n21 In a number of states, a violation of a state debt collection statute is a per se violation of the UDAP statute. n22

On the other hand, the coverage of some UDAP statutes is patchy. Some exclude certain types of creditors such as banks or utility companies. Some UDAP statutes also have special preconditions to suit or create special statutory defenses.

[e] State Debt Collection Statutes' Remedies

The remedies provided by state debt collection statutes vary widely, allowing recovery for actual damages, statutory damages, attorney fees, punitive damages, revocation, termination, or denial of a debt collection license, injunctive relief, etc. n23

[3] General State Consumer Protection Statutes Prohibiting Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices (UDAP)

[a] UDAP Coverage of Debt Collection Activities

During the late 1960s and the 1970s, almost every state passed laws protecting consumers from deceptive sales practices. These statutes are referred to as "Little FTC Acts," "Consumer Protection Acts," or "UDAP" (unfair and deceptive acts and practices) statutes. They are often interpreted to prohibit unfair or deceptive practices by debt collectors.

Whether collection agencies, creditors, attorneys, loans, and debt collection activities in general are covered by a particular state's UDAP statute depends upon the language of the statute and its interpretation by the courts. n24

[b] Deceptive Debt Collection Activities

Numerous collection activities have been found to be "deceptive" under state UDAP statutes, including: sending consumers dunning letters that appeared to have been issued by the government; misrepresenting the imminence of suit; falsely implying that a referral to an attorney would occur; misrepresenting contact with the consumer's employer; threatening to enforce illegal contractual provisions; exaggerating the creditor's contractual or legal remedies; collecting an amount greater than actually owed; disguising usurious lending as a "check cashing service," failing to disclose the interest rate; threatening to criminally prosecute debtors under NSF laws; and attempting to collect a debt barred by the statute of limitations. Dunning the consumer for attorney fees that are not actually owed is deceptive. n25

[c] Unfair and Unconscionable Debt Collection Activities Under UDAP Statutes

State UDAP statutes have also been held to disallow debt collection activities that are "unfair" or "unconscionable." Some statutes provide for injunctive relief. As with some debt collection statutes, some UDAP statutes require a showing of actual damages to pursue a private action.

[d] UDAP Remedies for Debt Collection Violations

All UDAP statutes except Iowa's provide a private cause of action for at least actual damages resulting from a violation. n26 Relief may include return of funds collected. n27 Emotional distress damages are recoverable in some but not all jurisdictions. n28 Many UDAP statutes provide for multiple or punitive damages and reasonable attorney fees n29 in successful consumer actions. Some statutes provide for injunctive relief.

Many UDAP statutes require a showing of actual damages as a precondition of suit. n30 In states that merely require the consumer to be "aggrieved," it may be sufficient to show that the collection activities imposed a burden or obligation on the consumer. n31 In other states, the loss must be of money or property, or must be "pecuniary," so a debtor who has suffered only emotional distress may have difficulty making a UDAP claim. n32 Even in these states, however, the loss of money or property may be small in amount, n33 and it may not be necessary to prove the exact amount. n34

[4] State Credit Repair Organization Statutes

[a] Introduction

Most states have passed statutes to deal with abuses by credit repair organizations. n35 These statutes, often termed the state Credit Services Organization Act, offer strong remedies and have the potential of applying to certain debt collection activities. They typically follow the federal Credit Repair Organizations Act n36 closely in some respects, but differ in significant ways, often imposing additional requirements such as registration and bonding.

[b] Coverage

Like the federal Credit Repair Organizations Act, all or nearly all state credit repair statutes cover organizations that offer to improve an individual's credit rating, in return for the payment of money or other valuable consideration. This language should be interpreted consistently with the federal statute to cover debt collectors who represent to debtors that payment will improve their credit records. n37

In addition, most state credit repair statutes cover organizations that assist or offer to assist consumers in obtaining extensions of credit. These statutes may cover debt collectors who offer to assist the consumer in obtaining credit to pay the debt. n38 Again, the assistance must be offered or provided in return for the payment of money or other valuable consideration, but the collector's receipt of the proceeds of the extension of credit may meet this requirement. n39

State credit repair laws typically exempt non-profit organizations; licensed real estate brokers and attorneys when acting within the scope of their licenses; broker-dealers registered with the SEC or the Commodity Futures Trading Commission ("CFTC"); consumer reporting agencies; credit unions; banks eligible for FDIC or FSLIC insurance; banks and other lenders authorized under federal or state law; and lenders approved by HUD for participation in federal mortgage insurance. A smaller number exempt debt collectors, debt adjusters, mortgage brokers, accountants, holders of other licenses, or other entities.

[c] Substantive Prohibitions

Debt collectors that fall under state credit repair statutes are likely to have made no attempt to comply with the statute's substantive requirements. Typical requirements of state credit repair statutes include:

- Registration and bonding, requirements that go beyond the federal statute;
- Disclosures to the consumer about rights available under the FCRA;

- Written contracts with specified provisions, including a description of the services to be provided;

- A prohibition against charging the consumer for a referral to a retail seller who will or may extend credit to the consumer on the same terms as those available to the general public;

- A three- or five-day right to cancel.

Most, like the federal statute, also prohibit certain misrepresentations and deceptive acts. A number of state statutes explicitly prohibit waivers of the statutory protections.

Some state credit repair statutes, like the federal statute, prohibit organizations from accepting payment from the buyer before performing services. Many allow advance payment once the organization has posted a bond, however.

[d] Private Remedies

Almost all state credit repair statutes provide a private right of action to consumers. Some do so both by making a violation actionable under the state UDAP statute n40 and by creating a special cause of action.

The special causes of action offered by state credit repair laws are often broader than those authorized by the state UDAP statute or the state debt collection practices statute. Usually the statutes that create special causes of action authorize punitive damages and attorney fees. Many, like the federal statute, n41 set as minimum damages the total amount paid by the consumer. n42 A few set a dollar amount, such as $1000, as minimum damages.

[5] Unauthorized and Unethical Practice of Law by Creditors, Lawyers, and Collection Agencies

[a] Unauthorized Practice of Law by Creditors

Every state has laws restricting the practice of law to licensed lawyers. While most unauthorized practice of law cases in the debt collection context have involved the unauthorized practice of law by collection agencies, some cases have involved creditors whose officer or employee represented them in court. n43

[b] Unethical Practice of Law by Lawyers

The collection activities of a lawyer may be unethical, such as lending one's name to a collection agency letterhead and failing to authorize or supervise personally court proceedings brought by the collection agency in the lawyer's name.

A lawyer's interstate collection letters must avoid misrepresenting the lawyer's authority to sue where he or she is not admitted to practice.

Lawyers may also violate legal ethics when attempting to collect their own fees. Lawyers have been sanctioned for debt collection harassment, n44 and for revealing client secrets in the course of a fee dispute. n45 A lawyer's retainer agreement which called for a 1% per month late fee, plus costs and attorney fees if collection efforts were required, was held unenforceable because it was unfair and violated the rules of professional conduct. n46

[c] Unauthorized Practice of Law by Collection Agencies

States have taken very different positions as to what activities of a collection agency constitute unauthorized practice of law, but many states have such laws. Some bar associations and bar committees have issued advisory opinions defining activities of collection agencies or creditors that may constitute unauthorized practice of law. Such acts are also UDAP violations. n47 A lawyer who fails to properly supervise non-lawyer employees will be responsible for their unauthorized practice, or other misconduct. n48 Some states prohibit a contingent fee collector from filing suit in its own name. n49 Collection agencies may not file suit on behalf of creditors. n50

[d] Remedies for Unauthorized Practice of Law

Courts are divided as to what remedies are available to consumers affected by a collection agency's or creditor's unauthorized practice of law.

Some courts, however, allow suits by consumers to enjoin debt collectors' unauthorized practice of law. The FTC staff considers unauthorized practice of law (as determined by state law) by a debt collector to violate the provision of the FDCPA prohibiting "unfair" practices, if the collector is covered by the Act. An Ohio statute was recently revised to allow a private right of action for unauthorized practice, but only if the state supreme court had made a finding of such practice. n51

[6] State Criminal Statutes

A debt collector's misconduct may be so extreme that it violates state criminal statutes or local criminal ordinances. Local criminal law may prohibit telephone abuse, unauthorized practice of law, and larceny by trick, extortion, and other crimes.

[a] Other State Causes of Action

Debt collection activities may support common law causes of action such as trespass, breach of peace, etc. n52 Collection of debts for most types of utility service is governed by specific state laws and regulations. n53

[7] Tort Remedies

Abusive collection activity may give rise to a variety of tort claims, including intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress, invasion of privacy, intentional interference with employment relationships, defamation, malicious prosecution, and abuse of process. n54 Ordinary tort actions against governmental creditors will, however, raise special problems: the consent to suit found in federal and state tort claims acts generally excludes certain collection activities, i.e., taxes, and the complexities of municipal liability law are beyond the scope of this treatise. n55

[8] Consumer Protection Defenses to Medical Bills

A few states recognizing the special burden created by health care debts, have enacted statutes limiting health care debt collection, or otherwise assisting debtors facing health problems. n56 For example, Nevada and Ohio forbid execution on the primary residence for health care debts during the lifetime of the debtor and certain specified dependents; a lien may be created which may be foreclosed only after the residence ceases to be occupied by the protected persons. n57 West Virginia provides a larger homestead exemption for debts resulting from "catastrophic illness or injury." n58 Illinois limits the percentage of a personal injury recovery which may be subject to a lien by certain health care providers. Kansas forbids wage garnishments for two months after the return to employment of a debtor after an illness of the debtor or of a family member which has kept the debtor out of work for two or more weeks. n59

Connecticut has a comprehensive law to protect medical debtors. n60 California also prohibits health facilities from detaining a patient for non-payment of a medical debt. n61

California enacted a new statute requiring hospitals to make a copy of its "charge description master" publicly available. The "charge description master" is the schedule of gross or "retail" prices for services or items charged by the hospital. n62 The intent of the statute was both to enable consumers to comparison shop and to provide an impetus for hospitals limit their markups. n63

New Jersey prohibits collection activities against patients found eligible for charity care. n64 In addition, New Jersey has established a "Hospital Care Payment Commission" to which hospitals can voluntarily assign medical debt. n65 The Commission has the power to set-off state tax refunds and other state refunds to collect medical debts, n66 but the hospital agrees to first determine that patients are not eligible for charity care. n67

In addition, the full panoply of laws that protect consumers in general from abusive debt collection tactics should also protect health care consumers who are subject to abusive collection tactics by health care providers and their agents, including the FDCPA, state debt collection statutes, and other common law claims such as duress, as well as special defenses under statutes creating a duty to provide free or reduced cost care. n68

[9] Enjoining Abusive Debt Collection Practices

Injunctive relief is available in most states to persons suffering or about to suffer irreparable injury for which there is no adequate remedy at law. The unauthorized practice of law and violations of state statutes prohibiting unfair and deceptive acts and practices may also be subjects of injunctive relief.

[10] State Restrictions on the Recovery of Collection Expenses

[a] Overview

The common law strictly limits the damages a creditor may recover from debtors for failing to timely pay a debt to the interest provided in the contract or by statute. Dissatisfied with this limitation on their profits, creditors and collectors have through their adhesion contracts and legislation sought additional charges from consumers allegedly to compensate for their collection expenses.

The most common inroad on the common law rule prohibiting recovery of more than interest for the failure of a consumer to pay a debt on time is the allowance by some courts of an attorney fee award for a creditor if it is authorized by the contract.

Generally, in the absence of a contractual or state statutory provision providing for the recovery of collection expenses or attorney fees, collection expenses are not recoverable as damages for the collection of a debt, and many state statutes and cases prohibit or limit the recovery of collection expenses even when apparently authorized by a consumer credit contract.

[b] Charging Collection Fees Proportional to Debt and Other Excessive Fees Penalize Consumers

Creditors and collectors often seek to recover the collection fees they pay their lawyers from the consumers pursued by their lawyers. Most often they seek a fee calculated as a percentage of the debt rather than based on the actual amount of the time and effort by the lawyers. When the debt is large, the fees generated by the percentage method may greatly exceed the actual cost of recovery for the particular debt.

Frequently, there are grounds to challenge these fees. Some jurisdictions prohibit creditors from recovering their attorney fees from consumers entirely, while others allow the creditor to recover only the actual collection costs incurred or limit recovery to only "reasonable" attorney fees.

[c] State Legislation Limiting Recovery of Collection Expenses

There are numerous state statutory restrictions on a collector's recovery or attempted recovery of its collection expenses from the debtor. n69 Statutory restrictions may be contained in statutes that may apply only to specific creditors, to certain types of credit, or to special collection expenses.

A few states permit recovery of collection fees in certain circumstances even when such fees are not authorized by the consumer credit contract. Thus, statutes may provide that a collector of dishonored checks may add a small, e.g., $5.00 to $15.00, collection charge even in the absence of a contractual basis for the charge. More recent state legislation allows larger bad check charges, in the $20 to $30 range, or as a percentage of the amount of the check. Some courts have found authority for service charges on returned checks in a provision of Article 2 of the UCC that allows a person in the position of the seller to recover incidental damages for nonpayment of the price of goods. n70 Courts that are less anxious to find authority for returned check charges correctly hold that Article 3, not Article 2, applies to collection of dishonored checks that have been sold to a third party. n71 And some states have statutorily overruled the American Rule on attorney fees by generally permitting courts to award attorney fees to prevailing parties in many types of civil suits. Many state statutes also expressly permit the recovery of a limited amount of attorney or collection fees in collection suits if the fees are authorized by the consumer credit contract. A few states allow attorney fee awards in a suit on an "account stated" or "open account" where there is no question raised as to the amount owed.

Some state debt collection statutes allow fees only where expressly permitted by law. Other statutes expressly prohibit the recovery of any attorney or collection fees.

[d] Case Law: Noncontractual Collection Fees

Unless the credit agreement or state statute provides for collection expenses or unless the debtor's defense is frivolous, attorney fees or other collection expenses may not be awarded as damages or taxed as costs in a collection action.

[e] Case Law: Contractual Collection Fees

[i] General

There is a vast amount of case law dealing with the collector's recovery of one type of collection expense--attorney collection fees that are provided by the credit contract, but only a few cases deal with collection expenses of nonattorneys or with attorney fees when they are not specifically authorized by the credit agreement. Consequently, the numerous cases limiting court-awarded attorney fees are usually the best precedent for other collection expense issues, either directly or by analogy. n72

Courts have divided into three main camps regarding the validity and construction of clauses in credit contracts providing for the recovery of collection expenses, including attorney fees. The three main camps are: 1) Freedom of Contract Approach (these courts generally enforce contractual provisions for attorney fees or collection expenses on the premise that the parties are free to contract without judicial interference); 2) Indemnity Approach (these courts uphold the validity of such clauses as binding agreements by the debtor to indemnify the creditor's attorney fees, but limit the enforcement of such clauses in ways consistent with indemnification theory); and 3) Invalid Contract Approach (these courts hold that contract clauses providing for the recovery of collection fees are invalid in the absence of statutory authorization of such fees).

[11] Threats to Criminally Prosecute Consumer Under Bad Check Laws

A troublesome debt collection tactic is to threaten consumers with prosecution under criminal bad check statutes.When a consumer writes a check which is dishonored (bounced) because the consumer's account has nonsufficient funds (NSF) or credit to cover the check, or was closed, the person holding the check may threaten to initiate a bad check criminal prosecution against the consumer. Some collectors may solicit checks from financially distressed consumers and are indifferent to the sufficiency of funds to cover the check, knowing that the possibility of a bad check prosecution provides the collector with powerful collection leverage. Payday lenders, who provide small, short term loans, often at triple-digit interest rates, commonly use this method of coercion. n73

However, constitutional and judicial limitations often limit the apparent breadth of bad check laws. Most state constitutions contain a prohibition against the imprisonment for debt, although this is not a protection explicitly provided by the U.S. Constitution. Some state bad check laws have been declared facially unconstitutional under such provisions, while courts have indicated that other statutes would be unconstitutional if fraudulent intent was not construed to be an essential element of the crime.

Many courts also have held that bad check laws do not apply to post-dated checks or to checks given for preexisting debts. n74

Many states have enacted civil bad check penalty laws, which encourage bounty hunters by providing for attorney fees and multiple or inflated damages for acts which may violate a criminal bad check statute.

[12] Arbitration and Use of Alternative Dispute Mechanism to Collect Debts

[a] Creditors Increasingly Using Arbitration to Collect Consumer Debts

Including compulsory arbitration clauses in standard form loan contracts may become a trend among banks and finance companies.

While there may be many valid reasons to encourage truly voluntary and non-binding Alternative Dispute Resolution ("ADR") mechanisms in consumer cases, there are several ways in which compulsory and binding ADR procedures, especially arbitration and judicial reference, impact negatively on consumers. The most important result to consumers is the loss of the right to have a jury decide their dispute with the creditor or merchant, particularly when this right is not knowingly given up.

Another consequence of ADR may be the loss of an opportunity to appeal. There is often little or no right to appeal from an arbitration or judicial reference decision. And the arbitrator or other decision-maker is not necessarily bound to follow judicial precedent.

The arbitrator also has broader discretion to choose a remedy, and arbitrators have a tendency to use this discretion only to award actual damages and only under basic common law notions. This tendency often results in failure to award multiple statutory or punitive damages and attorney fees under consumer protection statutes.

There is generally little discovery beyond basic document production in an ADR procedure and some of these procedures may cost more than bringing an action in court.

A few court cases have found such programs to be unconscionable on a number of grounds.

[b] Validity and Scope of Arbitration Clauses

The Federal Arbitration Act ("FAA") broadly preempts any state law which singles out arbitration clauses for special treatment, for example by restricting their use in consumer transactions or requiring that they be conspicuous. The FAA applies to any transactions "involving" interstate commerce. Where the Act applies, a state may apply to arbitration clauses only those requirements which apply to contracts in general.

An important threshold question when dealing with any arbitration clause is the scope: who may compel arbitration of what causes of action. Another question, which has divided courts, is whether non-signing consumers, such as spouses or third-party beneficiaries, are bound by arbitration clauses. Broadly worded arbitration clauses have been construed to include a wide range of statutory and common law causes of action, including tort, but more limited clauses may be construed to exclude the consumer's claim. Questions may arise whether the document containing the arbitration clause is part of the contract.

Still another difficult issue is whether the court or the arbitrator should resolve challenges to an arbitration clause. Courts may draw fine distinctions between fraud in the execution, which prevents the signer from knowing what he or she was signing, and voids the entire contract, which is a question for the court, and fraud in the inducement, a misrepresentation which makes the contract voidable, which is arbitrable. A claim that a party's signature was forged must be decided by the court. n75

[c] Arbitration Is Unenforceable Where It Violates State Collection or Credit Law

While the Federal Arbitration Act may preempt a state's attempt to prohibit collection via arbitration, the state can regulate collections and credit in a way that does not single out arbitration, but still has the effect of restricting arbitration agreements. n76 For example, if a state statute limits the consumer's liability for attorney fees and collection costs, then an arbitration agreement should not be able to require the consumer to pay more than this amount. n77

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionFair Debt CollectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionState LawGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. For discussion of other common law claims that debt collection abuse may give rise to, such as intentional infliction of emotional distress, and invasion of privacy, see National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection Ch. 10 (6th ed. and supp.).

(n2)Footnote 2. 15 U.S.C. § 1692n. See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 6.13 (6th ed. and supp.).

(n3)Footnote 3. Thrasher v. Cardholder Servs., 74 F. Supp. 2d 691, 694 (S.D. Miss. 1999) (non-preemption language does not apply to state tort action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, because this not a state law "with respect to debt collection;" state common law which allows punitive damages conflicts with and is preempted by section of FDCPA which limits noncompensatory damages to $1,000). See also Binion v. Franklin Collection Servs., 147 F. Supp. 2d 519 (S.D. Miss. 2001) (FDCPA does not completely preempt state tort causes of action, so as to allow removal to federal court, but Trasher conflict preemption may be a defense to state tort claim).

(n4)Footnote 4. Williams v. Northcut & Edwards, P.C., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12980, at 10 (S.D. Ohio July 7, 1999) (Ohio common law action for invasion of privacy not preempted by FDCPA; statute and common law "further the same purpose," i.e., protecting the consumer from abusive debt collection practices, and common law does not "in any way limit" the FDCPA).

(n5)Footnote 5. Nicholl v. A & P, 238 Ga. App. 30, 517 S.E.2d 561 (1999) (malice and lack of probable cause shown where store's investigation inadequate, and it did not even follow its own standard procedure before criminally prosecuting identity theft victim). See also Gill v. Kostroff, 82 F. Supp. 2d 1354 (M.D. Fla. 2000) (malicious prosecution: issue of material fact whether suit was brought without probable cause, where not clear what information creditor had when it sued identity theft victim); Dornhecker v. Ameritech Corp., 99 F. Supp. 2d 918 (N.D. Ill. 2000) (defamation); Arcaro v. Silva, 77 Cal. App. 4th 152, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 433 (1999) (malicious prosecution: lack of probable cause, where alleged debtor informed creditor and collection agency that signature was forged, provided handwriting exemplars, and pointed out that former officemate had access to personal information which would enable him to open account in alleged debtor's name).

(n6)Footnote 6. Harris v. Beneficial Fin. Co., 338 So. 2d 196 (Fla. 1976) , cert. denied, 430 U.S. 950, 97 S. Ct. 1591, 51 L. Ed. 2d 800 (1977) ; but see Brannan v. United Student Aid Funds, Inc., 94 F.3d 1260 (9th Cir. 1996) , cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1106, 117 S. Ct. 2484, 138 L. Ed. 2d 992 (1997) (state debt collection statute preempted by federal Department of Education collection regulations). See also Annot., Validity, Construction, and Application of State Statutes Prohibiting Abusive or Coercive Collection Practices, 87 A.L.R.3d 786 (1978). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Student Loan Law (2001).

(n7)Footnote 7. See Liles v. American Corrective Counseling Servs., 131 F. Supp. 2d 1114 (S.D. Iowa 2001) (genuine issue of fact whether independent contractor hired by county attorney to process NSF checks, who sent out misleading notices about criminal prosecution, was debt collector under Iowa debt collection statute), mot. denied, 201 F.R.D. 452 (Iowa Dist. Ct. 2001) . Cf. Gradisher v. Check Enforcement Unit, 133 F. Supp. 2d 988 (declining jurisdiction over novel and complex question whether Michigan collection agency statute applies to independent contractor hired by county to send out bad check notices), class certification granted, in part, 203 F.R.D. 271 (W.D. Mich. 2001) ; Rhoades v. West Virginia Credit Bureau Reporting Servs., Inc., 96 F. Supp. 2d 528 (S.D. W. Va. 2000) (West Virginia debt collection statute applies to any consumer debt; fact question whether debtor was consumer, where she owned an interior design business, but claimed that potted plants from creditor-florist were intended for her home); Ford v. The City State Bank of Palacios, 44 S.W.3d 121 (Tex. App. 2001) (no cause of action under Texas Debt Collection Act, where rancher's purchase of cattle not for personal, household, or family purposes). For coverage of attorneys under state debt collection statutes, see Campion v. Credit Bureau Services, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20233 (E.D. Wash. Sept. 19, 2000) (collector's lawyer, who was not collector within meaning of Washington Collection Agency Act, not liable for violations of Act for failure to follow proper garnishment procedure; lawyer also exempt under state UDAP statute, which regulates only entrepreneurial aspects of law practice); Universal Bank v. Machnic (In re Machnic), 2002 Bankr. LEXIS 39 (Bankr. S.D. W. Va. Jan. 10, 2002) (attorneys not exempt, even in their litigation activities, from debt collection provisions of W. Va. Consumer Credit Protection Act, and creditor itself is liable for acts of its attorney); Cooper v. Litton Loan Servicing (In re Cooper), 253 B.R. 286 (Bankr. N.D. Fla. 2000) (lawyer who relies in good faith on information given by creditor not liable under FDCPA or Florida Consumer Collection Practices Act); Davis Lake Cmty. Ass'n v. Feldmann, 138 N.C. App. 292, 530 S.E.2d 865 (2000) (following Reid v. Ayers); Tennessee Attorney General, Opinion No. 00-105, 2000 Tenn. AG LEXIS 107 (June 8, 2000) (company that purchases and collects upon unpaid judgments is a collection service even though it is owned by attorneys, who would be exempt if acting on behalf of clients).

(n8)Footnote 8. Leadbetter v. Comcast Cable Communications, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45365 (W.D. Wash. Aug. 22, 2005) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Norton v. Local Loan Co., 251 N.W.2d 520 (Iowa 1977) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Mlynek v. Household Fin. Corp., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13783 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 11, 2000) (Florida Consumer Collection Practices Act protects out-of-state consumer being dunned by Florida collector).

(n11)Footnote 11. Van Westrienen v. Americontinental Collection Corp., 94 F. Supp. 2d 1087 (D. Or. 2000) (Oregon debt collection statute does not use "least sophisticated debtor" standard; technically correct statements which would tend to mislead unsophisticated debtor violate the FDCPA but not the state statute).

(n12)Footnote 12. Piper v. Portnoff Law Assocs., 274 F. Supp. 2d 681 (E.D. Pa. 2003) (government entities' exemption did not extend to contractor hired by municipality to collect delinquent water bills); University of Houston Main Campus v. Simons, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7598 (Tex. App. Oct. 24, 2002) (unpublished; citation limited) (sovereign immunity barred state debt collection act and intentional tort claims against state university).

(n13)Footnote 13. See Blair v. Supportkids, Inc., 222 F. Supp. 2d 1038 (N.D. Ill. 2002) (claim stated for violation of Collection Agency Act; that Act does not exempt collector from sections forbidding simulated process, disseminating false information, falsely claiming association with government, and conduct likely to deceive the public).

(n14)Footnote 14. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 5-1-202(1)(f).

(n15)Footnote 15. See Van Westrienen v. Americontinental Collection Corp., 94 F. Supp. 2d 1087, 1099 (D. Or. 2000) (single call to consumer at work violated Oregon Unfair Debt Collection Practices Act, which requires that collector first make reasonable efforts to contact debtor at home; consumer's home phone number was listed).

(n16)Footnote 16. Greenwood Trust Co. v. Conley, 938 P.2d 1141 (Colo. 1997) .

(n17)Footnote 17. See Matter of O'Brien, 1997 WL 698008 (Bankr. S.D. Iowa 1997).

(n18)Footnote 18. See also Greenpoint Credit Corp. v. Perez, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 263 (Tex. App. Jan. 16, 2002) (affirming award of $5 million in compensatory damages where creditor threatened elderly identity theft victim with jail, used rude and obscene language, and refused to believe her denials even when reiterated by sheriff), pet. for rev. granted by 2003 Tex. LEXIS 15 (Tex. Feb. 13, 2003) , vacated by, remanded by 2003 Tex. LEXIS 50 (Tex. Apr. 24, 2003) vacated on other grounds, 2003 Tex. LEXIS 50 (Apr. 24, 2003) (vacating decision pursuant to parties' settlement). See also Bruce v. Home Depot, U.S.A., 308 F. Supp. 2d 72 (D. Conn. 2004) (persistent phone calls and threats, while creditor was egregiously failing to provide the goods and services for which it sought payment, violated Connecticut Creditors' Collection Practices Act and UDAP statute); Akalwadi v. Risk Management Alternatives, 336 F. Supp. 2d 492 (D. Md. 2004) (must consider number and pattern of calls to determine if "reasonably calculated to abuse or harass"); Harris v. American Gen. Fin., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33260 (D. Kan. July 6, 2005) (allegation that collector called 17 times in one week not sufficient to state claim for harassing calls; must allege the content of the calls); First N. Am. Nat'l Bank v. Superior Court, 2005 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 356 (Cal. Ct. App. Jan. 13, 2005) (consumers stated claim under California debt collection act; alleged numerous calls at home, some at inappropriate times, calls at work, contact with consumers known to be represented by counsel; issue of fact whether 80 contacts in 230 days unreasonable). See also Dowling v. I.C. Sys., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35018 (M.D. Fla. Oct. 20, 2005) (FDCPA and Florida Collection Practices Act claims arising from dunning phone calls; genuine issue of fact regarding number and content of calls).

(n19)Footnote 19. Forsyth Mun. Hosp. v. Contreras, 421 S.E.2d 167 (N.C. Ct. App. 1992) (court assumed without deciding that the "least sophisticated consumer" standard would be applied in cases under the state debt collection statute; found no deception); Russey v. Rankin, 911 F. Supp. 1449 (D.N.M. 1995) (statement that agency could file suit within thirty days was deceptive within the meaning of New Mexico debt collection statute, where agency was not licensed in New Mexico, and agency's usual practice of taking assignments of debts and suing on them was forbidden by New Mexico law); In re Belile (Belile v. Allied Medical Accounts Control Associated Bureaus), 209 B.R. 658 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1997) (letter which threatened immediate suit, although no employee of collector was admitted in Pennsylvania, threatened action which could not be taken and violated both FDCPA and Pennsylvania Debt Collection Trade Practices Act); Wilkes Nat'l Bank v. Halvorsen, 126 N.C. App. 179, 484 S.E.2d 582 , rev. denied, 346 N.C. 557, 488 S.E.2d 826 (1997) (letter from bank to delinquent borrower, acknowledging receipt of information that borrower was suffering prolonged illness, and inviting her to discuss an alternate repayment schedule, was not "a communication attempting to collect a debt" within meaning of state debt collection statute; a later letter, which accelerated the loan and demanded repayment, clearly indicated its debt collection purpose; a letter need not quote the statutory language, provided its meaning is clear). But see Chapman v. Ontra, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8331 , RICO Bus. Disp. Guide P 9319 (N.D. Ill. June 3, 1997) (violations of the FDCPA were not per se violations of the Illinois debt collection statute), dismissed, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9426 (N.D. Ill. June 11, 1998) .

(n20)Footnote 20. See Van Westrienen v. Americontinental Collection Corp., 94 F. Supp. 2d 1087 (D. Or. 2000) (collector whose dunning letter referred consumers to a website containing egregious misrepresentations violated the Oregon Unfair Debt Collection Practices Act; website of one-man collection firm claimed that agency had a staff of private investigators, with offices in three states and 13 foreign countries); Sandlin v. Shapiro & Fishman, 919 F. Supp. 1564 (M.D. Fla. 1996) (state statute which forbids attempt to collect debt which is not "legitimate" applied to a charge imposed for verifying the debt when that charge was a pre-payment penalty not permitted by the contract); Patzka v. Viterbo College, 917 F. Supp. 654 (W.D. Wis. 1996) (collection fee was not permitted by the Wisconsin Consumer Act);

Waterfield Mortgage Co. v. Rodriguez, 929 S.W.2d 641 (Tex. App. 1996) .

(n21)Footnote 21. See, e.g., Tenuto v. Transworld Sys., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14344 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 29, 2000) (class action split into subclasses, those who received allegedly deceptive letter within one year, who have claims under both FDCPA and Pennsylvania UDAP, and those who received letters within four years, who have claims only under Pennsylvania statute). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 7.3 (6th ed. 2004 and Supp.).

(n22)Footnote 22. Daniels v. Baritz, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7707 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 30, 2003) ; Hansen v. Ticket Track, Inc., 280 F. Supp. 2d 1196 (W.D. Wash. 2003) ; Watkins v. Peterson Enterprises, 57 F. Supp. 2d 1102 (E.D. Wash. 1999) (violation of Washington debt collection statute is per se UDAP violation); Wagner v. American Nat'l Educ. Corp., 1983 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10287 (D. Conn. Dec. 30, 1983) ; Ai v. Frank Huff Agency, Ltd., 61 Haw. 607, 607 P.2d 1304 (1980) ; Wiginton v. Pacific Credit Corp., 2 Haw. App. 435, 634 P.2d 111 (1981) ; Western Acceptance Corp. v. Jones, 117 Idaho 399, 788 P.2d 214 (1990) (debt collector also subject to Idaho Consumer Protection Statute); Baldassari v. Public Fin. Trust 369 Mass. 33, 337 N.E.2d 701 (1975) ; Evergreen Collectors v. Holt, 60 Wash. App. 151, 803 P.2d 10 (1991) (violation of the Collection Agency Act is a per se UDAP violation); Connelly v. Puget Sound Collections, Inc., 16 Wash. App. 62, 553 P.2d 1354 (1976) . See also National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 3.2 (6th ed. 2004 and Supp.).

(n23)Footnote 23. See Peters v. Quinney, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8395 (Tex. App. Dec. 20, 2001) (not for publication) (punitive damages appropriate; lender filed criminal charge although told by county attorney and justice of peace that matter was civil); Siemer v. Nangle (In re Nangle), 257 B.R. 276 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2001) (punitive damages available under Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Practices Act for debt collector's willful and wanton misconduct); Greenpoint Credit Corp. v. Perez, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 263 (Tex. App. Jan. 16, 2002) (affirming compensatory damage award of $5 million under Texas Debt Collection Act where plaintiff suffered fear, embarrassment, skin eruptions, heart palpitations, shortness of breath, nausea, sleeplessness, panic attacks, difficulty in concentrating, irritability, reclusiveness and elevated blood pressure due to defendant's abusive collection tactics), pet. for rev. granted by 2003 Tex. LEXIS 15 (Tex. Feb. 13, 2003) , vacated by, remanded by 2003 Tex. LEXIS 50 (Tex. Apr. 24, 2003) vacated on other grounds, 2003 Tex. LEXIS 50 (Apr. 24, 2003) (vacating decision pursuant to parties' settlement). See also National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 13.3.3 (7th ed. 2008).

(n24)Footnote 24. Compare Griffin v. Security Pac. Auto. Fin. Servs. Corp., 33 F. Supp. 2d 926 (D. Kan. 1998) (misrepresentations and omissions of material fact in a debt collection matter violate the Kansas Consumer Protection Act); DeBerry v. First Gov't Mortgage & Investors Corp., 743 A.2d 699 (D.C. 1999) (D.C. UDAP statute, which forbids "unconscionable terms or provisions of sales or leases" applies to predatory home equity lending); Norwest Mortgage, Inc. v. Salinas, 999 S.W.2d 846, 855 (Tex. App. 1999) (buyers of home were consumers as to mortgage company, where company was intertwined with builder which advertised "financing available by Norwest" and where mortgage company itself violated the Deceptive Trade Practices Act by making advances to builder without determining that work was properly done, not obtaining release of liens, etc., and meanwhile requiring payments on the mortgage), with Zanayed v. Gertler & Gertler, Ltd., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5827 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 17, 2000) (attorneys collecting debts not covered by state UDAP statute); King v. Cashland, Inc., 2000 Ohio App. LEXIS 3943 (Sept. 1, 2000) (payday lender was exempt from state UDAP statute as a "dealer in intangibles," so its collection activities were not covered); Taylor v. First State Bank of Smithville, 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 6329 (Aug. 26, 1999) (unpublished, not to be cited as authority) (a loan is not a good or service within the meaning of Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act). See also Edwards v. McCormick, 136 F. Supp. 2d 795 (S.D. Ohio 2001) (attorney collecting debts for health care provider was "supplier" covered by the Ohio Consumer Sales Practices Act); Evanauskas v. Strumpf, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14326 (D. Conn. June 27, 2001) (Connecticut UDAP statute applies only to commercial aspects of legal practice; no cause of action against lawyer who sent improper dunning letter on behalf of client-creditor); Smith v. Short Term Loans, LLC, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1554 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 9, 2001) (Illinois Consumer Fraud Act regulates lenders, and also their employees if employees direct or permit violations; consumer stated a claim against attorney who sent out dunning letters on his own letterhead, leading unsophisticated consumer to think third party was involved); Campion v. Credit Bureau Servs.,

2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20233 (E.D. Wash. Sept. 19, 2000) (lawyer who failed to follow proper garnishment procedure when collecting debt for client not liable under Washington UDAP statute which covers only entrepreneurial aspects of law practice); Campos v. Brooksbank, 120 F. Supp. 2d 1271 (D.N.M. 2000) (alleged misconduct of creditor's lawyer subject to New Mexico Unfair Practices Act; exemption for actions or transactions permitted under laws administered by regulatory body did not apply where acts complained of, i.e., filing a false affidavit and abusing discovery, were not permitted rules of professional conduct). DirecTV, Inc. v. Karpinsky, 269 F. Supp. 2d 918 (E.D. Mich. 2003) (UDAP statute did not apply to collection activities against person who had not entered into transaction, but was falsely accused of intercepting satellite transmissions), vacated in part on other grounds, 274 F. Supp. 2d 918 (E.D. Mich. 2003) .

(n25)Footnote 25. Davis Lake Cmty. Ass'n v. Feldmann, 138 N.C. App. 292, 530 S.E.2d 865 (2000) . District Cablevision Ltd. v. Bassin, 828 A.2d 714 (D.C. 2003) (collecting late fees in violation of common law was UDAP violation); Davis Lake Community Ass'n v. Feldmann, 530 S.E.2d 865 (N.C. App. 2000) (representing that attorney fees in excess of a statutory cap had to be paid to satisfy an obligation is deceptive).

(n26)Footnote 26. National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 13.3 (7th ed. 2008). Each state's UDAP statute is cited and summarized in National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices Appx. A (6th ed. 2004).

(n27)Footnote 27. Irwin v. Mascott, 112 F. Supp. 2d 937 (N.D. Cal. 2000) (California Unfair Business Practices Act entitles consumers to restitution of any funds acquired as a result of illegal practices, with prejudgment interest);. See also National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices §§ 8.2, 8.3 (6th ed. 2004).

(n28)Footnote 28. Bank of New Orleans & Trust Co. v. Phillips, 415 So. 2d 973 (La. App. 1982) ("actual" damages means "real," "genuine," and "existing in fact" and accordingly includes damages for humiliation and mental anguish); Ausley v. Bishop, 133 N.C. App. 210, 515 S.E.2d 72, 1999-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72531 (1999) (emotional distress damages recoverable for UDAP violation, where distress resulted in a hospital visit). But see Wenrich v. Robert E. Cole, P.C., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18687 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 22, 2000) (emotional distress damages available under FDCPA but not state UDAP statute or former debt collection regulations); Ashley v. Edwards, 626 S.W.2d 107 (Tex. Civ. App. 1981) . See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 13.3.3.9 (7th ed. 2008).

(n29)Footnote 29. See Siemer v. Nangle (In re Nangle), 274 F.3d 481 (8th Cir. 2001) (punitive damages available under Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Practices Act for debt collector's willful and wanton misconduct); Lowe v. Surpas Resource Corp., 253 F. Supp. 2d 1209 (D. Kan. 2003) (debtor may be entitled to enhanced statutory damages as elderly person); Caputo v. Professional Recovery Servs., Inc., 261 F. Supp. 2d 1249 (D. Kan. 2003) (debtor entitled to special statutory damage award as disabled person). But cf. DuBose v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., Clearinghouse No. 829 (D. Conn. 1989) (evidence must reveal reckless indifference or intentional and wanton violation to award UDAP punitive damages). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices §§ 13.4.3 (7th ed. 2008).

(n30)Footnote 30. Veach v. Sheeks, 316 F.3d 690 (7th Cir. 2003) (alleged debtor who received debt collection letter misstating amount of debt owed could not show that he sustained pecuniary loss, as required to establish claim under Indiana's deception law); Sambor v. Omnia Credit Services, Inc., 183 F. Supp. 2d 1234 (D. Haw. 2002) (summary judgment denied where actual damages not shown); Smith v. Short Term Loans, L.L.C., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1554 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 9, 2001) (claim under Illinois Consumer Fraud Act must allege actual damages). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices §§ 12.5.2 (7th ed. 2008).

(n31)Footnote 31. Lowe v. Surpas Resource Corp., 253 F. Supp. 2d 1209 (D. Kan. 2003) (consumer was aggrieved by having to obtain the assistance of third parties to respond to collection calls, even though she herself did not hear the calls); Caputo v. Professional Recovery Servs., Inc., 261 F. Supp. 2d 1249 (D. Kan. 2003) (consumer who suffered emotional and intangible injuries was "aggrieved").

(n32)Footnote 32. National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices §§ 13.3.3.9 (7th ed. 2008).

(n33)Footnote 33. Id. § 7.5.2.4.

(n34)Footnote 34. Id. § 7.5.2.2.

(n35)Footnote 35. See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Credit Reporting Appx. H (6th ed. 2006).

(n36)Footnote 36. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1679 et seq. See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 9.9 (5th ed. 2004) (summary of debt collection applications of federal Act). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Fair Credit Reporting Act, Ch. 15 (6th ed. 2006).

(n37)Footnote 37. See Bigalke v. Creditrust Corp., 162 F. Supp. 2d 996 (N.D. Ill. 2001) (denial of motion to dismiss) (debt collector that sent similar letter was covered by CROA), later op. at 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14591 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 11, 2001) (certifying class); Nielsen v. United Creditors Alliance Corp., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13267 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 18, 1999) (denying motion to dismiss). But see White v. Financial Credit Corp., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21486 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 20, 2001) (collector that offered to have debtor's credit report amended if debtor paid debt was not credit repair organization).

(n38)Footnote 38. See Arnold v. United Cos. Lending Corp., 511 S.E.2d 854 (W. Va. 1998) (finding loan broker covered by state credit repair statute).

(n39)Footnote 39. See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Credit Reporting Act, § 15.3 (6th ed. 2006).

(n40)Footnote 40. See Illinois v. National Credit Mgmt. Group, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8722 (N.D. Ill. June 20, 1996) (violation of state credit repair law is UDAP violation); Barker v. Altegra Corp. (In re Barker), 251 B.R. 250 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2000) (any violation of state credit repair law is UDAP violation).

(n41)Footnote 41. 15 U.S.C. § 1679g(a)(1)(B).

(n42)Footnote 42. See Barker v. Altegra Corp. (In re Barker), 251 B.R. 250 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2000) (amount paid must be awarded regardless of amount of actual damages).

(n43)Footnote 43. See Cole v. Price, 758 A.2d 231, 2000 Pa. Super. 255 (Pa. Super. 2000) (creditor engaged in unauthorized practice of law when, after filing suit pro se he transferred his interest in claim to another; former creditor enjoined from further court appearances but case not dismissed). But see George Shima Buick, Inc. v. Ferencak, 1999 Ohio App. LEXIS 6132 (Dec. 17, 1999) (Ohio statute which allowed non-lawyer corporate officer to represent corporation in small claims court did not violate separation of powers and was not unconstitutional), review granted, 88 Ohio St. 3d 1501, 727 N.E.2d 924 (2000) , vacated, appeal dismissed, cert. dismissed, 91 Ohio St. 3d 1211, 741 N.E.2d 138 (2001) .

(n44)Footnote 44. In re Boydell, 760 So. 2d 326 (La. 2000) (three-year suspension for lawyer who viciously harassed client in dispute over fee which lawyer had improperly calculated and disbursed to self). See also Ratcliff v. Boydell, 674 So. 2d 272 (La. App. 1996) .

(n45)Footnote 45. In re Conduct of Huffman, 328 Or. 567, 983 P.2d 534 (1999) (lawyer wrote angry letter to client's new lawyer, threatening criminal prosecution over matters which first lawyer could only have learned about while representing client; these were "client secrets" within the meaning of rule forbidding the disclosure of client secrets or the use of client secrets to the advantage of the lawyer or the disadvantage of the client; also violated rule against threatening criminal prosecution to gain advantage in a civil matter).

(n46)Footnote 46. Lustig v. Horn, 315 Ill. App. 3d 319, 732 N.E.2d 613 (App. Ct. 2000) .

(n47)Footnote 47. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 7.2.8.6 (7th ed. 2008); National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice § 15.6 (8th ed. 2006 and Supp.).

(n48)Footnote 48. In re Lustig, 2001 Ariz. LEXIS 160 (Ariz. Sept. 7, 2001) (non-lawyer employees held selves out as lawyers, and assisted in "dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation and conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice"; attorney publicly censured); In re Suspended Member of the Arizona Bar, Klahr, 2002 Ariz. LEXIS 71 (Ariz. May 1, 2002) (allowing office manager to make threatening calls to collect debts).

(n49)Footnote 49. Iowa Supreme Court Comm'n on Unauthorized Practice of Law v. A-1 Associates, 623 N.W.2d 803 (Iowa 2001) (company that took assignments, sued in small claims court, then kept agreed percentage and forwarded rest to creditor was rendering legal services for profit "under the guise of trying its own case"); State v. Hunt, 880 P.2d 96 (Wash. App. 1994) (paralegal, who took assignments of debts and sued, while charging the creditors for his services, was criminally convicted of the unauthorized practice of law); State v. Isner, 285 S.E.2d 641 (W. Va. 1981) (collection agency may not sue on debt assigned to it for collection).

(n50)Footnote 50. Withers v. Eveland, 988 F. Supp. 942 (E.D. Va. 1997) (under Virginia law, non-lawyer was not authorized to file suit to collect debt owed by another; non-lawyer collector who threatened to sue violated the FDCPA by threatening to take action that cannot legally be taken or is not intended to be taken). See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 36a-805(a)(3) (collection agencies may not "purchase or receive assignments of claims for the purpose of collection or institute suit thereon in any court"). See also Petrolito v. Arrow Fin. Servs., 221 F.R.D. 303 (D. Conn. 2003) (declining to rule at class certification stage on application of statute to purchaser of written-off debts, and whether purchaser's misrepresentation of self as credit-card issuer violated FDCPA or state UDAP). But see Idaho Code § 26-2243 (a permit holder shall have a property right in any account assigned to it for collection; provided, however, no right herein granted shall authorize such permit holder to engage in the practice of law); Tenn. Code Ann. § 62-20-127 (agency may take assignment of debts and sue in own name; statute establishes procedural requirements for suits on assigned debts); In re UPL Advisory Opinion No. 2001-1, 591 S.E.2d 822 (Ga. 2004) (if suit on assigned debt is in creditor's interest, i.e., if creditor gets paid only if agency wins, this is unauthorized practice; if creditor makes "actual and legal transfer of all interest in the account" then collector is lawfully representing itself).

(n51)Footnote 51. Ohio Rev. Code § 4705.07. See Greenspan v. Third Fed. Sav. & Loan, 894 N.E.2d 1250 (Ohio Ct. App. 2008) (amendment not retroactive; consumers could raise unauthorized practice defense to lender's document preparation fee without seeking state supreme court opinion), review granted, 897 N.E.2d 651 (Ohio 2008) .

(n52)Footnote 52. See, e.g., Lingross v. Heilig-Meyers Furniture, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3986 (N.D. Miss. Mar. 17, 1999) (consumers stated claim for assault and trespass, where repossessors pounded on door at 6 a.m., one repossessor backed consumer up against wall, and repossessor wearing SWAT uniform placed his hand on his holster).

(n53)Footnote 53. See National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service, Chs. 11, 12 (3rd ed. and Supp.).

(n54)Footnote 54. See National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection Ch. 10 (6th ed. 2008). Caputo v. Professional Recovery Servs., Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6514 (D. Kan. Mar. 11, 2002) (complaint alleged sufficient basis for claim against collection agency for employee's torturous actions during collection attempts. Case discussed elements of claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress under Kansas law.). See also Flamm v. Sarner & Assocs., P.C., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22255 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 6, 2002) (telling a coworker that the consumer owed a large medical bill, was a thief and would be arrested was odious but not outrageous; claim of intentional infliction of mental distress dismissed; claim of slander stated).

(n55)Footnote 55. Silver v. United States, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10285 (D.N.M. June 22, 1999) (fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress claims against IRS barred by sovereign immunity; tort claims act specifically excepts tax collection); Soghomonian v. United States, 82 F. Supp. 2d 1134 (E.D. Cal. 1999) (negligence and negligent infliction of emotional distress claims against IRS barred). The problems of government debt collection are discussed in National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection Ch. 13 (4th ed. and Supp.).

(n56)Footnote 56. See National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, Ch. 10 (1st ed. 2008 and supp.)

(n57)Footnote 57. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 21.095; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 2329.66A(1)(b) and 2329.661.

(n58)Footnote 58. W. Va. Code § 38-9-3(b).

(n59)Footnote 59. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-2310.

(n60)Footnote 60. See Conn. Gen Stat. § 19a-673. A Connecticut trial court has held there is a private right of action to enforce this section under the pre-2003 version of this statute. Ahmad v. Yale New Haven Hosp., 2004 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2765 (Sept. 29, 2004) .

(n61)Footnote 61. Cal. Health & Safety § 1285.

(n62)Footnote 62. Cal. Health & Safety § 1339.51(a)(1).

(n63)Footnote 63. Cal. Health & Safety § 1339.51(b)(1).

(n64)Footnote 64. The new statute has already revealed startling disparities between what hospitals charge for certain items and services. For example, one hospital charges $9 for a single tablet of Tylenol and another charges $5.50, whereas another hospital charges just 12 cents--the retail prices of Tylenol is about 8 or 9 cents a tablet. For a series of blood tests called a 'comprehensive metabolic panel,' one hospital charged $1733 while another charged $576 and a third only charged $97. Lucette Lagnado, Medical Markup: California Hospitals Open Books, Showing Huge Price Differences, Wall Street Journal, Dec. 27, 2004.

(n65)Footnote 65. N.J. Stat. 17B:30-41 et seq .

(n66)Footnote 66. N.J. Stat. 17B:30-45. In return, hospitals let the state keep 50% of the amount collected, plus administrative and collection costs. N.J. Stat. 17B:30-44.

(n67)Footnote 67. N.J. Stat. 17B:30-47.

(n68)Footnote 68. See National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, Ch. 10 (1st ed. 2008) See also National Consumer Law Center, In Sickness and In Debt: Using Consumer Law to Help Elders Facing Overwhelming Medical Bills (2001).

(n69)Footnote 69. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices §§ 5.1.1.2, 5.1.1.3 (6th ed. 2004). National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit, § 10.8.2 (3rd ed. and Supp.).

(n70)Footnote 70. Tuttle v. Equifax Check Servs., 190 F.3d 9 (2d Cir. 1999) ($20 service charge); Charles v. Check Rite, Ltd., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22512 (D. Ariz. Dec. 14, 1998) ($25 fee was incidental damages under UCC Article 2).

(n71)Footnote 71. Ballard v. Equifax Check Servs., 27 F. Supp. 2d 1201 (E.D. Cal. 1998) (only seller, not check guarantee service, can claim Article 2 incidental damages [note that California has since enacted statutory authority for $25 to $35 charges]).

(n72)Footnote 72. Annot., Validity of provision in promissory note or other evidences of indebtedness for payment as attorneys' fees, expenses and costs of collection, of specified percentage of note, 17 A.L.R.2d 288 (1951). See also National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 15.2.5 (5th ed. and supp.) for discussion of case law on contractual and noncontractual collection fees. E.g., Sunbelt Rentals v. Corbridge, 171 F. Supp. 2d 14 (D. Me. 2001)

(contractual attorney fees available only where permitted by statute; maximum of 15%, where note collected by an attorney after maturity); Universal Bank, N.A. v. Machnic (In re Machnic), 271 B.R. 789 (Bankr. S.D. W. Va. Jan. 10, 2002) (credit card issuer violated W. Va. Consumer Credit and Protection Act when it sought attorney fees for collection where not explicitly permitted by Act even though authorized by contract).

(n73)Footnote 73. Jones v. Kunin, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6380, at 3 (S.D. Ill. May 1, 2000) (FDCPA claim stated against payday lender that threatened liability under bad check law which requires "intent to defraud," where lender solicited post-dated checks and it was clear that borrower did not have sufficient funds); Turner v. E-Z Check Cashing, Inc., 35 F. Supp. 2d 1042 (M.D. Tenn. 1999) (describing payday lender's practice of threatening criminal bad check prosecution as means of collecting debt and finding that it was a UDAP violation since there was no basis for prosecution). But see Smith v. Cash Store Mgmt., Inc., 195 F.3d 325 (7th Cir. 1999) (payday lender could lawfully assert that your "check is security for this loan," where check entitled holder to seek remedies under civil bad check statute). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 15.3.1 (5th ed. and supp.) for further discussion of collector threats to criminally prosecute under bad check laws, and civil bad check statutes.

(n74)Footnote 74. See State v. Braham, 567 S.E.2d 624 (W. Va. 2002) (West Virginia bad check statute explicitly did not apply to post-dated checks; post-dated check may support larceny by fraudulent scheme conviction, but fraudulent intent not shown merely by NSF check). But see Thompson v. Adcox, 63 S.W.3d 783 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2001) (post-dated check becomes check, for purposes of civil bad check statute, on post-dated date; Stooksbury distinguished because it construed criminal statute); State v. Brotzman, 108 Wash. App. 1042 (Wash. Ct. App. Oct. 18, 2001) (unpublished) (post-dated check may support conviction for larceny by check).

(n75)Footnote 75. For discussion of other challenges to arbitration agreements and awards, see National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, Ch. 8 (1st ed. 2008).

(n76)Footnote 76. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Arbitration Agreements Ch. 2 (4th ed. 2004).

(n77)Footnote 77. See Louisiana Department of Justice Opinion # 98-380, Clearinghouse No. 53554 (Mar. 28, 1999).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Appendix 8A.syn

§ 8A.syn Synopsis to Appendix 8A: FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

Section 801 Short Title

Section 802 Findings and Purpose

Section 803 Definition

Section 804 Acquisition of Location Information

Section 805 Communication in Connection With Debt Collection

Section 806 Harassment or Abuse

Section 807 False or Misleading Representations

Section 808 Unfair Practices

Section 809 Validation of Debts

Section 810 Multiple Debts

Section 811 Legal Actions by Debt Collectors

Section 812 Furnishing Certain Deceptive Forms

Section 813 Civil Liability

Section 814 Administrative Enforcement

Section 815 Reports to Congress by Commission

Section 816 Relations to State Laws

Section 817 Exemption For State Regulation

Section 818 Effective Date

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 801

§ 801 Short Title

Section 801 names the statute the "Fair Debt Collection Practices Act."

The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) is Title VIII of the Consumer Credit Protection Act, which also includes other federal statutes relating to consumer credit, such as the Truth in Lending Act (Title I), the Fair Credit Reporting Act (Title VI), and the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (Title VII).

101 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 802

§ 802 Findings and Purpose

Section 802 recites the Congressional findings that serve as the basis for the legislation.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 803

§ 803 Definition

Section 803(1) defines "Commission" as the Federal Trade Commission.

1. General. The definition includes only the Federal Trade Commission, not necessarily the staff acting on its behalf.

Section 803(2) defines "communication" as the "conveying of information regarding a debt directly or indirectly to any person through any medium."

1. General. The definition includes oral and written transmission of messages which refer to a debt.

2. Exclusions. The term does not include formal legal action (e.g., filing of a lawsuit or other petition/pleadings with a court; service of a complaint or other legal papers in connection with a lawsuit, or activities directly related to such service). Similarly, it does not include a notice that is required by law as a prerequisite to enforcing a contractual obligation between creditor and debtor, by judicial or nonjudicial legal process.

The term does not include situations in which the debt collector does not convey information regarding the debt, such as:

- A request to a third party for a consumer to return a telephone call to the debt collector, if the debt collector does not refer to the debt or the caller's status as (or affiliation with) a debt collector.

- A request to a third party for information about the consumer's assets, if the debt collector does not reveal the existence of a debt.

- A request to a third party in connection with litigation (e.g., requesting a third party to complete a military affidavit that must be filed as a prerequisite to enforcing a default judgment, if the debt collector does not reveal the existence of the debt[)].

Section 803(3) defines "consumer" as "any natural person obligated or allegedly obligated to pay any debt."

1. General. The definition includes only a "natural person" and not an artificial person such as a corporation or other entity created by statute.

Section 803(4) defines "creditor" as "any person who offers or extends credit creating a debt or to whom a debt is owed". However, the definition excludes a party who "receives an assignment or transfer of a debt in default solely for the purpose of facilitating collection of such debt for another."

General. The definition includes the party that actually extended credit or became the obligee on an account in the normal course of business, and excludes a party that was assigned a delinquent debt only for collection purposes.

Section 803(5) defines "debt" as a consumer's "obligation ... to pay money arising out of a transaction in which the money, arising out of a transportation in which the money, property, insurance, or services (being purchased) are primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. ..."

1. Examples. The term includes:

- Overdue obligations such as medical bills that were originally payable in full within a certain time period (e.g., 30 days).

- A dishonored check that was tendered in payment for goods or services acquired or used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes.

- A student loan, because the consumer is purchasing "services" (education) for personal use.

2. Exclusions. The term does not include:

Unpaid taxes, fines, alimony, or tort claims, because they are not debts incurred from a "transportation (involving purchase of) property * * * or services * * * for personal, family or household purposes."

- A credit card that a cardholder retains after the card issuer has demanded its return. The cardholder's account balance is the debt.

- A non-pecuniary obligation of the consumer such as the responsibility to maintain adequate insurance on the collateral, because it does not involve an "obligation * * * to pay money."

Section 803(6) defines "debt collector" as a party "who uses any instrumentality or interstate commerce or the mails in * * * collection of * * * debts owed * * * another."

1. Examples. The term includes:

- Employees of a debt collection business, including a corporation, partnership, or other entity whose business is the collection of debts owned another.

- A firm that regularly collects overdue rent on behalf of real estate owners, or periodic assessments on behalf of condominium associations, because it "regularly collects * * * debts owned or due another."

- A party based in the United States who collects debts owned by consumers residing outside the United States, because he "uses * * * the mails" in the collection business. The residence of the debtor is irrelevant.

- A firm that collects debts in its own name for a creditor solely by mechanical techniques, such as (1) placing phone calls with pre-recorded messages and recording consumer responses, or (2) making computer-generated mailings.

- An attorney or law firm whose efforts to collect consumer debts on behalf of its clients regularly include activities traditionally associated with debt collection, such as sending demand letters (dunning notices) or making collection telephone calls to the consumer. However, an attorney is not considered to be a debt collector simply because he responds to an inquiry from the consumer following the filing of a lawsuit.

2. Exclusions. The term does not include:

- Any person who collects debts (or attempts to do so) only in insolated [sic] instances, becuause [sic] the definition includes only those who "regularly" collect debts.

- A credit card issuer that collects its cardholder's account, even when the account is based upon purchases from participating merchants, because the issuer is collecting its own debts, not those "owed or due another."

- An attorney whose practice is limied [sic] to legal activities (e.g., the filing and prosecution of lawsuits to reduce debts to judgment).

3. Application of definition to creditor using another name. Creditors are generally excluded from the definition of "debt collector" to the extent that they collect their own debts in their own name. However, the term specifically applies to "any creditor who, in the process of collecting his own debts, uses any name other than his own which would indicate that a third person is" involved in the collection.

- He uses a name other than his own to collect his debts, including a fictitious name.

- His salaried attorney employees who collect debts use stationery that indicates that attorneys are employed by someone other than the creditor or are independent or separate from the creditor (e.g., ABC Corp. sends collection letters on stationery of "John Jones, Attorney-at-Law").

- He regularly collects debts for another creditor; however, he is a debt collector only for purposes of collecting these debts, not when he collects his own debt in his own name.

- The creditor's collection division or related corporate collector is not clearly designated as being affiliated with the creditor; however, the creditor is not a debt collector if the creditor's correspondence is clearly labeled as being from the "collection unit of the (creditor's name)," since the creditor is not using a "name other than his own" in that instance.

Relation to other sections.

A creditor who is covered by the FDCPA because he uses a "name other than his own" also may violate section 807(14), which prohibits using a false business name. When he falsely uses an attorney's name, he violates section 807(3).

4. Specific exemptions from definition of debt collector.

(a) Creditor employees. Section 803(6)(A) provides that "debt collector" does not include "any officer or employee of a creditor while, in the name of the creditor, collecting debts for such creditor".

The exemption includes a collection agency employee, who works for a creditor to collect in the creditor's name at the creditor's office under the creditor's supervision, because he has become the de facto employee of the creditor.

The exemption includes a creditor's salaried attorney (or other) employee who collects debts on behalf of, and in the name of, that creditor.

The exemption does not include a creditor's former employee who continues to collect accounts on the creditor's behalf, if he acts under his own name rather than the creditors's [sic].

(b) Creditor-controlled collector. Section 803(6)(B) provides that "debt collector" does not include a party collecting for another, where they are both "related by common ownership or affiliated by corporate control, if the (party collects) only for persons to whom it is so related or affiliated and if the principal business of such person is not the collection of debts".

The exemption applies where the collector and creditor have "common ownership or * * * corporate control." For example, a company is exempt when it attempts to collect debts of another company after the two entities have merged.

The exemption does not apply to a party related to a creditor if it also collects debts for others in addition to the related creditors.

(c) State and federal officials. Section 803(6)(C) provides that "debt collector" does not include any state or federal employee "to the extent that collecting or attempting to collect any debt is in the performance of his official duties".

The exemption applies only to such governmental employees in the performance of their "official duties" and, therefore, does not apply to an attorney employed by a county government who also collected bad checks for local merchants where that activity is outside his official duties.

The exemption includes a state educational agency that is engaged in the collection of student loans.

(d) Process servers. Section 803(6)(D) provides that "debt collector" dos [sic] not include "any person while serving or attempting to serve legal process on any other person in connection with the judicial enforcement of any debt".

The exemption covers marshals, sheriffs, and any other process servers while conducting their normal duties relating to serving legal papers.

(e) Non-profit counselors. Section 803(6)(E) provides that "debt collector" does not include "any nonprofit organization which, at the request of consumers, performs bona fide consumer credit counseling and assists consumers in the liquidation of their debts by receiving payments from such consumers and distributing such amounts to creditors".

This exemption applies only to non-profit organizations; it does not apply to for-profit credit counseling services that accept fees from debtors and regularly transmit such funds to creditors.

(f) Miscellaneous. Section 803(6)(F) provides that "debt collector" does not include collection activity by a party about a debt that "(i) is incidental to a bona fide fiduciary obligation or * * * escrow arrangement; (ii) * * * was originated by such person; (iii) * * * was not in default at the time it was obtained by such person; or (iv) (was) obtained by such person as a secured party in a commercial credit transaction involving the creditor."

The exemption (i) for bona fide fiduciary obligations or escrow arrangements applies to entities such as trust departments of banks, and escrow companies. It does not include a party who is named as a debtor's trustee solely for the purpose of conducting a foreclosure sale (i.e., exercising a power of sale in the event of default on a loan).

The exemption (ii) for a party that originated the debt applies to the original creditor collecting his own debts in his own name. It also applies when a creditor assigns a debt originally owed to him, but retains the authority to collect the obligation on behalf of the assignee to whom the debt becomes owed. For example, the exemption applies to a creditor who makes a mortgage or school loan and continues to handle the account after assigning it to a third party. However, it does not apply to a party that takes assignment of retail installment contracts from the original creditor and then reassigns them to another creditor but continues to collect the debt arising from the contracts, because the debt was not "originated by" the collector/first assignee.

The exception (iii) for debts not in default when obtained applies to parties such as mortgage service companies whose business is servicing current accounts.

The exemption (iv) for a secured party in a commercial transaction applies to a commercial lender who acquires a consumer account that was used as collateral, following default on a loan from the commercial lender to the original creditor.

(g) Attorneys. A provision of the FDCPA, as enacted in 1977 (former section 803(6)(F)), providing that "debt collector" does not include "any attorney-at-law collecting a debt as an attorney on behalf of and in the name of a client," was repealed by Pub. L. 99-361, which became effective in July 1986. Therefore, an attorney who meets the definition set forth in section 803(6) is now covered by the FDCPA.

Section 803(7) defines "location information" as "a consumer's place of abode and his telephone number at such place, or his place of employment."

This definition includes only residence, home phone number, and place of employment. It does not cover work phone numbers, names of supervisors and their telephone numbers, salaries or dates of paydays.

Section 803(8) defines "state" as "any State, territory, or possession of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or any political subdivision of any of the foregoing."

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 804

§ 804 Acquisition of Location Information

Section 804 requires a debt collector, when communicating with third parties for the purpose of acquiring information about the consumer's location to "(1) identify himself, state that he is confirming or correcting location information concerning the consumer, and, only if expressly requested, identify his employer," (2) not refer to the debt, (3) usually make only a single contact with each third party, (4) not communicate by post card, (5) not indicate the collection nature of his business purpose in any written communication, and (6) limit communications to the consumer's attorney, where the collector knows of the attorney, unless the attorney fails to respond to the communication.

1. General. Although the FDCPA generally protects the consumer's privacy by limiting debt collector communications about personal affairs to third parties, it recognizes the need for some third party contact by collectors to seek the whereabouts of the consumer.

2. Identification of debt collector (section 804(1)). An individual employed by a debt collector seeking location information must identify himself, but must not identify his employer unless asked. When asked, however, he must give the true and full name of the employer, to comply with this provision and avoid a violation of 807(14).

An individual debt collector may use an alias if it is used consistently and if it does not interfere with another party's ability to identify him (e.g., the true identity can be ascertained by the employer).

3. Referral to debt (section 804(2)). A debt collector may not refer to the consumer's debt in any third party communication seeking location information, including those with other creditors.

4. Reference to debt collector's business (section 804(5)). A debt collector may not use his actual name in his letterhead or elsewhere in a written communication seeking location information, if the name indicates collection activity (such as a name containing the word "debt", "collector", or "collection"), except when the person contacted has expressly requested that the debt collector identify himself.

5. Communication with consumer's attorney (section 804(6)). Once a debt collector learns a consumer is represented by an attorney in connection with the debt, he must confine his request for location information to the attorney. (See also comments on section 805(a)(2)).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 805

§ 805 Communication in Connection With Debt Collection

Section 805(a) Communication with the consumer. Unless the consumer has consented or a court order permits, a debt collector may not communicate with a consumer to collect a debt (1) at any time or place which is unusual or known to be inconvenient to the consumer (8AM-9PM is presumed to be convenient), (2) where he knows the consumer is represented by an attorney with respect to the debt, unless the attorney fails to respond to the communication in a reasonable time period, or (3) at work if he knows the consumer's employer prohibits such contacts.

1. Scope. For purposes of this section, the term "communicate" is given its commonly accepted meaning. Thus, the section applies to contacts with the consumer related to the collection of debt, whether or not the debt is specifically mentioned.

2. Inconvenient or unusual times or places (section 805(a)(1)). A debt collector may not call the consumer at any time, or on any particular day, if he has credible information (from the consumer or elsewhere) that it is inconvenient. If the debt collector does not have such information, a call on Sunday is not per se illegal.

3. Consumer represented by attorney (section 805(a)(2)). If a debt collector learns that a consumer is represented by an attorney in connection with the debt, even if not formally notified of this fact, the debt collector must contact only the attorney and must not contact the consumer.

A debt collector who knows a consumer is represented by counsel with respect to a debt is not required to assume similar representation on other debts; however, if a consumer notifies the debt collector that the attorney has been retained to represent him for other debts placed with the debt collector, the debt collector must deal only with that attorney with respect to such debts.

The creditor's knowledge that the consumer has an attorney is not automatically imputed to the debt collector.

4. Calls at work (section 805(a)(3)). A debt collector may not call the consumer at work if he has reason to know the employer forbids such communication (e.g., if the consumer has so informed the debt collector).

Section 805(b) Communication with third parties. Unless the consumer consents, or a court order or section 804 permits, "or as reasonably necessary to effectuate a postjudgment judicial remedy," a debt collector "may not communicate, in connection with the collection of any debt, with any person other than the consumer, his attorney, a consumer reporting agency if otherwise permitted by law, the creditor, the attorney of the creditor, or the attorney of the debt collector."

1. Consumer consent to the third party contact. The consumer's consent need not be in writing. For example, if a third party volunteers that a consumer has authorized him to pay the consumer's account, the debt collector may normally presume the consumer's consent, and may accept the payment and provide a receipt to the party that makes the payment. However, consent may not be inferred only from a consumer's inaction when the debt collector requests such consent.

2. Location information. Although a debt collector's search for information concerning the consumer's location (provided in 804) is expressly excepted from the ban on third party contacts, a debt collector may not call third parties under the pretense of gaining information already in his possession.

3. Incidental contacts with telephone operator or telegraph clerk. A debt collector may contact an employee of a telephone or telegraph company in order to contact the consumer, without violating the prohibition on communication to third parties, if the only information given is that necessary to enable the collector to transit the message to, or make the contact with, the consumer.

4. Accessibility to third party. A debt collector may not send a written message that is easily accessible to third parties. For example, he may not use a computerized billing statement that can be seen on the envelope itself.

A debt collector may use an "in care of" letter only if the consumer lives at, or accepts mail at, the other party's address.

A debt collector does not violate this provision when an eavesdropper overhears a conversation with the consumer, unless the debt collector has reason to anticipate the conversation will be overheard.

5. Non-excepted parties. A debt collector may discuss the debt only with the parties specified in this section (consumer, creditor, a party's attorney, or credit bureau). For example, unless the consumer has authorized the communication, a collector may not discuss the debt (such as a dishonored check) with a bank, or make a report on a consumer to a non-profit counseling service.

6. Judicial remedy. The words "as reasonably necessary to effectuate a postjudgment judicial remedy" mean a communication necessary for execution or enforcement of the remedy. A debt collector may not send a copy of the judgment to an employer, except as part of a formal service of papers to achieve a garnishment or other remedy.

7. Audits or inquiries. A debt collector may disclose his files to a government official or an auditor, to respond to an inquiry or conduct an audit, because the disclosure would not be "in connection with the collection of any debt."

8. Communications by attorney debt collectors. An attorney who represents either a creditor or debt collector that has previously tried to collect an account may communicate his efforts to collect the account to the debt collector. Because the section permits a debt collector to communicate with "the attorney of the creditor, or the attorney of the debt collector", communications between these parties (even if the attorney is also a debt collector) are not forbidden.

An attorney may communicate with a potential witness in connection with a lawsuit he has filed (e.g., in order to establish the existence of a debt), because the section was not intended to prohibit communications by attorneys that are necessary to conduct lawsuits on behalf of their clients.

Section 805(c) Ceasing communication. Once a debt collector receives written notice from a consumer that he or she refuses to pay the debt or wants the collector to stop further collection efforts, the debt collector must cease any further communication with the consumer except "(1) to advise the consumer that the debt collector's further efforts are being terminated; (2) to notify the consumer that the debt collector or creditor may invoke specified remedies which are ordinarily invoked by such debt collector or creditor; or (3) where applicable, to notify the consumer that the debt collector or creditor intended to invoke a specified remedy."

1. Scope. For purposes of this section, the term "communicate" is given its commonly accepted meaning. Thus, the section applies to any contact with the consumer related to the collection of the debt, whether or not the debt is specifically mentioned.

2. Request for payment. A debt collector's response to a "cease communication" notice from the consumer may not include a demand for payment, but is limited to the three statutory exceptions.

Section 805(d) "consumer" definition. For section 805 purposes, the term "consumer" includes the "consumer's spouse, parent (if the consumer is a minor), guardian, executor, or administrator."

1. Broad "consumer" definition. Because of the broad statutory definition of "consumer" for the purposes of this section, many of its protections extend to parties close to the consumer. For example, the debt collector may not call the consumer's spouse at a time or place known to be inconvenient to the spouse. Conversely, he may call the spouse (guardian, executor, etc.) at any time or place that would be in accord with the limitations of section 805(a).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 806

§ 806 Harassment or Abuse

Section 806 prohibits a debt collector from any conduct that would "Harass, oppress, or abuse any person in connection with the collection of a debt." It provides six examples of harassement [sic] or abuse.

1. Scope. Prohibited actions are not limited to the six subsections listed as examples of activities that violate this provision.

2. Unnecessary calls to third parties. A debt collector may not leave telephone messages with neighbors when the debt collector knows the consumer's name and telephone number and could have reached him directly.

3. Multiple contacts with consumer. A debt collector may not engage in repeated personal contacts with a consumer with such frequency as to harass him. Subsection (5) deals specifically with harassment by multiple phone calls.

4. Abusive conduct. A debt collector may not pose a lengthy series of questions or comments to the consumer without giving the consumer a chance to reply. Subsection (2) deals specifically with harassment involving obscene, profane, or abusive language.

Section 806(1) prohibits the "use or threat of use of violence or other criminal means to harm * * * any person."

1. Implied threat. A debt collector may violate this section by an implied threat of violence. For example, a debt collector may not pressure a consumer with statements such as "We're not playing around here--we can play tough" or "We're going to send somebody to collect for us one way or the other."

Section 806(2) prohibits the use of obscene, profane, or abusive language.

1. Abusive language. Abusive language includes religious slurs, profanity, obscenity, calling the consumer a liar or a deadbeat, and the use of racial or sexual epithets.

Section 806(3) prohibits the "publication of a list of consumers who allegedly refuse to pay debts," except to report the items to a "consumer reporting agency", as defined in the Fair Credit Reporting Act or to a party otherwise authorized to receive it under that Act.

Section 806(4) prohibits the "advertisement for sale of any debt to coerce payment of the debt."

2. Shaming prohibited. These provisions are designed to prohibit debt collectors from "shaming" a customer into payment, by publicizing the debt.

3. Exchange of lists. Debt collectors may not exchange lists of consumers who allegedly refuse to pay their debts.

Information to creditor subscribers. A debt collector may not distribute a list of alleged debtors to its creditor subscribers.

4. Coded lists. A debt collector that publishes a list of consumers who have had bad debts, coded to avoid generally disclosing the consumer's identity (e.g., showing only the drivers license number and first three letters of each consumer's name) does not violate this provision, because such publication is permitted under the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

5. List for use by investigator. A debtor collector does not violate these provisions by providing a list of consumers against whom judgments have been entered to a private investigator in order to locate such individuals, because section 805(b) specifically permits contacts "reasonably necessary to effectuate a postjudgment judicial remedy."

6. Public notice required by law. A debt collector does not violate these provisions by providing public notices that are required by law as a prerequisite to enforcement of a security interest in connection with a debt.

Section 806(5) prohibits contacting the consumer by telephone "repeatedly or continuously with intent to annoy, abuse, or harass any person at the called number."

1. Multiple phone calls. "Continuously" means making a series of telephone calls, one right after the other. "Repeatedly" means calling with excessive frequency under the circumstances.

Section 806(6) prohibits, except where section 804 applies, "the placement of telephone calls without meaningful disclosure of the caller's identity."

1. Aliases. A debt collector employee's use of an alias that permits identification of the debt collector (i.e., where he uses the alias consistently, and his true identity can be ascertained by the employer) constitutes a "meaningful disclosure of the caller's identity."

2. Identification of caller. An individual debt collector must disclose his employer's identity, when discussing the debt on the telephone with consumers or third parties permitted by section 805(b).

3. Relation to other sections. A debt collector who uses a false business name in a phone call to conceal his identity violates section 807(14), as well as this section.

106 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 807

§ 807 False or Misleading Representations

Section 807 prohibits a debt collector from using any "false, deceptive, or misleading representation or means in connection with the collection of any debt." It provides sixteen examples of false or misleading representations.

1. Scope. Prohibited actions are not limited to the sixteen subsections listed as examples of activities that violate this provision. In addition, section 807(10), which prohibits the "use of any false representation or deceptive means" by a debt collector, is particularly broad and encompasses virtually every violation, including those not covered by the other subsections.

Section 807(1) prohibits "the false representation or implication that the debt collector is vouched for, bonded by, or affiliated with the United States or any State * * *"

1. Symbol on dunning notice. A debt collector may not use a symbol in correspondence that makes him appear to be a government official. For example, a collection letter depicting a police badge, or the scales of justice, normally violates this section.

Section 807(2) prohibits falsely representing either "(A) the character, amount, or legal status of any debt; or (B) any services rendered or compensation which may be lawfully received by" the collector.

1. Legal Status of debt. A debt collector may not falsely imply that legal action has begun.

2. Amount of debt. A debt collector may not claim an amount more than actually owed, or falsely assert that the debt has matured or that it is immediately due and payable, when it is not.

3. Judgment. When a debt collector provides the validation notice required by section 809(a)(4), the notice may include the words "copy of a judgment" whether or not a judgment exists, because section 809(a)(4) provides for a statement including these words. Compliance with section 809(a)(4) in this manner will not be considered a violation of section 807(2)(A).

Section 807(3) prohibits falsely representing or implying that "any individual is an attorney or that any communication is from an attorney."

1. Form of legal correspondence. A debt collector may not send a collection letter from a "Pre-Legal Department," where no legal department exists. An attorney may use a computer service to send letters on his own behalf, but a debt collector may not send a computer-generated letter deceptively using an attorney's name.

2. Named individual. A debt collector may not falsely represent that a person named in a letter is his attorney.

3. Relation to other sections. If a creditor falsely uses an attorney's name rather than his own in his collection communications, he both loses his exemption from the FDCPA's definition of "debt collector" (Section 803(6)) and violates this provision.

Section 807(4) prohibits falsely representing or implying to the consumer that nonpayment "will result in the arrest or imprisonment of any person or the seizure, garnishment, attachment, or sale of any property or wages of any person * * *"

Section 807(5) prohibits the "threat to take any action that cannot legally be taken or that is not intended to be taken."

1. Debt collector's statement of his own definite action. A debt collector may not state that he will take any action unless he intends to take the action when the statement is made, or ordinarily takes the action in similar circumstances.

2. Debt collector's statement of definite action by third party. A debt collector may not state that a third party will take any action unless he has reason to believe, at the time the statement is made, that such action will be taken.

3. Statement of possible action. A debt collector may not state or imply that he or any third party may take any action unless such action is legal and there is a reasonable likelihood, at the time the statement is made, that such action will be taken. A debt collector may state that certain action is possible, if it is true that such action is legal and is frequently taken by the collector or creditor with respect to similar debts; however, if the debt collector has reason to know there are facts that make the action unlikely in the particular case, a statement that the action was possible would be misleading.

4. Threat of criminal action. A debt collector may not threaten to report a dishonored check or other fact to the police, unless he actually intends to take this action.

5. Threat of attachment. A debt collector may not threaten to attach a consumer's tax refund, when he has no authority to do so.

6. Threat of legal or other action. Section 807(5) refers not only to a false threat of legal action, but also a false threat by a debt collector that he will report a debt to a credit bureau, assess a collection fee, or undertake any other action if the debt is not paid. A debt collector may also not misrepresent the imminence of such action.

A debt collector's implication, as well as a direct statement, of planned legal action may be an unlawful deception. For example, reference to an attorney or to legal proceedings may mislead the debtor as to the likelihood or imminence of legal action.

A debt collector's statement that legal action has been recommended is a representation that legal action may be taken, since such a recommendation implies that the creditor will act on it at least some of the time.

Lack of intent may be inferred when the amount of the debt is so small as to make the action totally unfeasible or when the debt collector is unable to take the action because the creditor has not authorized him to do so.

7. Illegality or threatened act. A debt collector may not threaten that he will illegally contact an employer, or other third party, or take some other "action that cannot legally be taken" (such as advising the creditor to sue where such advice would violate such rules governing the unauthorized practice of law). If state law forbids a debt collector from suing in his own name (or from doing so without first obtaining a formal assignment and that has not been done), the debt collector may not represent that he will sue in that state.

Section 807(6) prohibits falsely representing or implying that a transfer of the debt will cause the consumer to (A) lose any claim or defense, or (B) become subject to any practice prohibited by the FDCPA.

1. Referral to creditor. A debt collector may not falsely state that the consumer's account will be referred back to the original creditor, who would take action the FDCPA prohibits the debt collector to take.

Section 807(7) prohibits falsely representing or implying that the "consumer committed any crime or other conduct in order to disgrace the consumer."

1. False allegation of fraud. A debt collector may not falsely allege that the consumer has committed fraud.

2. Misrepresentation of criminal law. A debt collector may not make a misleading statement of law, falsely implying that the consumer has committed a crime, or mischaracterize what constitutes an offense by misstating or omitting significant elements of the offense. For example, a debt collector may not tell the consumer that he has committed a crime by issuing a check that is dishonored, when the statute applies only where there is a "scheme to defraud."

Section 807(8) prohibits "Communicating or threatening to communicate to any person (false) credit information * * *, including the failure to communicate that a disputed debt is disputed."

1. Disputed debt. If a debt collector knows that a debt is disputed by the consumer, either from receipt of written notice (section 809) or other means, and reports it to a credit bureau, he must report it as disputed.

2. Post-report dispute. When a debt collector learns of a dispute after reporting the debt to a credit bureau, the dispute need not also be reported.

Section 807(9) prohibits the use of any document designed to falsely imply that it issued from a state or federal source, or "which creates a false impression as to its source, authorization, or approval."

1. Relation to other sections. Most of the violations of this section involve simulated legal process, which is more specifically covered by section 807(13). However, this subsection is broader in that it also covers documents that fraudulently appear to be official government documents, or otherwise mislead the recipient as to their authorship.

Section 807(10) prohibits the "use of any false representation or deceptive means to collect or attempt to collect any debt or to obtain information concerning a consumer."

1. Relation to other sections. The prohibition is so comprehensive that violation of any part of section 807 will usually also violate subsection (10). Actions that violate more specific provisions are discussed in those sections.

2. Communication format. A debt collector may not communicate by a format or envelope that misrepresents the nature, purpose, or urgency of the message. It is a violation to send any communication that conveys to the consumer a false sense of urgency. However, it is usually permissible to send a letter generated by a machine, such as a computer or other printing device. A bona fide contest entry form, which provides a clearly optional location to enter employment information, enclosed with request for payment, is not deceptive.

3. False statement or implications. A debt collector may not falsely state or imply that a consumer is required to assign his wages to his creditor when he is not, that the debt collector has counseled the creditor to sue when he has not, that adverse credit information has been entered on the consumer's credit record when it has not, that the entire amount is due when it is not, or that he cannot accept partial payments when in fact he is authorized to accept them.

4. Misrepresentation of law. A debt collector may not mislead the consumer as to the legal consequences of the consumer's actions (e.g., by falsely implying that a failure to respond is an admission of liability).

A debt collector may not state that federal law requires a notice of the debt collector's intent to contact third parties.

5. Misleading letterhead. A debt collector's employee who is an attorney may notuse [sic] "attorney-at-law" stationery without referring to his employer, so as to falsely imply to the consumer that the debt collector had retained a private attorney to bring suit on the account.

Section 807(11) requires the debt collector to "disclose clearly in all communications made to collect a debt or to obtain information about a consumer, that the debt collector is attempting to collect a debt and that any information obtained will be used for that purpose", except where section 804 provides otherwise.

1. Oral communications. A debt collector must make the required disclosures in both oral and written communications.

2. Disclosure to consumers. When a debt collector contacts a consumer and clearly discloses that he is seeking payment of a debt, he need not state that all information will be used to collect a debt, since that should be apparent to the consumer. The debt collector need not repeat the required disclosure in subsequent contacts.

A debt collector may not send the consumer a note saying only "please call me right away" unless there has been prior contact between the parties and the collector is thus known to the consumer.

3. Disclosures to third parties. Except when seeking location information, the debt collector must state in the first communication with a third party that he is attempting to collect the debt and that information will be used for that purpose, but need not do so in subsequent communications with that party.

Section 807(12) prohibits falsely representing or implying that "accounts have been turned over to innocent purchasers for value."

1. Relation to other sections. Section 807(6)(A) prohibits a false statement or implication that threatening to affect the consumer's rights may be affected by transferring the account; this subsection forbids falsely stating or implying that a transfer to certain parties has occurred.

Section 807(13) prohibits falsely representing or implying that "documents are legal process."

1. Simulated legal process. A debt collector may not send written communications that deceptively resemble legal process forms. He may not send a form or a dunning letter that, taken as a whole, appears to simulate legal process. However, one legal phrase (such as "notice of legal action" or "show just cause why") alone will not result in a violation of this section unless it contributes to an erroneous impression that the document is a legal form.

Section 807(14) prohibits the "use of any business, company, or organization name other than the (collector's) true name".

1. Permissible business name. A debt collector may use a name that does not misrepresent his identity or deceive the consumer. Thus, a collector may use its full business name, the name under which it usually transacts business, or a commonly-used acronym. When the collector uses multiple names in its various affairs, it does not violate this subsection if it consistently uses the same name when dealing with a particular consumer.

2. Creditor misrepresentation of identity. A creditor may not use any name that would falsely imply that a third party is involved in the collection. The in-house collection unit of "ABC Corp." may use the name "ABC Collection Division," but not the name "XYZ Collection Agency" or some other unrelated name.

A creditor violates this section if he uses the name of a collection bureau as a conduit for a collection process that the creditor controls in collecting his own accounts. Similarly, a creditor may not use a fictitious name or letterhead, or a "post office box address" name that implies someone else is collecting his debts.

A creditor does not violate this provision where an affiliated (and differently named) debt collector undertakes collection activity, if the debt collector does business separately from the creditor (e.g., where the debt collector in fact has other clients that he treats similarly to the creditor, has his own employees, deals at arms length with the creditor, and controls the process himself).

3. All collection activities covered. A debt collection business must use its real business name, commonly-used name, or acronym in both written and oral communications.

4. Relation to other sections. If a creditor uses a false business name, he both loses his exemption from the FDCPA's definition of "debt collector" (section 803(6)) and violates this provision. If a debt collector falsely uses the name of an attorney rather than his true business name, he violates section 807(3) as well as this section. When a debt collector uses a false business name in a phone call, he violates section 806(6) as well as this section.

When using the mails to obtain location information, a debt collector may not (unless expressly requested by the recipient to identify the firm) use a name that indicates he is in the debt collection business, or he will violate section 804(5). When a debt collector's employee who is seeking location information replies to an inquiry about his employer's identity under section 804(1), he must give the true name of his employer.

Section 807(15) prohibits falsely representing or implying that documents are not legal process forms or do not require action by the consumer.

1. Disguised legal process. A debt collector may not deceive a consumer into failing to respond to legal process by concealing the import of the papers, thereby subjecting the consumer to a default judgment.

Section 807(16) prohibits falsely representing or implying that a debt collector operates or is employed by a "consumer reporting agency" as defined in the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

1. Dual agencies. The FDCPA does not prohibit a debt collector from operating a consumer reporting agency.

2. Misleading names. Only a bona fide consumer reporting agency may use names such as "Credit Bureau," "Credit Bureau Collection Agency," "General Credit Control," "Credit Bureau Rating, Inc.," or "National Debtors Rating." A debt collector's disclaimer in the text of a letter that the debt collector is not affiliated with (or employed by) a consumer reporting agency, will not necessarily avoid a violation if the collector uses a name that indicates otherwise.

3. Factual issue. Whether a debt collector that has called itself a credit bureau actually qualifies as such is a factual issue, to be decided according to the debt collector's actual operation.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 808

§ 808 Unfair Practices

Section 808 prohibits a debt collector from using "unfair or unconscionable means" in his debt collection activity. It provides eight examples of unfair practices.

1. Scope. Prohibited actions are not limited to the eight subsections listed as examples of activities that violate this provision.

2. Elements of unfairness. A debt collector's act in collecting a debt may be "unfair" if it causes injury to the consumer that is (1) substantial, (2) not outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or competition, and (3) not reasonably avoidable by the consumer.

Section 808(1) prohibits collecting any amount unless the amount is expressly authorized by the agreement creating the debt or is permitted by law.

1. Kinds of amounts covered. For purposes of this section, "amount" includes not only the debt, but also any incidental charges, such as collection charges, interest, service charges, late fees, and bad check handling charges.

2. Legality of charges. A debt collector may attempt to collect a fee or charge in addition to the debt if either (a) the charge is expressly provided for in the contract creating the debt and the charge is not prohibited by state law, or (B) [sic] the contract is silent but the charge is otherwise expressly permitted by state law. Conversely, a debt collector may not collect an additional amount if either (A) state law expressly prohibits collection of the amount or (B) the contract does not provide for collection of the amount and state law is silent.

3. Legality of fee under state law. If state law permits collection of reasonable fees, the reasonableness (and consequential legality) of these fees is determined by state law.

4. Agreement not in writing. A debt collector may establish an "agreement" without a written contract. For example, he may collect a service charge on a dishonored check based on a posted sign on the merchant's premises allowing such a charge, if he can demonstrate that the consumer knew of the charge.

Section 808(2) prohibits accepting a check postdated by more than five days unless timely written notice is given to the consumer prior to deposit.

Section 808(3) prohibits soliciting any postdated check for purposes of threatening or instituting criminal prosecution.

Section 808(4) prohibits depositing a postdated check prior to its date.

1. Postdated checks. These provisions do not totally prohibit debt collectors from accepting postdated checks from consumers, but rather prohibit debt collectors from misusing such instruments.

Section 808(5) prohibits causing any person to incur telephone or telegram charges by concealing the true purpose of the communication.

1. Long distance calls to the debt collector. A debt collector may not call the consumer collect or ask a consumer to call him long distance without disclosing the debt collector's identity and the communication's purpose.

2. Relation to other section. A debt collector who conceals his purpose in asking consumers to call long distance may also violate section 807(11), which requires the debt collector to disclose his purpose in some communications.

Section 808(6) prohibits taking nonjudicial action to enforce a security interest on property, or threatening to do so, where (A) there is not [sic] present right to the collateral, (B) there is no present intent to exercise such rights, or (C) the property is exempt by law.

1. Security enforcers. Because the FDCPA's definition of "debt collection" includes parties whose principal business is enforcing security interests only for section 808(6) purposes, such parties (if they do not otherwise fall within the definition) are subject only to this provision and not to the rest of the FDCPA.

Section 808(7) prohibits "Communicating with a consumer regarding a debt by post card."

1. Debt. A debt collector does not violate this section if he sends a post card to a consumer that does not communicate the existence of the debt. However, if he had not previously disclosed that he is attempting to collect a debt, he would violate section 807(11), which requires this disclosure.

Section 808(8) prohibits showing anything other than the debt collector's address, on any envelope in any written communication to the consumer, except that a debt collector may use his business name if it does not indicate that he is in the debt collection business.

1. Business names prohibited on envelopes. A debt collector may not put on his envelope any business name with "debt" or "collector" in it, or any other name that indicates he is in the debt collection business. A debt collector may not use the American Collectors Association logo on an envelope.

2. Collector's name. Whether a debt collector/consumer reporting agency's use of his own "credit bureau" or other name indicates that he is in the collection business, and thus violates the section, is a factual issue to be determined in each individual case.

3. Harmless words or symbols. A debt collector does not violate this section by using an envelope printed with words or notations that do not suggest the purpose of the communication. For example, a collector may communicate via an actual telegram or similar service that uses a Western Union (or other provider) logo and the word "telegram" (or similar word) on the envelope, or a letter with the word "Personal" or "Confidential" on the envelope.

4. Transparent envelopes. A debt collector may not use a transparent envelope, which reveals language or symbols indicating his debt collection business, because it is the equivalent of putting information on an envelope.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 809

§ 809 Validation of Debts

Section 809(a) requires a collector, within 5 days of the first communication, to provide the consumer a written notice (if not provided in that communication) containing (1) the amount of the debt and (2) the name of the creditor, along with a statement that he will (3) assume the debt's validity unless the consumer disputes it within 30 days, (4) send a verification or copy of the judgment if the consumer timely disputes the debt, and (5) identify the original creditor upon written request.

