

1 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Braucher on Hertz Corp. v. Friend

2010 Emerging Issues 5316

Anne Braucher on the Effect of the Supreme Court's Adoption of the Nerve Center Test on Bankruptcy Venue -- Hertz Corp. v. Friend, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 1897, 130 S. Ct. 1181 (Feb. 23, 2010)

By Anne Braucher

September 22, 2010

SUMMARY: According to Hertz v. Friend, the nerve center test is the only appropriate test for determining the location of a principal place of business. The Court stated that a corporation's principal place of business is the place where its officers direct, control, and coordinate its activities, most often its headquarters. Under bankruptcy law, however, the principal place of business is only one of several venues that a debtor can consider.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: A Corporation's Principal Place of Business is its Nerve Center, the Location where its Officers Direct, Control, and Coordinate its Activities.

The United States Supreme Court has ruled that, for purposes of establishing diversity jurisdiction, a corporation's principal place of business is the place where the corporation's officers direct, control, and coordinate the corporation's activities, normally its headquarters. The decision, Hertz Corp. v. Friend, 559 U.S. ___, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 1897, 130 S. Ct. 1181 (Feb. 23, 2010), resolves a split among circuit courts regarding whether a corporation's principal place of business is where it does the most business, where it is headquartered, or some other place where it has a large amount of business assets. The Court stated that identifying a corporation's principal place of business as its headquarters serves the purposes of the diversity jurisdiction statute. A headquarters is a single location that lends predictability and simplicity to a jurisdictional determination.

Background.

Federal courts have jurisdiction in diversity cases pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a). According to this statute, a federal court may decide a case in which the defendants are citizens of different states than the plaintiffs. Section 1332(c) further provides that, for purposes of determining diversity, a corporation is a citizen of the states in which it is incorporated and where it has its principal place of business. Over time, courts have developed a great number of tests for determining in which state a corporation has its principal place of business. Depending on the court in which the case is pending, the principal place of business may be the location of a corporation's "center of gravity," "nerve center," principal office, principal business assets, or where it does the most business. Hertz, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 1897, at *26-29, 130 S. Ct. at 1192-3.

Under bankruptcy law, a debtor has several options when deciding where to file its petition. A debtor may file its petition in the district "in which the domicile, residence, principal place of business in the United States, or principal assets in the United States ... have been located for the [180] days immediately preceding such commencement." 28 U.S. § 1408(1). In addition, 28 U.S. § 1408(2) allows a corporate debtor with multiple subsidiaries and affiliates to file its petition in any district that is appropriate for any single entity in its corporate family. Because principal place of business appears in both the federal diversity jurisdiction statute and the bankruptcy venue statute, the Hertz decision is relevant for both bankruptcy and non-bankruptcy courts.

Facts of the Case.

Individuals Melina Friend and John Nhieu filed suit against the Hertz Corporation in a California state court for violations of California's wage and hour laws. They sought relief on behalf of a class of California citizens who allegedly suffered the same damages.

Hertz filed a notice removing the case to federal district court, claiming that the class representatives and Hertz were citizens of different states. In support of its position that the federal court had diversity jurisdiction, Hertz submitted a declaration by its employee relations manager that alleged that Hertz was a citizen of New Jersey, not California. The declaration said that the corporation's principal place of business was in New Jersey because its core executive and administrative functions were carried out at its headquarters in Park Ridge, New Jersey. The declaration further stated that Hertz operated facilities in 44 states, and California accounted for only 273 of Hertz's 1,606 car rental locations, about 2,300 of its 11,230 full-time employees, and about $3.8 million of its $4.371 billion in annual revenue.

The California district court found diversity jurisdiction lacking and remanded the case back to state court. The district court applied Ninth Circuit precedent, which required it to first determine the amount of the corporation's business activity on a state-by-state basis. If the amount of activity was significantly larger or substantially predominated in one state, then the corporation's principal place of business was in that state. If no state predominated, the corporation's principal place of business was its nerve center, the place where a majority of its executive and administrative functions were performed. Applying this test, the district court held that Hertz's principal place of business was in California because the differential between the amount of business activities performed there and in the next closest state was significant. The Ninth Circuit upheld the district court's ruling, and Hertz appealed to the Supreme Court.

The Decision.

The Supreme Court vacated the Ninth Circuit's ruling and remanded for further proceedings consistent with its opinion. See Hertz, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 1897, at *37, 130 S. Ct. at 1195. The Court began its opinion with a brief history of diversity jurisdiction. It explained that the principal place of business phrase was added to the diversity jurisdiction statute to prevent abuses by corporations that had been incorporating in states only for the purpose of taking litigation into federal courts. See Hertz, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 1897, at *17-23, 130 S. Ct. at 1189-90. Because the phrase was not adequately defined, however, courts developed their own tests for determining a corporation's principal place of business. Some courts, like the Ninth Circuit, used a business activities approach that focused on the amount of business a corporation performed in each state. See Hertz, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 1897, at *24-27, 130 S. Ct. at 1191-2. Other courts used a nerve center approach that focused on the location where a corporation's officers direct, control, and coordinate activities, often its headquarters. See id. The Supreme Court stated that the number and types of tests employed by lower federal courts made it difficult to serve the purpose of diversity jurisdiction - to find the state where a corporation is least likely to suffer out-of-state prejudice when it is sued in a local court. See Hertz, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 1897, at *27, 130 S. Ct. at 1192.

After reviewing the various tests applied by the courts, the Supreme Court arrived at what it believed was the best definition of the principal place of business - "the place where a corporation's officers direct, control, and coordinate the corporation's activities." Id. This place, often called the nerve center, will normally be the place where a corporation maintains its headquarters. See id. The Court gave three reasons why this definition of principal place of business is superior to others. First, principal place of business is a singular term, so it should be a single location. See Hertz, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 1897, at *29, 130 S. Ct. at 1192-3. A headquarters is a single place within a state, just as the statute requires. Second, using the nerve center/headquarters definition promotes administrative simplicity and predictability. See Hertz, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 1897, at *31, 130 S. Ct. at 1193. Locating a corporation's headquarters is a simple matter, so litigants and courts will less frequently have to invest time and money in jurisdictional battles. Third, the nerve center/headquarters definition of principal place of business meets the simplicity benchmark established by legislative history. See Hertz, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 1897, at *32-33, 130 S. Ct. at 1194. The drafters of the diversity jurisdiction statute wanted a test that was not complex and impractical to apply. A nerve center test will be easy to apply in a way that a business activities test will not.

The Effect of the Decision: Even With a Better-Defined Principal Place of Business, Bankruptcy Law Gives Corporate Debtors Several Venue Options.

As the Supreme Court itself observed, the Hertz decision should increase predictability and preserve resources in federal diversity cases. Under the business activities test rejected by the Supreme Court, determining a corporation's principal place of business required a showing of the amount of business activities that the corporation engaged in on a state-by-state basis. The test required litigants to spend time and money tallying the corporation's revenue and assets in each state, and it required courts to spend time deciding whether the amount of revenue and/or assets generated in any state was significantly larger than the rest. Under the nerve center test adopted by the Supreme Court in Hertz, parties and courts will preserve resources by arriving much more quickly at predictable jurisdictional determinations. Parties will no longer have to marshal evidence related to a corporation's business because its nerve center, the place where a corporation's officers direct, control, and coordinate the corporation's activities, will most often be its headquarters. With much more predictable outcomes under the nerve center test, parties will also be less able to abuse the diversity jurisdiction statute to engage in forum-shopping.

Even with the Hertz clarification regarding principal place of business, however, debtors still have many choices when deciding where to file their cases. Section 1408(1) allows a bankruptcy debtor to file in the district of its domicile, residence, principal place of business, or the location of its principal assets. The Hertz decision will indeed most often limit the principal place of business to the location of a debtor's headquarters. But domicile and residence are often defined as the state in which a debtor is incorporated, so these venues are still available for every debtor. Especially for large corporate debtors, the location of the debtor's principal assets may be a third available venue, in addition to principal place of business and domicile/residence. Furthermore, 28 U.S.C. 1408(2) allows a corporate debtor with many subsidiaries and affiliates to file its petition in any venue that is appropriate for any single entity in its corporate structure. Because debtors have so many options, the Hertz decision will likely have little influence on debtors when making their decision where to file their petitions.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Anne Braucher is an associate at McMillan Metro, P.C. located in Rockville, Maryland. Ms. Braucher's practice focuses on commercial litigation, business law, bankruptcy, and creditors' rights. Prior to joining McMillan Metro, Ms. Braucher spent 5 years as an associate in the Litigation and Bankruptcy Departments of DLA Piper LLP (US). From 2003 to 2004, Ms. Braucher clerked for Chief Judge Douglas O. Tice, Jr. of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Virginia. Ms. Braucher received a B.A. from Oberlin College in 1998 and a J.D. from the American University Washington College of Law, where she was Managing Editor of The American University International Law Review. Ms. Braucher is a member of the Montgomery County Bar Association, the DC Bar Lawyers Assistance Program Committee, and the DC Volunteer Lawyers Project.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

2 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Prof. Kenneth N. Klee. All Rights Reserved.

Klee on Schwab v. Reilly

2010 Emerging Issues 5237

Professor Kenneth N. Klee on the Supreme Court's Holding in Schwab v. Reilly, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4974 (2010)

By Prof. Kenneth N. Klee

August 3, 2010

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis addresses issues of statutory interpretation. Klee examines the primary lesson from Schwab v. Reilly: If a statute contains a detailed definition of a term or concept that can have more than one interpretation, the Court may construe the statute to reduce the burden on bankruptcy administration and possibilities for abuse, even if it undermines the debtor's fresh start.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The Lesson to be Learned:

If a statute contains a detailed definition of a term or concept that can have more than one interpretation, the Court may construe the statute to reduce the burden on bankruptcy administration and possibilities for abuse, even if it undermines the debtor's fresh start.

Legal Background:

The Bankruptcy Code provides that, subject to statutory caps, certain property of the debtor is exempt from inclusion in the bankruptcy estate. n1 Broadly speaking, unless a state opts out, a debtor may choose between two subsets of exempt property: property specifically exempted under state law and non-bankruptcy federal law, n2 and property specifically listed in the Bankruptcy Code, in many instances subject to capped dollar amounts. n3

A debtor lists the interests in property claimed as exempt on Schedule C filed with, or shortly after, the bankruptcy petition. n4 Unless a party-in-interest objects to debtor's scheduled exemptions under Bankruptcy Rule 4003 within thirty days of the conclusion of the § 341(a) meeting, the exempt interests in property leave the bankruptcy estate and revert to the debtor. n5

Facts and Proceedings Below:

Respondent Nadejda Reilly ("Reilly") is a debtor residing in Pennsylvania. Reilly filed for chapter 7 bankruptcy protection on April 21, 2005. On her bankruptcy schedules, she listed an exemption of $10,718 (the maximum amount available) in "tools of the trade" cooking equipment. The debtor valued the equipment at $10,718. Petitioner William Schwab ("Schwab"), the bankruptcy trustee appointed in her case, indicated to Reilly at her § 341(a) meeting that he disputed the debtor's valuation ($17,200) for her cooking equipment, and would consequently seek to sell the equipment and distribute the proceeds in excess of the exempt amount to her creditors. Schwab, however, never timely objected to Reilly's exemption claim within the 30 days allowed in Bankruptcy Rule 4003.

After the bankruptcy court denied his request to sell the cooking equipment, n6 Schwab appealed to the district court. n7 The district court affirmed the bankruptcy judge's order, n8 finding that Reilly demonstrated her intent to exempt the full amount of the property, thereby requiring Schwab to object on a timely basis or lose his right to later sell the property. n9 Schwab appealed to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals. n10

The Third Circuit affirmed, holding that the Supreme Court's holding in Taylor v. Freeland & Kronz n11 meant that "where the debtor signals her intention to exempt certain property in its entirety by listing an identical entry for the property's value and the amount of the exemption, the trustee must object pursuant to Rule 4003 lest the property be rendered fully exempt." n12 (emphasis added). The court further clarified that:

[W]here a debtor shows her intent to exempt the entirety of certain property and the trustee does not object within Rule 4003's time-frame, the asset passes through the bankruptcy estate and becomes fully exempt, even if it is later discovered that the property has a higher value than the exempted amount. n13

By its own admission, the Third Circuit's ruling differed from contrary holdings in the Eighth and Ninth Circuits, but mirrored holdings in the Sixth and Eleventh Circuits. n14 The Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve the circuit split. n15 The Court reversed, holding that the exemption of an interest in property for a stated dollar amount is not legally equivalent to exemption of the property itself. n16 The Court's opinion focused on the question:

Does an exemption claim for a property's full claimed value exempt the property or just the claimed amount?

Schwab, the bankruptcy trustee argued that the specific intention (and clear meaning) of § 522 was for only the "interest" in the property up to the specified dollar amount to be exempt. n17 He also noted that ruling in favor of Reilly would force trustees to file more pro forma objections or motions to extend, miring the judicial system in needless bureaucratic procedures. n18

In contrast, respondent Reilly, the debtor, argued that once property claimed as exempt passes the thirty day threshold for objections, it becomes fully exempt regardless of its ultimate value. n19 Reilly further argued that the Trustee's ability to deny debtor access to property claimed exempt "is [a] privilege that arises [only] from a timely and successful objection." n20

Writing for the majority in a 6-3 opinion, Justice Thomas sided with Schwab. Justice Ginsburg wrote the dissent.

Analysis:

In Schwab v. Reilly, the Supreme Court determined that a debtor's exemption claim for a property's full claimed dollar value protects only the value claimed, not the property itself, regardless of its ultimate value. The Court also determined that a trustee need not object to a debtor's scheduled exemption of property listed at a fixed dollar valuation within the thirty day window specified in Bankruptcy Rule 4003 ("Rule 4003") in order to later sell that property. Simply stated, the trustee has no quarrel with the dollar amount the debtor has exempted under § 522 of the Bankruptcy Code ("§ 522"), because the scheduled value matches the allowed exemption amount. The trustee only seeks the coverage above the listed dollar amount, and this does not require action within the 30 day period to object to exemptions.

In ruling, the Court rejected the reasoning of the Third Circuit that the trustee had to object to debtor Reilly's valuation within the thirty day window of Rule 4003 or lose the chance to later sell the asset. n21 The Third Circuit incorrectly reasoned that listing the dollar value of the asset as the maximum amount of the exemption was the same as exempting the entirety of the asset no matter what its actual value might be.

In Schwab v. Reilly, the Court also clarified its holding in Taylor v. Freeland & Kronz,ⁿ²² in which the Court ruled that a trustee's failure to timely object to a debtor's exemption claim for her employee discrimination lawsuit, valuation "unknown," rendered the full amount of the lawsuit's proceeds exempt - despite the fact that the lawsuit later settled for $110,000 and the debtor did not have a legal right to exempt this much.ⁿ²³ In Taylor, the debtor's listing of the valuation as "unknown" put the trustee on notice that the debtor intended to exempt the entire proceeds. Not so in Schwab, when the debtor's listing of a specific dollar amount did not evidence the debtor's intention to exempt portions of the interest in the cooking equipment in excess of the dollar value. Taylor remains good law when the debtor exempts the full amount of the property or lists the property value as "unknown."

Both the majority and dissent have policy arguments supporting their positions. On the one hand, from the majority's perspective, limiting the debtor to his "interest" in the exempt property tracks the explicit statutory language. Indeed, the majority reasons that the "property" specified in § 522 is merely the interest and not the underlying cooking equipment. Additionally, as pointed out by Schwab, allowing debtors to get around statutory exemption caps by slipping low valuations past unsuspecting trustees violates both the letter and intent of the Bankruptcy Code.

On the other hand, as the dissent notes, allowing trustees to later attack a property valuation in this manner encourages abuse by trustees and creditors. As pointed out in an amicus brief of the National Association of Consumer Bankruptcy Attorneys, allowing trustees to make an end run around Rule 4003 by reopening valuation at their leisure will incentivize them to take their time.ⁿ²⁴ And, as noted in Collier on Bankruptcy:ⁿ²⁵

Normally, if the debtor lists property as exempt, that listing is interpreted as a claim for exemption of the debtor's entire interest in the property, and the debtor's valuation of that interest is treated as the amount of the exemption claimed. Were it otherwise—that is, if the listing were construed to claim as exempt only that portion of the property having the value stated—the provisions finalizing exemptions if no objections are filed would be rendered meaningless. The trustee or creditors could always claim that the debtor's interest in the property was greater than the value claimed as exempt and still object to the debtor exempting his or her entire interest in the property after the deadline for objections had passed.

(emphasis added).

From a policy perspective, allowing trustees to later attack property that has ostensibly lapsed out of the chapter 7 estate values certainty and trustee economy above judicial efficiencyⁿ²⁶ and finality. It tempers the tenor of bankruptcy's "fresh start" in favor of ensuring that creditors have full access to debtor's assets. The direction these policy arguments cut depends on the values one believes the Bankruptcy Code is designed to enshrine.

Practice Tips:

As is the case with many Supreme Court decisions, the marketplace will adapt to the Court's ruling. Because the Court reaffirmed its holding in Taylor, debtors will be well-advised to list the property value as "unknown," unless they lack a good faith basis to do so. Plainly, deposit accounts, publicly traded stocks and bonds, and perhaps motor vehicles have a determinable value. With respect to other property, however, debtors honestly do not know the value, nor is the value easily ascertainable. Thus, they can safely list the value as unknown. So as not to unduly provoke the trustee into objecting to exemptions, however, debtors should employ this strategy selectively.

From a slightly different perspective, debtors' attorneys might want to adopt a written policy to distribute to their client's indicating the costs and benefits of exempting an interest in property for a dollar sum certain versus 100% of the value or "amount unknown." Assuming the consumer debtors' bar (and software providers) appropriately adjust their practices, debtors may continue to put trustees to the burden of objecting within 30 days or continuing meetings of creditors in order to assess and contest claims of exemptions in property whose value is subject to a dollar cap. On the other hand, Schwab will remain a trap for unwary debtors who seek to exempt such property in full notwithstanding uncertainty about whether the property exceeds applicable dollar limits.