1. Who must provide notice. If the employer debt collection agency gives the required notice, employee debt collectors need not also provide it. A debt collector's agent may give the notice, as long as it is clear that the information is being provided on behalf of the debt collector.

2. Single notice required. The debt collector is not required to provide more than one notice for each debt. A notice need not offer to identify the original creditor unless the name and address of the original creditor are different from the current creditor.

3. Form of notices. The FDCPA imposes no requirements as to the form, sequence, location, or typesize of the notice. However, an illegible notice does not comply with this provision.

4. Alternate terminology. A debt collector may condense and combine the required disclosures, as long as he provides all required information.

5. Oral notice. If a debt collector's first communication with the consumer is oral, he may make the disclosures orally at that time in which case he need not send a written notice.

6. Legal action. A debt collector's institution of formal legal action against a consumer (including the filing of a complaint or service of legal papers by an attorney in connection with a lawsuit to collect a debt) or transmission of a notice to a consumer that is required by law as a prerequisite to enforcing a contractual obligation is not a "communication in connection with collection of any debt," and thus does not confer section 809 notice-and-validation rights on the consumer.

7. Collection activities by attorneys. An attorney who regularly attempts to collect debts by means other than litigation, such as writing the consumer demand letters (dunning notices) or calling the consumer on the phone about the obligation (except in response to a consumer's call to him after suit has been commenced), must provide the required notice, even if a previous debt collector (or creditor) has given such a notice.

8. Effect of including proof with first notice. A debt collector must verify a disputed debt even if he has included proof of the debt with the first communication, because the section is intended to assist the consumer when a debt collector inadvertently contacts the wrong consumer at the start of his collection efforts.

Section 809(b) requires that, if the consumer disputes the debt or requests identification of the original creditor in writing, the collector must cease collection efforts until he verifies the debt and mails a response.

Section 809(c) states that a consumer's failure to dispute the validity of a debt under this section may not be interpreted by a court as an admission of liability.

1. Pre-notice collection. A debt collector need not cease normal collection activities within the consumer's 30-day period to give notice of a dispute until he receives a notice from the consumer. An attorney debt collector may take legal action within 30 days of sending the notice, regardless of whether the consumer disputes the debt. If the consumer disputes the debt, the attorney may still take legal action but must cease collection efforts until verification is obtained and mailed to the consumer.

A debt collector may report a debt to a credit bureau within the 30-day notice period, before he receives a request for validation or a dispute notice from the consumer.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 810

§ 810 Multiple Debts

Section 810 provides: "If any consumer owes multiple debts and makes any single payment to any debt collector with respect to such debts, such debt collector my [sic] not apply such payment to any debt which is disputed by the consumer and, where applicable, shall apply such payment in accordance with the consumer's directions."

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 811

§ 811 Legal Actions by Debt Collectors

Section 811 provides that a debt collector may sue a consumer only in the judicial district where the consumer resides or signed the contract sued upon, except that an action to enforce a security interest in real property which secures the obligation must be brought where the property is located.

1. Waiver. Any waiver by the consumer must be provided directly to the debt collector (not to the creditor in the contract establishing the debt), because the forum restriction applies to actions brought by the debt collector.

2. Multiple defendants. Since a debt collector may sue only where the consumer (1) lives or (2) signed the contract, the collector may not join an ex-husband as a defendant to a suit against the ex-wife in the district of her residence, unless he also lives there or signed the contract there. The existence of community property at her residence that is available to pay his debts does not alter the forum limitations on individual consumers.

3. Real estate security. A debt collector may sue based on the location of a consumer's real property only when he seeks to enforce an interest in such property that secures the debts.

4. Services without written contract. Where services were provided pursuant to an oral agreement, the debt collector may sue only where the consumer resides. He may not sue where services were performed (if that is different from the consumer's residence), because that is not included as permissible forum location by this provision.

5. Enforcement of judgments. If a judgment is obtained in a forum that satisfies the requirements of this section, it may be enforced in another jurisdiction, because the consumer previously has had the opportunity to defend the original action in a convenient forum.

6. Scope. This provision applies to lawsuits brought by a debt collector, including an attorney debt collector, when the debt collector is acting on his own behalf or on behalf of his client.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 812

§ 812 Furnishing Certain Deceptive Forms

Section 812 prohibits any party from designing and furnishing forms, knowing they are or will be used to deceive a consumer to believe that someone other than his creditor is collecting the debt, and imposes FDCPA civil liability on parties who supply such forms.

1. Practice prohibited. This section prohibits the practice of selling to creditors dunning letters that falsely imply that a debt collector is participating in collection of the debt, when in fact only the creditor is collecting.

2. Coverage. This section applies to anyone who designs, complies, or furnishes the forms prohibited by this section.

3. Pre-collection letters. A form seller may not furnish a creditor with (1) a letter on a collector's letterhead to be used when the collector is not involved in collecting the creditor's debts, or (2) a letter indicating "copy to (the collector)" if the collector is not participating in collecting the creditor's debt. A form seller may not avoid liability by including a statement in the text of a form letter that the sender has not yet been assigned the account for collection, if the communication as a whole, using the collector's letterhead, represents otherwise.

4. Knowledge required. A party does not violate this provision unless he knows or should have known that his form letter will be used to mislead consumers into believing that someone other than the creditor is involved in collecting the debt.

5. Participation by debt collector. A debt collector that uses letters as his only collection tool does not violate this section, merely because he charges a flat rate per letter, if he is meaningfully "participating in the collection of a debt." The consumer is not misled in such cases, as he would be in the case of a party who supplied the creditor with form letters and provided little or no additional service in the collection process. The performance of other tasks associated with collection (e.g., handling verification requests, negotiating payment arrangements, keeping individual records) is evidence that such a party is "participating in the collection."

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 813

§ 813 Civil Liability

Section 813 (A) imposes civil liability in the form of (1) actual damages, (2) discretionary penalties, and (3) costs and attorney's fees, (B) discusses relevant factors a court should consider in assessing damages, (C) exculpates a collector who maintains reasonable procedures from liability for an unintentional error, (D) permits actions to be brought in federal or state courts within one year from the violation, and (E) shields a defendant who relies on an advisory opinion of the Commission.

1. Employee liability. Since the employees of a debt collection agency are "debt collectors," they are liable for violations to the same extent as the agency.

2. Damages. The courts have awarded "actual damages" for FDCPA violations that were not just out-of-pocket expenses, but included damages for personal humiliations, embarrassment, mental anguish, or emotional distress.

3. Application of statute of limitation period. The section's one year statute of limitations applies only to private lawsuits, not to actions brought by a government agency.

4. Advisory opinions. A party may act in reliance on a formal advisory opinion of the Commission pursuant to 16 CFR 1.1-1.4, without risk of civil liability. This protection does not extend to reliance on this Commentary or other informal staff interpretations.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 814

§ 814 Administrative Enforcement

Section 814 provides that the principal federal enforcement agency for the FDCPA is the Federal Trade Commission, but assigns enforcement power to other authorities empowered by certain federal statutes to regulate financial, agricultural, and transportation activities, where FDCPA violations relate to acts subject to those laws.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 815

§ 815 Reports to Congress by Commission

Section 815 requires the Commission to submit an annual report to Congress which discusses its enforcement and other activities administering the FDCPA, assesses the degree of compliance, and makes recommendations.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 816

§ 816 Relations to State Laws

Section 816 provides that the FDCPA preempts state laws only to the extent that those laws are inconsistent with any provision of the FDCPA, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency. A State law is not inconsistent if it gives consumers greater protection than the FDCPA.

1. Inconsistent laws. Where a state law provides protection to the consumer equal to, or greater than, the FDCPA, it is not pre-empted by the federal statute.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 817

§ 817 Exemption For State Regulation

Section 817 orders the Commission to exempt any class of debt collection practices from the FDCPA within any State if it determines that State laws regulating those practices are substantially similar to the FDCPA, and contain adequate provision for enforcement.

1. State exemptions. A state with a debt collection law may apply to the Commission for an exemption. The Commission must grant the exemption if the state's law is substantially similar to the FDCPA, and there is adequate provision for enforcement. The Commission has published procedures for processing such applications (16 CFR 901).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
Appendix 8A FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION STAFF COMMENTARY ON THE FAIR DEBT COLLECTION PRACTICES ACT

1-8A Consumer Credit Law Manual Section 818

§ 818 Effective Date

Section 818 provides that the FDCPA took effect six months from the date of its enactment.

1. Key dates. The FDCPA was approved September 20, 1977, and became effective March 20, 1978.

[FR Doc. 88-28573 Filed 12-12-88; 8:45 am]

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1A-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual 9.syn

§ 9.syn Synopsis to Chapter 9: Garnishment and Exemptions

§ 9.01 Federal Garnishment Protections

[1] Introduction

§ 9.02 Due Process Protections From Garnishment of Exempt Property

[1] The Constitutional Balancing of Interests

[2] Prompt Post-Garnishment Notice Is Required

[3] Garnishment Notice Must Inform Debtor of Exemptions

[4] Notice Must Inform Debtor of Procedures to Contest Garnishment

[5] Debtor Has a Right to a Prompt Post-Garnishment Hearing

§ 9.03 Federal Wage Garnishment Protections

[1] Scope of Federal Wage Garnishment Protections

[2] Earnings Subject to CCPA Garnishment Protections

[a] Earnings for Personal Services Protected

[b] CCPA Protection Generally Not Extended to Paid or Deposited Earnings

[3] Calculating Amount of Wages Protected

[4] Remedies for Excessive Wage Garnishment

[5] Federal Protections Against Employee Discharge for Wage Garnishment

[6] Garnishment of Federal Employees Wages

[7] Relationship of the CCPA to State Law

§ 9.04 Creditors May Be Barred From Reaching Exempt Funds and Funds of Another in a Joint Bank Account

§ 9.05 Protection of Exempt Funds From Creditors' Self-Help Remedy of Set-Off

[1] Bankers' Set-Off of Exempt Funds Deposited in Bank Account

[a] Majority Rule Courts Protect Exempt Income Deposited in Checking or Savings Account

[b] Additional Limitations Upon Bankers' Right of Set-Off

[2] Bankruptcy and Other Set-Off Situations

[3] Restriction on Card Issuers' Use of Set-Off

[4] Allowable Card Issuer Set-Offs Against Deposit Accounts

§ 9.06 Creditor's Right to Seize Funds in a Joint Bank Account May Be Limited to Debtor's Contribution

[1] Introduction

[2] The Contract Approach

[3] The Net Contribution Approach

[4] Due Process Considerations

§ 9.07 Exemption Laws Are Fundamental Protections for Low-Income Consumers From Debt Collectors

§ 9.08 Purpose of Exemption Laws

§ 9.09 Homestead Exemptions

[1] Scope

[2] Homestead Exemption Limits in Bankruptcy

§ 9.10 State Restrictions on Wage Garnishment

[1] General

§ 9.11 Protection of Public Assistance Payments

[1] FEMA Disaster Relief Assistance

[2] Deposit of Exempt Funds in Bank Accounts

[a] Key Issues

[b] Are Benefits Exempt Once Deposited in Bank Account?

[c] Accumulation of Excessive Funds

[d] Commingling of Exempt and Non-Exempt Funds

[e] Set-Off

[f] Maintenance, Child Support, and Other Claims May Be Allowed Against Exempt Funds

[g] Liability for Wrongful Seizure of Bank Account Funds

[h] Counselling Clients to Keep Exempt Funds in Separate Account

§ 9.12 Exemptions for Pensions and Retirement Benefits

[1] Purpose

§ 9.13 Exemptions for Unemployment and Worker's Compensation Payments

§ 9.14 State Statutes Specifically Limiting Health Care Debt Collection

§ 9.15 Exemptions for Insurance Benefits

§ 9.16 Exemptions for Personal Property

[1] Purpose

§ 9.17 Exempt Assets in Bank Accounts

§ 9.18 Personal Injury Judgments

§ 9.19 Internal Revenue Service Operates Under Its Own Exemption Scheme

§ 9.20 Assertion of Exemptions

§ 9.21 Proceeds From Sale of Exempt Property

§ 9.22 Waiver of Exemptions

[1] General

119 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.01

§ 9.01 Federal Garnishment Protectionsn1

[1] Introduction

Garnishment is a frequently used debt collection technique in which the collector seizes money someone else owes to the debtor. The debtor's wages from the employer or the debtor's deposits in a bank account from the bank are the most frequent targets. Garnishments today are used commonly to enforce only post-judgment debts.

Post-judgment garnishments must comply with federal due process standards, most significantly allowing debtors to assert that certain of their assets are exempt from execution, and, thus, may not be garnished. In addition, wage garnishments must comply with the Federal Consumer Credit Protection Act's ("CCPA") protection of a portion of earnings from garnishment, n2 the state law and/or court rules establishing garnishment procedures, and any other state restrictions, e.g., wage and personal property exemptions.

A variety of federal and state exemption laws may protect a debtor's assets. Federal laws protect federal benefits from garnishment, e.g., veteran's benefits, social security benefits, Employee Retirement Income Security Acts ("ERISA") pension plans, and proceeds of guaranteed student loans. State laws may also protect wages and welfare benefits. A creditor's right to garnish or attach a joint bank account may be limited by the state determinations of the debtor's interest in the account. The due process protections of notice of exemptions and right to a hearing on exemptions extends to execution on potentially exempt personal property.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishments

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. For a fuller discussion of garnishment with numerous case citations, see National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, Ch. 12 (1st ed. 2008 and supp.). See also Ch. 8 supra.

(n2)Footnote 2. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1671 to 1677, reprinted in Vol. 1B infra.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.02

§ 9.02 Due Process Protections From Garnishment of Exempt Property

[1] The Constitutional Balancing of Interests

Although it is clear that debtors have a significant property interest in assets which are exempt from garnishment, and that garnishment involves state action sufficient to invoke Fourteenth Amendment protections, n1 it is only since the late 1970s that courts have seriously considered the due process rights of judgment debtors.

The most prevalent due process analysis for post-judgment garnishment procedures and execution relating to exempt property was the balancing test set out by the Supreme Court in 1976 in Matthews v. Eldridge. n2 Under this "three-pronged" approach, a court considering the process due when a person is deprived of property bases its decision on the competing interests involved and the effect of state action on these interests; the risk of erroneous deprivation of property under the existing system and the probable value of additional or substitute procedures; and the cost and administrative burden of the new procedures in comparison to their probable value.

Applying the Matthews tests, courts generally hold that post-judgment garnishments must comply with four procedural requirements.

[2] Prompt Post-Garnishment Notice Is Required

Generally, state laws violate due process when they allow garnishment without any notice (other than the actual notice the debtor gets when, for example, he receives a smaller pay check). n3

Nevertheless, some courts have ruled that due process does not require notice prior to garnishment, based on the fear that, in cases involving the garnishment of bank accounts or moveable property, a debtor might remove the property to defeat a valid garnishment.

A recent district court decision, Mayers v. New York Cmty. Bankcorp, n4 takes a fresh look at the constitutionality of freezing the debtor's bank account in light of technological changes. In particular, the court noted that the Social Security Administration's requirement that beneficiaries receive payments electronically, unless they specifically opt out, has increased the risk and severity of erroneous deprivation and decreased the burden of determining whether bank accounts contain only exempt funds. Balancing these factors, along with the government's interest in avoiding clogging up the courts with exemption claims, the Mayers court held that the plaintiffs had the right to proceed on their claim that the New York bank account garnishment procedures denies debtors procedural due process by allowing accounts that contain only exempt electronically-deposited Social Security funds to be frozen.

Instead of pre-garnishment notice, the courts have required that notice be contemporaneous with or immediately follow the garnishment.

[3] Garnishment Notice Must Inform Debtor of Exemptions

The notice must inform the debtor that garnishment has occurred, must describe major legal exemptions from garnishment, and must tell the debtor what procedures the debtor can follow to contest the garnishment. n5 Disclosing thisinformation places little burden on creditors or the state, since the information can be included in a pre-printed form. These disclosures, on the other hand, are very important to a debtor who often does not know of the existence of exemptions or how to contest improper garnishment.

The courts have not required garnishment notices to list exhaustively all the potential legal exemptions, but must at least include mention of some of the most important exemptions, such as Social Security, Aid to Families with Dependent Children ("AFDC"), and wage payments. n6 Other exemptions which may have to be listed include Supplementary Security Income ("SSI"), veteran's benefits, unemployment compensation, worker's compensation, alimony and child support, pensions, and lump sum state exemptions. The list will vary from state-to-state.

[4] Notice Must Inform Debtor of Procedures to Contest Garnishment

Courts have generally required that the notices state what action a debtor may take to contest garnishment. n7 However, a few courts have held that a mere citation to the statute or court rule governing procedures to contest garnishment was a sufficient description of those procedures.

[5] Debtor Has a Right to a Prompt Post-Garnishment Hearing

Due process also requires that debtors have the right to obtain a hearing to contest a garnishment within a reasonable period after the garnishment has occurred. The courts have widely recognized that delays can impose severe hardship on debtors, and that garnishment statutes allowing significant delay prior to a hearing are unconstitutional. As with the timing of notice of garnishment, however, no particular reasonable time before hearing has been agreed upon, although ten days or less seems common.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsProcedural Due ProcessGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., Sniadach v. Family Fin. Corp., 395 U.S. 337, 89 S. Ct. 1820, 23 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1969) ; Doyle v. Schultz, 97 F. Supp. 2d 763 (W.D. La. 2000) (creditor and attorney were state actors when they set in motion state execution procedure which was unconstitutional as applied); Mayers v. New York Cmty. Bancorp, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20279 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 31, 2005) (procedure for pre-garnishment bank account freeze was state action; state coercion present because bank that disregarded notice could be sanctioned for contempt).

(n2)Footnote 2. 424 U.S. 319, 96 S. Ct. 893, 47 L. Ed. 2d 18 (1976) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Dionne v. Bouley, 757 F.2d 1344 (1st Cir. 1985) ; Doyle v. Schultz, 97 F. Supp. 2d 763 (W.D. La. 2000) (Louisiana procedure for executing judgments was unconstitutional as applied, where house was seized pursuant to Texas judgment without notice that judgment had been domesticated); Department of Revenue, Child Support Enforcement Div. v. Maxwell, 6 P.3d 733 (Alaska 2000) (child support order void for denial of due process, where obligor was given no opportunity to be heard before issuance of administrative order); Romero v. Star Mkts., Inc., 82 Haw. 405, 922 P.2d 1018 (Ct. App. 1996) ; E.J. McKernan Co. v. Gregory, 643 N.E.2d 1370 (Ill. App. Ct. 1994) (former version of Illinois non-wage garnishment law was unconstitutional because it failed to provide notice and hearing regarding possible exemptions, prior to issuance of garnishment summons); Dorwart v. Caraway, 290 Mont. 196, 966 P.2d 1121 (1998) , op. withdrawn, reh'g denied, 1998 Mont. LEXIS 251 (1998) , cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1051, 119 S. Ct. 1358, 143 L. Ed. 2d 519 (1999) (Montana post-judgment procedure found to violate due process by failing to require prompt post-seizure notice re: exemptions and how to assert them, and availability of hearings on claims of exemption). But see Day v. Idaho Dep't of Corrections, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 34125 (9th Cir. Dec. 27, 1999) (unpublished opinion, court rules may limit citation). Cf. Price v. Secretary, Dep't of Revenue & Taxation, 664 So. 2d 802 (La. App. 1995) , cert. denied, 669 So. 2d 405 (La. 1996) (under community property law, wages of non-debtor wife could be garnished without notice for tax debt of husband's corporation). Cf. Savage v. Scales, 310 F. Supp. 2d 122 (D.D.C. 2004) (due process requires only reasonable effort to provide notice; administrative garnishment for student loan upheld, where notice sent to last known address).

(n4)Footnote 4. 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20279 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 31, 2005) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Aacen v. San Juan County Sheriff's Dep't, 944 F.2d 691 (10th Cir. 1991) ; Imperial Bank v. Pim Elec., Inc., 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 432 (App. Ct. 1995) (detailed discussion of California procedure under the enforcement of judgments law; due process satisfied where notice of possible exemptions given at time of seizure); Dorwart v. Caraway, 966 P.2d 1121 (Mont. 1998) , op. withdrawn, reh'g denied, 1998 Mont. LEXIS 251 (1998) , cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1051, 119 S. Ct. 1358, 143 L. Ed. 2d 519 (1999) . See also First Union Nat'l Bank v. Knyal, 874 So. 2d 716 (Fla. App. 2004) (Florida procedure requires notice of right to exemptions, procedure for claiming them, and right to hearing).

(n6)Footnote 6. Aacen v. San Juan County Sheriff's Dep't, 944 F.2d 691 (10th Cir. 1991) (due process violated where notice of exemptions listed only the homestead exemption and failed to reveal existence of others, or how to claim them). But see Reigh v. Schleigh, 595 F. Supp. 1535 (D. Md. 1984) (mere notice that there are federal and state exemptions was sufficient), rev'd on other grounds, 784 F.2d 1191 (4th Cir. 1986) , cert. denied, 479 U.S. 847, 107 S. Ct. 167, 93 L. Ed. 2d 105 (1986) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Washington v. Thompson, 339 Ark. 417, 6 S.W.3d 82 (1999) (child support obligor who missed deadline was nonetheless allowed a hearing, where notice was confusing and inconsistent as to procedure for requesting hearing). See also First Resolution Inv. Corp. v. Seker, 795 A.2d 868 (N.J. 2002) (rejecting constitutional challenge, but ordering Civil Practice Committee to revise form notice to provide further information to debtor about how to challenge garnishment).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.03

§ 9.03 Federal Wage Garnishment Protections

The CCPA garnishment provisions n1 exempt a portion of a consumer's earnings from garnishment and prohibit employers from firing a worker due to garnishment resulting from a single indebtedness. The Federal Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996 gave special garnishment powers to federal agencies to which delinquent debts are owed. They can garnish up to 15% of debtors' disposable wages "notwithstanding any provision of state law." n2

[1] Scope of Federal Wage Garnishment Protections

The CCPA protects earnings which are "subject to garnishment." The term "subject to garnishment" has been interpreted broadly to relate to any seizure flowing from judicial action, thus applying to proceedings in aid of execution and attachment proceedings. Most wage garnishments are made by court order, with a creditor seeking to satisfy a claim against the employee by reaching an employee's earnings before they are paid.

The CCPA garnishment provisions do not apply to seizures pursuant to contractual agreement, such as a wage assignment or a set-off procedure by a government agency. However, contractual wage assignment provisions have been broadly prohibited by the Federal Trade Commission's Credit Practices Rule. n3 The CCPA garnishment provisions do apply to wage assignments resulting from a judicial order.

The CCPA wage protections do not apply to bankruptcy court orders or to actions to collect state or federal taxes. n4 But, while the CCPA wage protections do not apply to a levy by the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS"), the Internal Revenue Code itself exempts from such seizure a portion of income that may be more generous than the CCPA for families and less generous for individuals without dependents. n5

The CCPA garnishment protections apply to debt incurred for a business, as well as a consumer, purpose.

[2] Earnings Subject to CCPA Garnishment Protections

[a] Earnings for Personal Services Protected

The CCPA garnishment provisions protect consumers from garnishment of "earnings," which means compensation paid or payable for personal services, whether denominated as wages, salary, commission, bonus, or other periodic payment pursuant to a pension or retirement program. n6 The key question is whether payments are compensation "for personal services." Vacation pay is "earnings" within the scope of the statute and is thus protected; severance pay and tax refunds are not. Many courts have found that payments to independent contractors are not "earnings" and are not protected by the federal statute; however, courts applying state wage exemptions laws have ruled that similar provisions do extend to independent contractors. n7

[b] CCPA Protection Generally Not Extended to Paid or Deposited Earnings

Ignoring the CCPA's remedial purpose, the federal courts have generally not protected earnings of a wage earner after they are paid to the employee and hold that the exemption is lost once the earnings are deposited in a financial institution. n8

State wage exemptions commonly apply to wages after deposit, but state courts are split on this issue. n9 Courts recognized that the purpose of exemption statutes is to "protect funds intended primarily for maintenance and support of the debtor's family." n10 That purpose would be frustrated if wages lost their exempt character upon deposit in an account maintained to pay those necessary expenses.

Veteran's Benefits, Social Security benefits, n11 Workers' Compensation, and welfare benefits also retain their exempt status after deposit.

[3] Calculating Amount of Wages Protected

The CCPA garnishment provisions set a ceiling on the amount of a debtor's disposable earnings that may be garnished. "Disposable earnings" are that part of the employee's earnings remaining after the deduction of any amount required by law to be withheld. These deductions include federal, state, and local taxes, Social Security, and other governmental retirement programs required by law. n12 Deductions such as those for union dues, health and life insurance, charitable contributions, voluntary wage assignments, and savings bonds are usually not considered required by law to be withheld for calculating the exemption. n13

An existing garnishment for child support should not be treated as a deduction from income; instead, after the disposable earnings are calculated, the court should determine whether the child support garnishment and any creditors' garnishments fall within the statutory percentages. n14

The maximum amount of disposable earnings that may be garnished is the lesser of:

- Twenty-five percent of the disposable earnings for that workweek; or

- The amount by which disposable earnings for that week exceeds 30 times the federal minimum hourly wage. Greater amounts may be garnished for child support as discussed below.

In 2007, Congress adopted a law increasing the federal minimum wage from $5.15 to $5.85 per houras of July 24, 2007, from $5.85 to $6.55 per houras of July 24, 2008, and from $6.55 to $7.25 per houras of July 24, 2009. n15 State earning exemptions should also be checked because many are more generous to debtors, often using 40 times the minimum wage. n16

With a minimum wage of $6.55 per hour in effect during the period July 24, 2008 to July 23, 2009, no garnishment can be made if an employee's disposable earnings are $196.50 or less for the week in question. When an employee's disposable earnings exceed $196.50 but are less than $262.00, only the amount over $196.50 can be garnished. For example, an employee's gross earnings in a particular week are $250.00. After deductions required by law, the disposable earnings are $220.00. Because only the amount over $196.50 may be garnished when disposable earnings are less than $262.00, only $23.50 may be garnished and $196.50 must be paid to the employee.

When an employee's disposable earnings are $262.00 or more in a given week, up to 25% of those earnings can be garnished. For example, an employee's gross earnings in a particular week are $350.00. After deductions required by law, the disposable earnings are $320.00.In this week, 25% of disposable earnings, or $80.00 could be garnished. $240.00 must paid to the employee.

After July 23, 2009, with a minimum wage of $7.25 per hour in effect,no garnishment can be made if an employee's disposable earnings are $217.50 or less forthe week in question. When an employee's disposable earnings exceed $217.50 but are less than $290.00, only the amount over $217.50 can be garnished. For example, an employee's gross earnings in a particular week are $250.00. After deductions required by law, the disposable earnings are $220.00. Because only the amount over $217.50 may be garnished when the disposable earnings are less than $290.00, only $2.50 may be garnished and $217.50 must be paid to the employee.

When an employee's disposable earnings are $290.00 or more in a given week, up to 25% of those earnings can be garnished. For example, an employee's gross earnings in a particular week are $350.00. After deductions required by law, the disposable earnings are $320.00.In this week, 25% of disposable earnings, or $80.00 could be garnished. $240.00 must be paid to the employee.

Some additional calculations are necessary where a worker is not paid weekly, but instead is paid bi-weekly, semi-monthly, or monthly. Department of Labor Regulations specify how to perform these calculations for these irregular pay periods:

- Assume a calendar month consists of four and one-third workweeks;

- Multiply the number of workweeks or fractions thereof in the irregular pay period times the weekly minimum wage. n17 n18

The CCPA garnishment provisions offer debtors less protection where the debt involves a court order for child support or alimony. n19 The maximum amount of disposable income that may be garnished for child support or alimony payments may not exceed:

- 50% for a debtor also supporting another spouse or child;

- 55% for such a debtor if support is twelve weeks or more in arrears;

- 60% for a debtor not supporting another spouse or child;

- 65% for such a debtor if support is twelve weeks or more in arrears. n20

[4] Remedies for Excessive Wage Garnishment

There are no specified penalties for court orders allowing excessive wage garnishments. There is also no explicit private right of action under the CCPA for excessive wage garnishment orders, although possible claims for abuse of process, violation of other federal or state debt collection laws, or for wrongful garnishment may be possible, including the possibility of punitive damages. n21 An employer who pays more to a creditor than the CCPA allows may be liable to the employee under the federal minimum wage laws. The excess amountgarnished does not count toward the minimum wage requirement. n22 If the excess amount of the garnishment brings the worker's wages below the minimum wage, the worker has a private cause of action against the employer. n23 The worker may also have a cause of action against the employer under a state wage law, which may apply to any failure to pay wages that are legally due, regardless of whether there is a minimum wage violation. n24 One court has held that an employee may assert common law claims against her employer for wrongful wage deduction and conversion. n25 The CCPA's wage garnishment protections are intended to be self-executing and need not be affirmatively asserted by the debtor. n25.1

[5] Federal Protections Against Employee Discharge for Wage Garnishment

The CCPA provides that no employer may discharge an employee whose earnings have been subject to garnishment for any one indebtedness, n26 with criminal sanctions for violation. n27 The term "one indebtedness" refers to a single debt. Thus, an employee may not be discharged regardless of the number of levies or proceedings brought to collect a single debt. However, the CCPA restrictions do not protect the employee if his or her salary has been garnished for more than one debt.

The Secretary of Labor has the authority to seek injunctive and declaratory relief n28 and reinstatement of a wrongfully discharged employee. n29 However, enforcement by the Secretary of Labor is discretionary. n30

Courts are split as to whether there is a federal private right of action to enforce the CCPA garnishment protections against employee discharges. Garnishment-related discharges have also been challenged as racially discriminatory under other statutes such as 42 U.S.C. section 1983, if a public employer is involved, or Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. n31

[6] Garnishment of Federal Employees Wages

Before 1994, sovereign immunity protected federal government employees from garnishment, but a 1994 statute authorized garnishment of federal employee pay checks. n32 It did not authorize the garnishment of federal pension benefits. n33 That law provided that the CCPA protection, and any more protective state exemptions, were available to federal employees. n34 Regulations by several branches of government and the military were authorized to implement this new debt collection tool.

[7] Relationship of the CCPA to State Law

The CCPA explicitly provides that its garnishment restrictions do not limit the operation of state law exempting a larger share of debtor's wages from garnishment or prohibiting employee discharge in cases where the CCPA does not prohibit discharge. n35 Congress enacted the CCPA to maximize debtor protections, and the CCPA has been construed as an exemption statute only preempting state law that is less protective to debtors. n36 Even if portions of a state law conflict with the federal provisions, the federal law will only preempt those portions of the state law that are less protective than the CCPA. n37

Consequently, practitioners should also be aware of state garnishment laws that provide debtors with added protections. n38 One state bans any wage garnishment arising from a consumer credit transaction. n39 Other state laws exempt such a high percentage of a debtor's wages that garnishment is no longer a practical collection method. n40 State personal property exemptions may protect wages oncedeposited in a bank account. In addition, some states have enacted legislation stronger than the CCPA by prohibiting discharge for multiple garnishments for multiple debts. n41 The state statute may also exempt more types of income than the federal statute. n42

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishments

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1671 to 1677, reprinted in Vol. 1B infra. See Annot., Validity, Construction and Application of Secs. 301-307 of Consumer Credit Protection Act (15 U.S.C.S. Secs. 1671-1677) Placing Restrictions on Garnishment of Individuals' Earnings Secs. 301-307 of Consumer Credit Protection Act 15 U.S.C.S. Secs. 1671-1677, 14 A.L.R. Fed. 447 (1973).

(n2)Footnote 2. 31 U.S.C. § 3720D.

(n3)Footnote 3. 16 C.F.R. § 444.2(a)(3); see also National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices §§ 6.11, 6.12 (7th ed. 2008).

(n4)Footnote 4. 15 U.S.C. § 1673(b).

(n5)Footnote 5. 26 U.S.C. § 6334(d) provides for weekly exemption of the standard deduction provided by 26 U.S.C. § 63(c) and the deduction provided for personal exemptions in 26 U.S.C. § 151 divided by 52. Other exemptions are provided by 26 U.S.C. § 6334, including exemption of many government benefits and specified personal property.

(n6)Footnote 6. 15 U.S.C. § 1672(a). See Kokoszka v. Belford, 417 U.S. 642, 651, 94 S. Ct. 2431, 41 L. Ed. 2d 374 , reh'g denied, 419 U.S. 886, 95 S. Ct. 160, 42 L. Ed. 2d 374 (1974) (in holding that an income tax refund was not "earnings," the U.S. Supreme Court stated that it agreed with a court of appeals opinion that earnings are limited to periodic payment of compensation. However, the statute itself, 15 U.S.C. § 1672(a), defines earnings to include "bonus," which would not be a periodic payment. The Supreme Court's statement has been characterized as dictum, in that the issue before the Court was not the scope of the earnings exemption, but rather whether Congress intended the wage garnishment protections to override the bankruptcy laws). See also State Treasurer v. Gardner, 564 N.W.2d 51 (Mich. Ct. App. 1997) , rev'd on other grounds, 459 Mich. 1, 583 N.W.2d 687 (1998) (disability benefits were earnings within the meaning of the Consumer Credit Protection Act [hereinafter CCPA] because the payments would not have been made but for the recipient's past employment); Funk v. Utah State Tax Comm'n, 839 P.2d 818 (Utah 1992) (because of their nonperiodic nature, tax refunds did not constitute disposable earnings and were not protected). See also In re Christy, 306 B.R. 611 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2004) (genuine issue of fact what part of receivables of two-physician professional corporation was attributable to personal services of debtor-physician and therefore exempt as wages or salary under Illinois law); In re Nelson, 2003 Bankr. LEXIS 1306 (Bankr. D. Colo. Oct. 1, 2003) (judgment for tortious interference with prospective economic relation, calculated as amount of earnings lost, was not earnings under Colorado exemption statute because plaintiff performed no personal services); Rooney v. Rooney, 669 N.W.2d 362 (Minn. App. 2003) (church was employer and payor within meaning of child support garnishment statute; it required members to give up all individual property, and provided for their needs; obligor was doing work for the church). But see United States v. Armstrong, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6844 (N.D. Tex. Apr. 21, 2005) (Social Security retirement benefits deposited in bank account not "earnings" and not protected by CCPA); In re Rangel, 317 B.R. 553 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2004) (tax refund not earnings within meaning of state garnishment exemption).

(n7)Footnote 7. See, e.g., Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Shoemaker, 849 F. Supp. 30 (S.D. Tex. 1994) ; In re Barnett, 214 B.R. 632 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1997) ; In re Marples, 266 B.R. 202 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2001) ; In re Atkinson, 258 B.R. 769 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2001) (doctor's accounts receivables are compensation for personal services so are protected as earnings); In re Price, 195 B.R. 775 (Bankr. D. Kan. 1996) ; In re Duncan, 140 B.R. 210 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1992) ; Genessee County Friend of the Court v. GMC, 464 Mich. 44, 626 N.W.2d 395 (2001) . But see Lawrence v. Jahn (In re Lawrence), 219 B.R. 786 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1998) (Tennessee garnishment statute did not protect accounts receivable of podiatrist; it is not an exemption statute, but simply a restriction on use of a wage restriction order to reach earnings in hands of employer).

(n8)Footnote 8. Usery v. First Nat'l Bank, 586 F.2d 107 (9th Cir. 1978) (unrealistic to ask bank to determine which deposits traceable to employee pay check, therefore, bank not responsible for determining exemptions under the CCPA). One court made the distinction between compulsory and non- compulsory deposit of wages, holding that a compulsory direct deposit as a condition of employment renders the earnings subject to the restrictions of the CCPA even after they are deposited in a bank. Household Fin. Corp. v. Kinder, 3 Ohio Misc. 2d 3, 444 N.E.2d 99 (Mun. Ct. 1982) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Compare State Treasurer v. Schuster, 547 N.W.2d 332 (Mich. Ct. App. 1996) , rev'd on other grounds, 572 N.W.2d 628 (Mich. 1998) (exemption for public school employees' retirement funds continues to protect funds after they are paid to recipient), with Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Shoemaker, 849 F. Supp. 30 (S.D. Tex. 1994) (Texas exemption for "current wages" does not survive deposit).

(n10)Footnote 10. Daugherty v. Century Trust Co., 28 Ohio St. 3d 441, 445 (1986) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Philpott v. Essex Cty. Welfare Bd., 409 U.S. 413, 93 S. Ct. 590, 34 L. Ed. 2d 608 (1973) .

(n12)Footnote 12. 15 U.S.C. § 1672(b).

(n13)Footnote 13. Department of Labor's Fact Sheet #30, available at www.dol.gov/esa/regs/compliance/whd/whdfs30.htm.

(n14)Footnote 14. Union Pac. R.R. v. Trona Valley Fed. Credit Union, 57 P.3d 1203 (Wyo. 2002) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Pub. L. No. 110-28, §§ 8101-8104, 121 Stat. 112 (2007).

(n16)Footnote 16. For example, the Uniform Consumer Credit Code § 5.105 provides for a weekly exemption of 40, instead of 30, times the minimum hourly wage.

(n17)Footnote 17. 29 C.F.R. § 870.10. See also Koethe v. Johnson, 328 N.W.2d 293 (Iowa 1982) (describing formula for biweekly pay period; decision also holds that, where garnishment order arrives in middle of pay period, before entire period is earned, full pay for entire period should be used in CCPA calculations).

(n18)Footnote 18. [Reserved].

(n19)Footnote 19. Cf. In re Marriage of Eklofe, 586 N.W.2d 357 (Iowa 1998) (Iowa's $800 per year limitation on garnishment of certain low income debtor's wages applied towage garnishment for alimony, but not child support; discussion of complicated interrelationship of garnishment and family support law, which has changed since case decided); In re Prade, 135 Ohio App. 3d 424, 734 N.E.2d 430 (Summit County 1999) (court has power to order family support in amount greater than that which may be collected by garnishment); Naedel v. Naedel, 115 Md. App. 347, 693 A.2d 60 (1997) (family support exception to CCPA garnishment limitation narrowly construed: where the alimony obligation arose from a voluntary agreement, which was then "incorporated but not merged in" the divorce decree, and was non-modifiable by the court, even in response to major deterioration in husband's finances, the alimony was neither "ordered by a court" nor "subject to judicial review," so the 25% limitation would apply). See also Laws v. Laws, 758 A.2d 1226, 2000 Pa. Super. 248 (maximum child support garnishment under CCPA could be based on obligor's earning capacity rather than lower actual earnings).

(n20)Footnote 20. 15 U.S.C. § 1673(b)(2). See also DiZazzo v. DiZazzo, 1992 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1178 (Conn. Super. Apr. 23, 1992) (65% disposable earnings, not 60%, may be garnished where child support or alimony in arrears).

(n21)Footnote 21. Williams v. M.R.C. Polymers, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14550 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 29, 2000) ; Perkins v. Metropolitan Water Reclamation Dist., 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12594 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 24, 1990) (no private cause of action against employer for garnishing more than allowed by CCPA); Whitney v. Chicago Transit Auth., 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4564 (N.D. Ill. June 3, 1987) (no private cause of action against employer for violating CCPA); Oldham v. Oldham, 337 F. Supp. 1039 (N.D. Iowa 1972) (granting unopposed motion to dismiss cause of action alleging wage garnishment in violation of CCPA). See Annot., Recovery of Damages for Mental Anguish, Distress, Suffering, or the

Like, In Action for Wrongful Attachments, Garnishment, Sequestration, or Execution, 83 A.L.R.3d 598 (1978) ; Annot., What Constitutes Malice Sufficient To Justify An Award of Punitive Damages in Action for Wrongful Attachment or Garnishment, 61 A.L.R.3d 984 (1975) . See also Pinsky v. Duncan, 79 F.3d 306 (2d Cir. 1996) (wrongful attachment may give rise to cause of action for malicious prosecution or abuse of process; where creditor relied in good faith on statute which was subsequently held unconstitutional, malice and lack of probable cause were not proven). But cf. Brown v. Kennard, 94 Cal. App. 4th 40 (2001) (litigation privilege prevents abuse of process claim based on wrongful post-judgment execution proceedings unless it is repeated). See also In re See, 301 B.R. 549 (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 2003) (sanctions, including punitive damages, for bank's violation of automatic stay in continuing to garnish exempt wages; bank knew of bankruptcy, and exempt status of fund, and should be "well versed in the rights and duties of borrowers and lenders").

(n22)Footnote 22. 29 C.F.R. § 531.39.

(n23)Footnote 23. 29 U.S.C. § 216(b) (authorizing suit for unpaid minimum wages plus additional equal amount as liquidated damages, equitable relief, and attorney fees).

(n24)Footnote 24. See, e.g., 43 Pa. Stat. § 260.9a. See also Cowart v. David J. Axelrod & Assocs., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7228 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 26, 2004) (common law as well as statutory claim available for wrongful garnishment; employee--who was not the judgment debtor--allowed to amend complaint to add common law wrongful garnishment and conversion claims against employer who withheld wages without court order, based on garnishment notice with wrong name); Giles v. General Motors Corp., 802 N.E.2d 858 (Ill. App. 2003) (employee stated claims for gross negligence or wanton and willful misconduct against employer who continued to withhold wages for 2.5 years after expiration of court order; court order not a defense where it included termination date). But see Broughton v. Magnetic Ticket & Label Corp., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5084 (M.D. Tenn. Jan. 24, 2006) (employer owed no duty to child support obligor; even if delay in remitting funds withheld from wages was proximate cause of obligor being jailed for contempt, obligor failed to state a claim for negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress).

(n25)Footnote 25. Cowart v. David J. Axelrod & Assocs., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7228 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 27, 2004) (plaintiff permitted to amend complaint to add common law claims where she alleged employer wrongfully withheld her wages after receiving garnishment notice for different employee).

(n26)Footnote 25.1. United States Dep't of Labor, Wage & Hour Div., Field Operations Handbook ch. 16, § 16a06, available at www.dol.gov/esa/whd/FOH/FOH_Ch16.pdf.

(n27)Footnote 26. 15 U.S.C. § 1674(a).

(n28)Footnote 27. 15 U.S.C. § 1674(b).

(n29)Footnote 28. See, e.g., Donovan v. Hamilton Cty. Mun. Ct., 580 F. Supp. 554 (S.D. Ohio 1984) ; Hodgson v. Hamilton Mun. Ct., 349 F. Supp. 1125, 60 Ohio Op. 2d 309 (S.D. Ohio 1972) .

(n30)Footnote 29. Hodgson v. Consol. Freightways, Inc., 503 F.2d 797 (9th Cir. 1974) (Secretary of Labor has an express grant of power to sue under 15 U.S.C. § 1674; this constitutes a jurisdictional basis under 28 U.S.C. § 1345 for the Secretary's suit seeking reinstatement of employees discharged for multiple wage garnishments); see also Martin v. Hawkeye Int'l Trucks, Inc., 782 F. Supp. 1320 (S.D. Iowa 1991) (employee discharged because of an Internal Revenue Service [hereinafter IRS] wage levy protected by CCPA, but only entitled to five months back pay, not reinstatement, since employer would have discharged for poor performance in five months at the next scheduled performance evaluation); Ellis v. Glover & Gardner Constr. Co., 562 F. Supp. 1054 (M.D. Tenn. 1983) (Secretary of Labor asks court to award back pay for wages lost by wrongfully discharged employee).

(n31)Footnote 30. McCabe v. City of Eureka, 664 F.2d 680, 684 n.1 (8th Cir. 1981) .

(n32)Footnote 31. 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e et seq. ; Johnson v. Pike, 332 F. Supp. 490 (C.D. Cal. 1971) ; EEOC Dec. No. 74-27 (1983), Empl. Pract. Guide (CCH) P 6396; Annot., 26 A.L.R. Fed. 394 (1976) .

(n33)Footnote 32. Hatch Act Reform Amendments of 1993, Pub. L. No. 103-94, § 9 (codified at 5 U.S.C. § 5520a) (allows garnishment of federal employees' wages, including employees of executive, judicial and legislative agencies, members of Congress, and military personnel).

(n34)Footnote 33. See 5 U.S.C. § 5520a(a)(4)(A).

(n35)Footnote 34. 5 U.S.C. § 5520a(b). See S. Rep. No. 103-57, at 6, reprinted in 1993 U.S.C.C.A.N. 1802, 1807.

(n36)Footnote 35. 15 U.S.C. § 1677.

(n37)Footnote 36. See, e.g., Benson v. Richardson, 537 N.W.2d 748 (Iowa 1995) (federal CCPA did not preempt Iowa's more protective treatment of wages, which remained exempt for 90 days in checking or savings account, so long as reasonably traceable).

(n38)Footnote 37. Kropf v. Kropf, 538 N.W.2d 496 (Neb. 1995) (where Nebraska law did not limit amount of Social Security benefits which could be garnished for support of ex-wife, CCPA limits applied).

(n39)Footnote 38. For a detailed list of state wage protections, see National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, §§ 12.4.3, 12.6 (5th ed. 2004).

(n40)Footnote 39. Texas.

(n41)Footnote 40. Among these states are North Carolina, Florida, and South Carolina.

(n42)Footnote 41. E.g., Uniform Consumer Credit Code § 5.106 prohibits an employer from discharging any employee because his earnings have been subjected to garnishment to pay a judgment arising from a consumer credit sale, consumer lease or consumer loan. See also Annot., Discharge Based on Garnishment, 41 A.L.R.5th 31 (1996) .

(n43)Footnote 42. See generally National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, §§ 12.4.3, 12.4.4 (1st ed. 2008).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.04

§ 9.04 Creditors May Be Barred From Reaching Exempt Funds and Funds of Another in a Joint Bank Account

The statutes creating benefit programs, e.g., Veteran's benefits, n1 Social Security benefits, n2 workers' compensation benefits, and welfare benefits, generally exempt those benefits from attachment by creditors when those benefits are deposited into a bank account, as long as the funds are available on demand or for the support of the beneficiary and not converted into a permanent investment. n3 This is in accordance with the straightforward construction of exemption statutes to accomplish their purpose of protecting funds necessary for the support of the debtor and the debtor's family.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewBanking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsPublic Health & Welfare LawGeneral OverviewWorkers' Compensation & SSDIGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Porter v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 370 U.S. 159, 82 S. Ct. 1231, 8 L. Ed. 2d 407 (1962) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Philpott v. Essex Cty. Welfare Bd., 409 U.S. 413, 93 S. Ct. 590, 34 L. Ed. 2d 608 (1973) . See also S&S Diversified Servs. L.L.C. v. Taylor, 897 F. Supp. 549 (D. Wyo. 1995) (Social Security benefits remained exempt, even after being commingled with other funds, so long as "readily traceable." Court warned of possible sanctions against creditors who attempt to garnish social security benefits.).

(n3)Footnote 3. Porter v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 370 U.S. 159, 82 S. Ct. 1231, 8 L. Ed. 2d 407 (1962) . See also Beardsley v. Admiral Ins. Co., 647 So. 2d 327 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1994) (commingling exempt federal retirement funds and non-exempt funds did not destroy exemption; funds should be allocated or traced, if possible).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.05

§ 9.05 Protection of Exempt Funds From Creditors' Self-Help Remedy of Set-Off

[1] Bankers' Set-Off of Exempt Funds Deposited in Bank Account

The infrequently used bankers' right of a set-off can be a devastating remedy when employed against funds needed for a household's essential living expenses. While the majority rule is that otherwise exempt income (e.g., social security, welfare, disability, retirement funds) n1 is also exempt from set-off, a significant minority of courts, through a variety of rationales, allow a set-off against these same types of funds.

The most practical course for consumers to take to protect against the bankers' right of set-off, at least in the minority states and those without recent precedent, is not to maintain a checking or savings account at a bank or other depository institution to which they owe a debt or where they have cosigned for another debtor. Having a bank or credit union deposit account often facilitates obtaining lower priced credit from the bank holding the deposit. However, in those states which have not embraced the majority rule, once the credit is obtained, the only safe course is to transfer the deposit account to another depository which is not a creditor of the account holders. The alternative course of not maintaining a bank account may increase the risk of theft.

The bankers' right of set-off is generally limited by the duties of good faith and fair dealing, and commercial due diligence. n2

[a] Majority Rule Courts Protect Exempt Income Deposited in Checking or Savings Account

The leading modern case states the reasoning behind the majority rule of maintaining an exemption against a claim of set-off:

> The assertion of a banker's set-off has exactly the same effect as a third party's levy of execution on the account--it deprives the depositor of the income which the state provided him to meet subsistence expenses, compelling the state either to give him additional money or leave him without means of physical survival. n3

Exemption statutes often protect income or property from a list of court processes (e.g., execution, garnishment), but seldom specifically mention the self-help remedy of set-off, giving a basis for the minority position. Waiver of the exemption and commingling of funds also support some decisions allowing the set-off.

The majority rule courts, on the other hand, have little trouble deflecting the above arguments by pointing out the remedial purpose of exemption statutes. These statutes are intended to protect households from deprivation of the means to meet the basic necessities of living. That purpose is entirely frustrated when the exemption is not maintained for deposited funds. Even when commingled with nonexempt funds in a bank account, by adopting a simple accounting tracing formula, the court may maintain the purpose of the exemption.

[b] Additional Limitations Upon Bankers' Right of Set-Off

When the set-off is exercised against a joint bank account, the debtor's equitable interest in the account should be determined. Many states limit the amount that may be reached by creditors on a joint account to the equitable interest or the actual contribution of each to the account. n4

The set-off prerequisite of "mutuality" often protects commercial accounts from set-offs. Under that rule, a special deposit account, e.g., for payroll payments, may not be offset for unrelated debts because of a lack of "mutuality." n5 That is, if the account is established for a special purpose known to the bank, the account is not subject to set-off for a debt unrelated to that purpose. Proof of the bank's knowledge of the purpose of the account may be problematic.

[2] Bankruptcy and Other Set-Off Situations

Attempts to set-off exempt property may arise in a variety of contexts other than bank accounts. They may arise also in the case of a government interception of a tax refund check made exempt by state law, a landlord-tenant dispute, an employer-employee relationship, or a retail layaway plan. In bankruptcy cases, many courts hold that the right of set-off established by the Bankruptcy Code n6 cannot be used against property exempted by the Bankruptcy Code. n7

A bankruptcy set-off may be denied for lack of mutuality between the claims and avoided in certain circumstances if occurring within 90 days of the bankruptcy filing. Funds deposited in an account after filing of a bankruptcy petition may not be set off against pre-petition debt, but in some jurisdictions a bank may be permitted to freeze an account pending a decision on its motion to lift the stay. n8

[3] Restriction on Card Issuers' Use of Set-Off

Many credit cards are issued by banks or other financial institutions which may also have a deposit account relationship with the card holders and users. Truth in Lending provides that the card issuer may not take funds out of a deposit account to satisfy a credit card debt except under an automatic payment plan previously authorized by the cardholder in writing. n9 Even then, the card issuer may not take an automatic payment for a properly disputed amount. n10

The card issuer, however, is permitted to attach or levy upon funds under procedures which are constitutionally available to other creditors. n11 What is restricted is the self-help, set-off remedy available only to financial institutions by reason of their relationship with their depositor.

The Official Staff Commentary to Regulation Z further prohibits putting a freeze on the deposit account, the functional equivalent of a set-off, for a credit card debt, except where a security agreement allows it, or where a bankruptcy court has issued a turnover order; n12 nor may the bank evade the statutory prohibition by intercepting money before it is formally deposited, n13 when the money was given to the bank by the cardholder with the intent to place it on deposit.

[4] Allowable Card Issuer Set-Offs Against Deposit Accounts

One (sometimes expensive) way for consumers with a poor credit record to get a credit card is to place funds on deposit with the card issuer in the amount of the credit limit on the account. Other customers may seek to take advantage of lower interest rates offered by the card issuer by pledging their deposit accounts. In both situations, Truth in Lending Regulation Z allows the card issuer to take a consensual security interest in the deposit account, and to enforce that interest. n14 However, the security interest involved must be affirmatively agreed to by the consumer, be disclosed in the initial disclosures, and be taken and enforced only through procedures equally available to other creditors. n15

Therefore, security interests granted by the language routinely included in credit card agreements may not be construed to authorize a set-off of a deposit account.

Another basis for a set-off on credit card indebtedness is an automatic payment plan. n16 The cardholder's authorization for an automatic payment plan must be in writing and signed or initialed by the cardholder.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)Third Party RightsBank RightsContracts LawNegotiable InstrumentsEnforcementSetoffs

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. An extensive listing of state and federal exempt property statutes is found in National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice Ch. 10 (8th ed. 2006 and Supp.).

(n2)Footnote 2. See, e.g., Banco de la Provincia de Buenos Aires v. Baybank Boston N.A., 985 F. Supp. 364 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (bank acted in good faith, and in compliance with the Uniform Commercial Code, when it froze account of insolvent commercial customer, then used set-off to recoup its loan proceeds from customer's account); Peavy v. Bank S., N.A., 222 Ga. App. 501, 474 S.E.2d 690 (1996) (case remanded to trial court for fact findings regarding good faith and due diligence, where bank set-off account three months after it had accepted deposit of a check with patently insufficient endorsement).

(n3)Footnote 3. Tom v. First Am. Credit Union, 151 F.3d 1289, 1292 (10th Cir. 1998) , quoting from Kruger v. Wells Fargo Bank, 11 Cal. 3d 352, 113 Cal. Rptr. 449, 521 P.2d 441 (1974) . See also Miller v. Bank of America, 2004 WL 3153009 (Cal. App. Super. Dec. 30, 2004) (unpublished, citation limited.) (setoff of directly deposited Social Security for bank fees and overdrafts forbidden by California exemption law, and procedure violates state consumer protection statutes).

(n4)Footnote 4. See § 9.06 infra.

(n5)Footnote 5. B. Clark, The Law of Bank Deposits, Collections and Credit Cards P 14.06 (3d ed. 1989). See Smaltz v. National City Bank, 736 N.E.2d 95 (Ohio App. 2000) .

(n6)Footnote 6. 11 U.S.C. § 553.

(n7)Footnote 7. See, e.g., Malinowski v. New York State DOL (In re Malinowski), 156 F.3d 131 (2d Cir. 1998) (bankruptcy prevents government from setting-off overpayment of unemployment benefits against unrelated unemployment claim; if claims arose from same transaction, however, recoupment might be allowed), on remand, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18397 (N.D.N.Y. Nov. 18, 1998) ; United States v. Jones (In re Jones), 230 B.R. 875 (Bankr. M.D. Ala. 1999) (court denied set-off against exempt property, noting that this is the majority rule). But see In re Pieri, 86 B.R. 208 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1988) (legislative construction requires bankruptcy set-off available against exempt property).

(n8)Footnote 8. In re Erickson (Erickson v. Citizens First Nat'l Bank), 216 B.R. 938 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1998) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Truth in Lending Act [hereinafter TILA] § 169, 15 U.S.C. § 1666h.

(n10)Footnote 10. Reg. Z, 12 C.F.R. § 226.13(d)(1).

(n11)Footnote 11. TILA § 169(b), 15 U.S.C. § 1666h(b); Reg. Z, 12 C.F.R. § 226.12(d)(2).

(n12)Footnote 12. Official Staff Commentary, 12 C.F.R. § 226.12(d)(1)-1.

(n13)Footnote 13. Official Staff Commentary, 12 C.F.R. § 226.12(d)(1)-2.

(n14)Footnote 14. Reg. Z, 12 C.F.R. § 226.12(d)(2).

(n15)Footnote 15. Official Staff Commentary, 12 C.F.R. § 226.12(d)(2)-1.

(n16)Footnote 16. Reg. Z, 12 C.F.R. § 226.12(d)(3).

124 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.06

§ 9.06 Creditor's Right to Seize Funds in a Joint Bank Account May Be Limited to Debtor's Contribution

[1] Introduction

It is not unusual for an individual to list another person, perhaps a relative or friend, jointly on a bank account even though only one of them deposits funds into the account. This may be done to facilitate care for an aging parent, avoid probate, or to give the nondepositor access to check cashing or other financial services. However, the arrangement can create problems when the noncontributor is a judgment-debtor. In some states, the entire account is subject to attachment or garnishment for the debts of either of the joint account holders, irrespective of the ownership of the funds. Other states offer protections to joint account holders from liability to each other's creditors.

A joint account with right of survivorship is often inappropriately used to enable an adult son or daughter to write checks for an aging parent. n1 Such a joint account may not be an acceptable substitute for a durable power of attorney. In most states, a durable power of attorney empowers the son or daughter to write checks for the parent's benefit, even if the parent becomes incompetent, while making clear the strictly fiduciary role of the offspring. Because the fiduciary may not write checks on the account to pay his or her own debts, the bank or other creditor may not set-off or attach the funds either.

Joint accounts are also inappropriately used as a short-cut for holding money in trust for a child. This is no substitute for a properly drawn trust, which satisfies a state's requirements for gifts to minors. If the donor retains control of the funds, as in a joint account, the funds may be set-off against his or her debts. n2

Both statutes and case law have recognized that nondebtors may have protectable interests in joint property which creditors seek to attach, but there is a great deal of variation among the states as to how, when, and to what extent these interests may be asserted against an attachment. In addition, unresolved constitutional due process issues may arise in some situations.

Most jurisdictions are in agreement that joint accounts are subject to legal process by the creditor of a single co-depositor, n3 but only to the extent of the debtor-depositor's equitable interest in the funds. In determining what portion of the account represents the debtor's interest, most courts have focused on one or more of three factors: (1) the agreement between the bank and the depositors; (2) the co-depositors' respective net contributions to the account; and

(3) statutes defining the rights in jointly held bank accounts. n4

n5-6

Married couples should be aware of the law of their state regarding joint accounts and marital property before deciding what use to make of joint accounts--especially if one spouse brings debts to the marriage. n7

The debtor's death may prevent set-off. A borrower's death is often an "event of default," but courts have reasoned that by the time this default occurs, the ownership of the account has already passed to the survivor. n8

[2] The Contract Approach

Some courts have found the agreement between the bank and the depositors to be determinative. These agreements (and/or the laws which regulate them) usually provide that, in the absence of customers' instructions to the contrary, each co-depositor has a right to withdraw any or all of the funds at any time. If, it is reasoned, a single co-depositor has an absolute right to withdraw funds without notice to co-depositors, and is able to use those funds for any purpose (including payment of the debt in question), a creditor should be able to "stand in the depositor's shoes" and attach the entire account. n9 However, when it wasclear to the bank that the debtor had only limited rights to the funds, the creditor could not assert greater rights. n10

[3] The Net Contribution Approach

In other jurisdictions, the net contribution of the joint depositors determines each depositors' proportional ownership rights. A joint account may be afforded additional protection in the jurisdictions which allow a debtor to present evidence of an intention to make a gift to co-depositors of another depositor's contributions to the account.

Absent clear evidence of co-depositors' respective ownership rights, courts typically rely on various presumptions. In some jurisdictions, a judgment-debtor presumptively holds the entire account, and unless he or she is able to establish otherwise, all monies in the account may be reached. n11 In other jurisdictions, it is presumed that co-depositors share equally in the ownership of the account. n12 A small minority of jurisdictions treat joint accounts held by a husband and wife as tenancies by the entireties. n13 Because the deposits belong to them as a unit and not as individuals, attachment or garnishment is precluded altogether where only one spouse is a debtor. n14

[4] Due Process Considerations

In addition to the substantive question of whether deposited funds belonging to a nondebtor may be attached, special procedural issues arise. Usually, the nondebtor co-depositor is not a party to the judicial or administrative proceeding where the creditor seeks to attach the funds contained in a joint bank account. Since the nonparty will not have had notice or an opportunity to defend the account, due process may not be provided.

Only a few jurisdictions place the burden of proving that the debtor owns all or part of the joint account on the seizing creditor. Equally rare is the requirement that nondebtor co-depositors be given preseizure notice and an opportunity to be heard. n15 Post-attachment relief (whether it be against co-depositors, the banking institution, or the creditor) is not always an adequate remedy, particularly in the case of low-income depositors who may suffer serious harm when deprived of subsistence funds for even a short period of time. n16

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawBank ActivitiesBank AccountsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesAttachmentsCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional

RemediesGarnishments

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Rives v. Krupzsield, 60 Ohio App. 3d 97, 573 N.E.2d 1199 (1989) (set-off for son's debt improper where elderly depositor told bank officer she wanted son to be able to withdraw funds from her account "in case of an emergency," and bank officer provided joint account; once question of depositor's knowledge and understanding of joint account is raised, bank, with its superior knowledge and bargaining power, must show it provided correct information).

(n2)Footnote 2. Farrell v. Coulter, 898 S.W.2d 139 (Mo. Ct. App. 1995) . Branch Banking Trust Co. v. Bartley, 2006 WL 1113632 (Ky. Ct. App. Apr. 28, 2006) (father sued bank that allowed creditor to garnish non-custodial account containing minor son's funds; bank raised genuine issue of fact on counterclaim that father breached fiduciary duty by setting up ordinary joint account and failing to respond to creditor's garnishment notice).

(n3)Footnote 3. Annot., Attachment-Joint Bank Account, 11 A.L.R.3d 1465, 1468 (1967) .

(n4)Footnote 4. 7 Am. Jur. 2d Proof of Facts 311, 343 (1975).

(n5)Footnote 5-6. [Reserved].

(n6)Footnote 7. McNeilly v. Geremia (In re McNeilly), 249 B.R. 576 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2000) (bank account owned in tenancy by entireties was exempt under Vermont law); In re Mukhi, 246 B.R. 859 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2000) (property held in tenancy by entireties will be treated as exempt as to debts of one spouse); Sullivan v. Century Bank, 601 So. 2d 985 (Ala. 1992) (wife had individual bank account before marriage; added husband's name; joint account with survivorship, and right of set-off for bank; husband's first wife defaulted on car loan, which both spouses had signed; bank allowed to set-off second wife's checking account). See Fleet Bank of Conn., N.A. v. Carillo, 240 Conn. 343, 691 A.2d 1068 (1997) (judgment creditor of one spouse may obtain bank execution, pursuant to Connecticut statute, against bank account of married couple to which both spouses had contributed: either spouse could withdraw entire balance, so by putting her money in joint account, non-debtor wife took risk that husband might use account to pay his individual debts).

(n7)Footnote 8. Bank of Washington v. Koester, 939 S.W.2d 464 (Mo. Ct. App. 1996) (joint tenants' rights terminate at death, and bank had no right of set-off after co-tenant, who pledged CD as collateral for his individual debt, died); Lowery v. First Nat'l Bank of St. Louis, 895 S.W. 2d 200 (Mo. Ct. App. 1995) .

(n8)Footnote 9. See Fleet Bank of Conn., N.A. v. Carillo, 240 Conn. 343, 691 A.2d 1068 (1997) . See also In re Mastrofino,247 B.R. 330 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2000) (car titled to husband or wife was available to creditors of one spouse since it could be sold by either owner; bank account with signature card showing joint tenancy also available to individual creditors). See also Winecoff v. Compass Bank, 876 So. 2d 1145 (Ala. Civ. App. 2003) (bank properly set off joint account for inadvertent overpayment to one depositor; account agreement permitted this; unconscionability of agreement may be raised only as defense, not as a claim for relief where depositors were suing bank).

(n9)Footnote 10. Masotti v. Bristol Sav. Bank, 653 A.2d 179 (Conn. 1995) .

(n10)Footnote 11. Tayar v. Tayar, 208 A.D.2d 609, 618 N.Y.S.2d 35 (1994) . 638 Highsmith v. Department of Public Aid, 803 N.E.2d 652 (Ill. App. 2004) (burden on non-debtor to show ownership of funds and lack of donative intent; where father funded account for son's education and son did not choose to be educated, this was at most a conditional gift, and could not be reached for son's child support obligation). See also Food Servs. Corp. v. Rheam, 145 S.W.3d 484 (Mo. App. 2004) (non-debtor tenants may show that debtor contributed nothing, and that they did not intend a gift; remanded to determine debtor's contributions and co-tenants' intentions). In re Estate of Shea, 848 N.E.2d 185 (Ill. App. Ct. 2006) (estate rebutted presumption that adding joint tenant was a gift where account owner had discussed, with lawyer and others, need for someone to pay bills, etc. if he became disabled).

(n11)Footnote 12. In re Kondora, 194 B.R. 202 (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 1996) (Joint accounts presumed to be owned in equal shares by the co-tenants; presumption can be rebutted by "clear and convincing" evidence. Funds may be garnished only to the extent of the debtor's interest in the property.).

(n12)Footnote 13. Florida, Maryland, Missouri, and Pennsylvania.

(n13)Footnote 14. See 11 A.L.R.3d 1465, 1484 (1967) .

(n14)Footnote 15. See 11 A.L.R.3d 1465, 1484 (1967) . See also FDIC v. Perry Bros., 854 F. Supp. 1248 (E.D. Tex. 1994) (detailed discussion of due process issue).

(n15)Footnote 16. See Sniadach v. Family Fin. Corp., 395 U.S. 337, 89 S. Ct. 1820, 23 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1969) .

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.07

§ 9.07 Exemption Laws Are Fundamental Protections for Low-Income Consumers From Debt Collectors

Exemption laws provide debtors with the ability to shield certain assets or possessions from attachment or garnishment. State and federal exemption laws, which exclude a wide variety of property from seizure by creditors, are a fundamental safeguard for the protection of low-income persons. n1 Some states provide for a "wild card" exemption that exempts any property specified by the debtor up to a certain amount. n2

When a debtor possesses only exempt assets, he or she is referred to as "judgment proof" or "collection proof." While a judgment may be taken against such a person, there is no way for the creditor to compel collection of the judgment from the debtor's income or assets unless the debtor's circumstances change. Because of this, judgment-proof debtors are seldom sued.

Under exemption statutes, property listed as collateral in a security agreement, mortgage, or deed of trust usually is not protected from the creditor who took it as collateral. Such creditors are referred to as secured creditors. Usually, secured creditors pursue any valuable collateral as their first collection option. Typically, secured transactions are car loans and mortgages to purchase a home. Exemption statutes often provide protection against general or unsecured creditors, e.g., most bank credit cards, most retailers who issue their own credit cards, and medical providers.

It is important to remember, however, that judgment-proof individuals are sometimes targets for debt collection abuse; since ordinary legal tactics are not effective, collectors attempt to scare these consumers into paying voluntarily. Representing a consumer in an affirmative suit against a debt collector for collection abuse may remove a source of grave stress for the client and provide some relief for the client's financial hardship.

In formulating a legal strategy, one must first determine which of the low-income client's assets are available to creditors. A client who has only exempt income and property may be more willing to take a risk on pursuing a claim for a less than certain legal theory because he or she would be immune from liability for court costs. A threat against nonexempt wages frequently suggests that the client should consider a chapter 7 (liquidating) bankruptcy if there are substantial debts and little other property available to creditors. n3 Nonexempt equity in a home threatened by creditors presents yet a different scenario and suggests that consideration should be given to a chapter 13 (installment payment plan) bankruptcy. While property exemption laws are fundamental to bankruptcy cases, many exemptions are also available outside of bankruptcy and a truly judgment proof debtor is not likely to need bankruptcy at all.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Bankruptcy LawGeneral OverviewBankruptcy LawExemptionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishments

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. For a complete list of state exemption statutes, see National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, Ch. 12 (1st ed. 2008).

(n2)Footnote 2. In re Arnold, 193 B.R. 897 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1996) (wild card exemption may be used to exempt bank accounts).

(n3)Footnote 3. See generally Collier Consumer Bankruptcy Practice Guide Chs. 1, 4, P 4.05 (Matthew Bender).

126 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.08

§ 9.08 Purpose of Exemption Laws

Exemption laws were established to protect a limited amount of a debtor's property from a forced sale for the payment of debts. The courts have enumerated the following purposes: (i) to provide the debtor with enough money to survive; (ii) to protect the debtor's dignity; (iii) to afford a means of financial rehabilitation; (iv) to protect the family unit from impoverishment; and (v) to spread the burden of a debtor's support from society to his creditors. It is settled that exemption laws are to be liberally construed in favor of the debtor and the debtor's family.

The initial exemption laws were provided by state statute and protected debtors against many judgment creditors. Many later federal statutes included exemption provisions, e.g., 42 U.S.C. section 407 and 38 U.S.C. section 3101, and provide that social security and veterans benefits, respectively, are exempt from seizure by creditors. The Bankruptcy Code provides a federal exemption scheme in bankruptcy for states which do not provide their own bankruptcy exemptions. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Bankruptcy LawGeneral OverviewBankruptcy LawExemptionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishments

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. A thorough analysis of exemptions provided under the Bankruptcy Code for people filing bankruptcy is found in Collier Consumer Bankruptcy Practice Guide Ch. 13 (Matthew Bender), and a broad overview of state law is found in Vukowich, Debtor's Exemption Rights, 62 Geo. L.J. 779 (1974). A nearly exhaustive reprint of state and federal exemption statutes is in 7 Collier on Bankruptcy (15th ed. rev.). Summaries of state exemptions are found in National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, Ch. 12 (5th ed. 2004 and Supp.).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.09

§ 9.09 Homestead Exemptions

[1] Scope

Homestead exemptions are designed to protect the home for the debtor and the debtor's family. The only states that do not provide for homestead exemptions are Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania.

The remaining states each set a different amount that is exempt. New Hampshire allows $30,000; New York allows $50,000; Florida does not set a dollar amount and allows up to 160 acres outside a municipal area and a half-acre within a municipal area. Note that these dollar amounts generally refer to the debtor's equity in the property, i.e., if a $200,000 property is encumbered by a $190,000 mortgage, then a $10,000 homestead exemption will make it completely exempt. n1 Many jurisdictions protect the marital home against seizure for debts of one spouse. n2 Some states provide a larger homestead exemption for elderly or disabled persons. n3

Many states distinguish between rural and urban homesteads, exempting much more land, n4 and sometimes allowing much higher value, n5 for rural homesteads, and may also provide a separate exemption for personal property used in agriculture. n6 The urban/rural distinction presents difficult problems where land uses are changing, municipalities are expanding into formerly unincorporated areas, and farmers turn to non-agricultural work to sustain themselves. Courts will generally consider first the character of the area, and then whether the individual parcel is used for traditionally rural activities that support the family. n7

The states' limitations on homestead exemptions and procedures for asserting them vary widely from state-to-state. Frequently, homesteads are available to heads of households, but not to an individual. Mortgages or deeds of trust areusually considered waivers or exclusions from homestead protections, although in some states where a married couple is involved, both spouses must sign. Frequently, debts for child support or alimony may be enforced against the homestead. Advocates should familiarize themselves with the specific limitations of their state homestead law.

[2] Homestead Exemption Limits in Bankruptcy

The extreme variation in state homestead amounts, and the existence of states with high or unlimited homesteads and narrow fraud exceptions, n8 led to concern about the use of homestead exemptions to shelter unreasonable amounts from creditors. Recent amendments to the Bankruptcy Code limit debtors from taking full advantage of state homestead exemptions. n9 Section 522(o) limits debtor's state homestead exemption where the debtor converted non-exempt property into exempt homestead property within ten years before the filing of the petition and with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor. n10 In addition, two new provisions cap state homestead exemptions at $125,000. Section 522(p) applies to homestead property acquired during the 1215-day period before filing a petition for bankruptcy. n11 However, the monetary cap does not apply to any interest transferred from a debtor's previous principal residence to the debtor's current principal residence if both are in the same state. n12 Section 522(q) limits a debtor's homestead exemption if the debtor has been convicted of felonies or owes debts arising from certain unlawful conduct.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Bankruptcy LawExemptionsState LawSpecific ExemptionsCivil ProcedureJudgmentsEntry of JudgmentsEnforcement & ExecutionExemptionsCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsReal Property LawHomestead ExemptionsReal Property LawMobilehomes & Mobilehome ParksExemptions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., Martone-Rosato v. Guardiano-Neizwanger, 2001 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1294 (Conn. Super. Ct. April 11, 2001) (lien may be placed against property if owner's equity exceeds statutory exemption), aff'd, 70 Conn. App. 909, 802 A.2d 927 , appeal denied, 261 Conn. 926, 806 A.2d 1060 (2002) ; Baumann v. Chaska Bldg. Ctr., Inc., 621 N.W.2d 795 (Minn. Ct. App. 2001) (cap on homestead exemption applies to owner's equity, not fair market value); Kipp v. Sweno, 629 N.W.2d 468 (Minn. Ct. App.) (remanded to determine if equity exceeded cap), rev. denied, 2001 Minn. LEXIS 568 (Minn. Aug. 22, 2001) .

(n2)Footnote 2. For a discussion of state homestead exemptions, see National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 12.5.2 (5th ed. 2004 and supp.).

(n3)Footnote 3. In re Rolland, 317 B.R. 402 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2004) (debtors not entitled to increased exemption for "physically or mentally disabled;" must show inability to engage in gainful employment; wife, although diagnosed with depression, claimed monthly income from self-employment and monthly expense for self-employment tax); In re LaHaye, 2003 WL 22764771 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. Sept. 10, 2003) (standard for disability same as for Social Security disability; burden of proof on objector; where evidence inconclusive, enhanced exemption allowed); In re Davis, 681 N.W.2d 452 (S.D. 2004) (increased homestead for the elderly permissible, but unlimited exemption violates state constitutional requirement of reasonableness); In re Sweitzer, 332 B.R. 614 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2005) (investment losses may be deducted in calculating gross income to determine eligibility for enhanced homestead exemption available to debtors age 55 or over with gross annual income below $15,000). In re Bush, 346 B.R. 207 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 2006) (explaining method of calculating income, for California statute granting enhanced homestead exemption to low-income debtors age 55 and older: sole proprietor of small business may deduct cost of goods and any legitimate business expenses, but not "investment losses").

(n4)Footnote 4. See, e.g., Ark. Code Ann. § 16-66-210 (1/4 acre or 80 acres); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 20:1 (5 acres or 200 acres); Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 41.002 (10 acres or 100 acres for individual; 200 acres for family).

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Minn. Stat. Ann. § 510.02 ($500,000 agricultural; otherwise $200,000).

(n6)Footnote 6. See generally National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 12.5.2.3.1, 12.5.2.3.2 (5th ed. 2004 and supp.).

(n7)Footnote 7. Painewebber Inc. v. Murray, 260 B.R. 815 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2001) (head of household allowed to exempt three contiguous parcels used for residence, agriculture and family recreation; where parcels non-contiguous, more than pure aesthetic enjoyment must be shown, but activity need not generate a profit); In re McLachlan, 266 B.R. 220 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2001) (homeowner in rural area could exempt contiguous lot with palm grove from which he occasionally sold palm trees; land used for rural purposes, i.e., citrus groves, ranching or farming, and not leased to another, is part of rural homestead).

(n8)Footnote 8. See, e.g., Havaco of America v. Hill, 790 So. 2d 1018 (Fla. 2001) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice,§ 10.2.2.2 (9th ed. 2009).

(n10)Footnote 10. See In re Maronde, 332 B.R. 593 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2005) (homestead exemption limited where debtor paid down home equity line with proceeds of non-exempt property on eve of bankruptcy).

(n11)Footnote 11. Most courts that have construed this section conclude that it applies in opt-out states as well as those where debtors may choose between federal and state exemptions. In re Kaplan, 331 B.R. 483 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. Oct. 6, 2005) ; In re Virissimo, 332 B.R. 201 (Bankr. D. Nev. 2005) . Contra In re McNabb, 326 B.R. 785 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 2005) .

(n12)Footnote 12. 11 U.S.C. § 522(p)(2)(b). See In re Wayrynen, 332 B.R. 479 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2005) (debtor entitled to full homestead exemption even though debtors purchased properties within 40-month period where funds came from proceeds of first homestead bought prior to 40-month period, plus appreciation due to increased property values).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.10

§ 9.10 State Restrictions on Wage Garnishment

[1] General

Most states have statutes that duplicate the protections of the CCPA, 15 U.S.C. sections 1671-1677, which sets the maximum amount of wages that can be garnished by most creditors at 25% of weekly wages, but no more than a flat amount, $154.50. Many states that set their own exemption statutes set higher amounts that may not be garnished by creditors, thus offering more protection for the debtor. Checking current state law is essential. n1

North Carolina and Texas completely exempt the wages of the head of the household from garnishment. Alaska exempts $438 of weekly net earnings, increased to $688 if the debtor's wages are the sole support of the household. n2 Missouri allows 10% of the head of household's wages to be garnished. n3 A repealed Ohio statute limits garnishments for health care debts to 12% of income; n4 other creditors may garnish up to 25%. The courts split on the constitutionality of this provision. State laws also vary as to the extent of protection provided to the earnings of independent contractors. In addition, several state statutes make provision for hardship in addition to the percentage limitations on garnishment. Some states provide additional protection for certain present or former recipients of needs-tested benefits. The court may also have discretion to limit garnishment. n5

State wage exemptions commonly follow wages after deposit. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishments

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. For a discussion of state wage exemption laws, see National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions § 12.4.3 (1st ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n2)Footnote 2. Alaska Stat. §§ 09.38.030, 09.38.115; 8 Alaska Admin. Code 95.030.

(n3)Footnote 3. Mo. Stat. Ann. § 523.030.

(n4)Footnote 4. Ohio Rev. Code § 2716.051 (repealed in 1995).

(n5)Footnote 5. LaFreniere-Nietz v. Nietz, 547 N.W.2d 895 (Minn. Ct. App. 1996) (statute permitted garnishments of less than statutory maximum; court which allowed garnishment for child support arrearage and forbade further garnishments properly exercised its equitable powers, where larger garnishment might cause father to lose car or apartment, which would likely result in losing job, and where father's financial problems were adversely affecting his visitation with child). But see Hartford Postal Employees Credit Union v. Rosemond, 33 Conn. App. 395, 635 A.2d 876 (1994) (power to "modify" wage execution does not include power to vacate it; issuance of wage execution was "mandatory" if judgment debtor did not keep up installment payments).

(n6)Footnote 6. See In re Arnold, 193 B.R. 897 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1996) (under Missouri law, exempt wages did not lose their exemption by being commingled with other funds in bank account); Benson v. Richardson, 537 N.W.2d 748 (Iowa 1995) (under Iowa statute, exempt wages remained exempt for 90 days after deposit in checking or savings account). But cf. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Shoemaker, 849 F. Supp. 30 (S.D. Tex. 1994) (Texas exemption for "current" wages did not survive deposit); Frazer, Ryan, Goldberg, Keyt & Lawless v. Smith, 907 P.2d 1384 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1995) (Arizona wage garnishment statute modelled on federal wage garnishment law did not protect wages after payment).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.11

§ 9.11 Protection of Public Assistance Payments

Most public assistance payments made to both single adults and to families are exempt from garnishment under state law. Many states now receive federal funding pursuant to the recently-enacted Temporary Aid to Needy Families ("TANF") statute, 42 U.S.C. sections 601 et seq. One of the many purposes of the statute, which provides block grant funding to state programs that temporarily assist needy families and has replaced the former Aid to Families with Dependent Children program, is to strengthen the family unit. n1 It would be contrary to the statute's goals if creditors were allowed to attach payments received pursuant to the block grants.

Old age, survivors, and disability benefits are exempt under the Social Security Act. n2 SSI payments are generally exempt under the Social Security Act. n3 Veteran's benefits are generally exempt under the Veteran's Administration Act even after deposit in a checking account. n4 Some states may exempt tax refunds with "earned income tax credit." In addition, at least five states exempt the wages, as well as the benefits, of certain present or former recipients of means-tested benefits. n5 Some states may also exempt tax refunds that consist of the "earned income tax credit." n6

Most, but not all, public assistance exemption provisions continue to protect the funds after payment to the beneficiary. The Social Security Act, which applies to old age, survivors' and disability benefits, n7 and to SSI, n8 explicitly protects both the "right to receive" benefits, and funds "paid or payable" from attachment, garnishment, and "other legal process." The "paid or payable" language clearly exempts the funds in the hands of the recipient. The less explicit language governing Veterans' Disability and Civil Service Retirement benefits has also been construed to exempt funds paid to the recipient. n9 Many states' workers' compensation statutes continue to protect funds in the hands of the beneficiary. In at least a few states, exemption protection is given to real or personal property purchased with benefit payments. n10 Various other state exemptions also survive deposit to the beneficiary's bank account. n11 In at least a few states, exemption protection is also given to real or personal property purchased with benefit payments. n12

[1] FEMA Disaster Relief Assistance

One of the primary federal programs available to help individuals victims of disaster is the Individuals and Households Program (IHP) administered by the Federal Emergency Management Agency. n13 The IHP consists of Housing Assistance, n14 which may be used to pay for rent, repair, or housing construction, and Other Needs Assistance, n15 which may be provided to replace personal property (clothing, furnishings, appliances, etc.) or meet other disaster-related necessary expenses (e.g., medical, dental, funeral, transportation).

The implementing federal regulation makes all assistance provided through the IHP "exempt from garnishment, seizure, encumbrance, levy, execution, pledge, attachment, release or waiver." n16 The regulation also prohibits recipients from transferring or assigning their rights under the program. However, these limitations do not apply to FEMA recovering assistance fraudulently obtained or misapplied.

While there are no reported cases to date related specifically to the exemption of FEMA benefits, the unprecedented amount of disaster relief distributed by FEMA in the wake of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita may drive abusive creditor practices with respect to these benefits. n17

[2] Deposit of Exempt Funds in Bank Accounts

[a] Key Issues

The continuing protection of exempt funds deposited in bank accounts is especially critical today, as paper checks are being replaced by direct deposit and electronic benefit transfer. The key issues are:

- whether funds remain exempt when deposited in a checking, savings, CD, or similar account
- the amount of exempt funds that may be accumulated before they lose protection
- whether the exemption is lost by commingling with non-exempt funds of the beneficiary or another
- whether the deposited funds are protected against the bank's self-help remedy of set-off for debts owed to the bank
- whether exempt funds are subject to a claim for maintenance or child support or other favored claim.

[b] Are Benefits Exempt Once Deposited in Bank Account?

In Porter v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., n18 the Supreme Court held that veterans' disability benefits deposited in a bank account remained exempt so long as they were readily traceable and "retain the quality as moneys," that is, they were readily available for the day to day needs of the recipient and had not been converted into a "permanent investment." This rationale has been widely applied to other exempt benefits, to hold that exempt funds remain exempt when deposited in checking, savings, or CD accounts so long as these are "usual means of safekeeping" for money used for daily living expenses. n19

[c] Accumulation of Excessive Funds

The exemption, even of Social Security and SSI benefits, will be lost if the funds are accumulated beyond the amount needed for daily care and maintenance. n20

[d] Commingling of Exempt and Non-Exempt Funds

Commingling of exempt funds with non-exempt funds, or funds of another, raises the problem of traceability. Most courts will continue to protect such funds, generally applying a first-in, first-out accounting method. n21 However, a minority of courts find that the exemption is lost when funds are commingled. n22

[e] Set-Off

The banker's set-off is a self-help remedy based on the rule that funds deposited in a bank account are a debt owed by the bank to the depositor. This "debt" may then be "set off" against a debt owed by the depositor to the bank. n23 A bank's set-off can devastate a low-income household, if funds required for necessities are removed from their bank account without prior warning.

Very few exemption statutes explicitly mention set-off. A majority of courts, however, consider that the effect of a set-off is the same as that of garnishment, attachment, or other process mentioned in the statute, namely the loss of funds intended to prevent absolute destitution. They then reason that because this is precisely what exemption statutes were designed to prevent, the statutory purpose will best be served by including set-off. n24

[f] Maintenance, Child Support, and Other Claims May Be Allowed Against Exempt Funds

Many exempt funds may be reached for maintenance or child support. The Social Security Act provides a specific exception to the 42 U.S.C. section 407 exemption for these debts, which applies to old age, survivors' and disability benefits, but apparently not to SSI. n25 Veterans' benefits, n26 civil service, military retirement, n27 and workers' compensation benefits may also be reached. n28 However, workers' compensation provided to pay medical expenses may remain exempt. n29

Especially difficult problems arise where the state seeks reimbursement for services provided to benefit recipients, sometimes involuntarily, such as mental hospital expenses or costs of imprisonment, n30 or the services of a guardian or conservator. n31 Exempt property may also be reachable for taxes n32 or for restitution ordered by a criminal court under the Victim and Witness Restitution Act. n33

[g] Liability for Wrongful Seizure of Bank Account Funds

Just as judgment creditors and employers may be liable to their employees for excessive wage garnishment, judgment creditors and banks may be liable for wrongfully seizing funds from the debtor's bank account. For example, in Cruthis v. Firstar Bank, N.A., n34 the court upheld a jury determination that the bank had illegally converted funds from plaintiff's checking account. Acting on a letter from plaintiff's employer requesting the return of payroll deposits, the bank withdrew funds from the plaintiff's account without notice. While acknowledging that banks generally have a right to setoff, the court stated that the bank could not "offset" debts owed by the depositor to third parties. However, the court also found that the bank's lack of good judgment did not rise to the level of willful and wanton conduct such that it would support the jury's punitive damages award.

The more difficult question arises where a bank takes exempt funds from a depositor's account pursuant to writ of execution or other court order served by the judgment creditor. Courts have been reluctant to impose liability on banks to determine independently whether funds in an account are exempt. n35 However, given the relative ease with which banks can now determine the source of electronic deposits and whether the accounts contain only exempt funds, n36 more diligence may be required of them to satisfy an ordinary standard of care. Indeed, a California statute requires the garnishee bank to do exactly that. n37

Creditors and creditors' attorneys wrongfully seizing bank account funds may be subject to common law claims such as conversion, negligence, or intentional infliction of emotional distress and to statutory claims for violations of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act and state UDAP statutes. n38 A recent decision raises the stakes for attorneys submitting affidavits to initiate bank account garnishments. In Todd v. Weltman, n39 a collection attorney had obtained a bank account garnishment order by submitting an affidavit stating that "the affiant has a reasonable basis to believe that the [bank] may have property, other than personal earnings, of the judgment debtor that is not exempt under the law of this state or the United States." n40 In fact, according to the complaint, the bank account contained solely Social Security benefits. The plaintiffs alleged that the collection attorney had not conducted a debtor's exam, undertaken discovery, or had any factual basis for believing that the bank account contained non-exempt funds. The Sixth Circuit denied the attorney's immunity claim and affirmed the district court's order allowing the plaintiff to proceed on his claim that the collection attorney violated the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act by using unfair methods and false, deceptive, and misleading representations to collect the debt.

[h] Counselling Clients to Keep Exempt Funds in Separate Account

Consumers who wish to protect their exempt benefits should keep their funds in banks to which they do not owe money, and should segregate their public assistance funds in special purpose accounts clearly designated as such. If the consumer becomes a judgment debtor, the bank should be immediately reminded, and the creditor informed, of the purpose of the account. If the account is nonetheless garnished or set-off, the consumer may have a cause of action against the creditor for wrongful garnishment. n41

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsPublic Health & Welfare LawGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 42 U.S.C. § 601(a)(4).

(n2)Footnote 2. 42 U.S.C. § 407. See Philpott v. Essex Cty. Welfare Bd., 409 U.S. 413, 93 S. Ct. 590, 34 L. Ed. 2d 608 (1973) . For further discussion of exempt status of Social Security and SSI benefits see National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions § 12.5.5.3 (1st ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n3)Footnote 3. 42 U.S.C. § 1383(d)(1). See also Anderson Boneless Beef v. Sunshine Ctr., 852 P.2d 1340 (Colo. Ct. App. 1993) (creditor not entitled to garnish Social Security and supplemental security income checks deposited by debtor for care and maintenance of beneficiaries). Hambrick v. First Security Bank, 336 F. Supp. 2d 890 (E.D. Ark. 2004) (protects all benefits, lump sum as well as periodic payments); Binder & Binder, P.C. v. Barnhart, 281 F. Supp. 2d 574 (E.D.N.Y. 2003) (anti-alienation clause prevented attachment of attorney's charging lien to SSI benefits recovered in proceeding where attorney represented claimant), vacated on other grounds, 399 F.3d 128 (2d Cir. Feb. 17, 2005) (jurisdictional grounds).

(n4)Footnote 4. Porter v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 370 U.S. 159, 82 S. Ct. 1231, 8 L. Ed. 2d 407 (1962) (deposited VA benefits retain exempt characteristic so long as they remain subject to demand and use for needs of recipient for maintenance and support, and not converted to permanent investment); Strong v. Strong (In re Strong), 2000 MT 178, 8 P.3d 763 (2000) (VA disability benefits cannot be treated as marital property or otherwise counted in division of property upon divorce, but can be considered in child support determination).

(n5)Footnote 5. Rhode Island, Minnesota, Vermont, New York and Connecticut. For a discussion of state exemptions, see National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 12.5.5 (5th ed. 2004 and supp.).

(n6)Footnote 6. See In re Barnett, 214 B.R. 632 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1997) (earned income credit was "earnings from personal services" which may be exempted under provision which permits exemption "by reason of undue hardship" of "that portion of any earnings from personal services necessary for the maintenance of a family or other dependents supported wholly or in part by the earnings of a debtor"); In re George (Kirtley v. George), 199 B.R. 60 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 1996) , magistrate's recommendation, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22830 (N.D. Okla. May 27, 1997) , adopted, rev'd, remanded, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22829, 2000-1 U.S. Tax Cas. (CCH) P 50135 (N.D. Okla. 1997) (federal tax refund consisting of earned income tax credit, for married couple with dependents, was exempt under state exemption for "alimony, support, separate maintenance or child support"so far as reasonably necessary for support of debtors and their children). Contra In re Fish, 40 C.B.C.2d 1021, 224 B.R. 82 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 1998) (earned income credit was exempt under Illinois exemption for "public assistance"); In re McCourt, 217 B.R. 998 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1997) (earned income credit was exempt under Ohio exemption for Aid to Dependent Children); In re Rutter, 204 B.R. 57 (Bankr. D. Or. 1997) (earned income credit was not exempt under Oregon exemptions for "general" or "public" assistance, which refer to specific Oregon welfare programs, or for "spousal support, child support or separate maintenance" all of which are defined to refer to specific kinds of court or administrative orders); In re Goertz, 202 B.R. 614 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1996) (earned income credit was not exempt under Missouri exemption for "local public assistance benefits"); In re Kurilich, 199 B.R. 161 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1996) (tax refund attributable to earned income credit was not exempt under Ohio's public assistance exemption, which was narrowed by Ohio's elimination of the general relief category of welfare); In re Beagle, 200 B.R. 595 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1996) (earned income credit was not protected by Ohio exemptions for Aid to Families with Dependent Children [hereinafter AFDC] and disability funds; it had been exempt under former provision exempting "poor relief" which was repealed when Ohio eliminated general relief). But see Asset Acceptance Corp. v. Hughes, 706 N.W.2d 446 (Mich. Ct. App. 2005) (state homestead property tax credit not a public assistance benefit).

(n7)Footnote 7. 42 U.S.C. § 407(a).

(n8)Footnote 8. 42 U.S.C. § 1383(d)(1).

(n9)Footnote 9. Porter v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 370 U.S. 159, 82 S. Ct. 1231, 8 L. Ed. 2d 407 (1962) ; Tom v. First Am. Credit Union, 151 F.3d 1289 (10th Cir. 1998) ; Crawford v. Gould, 56 F.3d 1162 (9th Cir. 1995) ; Waggoner v. Game Sales Co., 288 Ark. 179, 702 S.W.2d 808 (1986) ; Missouri ex rel. Nixon v. McClure, 969 S.W.2d 801 (Mo. Ct. App. 1998) ; Joseph v. Giacalone, 224 A.D.2d 391, 637 N.Y.S.2d 771 (1996) ; Gray v. Gray, 922 P.2d 615 (Okla. 1996) ; Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Harris, 854 P.2d 921 (Okla. Ct. App. 1993) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See, e.g., In re Ladomer, 215 B.R. 265 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1997) ; In re Williams, 171 B.R. 451 (Bankr. D.N.H. 1994) (workers' compensation lump sum deposited in bank account remained exempt, and so did car purchased with lump sum; court noted that workers' compensation proceeds are "meant to be put to useful purposes"); In re Nelson, 179 B.R. 811 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 1994) (mobile home and lot purchased with workers' compensation funds); Broward v. Jacksonville Med. Ctr., 690 So. 2d 589 (Fla. 1997) . But see In re Burchard, 214 B.R. 494 (Bankr. D. Neb. 1997) (proceeds of personal injury judgment remained exempt while they were "cash or cash equivalent" but exemption did not protect personal property bought with the proceeds); SSM Health Care Sys. v. Bartel, 914 S.W.2d 8 (Mo. Ct. App. 1995) ; Gray v. Gray, 922 P.2d 615 (Okla. 1996) (veterans' disability funds lost quality of moneys when used to purchase property; specially adapted vehicle was jointly acquired property which could be divided up by divorce judgment).

(n11)Footnote 11. E.g., Minn. Stat. Ann. § 550.37(14) and (20) (needs-based assistance explicitly protected from set-off or security interest by bank); Or. Rev. Stat. § 23.166 (exempt funds remain exempt in bank account); Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 2740(19) (property traceable to debtor's right to receive a long list of exempt funds, including insurance, crime victim's benefits, family support, personal injury recoveries, as well as government benefits); In re Lazin, 217 B.R. 332 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1998) (proceeds of an annuity); In re Nye, 210 B.R. 857 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1997) (earnings of independent contractor); In re Ryzner, 208 B.R. 568 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1997) (police disability retirement benefits); In re Norris, 203 B.R. 463 (Bankr. D. Nev. 1996) ; Parl v. Parl, 699 So. 2d 765 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1997) (disability benefits from private insurance).

(n12)Footnote 12. See In re Williams, 171 B.R. 451 (Bankr. D.N.H. 1994) (workers' compensation lump sum deposited in bank account remained exempt, as did car purchased with lump sum).

(n13)Footnote 13. The IHP is statutorily authorized under the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act. 42 U.S.C. §§ 5121-5206. The Stafford Act authorizes the President to issue major disaster declarations thereby triggering the assistance available through the Act. Through executive orders, the President has delegated responsibility for administering the major provisions of the Act to FEMA. See Exec. Order No. 12673, 54 Fed. Reg.

12571 (Mar. 23, 1989) .

(n14)Footnote 14. 42 U.S.C. § 5174(c); 44 C.F.R. § 206.117(b).

(n15)Footnote 15. 42 U.S.C. § 5174(e); 44 C.F.R. § 206.119(a), (b).

(n16)Footnote 16. 44 C.F.R. § 206.110(g).

(n17)Footnote 17. As of February 2006, FEMA has committed $6.7 billion in IHP assistance to victims of Hurricane Katrina. See Hurricane Katrina: What Government is Doing, available at www.dhs.gov/interweb/assetlibrary/katrina.htm.

(n18)Footnote 18. 370 U.S. 159, 82 S. Ct. 1231, 8 L. Ed. 2d 407 (1962) .

(n19)Footnote 19. See In re Radford, 265 B.R. 827 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2000) (lump-sum Social Security Disability payment, received by debtor and deposited in bank account, exempted by "paid or payable" language; no need to determine whether funds necessary for support); In re Smith, 242 B.R. 427 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1999) (proceeds of veterans' life insurance policy remained exempt when widow used them to purchase CD, and funds were not commingled with other funds); E.W. v. Hall, 260 Kan. 99, 917 P.2d 854 (1996) .

(n20)Footnote 20. United States v. Devall, 704 F.2d 1513 , reh'g denied, 714 F.2d 1068 (11th Cir. 1983) ; In re Lazin, 217 B.R. 332 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1998) ; In re Gardiner, 332 B.R. 891 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 2005) (asset acquired, in part, with workers' compensation award retained exempt status, subject to tracing requirements).

(n21)Footnote 21. E.g., In re Mix, 244 B.R. 877 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2000) (workers' compensation settlement remains exempt when deposited in checking account, even if commingled with non-exempt funds, so long as traceable).

(n22)Footnote 22. E.g., Bernardini v. Century Bank, 223 Va. 519, 290 S.E.2d 863 (1982) , superseded by statute as stated in In re Meyer, 211 B.R. 203 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1997) .

(n23)Footnote 23. See Daugherty v. Central Trust Co., 28 Ohio St. 3d 441, 504 N.E.2d 1100 (1986) .

(n24)Footnote 24. E.g., Tom v. First Am. Credit Union, 151 F.3d 1289 (10th Cir. 1998) ; Marengo v. First Mass. Bank, N.A., 152 F. Supp. 2d 92 (D. Mass. 2001) (banker's set-off is "other legal process" within the meaning of anti-alienation provisions of Social Security and SSI law); Kruger v. Wells Fargo Bank, 11 Cal. 3d 352, 113 Cal. Rptr. 449, 521 P.2d 441 (1974) ; Atlantic Life Ins. Co. v. Ring, 167 Va. 121, 187 S.E. 449 (1936) .

(n25)Footnote 25. See Becker Cty. Human Servs. v. Peppel, 493 N.W.2d 573 (Minn. Ct. App. 1992) ; Tennessee Dep't of Human Servs. ex rel. Young v. Young, 802 S.W.2d 594 (Tenn. 1990) ; Department of Public Aid ex rel. Lozada v. Rivera, 755 N.E.2d 548 (Ill. App. Ct. 2001) (SSI benefits already paid to recipient exempt from child support order; where only source of income is SSI, order vacated). Contra Whitmore v. Kenney, 426 Pa. Super. 233, 626 A.2d 1180 (1993) , reh'g denied, (June 28, 1993), appeal denied, 537 Pa. 621, 641 A.2d 587 (1994) .

(n26)Footnote 26. Loving v. Sterling, 680 A.2d 1030 (D.C. 1996) .

(n27)Footnote 27. 42 U.S.C. § 659(f).

(n28)Footnote 28. E.g., Cameron v. Hughes, 825 P.2d 882 (Alaska 1992) .

(n29)Footnote 29. Department of Health & Welfare ex rel. Lisby v. Lisby, 126 Idaho 776, 890 P.2d 727 (1995) .

(n30)Footnote 30. See Bennett v. Arkansas, 485 U.S. 395, 108 S. Ct. 1204, 99 L. Ed. 2d 455 (1988) ; Crawford v. Gould, 56 F.3d 1162 (9th Cir. 1995) ; Fetterusso v. State of New York, 898 F.2d 322 (2d Cir. 1990) .

(n31)Footnote 31. Guardianship of Freida, 43 Mass. App. Ct. 45, 680 N.E.2d 949 (1997) ; Conservatorship of Lambert, 143 Cal. App. 3d 239, 191 Cal. Rptr. 725 (1st Dist. 1983) .

(n32)Footnote 32. Sills v. Department of the Treasury, IRS (In re Sills), 82 F.3d 111 (5th Cir. 1996) .

(n33)Footnote 33. United States v. Eggen, 984 F.2d 848 (7th Cir. 1993) .

(n34)Footnote 34. 822 N.E.2d 454 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) .

(n35)Footnote 35. See, e.g., Gorstein v. World Sav. Bank, 110 Fed. Appx. 9 (9th Cir. 2004) (bank has no duty to determine whether portion of funds in account were exempt).

(n36)Footnote 36. See Mayers v. New York Cmty. Bancorp, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20279 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 31, 2005) (recent changes in technology, i.e., electronic direct deposit of Social Security benefits and ease of identifying deposits as exempt funds, require a re-evaluation of New York procedure allowing pre-judgment freeze of bank accounts).

(n37)Footnote 37. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 704.080 (West); see Chung v. Bank of Am., 2004 WL 1938272 (Cal. Ct. App. 2004) (bank garnishee had duty to verify whether funds were exempt).

(n38)Footnote 38. See Todd v. Weltman, 434 F.3d 432 (6th Cir. 2006) ; Rahaman v. Weber, 2005 Minn. App. LEXIS 32 (Minn. Ct. App. 2005) (procedure for claiming exemption, including damages if creditor seized exempt property, did not preclude common law causes of action for conversion against creditor and its attorneys). But see Chung v. Bank of Am., 2004 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 8092 (Cal. Ct. App. 2004) (stating that bank garnishee had duty to verify whether funds were exempt, not creditor). But see Beler v. Blatt, Hasenmiller, Liebsker & Moore, LLC, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31762 (C.D. Ill. May 18, 2006) (law firm that served citation on bank seeking freeze of "all non-exempt property" and gave examples of exempt property, including SSI, not liable when bank froze account containing only SSI, even though creditor knew that SSI was debtor's only source of income).

(n39)Footnote 39. 434 F.3d 432 (6th Cir. 2006) .

(n40)Footnote 40. Id.; see also Rahaman v. Weber, 2005 Minn. App. LEXIS 32 (Minn. Ct. App. Jan. 19, 2005) ; Contact Res. Services, L.L.C. v. Gregory, 806 N.Y.S.2d 407 (N.Y. City Ct. 2005) (protective order requires creditor to include in pre-judgment restraining notice statement that notice ineffective as to accounts containing only exempt SSI and SSD benefits).

(n41)Footnote 41. See S&S Diversified Servs., L.L.C. v. Taylor, 897 F. Supp. 549 (D. Wyo. 1995) (court warns creditor that sanctions can be imposed for an attempt to garnish Social Security funds in bank account).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.12

§ 9.12 Exemptions for Pensions and Retirement Benefits

[1] Purpose

The purpose of the ERISA, 29 U.S.C. sections 1003(b), 1144(a) (1988), and the Social Security Act, 42 U.S.C. section 301 (1988), is to provide for workers in their old age and to protect workers against hardships created by loss of earnings due to old age or illness. Therefore, federal law and most states exempt at least a portion of benefits received under various employee retirement or pension plans. n1 Sometimes a state's exemption is found in the statute creating or regulating the retirement or pension plan, rather than in a general exemption law. The exemption may continue after the benefits are paid out. n2 The Social Security Act exempts all benefits paid out under the Act and the exemption follows the funds deposited into a checking account. n3 Generally, the courts extend an exemption for employee pension plans to tax-qualified Individual Retirement Accounts ("IRAs"). n4

State exemptions seek to balance the need for security in old age against the possible abuse of retirement accounts to shelter unreasonable amounts from creditors. Some statutes exempt retirement funds so far as "reasonably necessary" for the retiree's needs, n5 others set limits on the amounts which may be transferred into an individual retirement account. These limits may create a hardship for long-term employees who lose their jobs and must roll over substantial sums from their former employer's pension fund into an IRA. As with other exempt property, retirement funds may be subject to garnishment for child support and delinquent taxes. n6 Practitioners are encouraged to refer to state law to determine the available exemptions.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsPensions & Benefits LawGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Patterson v. Shumate, 504 U.S. 753, 112 S. Ct. 2242, 119 L. Ed. 2d 519 (1992) (Employee Retirement Income Security Accounts [hereinafter ERISA] qualified pension plan funds are not available to creditors in or out of bankruptcy); Rousey v. Jacoway, 544 U.S. 320, 125 S. Ct. 1561, 161 L. Ed. 2d 563 (2005) (tax-qualified IRAs, funded by distributions from employer's pension plan, covered by federal bankruptcy exemption for "similar plan ... on account of ... age" where tax penalty for withdrawal before age 591/2 was "substantial barrier" to early withdrawal); In re Quinn, 327 B.R. 818 (W.D. Mich. 2005) (state university retirement plan was an exempt trust; strong anti-alienation language in both plan documents and state statute governing retirement system); In re Sforzo, 332 B.R. 294 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2005) (ERISA-qualified tax-sheltered annuity was exempted by Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 2329.66(a)(17) "property that is specifically exempted from execution, attachment, garnishment, or sale by federal statutes other than" the bankruptcy law).

(n2)Footnote 2. In re Meyer, 211 B.R. 203 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1997) (military retirement payisexempt under federal law because itisnot listed among the types of federal employee compensation made subject to garnishment by 5 U.S.C. § 5520, nor listed in regulations as subject to "involuntary allotment"; the payretainsexempt status when directly deposited in Navy Federal Credit Union, but not when transferred to debtor'snon-special purposechecking account in another institution); In re Bresnahan, 183 B.R. 506 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1995) (retirement pension, exempt under Ohio law so far as reasonably necessary for the support of debtor and dependents,retains its exempt character when deposited in checking account); Dowling v. Chicago Options Associates, Inc., 847 N.E.2d 741 (Ill. App. Ct. 2006) (401(k) funds remain exempt after payout if "periodic payments for support" but not if "lump sum available for investment"). But see Hoult v. Hoult, 373 F.3d 47 (1st Cir. 2004) (ERISA does not exempt funds in hands of beneficiary; anti-alienation clause not violated by court order requiring judgment debtor to deposit all his income, including ERISA funds, in one bank account, from which he could withdraw only court-approved sum for monthly expenses); In re McDonald, 2003 WL 23211570 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. Sept. 27, 2003) (funds in ERISA plan lose exemption when paid to beneficiary; funds borrowed from plan and deposited in credit union not exempt, so credit union could set off account); In re Ryzner, 208 B.R. 568 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1997) (former police officer's disability payments retain their exempt character when deposited in a bank account, so long as they remain traceable); Briceno v. Briceno, 2007 Tenn. App. LEXIS 719 (Tenn. Ct. App. Nov. 21, 2007) (ERISA exemption ends once funds are disbursed, so family court may impose constructive trust on pension payments after their payment).

(n3)Footnote 3. 42 U.S.C. § 407 (1988). See Philpott v. Essex Cty. Welfare Bd., 409 U.S. 413, 93 S. Ct. 590, 34 L. Ed. 2d 608 (1973) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See In re Hasse, 246 B.R. 247 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2000) (Virginia law allows unlimited exemption for Individual Retirement Account [hereinafter IRA] only if debtor does not have employer-sponsored retirement plan established pursuant to certain sections of the internal revenue code; plan that was similar but not identical to such plans did not bar exemption for IRA); Hermes v. Ribitwer (In re Hermes), 239 B.R. 491 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1999) (tax-qualified IRA which allowed withdrawals before age 59 subject to a penalty was similar to other plans providing income on account of age, disability, etc. and was exempt); In re Luttge, 204 B.R. 259 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1997) (tax-qualified IRA was exempt under Florida law, even though it was not covered by ERISA; C.P. v. Piscataway Township Bd. of Educ., 681 A.2d 105 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1996) (New Jersey statute which exempted "pension funds" covered tax-qualified IRAs). See also Premier Capital, Inc. v. Decarolis (In re Decarolis), 259 B.R. 467 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2001) (tax-qualified retirement plan is exempt under New Hampshire law, even if amounts deposited in account exceed tax exempt amount, except if fraudulent transfer); In re Pepmeyer, 273 B.R. 782 (N.D. Iowa 2002) ("individual retirement annuity," funded with rollover from IRA, a $2000 inheritance, and $2000 per year contributions from debtor, was exempt under Iowa law); In re Stewart, 246 B.R. 134 (Bankr. D.N.H. 2000) (tax-qualified IRA fully exempt under N.H. law, but only as to debts incurred after effective date of statute; this limitation does not apply in bankruptcy); In re MacLean, 2000 Bankr. LEXIS 1796 (Bankr. D.N.H. Mar. 1, 2000) (same); In re Bissell, 255 B.R. 402 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2000) (Virginia debtor had IRA, Simplified Employee Pension [hereinafter SEP] and ERISA pension; Virginia cap cannot be applied to ERISA, and amount in ERISA plan may not be considered in applying cap). But cf. Lampkins v. Golden, 28 Fed. Appx. 409, 2002 U.S. App. LEXIS 900 (6th Cir. Jan. 17, 2002) (SEP is not protected by ERISA's exemption provision, and ERISA preempts state exemption law that might have applied to it).

(n5)Footnote 5. See In re Spenler (Spenler v. Siegel), 212 B.R. 625 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1997) (IRA was not reasonably necessary for debtor's support within California exemption where debtor's Social Security and ERISA pension would provide over $5,000/month after retirement and 55-year old single male debtor was currently earning enough from his medical practice to enable him to build up a significant amount in his retirement fund over the next 10 years before retirement); In re Webb, 189 B.R. 144 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1995) (52-year old debtor allowed to exempt all of her IRA as reasonably necessary to support her in retirement, where her ability to save for retirement was limited and average Social Security payment would fall far short of her expenses).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Sills v. Department of the Treasury, IRS (In re Sills), 82 F.3d 111 (5th Cir. 1996) (court declined to decide whether house purchased with Workers' Compensation lump sum settlement was exempt from IRS levy; held that even if it was exempt from levy, it remained subject to IRS lien); Erb v. Erb, 91 Ohio St. 3d 503, 747 N.E.2d 230 (2001) (anti-alienation provision in police and firefighters' pension fund did not bar court-ordered payments directly to ex-wife, as divorce decree gave wife property interest in pension; statute has since been amended to expressly permit direct payments), recons. denied, 92 Ohio St. 3d 1451, 751 N.E.2d 487 (2001) ; Duke v. Duke, 675 A.2d 822 (R.I. 1996) (statute forbidding attachment of police and firefighters' pensions did not bar family court from ordering withdrawal of pension funds for child support arrearages; statute applied only to ordinary creditors, not debtors' families).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.13

§ 9.13 Exemptions for Unemployment and Worker's Compensation Payments

The purpose of the unemployment compensation and workers compensation laws is to provide a substitute for wages lost during a period of unemployment that is not the fault of the employee. State statutes generally exempt this income. n1 Courts have held that the exemption applies both to benefits deposited in bank accounts, and to property purchased with the benefits. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsLabor & Employment LawDisability & Unemployment InsuranceUnemployment CompensationGeneral OverviewWorkers' Compensation & SSDIGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Gagne v. Christians, 172 B.R. 50 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1994) (lump sum workers compensation settlement, which served the same purpose as periodic payments, exempt under Minnesota law).

(n2)Footnote 2. See, e.g., In re Ladomer, 215 B.R. 265 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1997) (Florida exemption for Workers' Compensation benefits protected workers' compensation claims which had been filed but not yet decided, as well as at all later stages through and including deposit in a bank account); In re Williams, 171 B.R. 451 (Bankr. D.N.H. 1994) (car; court noted that workers' compensation benefits were "meant to be put to useful purposes").

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.14

§ 9.14 State Statutes Specifically Limiting Health Care Debt Collection

A few states, recognizing the special burden created by health care debts, have enacted statutes limiting health care debt collection, or otherwise assisting debtors facing health problems. Nevada and Ohio forbid execution on the primary residence for health care debts during the lifetime of the debtor and certain specified dependents; n1 a lien may be created which may be foreclosed only after the residence ceases to be occupied by the protected persons. n2 West Virginia provides a larger homestead exemption for debts resulting from "catastrophic illness or injury." n3 Illinois limits the percentage of a personal injury recovery which may be subject to a lien by certain health care providers. n4

Kansas forbids wage garnishments for two months after the return to employment of a debtor after his/her illness or that of a family member which has kept the debtor out of work for two or more weeks. n5 Wyoming exempts from garnishment contributions to a qualified medical savings account (except for health care debts) to the extent the contributions are allowable under the Internal Revenue Code. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsHealthcare LawGeneral OverviewHealthcare LawInsuranceGeneral OverviewHealthcare LawInsurancePatient Obligations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Edwards v. McCormick, 136 F. Supp. 2d 795 (S.D. Ohio 2001) (lawyer-collector violated FDCPA and Ohio Consumer Sales Practices Act by threatening foreclosure on real property owned by Ohio health-care debtors).

(n2)Footnote 2. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 21.095; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 2329.66A(1)(b) and 2329.661.

(n3)Footnote 3. W. Va. Code § 38-9-3(b) provides a blanket $5,000 exemption which increases to $7,500 for hospital or medical expenses for catastrophic illness or injury.

(n4)Footnote 4. But see Burrell v. S. Truss, 176 Ill. 2d 171, 223 Ill. Dec. 457, 679 N.E.2d 1230 (1997) (where Illinois had five different health care lien statutes for hospitals, physicians, home health care, etc., limit was construed to mean 1/3 per group, allowing the liens to cumulate to devour the entire recovery).

(n5)Footnote 5. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-2310.

(n6)Footnote 6. Wyo. Stat. § 1-20-111.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.15

§ 9.15 Exemptions for Insurance Benefits

Each state exempts a certain amount of insurance benefits from creditors. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsEntry of JudgmentsEnforcement & ExecutionExemptionsCivil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsHealthcare LawInsuranceGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. In re Romp, 249 B.R. 853 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. 2000) (proceeds of insurance policy, exempt for deceased spouse's debts, not exempt for joint debts; debtor's insurance policies, the beneficiaries of which are debtor's adult, non-dependent offspring, are exempt). See also In re Fick, 249 B.R. 108 (Bankr. W.D.N.C. 2000) (North Carolina exemption for group insurance protects proceeds against creditors of the insured, but not against creditors of the beneficiary). See, e.g., Society of Lloyd's v. Collins, 284 F.3d 727 (7th Cir. 2002) (life insurance policy of which spouse was beneficiary exempt under Illinois law, even as to premium payments made after debt accrued, where no showing of fraudulent intent; policies purchased long before debt accrued and debtor simply continued to pay usual premiums); In re Morehead, 283 F.3d 199 (4th Cir. 2002) (payments from private disability insurance policy exempt only as needed for support of debtor); In re Sloss, 279 B.R. 6 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2002) (exemption for insurance lost when divorce decree made wife, formerly the beneficiary, trustee for the children); In re Portal, 45 P.3d 891 (N.M. 2002) (uninsured motorist policy is "accident" policy within the meaning of New Mexico exemption for "payments of every kind from any life, accident or health insurance policy... ."). But see In re Selfe, 260 B.R. 463 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2001) (proceeds of Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance policy not exempt; life insurance not exempt in Missouri); In re Ashley, 317 B.R. 352 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2004) (history of Illinois' "convoluted" insurance exemption provisions; widow allowed to exempt proceeds without showing of need). See also In re Andrews, 301 B.R. 211 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2003) (annuities "upon the life of any person" are fully exempt under Ohio law, but they must serve same purpose as life insurance, i.e., compensate the beneficiary for death of insured and be worth more in hands of beneficiary; not shown where, in case of retiree's early death, beneficiary received same payments as would have gone to retiree). Plastipak Packaging, Inc. v. DiPasquale, 2003 WL 22120971 (3d Cir. Sept. 12, 2003) (Pa. law) (insurance policy naming spouse as beneficiary is exempt as to debts of insured even if purchased with intent to hinder creditors); In re Ashley, 317 B.R. 352 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2004) (widow allowed to exempt proceeds without showing of need). See also In re Payne, 323 B.R. 723 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2005) (criteria for deciding whether an annuity is exempt life insurance or a non-exempt investment); In re Kennedy, 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 1994 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. Oct. 19, 2005) (unpublished) (Colo. Rev. Stat. § 10-7-106 exemption applicable only where life insurance policy or annuities contain anti-alienation provisions).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.16

§ 9.16 Exemptions for Personal Property

[1] Purpose

Most states have statutes which exempt a debtor's basic possessions, such as basic furniture, clothes, bedding, cooking utensils, books, tools, heirlooms, and often a vehicle. The purpose of these statutes is to allow the debtors to retain basic necessities for living. The specific items exempted under each state statute differ, usually as a result of the antiquity of the statutes, the geography, and the local economy. For example, states in the north frequently exempt a certain amount of products that are to be used as fuel. Other states with a strong agricultural community allow for a certain amount of crops and farm animals to be retained, in order to allow the debtor to continue to earn a living. In Utah, based on the state's Mormon tradition, food storage programs advocated by that church are protected. n1

Where a statute exempts "necessary" household goods, the question of what is necessary will depend on local usage, and may change over time. For example, televisions and VCRs have become so common that they are likely to be considered necessary. n2 In addition, as personal computers become less a luxury than a fixture in many homes, courts must consider whether they, too, should be exempted. n3

A useful exemption found in many state statutes protects "tools of a trade." This may be used, for example, to exempt a vehicle which is necessary to the debtor's livelihood--although something more than commuting must often be shown. n4 A computer system was found to be a tool of a trade where the employer furnished software so debtor could work at home, even though work at home was not mandatory.

Exemptions for personal property generally do not apply to purchase money debts n5 or criminal forfeitures. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsEntry of JudgmentsEnforcement & ExecutionExemptionsCivil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishments

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. For a discussion of state personal property exemption laws, see National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, § 12.5.3 (1st ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n2)Footnote 2. In re Szydlowski, 186 B.R. 907 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1995) (TV, VCR and, for debtor with custody of a child, a video game); In re Kinnemore, 181 B.R. 516 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1995) (TV and VCR); In re Biancavilla, 173 B.R. 930 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1994) (former luxury items might become so common as to be reasonably necessary household goods--TV and VCR were exempt; recreational equipment and computer system were not household goods, but computer system was tool of trade); In re Hicks, 276 B.R. 84 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2001) (television and VCR exempt; court considered "the standard of living ordinarily enjoyed by a majority of citizens" and "the present state of our technological society").

(n3)Footnote 3. See In re Ratliff, 209 B.R. 535 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1997) (computer and printer used by children to do homework, and by one debtor who was a student, was exempt under "household and kitchen furniture" exemption); In re Larson, 203 B.R. 176 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1996) (court declined to exempt a "relatively sophisticated" and "not inexpensive" computer system, but noted that computer is now "a virtual necessity which can be purchased for relatively little").

(n4)Footnote 4. In re Moore, 251 B.R. 380 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2000) (where Missouri motor vehicle exemption did not explicitly exclude recreational all terrain vehicles, principle of liberal construction required inclusion); In re Lyall, 193 B.R. 767 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1996) (automobile was "necessary" within the meaning of the Virginia "tools of a trade" exemption if debtor would be unable to compete effectively without it; where self-employed architect used car frequently to visit job sites and attend meetings with municipal officials, it was exempt).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Coonts v. Potts, 316 F.3d 745 (8th Cir. 2003) ; In re Johnson, 179 B.R. 800 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1995) (where consumer borrowed money from credit union for stated purpose of buying car, but never listed lien on title certificate, debt was purchase money and car was not exempt). See also In re Rushdi, 174 B.R. 126 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1994) (where borrowers refinanced several debts, some purchase money, some not, new security interests were all non-purchase money).

(n6)Footnote 6. State v. One 1965 Red Chevrolet Pickup, 37 P.3d 815 (Okla. 2001) (exemption from "every other species of forced sale" not broad enough to shield personal property from criminal forfeiture).

135 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.17

§ 9.17 Exempt Assets in Bank Accounts

Some states provide for a small amount of money held in a bank account to be exempt, ranging from $100 up to $7500. Also, exempt property, e.g., social security income, that is deposited in a bank account is generally held to remain exempt under state laws if it is not so commingled with nonexempt funds as to be untraceable. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawBank ActivitiesBank AccountsGeneral OverviewBanking LawDepository InstitutionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureJudgmentsEntry of JudgmentsEnforcement & ExecutionExemptionsCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishments

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. E.g., In re Smith, 242 B.R. 427 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1999) (proceeds of veterans' life insurance policy remained exempt when widow used them to purchase CD, and funds were not commingled with other funds).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.18

§ 9.18 Personal Injury Judgments

Some states exempt personal injury recoveries. The Maryland exemption for "money payable in the event of sickness, injury or death" was applied to exempt a structured settlement with a present value of $4,000,000 for a debtor who was permanently disabled by his injuries. n1 Some states exempt recoveries onlyso far as reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor. n2 Courts are divided on the question of whether payments for loss of consortium are exempt. n3 Monies stemming from other causes of action may be exempt under a state "wild card" exemption. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsEntry of JudgmentsEnforcement & ExecutionExemptionsCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsTortsDamagesGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. In re Butcher, 189 B.R. 357 (Bankr. D. Md. 1995) . See also In re Hernandez, 272 B.R. 178 (Bankr. D. Md. 2001) (personal injury recovery exempt only insofar as it compensates for injury to the person, future medical expenses, etc., but not for pre-petition medical expenses sought to be discharged in this bankruptcy; debtor given thirty days to clarify how personal injury settlement allocated).

(n2)Footnote 2. See In re Gose, 308 B.R. 41 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2004) ; In re Constantino, 274 B.R. 580 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 2002) (monthly payments under annuity that funded structured settlement were exempt, but not"singular" every five year payments).

(n3)Footnote 3. See In re Bippert, 311 B.R. 456 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2004) (allowing husband to exempt loss of consortium claim).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Ball v. Nationscredit Fin. Servs. Corp., 207 B.R. 869 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1997) (Illinois wild card exemption may be used to exempt a cause of action under the Truth in Lending Act); In re Ball, 201 B.R. 210 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1996) (discussion of how to value claim, for purposes of exemption's $2,000 cap; court chose "settlement value," i.e., amount arrived at by actual negotiations between bankruptcy trustee and defendant lender). See also In re

Key, 255 B.R. 217 (Bankr. D. Neb. 2000) (proceeds of cause of action for employment discrimination claim are exempt as "proceeds or benefits" of personal injury claims insofar as they compensate for psychological injury rather than back-pay, but cause of action itself is not exempt).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.19

§ 9.19 Internal Revenue Service Operates Under Its Own Exemption Scheme

The U.S. IRS collects federal income taxes subject to wage and property exemptions provided in the Internal Revenue Code. n1 It provides exemptions of income which may be more generous for families and less generous for individuals n2 than the federal wage garnishment protections in the CCPA. n3 It exempts other income, such as unemployment benefits, worker's compensation, and income to fulfill a child support obligation, from IRS seizure. n4 It exempts certain personal property, e.g., wearing apparel, a family's personal effects and furniture, and tools of the trade, from IRS seizure. A homestead exemption is provided to the principal residence unless the IRS district office approves a levy or the IRS Secretary finds collection of the tax is in jeopardy. n5 Other exemption laws are not applicable to the IRS. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsEntry of JudgmentsEnforcement & ExecutionExemptionsCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsTax LawFederal Tax Administration & ProcedureGeneral OverviewTax LawState & Local TaxesAdministration & ProceedingsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 26 U.S.C. § 6334.

(n2)Footnote 2. 26 U.S.C. § 6334(d) provides for weekly exemption of the standard deduction provided by 26 U.S.C. § 63(c) and the deduction provided for personal exemptions in 26 U.S.C. § 151 divided by 52.

(n3)Footnote 3. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1671 to 1677.

(n4)Footnote 4. 26 U.S.C. § 6334(a).

(n5)Footnote 5. 26 U.S.C. § 6334(a)(13) and (e). Presumably, the IRS district office would have to have good cause as well for allowing a levy on a principle residence to avoid a challenge of arbitrary and capricious conduct. See also Sills v. Department of Treasury, IRS (In re Sills), 82 F.3d 111 (5th Cir. 1996) (tax lien can be placed on home even if exempt).

(n6)Footnote 6. 26 U.S.C. § 6334(c). See, e.g., In re Jones (Jones v. IRS), 206 B.R. 614 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1997) (broad anti-alienation provision of federal statute governing thrift savings plans did not protect a TSP from federal tax lien and levy; tax statute provided that "notwithstanding any other law of the United States," only property specifically listed in the tax statute--which did not include TSPs--was exempt); United States v. Bollin, 264 F.3d 391 (4th Cir. 2001) (federal forfeiture law preempts state law garnishment limitations, so entire IRA subject to forfeiture), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 989 (2002) .

138 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.20

§ 9.20 Assertion of Exemptions

When creditors attach or execute upon the debtor's property, the debtor generally must assert the protections provided by the exemption statutes affirmatively. In Massachusetts and a few other states, a homestead exemption must have been filed with the recorder of deeds before the debt was incurred.

Different state procedures exist for asserting exemptions. Due process requires that debtors be given notice of the method for asserting major exemptions. Some states may provide a method for a debtor to identify exempt property prior to its seizure. Other states may only provide for the debtor to go into court after the seizure to obtain the return or release of exempt property; given the nature of exempt property, however, this latter approach works a hardship on low-income households. Finally, some states only provide information about exemptions in a post-seizure, pre-sale notice.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsEntry of JudgmentsEnforcement & ExecutionExemptionsCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishmentsReal Property LawHomestead Exemptions

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.21

§ 9.21 Proceeds From Sale of Exempt Property

Exemption statutes are not intended to restrict debtors' freedom to dispose of exempt property as they wish. Creditors have no right to complain of the disposition of exempt property. Transfers of exempt property cannot be attached by creditors. n1 Many decisions hold that the proceeds of the sale of exempt property deposited in a bank account are exempt, although commingling with nonexempt funds may present a problem of tracing for some courts. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsEntry of JudgmentsEnforcement & ExecutionExemptionsCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishments

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Anderson v. Odell, 51 Mich. 492, 16 N.W. 870 (1883) . See also Burns v. Miller, Hiersche, Martens & Hayward, P.C., 948 S.W.2d 317 (Tex. App. 1997) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Vukowich, Debtors Exemption Rights, 62 Geo. L.J. 779, 826 (1974). But see In re Simpson, 238 B.R. 776 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 1999) (insurance payment for damage to vehicle did not fall within exemption for debtor's "interest in a motor vehicle"); In re Ballato, 318 B.R. 205 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2004) (ex-husband could claim homestead exemption in proceeds of marital home sold by court order during property division; non-occupancy not a bar, where it was required by restraining order); In re Cumberbatch, 302 B.R. 675 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2003) (court-ordered sale of home during property division was "forced sale to satisfy a money judgment" within meaning of California statute allowing automatic exemption, for six months, for proceeds); In re Willoughby, 2003 WL 22849766 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. Dec. 2, 2003) (wife's court-ordered payment to husband as compensation for award to her of former marital home was exempt as proceeds of homestead); Battin v. Bayside Fin. Corp., 2004 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 9338 (Cal. App. Oct. 14, 2004) (unpublished, citation limited) (proceeds of sale of homestead exempt, even for debt that was non-dischargeable in bankruptcy for fraud); General R.A.C., Inc. v. Coldwell Banker Residential Real Estate, Inc., 876 So. 2d 606 (Fla. App. 2004) (buyer's deposit, held in escrow by realtor, was proceeds of seller's homestead, exempt for reasonable time).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 9 Garnishment and Exemptions

1-9 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 9.22

§ 9.22 Waiver of Exemptions

[1] General

Many states prohibit waivers of personal exemptions, considering them to be void and against public policy. n1 The states that do allow waivers generally require that they be in writing, signed by the appropriate parties, and acknowledged. Most exemption statutes provide exceptions for property given as collateral in a security agreement, making collateral subject to seizure by the secured creditors. A Federal Trade Commission rule prohibits waivers of exemptions in contracts other than security agreements. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsEntry of JudgmentsEnforcement & ExecutionExemptionsCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesProvisional RemediesGarnishments

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. For a discussion of state laws regarding waiver of exemptions, see National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, § 12.8 (1st ed. 2008).

(n2)Footnote 2. 16 C.F.R. § 444.2(a)(2), reprinted in Vol. 1B infra. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 5.6.3.1 (7th ed. 2008 and supp.). For discussion of Federal Trade Commission rule on waivers of exemptions, see National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions § 12.8.2 (1st ed. 2008 and supp.).

141 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 10 Repossessions

1A-10 Consumer Credit Law Manual 10.syn

§ 10.syn Synopsis to Chapter 10: Repossessions

§ 10.01 Overview

[1] Key Scope Issues

[a] Personalty vs. Realty

[i] General

[ii] Where Collateral Includes Both Personalty and Realty

[b] Consensual Liens vs. Statutory Liens

[c] Sources of Law

[i] The Uniform Commercial Code

[A] The Model Code and State Variations

[B] UCC Article 9

[C] UCC Article 2A.

[D] The UCC's Good Faith Requirement; Other Miscellaneous UCC Provisions in Other Articles

[ii] State Consumer Credit Legislation

[A] Types of Statutes

[B] Remedies

[iii] State Deceptive Practices (UDAP) Statutes

[A] Overview

[B] UDAP Statutes' Coverage of Repossession

[1] Importance of Examining the Statutory Language

[C] Unfair and Deceptive Repossession Practices

[1] Violation of Other Statute as Basis for UDAP Violation

[iv] Common Law Tort Claims

[v] Federal Civil Rights Law

[vi] Truth in Lending and the Consumer Leasing Act

[vii] Federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

[viii] State Debt Collection Laws

[ix] U.S. Bankruptcy Code

[x] State Lien Laws

[xi] Replevin Procedures

[xii] Rent-to-Own Legislation and State Leasing Statutes

[xiii] Preemption by Federal Law

§ 10.02 Enforceable Security Interests

[1] Valid Security Interest as Precondition to Seizure of Personal Property

[a] UCC Article 9 Authorizes Seizure of Property Only Where There Is a Valid Security Interest.

[b] Article 9 Applies to Credit Transactions No Matter How Structured

[c] Where Article 9 Does Not Apply

[i] General

[ii] Statutory Liens

[iii] Interests in Realty

[iv] Leases

[v] Consignments and Bailments

[2] Elements of a Valid Security Interest

[a] Uniform Standards Except for Possessory Security Interests

[b] Written Agreement Must Specifically Grant Security Interest

[i] Agreement Must Be a Written or Electronic Document

[ii] Agreement Must Specifically Grant the Security Interest

[iii] Is Truth in Lending Disclosure an Adequate Grant?

[c] Debtor Must Sign the Agreement

[i] General

[d] Unchecked Boxes, Blanks, and Amendments

[e] Creditor Must Give Value

[f] Debtor Must Have Rights in Collateral

[g] Security Agreement Must Identify the Collateral

[i] General Rule

[ii] Relationship to Collateral's Description in the Financing Statement

[iii] Where Collateral Identification Is Accidentally Omitted

[iv] Relationship to Truth in Lending Disclosure of Security Interest

[h] Security Interest Must Not Otherwise Be Prohibited

[i] Perfection of Security Interest Is Not Necessary

[3] Continued Enforceability After Security Interest Created

[a] Introduction

[b] Secured Party's Interest in Proceeds of Collateral

[c] When Debtor Transfers Collateral to Third Party

[i] General

[ii] Creditors With Unperfected Security Interests

[iii] Creditors Whose Interests Are Automatically Perfected

[iv] Perfection by Filing Financing Statement or Indicating Lien on Certificate of Title

[d] Refinancing of Indebtedness

[e] Assignment of Security Agreement

[f] Where Underlying Obligation Is Extinguished

[4] Non-Purchase Money Security Interests

[a] General

[b] FTC Rule Prohibits Non-Purchase Money Security Interests in Household Goods

[i] Introduction

[ii] FTC Definition of Household Goods

[A] Items That Are Household Goods

[B] Limited Exceptions for Electronic Equipment, Jewelry, Antiques, and Art

[C] Other Items That Are Not Household Goods

[D] Comparison to Bankruptcy Code

[iii] Creditors Covered by the Rule

[iv] Remedies for FTC Rule Violations

[c] Other Restrictions on Non-Purchase Money Security Interests

[d] Unfairness, Unconscionability, and Related Challenges

[e] Does Description Adequately Identify Non-Purchase Money Collateral?

[i] Introduction

[ii] Does Collateral Description Distinguish After-Acquired Property?

[A] The UCC Limitation on After-Acquired Property

[B] Loan Collateral Must Be Distinguished From After-Acquired Property

[iii] Identification of Televisions, Radios, Musical Instruments, and Antiques

[iv] Distinguishing Between Debtor's Property and That Owned by Other Household Members

[f] Is Negative Equity Owed on Trade-In Vehicle Part of Purchase Money Obligation for New Vehicle?

[i] Introduction

[ii] Is the Existence of a PMSI a State or Federal Law Question?

[iii] UCC Definition of PMSI

[iv] Courts Holding Negative Equity Is Not Part of Purchase Money Obligation

[v] Courts Holding Negative Equity Is Part of Purchase Money Obligation

[vi] Consequences If Negative Equity Is Not Part of Purchase Money Obligation: The Transformation Rule Versus the Dual Status Rule

[5] Automobiles and Mobile Homes as Collateral

[a] Introduction

[b] Minimum Requirements for Creation of Security Interests in Cars and Mobile Homes

[c] Security Interests in Property Added to the Vehicle or Mobile Home

[i] Property Pre-Dating the Security Agreement

[ii] Property Added After the Security Agreement Is Signed (Accessions)

[d] Insurance Proceeds and Trade-Ins

[e] Auto Pawns

[6] Credit Card Issuer's Interest in Goods Purchased With Card

[a] Introduction

[b] Is There a Valid Security Agreement?

[i] UCC Requirements

[ii] Can the Store Produce the Necessary Records?

[c] Is the Collateral Adequately Described?

[d] Determining Which Collateral Is Paid Off First

[e] State Laws Prohibiting Credit Card Security Interests

[7] Series of Purchases From the Same Merchant

[a] Introduction

[b] Cross-Collateral Clauses

[c] Loan Consolidations

[d] Methods of Allocating Consumer Payments to Multiple Purchases

[8] Refinancings and Consolidations

[a] Introduction

[b] Article 9 Requirements to Preserve Prior Collateral in a Refinancing

[i] Does the Security Interest Survive Automatically?

[c] FTC Credit Practices Rule Generally Inapplicable

[9] Future Advance and Antecedent Debt Clauses

[a] General

[b] Judicial Reluctance to Enforce Future Advance Clauses

[c] Status of Negative Equity Trade-In as Antecedent Debt Rather Than Purchase Money Security Interest

[10] Consumer Remedies

[a] Remedies for Mere Inclusion of Invalid Security

[i] Introduction

[ii] Sale of Credit Property Insurance on Invalid Collateral

[iii] Unnecessary Filing Fees or Nonfiling Insurance

[iv] Overinclusive Description of Collateral

[b] Remedies for Threats to Enforce an Invalid Security Interest

[c] Remedies for Enforcement of Invalid Security Interests

§ 10.03 Default as Precondition to Seizure

[1] Default and Acceleration

[a] Default as Precondition to Repossession

[b] Under UCC, Definition of Default Determined by Agreement

[c] Relationship of Default and Acceleration

[d] Agreement to Accelerate Required; Strict Construction of Grounds to Accelerate

[e] Validity Under the UCC of Contractual Grounds for Acceleration

[f] UCC Restricts Acceleration at Will, When Creditor Insecure

[i] General

[g] Where Consumer Does Not Waive Notice of Debt's Acceleration

[h] Contract Provisions Waiving Debtor's Right to Notice of Acceleration

[i] Waiver of Notice Usually Found Valid

[ii] Where Notice Required Despite Waiver

[iii] Waiver Provisions May Be Unconscionable or Violate State Deceptive Practices Statutes

[2] State and Federal Credit Statutes May Limit Grounds for Default and Acceleration

[a] Distinction With Right to Cure Laws

[b] Federal Limitations

[c] State Law Limitations

[d] Notice of Assignment

[3] Creditor's Waiver of Right to Declare Default

[a] Habitual Acceptance of Late Payments Prevents Sudden Acceleration

[b] Other Creditor Conduct Preventing Acceleration

[c] Effect of Contractual Antiwaiver Provisions

[4] Creditor's Obligation to Seek Credit Insurance Payments Before Declaring Default

[5] Yo-Yo (Spot Delivery) Sales

[a] Did Financing Really Fall Through?

[6] Relationship of Default to Consumer's Defenses or Counterclaims

[a] Introduction

[b] If Consumer's Obligation Is Extinguished

[c] Seller's Breach of Contract May Prevent Default

[i] UCC § 2-717 Right to Deduct Payments.

[ii] Potential Consequences of Stopping Payments

[iii] Against Which Payments May Damage Claims Be Deducted?

[iv] Consumer Must Notify the Seller

[v] Damages That May Be Deducted; Relationship to Third Party Lender

[d] Consumer's Revocation of Acceptance May Prevent a Default

[i] General

[ii] Consumer May Have a Superior Security Interest in the Collateral

[iii] Revocation of Acceptance After Repossession

[e] Effect of Debtor's Counterclaims

[7] Unconscionable and Bad Faith Acceleration

[8] The Right to Cure a Default

[a] Introduction

[b] State Statutory Rights to Cure

[i] General

[c] Federal Right to Cure for Mobile Home First Mortgage Loans

[i] General

[ii] When Consumer Has Right to Cure

[iii] Mobile Home Lender Liability for Failure to Provide Right to Cure

[iv] Does Credit Agreement Obfuscate Right to Cure, Leading to Statutory Damages?

[9] Remedies

[a] Punitive Damages Under a Tort Theory

[b] Other Remedies

[c] Effect of Federal and State Electronic Signature Laws on State Right-to-Cure Statutes

[i] Coverage

[ii] Substantive Provisions of E-Sign

[iii] Substantive Provisions of UETA

[iv] Manner of Delivery of Notices Under E-Sign and UETA

§ 10.04 Replevin

[1] Overview

[a] Replevin and Writ of Replevin

[b] Debtor Strategies

[2] Constitutional Standards Controlling Writ of Replevin

[a] General

[b] Due Process

[c] Unreasonable Search and Seizure

[d] State Constitutional Provisions

[3] Challenging Writs Issued Ex Parte.

[a] Introduction

[b] The Post-Seizure Hearing

[c] Debtor's Consent to the Seizure

[d] Debtor Remedies

[4] Challenging Writ of Replevin at Hearing Prior to or Immediately After Seizure

[a] Right to a Hearing

[b] The Court's Jurisdiction to Issue Writ

[c] Replevin Statute's Application to Mobile Home Seizures

[d] Has a Complaint Been Filed?

[e] Debtor's Substantive Defenses and Counterclaims

[f] Attorney's Fees

[5] Creditor's Bond and Debtor's Counter-Bond

[a] Challenging the Creditor's Bond

[b] Posting a Counter-Bond

[6] Debtor Resistance to Sheriff's Seizure of Collateral

[7] The Trial on the Merits

[a] Creditor Failure to Pursue Replevin Action

[b] Consumer's Counterclaims and Substantive Defense

§ 10.05 Self-Help Repossession

[1] Introduction

[2] Representing the Client Before Repossession

[a] Voluntary Surrender

[i] Other Pre-Repossession Options

[b] False Threats to Repossess

[c] Resisting Repossession Attempts

[i] When Clients Should Object

[3] Bars to Repossession

[a] General

[b] Statutes Prohibiting Repossession

[c] Limits on Self-Help Seizure of Mobile Homes

[d] Limits on Seizure of Other Specific Types of Goods

[e] Specially Protected Debtors

[i] Military Personnel and Dependents

[ii] Native Americans

[f] Due Process Considerations

[i] When Is There Sufficient State Action?

[ii] Private Remedies Where Due Process Violated

[4] Repossession Must Not Breach the Peace

[a] Introduction

[b] Bodily Force and Threats

[c] Repossession Despite Consumer's Objection Breaches the Peace

[d] Trespass

[i] General

[ii] Public Street or Private Driveway

[iii] Residence

[e] Use of a Police Officer

[f] Deception, Trickery, Stealth

[5] Other Repossession Restrictions

[a] Method of Seizure

[b] Notice of Repossession

[c] Limitations on Professional Repossessors

[d] Creditor's Agreement Not to Repossess

[6] Electronic Repossessions

[7] Debtor's Consent as Defense to Wrongful Repossession

[8] Debtor's Contractual Waiver of Action for Wrongful Repossession

[9] Creditor's Liability for the Acts of Repossession Companies

[10] Consumer Remedies for Wrongful Repossession

[a] UCC Remedies

[b] Common Law Tort Remedies

[i] Potential Tort Causes of Action

[ii] Tort Damages

[iii] Punitive Damages

[c] Debtor's Replevin of Wrongfully Seized Property

[d] Federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

[e] Other Statutory Remedies

[f] Contract Claims

§ 10.06 Unsecured Personal Property Taken With Repossession

[1] Description of the Problem

[2] Steps to Take Prior to Bringing Legal Action

[a] Demanding Return of the Property

[b] Documenting What Property Was Seized or Damaged and by Whom

[c] Creditor Conditions as to Return of Unsecured Property

[3] Legal Claims Against Creditor for Seizing Unsecured Property

[a] Common Law Tort Claims

[b] UCC Remedies

[c] FDCPA, Other Statutory Sources of Damages

[4] Contractual Limitations to Creditor's Liability for Seizure of Unsecured Property

§ 10.07 Disposition of Repossessed Collateral Other Than by Creditor's Sale: Reinstatement, Redemption, Strict Foreclosure, Sheriff's Sale, and Consumer's Sale

[1] Introduction

[2] Right to Reinstate Contract

[3] Redemption of Collateral

[a] Absolute Right Until Disposition

[b] Who Can Redeem

[c] Notice of Right

[d] Determination of Redemption Amount

[e] Tender

[f] Secured Party's Refusal

[g] Waiver

[4] Strict Foreclosure: Creditor's Retention of Collateral

[a] Deficiency Precluded

[b] Debtor's Right to Object

[c] Constructive Strict Foreclosure

[d] The 60% Rule: No Strict Foreclosure

[e] Strict Foreclosure Provisions in Revised Article 9

[5] Judicial Sale of Collateral

[6] Sale of Collateral by Debtor

[a] Introduction

[b] Automobiles

[c] Mobile Homes

[i] Introduction

[ii] Using Transfer Agreements

[iii] Selling on Consignment

§ 10.08 Creditor's Sale of the Collateral

[1] Creditor Must Sell, Lease, or Otherwise Dispose of Collateral

[2] Commercial Reasonableness Standard

[a] General

[b] Burden of Proof

[3] Creditor's Duties Toward Collateral

[a] Duty to Safeguard

[b] Use of Collateral

[c] Duty to Recondition

[d] Preservation of Warranties

[4] Notice of Sale

[a] Importance of Notice

[b] Who Must Send Notice

[c] Manner of Sending Notice

[d] Who Must Receive Notice

[e] Waiver of Notice

[i] Debtor's

[ii] Guarantor's

[f] Timing

[g] Notice Sent But Not Received

[h] Written Requirement

[i] Content

[j] When Notice Not Required

[k] Remedies for Notice Violations

[5] Timing of Sale

[a] Unreasonable Delay

[b] Excessive Delay

[c] Rushed Sale

[6] Public vs. Private Sale

[a] Determining Public or Private

[b] Commercial Reasonableness of Choice

[7] Public Sale

[a] Requirements of Auctions

[b] Adequate Advertisement

[c] Availability of Collateral for Inspection

[d] Injunctions Available

[8] Private Sale

[a] Requirements

[b] Creditor's Purchase at Private Sale

[c] Good Faith Bargaining Requirement

[d] Repurchase Agreements

[9] Other Challenges to Commercial Reasonableness

[a] Sale Price

[i] Is a Low Sale Price a Sufficient Basis for a Finding of Commercial Unreasonableness?

[b] Wholesale Disposition

[i] UCC Language

[ii] Case Law

[iii] FTC Precedent

[iv] "Dealers Only" Auto Auctions

[v] Private, Non-Auction Wholesale Disposition

[vi] Dealer Justifications for Wholesale Disposition

[c] "Churning": Revolving Repossession Schemes

[10] Rights of Purchasers at Repossession Sales

§ 10.09 Determining the Deficiency or Surplus

[1] Consumer's Right to Any Surplus

[a] Right to Surplus After Sale of Collateral

[b] Right to Surplus Where Creditor Retains Collateral

[c] Consumer Remedies for Creditor's Failure to Pay Surplus

[2] Creditor's Right to a Deficiency

[a] General

[b] Creditor Can Both Seize Collateral and Sue on Debt

[c] No Deficiency After Strict Foreclosure

[d] Creditor's Unintentional Strict Foreclosure May Preclude a Deficiency

[i] Introduction

[ii] Creditor's Sale of Collateral to Itself

[iii] Creditor's Transfer of Collateral to Dealer Pursuant to Repurchase Agreement

[iv] Delay in Sale of Collateral

[v] Abandoning Collateral as Worthless

[e] Commercially Reasonable Disposition as Precondition to Deficiency

[f] No Deficiency After Revocation of Acceptance

[g] Special Notice Requirements as Precondition to a Deficiency

[3] State Anti-Deficiency Statutes

[a] Overview

[b] Dollar Limitations on Anti-Deficiency Statutes

[c] Are Consumer Loans or Only Credit Sales Covered?

[d] Type of Goods Covered

[e] Excessive Damage to the Collateral May Give Rise to a Creditor Cause of Action

[f] Effect of Anti-Deficiency Statute on Foreclosure of Property Pursuant to a Judgment Lien

[g] Has the Creditor Made an Election?

[4] Calculating the Deficiency or Surplus

[a] Introduction

[b] The Balance Due on the Debt

[i] The Remainder Due on the Loan Before Adjustments

[ii] Unearned Interest Rebates

[A] Acceleration Treated as Prepayment in Computing Rebates

[B] Computing Rebates

[C] The Effect of the Consumer's Waiver of the Right to a Rebate

[D] Consumer Remedies for Failure to Rebate Unearned Interest

[iii] Interest and Penalties After Acceleration

[iv] Forced-Placed Insurance Premiums

[v] Credits to the Consumer for Insurance Claim Payments

[c] Insurance Rebates

[i] Introduction

[ii] Determining What Insurance the Consumer Has Purchased

[iii] Cancelling the Insurance and Calculating the Rebate

[d] Credit to Consumer for Collateral's Value

[i] Method of Determining Value

[ii] Determining the Collateral's Sale Price

[A] General

[B] Adjusting the Sale Price to Reflect a Subsequent Purchaser's Trade-In

[iii] Determining the Collateral's Value Where Disposition Not Commercially Reasonable

[e] Consumer's Liability for Repossession-Related Expenses

[i] Expenses in Seizing and Storing the Collateral

[ii] Expenses of Reconditioning or Repairing Collateral

[A] When Such Expenses Are Valid

[B] Computing Creditor Expenses

[iii] Selling Expenses

[iv] Attorney Fees

§ 10.10 Defending a Deficiency Action

[1] Introduction

[a] Importance of Defending a Deficiency Action

[2] UCC § 9-625(c) Statutory Damages.

[a] Violations Leading to Statutory Damages

[b] Section 9-625(c) Statutory Damages Limited to Consumer Goods Collateral

[c] Calculation and Significance of Minimum Damages

[d] Statute of Limitations for Consumer's Claim Under UCC § 9-625(c).

[3] Where a Deficiency Claim Is Prohibited

[a] Introduction

[b] Where Underlying Debt Is Extinguished

[c] State Anti-Deficiency Laws

[d] Failure to Sell Collateral or Sale to the Wrong Person

[e] Creditor's Promise to Accept Collateral in Satisfaction of Debt

[f] Procedural Defenses

[4] Defective Disposition as Defense to Deficiency Action

[a] Creditor's Burden and Overview of Consumer's Remedies Where Burden Not Met

[i] Burden on Creditor to Prove All Aspects of Sale Commercially Reasonable

[ii] Impact of Defective Disposition on Right to Deficiency

[b] The Absolute Bar Approach

[i] States Adopting the Absolute Bar Rule

[ii] Violations Triggering the Absolute Bar

[iii] Operation of the Absolute Bar Rule

[iv] Justification for the Absolute Bar Rule

[c] The Rebuttable Presumption Theory

[i] General

[ii] Distinguishing Rebuttable Presumption Precedent in Arguing for an Absolute Bar Approach

[iii] Operation of the Rebuttable Presumption Approach

[d] The Set-Off Theory

[5] Barring a Deficiency and Recovering UCC Statutory Damages

[6] Effect on Right to Deficiency of Failure to Send Explanation of Calculations

[7] Timing Limitations on Creditor's Ability to File Deficiency Claims

[a] No Action on Debt Where Collateral Seized, But Not Yet Sold

[b] UCC Four-Year Limitations Period on Creditor's Deficiency Claim

[c] Additional Timing Requirements for Deficiency Actions

[8] Consumer's Counterclaims Relating to Repossession

[a] Counterclaims Relating to Collateral Disposition

[9] Counterclaims Not Related to the Repossession

[a] Types of Counterclaims to Raise

[b] Raising Seller-Related Claims Against the Creditor

[10] Cosigners and Other Sureties' Defenses to Deficiency Action

[a] Introduction

[b] Distinguishing Cosigner or Other Surety From the Principal Obligor

[c] Cosigner Defenses Under the Current Version of UCC Article 3

[i] Extension of Due Date

[ii] Modification of Terms of Obligation

[iii] Creditor's Impairment of Collateral

[iv] Waiver

[v] Defenses Where Accommodation Party's Status Is Unknown to Creditor

[d] Cosigner Defenses Under the Previous Version of Article 3

[e] Defenses Under 2002 Revisions to Article 3

[f] Creditor's Failure to Reveal Risks of Guarantee as Defense to Deficiency

[g] Surety's Right to Notice of Sale and a Commercially Reasonable Disposition of the Collateral

[h] Creditor's Duty of Good Faith to Surety

[i] Creditor's Duty to Disclose Risks to Cosigner

[i] Federal Trade Commission Cosigner Requirements

[ii] State Cosigner Statutes

[j] Surety's Right to Redeem Collateral

[k] Surety's Claims Against the Principal Debtor

[11] Raising Defenses to FDIC or RTC's Deficiency Actions

142 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 10 Repossessions

1-10 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 10.01

§ 10.01 Overviewn1

Consumer rights in repossessions are governed by numerous different federal and state laws, particularly the Uniform Commercial Code Articles ("UCC") 1, 2A, and 9 where personal property is seized. Of almost equal importance are state retail installment sales acts, motor vehicle financing laws, and other state consumer credit legislation, state replevin and foreclosure procedures, state lien laws, state rent-to-own laws, state leasing statutes, state deceptive practices statutes, and state debt collection laws. Applicable federal laws include the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, Truth in Lending ("TIL"), the Federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act ("FDCPA"), Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") Rules, Office of Thrift Supervision ("OTS") mobile home regulations, the Consumer Leasing Act ("CLA"), the Equal Credit Opportunity Act ("ECOA"), and Civil Rights Acts. Common law tort and contract law also provide consumer remedies.

[1] Key Scope Issues

[a] Personalty vs. Realty

[i] General

A critical first issue in any seizure case is whether the case involves personalty or realty, because very different laws govern the two. The UCC does not apply to real property. n2

In most consumer transactions, it is clear whether the collateral involves realty or personalty. Mobile homes occupy a middle position. The question arises whether it is realty or personalty once it becomes attached semi-permanently to land. The answer to this will vary with each state's law. n3 Personalty includes the proceeds of a contract for the sale of real property, so an Article 9 security interest can be taken in such proceeds. n4

[ii] Where Collateral Includes Both Personalty and Realty

If the creditor's collateral includes both personalty and realty, Revised UCC section 9-604 [former section 9-501(4)] provides the creditor with an option. The creditor can proceed, upon debtor's default, against the personalty under UCC Article 9, or the creditor can proceed against the realty and personalty pursuant to state real estate law. n5

[b] Consensual Liens vs. Statutory Liens

The UCC explicitly excludes statutory liens from its coverage, n6 and appliesonly to consensual security interests (where the debtor signs an agreement granting the creditor an interest in the debtor's property).

A statutory lien, instead, is created by a specific state statute giving certain parties, such as automotive mechanics or towing companies, the right to seize specified property under certain statutory conditions, such as when the consumer fails to pay for work performed.

UCC section 1-201(35) [former 1-201(37)] specifies when a lease is treated as creating a security interest so that Article 9 applies.

[c] Sources of Law

[i] The Uniform Commercial Code

[A] The Model Code and State Variations

The general framework for repossession law dealing with personalty is set out in the UCC. While all fifty states, the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands have adopted the UCC in most respects, each version is different.

[B] UCC Article 9

UCC Article 9 is the fundamental law regulating security interests and repossession of personal property. Article 9 offers a framework for determining when the creditor has a valid security interest, when and how it can repossess and dispose of the collateral, and the rights of creditor and debtor after the collateral's disposition.

UCC Article 9 applies generally to consensual security interests in personal property and fixtures. n7 It covers pledges, assignments, chattel mortgages, trust deeds, factor's liens, conditional sales, lien contracts, title retention contracts, and leases intended as security. n8

When a secured party fails to comply with UCC Article 9, Revised UCC section 9-625 specifies the debtor's remedies.

Article 9 of the UCC was substantially revised in 2001. All states and the District of Columbia have adopted Revised Article 9. The more important changes for consumers are noted where appropriate in this chapter.

[C] UCC Article 2A.

UCC Article 2A applies to leases of personal property not governed by Article 9. In general, where Article 9 does not apply to a lease, then Article 2A will be the major source of governing law.

Unlike Revised UCC section 9-625 [former UCC section 9-507(1)], Article 2A provides no statutory damages or other explicit remedies where the lessor fails to comply with Article 2A in enforcing its default remedies. The only special consumer remedy is found in section 2A-108, dealing with unconscionability.

Article 2A also discusses the rules for determining whether a lease is a true lease, which will be governed by Article 2A, or a disguised security interest, in which case Article 9 will apply.

[D] The UCC's Good Faith Requirement; Other Miscellaneous UCC Provisions in Other Articles

One of the most significant and pervasive other sections of the UCC is Revised UCC section 1-304 [former UCC

section 1-203], which states that "Every contract or duty within [this Code] imposes an obligation of good faith in its performances and enforcement."

[ii] State Consumer Credit Legislation

[A] Types of Statutes

The Uniform Consumer Credit Code ("UCCC") and other model credit codes pull together in one source many different pieces of legislation, providing somewhat uniform and coherent standards. n9 But only six states currently use all or most of the 1968 UCCC n10 and four states have adopted major provisions of the 1974 UCCC. n11 Wisconsin's consumer credit code, n12 based on the National Consumer Act, offers significantly more consumer protection than either UCCC version.

A state consumer credit statute is not preempted by the UCC even if not enumerated at Revised UCC section 9-201.

[B] Remedies

There is a large variation in the remedies found in state consumer credit legislation. A number of statutes provide for attorneys' fees and substantialstatutory damages, such as forfeiture of all or double the finance charge, plus forfeiture of "other charges."

[iii] State Deceptive Practices (UDAP) Statutes

[A] Overview

State deceptive practices statutes prohibit marketplace deception; many of these statutes also proscribe unfair or unconscionable conduct. Because many statutes prohibit unfair and deceptive acts and practices, these statutes are generally termed "UDAP" statutes. This volume will use the terms state deceptive practices and UDAP statutes interchangeably.

Deception and unfairness are broad, flexible standards; they apply to many forms of abusive repossession, foreclosure, and leasing practices. Even if a practice does not violate the UCC, state consumer credit legislation, state foreclosure laws, or other specialized legislation, aggressive consumer attorneys can often find deceptive or unfair aspects of the practice.

Every state has a deceptive practices statute that authorizes a private damage action. In addition, most deceptive practices statutes provide for attorneys' fees and either multiple, punitive, or statutory damages. n13

[B] UDAP Statutes' Coverage of Repossession

[1] Importance of Examining the Statutory Language

Consumer attorneys, when utilizing a state UDAP statute to challenge repossession, must always make sure that the practices fall within the statute's scope. While UDAP statutes have general applicability to almost all consumer transactions, coverage of repossessions will be an issue in at least certain states.

Absent case law directly considering the coverage of repossession practices, courts should generally follow a state's case law dealing with whether debt collection falls within a state UDAP statute's scope. Where a UDAP statute applies to conduct "in trade or commerce," the statute can be used to challenge debt collection activities. The same is generally the case even where the statute is not so broad, but applies more narrowly to the sale of goods or services or contains similar coverage. n14

Credit practices fall within a statute's scope if it covers practices "in trade or commerce," or if the statute does not specifically contain a limitation that could apply to credit.

[C] Unfair and Deceptive Repossession Practices

[1] Violation of Other Statute as Basis for UDAP Violation

Violation of a statute designed to protect the public is arguably a per se violation of a state's UDAP statute.

UDAP statutes may also be utilized to attack adhesion contracts that waive the debtor's right to challenge unlawful repossession practices, or that contain overreaching creditor remedies or unconscionable security arrangements.

[iv] Common Law Tort Claims

Common law tort law concerning conversion, negligence, trespass, assault, infliction of emotional distress, and invasion of privacy has applications when unsecured property is seized, when unlawful methods are used to seize secured or leased property, or when other improper repossession or foreclosure practices are committed.

The UCC preserves common law tort claims such as conversion. n15

For secured transactions that are not covered by Article 9, a court may apply the common law of the pledge, a transfer of property as security for a debt. n16 To create a pledge, there must be a debt, property must be offered to secure the debt, and the property must be transferred from the debtor (pledgor) to the creditor (pledgee). n17 Possession, either actual or symbolic, of the pledged property must be delivered to the pledgee in order to create the lien. n18 If the debtor retains control over the property, the creditor does not have possession, and there is no effective pledge. n19

When a common law pledge exists, the secured party is under a duty to exercise reasonable care to preserve the pledged property. n20 Wrongful disposition of the pledged property, so that it can not be returned to the debtor upon payment of the debt, is conversion. n21

[v] Federal Civil Rights Law

42 U.S.C. section 1983 provides debtors whose property has been seized unconstitutionally with a federal cause of action for actual and punitive damages and attorneys' fees if state action is present.

But consumers can raise such a cause of action relatively infrequently to challenge repossession practices. Sufficient state action is usually lacking for a self-help repossession due process attack, unless state or local officials are involved. Due process protections apply to replevin, but most state replevin procedures have been amended to meet due process requirements. Due process protections may also apply to the enforcement of common law or statutory liens, depending on the extent of state involvement.

[vi] Truth in Lending and the Consumer Leasing Act

The Federal Truth in Lending Act ("TILA") n22 and the Federal CLA n23 provide important consumer rights relevant to repossessions and foreclosures. n24

[vii] Federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

The Federal FDCPA n25 has several important applications to repossession practices. Since statutory violations can result in awards to the debtor of actual damages, up to $1000 statutory damages, and attorney fees, FDCPA claims should be alleged whenever appropriate. n26

[viii] State Debt Collection Laws

The Federal FDCPA generally does not apply to the collection activities of creditors, but only to the collection efforts of independent collection agencies. On the other hand, state debt collection statutes often do apply to creditors, and typically provide private remedies for various forms of debt collection deception or abuse.

[ix] U.S. Bankruptcy Code

The U.S. Bankruptcy Code n27 offers some of the most effective consumer remedies to prevent foreclosures and repossessions. For most debtors, bankruptcy automatically stays all actions against the debtor's secured property. n28 (The 2005 amendments to the Bankruptcy Code have created some exceptions, primarily for repeat filers). It may also allow a debtor to obtain the return of property which has already been seized. n29

[x] State Lien Laws

UCC Article 9 applies only to security interests created by agreement, not to interests in consumers' property created by statute.

[xi] Replevin Procedures

State replevin laws and related court rules are important to repossession law. These state replevin laws, sometimes called detinue, claim and delivery, bail, or sequestration laws, regulate seizures of personal property through judicial action.

[xii] Rent-to-Own Legislation and State Leasing Statutes

Most states have enacted special legislation covering rent-to-own ("RTO") transactions. In many cases, this legislation explicitly ousts the applicability of UCC Article 9 and state consumer credit legislation to RTO transactions and replaces these statutes with only minimal protections for consumers. Remedies vary by statute.

[xiii] Preemption by Federal Law

The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) has adopted regulations that broadly preempt certain state laws that interfere with the ability of national banks to operate under uniform federal standards. n30 These regulations do not preempt the UCC, which is a uniform law of general applicability on which parties rely in their daily commercial transactions. n31 Likewise, regulations of the Office of Thrift Supervision, which regulates federal savings and loan associations, specify that state contract and commercial laws are generally not preempted. n32 The OCC did issue an opinion, however, stating that federal law preempted a state law that prevented banks from using auctions open to the public when they disposed of repossessed leased vehicles was preempted. Under the state law, only a licensed motor vehicle dealer or salesperson could offer vehicles for sale at auctions open to the public.

A California state court opinion erroneously concluded that the Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS) regulations preempt a California law that requires a post-repossession notice setting forth the right to redeem, the right to reinstate the contract under state law, and other matters. n33 One problem with this decision is that it applies preemption to retail installment contracts that are generated by motor vehicle dealers and then later assigned to federal savings and loan associations. This interpretation would mean that a contract would be governed by state law at its initiation, but would be stripped of state law protections upon its assignment to the savings and loan, an odd and illogical result. Second, it applies preemption to state repossession protections, even though the OTS preemption regulation lists neither default remedies in general nor repossession in particular as one of the areas preempted. Finally, the decision fails to take account of the OTS regulation's statement that state contract and commercial laws are not preempted. n34

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawConsumer ProtectionGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Leases (Article 2A)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. For a more extensive treatment of the subject of Repossessions, see National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.)

(n2)Footnote 2. Revised U.C.C. § 9-109(d)(11) [former U.C.C. § 9-104(j)]; In re Anthony, 835 P.2d 811, 18 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 606 (N.M. 1992) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Warranty Law § 17.2 (3d ed. 2006 and Supp.).

(n4)Footnote 4. U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(2)(i); see In re Nittolo Land Dev. Ass'n, 58 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 313 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2005) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Revised U.C.C. § 9-604 [former U.C.C. § 9-501(4)].

(n6)Footnote 6. Revised U.C.C. § 9-109(d)(1), (2) [former U.C.C. § 9-102(2)].

(n7)Footnote 7. Revised U.C.C. § 9-109(a) [former U.C.C. § 9-102(1)(a)]. Selected U.C.C. Article 9 sections are reprinted in Vol. 1A infra.

(n8)Footnote 8. Former U.C.C. § 9-102(2). Revised Article deleted this language as superfluous, but the Official Comments state that no change in meaning was intended. Official Comment 2 to Revised U.C.C. § 9-109. See also In re Schwalb, 347 B.R. 726, 60 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 755 (D. Nev. 2006) (Article 9 governs auto title pawn transaction).

(n9)Footnote 9. For a detailed discussion of the scope of consumer credit legislation, see National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption, and Industry Abuses Chs. 2, 9 (4th ed. 2009).

(n10)Footnote 10. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 5-1-101; Ind. Code § 24-4.5-1-101; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 14A, § 1-101; S.C. Code Ann. § 37-1-101; Utah Code Ann. § 70C-3-101; Wyo. Stat. § 40-14-101.

(n11)Footnote 11. Iowa Code Ann. § 537.1101; Idaho Code §§ 28-41-101 to 28-49-107; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 16a-1-101; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 9A, § 1-101.

(n12)Footnote 12. Wis. Stat. § 421.101.

(n13)Footnote 13. See generally Ch. 4, "Unfair and Deceptive Credit Practices," supra.

(n14)Footnote 14. See In re Western Acceptance Corp., 117 Idaho 399, 788 P.2d 214 (1990) .

(n15)Footnote 15. U.C.C. § 1-103; Official Comment 12 to Revised U.C.C. § 9-620; Official Comment 3 to Revised U.C.C. § 9-625 ("principles of tort law supplement this subsection"); see Fleet Capital Corp. v. Yamaha Motor Corp., 48 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1137 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) .

(n16)Footnote 16. In re Alabama Land & Mineral Corp., 292 F.3d 1319, 48 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 379 (11th Cir.

2002) (Kentucky law).

(n17)Footnote 17. In re Alabama Land & Mineral Corp., 292 F.3d 1319, 48 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 379 (11th Cir. 2002) (Kentucky law); see In re Section 20 Land Group, Ltd., 261 B.R. 721 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2001) . See also In re Timothy Dean Restaurant & Bar, 342 B.R. 1, 59 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 485, 499 (D.D.C. 2006) .

(n18)Footnote 18. In re Alabama Land & Mineral Corp., 292 F.3d 1319, 48 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 379 (11th Cir. 2002) (Kentucky law); Ellefson v. Centech Corp., 606 N.W.2d 324 (Iowa 2000) (pledge of bank accounts is effective only if pledgee has absolute, unequivocal, and exclusive possession and control); Walton v. Piqua State Bank, 466 P.2d 316 (Kan. 1970) (pledge of savings account ineffective without delivery of passbook).

(n19)Footnote 19. In re Section 20 Land Group, Ltd., 261 B.R. 721 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2001) (finding effective pledge when debtor did not retain control).

(n20)Footnote 20. Premier Capital, Inc. v. Grossman, 789 A.2d 565 (Conn. App. Ct. 2002) .

(n21)Footnote 21. Premier Capital, Inc. v. Grossman, 789 A.2d 565 (Conn. App. Ct. 2002) .

(n22)Footnote 22. 15 U.S.C. § 1601. The Truth in Lending Act [hereinafter TILA] is reprinted in Vol. 1A infra.

(n23)Footnote 23. 15 U.S.C. § 1667. The Consumer Leasing Act [hereinafter CLA] is reprinted in Vol. 1A infra.

(n24)Footnote 24. See Ch. 13 supra.

(n25)Footnote 25. 15 U.S.C. § 1692. The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act [hereinafter FDCPA] is reprinted in Vol. 1A infra.

(n26)Footnote 26. See Ch. 8 supra.

(n27)Footnote 27. 11 U.S.C. §§ 101-1330.

(n28)Footnote 28. 11 U.S.C. § 362.

(n29)Footnote 29. 11 U.S.C. §§ 542, 543. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions Ch. 8 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.), for discussion of using bankruptcy to prevent a repossession. See also National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice (8th ed. 2006 and supp.).

(n30)Footnote 30. 12 C.F.R. §§ 7.4007, 7.4008.

(n31)Footnote 31. Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Interpretive Letter #1005 (June 10, 2004), available at www.occ.treas.gov/interp/sep04/int1005.pdf; see also U.C.C. § 9-109(c)(1) (Article 9 is inapplicable to the extent it is preempted by federal law); Official Comment 6 to U.C.C. § 9-109 (Article 9 defers to federal law only when and to the extent that it must because of preemption).

(n32)Footnote 32. Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Preemption Opinion, 66 Fed. Reg. 23,977 (May 10, 2001) .

(n33)Footnote 33. WFS Fin., Inc. v. Super. Ct., 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 561 (Ct. App. 2006) .

(n34)Footnote 34. 12 C.F.R. § 560.2(c)(1).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 10 Repossessions

1-10 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 10.02

§ 10.02 Enforceable Security Interests

[1] Valid Security Interest as Precondition to Seizure of Personal Property

[a] UCC Article 9 Authorizes Seizure of Property Only Where There Is a Valid Security Interest.

A valid security interest is a precondition to a creditor's right to seize collateral either through self-help repossession or through a court replevin procedure. Every state has enacted UCC Article 9, and, for transactions within its scope, Article 9 allows seizure of property where the property is subject to a security interest. n1

The security interest cannot be enforced unless the debtor has signed a security agreement describing the collateral (or the creditor has possession of the collateral pursuant to an agreement), value has been given, and the debtor has rights in the collateral. n2 In addition, security interests are not enforceable to the extent to which they are limited by another statute or regulation. n3

[b] Article 9 Applies to Credit Transactions No Matter How Structured

UCC Article 9 rules as to the enforceability of security interests apply generally to any type of creditor interest in property where the intent of that interest is to secure payment or performance of an obligation. No matter how a sale or loan is structured, or how a creditor labels the interest it retains in property, the creditor can only seize the property if the creditor has created a valid security interest in the property pursuant to Article 9.

[c] Where Article 9 Does Not Apply

[i] General

The exclusions to UCC Article 9 are set out in Revised UCC section 9-109(d) [former UCC section 9-104].

[ii] Statutory Liens

State legislation and common law principles give artisans, mechanics, warehousemen, and others liens in the consumer's property when the consumer has not paid for repairs, improvements, or storage. These liens, like security agreements, authorize lien holders to dispose of the debtor's property without judicial process.

If the possessory interest is an artisan's lien created by statute or common law, the UCC does not govern that interest. n4

[iii] Interests in Realty

UCC Article 9 applies only to interests in personal property, and does not apply to interests in real estate. n5

[iv] Leases

Revised UCC section 1-201(35) [former UCC section 1-201(37)] sets out detailed standards as to whether a lease is really intended for security (in which case UCC Article 9 requirements apply), or whether the transaction is a true lease (in which case Article 9 does not apply).

[v] Consignments and Bailments

Consumers may obtain or relinquish possession of property pursuant to a consignment or bailment. The consumer's right to return of the property is thus not conditioned on the consumer creating a valid security interest in the property. Instead, the relationship is governed by other state law.

Under common law, a bailment contract, express or implied, is created when someone delivers personal property into the possession of another person in trust for a specific purpose, subject to agreement that the property will eventually be returned to the owner. n6 A classic example of a bailment would be turning possessions over to a moving company for the purpose of moving them to a new home. Most sale transactions do not contemplate that the buyer will return the property to the seller, and, therefore, a critical element of a bailment is missing. Accordingly, a security interest in that property should not be labeled a bailment. n7

Even if a transaction can fairly be characterized as a bailment, it still cannot escape Article 9's requirements if the seller intended to create a security interest: "The article does not in terms abolish existing security devices. The conditional sale or bailment-lease, for example, is not prohibited; but even though it is used, the rules of this article govern." n8 Thus, although a seller may expressly retain title to the conveyed property, if the circumstances show that the title was retained for the purpose of securing payment of a debt, the transaction falls squarely within Article 9. n9

In addition, Revised Article 9 will cover "consignments." n10 However, the definition of a consignment covered by Revised Article 9 includes a requirement that the goods being consigned "are not consumer goods immediately before delivery." n11 "Consumer goods," in turn, are "goods that are used or bought for use primarily for personal, family, or household purposes." n12 It seems likely, therefore, that the rights of consumers in consignment situations will continue to be governed by non-Article 9 law.

[2] Elements of a Valid Security Interest

[a] Uniform Standards Except for Possessory Security Interests

UCC Article 9 sets out one set of minimum standards for creation of any valid security interest.

The basic UCC requirements for creation of an enforceable security interest are:

- The creditor must give value;

- The debtor must have rights in the collateral or power to transfer rights in the collateral to a secured party; and

- With some exceptions, the debtor must have signed or otherwise authenticated a security agreement that describes the collateral. n13

No matter how a transaction is structured, if UCC Article 9 applies, the creditor must meet these minimum requirements to obtain an enforceable interest in the property.

The UCC rules as to the enforceability of security interests apply to all forms of security interests with one exception. The Article 9 requirement as to a signed security agreement describing the collateral does not apply to pawns, pledges, and other possessory security interests; that is, where the creditor has physical possession of the property. In addition, Revised Article 9, reflecting the rise of electronic commerce, now allows security agreements to be "authenticated" rather than signed. n14

[b] Written Agreement Must Specifically Grant Security Interest

[i] Agreement Must Be a Written or Electronic Document

For a security interest to attach (unless the creditor retains possession (or control under Revised Article 9) of the property), there must be a written agreement. However, Revised Article 9 allows the security agreement to be electronic, rather than paper, and the consumer's signature can be an electronic signature. n15 An oral security agreement is ineffective. n16

[ii] Agreement Must Specifically Grant the Security Interest

The writing must specifically grant, create, or provide for a security interest. n17 Security interests are not created by: a mere promissory note and sales contract; a simple bill of sale in which the seller is listed as a secured party; the indication on the certificate of title of the existence of a lien or security interest; the listing of the title in the creditor's name; a financing statement unless the financing statement in itself meets all the requirements of a security agreement; an application for a certificate of title, describing the collateral and signed by the debtor; a signed revolving credit application and agreement which does not granta security interest; charge slips granting a security interest in the items purchased with reference to a charge agreement that is not offered in evidence; or an "acknowledgment" that the debtor would not transfer title to the collateral.

[iii] Is Truth in Lending Disclosure an Adequate Grant?

The Federal TILA requires that creditors disclose any security interest they take in a credit transaction. n18 Creditors thus must comply with two separate requirements when they obtain a security interest: they must obtain from the consumer a written grant of the security interest, and they must then disclose that security interest to the consumer in a manner complying with TILA.

Typically, creditors use one document as a promissory note, Truth in Lending disclosure, and security agreement, and then pattern the Truth in Lending disclosures after the Federal Reserve Board model disclosure forms. Since the segregated disclosure is not signed by the debtor and often does not meet specificity requirements of Article 9, it may not meet the minimum preconditions for creation of a security interest.

If the TILA disclosure is not adequate to grant a security interest, and the interest is not granted elsewhere, there is no enforceable security interest. If the interest described in the TILA disclosure is not valid, the TIL disclosure of the interest is inaccurate, and this may be a TIL violation. Then, even if the invalid security interest is never enforced, the TILA violation will lead to statutory damages and attorney fees.

[c] Debtor Must Sign the Agreement

[i] General

The UCC requires that the written or electronic security agreement be authenticated by the debtor. n19 A signature is a type of "authentication," but the term also includes electronic signatures and other similar methods. n20 Failure to obtain the debtor's signature defeats the security interest, making it unenforceable against the debtor or third parties.

The signature requirement is in the nature of a statute of frauds and cannot be circumvented by showing an intent by the parties that the agreement be effective. n21

While requiring strict compliance with the signature rule, the UCC defines "signed" broadly as including "any symbol executed or adopted by a party with present intention to authenticate a writing." n22 The 1999 revisions to Article 9 contemplate electronic as well as paper security agreements, and allow electronic signatures. n23

For a valid security interest, the creditor must obtain the signature not of the person borrowing the money, but of the person that presently owns the collateral. n24

[d] Unchecked Boxes, Blanks, and Amendments

Because a security agreement must be in writing and signed, lenders are strictly held to the version of the security agreement that was signed by the debtor, which could include blank spaces or errors in marking boxes.

Leaving blanks in credit documents usually violates retail installment sales acts, motor vehicle financing acts, or other state legislation. In addition, where a security agreement is signed with blanks that are filled in later by the creditor, the security agreement is at best effective only as to its content with the blanks not filled in. Accordingly, if the description of the collateral was originally left blank, there is no security interest. n25

The strict signature requirement also applies to all changes or additions to the security agreement. If a debtor does not sign or initial subsequent changes to the agreement, those changes are not enforceable.

However, oral agreements may modify inessential terms of the security agreement.

[e] Creditor Must Give Value

A security interest does not attach until value has been given for the security interest. n26 The concept of value is broader than the contract concept of consideration. n27

[f] Debtor Must Have Rights in Collateral

Another precondition to the creation of a valid security interest is that the debtor has rights in the collateral. n28 A creditor cannot enforce a security interest in property if the debtor neither owns nor has an interest in that property. n29 Revised UCC section 9-203(b)(2) expands this precondition, saying that the debtor must have rights in the collateral or the power to transfer rights in the collateral to a secured party. If the debtor transfers the property after the creditor's security interest is created, however, the interest attaches.

[g] Security Agreement Must Identify the Collateral

[i] General Rule

UCC Article 9 requires that the security agreement describe the collateral. n30 The basic rule under the UCC is that a description of the collateral must be specific enough to allow creditors' agents, sheriffs, and others to distinguish between goods subject to a security interest and the debtor's other similar property not subject to the security interest.

n31

Creditors need not list with great specificity each item of collateral as long as the general description adequately and uniquely identifies the collateral. Identifying the collateral as "a type of collateral defined in" the UCC is also sufficient as a general rule. n32 It appears that "equipment," "inventory," and "commercial tort claim" are all examples of "types" of collateral defined in the UCC, n33 and that "type" is a broader term than "category." n34 However, there are important exceptions to the general rule that a description by type is sufficient. n35

[ii] Relationship to Collateral's Description in the Financing Statement

It is important to distinguish two questions: Is a description of collateral in a security agreement sufficient identification to create a valid security interest, and is the description in a financing statement adequate to put creditors on notice of a potential security interest. The security agreement signed by the consumer grants the security interest. The creditor can then insure its priority in that collateral as against other creditors by perfecting that security interest, such as by filing a financing statement that describes the collateral.

A description of collateral found in a financing statement may be adequate for purposes of perfecting a security interest, but may be inadequate for purposes of creating the security interest. n36 The security agreement requires specification of the collateral to allow identification. The financing statement need only contain enough of a description to put other creditors on notice that a further inquiry is necessary to determine the exact nature of the first creditor's security interest.

In addition, a financing statement that indicates more collateral than provided for in the security agreement is not effective to expand the collateral. n37 It is the security agreement, not the financing statement, that controls the extent of the collateral. n38

[iii] Where Collateral Identification Is Accidentally Omitted

The requirement that the collateral be described in the security agreement is a strict one. An unintentional omission can prevent the security interest from being enforceable. Creditors often get into trouble by indicating in the security agreement that collateral is described in an attachment which, in fact, is not attached. This defeats the security interest in the intended collateral. However, the creditor may be able to obtain a court order reforming the security agreement under the common law of mutual mistake. n39

[iv] Relationship to Truth in Lending Disclosure of Security Interest

The Federal TILA n40 requires that security interests in consumer transactions be clearly and conspicuously disclosed. This disclosure, along with certain other TIL disclosures, must be segregated from other information not required by TIL, and be in a form which the borrower may keep. n41

This requirement has at least four implications for consumer attorneys examining the validity of a security interest:

- Failure to properly disclose valid security interests subjects the creditor to TILA statutory damages, actual damages, and attorney fees whether or not the security interest is ever enforced;

- Where creditors rely solely on the TILA disclosure to create the security interest, the disclosure's description of the collateral may not meet UCC minimum standards for identifying the collateral;

- If the collateral description is different in the TILA disclosure than in the security agreement, this may lead not only to a TILA violation, but may even invalidate the security interest;

- If the interest described in the TILA disclosure turns out to be invalid, this may also be a TILA violation.

[h] Security Interest Must Not Otherwise Be Prohibited

The UCC sets out minimum standards for a valid security interest. But certain interests meeting these minimum standards are not valid security interests because of the operation of other law--tate statutes, federal rules, case law, and even UCC Article 9. n42 Revised Article 9 is more explicit about its subordinate relationship to other laws, recognizing that applicable consumer laws and regulations also apply to transactions subject to Article 9, and that, if there is a conflict, other law controls. n43

[i] Perfection of Security Interest Is Not Necessary

A common misunderstanding concerns the relationship between a creditor's right to repossess and the requirement that a creditor perfect a security interest through a financing statement, motor vehicle certificate of title, or otherwise. Perfection of a security interest is necessary only if the secured party wants to protect itself against the claims of other creditors and retain its special status when the debtor files for bankruptcy.

Perfecting a security interest neither gives a creditor further rights against its debtor nor assists it in repossessing the collateral. In the normal case, whether a security interest is perfected has no bearing on the creditor's right to repossess. n44

Revised Article 9 contains new choice-of-law rules with respect to the law governing perfection and priority. Among these changes are:

- The revisions change the choice-of-law rule governing perfection for most collateral to the law of the jurisdiction where the debtor is located. n45

- A "registered organization" is considered located in the state under whose law the debtor is organized, e.g., a corporate debtor's state of incorporation. n46

- An individual debtor is located at his/her principal residence. n47

Revised Article 9 also enables states to move toward paperless filing systems, although it does not mandate such systems. n48

[3] Continued Enforceability After Security Interest Created

[a] Introduction

This section considers the continued enforceability of a security interest after the security interest is created, when the consumer transfers ownership of the collateral, the obligation is refinanced, the creditor assigns the security interest, or the consumer's obligation secured by the collateral has been extinguished.

[b] Secured Party's Interest in Proceeds of Collateral

Secured parties have a security interest in the proceeds of their collateral. Proceeds are whatever is received when collateral or proceeds from that collateral is sold, exchanged, or otherwise disposed. n49 Creditors do not have to specify in the security agreement that they are retaining an interest in proceeds. A securityinterest automatically "continues in any identifiable proceeds ... received by the debtor." n50 The secured party can only reach proceeds that are identifiable. n51

Upon default, creditors can repossess any replacement or substitute property that the debtor has exchanged for the secured property and any goods purchased from identifiable proceeds from the sale of the secured property.

The UCC specifically recognizes insurance payments on loss to collateral as proceeds if payable to a party to the security agreement. n52

[c] When Debtor Transfers Collateral to Third Party

[i] General

Creditors may agree that a consumer can transfer collateral to another party free and clear of the security interest, often in consideration of payment of all or part of the obligation. The creditor's authorization of the transfer terminates the creditor's security interest in the collateral, n53 although the creditor can obviously enter into a separate security agreement with the transferee.

Usually the security agreement will prohibit the debtor from transferring the collateral without the creditor's permission. Nevertheless, debtors may transfer secured property to third parties not realizing that they are breaching the security agreement. Other debtors faced with imminent repossession of their property may attempt to avoid seizure by transferring the property to a third party. The debtor, of course, will still owe the creditor on the obligation, but the creditor's leverage against the debtor will have diminished since there is no property to repossess.

The cash or property the debtor receives from the third-party transferee is "proceeds," which can be repossessed by the secured party, if those proceeds can be traced to the sale of the collateral.

[ii] Creditors With Unperfected Security Interests

Creditors with unperfected security interests are extremely vulnerable. A creditor with an unperfected security interest has rights subordinate to a buyer, even if the buyer is not in the ordinary course of business. n54

[iii] Creditors Whose Interests Are Automatically Perfected

When a creditor takes a purchase money security interest in consumer goods other than motor vehicles, the creditor's security interest is perfected automatically without the need for filing a financing statement. n55 Creditors with automatically perfected security interests have rights over all third-party transferees except buyers of consumer goods purchasing the goods without knowledge of the security interest, for value, and for the buyer's own personal, family, or household purposes. n56

Revised Article 9 lists various types of security interests as to which no public notice step is required for perfection. These security interests are perfected when they attach. n57

[iv] Perfection by Filing Financing Statement or Indicating Lien on Certificate of Title

A creditor that files a financing statement or fully complies with a state's motor vehicle certificate of title provisions has superior rights over all third-party transferees, assuming the creditor can find the collateral.

For items other than motor vehicles, creditors partially protected against third party transferees under an automatically perfected security interest can improve their priority over innocent consumer buyers by filing a financing statement to perfect their interest.

[d] Refinancing of Indebtedness

Many consumer credit transactions are refinanced. Case law is split on the issue of whether the old security agreement continues in force if a new security agreement drawn up at refinancing leaves out some collateral. n58

[e] Assignment of Security Agreement

Consumer credit agreements are often assigned. If the security agreement is not also properly assigned, the new creditor may not have the right to repossess.

[f] Where Underlying Obligation Is Extinguished

If the underlying obligation is extinguished, there is no security interest and there can be no repossession. If a security interest in consumer goods was perfected by a financing statement or a notation on the title, the 1999 revisions to Article 9 require the creditor to file a statement that the security interest is terminated within one month n59 after the obligation is extinguished by payment or otherwise. n60 Statutory damages of $500 are available for noncompliance. n61 The pre-1999 version of Article 9 was similar, but provided for only $100 statutory damages, required a quicker response by the creditor in some circumstances, and was less clear about whether it applied to security interest perfected by a notation on a certificate of title. n62 A consumer whose creditor wrongfully refuses to release a security interest may also have a UDAP claim or a common law claim of slander of title.