Return to Text

n1 See 11 U.S.C. § 522 (2006).

n2 See 11 U.S.C. § 522(b)(3) (2006).

n3 See 11 U.S.C. § 522(b)(2), (d) (2006).

n4 See 11 U.S.C. § 522(l) (2006).

n5 See id.

n6 Because she did not want to part with the sentimental property, which had been given to her by her immigrant parents, Reilly had motioned the bankruptcy court for leave to withdraw her petition, which the bankruptcy judge had denied. However, the judge also denied Schwab's motion to sell, concluding that Reilly put him on notice that she intended to exempt the full amount of the property and that Schwab, having not timely objected, had lost the ability to bring the property into the estate. See In re Reilly, 534 F. 3d 173, 174 (3d Cir. 2008).

n7 See id.

n8 Schwab v. Reilly (In re Reilly), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98261 (M.D. Pa. Sept. 19, 2006).

n9 See 534 F. 3d at 174-75.

n10 See id.

n11 503 U.S. 638, 112 S. Ct. 1644, 118 L. Ed. 2d 280, 1992 U.S. LEXIS 2546 (1992). Taylor v. Freeland & Kronz is discussed in the Property of the Estate, Exemptions, and Exclusions from the Estate section at 272 of the author's book, Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court (LexisNexis 2008).

n12 See In re Reilly, 534 F.3d at 179.

n13 Id.

n14 Id. (citing and comparing Allen v. Green (In re Green), 31 F.3d 1098 (11th Cir. 1994), and Olson v. Anderson (In re Anderson), 377 B.R. 865 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 2007), with Stroebner v. Wick (In re Wick), 276 F.3d 412 (8th Cir. 2002) and Hyman v. Plotkin (In re Hyman), 967 F.2d 1316 (9th Cir. 1992)).

n15 129 S. Ct. 2049, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1131, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 3246 (April 27, 2009).

n16 130 S. Ct. 2652, 177 L. Ed. 2d 234, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4974 (June 17, 2010).

n17 See Transcript of Oral Argument, Schwab v. Reilly, No. 08-538, 2009 U.S. Trans. LEXIS 58 at *16-17 (Nov. 3, 2009).

n18 See id.

n19 See, e.g., Brief for Respondent Nadeja Reilly, Schwab v. Reilly, 2008 U.S. Briefs 538, 2009 U.S. S. Ct. Briefs LEXIS 931 (Sept. 18, 2009).

n20 See Brief for Respondent Nadeja Reilly, Schwab v. Reilly, 2008 U.S. Briefs 538, at *26, 2009 U.S. S. Ct. Briefs LEXIS 931, at *37 (Sept. 18, 2009).

n21 Schwab v. Reilly, 534 F.3d 173, 177-78 (3d Cir. 2008).

n22 530 U.S. 638 (1992).

n23 Id. at 642.

n24 See Brief Supporting Respondent of Amici Curiae (I) National Association of Consumer Bankruptcy Attorneys and (II) Professors Kenneth N. Klee, Robert M. Lawless, Richard Lieb and Michael D. Sousa, Schwab v. Reilly, No. 08-538, 2008 U.S. Briefs 538, at *4-5, 2009 U.S. S. Ct. Briefs LEXIS 985, at * 8-9 (Sept. 25, 2009).

n25 9 Collier on Bankruptcy 4003.02[1] (Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer eds., 15th ed. rev. 2005) (cited in Schwab v. Reilly, 534 F.3d 173, 180 (3d Cir. 2008)).

n26 Petitioner takes great pains to suggest the opposite, namely, that ruling to support this approach will increase judicial inefficiency by forcing trustees to make more pro-forma objections to debtor valuations. So the logic runs, a trustee would need to presumptively object in order to allow himself or herself time to make a sufficiently accurate valuation of the property in order to allow it to lapse out of the estate. This argument overstates the problem by ignoring the fact that trustees can simply continue the § 341(a) meeting and toll Rule 4003's thirty day clock. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(b)(1) (2006).

RELATED LINKS: For general information, see Kenneth N. Klee, ■ Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Kenneth N. Klee is a founding member of Klee, Tuchin, Bogdanoff & Stern LLP, in Los Angeles, specializing in corporate reorganization, insolvency, and bankruptcy law. He is also a professor at the University of California, Los Angeles School of Law, where he teaches courses in bankruptcy law and Chapter 11 business reorganizations law, as well as a business simulation/clinical course dedicated to the topic of creating value through the renegotiation of business agreements. He has served as an expert witness in over 40 matters and renders services as an arbitrator or mediator.

Mr. Klee is a fellow of the American College of Bankruptcy, serves as a member of the American Law Institute, and is a founding member of the International Insolvency Institute. He was a member of the executive committee of the National Bankruptcy Conference from 1985 to 1988 and 1992 to 2000 and served as Chair of the National Bankruptcy Conference's legislation committee from 1992 to 2000. Mr. Klee was Associate Counsel, Committee on Judiciary, U.S. House of Representatives 1974-1977, where he was a principal draftsman of the Bankruptcy Code. From 1992 to 2000, he served as a member of the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules of the United States Judicial Conference.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

3 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Key Employee Benefits Issues in a Sale of Assets under 11 U.S.C. § 363

2010 Emerging Issues 5185

Key Employee Benefits Issues in a Sale of Assets under Section 363 of the Bankruptcy Code

By John R. Cornell, Daniel C. Hagen, Tricia Eschbach-Hall and Lisa Rothman Jesner

July 8, 2010

SUMMARY: Debtors are now more frequently selling a significant portion of assets in bankruptcy under section 363 of the Bankruptcy Code, with an accompanying distribution of sale proceeds and disposition of remaining assets in a liquidating chapter 11 plan. This excerpt from the Second Edition of Collier Monograph: Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation in Corporate Bankruptcy looks at such sales in the context of pension plans.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: This article is an excerpt from the forthcoming Second Edition of Collier Monograph: Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation in Corporate Bankruptcy, written by John R. Cornell, Daniel C. Hagen, Tricia Eschbach-Hall and Lisa Rothman Jesner. The authors are lawyers with the international firm of Jones Day, and practice in the firm's Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation practice in New York and Cleveland. n1

The breakdown in the credit markets that peaked in the second half of 2008 has had a significant impact on bankruptcy planning and strategy. With a severe lack of access to commercially reasonable debtor-in-possession financing, debtors are more frequently selling a significant portion of assets in bankruptcy under section 363 of the Bankruptcy Code (a "363 Sale"), with an accompanying distribution of sale proceeds and disposition of remaining assets in a liquidating chapter 11 plan.

Single Employer Defined Benefit Pension Plans in a 363 Sale

A 363 Sale may allow the debtor to sell assets free and clear of liability for underfunded pension plans. n2 Purchasers frequently choose (i) not to assume any pension plans or (ii) to assume only those plans they wish to maintain, leaving any other plans behind.

Several scenarios could occur in connection with the sale. First, if there was a plan termination during the bankruptcy, the PBGC would have a claim against the debtor's estate. The claim would be liquidated in the bankruptcy case. While ERISA provides that a lien is imposed in favor of the PBGC at the time of termination, courts have found that the PBGC lien does not attach in bankruptcy, as a result of the automatic stay. n3 Therefore, the acquirer who purchases the debtor out of bankruptcy in a 363 asset sale should not be subject to those liens.

While it is somewhat unusual for the equity of a debtor to be purchased out of bankruptcy, it nevertheless is possible for the equity of a debtor to be sold in a 363 Sale. In addition, a debtor may sell the equity of a non-debtor subsidiary in connection with a 363 Sale. If the equity of an entity that is liable for an underfunded defined benefit plan is purchased in a 363 Sale, the PBGC typically takes the position that the sale of equity is not free and clear of pension liabilities. There is a risk that the transaction (as to the entities acquired in an equity sale) will be treated as a sale of equity. As a result, the PBGC may claim that the transferred entity is subject to joint and several liability and may threaten to impose liens against the transferred entity following the transaction. n4 The PBGC may seek to negotiate for additional consideration in exchange for a release of these potential liabilities. n5

It should be noted, however, that a PBGC lien could be imposed upon the stock of a debtor after emergence if the pension-related liability is not discharged in bankruptcy as to the debtor. If an underfunded pension plan is terminated and the amount of the unfunded benefit liability is not paid upon demand by the PBGC, a lien arises automatically in favor of the PBGC against the property of any controlled group member that is not protected by the automatic stay. n6 All members of the controlled group are jointly and severally liable for unfunded benefit liabilities upon plan termination. n7 Any lien for unfunded benefits is equal to the lesser of the amount of the liability or 30 percent of the combined net worth of the contributing sponsor and its controlled group. n8

Under certain circumstances, the PBGC may also impose a termination premium following the termination of an underfunded pension plan ($1,250 per participant per year for each of three years). n9 In the event that the termination occurs during a chapter 11 case, the termination premium is not payable until after the debtor's discharge or dismissal from the case. n10 While there is no legal precedent discussing whether a purchaser in a 363 asset sale would be liable for the termination premium, there is no statutory basis for successor liability. n11

Where a debtor maintains ongoing defined benefit pension plans, subject to approval of a 363 Sale by the bankruptcy court, an acquirer could purchase assets, choosing not to assume assets and liabilities of the underfunded defined benefit pension plans. An acquirer should not be held liable for the underfunding of any pension plans left behind and later terminated because ERISA does not provide for successor liability in a sale of assets and such liability has never been imposed by a court in connection with a single employer pension plan. n12 It may also be possible for the acquirer to pick and choose which defined benefit pension plans it assumes. The acquirer could choose to maintain the plans with less underfunding, or plans subject to a CBA, while terminating plans in which participants are likely to recover their benefits under the PBGC benefit caps. A compromise may need to be struck with the PBGC, especially if the PBGC threatens to terminate plans and mature its claim (thereby reducing the consideration available to other creditors, and in some cases creating a lien and liability for non-debtor controlled group members) prior to consummation of the transaction.

The PBGC has become proactive in terminating plans prior to 363 Sales. n13 These involuntary terminations by the PBGC often occur with little or no warning and have the potential to disrupt the sale. Where the intention is to leave behind underfunded plans, the parties should consider the ramifications of a potential PBGC termination, regardless of whether the PBGC has been vocal during the pretransaction negotiations. The PBGC closely monitors underfunded defined benefit plans and, as described below, statutory notice requirements (including notice within 30 days of a bankruptcy filing) often alert the PBGC to closely monitor the debtor as well.

If the acquirer chooses to assume all or some of the defined benefit pension plans, the acquirer could freeze the benefit plan accruals (subject to statutorily protected rights to continue to reach certain eligibility requirements for benefit subsidies), n14 particularly with regard to non-collectively bargained plans. If plans are collectively bargained, the acquirer would have to examine contracts with the unions, and may have to face union negotiations in order to modify the benefits. If this modification occurs during the course of the bankruptcy case, the process under section 1113 of the Bankruptcy Code would have to be followed. n15

A 363 Sale may be challenged by creditors and by the PBGC. In fact, where the PBGC has a sizeable contingent claim, the PBGC may have a considerable voice. Creditors may object to the sale if their claims will be diluted by claims of the PBGC as a result. Creditors may argue that the debtor did not exercise sound business judgment in agreeing to the sale, or that the sale is a sub rosa chapter 11 plan. n16

Multiemployer Pension Plans in a 363 Sale

Multiemployer pension plans are collectively bargained pension plans to which more than one employer contributes. n17 A participating employer in a multiemployer plan enters into an agreement with the fund to make specified contributions on behalf of employees covered by a CBA. If an employer ceases to make payments or otherwise terminates its participation in the plan, the plan administrator may assess a withdrawal liability on that employer. n18 Multiemployer pension plan withdrawal liability is joint and several among controlled group members. n19

An asset sale typically results in a withdrawal from a multiemployer plan, as the sale results in a permanent cessation of the seller's obligation to contribute to the plan, or results in a cessation of all covered operations under the plan. n20 Where a purchaser assumes a CBA or other agreement governing contributions to the multiemployer plan and follows statutory procedures set forth in section 4204 of ERISA, withdrawal liability may be avoided. n21 Purchasers may seek to include language in the purchase agreement excluding liability for withdrawal or unpaid contributions to a multiemployer plan to add a layer of protection. n22

Successor COBRA Liability in a 363 Sale

Generally, a seller retains the obligation to provide COBRA coverage to all employees who lost coverage under the seller's group health plan prior to or in connection with the sale unless the seller terminates all of its group health plans. n23 Should the seller and its controlled group terminate all health plans (which is likely in the event of a debtor's liquidation following a 363 Sale), the buyer is obligated to provide COBRA coverage if (1) the termination of the seller's group health plans occurred in connection with the sale, and (2) in a sale of assets, the buyer is a successor employer. n24 For this purpose, an asset sale is a "transfer of substantial assets, such as a plant or division or substantially all the assets of a trade or business." n25

Although the definition of successor employer is not explicit, the applicable COBRA regulations do state explicitly that a buyer does not fail to be a successor employer in an asset sale "merely because the asset sale takes place in connection with a proceeding in bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code." n26 This creates a potential conflict with the Bankruptcy Code, which provides that assets are sold free and clear of liabilities in a 363 Sale.

While there are no reported cases specifically addressing whether assets can be sold in a bankruptcy proceeding free and clear of COBRA liability, bankruptcy courts have entered orders conveying assets free and clear of such liability, and federal courts have held that assets could be sold free and clear of other statutory liabilities. n27

Debtors should consider requesting that the court include a statement that the sale is free and clear of claims for COBRA continuation coverage in the sale order.

Return to Text

n1 The views set forth in this article are the personal views of the authors and do not necessarily reflect those of the law firm with which they are associated.

n2 11 U.S.C. § 363(f); see also 3 Collier on Bankruptcy, 363.06 (Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer eds., 16th ed.).

n3 See, e.g., PBGC v. Belfance (In re CSC Indus., Inc. & Copperweld Steel Co.), 232 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2000); 183 B.R. 841; In re Divco Philadelphia Sales Corp., 64 B.R. 232 (E.D. Pa. 1986).

n4 For further discussion of foreign entities, see Collier Monograph: Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation in Corporate Bankruptcy, § 2[3][a][ii] (2d ed. 2010).

n5 For further discussion of the purchase of equity in a 363 Sale, see Collier Monograph: Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation in Corporate Bankruptcy, § 7[13][b] (2d ed. 2010).

n6 ERISA § 4068, 29 U.S.C. § 1368.

n7 ERISA § 4068(a), 29 U.S.C. § 1368(a); ERISA § 4062(a), 29 U.S.C. § 1362(a).

n8 Id. Entities with a negative net worth are calculated as if their net worth were zero. ERISA § 4068(d)(1), 29 U.S.C. § 1368(d)(1).

n9 ERISA § 4006(a)(7)(A), 29 U.S.C. § 1306(a)(7)(A).

n10 ERISA § 4006(a)(7)(B), 29 U.S.C. § 1306(a)(7)(B).

n11 See 11 U.S.C. § 363(f); see also 3 Collier on Bankruptcy, 363.06; Nell Hennessy, PBGC Termination Premium: the Bankruptcy Code vs. ERISA, Labor and Employment Comm. Newsletter (Am. Bankr. Inst., Alexandria, Va.), Dec. 2008, available at <http://www.abiworld.org/committees/newsletters/employeebenefits/vol3num3/PBGC.html>.

n12 Some courts have stated that a purchaser of assets may be a successor employer for purposes of multiemployer plan liability. In Upholsterers' Int'l Union Pension Fund v. Artistic Furniture of Pontiac, the court looked to labor and employment principles of successorship to determine whether a purchaser of assets could be held liable by the plan for the seller's failure to make contribution payments to the plan. According to the court, these principles allow for more flexibility in who is deemed a successor employer. The court stated that allowing claims for unpaid contributions against a purchaser would "vindicate important statutory policies," and serve the same purposes as those behind the codification of the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980 ("MPPAA"). Therefore, the court held that it was premature for the purchaser to bring a motion to dismiss, and the Seventh Circuit reversed and remanded to determine whether the purchaser would be subject to successor liability. 920 F.2d 1323, 1324-26 (7th Cir. 1990); see also Chicago Truck Drivers, Helpers & Warehouse Workers Union (Independent) Pension Fund v. Tasemkin, Inc., 59 F.3d 48, 33 C.B.C.2d 1456 (7th Cir. 1995) (stating that purchaser of assets could be assessed withdrawal liability as a successor employer, and that the multiemployer plan's participation in bankruptcy proceedings did not preclude it from bringing a claim against the purchaser). In addition, under ERISA a transaction can be ignored for purposes of imposing liability on a person if a principal purpose of that person entering the transaction was to evade liability under Title IV of ERISA. ERISA §§ 4069, 4212, 29 U.S.C. §§ 1369, 1392.

n13 Recent examples where the PBGC has terminated pension plans shortly before 363 asset sales include the terminations of the Metaldyne Corporation and Proliance International, Inc. pension plans in July and August of 2009, respectively. Information about these and other PBGC pension plan terminations has been published in PBGC press releases that are available on the PBGC website at www.pbgc.gov.

n14 I.R.C. § 411(d)(6); ERISA § 204(h), 29 U.S.C. § 1054(h).

n15 For a discussion of section 1113 of the Bankruptcy Code, see Collier Monograph: Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation in Corporate Bankruptcy, § 9[4] (2d ed. 2010); Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 113.

n16 See Chrysler LLC, 576 F.3d 108.

n17 ERISA § 3(37)(A), 29 U.S.C. § 1002(37)(A). For a discussion of multiemployer plans, see infra.

n18 ERISA § 4201(A), 29 U.S.C. § 1381(A).

n19 ERISA § 4001(b)(1), 29 U.S.C. § 1301(b)(1).

n20 ERISA § 4203(a)(1)-(2), 29 U.S.C. § 1383(a)(1)-(2).

n21 See ERISA § 4204, 29 U.S.C. § 1384.

n22 See ERISA § 4201, 29 U.S.C. § 1381; see, e.g., In re Pan Am Corp., 1991 Bankr. LEXIS 1063, at *22 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 12, 1991) (approving an asset purchase agreement containing provisions excluding liability for both unpaid contribution amounts as well as withdrawal liability).

n23 Treas. Reg. § 54.4980B-9, Q&A-8(a).

n24 Treas. Reg. § 54.4980B-9, Q&A-8(b), (c). A successor employer must provide COBRA coverage to former participants in the seller's plan whose employment prior to the qualifying event was associated with the assets or the stock being sold and whose qualifying event occurred in connection with or prior to the sale. Id. at Q&A-4.

n25 Treas. Reg. § 54.4980B-9, Q&A-1(c).

n26 Treas. Reg. § 54.4980B-9, Q&A-8(c).

n27 See, e.g., In re TWL Corp. & TWL Knowledge Group, Inc., 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 3392 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. Dec. 15, 2008) (approving a sale motion free and clear of all successor liability, explicitly including COBRA liability). There are no published cases, however, regarding whether precluding COBRA liability for a purchaser in a section 363 Sale is proper.