[4] Non-Purchase Money Security Interests

[a] General

Creditors taking these security interests rarely intend to enforce them, but only retain such collateral for the in terrorem effect and as an excuse to sell credit property insurance.

[b] FTC Rule Prohibits Non-Purchase Money Security Interests in Household Goods

[i] Introduction

The FTC's Trade Regulation Rule Concerning Credit Practices (and related federal rules) prohibits non-possessory, non-purchase money security interests in consumers' household goods. n63 The Rule has three important limitations.

- It does not apply to pawned items or other possessory security interests.
- It does not apply to purchase money security interests.
- It does not even apply to non-possessory, non-purchase money security interests in collateral other than household goods.

[ii] FTC Definition of Household Goods

[A] Items That Are Household Goods

The definition of household goods is critical to an understanding of the scope of the FTC Rule.

Household goods are defined in the FTC Rule as including clothing, furniture, appliances, linens, china, crockery, kitchenware, and "personal effects" of the consumer and the consumer's dependents. n64

[B] Limited Exceptions for Electronic Equipment, Jewelry, Antiques, and Art

The Rule explicitly excludes certain items from the definition of household goods. One radio and one television are considered household goods protected by the Rule, but the Rule does not prohibit a creditor from taking security interests in additional televisions or radios. n65 The Rule also excludes from the definition of household goods other types of "electronic entertainment equipment." n66 The FTC staff has interpreted this to exclude from the Rule's coverage VCRs, stereo equipment, tape players, home computers and computer equipment.

The Rule also explicitly excludes jewelry other than wedding rings, works of art and items acquired as antiques. n67

[C] Other Items That Are Not Household Goods

The FTC also excludes boats, snowmobiles, cameras, planes, and home workshops from the definition of household goods. Motor vehicles do not fall within the rule's definition of household goods. n68

[D] Comparison to Bankruptcy Code

A debtor in bankruptcy can avoid a non-possessory, non-purchase money security interest in household furnishings, household goods, wearing apparel, appliances, and certain other items held primarily for the personal, family, or household use of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor. n69 Until 2005, many bankruptcy courts declined to export the FTC's narrow definition of "household goods" into this lien avoidance provision. n70 As a result, a debtor who filedbankruptcy could free some items of personal property from security interests that the FTC Rule permitted.

Effective October 17, 2005, however, the Bankruptcy Code was amended to define "household goods" in a way nearly identical to the definition in the FTC Rule. n71 Some items that do not qualify as household goods under this narrowed definition may still qualify for lien avoidance as tools of the trade, books, musical instruments, or one of the other categories listed in the bankruptcy statute.

Bankruptcy law draws a distinction between non-purchase money security interests that are possessory and those that are non-possessory. n72 For example, a pawnbroker also takes a non-purchase money security interest in household goods, but this security interest is a possessory one. Automobile pawns, in which the lender usually does not take possession of the collateral, are discussed in § 10.02[5][e], infra.

[iii] Creditors Covered by the Rule

The FTC Rule applies to finance companies, credit unions, retailers, and other creditors within the FTC's jurisdiction. Though the FTC Rule does not apply to savings and loans and banks, the Office of Thrift Supervision and the Federal Reserve Board have adopted virtually the same rule for savings and loan institutions and all other banks, respectively. The FTC Rule also prohibits covered creditors from purchasing contracts containing the prohibited security interests. n73

The FTC Rule applies to lenders and also to "retail installment sellers," anyone who sells goods or services to consumers on a deferred payment basis or pursuant to a lease-purchase arrangement. n74

[iv] Remedies for FTC Rule Violations

Rule violations may lead to FTC enforcement actions. Courts consistently view that a security interest in violation of the FTC Rule is unenforceable. n75

[c] Other Restrictions on Non-Purchase Money Security Interests

Consumers in bankruptcy can avoid non-purchase money security interests in household goods to the extent that the property is otherwise exempt. A number of state laws provide various consumer protections concerning non-purchase money security interests. n76

[d] Unfairness, Unconscionability, and Related Challenges

Even if the FTC Credit Practices Rule and state law do not prohibit a non-purchase money security interest in the consumer items, the creditor's conduct may still be challenged as unfair, deceptive, unconscionable, or in bad faith.

[e] Does Description Adequately Identify Non-Purchase Money Collateral?

[i] Introduction

Unless the creditor describes in detail each item of collateral, the creditor risks invalidating its security interest for failing to identify the collateral.

[ii] Does Collateral Description Distinguish After-Acquired Property?

[A] The UCC Limitation on After-Acquired Property

The UCC does not permit creditors to enforce security interests in consumer goods where the goods are acquired more than ten days after the secured party gives value. n77

[B] Loan Collateral Must Be Distinguished From After-Acquired Property

If the blanket description is inadequate to distinguish after-acquired property, the security interest should not attach and should not be enforceable for any of the consumer goods, even for goods acquired before the security agreement.

[iii] Identification of Televisions, Radios, Musical Instruments, and Antiques

The FTC Credit Practices Rule prohibits non-purchase money interests in one television and one radio. To effectively take an interest, the creditor will have to identify the collateral to distinguish it from the consumer's other television or radio (similarly with musical instruments and antiques).

[iv] Distinguishing Between Debtor's Property and That Owned by Other Household Members

The agreement must still allow sheriffs and repossessors to distinguish collateral owned by the signatory from similar property owned by others in the household.

[f] Is Negative Equity Owed on Trade-In Vehicle Part of Purchase Money Obligation for New Vehicle?

[i] Introduction

An increasingly common question is whether an obligation that covers not only the price of a car but also the trade-in vehicle's negative equity qualifies as a purchase money obligation. This question is particularly important in the bankruptcy context, as the "hanging paragraph" of 11 U.S.C. § 1325(a) prohibits cram-down in certain circumstances in which the creditor has a purchase money security interest in a motor vehicle. If the negative equity portion of the debt does not qualify as a purchase money obligation, then the debtor can make use of the cram-down right for at least the negative equity portion, and possibly for the entire debt.

[ii] Is the Existence of a PMSI a State or Federal Law Question?

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the term "purchase money security interest" (PMSI). Most courts consider the definition for purposes of the Bankruptcy Code to be a question of state law. n78 However, one court has concluded that the question should be resolved as a matter of federal common law. n79

[iii] UCC Definition of PMSI

Assuming that state law applies, most courts start by referring to section 9-103 of the UCC, which defines "purchase-money obligation" as one "incurred as all or part of the price of the collateral or for value given to enable the debtor to acquire rights in or the use of the collateral if the value is in fact so used." n80

The terms "price of the collateral" and "value given to enable the debtor to acquire rights in the collateral" are not defined in the UCC itself. However, these terms are given further meaning by official comment 3, which states: "the 'price' of collateral or the 'value given to enable' includes obligations for expenses incurred in connection with acquiring rights in the collateral, sales taxes, duties, finance charges, interest, freight charges, costs of storage in transit, demurrage, administrative changes, expenses of collection and enforcement, attorney's fees, and other similar obligations" (emphasis added).

[iv] Courts Holding Negative Equity Is Not Part of Purchase Money Obligation

Many courts have applied the UCC definitions to hold that the negative equity in the trade-in vehicle is neither part of the "price" of the new vehicle nor "value given to enable the debtor to acquire rights" in it. n81 These courts note that negative equity is not one of the enumerated items in the official comment and is not similar to any of those items. Because negative equity is so commonly financed in vehicle sales, it would be odd for the drafters not to have mentioned it if they had intended to include it. n82

[v] Courts Holding Negative Equity Is Part of Purchase Money Obligation

Despite all this authority, other courts have found ways to hold that the negative equity in a trade-in vehicle is part of the price of the new vehicle. Some of these courts hold that negative equity meets the UCC definition of "purchase money obligation" because it is an integral part of the sales transaction or is part of the value that enables the debtor to acquire rights in the collateral. n83 Others have relied on a broad definition of purchase price in the state installment sales law. n84 However, the UCC should be construed in pari materia with other state statutes only if they concern the same subject matter, relate to the same person or class of persons, or have the same object or purpose. n85 Non-UCC state statutes may not meet these criteria. n86

[vi] Consequences If Negative Equity Is Not Part of Purchase Money Obligation: The Transformation Rule Versus the Dual Status Rule

If the court concludes that the negative equity portion of the obligation is not a purchase money obligation, the next question is what effect does that have on the applicability of the hanging paragraph. Some courts have held that the Bankruptcy Code itself requires the entire obligation to be non-PMSI in order for the debtor to be denied the right of cram-down. n87 This conclusion is consistent with the rule that an exception to an otherwise general rule, such as that created by the hanging paragraph, should be construed narrowly. n88 In addition, the hanging paragraph does not include the language "to the extent" that is found in other parts of the Bankruptcy Code, and allows cram-down to be denied only if a purchase money security interest secures "the debt," rather than "any part of the debt." n89

Other courts, though, have looked to whether state law adopts the "transformation" rule or the "dual status" rule. Courts applying the transformation rule to consumer transactions typically determine that the entire loan amount lacks purchase money status when a portion of the loan is not purchase money. n90 States applying the dual purpose rule hold that the purchase money portion of an obligation retains its purchase money status even though another portion of the obligation is not purchase money. n91

The UCC adopts the dual status rule for transactions other than consumer-goods transactions, but explicitly disclaims any intention to establish a rule for consumer-goods transactions. n92 However Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Maryland, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota adopted non-uniform amendments applying the dual status rule to consumer-goods transactions as well.

[5] Automobiles and Mobile Homes as Collateral

[a] Introduction

Automobiles, mobile homes, and related vehicles are the most important forms of personal property collateral in consumer loans.

[b] Minimum Requirements for Creation of Security Interests in Cars and Mobile Homes

Merely indicating a lien on the certificate of title does not create the security interest. n93 For either the title or the title application to create a security interest, the document must meet all the requirements of a security interest -- the consumer must grant the interest in writing, describe the collateral, and sign the writing. In some states, statutes provide that no court shall recognize the right, title, claim, or interest of any person in or to any motor vehicle or mobile home sold, disposed of, mortgaged, or encumbered, unless evidenced by the certificate of title. n94 In these states, there may be an argument that the failure of a creditor to indicate its name on the title as a lienholder not only means that the security interest is unperfected but also means that there is no security interest.

[c] Security Interests in Property Added to the Vehicle or Mobile Home

[i] Property Pre-Dating the Security Agreement

In general, when a loan is used to purchase not only the vehicle or home, but also additional items to be attached to the vehicle or home, the creditor can take a security interest in all of that property simply by adequately identifying it in the security agreement.

On the other hand, if the security agreement does not adequately identify all the items, then the creditor loses its interest in items not described, even if the interest would have been a purchase money interest.

[ii] Property Added After the Security Agreement Is Signed (Accessions)

Creditors can take a security interest in accessions (goods installed or affixed to other goods) even in consumer transactions and even if such property is acquired after the security agreement, if the security agreement specifically mentions accessions.

[d] Insurance Proceeds and Trade-Ins

Secured parties automatically have a security interest in any proceeds from the collateral. Consequently, when a consumer trades in a car or mobile home, the creditor with a security interest in the trade-in retains its security interest in the new vehicle or home.

[e] Auto Pawns

If an "auto pawn" actually transfers possession of the vehicle to the creditor, then a valid security agreement has been created as long as the transfer was pursuant to an agreement. If the lender does not have actual possession, then the lender must comply with UCC requirements on the creation of a valid security agreement. n95

Sometimes, an automobile dealer delivers the car to the consumer but keeps the certificate of title in the dealership's name. Who owns the car in this situation? Whether title to a car transfers upon its delivery to a buyer raises issues under both the state's Certificate of Title statute and UCC section 2-401 (Passing of Title; Reservation for Security).

Every state has a statute that provides for the transfer of a vehicle's certificate of title upon sale by a seller to a purchaser. The statutes of some states merely provide that the seller shall execute an assignment on the certificate of title to the transferee and deliver it at the time of delivery of the vehicle, without providing consequences for the failure to so deliver the certificate. n96 "Strict-title" states, however, have certificate of title statutes that provide that a sale without transfer of the certificate of title is ineffective or void. n97 Still other states have statutes that fall in between, providing that notwithstanding the failure to comply, the transfer is still good "as between the parties," but void otherwise, establishing the equivalent of a requirement for perfection of the security interest. n98 If the certificate of title statute does not dictate a conclusion about who owns the item, the rules of UCC section 2-401 may determine the issue.

If the transaction is not voided by a "strict title" statute, and under the rules of section 2-401 title has passed to the buyer, then the most the dealer can claim is a security interest in the car, notwithstanding that it retained the car's title.

Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Kentucky, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, New Hampshire, Ohio, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, and Utah have special auto title pawn laws, n99 but none of these statutes contains any specific exemption from Article 9, and the statutes of six states specifically say that Article 9 applies. n100 Florida's law, while not making a blanket exemption from Article 9 for title pawn transactions, provides that the title pawn law controls in the event of a conflict with Article 9. n101

[6] Credit Card Issuer's Interest in Goods Purchased With Card

[a] Introduction

Bank and other third party credit card issuers (e.g., VISA, MasterCard, Discover, American Express, Diners) do not take security interests in the property purchased with the card. But some merchants, particularly sellers of consumer hard goods and electronics, issue store credit cards that attempt to take security interests in items purchased with the card. Examples are Sears and Radio Shack.

From the outset, the card issuer views the security interest as leverage in the event that the debtor runs into problems making payments.

Nevertheless, the FTC Rule does not apply to credit card purchases.

[b] Is There a Valid Security Agreement?

[i] UCC Requirements

The debtor must sign a security agreement granting the security interest. Creditors can use the charge slip to try to create a security agreement, as long as the consumer signs the slip, and the slip adequately identifies the collateral and specifically grants the security interest.

[ii] Can the Store Produce the Necessary Records?

In many cases, the store will not have records of the credit contract or the signed sales slip; they will be missing, illegible, or unintelligible as to the items purchased.

[c] Is the Collateral Adequately Described?

The creditor must identify the collateral being taken so that repossessors, sheriffs, and others know which property to seize and which to leave alone. n102

[d] Determining Which Collateral Is Paid Off First

Card issuers seeking security interests in the property being purchased must be able to identify which items have been paid in full (thus extinguishing the security interest in those items). The card issuer will have to specify in the security agreement the method of allocating the consumer's payments to various items purchased, this method must comply with state law, and the merchant must, in fact, have records reflecting its compliance with this method.

[e] State Laws Prohibiting Credit Card Security Interests

Security interests in store credit card purchases may be limited or prohibited by state law that limits the enforcement of such interests. For example, New York prohibits security interests in any item purchased for less than $200. n103

In addition, federal and state laws that prohibit collectors from threatening actions they do not intend to take may come into play here.

[7] Series of Purchases From the Same Merchant

[a] Introduction

Merchants attempt to extend their interest to all items purchased from that merchant through use of cross-collateral clauses (that take as security property previously purchased from that merchant), by consolidating the series of loans into one loan retaining all the collateral previously taken by individual loans, or by applying consumer payments on a pro rata basis to all outstanding loans (instead of applying payments in the order of purchase).

[b] Cross-Collateral Clauses

Such a clause states that the present credit-sale obligation is secured not only by the item being purchased, but also by any other item purchased from the same merchant in the past.

To take cross-collateral, the merchant has to properly draft the security agreement and be specific enough. The cross-collateral clause also runs into trouble with the FTC Credit Practices Rule to the extent that any of the earlier purchased goods fall within the Rule's definition of household goods. State retail installment sales acts may limit a merchant's security interest to the product being purchased, effectively prohibiting cross-collateral clauses. Some laws require that consumer payments be applied to the first item purchased, and that the security interest be extinguished once that item is paid off. This is the approach taken by the UCCC. Courts may find the provision unconscionable or unenforceable

[c] Loan Consolidations

Merchants can avoid the FTC Credit Practices Rule's restriction on cross-collateral clauses, while achieving the same result, by consolidating several different credit sales into one loan secured by all of the items purchased. The FTC Rule does not prohibit cross-collateral if the collateral is taken in a refinancing or consolidation of the original purchase money transaction.

Nevertheless, for the merchant to consolidate various consumer loans, the merchant must have authority to do this under state law. Consolidations also cannot take security interests in prior purchases that have already been paid off. Taking such paid-off purchases as security should run afoul of the FTC Credit Practices Rule.

Furthermore, some state laws specify that even when loans are consolidated, the security on the first-purchased items be released after that purchase has been repaid under a FIFO formula.

[d] Methods of Allocating Consumer Payments to Multiple Purchases

Pro rata application of payments also has the same effect as an after-acquired property clause. The leading case disapproving the pro rata payment method is Williams v. Walker-Thomas Furniture Co. n104

[8] Refinancings and Consolidations

[a] Introduction

Finance companies and other lenders often refinance or consolidate consumer obligations. The lender may attempt to retain security from an earlier loan as security for the loan that refinances or consolidates that earlier loan.

[b] Article 9 Requirements to Preserve Prior Collateral in a Refinancing

[i] Does the Security Interest Survive Automatically?

Courts generally find that a "renewal" of a loan automatically keeps preexisting collateral as security for the new loan, even if the security is not mentioned in the new loan.

On the other hand, a "novation," whereby the old loan is extinguished and a new loan created, does not automatically retain prior collateral. In that case, the old security interest is extinguished, and the only collateral for the new loan is that which is created pursuant to a new security agreement in conjunction with the new loan.

Unfortunately, there are no uniform standards to determine in a close case whether a loan is a renewal or a novation.

Assuming that a refinancing is treated as a novation, and not a renewal, the prior security interest is not automatically extended. Instead, the refinancing must include a new signed security agreement identifying the collateral.

[c] FTC Credit Practices Rule Generally Inapplicable

Purchase money interests in household goods are allowed, and the FTC finds that a refinancing or consolidation of a prior purchase money interest continues this purchase money interest for purposes of the FTC Rule, even if the refinancing extends new credit or consolidates additional loans.

State law restrictions on non-purchase money security interests could also apply.

[9] Future Advance and Antecedent Debt Clauses

[a] General

Future advance clauses, also known as dragnet or anaconda n105 clauses, allow creditors to continue their security interest not only in the present loan, but in future loans between that creditor and that debtor, even though the future loan does not explicitly grant the security interest. The clause in the first loan states that the collateral in that loan also secures any future indebtedness between the lender and the consumer.

Another variant is the preexisting or antecedent debt clause, where the loan states that its collateral secures not only that loan, but any earlier loan betweenthe lender and the consumer, even if that earlier loan had been unsecured. The courts, the FTC Credit Practices Rule, and other law severely restrict the use of future advance and antecedent debt clauses in consumer transactions.

When future advances or antecedent debts take household goods as security, these are non-possessory, non-purchase money security interests violating the FTC Credit Practices Rule.

There are also Truth in Lending implications when lenders use future advance clauses in one loan. Subsequent loans with that lender must disclose under Truth in Lending that collateral securing the first indebtedness also secures that subsequent loan.

The 1999 revisions to Article 9 make no substantive changes in the language of Section 9-204 that authorizes future advance clauses. n106 Nonetheless, one of the comments states: "This Article rejects the holdings of cases decided under former Article 9 that applied other tests, such as whether a future advance clause or other subsequently incurred obligation was of the same or a similar type or class as earlier advances and obligations secured by the collateral." n107 In similar situations, courts have disregarded comments that are at variance with the language of the Code. n108 But even the test that the comment espouses -- "construing the parties' agreement under applicable law" -- is broad enough to include the factors courts have used in the past, including the parties' intent, whether the transactions are related, and whether the secured party relied on the collateral in issuing the otherwise unsecured loan. "Agreement" is defined as "the bargain of the parties in fact as found in their language or by implication from other circumstances including course of dealing or use of trade or course of performance. ..." (emphasis added). n109

[b] Judicial Reluctance to Enforce Future Advance Clauses

Despite the UCC's seeming validation of future advance clauses, some courts are reluctant to enforce such provisions. Many courts will, however, enforce these clauses provided that the terms are clear and unambiguous. n110 Courts are likely to show a similar reluctance to enforce antecedent or preexisting debt clauses, and will only do so where the preexisting debt is explicitly identified. The First Circuit has relied on the new Official Comment to hold, in a case involving sophisticated commercial entities, that a dragnet clause was valid regardless of whether it was restricted to advances of the same type as the original advance. n111

Some courts have held that a subsequent extension of credit constitutes a novation of the original debt, thereby extinguishing any future advance clause in the original loan. n112 Courts will look to the intent of the parties to determine if the new loan constituted a novation. Absent some explicit language or other showing of intent, most courts have been reluctant to find that a new extension of credit constitutes a novation. n113 Antecedent debt clauses may also be inapplicable if the subsequent loan involves different parties than the antecedent debt. In one case a court found that an antecedent debt clause in a note and security agreement signed by three co-makers did not secure the prior individual debt of one of the co-makers. n114

[c] Status of Negative Equity Trade-In as Antecedent Debt Rather Than Purchase Money Security Interest

Courts attempting to determine the purchase money status of loans that include negative equity in a trade-in vehicle often look to the state's version of Article 9 or other state law. The critical question is typically whether the state applies the dual purpose rule or the transformation rule to consumer transactions. States applying the transformation rule to consumer transactions often determine that the entire loan amount lacks purchase money status when a portion of the loan covers negative equity in a vehicle the consumer previously owned. n115 States applying the dual purpose rule have found that borrowing an amount in excess of the cash price of the new car in order to pay off the negative equity on the trade-in is not a requirement to gain a legal interest in the new vehicle but rather an accommodation on the part of the lender, and that therefore only the cash price portion is eligible for purchase money status. n116 Such courts have found that the money lent to pay off the trade-in is actually an antecedent debt. Some courts have looked to other state law in making this determination. n117 This determination can be especially important in the bankruptcy context.

[10] Consumer Remedies

[a] Remedies for Mere Inclusion of Invalid Security

[i] Introduction

The mere inclusion of an invalid security interest in the loan agreement can lead to significant consumer remedies even if the lender never enforces the invalid interest and never even threatens to enforce the interest.

[ii] Sale of Credit Property Insurance on Invalid Collateral

Lenders normally require consumers to purchase credit property insurance to protect the collateral, insurance the consumer would not purchase otherwise. This requirement can lead to significant violations of federal and state law where the lender requires that insurance be purchased on property that is not in fact collateral, including specific state insurance laws.

[iii] Unnecessary Filing Fees or Nonfiling Insurance

The mere inclusion of an invalid security interest also leads to the consumer being charged for unnecessary filing fees or nonfiling insurance. The practice may violate state credit legislation and state deceptive practices statutes.

[iv] Overinclusive Description of Collateral

Identification, in the security agreement and other loan documents, of a security interest that is in fact invalid may also lead to violation of federal and state laws concerned with accurate disclosures to consumers. Many of these statutes provide for minimum statutory damages and attorney fees even where actual damages are not proved.

[b] Remedies for Threats to Enforce an Invalid Security Interest

Where a lender threatens to enforce a security interest that is in fact invalid, the consumer has two types of remedies. The first is for the mere inclusion of the invalid interest in the loan documents. The second is for the false threat.

The threat to enforce a security interest that is in fact invalid and unenforceable violates several laws: the Federal FDCPA, state debt collection laws, and state deceptive practices statutes.

[c] Remedies for Enforcement of Invalid Security Interests

A valid security interest in secured property is a prerequisite to the seller's repossession of that property. When the security interest has not attached or is unenforceable, repossession is unlawful. The UCC provides the debtor with a number of remedies against the creditor who repossesses without a valid security interest, including restraining orders and damages.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionEnforcement

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Revised U.C.C. § 9-609 [former U.C.C. § 9-503] authorizes the seizure of collateral which is defined in Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(12) [former U.C.C. § 9-105(c)] as property subject to a security interest.

(n2)Footnote 2. Revised U.C.C. § 9-203(b) [former U.C.C. § 9-203(1)].

(n3)Footnote 3. Revised U.C.C. § 9-109(c) [former U.C.C. § 9-201].

(n4)Footnote 4. Revised U.C.C. § 9-109(d)(2) [former U.C.C. §§ 9-102(2), 9-109(c)].

(n5)Footnote 5. Revised U.C.C. § 9-109(d)(11) [former U.C.C. § 9-104(j)]. Munson v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 67 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 692 (E.D. Mich. 2008) (Article 9 does not govern sales of foreclosed real property). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Foreclosures Appx. C (2d ed. 2007 and Supp.).

(n6)Footnote 6. See, e.g., Sgro v. Getty Petroleum Corp., 854 F. Supp. 1164, 1174 (D.N.J. 1994) , aff'd per curiam, 96 F.3d 1434 (3d Cir. 1996) ; Pagliai v. Del Re, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2195 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 7, 2001) (defining elements of bailment; finding that gallery owner was bailee of plaintiff's painting), aff'd as modified, 34 Fed. Appx. 36 (2d Cir. 2002) ; Kormi v. Kormi, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3402 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 17, 1998) (elements); see 8A Am. Jur. 2d Bailments (1997).

(n7)Footnote 7. Uni-Products, Inc. v. Bearse, 153 B.R. 764, 767 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1993) (where no evidence that seller delivered the property to the debtor for any reason other than because the seller had sold it to the debtor, no issue for trial as to bailment); see 8 Am. Jur. 2d Bailments § 39 (1980) ("[a] conditional sale imports an absolute obligation on the part of the purchaser to pay the purchase price, while a bailee may relieve himself of further liability by surrender of the property, and in a bailment for hire by payment for use of the thing let or bailed").

(n8)Footnote 8. Former U.C.C. § 9-102, Official Comment 1. Revised Article 9 deleted this language as superfluous, butthe Official Comments state that no change in meaning was intended. Official Comment 2 to Revised U.C.C. § 9-109. See Greene v. Assocs. (In re Greene), 248 B.R. 583 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 2000) ; Uni-Products, Inc. v. Bearse, 153 B.R. 764 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1993) (even if characterized as a bailment, U.C.C. Article 9 controlled when seller's purpose was to retain a security interest); Tilghman Hardware v. Larrimore, 331 Md. 390, 628 A.2d 215 (1993) (Article 9 applies to a bailment used as a security device); Industrial Valley Bank & Trust Co. v. Nash, 349 Pa. Super. 27, 502 A.2d 1254 (1985) (U.C.C. Article 9, not just Motor Vehicle Sales Finance Act, applied to repossession of automobile). In contrast, a true bailment is one where the bailee takes possession of the property expecting to either return it to the bailor or to dispose of it pursuant to the bailor's instructions. See, e.g., Sgro v. Getty Petroleum Corp., 854 F. Supp. 1164 (D.N.J. 1994) , aff'd per curiam, 96 F.3d 1434 (3d Cir. 1996) (defendant petroleum company loaned tanks and related equipment to plaintiff for the purpose of storing, handling and dispensing defendant's products; agreement specified that the equipment would permanently remain the property of the defendant).

(n9)Footnote 9. Uni-Products, Inc. v. Bearse, 153 B.R. 764, 767 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1993) ; Cox Motor Co. v. Faber, 113 So. 2d 771, 773 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1959) (though sales contract for car stated that no "right, title or interest" in the vehicle would pass to the buyer until either the purchase price had been paid in full or a satisfactory financing agreement had been made, transaction was a conditional sale, not a bailment, even though it contemplated the execution of another contract to secure payment of the purchase price; stated language referred only to passage of legal title, not a beneficial interest, to the buyer). But see Peak v. Ted Russell Enters., Inc., 2000 Tenn. App. LEXIS 120 (Tenn. Ct. App. Feb. 28, 2000) (bailment arose when plaintiffs signed a contract to purchase truck from defendant dealer conditioned upon approval of financing and dealer repossessed truck upon inability to find financing under the original terms contracted for; because the contract stated that defendant dealer retained ownership until the transaction was completed, no security interest arose and U.C.C. did not apply).

(n10)Footnote 10. Revised U.C.C. § 9-104(a)(4).

(n11)Footnote 11. Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(20)(c). Cf. Tabar v. Charlie's Towing Serv., Inc., 97 Ohio App. 3d 423, 646 N.E.2d 1132 (1994) (list of elements of bailment; no implied bailment where parties were not in privity).

(n12)Footnote 12. Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(23).

(n13)Footnote 13. U.C.C. § 9-203(b).

(n14)Footnote 14. Revised U.C.C. § 9-203(b)(3)(A).

(n15)Footnote 15. Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(7)(B), (a)(69) (definitions of "authenticate" and "record").

(n16)Footnote 16. In re Miller, 320 B.R. 911, 56 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 499 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2005) .

(n17)Footnote 17. Expeditors Int'l v. Official Creditors Comm. of CFLC, Inc. (In re CFLC, Inc.), 166 F.3d 1012 (9th Cir. 1999) , aff'g 209 B.R. 508 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1997) . See Lashua v. La Duke, 272 A.D.2d 750, 707 N.Y.S.2d 542, 41 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 930 (2000) (signed financing statement met all requirements for security agreement); In re Stevens Point Associated, Inc., 1991 WL 11002287 (Bankr. W.D. Wis. Dec. 24, 1991) (document saying that title remained in seller did not create security interest in favor of auction, nor did language "this vehicle subject to a lien"); Empresas Berrios v. Ortiz, 295 B.R. 158 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2003) (decided under comparable provisions of Puerto Rico law); In re Sabol, 337 B.R. 195, 58 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 756 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2006) (unsigned financing statement that was not presented to debtor at closing is insufficient). In re Schwalb, 347 B.R. 726, 742, 60 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 755 (D. Nev. 2006) ("you are giving a security interest in [the vehicle]" is sufficient); see also In re Verus Inv. Mgmt., L.L.C., 344 B.R. 536, 60 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 60 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2006) (construing real estate lease as creating security interest in security deposit). Ariza v. Long, 65 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 147 (Tex. App. 2008) (letter to former roommate, stating that he could keep household goods as collateral for debt, was security agreement); Flager, 63 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 22 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 2007) (construing promissory note, which did not mention any collateral, along with title application, which listed lender as lienholder, and concluding that they created security agreement).

(n18)Footnote 18. 15 U.S.C. § 1638(a)(9); see generally Ch. 1, "Truth in Lending," §§ 1.05, 1.07 supra .

(n19)Footnote 19. U.C.C. § 9-203(b) [former U.C.C. § 9-203(1)(a)]; cf. Falconbridge U.S., Inc. v. Bank One Ill., 227 F.3d 928 (7th Cir. 2000) (under Illinois law, creditor need not sign security agreement when creditor "indicated acceptance through performance"). Tyler v. Rapid Cash, L.L.C., 930 So. 2d 1135 (La. Ct. App. 2006) (title pawn lender had no security interest when transaction was structured as a sale of the collateral with a side agreement that the debtor could repurchase it, and debtor never signed a security agreement).

(n20)Footnote 20. U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(7) (definition of authenticate); Official Comment 9(b) to U.C.C. § 9-102.

(n21)Footnote 21. Revised U.C.C. § 9-203, Official Comment 3.

(n22)Footnote 22. Former U.C.C. § 1-201(39).

(n23)Footnote 23. Revised U.C.C. § 9-203(b)(3)(A); see Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(7) (definition of "authenticate").

(n24)Footnote 24. Cargill Inc. v. Trico Steel Co. (In re Trico Steel Co.), 282 B.R. 318, 48 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1004 (Bankr. D. Del. 2002) (buyer of goods that had not yet been delivered did not have sufficient rights to grant security interest); South Main St. v. CMB Assocs., 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 601 (Conn. Super. Ct. 2002) (security interest in all personal property of tenant at the leased premises did not attach until tenant acquired personal property); Conister Trust Ltd. v. Boating Corp., 2002 Tenn. App. LEXIS 183 (Tenn. Ct. App. Mar. 14, 2002) (buyer who has merely ordered goods does not have sufficient rights to give security interest); Arcadia Fin., Ltd. v. Southwest-Tex Leasing Co., 78 S.W.3d 619, 47 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1371 (Tex. App. 2002) (when sale from wholesaler to retailer was not complete, retailer had no rights in the property and could not grant security interest).

(n25)Footnote 25. In re Hein, 20 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 745 (Bankr. W.D. Wis. 1976) . See also In re Hillman, 94 B.R. 18, 7 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 907 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1988) (no security interest where blanks never filled in); In re Kane, 20 B.R. 700, 34 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 702 (Bankr. D.S.C. 1982) .

(n26)Footnote 26. Revised U.C.C. § 9-203(b)(1) [former U.C.C. § 9-203(1)(b)].

(n27)Footnote 27. In re Blackerby, 53 B.R. 649, 42 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1033 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1985) .

(n28)Footnote 28. Revised U.C.C. § 9-203(b)(2) [former U.C.C. § 9-203(1)(c)]; Rohweder v. Aberdeen Prod. Credit Ass'n, 765 F.2d 109 (8th Cir. 1985) (mere possession of the collateral insufficient to give debtor sufficient rights in the collateral); Cantor v. Anderson, 639 F. Supp. 364 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) ; Dzikowski v. Stoeppelwerth (In re Boca Arena, Inc.), 237 B.R. 221, 39 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 901 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1999) (individual did not have "rights to collateral" when shares were held by individual in constructive trust for a corporation which did not consent to their use as collateral); In re Atlantic Marble, Inc., 126 B.R. 463, 16 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 528 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1991) (property debtor is holding belongs to another company); Chartered Bank of London v. Chrysler Corp., 115 Cal. App. 3d 755, 171 Cal. Rptr. 748, 30 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1438 (1981) ; Milledgeville Cmty. Credit Union v. Corn, 307 Ill. App. 3d 8, 716 N.E.2d 864, 39 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 929 (1999) (no security interest created because car dealer did not own car). Matrix IV, Inc. v. Am. Nat'l Bank & Trust (In re S. M. Acquisition Co.), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7485, 53 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d (CBC) 665 (N.D. Ill. 2004) (control of property insufficient); Fifth Third Bank v. Comark, Inc., 51 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 533 (Ind. Ct. App. 2003) (debtor had no rights in collateral that belonged to sister corporation); In re SHC, Inc., 329 B.R. 438, 58 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 573 (Bankr. D. Del. 2005) (when a third party overpaid debtor's tax debt, debtor could not grant security interest in refund that was owed).

(n29)Footnote 29. Jerke Constr., Inc. v. Home Fed. Sav. Bank, 693 N.W.2d 59, 56 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 125 (S.D. 2005) . Manheim Auto. Fin. Services, Inc. v. Guthrie, 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 230 (D. Kan. 2007) (question of fact whether debtor had rights in cars when certificates of title were in his name but he had bought them with post-dated checks and agreed with seller that sale was conditional upon payment).

(n30)Footnote 30. Revised U.C.C. § 9-203(b)(3)(A) [former U.C.C. § 9-203(1)(a)]. See In re Stout, 284 B.R. 511, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 626 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2002) (security interest in crops unenforceable when agreement did not identify the land where they were growing, as required by former U.C.C. § 9-203(1)(a)).

(n31)Footnote 31. In re LMJ, Inc., 159 B.R. 926, 22 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 343 (D. Nev. 1993) (all "personal property" at leased premises insufficient description for financing statement under U.C.C. § 9-402(1)).

(n32)Footnote 32. U.C.C. § 9-108(b)(3).

(n33)Footnote 33. See U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(13), (33), (48).

(n34)Footnote 34. See Official Comment 5 to U.C.C. § 9-108.

(n35)Footnote 35. Revised U.C.C. § 9-108(e)(2). See In re Shirel, 251 B.R. 157 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 2000) ("all merchandise" insufficient); Bank of Am. v. Case Credit Corp. (In re K & P Logging, Inc.), 272 B.R. 867, 47 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 731 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2001) ("equipment" a sufficient description in commercial case). See also In re Pickle Logging, Inc., 286 B.R. 181, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 971 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 2002) (inaccurate serial number defeats security interest unless there is other information that provides a key to the identity of the collateral).

(n36)Footnote 36. In re Softalk Publ'g Co., 856 F.2d 1328 (6th Cir. 1988) (security agreement must be more explicit). But see In re Batsell, 62 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 270 (Bankr. D. Or. 2007) (construing security agreement, contract, and financing statement together when description of collateral on security agreement was left blank); In re ACRO Bus. Fin. Corp., 357 B.R. 785, 61 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 619 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2006) (court may refer to extrinsic evidence if security agreement is ambiguous).

(n37)Footnote 37. In re Martin Grinding & Mach. Works, Inc., 793 F.2d 592 (7th Cir. 1986) ; Fulton State Bank v. Deutz-Allis Credit Corp., 701 F. Supp. 151 (N.D. Ill. 1988) ; General Motors Acceptance Corp. v. First Nat'l Bank, 139 B.R. 919, 16 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 892 (Bankr. D. Neb. 1991) ; In re Door Supply Ctr., Inc., 3 B.R. 103, 29 U.C.C Rep.

318 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1980) ; Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Staggs, 117 Ill. App. 3d 428, 453 N.E.2d 145, 37 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 262 (1983) ; C & H Farm Serv. Co. v. Farmers Sav. Bank, 449 N.W.2d 866, 10 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 528 (Iowa 1989) (description of land in financing statement can not cure lack thereof in security agreement); Dowell v. D.R. Kincaid Chair Co., 481 S.E.2d 670 (N.C. Ct. App. 1997) ; Landen v. Production Credit Ass'n, 737 P.2d 1325, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 240 (Wyo. 1987) .

(n38)Footnote 38. 718 Arch St. Assocs., Ltd. v. Blatstein (In re Blatstein), 39 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 896 (E.D. Pa. 1999) . But see Dickason v. Marine Nat'l Bank, 898 So. 2d 1170 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2005) (when security agreement incorporated financing statement by reference, broader description of collateral in financing statement was effective).

(n39)Footnote 39. In re Invenux, Inc., 298 B.R. 442 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2003) .

(n40)Footnote 40. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1601 et seq. The TILA is reprinted in Vol. 1A infra.

(n41)Footnote 41. 15 U.S.C. § 1632(a); 12 C.F.R. § 226.5(a)(1) (open-end); 12 C.F.R. § 226.17(a)(1) (closed-end).

(n42)Footnote 42. See U.C.C. § 9-201.

(n43)Footnote 43. Revised U.C.C. § 9-201(b), (c); see also Revised U.C.C. § 9-201, Official Comment 3.

(n44)Footnote 44. Anderson v. First Jacksonville Bank, 243 Ark. 977, 423 S.W.2d 273, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1071 (1968) ; Bank of Am. N.T.S.A. v. Denver Hotel Ass'n P'ship, 830 P.2d 1138, 19 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 289 (Colo. Ct. App. 1992) ; First Galesburg Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Martin, 58 Ill. App. 3d 113, 373 N.E.2d 1075, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1328 (1978) ; Kansas State Bank v. Overseas Motosport, Inc., 1 Kan. 2d 22, 563 P.2d 414, 21 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1451 (1977) ; Roberge v. Bankers Trust Co., 85 A.D.2d 8, 446 N.Y.S.2d 443, 32 U.C.C Rep. Serv. 1303 (1981) .

(n45)Footnote 45. Revised U.C.C. § 9-301.

(n46)Footnote 46. Revised U.C.C. § 9-307. Additional changes governing perfection of security interests and agricultural liens are found in §§ 9-308 through 9-316 of Revised Article 9.

(n47)Footnote 47. Revised U.C.C. § 9-307.

(n48)Footnote 48. Revised U.C.C. § 9-516(b); Official Comment 9(a) to Revised U.C.C. § 9-102.

(n49)Footnote 49. Revised U.C.C. § 9-315 [former U.C.C. § 9-306(1)]. This generally includes the proceeds of involuntary dispositions, as well.

(n50)Footnote 50. Revised U.C.C. § 9-315 [former U.C.C. § 9-306(2)]; see In re Brantley, 286 B.R. 918, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 976 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2002) . Cf. Ferris, Baker Watts, Inc. v. Stephenson (In re MJK Clearing, Inc.), 286 B.R. 109, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 11 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2002) (applying "lowest intermediate balance rule" but finding proceeds untraceable), aff'd, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5954 (D. Minn. Apr. 7, 2003) , aff'd, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 11302 (8th Cir. June 9, 2004) .

(n51)Footnote 51. Van Diest Supply Co. v. Shelby County State Bank, 425 F.3d 437 (7th Cir. 2005) (secured party could not reach proceeds of sale of collateral that debtor had commingled with other inventory, when there were no records showing the proportion that was collateral).

(n52)Footnote 52. Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(64)(E) [former U.C.C. § 9-306(1)].

(n53)Footnote 53. Revised U.C.C. § 9-315(a)(1) [former U.C.C. § 9-306(2)]. See also Ronald V. Odette Family Ltd. P'ship v. AGCO Fin., Inc., 58 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 206 (Kan. Ct. App. 2005) . But cf. Smith v. PACCAR Fin. Corp., 2007 Minn. App. Unpub. LEXIS 1216 (Minn. Ct. App. 2007) (creditor's perfected security interest in vehicle survived sale when creditor did not expressly agree to sale and debtor did not comply with creditor's requirements for sale).

(n54)Footnote 54. Revised U.C.C. § 9-317 [former U.C.C. § 9-301(1)(c)].

(n55)Footnote 55. Revised U.C.C. § 9-309(1) [former U.C.C. § 9-302(1)(d)].

(n56)Footnote 56. Revised U.C.C. § 9-103 [former U.C.C. § 9-307(2)].

(n57)Footnote 57. Revised U.C.C. § 9-309.

(n58)Footnote 58. See In re Cantrill Constr. Co., 418 F.2d 705 (6th Cir. 1969) (a new note refinancing the old note is still secured by the same property), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 990, 90 S. Ct. 1124, 25 L. Ed. 2d 398 (1970) ; In re Thayer, 38 B.R. 412, 38 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 606 (1984) , later proceeding, 47 B.R. 90 (Bankr. D. Vt. 1985) ; In re Gibson, 16 B.R. 257, 33 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 77 (Bankr. D. Kan. 1981) ; State Bank of Young Am. v. Vidmar Iron Works, Inc., 292 N.W.2d 244, 28 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1133 (Minn. 1980) ; First Dakota Nat'l Bank v. Maxon, 534 N.W.2d 37, 28 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 921 (S.D. 1995) (two comakers on note not relieved of obligations by third comakers' execution of renewal note). But see Safe Dep. Bank & Trust Co. v. Berman, 393 F.2d 401 (1st Cir. 1968) (security for the initial note is not incorporated into subsequent notes if the first note is marked paid, even though subsequent notes are just refinancing the old note); In re Tardy, 18 B.R. 36, 33 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1124 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1982) ; Smith v. Akers, 13 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 255 (Va. Cir. Ct. 1990) ; see also Hansford v. Burns, 526 S.E.2d 896, 40 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 592 (Ga. Ct. App. 1999) . In re D & K Aviation, Inc., 349 B.R. 169 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2006) (noting Ohio presumption that renewal is intended when parties execute new note; question of fact here whether presumption rebutted).

(n59)Footnote 59. The time for the secured party to respond may be shorter if the debtor sends an authenticated demand. Revised U.C.C. § 9-513(b)(2).

(n60)Footnote 60. Revised U.C.C. § 9-513(a), (b). See also Revised U.C.C. § 9-513, Official Comment 2 (requirement applies to certificate of title unless superseded by a specific state law).

(n61)Footnote 61. Revised U.C.C. § 9-625(e)(4). Note, however, that some states have adopted non-uniform amendments to this provision.

(n62)Footnote 62. Revised U.C.C. § 9-404.

(n63)Footnote 63. 16 C.F.R. § 444.2(a)(4). The Rule was upheld in American Fin. Servs. Ass'n v. FTC, 767 F.2d 957 (D.C. Cir. 1985) , cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1011, 106 S. Ct. 1185, 89 L. Ed. 2d 301 (1986) . 16 C.F.R. pt. 444 is reprinted in Vol. 1A infra.

(n64)Footnote 64. 16 C.F.R. § 444.1(i).

(n65)Footnote 65. 16 C.F.R. § 444.1(i).

(n66)Footnote 66. 16 C.F.R. § 444.1(i)(2).

(n67)Footnote 67. 16 C.F.R. § 444.1(i)(1), (3).

(n68)Footnote 68. Allegheny-Ludlum Brackenridge Fed. Credit Union v. Fassinger (In re Fassinger), 246 B.R. 513 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 2000) .

(n69)Footnote 69. 11 U.S.C. § 522(f)(B).

(n70)Footnote 70. See In re Crawford, 226 B.R. 484 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1998) ; In re French, 177 B.R. 568 (Bankr.

E.D. Tenn. 1995) ; In re Reid, 121 B.R. 875 (Bankr. D. N.M. 1990) ; In re Vale, 110 B.R. 396 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1989) ; In re Boyer, 63 B.R. 153 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1986) ; Lawhon Farm Supply, Inc. v. Hayes, 870 S.W.2d 729, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 290 (Ark. 1994) ; cf. In re Larson, 203 B.R. 176 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1996) (reasonably sophisticated home computer valued at more than $1000 not reasonably necessary for maintenance of household); In re Thomas, 2005 WL 2429963 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. Sept. 21, 2005) (pool table is neither a household good nor a furnishing, so creditor's non-purchase money security interest is not avoidable). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice § 10.4.2.4 (8th ed. 2006 and supp.).

(n71)Footnote 71. 11 U.S.C. § 522(f)(4) (as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005)).

(n72)Footnote 72. 11 U.S.C. § 522(f)(1)(B).

(n73)Footnote 73. 16 C.F.R. § 444.2(a).

(n74)Footnote 74. 16 C.F.R. § 444.1(b).

(n75)Footnote 75. See United States v. Action Loan Co., Civil No. 3:00CV-511-H (W.D. Ky. 2000), available at www.ftc.gov/os/2000/08/actionloanccon.htm (consent decree extinguishing security interest in household goods that violated Credit Practices Rule, and forbidding future violations).

(n76)Footnote 76. For summary of state law restrictions on non-purchase money security interests, see National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 3.4.3 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n77)Footnote 77. Revised U.C.C. § 9-204(b)(1) [former U.C.C. § 9-204(2)].

(n78)Footnote 78. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Peaslee, 373 B.R. 252 (W.D.N.Y. 2007) ; In re Look, 383 B.R. 210, 65 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 158 (Bankr. D. Me. 2008) ; In re Dunlap, 383 B.R. 113, 65 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 166 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2008) ; In re Wear, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 208 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. 2008) ; In re Johnson, 380 B.R. 236 (Bankr. D. Or. 2007) ; In re Pajot, 371 B.R. 139 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2007) ; In re Acaya, 369 B.R. 564, 567 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2007) ; cf. In re Sanders, 377 B.R. 836, 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 245, 253 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2007) (U.C.C. definition of PMSI is "starting point" but not binding on interpretation of Bankruptcy Code).

(n79)Footnote 79. In re Westfall, 376 B.R. 210 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007) .

(n80)Footnote 80. "Purchase money obligation" is the key term in the U.C.C. § 9-103 definition of PMSI.

(n81)Footnote 81. See Americredit Fin. Servs. v. Penrod (In re Penrod), 392 B.R. 835 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2008) ; CitiFinancial Auto v. Hernandez-Simpson, 369 B.R. 36 (D. Kan. 2007) (lending money for the purchase price of the new vehicle and lending money for the payoff of the negative equity in the trade-in were two separate transactions memorialized by one retail installment sales contract document, one an antecedent debt (paying off the trade-in) and one a purchase money transaction); In re Look, 383 B.R. 210, 65 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 158 (Bankr. D. Me. 2008) ; In re Riach, 65 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 25 (Bankr. D. Or. 2008) ; In re Wear, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 208 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. 2008) ; In re Mitchell, 379 B.R. 131, 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 483 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 2007) (treating sale of car and financing of negative equity as two transactions, one with a PMSI and the other without; because security interest is not wholly PMSI, hanging paragraph does not apply); In re Pajot, 371 B.R. 139 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2007) (negative equity is not part of "price of the collateral" or "value given to enable the debtor to acquire rights in" or use of the collateral); In re Acaya, 369 B.R. 564, 568 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2007) ; In re Bray, 62 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 745, 758 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 2007) ; In re Vega, 344 B.R. 616 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2006) ; see also In re Westfall, 376 B.R. 210, 219 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007) (treating negative equity as not part of purchase price as matter of federal law).

(n82)Footnote 82. Americredit Fin. Servs. v. Penrod (In re Penrod), 392 B.R. 835 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2008) ; In re Johnson, 380 B.R. 236, 245 /-/246 (Bankr. D. Or. 2007) ("Given that financing negative equity is increasingly common, it was not an oversight that the legislature did not include negative equity in the list of 'expenses incurred in connection with acquiring rights in the collateral' set forth in Official Comment 3."). See, e.g., CitiFinancial Auto v. Hernandez-Simpson, 369 B.R. 36, 47 (D. Kan. 2007) ; In re Johnson, 380 B.R. 236, 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 893 (Bankr. D. Or. 2007) ; In re Sanders, 377 B.R. 836 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2007) ; In re Blakeslee, 377 B.R. 724, 729 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2007) . See In re Sanders, 377 B.R. 836, 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 245, 262 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2007) . Americredit Fin. Servs. v. Penrod (In re Penrod), 392 B.R. 835 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2008) ; In re Mancini, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 3739 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2008) ; In re Munzberg, 388 B.R. 529 (Bankr. D. Vt. 2008) ; In re Wear, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 208 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. 2008) .

(n83)Footnote 83. GMAC v. Horne, 390 B.R. 191 (E.D. Va. 2008) ; Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Peaslee, 373 B.R. 252 (W.D.N.Y. 2007) ; In re Cohrs, 63 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 352 (E.D. Cal. 2007) (negative equity is "value given to enable the debtor to acquire rights in" the collateral, so is part of purchase price; California automobile sales finance act also treats negative equity as part of the purchase price); In re Dunlap, 383 B.R. 113, 65 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 166 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2008) (negative equity is part of PMSI because of close nexus to acquisition by debtors of the new car); In re Vinson, 65 U.S.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 67 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2008); In re Austin, 381 B.R. 892 (Bankr. D. Utah 2008) (negative equity, but not GAP insurance, is part of "value given to enable" debtor to acquire rights in the collateral); In re Schwalm, 380 B.R. 630 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2008) ; In re Weiser, 381 B.R. 263 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2007) (concluding that negative equity is "value given to enable the debtor to acquire" the vehicle; there was close nexus to sale as debtor could not have bought new vehicle without including the trade-in's negative equity in the new contract); In re Burt, 378 B.R. 352 (Bankr. D. Utah 2007) (when required by seller, negative equity is part of purchase price); In re Petrocci, 370 B.R. 489 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 2007) ; see also In re Graupner, 537 F.3d 1295 (11th Cir. 2008) (citing U.C.C. commentary as supporting conclusion that state installment sales law makes negative equity part of PMSI; negative equity has close nexus to sale, and list of expenses in commentary is not exclusive).

(n84)Footnote 84. See In re Graupner, 537 F.3d 1295 (11th Cir. 2008) (although close call, negative equity has purchase money status in light of Georgia motor vehicle sales financing act, which defines "cash sale price" as including amounts used to pay off the trade-in); GMAC v. Horne, 390 B.R. 191 (E.D. Va. 2008) ; Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Peaslee, 373 B.R. 252 (W.D.N.Y. 2007) (relying in part on New York vehicle installment sales law's definition of "cash sale price" as including negative equity); In re Cohrs, 63 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 352 (E.D. Cal. 2007) (relying in part on California automobile sales finance act, which treats negative equity as part of "cash price"); In re Schwalm, 380 B.R. 630 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2008) (relying in part on Florida motor vehicle sales finance act's inclusion of negative equity in "total sale price" (although not in "cash price")).

(n85)Footnote 85. In re Sanders, 377 B.R. 836, 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 245, 255 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2007) .

(n86)Footnote 86. Id.; In re Mancini, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 3739 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2008) (as a disclosure statute, state installment sales act can not be read in pari materia with U.C.C.); In re Munzberg, 388 B.R. 529 (Bankr. D. Vt. 2008) (same); In re Blakeslee, 377 B.R. 724, 729 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2007) (improper to refer to consumer protection statute to interpret U.C.C. definition of PMSI); In re Pajot, 371 B.R. 139 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2007) (finding definitions in other statutes unpersuasive, because they were not intended to define scope of U.C.C. and U.C.C. includes its own gloss on meaning of "price"; truth in lending act definition of "total sales price" and Virginia statute allowing finance charge to be imposed on negative equity do not relate to definition of PMSI); In re Acaya, 369 B.R. 564, 570 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2007) (state disclosure statute was adopted for different purposes and is not helpful in interpreting "PMSI"); see also Americredit Fin. Servs. v. Penrod (In re Penrod), 392 B.R. 835 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2008) (declining to read U.C.C. in pari materia with California auto finance law, which was designed for disclosure). In re Riach, 65 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 25 (Bankr. D. Or. 2008) (state installment sales law, which distinguishes between "cash sale price" and "other benefits," and includes "discharge of a security interest" in the latter category, does not make negative equity part of the purchase price); In re Wear, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 208 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. 2008) (finding installment sales law's failure to include negative equity in list of items that make up "sale price" persuasive); In re Johnson, 380 B.R. 236, 244 /-/245 (Bankr. D. Or. 2007) (Oregon statutes require disclosure of negative equity as separate from "cash sale price"); In re Sanders, 377 B.R. 836, 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 245, 257 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2007) .

(n87)Footnote 87. In re Johnson, 380 B.R. 236, 249 /-/250 (Bankr. D. Or. 2007); In re Sanders, 377 B.R. 836, 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 245, 272 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2007) . But see In re Westfall, 376 B.R. 210, 219 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007) (applying dual status rule as matter of federal law).

(n88)Footnote 88. See, e.g., Knight v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 128 S. Ct. 782, 789, 169 L. Ed. 2d 652 (2008) .

(n89)Footnote 89. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(a).

(n90)Footnote 90. See In re Mitchell, 379 B.R. 131, 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 483 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 2007) (treating sale of car and financing of negative equity as two transactions, one with a PMSI and the other without; because security interest is not wholly PMSI, hanging paragraph does not apply); In re Huddle, 63 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 634 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2007) (listing federal circuits that follow transformation rule and those that follow dual status rule); In re Price, 363 B.R. 734 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. 2007) .

(n91)Footnote 91. See Americredit Fin. Servs. v. Penrod (In re Penrod), 392 B.R. 835 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2008) (applying dual purpose rule after determining that negative equity is not part of PMSI); CitiFinancial Auto v. Hernandez-Simpson, 369 B.R. 36 (D. Kan. 2007) (following non-uniform provision of Kansas U.C.C. that adopts dual status rule for consumer transactions); In re Mancini, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 3739 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2008) ; In re Munzberg, 388 B.R. 529 (Bankr. D. Vt. 2008) ; In re Riach, 65 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 25 (Bankr. D. Or. 2008) (adopting dual status rule); In re Wear, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 208 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. 2008) (U.C.C. § 9-103 requires application of dual status rule, as this transaction does not qualify under Washington's nonconforming definition of "consumer-goods transaction"); In re Pajot, 371 B.R. 139 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2007) (applying dual status rule, but reserving right to apply transformation rule if creditor accounts for trade-in in a way that obfuscates negative equity amount); In re Acaya, 369 B.R. 564, 568 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2007) (adopting dual status rule); In re Vega, 344 B.R. 616, 622 n.29 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2006) (relying on non-uniform provision of Kansas U.C.C. that applies dual status rule to consumer-goods transactions); cf. In re Weiser, 381 B.R. 263 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2007) (stating, in dicta, that Missouri applies dual status rule only if dual status aspect is properly documented so that it is clear what is and is not purchase money). See generally § 3.8.4, infra.

(n92)Footnote 92. U.C.C. § 9-103(h); see also In re Graupner, 537 F.3d 1295 (11th Cir. 2008) (relying on state law to find that PMSI encompassed negative equity, but concluding that Congress probably also intended this result).

(n93)Footnote 93. See Parker v. Elkins Welding & Constr., Inc. (In re Elkins Welding & Constr., Inc.), 42 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 597 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2000) (mere notation on title is insufficient without a written security agreement), later op. at 258 B.R. 216 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2001) (possession of collateral by creditor may be sufficient basis for security interest to attach, but not if creditor is acting as debtor's agent); see also Morin v. Galan (In re Lanzatella), 254 B.R. 84 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 2000) (notice of lien form insufficient to create security interest).

(n94)Footnote 94. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. § 319.22(1); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 4505.04(B).

(n95)Footnote 95. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 3.5.5 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.). See also Commonwealth v. Car Pawn of Va., Inc., 37 Va. Cir. 412 (1995) (to pawn an automobile, possession of the automobile, not merely the certificate of title, must be delivered as security; where the creditor holds the certificate of title only, the parties have merely created a loan with property listed as collateral, and loan is in violation of Consumer Finance Act).

(n96)Footnote 96. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 28.10.271.

(n97)Footnote 97. See, e.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 301.210 (sale without assignment of certificate of title at time of delivery is "fraudulent and void"); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 4505.04 ("[n]o person acquiring a motor vehicle from its owner, whether the owner is a manufacturer, importer, dealer, or any other person, shall acquire any right, title, claim, or interest in or to the motor vehicle until there is issued to the person a certificate of title to the motor vehicle").

(n98)Footnote 98. See, e.g., Ala. Code § 32-8-44; see also Ranger Ins. Co. v. Whitlow, 514 So. 2d 1338 (Ala. 1987) (nondelivery of a certificate of title at the time of the sale does not prevent the passage of title from the seller to the buyer).

(n99)Footnote 99. Ala. Code §§ 5-19A-1 to 5-19A-20 (general pawnshop law, interpreted by state supreme court to allow auto title pawns); Fla. Stat. §§ 537.001 to 537.018.; Ga. Code Ann. §§ 44-12-130 to 44-12-138; Idaho Code Ann. §§ 28-46-501 to 28-46-509; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 286.10-200 to 286.10-991 (West); Minn. Stat. §§ 325J.01 to 325J.13; Miss. Code Ann. §§ 75-67-401 to 75-67-449 (Mississippi Title Pledge Act); Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 367.500 to 367.533 (Pawnbrokers and Small Loans); Mont. Code Ann. §§ 31-1-801 to 31-1-827 (Title Loan Act); N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 398:1 to 398:14, 399-A:14; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 4505.102 (West) (Certificate of Motor Vehicle Title Law; allows licensed pawnbrokers to make title pawn loans); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 4727.01 to 4727.99 (West) (Pawnbrokers); Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 725.600 to 725.625; S.C. Code Ann. §§ 37-3-413 (auto pawn statute; some Article 9 requirements are specifically incorporated by reference), 36-9-201 (S.C. Code Ann. tit. 37 overrides Article 9 in case of conflict); S.D. Codified Laws §§ 54-4-36(15), (16), 54-4-70 to 54-4-72; Tenn. Code Ann. §§ 45-15-101 to 45-15-120; Utah Code Ann. §§ 7-24-102 to 7-24-305.

(n100)Footnote 100. Ala. Code § 5-19A-20 (pawnshop act "shall not repeal or be construed to repeal any provision of the Uniform Commercial Code, Sections 7-1-101 et seq. "); Ga. Code Ann. § 11-2-201(9) (pawnbroker is excluded from definition of "buyer in ordinary course of business"); Idaho Code Ann. § 28-46-502(2)/-/(4); Minn. Stat. § 325J.06(c) (auto title pawn transactions subject to state U.C.C.); Mo. Rev. Stat. § 367.521(1) (U.C.C. applies); S.D. Codified Laws § 57-4-70.

Note that all of these statutes exclude title pawn lenders from the definition of "buyer in the ordinary course." This exclusion means that a title pawn lender that buys the vehicle acquires it subject to any pre-existing purchase money security interest but has no effect on the general applicability of Article 9 to these transactions. See also S.C. Code Ann. § 37-3-413(5) (making cross-reference to Article 9; implication is that it applies; S.C. Code Ann. § 36-9-201(b) and (c) make Article 9 subject to the title pawn law, but only in case of a conflict).

(n101)Footnote 101. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 537.002.

(n102)Footnote 102. But see McLeod v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (In re McLeod), 245 B.R. 518, 523, 41 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 302 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2000) (citing Michigan's retail installment sales act, court rejects standard that description must enable a third party to distinguish the collateral from other property, all that was necessary was that the description "be sufficient for Debtors and [Creditor] to identify the goods at issue").

(n103)Footnote 103. N.Y. Pers. Prop. Law § 413.12. See In re Beck, 248 B.R. 229 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 2000) . See generally National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 3.6.5 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n104)Footnote 104. 350 F.2d 445 (D.C. Cir. 1965) .

(n105)Footnote 105. "Mortgages of this character have been denominated 'Anaconda mortgages' and are well named thus, as ... they enwrap the unsuspecting debtor in the folds of indebtedness embraced and secured in the mortgage which he did not contemplate. ..." Berger v. Fuller, 180 Ark. 372, 377, 21 S.W.2d 419, 421 (1929) , quoted in Gilmore, Security Interests in Personal Property § 35.2 (1965).

(n106)Footnote 106. Compare former U.C.C. § 9-204(3), with Revised U.C.C. § 9-204(c).

(n107)Footnote 107. See Revised U.C.C. § 9-204(c), Official Comment 5.

(n108)Footnote 108. See, e.g., Frericks v. Gen. Motors Corp., 278 Md. 304, 363 A.2d 460 (1976) . See generally National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Warranty Law § 1.4.2 (3d ed. 2006).

(n109)Footnote 109. Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(c) [former U.C.C. § 1-201(3)]. But see Alcantar v. Windsor-Orange County Credit Union, 2000 Tex. App. LEXIS 1576 (Tex. App. Mar. 9, 2000) (refusing to allow parol evidence to establish that parties did not contemplate future advances when contract referred to future advances).

(n110)Footnote 110. James v. Blackhawk Credit Union (In re James), 221 B.R. 760, 35 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1345 (Bankr. W.D. Wis. 1998) ; In re Lewis, 212 B.R. 827 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1997) . See also Alcantar v. Windsor-Orange County Credit Union, 2000 Tex. App. LEXIS 1576 (Tex. App. Mar. 9, 2000) (unpublished) (subsequent loan was secured by car purchased with first loan where both sets of loan documents contained dragnet clauses; when debtor defaulted on second loan, creditor could lawfully repossess car); In re Nagata, 60 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 255 (Bankr. D. Haw. 2006) (dragnet clause in note and security instrument providing that collateral vehicle also secures other loans, including credit card loans, was sufficient to include antecedent credit card debt).

(n111)Footnote 111. Pride Hyundai v. Chrysler Fin. Co., 369 F.3d 603, 615 (1st Cir. 2004) (Mass. law).

(n112)Footnote 112. See Fanucchi & Limi Farms v. United Agri Products, 414 F.3d 1075 (9th Cir. 2005) ; In re Utke, 1990 WL 1239795 (Bankr. D.N.D. Nov. 19, 1990) ; In re Averhoff, 18 B.R. 198 (Bankr. D. Iowa. 1982) (when a creditor had a security interest in household goods and subsequently made additional loans to the borrower, each time obtaining a new security agreement covering all previous items plus additional personal property as collateral and marked the original loan as being "renewed by" the subsequent loan, each subsequent loan constituted a novation of the prior loan and rendered the future advance clause of the prior loans ineffective).

(n113)Footnote 113. In re McAllister, 267 B.R. 614 (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 2001) ; Pallie v. Riggs Nat'l Bank, 697 A.2d 1239 (D.C. 1997) ; Cumberland County Bank v. Eastman, 2005 Tenn. App. LEXIS 533 (Tenn. Ct. App. Aug. 25, 2005) .

(n114)Footnote 114. In re Yelverton, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 897 (Bankr. M.D. Ala. Mar. 19, 2007) (citing Alabama law that requires cross-collateralization clauses be between the same parties).

(n115)Footnote 115. See In re Westfall, 365 B.R. 755 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007) ; In re Price, 363 B.R. 734 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. 2007) .

(n116)Footnote 116. See CitiFinancial Auto v. Hernandez-Simpson, 369 B.R. 36 (D. Kan. 2007) (holding that lending money for the purchase price of the new vehicle and lending money for the payoff of the negative equity in the trade-in were two separate transactions memorialized by one retail installment sales contract document, one an antecedent debt (paying off the trade-in) and one a purchase money transaction); In re Pajot, 371 B.R. 139 (Bankr. E.D. Va. July 17, 2007) ; In re Vega, 344 B.R. 616 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2006) .

(n117)Footnote 117. See Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Peaslee, 373 B.R. 252 (W.D.N.Y. Aug. 15, 2007) ; In re Graupner, 356 B.R. 907 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 2006) (looking to Georgia's Motor Vehicle Sales Financing Act, which defines price as including amounts used to payoff the trade-in, and determining that the total loan amount had purchase money status despite the payment of negative trade-in equity).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 10 Repossessions

1-10 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 10.03

§ 10.03 Default as Precondition to Seizure

[1] Default and Acceleration

[a] Default as Precondition to Repossession

Under the UCC, the debtor's default is necessary before the secured party may either repossess the collateral n1 or dispose of collateral already in the secured party's possession. n2

[b] Under UCC, Definition of Default Determined by Agreement

The UCC does not define the concept of "default." Unless other state law limits its definition, the parties are free under the UCC to define default as they please in the security agreement. n3

The typical security agreement defines default to include not only the debtor's late payment on an installment note, but also the debtor's failing to purchase insurance to cover the collateral, moving the collateral to another location without the creditor's permission, or violating any of a host of other restrictions set up by the creditor. When the debtor violates any of these conditions, even though the debtor is current on all payments due, the creditor can declare the obligation is in default. The creditor may then lawfully repossess the collateral.

Only the actual holder of the credit contract has the right to exercise the right of repossession of the collateral. Upon assigning a credit contract to another entity, the original creditor loses this right. n4

[c] Relationship of Default and Acceleration

It is important to understand the concept of acceleration as it relates to the various uses of the term "default." Creditors usually specify in the credit agreement that if the debtor is delinquent on an installment, or otherwise breaches a condition of the agreement, the creditor may accelerate the debt. The full unpaid balance of the loan becomes due immediately. Acceleration leads almost automatically to default on the total balance of the loan. Then the creditor can enforce its remedies to recover the total remaining balance of the loan, including repossession and sale of the collateral to satisfy the obligation to pay all remaining installments.

Many credit agreements also allow the creditor to accelerate even in the absence of default, for example when the creditor deems itself insecure. In such a situation the creditor would not have the right to repossess before acceleration, because there would be no default at that point. The creditor would only be able to repossess if the debtor failed to pay the accelerated amount.

Whether acceleration has occurred is also relevant to the creditor's right to repossess when the consumer catches up on the missed payments before repossession occurs. If the creditor did not accelerate the debt before the consumer paid the missed payments, repossession is clearly improper. n5 Even if the creditor did accelerate the debt before the consumer paid the missed payments, its acceptance of those payments may constitute a waiver.

Finally, the credit contract itself may require that acceleration occur before the creditor can repossess.

[d] Agreement to Accelerate Required; Strict Construction of Grounds to Accelerate

In order for the creditor to accelerate, the credit agreement must provide for the creditor's right to accelerate. This right must be stated clearly and with certainty, and may not be determined by mere inference.

[e] Validity Under the UCC of Contractual Grounds for Acceleration

The typical credit agreement provides a number of independent grounds for the creditor's acceleration of the note, such as missing a payment, damage to the collateral, failure to properly insure the collateral, etc. These are often similar to, but need not be identical to, grounds for default.

With the exception of a partial limitation on acceleration at will or when the secured party believes the prospect of payment is impaired, the UCC does not limit acceptable grounds for acceleration.

[f] UCC Restricts Acceleration at Will, When Creditor Insecure

[i] General

The UCC allows credit agreements to be accelerated "at will" or when the creditor "deems himself insecure" only if the creditor "in good faith" believes that the prospect of payment or performance is impaired. n6 This standard is broad and very generous to the creditor. Even so, litigants have successfully challenged the creditor's good faith. n7 State laws may impose stricter standards governing when impairment of the prospect of payment is sufficient grounds for acceleration. n8

[g] Where Consumer Does Not Waive Notice of Debt's Acceleration

Unless a contract specifically provides otherwise, before a creditor repossesses collateral, it must notify the debtor that it has accelerated the debt and that the full amount is due; the creditor must also give the debtor a reasonable opportunity to pay.

[h] Contract Provisions Waiving Debtor's Right to Notice of Acceleration

[i] Waiver of Notice Usually Found Valid

Creditors frequently draft their credit agreements to avoid the requirement that, before repossessing the collateral, they notify the debtor that the note has been accelerated.

Despite the harshness and one-sided nature of credit provisions allowing secured parties to repossess collateral without making any kind of demand and without notifying the debtor that the note has been accelerated, the majority of courts considering the issue enforce such provisions. n9

Courts will strictly interpret contractual language which allows creditors to repossess without demand or notice. n10

[ii] Where Notice Required Despite Waiver

Despite waivers in the credit agreement, there are a number of situations where the consumer must receive some form of notice before acceleration. The most important such situation is where a state right to cure law requires the creditor to notify the consumer of a default and provide a time frame to cure the default before the note can be accelerated.

When a creditor habitually accepts late payments, the creditor may not be able to suddenly and without notice accelerate the note because payments are late. The terms of payment may have been modified, and the creditor will have to warn the consumer that prompt payment must be made in the future. n11

[iii] Waiver Provisions May Be Unconscionable or Violate State Deceptive Practices Statutes

Courts are divided about the unconscionability of these waiver provisions, but may be vulnerable to an attack as "unfair" under state deceptive practices statutes.

[2] State and Federal Credit Statutes May Limit Grounds for Default and Acceleration

[a] Distinction With Right to Cure Laws

The most significant limitations on the right to accelerate are state and federal right to cure laws which provide consumers with thirty days (or some similar period) to cure a default.

This section describes another type of statute: laws that restrict the basis upon which a note can be accelerated.

[b] Federal Limitations

Federal law provides few restrictions on when a creditor can accelerate the loan, but the few limits that do exist are important because they apply to all credit transactions in all states. The United States Bankruptcy Code declares of no effect a contract provision declaring the debtor in default if the debtor files for bankruptcy. n12 Similarly, the Bankruptcy Code's automatic stay prevents the creditor from accelerating the note or taking any action against the collateral without first seeking the court's permission.

The Federal ECOA prohibits creditors from declaring a note in default or accelerating a loan just because the consumer has exercised rights under the TIL, Fair Credit Reporting, Consumer Leasing, Fair Credit Billing ("FCBA"), FederalGarnishment, Fair Debt Collection, Electronic Funds Transfer Acts or the ECOA itself. n13

The ECOA also prohibits a creditor from declaring a default or accelerating a loan sooner against certain debtors than others if the basis of the disparate treatment is race, color, religion, national origin, sex, marital status, age, or public assistance status. n14 Not only are creditors prohibited from discriminating in accelerating loans, they also can not establish policies that have the effect of discriminating on these bases. n15

For members of the armed forces on active duty, the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act requires creditors to reduce interest rates on pre-active duty obligations to six percent unless the creditor goes to court and proves that the service member's active duty does not materially affect her ability to pay. n16 The creditor must forgive any interest over six percent that would otherwise have accrued during the period of active duty. n17 The creditor should reduce the monthly payment to reflect the lower interest rate. n18 A debtor who is on active duty and makes the reduced payments that the Act allows can not be considered in default, and any repossession should therefore be wrongful.

[c] State Law Limitations

In some states, motor vehicle installment sales acts, state retail installment sales acts, and the UCCC prohibit clauses that allow arbitrary or unreasonable acceleration, acceleration because the holder deems itself insecure, or acceleration in the absence of default (which effectively prohibits acceleration based on the holder feeling insecure). n19

[d] Notice of Assignment

Obligations are often assigned from one creditor to another. Under Article 9, the debtor can continue paying the original creditor until it or the assignee sends the debtor an authenticated notification that the debt has been assigned and that payment is to be made to the assignee. n20 Such payment discharges the debtor's obligations, n21 so failure to pay the assignee would not be a default.

If requested by the debtor, the assignee must "seasonably" furnish reasonable proof that the assignment has been made. n22 Until the assignee provides proof, the debtor can continue paying the assignor, even if the debtor has received a notification of the assignment. n23

[3] Creditor's Waiver of Right to Declare Default

[a] Habitual Acceptance of Late Payments Prevents Sudden Acceleration

Acceleration is not favored in the law. A creditor who has not insisted upon strict compliance with due dates in the past, but who has instead accepted late payments, must give reasonable notice to the debtor that it will insist on strict compliance in the future. n24

To reach this conclusion, courts have relied upon either waiver or estoppel.

Creditors can also waive their right to declare a default on grounds other than just delinquent payments.

[b] Other Creditor Conduct Preventing Acceleration

Misrepresenting that making a payment will prevent repossession may violate the state's deceptive practices statute. n25 The Alabama Supreme Court has held that a creditor's agreement to extend a payment's due date did not prevent repossession because it was unsupported by consideration, but a concurring justice pointed out that an estoppel theory would not have required consideration. n26

The Fourth Circuit upheld a jury's finding that a car buyer had a good reason not to make payments on a car loan. The bank had delayed over six months in recording the loan. When the buyer tried to arrange to make payments, it repeatedly insisted that he owed nothing. After six months, upon discovering the existence of the loan, the bank declared the buyer in default, accelerated the loan, and refused to allow him to make payments unless he agreed to pay late fees and penalties. The court upheld a jury's award of $1000 in statutory damages and $80,000 punitive damages against the bank for refusing to correct negative credit reports it had submitted regarding this transaction. n27

[c] Effect of Contractual Antiwaiver Provisions

A number of courts, particularly in commercial cases, find that antiwaiver clauses effectively cut off the debtor's rights and that the creditor can use the clause to accelerate without notice, even after accepting late payments in the past. The majority of courts in consumer cases, however, find various ways of avoiding the effect of this provision inserted in the credit agreement, such as creditor's subsequent conduct as modification or estoppel by conduct.

[4] Creditor's Obligation to Seek Credit Insurance Payments Before Declaring Default

Creditors frequently sell credit insurance in connection with credit transactions. The insurance may cover the death, disability, or loss of employment of the borrower or theft or other loss of the collateral. n28 Creditors will sometimes declare a default for nonpayment even when they know that an event has occurred (e.g., the debtor's death or disability) that will trigger payments under the credit insurance policy. Some courts have found this wrongful. n29

Not only might the creditor have an obligation to seek credit insurance payments prior to repossession, but the insurance carrier also may be acting in bad faith if it denies a claim on a credit disability policy without even limited investigation simply because the borrower fails to supply all the completed forms required by the policy. n30 While this duty of the insurer will not affect the borrower's default status, any proceeds from the policy would be available to prevent default or a deficiency.

[5] Yo-Yo (Spot Delivery) Sales

Yo-yo sales, also known as "spot delivery," "take back sales," or "gimmee back sales," can lead to serious repossession abuses. In these sales, the dealer delivers the car to the consumer "on the spot," before financing is firmly arranged. If the dealership is unable to arrange financing on the terms originally quoted, it requires the consumer either to return the car or to sign a new contract with different, less favorable terms. If the consumer does not return the car, the dealer may try to repossess it.

A yo-yo sale is often the result of a deliberate sales tactic. The dealer baits the consumer with financing terms that it does not intend to deliver, and then, after the consumer has become committed to the car, moves the consumer to less favorable terms. If the consumer tries to get out of the deal, the dealer may claim that the consumer's trade-in has been sold, that the agreement to purchase the car is binding, or that the consumer will have to forfeit a down payment.

In most dealer-arranged automobile financing, the dealer will first get a creditor to approve the deal, and then have the consumer sign a credit contract with the dealer, which the dealer then assigns to the creditor. If the creditor declines to accept assignment of the contract from the dealer, the sale and the credit terms should still be binding on the dealer unless the contract included a legally effective clause making the contract contingent on financing.

If the contract does not have a contingency clause and the consumer is making the payments and performing any other contractual obligations, the dealer has no grounds for repossession. Default by the consumer is required before the dealer can repossess. n31 Repossession when there has been no default is conversion and a breach of contract. n32 It also triggers the UCC's statutory damages remedy. n33

Some dealers do not sign the credit contract and then argue that the deal is not final for this reason. But the filled-in contract should be viewed as the dealer's offer, and the consumer's signature is acceptance, so the contract is binding. n34 The dealer's argument that the contract is not binding is stronger if the contract explicitly states that it is not binding unless signed by the dealer, but the consumer should not accept at face value the dealer's claim about whether and when it signed the contract. The dealer may have had to show a signed contract to potential assignees. Also, the contract would not be binding on the consumer until the dealer signed it, so the dealer may have done so to prevent the consumer from canceling the sale.

Even if the contract states that it is not binding until signed by the dealer, the dealer may have conveyed title to the consumer, reserving only a security interest to itself, by delivering the vehicle to the consumer. UCC section 2-401(1) provides: "Any retention or reservation by the seller of the title (property) in goods shipped or delivered to the buyer is limited in effect to a reservation of a security interest."

Many dealers insert an explicit clause in their yo-yo sales contracts that makes the deal contingent on the dealer's ability to arrange financing on the terms stated in the contract. State law governs the validity of such clauses. n35 If the car salehas not been explicitly conditioned on final credit approval, then the dealer has no right to undo the sale. n36 If the contingency clause is invalid, the contract is binding on the dealer, and repossession is a violation of Article 9 if the consumer has not defaulted.

A rider should not conflict with the main document either. For example, when an installment sales agreement states that the dealer has sold the vehicle to the consumer, and that the transaction is final, then a separate document should not indicate that the transaction is not final. For a rider to be effective in establishing a bailment agreement until financing is complete, the installment sales agreement must clearly state that it is a condition precedent agreement, that it is not a final agreement.

Washington state outlaws contingent sales unless the dealer either accepts or cancels the sale within three business days. n37 Utah law only accepts contingency clauses that give the dealer seven days to cancel, n38 and Louisiana law requires the contingency to allow the dealer only twenty-five days. n39 Alaska requires the contingency to be disclosed in a separate document, signed by both parties, that clearly and conspicuously discloses the contingency, the proposed financing terms, the consumer's obligation to complete the deal on those terms, if approved, and the fact that the deal is voided if financing can not be found on those terms. Certain contingency clauses may be drafted so poorly or be so one-sided as to raise issues of enforceability. n40 Other contingency clauses may be so poorly drafted as to make it difficult to determine if the contingency has occurred. For example, clauses may state that the contract may be cancelled if financing is not obtained within three or ten days. n41 If the dealer waits well beyond the specified time period to notify the consumer, can it still cancel the sale if it alleges that financing was not obtained during those three or ten days?

Even if the contingency clause is valid, there may be significant factual questions about whether the contingency occurred. Often the dealer actually is able to secure the financing set forth in the contract, but rejects it because it wants a larger hidden commission or "yield spread premium" than the creditor is willing to pay. n42 In such a case, the contract would still be binding and the dealer would have no right to repossess.

When the dealer repossesses a motor vehicle because a yo-yo sale has fallen through, not only may the repossession itself be wrongful, but the dealer may also be liable for failing to follow the Article 9 rules regarding reselling the vehicle. If the dealer's interest in the vehicle was a security interest, and if some action or inaction by the buyer constitutes a default that gave the dealer the right to repossess, then it must give the buyer notice of the repossession sale and account to the buyer for any surplus. n43 Violation of these requirements gives the consumer the right to actual and statutory damages.

[a] Did Financing Really Fall Through?

Automobile paper is often sold with a yield-spread premium, being the difference between what the finance company will accept (the buy rate) and the rate at which the dealer writes up the loan. The dealer pockets most or all of the yield spread as a kickback. n44 Consider whether financing really fell through where the rate specified in the installment sales agreement is 15%, but the loan is offered to the assignee not at that rate, but at a buy rate of 11%. In addition, the Equal Credit Opportunity Act requires lenders to provide written notice of any adverse action on the consumer's credit application, and the lender must retain for twenty-five months all documents evidencing this denial of credit. n45

Has the dealer made a good faith effort to finance the 15% paper when it is only offering it to other lenders at 11%? Before canceling the sale, must the dealer instead seek a buyer for the paper at 15%? The contingency clause does not specify that the dealer can cancel if it cannot find a lender to purchase the paper at a significant profit to the dealer. In any event, it is surely deceptive to state that financing can not be arranged for a 15% loan where the dealer never sought a lender out to purchase the loan at 15%. And it surely should be a UDAP violation to fail to disclose, when selling a vehicle pursuant to a contingency clause, that the sale is not contingent on a lender purchasing the paper at 15%, but instead at 11%.

A New Hampshire statute references cancellation where "approval of the terms of the retail installment contract cannot be obtained." n46 This would seem to allow cancellation only if the dealer can not obtain financing at the rate described in the contract, not at some lower interest rate selected by the dealer.

[6] Relationship of Default to Consumer's Defenses or Counterclaims

[a] Introduction

The existence of various consumer defenses or counterclaims also affects the creditor's ability to declare a default and accelerate the loan. Valid defenses and counterclaims can certainly reduce the amount the creditor can recover in a collection lawsuit.

[b] If Consumer's Obligation Is Extinguished

The creditor does not have the right to declare a default or repossess the collateral if the consumer's obligation underlying the security is extinguished for two reasons. First, the consumer has not defaulted on an obligation if the consumer has fully satisfied the obligation. Second, the security interest is no longer valid because the UCC definition of a security interest is an interest securing payment of an obligation. n47 The security interest should cease to exist if the underlying obligation is extinguished. The 1999 revisions to Article 9 add a provision that, until the debtor is notified of an assignment, the debtor can discharge the obligation by paying the assignor. n48 Consequently, a seizure is wrongful if the consumer has already paid off the loan in full. This may happen, for example, where a loan is assigned and the assignor does not communicate effectively with the assignee as to which consumer payments have been received. An obligation can also be terminated if the underlying contract is void or voidable.

In addition, a consumer who revokes acceptance has the right under the UCC to cancel the sales contract. n49

[c] Seller's Breach of Contract May Prevent Default

[i] UCC § 2-717 Right to Deduct Payments.

Consumers can prevent a default even where the obligation is not satisfied, if the consumer has a claim for breach of contract damages against the seller, such as a breach of warranty claim. Even without first receiving a court determination, consumers have the right to notify the seller of their damages for the seller's breach of the sales agreement and deduct those damages from installment payments.

[ii] Potential Consequences of Stopping Payments

Consumer lawyers differ on whether it is wise to advise clients to stop payments prior to filing suit and/or during the pendency of litigation. The question is not whether a consumer has the right to do so, but whether it is worth risking potential consequences such as negative credit references or repossessions. n50

Many lawyers address potential problems by warning lenders' counsel that the debt is clearly disputed and that credit reports should reflect that. Another strategy is to seek a restraining order prohibiting the lender from making unfavorable credit reports or repossession while the case is in dispute.

Conversion, FCRA, UDAP and other tort claims may be appropriate if lenders repossess goods or make negative credit reports when consumers have properly withheld payments and given notice to lenders.

[iii] Against Which Payments May Damage Claims Be Deducted?

UCC section 2-717 states that the consumer can deduct the damages "from any part of the price still due" (emphasis added). The words "any part of" would be superfluous if they did not mean it is the consumer's choice to determine against which part of the still due amount to apply the deduction. n51

[iv] Consumer Must Notify the Seller

UCC section 2-717 requires the buyer to notify the seller of the intention to deduct damages before the buyer can deduct those damages.

[v] Damages That May Be Deducted; Relationship to Third Party Lender

UCC section 2-717 allows consumers to withhold payments on a sales contract if the consumer has a claim for breach of that same contract. The most common type of breach of contract claim will be breach of warranty. The section 2-717 remedy is available not only for damages for reduced value of the goods, but also for incidental and consequential damages. In addition, the remedy is available for nonwarranty breach of contract claims, such as imposition of credit terms or charges not in the contract, delay in delivery, or breach of the seller's duty of good faith.

[d] Consumer's Revocation of Acceptance May Prevent a Default

[i] General

If the consumer revokes acceptance of the collateral and cancels the sale before a repossession, the consumer's position with the creditor is greatly improved, and the consumer may even have a greater chance of retaining the collateral. A consumer can cancel a sale if the goods are substantially impaired and the seller fails to cure the defect. After notice of revocation to the seller, the consumer is no longer obligated on the sales agreement, the seller must return payments already made, and the seller has the right to recover the goods.

[ii] Consumer May Have a Superior Security Interest in the Collateral

When the consumer rightfully revokes acceptance of the goods, the consumer has a UCC Article 2 security interest in the goods in the consumer's possession to secure those payments on the price of the goods already made and to secure certain expenses already incurred relating to the goods. n52 The security interest stays in effect as long as the consumer retains possession and as long as the creditor has not reimbursed the consumer for these payments and expenses.

This buyer's security interest gives the consumer a superior right to the goods unless the creditor fully reimburses the consumer.

Even if it is clear that the consumer has the right to retain possession of the vehicle as security for the seller's return of payments and reimbursement of expenses, the consumer should be prepared for repossession attempts. A strongly worded letter, explaining the basis for revocation of acceptance, the duties that revocation imposes upon the seller, and the consequences of a wrongful repossession, may act as a deterrent. n53

A buyer who revokes acceptance has the right under UCC § 2-711(1) to cancel the contract. If the buyer does so, then the buyer no longer has an obligation to the seller, so any security interest securing the obligation is automatically terminated. A proper revocation of acceptance and cancellation of the contract means that the debtor no longer has any obligation for the merchandise, so any security interest securing the obligation is automatically terminated.

[iii] Revocation of Acceptance After Repossession

There seems to be no legal impediment to revoking acceptance after a repossession. UCC section 2-608 on revocation of acceptance does not require the consumer to be in possession of the goods to cancel. As long as the other requirements for revocation are met, the cancellation should be proper. As UCC § 2-711(3) creates only a possessory security interest, which is lost once the consumer loses possession of the goods, revocation after repossession would not enable the consumer to claim a security interest in the goods. n54 But the consumer may have a more difficult time proving the goods substantial impairment if the consumer does not have possession.

[e] Effect of Debtor's Counterclaims

A debtor not revoking acceptance and not withholding payments pursuant to UCC section 2-717 may have difficulty preventing a default merely by raising claims against the creditor or seller. While the consumer argues that the legal claims against the creditor off-set the amount of payments for which the debtor is delinquent, courts may distinguish between claims that dispute the amount of the debt and those that go to the right of the creditor to take possession of the collateral.

[7] Unconscionable and Bad Faith Acceleration

UCC section 2-302 allows courts to refuse to enforce unconscionable contracts in whole or in part. Former UCC section 1-203 imposes upon the creditor an obligation of good faith in enforcement of the credit agreement's right to declare a default and accelerate the loan. An acceleration can violate this obligation when the creditor's actions, as opposed to the contract provisions, are inequitable.

[8] The Right to Cure a Default

[a] Introduction

Nothing in the UCC prevents the creditor, upon the debtor's delinquency, from immediately accelerating the note and repossessing the collateral. Credit agreements or state law may create a grace period during which delinquency will not lead to acceleration or repossession, and that provision is then enforceable against the creditor like any contract term.

Right to cure statutes should be distinguished from right to reinstate and right to redeem statutes. The UCC also gives debtors a right to redeem repossessed collateral by paying the entire obligation.

[b] State Statutory Rights to Cure

[i] General

A number of state statutes provide a right to cure defaults prior to acceleration or repossession for some or all consumer credit transactions. Generally, creditorsmust first send a written notice of default and right to cure, and then wait for a specified period prior to acceleration, repossession, or court enforcement of the security interest. n55 During that period, the debtor can reinstate the credit transaction as if the default had not occurred merely by paying any back payments plus delinquency charges.

Consumers also have the right to cure a default whenever the creditor offers the consumer that right.

Check carefully for creditor compliance with the notice requirements of the state right to cure statutes. The creditor should be held to the strictest compliance standard.

When a debtor properly offers to cure the delinquent installments, but a creditor wrongfully requires payment on the full accelerated debt, some debtors respond by making no payment at all. Courts may find the debtor's offer to cure sufficient to stop acceleration.

[c] Federal Right to Cure for Mobile Home First Mortgage Loans

[i] General

An important, but limited, federal right to cure provision for federally-related mobile home loans is found in OTS regulations, n56 which apply to first mortgages on residential mobile homes. The regulations provide debtors with a thirty-day right to cure defaults after notice.

The notice, in effect, gives the debtor a second chance, within thirty days of the notice's postmark, to cure any past delinquencies or other default before the total amount due may be accelerated or the home repossessed.

[ii] When Consumer Has Right to Cure

The OTS regulations do not provide consumers with the right to cure their mobile home loans. Instead, the Depository Institutions Deregulation and Monetary Control Act of 1980 ("DIDA") n57 provides lenders with certain incentives to provide this right to cure to consumers and to comply with other consumer safeguards specified in the OTS regulations. The incentive is that, if the lender provides the consumer with the right to cure notice and all the other consumer safeguards specified in the regulations, then the lender can avoid certain state usury laws. n58

The consumer only has a right to cure if the lender offers the consumer that right.

[iii] Mobile Home Lender Liability for Failure to Provide Right to Cure

In most cases, mobile home lenders failing to offer a right to cure and failing to comply with the other OTS consumer safeguards must comply with all applicable state usury law. The significance of this will vary state-by-state with the nature of the usury limits and usury remedies. There may be no consequence for lenders' failure to comply with the OTS regulations in states with high or nonexistent interest ceilings on mobile home loans. However, if a state has a low or moderate usury ceiling applicable to these transactions, a creditor that relied on the DIDA preemption to charge a higher rate will have violated the state usury law and will be subject to applicable penalties.

[iv] Does Credit Agreement Obfuscate Right to Cure, Leading to Statutory Damages?

The OTS regulations do not require that the lender mention the right to cure in the actual loan documents. Nevertheless, a number of courts have examined whether loan documents that might obfuscate the right to cure do violate the OTS regulations, leading to the lender losing its federal insulation from state usury laws, even if the consumer never defaults.

[9] Remedies

[a] Punitive Damages Under a Tort Theory

If the secured party repossesses property when the debtor is not in default, when the creditor is prevented from accelerating the note, or when the creditor has not made proper demand after accelerating the note, generally the most important remedial strategy is to seek punitive damages under a tort theory. The most common tort theories for creditor liability are conversion, trespass, and negligence. n59

If a tort violation is found, and the creditor's actions meet a state's standards for punitive damages, then punitive damages should be awarded. Courts often award punitive damages in the $20,000 to $30,000 range or even higher where creditors wrongfully repossess or accelerate, or even where creditors merely do not properly notify the debtor of an impending acceleration or repossession. n60

[b] Other Remedies

Where creditors repossess property without a proper default or illegally accelerate a loan, the creditor may also be subject to statutory damages under the UCC, n61 under applicable RISA, MVRISA, or other state consumer credit legislation that may be violated, or under state deceptive practices statutes. In addition, an independent repossession agency (but not the creditor unless its employee impersonates a third party) n62 will be liable for statutory damages up to $1000 under the Federal FDCPA.

The FDCPA prohibits independent repossession agencies (but not creditors) from seizing collateral when there is no present right to the collateral. n63

The major opportunity for multiple damages and attorney fees is a claim under a state deceptive practices statute. Finally, it may be that the creditor's improper action releases a surety or guarantor from any further obligation on the note.

[c] Effect of Federal and State Electronic Signature Laws on State Right-to-Cure Statutes

[i] Coverage

In early 2000, Congress passed the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act ("E-Sign"), which took effect October 1, 2000. n64 At the same time, a number of states were adopting the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act ("UETA"). n65 Both statutes affect state right-to-cure laws. Neither E-Sign nor UETA applies to a contract or other record (electronic document) "to the extent that it is governed by" Article 9. n66

Thus, neither affects notices, such as the notice of the repossession sale, that are required by Article 9. These notices must still be provided in accordance with the requirements of Article 9, although, in states that have adopted the 1999 revisions to Article 9, electronic notices will be authorized in many circumstances. n67 E-Sign also exempts right-to-cure notices that relate to an individual's primary residence, such as a mobile home. n68 Both statutes do, however, appear to apply to other state right-to-cure laws. n69 Additionally, both statutes allow electronic notices even if the consumer did not enter into the transaction electronically, as long as the consumer consents in a way that satisfies the statute's requirements. E-Sign preempts state laws that require that contracts or other documents be written, signed, or in nonelectronic form. n70 It allows states to supersede its substantive requirements, however, by enacting UETA or by enacting other laws that are technologically neutral and consistent with it. n71 The state law must specifically say that it is modifying, limiting, or superseding the federal law. n72

[ii] Substantive Provisions of E-Sign

In states that have not adopted UETA or another law that is consistent with E-Sign, the federal statute controls. Assuming that it applies to right-to-cure notices, it allows electronic rather than paper notices if the consumer consents. n73

E-Sign does not affect requirements concerning the content or timing of notices. n74 Format requirements for right-to-cure notices, e.g., type size or conspicuousness, should be considered part of the "content" requirements that creditors must still follow.

[iii] Substantive Provisions of UETA

Section 101 of E-Sign (which contains most of its substantive rules) n75 maynot apply in the few states n76 that have adopted a conforming version of UETA and specifically expressed an intent to supersede the federal statute. Even in these states, there is still a question of how much of E-Sign's section 101 is displaced, and the consumer consent provisions may still apply. n77 In that case, the question whether a right to cure notice can be sent electronically is determined by UETA rather than by E-Sign.

UETA is different in many ways from E-Sign. First, it does not have any of E-Sign's confirmation of consent procedures. It merely requires that the parties agree to conduct transactions by electronic means. n78 The only nod it gives to consumer protection in the consent process is that "[w]hether the parties agree to conduct a transaction by electronic means is determined from the context and surrounding circumstances, including the parties' conduct."

If the state adopted UETA before E-Sign was passed, n79 adopted a non-uniform version of UETA or other state law inconsistent with E-Sign after E-Sign was passed, n80 or has not specifically expressed an intent to supersede E-Sign, n81 then the federal protections apply as in addition to UETA's rules on consumer consent. n82 Creditors in such states will have to give the disclosures and follow the confirmation of consent procedures that E-Sign requires.

UETA does not override any substantive provisions of state law and clearly preserves state law requirements regarding format of notices. n83

[iv] Manner of Delivery of Notices Under E-Sign and UETA

Some state right-to-cure laws require certified mail notice to the debtor. E-Sign provides that, if a pre-existing law requires something to be made available by a specified method that requires verification or acknowledgement of receipt, it can be provided electronically only if the method used provides verification or acknowledgement of receipt. n84

UETA also does not override state laws about how information is to be "sent, communicated, or transmitted." n85 For example, the official comments state that, if a state law requires information to be sent to the consumer by mail, mail must be used, although the creditor can mail an electronic disk instead of a letter. Section 8(d) provides that state law requirements for use of first class mail can be varied by agreement, to the extent permitted by other law, but there is no similar provision for state law requirements that certified mail be used.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Revised U.C.C. § 9-609 [former U.C.C. § 9-503]. See, e.g., Christie's Inc. v. Davis, 247 F. Supp. 2d 414, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 684 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) ; Corbin v. Regions Bank, 258 Ga. App. 490, 574 S.E.2d 616, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1328 (2002) (inducing debtor to surrender collateral when he was not in default was wrongful repossession and conversion); Ansley v. Conseco Fin. Serv. Corp., 2002 Mich. App. LEXIS 2033 (Mich. Ct. App. Dec. 17, 2002) (unpublished).

(n2)Footnote 2. Revised U.C.C. § 9-609 [former U.C.C. § 9-504(1)].

(n3)Footnote 3. See Revised U.C.C. § 9-601 [former U.C.C. § 9-501(1)]. See also Manufacturers Hanover Leasing Corp. v. Ace Drilling Co., 726 F. Supp. 966 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) ; Brockbank v. Best Capital Corp., 341 S.C. 372, 534 S.E.2d 688 (2000) (court held that creditor was required to treat alleged abandonment as default). See, e.g., Kahwaty v. Potter, 57 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1000 (Wash. Ct. App. 2005) (failure to maintain insurance as required by contract was default even though contract did not list it as one of grounds for default).

(n4)Footnote 4. Goodwin v. Harmon, 34 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 551 (Minn. Ct. App. 1997) (unpublished).

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Barnes, 126 Ga. App. 444, 191 S.E.2d 121, 11 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 327 (1972) (repossession improper when debtor tendered the missed payment before repossession occurred and creditor had not given notice of acceleration of debt); Fontaine v. Indus. Nat'l Bank, 298 A.2d 521 (R.I. 1973) (debtor was not in default on current payment; creditor could not claim that it had accelerated because of debtor's lateness in making other payments when it had not given notice of acceleration and demanded the accelerated amount).

(n6)Footnote 6. Revised U.C.C. § 1-309 [former U.C.C. § 1-208]. Note that the Uniform Consumer Credit Code places the burden of establishing the prospect of significant impairment upon the creditor. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 4.1.6 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n7)Footnote 7. See, e.g., In re Progressive Farmers Ass'n, 50 B.R. 525, 536 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1985) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Meredith v. Pathfinders Detective & Recovery, Inc., 1983 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20367 (D.S.C. Nov. 9, 1983) (South Carolina defines default only as nonpayment or "significant impairment" of prospect of payment, performance, or realization of collateral; consumer's statement that creditor would never take his car insufficient because he was merely asserting his legal rights, and creditor had already accelerated the debt and threatened to repossess).

(n9)Footnote 9. See Williamson v. Nissan Motor Acceptance Corp., 631 So. 2d 241 (Ala. 1993) ; Anderson v. Mobile Disc. Corp., 595 P.2d 203, 26 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 248 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1979) ; Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Hunt, 241 Ga. 342, 245 S.E.2d 314, 24 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 251 (1978) ; Fulton Nat'l Bank v. Horn, 239 Ga. 648, 238 S.E.2d 358, 22 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1302 (1977) ; Oak Mountain Dev. Corp. v. Harrell, 162 Ga. App. 186, 290 S.E.2d 177, 34 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 407 (1982) ; Van Bibber v. Norris, 419 N.E.2d 115, 31 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1522 (Ind. 1981) ; King v. South Jersey Nat'l Bank, 30 A.2d 1, 15 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 969 (N.J. 1974) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See Hence v. Indian Cave Park P'ship, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29329 (S.D. Tex. Apr. 20, 2007) (foreclosure case; requiring notice prior to acceleration when contract clause is not clear and unequivocal).

(n11)Footnote 11. Cf. Wallace v. Sunstar Acceptance Corp., 2000 Ohio App. LEXIS 2008 (Ohio Ct. App. May 12, 2000) (where a consumer was not habitually late but, instead, justifiably relied on creditor's mistaken representation that payments were not owed, the creditor could not accelerate the note without any notice prior to the repossession; the creditor was equitably estopped from holding consumer in default on her installment loan).

(n12)Footnote 12. 11 U.S.C. § 541(c)(1).

(n13)Footnote 13. 15 U.S.C. § 1691(a)(3).

(n14)Footnote 14. National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, Ch. 8 (6th ed. 2005).

(n15)Footnote 15. National Consumer Law Center, Credit Discrimination § 3.4.4 (5th ed. 2009).

(n16)Footnote 16. 50 U.S.C. app. § 526. See Rodriguez v. Am. Express, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17727 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 7, 2006) (reduction of interest charges must be effective as of date of entry into active duty, not date lender received notice); cf. Linscott v. Vector Aerospace, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55841 (D. Or. July 27, 2007) (servicemember's obligation to provide creditor with written notice and copy of military orders within 180 days of termination or release from military service is not excused by "substantial compliance").

(n17)Footnote 17. Moll v. Ford Consumer Fin. Co., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3638, at *4 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 16, 1998) .

(n18)Footnote 18. OCC Advisory Letter, No. AL 2001-10 (Oct. 25, 2001).

(n19)Footnote 19. See Rubin v. Gallery Auto Sales, 1997 WL 1068459 (Ohio C.P. June 23, 1997) (repossessing and demanding payment of accelerated balance when default had lasted less than 30 days is RISA violation and amounts to conversion).

(n20)Footnote 20. Revised U.C.C. § 9-406(a). These rights apply to an account debtor on an account, chattel paper, or a payment intangible, terms that are defined in Revised U.C.C. § 9-102. The comparable provision of the pre-1999 version of Article 9 was § 9-318.

(n21)Footnote 21. Id.

(n22)Footnote 22. Revised U.C.C. § 9-406(c).

(n23)Footnote 23. Revised U.C.C. § 9-406(c).

(n24)Footnote 24. Saice v. Mid-America Bank, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20845 (D. Minn. Sept. 20, 1999) (for electronic publication only) (creditor's motion for summary judgment denied where debtor alleged that the creditor failed to provide notice that late payments were no longer acceptable); Williamson v. Wanlass, 545 P.2d 1145, 18 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1116 (Utah 1976) . See also In re Valentine, 292 B.R. 164 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2003) (creditor who accepted late payments was estopped from declaring debtor in breach of reaffirmation agreement). But see Parker v. Genco Fed. Credit Union, 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 6455 (Tex. App. Aug. 26, 1999) (unpublished) (where contract included provision allowing for creditor to delay enforcement of its rights under the agreement without losing the ability to accelerate the note, creditor did not waive its rights to strict compliance by accepting late payments) Wright v. Wells Fargo Auto Fin., Inc., 59 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 8 (Iowa Dist. Ct. 2005) (mailing letters demanding strict compliance, and then continuing to accept late payments, was not waiver when consumers did not receive the letters); Catron v. Citizens Union Bank, 229 S.W.3d 54 (Ky. Ct. App. 2006) (bank could accelerate despite past acceptance of late payments when note so provided and also waived notice of default).

(n25)Footnote 25. Williams v. Precision Recovery, Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6190 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 7, 2004) (denial of motion to dismiss).

(n26)Footnote 26. Callaway v. Whittenton, 52 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 525 (Ala. 2003) .

(n27)Footnote 27. Saunders v. Branch Banking & Trust Co., 526 F.3d 142 (4th Cir. 2008) .

(n28)Footnote 28. National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption, and Industry Abuses Ch. 8 (4th ed. 2009).

(n29)Footnote 29. See Wiley v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., 624 So. 2d 518 (Ala. 1993) (repossession wrongful if creditor knows of insurance and of debtor's disability, and debtor takes steps to make insurance claim; "at least an implied promise" not to repossess); Corbin v. Regions Bank, 574 S.E.2d 616 (Ga. Ct. App. 2002) (conversion and wrongful repossession; genuine issue of fact whether creditor had right to declare default and repossess when file contained copy of insurance certificate naming creditor as loss payee; failure to pay resulted from disability, but debtor never filed insurance claim); Elyria Sav. & Trust Nat'l Bank v. Santiago, 1991 WL 771242 (Ohio Mun. Ct. Dec. 10, 1991) (before declaring default or acceleration, creditor must ascertain extent of coverage and nature of any possible claim, and give consumer fair and reasonable opportunity to establish and maintain eligibility and collect benefits).

(n30)Footnote 30. See McCormick v. Sentinel Life Ins. Co., 153 Cal. App. 3d 1030 (1984) (insurance carrier had a duty to conduct at least a limited investigation when borrower filed a claim against a credit disability policy but submitted subsequent claim forms to secured party believing secured party was the insurer); National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption, and Industry Abuses Ch. 8 (4th ed. 2009).

(n31)Footnote 31. Revised U.C.C. § 9-609 [former U.C.C. § 9-501].

(n32)Footnote 32. Heltzel v. Mecham Pontiac, 152 Ariz. 58, 730 P.2d 235 (1986) .

(n33)Footnote 33. See Revised U.C.C. § 9-625(c)(2) [former U.C.C. § 9-507(1)], which applies whenever the secured party is not proceeding in accordance with the provisions of Part 5. Part 5 includes the requirement that there be a default prior to repossession.

(n34)Footnote 34. See Cannon v. Metro Ford, Inc., 242 F. Supp. 2d 1322 (S.D. Fla. 2002) (consumer's signature consummates the transaction even if dealer does not sign agreement). In addition, the dealer's notations on the contract may be sufficient to show a signature. In particular, see if the dealer's name is typed below the signature line. The U.C.C. § 1-201(39) defines "signed" as "any symbol executed or adopted by a party with present intention to authenticate a writing." The Official Comment notes that the signature may be printed, stamped, or written, and may even be found in the letterhead. See Official Comment 39 to U.C.C. § 1-201. Revised Section 1-201(b)(37), so far adopted by only three jurisdictions, preserves this definition. But cf. Brewer v. Stokes Kia, 613 S.E.2d 802 (S.C. Ct. App 2005) (failure to find financing is a default if the contract so specifies).

(n35)Footnote 35. See Peak v. Ted Russell Enters., Inc., 2000 Tenn. App. LEXIS 120 (Tenn. Ct. App. Feb. 28, 2000) (contingency clause created condition precedent and buyer was a mere bailee); Scott v. Forest Lake Chrysler-Plymouth-Dodge, 611 N.W.2d 346 (Minn. 2000) (use of separate document with contingency clause did not violate state credit act). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 5.4.5 (5th ed. 2002).

(n36)Footnote 36. See Daenzer v. Wayland Ford, Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8409 (W.D. Mich. May 7, 2002) ; Braucher v. Mariemont Auto, 2002 Ohio App. LEXIS 3522 (Ohio Ct. App. June 28, 2002) (deceptive to fail to disclose financing contingency); Cardwell v. Tom Harrigan Oldsmobile, Inc., 1984 Ohio App. LEXIS 10104 (Ohio Ct. App. June 27, 1984) (dealer violated UDAP statute by refusing to transfer title unless buyer paid charges beyond those required by contract).

(n37)Footnote 37. Wash. Rev. Code § 46.70.180(4)(b).

(n38)Footnote 38. Utah Code Ann. § 41-3-401.

(n39)Footnote 39. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 32:1254(N)(3)(f) (as amended by 2004 La. Acts 670).

(n40)Footnote 40. Couture v. G.W.M., Inc., 2002 WL 31962752 (N.H. Super. Ct. Dec. 3, 2002) (dealer used a contingency clause that required the consumer to agree in advance to an unspecified higher interest rate if the contract at the stated rate could not be assigned to a financer; allowed the case to go forward to determine if this clause violated the installment sales statute)

(n41)Footnote 41. See Fox v. Montell Corp., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3403 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 19, 2001) ; Williams v. Thomas Pontiac-GMC-Nissan-Hyundai, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15045 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 24, 1999) .

(n42)Footnote 42. See Pescia v. Auburn Ford-Lincoln Mercury, Inc., 68 F. Supp. 2d 1269 (M.D. Ala. 1999) .

(n43)Footnote 43. See Williams v. Thomas Pontiac-GMC-Nissan-Hyundai, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15045 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 22, 1999) (dealer did not have duty to proceed under U.C.C. § 9-504 in yo-yo sale because buyer was not in default; court allows other claims). See also Padin v. Oyster Point Dodge, 397 F. Supp. 2d 712, 724-725 (E.D. Va. 2005) (repossession was wrongful in yo-yo sale when buyer had made all required payments); Love v. O'Connor Chevrolet, Inc.,2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52612 (N.D. Ill. July 11, 2006) (repossession is wrongful following yo-yo sale when consumer's actions did not satisfy the contractual grounds for default; wrongful repossession following yo-yo sale can also be UDAP violation).

(n44)Footnote 44. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices § 7.3.9 (7th 2d. 2008).

(n45)Footnote 45. See National Consumer Law Center, Credit Discrimination Ch. 10 (4th ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n46)Footnote 46. N.H. Stat. § 361-A:10-b (effective July 23, 2004).

(n47)Footnote 47. Former U.C.C. § 1-201(37). Revised U.C.C. § 1-201(b)(35), so far adopted only by three jurisdictions, preserves this definition without substantive change.

(n48)Footnote 48. Revised U.C.C. § 9-406.

(n49)Footnote 49. U.C.C. § 2-711(1).

(n50)Footnote 50. A related issue is whether a consumer can continue to use a car after revocation. Although it is safer to advise a client not to do so, there are circumstances under which continued use is not inconsistent with revocation. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Warranty Law §§ 8.4.6.1, 8.4.6.3 (3d ed. 2006).

(n51)Footnote 51. See Detroit & N. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Woodworth, 54 Mich App. 517, 221 N.W.2d 190, 15 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 403 (1974) (consumer entitled to show that damages should be off-set against first ten installment payments).

(n52)Footnote 52. Revised U.C.C. § 9-110 [former U.C.C. § 2-711(3)]. See Revised U.C.C. § 9-110, Official Comment 4.

(n53)Footnote 53. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Warranty Law Appx. J.2 (3d ed. 2006 and Supp.) (sample letter).

(n54)Footnote 54. U.C.C. § 2-711(3).

(n55)Footnote 55. Notice requirements of state right to cure statutes have been affected by the federal Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act [hereinafter E-Sign] law, and state Uniform Electronic Transactions Acts [hereinafter UETAs]; see § 10.03[9][c] infra. These two statutes are also discussed in detail in National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law Ch. 9 (2d ed. 2002). See Meredith v. Pathfinders Detective & Recovery, Inc., 1983 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20367 (D.S.C. Nov. 9, 1983) (repossession without having provided notice of right to cure required by state statute was conversion and Fair Debt Collection Practices Act violation).

(n56)Footnote 56. 12 C.F.R. § 590.4. See 12 C.F.R. § 590.2(b) (definition of "federally-related").

(n57)Footnote 57. 12 U.S.C. § 1735f-7a.

(n58)Footnote 58. But note that if a mortgage loan is secured both by a first lien on the residential mobile home and by a first lien on real property, one court has held that the Depository Institutions Deregulation and Monetary Control Act of 1980 [hereinafter DIDA] applies even if the consumer safeguards specified in the regulations are not followed. In Nelson v. River Valley Bank & Trust, 334 Ark. 172, 971 S.W.2d 777 (1998) , the Arkansas Supreme Court reasoned that a historical note following the codification of DIDA directs that if more than one DIDA provision applies to a loan, the loan may be made at the highest applicable rate. Here, the provision governing a first lien on real property does not require consumer safeguards in order to trigger DIDA preemption, and thus permits an interest rate higher than state usury limits would allow.

(n59)Footnote 59. Farmers & Merchs. Bank v. Hancock, 506 So. 2d 305, 3 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1983 (Ala. 1987) (upholding $30,000 punitive damages and $26,000 damages for mental anguish where no good faith in acceleration of note and debtor voluntarily turned over collateral).

(n60)Footnote 60. Winkle Chevy-Olds Pontiac v. Condon, 830 S.W.2d 740 (Tex. App. 1992) (debtor not in default awarded damages for lost value of repossessed vehicle, lost business income and $25,000 punitive damages on conversion claim, in addition to $5,000 treble damages and $5,000 for mental anguish under state unfair and deceptive acts and practices [hereinafter UDAP] claim).

(n61)Footnote 61. Statutory damages under Revised U.C.C. § 9-625 [former U.C.C. § 9-507(1)] are 10% of the principal plus the whole finance charge.

(n62)Footnote 62. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6).

(n63)Footnote 63. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692(f)(6), 1692(a).

(n64)Footnote 64. Pub. L. No. 106-229, 114 Stat. 464 (2000). Key excerpts of the act's legislative history are posted on the Consumers Union website, http://www.consumersunion.org.

(n65)Footnote 65. Unif. Elec. Transactions Act, 7A U.L.A. 20 (Supp. 2000) (UETA). The text of UETA is reprinted as Appx. I.2.2 of National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law (4th ed. 2009). It is also available from the website of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (NCCUSL), www.nccusl.org, as is an up-to-date list of those states which have adopted the uniform act.

(n66)Footnote 66. E-Sign, 15 U.S.C. § 7003(a)(3); UETA § 3(b).

(n67)Footnote 67. Revised Article 9 defines "record" to include both written and electronic documents, and "authenticate" is defined to include traditional signatures and electronic signatures. Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(7) and (a)(69). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 4.8.3.2 (6th ed. 2005).

(n68)Footnote 68. 15 U.S.C. § 7003(b)(2)(B).

(n69)Footnote 69. On the other hand, the statutory language could be read to completely exclude those aspects of contracts that are covered by Article 9 from coverage by the E-Sign. In that case, the federal statute would be inapplicable to right to cure laws because they regulate the same aspects of contracts as Article 9 does.

(n70)Footnote 70. 15 U.S.C. § 7001(a), (b).

(n71)Footnote 71. 15 U.S.C. § 7002(a).

(n72)Footnote 72. See 15 U.S.C. § 7002(a). See also National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law, § 11.4.6 (4th ed. 2009) (detailed discussion of the opt-out provisions of E-Sign). Only two states, Arkansas and Louisiana, have enacted a uniform version of UETA after passage of E-Sign with the express intent of displacing E-Sign's consumer consent requirements. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law § 9.5.5.3.4, App. H (2d ed. 2002 and Supp.).

(n73)Footnote 73. 15 U.S.C. § 7001(c)(1)(A). A discussion of the requirements for valid consent under E-Sign is contained at § 1.05[2][a] supra .

(n74)Footnote 74. 15 U.S.C. § 7001(c)(2)(A).

(n75)Footnote 75. 15 U.S.C. § 7001.

(n76)Footnote 76. Arkansas and Louisiana. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law, § 11.4.5 (4th ed. 2009).

(n77)Footnote 77. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law, § 11.4.5 (4th ed. 2009).

(n78)Footnote 78. UETA § 5(b).

(n79)Footnote 79. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law, § 11.4.5.3 (4th ed.

2009).

(n80)Footnote 80. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law, § 11.4.5.4.3 (4th ed. 2009).

(n81)Footnote 81. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law, § 11.4.5.4.5 (4th ed. 2009).

(n82)Footnote 82. See National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Banking and Payments Law, § 11.4.6 (4th ed. 2009).

(n83)Footnote 83. UETA § 8(b)(3).

(n84)Footnote 84. 15 U.S.C. § 7101(c)(2)(B).

(n85)Footnote 85. UETA § 8(b)(2).

145 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 10 Repossessions

1-10 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 10.04

§ 10.04 Replevin

[1] Overview

[a] Replevin and Writ of Replevin

Upon debtor's default, the secured party can seize the collateral through self-help repossession or through judicial action. n1 These judicial procedures have different names in different states: replevin, detinue, claim and delivery, bail, sequestration, trover, or simply recovery of personal property. For convenience, this chapter refers to all of these statutory actions as "replevin."

Every state has a replevin statute and/or specific court rules on replevin proceedings. Replevin procedures will be found in the statutory or rule provisions for pre-judgment remedies, provisional remedies, or special proceedings.

Replevin is a costly and time-consuming process compared to self-help repossession. Most courts require strict compliance with the replevin statute. Creditors usually resort to a replevin action only when self-help repossession would lead to a breach of the peace, n2 or where self-help repossession is barred.

Replevin determines, between the secured party (or any other party seeking property) and the debtor (or other person possessing the property), the rightful possession of the property. If the creditor prevails, the court orders the sheriff to seize the collateral and turn it over to the creditor. In a replevin action, the court does not grant a judgment on the debt, order a judicial sale of the collateral, or award deficiency judgment. Replevin only determines possession of the disputed property, although a plaintiff may recover damages for depreciation or loss of use, and a number of state statutes permit the joinder of a replevin claim with a claim for the value of the property n3 (in these cases, a successful plaintiffmust elect between remedies to avoid double recovery). Creditors recovering the collateral through a replevin action must still dispose of the property according to UCC requirements just as if the creditor had resorted to self-help repossession.

[b] Debtor Strategies

The debtor has several responses to a replevin action. Where the proceeding is initiated via an ex parte writ of replevin, the debtor can challenge the method of issuing the writ of replevin as violative of the state replevin statute and of the U.S. Constitution, or may challenge it on substantive or jurisdictional grounds, raising defenses and counterclaims.

The debtor can also attack the adequacy of the creditor's bond or can post a counter-bond, regaining possession of the collateral, or can seek to have the replevin action dismissed and sue for damages if the creditor, after obtaining prejudgment custody of the collateral through a writ of replevin, fails to pursue the action on the merits, or if the creditor sells the collateral before a final judgment.

[2] Constitutional Standards Controlling Writ of Replevin

[a] General

State replevin procedures existing today typically meet constitutional requirements, but constitutional standards will be critical in many cases because courts will interpret ambiguous provisions in a manner so that they meet minimum constitutional standards. The seizure of the debtor's property without strict compliance with state procedures may violate not only the statute, but also Fourteenth Amendment due process or Fourth Amendment search and seizure standards.

[b] Due Process

In Fuentes v. Shevin, n4 the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the Florida and Pennsylvania writ of replevin procedures violated due process. Debtors were denied the right to notice and an opportunity to be heard before their property was seized. Fuentes and the lower court cases following it n5 held that the state could seize the debtor's property without a prior hearing only in extraordinary circumstances. In response, many state legislatures amended their replevin statute to require notice to the debtor and a hearing prior to the writ's issuance.

Two years later, the Court, in Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co., n6 upheld the Louisiana writ of replevin procedure (called a writ of sequestration) even though the creditor could obtain the writ on an ex parte application without notice to the debtor. The Court noted that the debtor was protected against loss by the creditor's bond, and then distinguished the Louisiana procedure from the Pennsylvania and Florida procedures it had earlier rejected.

The following year, the Court, in North Georgia Finishing v. Di-Chem,, n7 ruled that a Georgia wage garnishment procedure fell short of the Mitchell due process standards.

Mitchell and Di-Chem taken together indicate that an ex parte application for a writ of replevin satisfies due process only if the creditor files under oath the factual allegations upon which the claim is based; the creditor's affidavit specifically alleges grounds for the creditor's claim of possession that are readily susceptible to proof without an adversary hearing; the writ is issued under judicial supervision; the debtor has the right to an immediate post-seizure hearing; and the creditor posts a sufficient bond.

[c] Unreasonable Search and Seizure

Fuentes, Mitchell, and Di-Chem were decided only on due process grounds, but writ of replevin procedures must also comply with Fourth Amendment search and seizure standards. n8 The writ of replevin authorizes the sheriff to search the debtor's property, use force if necessary, and seize property in the debtor's possession. Thus, Fourth Amendment protections apply to replevin actions, in addition to criminal proceedings. n9

To prevent the sheriff from conducting an overbroad search, writs of replevin must specify with particularity the property to be seized and indicate where the property is to be found. The writ should be issued only if a judge has found probable cause for a search.

[d] State Constitutional Provisions

The search and seizure and due process provisions of state constitutions have been read more expansively than the U.S. Supreme Court's current interpretations of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments. Consumer attorneys can argue that such provisions, or state provisions for rights without federal counterparts, forbid the issuance of ex parte writs of replevin.

[3] Challenging Writs Issued Ex Parte.

[a] Introduction

Creditors prefer to apply for writs of replevin ex parte when this is possible. Ex parte hearings minimize the creditor's paperwork, expedite the process, and give the creditor significant leverage over the debtor by seizing the collateral before the debtor can raise defenses. However, ex parte hearings must meet strict constitutional and statutory guidelines.

Creditors can only obtain writs of replevin ex parte if authorized by a particular state statute or rule, and not all states authorize this procedure.

States have redrafted their writ of replevin procedures to meet standards enunciated in Fuentes, Mitchell, and Di-Chem. Consequently, a debtor will likely fail in a challenge of a state's current procedures as unconstitutional on their face. n10

A constitutional challenge may be successful if the creditor applies for an ex parte writ under the wrong statute's procedures. If the creditor utilizes the correct statute, debtor attorneys should concentrate their efforts in determining whether the creditor's application for the ex parte writ strictly followed those procedures in all respects.

Most state replevin statutes limit the creditor's ability to obtain a writ ex parte to specified situations, such as where the creditor can establish that the debtor is likely to conceal, destroy, remove from the state, or fraudulently transfer the collateral. n11

For an ex parte writ to meet due process standards, the creditor must file an affidavit justifying the creditor's superior right to the collateral. Someone with actual knowledge of the allegations must swear to the affidavit, and the affidavit must indicate specific facts readily susceptible to proof without an adversary proceeding. An affidavit containing only conclusory allegations by one not having personal knowledge of the facts does not satisfy due process requirements. n12

Debtor attorneys should make certain that a judge and not just a clerk reviewed the ex parte application and signed the writ.

[b] The Post-Seizure Hearing

Debtors have a due process right to an immediate hearing after their property has been seized pursuant to an ex parte writ. n13 Debtors must receive adequate and timely notice of the right to a hearing. The failure to hold the hearing at the location specified in the notice is sufficient grounds to open a default judgment and overturn the writ of replevin.

[c] Debtor's Consent to the Seizure

Creditors may defend against a debtor's due process challenge by pointing to a provision in the credit agreement whereby the debtor consents to the creditor's repossession of the collateral. But courts should reject this defense for several reasons: it is unlikely the debtor knowingly consented to the sheriff seizing the collateral and courts should not enforce adhesive consumer credit agreements that waive consumers' constitutional due process rights. The mere inclusion in the credit agreement of a waiver of the consumer's right to a hearing on a replevin action violates the FTC's

Credit Practices Rule. n14

[d] Debtor Remedies

Where the debtor has been deprived of property through an unconstitutional process, the debtor has an action under 42 U.S.C. section 1983 for a civil rights violation.

The debtor may also prevail on a state law claim for violation of the writ of replevin procedure.

[4] Challenging Writ of Replevin at Hearing Prior to or Immediately After Seizure

[a] Right to a Hearing

Debtors have a constitutional and statutory right to contest the seizure of their property, either at a hearing before or immediately after the seizure. At the hearing, the debtor has an opportunity to object to the writ of replevin. The opportunity for a hearing must be meaningful and the debtor must be given a chance to present his defense. n15

[b] The Court's Jurisdiction to Issue Writ

A writ can be properly issued only if the creditor applies to a court that has both jurisdiction and proper venue to seize the debtor's property. n16

[c] Replevin Statute's Application to Mobile Home Seizures

A state replevin statute will not apply to mobile homes seizures where the state replevin statute applies only to personalty, and the state treats mobile homes as realty for purposes of secured transactions. n17

[d] Has a Complaint Been Filed?

State replevin procedures may require the creditor to file an adequate complaint in the replevin action and arrange for the debtor to receive a proper summons before the court will issue a writ of replevin. The debtor's attorney should argue that the writ should not issue if the complaint has not been filed or is not adequate.

[e] Debtor's Substantive Defenses and Counterclaims

The debtor's statutory right to a hearing before or immediately after issuance of the writ is based upon a constitutional due process requirement. Debtors should thus claim the right at that hearing to a full airing of their defenses and/or counterclaims. n18 In Wisconsin, the consumer may reinstate the contract and obtain possession of the collateral even after replevin. n19 Reinstatement requires paying the amount in default, court costs and certain other costs, and a performance deposit of three installments.

[f] Attorney's Fees

Under some state replevin statutes, attorney's fees may be available to the successful defendant.

[5] Creditor's Bond and Debtor's Counter-Bond

[a] Challenging the Creditor's Bond

Creditors must post an adequate bond with sufficient sureties to obtain temporary custody of the collateral pending the replevin trial on the merits. If the debtor prevails on the merits, the bond protects the debtor from damage to the collateral. Replevin statutes specify the amount of the bond, usually double the collateral's value. Where the writ of replevin is issued ex parte, the failureto post an adequate bond is a due process violation that can lead to a civil rights action.

[b] Posting a Counter-Bond

An alternative debtor strategy to challenging the size of the bond or sufficiency of the sureties is for the debtor to post a counter-bond, although strict time limits for filing the counter-bond may be imposed on the debtor. Most states' replevin procedures allow the debtor to retain the collateral pending the trial on the merits by posting a counter-bond, although strict time limits for filing the counter-bond may be imposed on the debtor. A few state statutes allow the waiver or reduction of counter-bonds in cases of indigency or hardship.

[6] Debtor Resistance to Sheriff's Seizure of Collateral

Consumer attorneys should advise their clients not to resist the sheriff when the sheriff comes to seize the collateral pursuant to a writ of replevin. The debtor's remedy is limited to a damage action if the debtor can show the seizure was wrongful.

[7] The Trial on the Merits

[a] Creditor Failure to Pursue Replevin Action

The writ of replevin gives the creditor temporary custody of the collateral pending the outcome of the trial on the merits. If the creditor, satisfied with possession of the collateral, does not pursue the replevin action to final judgment, the debtor may be able to obtain a non-suit or other sanctions. The creditor will have to return the collateral to the debtor and will be liable for the debtor's damages.

[b] Consumer's Counterclaims and Substantive Defense

Consumer attorneys should not neglect defending the replevin action itself. The trial on the merits will give the debtor a chance to fully air all possible defenses. Any defenses relating to both the security interest and the underlying obligation should be raised. n20

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)Sales (Article 2)RemediesBuyer's RemediesReplevin & Specific PerformanceCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultCreditor MisbehaviorRemedies for NoncomplianceCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionEnforcement

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Revised U.C.C. § 9-609 [former U.C.C. § 9-503].

(n2)Footnote 2. Revised U.C.C. § 9-609 [former U.C.C. § 9-503].

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., Ala. Code § 6-6-250; Wis. Stat. § 810.14. See also Aircraft Repair Servs. v. Stambaugh's Air Serv., Inc., 175 F.3d 314 (3d Cir. 1999) (under Pennsylvania law, replevin is not an action for damages, although damages may be available "incidentally"); Lozada v. Dale Baker Oldsmobile, Inc., 145 F. Supp. 2d 878 (W.D. Mich. 2001) (replevin procedure can only be used to recover specific personal property and does not provide general remedy for recovery of damages); Ivey v. Verbeck, 461 So. 2d 813 (Ala. Civ. App. 1984) ; Innovative Material Sys. v. Santa Rosa Utils., Inc., 721 So. 2d 1233 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1998) (claim for replevin may be joined with claim for value of property; plaintiff must then elect between inconsistent remedies before the entry of judgment); Demetree v. Stramondo, 621 So. 2d 740 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1993) ; Roush v. Mahaska State Bank, 605 N.W.2d 6 (Iowa 2000) (although damages are available in a replevin action, replevin is not an action for damages; as truck owner improperly filed replevin complaint against bank which had already returned wrongfully repossessed truck, Iowa's notice pleading rules allowed him to maintain an action for conversion, i.e., for depreciation and loss of use of truck); Security Pac. Fin. Servs. v. Signfilled Corp., 125*N.M. 38, 956 P.2d 837 (Ct. App. 1998)* (where creditor who brought replevin and conversion actions had already repossessed mobile home, it had elected replevin and could obtain damages only for wrongful detention, i.e., for depreciation during time while home was wrongfully held); First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. A & M Towing & Rd. Serv., 127 Ohio App. 3d 46, 711 N.E.2d 755 (1998) (in replevin action, plaintiff may seek, in the alternative, return of property or money damages); Global Steel Prods. Corp. v. Ecklund Carriers, Inc., 253 Wis. 2d 588, 644 N.W.2d 269 (2002) (replevin remedy is return of property plus damages for its decrease in value while wrongfully held; alternative is value of property).

(n4)Footnote 4. 407 U.S. 67, 92 S. Ct. 1983, 32 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1972) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Turner v. Colonial Fin. Corp., 467 F.2d 202 (5th Cir. 1972) (interpreting Mississippi law); Stuckers v. Thomas, 374 F. Supp. 178 (D.S.D. 1974) ; Thompson v. Keesee, 375 F. Supp. 195 (E.D. Ky. 1974) . See also Leslie v. Lacy, 91 F. Supp. 2d 1182 (S.D. Ohio 2000) (on appeal) (Ohio statute permitting transfer of title to lienholders of motor vehicles, including mobile homes, was unconstitutional both on its face and as applied, because it provided for no notice to consumer before or after transfer, did not require proof of exigent circumstances, and provided no opportunity for a hearing).

(n6)Footnote 6. 416 U.S. 600, 94 S. Ct. 1895, 40 L. Ed. 2d 406 (1974) .

(n7)Footnote 7. 419 U.S. 601, 95 S. Ct. 719, 42 L. Ed. 2d 751 (1975) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See, e.g., In re Foust, 310 F.3d 849 (5th Cir. 2002) (genuine issue of fact whether locking up store for period of hours to inventory contents and remove fixtures was an unreasonable search); Audio Odyssey, Ltd. v. Brenton First Nat'l Bank, 245 F.3d 721 (8th Cir. 2001) (overlong seizure of real property in course of replevin of inventory and turning over keys to creditor violated Fourth Amendment), aff'd on reh'g, 286 F.3d 498 (8th Cir. 2002) (en banc). See also Bernstein v. Roberts, 405 F. Supp. 2d 34 (D.D.C. 2005) (Fourth Amendment applies equally to civil or criminal matters; wife of judgment debtor stated claim when federal marshals searched home pursuant to expired writ).

(n9)Footnote 9. See, e.g., Waters v. Graham, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8688 (D. Or. May 18, 1999) (extensive discussion of cases concerning application of Fourth Amendment to civil searches; although probable cause and specificity are guiding standards in civil as well as criminal cases, a "less strict or particularized showing" is sufficient for a civil seizure); Owens v. Swan, 962 F. Supp. 1436 (D. Utah 1997) ; see also Abbott v. Latshaw, 164 F.3d 141 (3d Cir. 1998) , cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1035, 119 S. Ct. 2393, 144 L. Ed. 2d 794 (1999) (where ex-husband alleged that constable, police and ex-wife wrongfully seized van without due process, he should have been given leave to amend complaint to add count alleging Fourth Amendment violation).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Audio Odyssey, Ltd. v. Brenton First Nat'l Bank, 245 F.3d 721 (8th Cir. 2001) (Iowa replevin statute that allows ex parte application for writ of replevin not unconstitutional on its face), aff'd on reh'g, 286 F.3d 498 (8th Cir. 2002) (en banc); In re Foust, 310 F.3d 849 (5th Cir. 2002) (denial of due process when court failed to make finding that pre-seizure hearing was not feasible; constitutionality of Mississippi statute "an open question" when courts have construed it to require a hearing whenever feasible but not articulated criteria for granting ex parte writ).

(n11)Footnote 11. See Quality Ford of Mt. Vernon v. Metro Auto Leasing, Inc., 172 Misc. 2d 635, 660 N.Y.S.2d 341 (Sup. Ct. 1997) (merely quoting statutory language is insufficient; creditor must allege some basis for belief that property may be concealed or removed). See also Audio Odyssey, Ltd. v. Brenton First Nat'l Bank, 245 F.3d 721 (8th Cir. 2001) (in upholding constitutionality of Iowa replevin statute, court interpreted statute to require plaintiff to substantiate legal basis for obtaining ex parte writ of replevin, even though statute did not contain express requirement, holding that statute as written could be construed to require such a showing, and that statute grants court the authority to provide advance notice and hearing when circumstances are not exigent); Weil v. Macri, 2002 Conn. Super. LEXIS 743 (Conn. Super. Ct. Mar. 6, 2002) (affidavit was sufficient); Lennox Retail, Inc. v. McMillan, 786 So. 2d 1252 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2001) (allegations in unverified counterclaim insufficient); In re Foust, 310 F.3d 849 (5th Cir. 2002) (complaint "too skeletal" for due process, because it failed to clearly identify things to be seized). Georgia prohibits the issuance of an immediate writ of possession for interests in property arising out of consumer transactions. Ga. Code Ann. §§ 44-14-260 to 44-14-261; see also Wash. State Employees Credit Union v. Robinson, 427 S.E.2d 15 (Ga. Ct. App. 1992) (no writ of immediate possession may issue on a security interest arising from a consumer transaction); Tempur-pedic Int'l, Inc. v. Waste to Charity, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11435 (W.D. Ark. Feb. 16, 2007) (describing Arkansas short-form replevin procedure; ex parte writ requires showing of danger of concealment, destruction, or removal from jurisdiction); Ford Motor Credit Co. v. N. Associates, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6819 (M.D. Pa. Jan. 31, 2007) (ex parte writ requires showing of likelihood of success on merits and either that defendant will conceal, dispose of, waste, encumber, or remove the property, or that its value will be adversely affected; neither shown here); In re Bursztyn, 366 B.R. 353, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 1207 (Bankr. D.N.J. Apr. 10, 2007) (approving ex parte writ of replevin by bankruptcy trustee to obtain jewelry concealed by debtor when evidence showed that debtor possessed the jewelry and was likely to conceal or remove it).

(n12)Footnote 12. See McMurrain v. Fason, 573 So. 2d 915 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1991) .

(n13)Footnote 13. North Georgia Finishing, Inc. v. Di-Chem, Inc., 419 U.S. 601, 95 S. Ct. 719, 42 L. Ed. 2d 751 (1975) ; Mitchell v. W. T. Grant Co., 416 U.S. 600, 94 S. Ct. 1895, 40 L. Ed. 2d 406 (1974) ; Associates Commercial Corp. v. Wood, 22 F. Supp. 2d 502 (D. Md. 1998) (Md. Transp. Code article dealing with abandoned vehicles was unconstitutional, when it provided no opportunity for a hearing before the deprivation became final, i.e., before the new possessor obtained salvage title and could dismantle the vehicle); Crown Builders v. Stowe Eng'g Corp., 8 F. Supp. 2d 483 (D.V.I. 1998) (Virgin Islands prejudgment attachment statute, construed so as to save its constitutionality, requires pre-seizure hearing to give defendant opportunity to post security as permitted by other section of statute); Thornton v. Carson, 111 Ariz. 490, 533 P.2d 657 (1975) ; Collection Prof'ls, Inc. v. Logan, 695 N.E.2d 1344 (Ill. App. Ct. 1998) (Illinois's amended non-wage garnishment statute satisfied due process requirements; notice must be provided within two days of the garnishment, but hearing might be twenty-one to thirty days afterwards).

(n14)Footnote 14. 16 C.F.R. § 444.2(a)(1). 16 C.F.R. pt. 444 is reprinted in Vol. 1A infra.

(n15)Footnote 15. Kingswood S., Inc. v. J.I. Case Credit Corp., 623 So. 2d 584 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1993) ; Baldwin v. First Nat'l Bank, 362 N.W.2d 85 (S.D. 1985) . See Soltesz v. Miller, 56 Conn. App. 114, 741 A.2d 335 (1999) (hearing on application for prejudgment attachment must provide opportunity for each party to present evidence; hearing was inadequate because plaintiff was not given opportunity to present evidence); Matza v. West, 2000 Conn. Super. LEXIS 516 (Conn. Super. Ct. Feb. 25, 2000) (if affidavit seeking a pre-judgment remedy is properly executed but factually insufficient, it may be supplemented by evidence presented at the hearing; plaintiff was entitled to a hearing and the opportunity to present such evidence).

(n16)Footnote 16. See, e.g., Leasing Techs. Int'l, Inc. v. Uniscribe Prof'l Servs., Inc., 2002 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2638 (Conn. Super. Ct. Aug. 1, 2002) (Connecticut court had no power to order replevin of goods located outside Connecticut); Pondella Hall for Hire, Inc. v. City of St. Cloud, 837 So. 2d 510 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2003) (replevin action seeking return of property seized as part of criminal investigation, which did not result in conviction or forfeiture, must be brought in the court that issued the warrant). But see Atlantic Bank of N.Y. v. Metropolitan Food Group, LLC, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4164 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 20, 2003) (New York replevin action may be brought in any county where venue otherwise lies, N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7102(d)(1)); Atl. Bank v. Metro. Food Group, LLC, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4164 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 19, 2003) (under New York law, replevin may be brought in any county in which venue is otherwise proper, here, county of plaintiff's residence).

(n17)Footnote 17. See, e.g., Altegra Credit Co. v. Banks (In re Timothy Banks), 259 B.R. 848 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2001) (whether mobile home placed upon real property subject to foreclosure has become part of the realty must be decided on case-by-case basis based on common law doctrine of fixtures, including intent of owner in annexing mobile home to realty); BankAmerica Hous. Servs. v. P.D.N. & Assocs., 159 Or. App. 264, 977 P.2d 396, 37 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1158 (1999) (under Oregon law, manufactured homes become fixtures only if they are exempt from certificate of title requirements, which can occur when new manufactured structure is located on land owned by the purchaser; real estate law controls only after an exemption acquired). See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions § 5.2 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp).

(n18)Footnote 18. See Chrysler Fin. Co. v. Flynn, 88 S.W.3d 142 (Mo. Ct. App. 2002) (validity of breach of warranty claim must be determined before creditor's replevin claim can be resolved).

(n19)Footnote 19. Wis. Stat. § 425.208.

(n20)Footnote 20. See, e.g., Chrysler Fin. Co. v. Flynn, 88 S.W.3d 142 (Mo. Ct. App. 2002) (replevin of truck; counterclaims for breach of warranty, and various state torts; remanded to determine whether truck used for amateur farming was a consumer good, the key issue on the warranty claim; if warranty breached, consumer not in default and lender not entitled to replevin).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 10 Repossessions

1-10 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 10.05

§ 10.05 Self-Help Repossession

[1] Introduction n1

Self-help repossession is just what the name describes: the secured creditor's employee or agent takes the pledged property from the debtor's possession. The most widespread restriction on such action is that the creditor cannot breach the peace. A creditor's use of force or threats, taking property over the debtor's objection, impersonating government officials, or trespassing into the debtor's home are all possible breaches of the peace and, therefore, wrongful forms of repossession -- a tort. Creditors could claim consent, waiver, or that they are not responsible for misconduct by an independent contractor performing the repossession as defenses to such a tort claim.

[2] Representing the Client Before Repossession

[a] Voluntary Surrender

Debtors in default and unable to meet payments can surrender the collateral voluntarily to the secured party, rather than wait for the creditor to repossess. Voluntary surrender may save the consumer the creditor's repossession costs because these expenses are deducted from the collateral's sale proceeds before the remaining balance is credited to the consumer's outstanding debt. n2 Voluntary surrender also insures that the repossessor does not seize other debtor property in addition to the collateral (tools left in a car's trunk or cash left in the glove compartment), and does not damage the collateral or other property during repossession and can speed up the collateral's sale date, increasing the sale price for goods that depreciate.

The debtor's offer of voluntary surrender should be made only in return for concessions from the creditor, such as waiving its right to seek a deficiency and promising not to include the default in any credit report. This should constitute an accord and satisfaction. n3 Creditors may agree, if the debtor resumes making payments, not to sell the collateral and to return the property after a certain number of payments are made or to allow the debtor to sell the collateral in return for immediately turning over all or some of the sale proceeds to the creditor.

But voluntary surrender's financial advantages are sharply limited where state law prohibits the creditor from seeking a deficiency after disposing of the collateral.

[i] Other Pre-Repossession Options

Bankruptcy is another option that consumers should consider. The automatic stay will prevent repossession. Filing bankruptcy before repossession may be important in jurisdictions that mistakenly conclude that the bankruptcy court can not order the creditor to turn the property back over to the debtor after repossession.

[b] False Threats to Repossess

A debtor's attorney first should determine if a debt collector's threat to repossess collateral is lawful. False threats of legal action to collect a debt repeatedly have been held to be a deceptive practice.

A false threat to repossess collateral (as well as an unlawful repossession of collateral generally) violates 15 U.S.C. section 1692f(6), the core section of the Federal FDCPA to which repossession agents are subject. n4 Other misconduct by a repossessor may violate the FDCPA, so long as the repossessor qualifies as a "debt collector." Even though creditors are not generally covered by the FDCPA, if a creditor's employee falsely poses as a third party to threaten repossession, the creditor is covered. n5

[c] Resisting Repossession Attempts

[i] When Clients Should Object

A debtor's attorney should take several steps to assist a client threatened with repossession. The attorney can notify the creditor that the creditor is not allowed on the debtor's property, that the debtor objects to any repossession attempts, and that the creditor should not use force, threats or intimidation to obtain the collateral. The client and their family should be advised not to consent to the creditor entering the debtor's home or to the creditor repossessing the collateral. The creditor cannot use force, threats or intimidation to repossess the collateral, and the debtor should clearly object to any taking. The creditor has no right to enter the debtor's property and cannot repossess the collateral on a public street if the debtor is there and objects. The client should try to have witnesses to any attempted repossession, so that they can testify about the debtor's objections or the creditor's trespass, use of force, or threats. If the repossessor ignores the debtor's objections, the police can be called, but the debtor always is limited to verbal and passive resistance and should be emphatically advised not to resort to violence.

Clients should be advised not to resist seizure by a sheriff or other government official. Interference with a sheriff's carrying out a writ of replevin may subject the debtor to contempt of court or criminal sanctions.

The debtor should also ask the official for identification to determine if the individual is a government official or an employee of the creditor simulating official status.

In some states, there may be a risk in advising a client to resist repossession because of possible prosecution under federal or state laws for concealing collateral with intent either to defraud a creditor or hinder enforcement of a security interest. n6 An attorney also may run afoul of state ethical rules by advising or suggesting that a client conceal collateral. n7

[3] Bars to Repossession

[a] General

The UCC authorizes the secured party on default to take possession of the collateral without judicial process if this can be done without breach of the peace. n8

Another limitation to the right to repossess is that a creditor cannot repossess additional items of collateral where seizure of an earlier item satisfies the obligation.

[b] Statutes Prohibiting Repossession

Louisiana and Wisconsin prohibit self-help repossession outright, limiting the creditor to obtaining the collateral through judicial process or the debtor's voluntary surrender. The Wisconsin Consumer Act limits the creditor to judicial action to recover the collateral, unless the debtor voluntarily surrenders the property. These restrictions apply to motor vehicle consumer leases as well, as long as the total lease obligation does not exceed $25,000. n9 In 2005, however, Wisconsin amended its laws, effective April 13, 2006, to create an exception that allows self-help repossession of motor vehicles that are collateral for debts. The exception also covers any goods that are subject to a motor vehicle lease. The secured party must not enter the consumer's home or breach the peace, and must mail the consumer a pre-repossession notice. If the consumer responds by demanding that the creditor proceed in court, the creditor must do so. n10

Other statutes forbid repossession absent the debtor's express consent. n11 Massachusetts allows self-help repossession only if the default is material and consists of failure to make one or more payments, or the occurrence of an event which substantially impairs the value of the collateral. The creditor is not allowed to enter upon property owned by or rented to the debtor unless the debtor consents to an entry, at the time of such entry. n12

[c] Limits on Self-Help Seizure of Mobile Homes

Mobile homes are exempt from repossession in several states. As a practical matter, the non-voluntary repossession of an occupied mobile home is virtually certain to violate provisions of law prohibiting the taking of unsecured property and may constitute a trespass (and therefore a breach of peace). n13 Colorado allows self-help repossession of mobile homes without the debtor's consent only if there is clear and convincing evidence that the debtor has vacated or abandoned the mobile home or the debtor voluntarily surrenders it. n14

[d] Limits on Seizure of Other Specific Types of Goods

Other secured property may also be exempt from self-help repossession under state laws.

[e] Specially Protected Debtors

[i] Military Personnel and Dependents

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act [formerly the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act], n15 and some state laws, provide military personnel and their dependents with significant protection against self-help repossession. The federal Act prohibits creditors from repossessing collateral where the debt arises before the debtor entered military service. n16 This prohibition applies not only to transactions governed by UCC Article 9, but also to any "lease or bailment of such property." n17 The prohibition against self-help repossession applies regardless of whether there are co-obligors or co-owners. The creditor is limited to a judicial action to recover the collateral, and the court, even on its own motion, can stay the proceedings if the debtor's entry into the military service affects the debtor's ability to repay the debt, or make other disposition as is equitable to preserve the interests of all parties. n18 Debtors may have similar protection if they have difficulty paying creditors because of injury or illness resulting from military service. n19 The Act's protections against repossession are particularly potent in combination with its requirement that creditors reduce the interest rate on obligations to six percent if the debtor enters military service. n20 The only exception is if, upon application of the creditor, a court determines that the debtor's ability to pay the original interest rate is not materially affected by military service. n21 This reduction in the interest rate may mean that a debtor who has been able to make at least reduced payments may not be in default.

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act provides misdemeanor penalties of $1000 and one year imprisonment for violations, including a creditor's self-help repossession of protected property. The legislation does not provide a private right of action per se, but at least one court has interpreted the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act as providing such a right. n22 Moreover, a conversion action should be available for wrongful repossessions. n23

Unless the repossession occurs without the knowledge of the debtor, any repossession on a military base will necessarily be wrongful, either as a violation of constitutional due process or, if the repossessor fails to seek the assistance of the military police, as a violation of law and regulations applicable to conduct on the base. n24

[ii] Native Americans

Native Americans living on a reservation are also specially protected if tribal law restricts or prohibits self-help repossession, as many tribal codes do. n25 The Supreme Court has suggested that courts should defer to the repossession statutes of Native American tribes because tribes have the power to regulate the activities of nonmembers who enter into consensual relationships with tribe members through contracts and other commercial dealings. n26 Punitive damages may also be recoverable, even against non-Indian defendants. n27

Native American laws may even protect against repossessions that occur off tribal land. The North Dakota Supreme Court upheld a tribal court judgment finding self-help repossession wrongful under tribal law applicable to the Three Affiliated Tribes on the Fort Berthold Reservation. n28 The court held that the tribal court judgment was entitled to comity even though both the repossession and the initial contract formation occurred off tribal land.

[f] Due Process Considerations

[i] When Is There Sufficient State Action?

Since self-help repossession offers debtors only minimal due process, the critical issue is whether there is sufficient state action to trigger the constitutional due process protections.

At least seven of the twelve U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeal have considered the extent of state action in self-help repossession and unanimously have ruled that there is insufficient state action to trigger due process requirements. n29 Similarly, state courts consistently find that self-help repossession does not violate state constitutional requirements. n30

Nevertheless, there are several contexts where a debtor can claim that constitutional standards prohibit self-help repossession. Due process rights arise where the government itself is the creditor. n31 In addition, where a sheriff or other official accompanies the creditor when the goods are repossessed, virtually all cases hold that there is sufficient state action to convert a permissible self-help remedy into a constitutional tort. n32

One must distinguish the sheriff seizing collateral pursuant to a valid writ of replevin (which meets due process requirements if certain guidelines are followed) from the sheriff, with no prior legal process, informally accompanying the creditor during a self-help repossession (which constitutes sufficient state action to trigger a due process violation).

In addition to constitutional due process, police involvement in self-help repossession may also trigger rights under the Fourth Amendment, which prohibits unreasonable searches and seizures. n33

[ii] Private Remedies Where Due Process Violated

Debtors showing state action in a repossession still face questions of whom to sue. In brief, individual police officers who participate in the repossession are immune from liability under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 if they act in good faith, based upon an objectively reasonable understanding of the law at the time of their actions. n34 The municipality may not be liable either unless its "official policy" was to allow such police assistance in repossessions. Of course, the debtor may still have an action against the repossessor who, as a private party subject to section 1983 liability, is not entitled to claim qualified good faith immunity, n35 but courts have not yet resolved whether a private party can raise good faith as an affirmative defense. n36

If a party is liable under section 1983, the consumer can recover damages, including recovery for mental anguish. n37 Punitive damages are available where the creditor's conduct is wanton or egregious. A 42 U.S.C. section 1983 action also authorizes recovery of attorney fees and injunctive relief.

[4] Repossession Must Not Breach the Peace

[a] Introduction

The most important restriction on the creditor's use of self-help is that the repossession must not breach the peace. n38 Breach of the peace may involve bodily force, threats, trespass, or, in some cases, even deception or trickery. The general rule is that the creditor cannot utilize force or threats, cannot enter the debtor's residence without consent, and cannot seize any property over the debtor's objections.

The 1999 revisions to Article 9 provide that the debtor cannot waive the prohibition against breach of the peace. n39 Indeed, the parties cannot even incorporate into the agreement a standard for determining whether the creditor has breached the peace. n40 The 1999 revisions also make it clear that courts should hold the secured party responsible for the actions of others taken on the secured party's behalf, including independent contractors engaged by the secured party to take possession of the collateral. n41

[B] Bodily Force and Threats

A repossessor's use of physical force on the person (not necessarily the debtor) is a breach of the peace.

A breach of the peace can occur if the secured party damages the debtor's property during the repossession. Threats can also breach the peace, such as a creditor's violent and abusive language reasonably calculated to intimidate or lead to a breach of the peace. n42 The federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act also prohibits the use or threat of use of violence in debt collection, n43 although its coverage of repossessions has significant limitations.

[c] Repossession Despite Consumer's Objection Breaches the Peace

Repossession over the debtor's objection also breaches the peace because the dispute may lead to violent confrontation, but the debtor must object.

The objection of a third party, particularly one related to the debtor, is as effective as the debtor's own objection. The taking does not breach the peace if the confrontation occurs after the repossessor has validly gained possession of the property for the secured party.

[d] Trespass

[i] General

In considering whether a creditor's trespass on debtor's property is a breach of the peace, courts have looked at two factors: the potential for immediate violence and the nature of the property. Thus, trespass into a residence will almost certainly constitute breach of the peace, while entry on an open driveway will depend on other circumstances. Entry on the property of a non-debtor to take possession of collateral is likely to be a trespass unless the property owner consents. n43.1

[ii] Public Street or Private Driveway

One of the most frequent self-help methods is seizing a vehicle while it is parked on a public street or private driveway. Courts find no breach of the peace where the repossessor surreptitiously seizes a vehicle from a public street, the parking lot of the debtor's apartment building late at night, a public parking lot with the keys left in the car's ignition, the debtor's place of employment with the use of a duplicate key, the dealer's lot, a private driveway adjacent to debtor's home, the debtor's open garage, or an unenclosed carport.

Entry into a closed garage, even without a physical breaking, is usually treated as being analogous to entering the debtor's home and, thus, breaches the peace.

[iii] Residence

The courts discourage any unauthorized entry by the creditor into the debtor's residence. Virtually any entry into a residential structure without the consent of the debtor is a breach. Mobile homes are no exception.

The same rule as to any entry of a private residence may also apply to entry into debtor's place of business.

[e] Use of a Police Officer

If the seizure is not pursuant to a writ of replevin or other court order, the government official's participation is probably based on the creditor's informal request. If so, this official participation almost always constitutes sufficient state action to require the repossession to meet due process standards. The creditor's seizure would then constitute a civil rights violation. If the creditor's agent misrepresented himself as a government official in an attempt to forestall debtor objections to the seizure, courts are likely to find a wrongful repossession, even if the debtor mistakenly consents to the taking. n44 Misrepresentation of arepossessor's government affiliation may also violate the FDCPA, and the state deceptive practices act.

[f] Deception, Trickery, Stealth

As long as the creditor does not misrepresent the involvement of the law in the repossession, courts generally permit the creditor to repossess collateral with the use of stealth, trickery, or fraud.

But a minority of courts hold otherwise. A repossession agent's deceptive statements to a police officer called to the scene may be an element in finding a breach of the peace. n45 There is also an argument that the UCC's incorporation of an obligation of good faith into every contract and duty within the UCC imposes a duty on the creditor to avoid intentional misrepresentation during the repossession. n46

[5] Other Repossession Restrictions

[a] Method of Seizure

Creditor repossession practices are further restricted by other state and federal legislation. Small loan legislation, installment sales acts, state credit codes, and other statutes may limit the creditor's entry into the debtor's dwelling, n47 use of force, n48 or even entry into a locked motor vehicle. State law may also specify what entities are authorized to engage in self-help repossession, such as licensed personnel, employees of the creditor, or automobile dealers. The FDCPA includes a number of restrictions on independent debt collectors.

[b] Notice of Repossession

A number of states have right to cure laws that require a notice to consumers, and a right to cure, before the creditor repossesses the collateral. In addition, other states provide notice to the consumer before collateral can be seized, even though not providing a statutory right to cure. But in virtually all other states, no notice is required before the repossession.

In every state, after collateral is seized, the creditor must eventually notify the consumer concerning the sale or other disposition of that collateral.

[c] Limitations on Professional Repossessors

A few states require that those in the business of repossessing property be licensed, or at least follow certain guidelines.

[d] Creditor's Agreement Not to Repossess

Former UCC section 9-503 provided a right to self-help repossession "unless otherwise agreed." While this language does not appear in the 1999 revision of the provision regarding self-help repossession, Revised U.C.C. section 9-609, the same principle is established for all parts of the UCC by former section 1-102(3) and (4). Where a creditor has agreed after default not to repossess for a certain time period or until conditions are met, repossession in violation of the agreement is wrongful and subject to a claim for conversion.

[6] Electronic Repossessions

A few used car dealers, primarily subprime, buy-here, pay-here dealerships, have begun using a controversial new method of "repossession," which electronically disables a vehicle if the monthly loan payment is not made. Dealers using this system install a device, also known as "electronic on-time payment system," or "collateral disabling device," in the vehicle which is serving as collateral for a purchase-money loan. n49 The device includes a timing mechanism which is set by the dealer to allow the car to start for a set period of time, usually thirty days. If a payment is not made by the end of the thirty day period, the car will not start. Some systems use a code, which the borrower is given each month when payment is made, which allows the borrower to start the car for another thirty-day period. Another system uses a special key fob which the dealer programs each month when the borrower comes in to make a payment. The key fob is passed over a reader in the vehicle which allows it to start. The device is not intended to disable the vehicle while moving, but only to prevent it from being started if the borrower falls behind in payments.

Devices also exist that use global positioning technology to track the location of a car. These devices can be connected to the vehicle's ignition so that the starter can be disabled remotely. Some of the companies selling these devices advertise them as a means of repossession.

The use of these devices to repossess or enforce a security interest raises a number of issues under Article 9. A threshold issue is whether disabling a vehicle is even a repossession under the UCC. Although the creditor does not take physical possession of the vehicle, it does render it unusable for the borrower, as much as if the creditor had taken possession.

If disabling the vehicle electronically is in fact a repossession, it would seem that in states where the consumer has a right to cure a default in payments, n50 that notice (in accordance with the state right to cure statute) would have to precede the disabling of the vehicle. In addition, if the dealer or creditor uses electronic repossession when it is not legally entitled to repossession, because, for example, the consumer has revoked acceptance or is rightfully withholding payments, then the UCC penalties for wrongful repossession would apply. n51

The use of these devices may give rise to other claims as well. n52

Electronic self-help may also be practiced by computer software companies to restrict the use of software by a licensee. Typically the electronic self-help used by the software industry will be some sort of built-in deactivation, rather than remote disabling. The Uniform Computer Information Transactions Act ("UCITA"), adopted in two states, n53 contained a provision limiting the use of electronic self-help for licensed software. In 2002, however, in response to significant controversy and opposition generated by UCITA, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws adopted amendments to the model law that prohibit electronic self-help. n54 This prohibition can not be waived or varied by a pre-default agreement. n55 Instead, UCITA allows the licensor to seek a prejudgment injunction against further use, and authorizes the court to award attorney fees to the party who prevails in the injunction proceeding. n56

[7] Debtor's Consent as Defense to Wrongful Repossession

The debtor's valid consent at the time of seizure forecloses the debtor's right to challenge an otherwise wrongful repossession. Valid consent requires the debtor's free and knowing relinquishment. Consent obtained by fraud, force, or intimidation is neither knowing nor voluntary.

[8] Debtor's Contractual Waiver of Action for Wrongful Repossession

Creditors may attempt to insulate themselves by inserting a provision in the credit agreement whereby the debtor waives the right to bring an action for wrongful repossession. Courts typically refuse to enforce the waiver. In addition, some state legislation specifically prohibits such waivers.

[9] Creditor's Liability for the Acts of Repossession Companies

Creditors that use the services of repossession companies will claim they are not liable for the unauthorized acts of the repossessor. If the repossessor is an agent operating under the control of the secured party, then the common law doctrine of respondeat superior makes the secured party liable for torts committed by its agent. n57 The general rule that a master is not liable for the unauthorized, intentional torts of his servant does not apply to repossessions. Where the nature of the employment contemplates such tortious acts, the master is liable, n58 and the work of a repossessor is precisely such a job.

Secured parties often claim that the repossessor is an independent contractor and that respondeat superior does not apply. One exception to the doctrine that an employer is not liable for the acts of an independent contractor is where the employer fails to exercise care in selecting a competent contractor.

More broadly, the responsibility to repossess collateral without breach of the peace is a nondelegable duty for which the secured party is always responsible even if it hires independent contractors to do the work. n59 The 1999 revisions to Article 9 adopt this position. n60

[10] Consumer Remedies for Wrongful Repossession

[a] UCC Remedies

The UCC provides debtor remedies for the creditor's failure to comply with UCC Article 9. n61 If the collateral is consumer goods, statutory damages are available for any violation of Revised UCC sections 9-601 to 9-628, including when repossessors breach the peace, since UCC Article 9 authorizes repossession only if it is accomplished without breach of the peace. Remedies for breach thus include restraining the sale of the collateral or damages if the collateral has already been sold.

The remedies section of the Revised UCC, section 9-625, for the most part mirrors the provisions in former section 9-507. One difference, however, is thatthe provision for actual damages now applies to non-compliance with any provision of the Article, not just Part 6. n62

Revised UCC section 9-625(a) allows the court to grant injunctive relief "on appropriate terms and conditions." This language probably allows the court to impose a bond requirement if that is the jurisdiction's usual rule for injunctive relief. The bond should not be based on the value of the collateral, but rather the depreciation in its value, if any, that is likely to occur due to delaying the sale. The court might also grant the injunction on the condition that the debtor maintain insurance on the collateral or take other steps to protect it.

[b] Common Law Tort Remedies

[i] Potential Tort Causes of Action

Creditors making a wrongful repossession may commit one or more common law torts, including trespass, assault, battery, conversion, invasion of privacy, and intentional infliction of emotional distress or mental anguish.

[ii] Tort Damages

If the torts are proved, courts will consider in calculating the debtor's damages the market value of the collateral at the seizure (not the eventual sale price) and/or damages for loss of use of the collateral.

The creditor is liable under a negligence theory for personal injuries resulting from an unlawful repossession.

[iii] Punitive Damages

Punitive damages are particularly appropriate in wrongful repossession cases and many courts have sustained large jury verdicts.

[c] Debtor's Replevin of Wrongfully Seized Property

In many situations, a debtor may desire the return of wrongfully seized or detained property, rather than the receipt of the property's value. Here, a consumer's attorney should consider the common law remedy of replevin, which often gives the successful party the choice of the property or its value. n63

[d] Federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

Repossession practices by "debt collectors" violating the FDCPA n64 can result in awards to the debtor of actual damages, n65 statutory damages up to $1000, and attorney's fees.

[e] Other Statutory Remedies

Even if the repossession clearly violates the UCC, debtor attorneys should consider alternative state statutory grounds for challenging the seizure. Installment sales acts, state credit codes, and other legislation may provide more generous debtor remedies, or may be able to provide relief cumulative to that obtained through Code remedies.

[f] Contract Claims

Often the parties' contract will echo some UCC or tort law requirements. For example, the contract may provide that the creditor may "peacefully take" the collateral if the consumer defaults. A repossession that breaches the peace will violate this contract clause as well as violating the UCC. n66

In some circumstances, a contract claim will have advantages that will make it worth pleading. Some jurisdictions allow attorney fees for breach of contract.By contrast, attorney fees are not generally available under the UCC or tort law. While attorney fees are available under the FDCPA and many state UDAP statutes, contract claims avoid those statutes' scope problems.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. For a complete review of statutes and cases on this subject, as well as sample pleadings on disk, see National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n2)Footnote 2. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(a) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(1)(a)].

(n3)Footnote 3. Cobb v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., 589 So. 2d 728, 16 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1253 (Ala. Ct. App. 1991) (returning collateral is new consideration when the security agreement does not require the debtor to return and surrender collateral). See Jackson v. Slidell Nissan, 693 So. 2d 1257 (La. Ct. App. 1997) (reversing summary judgment for creditor when buyer claimed she voluntarily surrendered vehicle as part of agreement under which creditor waived right to seek deficiency).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Ch. 8 supra. The FDCPA is reprinted Vol. 1A infra. See also National Consumer Law Center, Fair Debt Collection, § 5.5.2 (6th ed. and supp.). See National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions § 11.2 (2008).

(n5)Footnote 5. 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6).

(n6)Footnote 6. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. § 658. See also People v. Butler, 2002 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 7978 (Cal. Ct. App. Aug. 23, 2002) (unpublished) (upholding criminal conviction of consumer for armed assault and threats for pointing a gun at repossessors; whether repossession was wrongful was irrelevant to criminal charge).

(n7)Footnote 7. Cuyahoga County Bar Ass'n v. Freedman, 836 N.E.2d 559 (Ohio 2005) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Revised U.C.C. § 9-609 [former U.C.C. § 9-503].

(n9)Footnote 9. Raneda v. Bank of Am., 668 N.W.2d 563 (Wis. Ct. App. 2003) (table) (relying on Wis. Stat. § 421.202(6)).

(n10)Footnote 10. Wis. Stat. § 425.205. Wisconsin's administrative regulations further protect the debtor by strictly limiting "voluntary surrender" to situations in which the creditor provides the debtor with a notice of the debtor's right to a pre-repossession hearing, when the creditor does not make any misrepresentations to the debtor, and when the lender has not violated any provision of chapter 427 of the Wisconsin Statutes.Wis. Admin. Code DFI-Bkg § 80.68; see also Homa v. E. Towne Ford, Inc., 370 N.W.2d 592 (Wis. Ct. App. 1985) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 6.3.2 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.)

(n12)Footnote 12. Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 255, § 13J(a) (mortgages and personal property); Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 255B, § 20b(a) (motor vehicle sales); Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 255D, § 22(a) (retail installment sales).

(n13)Footnote 13. See Dixie Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Pitre, 751 So. 2d 911 (La. Ct. App. 1999) (damages for wrongful seizure awarded when sheriff seized mobile home and contents without providing adequate notice to occupant to allow removal of unsecured property).

(n14)Footnote 14. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 4-9-609.

(n15)Footnote 15. 50 U.S.C. app. § 501. Federal and state courts have construed the Act liberally. See James P.

Pottoff, Contemporary Applications of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, 132 Mil. L. Rev. 115 (1991). See also Legal Assistance Note, Using the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act to Your Clients' Advantage, Army Law., Dec. 1993, at 34. See, e.g., Marin v. Armstrong, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22792, at *6 (N.D. Tex. Sept. 1, 1998) (stating "[a]ny doubt regarding the application of the [Act] should be resolved in favor of the service member"), motion to dismiss denied, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22791 (N.D. Tex. Sept. 21, 1998) ; Murdock v. Murdock, 338 S.C. 322, 526 S.E.2d 241 (Ct. App. 1999) . The Act makes no distinction between service members who enlist and those who are called to federal active duty from National Guard or reserve units. Helpful materials on the law may be found on the JAG Corps website, www.jagcnet.army.mil (click on "Legal Assistance"). See also National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 6.3.5.1 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.), and National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, Ch. 5 (1st ed. 2008 and supp.).

(n16)Footnote 16. 50 U.S.C. app. §§ 531(1), 532.

(n17)Footnote 17. 50 U.S.C. app. § 531(1).

(n18)Footnote 18. 50 U.S.C. app. § 532(c). See also In re Burrell, 230 B.R. 309 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 1999) (in dispute regarding repossession court may, on its own initiative, apply protections of Soldiers and Sailors Act, but declined to do so because of lack of petitioner's request).

(n19)Footnote 19. See Marin v. Armstrong, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22792 (N.D. Tex. Sept. 1, 1998) (denying creditor's motion for summary judgment in case involving debtor's claims that creditor harassed him despite his allegation of difficulty paying debt due to illness suffered during military service), motion to dismiss denied, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22791 (N.D. Tex. Sept. 21, 1998) .

(n20)Footnote 20. 50 U.S.C. app. § 527; see Moll v. Ford Consumer Fin. Co., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3638 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 16, 1998) (recognizing private cause of action for failure to reduce interest rate).

(n21)Footnote 21. 50 U.S.C. app. § 527(c).

(n22)Footnote 22. Moll v. Ford Consumer Fin. Co., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3638 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 16, 1998) (concluding that service members have a private right of action in a case involving excessive interest).

(n23)Footnote 23. McMurtry v. City of Largo, 837 F. Supp. 1155 (M.D. Fla. 1993) (except for the stay during military service, the act was not intended to give service people any additional rights not possessed by civilians; because a civilian's claim would be defeated by the missed deadline, so was plaintiff's).

(n24)Footnote 24. See Waisner v. Jones, 107 N.M. 260, 755 P.2d 598, 6 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1374 (1988) .

(n25)Footnote 25. Babbitt Ford, Inc. v. Navaho Indian Tribe, 710 F.2d 587 (9th Cir. 1983) , cert. denied, 466 U.S. 926, 104 S. Ct. 1707, 80 L. Ed. 2d 180 (1984) ; Chischilly v. GMAC, 96 N.M. 264, 629 P.2d 340 (Ct. App. 1980) . But see Brown v. Babbitt Ford, Inc., 117 Ariz. 192, 571 P.2d 689, 23 U.C.C. Rep. 266 (Ct. App. 1977) .

(n26)Footnote 26. See Montana v. United States, 450 U.S. 544, 101 S. Ct. 1245, 67 L. Ed. 2d 493 (1981) . See also In re Dalton, 336 B.R. 600, 58 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 213 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2005) (perfection of security interest according to tribal law is proper when debtor was tribal member, even though he did not live on the formal reservation); In re Snell, 329 B.R. 753, 58 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 159 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 2005) (tribal law rules for perfection of security interests on motor vehicle titles apply to contracts with tribe members who live in tribal jurisdiction area but not on reservation, on allotted land, or in a dependent Indian community).

(n27)Footnote 27. Halwood v. Cowboy Auto Sales, Inc., 124 N.M. 77, 946 P.2d 1088 (Ct. App. 1997) ; Risse v. Meeks, 585 N.W.2d 875, 1998 SD 112 (1998) .

(n28)Footnote 28. See Fredericks v. Eide-Kirschmann Ford, Mercury, Lincoln, Inc., 462 N.W.2d 164 (N.D. 1990) . Note, however, that the Fredericks case may have been decided more on the basis of comity than on the applicability of tribal law to events occurring off tribal land. The automobile dealer initiated proceedings in tribal court but neglected to pursue an appeal in such court. The concurring opinion noted: "Perhaps the greatest test of the principle of comity is to affirm a judgment which we believe to be in error. In this instance it appears clear to me that the tribal statute did not apply to repossessions which took place off the Reservation and that the tribal court's authority to require the return of the pickup and impose the other relief contained in the judgment is questionable."

(n29)Footnote 29. See, e.g., Gibson v. Dixon, 579 F.2d 1071 (7th Cir. 1978) .

(n30)Footnote 30. See Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Tremer, 48 Ala. App. 675, 267 So. 2d 467 (Civ. App. 1972) ; Price v. U-Haul Co., 745 So. 2d 593, 39 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 579 (La. 1999) (self-help provision of storage facility act, allowing lessor to seize and sell lessee's property if lessee defaults, did not violate due process requirements; however, court cautioned that self-help may not be appropriate in every debtor-creditor situation, and must be evaluated on case by case basis); Giles v. First Va. Credit Servs., 560 S.E.2d 557 (N.C. Ct. App. 2002) (no state action in North Carolina self-help repossession: state officials not involved; statute codifies right that existed at common law, thus does not delegate "authority previously held by the state;" no state action involved in contract clause waiving right to notice of default).

(n31)Footnote 31. See, e.g., Love v. United States, 915 F.2d 1242 (9th Cir. 1989) (Farmers Home Administration). Jones v. Flowers, 547 U.S. 220, 126 S. Ct. 1708, 164 L. Ed. 2d 415 (2006) (due process standards for giving notice of tax sale if notice to address of subject property is returned unclaimed).

(n32)Footnote 32. Yeomans v. Wallace, 291 F. Supp. 2d 70 (D. Conn. 2003) (action under color of state law sufficiently alleged; police escorted former licensee, who claimed falsely to be retrieving only her own property, into locked store in plaintiff-storekeeper's absence, over objections of landlord). See Booker v. City of Atlanta, 776 F.2d 272 (11th Cir. 1985) , reh'g, en banc, denied, 782 F.2d 180 (11th Cir. 1986) ; Dixon v. Lowery, 302 F.3d 857 (8th Cir. 2002) (actions of police went well beyond "standing by" when they participated in raid and closure of restaurant, and thereafter guarded it, on behalf of alleged purchaser); Brees v. Courtesy Ford, Inc., 45 Fed. Appx. 711 (9th Cir. 2002) (unpublished) (police ordered consumer to move car that was blocking private road, so repossessors could remove car). But see Barrett v. Harwood, 189 F.3d 297 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding no state action when police officer is present at repossession in order to prevent violence), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1262, 120 S. Ct. 2719, 147 L. Ed. 2d 984 (2000) ; Vakkas v. Tyson Assocs., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3827 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 28, 2000) (finding no state action when debtor was not present at repossession and officers did not assist repossessor); Sherry v. Associates Commercial Corp., 60 F. Supp. 2d 470 (W.D. Pa. 1998) (determining, oddly, that state action does not exist when officer approaches parties "when tempers flare" and responds to debtor by erroneously stating that creditor has a "repo order"), aff'd without opinion, 191 F.3d 445 (3d Cir. 1999) . But cf. Van Ort v. Estate of Stanewich, 92 F.3d 831 (9th Cir. 1996) (no county liability under § 1983 for police officer who committed robbery of home involved in police investigation, because officer did not operate under color of law in robbery; rather, his goals were private), cert. denied. 519 U.S. 1111, 117 S. Ct. 950, 136 L. Ed. 2d 837 (1997) .

(n33)Footnote 33. See, e.g., Soldal v. Cook County Illinois, 506 U.S. 56, 113 S. Ct. 538, 121 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1992) . But see, Barber v. Galindo, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3356 (E.D. Wis. Jan. 18, 2006) (no constitutional claims when police involvement minimal, repossession peaceable, and creditor had right to immediate possession; consumer had unknowingly bought vehicle with bad title); Bevan v. Scott, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20387 (M.D. Fla. Sept. 13, 2005) (extensive discussion of officers' role in private repossessions; key question is whether presence is designed to keep the peace or to facilitate the repossession); Revis v. Meldrum, 2005 WL 1420888 (E.D. Tenn. June 16, 2005) (standing by to keep the peace while judgment creditor removes property not sufficient to make action attributable to state).

(n34)Footnote 34. See Booker v. City of Atlanta, 776 F.2d 272 (11th Cir. 1985) , reh'g, en banc, denied, 782 F.2d 180 (11th Cir. 1986) ; Hesik v. Krug, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3223 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 11, 1993) .

(n35)Footnote 35. Wyatt v. Cole, 504 U.S. 158, 112 S. Ct. 1827, 118 L. Ed. 2d 504 (1992) .

(n36)Footnote 36. See Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O'Brien & Frankel, 20 F.3d 1250 (3d Cir. 1994) .

(n37)Footnote 37. See Guzman v. Western State Bank, 540 F.2d 948 (8th Cir. 1976) (unconstitutional replevin procedure).See also Fleming-Dudley v. Legal Investigations, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21653 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 22, 2007) (breach of peace is conduct that is likely to incite immediate public turbulence; probability of violence at time of repossession is element).

(n38)Footnote 38. Revised U.C.C. § 9-609 [former U.C.C. § 9-503].

(n39)Footnote 39. Revised U.C.C. § 9-602(6).

(n40)Footnote 40. Revised U.C.C. § 9-603(b).

(n41)Footnote 41. Revised U.C.C. § 9-609, Official Comment 3.

(n42)Footnote 42. In re Daniel, 137 B.R. 884 (Bankr. D.S.C. 1992) . Cf. Saice v. MidAmerica Bank, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20845 (D. Minn. Sept. 20, 1999) (issue of fact existed as to whether defendant breached the peace where child and personal belongings were left in car while debtor was near car; the court focused on the likelihood that the circumstances surrounding the repossession could have provoked a violent response); Lingross v. Heilig-Meyers Furniture, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3986 (N.D. Miss. Mar. 17, 1999) (sufficient evidence to raise genuine issue of fact as to whether breach of peace occurred when repossessor dressed in black "SWAT" uniform with face covered by a black ski mask, and with badge, handcuffs, pepper spray, mace, knife and gun in a holster on his hip attempted to repossess furniture, using threats and intimidation); Branson v. Nissan Motor Acceptance Corp., 963 F. Supp. 595 (S.D. Miss. 1996) (remanding claim to state court in which debtor feared, based on their tone of voice and actions, that repossessors would harm him if he tried to stop the repossession). But cf. Cornelius v. Nuvell Fin. Servs. Corp., 256 Ga. App. 171, 568 S.E.2d 82 (2002) (threat of arrest and rude language not breach of peace).

(n43)Footnote 43. 15 U.S.C. § 1692d(1).

(n44)Footnote 43.1. JCB, Inc. v. Union Planters Bank, N.A., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58253 (E.D. Mo. Aug. 9, 2007) .

(n45)Footnote 44. See State v. Gandy, 2002 Ohio App. LEXIS 6482 (Ohio Ct. App. Dec. 9, 2002) (fact that defendant was attempting to repossess collateral is no defense to prosecution for impersonating peace officer); Fleming-Dudley v. Legal Investigations, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21653 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 22, 2007) (impersonating police officer may be breach of peace although it is not actionable under section 1983).

(n46)Footnote 45. In re TWS Enters., Inc., 2002 Bankr. LEXIS 958 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. Aug. 23, 2002) . But see Strong v. Torres, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5003 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 24, 2004) (demand that repossessors leave premises insufficient to make them trespassers; no trespass unless repossessor overcomes obstacle such as gate, barricade, chain, and so forth); Callaway v. Whittenton, 52 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 525 (Ala. 2003) (no trespass even though there was evidence that debtor told repossessor to leave).

(n47)Footnote 46. Former U.C.C. § 1-203 provides: "Every contract or duty within this Act imposes an obligation of good faith in its performance or enforcement."

(n48)Footnote 47. U.C.C.C. § 5.112 (1974).

(n49)Footnote 48. U.C.C.C. § 5.112 (1974).

(n50)Footnote 49. One example of these products can be seen at www.passtecsecurity.com, the web site of the retailer of one device.

(n51)Footnote 50. See § 10.03[8] supra, for discussion of right to cure provisions.

(n52)Footnote 51. See § 10.05[10] infra, for a discussion of remedies available for wrongful repossession.

(n53)Footnote 52. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 6.6 (6th ed. 2005). See also Pelican Point Operations v. Carroll Childers Co., 807 So. 2d 1171 (La. Ct. App. 2002) (awarding damages, plus UDAP attorney fees, against creditor who disabled computer system that controlled equipment, when user was not in default). In re Dawson, 2006 Bankr. LEXIS 4396 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio July 28, 2006) (discussing the pernicious nature of an electronic disabling system and comparing it to the "doomsday machine" in the 1964 film Dr. Strangelove).

(n54)Footnote 53. Md. Code Ann., Com. Law §§ 22-101 to 22-816; Va. Code Ann. §§ 59.1-501.1 to 59.1-509.2.

(n55)Footnote 54. Unif. Computer Info. Transactions Act § 816(b) (2002).

(n56)Footnote 55. Unif. Computer Info. Transactions Act § 816(d) (2002).

(n57)Footnote 56. Unif. Computer Info. Transactions Act § 816(c) (2002); see also Official Comment 4 to Unif. Computer Info. Transactions Act § 816 (2002).

(n58)Footnote 57. Mitchell v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 688 P.2d 42, 38 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1812 (Okla. 1984) (where creditor directed repossessor to pick up tractor, agency was established).

(n59)Footnote 58. Restatement (Second) of Agency § 245.

(n60)Footnote 59. Nixon v. Halpin, 620 So. 2d 796 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1993) ; MBank El Paso, N.A. v. Sanchez, 836 S.W.2d 151 (Tex. 1992) .

(n61)Footnote 60. Revised U.C.C. § 9-609, Official Comment 3.

(n62)Footnote 61. Revised U.C.C. § 9-625 [former U.C.C. § 9-507(1)]. Selected U.C.C. Article 9 sections are reprinted in Vol. 1B infra.

(n63)Footnote 62. Revised U.C.C. § 9-625(b).

(n64)Footnote 63. Ansley v. Conseco Fin. Servicing Group, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 955 (Mich. Ct. App. 2002) (affirming award of damages for items that creditor did not return; replevin and conversion pleaded in alternative); Berg v. Gohlike, 2002 Minn. App. LEXIS 696 (Minn. Ct. App. June 18, 2002) (unpublished) (if only part of wrongfully detained property can be returned, plaintiff may choose either the value of the property, or the return of the available parts plus the value of the missing parts).

(n65)Footnote 64. 15 U.S.C. § 1692; see Ch. 8 supra, for analysis of this statute.

(n66)Footnote 65. 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(a)(1).

(n67)Footnote 66. See Pantoja-Cahue v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 375 Ill. App. 3d 49 (Ill. App. Ct. July 18, 2007) (allegations would have stated contract claim if consumer had alleged existence of valid contract).

147 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 10 Repossessions

1-10 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 10.06

§ 10.06 Unsecured Personal Property Taken With Repossession

[1] Description of the Problem

Creditors repossessing motor vehicles may seize items in the car for which the creditor retains no security interest, such as the consumer's cash, documents, tools, or other personal belongings.

[2] Steps to Take Prior to Bringing Legal Action

[a] Demanding Return of the Property

Even if it seems futile, the consumer's attorney should always make a written demand for the personalty as soon as is practicable, itemizing the nature and, if possible, the value of each item. n1 Failure to do so may preclude any claim for the wrongful detention of the property.

If, at the time of the seizure, the creditor provides the debtor with the time and opportunity to remove personal property from the foreclosed collateral, the debtor should do so. Failure to do so may constitute implied consent to the creditor's disposition of the unsecured property.

[b] Documenting What Property Was Seized or Damaged and by Whom

Consumer attorneys should develop supporting evidence concerning what property is missing and when and where it was last seen. A written list should be obtained from the client and witnesses who have independent knowledge of what property was with the repossessed collateral should be located. If the creditor returns unsecured property to the consumer, the consumer should inspect it immediately to determine if any items are still missing or damaged.

[c] Creditor Conditions as to Return of Unsecured Property

The debtor should not be required to pay a fee to obtain the release of unsecured property. n2 Even so, when unsecured personal property has been seized during a repossession, creditors will often ask the debtor to sign a release form in order to obtain the return of their property.

Some creditors may insert other provisions in the release form, such as a waiver of the debtor's right to receive notice of the sale of the secured collateral, n3 or a general release from tort liability. n4 The debtor should not sign a release containing these or other waivers.

[3] Legal Claims Against Creditor for Seizing Unsecured Property

[a] Common Law Tort Claims

When the secured party or its agent fails to return unsecured property taken with the repossessed collateral, the debtor has an action against the secured party for conversion for the value of unsecured personal property not returned. n5

Even if the secured party returns all the unsecured personalty it seized, the consumer still has a cause of action for trespass or conversion for the temporary loss of the use of the consumer's property. Any damage caused by the temporary loss of the personalty may be recovered. If the collateral has been damaged after being taken, the debtor has an action for negligence.

Creditors may also be liable for acts of their repossessors by virtue of agency law.

In addition, if the secured party's actions are particularly egregious, the consumer's attorney should consider seeking punitive damages in addition to actual damages. n6

[b] UCC Remedies

Under UCC section 9-507(1) [Revised UCC section 9-625], a creditor who fails to dispose of repossessed collateral in a commercially reasonable manner is liable to the debtor for "any loss" caused by this failure.

[c] FDCPA, Other Statutory Sources of Damages

Where a repossession agency, and not the creditor, repossesses unsecured personal property, the agency may also be violating the Federal FDCPA. Such a violation would lead to an FDCPA award of actual damages, statutory damages up to $1000, and attorney's fees.

Many states have enacted state debt collection legislation, and this legislation may also prohibit the seizure of unsecured property, but may have a broader scope than the FDCPA, and apply to illegal actions by creditors, and not just by repossession agencies. Similarly, state deceptive practices statutes generally apply to both repossessors and collectors, and it should generally be a violation of the deceptive practices statute to seize property in which the creditor has no security interest. n7 If the property includes a medical device or equipment necessary for health and welfare, and the consumer has no practicable means to retrieve it, the debt collector must arrange for its prompt return, and may add the reasonable cost of doing so to the consumer's indebtedness. n8

[4] Contractual Limitations to Creditor's Liability for Seizure of Unsecured Property

Creditors attempt to avoid liability for the temporary taking of unsecured property by inserting a clause into the security or credit agreement. This clause grants the secured party the right to take unsecured personalty in the course of a repossession and hold it for the debtor without liability.

Unless this clause conflicts with a specific state law, which it may, the clause will probably withstand a legal challenge. n9

Creditors may attempt, through provisions in their credit agreements, to avoid liability for their seizure of unsecured personalty, even if the creditor never returns the property to the consumer. Often these clauses can be challenged as unconscionable.

Any type of liability disclaimer provisions may violate state law designed to protect debtors whose property is repossessed. A number of state motor vehicle financing acts and retail installment sales acts prohibit contract provisions waiving the debtor's right of action against the creditor for various illegal actions in repossession.

Debtors' attorneys should also argue that such clauses are unconscionable, unfair, or deceptive in violation of state deceptive practices statutes. The clauses may also be unconscionable under UCC section 2-302 and thus unenforceable. n10

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. But see Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Andrews, 736 P.2d 40 (Colo. Ct. App. 1987) (demand only necessary if defendant had lawful possession of the goods in the first place). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 7.2.1 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.). See Baker v. J. Hall Services, Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25386 (N.D. Tex. Dec. 14, 2004) (debtor's failure to demand return of personal property or to claim the property when it was offered to him defeated any conversion claim debtor had). Mayo v. Allen, 973 So. 2d 1257 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2008) (no conversion claim for property inside repossessed recreational vehicle because consumers neither demanded its return, nor showed that demand would be futile).

(n2)Footnote 2. Carrasco v. Auto Lock Unlimited, Inc., 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 3304 (Conn. Super. Ct. Nov. 29, 2005) (allowing consumer to go forward with claims that charging $20 fee for return of property from repossessed car was conversion, unjust enrichment, and deceptive practices statute violation).