RELATED LINKS: For a complete discussion of Bankruptcy Code section 363, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ ch. 363.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

John R. Cornell is a partner in the New York office of Jones Day and advises the firm's clients on all aspects of their executive compensation and employee benefits programs. With more than 40 years of experience, he has been the lead benefits and compensation attorney in restructuring matters when corporations and other entities prepare for, enter and emerge from chapter 11 proceedings under the Bankruptcy Code. Mr. Cornell handled the benefits and compensation aspects of the restructuring of Chrysler LLC, and the emergence of the new entity, Chrysler Group LLC. He is also active on restructuring matters for companies in the automotive and basic manufacturing industries. His experience includes the termination of underfunded defined benefit plans and retiree welfare plans and related negotiations with the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, creditor groups and other stakeholders. He is also involved in designing and implementing compensation programs covering key executives of companies in financial distress. He received B.A. and M.A. (hon.) degrees from Colby College in 1965 and 1997, respectively, a J.D. from Georgetown University Law Center in 1968, where he was an Executive Editor of the Law Journal, and an L.L.M. in Taxation from New York University in 1972.

Daniel C. Hagen is a partner in the Cleveland office of Jones Day and is the co-chair of the firm's employee benefits and executive compensation practice. He advises Jones Day clients on all aspects of their executive compensation and employee benefits programs, with special emphasis on restructurings, mergers and acquisitions and executive compensation programs and agreements. Mr. Hagen's experience in bankruptcy and other restructuring matters has covered the full range of benefits and compensation issues that need to be handled in those settings, including terminations of defined benefit pension plans, negotiations with the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, the redesign or elimination of retiree welfare benefits and the design and implementation of compensation programs for debtors and reorganized companies. Mr. Hagen received his B.A. from Baldwin-Wallace College (summa cum laude) in 1977 and his J.D. from the University of Virginia, where he was a member of the law review, in 1980. He is listed in the Best Lawyers in America and in Chambers USA (America's Leading Lawyers for Business).

Tricia Eschbach-Hall is a partner in the Cleveland office of Jones Day and practices in the areas of employee benefits and executive compensation. She counsels clients on the administration and legal compliance of qualified and nonqualified retirement plans, welfare benefit plans and compensation programs. Ms. Eschbach-Hall has considerable experience providing advice to distressed employers with respect to the benefits and compensation issues raised during corporate reorganizations. She has assisted clients with the establishment and funding of VEBAs to fund retiree medical benefits and has also provided advice relating to the many issues that arise in connection with underfunded pension plans of debtors. She has provided benefits-specific advice in several bankruptcy proceedings, has assisted distressed companies in out-of-court restructurings. Ms. Eschbach-Hall received her B.A. from Kenyon College (cum laude) in 1996 and her J.D. (with honors) in 1999 from The Ohio State University, where she was a Managing Editor of the Ohio State Law Journal.

Lisa Rothman Jesner is an associate in the New York office of Jones Day in the employee benefits and executive compensation group. Her practice includes counseling clients on benefits and compensation issues, and on matters that arise in the course of corporate transactions and restructurings. Ms. Rothman Jesner has counseled clients on various aspects of bankruptcy matters, including negotiations and litigation with the PBGC and establishment of VEBAs in connection with modification of retiree benefits in bankruptcy. She also has experience designing, drafting and implementing compensation programs for senior management of distressed companies. She has represented debtors and creditors in bankruptcy proceedings, including Chrysler LLC and Dana Corporation. Ms. Rothman Jesner received her B.A. from Brandeis University (cum laude) in 1995, and her J.D. from Georgetown University Law Center (cum laude) in 1999.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

4 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on Wolfe v. Greentree Mortgage Corp.

2010 Emerging Issues 5111

S. Andrew Jurs on Wolfe v. Greentree Mortgage Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6005 (N.D. W. Va. Jan. 26, 2010)

By S. Andrew Jurs

June 11, 2010

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis considers a district court's decision that lays out the rules and standards for mandatory and equitable abstention. In the analyzed decision, mandatory abstention was not applicable because the action was a core proceeding and there was an adequate alternative basis for jurisdiction. And equitable abstention was not necessary given that the core proceeding would have a substantial effect on the bankruptcy estate.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Neither Mandatory Abstention Nor Equitable Abstention Was Warranted When a Lawsuit Was a Core Proceeding and Its Result Would Significantly Affect the Bankruptcy Case

In Wolfe v. Greentree Mortgage Corporation, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6005 (N.D. W. Va. Jan. 26, 2010), the district court considered whether to continue exercising jurisdiction over an action commenced in state court but removed to the bankruptcy court, and subsequently to the district court, under 28 U.S.C. §1452. After determining that the Debtor's lawsuit was a core proceeding, the district court held that mandatory abstention was not required by 28 U.S.C. § 1334(c). The district court further held that mandatory abstention was not necessary when there was an adequate basis for asserting jurisdiction due to diversity of the parties. Finally, the district court balanced various factors and determined that equitable abstention was unwarranted where the lawsuit would have a large effect on the Debtor's bankruptcy estate.

Facts and Procedural History

On July 11, 2009, Debtor filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of West Virginia. On October 19, 2009, Debtor filed a lawsuit in the Circuit Court of Jefferson County, West Virginia, alleging seven claims against the defendants. These claims included (1) unconscionable inducement of a loan, rendering the deed of trust void; (2) misconduct by a notary public; (3) allegations of joint venture and agency; (4) breach of contract; (5) estoppel preventing foreclosure on the loan; (6) illegal debt collection; and (7) illegal return of payment. The Debtor's goal was to invalidate the deed of trust and obtain damages.

On November 24, 2009, defendant America's Servicing Company ("ASC") and defendant Deutsche Bank Trust Company Americas ("Deutsche Bank") removed the action to the U.S. District Court, asserting as alternate bases for removal the bankruptcy removal statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1452, and diversity removal, 28 U.S.C. § 1441(a).

Debtor subsequently moved to remand the case to state court. With respect to the removal under the bankruptcy statute, Debtor contended that mandatory abstention was required, and that, in the alternative, the District Court should remand the case under equitable remand.

Legal Analysis

Section 1334 of title 28 provides the requirements for mandatory abstention:

Upon timely motion of a party in a proceeding based upon a State law claim or State law cause of action, related to a case under title 11 but not arising under title 11 or arising in a case under title 11, with respect to which an action cannot have commenced in a court of the United States absent jurisdiction under this section, the district court shall abstain from hearing such proceeding if an action is commenced, and can be timely adjudicated, in a State forum of appropriate jurisdiction.

28 U.S.C. § 1334(c)(2). Applying this standard in a previous matter, the district court noted in Mey v. Herbalife International, Inc., 2003 WL 23571253 (N.D. W.Va. Nov. 19, 2003):

"[A] district court must abstain from hearing a non-core, related matter if the action can be timely adjudicated in state court." Howe v. Vaughan, 913 F.2d 1138, 1142 (5th Cir. 1990). In order for mandatory abstention to apply, the plaintiff must show: (1) a timely motion to abstain has been made; (2) the proceeding is based upon a state law cause of action; (3) the proceeding is related to a Title 11 case, but is not a core proceeding; (4) the action could not have been commenced in federal court absent jurisdiction under § 1334; and (5) an action is commenced, and can be timely adjudicated, in state court with proper jurisdiction. See Personette v. Kennedy (In re Midgard Corp.), 204 B.R. 764, 776-79 (BAP 10th Cir. 1997); In re Futura Ind., Inc., 69 B.R. 831, 834 (Bank. E.D. Pa. 1987); see also Busines and Commercial Litigation in Federal Courts, § 45.5 (Robert L. Haig Ed., 1998).

2003 WL 23571253, at *3; see also Barge v. Western Southern Life Ins. Co., 307 B.R. 541, 546 (S.D. W. Va. 2004).

Commentary

The district court's holding in Wolfe is noteworthy in that it addresses the process for determining whether an action should be remanded to state court. After applying the statutory requirements to the case at hand, the district court found that mandatory abstention was not applicable for two reasons: (1) the action was a core proceeding; and (2) there was an adequate alternative basis for jurisdiction. With mandatory abstention no longer an option, the district court determined that equitable abstention was not necessary given that the core proceeding would have a substantial effect on the bankruptcy estate.

The Action Is a Core Proceeding. Section 157(b)(2) of title 28 provides that core proceedings include, but are not limited to: (A) matters concerning the administration of the estate; (K) determination of the validity, extent, or priority of liens; and (O) other proceedings affecting the liquidation of the assets of the estate or the adjustment of the debtor-creditor or the equity security holder relationship, except personal injury tort or wrongful death claims. Because the Debtor sought, in large part, to invalidate the lien of the deed of trust, the district court found that the action fell squarely within 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(K). The district court based this conclusion on In re Smith, 300 B.R. 828, 829-30 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 2003), which held that an action to determine the validity of a lien on real property is a core proceeding:

If Plaintiff's lien against the real estate is subject to rescission, the trustee may have a valuable asset to administer. 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(A), (K) (core proceedings include matters concerning administration of the estate and determinations of the validity, extent, or priority of liens). The Court therefore must conclude that Debtor's adversary proceeding is a core proceeding in Defendant's bankruptcy case.

To the extent that mandatory abstention does not apply to core proceedings, therefore, the case could not be remanded on that ground.

An Alternate Basis for Jurisdiction Existed. According to the district court, even if the case were not a core proceeding, mandatory abstention would still not apply because the case could have been brought in federal court anyway due to the complete diversity between the Debtor and defendants. While the Debtor included a claim against a notary public Anthony Freda, the district court found that Mr. Freda was fraudulently joined. Under the doctrine of fraudulent joinder, a district court can assume jurisdiction over a case even if there are nondiverse named defendants at the time the case is removed. Mayes v. Rapoport, 198 F.3d 457, 461 (4th Cir. 1999); Marshall v. Manville Sales Corp., 6 F.3d 229, 232-33 (4th Cir. 1993); Cobb v. Delta Exports, Inc., 186 F.3d 675, 677 (5th Cir. 1999). The doctrine permits a district court to disregard, for jurisdictional purposes, the citizenship of certain nondiverse defendants, assume jurisdiction over a case, dismiss the nondiverse defendants and thereby retain jurisdiction. Mayes, 198 F.3d at 461.

In this case, the removing defendants did not meet their burden as to their claim against the notary. The Debtor alleged that Mr. Freda engaged in official misconduct by notarizing Debtor's signature on the deed of trust outside Debtor's presence and without witnessing Debtor sign the document. Debtor did not, however, deny that she in fact signed the deed of trust. Because the sole purpose of a notary is merely to acknowledge the authenticity of the signature, Dickey v. Royal Banks of Missouri, 111 F.3d 580, 584 (8th Cir. 1997), no damages could arise from the notary public's failure to properly acknowledge that signature. In other words, because there was no damage, there could be no judgment against defendant Freda, and without defendant Freda in the action, there was diversity among the parties. Accordingly, the action could have been brought in the district court and the Debtor could not satisfy the fourth requirement of mandatory abstention.

No Basis for Equitable Remand. In the alternative, the Debtor sought that the district court equitably remand the case. Section 1452(b) of title 28 provides, in relevant part: "The court to which such claim or cause of action is removed may remand such claim or cause of action on any equitable ground." Courts have described several factors concerning the issue of whether to remand under section 1452(b):

(1) the effect on the efficient administration of the bankruptcy estate; (2) the extent to which issues of state law predominate; (3) the difficulty or unsettled nature of the applicable state law; (4) comity; (5) the degree of relatedness or remoteness of the proceeding to the main bankruptcy case; (6) the existence of a right to a jury trial; and (7) prejudice to the party involuntarily removed from state court.

Barge v. Western Southern Life Ins. Co., 307 B.R. 541, 547 (S.D. W.Va. 2004) (citing In re Riverside Nursing Home, 144 B.R. 951, 956 (S.D. N.Y. 1992)); see also Shubert v. Roche Holding Ag., 157 F.Supp.2d 542, 545 (E.D. Pa. 2001); In re Merry-Go-Round Enterprises, Inc., 222 B.R. 254, 257 (D. Md. 1998).

The first consideration is the effect on the efficient administration of the bankruptcy estate. As the district court noted, the issue of the validity of the deed of trust is one that will have a large impact on the administration of the estate, since it may provide a free and clear asset that could inure to the benefit of creditors. The same is true of any money judgment, which may be obtained and which would inure to the benefit of the creditors. "Where the proceedings will affect the amount or existence of creditors' dividends, abstention is inappropriate." In re Ascher, 128 B.R. 639, 647 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1991) (citing J.D. Marshall Internat'l v. Redstart, 74 B.R. 651, 656 (N.D. Ill. 1987)).

The second consideration is the extent to which state law issues predominate. According to the district court, this factor militated in favor of remand.

In contrast, though, the third consideration favored no remand because there is the little difficulty or unsettled nature to the applicable state law. The district court had a large number of diversity cases on its docket that dealt with same or similar issues, so it faced little difficulty in handling this case.

The fourth consideration is comity, and the district court found little difference one way or the other with regard to this factor. The case was removed very early in the litigation process and does involve a debtor in bankruptcy.

The fifth consideration is the degree of relatedness or remoteness of the proceeding to the main bankruptcy case. The resolution of the issues in the state lawsuit would have a large impact on the extent of the dividends to creditors. Further, this was a core proceeding. Accordingly, this case was very much related to the main bankruptcy matter, in which case remand would be inappropriate.

The sixth consideration is the existence of a right to a jury trial. In bankruptcy, there is no right to a trial by jury, which would be available in state court. The seventh and final consideration is prejudice to the party involuntarily removed from state court. According to the district court, the Debtor would not be unfairly prejudiced by proceeding in the federal court system.

Based upon these considerations, and especially given that the case was a core proceeding that may have a large effect on the bankruptcy estate, the district court declined to equitably remand this case.

Conclusion

The decision in Wolfe v. Greentree Mortgage Corporation is useful because it lays out the rules and standards for both mandatory and equitable abstention. In its decision, the district court gave substantial weight to the fact that the Debtor's lawsuit was a core proceeding such that mandatory abstention was not required by 28 U.S.C. § 1334. Additionally, the fact that diversity jurisdiction provided an adequate basis for jurisdiction further militated against mandatory abstention. Finally, of the various factors to be considered in determining whether to equitably abstain, the district court relied most heavily on the fact that this core proceeding would have a sufficiently large effect on the Debtor's bankruptcy estate such that abstention was unwarranted.

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion related to abstention under 28 U.S.C. § 1334(c), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ 1-3 Collier on Bankruptcy P 3.05

For analysis of other decisions relating to jurisdiction, procedure and litigation, click ■ here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors' rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

5 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Putting More Equity Into Equitable Mootness

2010 Emerging Issues 5091

Putting More Equity Into Equitable Mootness: Recent Cases in the Tenth and Fifth Circuits Signal More Appellate Review of Plan Confirmation Orders

By Phillip D. Anker, Craig Goldblatt and Lisa E. Ewart

June 3, 2010

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis analyzes the judicially-created doctrine of "equitable mootness." Although equitable mootness has historically been viewed as a powerful tool for debtors to limit appellate review of orders confirming their chapter 11 plans, recent decisions in the Fifth and Tenth Circuits may suggest an inclination of some appellate courts to apply a more flexible standard toward review of confirmation decisions on appeal.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Introduction

The bankruptcy process often moves more quickly toward a final result than litigation in other courts. In many bankruptcy cases, courts recognize that urgent and final judicial action will better preserve the value of the debtor's assets, increase the chances for the debtor's successful reorganization and maximize recoveries for creditors. Indeed, chapter 11 plans of reorganization are often consummated just days after confirmation by the court-which can undermine the efforts of an objecting party to pursue an effective appeal, in part because of the judicially-created doctrine of "equitable mootness."

Although equitable mootness has historically been viewed as a powerful tool for debtors to limit appellate review of orders confirming their chapter 11 plans, recent decisions in the Fifth and Tenth Circuits may suggest an inclination of some appellate courts to apply a more flexible standard toward review of confirmation decisions on appeal.

What is equitable mootness?

Equitable mootness is the doctrine under which appellate courts refrain from hearing bankruptcy appeals relating to plan confirmation when it would be "inequitable" to do so. Distinct from "constitutional mootness," equitable mootness does not relate to an appellate court's inability to hear a case on the ground that there is no longer a live case or controversy, but the court's unwillingness to do so on the ground that providing relief after a plan has become effective is simply impractical. See In re Pacific Lumber Co., 584 F.3d 229, 240 (5th Cir. 2009) (noting constitutional mootness "prevents adjudication when cases are no longer 'live'" and equitable mootness "abdicates appellate review of very real, continuing controversies"). As the Fifth Circuit has aptly noted, equitable mootness is "a kind of appellate abstention that favors finality of reorganizations and protects the interrelated multi-party expectations on which they rest." Id.

The goal of equitable mootness is to "strike the proper balance between the equitable considerations of finality and good faith reliance on a judgment and competing interests that underlie the right of a party to seek review of a bankruptcy order adversely affecting him." In re Manges, 29 F.3d 1034, 1039 (5th Cir. 1994). Each of the 12 regional Circuit Courts of Appeals has adopted some form of the doctrine. n1

Generally, courts have agreed that the "substantial consummation" of a chapter 11 plan-the point when the debtor has implemented the major transactions contemplated by the plan-is the key moment after which a confirmation appeal may become equitably moot. For this reason, a party pursuing a confirmation appeal is best served by seeking and obtaining a stay pending appeal so that the debtor is enjoined from substantial consummation, and so that the plan's effectiveness is essentially put on hold while the appeal proceeds. But many times, an appellant is unsuccessful in obtaining a stay pending appeal because the bankruptcy court confirming the plan (and the appellate court considering a motion for an emergency stay) is concerned that a delay in plan implementation will adversely affect the debtor and creditors as a whole.

Recent decisions may suggest more flexibility for appellants

Whether the reorganization plan has been substantially consummated and whether a stay of the confirmation decision has been obtained pending appeal remain two important factors for courts considering equitable mootness. But three recent cases, one from the Fifth Circuit and two from the Tenth, make clear that, before a reviewing court refrains from hearing an appeal, it must consider the equities of the situation, including the equities as they relate to the appellant. These decisions may indicate a somewhat greater ability of an appellant to convince a district court, bankruptcy appellate panel, or court of appeals to hear the merits of an appeal even where there is no stay pending appeal and where the plan has already been substantially consummated.

In re Blast Energy Services, Inc., 593 F.3d 418 (5th Cir. 2010)

First, in Blast, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals criticized the district court for too easily reaching a conclusion that a confirmation appeal was equitably moot.