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., Underwood v. First Alabama Bank of Huntsville, 453 So. 2d 742, 39 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 738 (Ala. Civ. App. 1983) (waiver held effective).

(n4)Footnote 4. Cf. People v. James, 122 Cal. App. 3d 25, 177 Cal. Rptr. 110 (1981) (towing company enjoined from requiring damage waiver before vehicles released).

(n5)Footnote 5. McGrady v. Nissan Motor Acceptance Corp., 40 F. Supp. 2d 1323 (M.D. Ala. 1998) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Darcars Motors of Silver Spring, Inc. v. Borzym, 818 A.2d 1159 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2003) (affirming award of $25,000 punitive damages and $4,300 actual damages on conversion claim when creditor failed to return personal property after repossession), rev. granted, 827 A.2d 112 (Md. 2003) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See, e.g., Gaskill v. Doss, 2000 Ohio App. LEXIS 6185 (Ohio Ct. App. Dec. 26, 2000) (affirming award of attorney fees in successful UDAP suit against creditor who lost and damaged buyer's personal property while repossessing mobile home). See also Akins v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car, Co., 79 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448 (2000) (affirming award of attorney fees after plaintiff prevailed on FDCPA claim for creditor's wrongful retention of personal property contained in repossessed vehicle in attempt to obtain rental payments due on vehicle).

(n8)Footnote 8. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 32, § 11017(3).

(n9)Footnote 9. See Dub Shaw Ford, Inc. v. Jackson, 622 S.W.2d 664 (Tex. App. 1981) (provision in contract providing that unsecured property contained in repossessed collateral may be temporarily held by creditor did not violate Texas Consumer Credit Code; provision merely restated law of bailor-bailee relationship).

(n10)Footnote 10. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 7.4 (6th ed. 2005 and supp.).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 10 Repossessions

1-10 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 10.07

§ 10.07 Disposition of Repossessed Collateral Other Than by Creditor's Sale: Reinstatement, Redemption, Strict Foreclosure, Sheriff's Sale, and Consumer's Sale

[1] Introduction

After the creditor obtains possession of the collateral, it has a choice as to how to deal with the collateral. One is to sell it. This section discusses the other options.

[2] Right to Reinstate Contract

In some states, creditors are required to permit a consumer to reinstate the contract after default and repossession. Sometimes this is called a right to redeem or a right to cure, but it is not the same as either the right to redeem customarily available under UCC Article 9 or the right to cure sometimes provided by state law.

A right to reinstate differs from the Article 9 right of redemption also in that it is usually limited to a specific time period, e.g., 15 days, following repossession and may also not be available if the buyer has acted in bad faith.

The right to reinstate also differs from the right to cure, which arises prior to acceleration and repossession. The two are similar in that both generally restore the contract to its original terms.

State law usually prescribes specific notice requirements for the right to reinstate. The duty to give notice may be triggered by the creditor's exercise of control over the collateral even if the creditor does not take physical possession.

[3] Redemption of Collateral

[a] Absolute Right Until Disposition

The Code provides that the debtor may redeem repossessed collateral by tendering an amount sufficient to satisfy all obligations secured by the collateral as well as the cost of repossession. n1 If the amount due under the contract has been accelerated, the debtor must tender the total remaining amount due, not just the delinquent installments. n2 In such cases, the debtor is better off reinstating the contract or "curing" the default where state law allows. Debtors may redeem the collateral at any time before the secured party has disposed of the collateral. Failure to return the collateral after the debtor tenders the redemption amount is conversion. n3

Because of the right to redeem, the debtor loses ownership of the collateral only when the creditor sells it or exercises the option of retaining it in satisfaction of the debt. n4 The debtor retains ownership even if the creditor has obtained a repossession title in anticipation of the repossession sale. n5 In fact, even a debtor who has waived the right to redeem still retains ownership of the collateral (but not the right to regain possession). Under Article 9, transfer of ownership occurs and the debtor's rights in the collateral are terminated only when the creditor either sells the property or goes through the notice procedure required to accept it in satisfaction of the debt. n6 The view that repossession results in a transfer of ownership is not only contrary to the language of the UCC, but completely breaks down in the case of possessory security interests, in which the creditor has possession of the collateral throughout the term of the security agreement. n7 As the Georgia Supreme Court has noted, U.C.C. § 9-610(c) specifically provides that the secured party may purchase the collateral at the repossession sale, and the secured party would not need to purchase the collateral if it already owned it. n8 Further, the notion that ownership vests in the secured party upon repossession is inconsistent with UCC § 9-620, which sets forth specific procedures for the secured party to follow if it wants to accept the collateral in satisfaction of the debt. These procedures would be meaningless if the creditor already owned the collateral. n9 In addition, UCC § 9-617 states that the secured party's disposition of the collateral transfers to the buyer "all of the debtor's rights in the collateral," a statement that would be surplusage if repossession alone terminated the debtor's ownership. n10 The leading case to the contrary, n11 whichwas decided under the former version of Article 9, should be of little continuing precedential value as revised Article 9 is so clear about the debtor's continued ownership of the collateral after repossession.

After repossession the buyer also has the right to demand that the creditor act with due care to preserve the collateral; the right to be notified before the creditor disposes of the collateral; the right to any surplus from the sale; and the right to damages for the creditor's failure to comply with the UCC's provisions. n12 These rights further reveal the UCC's treatment of the debtor as the owner of the repossessed collateral until the creditor complies with the statutory procedures for disposition or retention of the collateral.

Debtors may be better off not to redeem collateral, but to purchase it at the repossession sale. The sale price is usually significantly less than the amount required to redeem the collateral. In states where the transaction or deficiency balance is covered by an anti-deficiency law, this may mean the debtor can recover the collateral at a bargain price and then have no further obligation to the creditor for the deficiency.

[b] Who Can Redeem

Although the former version of Article 9 allowed only "the debtor" to redeem collateral, n13 the UCC defined "debtor" broadly and, in the case of redemption, the term "debtor" most likely refers both to the collateral's owner and the debt's primary obligor.

A guarantor or cosigner or other accommodation party may also be a debtor for purposes of redemption. As sureties, they are persons who may owe payment and are thus within the Code's definition of debtor.

Revised UCC section 9-623 explicitly includes secondary obligors in the list of parties who may redeem collateral. The section makes a distinction, however, between the "debtor," who has the right to redeem, and the primary obligor, who is not listed as having the right to redeem. "Debtor" is defined as the person who owns the collateral. n14

[c] Notice of Right

Former Article 9 did not require a notice to the debtor of the debtor's right to redeem the collateral, but other state law may impose this requirement. Such a notice is defective if it says anything other than that the debtor has the right to redeem the collateral at any time before the sale is consummated.

Improper notice of the time to redeem may make the notice of sale defective under Article 9, even if that notice is proper in all other respects. Improper notice of the amount needed to redeem has also been held to make the notice improper. Bad notices constitute a likely violation of state UDAP statutes. n15

Where state law does require notice of the right to redeem, each debtor in the transaction may be entitled to the redemption notice. The failure to provide a timely notice of the right to redeem may bar a deficiency judgment.

The 1999 revisions to Article 9 correct the failure to require notice of the right to redeem. In consumer-goods transactions, the notice of sale that the secured party must send to the debtor must include a telephone number from which the debtor may obtain the amount necessary to redeem the collateral. n16 The safe-harbor form includes not only the telephone number but also a brief description of the right of redemption. n17

[d] Determination of Redemption Amount

Redemption requires the payment of the original obligation plus expenses of repossession and possibly attorney's fees. n18 Critical to the calculation of the amount that must be tendered is the treatment of unearned finance charges and insurance premiums. Where the total amount of the debt has been accelerated, creditors are entitled to receive the outstanding principal, but are not entitled to receive as tender unearned interest or insurance payments.

Revised Article 9 requires the notice of sale in consumer-goods transactions n19 to state that the consumer can learn the amount necessary to redeem by calling a telephone number listed in the notice. n20 The consumer should call this number and ask for both the current redemption amount and how to determine whether it will increase during the redemption period (for example, due to interest). While Article 9 explicitly requires the creditor to respond only to a signed or otherwise authenticated request for the balance due, n21 the clear implication of the section 9-614 reference to a telephone number is that the creditor must provide the redemption amount in response to a telephone request. If the telephone number is inoperable or there is no one at the number who can provide the redemptionamount, the consumer has a good argument that the notice of sale was deficient. n22

If the consumer calls the number and reaches someone who provides a redemption figure, the consumer should confirm this amount in writing if time allows, so that the creditor can not later claim that the amount tendered was not the correct amount due. Article 9 provides a specific procedure that can be used to obtain written confirmation of the redemption amount. Under UCC § 9-210(a)(4) and (b), the debtor can request that the creditor approve or correct a statement indicating what the debtor believes to be the aggregate amount of unpaid obligations secured by collateral as of a specified date. The debtor's request should ask the creditor to confirm that the amount stated in the telephone conversation is correct as of the date of the call, and to confirm the amount that will be due on the date the debtor plans to redeem. The debtor's request must be signed or otherwise authenticated and must reasonably identify the transaction. n23

The creditor has fourteen days to respond to such a request, which Article 9 refers to as a "request regarding a statement of account." n24 The debtor is entitled to one response without charge in any six-month period. n25 After that, the creditor can charge up to $25 to respond to such a request.

If the creditor fails to respond properly to such a request without reasonable cause, the consumer is entitled to actual damages plus statutory damages of $500. n26 In addition, failure to respond, thereby making it impossible for the debtor to redeem the vehicle, may excuse the debtor's duty to tender the redemption amount, so the creditor's sale of the collateral would be conversion. n27

Section 9-210 also requires the creditor to reply, without charge, to a signed or otherwise authenticated request by the debtor for the balance due on a secured obligation. n28 This is termed a "request for an accounting" rather than a

"request regarding a statement of account." When the debtor requests an accounting, the creditor can respond by providing the balance due up to thirty-five days earlier or thirty-five days later than the date of the request. n29 As a result, this type of request is of little use in the redemption context.

If fewer than fourteen days remain before the repossession sale, there is not enough time to invoke the Article 9 procedure for confirming a statement of account. The debtor should still send a letter confirming the amount required to redeem. The letter will corroborate the consumer's understanding of the amount that the creditor stated orally. The creditor's refusal to accept that amount may violate the debtor's right to redeem or the creditor's duty of good faith. n30

The debtor should not assume that the creditor has accelerated the debt and that the entire unpaid balance must be paid to redeem the collateral. Even though the timing of acceleration is within the discretion of the creditor once a default has occurred, some creditors may hold off on acceleration because they perceive an advantage in delaying the calculation of rebates. If the debt has not been accelerated, then a consumer wishing to redeem need only pay the delinquent payments plus the creditor's expenses. n31 As there is usually a very significant difference between the amount of the overdue payments and the full accelerated balance, use of the model form's language when the debt has not been accelerated would be clearly misleading in violation of Revised Article 9. It is unlikely to be apparent to the debtor whether the creditor has accelerated the debt, but this issue can be explored through discovery. Sending a misleading notice triggers the remedies of Revised Article 9, n32 and a creditor's sale of the collateral after having impeded redemption by sending such a notice may be conversion. n33

Where the collateral is security for more than one obligation, the debtor may have to tender the amount due on all obligations in default in order to redeem the item.

[e] Tender

The mechanics of making tender under the UCC are controlled by common law tender notions. The debtor must actually have the money present and produce and offer it to the creditor. The tender must be unconditional and in the correct amount. n34

[f] Secured Party's Refusal

Actual production of the cash is not necessary if the secured party says that he or she will not accept it. If the creditor refuses to accept a properly made tender and, thus, violates Article 9, the debtor has two avenues for a remedy -- conversion and damages under section 9-507(1) [Revised UCC section 9-625].

[g] Waiver

The uniform version of Article 9 prohibits waiver of the right to redeem in consumer-goods transactions. n35 In other transactions waiver is allowed, but only by an agreement entered into and signed or otherwise authenticated after default. n36 Debtors' attorneys faced with a waiver should determine whether it was knowing and voluntary. n37

[4] Strict Foreclosure: Creditor's Retention of Collateral

[a] Deficiency Precluded

Except where the debtor has already paid off a substantial portion of the loan or where prohibited by state law, the creditor may propose to retain repossessed collateral in full satisfaction of the obligation. n38 Retention of the collateral, also known as strict foreclosure, being "in satisfaction of the obligation," precludes the creditor from any further claim to a deficiency, though the creditor is entitled to keep all prior amounts paid by the debtor.

On the other hand, Article 9 does not require a strictly foreclosing creditor to pay out any surplus to the debtor. n39

However, if the strictly foreclosing creditor later sells the collateral in the regular course of its business, it may be liable to the debtor for any surplus.

A secured party intending to elect strict foreclosure must notify the debtor in writing of that election. n40 If the notice is not proper, the retention is not proper either. n41 If the creditor accepts the collateral in satisfaction of the debt, there is no Article 9 sale, either public or private, and the consumer does not have the right to redeem the collateral. n42

[b] Debtor's Right to Object

The debtor has the right to object to the strict foreclosure. n43 The debtor's objection must also be in writing. n44 The debtor must send notice of any objection to the creditor's retention so that the creditor receives the objection within 21 days of the date on which the creditor sent its notice of retention.

Debtors should object to strict foreclosure if they believe that the collateral can be sold for more than the sum of the amount remaining on the obligation and the creditor's expenses of repossessing, reconditioning, and selling the collateral; that is, when a surplus would result.

[c] Constructive Strict Foreclosure

A creditor may also be held to have involuntarily retained the collateral in lieu of other remedies. Destruction of the collateral, transfer of title to the secured party, or use of the collateral while in the creditor's possession may also constitute a constructive strict foreclosure. This constructive strict foreclosure on the collateral would completely satisfy the debt just as if it were a voluntary strict foreclosure, allowing the creditor no right to seek a deficiency or to sue on the underlying debt.

A constructive strict foreclosure can also happen when the secured party "sells" the collateral to a dealer or other party pursuant to a repurchase or recourse agreement.

[d] The 60% Rule: No Strict Foreclosure

Strict foreclosure is not allowed if the debtor has paid 60% of the cash price in the case of a purchase money security interest in consumer goods or 60% of the loan in the case of another security interest in consumer goods. Unless the debtor renounces this right by signing a written statement after default, the creditor must sell the collateral within 90 days of taking possession, and may not retain the collateral. n45 If the creditor violates this requirement by not disposing of the goods by sale within 90 days, the debtor may choose either to recover in conversion or to seek Code remedies under section 9-507.

[e] Strict Foreclosure Provisions in Revised Article 9

The strict foreclosure provisions of Revised Article 9 contain some significant changes. The new sections eliminate "the fiction that the secured party always will present a 'proposal' for retention of collateral and the debtor will have a fixed period to respond." n46 Section 9-620(a) sets forth the conditions necessary to an effective acceptance (formerly, retention) of collateral in full or partial satisfaction of the secured obligation. The first condition is that the debtor must consent to the acceptance. The new section, therefore, is similar to old section 9-505 in that it allows the debtor to object to the strict foreclosure. n47 The revised procedure requires that the debtor send an authenticated objection within twenty days after the proposal is sent. Failure to object to a proposal sent by the secured party may constitute consent. n48

Acceptance is normally automatic once the secured party becomes bound and the time for objection passes.

The secured party must notify others (such as junior lienholders) who would be affected by acceptance of the collateral in satisfaction of the debt. n49 If any of them object within the prescribed time (twenty days in most cases), the creditor cannot accept the collateral in satisfaction of the debt. n50

Finally, Revised Article 9 appears to foreclose arguments that an extensive delay by a secured party in disposing of collateral constitutes a constructive strict foreclosure, because it requires that the secured party consent to the acceptance of the collateral. n51

[5] Judicial Sale of Collateral

Although not frequently encountered in consumer transactions, there are circumstances in which repossessed goods may be disposed of by judicial sale. Judicial sales are conclusively presumed to be commercially reasonable under Revised UCC section 9-627(c) [former section 9-507(2)].

However, where the court orders or permits a sale but does not itself conduct, supervise, or approve the sale, the sale is subject to the requirement of commercial reasonableness.

[6] Sale of Collateral by Debtor

[a] Introduction

Prior to or immediately after repossession, it will often be to the advantage of the debtor to arrange a buyer for the collateral. A private buyer is likely to pay more than can be obtained through an auction or other wholesale disposition, such as the creditor is most likely to use. Whether sold before or after repossession, the permission of the creditor will be necessary.

[b] Automobiles

The client should at least try to obtain some reasonable offers for the car. These could be offered into evidence to support a value in excess of the ultimate resale value which the creditor will likely realize. If the creditor rejects such an offer, later deficiency judgment claims may breach their duty of good faith.

[c] Mobile Homes

[i] Introduction

Consumer debtors who want to sell their mobile homes while they are still subject to a long-term installment sales agreement or by consigning them to a dealer may encounter unique difficulties because of liability clauses in the transfer agreements or because of the UCC law on consignments.

[ii] Using Transfer Agreements

Many creditors will permit consumers still paying on their mobile homes to sell the homes and have the new purchaser assume the obligation of the installment sales contract. These transfer agreements, however, typically contain clauses which hold the original purchaser to continuing liability under the agreement. After one or more transfers, if there is a default, the original purchasers may find themselves liable for a deficiency judgment. In these circumstances, the original purchasers should at least be considered "debtors" under section 9-105(1)(d), with rights to notice of the disposition. Failure to give notice should render the disposition commercially unreasonable.

Under the 1999 revisions to Article 9, only the "debtor" and any secondary obligor (but not the primary obligor) are entitled to notice of the creditor's disposition of the collateral. n52 The original purchasers will be considered debtors, and be entitled to notice of the disposition, only if they still have an interest other than a security interest or other lien on the mobile home.

[iii] Selling on Consignment

Another method by which consumers can sell mobile homes is through a consignment agreement with a dealer. Under these arrangements, the consumer retains title to the home and permits the dealer to sell the home, usually from the dealer's lot. The dealer agrees to sell the mobile home for a percentage of the sale price or for the right to keep the sale proceeds above a certain amount.

Unbeknownst to the consumer selling the mobile home, the dealer may have granted or may later grant a security interest in its inventory, which would include the consumer's mobile home, to a bank or other lender. If the dealer then defaults on its loan, the bank may repossess and sell the inventory, including the consumer's mobile home.

The consumer's attorney may be surprised to discover that the bank has a strong UCC argument that the bank is entitled to the trailer. Under section 2-326(a), goods delivered to another to be sold, but which may be returned, are considered to be for "sale or return." Goods for "sale or return" are subject to the claims of the seller's creditors even if considered "on consignment" and even if the party delivering the goods reserves title. n53

While this provision may make sense in the commercial context, it is clearly inequitable for the individual owner of a mobile home. There are a number of legal approaches to the consumer's problem.

First, the consumer should have a claim against the dealer individually for conversion. Or, the consumer could try to convince the court that section 2-326 was never intended to apply to consumer sellers. n54

Another defense specifically sanctioned by section 2-326 is to show that the dealer was generally known by its creditors to be substantially engaged in selling the goods of others. n55

The 1999 revisions to Article 9 include a repeal of the portion of section 2-326 that covered consignment sales. n56 Coverage of true consignments will be transferred to Article 9. n57 The consignor's interest in the consigned goods is considered a security interest, n58 and, if that security interest is perfected it will have priority over any security interest the merchant gives. n59 If the owner's name appears on the title to the mobile home, the owner's interest in the home will amount to a perfected security interest and will have priority. n60 If the mobile home is not subject to a title registration law, the owner's security interest may still be considered perfected and thus entitled to priority since a financing statement is not required to perfect a security interest in consumer goods. n61

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)Sales (Article 2)Breach, Repudiation & ExcuseInstallment ContractsCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionRedemption

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Revised U.C.C. § 9-623 [former U.C.C. § 9-506].

(n2)Footnote 2. Medallion Funding Corp. v. Helen Laundromat, Inc. 34 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 250 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1997) ; but see Sibley v. Regency Toyota, Inc., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19636 (N.D. Miss. Dec. 9, 1999) (court finds merit in debtor's argument that Mississippi U.C.C. may prevent creditor from demanding full contract price in order to redeem car).

(n3)Footnote 3. Telemark Dev. Group, Inc. v. Mengelt, 313 F.3d 972 (7th Cir. 2002) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See In re Moffett, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1341 (E.D. Va. 2003) ; Rozier v. Motors Acceptance Corp., 290 B.R. 910 (M.D. Ga. 2003) ; In re Robinson, 285 B.R. 732, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 327 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 2002) ; In re Pluta, 200 B.R. 740 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1996) (debtor remains title holder and owner after repossession). But see Bell-Tel Fed. Credit Union v. Kalter (In re Kalter), 292 F.3d 1350 (11th Cir. 2002) (Florida law) (construing former version of Article 9 and Florida's repossession title statute).

(n5)Footnote 5. Revised U.C.C. § 9-619(c) (transfer of record or legal title to secured party is not a disposition and does not relieve secured party of Article 9 duties); Official Comment 2 to Revised U.C.C. § 9-619; In re Robinson, 285 B.R. 732, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 327 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 2002) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Revised U.C.C. §§ 9-617(a)(1), 9-619(c), 9-622(a)(2); see also Official Comment 4 to Revised U.C.C. § 9-207 (secured party's duty to preserve collateral in its possession applies whether it has possession before or after default); Jenkins v. G2S Constructors, Inc., 665 A.2d 354 (N.H. 1995) (title to collateral does not pass to secured party upon default, but only after disposition or strict foreclosure).

(n7)Footnote 7. U.C.C. § 9-313.

(n8)Footnote 8. Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Rozier, 278 Ga. 52, 597 S.E.2d 367 (2004) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Id.; see also In re Sanders, 291 B.R. 97 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2003) (setting forth this and many other inconsistencies that the Kalter view would create with revised Art. 9).

(n10)Footnote 10. In re Sanders, 291 B.R. 97 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2003) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Bell-Tel Fed. Credit Union v. Kalter (In re Kalter), 292 F.3d 1350 (11th Cir. 2002) (Fla. law).

(n12)Footnote 12. In re Caple, 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 1094 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. Apr. 4, 2005) (debtor's right to redeem, right to surplus, and ability to agree that creditor can accept collateral in satisfaction of debt all suggest that ownership is not terminated by repossession); Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Rozier, 597 S.E.2d 367 (Ga. 2004) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Revised U.C.C. § 9-623 [former U.C.C. § 9-506].

(n14)Footnote 14. Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(28).

(n15)Footnote 15. E.g., Coones v. FDIC, 848 P.2d 783 (Wyo. 1993) (statement in notice that debtor could redeem by bidding on the collateral at the repossession sale was misstatement).

(n16)Footnote 16. Revised U.C.C. § 9-614(1)(C).

(n17)Footnote 17. Revised U.C.C. § 9-614(3).

(n18)Footnote 18. Revised U.C.C. § 9-623 [former U.C.C. § 9-506].

(n19)Footnote 19. See U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(24) (defining "consumer-goods transaction" as one in which the obligation is incurred for consumer purposes and the collateral is consumer goods); § 2.4.2.1, supra.

(n20)Footnote 20. U.C.C. § 9-614(1)(C).

(n21)Footnote 21. U.C.C. § 9-210; see Rainey v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 313 So. 2d 179, 16 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1436 (Ala. 1975) (decided under former Article 9, before section 9-614 required the notice of sale to include a telephone number for the debtor to learn the redemption amount).

(n22)Footnote 22. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 10.4.9.8 (6th ed. 2005).

(n23)Footnote 23. U.C.C. § 9-210(a)(4).

(n24)Footnote 24. U.C.C. § 9-210(b).

(n25)Footnote 25. U.C.C. § 9-210(f).

(n26)Footnote 26. U.C.C. § 9-625(f).

(n27)Footnote 27. Emmons v. LeMaster, Inc., 27 Kan. App. 2d 940, 10 P.3d 33, 42 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 861 (2000) . But cf. Rainey v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 313 So. 2d 179, 16 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1436 (Ala. 1975) (creditor's failure to respond to oral request for balance due does not excuse debtor from tender obligation, so creditor's sale of vehicle was not conversion).

(n28)Footnote 28. U.C.C. § 9-610(a)(2), (b); see also U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(4) (definition of "accounting").

(n29)Footnote 29. U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(4).

(n30)Footnote 30. Draughon v. Gen. Fin. Credit Corp., 362 So. 2d 880, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 349 (Ala. 1978) (creditor violated right to redeem when it refused to accept debtor's tender of check for amount it had orally indicated was due; a formal written request for a statement of the balance is unnecessary); Emmons v. LeMaster, Inc., 27 Kan. App. 2d 940, 10 P.3d 33, 42 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 861 (2000) (debtor's tender was sufficient when it included entire balance known to debtor, and creditor failed to respond to debtor's written request for the amount of certain incidental expenses; sale of collateral after refusing this tender was conversion). But cf. Rainey v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 313 So. 2d 179, 16 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1436 (Ala. 1975) (creditor's failure to respond to oral request for balance due does not excuse debtor from tender obligation, so creditor's sale of vehicle was not conversion).

(n31)Footnote 31. See Official Comment 2 to U.C.C. § 9-623, which indicates that payment of the entire balance is necessary only if the creditor has accelerated the debt, and that the security interest continues to secure unmatured obligations as if there had been no default. Official Comment to former U.C.C. § 9-506 used this same language.

(n32)Footnote 32. Revised U.C.C. § 9-625; see also National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 9.3.6.2 (6th ed. 2005).

(n33)Footnote 33. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 9.3.6.2 (6th ed. 2005).

(n34)Footnote 34. Telemark Dev. Group, Inc. v. Mengelt, 313 F.3d 972 (7th Cir. 2002) .

(n35)Footnote 35. Revised U.C.C. §§ 9-602(11), 9-624(c). Note that Illinois, by virtue of a non-uniform amendment to Revised U.C.C. § 9-624(c), allows post-default waiver of the right to redeem even in consumer-goods transactions. 810 Ill. Comp. Stat. § 5/9-624(c).

(n36)Footnote 36. Revised U.C.C. § 9-624(c); see Data Sec. Inc. v. Plessman, 510 N.W.2d 361 (Neb. Ct. App. 1993) .

(n37)Footnote 37. The Official Comments to Revised Article 9 stress that a post-default waiver must be "the bargain of the parties in fact," and that courts should carefully scrutinize waivers that appear in documents that address many additional or unrelated matters. Official Comment 5 to Revised U.C.C. § 9-602. The waiver must also be clear and unambiguous. National Operating, Ltd. P'ship v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 244 Wis. 2d 839, 630 N.W.2d 116 (2001) (decided under former Article 9, but court states in note 19 that conclusions would be the same under Revised Article 9).

(n38)Footnote 38. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620 [former U.C.C. § 9-505(2)].

(n39)Footnote 39. See Harris v. Key Bank, 193 F. Supp. 2d 707 (W.D.N.Y.) (decided under former U.C.C. § 9-505), aff'd, 51 Fed. Appx. 346 (2d Cir. 2002) (unpublished).

(n40)Footnote 40. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620 [former U.C.C. § 9-505(2)]. See Emmons v. LeMaster, Inc., 27 Kan. App. 2d 940, 10 P.3d 33 , 42 U.C.C. Rep. 2d 861 (2000) (creditor's failure to send proper notice of strict foreclosure meant that debtor did not lose redemption right).

(n41)Footnote 41. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620 [former U.C.C. § 9-505(2)]. See Hansford v. Burns, 241 Ga. App. 407, 526 S.E.2d 896, 40 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 592 (1999) (notice of retaking of collateral and intent to sell did not constitute notice that collateral would be retained in satisfaction of the debt, so creditor was required to dispose of collateral in a commercially reasonable manner).

(n42)Footnote 42. Fodale v. Waste Mgmt. of Mich., Inc., 271 Mich. App. 11 (2006) .

(n43)Footnote 43. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620 [former U.C.C. § 9-505(2)].

(n44)Footnote 44. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620 [former U.C.C. § 9-505(2)].

(n45)Footnote 45. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620(e) [former U.C.C. § 9-505(1)].

(n46)Footnote 46. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620, Official Comment 2.

(n47)Footnote 47. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620.

(n48)Footnote 48. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620(c)(2); see Harris v. Key Bank, 193 F. Supp. 2d 707 (W.D.N.Y.) (failure to respond to proposal was consent under former U.C.C. § 9-505(2)), aff'd, 51 Fed. Appx. 346 (2d Cir. 2002) (unpublished).

(n49)Footnote 49. Revised U.C.C. § 9-621.

(n50)Footnote 50. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620(a)(2)(B).

(n51)Footnote 51. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620(b); see Revised U.C.C. § 9-620, Official Comment 5. Strict foreclosure under Revised Article 9 is discussed more fully in National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 9.4.5 (6th ed. 2005).

(n52)Footnote 52. Revised U.C.C. § 9-611(c)(1), (2).

(n53)Footnote 53. U.C.C. § 2-326(3). For a more detailed discussion of § 2-326, see Clark, The Law of Secured Transactions Under the Uniform Commercial Code P 1.06[1] (1993). But cf. Budsberg v. Premier Credit Co. (In re Kincaid), 218 B.R. 965, 37 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 434 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. 1998) (consumers transferred and consigned motor vehicles to auto store; auto store subsequently filed bankruptcy; because consumers' creditors noted interest on the certificates of title, their security interests survived and had priority over security interest claims of auto store's creditors). See also In re Corvette Collection of Boston, Inc., 294 B.R. 409 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2003) .

(n54)Footnote 54. Founders Investment Corp. v. Fegett, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 903 (Ky. Ct. App. 1978) .

(n55)Footnote 55. U.C.C. § 2-326(3)(b).

(n56)Footnote 56. Revised U.C.C. § 9-326, Official Comment 4.

(n57)Footnote 57. Revised U.C.C. § 9-109(a)(4).

(n58)Footnote 58. Revised U.C.C. § 1-201(37).

(n59)Footnote 59. Revised U.C.C. § 9-319.

(n60)Footnote 60. Revised U.C.C. § 9-311(a)(2).

(n61)Footnote 61. Revised U.C.C. § 9-309.

149 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 10 Repossessions

1-10 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 10.08

§ 10.08 Creditor's Sale of the Collateral

[1] Creditor Must Sell, Lease, or Otherwise Dispose of Collateral

Unless the debtor has reinstated the contract or redeemed the collateral, or the creditor properly elects to retain the collateral, the creditor must sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of the collateral. n1

The commercial reasonableness standard applies equally to leases and other dispositions as it does to sales. Violations of lease and other disposition procedures also give rise to actual damages and statutory damages under the Code. n2

[2] Commercial Reasonableness Standard

[a] General

Every aspect of the sale must be commercially reasonable: n3 the initial preparation of the collateral for resale, the notice, method, manner, time, place, and terms of the sale, and accounting to the debtor for any surplus proceeds after the sale. n4 The commercial reasonableness standard applies whether the creditor repossesses the collateral or the debtor voluntarily surrenders the collateral. n5 Commercial unreasonableness may be found based solely on one aspect of a sale that was particularly egregious or based on the cumulative effect of several less serious but commercially unreasonable practices. Although one particular aspect of the sale may not on its own cause the sale to be commercially unreasonable, the cumulative effect of a number of suspect practices may lead a court to such a finding.

Notwithstanding the importance of commercial reasonableness, the Code does not define commercial reasonableness.

Section 9-627 sets forth some circumstances in which a sale is commercially reasonable:

- When the collateral is sold in the usual manner on, or at the current price in, any "recognized market," a term that refers to markets like stock exchanges where there are standardized price quotations for essentially fungible property; n6

- When the collateral is sold in conformity with reasonable commercial practices among dealers in that type of property;

- When the sale has been approved by a judicial committee, by a bona fide creditors' committee, by a representative of creditors, or by an assignee for the benefit of creditors.

Section 9-627 also provides that the fact that a greater price could have been obtained by a disposition at a different time or in a different method does not of itself preclude the secured party from establishing commercial reasonableness.

Outside of these principles, the definition of commercial reasonableness is left to a case by case analysis.

The debtor cannot waive the requirement of commercial reasonableness prior to default. n7 In some states, the debtor cannot waive the commercial reasonableness requirement even after default.

For consumer goods, any failure to comply with the Code's sale requirements gives rise to Revised UCC section 9-625 [former section 9-507(1)] statutory damages of the finance charge plus 10% of the cash price or principal of the loan.

[b] Burden of Proof

Creditors seeking a deficiency judgment generally have the burden of proving they acted in a commercially reasonable fashion in each aspect of the repossession and disposition of the collateral. In some jurisdictions, however, this is true only if the debtor raises the issue, n8 while, in others, the creditor has the burden regardless of the debtor's pleadings. n9 While generally considered a question of fact, and thus appropriate for jury determination, commercial reasonableness has been found by some courts to be a mixed question of fact and law. n10

[3] Creditor's Duties Toward Collateral

[a] Duty to Safeguard

A secured party is under a duty to use reasonable care in the custody and preservation of collateral in its possession. n11 Deterioration or destruction of the collateral that occurs through the creditor's reckless actions likewise should render the sale commercially unreasonable. n12 If the collateral is destroyed while in the possession of the creditor, this may be considered a constructive strict foreclosure, in which case the creditor would not be permitted to seek a deficiency.

[b] Use of Collateral

The duty to use reasonable care in the custody and preservation of the collateral means that the creditor may not drive the debtor's car for personal reasons or let someone use the debtor's mobile home pending sale. However, the creditor may always use or operate the collateral in order to preserve it or its value.

If the creditor puts the goods to an improper use, any subsequent sale of the collateral should, at the very least, be commercially unreasonable. n13 Under the former and possibly the current UCC, the debtor could argue, even further, that there has been a constructive strict foreclosure, that the obligation is thus satisfied, and that the creditor's retention of the collateral precludes any deficiency action. n14

The debtor can argue alternatively that the creditor is liable for any depreciation in value caused by the improper use of the collateral.

A third remedial approach is for the debtor to seek the fair market rental value of the property for the period the creditor improperly uses it.

In addition to the above approaches, since the creditor has not complied with the default provisions of Article 9, the creditor is liable for any resulting actual damages or the minimum statutory damages of the finance charge plus 10% of the cash price or principal amount, whichever is larger. n15

[c] Duty to Recondition

Although Revised section 9-610(a) specifically states that the creditor may sell the collateral "in its present condition," n16 the secured party is under a duty to undertake necessary preparation of the collateral. n17 This may require simply washing and cleaning the collateral so as to make it more presentable or may involve more extensive repairs.

Any reconditioning work and any charge for such work must always be commercially reasonable. If the amount of the creditor's reconditioning work is disproportionate to the value of the collateral or does not result in a significant increase in the amount obtained for the collateral at the sale, it is very likely not commercially reasonable.

[d] Preservation of Warranties

Preservation of warranties on the collateral may also be critical to maximizing the resale price. In a departure from the previous approach of the UCC, Revised Article 9 provides that a repossession sale includes "the warranties relating to title, possession, quiet enjoyment, and the like" which arise by operation of law in similar voluntary sales. n18

Implied warranties of merchantability or fitness for a particular purpose may also arise in a repossession sale. Whether implied warranties have arisen, and whether the seller has successfully disclaimed them, will be governed by the implied warranty provisions of Article 2. n19 Again, if a disclaimer of implied warranties is likely to reduce the resale price significantly and is contrary to the usual method of sale, it may be commercially unreasonable.

Preserving manufacturers' warranties on collateral, such as new vehicles, may also be critical to securing a fair repossession sale price. The seller may have to incur some expenses to ensure that the vehicle meets the manufacturer's standards, but failure to do so is likely to have such a grave impact on the resale price that it should be commercially unreasonable except in very unusual circumstances. n20

[4] Notice of Sale

[a] Importance of Notice

Revised UCC Section 9-611(b) requires reasonable notice of the sale or other disposition of repossessed collateral. The notice of sale is of the utmost importance to the consumer. Notice of sale is also important because of the substantial remedies available if the creditor fails in any of a number of ways to provide proper notice. Creditors must comply with all notice requirements, even if the debtor has voluntarily surrendered the collateral to the creditor. Notice is required regardless of whether the creditor acquires possession of the collateral before or after default. n21

[b] Who Must Send Notice

The "secured party," that is, the party actually responsible for selling the collateral, must send the notice. n22

Where a secured party reassigns the collateral to the dealer pursuant to a repurchase agreement, section 9-504(5) [Revised UCC section 9-618] specifically provides that such a transfer confers on the transferee all the rights and duties of the secured party.

[c] Manner of Sending Notice

Former section 9-504(3) required that the notice of the sale be "sent" to the debtor. "Send" is defined in former UCC § 1-201(38) as "to deposit in the mail or deliver for transmission by any other usual means of communication with postage or cost of transmission provided for and properly addressed."

Revised Article 9 also requires the secured party to "send" notification of the sale, n23 but includes its own definition of "send" instead of incorporating the Article 1 definition. The core of the Revised Article 9 definition is "to deposit in the mail, deliver for transmission, or transmit by any other usual means, with postage or cost of transmission provided for, addressed to any address reasonable under the circumstances." n24 This definition contemplates not just notice by mail but also by electronic means of transmission.

Revised Article 9 does not allow secured parties to transmit the notice of sale electronically as a way to avoid giving actual notice to the consumer. Section 9-611(b) requires "reasonable" notification of the sale, and Official Comment 2 specifically says that the manner in which the notice is sent must be reasonable.Further, Article 9 expands the definition of "good faith," which is required in performance and enforcement of a transaction, to include both honesty in fact and the observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing. n25 Notice by electronic means would be arguably unreasonable and a violation of the duty of good faith unless the creditor had engaged in a pattern of electronic communication with the debtor, to which the debtor had consistently responded.

[d] Who Must Receive Notice

The former version of Article 9 provided, in the case of consumer goods, that the "debtor" must receive notice of the sale. n26 Except in Louisiana, former Article 9 defined "debtor" broadly as the person who owes payment or other performance of the obligation and included both the owner of the collateral and the obligor, if different. n27 The 1999 revisions to Article 9 clarify that notice must be sent to both the debtor and to any secondary obligor. n28

[e] Waiver of Notice

[i] Debtor's

The debtor may not waive the right to receive notice except by an agreement entered into and signed or otherwise authenticated after default. n29 Article 9 should be strictly construed to allow only a specific, knowing waiver. n30

[ii] Guarantor's

Courts split as to whether, under the former version of Article 9, guarantors can waive their right to notice prior to default, but have recognized that the nonwaivability of guarantors' rights under former section 9-504(3) is the majority view in the country. The 1999 revisions clarify that neither the debtor nor any secondary obligor may waive the right to receive notice of the sale unless the waiver is entered into and authenticated after default. n31

[f] Timing

The secured party must give "reasonable notification of the sale." n32 Thus, the test is whether the debtor has adequate time to react to notice of the sale and protect their interest.

State statutes may prescribe a minimum time period between the giving of notice and the sale, such as ten days. Otherwise, a court must decide what is reasonable. A period of ten days between the time of notice and the time of sale appears to be the standard minimum acceptable period. The 1999 revisions to Article 9 set ten days before sale as a "safe harbor" for non-consumer transactions, but do not specify a notice period for consumer transactions. n33

[g] Notice Sent But Not Received

Although the secured party need not prove the debtor actually received the notice, the secured party bears the burden of proving that the notice was sent or that a reasonable attempt to notify the debtor was made.

[h] Written Requirement

Under the former version of Article 9, courts were split on whether oral notice was proper or whether only written notice of the sale would suffice. The 1999 revisions to Article 9 make it clear that written notice is required. n34 The notice may, however, be electronic, although the secured party's choice of an electronic means of sending notice must be reasonable and will have to measure up to the good faith standard. n35

[i] Content

The Code specifies the required content of the notice. n36 The notice must contain the time and place of a public sale. n37 If a private sale or other disposition is contemplated instead, the notice must contain the time after which the sale or other disposition is to be made. Courts also find that the notice must state whether the sale will be public or private. n38 Describing the method of sale as an auction, without indicating whether it will be a private or public sale, is insufficient. n38.1 If either the creditor notifies the debtor that a private sale will be held and, in fact, holds a public sale, or the notice is for a public sale and a private sale is held, then the notice is defective.

The content of the notice must be accurate in all respects, such as identity of collateral to be sold, redemption price, responsibility of guarantors, etc.

The 1999 revisions to Article 9 significantly expand the information that must be included in the notice of sale in consumer goods transactions. In addition to the time and place of a public sale, or the date after which a private sale will be held, the notice will have to include: a description of the debtor and the secured party; a description of the collateral; a statement that the debtor is entitled to an accounting of the unpaid indebtedness and the charge, if any, for an accounting; a description of any liability for a deficiency of the person to which the notification is sent; a telephone number to call to learn the amount necessary to redeem the collateral; and a telephone number or mailing address to contact to get additional information. n39 While the notice need not be in any particular form, the drafters have provided a "safe harbor" form of notice that includes language to meet these requirements. All information required by the notice provision must be included in the notice and must be accurate. n40 The revised notice requirements will govern transactions entered into prior to the effective date of the 1999 revisions, as long as the notice is sent after the effective date. n41

[j] When Notice Not Required

Article 9 provides that notice is not required if the collateral is perishable, threatens to decline speedily in value, or is customarily sold on "recognized markets." n42 Only items such as stocks, bonds, securities, and commodities are sold on a "recognized market." With rare exception, courts have held that used vehicles and used appliances or other consumer goods are not perishable, do not threaten to decline speedily, and are not customarily sold on recognized markets, so that the requirement of notice prior to sale is not excepted in these cases.

The Commentary to the 1999 revision of Article 9 makes it crystal clear that automobile auctions are not "recognized markets": "A market in which prices are individually negotiated or the items are not fungible is not a recognized market, even if the items are the subject of widely disseminated price guides or are disposed of through dealer auctions." n43

[k] Remedies for Notice Violations

Revised UCC section 9-625 [former UCC section 9-507] provides for debtor remedies where a secured party fails to give proper notice. n44 Under Revised UCC section 9-625, the debtor has a right to actual damages, such as diminished sale price, and other foreseeable damages.

At minimum, in the case of consumer goods, failure to give notice should result in liability for Revised UCC section 9-625(c)(1) [former section 9-507(1)]'s minimum statutory damages of the finance charge plus ten percent of the cash price or loan principal. n45 The purpose of this statutory damage provision is to impose a flat penalty for noncompliance with Article 9 regardless of a plaintiff's ability to demonstrate any actual loss resulting from a given violation. In addition, it is arguably compensatory in that it ensures that a plaintiff will receive some level of compensation for a violation. It provides an incentive to pursue Article 9 claims even when the amount of actual loss that can be demonstrated is minimal. n45.1 In addition, the court may decide that, where notice is insufficient, the secured party is not entitled to a deficiency.

[5] Timing of Sale

[a] Unreasonable Delay

Under Article 9, creditors must sell repossessed consumer goods within 90 days if the debtor has already paid 60% of the cash price or 60% of the loan principal in the case of a purchase money security interest. n46 A court held that sale of a repossessed car within a year after repossession was commercially reasonable when extensive repairs were necessary and parts were difficult to get. n46.1 In addition to this specific requirement, the timing of the sale of any goods must meet a commercially reasonable standard.

An important factor in determining the commercial reasonableness of the delay is the extent to which the collateral's value is depreciating while it sits at the dealer's lot or warehouse. Unjustified delay is also commercially unreasonable where the result is the debtor having to pay substantial storage charges. The creditor's failure to comply with its own standard procedures for disposing of collateral may show unreasonable delay.

However, there is a line of cases -- primarily in the commercial, nonconsumer setting -- holding that, in certain circumstances, a delay of several months to a year is not commercially unreasonable; for example, where the collateral was expected to rise in price.

[b] Excessive Delay

If the creditor retains the collateral too long before disposing of it, a court may find that an involuntary or constructive strict foreclosure has occurred and force the creditor to retain the collateral in full satisfaction of the obligation, with no right to seek a deficiency.

However, courts do not always find a constructive strict foreclosure where the sale has been delayed if there has been good reason, and the official commentary to Revised Article 9 opines that "mere delays" in collection or disposition of collateral do not constitute a constructive strict foreclosure. n47

The revised version of Article 9 also preserves common law remedies such as conversion and estoppel when a secured party holds repossessed collateralfor an unreasonably long time. n48 These causes of action may provide a remedy similar to constructive strict foreclosure.

The creditor's delay may lull the consumer into believing that the collateral has been sold for an amount sufficient to pay the indebtedness, or the consumer may conclude that the creditor is acting in accord with a previous oral representation that returning the vehicle will resolve the debt. In either case, if the consumer changes position in reliance on the creditor's inaction, the creditor may be estopped from pursuing a deficiency.

[c] Rushed Sale

A sale that is too hastily conducted may not be commercially reasonable for a number of reasons, including the failure to advertise the sale adequately and the creditor's failure to locate potential purchasers. Creditors may also be required to wait until the proper selling season, as in the case of seasonal goods, such as heaters and air conditioners.

[6] Public vs. Private Sale

[a] Determining Public or Private

The creditor can sell the collateral at either a public or a private sale, but the choice of public or private sale must be commercially reasonable.

The most important indicator of whether a sale is public or private is the nature of the sale itself. Public sales take place at a given time, at a given place, with competitive bids. More typical of a private sale is for the collateral to remain at the dealer's place of business until an interested buyer is willing to pay a reasonable price for the collateral.

However, since public sales rarely attract more than a few bidders, it is often difficult to distinguish between the two. Discovery as to advertising, whether an auctioneer was used, how many bidders there were, and related questions usually suffice to determine the type of sale conducted. Courts have held that a public sale must be accessible to all members of the public. n49

If the creditor notifies the debtor that the sale is public, but, in fact, holds a private sale, the notice is defective and the creditor is liable for damages or other remedies under Revised UCC section 9-625 [former section 9-507]. In fact, the creditor has the burden of proof in a deficiency action to demonstrate whether a sale is public or private, so as to show whether the type of sale held corresponds to the type of sale specified in the notice.

[b] Commercial Reasonableness of Choice

Under Article 9, the creditor may hold either a public or a private sale, but this choice must be commercially reasonable and must maximize the sale proceeds. n50 Other state statutes, however, may require public sales in some circumstances.

Article 9 seems to permit wholesale sales in most cases, even though a retail sale may result in a higher price. Thus, banks, finance companies, and other nondealer lenders are probably well within their rights to sell repossessed consumer goods at wholesale public sales.

[7] Public Sale

[a] Requirements of Auctions

Public sales must be by public auction with competitive bidding. The sale may take place either at a regular, known auction for that kind of goods or at one specifically arranged to dispose of the repossessed collateral. n51

Whenever possible, the debtor or a representative of the debtor's attorney should be present at the auction to observe the nature of the sale. To assure the highest price, the auction should be conducted by someone familiar with the type of goods being sold and with the conduct of auctions. Without a professional auctioneer, this standard may not be met.

The sale location must be such as to allow access to the collateral on the part of the buying public.

[b] Adequate Advertisement

The secured party is under a duty to give notice of the intended sale to members of the public who might be expected to buy at the sale. The secured party has the burden of proving that it exposed the potential sale to at least a substantial number of potential buyers.

It is clear that failure to advertise consumer goods at all is commercially unreasonable. The requisites for advertising or eliciting bids vary, depending on the sale period and the type of collateral.

The advertising and notice of the sale must give prospective buyers enough time to make arrangements necessary to attend the sale and purchase the collateraland must also adequately describe the goods to be sold and the conditions of sale. The distribution of the advertising must be adequate to reach prospective bidders, such as through the use of trade journals, if appropriate, or at least in the manner of advertising like products on the open market.

It is the question of overall commercial reasonableness that is critical; the cumulative impact of minor infractions may very well convince a court that the sale as a whole does not meet Article 9 standards.

[c] Availability of Collateral for Inspection

The collateral offered for sale at public auction must be available for reasonable inspection before the auction. The need for advance inspection increases as the price of the goods increases. The sale must be to the highest responsible cash bidder. n52

A creditor may purchase the collateral at a public sale. However, if the creditor or a related party purchases the collateral at public auction, special attention must be paid to all aspects of the auction. Of particular importance is whether an auction was actually held and, if so, whether the creditor turned away or discouraged other bidders.

The 1999 revisions to Article 9 create a new remedy for some debtors where the collateral is sold to an insider at a low price. Revised section 9-615 requires the debtor to be credited with the price that would have been realized at an arm's length sale if the collateral is sold to the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor, and the proceeds are significantly below the range that a commercially reasonable sale to a non-insider would have brought. As a result, sales to the following are governed by the new rule:

- A person or organization that directly or indirectly controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with the secured party--for example, parent companies, subsidiaries and other companies under common ownership. Officers and directors of these related companies are also considered insiders.

- An officer or director of the secured party or someone performing similar functions.

- An ancestor or lineal descendant of any individual described above or the individual's spouse; the spouse, brother, brother-in-law, sister or sister-in-law of any individual described above, or any relative by blood or marriage who shares a home with an individual described above. n53

- The original seller, if it has a recourse agreement with the secured party, i.e., is obligated to buy back the debt if the buyer defaults. n54

The new rule applies to both public and private sales. The duty to credit the consumer with an arms-length sale price could be enforced in an individual suit, as a defense to a deficiency judgment, or in a class action. In addition, the creditor is liable for actual damages -- plus, in some cases, statutory damages -- if it also violates other provisions of Revised Article 9, such as the duty to resell the collateral in a commercially reasonable manner.

[d] Injunctions Available

Debtors' attorneys should note that Revised section 9-625(a) [former section 9-507] authorizes not only damages for commercially unreasonable sales, but also injunctions against such sales. An injunction may be appropriate if the creditor's preparation for the sale is clearly inadequate, or the creditor appears to be attempting to sell the collateral to itself at a low price. However, obtaining an injunction may not help the debtor in the end. Under many circumstances, a debtor is better off relying on a damage remedy for an unreasonable sale.

[8] Private Sale

[a] Requirements

A creditor may elect to hold a private sale whenever it appears that this form of sale will result in a higher sale price unless other state law requires a public sale. Private sales to retail buyers, where facilities for such sales are available, are likely to produce substantially higher prices than wholesale auctions, so this form of sale, if reasonably conducted, should always be permissible. On the other hand, a private wholesale non-auction sale should be scrutinized more carefully to ascertain whether a higher net price could have been obtained at auction, after deducting auction expenses, or at a private retail sale.

[b] Creditor's Purchase at Private Sale

Although secured parties may buy the collateral at a public sale, they may not do so at a private sale unless the collateral is of the type customarily sold in a recognized market or is the subject of widely distributed standard price quotations. n55

If the secured party buys the collateral at an allegedly public sale, it runs the risk of a court looking at all the aspects of the sale and determining that the sale was actually private and that the secured party's purchase was thus wrongful.

[c] Good Faith Bargaining Requirement

If the creditor elects to dispose of the collateral at a private sale, the creditor must be careful to engage in good-faith bargaining and make sure that there is no self-dealing.

[d] Repurchase Agreements

A significant portion of consumer credit contracts are assigned by a dealer to a finance company. Former section 9-504(5) specifically stated that a transfer of collateral pursuant to a repurchase agreement or the like was not a sale or disposition of the collateral under Article 9. n56 Instead, the dealer or other transferee had the same rights and duties after the transfer as the secured party had prior to the transfer, and must now conduct a commercially reasonable sale of the collateral, meeting notice and all other requirements.

Debtors' attorneys faced with alleged sales between finance companies and their dealers -- particularly involving General Motors, Ford, and Chrysler -- should be familiar with the FTC activity in this area. The Commission has obtained lengthy consent agreements from the three major American automobile companies whereby they agree to discontinue improper conduct. n57

Where the collateral has been assigned back to the dealer under a repurchase agreement, it has been held that only the dealer, and not the repossessing creditor, is liable for failure to dispose of the collateral properly. n58

The 1999 revisions to Article 9 eliminate the flat rule that a transfer back to a dealer under a repurchase or recourse agreement is never an Article 9 disposition. n59 If the secured obligation, i.e., the paper, rather than the collateral itself is re-assigned to the dealer under a repurchase agreement, it is not an Article 9 disposition. n60 But if the collateral itself is transferred to the secondary obligor, then it may be an Article 9 disposition. n61 Only if the secondary obligor (the dealer) agrees to accept the rights and assume the duties of the secured party, as well as take the transfer of the collateral, will it be clear that the transfer is not an Article 9 disposition. If the price at which the dealer repurchases the collateral is significantly below the usual range of prices, however, the consumer is entitled to be credited with the price that an arm's length sale to an unrelated party would have produced. n62 This revision to Article 9 will open the door to a new wave of self-dealing, which will be difficult for consumers to police.

[9] Other Challenges to Commercial Reasonableness

[a] Sale Price

[i] Is a Low Sale Price a Sufficient Basis for a Finding of Commercial Unreasonableness?

A low sale price does not always, in and of itself, support a finding of commercial unreasonableness, especially if the sale itself is conducted in a commercially reasonable manner. n63 Allegations of a commercially unreasonable resale price alone, however, may be sufficient to place the burden on the creditor of proving that the value of the goods was less than the amount of the debt. n64 Further, if the collateral was sold at a low price to a secured party, or secondary obligor, the 1999 revisions to Article 9 provide a special remedy to the debtor. n65

In any case, the secured party is still under an affirmative duty to obtain the best possible price for the collateral. A particularly low price will subject the disposition itself to close scrutiny. n66 Courts applying the 2001 revision of Article 9 have agreed that a low sale price is relevant to the question of commercial reasonableness. n66.1

A showing that the creditor was acting solely in its own best interest, n67 and not fulfilling what is essentially its fiduciary duty n68 to the debtor, may convince the trier of facts that the price obtained was not commercially reasonable.

The District of Columbia and Guam have court rules that require a creditor seeking a deficiency judgment to show that the collateral was resold for a fair and reasonable price. n69

[b] Wholesale Disposition

[i] UCC Language

One of the most persistent problems faced by consumer debtors is the sale by the dealer of repossessed collateral at wholesale where the dealer could, with little additional effort or cost, sell the same collateral at retail at a higher price, thus reducing the size of the deficiency claim. n70 Dealers often defend their wholesale dispositions by pointing to the first sentence of Revised UCC section 9-627 [former section 9-507(2)].

However, Revised UCC section 9-627 [former section 9-507(2)] contains additional language indicating that dealers should sell repossessed collateral in the same way they sell similar, non-repossessed property. Revised section 9-627(b) states that a sale is commercially reasonable if sold pursuant to a recognized market or sold "in conformity with reasonable commercial practices among dealers in the type of property." While it is clear that there is no recognized market for the sale of used cars, they can be sold at retail in conformity with the practices of dealers of used cars. The Commentary to the 1999 revision of Article 9 makes this same point, but in somewhat stronger language. n71

[ii] Case Law

Several courts take the sensible position that wholesale disposition is not per se unreasonable; instead, the reasonableness of wholesale disposition depends on whether, under the circumstances, the sale will be likely to yield a net recovery as large as a retail sale. Although wholesale prices are lower, so are selling expenses, including storage, advertising, and sales commissions. Where a dealer can sell collateral at retail at a significantly higher price than wholesale, with only slightly higher sales expenses, a wholesale disposition may be commercially unreasonable.

[iii] FTC Precedent

In actions brought by the FTC against them, the three major automobile creditors signed consent agreements agreeing to sell repossessed cars in the same manner that they sell other similar used cars. While the FTC has since modified these consent orders so that this requirement and other aspects of the consent orders are no longer mandatory for dealers, the consent orders are still a useful source of authority on commercial reasonableness.

Car dealers typically sell the majority of their used cars to consumers at retail. Consequently, debtors' attorneys must look at the pattern of a dealer's sale of used cars, comparing the percentage of repossessed cars versus the percentage of other used cars that are sold at wholesale auction.

[iv] "Dealers Only" Auto Auctions

Dealers and creditors frequently dispose of repossessed automobiles at auctions that are open only to auto dealers and not to the public or the consumer debtor. Because the auctions are designed to bring in a wholesale price, repossessed cars will often sell for less than one half of their fair market value. The few courts to consider the issue have generally upheld the commercial reasonableness of a dealers-only sale. n72 These decisions are often based on the court's acceptance of the creditor's evidence either that such sales are the customary practice among creditors or that such sales usually bring the highest prices. However, if consumers can show that a certain aspect of the dealers-only auction violated Revised UCC section 9-610 [former section 9-504], such as using an improper notice, the creditor may be barred from obtaining a deficiency and in some cases be required to pay statutory damages or fines. n73

These decisions have failed to subject the creditors' arguments to close scrutiny and those arguments may be vulnerable to attack in the appropriate factual situation.

Another issue is what type of notice must be provided concerning a dealers-only auto auction, a public or private sale notice. Most courts take the highly questionable position that dealers-only auctions are private sales for which a private sale notice is proper despite the fact that they are auctions. Yet an auction is the very essence of a public sale. If a dealers-only auction is a private sale,then purchase of the collateral by the secured party at the sale is a violation of the UCC. n74

[v] Private, Non-Auction Wholesale Disposition

Another highly suspect practice involves a dealer that sells repossessed cars privately at wholesale. That is, instead of auctioning the car, the dealer solicits bids from a limited number of other dealers. This method has a high potential for abuse, and, arguably, will not produce as good a result as either a private retail sale or a public or dealers only auction.

[vi] Dealer Justifications for Wholesale Disposition

There are a number of other reasons why dealers sell collateral at wholesale. The first involves self-dealing. If the dealer wants to sell the collateral to itself or a business associate, the dealer's incentive is to arrange a low-priced wholesale auction. Dealers may also resist selling repossessed cars at retail because the repossessed cars compete with other cars on the lot that the dealer owns outright.

[c] "Churning": Revolving Repossession Schemes

Creditors and closely-connected dealers may engage in various types of revolving repossession or "churning" schemes. These schemes generally involve the dealer selling a used car on credit terms the debtor cannot afford, often at an inflated price. The debtor almost immediately defaults, and the creditor quickly repossesses the car. The creditor sells it back to the dealer for a fraction of its worth, using this sale price to calculate the deficiency owed, and then brings a large deficiency action against the debtor. The dealer resells the repossessed car for much more than the dealer just "bought" it for, and starts the cycle over again with a new debtor. In a churning scheme, the dealer can use the same car over and over again, each time creating a sizeable deficiency action at little cost to the dealer. n75 This scheme works particularly well if the car has an attractive appearance but is defective. When it breaks down and the buyer stops paying, the dealer repossesses it, keeping the downpayment, and sells it again.

Where practitioners believe their client and others are victims of a churning scheme, one option is to obtain class-wide relief for the many victims of the scheme. n76 A title search will reveal how often a dealership has resold a particular vehicle. In addition, some dealerships assign each car a stock number, and then add a digit to indicate how many times the dealership has sold the vehicle.

Churning violates the commercially reasonable resale requirement of Article 9, as a sale to an alter ego at a reduced price is not a commercially reasonable way to maximize the sale price. In addition, Revised Article 9, effective July 1, 2001, in most states, has a new provision that addresses churning. This new provision applies whenever a secured party sells the collateral back to a dealer who is obligated under a recourse agreement, i.e., a dealer who is obligated to buy the collateral back if the buyer defaults. In such a case, if the proceeds of the sale are significantly below the range of proceeds that an arms-length sale would have produced, the creditor is required to credit the consumer with the amount that would have been realized by an arms-length sale. n77 Illinois has a special provision of its UDAP statute that forbids churning n78 but, even without such a specific prohibition, courts are likely to find that churning is a UDAP violation.

[10] Rights of Purchasers at Repossession Sales

The rights of a purchaser at a disposition after repossession, a foreclosure sale, are determined by Article 2 of the UCC covering the sale of goods. In addition to the rights provided in Article 2, Article 9 controls some aspects of the purchaser's rights. The purchaser takes all the rights of the debtor n79 and all subordinate security interests are extinguished. n80 The only two situations that will cloud the title of a foreclosure purchaser are where there is a security interest superior to that of the creditor selling the collateral n81 or where the debtor never had good title in the collateral in the first place. n82

Under the former version of Article 9, the secured party's failure to comply with the provisions of the UCC or with the requirements of any judicial proceedings will not vitiate the sale or affect the interest taken by the purchaser except:

- In the case of a public sale, if the purchaser actually has knowledge of defects in the sale or buys in collusion with the secured party, other bidders, or any other person conducting the sale; n83 or

- In the case of a private sale, if the purchaser fails to act in good faith. n84

The 1999 revisions to Article 9 protect any buyer who acts in good faith and eliminate the distinction between buyers at public and private sales. n85 Revised Article 9, in a departure from the previous approach of the UCC, provides that a repossession sale includes "the warranties relating to title, possession, quiet enjoyment, and the like" which arise by operation of law in similar voluntary sales. n86 These warranties can be disclaimed, however. n87 The Official Comments note that implied warranties of merchantability or fitness for a particular purpose may also arise in a repossession sale, a question which would be governed by Article 2. n88 Disclaimer of these warranties may so reduce the repossession sale price as to be commercially unreasonable.

A successor liability claim can proceed against an entity that purchases assets in a commercially reasonable Article 9 repossession sale if the other requirements for successor liability are met. n89 In other words, when a successor corporation buys its predecessor's assets at a repossession sale, the fact that the sale extinguishes the creditor's security interest does not insulate the successor corporation from liability under the general law of successor liability. n90

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Commercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionDisposition of Collateral

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610(a) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(1)]. See Williams v. Regency Fin. Corp., 309 F.3d 1045 (8th Cir. 2002) (Missouri law) (listing gift, assignment, abandonment, barter, exchange, and destruction as examples of "other disposition[s]" of collateral).

(n2)Footnote 2. Revised U.C.C. § 9-625 [former U.C.C. § 9-507(1)].

(n3)Footnote 3. Clark, The Law of Secured Transactions Under the Uniform Commercial Code § 4.08 (1993). However, the commercially reasonable standard does not apply to a creditor's pre-repossession forbearance arrangements with the debtor. McDonald v. Rockland Trust Co., 798 N.E.2d 323, 52 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 516 (Mass. App. Ct. 2003) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610(b) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(3)].

(n5)Footnote 5. All Valley Acceptance Co. v. Durfey, 800 S.W.2d 672, 13 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1376 (Tex. Ct. App. 1990) . But cf. Williams v. Thomas Pontiac-GMC-Nissan-Hyundai, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15045 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 22, 1999) (court found that the duty to be commercially reasonable only attached after a debtor's default; thus, consumer could not seek relief under U.C.C. § 9-504 because consumer claimed no default existed).

(n6)Footnote 6. Official Comment 4 to U.C.C. § 9-627; see Layne v. Bank One, 395 F.3d 271, 55 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 704 (6th Cir. 2005) (sale on a recognized market, here NASDAQ, is commercially reasonable).

(n7)Footnote 7. Revised U.C.C. § 9-602(7) [former U.C.C. § 9-501(3)]. See Solfanelli v. CoreStates Bank N.A., 203 F.3d 197, 40 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 914 (3d Cir. 2000) ; Beninati v. FDIC, 55 F. Supp. 2d 141 (E.D.N.Y. 1999) . See also Fodale v. Waste Mgmt. of Mich., Inc., 271 Mich. App. 11 (2006) (decided under former version of Article 9).

(n8)Footnote 8. See, e.g., City Nat'l Bank v. Unique Structures, Inc., 49 F.3d 1330 (8th Cir. 1995) (Arkansas law).

(n9)Footnote 9. United Mo. Bank of Kansas City, N.A. v. Gagel, 815 F. Supp. 387 (D. Kan. 1993) (even if debtor does not plead issue affirmatively). See also Solfanelli v. CoreStates Bank N.A., 203 F.3d 197, 200, 40 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 914 (3d Cir. 2000) (creditor's burden to show that under the "totality of the circumstances" sale was reasonable).

(n10)Footnote 10. See City Nat'l Bank v. Unique Structures, Inc., 49 F.3d 1330 (8th Cir. 1995) (Arkansas law).

(n11)Footnote 11. U.C.C. § 9-601(b) [former U.C.C. § 9-501(1), (2)] (referring to Revised U.C.C. § 9-207(a)). See Harris v. Key Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 89 F. Supp. 2d 408 (W.D.N.Y. 2000) (duty is equivalent to common law fiduciary duty), summ. judg. granted, 193 F. Supp. 2d 707 (W.D.N.Y. 2002) (plaintiffs' injuries caused not by actions of defendant, but by their own inaction when notified of creditor's intent to keep collateral), aff'd, 51 Fed. Appx. 346 (2d Cir. 2002) (unpublished).

(n12)Footnote 12. Marks v. Powell, 162 B.R. 820, 24 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 371 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1993) (creditor's repossession agents killed many fish, kept some fish, and destroyed equipment in attempting repossession of fish farm, reducing value of the collateral).

(n13)Footnote 13. See R & J of Tenn., Inc. v. Blankenship-Melton Real Estate, Inc., 166 S.W.3d 195, 55 U.C.C.

Rep. Serv. 2d 278 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2004) (allowing others to use the collateral after repossession breached duty of good faith and is one factor in finding of commercial unreasonableness).

(n14)Footnote 14. See § 10.09[2][d] infra.

(n15)Footnote 15. Revised U.C.C. § 9-625 [former U.C.C. § 9-507(1)].

(n16)Footnote 16. Former U.C.C. § 9-504(1) used the same standard but refers to the collateral's "then condition."

(n17)Footnote 17. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610, Official Comment 4.

(n18)Footnote 18. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610(d). See Revised U.C.C. § 9-610, Official Comment 11 and the proposed 1999 revision to U.C.C. § 2-312, Official Comment 5.

(n19)Footnote 19. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610, Official Comment 11.

(n20)Footnote 20. See Donald J. Rapson, Symposium: Default and Enforcement of Security Interests Under Revised Article 9, 74 Chi.-Kent. L. Rev. 893, 917 (1999).

(n21)Footnote 21. Brockbank v. Best Capital Corp., 341 S.C. 372, 534 S.E.2d 688, 42 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 310 (2000) .

(n22)Footnote 22. Revised U.C.C. § 9-611(b) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(3)]. But cf. Green Tree Fin. Corp. v. Stone, 2000 Del. Super. LEXIS 345 (Del. Super. Ct. Sept. 29, 2000) (acceptable for creditor to delegate to servicer the duty to send notice).

(n23)Footnote 23. Revised U.C.C. § 9-611(c).

(n24)Footnote 24. Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(74).

(n25)Footnote 25. Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(43).

(n26)Footnote 26. Former U.C.C. § 9-504(3).

(n27)Footnote 27. Former U.C.C. § 9-105(d).

(n28)Footnote 28. Revised U.C.C. § 9-611(c).

(n29)Footnote 29. Revised U.C.C. § 9-624(a) [former U.C.C. §§ 9-501(3)(b), 504(3)].

(n30)Footnote 30. Brockbank v. Best Capital Corp., 341 S.C. 372, 534 S.E.2d 688, 42 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 310 (2000) .

(n31)Footnote 31. Revised U.C.C. §§ 9-602, 9-624. But cf. Jett v. Peoples Bank & Trust of Hazard, 2005 WL 2173947 (Ky. Ct. App. Sept. 9, 2005) (notice of sale not required after borrower revoked acceptance of the collateral and gave no indication he had any continuing interest in the property).

(n32)Footnote 32. Revised U.C.C. § 9-611(b) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(3)].

(n33)Footnote 33. Revised U.C.C. § 9-612.

(n34)Footnote 34. Revised U.C.C. § 9-611(b). See Cerritos Valley Bank v. Stirling, 81 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 432 (2000) (to be consistent with U.C.C. § 9-504(3), any estoppel claim can only be based on a signed writing); Brockbank v. Best Capital Corp., 341 S.C. 372, 534 S.E.2d 688, 42 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 310 (2000)

(abandonment of mobile home is not waiver, which can only be made by signed writing).

(n35)Footnote 35. See § 10.08[4][c] supra.

(n36)Footnote 36. Revised U.C.C. §§ 9-613, 9-614 [former U.C.C. § 9-504(3)].

(n37)Footnote 37. Society Bank N.A. v. Cazeault, 83 Ohio App. 3d 84, 613 N.E.2d 1103, 21 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 398 (1993) (notice deficient where state not specified: Kansas City, Kansas or Kansas City, Missouri).

(n38)Footnote 38. Davis v. Huntsville Prod. Credit Ass'n, 481 So. 2d 1103, 42 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1863 (Ala. 1985) ; Union Safe Dep. Bank v. Floyd, 76 Cal. App. 4th 25, 31 (3d Dist. 1999) (California U.C.C. § 9-504 requires strict compliance and "does not permit the creditor to leave the debtor guessing regarding the type of sale contemplated"). See In re Downing, 286 B.R. 900, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 697 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2002) (deficiency barred when notice governed by Revised Article 9 did not specify method of sale).

(n39)Footnote 38.1. Garcia v. United Auto Credit Corp., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2210 (S.D. Fla. 2008) .

(n40)Footnote 39. Revised U.C.C. § 9-614 (some provisions incorporated by reference from Revised U.C.C. § 9-613). See In re Moffett, 356 F.3d 518, 522 (4th Cir. 2004) (Va. law) (noting that creditor must give debtor notice of right to redeem).

(n41)Footnote 40. Revised U.C.C. § 9-614, Official Comment 2.

(n42)Footnote 41. Revised U.C.C. § 9-702.

(n43)Footnote 42. Revised U.C.C. § 9-611(d) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(3)].

(n44)Footnote 43. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610, Official Comment 9.

(n45)Footnote 44. Revised U.C.C. § 9-625 [former U.C.C. § 9-507(1)]; Security Sav. Bank, SLA v. Tranchitella, 249 N.J. Super. 234, 592 A.2d 284, 15 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 349 (App. Div. 1991) .

(n46)Footnote 45. Zions First Nat'l Bank v. Hurst, 570 P.2d 1031, 22 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1071 (Utah 1977) .

(n47)Footnote 45.1. Cavil v. Globe Acceptance, Inc., Case No. CL 103257 (Iowa Dist. Ct., Polk County Dec. 5, 2007), available at www.consumerlaw.org/unreported.

(n48)Footnote 46. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620(e) [former U.C.C. § 9-505(1)].

(n49)Footnote 46.1. Triple J Saipan, Inc. v. Sanchez, 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 574 (N. Mar. I. 2007) .

(n50)Footnote 47. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620, Official Comment 5.

(n51)Footnote 48. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620, Official Comment 12 (explicitly mentioning conversion and cross-referencing U.C.C. § 1-103, which mentions estoppel).

(n52)Footnote 49. See also Revised U.C.C. § 9-610, Official Comment 7.

(n53)Footnote 50. Vornado PS, Ltd. Liab. Co. v. Primestone Inv. Partners, 821 A.2d 296, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1348 (Del. Ch. 2002) (New York law) (choice of public sale was commercially reasonable as the secured creditor, who was one of the most interested potential buyers of the collateral, would have been excluded from the bidding at a private sale), aff'd, 822 A.2d 397 (Del. 2003) (table).

(n54)Footnote 51. See Estate of Gammell v. Modern Fin. Co., 1998 Ohio App. LEXIS 4307 (Ohio Ct. App. Sept. 3, 1998) (sale not commercially reasonable where auction rarely sold motor vehicles), appeal disallowed, 84 Ohio St. 3d 1474, 704 N.E.2d 581 (1999) .

(n55)Footnote 52. Clark, The Law of Secured Transactions Under the Uniform Commercial Code P 4.09*[2] (1993).

(n56)Footnote 53. U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(62), (63).

(n57)Footnote 54. Revised U.C.C. §§ 9-615(f), 9-102(a)(71) (definition of "secondary obligor").

(n58)Footnote 55. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610(c) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(3)].

(n59)Footnote 56. Revised U.C.C. § 9-618 [former U.C.C. § 9-504(5)]. See Williams v. Regency Fin. Corp., 309 F.3d 1045 (8th Cir. 2002) (Missouri law) (transfer from finance company to related dealer was disposition; no discussion of whether recourse agreement existed).

(n60)Footnote 57. Chrysler Motor Co., 97 F.T.C. 139 (1981) (consent order), modified, 99 F.T.C. 343 (1982); Ford Motor Co., 93 F.T.C. 402 (1980) (consent order), modified, 95 F.T.C. 343 (1980) , modified, 52 Fed. Reg. 16,234 (May 4, 1987) ; General Motors Corp., 95 F.T.C. 825 (1980) (consent order), modified, 53 Fed. Reg. 9,105 (Mar. 21, 1988) .

(n61)Footnote 58. Brooks v. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., 96 N.C. App. 89, 384 S.E.2d 288 (1989) .

(n62)Footnote 59. Revised U.C.C. § 9-618.

(n63)Footnote 60. Revised U.C.C. § 9-618(a)(1), (b).

(n64)Footnote 61. Revised U.C.C. § 9-618(a)(2).

(n65)Footnote 62. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(f). See Revised U.C.C. § 9-618, Official Comment 3.

(n66)Footnote 63. Revised U.C.C. § 9-627 [former U.C.C. § 9-507(2)]. The Official Comments to the 1999 revisions to Article 9 explicitly adopt the conclusion reached by many courts that "a low price suggests that a court should scrutinize carefully all aspects of a disposition to ensure that each aspect was commercially reasonable." Revised U.C.C. § 9-610, Official Comment 10. See, e.g., McGrady v. Nissan Motor Acceptance Corp., 40 F. Supp. 2d 1323 (M.D. Ala. 1998) ; McReynolds v. Barnett Recovery Corp., 42 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 327 (Fla. Cir. Ct. 2000) ; Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Sagmiller (In re Estate of Sagmiller), 615 N.W.2d 567 (N.D. 2000) (price is an important but not dispositive factor); Southeast Recovery Servs. v. Northen, 565 S.E.2d 861, 47 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1510 (Ga. Ct. App. 2002) (fact that different price may have been paid at different time does not establish commercial unreasonableness; non-consumer case).

(n67)Footnote 64. Brewer v. Trust Co. Bank, 205 Ga. App. 891, 424 S.E.2d 74, 21 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 189 (1992) (even where notice valid and properly conducted resale, debtor's challenge of commercial reasonableness of price puts burden on creditor to prove value of goods not equal to debts by proof independent of reciting price obtained on resale).

(n68)Footnote 65. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(f).

(n69)Footnote 66. State Nat'l Bank v. Academia, Inc., 802 S.W.2d 282, 14 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 662 (Tex. Ct. App. 1991) (Illinois law) (sale price "is a key component in assessing the commercial reasonableness"). See also Revised U.C.C. § 9-610, Official Comment 10. Wright v. Wells Fargo Auto Fin., Inc., 59 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 8 (Iowa Dist. Ct. 2005) (low sale price not a violation when creditor established that sale was commercially reasonable); McDonald Mobile Home Sales, Inc. v. BankAmerica Hous. Services, 218 S.W.3d 376 (Ala. Civ. App. 2005) (large price discrepancy signals need for close scrutiny of sale procedures).

(n70)Footnote 66.1. Coxall v. Clover Commercial Corp., 4 Misc. 3d 654, 781 N.Y.S.2d 567, 54 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 5 (Civ. Ct. 2004) ; CIT Group Equip. Fin., Inc. v. FRS Farms, Inc., 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 948, 951 (Wis. Ct. App. 2007) .

(n71)Footnote 67. Bezanson v. Fleet Bank-N.H., 29 F.3d 16 (1st Cir. 1994) (sale of business commercially unreasonable where creditor bank rejected higher bid for one at lower price that included equity interest in business for bank).

(n72)Footnote 68. The secured party's responsibility to the debtor may be phrased in terms of the fiduciary duty.

(n73)Footnote 69. See D.C. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 55-II-b; Town House Dep't Stores, Inc. v. Ahn, 2003 Guam LEXIS 30 (Guam Mar. 7, 2003) (applying Civil Procedure Rule 70(a); price here was fair and reasonable).

(n74)Footnote 70. Citizens State Bank v. Krewson, 822 S.W.2d 580, 17 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 665 (Mo. Ct. App. 1992) (fact that farm equipment was re-sold by retail dealer a factor making sale commercially reasonable).

(n75)Footnote 71. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610, Official Comment 2 ("This section encourages private dispositions on the assumption that they frequently will result in higher realization on collateral for the benefit of all concerned"); see also Revised U.C.C. § 9-610, Official Comment 3 (flexibility in timing of sale is "consistent with this Article's policy to encourage private disposition through regular commercial channels").

(n76)Footnote 72. See, e.g., Daniel v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 612 So. 2d 483, 20 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 696 (Ala. Civ. App. 1992) (upholds dealers-only auction because it is "usual manner of sale"); Beard v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 41 Ark. App. 174, 850 S.W.2d 23, 20 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1158 (1993) (dealers-only sale upheld on basis of expert testimony that such sales bring highest prices); Ford Motor Credit v. Russell, 519 N.W.2d 460, 24 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 687 (Minn. Ct. App. 1994) (dealers-only auction is well recognized market for hundreds of auto dealers in the area). See also Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Sagmiller (In re Estate of Sagmiller), 615 N.W.2d 567 (N.D. 2000) (dealers-only auction is neither per se commercially reasonable nor per se unreasonable; unrebutted facts here support finding of commercial reasonableness).

(n77)Footnote 73. See, e.g., Bank of Am. v. Lallana, 55 Cal. App. 4th 543, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 168 (1997) , aff'd on other grounds, superseded, 19 Cal. 4th 203, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 910, 960 P.2d 1133 (1998) . While the California Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeals, it did so on different grounds, relying on improper notice, not on the commercial unreasonableness of the dealers-only sale as the Court of Appeals had.

(n78)Footnote 74. See § 10.08[8][b] supra.

(n79)Footnote 75. See, e.g., R. Sutton, Don't Get Taken Every Time 182-83 (Penguin Books 1994); Williams v. Regency Fin. Corp., 309 F.3d 1045 (8th Cir. 2002) (Missouri law) (remanding for trial on question whether finance company's disposition of vehicle to dealer was commercially reasonable). See also Chisolm v. TranSouth Fin. Corp., 95 F.3d 331 (4th Cir. 1996) , appeal after remand, 164 F.3d 623 (4th Cir. 1998) (unpublished), reported in full at 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 24632 (4th Cir. Oct. 5, 1998) , class certified, 184 F.R.D. 556 (E.D. Va. 1999) , class decertification denied, subclasses certified, 194 F.R.D. 538 (E.D. Va. 2000) .

(n80)Footnote 76. See Chisolm v. TranSouth Fin. Corp. 95 F.3d 331 (1996) , appeal after remand, 164 F.3d 623 (4th Cir. 1998) (unpublished), reported in full at 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 24632 (4th Cir. Oct. 5, 1998) , class certified, 184 F.R.D. 556 (E.D. Va. 1999) , class decertification denied, subclasses certified, 194 F.R.D. 538 (E.D. Va. 2000) (recent example of a class action against a finance company involved in a churning scheme). See also National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 10.11.2 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.)

(n81)Footnote 77. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(f); see Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(71) (defining "secondary obligor" to include recourse parties).

(n82)Footnote 78. 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. § 505/2G.

(n83)Footnote 79. Revised U.C.C. § 9-617(a)(1) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(4)].

(n84)Footnote 80. Revised U.C.C. § 9-617(a)(3) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(4)].

(n85)Footnote 81. Revised U.C.C. § 9-617(a)(2), (3) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(4)].

(n86)Footnote 82. Clark, The Law of Secured Transactions Under the Uniform Commercial Code P 4.09*[1] (1993).

(n87)Footnote 83. Former U.C.C. § 9-504(4).

(n88)Footnote 84. Former U.C.C. § 9-504(4).

(n89)Footnote 85. Revised U.C.C. § 9-617(b). See Revised U.C.C. § 9-617(b), Official Comment 3.

(n90)Footnote 86. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610(d). See Revised U.C.C. § 9-610, Official Comment 11 and the proposed 1999 revision to U.C.C. § 2-312, Official Comment 5.

(n91)Footnote 87. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610(e).

(n92)Footnote 88. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610, Official Comment 11.

(n93)Footnote 89. Cont'l Ins. Co. v. Schneider, Inc., 873 A.2d 1286, 57 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 583 (Pa. 2005) .

(n94)Footnote 90. Id.

150 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 10 Repossessions

1-10 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 10.09

§ 10.09 Determining the Deficiency or Surplus

[1] Consumer's Right to Any Surplus

[a] Right to Surplus After Sale of Collateral

After the creditor's disposition of repossessed collateral, the creditor owes the consumer for any resulting surplus. The sale proceeds must be applied, in order, to the reasonable expenses of retaking and of the sale, satisfaction of the indebtedness, and satisfaction of any indebtedness secured by any subordinate security interest. n1 After these deductions, any amount of the sale proceeds remaining is called the surplus. The secured party is required to turn any surplus over to the debtor. n2

A significant problem in determining whether the consumer is entitled to a surplus or is liable for a deficiency has been the absence of a requirement in the UCC for the creditor to provide its calculations to the consumer. The 1999 revisions to Article 9 take on this problem by requiring the secured party in a consumer goods transaction to provide a written explanation of the surplus or deficiency. n3 A creditor who fails to respond properly to a consumer's request for an explanation is liable for statutory damages even if there is no pattern or practice of noncompliance. n4 A significant gap in the coverage of Revised section 9-616 occurs in the situation where the secured party has bid the amount of the debt and expenses, so there is neither a deficiency nor a surplus. The statute does not appear to require an explanation of the creditor's calculations in this circumstance. The debtor may be able to request an accounting under Revised section 9-210, but that section implies that the creditor need only provide an accounting of an unpaid balance. n5 The consumer is entitled to one free statement in any six-month period; additional statements cost twenty-five dollars each. Creditors must send an explanation within fourteen days after receiving a request, or at the time of paying over any surplus or demanding payment of any deficiency.

If there are joint debtors, each is entitled to a pro rata share of any surplus. The right to surplus proceeds cannot be waived by agreement. n6

While most repossessions result in a claim for a deficiency, in a surprising number of cases, a surplus is owed.

[b] Right to Surplus Where Creditor Retains Collateral

The creditor in some situations can opt to retain the collateral in full satisfaction of the debt. n7 This is known as strict foreclosure. If the creditor keeps the collateral, no deficiency is owed, but also no surplus will generally be paid. n8

If the consumer believes that sale of the collateral would lead to a surplus, the consumer has several strategies. First, the consumer can object to the strict foreclosure. The UCC requires the creditor to notify the consumer in writing of the intended strict foreclosure, and sell the collateral if the consumer objects in writing within 21 days to the strict foreclosure. n9 (The 1999 revisions to Article 9 shorten this period to twenty days.) n10

Second, even without the consumer's objection, the creditor generally cannot choose strict foreclosure if the consumer has paid more than 60% of the loan amount. n11 Instead, the creditor must sell the collateral and pay the consumer any surplus. This 60% rule is particularly significant because loans that are mostly paid off are those most likely to result in a surplus.

The UCC allows creditors to use strict foreclosure where a loan is more than 60% paid only if they obtain the consumer's permission in writing after default. Creditors thus have an incentive to utilize this exception to deprive the consumer of the potential surplus by obtaining the consumer's written permission that the creditor can retain the collateral in satisfaction of the debt, instead of selling it for the consumer's benefit. n12

Moreover, state law may entitle the consumer to a surplus even if the creditor has properly exercised its right of strict foreclosure.

[c] Consumer Remedies for Creditor's Failure to Pay Surplus

A creditor's failure to pay over a surplus is a violation of UCC Article 9, Part 5, so that the consumer is entitled to actual or statutory minimum damages under Revised UCC section 9-625 [former section 9-507(1)], whichever is greater. In addition, a creditor's failure to account for the surplus is an unfair or deceptive practice, remedied by a state deceptive practices statute, and may also violate state consumer credit legislation.

[2] Creditor's Right to a Deficiency

[a] General

The creditor has a right to repayment in full of a loan, and can bring a court action to recover the full amount of the debt. But, once the creditor seizes collateral securing that loan, the creditor's right to repayment in full is limited by the UCC, other state law, and by case law. That is, after disposing of collateral, the creditor's right to seek repayment of the balance due on the note (the deficiency) is restricted in certain respects.

Once the repossession sale has been conducted, the sale proceeds must be applied, in order, to the reasonable expenses of retaking and of the sale, satisfaction of the indebtedness, and satisfaction of any indebtedness secured by any subordinate security interest. n13 If these deductions are greater than the sale proceeds, a deficiency remains on the obligation and, depending on state law, the debtor may be liable to the secured party for that amount. n14

[b] Creditor Can Both Seize Collateral and Sue on Debt

The UCC generally does not require the creditor to elect between suing on the debt and seizing the collateral. (Certain state laws do require creditors to make this election for certain credit transactions.)

Nevertheless, under the former version of Article 9, courts often required that, once a creditor had chosen one of the remedies available under the UCC (repossession or a suit on the debt), it must pursue that remedy to its fruition before pursuing other UCC remedies.

The 1999 revisions to Article 9, however, state not only that the creditor's rights are cumulative, but also that they may be exercised simultaneously. n15 Nonetheless, the Official Comments note some significant limits. First, the creditor must act in good faith and is liable under the UCC for failure to do so. Second, the provision permitting the simultaneous exercise of remedies does not override any non-UCC law, including the law of tort and statutes regulating collection of debts under which the simultaneous exercise of remedies in a particular case constitutes abusive behavior or harassment, giving rise to liability. n16

[c] No Deficiency After Strict Foreclosure

Where the creditor elects strict foreclosure, it loses its right to seek a deficiency.

[d] Creditor's Unintentional Strict Foreclosure May Preclude a Deficiency

[i] Introduction

Under a strict foreclosure, the creditor chooses to keep the collateral in lieu of selling it and seeking a deficiency. There are also a number of situations where the creditor intends to seek a deficiency, but where its actions effectively create a strict foreclosure, thus barring a deficiency.

[ii] Creditor's Sale of Collateral to Itself

A creditor cannot avoid the consequences of retaining collateral by calling a strict foreclosure a private sale of the repossessed collateral, with the creditor as the buyer at its own sale. The UCC specifically prohibits the secured party from buying repossessed consumer goods at its own private sale. The creditor's private sale to itself not only violates Article 9, but should be treated as a strict foreclosure, barring the deficiency. n17

Through a public sale, however, creditors can retain collateral and still seek a deficiency.

[iii] Creditor's Transfer of Collateral to Dealer Pursuant to Repurchase Agreement

A strict foreclosure can also happen when the secured party "sells" the collateral to a dealer or other party pursuant to a repurchase or recourse agreement. The UCC provides that such a transfer is not a sale; a transfer pursuant to a repurchase agreement leaves the "buyer" with all the duties of the original secured party. For example, if the secured party transfers the collateral to the dealer pursuant to a repurchase agreement, and the dealer retains the collateral, then this should be treated as a strict foreclosure by the secured party. Neither the creditor nor the dealer may seek a deficiency. The 1999 revisions to Article 9, however, eliminate the flat rule that a transfer back to a dealer under a repurchase or recourse agreement is never an Article 9 disposition. n18

[iv] Delay in Sale of Collateral

If the creditor holds on to the collateral too long before selling it, under the former version of Article 9, a court may find that the creditor's slow disposition amounts to a strict foreclosure and treat the collateral as if it has been retained by the creditor, even though the property was subsequently sold. An official comment to the 1999 revisions to Article 9 rejects the application of the doctrine of strict foreclosure to cases of "mere delay in collection or disposition of the collateral," n19 but other remedies may be available to the consumer.

[v] Abandoning Collateral as Worthless

Destruction of the collateral while in the possession or constructive possession of the creditor may also result in strict foreclosure. Where the creditor scraps the collateral as worthless with no notice to the debtor, the creditor cannot seek a deficiency.

[e] Commercially Reasonable Disposition as Precondition to Deficiency

An important limitation on the creditor's right to seek a deficiency can occur where the creditor did not engage in a commercially reasonable disposition of the collateral or properly notify the consumer of the sale. State law or case law may absolutely bar a deficiency where the sale or notice is improper. In other states, the creditor will have the burden of proving the collateral was worth less than the balance due by evidence other than the repossession sale.

[f] No Deficiency After Revocation of Acceptance

If the consumer properly revokes acceptance of the collateral before a repossession, the consumer may no longer be obligated on the debt. A valid revocation extinguishes the consumer's obligation to pay the seller or the seller's assignee for the property whose purchase is revoked.

If the revocation extinguishes the debt, the creditor is entitled to return of the collateral (which the repossession has already effectuated), but the creditor is not entitled to anything more and must even return payments already made, including return of the down payment or trade-in and payments already made on the loan, as well as recovery of certain expenses. n20 The consumer is not liable for any deficiency and is not liable for any expenses in the retaking and sale of the collateral, since seizure after the consumer's revocation is not a repossession.

There seems no legal impediment to revoking acceptance even after a repossession or a repossession sale.

[g] Special Notice Requirements as Precondition to a Deficiency

A number of state consumer credit statutes place certain notice requirements on a creditor and condition its right to a deficiency on compliance with these requirements. (These requirements are in addition to UCC restrictions on a deficiency where the notice of sale is defective.)

Federal legislation effective October 1, 2000, n21 and the UETA, n22 which over forty states had passed by mid-2001, allow notices to be sent electronically in some circumstances if the consumer consents. n23

[3] State Anti-Deficiency Statutes

[a] Overview

Generally, the UCC permits a creditor to seek a deficiency after sale of repossessed collateral. But about half the states have enacted legislation that limits deficiencies for at least certain consumer transactions. n24

State statutes disallowing deficiency actions are often called election-of-remedy or anti-deficiency statutes. They require creditors to elect either to pursue the full amount due on a debt in a legal action or to repossess the collateral. If the creditor repossesses the property, it cannot then bring an action for a deficiency, either against the debtor or against a surety. If the creditor sues the consumer on the debt, the creditor cannot then repossess the collateral.

Many anti-deficiency statutes are modeled after section 5.103 of either the 1968 or 1974 version of the UCCC. Consequently, the Official Comment to the UCCC and case law interpreting UCCC-type provisions should have precedential value for other election-of-remedy statutes.

Generally, under an anti-deficiency statute, the creditor has the choice of either suing on the debt or taking the goods.

[b] Dollar Limitations on Anti-Deficiency Statutes

The most common reason state anti-deficiency statutes will not apply in a particular case is the low dollar maximum on the consumer transactions covered by the legislation, allowing creditors to seek deficiencies when the consumer transaction exceeds the statutory amount. Only two states place no monetary limits on their anti-deficiency statutes; n25 other statutes have varying dollar maximums, usually $1000 or $2000. n26

A few anti-deficiency statutes, including the UCCC, specify that the dollar maximum described in the statute increases from year to year with the Consumer Price Index or some other factor. n27

The statute may specify that the dollar maximum applies to the original cash price of the goods purchased, the original amount financed, or to the unpaid balance at the time of default. The 1974 version of the UCCC makes clear that the dollar maximum applies to each separate item purchased, and not to the total value of all the collateral. n28 The 1968 UCCC is not clear on this point.

[c] Are Consumer Loans or Only Credit Sales Covered?

Certain state anti-deficiency statutes apply only to credit sales; that is, installment sales or other credit offered by the seller at the time of sale, not to loans made directly by a bank, finance company, or other lender.