In Blast, Alberta Energy Partners ("Alberta") sought to appeal two orders: (1) the denial of its motion for rehearing of the district court's earlier dismissal of Alberta's appeal of the confirmation order; and (2) the district court's denial of Alberta's appeal of the rulings permitting debtors-Blast Energy Services, Inc. and Eagle Domestic Drilling Operations, LLC ("Blast")-to assume an executory contract between Alberta and the debtors. Although Alberta had been unsuccessful in obtaining a stay and the plan had been substantially consummated, the parties stipulated that the confirmation order would have no effect with respect to the appeals relating to the assumption of the executory contract and that granting that relief would not affect the reorganization or any third parties. The parties also agreed and represented to the district court that the assumption of the contract was not essential to Blast's reorganization. Despite these representations, the district court dismissed all appeals as equitably moot and also as statutorily moot pursuant to Section 1127(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, a provision of the Bankruptcy Code that permits a debtor to modify a plan, with court approval, between confirmation and substantial consummation "if circumstances warrant such modification." 11 U.S.C. § 1127(b).

With respect to statutory mootness, the district court reasoned that the appeals "would require modification of the substantially consummated Plan" in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 1127(b). In re Blast Energy Services, Inc., 593 F.3d at 423 n.1. But the Fifth Circuit disagreed, holding-consistent with the statutory language-that Section 1127(b) applies only to bar changes to reorganization plans by the plan proponent post-confirmation, and does not apply to changes in a plan necessitated by a confirmation appeal by a party objecting to confirmation. Id. at 426-27.

As for equitable mootness, the Fifth Circuit reiterated its previously-announced three-pronged analysis under which a court weighs the following factors to determine whether an appeal is equitably moot: (1) whether a stay has been obtained; (2) whether the plan has been substantially consummated; and (3) whether the relief requested would affect either the rights of the parties not before the court or the success of the plan. Id. at 424. In addition, a court may also consider (1) the degree of prejudice to third parties and to some of the litigants and (2) the "arbitrariness" of the ruling being appealed. Id. at 425 n.4.

The Fifth Circuit found that, in the face of the parties' stipulation, the district court's unsupported conclusion that "the parties not before the court, including the recipients of the monies already distributed, would be harmed by the modification or that the modification would put the success of the Plan at risk" was clearly erroneous. Accordingly, the district court had abused its discretion in refusing to hear the merits of the appeal on the ground that it was equitably moot. The Fifth Circuit remanded the matter to the district court with instructions to fully consider the equitable mootness question and to "articulate in detail the reasons for its conclusion, with references to the record." Id. at 426.

Search Market Direct v. Jubber (In re Paige), 584 F.3d 1327 (10th Cir. 2009)

Second, in Paige, the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals announced a new rule for equitable mootness that requires the reviewing court to conduct a more detailed analysis of the circumstances surrounding the appeal before it may reach the conclusion that an appeal from plan confirmation is equitably moot.

Paige involved competing bankruptcy reorganization plans. The plan confirmed by the bankruptcy court was not supposed to become effective until after "any pending appeals were resolved," but that requirement was waived by the plan proponents. Fearing substantial consummation, the sponsor of the rejected plan-SMDI-sought a stay pending appeal. The bankruptcy court denied the stay, and SMDI appealed the confirmation order to the district court. The district court dismissed the appeal as both constitutionally and equitably moot.

As for the former, the Tenth Circuit held that so long as some form of relief on appeal-even partial relief-could be granted, an appeal is not constitutionally moot. In re Paige, 584 F.3d at 1336. In this case, because the court could reverse the confirmation order and provide SMDI an opportunity to seek approval of its own plan or to propose a new plan, some relief was possible. Id.

With respect to equitable mootness, the court outlined a six factor test:

It seems that under the doctrine of equitable mootness a court should decline to hear an appeal of a bankruptcy court's decision where the answers to the following six questions indicate that reaching the merits would be unfair or impracticable: (1) Has the appellant sought and/or obtained a stay pending appeal? (2) Has the appealed plan been substantially consummated? (3) Will the rights of innocent third parties be adversely affected by reversal of the confirmed plan? (4) Will the public-policy need for reliance on the confirmed bankruptcy plan-and the need for creditors generally to be able to rely on bankruptcy court decisions-be undermined by reversal of the plan? (5) If appellant's challenge were upheld, what would be the likely impact upon a successful reorganization of the debtor? And (6) based upon a quick look at the merits of appellant's challenge to the plan, is appellant's challenge legally meritorious or equitably compelling?

Id. at 1338-39.

The Tenth Circuit stated that the plan proponent seeking to prevent appellate review bears the burden of proving that, in light of these factors, the court should abstain from reaching the merits. In this regard, it rejected the view of other Circuits that if the plan has been substantially consummated, the burden shifts to the party seeking review of the challenge to the plan. See id. at 1340 (rejecting In re Chateaugay Corp., 94 F.3d 772, 776 (2d Cir. 1996)).

The Tenth Circuit also noted that the six factors it had identified "are not necessarily conclusive, nor will each factor always merit equal weight." Id. at 1339. But the court provided some guidance into the application of these factors. For example, if the plan proponents have tried to accelerate the consummation process, courts should be less inclined to find the appeal to be equitably moot. Id. at 1341-42. With respect to the stay factor, the court noted that if a party sought a stay of the appeal-regardless of whether a party was successful-the court would be more inclined to review the merits of the decision below. Id. at 1340-41. The Tenth Circuit also held that it is important for the district court to take a "quick look" at the merits of the claim because claims that went to the integrity of the bankruptcy process or the good faith of the parties "should not be lightly swept under the rug in the name of equitable mootness." Id. at 1348.

In re Centrix Financial LLC, 355 Fed. Appx. 199, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 26716 (10th Cir. 2009)

Third, in Centrix Financial, the Tenth Circuit had an opportunity to apply the new standard it had announced in Paige.

In Centrix Financial, the appellants had filed a notice of appeal of the confirmation order, but had not sought a stay of consummation of the plan pending appeal. The trustee of the liquidating trust created under the plan thereafter filed a motion to dismiss the appeal, arguing that, because the plan had been substantially consummated, a reversal of confirmation was impractical and inequitable. The district court agreed and determined that the appeal was equitably moot.

On appeal, the Tenth Circuit noted that the district court had decided the question before the Tenth Circuit had issued its decision in Paige, and therefore, the district court had not had the benefit of the Tenth Circuit's guidance that it should consider all of the factors outlined in the Paige decision. Specifically, the district court had not considered the sixth question of the analysis: "whether Appellants' challenge to the Plan is legally meritorious or equitably compelling 'based upon a quick look at the merits.'" In re Centrix Financial LLC, 355 Fed. Appx. 199, 202, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 26716, at *7. The court of appeals also drew a distinction between the question that the district court had considered-whether the relief requested by Appellants would affect the success of the plan-and the question that the Tenth Circuit had found relevant in Paige-the likely impact of an appellant's challenge to the successful reorganization of the debtor (whether under this or another plan). Id. The Tenth Circuit remanded the case to the district court to allow it to weigh and apply those factors in the first instance.

What are the implications?

These decisions highlight efforts by the appellate courts to reconcile a federal court's "virtually unflagging obligation" to exercise the jurisdiction Congress has granted by statute with the need for finality in bankruptcy reorganization plans, and suggest that the balance may be tipping in favor of exercising jurisdiction. In all three decisions, the courts gave teeth to the equity component of the analysis by making clear that the reviewing court must engage in an analysis of the equities of the case and that the failure of the would-be appellant to obtain a stay and the appellee's substantial consummation of a reorganization plan by themselves are not enough to invoke the equitable mootness doctrine. The Tenth Circuit went even further and required the district court to take "a quick look at the merits" to consider whether the appellant's challenge is legally meritorious or equitably compelling.

To the extent these decisions suggest a trend of favoring review of confirmation orders over abstention, plan proponents should be prepared to defend confirmation orders on appeal even when their plans have been substantially consummated. In addition, the possibility of review and reversal on appeal makes it all the more important for plan proponents to try to build consensus and to make their best effort to settle disputes before confirmation in order to avoid the risk associated with reversal of a substantially consummated plan. Indeed, if a higher likelihood of review exists, objecting parties may find themselves with more leverage in confirmation disputes.

Return to Text

ⁿ¹ See In re Pub. Serv. Co. of New Hampshire, 963 F.2d 469, 473 (1st Cir. 1992); In re Chateaugay, 988 F.2d 322, 325 (2d Cir. 1993); In re Continental Airlines, 91 F.3d 553, 559 (3d Cir. 1996); Mac Panel Co. v. Virginia Panel Corp., 283 F.3d 622, 625 (4th Cir. 2002); In re Manges, 29 F.3d 1034, 1038-39 (5th Cir. 1994); In re United Producers, 526 F.3d 942, 947 (6th Cir. 2008); In re UNR Indus., Inc., 20 F.3d 766, 769 (7th Cir. 1994); In re Smith, 209 Fed.Appx. 607, 607 (8th Cir. Dec. 14, 2006) (unpublished) (per curiam); In re Roberts Farms, Inc., 652 F.2d 793, 798 (9th Cir. 1981); In re Paige, 584 F.3d 1327, 1337 (10th Cir. 2009); In re East Coast Beverage Corp., 143 Fed.Appx. 259, 260 (11th Cir. Aug. 30, 2005) (unpublished) (per curiam); In re AOV, 792 F.2d 1140, 1147 (D.C. Cir. 1986).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Philip D. Anker is a partner in WilmerHale's Litigation/Controversy Department and vice chair of the firm's Bankruptcy and Financial Restructuring Practice Group. He is a member of the Bankruptcy and Creditor Rights Litigation Practice Group and the Business Trial Group and is resident in the firm's New York office. Mr. Anker is an experienced bankruptcy litigator and counselor, who has practiced for more than 20 years in the field. He can be reached via email at philip.anker@wilmerhale.com.

Craig Goldblatt is a partner in WilmerHale's Litigation/Controversy Department, and a member of the Appellate and Supreme Court Litigation and Bankruptcy and Creditor Rights Litigation Practice Groups and the Business Trial Group. His practice focuses on complex civil and appellate litigation, with an emphasis on bankruptcy-related litigation and other restructuring matters. Mr. Goldblatt is resident in the firm's DC office and can be reached via email at craig.goldblatt@wilmerhale.com.

Lisa E. Ewart is a senior associate in the firm's Corporate and Transactional and Litigation/Controversy Departments, and the firm's Bankruptcy and Financial Restructuring Group. Ms. Ewart is resident in the firm's DC office and can be reached at lisa.ewart@wilmerhale.com.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

6 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Jeannette K. Boot, Craig Goldblatt and Lisa E. Ewart.
All Rights Reserved.

In re Lehman Bros. Holdings Inc.

2010 Emerging Issues 5094

In re Lehman Bros. Holdings Inc. Raises Questions About Application of Safe Harbors to Complex Financial Products

By Jeannette K. Boot, Craig Goldblatt and Lisa E. Ewart

June 3, 2010

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis analyzes a case that narrowed the protections that the Bankruptcy Code was thought to provide to participants in the derivatives markets. The court ruled that "flip" provisions of swap documents triggered by a Lehman Brothers bankruptcy are unenforceable and that actions to enforce the swap documents violate bankruptcy's automatic stay, notwithstanding the Bankruptcy Code's "safe harbors" for swap agreements.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: In a decision issued on January 25, 2010, the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York substantially narrowed the protections that the Bankruptcy Code was thought to provide to participants in the derivatives markets. Lehman Bros. Special Fin. Inc. v. BNY Corporate Tr. Servs. (In re Lehman Bros. Holdings Inc.), 422 B.R. 407 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2010). Specifically, the bankruptcy court granted summary judgment in favor of Lehman Brothers Special Financing Inc. ("LBSF") and against the Trustee (the "Trustee") with respect to a series of notes, ruling that "flip" provisions of swap documents triggered by a Lehman Brothers bankruptcy are unenforceable and that actions to enforce the swap documents violate bankruptcy's automatic stay, notwithstanding the "safe harbors" for swap agreements contained in the Bankruptcy Code. The decision has several important implications for the financial community.

The Underlying Structure: Swaps and Flips

This case involves two series of credit-linked synthetic portfolio notes (the "Notes") issued by Saphir Finance Public Limited Company ("Saphir")-a special-purpose entity created by Lehman Brothers International (Europe)-in connection with a multi-issuer secured obligation program. Each series of Notes was governed by a supplemental trust deed (a "Supplemental Trust Deed") which referenced a credit default swap agreement (a "Swap Agreement") linked to that series. Each Swap Agreement was evidenced by a written confirmation and related ISDA Master Agreement, schedules, and annexes entered into between Saphir, as the issuer of the Notes, and LBSF, as the swap counterparty.

The Notes were secured by collateral held by the Trustee in trust for the benefit of the creditors of Saphir. Saphir's creditors included Perpetual Trustee Company Limited, as the holder of the Notes (the "Noteholder"), and LBSF, as the swap counterparty. Under the Supplemental Trust Deed, the rights of LBSF to the collateral would normally take priority over those of the Noteholder. The documents provided, however, that in the event of default by LBSF under the Swap Agreement, the order of priority "flipped," so that the Noteholder would be entitled to priority over amounts otherwise payable to LBSF. In addition, as is often the case in derivatives contracts, the Swap Agreement provided that a bankruptcy filing by either LBSF or its parent, Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. ("LBHI"),ⁿ¹ would be an event of default and therefore a trigger for the "flip" provision.

The Bankruptcy: Ipso Facto Provisions and the Automatic Stay

LBHI filed for bankruptcy on September 15, 2008. LBSF filed for bankruptcy 18 days later, on October 3, 2008.

On November 25, 2008, counsel to the Lehman Brothers entities sent a letter to the Trustee, advising it of the "automatic stay" in place as a result of the bankruptcy filings under Section 362 of the Bankruptcy Code,ⁿ² and asserting that contractual provisions purporting to subordinate LBSF's claims were unenforceable. On December 1, 2008, Saphir sent notices to LBSF terminating the Swap Agreement.

On May 20, 2009, LBSF commenced its adversary proceeding, seeking a declaratory judgment that (1) the "flip" provisions of the Swap Agreement that modify LBSF's payment priority upon an event of default constitute an unenforceable ipso facto clause under Sections 365(e)(1) and 541(c)(1)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code, and (2) any action to enforce the payment provisions modifying LBSF's payment priority violates the Code's automatic stay provisions.

The Decision

The bankruptcy court found in favor of LBSF. Three particular aspects of the opinion warrant attention.

1. The bankruptcy case of a "sufficiently related debtor" can trigger the ipso facto protections of Sections 365(e)(1) and 541(c)(1)(B).

Sections 365(e)(1) and 541(c)(1)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code bar the enforcement of so-called ipso facto clauses-contractual provisions that alter parties' rights based on the filing of a bankruptcy petition. But until this decision, it was generally understood that these provisions of the Bankruptcy Code applied only to contractual provisions tied to bankruptcy filings by the contractual counterparty. A contractual provision that was triggered by the bankruptcy filing of a third party, by contrast, was widely believed to be fully enforceable as against the contractual counterparty.

This decision calls that conventional wisdom into question. Noting that "each of these sections of the Bankruptcy Code prohibits modification of a debtor's right solely because of a provision in an agreement conditioned upon the commencement of a case under this title," the bankruptcy court concluded that LBSF could assert the protections of these provisions based on the bankruptcy filing of LBHI, even though LBSF did not file for bankruptcy itself until 18 days later. In re Lehman Bros. at 419 (emphasis in original). In reaching this conclusion, the bankruptcy court relied on the absence of the language in the statute that limited "a case" to one "by or against the debtor" and the fact that early drafts of the legislation-not adopted by Congress-did include such a modification. Id.

2. The "safe harbor" provisions of the Bankruptcy Code apply only to the Swap Agreement-the ISDA Master Agreement, schedules and written confirmation-and not related documents.

Even if the change in priority distribution effected by the "flip" provision would otherwise violate the ipso facto restriction in the Bankruptcy Code, the Code includes a "safe harbor" that allows parties to a swap agreement to terminate that agreement in the event of a counterparty's bankruptcy.ⁿ³ This "safe harbor" is part of a broad set of statutory protections intended to exempt derivatives contracts from the application of bankruptcy law and guard against instability in financial markets as a result of one market participant's bankruptcy.

But this transaction was not a simple swap agreement; rather it was a more complex structured transaction involving swaps. It therefore presented the question whether the safe harbor provision protects the exercise of a contractual term that changes the priority of distribution of collateral when that term is included in a related document, rather than in the swap agreement itself. In re Lehman Bros. at 421. The bankruptcy court reviewed the language of Section 560 and determined-notwithstanding the statute's broad language extending to contractual provisions "arising under or in connections with the termination . . . of one or more swap agreements," and notwithstanding the Trustee's argument that the Swap Agreement expressly incorporated the terms of the Supplemental Trust Deed-that the alteration of distribution rights are not protected by the safe harbor. Because the provisions modifying distribution were contained in the Supplemental Trust Deed and not in the Swap Agreement itself, the bankruptcy court concluded that the exercise of any such provision is not protected by the statutory safe harbor. Id.

3. Decisions of foreign courts that do not appropriately consider United States bankruptcy law should not be provided comity.

It is also noteworthy that in a prior judicial decision in the United Kingdom (the "UK Decision"), the UK court held that LBSF's interest in the collateral securing the Swap Agreement was "always limited and conditional" and that the change in priority distribution became effective on the date of LBHI's bankruptcy. The Trustee argued that the agreements between the parties are governed by and construed in accordance with English law, and that the bankruptcy court should defer to the UK Decision. The bankruptcy court disagreed, noting that the United States has a strong interest in having a bankruptcy court resolve issues of federal bankruptcy law and that although the court may choose to give preclusive effect to a judgment rendered by a foreign court on the basis of comity, it is not obligated to do so. Because the bankruptcy court concluded that the UK Decision did not take sufficient account and consideration of the applicability and impact of United States bankruptcy laws, the court declined to give those decisions preclusive effect.

Implications

The potential implications of this decision are far-reaching.

First, the bankruptcy court purports to limit its holding that the ipso facto protections can be triggered on account of another entity's bankruptcy by stressing the unique complexity of the bankruptcies involving the Lehman-related entities and states that "nothing in this decision is intended to impact issues of substantive consolidation, the importance of each of the separate petition dates for purposes of allowing claims against each of the debtors or any other legal determination that may relate to the date of commencement of a case." In re Lehman Bros. at 419-420. The decision nevertheless raises an important question: if a contractual counterparty terminates a contract against a non-debtor subsidiary on account of a bankruptcy by another affiliate (such as a parent guarantor), may that otherwise proper termination later be invalidated if the subsidiary-counterparty itself later seeks bankruptcy protection? If so, under what circumstances? Beyond indicating that the result in this case was heavily influenced by the complexity of the Lehman bankruptcy, the court's decision provides relatively little guidance on the extent to which a different timing of the contract termination would affect the analysis of these issues.

Second, the bankruptcy court's holding that a bankruptcy termination clause needs to be in the same piece of paper as the swap agreement (and implicit holding that being incorporated by reference into the swap agreement was insufficient) in order to be protected by the safe harbor may raise questions about the application of the safe harbor provisions to other complex financial products. If the decision withstands appellate review, it may also require parties to complex financial products that involve swap arrangements to alter the structure of the agreements, or the manner in which they are documented, to ensure that swap counterparties are able to claim the protection of the statutory safe harbor.

Finally, the decision highlights the challenges and complexities involved when multi-national bankruptcies proceed in various jurisdictions.

Return to Text

n1 LBHI acts as credit support provider for LBSF's payment obligations under the Swap Agreement.

n2 References to Bankruptcy Code sections are references to 11 U.S.C. § 101 et seq.

n3 Specifically, Section 560 of the Bankruptcy Code permits "the exercise of any contractual right of any swap participant . . . to cause the liquidation, termination, or acceleration of one or more swap agreements because [of the filing of a bankruptcy] or to offset or net out any termination values or payment amounts arising under or in connections with the termination . . . of one or more swap agreements."

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Jeannette K. Boot is a partner in WilmerHale's Corporate and Transactional and Securities Departments, and a member of the Corporate and Investment Management Practice Groups. Her practice focuses on advising and representing institutional and entrepreneurial clients in derivatives transactions and trading agreements, working closely with the firm's tax, ERISA and bankruptcy teams with respect to these issues. Ms. Boot is resident in the firm's New York office and can be reached via email at jeannette.boot@wilmerhale.com.

Craig Goldblatt is a partner in WilmerHale's Litigation/Controversy Department, and a member of the Appellate and Supreme Court Litigation and Bankruptcy and Creditor Rights Litigation Practice Groups and the Business Trial Group. His practice focuses on complex civil and appellate litigation, with an emphasis on bankruptcy-related litigation and other restructuring matters. Mr. Goldblatt is resident in the firm's DC office and can be reached via email at craig.goldblatt@wilmerhale.com.

Lisa E. Ewart is a senior associate in the firm's Corporate and Transactional and Litigation/Controversy Departments, and the firm's Bankruptcy and Financial Restructuring Group. Ms. Ewart is resident in the firm's DC office and can be reached at lisa.ewart@wilmerhale.com.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

7 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

James M. Lawniczak on the Doctrine of Equitable Mootness

2010 Emerging Issues 5079

James M. Lawniczak on the Doctrine of Equitable Mootness

By James M. Lawniczak

May 26, 2010

SUMMARY: James M. Lawniczak considers the circumstances under which the doctrine of equitable mootness prevents appellate review of a consummated plan of reorganization. In particular, he focuses on three recent appellate cases, from the Fifth, Sixth and Tenth Circuits, and analyzes the different approaches they follow. There is much disagreement as to the standard of review on subsequent appeal and the actual factors to be applied in the final decision.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Recently, Three Courts of Appeals Have Addressed the Doctrine of Equitable Mootness, Considering Whether to Dismiss an Appeal from a Confirmed Plan of Reorganization That Has Been Substantially Consummated

"Equitable mootness" is a doctrine developed by appellate courts that provides under certain circumstances for the dismissal of appeals from bankruptcy court orders confirming plans. It is applied where a plan of reorganization has been "substantially consummated" such that the appellate court determines that it would be inequitable or impractical to grant relief to the appellant.

There have been a number of recent circuit court of appeals cases that have discussed and applied the doctrine of equitable mootness in a bankruptcy context. There is a split among the courts of appeals as to whether the standard of review of a lower court's decision on equitable mootness should be de novo or a more deferential standard, such as clearly erroneous or abuse of discretion. There are also differences among the courts of appeals as to the factors that are to be considered in making a determination whether to apply the doctrine. Those differences will be discussed below, following an introduction to the doctrine and a discussion of the facts of several of the recent courts of appeals cases.

What Is Equitable Mootness?

Chapter 11 plans of reorganizations can be quite complex and generally contain myriad concepts that combine to conclude a chapter 11 case. Oftentimes, parties who disagree with their treatment in such a plan object and, if they lose, appeal from the adverse decision. In those cases where the aggrieved party has a minor role in the scheme of the entire plan, the party may not be able, or even want, to post a large bond to stay consummation of a global plan, pending the appeal of its more narrow issue.

Thus, plans of reorganization are often consummated shortly after the confirmation order is entered, even if there are appeals pending from individual issues resolved by the plan. "Substantial consummation" is defined in 11 U.S.C. § 1101(2) as (A) transfer of all or substantially all of the property proposed by the plan to be transferred, (B) assumption by the debtor or its successor of the business or management of all or substantially all the affected property and (C) commencement of distribution under the plan.

Courts have developed the doctrine of "equitable mootness" to protect plans that have been substantially consummated from being overturned on appeal where the appellate court believes it would be inequitable under the circumstances to grant relief to the appellant because of the harm it would due to others. Each of the 12 circuit courts of appeals have adopted the doctrine, although the cases vary as to the elements or factors that the doctrine delineates. See Search Market Direct, Inc. v. Jubber (In re Paige), 584 F.3d 1327, 1337-38 (10th Cir. 2009), and the cases from each of the other 11 circuits cited therein.

Indeed, the courts have noted that the word "mootness" is incorrectly used. The doctrine does not require that the issues on appeal be completely "moot" for the appeal to be dismissed. Rather, a bankruptcy appeal is dismissed due to "equitable," "prudential" or "pragmatic" considerations. Paige, 584 F.3d at 1337; In re UNR Ind., Inc., 20 F.3d 766, 769 (7th Cir. 1994) (banishing the term "equitable mootness" from the "(local) lexicon" and using instead whether "it is prudent to upset the plan of reorganization at this late date"). However, the term "equitable mootness" has so long been employed by the courts that it continues to be misused in all circuits except for the Seventh. See, e.g., In re Continental Airlines, 91 F.3d 553, 559 (3d Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1057, 117 S. Ct. 686, 136 L. Ed.2d 610 (1997) (recognizing that "'equitable mootness' is an inapt description of the doctrine at issue here" but using it because "past cases have used that term").

There is also a narrower doctrine that applies to all appeals, called "constitutional mootness." This doctrine is based on the requirement in Article III, section 1 of the Constitution that federal courts adjudicate only actual cases or controversies. Therefore, any appeal will be dismissed as moot, if it has become impossible for the appellate court to grant any effectual relief whatsoever. Church of Scientology v. United States, 506 U.S. 9, 12, 113 S. Ct. 447, 449, 121 L. Ed.2d 313 (1992). Courts have made it clear that constitutional mootness is to be very strictly applied, requiring the inability to fashion any meaningful relief; it is not to be applied merely because a court can give only partial redress. See, e.g., Paige, 584 F.3d at 1336.

The Two-Tiered System of Bankruptcy Appeals

Except for the rare case where an appeal is taken directly from a decision of the bankruptcy court to the court of appeals, 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2), n1 appeals from bankruptcy courts are taken in the first instance either to the district court or a bankruptcy appellate panel. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), (b) and (c). Therefore, in most cases, the initial decision on whether the appeal is equitably moot will be presented to the district court or the bankruptcy appellate panel. A further appeal of right is then allowed from that decision to the appropriate circuit court of appeals. 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(1).

The Facts of Blast Energy

In Alberta Energy Partners v. Blast Energy Services, Inc. (In re Blast Energy Services, Inc.), 593 F.3d 418 (5th Cir. 2010), the debtor's confirmed plan of reorganization provided for the assumption of an executory contract with a third party. The prepetition contract had transferred a 50 percent interest in certain technology and governed the further development and management of the technology. 593 F.3d at 421-22. The third party appealed from the confirmation order, but its request for a stay was denied. Over $2 million was distributed under the plan, and the plan was substantially consummated. 593 F.3d at 422. The debtor entered into a stipulation with the third party that even though the plan was substantially consummated, granting relief to the third party "would not affect the reorganization or any third parties." Id. Notwithstanding the stipulation, the district court dismissed the appeal as moot.

The Facts of Paige

The debtor in Search Market Direct, Inc. v. Jubber (In re Paige), 584 F.3d 1327, 1330 (10th Cir. 2009), had a very valuable asset—the web domain name "FreeCreditScore.com." Two competing plans were advanced by parties who had been purchasing substantial portions of creditors' claims and whose true intentions were to acquire the name as cheaply as possible. Id. One of the plans was confirmed and substantially consummated with most of the estate's creditors paid. Id. The losing party appealed, but the district court dismissed the appeal as moot.

The Facts of United Producers

In Curreys of Nebraska, Inc. v. United Producers, Inc. (In re United Producers, Inc.), 526 F.3d 942, 945 (6th Cir. 2008), the debtor, an agricultural cooperative, was subject to a large $17 million prepetition judgment for breach of contract, fraud and conversion regarding cattle marketing. It proposed, and obtained confirmation of, a plan of reorganization paying creditors only a fraction of the judgment. Those creditors appealed, although they did not seek a stay. The plan was substantially consummated. Id.

The debtor moved the bankruptcy appellate panel to dismiss the appeal on grounds of equitable mootness, submitting the affidavit of the man who had been president of the debtor and was president of the reorganized debtor. The creditors disputed the evidence contained in the affidavit, and the appellate panel therefore remanded the matter to the bankruptcy court to hold a hearing on substantial consummation and third-party reliance on the plan. The bankruptcy court then found that the plan had been substantially consummated and that innocent third parties would be adversely affected if the plan were unwound. 526 F.3d at 945-46. The bankruptcy appellate panel dismissed the appeal under the equitable mootness doctrine.

Burden of Proof When Equitable Mootness Is Raised

In Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. LTV Steel Co., Inc. (In re Chateaugay Corp.), 94 F.3d 772, 776 (2d Cir. 1996), the court indicated that it would presume it would be inequitable or impractical to grant relief of a consummated plan of reorganization. The court indicated this presumption could be overcome by a showing of five factors. In essence, this shifted the burden of proof to the appellant to establish those five factors in cases where a plan has been substantially consummated.

This shifting of the burden of proof was expressly rejected by the Paige court. The court held there that a party "inviting the court not to reach the merits of an appeal always carries the burden." 584 F.3d at 1340.

What Standard of Review Should Be Used by a Court of Appeals Reviewing a Decision on Whether to Apply the Equitable Mootness Doctrine?

To the extent a lower court makes findings of fact based on an evidentiary record below, the court of appeals will examine those findings under the "clear error" standard. See Blast Energy, 593 F.3d at 423 ("[a] ruling based on . . . a clearly erroneous assessment of the evidence is an abuse of discretion"); Paige, 584 F.3d at 1334; United States ex rel. FCC v. GWI PCS 1 Inc. (In re GWI PCS 1 Inc.), 230 F.3d 788, 799 (5th Cir. 2000).

However, there is a split in the circuits as to the standard of review that should be used on the lower court's ultimate determination whether to apply the equitable mootness doctrine. One view is that the review should be de novo. The other is that the decision of the lower court is entitled to deference, so that it should be overturned only if clearly erroneous or if it constitutes an abuse of discretion.

De Novo Review. The courts that use de novo review rationalize that the initial decision on whether to dismiss a bankruptcy appeal as equitably moot was made on appeal by a court sitting as an appellate court, and therefore the court of appeals on the further appeal is in just as good a position to make the determination. See, e.g., United Producers, 526 F.3d at 946-47 (6th Cir.); GWI PCS 1 Inc., 230 F.3d at 799-800 (5th Cir.); First Union Real Estate Equity & Mortgage Inv. v. Club Assocs. (In re Club Assocs.), 956 F.2d 1065, 1069 (11th Cir. 1992).

Abuse of Discretion. Other courts apply an abuse of discretion standard even as to the lower court's ultimate legal determination of the equitable mootness issue. See, e.g., Paige, 584 F.3d at 1135 (10th Cir.); In re Continental Airlines, 91 F.3d 553, 560 (3d Cir. 1996) (en banc 7-6 decision); In re AOV Ind., Inc., 792 F.2d 1140, 1148 (D.C. Cir. 1986). Those courts note that the decision on equitable mootness "involves a discretionary balancing of equitable and prudential factors," which is why they conclude the abuse of discretion standard is the appropriate one. See Nordhoff Invs., Inc. v. Zenith Elec. Corp., 258 F.3d 180, 182 (3d Cir. 2001). The Paige court noted that the disagreement over the standard "is likely based on the unique role of the district courts in the bankruptcy context." 584 F.3d at 1335.

When Should the Doctrine of Equitable Mootness Be Applied?

All courts that have addressed the equitable mootness doctrine agree that it is highly fact specific and requires consideration of a wide range of factors, which the court then examines through "equitable," "prudential" and "pragmatic" eyes. Paige, 584 F.3d at 1337-38. There are no "rigid rules," to be followed; instead, the analysis is one of examination of the totality of the circumstances. Mac Panel Co. v. Virginia Panel Corp., 283 F.3d 622, 625 (4th Cir. 2002).

Several of the cases make the point that courts should be cautious before completely eliminating appellants' rights due to equitable mootness and apply the doctrine "with a scalpel rather than an axe." Bank of New York Trust Co., NA v. Official Unsecured Creditors' Committee (In re Pacific Lumber Co.), 584 F.3d 229, 240 (5th Cir. 2009). Each individual claim must be tested. 584 F.3d at 241. Even though full relief may no longer be available to an appellant, the court should nonetheless consider whether partial relief would be pragmatic and equitable before determining that the appellant's entire claim can no longer be pursued. Id.

There is a divergence among the courts of appeals as to the factors to employ in making an equitable mootness determination. The Fifth and Sixth Circuits use a three factor test: (1) whether a stay has been obtained; (2) whether the plan has been substantially consummated; and (3) whether the relief requested would affect the rights of parties not before the court or the success of the plan. Blast Energy, 593 F.3d at 424; United Producers, 526 F.3d at 947-48.

There are many more factors to be considered in the Tenth Circuit. The Paige court listed six questions, the answers to which would indicate whether reaching the merits of the appeal would be unfair or impracticable: (1) did appellant seek or obtain a stay; (2) has the plan been substantially consummated; (3) will the rights of innocent third parties be adversely affected by a reversal of the confirmation of the plan; (4) will public policy, considerations of reliance on decisions, be undermined; (5) what would be the likely impact of reversal on the likely success of the reorganization; and (6) based on a quick look at the merits of the appeal, is the appellant's challenge legally meritorious or equitably compelling? 584 F.3d at 1339.

In In re Continental Airlines, 91 F.3d 553, 559, 560 (3d Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1057, 117 S. Ct. 686, 136 L. Ed.2d 610 (1997), the Third Circuit noted five factors-essentially the first five questions noted in Paige. The Continental Airlines court stated that whether the plan had been substantially consummated was the most important of the factors, particularly where the reorganization is "intricate." 91 F.3d at 560-61.

The substantial consummation factor is even more important in the Second Circuit. In Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. LTV Steel Co., Inc. (In re Chateaugay Corp.), 94 F.3d 772, 776 (2d Cir. 1996), the court noted that reviewing courts will presume that it will be inequitable or impractical to grant relief after substantial consummation of a plan. That presumption will be overcome only if each of five factors exist: (1) the court can still provide effective relief; (2) granting relief will not affect the re-emergence of the debtor as a revitalized entity; (3) granting relief will not unravel the transactions; (4) the parties who might be adversely affected have received notice and an opportunity to be heard; and (5) the entity seeking relief has diligently pursued a stay throughout the proceedings.

A recent case in the Fifth Circuit, Bank of New York Trust Co, NA v. Official Unsecured Creditors' Committee (In re Pacific Lumber Co.), 584 F.3d 229, 243 (5th Cir. 2009), stated that rights of secured creditors must be given additional weight in equitable mootness decisions. "Secured credit represents property rights that ultimately find a minimum level of protection in the takings and due process clauses of the Constitution." Id. Thus, federal courts should proceed with caution when declining to review the treatment that secured creditors have received in a plan. Id. Indeed, the Pacific Lumber court held that equitable mootness did not prevent review of the secured creditors' appeal, but went on to hold that secured creditors do not have an absolute right to credit bid when their collateral is being sold pursuant to a plan. 584 F.3d at 245; see James M. Lawnczak on a Secured Creditor's Absolute Legal Right to Credit Bid under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(b)(2)(A), 2010 Emerging Issues 4957 (Apr. 10, 2010).

The Results in the Blast Energy, Paige and United Producers Cases

In Blast Energy, the court of appeals reversed the district court's order determining that the appeal of the other party to the assumed executory contract was moot. The district court had focused on the importance of executory contracts generally to reorganizations, without looking closely at the specific contract at issue. Because the evidence did not show that the contract was of importance to the reorganization, the appeal could go forward. 593 F.3d at 425-26.

In addition, Blast Energy court had to consider a legal issue determined below. The district court had ruled that 11 U.S.C. § 1127(b), which permits modification of a plan by a proponent before it has been substantially consummated, would prevent an appellate court from requiring a modification by ruling on an appeal after substantial consummation. The court ruled instead that it is the equitable mootness doctrine that limits post-consummation challenges to plans, not section 1127(b), reversing the lower court on this issue as well. 593 F.3d at 427.

In Paige, the court also found that equitable mootness did not prevent the appeal from going forward, thus reversing the decision of the district court. The court noted that on the issue of the effect of a possible reversal on third parties not before the court, the district court had improperly placed the burden of proof on the appellant. The fact that the appellees had not shown that relief to the appellant would adversely affect third parties was critical to the court's decision to reverse. 584 F.3d at 1343-44.

In United Producers, the district court's decision to dismiss the appeal was affirmed. The main focus of the court was on the consummated reorganization plan and the complex and substantial financing that had gone into it. Any modification of the plan would be a default under that financing. Thus, the court declined to consider any such modifications. 526 F.3d at 950-51.

How Does the District Court Sitting as a Court of Appeals Determine the Facts Relevant to a Decision Whether to Apply the Doctrine of Equitable Mootness?

The issue of "equitable mootness" is usually brought to the initial appellate court by motion with the facts explained by affidavit. If those facts are not disputed, then the appellate court is likely to accept them as correct and proceed to make a legal determination based thereon. However, if the appellant disagrees, then an evidentiary hearing is appropriate. In most cases, that hearing will take place in the bankruptcy court on remand, and the bankruptcy court will make findings of fact. This is what happened in United Producers, 526 F.3d at 946-47.