Despite the seemingly narrow scope of certain state anti-deficiency statutes, the FTC's Holder Rule n29 may subject certain lenders to anti-deficiency statutes that do not otherwise apply to lenders. Where a seller refers consumers to a lender or where there is some other business relationship between seller and lender, the loan agreement will usually contain a notice that the note holder is subject to all claims and defenses the consumer has against the seller. Where the anti-deficiency statute provides the debtor with a defense against the seller, this contractual language may provide a method to extend the anti-deficiency statute to lenders.

[d] Type of Goods Covered

Anti-deficiency statutes usually apply only to consumer transactions and not to commercial transactions. Several statutes are limited to "consumer goods," defined as goods for personal and not business use, with the intent of the buyer at the time of purchase being determinative.

[e] Excessive Damage to the Collateral May Give Rise to a Creditor Cause of Action

Anti-deficiency statutes prevent a creditor from repossessing collateral and then seeking a deficiency, but they often allow the creditor to bring an action against the consumer after repossession for excessive damage to collateral occurring before repossession. This should not apply to normal depreciation or typical wear and tear.

[f] Effect of Anti-Deficiency Statute on Foreclosure of Property Pursuant to a Judgment Lien

Anti-deficiency statutes require creditors to elect between repossessing the collateral or bringing an action on the debt. If they bring an action on the debt, the UCC allows the secured party to reduce its claim to judgment or to foreclose its interest by any available procedure provided by state law, including a judicial sale of the collateral following judgment, execution, and levy. n30 Such judicial sales are governed by other state law, not by the UCC. n31

A creditor can thus partly avoid the effect of an anti-deficiency statute by electing to bring an action on the debt, then enforcing that debt by seeking a judicial sale of the collateral, and then utilizing other remedies to collect the remaining balance due after the sale of the collateral. To prevent this outcome, a number of state anti-deficiency statutes specify that if the creditor elects to bring an action on the debt, the collateral is not subject to levy or sale on execution.

[g] Has the Creditor Made an Election?

What if, after repossession, the creditor changes its mind, and decides not to retain the collateral? The creditor can still be held to have retained the collateral, even if it has not so notified the debtor, where it has held onto the collateral too long without returning it. This is the case even if the creditor asks the debtor later to re-take possession of the collateral.

[4] Calculating the Deficiency or Surplus

[a] Introduction

Under the UCC, it is the creditor that determines the deficiency (or surplus). Few consumers ever challenge this calculation and federal or state law enforcement officials or regulators rarely monitor these calculations. As a result, creditors may become sloppy, apply suspect procedures, or even intentionally overstate deficiencies or "forget" surpluses.

Creditors or collectors may also inflate the amount of a claim by adding charges such as collection fees. n31.1 The 1999 revisions to Article 9, which will require the creditor to send the consumer an arithmetical explanation of the surplus or deficiency, may prompt greater scrutiny of these calculations. n32

This section provides a step-by-step approach to check the creditor's calculations.

[b] The Balance Due on the Debt

[i] The Remainder Due on the Loan Before Adjustments

The major debtor liability is for the outstanding credit balance, the amount due on the note whose acceleration led to the repossession. Even if the original contract accurately computes the amount due, the creditor may not have properly credited all of the installment payments that the debtor has made.

Over the course of the loan, the creditor may have also charged the debtor for a number of late charges if the loan is calculated with precomputed interest. The consumer should obtain from the creditor documentation of the amounts of and reasons for all late or added charges over the life of the loan. While the amount due is an element of the creditor's affirmative case on which it should bear the burden of proof in most jurisdictions, one court allowed a creditor to meet this burden through a conclusory affidavit when the consumer did not provide any specific rebuttal. n33

[ii] Unearned Interest Rebates

[A] Acceleration Treated as Prepayment in Computing Rebates

The total of payments of a precomputed loan includes interest payments over the full loan term. Where the loan payments are accelerated, the creditor seeks payment earlier than scheduled, and the amount of interest owed decreases. This unearned interest should be rebated to the consumer.

[B] Computing Rebates

The actual rebate should be computed based on applicable law or the formula specified in the credit agreement, whichever is more favorable to the consumer. Federal law requires use of a method at least as favorable as an actuarial rebate (the rebate method most favorable to consumers) in all precomputed consumer credit transactions with terms longer than 61 months consummated after September 30, 1993. n34 This federal standard prohibits use of the Rule of 78 in applicable loans and preempts contrary state law specifying use of the Rule of 78. n35

Even for loans consummated before October 1, 1993, federal law still requires an actuarial rebate if certain conditions are met. In determining the proper rebate, make sure the rebate is applied to the total finance charge.

[C] The Effect of the Consumer's Waiver of the Right to a Rebate

Creditors may place a provision in the credit agreement waiving the consumer's right to a rebate of unearned interest. The federal law requiring a prompt rebate should override such a waiver because the statute states that the creditor "shall promptly refund." n36

[D] Consumer Remedies for Failure to Rebate Unearned Interest

The failure to credit a rebate of unearned interest can cause a consumer significant actual damage because the amount to be rebated can be substantial. In fact, almost the entire deficiency a creditor may seek after selling the collateral may consist of the creditor's claim for unearned interest.

In addition, creditors may incur substantial liabilities if they seek excess interest charges that should have been rebated. Retaining unearned interest is a form of usury, and credit legislation often specifies that such action will make the total finance charge or even the total amount due unenforceable.

[iii] Interest and Penalties After Acceleration

After unearned interest is rebated as of the date of acceleration, the consumer will have a balance due as of the date of acceleration. The question then becomes what additional interest and penalties a creditor can assess from that date until the amount is paid in full. The answer to this question will usually depend on state law and the contract.

Also be alert to any form of creditor "double-dipping."

[iv] Forced-Placed Insurance Premiums

In many automobile repossessions, consumers may be startled by the amount the creditor claims is due on the loan -- far in excess of the balance due on the original loan agreement. The explanation is often significant charges for automobile physical damage insurance that the creditor, some time after the original loan agreement, has purchased for, but charged to, the consumer. The total cost of this insurance over the term of a loan, with related financing costs, can add more than $5,000 to the total of payments on a loan.

This insurance is often called forced-placed insurance because the creditor has purchased the insurance for the consumer without the consumer's permission.

If insurance has been force-placed, the consumer's attorney should make sure the unearned portion of the premium is rebated upon repossession. Also make sure the consumer's own physical damage policy had lapsed, and the consumer is not being charged for the same insurance twice. State law may require a notice giving details about the force placed insurance and its effect on the payment schedule. If the creditor fails to send this notice, at least one court has held that the consumer is not liable for the cost of the insurance or related costs. n36.1

[v] Credits to the Consumer for Insurance Claim Payments

When a creditor force places physical damage insurance, the creditor will purchase vendor single interest insurance. This insurance pays off after the collateral is repossessed for damage to the vehicle during the policy term. The claim payment is made directly to the creditor and reduces the amount owed on the debt.

These insurance payments can be sizeable and the consumer attorney should take several steps to insure that payments are made and properly credited.

[c] Insurance Rebates

[i] Introduction

The typical secured consumer loan will involve various types of insurance. Credit life, credit accident and health, and credit unemployment insurance protect the consumer's ability to repay the loan against risks of the debtor's death, disability, or lost employment. n37 When the loan is accelerated and the collateral is repossessed, the consumer no longer needs this insurance because the insurance relates to the consumer's ownership of the collateral or obligation to make installment payments. The policies should thus be canceled, and the unearned portion of the insurance should then be either rebated to the secured party and credited to the consumer's account or rebated directly to the consumer.

[ii] Determining What Insurance the Consumer Has Purchased

The first step in insuring that all rebates are properly applied is determining the different types of insurance that the client has purchased. A good starting point is the Truth in Lending disclosure form, which will indicate whether credit insurance has been purchased, its cost, and the policy term. The sales agreement will usually specify any extended warranty or service contract.

[iii] Cancelling the Insurance and Calculating the Rebate

Once all forms of insurance relating to the collateral purchased from all sources have been identified, the consumer's attorney should make sure that all of the policies are cancelled following a repossession. The one exception is that a policy should probably not be canceled when the consumer has a claim under that policy that is still to be presented to the insurer.

[d] Credit to Consumer for Collateral's Value

[i] Method of Determining Value

When a creditor seeks a deficiency after seizing the collateral, the amount of the deficiency is reduced by the collateral's value. A number of motor vehicle installment sales statutes and other state legislation specify the exact manner of determining the collateral's value. These more specific statutes override the UCC's provisions in this area. n38

If a state has not enacted such legislation, the UCC specifies that the proceeds of any disposition be credited to the consumer in calculating any deficiency. n39

[ii] Determining the Collateral's Sale Price

[A] General

Where the credit is based on the sale price, and the collateral is sold at auction, determining the sale price is generally straightforward.

Where the collateral is not sold at a bona fide auction, a number of issues may arise as to determining the actual sale price. The first question is whether the collateral was in fact sold. The secured party cannot credit the consumer with an estimated "actual cash value." The secured party must use an actual sale price resulting from a commercially reasonable sale.

A second set of issues concern the creditor's sale of the collateral at a private sale to itself or to the original credit-seller pursuant to a repurchase agreement. Neither of these sales are UCC dispositions under the former version of the UCC, and the resulting "sale prices" are not adequate credits for the consumer. The actual sale price is the price at which the creditor or dealer subsequently sells the collateral, which is often a much higher price paid by a retail buyer off a dealer's lot.

Whether the sale is public or private, the 1999 revisions to Article 9 have added a new protection where the collateral is sold to the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor. If the collateral is sold for a price significantly less than the range of proceeds a commercially reasonable sale would have brought, the consumer is to be credited with the price that a commercially reasonable sale would have produced. n40

When the creditor disposes of the collateral through a private retail sale to a consumer, special problems arise in determining the true sale price. Dealers properly may exclude from the sale price any finance charges, insurance, service contract, and other items, as long as these items are separately priced in the sales documents given to the consumer purchasing the repossessed car, and are not excessive. If such items are excessively priced, the argument should be made that these are part of the hidden price of the collateral's sale.

[B] Adjusting the Sale Price to Reflect a Subsequent Purchaser's Trade-In

Dealers must include in the sale price any trade-in allowance the dealer gives when selling the repossessed collateral. Consumer attorneys should not let dealers credit the debtor with only the net sales price; that is, the price of the repossessed collateral less the trade-in allowance.

[iii] Determining the Collateral's Value Where Disposition Not Commercially Reasonable

Where the creditor fails to dispose of the collateral in a commercially reasonable manner, the creditor cannot use that sale price in computing the deficiency owed. The sale price may not be a reasonable estimate of the value of the collateral because the sale was tainted.

Courts take varying approaches to computing a deficiency where the sale was not commercially reasonable. Some courts adopt the absolute bar approach which prohibits the creditor from seeking a deficiency, some courts allow the creditor to seek a deficiency, but require the creditor to prove the amount of the deficiency determining the collateral's value by some method other than the sale price, and a few use other approaches.

[e] Consumer's Liability for Repossession-Related Expenses

[i] Expenses in Seizing and Storing the Collateral

The UCC allows the creditor to be reimbursed for its reasonable expenses of retaking and holding the collateral. n41 Therefore, whether or not provided for in the credit agreement, the creditor can charge the debtor for fees paid to repossession agents, other repossession expenses, towing or transporting charges for the repossessed property, and storage fees.

The creditor must prove its entitlement to repossession expenses in order to have these amounts included in a judgment. n42 These fees must be reasonable, n43 so a secured party may not charge the debtor more for the services of a third party than the secured party paid that third party.

[ii] Expenses of Reconditioning or Repairing Collateral

[A] When Such Expenses Are Valid

Secured parties may sell "collateral in its then condition or following any commercially reasonable preparation or processing." n44 If the sale price of the repossessed collateral will be significantly enhanced, then the secured party may have an affirmative obligation to prepare or restore the collateral. The UCC specifically authorizes creditors to charge the debtor for "preparing the collateral for sale," but the charge must be reasonable. n45 Further, if the need for repairs arises because of the creditor's improper use of the collateral while in the creditor's possession, the repairs should not be charged to the debtor.

Reconditioning charges whereby the creditor is paid twice for the same expense are clearly unreasonable.

If the contract violates the state consumer credit law, for example, by including prohibited terms or failing to state required terms, the creditor may be prohibited from charging or collecting any delinquency or finance charges. Charges relating to the repossession and sale of the vehicle may be included in the definition of the delinquency charges the creditor can not collect. n46

[B] Computing Creditor Expenses

If the secured party contracts with an independent, unrelated party for repairs or preparation of the collateral, the secured party should not charge the debtor more than the amount the third party charges the secured party. But, if the secured party performs the repairs itself, it is not clear how it should compute its charge.

There is a respectable amount of precedent indicating that only out-of-pocket expenses and not overhead or profit charges are permitted under the UCC.

[iii] Selling Expenses

Debtors are liable for secured parties' reasonable expenses for selling the collateral. n47 Consumers are liable for actual payments the secured party makes to an auctioneer for fees and expenses. Advertising expenses are also chargeable to the debtor, but only for advertising that specifically mentions the consumer's property. Where the advertising mentions several goods for sale, the consumer should only pay a reasonable share of the advertising costs.

If the secured party sells the collateral at retail, a sales commission or similar selling expense may be reasonable.

[iv] Attorney Fees

The secured party's attorney fees are often a major consumer liability in a deficiency action. The UCC allows for reasonable attorney fees and legal expenses only to the extent provided for in the credit agreement and only to the extent that they are not prohibited by state law. n48 State laws and the exact wording of all contracts should be checked to avoid overcharges here.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionDisposition of Collateral

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(a) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(1)]. Selected U.C.C. Article 9 sections are reprinted in Vol. 1A infra.

(n2)Footnote 2. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(d) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(2)]. See Bill Fitts Auto Sales, Inc. v Daniels, 325 Ark. 51, 30 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 382 (1996) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Revised U.C.C. § 9-616. As of mid-2001, all of the states that had enacted Revised Article 9, except Illinois and North Dakota, had enacted this new requirement without significant change. In Illinois, creditors need not include the calculations in the notice, but must supply them if the obligor requests. North Dakota simply eliminated the requirement that creditors send the explanation. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions and Foreclosures, App. A.4.3 (summary of non-uniform amendments to Revised Article 9).

(n4)Footnote 4. Revised U.C.C. § 9-625(e)(6).

(n5)Footnote 5. Revised U.C.C. § 9-210(a)(2); see also Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(4) (definition of "accounting").

(n6)Footnote 6. Revised U.C.C. § 9-602(5).

(n7)Footnote 7. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620 [former U.C.C. § 9-505(2)].

(n8)Footnote 8. Harris v. Key Bank, 193 F. Supp. 2d 707 (W.D.N.Y.) , aff'd, 51 Fed. Appx. 346 (2d Cir. 2002) (unpublished).

(n9)Footnote 9. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620 [former U.C.C. § 9-505(2)].

(n10)Footnote 10. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620(d).

(n11)Footnote 11. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620 [former U.C.C. § 9-505(1)].

(n12)Footnote 12. The FTC has challenged this practice. See Chrysler Motor Co., 97 F.T.C. 139 (1981) (consent order); Gen. Motors Corp., 95 F.T.C. 825 (consent order) (1980); Ford Motor Co., 93 F.T.C. 402 (consent order) (1979). The FTC cases are cited in Reeves v. Foutz & Tanner, Inc., 94 N.M. 760, 617 P.2d 149, 29 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1450 (1980) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(a) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(1)]. However, a debtor may agree, prior to default in the security agreement itself, that the order of application of the proceeds will be a different order from that provided by the Code. Note that the 1999 revisions to Article 9 add rules for payment of proceeds to consignors.

(n14)Footnote 14. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(d) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(2)].

(n15)Footnote 15. Revised U.C.C. § 9-601(c).

(n16)Footnote 16. Revised U.C.C. § 9-601, Official Comment 5.

(n17)Footnote 17. Revised U.C.C. § 9-624, Official Comment 2.

(n18)Footnote 18. For a full discussion of such agreements and their impact on repossession and deficiency judgments, see National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions (6th ed. 2005).

(n19)Footnote 19. Revised U.C.C. § 9-620, Official Comment 5.

(n20)Footnote 20. U.C.C. § 2-608; see National Consumer Law Center, Consumer Warranty Law Ch. 8 (3d ed. 2006).

(n21)Footnote 21. E-Sign, Pub. L. 106-229, 114 Stat. 464 (2000).

(n22)Footnote 22. UETA, 7A U.L.A. 20 (Supp. 2000). The text of UETA is also available on the website of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, as is a list of those states which have adopted the uniform act. See www.nccusl.org.

(n23)Footnote 23. See § 1.05[2][a] supra. Note that, while § 103(b)(2)(B) of the federal statute makes an exception for state right-to-cure notices, it does not make a similar exception for state notices that are a precondition of a deficiency judgment.

(n24)Footnote 24. See, e.g., Kan. Stat. Ann. § 16a-5-103(2).

(n25)Footnote 25. California and Illinois.

(n26)Footnote 26. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 44-5501(B) ($1000).

(n27)Footnote 27. U.C.C.C. § 1.106; Ind. Code Ann. § 24-4.5-5-103(2); Minn. Stat. § 325G.22; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 14A, § 5-103(7); S.C. Code Ann. §§ 37-1-103, 37-5-109.

(n28)Footnote 28. U.C.C.C. § 5.103(2) (1974); U.C.C.C. § 5.103, Official Comment 3.

(n29)Footnote 29. Federal Trade Commission Trade Regulation Rule Concerning Preservation of Consumers' Claims and Defenses, 16 C.F.R. pt. 433, reprinted in Vol. 1A infra.

(n30)Footnote 30. Revised U.C.C. § 9-601 [former U.C.C. § 9-501(1); U.C.C. § 9-501, Official Comment 6].

(n31)Footnote 31. Revised U.C.C. § 9-601, Official Comment 8 [former U.C.C. § 9-501, Official Comment 6].

(n32)Footnote 31.1. See, e.g., Fields v. W. Mass. Credit Corp., 479 F. Supp. 2d 287 (D. Conn. 2007) (collection agency violated Fair Debt Collection Practices Act by adding illegal fifteen percent fee to deficiency it was attempting to collect).

(n33)Footnote 32. Revised U.C.C. § 9-616.

(n34)Footnote 33. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Ferguson, 56 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 543 (Ohio Ct. App. 2005) (affirming grant of summary judgment to creditor).

(n35)Footnote 34. 15 U.S.C. § 1615(b).

(n36)Footnote 35. See Ch. 6, "The Cost of Credit," § 6.03[4][b][i] supra .

(n37)Footnote 36. 15 U.S.C. § 1615(a).

(n38)Footnote 36.1. Bank of Okla. v. Portis, 942 P.2d 249 (Okla. Civ. App. 1997) (adding balloon payment at end of regular payments was a change in the payment schedule, and creditor was required to send a notice describing it).

(n39)Footnote 37. See Ch. 6, "The Cost of Credit," § 6.06 supra , for a further discussion of credit insurance.

(n40)Footnote 38. See Revised U.C.C. § 9-109(c) [former U.C.C. § 9-201(b)].

(n41)Footnote 39. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615 [former U.C.C. § 9-504].

(n42)Footnote 40. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(f).

(n43)Footnote 41. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(a)(1) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(1)(a)].

(n44)Footnote 42. Coxall v. Clover Commercial Corp., 4 Misc. 3d 654, 54 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 5 (Civ. Ct. 2004) ; see also Boles v. Texas Nat'l Bank, 750 S.W.2d 879 (Tex. App. 1988) (creditor has burden of proving expense of repairs to collateral was reasonable); Hall v. Crocker Equip. Leasing, Inc., 737 S.W.2d 1, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1646 (Tex. App. 1987) (trial court erred in finding disposition commercially reasonable when secured party failed to present evidence of reasonableness of expenses for repairs to collateral).

(n45)Footnote 43. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(a)(1) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(1)(a)].

(n46)Footnote 44. Revised U.C.C. § 9-610(a) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(1)].

(n47)Footnote 45. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(a)(1) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(1)(a)].

(n48)Footnote 46. See Route 50 Auto Sales v. Muncy, 331 Ill. App. 3d 515, 264 Ill. Dec. 931, 771 N.E.2d 635 (2002) .

(n49)Footnote 47. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(a)(1) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(1)].

(n50)Footnote 48. Revised U.C.C. § 9-615(a)(1) [former U.C.C. § 9-504(1)(a)]. See Route 50 Auto Sales v. Muncy, 331 Ill. App. 3d 515, 264 Ill. Dec. 931, 771 N.E.2d 635 (2002) (relying on 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. § 375.11) (even if the state consumer credit legislation allows attorney fees, it may bar them if the contract does not comply with the statute). See also Goucher v. Cold Springs RV Corp., 142 N.H. 299, 700 A.2d 299 (1997) (no fees awarded in deficiency action in absence of fee provision in the agreement, and no independent authorization for fee under U.C.C. § 9-504(1)(a), since "[t]hat provision addresses attorney's fees incurred prior to, and in connection with, the disposition of the collateral, not in the collection of the deficiency").

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 10 Repossessions

1-10 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 10.10

§ 10.10 Defending a Deficiency Action

[1] Introduction

[a] Importance of Defending a Deficiency Action

A creditor's deficiency claim arises when the creditor sells repossessed collateral for an amount insufficient to pay off both the loan and creditor's repossession and disposition expenses. The deficiency is the difference between what is owed the creditor (the amount due on the loan plus creditor's expenses) and what is realized in the sale of the collateral. Although the sale may result in a surplus that must be paid to the debtor, the usual sale of repossessed consumer collateral results in a deficiency.

From the client's and attorney's point of view, the deficiency claim is also an ideal forum to explore all aspects of the transaction to see if the dealer and creditor complied with the law. The creditor has already paid the filing fees and initiated the deficiency action. It is a straightforward matter for the consumer's attorney to raise counterclaims relating to the initial sale, subsequent warranty performance, the credit terms, insurance related to the transaction, debt collection harassment, the acceleration of the note, the repossession, notice of sale, and sale of the collateral.

[2] UCC § 9-625(c) Statutory Damages.

[a] Violations Leading to Statutory Damages

One of the most overlooked and misunderstood consumer remedy in response to a deficiency action is statutory damages pursuant to Revised UCC section 9-625(c) [former UCC section 9-507(1)]. n1 Under former UCC section 9-507(1) statutory damages were available if "the secured party is not proceeding in accordance with this Part [Article 9, Part 5]." Note that, unlike former UCC section 9-507, certain remedies provisions in Revised Article 9, UCC section 9-625, apply to noncompliance with any provision of the Article, although the minimum damages recovery still applies only to noncompliance with provisions of this Part (now Part 6 of Article 9).

UCC section 9-625(c) statutory damages are triggered by even technical Part 6 violations, such as failing to provide proper notice of a sale, or obtaining a waiver prohibited by Revised UCC section 9-602 [former section 9-501]. The consumer need not prove reliance in order to recover under section 9-625(c). n2

[b] Section 9-625(c) Statutory Damages Limited to Consumer Goods Collateral

Revised UCC section 9-625 [former section 9-507(1)]'s statutory damages are awarded only when the collateral is a consumer good, defined as one used or bought primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. n3 Consumer attorneys must always be careful to allege and to prove that the collateral is a consumer good.

[c] Calculation and Significance of Minimum Damages

When the creditor violates Article 9, Part 6, the consumer is entitled to the greater of the consumer's actual damages and the minimum damages set out in Revised UCC section 9-625(c), namely the "credit service charge" or "time price differential" (i.e., finance charge) and 10% of the "principal amount of the debt" (i.e., amount financed) or "cash price." These statutory damages are based on the finance charge and amount financed at the beginning of the transaction, not the interest and principal remaining due at the time of the Code violation.

Consequently, in any deficiency action, the consumer attorney's first step is to see if there is a violation of Article 9, Part 6. If the consumer can prove a violation, the statutory damages can go a long way toward off-setting the deficiency, and may even result in a positive recovery for the consumer.

[d] Statute of Limitations for Consumer's Claim Under UCC § 9-625(c).

UCC Article 9 does not have an explicit statute of limitations, although UCC section 2-725 does have a four-year limitation period for Article 2 actions. Most courts will turn to other state legislation specifying limitation periods for various types of legal actions -- i.e., for contract, tort, statutory or other actions.

[3] Where a Deficiency Claim Is Prohibited

[a] Introduction

In a number of situations, consumers have a complete defense to a deficiency action because the creditor has no right under state law to seek a deficiency.

[b] Where Underlying Debt Is Extinguished

The creditor has no right to seek a deficiency if the consumer at the time of the deficiency claim had completely satisfied the underlying obligation, by full payment or otherwise.

[c] State Anti-Deficiency Laws

Creditors have no right to seek a deficiency where prohibited by state law.

[d] Failure to Sell Collateral or Sale to the Wrong Person

There may be no right to a deficiency where the creditor sold the collateral to the wrong person or fails to sell the collateral. In these situations, the transaction may be characterized as a strict foreclosure.

[e] Creditor's Promise to Accept Collateral in Satisfaction of Debt

To induce consumers to voluntarily surrender collateral, creditors frequently state that turning over the collateral will end the consumer's obligation. The creditor's promise has been held to be a waiver of the right to a deficiency.

[f] Procedural Defenses

Several procedural bases can stop a deficiency action, such as the party seeking the deficiency is not the party that has a present right to enforce the balance of the note.

State law may also impose special procedural requirements as prerequisites to seeking a deficiency action.

The 1999 revisions to Article 9 also require the creditor in a consumer-goods transaction to send the obligor an explanation of the amount claimed as a deficiency. n4 They also create a special $500 statutory damages provision for persistent violations of this requirement. n5 While the 1999 revisions are explicit that the $500 statutory damage provision supplants the standard statutory damages of the finance charge plus 10% of the principal, n6 there is no indication of any intent to deny the remedy of defeat of a deficiency judgment where the creditor fails to send the explanation. If the loan agreement contains an arbitration provision, the consumer may want to force the collector to bring the action via arbitration instead. n7

[4] Defective Disposition as Defense to Deficiency Action

[a] Creditor's Burden and Overview of Consumer's Remedies Where Burden Not Met

[i] Burden on Creditor to Prove All Aspects of Sale Commercially Reasonable

A creditor's failure to comply with UCC disposition or notice requirements offers the consumer an important defense to a deficiency action. n8

The first court to address the question of who has the burden of proving compliance with Article 9 under Revised Article 9 had no difficulty concluding that the creditor bears the burden of showing strict compliance. n9

When the creditor has the burden of proof, it must produce more than evidence of the resale price to meet that burden. n10 The creditor's conclusory affidavit that it sold the collateral for the best possible price is insufficient. n11 Testimony by a witness who does not have personal knowledge of the activities surrounding the sale or disposition of the property is insufficient. n12 Unauthenticated documents can not meet the creditor's burden of proof. n13 Testimony about the vehicle's market value from employees of the creditor may be insufficient unless corroborated by other objective, credible evidence. n14 If the creditor isseeking the cost of repairs to the collateral as part of the deficiency judgment, it must prove not only that they were necessary but also that their cost was reasonable. n15 In some states, if the creditor makes a prima facie case, the burden of persuasion shifts to the debtor. n16

[ii] Impact of Defective Disposition on Right to Deficiency

Jurisdictions take a number of different approaches in deciding the impact of the creditor's failure to prove a sale commercially reasonable. All agree that a consumer who proves a code violation is entitled by way of a counterclaim to the greater of Revised UCC section 9-625 [former section 9-507(1)] statutory damages or actual damages. Some jurisdictions will absolutely bar any deficiency, others adopt the rebuttable presumption (or "shift") theory, and a few use a set-off approach.

For non-consumer transactions only, the 1999 revisions to Article 9 adopt the rebuttable presumption rule and reject the absolute bar rule for the failure of a secured party to proceed in accordance with Article 9 disposition or notice requirements. n17 A number of states, however, have adopted non-uniform amendments to Revised Article 9 that codify either the absolute bar or rebuttable presumption rule. Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Jersey, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota, Tennessee, Virginia, and Washington have codified the rebuttable presumption rule. Kansas adopted a non-uniform amendment to Revised Article 9 that makes the rebuttable presumption rule generally applicable, but also retained its UCCC provision that applies the absolute bar rule to certain consumer credit sales and loans. Maine and California have codified the absolute bar rule, although California also eliminated the provision allowing statutory damages in the amount of the finance charge plus ten percent of the principal. n18

For consumer transactions, the rule to be applied is specifically left up to the courts. n19 Courts are thereby allowed, but not required, to apply the absolute bar rule. The revisions also specify that courts are not to infer from the adoption of the rebuttable presumption rule for non-consumer transactions that this is the proper rule to apply for consumer transactions.

There is even more confusion as to the interrelation of Revised UCC section 9-625(c) statutory damages and the absolute bar and shift theories.

[b] The Absolute Bar Approach

[i] States Adopting the Absolute Bar Rule

The absolute bar rule holds that the creditor's compliance with Code disposition provisions is a condition precedent to the right to bring a deficiency action. A commercially unreasonable sale or defective notice of sale absolutely bars a deficiency. About half the states have adopted the absolute bar theory for consumer credit transactions, either by court decision or by legislation. n20

[ii] Violations Triggering the Absolute Bar

The absolute bar applies whenever the creditor fails to meet its burden of proving that every aspect of the sale is commercially reasonable. A defective notice alone will defeat a deficiency claim in most of these states.

[iii] Operation of the Absolute Bar Rule

When the creditor's conduct triggers the absolute bar rule, the deficiency being sought is precluded in its entirety, no matter what evidence the creditor later presents to prove its right to the balance due. If the amount of the debtor's counterclaims exceeds the creditor's deficiency claim, the debtor recovers at least the difference.

[iv] Justification for the Absolute Bar Rule

"The rule and requirement are simple. If the secured creditor wishes a deficiency judgment he must obey the law. If he does not obey the law, he may not have his deficiency judgment." n21

[c] The Rebuttable Presumption Theory

[i] General

Most states that do not adhere to the absolute bar approach adopt the rebuttable presumption or shift theory. n22 Creditors that violate the Code have the burden of proving by evidence independent of the collateral's sale price that the collateral's value is less than the outstanding debt, and that a deficiency is thus owed. Because the Code's disposition requirements have not been followed, the sale price cannot be accepted as an accurate indicator of value, and it would be unfair to place the burden on the debtor to determine the collateral's true value.

[ii] Distinguishing Rebuttable Presumption Precedent in Arguing for an Absolute Bar Approach

Most cases adopting the rebuttable presumption theory are not consumer cases, but are commercial cases between two merchants. These states thus have the potential of joining a growing trend toward adopting the rebuttable presumption approach in commercial cases, but the absolute bar rule in consumer cases.

[iii] Operation of the Rebuttable Presumption Approach

At least one state supreme court has ruled that the creditor must overcome its burden of showing the sale price did not equal the deficiency by clear and convincing evidence. n23 The North Dakota Supreme Court held that a creditor's evidence of the original purchase price, a tax valuation from two years before the sale, the debtor's internal valuation of the collateral from two years before the sale, the insurance proceeds from the loss of a portion of the collateral, and the amount of bids that were submitted but not accepted, along with testimony about poor market conditions, did not suffice to establish that the collateral was worth less than the sale price. n24

[d] The Set-Off Theory

Only a few states follow a third theory, which takes the questionable approach of limiting the debtor's remedies to raising counterclaims that are set-off against the creditor's deficiency recovery. Even where the creditor's sale of the collateral is commercially unreasonable, the creditor recovers the full amount of its claimed deficiency, reduced by the debtor's actual damages or by the Revised UCC section 9-625 [former UCC section 9-507(1)] statutory damages.

The 1999 revisions to Article 9 adopt the rebuttable presumption theory for non-consumer transactions. n25 While Revised UCC section 9-626(b) cautions the court not to draw inferences applicable to consumer cases from this adoption of the rebuttable presumption rule in non-consumer cases, it would be odd for a state's courts to apply a less protective standard to consumer cases. An intermediate appellate court has held that Alabama follows the set-off approach even after the adoption of revised Article 9. n25.1

[5] Barring a Deficiency and Recovering UCC Statutory Damages

A court may refuse to grant a deficiency for various reasons. The issue then becomes, what about statutory damages. A number of courts have dismissed the deficiency claim and still awarded the full statutory damages.

If the UCC's policy of deterring creditor misconduct in consumer transactions is to be upheld, courts must award Revised UCC section 9-625(c) statutory damages, while at the same time applying the rebuttable presumption rule of evidence to determine the size of the deficiency.

UCC statutory damages are also appropriate when state law prohibits the creditor's deficiency. If the creditor has no right to a deficiency, then it has no right to set-off a deficiency claim against the consumer's right to statutory damages.

Consumer attorneys must be careful to structure their pleadings and request for relief so that the court can both dismiss the deficiency claim and award Revised UCC section 9-625(c) [former UCC section 9-507(1)] statutory damages.

[6] Effect on Right to Deficiency of Failure to Send Explanation of Calculations

An innovation in Revised Article 9 is that the creditor is required to send the consumer an explanation of the calculation of any surplus or deficiency after the disposition of the collateral. n26 Revised Article 9 allows statutory damages of $500 for some violations of this requirement. n27 Whether failure to send this explanation can also bar a deficiency judgment is a more complicated question. n28

[7] Timing Limitations on Creditor's Ability to File Deficiency Claims

[a] No Action on Debt Where Collateral Seized, But Not Yet Sold

A number of courts have ruled that, under the former version of the UCC, the creditor could proceed either against the collateral or through an action on the debt, but could not pursue both remedies simultaneously. The 1999 revisions to Article 9 undercut this principle, but there may still be remedies available under UCC law and non-UCC law when the creditor seeks to pursue conflicting remedies simultaneously.

[b] UCC Four-Year Limitations Period on Creditor's Deficiency Claim

A creditor's deficiency action must be filed within the applicable state statute of limitations. Creditors may be surprised to discover that for actions relating to the sale of goods, the Uniform Commercial Code imposes its own four-year statute of limitations. n29

Whenever the contract being sued upon was originally for the sale of goods, the UCC's four-year limitations period applies even to the creditor's deficiency action.

Moreover, the four-year limitations period arguably even applies to a direct loan where the FTC Holder Notice is found in the loan agreement, since it makes the holder of the note subject to all defenses the consumer could raise against the seller, n30 and the four-year UCC limitations period is a defense that the consumer could raise against the seller.

A breach of the obligation to pay occurs when the buyer fails to pay and defaults on the payment obligation.

[c] Additional Timing Requirements for Deficiency Actions

In some states, the creditor must comply with additional timing requirements in addition to the statute of limitations. A 2007 Rhode Island law requires an "action for default" under a lease or loan agreement (defined to include credit sales) for a motor vehicle bought for personal, family, or household use to be brought within two years after the cause of action accrues. n30.1

[8] Consumer's Counterclaims Relating to Repossession

[a] Counterclaims Relating to Collateral Disposition

The consumer can obtain actual damages instead of Revised UCC section 9-625 [former UCC section 9-507(1)] statutory damages, if these are greater. n31 According to the UCC, if the collateral has already been sold, the debtor can recover "any loss" caused by a creditor's UCC violation. This recovery should include not just direct damages caused by the lower resale price of the vehicle, but consequential damages as well.

One type of consequential damages t hat consumers might seek is their attorney fees in defending a deficiency action if it turns out that no deficiency is owed. Another approach to obtain attorney fees is a UDAP claim for the disposition violations.

A creditor's unlawful disposition may also satisfy the elements of common law conversion, which could entitle the debtor to punitive damages.

The defense of a deficiency action is also the time to raise counterclaims relating to other aspects of the repossession.

[9] Counterclaims Not Related to the Repossession

[a] Types of Counterclaims to Raise

Consumers should always raise all their sales-related claims in a deficiency action, as long as the creditor is the seller or the seller's assignee, the FTC Holder Notice is in the loan document, or the lender is otherwise subject to the consumer's claims against the seller. This includes claims for breach of warranty, deception and fraud, and odometer rollbacks. These claims may result in recoveries of significant statutory damages, treble damages, attorney's fees, and punitive damages.

All counterclaims relating to the credit terms should also be raised, including claims for Truth in Lending disclosure violations, violations of state credit disclosure laws, and state laws regulating the cost or terms of credit.

A third area of potential counterclaims and cross-claims relates to debt collection abuse either before the repossession or later, where the creditor seeks to collect the deficiency. These might arise under the Federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) if committed by independent collection agencies or under a state debt collection statute, a statute UDAP statute, or as a common law tort claim. Many of these potential counterclaims are based on laws that have relatively short statutes of limitations. Nonetheless, claims arising out of the same transaction can be raised by way of recoupment even if they would otherwise be time-barred. n32

[b] Raising Seller-Related Claims Against the Creditor

In general, seller-related claims can be raised as counterclaims to a deficiency action. But the consumer cannot raise seller-related claims where the creditor has a non-purchase money security interest in the collateral or where the consumer obtains a purchase money loan independent of the seller's referral or recommendation.

Where a creditor is subject to seller-related claims, there are limitations to the creditor's liability. In general, the creditor's liability for the seller's misconduct is limited to the amount outstanding on the note, the amount already paid, and any statutory attorney fees. This means that the consumer can cancel the remainder of the debt (i.e., the deficiency) and recover everything already paid in, which should include all installment payments. If the loan was a credit sale with the original dealer, the amount paid also includes any down payment and trade-in. The creditor seeking a deficiency is also liable for all amounts related to the creditor's own misconduct.

[10] Cosigners and Other Sureties' Defenses to Deficiency Action

[a] Introduction

Consumers frequently find themselves facing liability for debts for which they have signed along with another person, expecting the other person to make payment. Typically, a friend or relative is asked to "cosign" a note or installment contract because a creditor has required another signature as a condition of extending credit. When the principal obligor defaults, the creditor may sell the collateral and come after both the principal obligor and the surety for the deficiency. The creditor may also sue the surety alone and not the principal obligor. The creditor may even just sue the surety on the note without first seizing the collateral.

In general, the cosigner, guarantor, or other surety has the same defenses and counterclaims to the deficiency action available to the principal obligor, including the right to seek Revised UCC section 9-625(c) statutory damages. n33

In addition to the other defenses and counterclaims to a deficiency set out earlier, the surety has several special defenses and counterclaims to the deficiency action or suit on the note. In addition, the surety has certain rights concerning the collateral before it is sold, and also as against the principal obligor.

[b] Distinguishing Cosigner or Other Surety From the Principal Obligor

Fundamental to whether a consumer can raise the special defenses and counterclaims available to sureties is whether the consumer is a surety, or, instead, is a principal obligor. The terms cosigner, guarantor, and accommodation party are often used synonymously. "Cosigner," often used generically, has no precise UCC definition. The UCC uses one catch-all term -- "accommodation party."

Under the 1990 amendments to Article 3, an accommodation party is defined as one who "signs the instrument for the purpose of incurring liability on the instrument without being a direct beneficiary of the value given for the instrument." n34 A guarantor is a particular kind of accommodation party -- one who adds specific words of guaranty to the signature, such as "payment guaranteed," or "collection guaranteed." n35 In most cases, a creditor may proceed directly against an accommodation party without prior resort to the debtor. However, if an accommodation party pays the debt, the primary debtor is then liable to the accommodation party. n36

[c] Cosigner Defenses Under the Current Version of UCC Article 3

Forty-eight states and the District of Columbia have adopted the 1990 amendments to UCC Article 3.

In 2002, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws approved yet another revision of Article 3 for adoption by the states. n37 As of mid-2003, one state -- Minnesota -- had adopted the 2002 revision, and a few other states were considering it. n38

[i] Extension of Due Date

If the creditor extends the due date for an instrument, the current version of Article 3 provides that an accommodation party is discharged to the extent that the extension caused loss to the accommodation party. n39 The accommodation party bears the burden of proving the extension caused a loss.

[ii] Modification of Terms of Obligation

Article 3 in its current version provides that a material modification discharges the accommodation party unless the creditor proves that no loss was caused by the modification. n40

[iii] Creditor's Impairment of Collateral

Article 3 also provides a defense for an accommodation party where the creditor impairs the value of its security interest in the collateral. n41 The accommodation party has the burden of proof. A prime example is the creditor's failure to perfect the security interest in the collateral, which is then seized by some other creditor.

[iv] Waiver

Waiver of these defenses is allowed, but the accommodation party must actually agree to the waiver, either at the outset of the transaction or at the time the extension or deferral is granted. n42

[v] Defenses Where Accommodation Party's Status Is Unknown to Creditor

An accommodation party is not discharged by extension, modification, or impairment of collateral unless the creditor knows of the accommodation party's status or the note was signed in a way that makes the accommodation status clear. n43

[d] Cosigner Defenses Under the Previous Version of Article 3

The pre-1990 version of UCC section 3-606(1), still in effect in New York and South Carolina, provides for a discharge of the debt against the accommodation party if the creditor either suspends or discharges the debt against the primary debtor. Proof of loss is not required. However, if the creditor makes "an expressreservation of rights" against the accommodation party, then the extension of time does not affect the creditor's claim against the accommodation party. n44

If, after repossession, the creditor damages the collateral or otherwise fails to take reasonable care of it, the accommodation party is discharged to the extent of the damage. n45

[e] Defenses Under 2002 Revisions to Article 3

The 2002 revisions to Article 3, so far enacted only by Minnesota, make some changes in accommodation parties' defenses. First, instead of setting forth the burden of proof separately for each type of defense, Revised section 3-605 establishes a general rule that a secondary obligor has the burden of persuasion with respect to both the occurrence of the acts that allegedly harmed the secondary obligor and the loss or prejudice caused by those acts. However, if the secondary obligor demonstrates prejudice caused by an impairment of its recourse, but the damage is difficult to quantify, there is a presumption that the damage is equal to the amount of the secondary obligor's liability, thereby eliminating that liability. The obligee then has the burden of persuasion that the damage is less than the secondary obligor's liability. n46

The second major change is that, under the 2002 revisions, the obligee's release of the principal obligor discharges the secondary obligor to the same extent as the principal obligor is discharged. There is an exception to this general rule, however, if the release preserves the rights of the obligee against the secondary obligor. But even then, the secondary obligor is discharged to the extent that the release of the primary obligor causes loss. n47

[f] Creditor's Failure to Reveal Risks of Guarantee as Defense to Deficiency

At common law, a surety is released when the creditor fails to disclose facts unknown to the surety which increase the risk to the surety.

[g] Surety's Right to Notice of Sale and a Commercially Reasonable Disposition of the Collateral

Failure to give notice to the surety or proceed in a commercially reasonable manner may bar or limit a deficiency judgment, and, in the case of consumer goods, entitle the debtor to minimum damages under UCC section 9-507(1). n48 Thus, the accommodation party may raise as a defense the failure to receive notice and may contest the commercial reasonableness of the sale, including seeking statutory damages. The UCC prohibits waiver of notice prior to default or waiver of the commercial reasonableness requirement. In addition, a post-default waiver of notice is effective only if it is in writing and signed by the obligor. n49

[h] Creditor's Duty of Good Faith to Surety

As part of the recent move to expand the liability of lenders, sureties have begun to argue that creditors owe them a duty of good faith beyond the literal terms of the surety agreement, which, if not followed, releases the guarantors.

[i] Creditor's Duty to Disclose Risks to Cosigner

[i] Federal Trade Commission Cosigner Requirements

The FTC Credit Practices Rule n50 requires all "cosigners" in consumer credit transactions to be given a notice prior to adding their signature to any debt. n51

[ii] State Cosigner Statutes

Some state statutes provide special consumer credit cosigner protections. The state requirements are similar to the FTC Credit Practices Rule. Failure to give the notice releases the cosigner from liability and may subject the creditor to statutory damages.

[j] Surety's Right to Redeem Collateral

If collateral is repossessed, an accommodation party, as a "debtor," has a right under UCC section 9-506 [Revised UCC section 9-623] to redeem the goods.

[k] Surety's Claims Against the Principal Debtor

When the secured party seeks collection from an accommodation party, it is usually because the debtor is bankrupt, judgment proof, or unavailable. Nevertheless, the accommodation party, if forced to pay some or all of the debt, has a right of recourse against the principal debtor. n52

[11] Raising Defenses to FDIC or RTC's Deficiency Actions

The growth of bank insolvencies has meant that consumers are increasingly being sued for deficiencies by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation ("FDIC"), the Resolution Trust Corporation ("RTC"), or by entities who received the consumer obligation from the FDIC or RTC. Consumer attorneys in this situation will have to become familiar with the "D'Oench, Duhme doctrine" n53 and related provisions in the United States Code. n54 Under this rapidly evolving area of federal law, the FDIC, RTC, and successor creditors are insulated from borrowers' claims and defenses based on side agreements between the borrowers and the now insolvent predecessor banks.

Nevertheless, such creditor arguments should not succeed where the consumer's defense alleges that the original bank held a commercially unreasonable sale of the collateral or improperly seized the collateral. The RTC, FDIC, and successor creditors are certainly subject to the written terms of the loan, including these legal requirements.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)General OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionGeneral OverviewCommercial Law (UCC)Secured Transactions (Article 9)DefaultForeclosure & RepossessionDisposition of Collateral

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Louisiana and California are the only states whose versions of U.C.C. § 9-625(c) does not provide special damages in the case of consumer goods.

(n2)Footnote 2. Chisolm v. TranSouth Fin. Corp., 194 F.R.D. 538 (E.D. Va. 2000) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Revised U.C.C. § 9-102(a)(26) [former U.C.C. § 9-109].

(n4)Footnote 4. Revised U.C.C. § 9-616(b).

(n5)Footnote 5. Revised U.C.C. § 9-625(e)(5).

(n6)Footnote 6. Revised U.C.C. § 9-628(d).

(n7)Footnote 7. See National Consumer Law Center, Arbitration Agreements (4th ed. 2004).

(n8)Footnote 8. In re Ott, 278 B.R. 154, 48 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1234 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2002) (creditor failed to satisfy burden of proof when it could not explain absence of documentary evidence that it had given notice).

(n9)Footnote 9. In re Downing, 286 B.R. 900, 49 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 697 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2002) (question of sufficiency of notice of sale; note, however, that Missouri adopted Revised U.C.C. §§ 9-625 and 9-626 with a delayed effective date so they were not in effect at the time of this decision).

(n10)Footnote 10. Brewer v. Trust Co. Bank, 205 Ga. App. 891, 424 S.E.2d 74 (1992) (proof of commercially reasonable procedures and sale price insufficient; creditor must also prove reasonable value of collateral); Hall v. Owen

County State Bank, 370 N.E.2d 918 (Ind. Ct. App. 1977) ; Citizens Nat'l Bank v. Robertson, 101 S.W.3d 302 (Mo. Ct. App. 2003) ; Parks Chevrolet, Inc. v. Watkins, 329 S.E.2d 728 (N.C. Ct. App. 1985) (reversing summary judgment for creditor when evidence showed only that it sold the collateral for a certain price to a wholesaler).

(n11)Footnote 11. Boles v. Texas Nat'l Bank, 750 S.W.2d 879 (Tex. App. 1988) .

(n12)Footnote 12. McDonald Mobile Home Sales, Inc. v. BankAmerica Hous. Services, 218 S.W.3d 376 (Ala. Civ. App. 2005) ; see also Greenlee v. Mazda Am. Credit, 59 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 532 (Ark. Ct. App. 2005) (testimony by creditor employee who has no personal knowledge of sale, and can only verify sale price, balance due, and that sale was a private auction, is insufficient).

(n13)Footnote 13. DaimlerChrysler Services v. Lennington, 2006 Ohio 1546 (2006) (unpublished).

(n14)Footnote 14. Hall v. Owen County State Bank, 370 N.E.2d 918 (Ind. Ct. App. 1977) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Hall v. Crocker Equip. Leasing, Inc., 737 S.W.2d 1 (Tex. App. 1987) .

(n16)Footnote 16. Karlstad State Bank v. Fritsche, 374 N.W.2d 177 (Minn. Ct. App. 1985) ; American State Bank v. Hewson, 411 N.W.2d 57 (N.D. 1987) (burden of persuasion, but not burden of proof, shifts to debtor); see First Nat'l Bank v. Ruttle, 778 P.2d 434 (N.M. Ct. App. 1989) (burden of going forward shifts to debtor).

(n17)Footnote 17. See Revised U.C.C. § 9-620. Note that Part 6 of the revisions corresponds with Part 5 of the former U.C.C. Article 9.

(n18)Footnote 18. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 12.6.1.2 (6th ed. 2005 and supp.).

(n19)Footnote 19. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 12.6.1.2 (6th ed. 2005 and supp.).

(n20)Footnote 20. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 12.6.2 (6th ed. 2005 and supp.), for citations to state statutes and court decisions adopting this approach.

(n21)Footnote 21. Atlas Thrift Co. v. Horan, 27 Cal. App. 3d 999, 104 Cal. Rptr. 315, 11 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 417 (1972) .

(n22)Footnote 22. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 12.6.3 (6th ed. 2005 and supp.) for citations to state statutes and court decisions adopting this approach.

(n23)Footnote 23. Hoch v. Ellis, 627 P.2d 1060, 31 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 760 (Alaska 1981) .

(n24)Footnote 24. Oliver-Mercer Elec. Co-op., Inc. v. Davis, 696 N.W.2d 924, 57 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 724 (N.D. 2005) .

(n25)Footnote 25. Revised U.C.C. § 9-626(a)(3).

(n26)Footnote 25.1. Folks v. Tuscaloosa County Credit Union, 64 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 957 (Ala. Civ. App. 2007) (setting off only actual value of collateral, which was less than the debt, resulting in a deficiency).

(n27)Footnote 26. Revised U.C.C. § 9-616.

(n28)Footnote 27. U.C.C. § 9-625(e)(5), (6); see National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 13.2.5 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n29)Footnote 28. See National Consumer Law Center, Repossessions, § 12.6.5 (6th ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n30)Footnote 29. U.C.C. § 2-725(1).

(n31)Footnote 30. See 16 C.F.R. pt. 433; see Ch. 4, "Unfair and Deceptive Credit Practices," supra.

(n32)Footnote 30.1. R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-51-5.

(n33)Footnote 31. See Revised U.C.C. § 9-625 [former U.C.C. § 9-507(1)].

(n34)Footnote 32. Associates Home Equity Servs., Inc., v. Troup, 778 A.2d 529 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 2001) ; see National Consumer Law Center, Truth in Lending § 7.2.5 (6th ed. 2007 and supp.).

(n35)Footnote 33. See Crane v. Citicorp Nat'l Servs., Inc., 437 S.E.2d 50 (S.C. 1993) . This principle is made explicit bythe 1999 revisions to Article 9, which will revise the statutory damage provision to state that either the debtor or a secondary obligor can recover statutory damages. Revised U.C.C. § 9-625(c)(2). See also Revised U.C.C. § 9-628(e) (secured party cannot be held liable for statutory damages more than once with respect to any secured obligation).

(n36)Footnote 34. U.C.C. § 3-419(a).

(n37)Footnote 35. U.C.C. § 3-419(c).

(n38)Footnote 36. U.C.C. § 3-415(5). For a more detailed discussion of guarantors, accommodation parties, and the concept of suretyship under the U.C.C., see White & Summers, Uniform Commercial Code §§ 13-13 to 13-19 (3d ed. 1988).

(n39)Footnote 37. See Mark Budnitz, The Law of Lender Liability Ch. 5A (2003 Supp.) (discussion of this latest revision).

(n40)Footnote 38. Minn. Stat. §§ 336.3-101 to 336.3-605, as amended by 2003 Minn. Sess. Law Serv. 81.

(n41)Footnote 39. U.C.C. § 3-605(c).

(n42)Footnote 40. U.C.C. § 3-605(d).

(n43)Footnote 41. U.C.C. § 3-605(e).

(n44)Footnote 42. U.C.C. § 3-605(i). See Decatur County Bank v. Smith, 1999 Tenn. App. LEXIS 864, 40 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 1236 (Tenn. Ct. App. Dec. 27, 1999) (enforcing waiver clause).

(n45)Footnote 43. U.C.C. § 3-605(h).

(n46)Footnote 44. U.C.C. § 3-606(1) [pre-1990 version].

(n47)Footnote 45. U.C.C. § 3-606 [pre-1990 version].

(n48)Footnote 46. Revised U.C.C. § 3-605(h), (i) (2002).

(n49)Footnote 47. Revised U.C.C. § 3-605(a)(2), (3) (2002).

(n50)Footnote 48. See Crane v. Citicorp Nat'l Servs., Inc., 437 S.E.2d 50 (S.C. 1993) .

(n51)Footnote 49. Cerritos Valley Bank v. Stirling, 81 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 432 (Ct. App. 2000) .

(n52)Footnote 50. 16 C.F.R. pt. 444, reprinted in Vol. 1A infra.

(n53)Footnote 51. FTC Credit Practices Rule, 16 C.F.R. § 444.3.

(n54)Footnote 52. U.C.C. § 3-419(e) [pre-1990 U.C.C. § 3-415(5)].

(n55)Footnote 53. See D'Oench, Duhme & Co. v. FDIC, 315 U.S. 447, 62 S. Ct. 676, 86 L. Ed. 956 (1942) .

(n56)Footnote 54. 12 U.S.C. § 1823(e). For further discussion of these issues, see National Consumer Law Center, The Cost of Credit: Regulation, Preemption and Industry Abuses, § 10.7 (6th ed. 2005).

152 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1A-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual 11.syn

§ 11.syn Synopsis to Chapter 11: Utility Terminations

§ 11.01 Introduction

§ 11.02 Legal Characteristics of Public Utilities: Duties and Obligations

§ 11.03 Regulated Utilities

§ 11.04 Deregulation of the Public Utility

§ 11.05 Unregulated Utilities

[1] Municipal Utilities

[2] Rural Electric Cooperatives

[3] Unregulated Deliverable Fuels

§ 11.06 Sources of Law in Termination Cases

[1] PUC Dispute Resolution Procedures

[2] Sources of Law Particular to RECs

[a] The Relevance of State Commission Regulation to "Unregulated" Utilities

[b] PUC Regulations and "Unfairness."

[3] Protections Offered From REC Membership

§ 11.07 Constitutional Law

[1] State Action Requirement

[a] Applicability to Municipal Utilities

[b] Applicability to Private (Investor-Owned) Regulated Utilities

[c] Applicability to RECs

§ 11.08 Federal Statutes

[1] Civil Rights Statutes

[2] Public Utilities Regulatory Policy Act (PURPA)

[3] Bankruptcy Law as a Source of Protection

§ 11.09 Consumer Protection Statutes

[1] The Uniform Commercial Code (UCC)

[a] Applicability to Different Types of Utilities

[2] Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices (UDAP)

§ 11.10 Grounds for Termination of Service

[1] Introduction

[2] Nonpayment

[3] Meter Tampering and Other Fraud

§ 11.11 Protection From Disconnection

[1] Protection From Disconnection for Low-Income and Elderly Customers

[a] Winter Moratoria

[b] Special Protections for the Sick

[c] Payment Plans

[2] Utilities May Not Disconnect for a Disputed Bill Pending Resolution of Dispute

[3] Public Utility May Not Disconnect Service Based on a "Collateral" Matter

[a] What Constitutes "Collateral" Matter

[b] Separate Business Run by Utility: Disconnection of Water for Nonpayment of Sewer Charges; Local and Long-Distance Telephone Charges

[c] Third Party's Debt

[i] General Rule

[ii] Prior Occupant in Arrears

[iii] Landlord-Tenant Situations

[iv] Roommate/Family Member/Spouse in Arrears

[4] A Utility May Not Disconnect to Collect a Mistaken Undercharge

[a] Mistaken Undercharges

[b] The Doctrine of Estoppel

[c] Ban on Disconnection as Collection Mechanism

[d] Mandatory vs. Discretionary Practices

[e] Protection From Disconnection in Rules

[f] Past Undercharges as Collateral Matters

[5] Protection From Disconnection by Filing for Bankruptcy Protection

[6] No Disconnection Based on Bills From Non-Approved Tariff

§ 11.12 Public Utility May Not Disconnect Service Without Providing Prior Adequate Notice

[1] Right to Notice

[a] Common Law and Regulatory Restrictions

[b] Constitution: Due Process

[2] What Constitutes Sufficient Notice

[a] Due Process Requirements

[b] Regulatory Requirements

[c] Timing of Notice

[d] Receipt Requirements

[3] Is Notice to Actual User Required?

[a] Tenants and Master-Meter Situations

§ 11.13 Meter Tampering Issues

[1] No Notice Required

[2] Presumptions

§ 11.14 Recourse for Wrongful Disconnection

[1] Available Remedies

[2] Disconnections as Torts

[a] Duty

[b] Breach

[i] The Standard

[ii] Disconnection of Service as Negligence Per Se

[c] Causation

[i] Actual Cause

[ii] Legal (Proximate) Cause

[d] Damages

[e] Limiting Liability Through Tariff: Legitimate Practice or Contrary to Public Policy?

[f] Mitigation of Damages: A Condition Precedent to Recovery

§ 11.15 Tenants' Rights Where Landlord Fails to Pay Utility

[1] Common Law

[2] Implied Warranty of Habitability

[a] Overview

[b] Application of the Warranty of Habitability

[c] Jurisdictions Adopting the Warranty of Habitability

[d] Waiver

[e] Remedies for Breach of Warranty of Habitability

[f] Serious Code Violations Violate Warranty of Habitability

[3] Specific Statutory Protection Against Utility Termination

[4] Special Public Utility Statutes

[5] Protection Against Reprisal

[6] Repair and Deduct

[7] Application of Constitutional Principles

[8] Public Utility Commission Rules and Orders

§ 11.16 Challenging Utility Service Terminations Effected at the Behest of Landlords: Tenants' Remedies Against Landlords and Utility Providers

[1] Public Utility Regulation

[2] Other State and Local Laws

[3] Quiet Enjoyment

[4] Self-Help Eviction

[5] Warranties of Habitability, Statutes and Regulations Ensuring a Minimum Quality of Housing and Statutes Ensuring Continuing Provision of Utility Services

[6] The Aggrieved Tenants as a Third Party Beneficiary of the Contract Between the Vindictive Landlord and the Complicit Utility

[7] Using State UDAP Statutes as a Remedy Against Landlords (and Complicit Utilities)

[8] The Fair Housing Act and Other Federal Nondiscrimination Guarantees

[a] Landlord's Obligations

[b] Utility Companies May Be Subject to Fair Housing Act Ban on Unintentional Discrimination

153 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.01

§ 11.01 Introduction

The termination of utility service can have devastating and immediate effects on a family. Loss of heat or lights can be difficult and inconvenient at any time of the year and potentially dangerous at certain times of the winter or summer when temperatures are extreme. Keeping the lights and heat on is important. This chapter discusses different strategies to use to fight utility terminations, including preventing the shutoff in the first place, restoring service if a termination has occurred, and seeking redress for improper shutoffs. n1

A "public utility" is a business whose services are sufficiently important so as to warrant government regulation n2 because the commodity which the company provides--whether electric, gas, water or telephone service--is viewed as being of great economic consequence. Local and state authorities, often called public service commissions or public utility commissions, as well as various federal agencies, have all imposed varying degrees of control upon these enterprises for the purpose of achieving what the free market cannot: the provision of adequate service at reasonable prices for anyone who demands it.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Energy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService Terminations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. For a thorough discussion of many issues concerning utility service, including termination, payment and payment assistance, weatherization, utility affordability programs, etc., see National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service (3rd ed. 2004 and Supp.).

(n2)Footnote 2. 64 Am. Jur. 2d Public Utilities § 1 (1972). See also Charles F. Phillips, Jr., The Regulation of Public Utilities 3 (1993).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.02

§ 11.02 Legal Characteristics of Public Utilities: Duties and Obligations

First and foremost, public utilities have a duty to serve. They are obligated to provide service on reasonable terms to all who request it, provided that the prospective customer lives within the service area, is willing to comply with the utility's rules and regulations, and that the technical capacity exists to provide the service.

The second obligation which utilities must observe is the requirement that they provide safe and adequate service to all of their customers.

Public utility firms must also serve all members of the public on equal terms. They must serve all customers impartially and without undue discrimination.

The fourth duty under which utilities must operate is the requirement that they charge "just and reasonable" prices for their services.

Utility companies may also be held to an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing implicit in all contracts under the common law of many states. Such a covenant is not a revision of company tariffs, but is a duty of all contracting parties, and is especially applicable given the higher duty of care often imposed on utility companies toward their customers.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Contracts LawContract InterpretationGood Faith & Fair DealingEnergy & Utilities LawImplied CovenantsGeneral OverviewEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesContracts for ServiceEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesRatesGeneral Overview

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.03

§ 11.03 Regulated Utilities

Regulated utilities generally include retail electric, gas, and telephone service providers, which are investor-owned utility companies and under the jurisdiction of a state utilities commission. They are granted the right to a monopoly subject to regulation. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawIndustry RegulationEnergy & UtilitiesState RegulationAntitrust & Trade LawIndustry RegulationEnergy & UtilitiesUtility CompaniesEnergy & Utilities LawAdministrative ProceedingsPublic Utility CommissionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. For current information on regulated utilities, see the following internet sites: for regulators' perspective: National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners (NARUC) (www.erols.com/naruc/nccei.htm); for utility company perspectives: Edison Electric Institute (www.eei.org).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.04

§ 11.04 Deregulation of the Public Utility

Many utility companies and their industries are currently undergoing rapid, fundamental changes of organizational and regulatory structures. Once typified by regulatory protection of monopoly investment, utility investment and pricing decision-making are increasingly guided by market forces and competition. Utility industry restructuring or deregulation changes the ways in which these companies are organized and operated, as well as changes the ways in which customers receive utility service.

At the wholesale level, restructuring involves implementation of what has come to be referred to as "open access," where natural gas pipeline owners and electricity transmission line owners are required by statute and Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Orders to provide access to these transportation facilities at a fair price.

"Electricity industry" restructuring generally describes any one of a number of ways of introducing competition between independent power producers and existing monopoly utilities to sell power to retail customers. The key is the concept of retail competition. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawIndustry RegulationEnergy & UtilitiesUtility CompaniesEnergy & Utilities LawElectric Power IndustryDeregulation & RestructuringEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesOwnership & RestructuringEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesRatesGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. For further discussion of deregulation and restructuring, see National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service, Ch. 1 (3rd ed. 2004 and Supp.).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.05

§ 11.05 Unregulated Utilities

[1] Municipal Utilities

One form of public utility which is typically not subject to the same array of statutory controls are publicly-owned municipal utilities ("MUNIs"). Most common in the electric power and water industries, MUNIs are government-run enterprises, not privately-run. The rationale supporting non-regulation by a utilities commission is that local control over utility service is more responsive to user needs than is commission oversight. MUNIs must still follow the common-law duties of public utilities in their dealings with their customers.

[2] Rural Electric Cooperatives

Over 1000 rural electric cooperatives ("RECs") exist and provide power to nearly 50% of all inhabitants of rural areas in the United States. Although RECs have not always been classified as public utilities, the general feeling is that they are. Thus, although they are not regulated by Public Utilities Commissions ("PUCs") in the traditional sense, they occasionally have been deemed bound by the common law duties and obligations unique to utilities. They present an odd combination of public and regulated utility provider.

[3] Unregulated Deliverable Fuels

In addition to regulated electric and natural gas utilities, MUNIs, and RECs, millions of people across the country depend upon a wide variety of unregulated "deliverable" fuels, such as propane, oil, kerosene, and wood. Thus, vendors of these alternative fuels are able to set prices and provide service much like any other provider of a non-utility good or service. Disputes with such companies are governed by the Uniform Commercial Code ("UCC") and other applicable merchant-consumer statutes and regulations.

In practical terms, customers who have disputes with such businesses cannot, therefore, seek refuge in the comprehensive protections and special rights which electric and natural gas consumers enjoy in the area of service terminations, reconnections, and deferred payment plans.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Energy & Utilities LawElectric Power IndustryElectricity Distribution & TransmissionState & Municipal OwnershipEnergy & Utilities LawGas IndustryLiquefied Natural GasEnergy & Utilities LawPurchase ContractsUniform Commercial CodeEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesOwnership & Restructuring

158 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.06

§ 11.06 Sources of Law in Termination Cases

When a consumer's utility service is at risk of being disconnected, the law that governs depends on the type of utility. If the utility is a privately owned regulated utility, then the state's public utility commission statutes, regulations, and rules apply. If the utility is municipally owned, constitutional restrictions limit what that utility may do. If the utility is a REC, in addition to the REC's specific rules, constitutional principles may apply. Common law principles apply to all types of utilities. Federal consumer protection statutes, state unfair or deceptive trade practices acts, and/or federal civil rights statutes may also provide protection.

[1] PUC Dispute Resolution Procedures

Public utilities commissions typically are afforded power to decide individual customer disputes with regulated utilities. State statutes often provide for the initiation of complaints against a utility before the commission.

The doctrine of primary jurisdiction may be invoked to bar judicial relief absent first resorting to such remedies as the public utility commission may afford. A trial court will typically lack jurisdiction to review claims involving the rate setting process, quality of service, or other matters under the commission's express supervision.

[2] Sources of Law Particular to RECs n1

[a] The Relevance of State Commission Regulation to "Unregulated" Utilities

Rural electric cooperatives typically are not subject to the direct regulatory supervision of state utility regulatory commissions. State public utility commission regulations can be imported as implied terms of the contract between a REC and its customers under the UCC "usage of trade" provisions. n2

Deferral of service disconnections in the event of medical emergencies, prohibition of disconnections "after hours," on weekends or on holidays, and winter shutoff protections are good examples of trade practices that may be implied in the contract between an REC and its customers based on usage of trade within the public utility industry.

[b] PUC Regulations and "Unfairness."

A majority of states have unfair or deceptive act or practices ("UDAP") statutes prohibiting "unfair practices." n3 Under this standard, existing PUC regulations could well serve as an "established concept of unfairness" even though the REC is not directly subject to PUC regulation.

[3] Protections Offered From REC Membership

Members n4 of RECs may be entitled to protections against unfair termination practices as an incident of membership in the REC as a nonprofit association. Such protections arise out of the contract of the member with the REC pursuant to its articles of incorporation, corporate bylaws, and any other agreements contracted with the REC's membership. State cooperative laws may also prescribe specific standards and procedures that an REC must incorporate into its contracts with its members as to service termination.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Energy & Utilities LawAdministrative ProceedingsPublic Utility CommissionsAuthorityEnergy & Utilities LawElectric Power IndustryElectricity Distribution & TransmissionState & Municipal OwnershipEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService Terminations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. For a more extensive discussion, see National Consumer Law Center, The Regulation of Rural Electric Cooperatives: The Common Law, Consumer Law and a Cornucopia of Consumer Protections (1993). See also National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service, § 1.5 (3rd ed. 2004 and Supp.).

(n2)Footnote 2. U.C.C. § 1-205(2).

(n3)Footnote 3. National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, App. A (7th ed. 2008), presents a state-by-state, statute-by-statute analysis of state unfair and deceptive acts and practices [hereinafter UDAP] laws.

(n4)Footnote 4. The recipient of an REC's services is ordinarily, but not universally, a member of the cooperative.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.07

§ 11.07 Constitutional Law

The conditions under which a utility may terminate or deny service to a customer may be limited by constitutional restrictions, n1 the central constitutional restriction being the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. These restrictions establish mere minimum procedures.

[1] State Action Requirement

In Memphis Light, Gas and Water Division v. Craft, n2 the United States Supreme Court held that where state action is present, constitutional restrictions will apply. The determination of whether a utility's action constitutes state action depends on the type of utility.

[a] Applicability to Municipal Utilities

Municipal utilities are cities and towns, or their agencies or departments, which sell utility services to retail customers. Municipalities are limited by the constitutional due process controls on government action. State action is present in all of the activities of municipal utilities. n3 The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires that certain elements of fairness be present in the termination of utility service. In particular, in most cases, customers are at least entitled to notice prior to having their service disconnected. n4

[b] Applicability to Private (Investor-Owned) Regulated Utilities

In Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., n5 the Supreme Court held that state action is not present where a utility is privately owned, despite both the regulation of the utilities and the grant of a monopoly by the state. The general rule, however, is that the actions of private utilities do not constitute state action, unless the state regulator actually ordered the utility's action.

[c] Applicability to RECs

There is no court decision directly on point as to whether service terminations by RECs constitute "state action" and are, thus, subject to the constraints of constitutional due process. The right of an REC to terminate the service of a member derives solely from any inherent powers it holds pursuant to its articles of incorporation, corporate bylaws, and any other agreements contracted with the REC's membership. State cooperative laws may also prescribe specific standards and procedures that an REC must incorporate into its contracts with its members as to service termination.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Constitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsProcedural Due ProcessScope of ProtectionEnergy & Utilities LawElectric Power IndustryElectricity Distribution & TransmissionState & Municipal OwnershipEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService Terminations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Memphis Light, Gas & Water Div. v. Craft, 436 U.S. 1, 98 S. Ct. 1554, 56 L. Ed. 2d 30 (1978) ; Davis v. Weir, 497 F.2d 139 (5th Cir. 1974) ; Smith v. Tri-County Elec. Membership Corp., 689 S.W.2d 181 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1985) . See generally National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service (2d ed. 2001).

(n2)Footnote 2. 436 U.S. 1, 98 S. Ct. 1554, 56 L. Ed. 2d 30 (1978) .

(n3)Footnote 3. DiMassimo v. City of Clearwater, 805 F.2d 1536 (11th Cir. 1986) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Memphis Light, Gas & Water Div. v. Craft, 436 U.S. 1, 98 S. Ct. 1554, 56 L. Ed. 2d 30 (1978) ; Davis v. Weir, 497 F.2d 139 (5th Cir. 1974) ; Smith v. Tri-County Elec. Membership Corp., 689 S.W.2d 181 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1985) .

(n5)Footnote 5. 419 U.S. 345, 95 S. Ct. 449, 42 L. Ed. 2d 477 (1974) .

160 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.08

§ 11.08 Federal Statutes

[1] Civil Rights Statutes

Civil rights statutes apply only to recipients of federal funding. This includes, for example, receipt of Rural Electrification Agency ("REA") loans or guarantees, n1 which applies to nearly all RECs.

[2] Public Utilities Regulatory Policy Act (PURPA)

The Public Utilities Regulatory Policy Act ("PURPA"), n2 enacted in 1978, regulates electric utilities with total annual sales of electricity in excess of 500 million kilowatt-hours. PURPA requires that commissions regulating electric utility providers (or the providers themselves in the case of unregulated providers), undertake a formal hearing process to consider whether to establish regulations, rules, and standards governing terminations of customer service. n3 Most commissions and many unregulated utilities established some termination procedures in response to this statute.

[3] Bankruptcy Law as a Source of Protection

The U.S. Bankruptcy Code n4 presents one of the strongest sources of consumer rights to deal with utility shut-offs and utilities' unwillingness to restructure utility arrearages. Under the Bankruptcy Code, a consumer may prevent a disconnection and seek to discharge unpayable debts through a variety of mechanisms. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Bankruptcy LawCase AdministrationAdministrative PowersUtility ServicesEnergy & Utilities LawCogeneration & Independent Power CompaniesPublic Utility Regulatory Policies ActGeneral OverviewEnergy & Utilities LawFinancingRural Electrification LoansEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService Terminations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See 7 U.S.C. §§ 901-916; 7 U.S.C. §§ 931-940. Zepp v. Mayor & Council of Athens, 180 Ga. App. 72, 348 S.E.2d 673 , 2 U.C.C. Rep. 2d 1179 (1986); Mulberry-Fairplains Water Ass'n v. Town of N. Wilkesboro, 105 N.C. App. 258, 412 S.E.2d 910 , 17 U.C.C. Rep. 2d 48 (1992). But see Mattoon v. City of Pittsfield, 56 Mass. App. Ct. 124,

775 N.E.2d 770 (2002) (the provision of water was predominantly a service because, although the city charged for the water, the rate covered storage, treatment, and distribution); Coast Laundry v. Lincoln City, 9 Or. App. 521, 497 P.2d 1224, 10 U.C.C. Rep. 1379, 54 A.L.R.3d 930 (1972) .

(n2)Footnote 2. 16 U.S.C. §§ 2601 et seq. (1989).

(n3)Footnote 3. 16 U.S.C. §§ 2612(c), 2623(a) (1984). See also Dotson v. PG&E, 1995 WL 216862 (Cal. PUC 1995) (PURPA does not mandate permanent free utility service to low-income or handicapped customers; extended payment plan ordered).

(n4)Footnote 4. See generally Annot., Bankruptcy, Debtor's Protection Under 11 U.S.C. Section 316 Against Utility Service Cutoff 11 U.S.C. Section 316, 83 A.L.R. Fed. 207 (1987).

(n5)Footnote 5. A more complete discussion of consumers' rights as bankruptcy debtors is contained in the Collier Consumer Bankruptcy Practice Guide (Matthew Bender) (see Ch. 12 regarding utility service issues).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.09

§ 11.09 Consumer Protection Statutes

[1] The Uniform Commercial Code (UCC)

[a] Applicability to Different Types of Utilities

Article 2 of the UCC can provide considerable protection for a consumer facing the disconnection of service provided by a utility company. In this analysis, the threshold determination to be made is whether utility service can be classified as "goods" for the purposes of rendering the UCC applicable. The majority view is that the UCC does apply to consumer purchases of utilities. n1 Specifically, the courts have found that a utility's provision of water, sewer, electricity, and gas, in metered amounts, to customers involves the sale of "goods" covered by Article 2.

[2] Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices (UDAP)

All states have enacted statutes, commonly called UDAP statutes, generally prohibiting unfair or unconscionable or deceptive practices. n2 UDAP statutes typically apply to the sale of goods or services or practices "in trade or commerce." Generally, utility services will fall within these coverages. Certain UDAP statutes, however, exempt regulated practices or regulated utilities, and certain state regulatory schemes are found to preempt UDAP coverage. None of these exemptions apply to RECs, as they are unregulated.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Antitrust & Trade LawIndustry RegulationEnergy & UtilitiesUtility CompaniesAntitrust & Trade LawTrade Practices & Unfair CompetitionState RegulationCoverageCommercial Law (UCC)Sales (Article 2)Subject MatterGoodsDefinitionEnergy & Utilities LawAntitrustGeneral OverviewEnergy & Utilities LawPurchase ContractsUniform Commercial CodeEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService Terminations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Zepp v. Mayor & Council of Athens, 180 Ga. App. 72, 348 S.E.2d 673 , 2 U.C.C. Rep. 2d 1179 (1986); Mulberry-Fairplains Water Ass'n v. Town of N. Wilkesboro, 105 N.C. App. 258, 412 S.E.2d 910 , 17 U.C.C. Rep. 2d 48 (1992). But see Mattoon v. City of Pittsfield, 56 Mass. App. Ct. 124, 775 N.E.2d 770 (2002) (the provision of water was predominantly a service because, although the city charged for the water, the rate covered storage, treatment, and distribution); Coast Laundry v. Lincoln City, 9 Or. App. 521, 497 P.2d 1224, 10 U.C.C. Rep. 1379, 54 A.L.R.3d 930 (1972) . See generally Annot., Electricity, Gas or Water Furnished by Public Utility as "Goods" Within Provisions of Uniform Commercial Code, Article 2 on Sales Uniform Commercial Code, Article 2, 48 A.L.R.3d 1060 (1973). Archer Daniels Midland Co. v. Brunswick County, N.C., 129 Fed. Appx. 16, 56 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 665, at 674 (4th Cir. 2005) (applies U.C.C. § 2-208 to sale of water; notes in footnote 10 that water is a good within meaning of U.C.C. § 2-105); Adel v. Greensprings of Vt., Inc., 363 F. Supp. 2d 692 (D. Vt. 2005) (water is a good within meaning of § 2-105; covered by implied warranty of merchantability; extensive collection and analysis of cases for and against); Darling v. Central Vt. Pub. Serv. Co., 762 A.2d 826 (Vt. 2000) (notes that most jurisdictions treat electricity as a good; issue not reached here because sale not shown; electricity escaped from fallen powerline and caused fire). See also Enron Power Mktg., Inc. v. Nevada Power Co., 55 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 31 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (notes that Utah courts have not decided this issue; other jurisdictions treat electricity as a good). Kotz v. Hawaii Elec. Light Co., 52 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d 857 (Haw. 2004) (unpublished, not citable) ("under the circumstances of this case," over-voltage of electricity from fallen power line not a good governed by UCC).

(n2)Footnote 2. See generally Ch. 4 supra.

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.10

§ 11.10 Grounds for Termination of Service

[1] Introduction

Public utilities have a duty to provide service. n1 However, this duty is not absolute, and if customers do not abide by the utility's rules, the utility has the right to terminate service.

[2] Nonpayment

The most frequent ground for the termination of utility service is nonpayment of the bill. Utility service is not free; public utilities have the right to collect a reasonable price for their services and have the right to terminate service if a customer has not paid the utility bill. This rule has roots in the common law, n2 and has been followed by courts at both the federal and state level, n3 as well as by state commissions, in their decisions, rules, and regulations. n4

The rationale behind allowing utilities to terminate service is ostensibly to provide them with a quick and inexpensive method of enforcing payment, as opposed to bringing individual customers to court. However, rooted in the common law is the principle that the purpose of disconnection is to prevent future loss, and that disconnection should not primarily serve as a collection tool, but, rather, as a means to avoid future economic losses. The importance of this principle is heightened by the fact that utilities have monopoly status, and that the service they provide is an essential of everyday life.

One commission has, however, refused to allow disconnection of service for nonpayment of a deposit.

[3] Meter Tampering and Other Fraud

A utility may also terminate service if it has discovered that the customer has engaged in fraud of any kind, for example tampering with the meter or misrepresenting one's identity for the purpose of obtaining or evading payment of utility service.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Energy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService Terminations

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service (4th ed. 2008).

(n2)Footnote 2. Annot., Right to Cut Off Water Supply Because of Nonpayment of Water Bill or Charges for Connection, 28 A.L.R. 472 (1924) ; Annot., Right of Telephone Company to Refuse, or Discontinue, Service Because of Failure to Pay Bills or Other Violation of Conditions of Use, 70 A.L.R 894 (1931) ; Annot., Right to Cut Off Supply of Electricity or Gas Because of Nonpayment of Service Bill or Charges, 112 A.L.R. 237 (1938) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., Lucas v. Wisconsin Elec. Power Co., 466 F.2d 638, 647 (7th Cir. 1972) ("It is undisputed that at common law a utility could cut off service for nonpayment of bills."); Huff v. Electric Plant Bd. of Monticello, 299 S.W.2d 817 (Ky. 1957) (generally accepted rule is that public service companies may adopt regulations providing for the discontinuance of service to a customer who fails to pay the bill).

(n4)Footnote 4. See, e.g., LeBeau v. Green Mountain Power Corp., 100 P.U.R.3d 337 (Vt. 1973) (public utility may disconnect a customer's service for nonpayment of proper bills and charges even in the absence of statutory authority). See also 25 Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 25-4.113(f) (telephone companies) (utility may discontinue telephone service for nonpayment of bills for telephone service); Mich. Admin. Code r. 460.2161(a) (subject to the requirements of these rules, an electric or gas utility may shut off or terminate service to a residential customer because the customer has not paid a delinquent account that accrued within the last six years).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.11

§ 11.11 Protection From Disconnection

[1] Protection From Disconnection for Low-Income and Elderly Customers

The shut-off of utility service can have serious consequences for many customers, particularly in the winter months. Some utilities have built in protections for either elderly customers, low-income customers, or both, whereby the utilities cannot terminate service, particularly in the winter months.

[a] Winter Moratoria

A utility may also have a prohibition on shutting off service during certain winter months or when the temperature drops below a certain level, regardless of who the customer is--a restriction known as a winter moratorium on terminations. Most often the moratorium is limited to certain eligible customers, who may be either low-income, elderly, disabled, or a combination. The authority for such moratoria may be state statute, commission orders, or a utility's own rules.

Sometimes the moratorium is contingent on the customer's agreement to pay a certain portion of the delinquent bill each month, for example 7% of the bill in Michigan's Winter Protection Plan, and/or agree to apply for state or federal heating assistance. n1 If the customer then fails to abide by the payment agreement, the utility may disconnect service. n2 Recently, there appears to be a growing movement among utility regulators to adopt formal rules or informal policies to protect customers from termination during periods of extreme hot or cold weather. On October 27, 2005, the California Public Utilities Commission, anticipating "exceptionally high gas prices" in the coming winter, adopted new policies under which "utilities are prohibited from shutting off service this winter [of 2005-2006] to residential customers that make regular payments of at least 50% of their bills." n3

On November 21, 2005, the Arkansas Public Service Commission revised its General Service Rule 6.15 (the "Cold Weather rule"), which previously barred electric and gas terminations on days when temperatures are forecast to be 32 degrees or lower. The Commission added a new Rule 6.15.B that additionally prohibits gas utilities from terminating service, between November 1 and March 31, to low-income and elderly households who receive Food Stamps; Women, Infants and children Assistance ("WIC"); Transitional Employment Assistance; Medicaid; or LIHEAP (fuel assistance). n4

On December 15, 2005, the Missouri Public Service Commission adopted emergency amendments to its winter moratorium rule that reduced the amount of the minimum monthly payments necessary for low-income customers to avoid termination and waived late penalty fees and interest during the moratorium period. n5

On April 5, 2006, the Ohio Public Utilities Commission extended the coverage period of its 2005/-/2006 Winter Reconnect Order from April 14, 2006, to April 28, 2006, noting, inter alia, the sharp increase in energy prices. n6

[b] Special Protections for the Sick

In some cases, the protection against disconnection of utility service is targeted to customers who are seriously ill or disabled, and where the "discontinuance of service will result in some person residing at that residence becoming seriously ill or more seriously ill. ..." n7 In these cases, the customer will likely have to provide medical proof of the condition, and the protection may be for a limited period of time only (such as 30 or 60 days).

[c] Payment Plans

Recognizing the difficulty many low-income customers have in keeping up with full payments of their utility bills, some utilities offer plans which provide low-income customers the opportunity to enter into different payment schedules or arrearage forgiveness plans, compliance with which will eliminate the possibility of disconnection. n8 In addition, the rules of many commissions require a utility to offer some sort of payment schedule or budget billing (equal monthly payment) plan to low-income customers, n9 and generally prohibit termination of utility service as long as the customer is abiding by the terms of the payment plan. n10

[2] Utilities May Not Disconnect for a Disputed Bill Pending Resolution of Dispute

Just as a customer's right to utility service is not absolute and a customer's service may be terminated for nonpayment of the bill, a utility's right to disconnect service is not absolute. One limitation is the general prohibition against disconnecting utility service or threatening disconnection for a disputed bill pending the resolution of this dispute. This rule is found within the common law, n11 state statutes, and in commission decisions n12 and rules. n13 The rationale, in part, is that the disputed portion of the bill is a matter separate from the current bill which the customer owes, and that the utility cannot disconnect current service for this separate matter.

The courts generally agree that a utility may not terminate for a disputed bill, and further state that a wrongful termination of a bill in dispute subjects the utility to damages. n14

If a utility attempts to violate its legal duty to maintain service pending resolution of a billing dispute, a court may issue an injunction preventing it from carrying out a threat to terminate service or a writ of mandamus, or award damages, including compensatory, nominal, and punitive awards.

These rights to equitable remedies should be available in the courts regardless of whether the affected utility is also regulated by the public utility commission.

[3] Public Utility May Not Disconnect Service Based on a "Collateral" Matter

[a] What Constitutes "Collateral" Matter

Court decisions, as well as state utility regulations, generally hold that a public utility cannot terminate the service which it is authorized by its charter to furnish because of some collateral matter unrelated to that service. n15

The definition of precisely what is "collateral" to any particular utility service, however, has been indefinite at best, but includes debt from another service address, debt for a different type of service, or a third party's debt.

[b] Separate Business Run by Utility: Disconnection of Water for Nonpayment of Sewer Charges; Local and Long-Distance Telephone Charges

In this area, the general rule about collateral matters has been subject to several significant exceptions. Most commonly, commissions and courts have allowed disconnection of local service for nonpayment of long distance telephone charges owed to the same company (as well as nonpayment of local charges), n16 and have allowed disconnection of water for failure to pay a sewer (or garbage) bill. n17

[c] Third Party's Debt

[i] General Rule

Sometimes, a utility seeks to obtain payment from a customer for a debt with which the customer has no connection, or requires as a condition of continued service that the customer pay the debt owed by a person who lives with the customer. As a general rule, commissions have not allowed utilities to disconnect service of one party because of nonpayment by another party, sometimes even where the third party was a guarantor. n18 There are three common scenarios in which third party debt might cause problems for the current recipient of utility service.

[ii] Prior Occupant in Arrears

First is the situation where a customer moves into a new home, and the utility cuts off service at some point because of an arrears accrued by a prior occupant or owner. Many courts and commissions have not allowed the utility to cut-off service in such a situation. n19

[iii] Landlord-Tenant Situations

Generally, utilities are not allowed to disconnect a tenant's service for a landlord's indebtedness. n20

[iv] Roommate/Family Member/Spouse in Arrears

In general, again, the rule agreed upon by most commissions is that the utility may not disconnect service to one person based on the delinquency of another (roommate, partner, etc.), and that the utility may not prevent a customer from living with an individual who has a delinquent utility bill. n21

The courts and commissions have struggled more with the issue of whether a utility should be allowed to terminate service to a customer based on a third party's debt to the utility company, when the third party is the customer's spouse, because of the possible application of the "family purpose" or "family expense" doctrine to the payment of utility bills.

Most states have such a doctrine, either as a part of the common law or as a statutory enactment, which makes both husband and wife legally liable for the payment of expenses of the family, which would generally include utility service. Thus, if one spouse fails to pay, the other may be held liable. n22

The applicability of this doctrine varies from state-to-state. Many states do not apply the doctrine to parties who are separated in anticipation of divorce. The doctrine does not apply to unmarried "couples." Its application to common law marriages, in states which recognize these, may be more difficult to ascertain depending on relevant time periods, whether or not there has been judicial recognition of the marriage, etc. More specific utility statutes could also be relied upon to defeat a family expense argument under customary rules of statutory construction.

[4] A Utility May Not Disconnect to Collect a Mistaken Undercharge

[a] Mistaken Undercharges

This situation arises when, after months or years of undercharges (often due to simple billing errors), a mistake is discovered and the household is presented with a large lump sum bill, nonpayment of which will result in termination of service. The mistake often occurs due to simple billing errors.

Unfortunately, in the public utility context, most courts refuse to follow contract law on mistake and estoppel in the underbilling context because to do so would violate the strong public policy, as established by statute, against discriminatory rates. n23

Public utilities have a statutory and common law duty to provide service at non-discriminatory rates. This duty prohibits a utility from providing service at a rate less than the one published in its tariffs. Because of this obligation, the utility has not only the right, but also the duty, to collect the undercharge in cases arising from a mistake on the part of the utility. n24 In these instances, the mandatory duties of the public utility to adhere to its tariffs, to avoid discrimination, and to prevent the grant of rebates or other preferences, outweigh the doctrines of mistake and estoppel. n25 However, despite these obligations, a utility may still be estopped from using the disconnection of service as a collection device. n26

[b] The Doctrine of Estoppel

Notwithstanding the general estoppel doctrine, the principles of utility law prevent the use of an estoppel defense to avoid the payment of utility undercharges. However, at the least, the estoppel doctrine should be sufficient to force the utility to collect the undercharge through a court action, rather than by threatening to terminate service. The equitable principles incorporated in the doctrines of estoppel and mistake may be applied without violating the utility's obligation to collect its rates as filed. This strategy would allow the utility to collect the under-billing but prohibit the utility from using disconnection of service for non-payment of the under-billing as a collection device. Advocates should argue that the utility is permitted to use any legitimate collection device, except for the extraordinary and highly coercive use of monopoly power to withhold a necessity. The utility and the customer would thus share the burdens of the utility's mistake.

[c] Ban on Disconnection as Collection Mechanism

Allowing the utility to collect the underbilling using any other legitimate collection device, but prohibiting the utility from using disconnection of service for nonpayment of the underbilling as a collection device, is consistent with recent trends in the doctrine regulating the collection of undercharges by freight carriers. As in those cases, while recognizing the right to collect the undercharge, restrictions would be placed on the manner of collection under this theory. The courts in a recent series of carrier cases have softened the historically absolute rule on undercharge collections, and created judicial limits instead of ipso facto permitting the collection of an undercharge. n27

[d] Mandatory vs. Discretionary Practices

Advocates can also argue that disconnections in cases of underbilling is discretionary rather than mandatory, and, as such, courts are free to apply the doctrine of estoppel.

[e] Protection From Disconnection in Rules

In some states, commissions have promulgated rules that prohibit altogether the "backbilling" of customers when a meter registers lower usage. More frequently, rules prohibit utilities from backbilling customers for undercharges that are older than a specified time frame. n28 As an additional protection, some rules require utilities to offer payment plans if the customer does indeed have to pay the undercharge.

[f] Past Undercharges as Collateral Matters

Another approach is to argue that the undercharge is a collateral matter, and, thus, disconnection to collect this amount is barred by the traditional rule.

[5] Protection From Disconnection by Filing for Bankruptcy Protection

Filing a petition under the Bankruptcy Code will prevent a shut-off so long as the automatic stay is in effect.

[6] No Disconnection Based on Bills From Non-Approved Tariff

Another little-used defense arises when a utility company provides service and bills for that service, but has never had the tariff upon which the bill is based properly approved by the appropriate regulatory commission. In that situation, termination for nonpayment of the bill has been denied. n29

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Energy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService Terminations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Under Kansas' Cold Weather Rule, "customers are protected against disconnection from November 1 through March 31, if they make a good faith attempt to pay their bill--defined in this case as paying one-twelfth of the total owed the company to maintain service, and agreeing to pay all past bills in equal amounts over the next 11 months" (discussed in Phillips, The Regulation of Public Utilities, at 561).

(n2)Footnote 2. The same principle applies to elderly or ill customers. See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. § 16-262d (b) (1988) (Telegraph, Telephone, Etc., Cos./Public Service Companies) (no company or utility shall terminate service for nonpayment when resident is seriously ill, provided customer agrees to amortize unpaid balance of account over reasonable period of time, and keeps current account).

(n3)Footnote 3. Interim Opinion Approving Various Emergency Program Changes in Light of Anticipated High Natural Gas Prices 2/-/3, D. 05-10-044 (Oct. 27, 2005), available at www.cpuc.ca.gov/WORD_PDF/FINAL_DECISION/50946.PDF.

(n4)Footnote 4. In re A Residential Utility Customer Cold Weather Disconnection Rule, Ark. Pub. Serv. Comm'n No. 05-121-R (Nov. 21, 2005), available at www.apscservices.info/PDF/05/05-121-r_28_1.pdf. The Commission's General Service Rules are available at www.apscservices.info/Rules/general_service_rules.pdf.

(n5)Footnote 5. Mo. Code Regs. Ann. tit. 4, § 240-13.055. Subsequently, several utilities challenged the legality of the emergency regulation, but the Court of Appeals upheld that regulation. State ex rel. Missouri Gas Energy v. Public Serv. Comm'n, 210 SW 3d 330 (Mo. Ct. App. 2006) .