Other Circumstances Where Appellate Courts Will Dismiss Appeals Where Events Have Occurred Following Entry of the Order Appealed From

Confirmation of plans comprise the vast majority of cases where courts of appeals consider whether equitable mootness requires dismissal of an appeal. However, it is possible that other types of orders in a bankruptcy case could be viewed in a similar vein. For example, in South Street Seaport Ltd. Partnership v. Burger Boys, Inc. (In re Burger Boys, Inc.), 94 F.3d 755, 759-60 (2d Cir. 1996), the court, considering an appeal from an order providing for the assumption of a lease, noted that the doctrines of constitutional mootness and equitable mootness apply to bankruptcy appeals. However, the court's holding was that the closing of the transaction did not render the appeal moot, as the court could simply undue the assumption. It would likely be a very rare case, where an order, other than a confirmation order, would indeed be equitably moot.

The Bankruptcy Code itself describes two situations when the consummation of transactions provided for in orders requires the dismissal of an appeal. This is called "statutory mootness." If an order providing for the sale or lease of an asset or assets or an order approving a financing is entered, and the transaction is closed before a stay is entered, then under the circumstances provided for in the statute, the appeal must be dismissed. 11 U.S.C. §§ 363(m), 364(e) (in either case protecting entities that acted "in good faith"); see Contrarian Funds LLC v. Aretex LLC (In re Westpoint Stevens, Inc.), 600 F.3d 231 (2d Cir. 2010) (discussing "statutory mootness" of a section 363 sale).

Practical Pointers

Because the doctrine of "equitable mootness" is so fact specific and is subject to a determination by a judge based on equitable, pragmatic and practical considerations, it is uncertain how important the standard of review and the factors to be considered are in reality. In the end, it comes down to whether the judge believes it is fair, under all the circumstances, to fashion some relief for the appellant.

Parties dealing with equitable mootness issues must, of course, be aware of the appropriate standard of review and factors to be considered in the circuit where the case is pending. They must then fashion their arguments to take those matters into account. However, the main focus should be on the specific facts of each case. The party asserting equitable mootness should focus on the unfairness, particularly to third parties, that any relief would cause. The appellant opposing equitable mootness must identify specific relief, even if only partial relief, that could be granted and show the court how that would be an appropriate result under all the circumstances.

Conclusion

Although all circuit courts of appeals agree that the doctrine of "equitable mootness" requires an appeal to be dismissed when effective relief can no longer be granted, there is much disagreement as to the standard of review on subsequent appeal and the actual factors to be applied to the ultimate decision. It is, therefore, critical to address the appropriate standards in the circuit where the case is pending.

Return to Text

ⁿ¹ Bank of New York Trust Co., NA v. Official Unsecured Creditors' Committee (In re Pacific Lumber Co.), 584 F.3d 229, 236 (5th Cir. 2009), discussed below, is an example of a direct appeal.

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of substantial consummation of a chapter 11 plan, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ 7-1101 Collier on Bankruptcy P 1101.02

For analysis of other decisions relating to corporate reorganization, click ■ here.

For analysis of decisions relating to bankruptcy litigation and procedure, click ■ here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

James M. Lawniczak is a partner at Calfee, Halter and Griswold LLP in Cleveland, Ohio. He concentrates his practice on corporate bankruptcy and creditors' rights, as well as commercial business and finance matters. His experience includes bankruptcy plans and related disclosure statements, cash collateral and financing orders, asset sales, executory contracts and unexpired leases, and bankruptcy litigation and appeals.

Mr. Lawniczak is a frequent author and lecturer in his field. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy, the leading national treatise on bankruptcy law. He is also the author of the bankruptcy chapters of the Matthew Bender treatises Asset Based Financing and Business Organizations with Tax Planning. He has been listed in multiple editions of Chambers USA as a Leading Lawyer for bankruptcy and restructuring and is recognized as one of the Best Lawyers in America.

Mr. Lawniczak is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, where he served as an editor of the Michigan Law Review.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

8 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Prof. Kenneth N. Klee. All Rights Reserved.

Klee on United Student Aid Funds, Inc. v. Espinosa

2010 Emerging Issues 4966

Professor Kenneth N. Klee on the Supreme Court's holding in United Student Aid Funds, Inc. v. Espinosa, 176 L. Ed. 2d 158; 2010 U.S. LEXIS 2750 (2010)

By Prof. Kenneth N. Klee

April 15, 2010

SUMMARY: Parties challenging a bankruptcy court's final order almost always must take a direct appeal or be forever barred from collateral attack, even when the order contains a clear legal error. Further, when a statute permits a court to act only if certain findings are made or conditions exist, the court must make an independent determination of the finding or condition, even if no party objects (with few exceptions).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The Lessons to be Learned:

First, we learn the same lesson as in Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Bailey, 129 S. Ct. 2195, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 4537 (2009): Parties challenging a bankruptcy court's final order almost always must take a direct appeal or be forever barred from collateral attack, even when the order contains a clear legal error. Second, when a statute permits a court to act only if certain findings are made or conditions exist, the court must make an independent determination of the finding or condition, even if no party objects (unless, perhaps, the parties jointly waive the findings or conditions).

Legal Background:

A chapter 13 debtor may obtain a discharge of student loan debt under Bankruptcy Code § 1328(a)(2) & (c)(2) only when the bankruptcy court finds that failure to do so would impose an "undue hardship" on the debtor or his dependents in accordance with Bankruptcy Code § 523(a)(8). Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 7001(6) requires an adversary proceeding, initiated by a properly served summons and complaint, to make such a dischargeability determination.

Additionally, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure Rule 60(b)(4) allows a court to relieve a party from a final judgment when the judgment is "void." The Supreme Court has traditionally held that Rule 60(b)(4)'s relief applies in exceptional cases only when a judgment is premised either on (1) a certain type of jurisdictional error when the court lacks even an arguable basis for jurisdiction; or (2) a violation of due process that deprives a party of notice or the opportunity to be heard.

Facts and Proceedings Below:

Francisco Espinosa ("Espinosa") is an individual who incurred student loan debt. He filed a petition for relief under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. His chapter 13 plan listed his student loan debt as his only specific indebtedness, and proposed repaying only the principal on such debt. The student-loan creditor, United Student Aid Funds, Inc. ("United"), received notice of the plan, but did not object, instead filing a proof of claim for the value of the debt plus accrued interest. Less than a year later, the bankruptcy court confirmed Espinosa's plan without conducting an adversary proceeding regarding the discharge of Espinosa's student loan interest. A month later, the chapter 13 Trustee notified United that the amount of its proof of claim differed from the confirmed plan, and informed United that it had 30 days to notify the Trustee if it wished to dispute the difference. United did not take any action.

Four years later, Espinosa completed his payment plan, and the bankruptcy court discharged his debt, including interest on his student loan debt. Three years after discharge, the Department of Education commenced collection on Espinosa's unpaid interest, and Espinosa filed a motion in the bankruptcy court to enforce its discharge order. Although United opposed this motion and cross-moved under Rule 60(b)(4) to void the confirmation order, the bankruptcy court upheld its confirmation order and enforced its discharge order to discharge the interest on the student loan debt.

United appealed to the federal district court, which reversed the bankruptcy court's decision on United's 60(b)(4) motion because it determined United had been denied due process because no complaint and summons had been served on it.

After ruling and remanding on a clerical issue, the Ninth Circuit reversed the district court, denying United's 60(b)(4) motion because legal error was not a basis for setting aside a final judgment and United had received actual notice of Espinosa's plan and had not timely objected.

The Ninth Circuit's ruling on Rule 60(b)(4) differed from several sister circuits and created a circuit split among the Second, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, Ninth and Tenth Circuits. The Supreme Court granted certiorari to consider all three questions and reconcile the circuit split.

Analysis:

Writing for a unanimous Court, Justice Thomas authored an opinion holding that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b)(4) did not apply to void the order confirming Espinosa's chapter 13 plan because the bankruptcy court had subject matter jurisdiction to enter the order and the lender was not denied due process of law. In Kontrick v. Ryan, 540 U.S. 443, 454 (2004), the Court held that a procedural rule cannot be jurisdictional. Specifically, in this case, Bankruptcy Rule 7001(6)'s requirement of an adversary proceeding to determine dischargeability of the debt for student loan interest was not jurisdictional. Nor were Bankruptcy Code §§ 523(a)(8) & 1328(a)(2)'s discharge requirement of a court determination of undue hardship jurisdictional. As such, the confirmation order was not void. Because the lender failed to object to confirmation and appeal the confirmation order, the order could not be collaterally attacked.

Moreover, the lender was not denied due process based on its failure to receive the required complaint and summons because it had actual notice of the chapter 13 case and that the plan might alter its rights. In fact, the lender filed a proof of claim in the case for payment of the principal and interest on its student loan debt. Even though no creditor objected, however, before confirming the plan, the bankruptcy court was required to make a determination that failure to discharge the student loan interest would impose an undue hardship on the debtor or his dependents.

In short, the Court refused to expand Rule 60(b)(4) to void judgments based on clear legal error. Instead, the Court noted that Rule 60(b)(4) applies narrowly to void judgments when a court clearly lacks subject matter jurisdiction or a party is denied due process of law; it may not be used as a substitute for the lender's failure to appeal the erroneous confirmation order. Thus, a bankruptcy court is required to make a finding of undue hardship before it may discharge all or part of a student loan debt, but its failure to do so does not make its confirmation order void for purposes of Rule 60(b)(4).

Practice Tips:

Creditors holding student loan debts cannot sit back and rest on their rights expecting that they will be protected unless they receive a complaint and summons. Creditors that are dissatisfied with the provisions of an improper plan must object to confirmation and take a direct appeal of the confirmation order. Klee, Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court at 232-238.

Moreover, even though the Bankruptcy Rules might require an adversary proceeding to be commenced to determine the dischargeability of a debt, constitutional due process may nevertheless be satisfied if the creditor has actual notice of the bankruptcy case or proceeding which generally alerts the creditor that its rights may be altered. For an in depth discussion of constitutional due process in the bankruptcy context, see Klee, Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court at 142-148.

Dictum to Watch:

In footnote 9, the Court states in obiter dictum that the statutory time limit to revoke confirmation of a plan in Bankruptcy Code § 1330 is not jurisdictional. The same reasoning should apply to revocation of confirmation orders in chapters 9, 11, and 12. See Bankruptcy Code §§ 901, 1144 & 1230.

Bankruptcy Law Community PodcastClick link below for the Related Podcast Interview with Author

http://www.lexisnexis.com/Community/bankruptcylaw/blogs/podcasts/archive/2010/04/16/LexisNexis_AE00_-Bankruptcy-Law-Comm

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Kenneth N. Klee is a founding member of Klee, Tuchin, Bogdanoff & Stern LLP, in Los Angeles, specializing in corporate reorganization, insolvency, and bankruptcy law. He is also a professor at the University of California, Los Angeles School of Law, where he teaches courses in bankruptcy law and Chapter 11 business reorganizations law, as well as a business simulation/clinical course dedicated to the topic of creating value through the renegotiation of business agreements. He has served as an expert witness in over 40 matters and renders services as an arbitrator or mediator.

Mr. Klee is a fellow of the American College of Bankruptcy, serves as a member of the American Law Institute, and is a founding member of the International Insolvency Institute. He was a member of the executive committee of the National Bankruptcy Conference from 1985 to 1988 and 1992 to 2000 and served as Chair of the National Bankruptcy Conference's legislation committee from 1992 to 2000. Mr. Klee was Associate Counsel, Committee on Judiciary, U.S. House of Representatives 1974-1977, where he was a principal draftsman of the Bankruptcy Code. From 1992 to 2000, he served as a member of the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules of the United States Judicial Conference.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

9 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Paul H. Zumbro and Robert H. Trust on In re Philadelphia Newspapers

2010 Emerging Issues 4956

Paul H. Zumbro and Robert H. Trust on In re Philadelphia Newspapers, LLC, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5805 (3d Cir. Mar. 22, 2010)

By Paul H. Zumbro and Robert H. Trust

April 12, 2010

SUMMARY: Authors from Cravath, Swaine & Moore consider the Third Circuit's decision in In re Philadelphia Newspapers. This decision, along with the decision in In re Pacific Lumber, marks a significant departure from long-held expectations of secured creditors and could endanger protections traditionally thought to be afforded under the Bankruptcy Code. Secured lenders are likely to use at least three tactics to mitigate the effects of the decision.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Debtors May Preclude Secured Lenders from Credit Bidding in a Free-and-Clear Sale in a Chapter 11 Cramdown Plan

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, in In re Philadelphia Newspapers, LLC, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5805 (3d Cir. Mar. 22, 2010), ruled that a chapter 11 debtor may evade the secured lenders' protection of credit bidding at a sale of their collateral through a cramdown chapter 11 plan. The court permitted such a plan under section 1129(b)(2)(A)(iii) of the Bankruptcy Code, as long as the secured lenders receive the "indubitable equivalent" of their claims. The decision is particularly significant because it is from the court of appeals that sets precedent for bankruptcies in Delaware, a state in which many significant bankruptcy cases are filed.

The decision could substantially increase the risk to secured creditors of undervaluation of collateral in bankruptcy asset sales, reduce the amount of secured lenders recoveries and depress the trading value of distressed leveraged loans.

Background

Section 1129 of the Bankruptcy Code permits a debtor to confirm a chapter 11 plan by "cramming down" the plan over the objection of creditors if "the plan does not discriminate unfairly and is fair and equitable, with respect to each class of claims or interests that is impaired under, and has not accepted, the plan." 11 U.S.C. § 1129(b)(1). For a cramdown of secured lenders to be fair and equitable, section 1129(b)(2)(A) requires that the plan provide (i) that the secured lenders retain their liens and receive deferred cash payments totaling at least to the value of the collateral securing their claims, (ii) for the sale, subject to the secured lenders' ability to credit bid, of the collateral free and clear of the secured lenders' liens, with such liens attaching to the proceeds of the sale, or (iii) that the secured lenders receive the "indubitable equivalent" of their claims. n1

The Debtors-Philadelphia Newspapers, LLC, along with eight affiliates-filed a chapter 11 plan in which they proposed to sell substantially all of their assets free and clear of any interests in a public auction pursuant to bidding procedures that precluded their secured lenders (the "Lenders") from credit bidding their claims. Instead, the Debtors insisted that any qualified bidder fund its purchase with cash. Simultaneously, the Debtors entered into a "stalking horse" asset purchase agreement with Philly Papers, LLC, an entity that was controlled by the Debtors' former management and equity holders. Under the plan, the Lenders would receive $37 million cash, the Debtors' headquarters building (which the Debtors valued at $29.5 million), subject to a two-year rent-free lease for the entity that purchased the assets, and any cash generated by a higher bid at a public auction. The Debtors argued that the sale satisfied clause (iii) of section 1129(b)(2)(A) because the Lenders would receive the "indubitable equivalent" of their claims under the plan, which totaled over $318 million. The Lenders objected to the plan, arguing that section 1129(b)(2)(A) requires all sales of assets free and clear of liens to permit credit bidding.

The Decision

The Bankruptcy Court rejected the Debtors' proposed bidding procedures, reasoning that section 1129(b)(2)(A), when analyzed in the context of other sections of the Bankruptcy Code, requires that any sale of a debtor's assets free and clear of liens under a chapter 11 plan allow secured lenders to credit bid. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania reversed the Bankruptcy Court, and the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit affirmed.

The court of appeals, relying heavily on a plain meaning interpretation and a recent Fifth Circuit decision, n2 concluded that the three clauses of section 1129(b)(2)(A) list possible alternatives under which a plan may be considered to be "fair and equitable" and therefore confirmable. Because the three options are separated by the disjunctive word "or," the court reasoned that each clause represented a distinct and independent method by which a plan may be confirmed over the objection of a class of secured creditors. Although the second clause specifically mandates the presumptive right n3 to credit bid in a free and clear sale of assets, the court found that a free and clear sale without credit bidding could still be permissible under the third clause as long as the sale provides the "indubitable equivalent" of the Lenders' claims. The court interpreted the term "indubitable equivalent" to be purposefully broad to allow for flexibility in formulating chapter 11 plans and not to require credit bidding in every free and clear asset sale. Moreover, the court found that its decision did not directly contradict the overall structure of and legislative intent behind the Bankruptcy Code's treatment of secured creditors. Even though the court held that the Lenders did not have an absolute right to credit bid in a sale under a plan, it did, however, note that "a lender can still object to a plan confirmation [on the basis that] the absence of a credit bid did not provide it with the 'indubitable equivalent' of its collateral," seemingly inviting the bankruptcy court to undo the outcome the court of appeals felt compelled to reach as a matter of statutory interpretation.

In an extensive dissent, Judge Thomas Ambro argued that there was more than one reasonable reading of the statute and that it had to be interpreted by reference to other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, and in light of the statute's legislative history and the overall structure of the Bankruptcy Code. Given such an analysis, he argued that the three clauses of section 1129(b)(2)(A) describe three exclusive and "distinct routes that apply specific requirements depending on how a given plan proposes to treat the claims of secured creditors." 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5805, at *76. As such, any plan that proposes a free and clear asset sale must presumptively allow for credit bidding, as is required in the second clause, and should not be permitted under the "indubitable equivalent" prong of section 1129(b)(2)(A)(iii).

The Effect of the Decision

This decision, coupled with the recent Fifth Circuit decision In re Pacific Lumber Co., marks a significant departure from long-held expectations of secured creditors and could endanger protections traditionally thought to be afforded to them under the Bankruptcy Code. As noted in the dissent, as a result of this decision, debtors that wish to preclude secured creditors from credit bidding (because, for example, they are unduly influenced by existing equity holders or other insiders) are more likely to try to sell their assets in a sale under a chapter 11 plan rather than through a sale under section 363. This could represent a significant erosion of secured creditor protections under the Bankruptcy Code, as credit bidding is an important safeguard that ensures against the undervaluation of collateral in an asset sale. As Judge Ambro points out in his dissent, "while many of the valuation mechanisms (such as judicial valuation or a market auction) may theoretically result in a perfect valuation, Congress has provided the credit bid mechanism as insurance for secured creditors to protect against an undervaluation of the assets sold. Secured creditors who believe their collateral is being sold for too low a price may bid it higher and use as credit the dollars they have already extended . . . to the debtors." 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5805, at *99. The loss of the important check on valuation that the ability to credit bid provides would be a significant adverse development for secured creditors.

As the dissent points out, the only party that stands to benefit from an undervaluation of the assets is the purchaser, in this case, most likely the stalking horse bidder "with substantial insider and equity ties." Id. at *111. The dissent also argues that the majority improperly shifted the burden on the issue of the availability of credit bidding from the debtors to the creditors, leaving the secured creditors "with only a belated court inquiry at confirmation to determine whether the denial of credit bidding was 'fair and equitable' to [them]." Id. at *101. This construct will likely lead to higher litigation costs and possibly reduced recoveries as secured creditors who are denied the ability to credit bid may have to litigate valuation issues as part of the confirmation process, as opposed to having valuation determined through an open auction process. Ultimately, the decision may depress the trading value of distressed leveraged loans, because of the increased risk to chapter 11 recoveries, and could have the unwelcome (from the perspective of secured lenders) consequence of making it easier for debtors to structure transactions in a manner that benefits existing equity and other insiders at the expense of secured creditors.

Secured lenders are likely to use at least three tactics to mitigate the effects of this decision. First, they may litigate the issues left open by the decision-whether the plan is actually fair and equitable and provides the indubitable equivalent of their claims. Litigation is likely to center on independent valuation and the Supreme Court's 1999 decision n4 casting a jaundiced eye toward insider plans that attempt to cram down secured lenders. Second, they may, if they are providing debtor-in-possession financing or consenting to use of cash collateral, attempt to negotiate limits on the kind of plan the debtor may file. Finally, they may use a daylight loan, when available, to permit a "cash" bid at the auction. The mere presence of the ability to use a daylight loan may take away the debtor's leverage in proposing a cash-only auction.

Return to Text

n1 Indubitable equivalence is a concept unique to bankruptcy law that is derived from a 1935 Second Circuit decision by Judge Learned Hand, re Murel Holding Corp., 75 F.2d 941, 942 (2d Cir. 1935). The Bankruptcy Code does not contain a definition of "indubitable equivalent"; rather, the "indubitable equivalent" standard has been developed through caselaw. As the Pacific Lumber court noted, the phrase is "rarely explained in caselaw, because most contested reorganization plans follow familiar paths outlined in Clauses (i) and (ii) [of section 1129(b)(2)(A)]." Bank of New York Trust Co., NA v. Official Unsecured Creditors' Comm. (In re Pacific Lumber Co.), 584 F.3d 229, 246 (5th Cir. Tex. 2009).

n2 Bank of New York Trust Co., NA v. Official Unsecured Creditors' Comm. (In re Pacific Lumber Co.), 584 F.3d 229 (5th Cir. Tex. 2009). Although decided on similar grounds, the decision in Pacific Lumber related to a different procedural situation from the one in Philadelphia Newspapers. Pacific Lumber dealt with an appeal of the confirmation of a plan involving a free and clear asset sale that precluded credit bidding, while Philadelphia Newspapers was an appeal of the bankruptcy court order disapproving bidding procedures that precluded credit bidding (i.e., before the asset sale had actually taken place).

n3 It is a presumptive right, because the "court [can] for cause order[] otherwise" under section 363(k).

n4 In re 203 N. La Salle St. P'ship, 526 U.S. 434, 119 S. Ct. 1411, 143 L. Ed. 2d 607, 41 C.B.C.2d 526 (1999).

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of Code section 1129(b)(2)(A), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ 7-1129 Collier on Bankruptcy P 1129.04[2].

For discussion of Code section 363(k), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ 3-363 Collier on Bankruptcy P 363.09.

For analysis of other decisions relating to corporate reorganization, click ■ here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Paul H. Zumbro is a partner in the Cravath, Swaine & Moore LLP Restructuring and Corporate Departments. He has experience in all phases of capital raising and balance sheet restructurings, including out-of-court debt exchanges and debtor-in-possession financings. His restructuring practice draws on his extensive experience in leveraged finance, as well as his experience with disputes that have arisen post-credit crunch. Mr. Zumbro represented the financing sources in many of the most significant LBO financing transactions over the past several years, including the acquisition of Neiman Marcus by TPG Inc. and Warburg Pincus LLC and the acquisition of Freescale Semiconductor by The Blackstone Group. Following the collapse of the credit markets, he advised the financing sources in a number of high-profile LBO transactions that encountered difficulties or collapsed, including the multibillion dollar proposed acquisitions of United Rentals, Alliance Data Systems, Clear Channel, and Huntsman Corporation. More recently, Mr. Zumbro has been involved with a number of high-profile bankruptcy and restructuring matters, including representing Goldman Sachs in connection with Lyondell Chemical Company's $8.015 billion DIP facility.

Mr. Zumbro received a B.A., cum laude, from Yale College in 1992, and his J.D. in 1997 from Columbia Law School, where he was a Stone Scholar. He has been recognized by The Legal 500 for his skill in the National Bank Lending arena. In May 2009, he co-chaired a panel entitled "Know Your Counterparty-Learning Lessons from the Credit Crunch" at the International Bar Association's 26th International Financial Law Conference, in Rome, Italy. More recently, he gave a seminar presentation at the LSTA entitled "Section 363 Bankruptcy Sales: Is There a New Trend that Could Undermine Creditors' Rights?"

Robert H. Trust is a Senior Attorney in the Corporate Department of Cravath, Swaine & Moore LLP. His practice primarily involves counseling financial institutions, acquirers, equity groups, and other companies on restructuring and bankruptcy matters. Mr. Trust's practice also involves workouts, debtor-in-possession financing, the formulation and development of out-of-court restructurings or Chapter 11 plans, and "exit" financing to reorganized companies. He received his B.A. and J.D. degrees from Duke University.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

10 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Lawniczak on a Secured Creditor's Absolute Legal Right to Credit Bid

2010 Emerging Issues 4957

James M. Lawniczak on a Secured Creditor's Absolute Legal Right to Credit Bid under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(b)(2)(A)

By James M. Lawniczak

April 12, 2010

SUMMARY: In this Emerging Issues Analysis, James M. Lawniczak addresses decisions from the Third and Fifth Circuits holding that secured creditors do not have an absolute legal right to credit bid when their collateral is sold through a plan of reorganization. While there may be a small swing in negotiation power towards plan proponents and away from secured creditors, he concludes that the decisions may not have that much practical significance.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Two Circuit Courts of Appeals Hold that Secured Creditors Do Not Have an Absolute Legal Right to Credit Bid When Their Collateral Is Sold Through a Plan of Reorganization

In September 2009 and in March 2010, the Courts of Appeals for the Fifth and Third Circuits each considered whether a plan of reorganization could be confirmed over the objection of a secured creditor where the collateral was sold and the secured creditor was not given an opportunity to credit bid. In re Philadelphia Newspapers, LLC, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5805 (3d Cir. Mar. 22, 2010); Bank of New York Trust Co., NA v. Official Unsecured Creditors' Comm. (In re Pacific Lumber Co.), 584 F.3d 229 (5th Cir. Tex. 2009). Section 1129(b)(2)(A) of the Bankruptcy Code was the applicable statutory provision that the two courts considered and interpreted.

The legal issue before each court was one of statutory interpretation-whether Bankruptcy Code section 1129(b)(2)(A)(ii), which provides that a plan can be confirmed over the objection of a secured creditor where the collateral is being sold and the secured creditor has the right to credit bid, is the exclusive provision of the Bankruptcy Code applicable to sales pursuant to a plan. The interpretation adopted by both courts of appeals allows plans to be confirmed over the objection of a secured creditor that is given the "indubitable equivalent" of its claim, because section 1129(b)(2)(A)(iii) is also available to a plan proponent even when collateral was being sold. Therefore, according to both courts, the right to credit bid when collateral is sold under a plan of reorganization is not absolute.

The Facts of the Philadelphia Newspapers Case

The debtors in Philadelphia Newspapers own and operate the Philadelphia Daily News and the Philadelphia

Enquirer, plus an online publication, philly.com, all of which they acquired in 2006 for $515 million. 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5805, at *2-*3. They owe their secured lenders, who hold liens in "substantially all of the Debtors' real and personal property," approximately $318 million.

The debtors proposed a chapter 11 plan of reorganization, providing for essentially all their assets to be sold to a group comprised mostly of insiders for $37 million in cash, plus the surrender of the headquarters building valued at $29.5 million but subject to a two-year rent free lease for the purchaser. As can readily be seen, the value of the business had plummeted in the three years since the acquisition by the debtors. The plan proposed that the sale would be pursuant to an auction, with the insider purchaser acting as the "stalking horse bidder." 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS, at *4-*5.

The plan of reorganization further provided that the secured lenders were not entitled to credit bid at the proposed auction. 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS, at *5-*6. They objected, and the bankruptcy court refused to allow the sale to proceed in the absence of credit bidding. 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 3814 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Oct. 8, 2009). The debtors appealed to the district court, which reversed and held that the lenders did not have an absolute legal right to credit bid. In re Philadelphia Newspapers, LLC, 418 B.R. 548 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 10, 2009). An appeal to the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit followed, and the court granted a stay pending resolution of the appeal. 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS, at *8.

Thus, in Philadelphia Newspapers, the legal issue of whether credit bidding must be provided a secured creditor whose collateral was being sold pursuant to a plan came up at the beginning of the plan process, before the auction, before solicitation of votes for the plan and well before the end stage of the process, plan confirmation.

The Facts of the Pacific Lumber Case

In Pacific Lumber, the debtors' business involved growing, harvesting and processing redwood timber in California. 584 F.3d 229, 236. Exclusivity was terminated, and several plans of reorganization were proposed. Two entities who held some of the secured debt of the debtors proposed the plan that was eventually confirmed. 584 F.3d at 237. The plan that was confirmed provided that certain secured noteholders, who were not plan proponents, would be paid $513 million on their secured claims, which was the value of their collateral determined by the bankruptcy court after an evidentiary hearing. 584 F.3d at 238. These secured noteholders voted against the plan and objected, contending among other things that they were entitled to credit bid their secured debt rather than being forced to accept the value of their collateral as determined by the bankruptcy court. The bankruptcy court confirmed the plan, holding that the secured creditors had received the "indubitable equivalent" of the secured claims by the payment of the $513 million. 584 F.3d at 238. A direct appeal followed.

In contrast to the posture in the Philadelphia Newspapers case, the issue of whether the secured creditors had a right to credit bid as part of the plan process came before the Fifth Circuit at the very end of the plan process. The secured creditors' collateral had already been valued, the plan confirmed, and indeed the plan had even been consummated. There would be no further legal action to take following the decision of the court.

Review of the Applicable Statutory Provisions

Sales of assets outside the ordinary course of business are generally governed by section 363(b) of the Bankruptcy Code. Section 363(k) provides that, in a sale governed by section 363(b), a secured creditor has the right to credit bid its claim, "unless the court for cause orders otherwise."

Sales pursuant to a plan of reorganization are governed by subchapter II of chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, principally sections 1123 and 1129. Section 1123(a)(5) states that a chapter 11 plan of reorganization shall provide adequate means for implementation, thereafter listing 10 nonexclusive examples of what might be such adequate means, including (D), "sale of all or any part of the property of the estate, either subject to or free of any lien . . ."

Section 1129(a) of the Bankruptcy Code describes what is required to confirm a chapter 11 plan. A plan can be confirmed if it is approved by the affected creditors. However, under appropriate circumstances, a plan that meets minimum requirements can be approved even if certain classes of creditors vote against it. Section 1129(b)(1) provides that a plan can be confirmed if all required elements of confirmation in section 1129(a) are met except 1129(a)(8), if the plan "does not discriminate unfairly, and is fair and equitable" as to the dissenting classes. This is called the "cramdown" power, as it permits a bankruptcy court to cram a plan through despite the objections of creditors. See Klee, All You Ever Wanted to Know About Cram Down Under the New Bankruptcy Code, 53 Am. Bankr. L.J. 133 (1979).

Section 1129(b)(2) goes on to add certain conditions that must be met for a plan to be fair and equitable-in subsection (A) as to classes of secured claims, in subsection (B) as to classes of unsecured claims and in subsection (C) as to classes of interests. Section 1129(b)(2)(A) provides three further subsections that address what a plan must provide in order to meet the minimum requirements for cramdown. Section 1129(b)(2)(A)(i) describes plans that provide for the secured creditor to retain their liens and a specific requirement for the payment stream that must be provided in that case. Section 1129(b)(2)(A)(ii) describes plans that provide for the sale of the collateral free and clear of liens, in which case, the sale must be subject to the right of the secured creditor to credit bid under section 363(k) and, further, the proceeds must be distributed to the secured creditor in accordance with the requirements of clause (i) or (iii). Finally, section 1129(b)(2)(A)(iii) describes plans that provide the secured creditor with "the realization by such holders of the indubitable equivalent of such claims."

The Legal Issue Presented by Philadelphia Newspapers and Pacific Lumber

The question before the courts of appeals in Philadelphia Newspapers and Pacific Lumber was whether a plan proponent seeking cramdown against a secured creditor class that does not accept the plan must use clause (ii) of section 1129(b)(2)(A). If yes, then the secured creditor would have an absolute right to credit bid unless, under section 363(k), "the court for cause orders otherwise." If the answer is no, then the plan proponent could proceed under clause (iii) and attempt to confirm the plan by proving that it had provided the secured creditor with the "indubitable equivalent" of its claim.

In reaching their conclusions, each court used traditional methods of statutory interpretation, including "plain meaning," to resolve the legal question before it. For a discussion of the correct approach to statutory interpretation in a bankruptcy context, see Kenneth N. Klee, Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court, 14-36 (LexisNexis 2008), and James M. Lawniczak on Statutory Interpretation in Bankruptcy Matters, 2009 Emerging Issues 3542 (LexisNexis Apr. 21, 2009).

Legal Analysis of the Philadelphia Newspapers Court Majority on the Issue of Whether the Secured Creditor Had to Be Given the Opportunity to Credit Bid When Collateral Was Sold Pursuant to the Plan

The majority in the Philadelphia Newspapers case essentially relied upon the plain meaning of the text of section 1129(b)(2)(A). The statute lists three elements, one of which must be satisfied in order for a plan to be confirmed over the objection of the secured creditor. The three elements are separated by "or," which Bankruptcy Code section 102(5) tells us is not exclusive. See 2 Collier on Bankruptcy 102.06 (16th ed. 2009). Viewing the language as "unambiguous," the court determined that the plan proponent was entitled to use any subsection of section 1129(b)(2)(A) to confirm a plan. Thus, if the plan proponent could show that the secured creditor was receiving the "indubitable equivalent" of its claim, without the right to credit bid, then the plan could be confirmed. 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5805, at *11-*19.

The court went on to determine that a right to credit bid was not absolutely necessary in order to meet the "indubitable equivalent" standard. 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5805, at *37-*38. Instead, the court noted that there were proposed bid procedures now in place, and that the bankruptcy court would be able to consider whether the secured creditors actually received the "indubitable equivalent" of their claims during the upcoming plan confirmation hearing. Id. at *39. The court affirmatively noted that the secured lenders can still object to plan confirmation on many different bases, "including that the absence of a credit bid did not provide it with the 'indubitable equivalent' of its collateral." Id. at *53. Indeed, the lenders stated publically that they planned to put in a "cash bid" in the auction process, which they were entitled to do under the bidding procedures. They did so and prevailed.

Each of the three separate opinions in the Philadelphia Newspapers case discussed how to use legislative history as an indicator of legislative intent. The dissenting opinion of Judge Ambro referred to floor statements of the bill sponsors that sales of property under section 363 or a plan operated to deprive secured lenders of the right to make a section 1111(b) election because of the right to credit bid. According to Judge Ambro, this evidenced legislative intent that the right to credit bid be incorporated into the plan process. Id. at *106-*110. The main opinion by Judge Fisher cited the same legislative history, but discounted it because it did not discuss or take into account that there are certain circumstances where credit bidding is not allowed. Id. at *52-*53. In concurring, Judge Smith rejected any recourse to legislative history at all where the statutory text was clear. Id. at *54-*55.

Analysis of the Pacific Lumber Court on the Statutory Interpretation Issue

The Pacific Lumber court also relied upon the statute's "plain meaning." The court noted that the three alternatives of section 1129(b)(2)(A) are not exhaustive in any event—a plan must still "not discriminate unfairly" and be "fair and equitable" under section 1129(b)(1), even if one of the three (b)(2)(A) alternatives is met. 584 F.3d 229, 245. The court expressly rejected the secured creditors' argument that paying them off in cash deprived them of any subsequent increase in the value of the collateral, as the Bankruptcy Code does not provide such protection for secured creditors. 584 F.3d at 247. Instead, the court indicated that "paying off secured creditors in cash can hardly be improper if the plan accurately reflected the value of the . . . collateral." 584 F.3d at 247.

Analysis of the Dissenting Opinion in Philadelphia Newspapers

In his dissent in Philadelphia Newspapers, Judge Ambro challenged the "plain meaning" result in a lengthy opinion. Judge Ambro believes that section 1129(b)(2)(A) is ambiguous and capable of two different meanings. The first possible meaning is the one given to it by the majority. But the second meaning is that Congress required plans that allow the secured creditor to retain its lien to comply with clause (i) and required plans that provide for a sale free and clear of liens to comply with clause (ii); only other types of plans are governed by clause (iii). Judge Ambro notes that the use of "or" as nonexclusive depends on context, that there are certain contexts where "or" has to be limiting and that this is one of those situations. 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS, at *74-*75 (citing to 2 Collier on Bankruptcy 102.06 (16th ed. 2009)).

The dissent noted that the operative verb in section 1129(b)(2)(A) is not "includes," which would support the majority's position, but rather "provides," which supports the dissent. Id. at *75-*76. Then, Judge Ambro invoked two canons of statutory construction, which support the view that credit bidding is required. First, specific provisions prevail over general ones. With that canon in mind, the specific provision of section 1129(b)(2)(A)(ii) should prevail over the general provision of section 1129(b)(2)(A)(iii). Id. at *87-*92. Second, the canon that a statute should not be interpreted so that a provision is superfluous also supports the interpretation of the dissent. If clause (iii) completely engulfs clause (ii), then clause (ii) has no separate function or meaning and would indeed be superfluous. Id. at *92-*94.

The underlying theme of the dissenting opinion is confidence in credit bidding as a way to come to a correct decision on the valuation of assets. It is a way "to protect against an undervaluation of assets sold." Id. at *99. The dissent recognized that one result of the majority's decision will be to shift the burden of proof on issues of credit bidding. Under the dissent's view of the law, the burden should be on the entity seeking to eliminate the right to credit bidding to show cause for such elimination under the language of section 363(k). Under the majority's view of the law, a debtor can unilaterally deny credit bidding with "only a belated court inquiry at confirmation to determine whether the denial of credit bidding was 'fair and equitable' to the secured lenders." Id. at *100-*101.

One Point of Statutory Construction Not Considered by the Courts

Further support for the decisions in the Philadelphia Newspapers and Pacific Lumber cases that was not discussed in either case is that if Congress had meant what the dissent in Philadelphia Newspapers believed it did, it could easily have restructured the statutory language to require that result. All that would need to have been done would be to note that clause (i) applies to all situations where the lien was retained, clause (ii) applies to all situations where a sale free and clear of liens was used and clause (iii) applies to all other situations.