(n6)Footnote 6. In re Investigation into Long-Term Solutions Concerning Disconnection of Gas and Electric Service in Winter Emergencies, Ohio Pub. Utils. Comm'n 05-1068-GE-UNC, 2006 WL 870234 (Apr. 5, 2006).

(n7)Footnote 7. See, e.g., 52 Pa. Code §§ 56.111 (Pennsylvania Emergency Provisions) (no utility shall terminate, or refuse to restore, service to any premises when any occupant therein is certified by a physician to be seriously ill or affected with a medical condition which will be aggravated by a cessation of service or failure to restore service); 16 Tex. Admin. *Code § 25.*29(g) (disconnection of electricity service for ill and disabled). See also Mich. Admin. Code r. 460.2153 (medical emergency) (notwithstanding any other provision of these rules, a utility shall postpone the shutoff of service for a reasonable time, but not for more than twenty-one days, if the customer produces a physician's certificate or notice from a public health or social services official stating that the shutoff of service will aggravate an existing medical emergency of the customer, a member of family, or permanent resident of premises).

(n8)Footnote 8. For a full discussion of payment plans, budget billing plans, energy assurance plans and the like, see National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service (4th ed. 2008).

(n9)Footnote 9. See, e.g., Nevada Rule 704.342 (utility shall provide a program for the payment of bills for customers who have difficulty paying their bills because of financial hardship).

(n10)Footnote 10. See, e.g., Re Rules Regulating Services of Electric Utilities, 35 P.U.R.4th 365 (Colo. 1980) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See Tucker v. Hinds County, 558 So. 2d 869, 873 (Miss. 1990) .

(n12)Footnote 12. See, e.g., Artesian Water Co. v. Cynwyd Club Apts., 297 A.2d 387 (Del. 1972) .

(n13)Footnote 13. See, e.g., Michigan Rule 460.2151(3) (Time of Shutoff) (utility shall not shut off service while a customer is awaiting the resolution of a complaint with the commission or the utility in accordance with these rules). See, e.g., Wash. Admin. Code § 480-120-081(5)(g) (telephone) (service may not be totally disconnected while a subscriber is pursuing any remedy or appeal provided for by these rules, provided any amounts not in dispute are paid when due; the phone company must inform the customer of this right).

(n14)Footnote 14. Sims v. Alabama Water Co., 87 So. 688 (Ala. 1920) (if public utility discontinues service for nonpayment of disputed amount, it does so at its peril, and if public utility was wrong, and customer overcharged, utility is liable for damages).

(n15)Footnote 15. Annot., Right of Public Utility Corporation to Refuse Its Service Because of Collateral Matter Not Related to that Service, 55 A.L.R. 771 (1928) ; Annot., Right of Municipality to Refuse Services Provided by It to a Resident for Failure of Resident to Pay for Other Unrelated Services, 60 A.L.R.3d 714 (1974). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service, 11.4.1 (4th ed. 2008).

(n16)Footnote 16. Re Calculation of Intrastate Access Charges, 109 P.U.R.4th 143 (Ill. 1990) (dial tone denial allows local exchange telephone carriers to discontinue service to customers who refuse to enter into reasonable arrangements to pay undisputed local services or long distance charges). Note, however, that disconnection of local service for nonpayment of long distance charges owed to another carrier, and added to a local telephone bill, is not allowed. Re Local Competition, Universal Service, and the Non-traffic Sensitive Access Rate, 181 P.U.R.4th 600 (Ky. PSC 1997) (no denial of local telephone service for non-payment of toll service); Re US West Communication Inc., 153 P.U.R.4th 350 (Utah PSC 1994) (PSC denies telephone company request to disconnect local service for failure to pay long distance charges billed by local company; decision based on public policy of not allowing regulated utility to use its status to detriment of its customers to support an unregulated business-collection of debts for third parties); Re Interstate Access Charges for Wyoming Telephone Utilities, 84 P.U.R.4th 524 (Wyoming PSC 1987) (no disconnection of local service for nonpayment of long distance charges; partial payments to be applied in following sequence: per direction of customer or, if no direction, first to local basic exchange charges, then to intrastate LATA charges, then pro rata among long distance providers). But see Allstates Transworld Vanlines v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., 937 S.W.2d 314 (Mo. Ct. App. 1996) (company tariffs have force of law; tariff allowing disconnection of local telephone service (in 1982) for nonpayment of Yellow Pages bill upheld).

(n17)Footnote 17. Edris v. Sebring Utils. Comm'n, 237 So. 2d 585 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1970) , cert. denied, 240 So. 2d 643 (1970) (discussing definition of "collateral service").

(n18)Footnote 18. See, e.g., Re Service Deposit & Termination Practice of Communication Utilities, 34 P.U.R.4th 512 (Idaho 1980) (telephone companies were not authorized to terminate service for the failure of a guarantor to pay a guaranteed utility bill).

(n19)Footnote 19. See, e.g., Price v. South Central Bell, 313 So. 2d 184 (Ala. 1975) (public utility company has no right to refuse service to a customer in order to compel that customer to pay the bill of a former subscriber, which it is not the duty of the customer to pay); Cascade Motor Hotel, Inc. v. City of Duluth, 348 N.W.2d 84 (Minn. 1984) (municipal ordinance allowing a municipal utility to terminate service to a current property owner because of arrearages incurred for service provided to a former owner was held arbitrary and unreasonable). But see Annot., Liability of Premises, or Their Owner or Occupant, for Electricity, Gas, or Water Charges, Irrespective of Who Is the User, 19 A.L.R.3d 1227 (1968). Utility rules and regulations sometimes have this same protection built in.

(n20)Footnote 20. Davis v. Weir, 497 F.2d 139 (5th Cir. 1974) ; Koger v. Guarino, 412 F. Supp. 1375 (E.D. Pa. 1976) , aff'd without op., 549 F.2d 795 (3d Cir. 1977) (city practice of requiring tenants to pay landlord's delinquent water bills in order to avoid terminations of water service violated due process clause). At least one court has held that a utility could terminate service when the tables are turned, and it is the landlord whose service is terminated for delinquent tenant bills. District of Columbia v. Mensh, 637 A.2d 514 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 1994) (under D.C. law, owners of multi-unit apartment building may be held personally liable for unpaid water and sewer service charges to their properties). Cf. California Apartment Ass'n v. City of Stockton, 80 Cal. App. 4th 699 , rev. denied, 2000 Cal. LEXIS 6750 (Cal. Aug. 23, 2000) (court finds invalid a city ordinance that attempts to impose liability on landlord or subsequent tenant for the unpaid water, sewer, and refuse bills of a tenant).

(n21)Footnote 21. O'Neal v. City of Seattle, 66 F.3d 1064 (9th Cir. 1995) (city policy of denying water service to tenant based on past tenant's unpaid bill violated equal protection; follows Davis v. Weir, 497 F.2d 139 (5th Cir. 1974) ; rejects Ransom v. Marrazzo, 848 F.2d 398 (3d Cir. 1988)) ; Donovan v. General Tel. Co., 19 P.U.R.3d 49 (Cal. 1957) (telephone company cannot deny service because another member of the household is delinquent); In re Tampa Elec. Co., 49 P.U.R.4th 547 (Fla. 1982) (electric company can only hold the customer of record responsible for the customer's bill and cannot force another person, not legally responsible for the debt, to pay that debt to obtain or continue service); Walton Elec. Membership Corp. v. Snyder, 270 Ga. 62, 508 S.E.2d 167 (1998) , aff'g 487 S.E.2d 613 (Ga. Ct. App. 1997) (co-op acted tortiously and punitive damages could be awarded when co-op threatened to terminate service to member who married another member who was delinquent.); Wright v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 169 Ga. App. 454, 313 S.E.2d 150 (1984) (termination of service to parents home was wrongful when it was used to coerce them into paying son-in-law's debt); Smith v. Tri-County Elec. Membership Corp., 689 S.W.2d 181 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1985) (electric company policy of denying service to a customer when anyone owing on an old bill planned to live in the residence was held unreasonable, arbitrary, and violation of due process).

(n22)Footnote 22. DiBello v. Illinois Commerce Comm'n, 610 N.E.2d 730 (Ill. App. Ct. 1993) (spouse of customer of record liable for outstanding bill; service denial until spouse's bill paid/approved; decision based on Illinois family expense statute and prior Illinois case, Peoples Gas Light & Coke v. Illinois Comm'n, 584 N.E.2d 341 (Ill. App. Ct. 1991)) . But see Central Ill. Light Co. v. Illinois Commerce Comm'n, 562 N.E.2d 4 (Ill. App. Ct. 1990) (gas and electric debts incurred by former and estranged husbands after separation were not a "family expense" for which wives were liable under "Family Expense Act"). See generally National Consumer Law Center, Collection Actions, § 5.3.4.3 (1st ed. 2008).

(n23)Footnote 23. Shoemaker v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 559 P.2d 721, 723-24 (Colo. Ct. App. 1976) (to permit an undercharge would be to disrupt the uniform application of rates).

(n24)Footnote 24. Memphis Light, Gas & Water Div. v. Auburndale Sch. Sys., Div. of Memphis, 705 S.W.2d 652 (Tenn. 1986) .

(n25)Footnote 25. The equitable policy of estoppel may not outweigh these statutory directives. The application of these principles in the freight industry has often been discussed. See, e.g., Annot., Carrier's Understatement of Charges Where Discrimination Is Forbidden (1963); Annot., Carrier's Right or Liability in Respect of Excess of Lawful Charge Over Charge Understated Where Discrimination Is Forbidden, 83 A.L.R. 245 (1933) . The courts rely on freight cases in deciding public utility cases. Annot., Carriers Understatement of Charges Where Discrimination Is Forbidden, 88

A.L.R.2d 1375 (1963). See also National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service, 11.6 (3rd ed. 2004 and Supp.).

(n26)Footnote 26. See Colton, Protecting Against the Harms of the Mistaken Utility Undercharge, 39 J. Urb. Aff. 99 (1991).

(n27)Footnote 27. See, e.g., Interstate Motor Freight Sys., Inc. v. Wright Brokerage Co., 539 S.W.2d 764, 766-67 (Mo. Ct. App. 1976) .

(n28)Footnote 28. Florida, for example, has included this rule in its regulatory scheme: 25 Fla. Admin. Code Ann. R. 25-7.0851 (gas utility may not backbill customers for any period greater than 12 months for any undercharge in billing which is the result of the utility's mistake).

(n29)Footnote 29. Popowsky v. Pennsylvania Public Util. Comm'n, 647 A.2d 302 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 1994) (where utility company failed to get approval of its tariff before billing customer, Commission order requiring the customer to pay the bill or face termination was reversed; no bill owed because charges not lawful).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.12

§ 11.12 Public Utility May Not Disconnect Service Without Providing Prior Adequate Notice

[1] Right to Notice

[a] Common Law and Regulatory Restrictions

The common law routinely has conditioned the exercise of a disconnection of service upon the proper issuance of a pre-disconnection notice. n1 Some cases have held that damages were recoverable for terminating services without notice. n2 A contract by a public utility with its customer is an agreement to furnish service for an indefinite period of time. n3 An implied term of such a contract is that service will not suddenly be terminated without reasonable notice. n4 This duty has been codified in tariffs approved by public utility commissions and rules issued by commissions governing billing and collection of residential accounts.

[b] Constitution: Due Process

In some situations, there may be constitutional requirements as well, if state action is present. This would generally be true if the utility company was a municipality or if the shutoff were made pursuant to some sort of specific state agency order. In run of the mill private regulated utility shutoffs, no state action is present.

[2] What Constitutes Sufficient Notice

[a] Due Process Requirements

In Memphis Light, Gas and Water Division v. Craft, n5 the Supreme Court held that Due Process requires a utility to provide its customers with at least notice n6 of the proposed disconnection, the reason for this action, and information about how to protest the shutoff at a hearing n7 prior to the termination of utility service. Other courts have followed this lead. n8

[b] Regulatory Requirements

Under state statutes and commission regulations, regulated utilities, as well as some municipal utilities, have very specific guidelines about what to include in a notice to a customer regarding a proposed disconnection. These requirements overlap substantially with what courts have held due process standards to require. Below are examples of the detailed information required in a shut-off notice:

> (a) The name and address of the customer and, if available, the address at which service is provided, if different.
>
> (b) A clear and concise reason for the proposed shut-off of service.
>
> (c) The date on or after which the utility may shut-off service, unless the customer takes appropriate action.
>
> (d) That the customer has the right to enter into a settlement agreement with the utility if the claim is for an amount that is not in dispute and the customer is presently unable to pay in full.
>
> (e) That the customer has the right to file a complaint disputing the claim of the utility before the proposed date of the shut-off of service.
>
> (f) That the customer has the right to request a hearing before a utility hearing officer if the complaint cannot be otherwise resolved and that the customer must pay to the utility that portion of the bill that is not in dispute within three days of the date that the customer requested a hearing.
>
> (g) That the customer has the right to represent himself or herself, to be represented by counsel, or to be assisted by other persons of his or her choice in the complaint process.
>
> (h) That the utility will not shut-off service pending the resolution of a complaint that is filed with the utility in accordance with these rules.
>
> (i) The telephone number and address of the utility where the customer may make inquiry, enter into a settlement agreement, or file a complaint.
>
> (j) That the customer should contact a social services agency immediately if the customer believes he or she might be eligible for emergency economic assistance.
>
> (k) That the utility will postpone the shut-off of service if a medical emergency exists at the customer's residence.
>
> (l) That the utility may require a deposit and restoration charge if the utility shuts off service for nonpayment of a delinquent account.
>
> (m) That the customer should contact the utility for information about a winter protection plan if the date on or after which shut-off of service may occur is between November 15 and March 31. Regulations sometimes require utilities to include with the notice of termination information on programs available to help pay the bill.

[c] Timing of Notice

In general, to comply with due process, a municipal utility must provide notice sufficiently in advance to permit the customer adequate time to prepare for and be present at the hearing.

State statutes governing utilities, as well as utility regulations and rules, often provide specific requirements on what constitutes sufficient notice, usually 10-15 days. n9

[d] Receipt Requirements

In addition to the time restraints discussed above, many commissions have specific requirements on the method of providing the notice. Commissions generally require utilities to provide notice by first class mail, or sometimes by certified mail.

In addition, utilities sometimes require personal receipt of the notice, or personal contact by telephone, if possible, before disconnecting utility service. Some states require that notice be provided to a third party when the customer is either elderly or disabled. n10

In the move to recognize electronic signatures and writings, advocates should be aware that notices of utility disconnections must still be provided in hard copy under federal law. The federal Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign) n11 has a specific exemption for utility notices of disconnections. n12 Many states' electronic transaction laws also exempt utility disconnections, n13 and those states without the specific exemption for disconnection notices may be preempted by the more protective federal E-Sign. n14

[3] Is Notice to Actual User Required?

[a] Tenants and Master-Meter Situations

Many utility regulations have built-in protections for the utility customer whose landlord is responsible for the bill, such as requiring notices to be mailed to each individual tenant of a single-metered, multi-unit dwelling, or requiring the utility to post notice of the disconnection in a common area as well.

The utilities are often required to provide the tenant the opportunity to start service in his or her own name, without having to pay the back delinquency of the landlord, and, if so, the notice should inform the customer of this right. In addition, the tenant may be exempt from the normal requirement of having to pay a security deposit to receive continued service. Furthermore, if utility service is included in the rent, a tenant may be able to deduct the payments for utilities from the rent.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Constitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsProcedural Due ProcessScope of ProtectionEnergy & Utilities LawElectric Power IndustryState RegulationGeneral OverviewEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesContracts for ServiceEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService Terminations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See generally 64 Am. Jur. 2d Public Utilities § 62 (1972).

(n2)Footnote 2. See, e.g., Mississippi Power Co. v. Byrd, 133 So. 193, 194 (Miss. 1931) , overruled in part by First Nat'l Bank v. Langley, 314 So. 2d 324 (Miss. 1975) . The defendant power company negligently cut off the electric current to the plaintiff's home for two days. As a result, plaintiff claimed he suffered "mental pain." However, because there was no mention of any accompanying or subsequent physical injury, the court held that damages for mental suffering cannot be recovered where caused by simple negligence, and where there is no bodily injury, malice or fraud. The court focused on the lack of evidence that the plaintiff suffered any physical injury on account of being deprived of electric light for two days.

(n3)Footnote 3. Cates v. Electric Power Bd., 655 S.W.2d 166, 170 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1983) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Cates v. Electric Power Bd., 655 S.W.2d 166, 170 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1983) (citing First Flight Assocs., Inc. v. Professional Golf Co., 527 F.2d 931 (6th Cir. 1975) ; Chattanooga R. & C.R. Co. v. Cincinnati, N.O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 44 F. 456 (C.C.D. Tenn. 1890)) .

(n5)Footnote 5. 436 U.S. 1, 98 S. Ct. 1554, 56 L. Ed. 2d 30 (1978) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See also Davis v. Weir, 497 F.2d 139, 143 (5th Cir. 1974) (Fifth Circuit did not have to consider whether property interest existed because the municipality conceded on appeal that it had a duty to provide the actual user with notice prior to termination).

(n7)Footnote 7. But see Rupp v. Grantsville City, 610 P.2d 338, 341 (Utah 1980) (where there was no dispute of fact, plaintiff residents had refused to pay connection fee, city officials discontinued water service pursuant to city ordinance allowing such actions for enforcement of mandatory sewer connection ordinance, and plaintiffs afforded adequate notice of action (several letters notifying them of the consequences of their continuing failure to comply), protections do not require right to pre-termination hearing).

(n8)Footnote 8. Turpen v. City of Corvallis, 26 F.3d 978 (9th Cir. 1994) (tenant had due process right to notification before disconnection for landlord's failure to pay; followed DiMassimo v. City of Clearwater, 805 F.2d 1536 (11th Cir. 1986) ; entitlement to notice based on property interest under Oregon Landlord and Tenant Act, Or. Rev. Stat. § 90.320(1)(c)).

(n9)Footnote 9. SeeAlaska Admin. Code tit. 3, § 52.450(c)(1) & (2)(15 days); Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 25-4.113(1)(e) (5 working days); Mich. Admin. Code r.460.2163(1) (10 days); 16 Tex. Admin. Code § 25.29(k)(3)(10 days); Conn. Gen. Stat. § 16-262d(a) (13 days).

(n10)Footnote 10. Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 10010.1 (c) (Municipally Owned Utilities) (Public utility shall make available third-party notification service to elderly (65+) or dependent adults).

(n11)Footnote 11. Pub. L. No. 106-229, 114 Stat. 464 (2000) (codified at 15 U.S.C. §§ 7001 et seq.).

(n12)Footnote 12. 15 U.S.C. § 7003(b)(2)(A).

(n13)Footnote 13. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 1633.3(c). See also National Consumer Law Center's Consumer Banking and Payments Law (3rd ed. 2005 and Supp.).

(n14)Footnote 14. See Gail Hillebrand & Margot Saunders, E-Sign and UETA: What Should States Do Now?, available at www.consumerlaw.org/e_sign.html (Sept. 2000).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.13

§ 11.13 Meter Tampering Issuesn1

[1] No Notice Required

Generally, a utility may terminate service without notice if it is discovered that the customer has engaged in fraud of any kind, for example, tampering with the meter or misrepresenting one's identity for the purpose of obtaining or evading payment of utility service. This is an exception to the general rule requiring notice prior to termination.

[2] Presumptions

In general, a utility may engage in the presumption that the possession of a meter with a tampering device was installed by the person in possession. However, the presumption is not irrebuttable and, in any event, there must be exclusive possession for the presumption to arise. In situations where others have an equal right and facility of access to the property, use of the presumption is inappropriate.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Energy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService Terminations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service, § 5.3 and 11.2.2 (4th ed. 2008).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.14

§ 11.14 Recourse for Wrongful Disconnection

[1] Available Remedies

Consumers whose utility service has been unlawfully disconnected by a utility company have different remedies available:

- They may apply to a court for a mandamus to compel the restoration of service; n1 or
- They may seek an injunction in a court to prevent the utility from carrying out a threat to terminate service; n2 or
- They may sue for damages; or n3
- They may seek damages in a court action and simultaneously proceed before the commission, seeking a penalty, to be paid to the state, pursuant to commission rules or statutes. Sometimes these penalties can be very substantial; or n4
- They may seek protection from the utility commission under its dispute resolution procedures, including reconnection or a ban on disconnection until the matter is resolved. In these situations, a lawsuit can be brought under either or both breach of contract or tort theories. n5

[2] Disconnections as Torts

[a] Duty

A public utility holding a franchise has a duty to serve all members of the public "who apply for and have made the necessary arrangements to receive service, and who pay or offer to pay the price and abide by the reasonable rules and regulations of the company" n6 and to exercise reasonable care to fulfill its obligation to provide continuing service. This degree of care is heightened by the recognition that electric, gas, and water services are essentials of life and the deprivation of such services is likely to be detrimental to life, health, and property. n7

A utility's duty to provide continuous service extends to persons beyond its "customers." As a result, a variety of persons have standing to sue a utility for disconnection-related torts if they have suffered injury in fact to a legally protected interest.

[b] Breach

[i] The Standard

Utility companies breach their duty of care to customers and third parties when they fail to act "reasonably" with regard to utility disconnections. Whether the utility has acted reasonably is analyzed on a case-by-case basis.

[ii] Disconnection of Service as Negligence Per Se

It is reasonable to argue that the disconnection of service in violation of a state statute or administrative regulation requiring either uninterrupted service or specific interruption notice procedures rises to the level of negligence per se, although this is not universally accepted by the courts.

Under this reasoning, a utility company's statutory duty to provide uninterrupted service generally and to adhere to specific notice procedures in cases of lawful service termination can be argued to constitute "safety standards." The indispensable nature of utility service in basic life functions bolsters this argument. Without unencumbered access to utilities, the health and safety of effected persons are gravely compromised.

The advantage of arguing that violation of shut-off regulations constitutes negligence per se is that it eliminates the issue of "negligence" as an issue in fact.

[c] Causation

[i] Actual Cause

Advocates must carefully determine what shut-off requirements have allegedly been violated. A clear causal relationship between the violation and the ensuing harm must be established.

[ii] Legal (Proximate) Cause

To hold the utility company liable for negligence, the disconnection must also constitute the proximate cause of the harm. Whether a disconnection was the proximate cause of the harm to the utility consumer is strictly a question of foreseeability. At the time of its actions, if the utility could reasonably foresee that the shut-off would result in the damages incurred by the consumer, then the proximate cause requirement has been satisfied. This is not an overly demanding standard, as most damages that flow from a wrongful utility shut-off are foreseeable, due to the nature and importance of uninterrupted utility service. n8

[d] Damages

Damages can include compensatory, nominal, and punitive awards where appropriate. In addition, if it is built into the state's statutory scheme, on occasion, consumers may be entitled to additional damages. A customer to whom a public utility has wrongfully terminated service is entitled to recover actual damages proximately caused by the wrongful action. n9 These recoverable damages may include the customer's:

- Discomfort, annoyance, and inconvenience;
- Embarrassment and humiliation;

- Temporary loss of use or rental value of property;
- Value of appliances, furniture and other personal property destroyed or damaged;
- Value of foodstuffs destroyed;
- Incidental expenses (such as motel expenses) directly caused by the shut-off; and
- The cost of obtaining power from another source. n10

Advocates can also argue that reconnection should be provided free of charge.

In addition, if the utility acted in "reckless disregard of the rights" of the customer, the utility may also be liable for punitive or exemplary damages.

[e] Limiting Liability Through Tariff: Legitimate Practice or Contrary to Public Policy?

A utility may seek to limit its liability by placing such a limitation in its tariff. n11 Some courts have disapproved such attempts as contrary to public policy; others have upheld them. n12

A court in South Dakota, in the case Mobile Electronic Serv., Inc. v. Firstel, Inc., n13 held that a local telephone company's attempt to limit its liability for negligent acts by tariff was an unenforceable contract of adhesion. In that case, a business sued the local phone company for breach of contract and negligence for failing to change the business's listing from unlisted to listed. The court refused to allow the phone company's attempt to limit its liability by unilaterally drafting and filing a tariff with the PUC and incorporating it by reference in its preprinted contract. The court cited a prior decision:

> '[T]he PUC cannot become a body to regulate claims for damages wrought in private contract. To regulate tariffs, schedules, directories, and listings is one thing, but to adjudicate on monetary rights arising thereunder is conceptually different.' [citations omitted] n14

The recent detariffing of long-distance service by the Federal Communications Commission has resulted in a lower court ruling in California that found AT&T's legal remedies provisions "that eliminate class actions, sharply curtail damages in cases of misrepresentation, fraud, and other intentional torts, cloak the arbitration process with secrecy and place significant financial hurdles in the path of a potential litigant," unlawful under the state's Consumer Legal Remedies Act and Unfair Competition Law. n15

[f] Mitigation of Damages: A Condition Precedent to Recovery

Customers seeking judgments for unlawful disconnections must attempt to mitigate their damages unless the cost of mitigating damages, such as procuring an alternate energy supply, is out-of-proportion to the damages or is otherwise unreasonable.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Energy & Utilities LawImplied CovenantsReasonable Care & DiligenceEnergy & Utilities LawPurchase ContractsRemedies for BreachEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesContracts for ServiceEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesLiabilityEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService TerminationsTortsNegligenceProofElementsTortsNegligenceProofViolations of LawStatutes

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. At common law, this was generally true where the situation was the wrongful termination of a bill in dispute. See Annot., Mandamus as Proper Remedy to Compel Service by Public Utility, 83 A.L.R. 917 (1933) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Hall v. Village of Swanton, 35 A.2d 381 (Vt. 1944) (injunction will ordinarily be granted to prevent a public service corporation from wrongfully shutting off light, which such corporation is under contract to furnish, on the theory that the remedy at law is inadequate and that the shutting off of the supply would cause irreparable injury).

(n3)Footnote 3. Trigg v. Middle Tenn. Elec. Membership Corp., 533 S.W.2d 730 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1975) (electric company has the right to cut off service to a customer for nonpayment of a just service bill, but if the customer has a bona fide dispute concerning the correctness of the bill, the electric company discontinues services for nonpayment of the disputed amount at its peril, and, if the company is wrong, it is liable for damages).

(n4)Footnote 4. See, e.g., Utah Code § 54-7-25 (utility violation of any statute or commission rule subject to penalty of $500-$2000 for each offense; for continuing offenses, each day is a separate offense).

(n5)Footnote 5. See generally Colton, Unlawful Utility Disconnections as a Tort: Gaining Compensation for the Harms of Unlawful Shutoffs, 22 Clearinghouse Review 609 (1989); Lynn v. Houston Lighting & Power, 820 S.W.2d 57 (Tex. App. 1991) (court, not Public Utility Commission, has exclusive jurisdiction over tort damage claims for wrongful disconnection after meter tampering dispute).

(n6)Footnote 6. Annot., Liability of gas, electric or water company for delay in commencing service, 97 A.L.R. (1935).

(n7)Footnote 7. See, e.g., Consolidated Edison Co. v. Jones, 444 N.Y.S.2d 1018 (1981) . Indeed, a number of utility tort cases indicate that, because of the consequence of the action, a utility owes the "highest standard of care" when seeking to terminate service. Kohler v. Kansas Power & Light Co., 387 P.2d 149, 151 (Kan. 1963) . Accord Washington Gas Light Co. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 242 A.2d 802, 804 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 1968) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Kuns v. City of Ukiah, 79 Cal. App. 4th 899, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359 (2000) , op. withdrawn by order of ct. 2000 Cal. LEXIS 5603 (Cal. July 19, 2000) (jury question as to proximate cause was presented by these facts: A utility company shut off a delinquent customer without the required, final forty-eight-hour notice. The customer presented evidence that she might have been able to raise the money from friends or social service organizations within forty-eight hours, as she had done before several times. A candle, left unattended in a potted plant hung over the couch, started a fire which killed four children.), modified, reh'g denied, 80 Cal. App. 4th 602b (2000), op. withdrawn by order of ct., review denied, 2000 Cal. LEXIS 5603 (Cal. 2000) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Annot., Measure and Amount of Damages For Breach of Duty to Furnish Water, Gas, Light or Power Service, 108 A.L.R. 1174 (1937) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See Wrongful Termination of Electric Service, 15 Am. Jur. 2d Proof of Facts 125, 147 (1978).

(n11)Footnote 11. See, e.g., Veals v. Consolidated Edison Corp., 452 N.Y.S. 2d 153, 155 (1982) (with citations); see also Landrum v. Florida Power & Light Co., 505 So. 2d 552, 553-54 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1987) (with citations).

(n12)Footnote 12. See also Re Illinois Bell Switching Station Litig., 641 N.E.2d 440 (Ill. 1994) (after fire at telephone company interrupted service for one month, customers sued in tort for economic losses under state public utilities act making utilities liable for all losses resulting from violation of act; tariff had "service interruption clause" which was enforceable, thus, damages limited to rebate of costs for missed service).

(n13)Footnote 13. 649 N.W.2d 603, 2002 S.D. 87 (2002) .

(n14)Footnote 14. 649 N.W.2d 603, 2002 S.D. 87 (2002) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Ting v. AT&T, 182 F. Supp. 2d 902, 938-39 (N.D. Cal. 2002) . For more information on tariff, detariffing, and telecommunications services falling outside of tariffs, see National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service, § 2.8 (3rd ed. 2004 and Supp.).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.15

§ 11.15 Tenants' Rights Where Landlord Fails to Pay Utility

[1] Common Law

Generally, tenants are not subject to termination or deprivation of utility service where their landlord fails to pay the utility bills. This conclusion comes from a number of different sources.

It is fairly clear in the common law that a utility cannot make one customer liable for the debts of another in the absence of a statutory or contractual basis. n1 Many utility commissions have relied on the same concepts to arrive at similar conclusions.

There is also ample law from various jurisdictions holding that a utility may not deny service to a tenant for the tenant's failure to pay the landlord's past due utility bill. Notice of the intended termination of service to a tenant because of a landlord's overdue bill is generally also required.

[2] Implied Warranty of Habitability

[a] Overview

The implied warranty of habitability, which has been adopted in at least 44 states, is the modern linchpin of remedies for the tenant deprived of utility service for which the landlord is responsible. In addition, about two-thirds of the states have adopted specific statutes protecting tenants from utility terminations by landlords. About one-half of the states have special statutes and regulations limiting utility company terminations of service to tenants.

The protection of the warranty of habitability is not confined to conditions that are so gross that the premises are literally uninhabitable; rather, the warranty mandates a standard for the conditions of the leased premises, and generally incorporates the conditions promised in the lease agreement. The requirements of the local housing code are also generally included.

[b] Application of the Warranty of Habitability

The warranty of habitability is grounded in the twin principles that 1) a landlord is obligated to provide livable and useable residential space in return for the rent, and 2) the landlord's material breach of this obligation diminishes the value of the premises, and, thus, the rent owed by the tenant.

Tenant self-help remedies for code violations, such as rent withholding, are in addition to criminal proceedings against the landlord and enforcement proceedings by local officials. All such action may occur concurrently, and the tenant generally can proceed for relief for code violations without any action being taken by local officials.

The landlord's liability for a material breach affecting habitability generally runs from the time that notice of the defect is provided to the landlord. n2 When utilities are shut off or threatened to be shut off because of nonpayment by the landlord, the landlord has actual knowledge since the landlord both knows he or she did not pay, and he or she should have received notice from the utility company of the threatened shut off for nonpayment.

[c] Jurisdictions Adopting the Warranty of Habitability

The warranty of habitability is almost universally accepted, either by case law or statute, often the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act. n3 Only four states have not formally recognized the warranty. Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, and Wyoming do not recognize an implied warranty for housing. n4 Arkansas and Mississippi may also hold that the covenant of quiet enjoyment implied in residential leaseholds comprehends a remedy for a deprivation of landlord-supplied utility service. n5 Wyoming has no recent case law addressing this issue.

In most jurisdictions, there is no doubt that a termination or threatened termination of utility service due to the landlord's failure to pay his or her utility service constitutes a sufficient threat to the health, safety, or welfare of inhabitants to constitute a breach of the warranty. n6

[d] Waiver

The warranty, in most jurisdictions which have adopted it, may not be waived by any provision in the lease or rental agreement. n7

[e] Remedies for Breach of Warranty of Habitability

Punitive damages may be awarded when the breach is willful, wanton, or fraudulent. Most important, injunctive relief is generally available to force the landlord to bring the unit in compliance with codes in order to prevent a threat to the health, safety, or well-being of the occupants of the unit.

In jurisdictions which subject landlord-tenant relations to UDAP statutes, additional UDAP remedies may be obtained for the landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability, and the landlord's violation of state or local housing codes may constitute a per se UDAP violation. n8 In many instances, punitive damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress may also be available. n9

The failure to provide basic utilities, such as heat or hot water, has been held to be a substantial violation of the warranty of habitability resulting in substantial rent abatements. n10

[f] Serious Code Violations Violate Warranty of Habitability

A landlord's failure to substantially comply with applicable building and housing code standards which materially affect health and safety constitutes a breach of the warranty of habitability. n11

[3] Specific Statutory Protection Against Utility Termination

Many jurisdictions, including those which have adopted the Uniform Residential Landlord Tenant Act ("URLTA"), have specific provisions which provide a tenant with a specific remedy against a utility shut-off. Wrongful termination of utility service will entitle a tenant to actual damages, as well as reasonable attorney's fees.

Similarly, many other states have laws which impose civil or criminal liability upon a landlord's failure to provide utility service to the rental units where the landlord is billed for the service. Other laws provide for self-help remedies against the landlord in the form of rent withholding, or the right to pay the utility directly and deduct the amount of the payment from the rent.

For example, Massachusetts law n12 prohibits the termination of gas or electric service in any unit where the tenant is not the customer of record unless the utility first provides notice as required in the law and complies with the implementing regulations of the Department of Telecommunications and Energy. n13 The same law requires notice to each affected tenant (1) stating the amount due on the account; (2) specifying the date on or after which service will be terminated, which must be no less than 15 and no more than 30 days after the date of the notice; and (3) advising the tenants of their right to pay the amount due, or such portion prescribed by the Department as due under its regulations, to avoid termination and the right to recover any amount so paid from the person to whom rent is paid. Service may not be terminated if the tenant pays the full amount due or such amount as is acceptable to the utility company or deemed sufficient by the Department.

The Department's implementing regulations specify the procedures companies must follow to identify accounts with "landlord customers paying for service to a residential building" and to identify the apartment numbers and addresses of any tenants who may be affected by a planned termination of a landlord-paid account. n14 The regulations also contain more detailed requirements than the statute for providing notice to landlords and, separately, to tenants prior to any termination of a landlord-paid account. n15 The utility must also provide separate notice to the Department's consumer division prior to proceeding with any termination. The Department has often ordered service to remain on, based on payment by tenants of something less than the full amount due from the landlord.

In Maine, utility terminations of service to tenants for the landlord's non-payment are only permitted after the tenant has been provided notice and an opportunity to assume responsibility for future service; the tenant is not liable for the landlord's old bill; payments by the tenant to the utility can be deducted from the rent. n16 Another statute requires the Utility Commission to have rules regarding when residential customers are subject to utility termination, including prior notice, the right to an installment payment plan and no terminations during a medical emergency. n17

[4] Special Public Utility Statutes

Many states have special statutes or utility regulations concerning a landlord's termination of service, either directly or as a result of nonpayment.

[5] Protection Against Reprisal

To protect all of these rights adopted for the benefit of tenants, most states have prohibited retaliation by the landlord against the tenant.

[6] Repair and Deduct

In some states, specific statutes have been adopted which allow tenants to pay overdue utility bills on the landlord's account, and deduct the amount of the payment from rent obligations in order to prevent service termination. n18 Many states allow by statute, or as a common law adjunct to the warranty of habitability, n19 the tenant to repair defective conditions and to deduct the cost of repairs from the rent. This remedy is generally broad enough to allow tenants to pay such portion of the landlord's utility arrearage as is necessary to maintain service and to deduct the payment from rent.

[7] Application of Constitutional Principles

When the terminating utility company is a state actor, constitutional due process requires that notice and an opportunity to be heard to contest the termination be provided. Indeed, a number of cases have held that it is unconstitutional for a city utility to terminate service to a tenant for the landlord's failure to pay the utility bill. n20

[8] Public Utility Commission Rules and Orders

Many public utility commissions have issued rules or orders specifically regarding the termination of utility service supplied by the landlord. n21

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Energy & Utilities LawAdministrative ProceedingsPublic Utility CommissionsGeneral OverviewEnergy & Utilities LawElectric Power IndustryState RegulationGeneral OverviewEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService TerminationsReal Property LawLandlord & TenantTenant's Remedies & RightsWarranty of Habitability

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Cascade Motor Hotel, Inc. v. City of Duluth, 348 N.W.2d 84 (Minn. 1984) (municipal ordinance allowing a municipal utility to terminate service to a current property owner because of arrearages incurred for service provided to a former owner was held arbitrary and unreasonable).

(n2)Footnote 2. Detling v. Edelbrook, 671 S.W.2d 265 (Mo. 1984) .

(n3)Footnote 3. At least forty-seven jurisdictions have adopted or otherwise given effect to an implied warranty of habitability by common law or by statute. Smith, Tenant Remedies for Breach of Habitability, 35 U. Kan. L. Rev. 505 (1987). See, e.g., Johnson v. Grand Cru Prop. One Ltd. P'ship, 49 Pa. D. & C.4th 531 (Pa. Com. Pl. 2000) (tenants whose electricity had been terminated for nonpayment were certified as a class in a lawsuit alleging breach of warranty of habitability, breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment, fraud, and negligent misrepresentation among other causes of action). In those states which do not recognize the implied warranty as such, relief may be available based on a theory of express warranty. See Mendenhall-Moore Realtors v. Sedoris, 89 N.C. App. 486, 366 S.E.2d 534 (1988) , on a narrower theory that recognizes a landlord's duty to maintain those items which are his exclusive control, including utility service; Marsh v. Riley, 118 W. Va 52, 188 S.E. 748 (1936) . On a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, see Bedell v. Los Zapatistas, 805 P.2d 1198 (Colo. Ct. App. 1991) and Morrison v. Smith, 757 S.W.2d 678 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1988) . For codification of an implied warranty of habitability for provision of utility service on public health grounds, see Mass. Regs. Code tit. 105, § 410.750.

(n4)Footnote 4. See Kitchens v. U.S., 604 F. Supp. 531, 535 (M.D. Ala. 1985) ; Murphy v. Hendrix, 500 So. 2d 8 (Ala. 1986) ; Martin v. Springdale Stores, 354 So. 2d 1144 , cert. denied, 354 So. 2d 1146 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978) ; Sanders v. Walker, 767 S.W.2d 526 (Ark. 1989) ; Bedell v. Los Zapatistas, Inc., 805 P.2d 1198, 1200 (Colo. 1991) ("implied warranty of habitability does not exist" in Colorado); Duncan v. Schuster-Graham Homes Inc., 578 P.2d 637 (Colo. Ct. App. 1978) (limiting class of purchasers entitled to protection of the implied warranty to purchasers of new housing); Ortega v. Flaim, 902 P.2d 199, 203 (Wyo. 1995) ("Wyoming ... has not judicially recognized an implied warranty of habitability for rental premises"); Thomley, The Implied Warranty of Habitability in Residential Leases: Alabama's Unwarranted Position, 22 Cumberland L. Rev. 73, 79 n.30 (1991).

(n5)Footnote 5. See 300 Spring Building v. Matthews, No.CA-89-211 1990, Ark. App. LEXIS 112 (Ark. App. Feb. 21, 1990) (landlord breached covenant of quiet enjoyment in commercial lease by failing to provide heat, drinking water and janitorial service); Seymour v. Evans, 608 So. 2d 1141 (1992) . See also Blagg v. Fred Hunt, Inc., 272 Ark. 185, 612 S.W.2d 321 (1981) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Parker 72d Assocs. v. Isaacs, 436 N.Y.S.2d 542 (1982) . See also Davidow v. Inwood N. Prof. Group, 747 S.W.2d 373 (Tex. 1988) (loss of electricity due to landlord's failure to pay bill); Adams v. Gaylock, 378 S.E.2d 297 (W. Va. 1989) (lack of electric service). A three month rent abatement was awarded for 18 days of no heat and hot water, no light in common hallway, and defective intercom system, in addition to garbage in common hallway for a year and roach-infested kitchen. Estate of Romanow v. Heller, 469 N.Y.S.2d 876 (1983) . See also Leeris Realty Corp v. Robbin, 408 N.Y.2d 166 (1981) (court held that the most serious breach was the failure to provide heat and hot water for a month; damages were measured by the difference in value of apartment with and without the services; the court awarded a 61% rent reduction for the period the services were out in September-October).

(n7)Footnote 7. See, e.g., George Washington Univ. v. Weintraub, 458 A.2d 43 (D.C. 1983) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See generally National Consumer Law Center Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 3.2 (6th ed. 2004 and Supp.).

(n9)Footnote 9. See Annot., Tenant Recovery for Emotional Distress Under URLTA, 6 A.L.R. 4th 528 (1981).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Davidow v. Inwood N. Prof. Group, 747 S.W.2d 373 (Tex. 1988) (loss of electricity due to landlord's failure to pay bill); Adams v. Gaylock, 378 S.E.2d 297 (W.Va. 1989) (lack of electric service).

(n11)Footnote 11. Smith v. David, 120 Cal. App. 3d 101, 176 Cal. Rptr. 112 (1981) ; Hilder v. St. Peter, 144 Vt. 150, 478 A.2d 202 (1984) . The Massachusetts Sanitary Code has detailed provisions addressing when the owner must pay for gas, electricity, and heating oil. See Mass. Regs. Code tit. 105, § 410.354 (owner must pay utilities unless separately metered solely for the tenant's individual use); Mass. Regs. Code tit. 105, §§ 410.180 and 410.190 (owner required to supply and pay for water and hot water; except tenant can be required to pay for fuel for hot water if in a written lease agreement.

(n12)Footnote 12. Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 164, § 124D.

(n13)Footnote 13. Mass. Regs. Code tit. 220, § 25.04 (termination of service to accounts affecting tenants).

(n14)Footnote 14. Mass. Regs. Code tit. 220, § 25.04(1), (2).

(n15)Footnote 15. Mass. Regs. Code tit. 220, § 25.04(4), (6).

(n16)Footnote 16. Me. Rev. Stat. tit. 35-A, § 706.

(n17)Footnote 17. Me. Rev. Stat. tit. 35-A, § 704.

(n18)Footnote 18. For more discussion on this topic, see National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service, § 4.4.1 (4th ed. 2008).

(n19)Footnote 19. See Restatement (Second) of Property §§ 5.4(2)(c), 11.2.

(n20)Footnote 20. James v. St. Petersburg, 6 F.3d 1457, 1463 (11th Cir. 1993) (actual user of a utility has a protected property interest in water service); DiMassimo v. City of Clearwater, 805 F.2d 1536 (11th Cir. 1986) (pre-termination notice required to actual user of utility service); Koger v. Guarino, 412 F. Supp. 1375 (E.D. Pa. 1976) (city practice of requiring tenants to pay landlord's delinquent water bills to avoid terminations violated due process clause); Davis v. Weir, 328 F. Supp. 317 (N.D. Ga. 1971) , aff'd in part, modified in part, 497 F.2d 139 (5th Cir. 1974) (city violated equal protection clause by refusing to provide service to tenant until tenant paid landlord's delinquent bill).

(n21)Footnote 21. See National Consumer Law Center, Access to Utility Service, App. A (4th ed. 2008).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 11 Utility Terminations

1-11 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 11.16

§ 11.16 Challenging Utility Service Terminations Effected at the Behest of Landlords: Tenants' Remedies Against Landlords and Utility Providers

[1] Public Utility Regulation

The first resort for the advocate of a tenant facing utility termination should be to the specific regulatory scheme governing service terminations in his or her state. In some states, the public service commission requires notice to tenants of impending shut-offs where service is in the landlord's name. Those electric utilities falling within the purview of the PURPA n1 likely will be governed by regulations that prescribe a requirement of notice and a hearing for the tenants prior to the time that service, even if it is in the landlord's name, is terminated. n2

It is clear from the language of PURPA, n3 from its legislative history, and from Department of Energy Guidelines that the Act contemplated notice to tenants who receive service that is billed to their landlords.

[2] Other State and Local Laws

In several states, specific statutes or local ordinances also require the utility company to give notice to tenants prior to termination of utility service which is billed to the landlord.

In about two-thirds of the states, specific statutes forbid the landlord from terminating utility service to tenants and provide civil or criminal penalties and/or injunctive relief to restore service or to avert a threatened service termination.

[3] Quiet Enjoyment

The termination of utility service works a constructive eviction, rendering the premises uninhabitable. Indeed, in most cases in which landlords order termination of service for an existing tenant, the landlord's actions are intended to force tenants from their units. Where the landlord willfully causes utility termination during the course of an ongoing tenancy, the landlord breaches the covenant of quiet enjoyment which is implied in all leases of residential premises in most jurisdictions. n4

A breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment is remediable by an action for damages after the fact or for injunctive relief to prevent the breach.

[4] Self-Help Eviction

Most states, including the fifteen states that have adopted the URLTA, statutorily prohibit self-help eviction. Other states have reached this same result through court decisions. Several specifically forbid interference with the tenancy by the direct or indirect termination of a tenant's utility service. Thus, in most jurisdictions, self-help eviction by ordering a shut-off of utility service to the tenant is illegal and may be enjoined.

[5] Warranties of Habitability, Statutes and Regulations Ensuring a Minimum Quality of Housing and Statutes Ensuring Continuing Provision of Utility Services

As an alternative to viewing the disconnection of utility services as a crude attempt to dispossess the tenant, a landlord's ordering of a utility shut-off may be viewed as a failure to provide contracted services over the term of the tenancy. In the great majority of states, by statute or court decision, a landlord will be held to a non-waiveable duty not to interfere with a tenant's receipt of utility services. A tenant may seek injunctive relief to enjoin violations by a landlord of that duty. n5

Nearly every state which recognizes a landlord's duty to maintain the premises includes within that duty a responsibility to ensure the uninterrupted flow of vital utility services, at least to the extent the provision of those services is part of the lease. n6 Even a state, which may not recognize the failure to provide some utility service as a per se violation of the landlord's implied warranty, may nevertheless find that a landlord's interruption of that service breaches his or her express and implied warranties which become enforceable when the tenant rented the unit on the explicit or implicit understanding that the landlord would supply that service. n7

Several states have laws imposing civil or criminal liability upon landlords who wilfully cause the interruption of utility service to their tenants. n8 Such practices may also constitute an unfair or deceptive commercial practice under many states' UDAP provisions. n9

[6] The Aggrieved Tenants as a Third Party Beneficiary of the Contract Between the Vindictive Landlord and the Complicit Utility

A landlord enters into a contract with a utility company to supply services to his or her tenants in order to satisfy his or her contractual and legal obligations to his or her tenants. The tenants, for their part, rely upon the landlord's provision of utility service by moving into the unit, by not seeking service in their own name, and by not obtaining alternative service. Under these circumstances, the tenant may be a third-party beneficiary of the contract between the utility and the landlord, unless that contract explicitly states to the contrary, and the tenant may have a right to sue on the contract, n10 as well as a property interest sufficient to trigger Constitutional Due Process safeguards. If the tenant is a third-party beneficiary of the landlord-utility company contract, neither the landlord nor the utility is free to modify or terminate the contract without the consent of the tenant.

An intended, as opposed to an incidental, beneficiary of a contract acquires rights under that contract to enforce it. Thus, the tenant as a third-party beneficiary acquires rights under the contract and may sue the contracting parties for equitable relief or damages. n11 Further, neither the landlord nor the utility company is free to modify or rescind the contract without the tenant's consent once the tenant has relied upon the contract and both may be liable for disconnection of service without the tenant's consent. n12

[7] Using State UDAP Statutes as a Remedy Against Landlords (and Complicit Utilities)

State UDAP statutes may be useful in challenging some actions of landlords. n13 UDAP provisions and regulations may specifically identify and forbid such actions as retaliatory evictions, self-help evictions, or utility terminations. n14 In the common situation in which the landlord orders a utility termination in response to a tenant's nonpayment of rent, unfair debt collection statutes may provide one avenue of relief available to a tenant. n15

[8] The Fair Housing Act and Other Federal Nondiscrimination Guarantees

[a] Landlord's Obligations

The Fair Housing Act (FHA) n16 proscribes both intentional discrimination and actions which are discriminatory in effect. n17 A landlord who terminates utility service to tenants in protected groups may be committing purposeful discrimination outlawed by the Act, for instance, if the landlord has not taken similar action against members of non-protected groups under like circumstances. n18

[b] Utility Companies May Be Subject to Fair Housing Act Ban on Unintentional Discrimination

A utility policy giving landlords the discretion to terminate landlord's service may be viewed as an instrument for discrimination, and, thus, the utility policy itself may violate the FHA. The FHA, by its terms, prohibits discrimination by providers of services to housing, as well as to those who provide housing itself. n19

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil Rights LawContractual Relations & HousingFair Housing RightsFair Housing ActEnergy & Utilities LawCogeneration & Independent Power CompaniesPublic Utility Regulatory Policies ActCompliance EnforcementEnergy & Utilities LawElectric Power IndustryState RegulationGeneral OverviewEnergy & Utilities LawUtility CompaniesService TerminationsReal Property LawLandlord & TenantLandlord's Remedies & RightsEviction ActionsSelf-Help RemediesReal Property LawLandlord & TenantTenant's Remedies & RightsWarranty of Habitability

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 16 U.S.C. §§ 2601 et seq. (1989).

(n2)Footnote 2. 16 U.S.C. § 2625(g).

(n3)Footnote 3. 16 U.S.C. § 2602(5).

(n4)Footnote 4. Bedell v. Los Zapatistas, 805 P.2d 1198 (Colo. 1991) (Colorado, which does not recognize an implied warranty of habitability, does recognize an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment in residential leases which may be breached by an interruption of vital utility services).

(n5)Footnote 5. Javins v. First Nat'l Realty, 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C. Cir. 1981) ; In re TM Carlton House Partners, Ltd., 93 B.R. 859 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1988) ; Clore v. Fredman, 319 N.E.2d 18 (Ill. 1974) ; Pugh v. Holmes, 384 A.2d 1234 , aff'd, 405 A.2d 897 (Pa. 1978) ; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a-14h(e)(1); Comment, URLTA § 4.107 (1981). See Steele v. Latimer, 521 P.2d 304 (Kan. 1974) ; Jones v. Parker, 163 Mass. 564 (1895) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Javins v. First Nat'l Realty, 428 F.2d 1071, 1074 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (provision of heat and light at the heart of warranty of habitability); In re Clark, 96 B.R. 569, 572 (E.D. Pa. 1989) (full utility service); Lifter v. Cohen, 480 So. 2d 1336 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1985) (hot water); Gennings v. Newton, 567 So. 2d 637, 641 (La. Ct. App. 1990) (water); 49 Prospect St. Tenants' Ass'n v. Sheva Gardens, 547 A.2d 1134 (N.J. 1988) (heat, water, security); Academy Spires v. Brown, 268 A.2d 556 (N.J. Dist. 1970) (garbage disposal, elevator, hot water); Whitehouse Estates v. Thomson, 386 N.Y.S.2d 733 (1976) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Mendenhall-Moore Realtors v. Sedoris, 366 S.E.2d 534, 536-37 (N.C. Ct. App. 1988) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 34.03.210; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-1367; Cal. Civ. Code § 789.3; Conn. Gen. Stat. 47a-13 (1977); Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 23, § 11-23.1; Kan. Rev. Stat. 58-2563; Mass. Gen. Laws. Ann. ch. 186, § 14; Mich. Stat. Ann. § 27A.2918; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 504-26; Neb. Rev. Stat. 76-1427; N.M. Stat. Ann. 70-7-36; New York Real Prop. Acts §§ 756, 235-a; Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 91.865, 91.815; Tex. Stat Ann. art. 5236C (Vernon); Va. Code §§ 55-248.36, 55-248.40; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 59-18-300. See Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 383.630, 383.655. See also Lifter v. Cohen 480 So. 2d 1336 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1982) , rev. denied, 484 So. 2d 7 (1986) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Aponte v. Aungst, 82 B.R. 738, 746-47 (E.D. Pa. 1988) . See Kingston Sq. Tenants' Ass'n v. Tuskegee Gardens, Ltd., 792 F. Supp. 1566, 1575 (S.D. Fla. 1992) ; In re Clark, 96 B.R. 569 (E.D. Pa. 1989) ; Gargano v. Heyman, 525 A.2d 1343 (Conn. 1987) (landlord shutting off electricity to premises of tenant who was holding over after lease terminated constituted unfair practice under Unfair Trade Practice Act); Wolfberg v. Hunter, 432 N.E.2d 467, 472 (Mass. 1982) . See also 940 Code of Mass. Regulations 3.08, 3.17. See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 5.5.2 (6th ed. 2004 and Supp.).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Restatement (Second) Contracts § 302.

(n11)Footnote 11. 4 Corbin on Contracts § 779K. Bush v. Upper Valley Telecable, 524 P.2d 1055, 1058 (Idaho 1974) .

(n12)Footnote 12. Restatement (Second) Contracts § 311. See Price v. Pierce, 823 F.2d 1114, 1122 (7th Cir. 1987) .

(n13)Footnote 13. See generally National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 2.2.6 (7th ed. 2008). However, some states hold that landlord-tenant relations are beyond the reach of the states UDAP scheme. Id. at § 2.2.6; see also Annot., Scope and Exemptions of State Deceptive Trade Practice and Consumer Protection Acts, 89 A.L.R. 3d 399 (1992 Supp.).

(n14)Footnote 14. See note 12 supra. See also Hernandez v. Stabach, 193 Cal. Rptr. 350 (Ct. App. 1983) ; Mosley & Mosley Builders v. Landin Ltd., 389 S.E.2d 576 (N.C. Ct. App. 1990) ; Love v. Pressley, 239 S.E.2d 574 (N.C. Ct. App. 1977) ; 49 Prospect St. Tenants Ass'n v. Sheva Gardens, 547 A.2d 1134 (N.J. App. Div. 1988) .

(n15)Footnote 15. See Aponte v. Aungst, 82 B.R. 738 (E.D. Pa. 1988) ; Gargano v. Heyman, 525 A.2d 1343 (Conn. 1987) . This is assuming the scope of the state's provisions contemplates landlords as creditors. See National Consumer Law Center, Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices, § 5.5.2 (6th ed. 2004 and Supp.).

(n16)Footnote 16. 42 U.S.C. §§ 3601 et seq. (1983). The Fair Housing Act is reprinted in Vol. 1B infra.

(n17)Footnote 17. See generally Trafficante v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 409 U.S. 205, 211-12, 93 S. Ct. 364, 34 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1972) ; Resident Advisory Board v. Rizzo, 564 F.2d 126 (3d Cir. 1977) ; Annot., FHA: Discriminatory Effects, 100 A.L.R. Fed. 97 ; see also 24 C.F.R. §§ 100.90-100.135 (1992) (HUD implementing regulations); Newman v. Voinovich, 789 F. Supp 1410 (D. Ohio 1992) ; Oxford House-Evergreen v. City of Plainfield, 769 F. Supp. 1329, 1343 (D.N.J. 1991) ; Casa Marie Inc. v. Superior Ct. of Puerto Rico for Dist. of Arecibo, 752 F. Supp. 1152, 1168 (D.P.R. 1990) .

(n18)Footnote 18. For example, the tenants could make out a prima facie case under the Act by showing that they were subjected to utility termination in response to a failure to pay rent timely, and, under similar circumstances, a member of a non-protected group did not suffer a utility termination. The landlord would then have the burden of offering a legitimate, business-related justification for the apparent differential treatment. The tenants then would prove their case by showing the landlord's explanation to be pretextual--a smoke screen to cover illegal discrimination.

(n19)Footnote 19. 42 U.S.C. § 3604(b); see United States v. Parma Ohio, 494 F. Supp. 1049, 1053 (D. Ohio 1980) , aff'd, 661 F.2d 562 (6th Cir. 1981) , cert. denied, 456 U.S. 1012, 102 S. Ct. 2308 (1982) (this broadly drafted section (§ 3604(b)) reaches every practice which has the effect of making housing more difficult to obtain on prohibited grounds); Concerned Tenant's Ass'n v. Indian Trails Apts., 496 F. Supp. 522, 525-26 (N.D. Ill. 1980) ; United States v. American Inst. of Real Estate Appraisers, 442 F. Supp. 1072 (N.D. Ill. 1977) . See also 24 C.F.R. § 100.70(d)(4) (1992); Fair Hous. Council v. Ayes, 855 F. Supp. 315 (C.D. Cal. 1994) .

169 of 180 DOCUMENTS

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 12 Student Loans and Trade School Abuses

1A-12 Consumer Credit Law Manual 12.syn

§ 12.syn Synopsis to Chapter 12: Student Loans and Trade School Abuses

§ 12.01 Introduction

§ 12.02 Overview of Major Educational Assistance Programs

[1] Federal Family Education Loans (FFELs)

[2] Stafford Loans (GSLs)

[3] PLUS and SLS Loans

[4] Federally Insured Student Loans (FISLs)

[5] Direct Loans

[6] Perkins Loans

[7] Pell (BEOG) and SEOG Grants; Work Study

[8] Determining What Type of Loan a Client Has/National Student Loan Data System

§ 12.02A The College Cost Reduction and Access Act of 2007

[1] Pell Grant Increases

[2] Interest Rate Reductions

[3] Deferment for Certain Members of the Armed Forces

[4] Income-Based Repayment

[a] General

[b] Eligibility

[i] Partial Financial Hardship

[ii] Cap on Payments

[iii] Eligible Loans and Eligible Borrowers

[iv] Borrowers in Default

[c] Forgiveness

[5] Loan Forgiveness for Public Service Employees

[a] Eligibility

[b] Forgiveness

[c] Definition of "Public Service Job"

[6] Definitions for Economic Hardship Deferment

§ 12.03 Repayment Options Prior to Default

[1] FFEL Repayment

[2] Federal Direct Loan Repayment

[3] Perkins Loan Repayment

[4] Interest Rates

[5] Private Loans

[a] Growth in Private Student Lending

[b] Comparing Private Loans and Federal Loans

[6] Student Loan and Income Tax Issues

§ 12.04 Student Loan-Related Collections

[1] Introduction

[2] Common Student Loan Debt Collection Abuses

[a] Violations Unique to Student Loans

[b] Illegal Debt Collection Activity Not Unique to Student Loans

[3] Applicability of FDCPA to Student Loan Collections

[4] Applicability of State Debt Collection Law to Student Loans

[5] Collection Fees and Penalties

[a] Amount of Fees

[b] Guaranty Agency Collection Fees

[c] Collection Fees Sought by Lenders

[d] Perkins Collection Fees

[6] Statute of Limitations as Defense to Collection Action

[7] Tax Refund Interceptions

[a] Introduction

[b] Right to a Pre-Intercept Hearing

[c] Grounds to Contest a Tax Intercept

[d] Post-Intercept Challenges

[8] Wage Garnishment

[a] Introduction

[b] The Right to a Hearing

[c] Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996 Expands Government Power to Collect Student Loan Debts

[d] Servicemember Civil Relief Act Protections

§ 12.05 Rescheduling Student Loan Payments

[1] Deferments

[a] Introduction

[b] Grounds for Seeking a Deferment

[c] Parent PLUS Deferment

[2] Forbearance

[a] Grounds for Seeking a Forbearance

[b] Private Loan Deferments and Forbearances

[3] Consolidation Loans

[a] Introduction

[b] Which Loans Can Be Consolidated

[4] Reasonable and Affordable and Other Repayment Plans; Loan Rehabilitation

[5] Guaranty Agency Compromise and Write-Off Authority

§ 12.06 Cancelling Student Loan Obligations

[1] Introduction

[2] The Closed School Discharge

[a] The Closed School Discharge Applies to Specified Types of Loans

[b] Determining if a Student Qualifies for a Discharge

[c] Relief Available for Those Obtaining a Closed School Discharge

[d] How to Obtain a Closed School Discharge

[e] Effect of School Closure on Perkins, FISLs, and Older FFELs

[3] False Certification Discharge

[a] In General

[b] Discharge Based on Ability-to-Benefit (ATB) Fraud

[c] Discharge Based on Student's Inability to Meet Minimum State Job Requirements

[d] Forgery

[e] How to Apply for a False Certification Discharge

[f] Identity Theft

[4] Discharging Student Loans in Bankruptcy

[a] When Can a Student Loan Be Discharged in Bankruptcy?

[b] Discharging Student Loans Over Seven Years Old No Longer Allowed for Cases Filed After October 7, 1998

[c] Substantial Hardship as Basis for Discharging Student Loan

[d] Student's Rights After Bankruptcy Discharge

[e] Discharge of Student Loans Owed to State Agencies

[5] Discharge Based on Death, Disability

[6] Other Loan Cancellations

[7] Forgery, Mistake, Infancy, and Other Defenses to Loan Enforceability

[8] Discharge for Unpaid Refunds

[a] Applying for the Discharge

[b] Relief Available for Those Obtaining a Discharge

§ 12.07 Eligibility for Additional Educational Assistance

[1] Loss of Eligibility

[2] Renewing Eligibility by Making Six Reasonable and Affordable Payments

[a] Standards for Renewing Eligibility

[3] Loan Rehabilitation

[4] Consolidation of Defaulted Loan Renews Student's Eligibility

§ 12.08 Students' Claims Against the School

[1] Introduction

[2] Connections Between Schools and Lenders

[3] UDAP Theories to Challenge School Misconduct

[a] Introduction

[b] FTC Guides and Rule

[c] Other Precedent

[d] Other State Law Claims

[e] Federal Claims

[f] When to Raise Claims Against the School

[g] Potential Defendants

§ 12.09 Raising School-Related Defenses Against Student Loan Collection Action

[1] Introduction

[a] Perkins Loans

[b] Direct Loans

[c] FISLs

[d] FFELs Extended After January 1, 1994

[2] FFELs Extended Before 1994

[3] Agency and Other Common Law Theories

[4] State Lender Liability Statutes

[5] Origination Theory

[6] Student Claims Against Tuition Recovery Funds

§ 12.10 Consumer Claims Against Scholarship Finders

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 12 Student Loans and Trade School Abuses

1-12 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 12.01

§ 12.01 Introduction

One of the most common forms of consumer loans are student loans, and student loan collections raise numerous special issues. Federal law provides collectors and student loan debtors with many special rights and responsibilities. Major sources of information in this area are the Higher Education Act ("HEA"), Department of Education ("DOE" or "Department") regulations under that Act, Department "Dear Colleague letters," and other informal interpretations. n1 In 2002, more than 45,000 students lost their federal financial aid because of the "drug conviction" provision. n2 The provision has been controversial, primarily because it is so broad that it denies aid, not only those who were convicted while in school, but also to those who were convicted of drug offenses prior to enrolling in higher education. n3 The law denies aid to students who have been convicted in a federal or state court of possessing or selling illicit drugs. Eligibility may be suspended for one year from the date of a first conviction on a drug possession charge, two years from the date of a second conviction and indefinitely for a third. n4 Students convicted of selling drugs lose eligibility for two years from the date of a first conviction, and indefinitely for a second. n5 Eligibility can be restored if the student satisfactorily completes a drug rehabilitation program or if the conviction is reversed or set aside. n6 Legislation introduced in 2005 would repeal the provisions prohibiting persons convicted of drug offenses from receiving financial assistance. n7 Other legislation restricts the scope of the drug-related ban, providing that borrowers are ineligible for aid only if the drug-related offenses were committed while they were attending college. n8

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Education LawAdministration & OperationStudent Financial AidGeneral OverviewEducation LawAdministration & OperationStudent Financial AidEligibilityEducation LawAdministration & OperationStudent Financial AidRenewal & Revocation

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Ch. 4 supra.

(n2)Footnote 2. Stephen Burd, Seeking Redemption for a Drug Law, The Chron. of Higher Educ., April 5, 2002, at A17.

(n3)Footnote 3. Id.

(n4)Footnote 4. 34 C.F.R. § 668.40(b)(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. 34 C.F.R. § 668.40(b)(2).

(n6)Footnote 6. 34 C.F.R. § 668.40(c) (rehabilitation programs), 34 C.F.R. § 668.40(a)(2) (definition of "conviction").

(n7)Footnote 7. See H.R. 1184, 109th Cong. (introduced 1st Sess., Mar. 9, 2005).

(n8)Footnote 8. See H.R. 609, 109th Cong. (introduced Feb. 8, 2005).

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 12 Student Loans and Trade School Abuses

1-12 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 12.02

§ 12.02 Overview of Major Educational Assistance Programs

[1] Federal Family Education Loans (FFELs)

The Higher Education Amendments of 1992 n1 created a new generic name for the major forms of federal student loans. Federal Family Education Loans ("FFELs") include Guaranteed Student (Stafford) Loans ("GSLs"), Unsubsidized Stafford Loans, Supplemental Loans for Students ("SLSs"), and PLUS loans. Throughout this chapter, the term FFEL is generally used instead of GSL because many of the student protections apply to all types of FFELs. n2 Significant amendments to the HEA were signed into law on October 7, 1998. n3 Although not as extensive as the 1992 Amendments, there are still a number of critical provisions for student borrowers. The most important of these provisions are reported in this chapter.

[2] Stafford Loans (GSLs)

Most student loan questions involve the most common form of FFEL, the GSLs. n4 GSLs have been renamed "Stafford" Loans and there are now subsidized and unsubsidized Stafford Loans. A Stafford Loan is a loan made to the student by an eligible lender, such as a bank, credit union or savings and loan. For a subsidized Stafford loan, while the student is in school, the United States pays the interest, and when the student leaves school and begins to repay the loan, the United States continues to pay a portion of the interest, thus accounting for the relatively low interest rate paid by the student. For an unsubsidized Stafford loan, interest accumulates while the student is in school or receiving a deferment. The SLS Program has been replaced by the Unsubsidized Stafford Loan Program.

Students repay Subsidized Stafford Loans (GSLs) six months (or in certain cases nine to twelve months) after they graduate, drop out, or the school closes; typically no interest accumulates until the first payment is due.

This "grace period" does not include any period, not to exceed three years, during which a borrower who is a member of an Armed Forces reserve component is called or ordered to active duty for a period of more than thirty days. n5 Any single excluded period may not exceed three years and must include the time necessary for the borrower to resume enrollment at the next available regular enrollment period. Borrowers are entitled to another full six- or nine-month grace period, as applicable, upon completion of the excluded period of service. n6 These same provisions apply to any individual who is an "affected individual," defined to include those serving on active duty during a war or other military operation or national emergency, performing qualifying National Guard duty during a war or other military operation or national emergency, residing or employed in an area that is declared a disaster area by any federal, state, or local official in connection with a national emergency, or suffering direct economic hardship as a direct result of a war or other military operation or national emergency, as determined by the Secretary. n7

[3] PLUS and SLS Loans

PLUS loans are for parent borrowers and SLSs were for students. n8 These loans have a higher interest rate than Subsidized Staffords (those after July 1, 1987 are variable interest rate loans) and financial need is not a prerequisite. Unlike Subsidized Stafford Loans, interest on PLUS and SLS loans begins to accrue sixty days after the loan is disbursed, although the lender may defer payments until after the student graduates or stops attending school. In other respects, PLUS and SLS loans are much the same as and may supplement Subsidized Stafford Loans (GSLs), with guaranty agencies acting as insurers and the United States as reinsurer.

Effective July 1, 1994, SLS loans were no longer issued. The SLS program was merged into the unsubsidized component of the Stafford Loan Program. But many students obtained SLS loans before that date, and the conditions and benefits of those earlier loans remain unchanged. Much of the discussion concerning Stafford Loans in this chapter also applies to PLUS and SLS loans. Parent borrowers with adverse credit histories may still get loans if they enlist an endorser who has been determined not to have an adverse credit history. n9 However, the absence of any credit history cannot be considered an indication of an adverse credit history and is not to be used as a reason for denial. n10 The lender may waive these requirements if extenuating circumstances exist. n11

The PLUS program was the fastest growing student aid program from 1995 through 2006. PLUS loan borrowing grew at an average annual rate of 12.5% during this time period, in inflation-adjusted dollars. n12 The program is expected to expand even more now that graduate and professional students are eligible to get PLUS loans. It will be especially important to track how financial aid offices describe PLUS loans in their financial aid packages, particularly in relation to private loans. This is because private lenders have generated much of their business from graduate and professional students and may try to steer borrowers away from PLUS loans. PLUS loans offer more affordable interest rates than students would typically receive from private loans. Furthermore, the interest rates are fixed, compared to the variable rates of most private loans. n13

[4] Federally Insured Student Loans (FISLs)

Many older loans are insured directly by the federal government, with no guaranty agency acting as intermediary. These loans are called Federally Insured Student Loans ("FISLs"). Unless specified otherwise, the term FFEL in this section includes FISLs.

[5] Direct Loans

Federal Direct Loans ("Direct Loans") are loans directly from the federal government to the student, with the assistance of the school or other entity that originates the loan. n14 Lenders and guaranty agencies are cut out of the process.

The schools or other originators receive fees for originating the loans, but the Department selects which schools participate in the Direct Loan program. Other schools continue to participate in the FFEL program. Direct Loans have terms similar to those of FFELs, but the loans, when they become due, are immediately owed to the United States. Students can choose various repayment plans, including graduated repayment plans where the amount of the payment increases over time, and income contingent repayment where payment size varies with the student's income.

As with Stafford Loans, there are Subsidized and Unsubsidized Direct Loans. A subsidized loan is awarded on the basis of financial need. The key difference between the two types of loans is that for unsubsidized loans, borrowers are not charged any interest before the repayment period begins or during authorized periods of deferment. In essence, the government "subsidizes" the interest during these periods. Unsubsidized loans are not awarded on the basis of financial need. Interest is charged from the time the loan is disbursed until it is paid in full. Annual and aggregate loan limits are set out in the Department regulations. n15 There are also Direct Loans for parents similar to the FFEL PLUS loans, and there are Consolidation Loans under both the FFEL and the Direct Loan programs.

Congressional changes were enacted in 2005, which aimed at limiting the scope of the "school as lender" program. Effective April 1, 2006, to be a school lender, a school must have met the "school as lender" requirements as they existed on February 7, 2006, and must have made FFEL loans as a lender on or before April 1, 2006. n16 Under new regulations, the school must not

- be a home study school;
- make a loan to any undergraduate student;
- make a loan other than Federal Stafford loans to a graduate or professional student; or
- make a loan to a borrower who is not enrolled at the school. n17

There are also new regulations that, among other provisions, require the schools participating in this program to maintain a cohort default rate that is not greater than 10% and offer loans with an origination fee and/or interest rate that is less than the applicable statutory fee or rate for any loan first disbursed on or after July 1, 2006. n18 In addition, schools must use payments they receive (exclusive of return of principal and certain costs) for need-based grants. n19 They may also use some funds for reasonable administrative expenses. The funds for need-based grants must supplement, not supplant, non-federal funds the school would otherwise use for need-based grants.

[6] Perkins Loans

Perkins Loans (formerly called National Direct Student Loans, and before that National Defense Student Loans) n20 are not FFELs. Perkins Loans are made by a school to the student and the United States takes assignment when the school cannot collect. n21

Perkins Loans are administered by the school itself, at interest rates below Staffords, and repayment is postponed nine (or sometimes six) months after the student graduates or stops attending school.

The 1998 HEA contains a number of provisions that make the Perkins regulations much more like the FFEL and Direct Loan regulations. In particular, the closed school discharge for loans made on or after January 1, 1986 will not apply to Perkins Loans as well. n22 Perkins Loan borrowers who make 12 consecutive timely monthly payments will also be able to rehabilitate defaulted loans. n23

In 2007, the Department proposed rules that would allow the Department to require assignment of a Perkins loan if the outstanding principal balance of the loan is $100 or more, the loan has been in default for seven or more years, and a payment has not been received on the loan in the preceding twelve months. There is an exception if payments were not due on the loan in the preceding twelve months because the loan was in an authorized deferment or forbearance period. n24 The Department adopted this proposal. n25 However, the 2008 HEA reauthorization law overrides the regulations. n26 The 2008 law provides that the Secretary of Education is not permitted to require the assignment of loans to the Department other than as currently allowed in cases in which the school has failed to maintain an acceptable collection record or if the school chooses not to service and collect loans. n27

[7] Pell (BEOG) and SEOG Grants; Work Study

Basic Educational Opportunity Grants ("BEOGs"), also called Pell grants, n28 and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants ("SEOGs") n29 are not loans, and require no repayment (unless there is an overpayment). n30 The College Work Study Program ("CWS") provides salaries for students in exchange for work. n31 All of these assistance programs are administered by the school. Students can have more than one form of student assistance, so that, for example, a student may participate in work-study, have a Pell grant, a Stafford, and a PLUS loan signed by his or her parents.

Grants do not usually have to be repaid. There are two main exceptions to this general rule for grantees who: (1) received more than they were eligible to receive, or (2) withdrew early from the program for which the grant was given. n32

The requirement to repay is waived for students who withdraw from a school because of their status as an "affected individual," defined to include those serving on active duty during a war or other military operation or national emergency, performing qualifying National Guard duty during a war or other military operation or national emergency, residing or employed in an area that is declared a disaster area by any federal, state, or local official in connection with a national emergency, or suffering direct economic hardship as a result of a war or other military operation or national emergency, as determined by the Secretary. n33 The Secretary is also permitted to waive a student's Title IV grant repayment if the student withdrew from an institution because of a major disaster. n34 In 2006, Congress created two new student grant programs: the Academic Competitiveness (AC) Grants and National Science and Mathematics Access to Retain Talent (SMART) Grants. n35 In addition to the Pell Grant amount, up to $750 will be awarded to eligible first-year AC Grant students and up to $1300 to second-year AC Grant students. Up to $4000 will be awarded to eligible National SMART Grant students for each year in addition to the Pell Grant funds. In the College Cost Reduction and Access Act of 2007, Congress created the Teacher Education Assistance for College and Higher Education (TEACH) Grant Program that provides grants of up to $4,000 per year to students who intend to teach in a public or private elementary or secondary school that serves students from low-income families. Final TEACH grant regulations were issued in June 2008 and became effective July 1, 2008. n36 The final regulations clarify that participation in the TEACH grant program is voluntary.

The TEACH grant program is not tied to financial need and provides up to $4000 annually to students who are enrolled in an eligible program and who agree to teach full-time in a high-need field at a public or private elementary or secondary school that serves low-income students. n37 Recipients of these grants must teach for at least four years within a period of eight years after completing the program for which the TEACH Grant was awarded. Although it is not tied to financial need, applicants must file FAFSAs. Students who wish to participate must complete and submit an application, including an agreement to serve and promise to repay. Students must also maintain a 3.25 grade point average while in school. n38

The Academic Competitiveness Grant was made available for the first time for the 2006-2007 school year to first-year college students who graduated from high school after January 1, 2006 and to second-year college students who graduated from high school after January 1, 2005. The Academic Competitiveness Grant award is in addition to the student's Pell Grant award. An Academic Competitiveness Grant will provide up to $750 for the first year of undergraduate study and up to $1300 for the second year of undergraduate study to full-time students who are eligible for a Federal Pell Grant and who had successfully completed a rigorous high school program, as determined by the state or local education agency and recognized by the Secretary of Education. Second year students must maintain a cumulative grade point average (GPA) of at least 3.0.

The National Science and Mathematics Access to Retain Talent Grant, also known as the National Smart Grant, is available during the third and fourth years of undergraduate study to full-time students who are eligible for the Federal Pell Grant and who are majoring in physical, life, or computer sciences; mathematics; technology; engineering; or a foreign language determined critical to national security. The student must also be enrolled in the courses necessary to complete the degree program and to fulfill the requirements of the intended eligible major in addition to maintaining a cumulative grade point average (GPA) of at least 3.0 in coursework required for the major. The National SMART Grant award is in addition to the student's Pell Grant award.

The final regulations for the AC and SMART grants were published in October 2007. n39 In 2007, Congress passed legislation that authorizes and appropriates new mandatory funding to increase the maximum Pell grant award by $490 in 2008-2009 and 2009-2010, $690 in 2010-2011 and 2011-2012, and $1090 in 2012 and 2013. n40 The 2008 Higher Education reauthorization law includes additional Pell grant increases. n41 The law also allows students to receive two Pell grants in a single academic year as long as they are enrolled at least half-time. The Department issued proposed regulations in August 2009 to implement the new Pell Grant program provisions. n41.1 Under current law, the Secretary announces in the Federal Register whether an institution may award up to a second Pell grant scheduled award to a student in a particular award year. The proposed regulations amend this process so that students will be eligible for a second scheduled award if the student has earned in an award year at least the credit or clock hours of the first academic year of the student's eligible program and if he or she is enrolled as at least a half-time student in a program leading to a bachelor's or associate degree or other recognized educational credential. n41.2 The Department explained that it proposed these regulations to encourage a student to accelerate the completion of a program of study within a shorter time period than the regularly scheduled completion time. There are separate provisions to determine the credit or clock hours for transfer students. The proposed regulations also allow a financial aid administrator to waive payments of the student's scheduled award disbursed at a prior institution under certain circumstances. n41.3 A new statutory provision also provides that a student whose parent or guardian died as a result of performing military service in Iraq or Afghanistan after September 11, 2001, is deemed to have a zero expected family contribution (EFC) for purposes of the Pell Grant program. n41.4

In 2006-2007, 31% of Pell grants went to undergraduates enrolled in public two-year colleges. These students comprise one-third of the total undergrad enroll- ment. Thirty-four percent went to public four-year college students (42% of undergraduate enroll ment); 16% to private nonprofit college students (19% of undergraduate enrollment), and 19% to students at for-profit institutions (7% of undergraduate enrollment). n41.5 After holding steady at 5.2 million for two years, the number of Pell grant recipients rose by 5%, to 5.4 million in 2007/-/2008, resulting in a 45% increase over the decade. n41.6

[8] Determining What Type of Loan a Client Has/National Student Loan Data System

The National Student Loan Data System ("NSLDS"), is the DOE's central database for student aid. It receives data from schools, agencies that guaranty loans, the Direct Loan program, the Pell Grant program, and other U.S. DOE programs. This information is available on the Internet at http://www.nslds.ed.gov.

Borrowers can use NSLDS to make inquiries about loans and grants using a personal identification number ("PIN"). The site displays information on loan and/or grant amounts, outstanding balances, loan statuses, and disbursements.

Borrowers can also call the Federal Student Aid Information Center, 1-800-4-FED-AID, TDD 1-800-730-8913. The Center's counselors can help borrowers figure out what types of loans they have over the phone. n42 There is a Direct Loan service center specifically for Direct Loan borrowers. Borrowers should call 1-800-848-0979 (1-800-557-7392 for Direct Consolidation Loans).

In June 2007, the Department issued proposed regulations that would set deadlines for reporting of NSLDS information. The changes require guaranty agencies to report enrollment and loan status information on an FFEL borrower or student to the current holder of the loan within thirty days of any changes to the student's enrollment status. This is a decrease from the current sixty-day period. n43

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Education LawAdministration & OperationStudent Financial AidGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Pub. L. No. 102-325, 106 Stat. 448 (1992).

(n2)Footnote 2. It is usually important to keep track of whether a Federal Family Education Loan [hereinafter FFEL] was disbursed before or after July 1, 1993. Many of the changes to the student loan programs instituted by the Higher Education Amendments of 1992 concerning deferments, repayment plans, and other topics apply only to FFELs disbursed after July 1, 1993.

(n3)Footnote 3. Higher Education Programs Authorization Extension Act, Pub. L. No. 105-244 (Oct. 7, 1998). For a summary of these provisions, see United States Department of Education [hereinafter DOE or Department], Dear Colleague Letter GEN-98-28, Clearinghouse No. 52,136 (Nov. 1998).

(n4)Footnote 4. 20 U.S.C. §§ 1071 to 1087-2; 34 C.F.R. § 682.

(n5)Footnote 5. 68 Fed. Reg. 69312 (Dec. 12, 2003) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Id.

(n7)Footnote 7. Id.

(n8)Footnote 8. 20 U.S.C. §§ 1078, 1078-2; 34 C.F.R. § 682.500.

(n9)Footnote 9. 34 C.F.R. § 682.201(b)(1)(vii) (FFEL); 34 C.F.R. § 685.200(b)(1)(vii)(A). Technical corrections to the FFEL regulations, mainly to correspond to the Direct Loan provisions, were published in December 2003. See 68 Fed. Reg. 75427 (Dec. 31, 2003) . An adverse credit history exists based on a credit report if the applicant is considered ninety or more days delinquent on the repayment of a debt, or the applicant has been the subject of a default determination, bankruptcy discharge, foreclosure, repossession, tax lien, wage garnishment, or write-off of a student loan debt, during the five years preceding the date of the credit report. 34 C.F.R. § 682.201(b)(2)(iii). FFEL regulations allow a creditor to establish more restrictive standards. 34 C.F.R. § 682.201(b)(2)(iv) (FFEL); 34 C.F.R. § 685.200(b)(1)(vii)(C) (Direct). In final rules issued in November 2006, the Department clarified that, just as in the FFEL program, a student Direct PLUS applicant who is determined to have an adverse credit history may receive a Direct PLUS loan if he or she obtains an endorser who does not have an adverse credit history or documents to the Secretary that there are extenuating circumstances. 71 Fed. Reg. 64378 (Nov. 1, 2006) .

(n10)Footnote 10. 34 C.F.R. § 682.201(b)(2)(ii)(A), (B) (FFEL); 34 C.F.R. § 685.200(b)(1)(vii)(B) (Direct).

(n11)Footnote 11. 34 C.F.R. § 682.201(b)(2)(ii), (v) (FFEL); 34 C.F.R. § 685.200(b)(1)(vii)(A) (Direct).

(n12)Footnote 12. See generally College Bd., Trends in Student Aid 2006, at 5 (2006), available at www.collegeboard.com/prod_downloads/press/cost06/trends_aid_06.pdf.

(n13)Footnote 13. See generally Inst. for Higher Educ. Policy, The Future of Private Loans: Who is Borrowing, and Why? (Dec. 2006), available at www.ihep.org/Pubs/PDF/FutureofPrivateLoans.pdf.

(n14)Footnote 14. Student Loan Reform Act of 1993, 107 Stat. 340, enacted as § 4021 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993, Pub. L. No. 103-66, 107 Stat. 312 (Aug. 10, 1993).

(n15)Footnote 15. 34 C.F.R. § 682.204(a) (FFEL); 34 C.F.R. § 685.203 (Direct Loan).

(n16)Footnote 16. Pub. L. No. 109-171, 120 Stat. 4 (Feb. 8, 2006), amending 20 U.S.C. § 1085.

(n17)Footnote 17. 34 C.F.R. § 682.601(a).

(n18)Footnote 18. 34 C.F.R. § 682.601(a)(5),(6).

(n19)Footnote 19. 34 C.F.R. § 682.601(a)(8).

(n20)Footnote 20. They are referred to in this chapter only as Perkins Loans. When this chapter refers to Direct Loans, the reference is to the new Federal Direct Loan Program.

(n21)Footnote 21. 20 U.S.C. §§ 1087aa to 1087vv; 34 C.F.R. § 674.

(n22)Footnote 22. Pub. L. No. 105-244 (Oct. 7, 1998), § 464. For information on closed school discharges, see § 12.06[2] infra. The regulations for Perkins closed school discharges, when final, will likely be similar to those for other student loans.

(n23)Footnote 23. See § 12.07[3] infra.

(n24)Footnote 24. 72 Fed. Reg. 32410 (June 12, 2007) (proposing to amend 34 C.F.R. § 674.8(d)).

(n25)Footnote 25. 72 Fed. Reg. 61960 (Nov. 1, 2007) .

(n26)Footnote 26. Pub. L. No. 110-315, § 463, 122 Stat. 3078 (Aug. 14, 2008).

(n27)Footnote 27. Id. See also U.S.C. § 1087cc(a).

(n28)Footnote 28. 20 U.S.C. § 1070a; 34 C.F.R. § 692.

(n29)Footnote 29. 20 U.S.C. § 1070b; 34 C.F.R. § 676.

(n30)Footnote 30. 20 U.S.C. § 1070b; 34 C.F.R. § 676.

(n31)Footnote 31. 42 U.S.C. §§ 2751 to 2756b; 34 C.F.R. § 675. The Department issued proposed rules in August 2009 to implement numerous changes to the federal work-study regulations. See 74 Fed. Reg. 42380 (Aug. 21, 2009) .

(n32)Footnote 32. 34 C.F.R. § 690.79(a)(1).

(n33)Footnote 33. 68 Fed. Reg. 69312 (Dec. 12, 2003) .

(n34)Footnote 34. See Pub. L. No. 109-66, 119 Stat. 1999 (Sept. 21, 2005) (The Pell Grant Hurricane and Disaster Relief Act); Pub. L. No. 109-67, 119 Stat. 2001 (Sept. 21, 2005) (The Student Grant Hurricane and Disaster Relief Act). See also 34 C.F.R. § 668.22(h)(5).

(n35)Footnote 35. Pub. L. 109-171, enacted on Feb. 8, 2006, 20 U.S.C. § 1070a-1.

(n36)Footnote 36. 73 Fed. Reg. 35472 (June 23, 2008) . See also 73 Fed. Reg. 36792 (June 30, 2008) (technical corrections to final regulations).

(n37)Footnote 37. High-need fields include bilingual education and English language acquisition, foreign language, math, reading specialist, science and special education, and any other field documented as high-need by the federal government or a state government and approved by the Secretary. 34 C.F.R. § 686.2.

(n38)Footnote 38. 34 C.F.R. § 686.11

(n39)Footnote 39. 72 Fed. Reg. 62148 (Oct. 29, 2007) .

(n40)Footnote 40. Congress passed the College Cost Reduction and Access Act on September 7, 2007. At the time this manual was written, the President had not yet signed the legislation but had indicated that he would do so.

(n41)Footnote 41. Pub. L. No. 110-315, § 401, 122 Stat. 3078 (Aug. 14, 2008). A summary of the 2008 HEA law is included at the beginning of this supplement.

(n42)Footnote 41.1. 74 Fed. Reg. 42380 (Aug. 21, 2009) .

(n43)Footnote 41.2. Id. (amending 34 C.F.R. § 690.67).

(n44)Footnote 41.3. Id. (amending 34 C.F.R. § 690.67(c)).

(n45)Footnote 41.4. Id. (proposing 34 C.F.R. § 690.75(e)).

(n46)Footnote 41.5. The College Bd., Trends in Student Aid (2008), available at http://professionals.collegeboard.com/profdownload/trends-in-student-aid-2008.pdf.

(n47)Footnote 41.6. Id.

(n48)Footnote 42. The collection process, including the major collection players, is discussed in more detail in § 12.04 infra.

(n49)Footnote 43. 72 Fed. Reg. 32410 (June 12, 2007) .

Consumer Credit Law Manual

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

PART I Consumer Credit
CHAPTER 12 Student Loans and Trade School Abuses

1-12 Consumer Credit Law Manual § 12.02A

§ 12.02A The College Cost Reduction and Access Act of 2007

A very significant student assistance bill, the College Cost Reduction and Access Act of 2007 (H.R. 2669), was recently passed by Congress, and became effective, with a few exceptions, on October 1, 2007. n1

Here are a few of the key changes.

[1] Pell Grant Increases n2

The maximum Pell grant awards were increased by $490 in 2008-09 and 2009-10, $690 in 2010-11 and 2011-12, and $1090 in 2012 and 2013.

[2] Interest Rate Reductions n3

Interest rates will be gradually reduced for Stafford subsidized loan borrowers only. The cuts will apply to loans disbursed after the effective date of the legislation. The new rates will be:

- 6.8% for loans first disbursed from July 1, 2006, to July 1, 2008
- 6% for loans first disbursed from July 1, 2008, to July 1, 2009
- 5.6% for loans first disbursed from July 1, 2009, to July 1, 2010
- 4.5% for loans first disbursed from July 1, 2010, to July 1, 2011
- 3.4% for loans first disbursed from July 1, 2011, to July 1, 2012.

[3] Deferment for Certain Members of the Armed Forces n4

Congress eliminated the three-year limit on the existing military deferment and expanded eligibility to include the six-month period following the demobilization dates of qualified service members.

[4] Income-Based Repayment n5

[a] General

The Act contains a new income-based repayment program (IBR) that represents is a very positive development for borrowers. Currently, an Income Contingent Repayment Plan (ICRP) is available only in the Direct Loan program. FFEL also has an income-based repayment plan, called "income-sensitive repayment," which is less affordable because it requires borrowers to at least pay monthly accrued interest. The new IBR program, in contrast, will be directly available to both FFEL and Direct Loan borrowers.

The IBR repayment formula is more favorable to borrowers than the ICRP formula. This means that some borrowers currently in ICRPs will want to switch to the new IBR. The IBR program will not begin until July 1, 2009, and by that time, regulations should clarify whether the payments that borrowers have already made through ICRP will count toward the IBR forgiveness provision. n6

Currently, borrowers who have made twenty-five years of ICRP payments are eligible for loan cancellation or forgiveness. There is a twenty-five-year cancellation period in the new IBR as well.

[b] Eligibility

[i] Partial Financial Hardship

Borrowers must have a partial financial hardship as defined under the law in order to qualify for the income-based repayment plan (IBR). Partial financial hardship (PFH) means that a borrower's annual student loan payments under a ten-year standard repayment plan are greater than 15% of the amount by which the borrower's adjusted gross income (and that of a spouse, if applicable), as defined by the Internal Revenue Service, exceeds 150% of poverty.

This formula is more favorable than ICRP, which caps payments at no more than 20% of the amount above 100% of poverty.

[ii] Cap on Payments

If the borrower has a partial financial hardship (PFH), the monthly student loan payment is capped at 15% of adjusted gross income above 150% of poverty divided by 12.

[iii] Eligible Loans and Eligible Borrowers

Borrowers with FFEL or Direct loans may select the income-based repayment plan (IBR). The only government loans that are not eligible for IBR are Parent PLUS loans and Perkins loans. However, Perkins loans borrowers may still access the program if they have other loans and can consolidate with FFEL or Direct Loan.

[iv] Borrowers in Default

There is nothing in the new law that prevents a borrower in default from accessing the IBR. The regulations, when issued, may impose additional requirements.

[c] Forgiveness

Borrowers must repay for a period not to exceed twenty-five years. The twenty-five-year period does not have to be consecutive.

[5] Loan Forgiveness for Public Service Employees n7

The Act also contains a new loan forgiveness program for public service employees who work in public service jobs for ten years and repay their loans through an eligible repayment plan. The remaining balance is then forgiven after the ten years of service is completed.

[a] Eligibility

The program applies only to Direct Loan borrowers, but it covers all types of Direct loans, including Stafford, PLUS, and consolidation loans. Borrowers with other government loans can consolidate with Direct Loan in order to obtain this benefit, assuming they are eligible to consolidate.

Borrowers in default on FFEL consolidation loans will be able to reconsolidate with Direct Loan in order to choose public service forgiveness.

[b] Forgiveness