Other Cases and Articles That Have Discussed the Legal Issue Whether Credit Bidding Is Absolutely Necessary as to a Sale Pursuant to a Plan

Cases and an Article Supporting the Result in the Fifth and Third Circuits. In In re Criimi Mae, Inc., 251 B.R. 796, 806 (Bankr. D. Md. 2000), the court determined that the three clauses of section 1129(b)(2)(A) are each available to a plan proponent. In so holding, the court rejected the claim that clause (ii) is the only one that can be used when a sale free and clear of liens is contemplated.

Sometimes courts that discuss statutes in the abstract, without actually reviewing them in the context of a specific issue, will give a "plain meaning" reading of the statute simply because the court is giving its actual impressions of the statutory language with no attempt to reach a specific desired result. The case of Arnold & Baker Farms v. United States (In re Arnold & Baker Farms), 85 F.3d 1415, 1420 (9th Cir. 1996), did just that. The case discussed the structure of section 1129(b)(2)(A) in the abstract, and noted that to be fair and equitable a plan must satisfy "one of the following three tests." Thus, the court read the statute in the same way that the Philadelphia Newspapers and Pacific Lumber cases did. A similar reading of the statute was made in Corestates Bank, N.A. v. United Chemical Tech., Inc., 202 B.R. 33, 48 (E.D. Pa. 1996), and in the article Friedman, What Courts Do to Secured Creditors in Chapter 11 Cram Down, 14 Cardozo L. Rev. 1495, 1501 n.19 (1993).

In addition, several cases have determined that any of the three subsections of section 1129(b)(2)(A) can be used independently to support confirmation in contexts other than the credit bid situation. Thus, in Wade v. Bradford, 39 F.3d 1126 (10th Cir. 1994), the court held that a plan that satisfied the first prong of the three part test did not also have to satisfy the third prong, indubitable equivalence. Accord Heartland Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Briscoe Enterprises, Ltd., 994 F.2d 1160, 1168 (5th Cir. 1993).

Cases and Articles Supporting the Absolute Right to Credit Bid. There are several cases and articles that support the proposition asserted by Judge Ambro's dissent in the Philadelphia Newspapers case that when assets are sold free and clear of liens in a plan only subsection 1129(b)(2)(A)(ii) can be used. See, e.g., In re River Village Assocs., 181 B.R. 795, 805-06 (E.D. Pa. 1995) ("Congress did not intend to deprive creditors of the right to bid their full claim under a reorganization plan"); In re Kent Terminal Corp., 166 B.R. 555, 566-67 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1994); John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. California Hancock, Inc. (In re California Hancock, Inc.), 88 B.R. 226, 230 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1988); Brubaker, Cramdown of an Undersecured Creditor Through Sale of the Creditor's Collateral: Herein of Indubitable Equivalence, the § 1111(b) Election, Sub Rosa Sales, Credit Bidding, and Disposition of Sale Proceeds, 29 No. 12 Bankruptcy Law Letter 1 (Dec. 2009).

Practical Pointers

Although the issue whether a secured creditor has the absolute right to credit bid in a plan is a very important one for secured creditors and the results in Philadelphia Newspapers and Pacific Lumber have generated substantial discussion, the cases may not have all that much practical consequence. In fact, in Philadelphia Newspapers, on remand from the court of appeals, the senior lenders prevailed at the auction with a cash bid of $139 million, approximately $100 million more than the original stalking-horse bid. Even if section 363(k) must be followed as to sales in plans, the section itself allows credit bidding to be eliminated "for cause." At the same time, the bankruptcy court, in making factual findings as to a plan, will have the ability to ensure that a secured creditor receives the benefit of its bargain and is not forced to accept a speculative payment.

Credit bidding will remain a strongly protected right, even if it is not absolutely required in plan sales. Indeed, as the dissent in Philadelphia Newspapers noted throughout, the right to credit bid has long been integral to the sales process both inside and outside of bankruptcy. 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS, at *113-*115. The Collier bankruptcy treatise notes the right of a court to eliminate credit bidding under the language of section 363(k) itself, but goes on to opine that "this will rarely occur in the context of a chapter 11 plan." 7 Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.04[2][b][ii] (16th ed. 2009). The treatise continues with the following observation: "Indeed, most courts jealously protect the secured creditor's right to credit bid, and will deny confirmation if that right is significantly impaired." Id. The treatise concludes by noting that a plan that structures a sale with conditions that cannot be matched by the secured creditor is not only unlikely to meet the "fair and equitable standard" but also to "fail the good faith test of section 1129(a)(3) as well." Id.

Bankruptcy courts are reluctant to force speculative valuations of collateral on secured creditors when other more direct and reasonable methods of determining value are available. Thus, the actual sales price of assets determines value, not separate appraisals. See, e.g., Romley v. Sun Nat'l Bank (In re The Two "S" Corp.), 875 F.2d 240, 243 (9th Cir. 1989) (rejecting the trustee's contention that appraised value rather than sales price should be used to determine the amount to be paid on the secured creditor's claim as "the price paid at a commercially reasonable sale is the best evidence of value"). Moreover, it is accepted that an open and competitive sale process is the best method of determining current value.

Indeed, the courts' reluctance to use appraisal testimony is the genesis of the current practice of section 363 sales. Rather than allowing private sales with competing appraisers trying to convince the court that an offered sales price is appropriate, the open auction practice developed instead. See 2 Asset Based Financing: A Transactional Guide § 16.11[2][c] (LexisNexis 2007). In essence, a bankruptcy judge asks anyone who objects to a sale based on inadequate price: "Are you willing to pay more?" If not, then the offered price is usually determined to be adequate; but if the objecting party or someone else is willing to pay more and has the means to do so, the price has been determinatively shown to be insufficient.

Thus, the impact of the Philadelphia Newspapers and Pacific Lumber cases is likely to be felt more in terms of negotiation power. In circuits that accept that secured creditors do not have an absolute right to credit bid in a plan, the plan proponents will have a leg up in plan negotiations, and the secured creditors may agree to slightly less favorable terms than if the right to credit bid were absolute.

How Can the "Indubitable Equivalent" Standard Be Met? The Philadelphia Newspapers case was made on a preliminary record that preserved for later consideration whether the secured lenders would indeed receive the "indubitable equivalent" of their claims. The discussion of what "indubitable equivalent" means is highly instructive and suggests that it is a very high standard indeed, very difficult for a plan proponent to meet.

The court first discussed the genesis of the phrase from a Judge Learned Hand opinion, In re Murel Holding Corp., 75 F.2d 941, 942 (2d Cir. 1935). Judge Hand determined that a debtor could not pay the balance of a secured loan in a balloon payment 10 years after confirmation because a secured creditor cannot be deprived of collateral "unless by a substitute of the most indubitable equivalence." 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5805, at *30-*31. The Philadelphia Newspapers case went on to discuss the normal meaning of "indubitable equivalent." Indubitable means "not open to question or doubt." Id. at *31. It would thus appear that the standard would be even higher than the burden of proof in a criminal case, where conviction is only acceptable if guilt is established beyond a "reasonable doubt." The standard here would require no question or doubt.

Indeed, most authorities discussing "indubitable equivalent" require a very high standard to be met before "indubitable equivalent" can be found. See, e.g., In re Criimi Mae, Inc., 251 B.R. 796, 808 n.12 (Bankr. D. Md. 2000) (noting that the definition requires that the matter be "without question, or doubt," so that a plan proponent "faces a formidable task" to meet the standard).

What then can we make of the decision in Pacific Lumber finding indubitable equivalence of the dissenting secured creditors' collateral by an appraisal valuation method? A careful review of all the facts and circumstances in the case suggests that there were many other reasons for the court's decision, beyond a simple finding that there is indubitable equivalence whenever a bankruptcy court makes a valuation determination.

First, the Pacific Lumber case was a large and complex case with many differing creditor groups, including more than one class of secured creditor. The exclusivity period had been eliminated and several plans were proposed, but only one confirmed. The plan had been consummated and the plan proponents raised issues of equitable mootness, although the court determined that mootness did not prevent an examination of the secured creditor issues before it, including the proper interpretation of section 1129(b)(2)(A). 584 F.3d 229, 243.

Indeed, the Pacific Lumber court affirmatively noted that courts should "be wary of the shortcomings of judicial valuation proceedings." 584 F.3d at 247. However, the court then went on to discuss the "procedural history" of the case before it, which supports the use of the judicial valuation, under the specific facts of the case before the court. The property was thoroughly marketed with substantial interest but no firm offer. 584 F.3d at 247-48. The court relied heavily on the fact that no firm bid was ever received. 584 F.3d at 248.

Then, the court noted that the secured creditors were not objecting very strenuously to the actual valuation determination and focused on the fact that the secured creditors' briefing dwelt more on the shortcomings of the process "than on the bankruptcy court's final result." 584 F.3d at 248. The valuation hearing itself was extensive, with testimony "from eight valuation experts." Id. A fair middle ground was reached between the valuation proposed by the secured creditors, approximately $575-$605 million, and that proposed by the plan proponents. Id. The court ended by concluding that the secured creditors "have made little effort to prove a clear error." Id.

One factor that the court did not mention was that the secured creditor never made an offer of its own to acquire the properties instead of taking the cash. It appears that a good part of the reasoning of the Pacific Lumber court on the issue of "indubitable equivalent" was the court's view that the secured creditors really did not want to credit bid but rather just wanted more money for their collateral. Thus, Pacific Lumber suggests that it should be the very rare case where a judicial valuation of collateral would result in a finding that the "indubitable equivalent" standard had been met.

Does Allowing Credit Bidding Chill the Bidding? Part of the discussion in Philadelphia Newspapers was of the Third Circuit case of Cohen v. KB Mezzanine Fund II, LP (In re SubMicron Sys. Corp.), 432 F.3d 448, 461 (3d Cir. 2006), which held that a secured creditor credit bidding under section 363(k) is entitled to credit bid up to the full amount of its total claim, not just to the value of its collateral, which would be its secured claim under section 506(a). Accord In re Suncruz Casinos, LLC, 298 B.R. 833, 839 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2003). In essence, this is because the collateral's value is established each time the secured creditor credit bids. Those holdings make the secured creditor with credit bidding rights a very powerful player in an auction process.

There has been some discussion in the authorities as to whether allowing credit bidding chills the auction process by inhibiting other bids and therefore should be curtailed. The dissenting opinion in Philadelphia Newspapers gave a very good example of why allowing someone with very large to infinite resources to participate in a bidding process is not inherently unfair and will not usually chill bidding. For example, if Warren Buffett is bidding, everyone knows that nearly unlimited resources are likely behind him, yet still no one expects him to bid unreasonably-i.e., the ability to bid high does not equate into a willingness to overpay for assets. 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5805, at *64 n.4. Similarly, when a secured creditor credit bids, the other bidders will understand that they will get the property if they bid one increment above the value the creditors have placed on the property.

The above analysis may not be true when an equity player has bought the secured debt in a "loan to own" strategy in order to acquire the target company. In that case, the other bidders may correctly feel that they have no legitimate chance to acquire the target themselves. See generally 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5805, at *112 (Ambro, J. dissenting).

Other authorities believe that credit bidding can indeed chill bidding and be inappropriate. For example, in In re Antaeus Tech. Services, Inc., 345 B.R. 556, 564 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2005), the court noted that there was not a level playing field where one bidder was "playing poker to see what is the highest bid which the independent bidder is willing to make." On the other hand, the credit bidder who does not actually want to take title to the assets risks just that if credit bidding continues beyond the point of the credit bidder's view of the true value of the target assets.

Conclusion

With two courts of appeals now reading Code section 1129(b)(2)(A) as allowing any of the three alternatives to be used in all contexts, and with that result supported by the text of the statute itself, it seems likely that plan proponents have great flexibility in proposing plans. However, plan proponents still need to get to confirmation. The indubitable equivalent standard is a very high one. Although there may have been a small swing in negotiation power towards plan proponents and away from secured creditors, good negotiation and give and take are still the essentials to reaching a fair and appropriate solution.

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of Code section 1129(b)(2)(A), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ 7-1129 Collier on Bankruptcy P 1129.04.

For discussion of Code section 363(k), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ 3-363 Collier on Bankruptcy P 363.09.

For discussion of the sale of the estate's assets pursuant to Code section 363(b), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ 3-363 Collier on Bankruptcy P 363.02.

For a discussion of sales of substantially all the assets of a chapter 11 debtor and the role of stalking horse bidders therein, see 2 Asset Based Financing: A Transactional Guide, ■ 2-16 Asset Based Financing: A Transactional Guide § 16.11.

For analysis of other decisions relating to corporate reorganization, click ■ here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

James M. Lawniczak is a partner at Calfee, Halter and Griswold LLP in Cleveland, Ohio. He concentrates his practice on corporate bankruptcy and creditors' rights, as well as commercial business and finance matters. His experience includes bankruptcy plans and related disclosure statements, cash collateral and financing orders, asset sales, executory contracts and unexpired leases, and bankruptcy litigation and appeals.

Mr. Lawniczak is a frequent author and lecturer in his field. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy, the leading national treatise on bankruptcy law. He is also the author of the bankruptcy chapters of the Matthew Bender treatises Asset Based Financing and Business Organizations with Tax Planning. He has been listed in multiple editions of Chambers USA as a Leading Lawyer for bankruptcy and restructuring and is recognized as one of the Best Lawyers in America.

Mr. Lawniczak is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, where he served as an editor of the Michigan Law Review.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

11 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Kenneth N. Klee. All Rights Reserved.

Klee on Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz, P.A. v. United States

2010 Emerging Issues 4933

Professor Kenneth N. Klee on the Supreme Court's holding in Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz, P.A. v. United States, 2010 U.S. Lexis 2206 (2010)

By Kenneth N. Klee

March 30, 2010

SUMMARY: In this LexisNexis Emerging Issues Analysis, Professor Kenneth N. Klee discusses the holding in Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz, P.A. v. United States, 2010 U.S. Lexis 2206 (2010), which concerns the constitutionality of bankruptcy legislation regulating attorney conduct.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The Lessons To Be Learned: parties challenging the constitutionality of the federal bankruptcy legislation regulating attorney conduct face long odds; the Court will not hesitate to interpret legislation to apply to attorneys; the Court will interpret legislation and construe statutory language narrowly to avoid constitutional questions.

In Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz, P.A. v. United States, 2010 U.S. Lexis 2206, 176 L. Ed. 2d 79 (2010), the Supreme Court granted certiorari to review the Eighth Circuit's decision in Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz, P.A. v. United States, 541 F.3d 785 (8th Cir. 2008), interpreting several aspects of the 2005 BAPCPA amendments dealing with debt relief agencies. Among other changes, BAPCPA imposed certain regulations on "debt relief agencies," defined by § 101(12A) of the statute as "any person who provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person in return for . . . payment . . . or who is a bankruptcy petition preparer." BAPCPA further amended § 101(4A) of the Bankruptcy Code to define "bankruptcy assistance" as "goods or services 'provided to an assisted person with the express or implied purpose of providing information, advice, counsel, document preparation, or filing, or attendance at a creditors' meeting or appearing in a case or proceeding on behalf of another or providing legal representation with respect to a case or proceeding.'" BAPCPA also amended § 101(3) of the Bankruptcy Code to define an "assisted person" as "someone with limited nonexempt property whose debts consist primarily of consumer debts."

Under Bankruptcy Code § 528, as enacted by BAPCPA, debt relief agencies must self disclose as such and include prominent disclaimers in their advertisements informing the general public that they provide bankruptcy assistance services. Moreover, BAPCPA enacted Bankruptcy Code § 526(a)(4) to restrict debt relief agencies from "advis[ing] an assisted person . . . to incur more debt in contemplation of such person filing a case under this title." The statute was silent, however, on the precise contours of this provision, leading some to wonder if the provision was unconstitutionally overbroad. Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz, P.A. ("Milavetz"), a debtors' firm located in Edina, Minnesota, brought just such a challenge.

In December 2006, Milavetz brought a pre-enforcement action against the United States seeking declaratory relief from these debt relief agency provisions. The district court granted Milavetz relief, holding that the "debt relief agencies" described under § 101(12A) did not include attorneys. In the alternative, the district court held that the disclosure requirements under § 528 and the limitations on legal advice under § 526(a)(4) were unconstitutional as applied to attorneys.

The Eighth Circuit affirmed in part, and reversed in part, overruling the district court on the question of whether attorneys were debt relief agencies and subject to disclosure requirements, but affirming the district court's assessment that § 526(a)(4) was unconstitutionally overbroad. The Eighth Circuit's ruling on § 526(a)(4) differed from the Fifth Circuit's opinion Hersh v. United States ex rel. Mukasey, 553 F.3d 743, 761, 764 (5th Cir. 2008), which had narrowly tailored the scope of § 526 to apply only to "advise to abuse or manipulate the bankruptcy system." The Supreme Court granted certiorari to consider all three questions and reconcile the circuit split.

The Milavetz case is the most recent in a long line of Supreme Court bankruptcy and insolvency cases interpreting a bankruptcy statute in accordance with its plain meaning. As explained more fully in the author's recent book, Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court (LexisNexis 2008):

When the language of the statute is unambiguous, courts must interpret the language in accordance with its plain meaning without regard to legislative history, except in the rare case in which the literal application of the "statute will produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intentions of its drafters."

See Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court at 15-16 (footnotes omitted). But when the plain meaning of the statute would render the statute unconstitutionally overbroad, the Court will be guided by its object and policy to support a narrow interpretation that passes constitutional muster. See Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court at 17 & n.56.

Based on Supreme Court precedents supporting these principles of statutory interpretation, the Court had little trouble deciding the Milavetz case unanimously, although Justices Scalia and Thomas authored separate concurrences on small parts of the decision.

Are Consumer Debtors' Attorneys Debt Relief Agencies?

The March 8, 2010 opinion, written by Justice Sotomayor, first addressed the threshold question of whether attorneys are debt relief agencies. Milavetz raised four arguments against the government's contention that Bankruptcy Code § 101(12A) applied to attorneys. First, Milavetz argued that because attorneys were not specifically included in the list of professionals described in § 101(12A), Congress could not have intended them to be included. Next, Milavetz argued that another Bankruptcy Code provision, § 526(d)(2), which instructed that §§ 526 & 528 "should not be 'deemed to limit or curtail' States' authority to 'determine and enforce qualifications for the practice of law,'" indicated that Congress did not wish to apply § 101(12A) to attorneys. Third, Milavetz contended that certain exceptions in § 101(12A) for "'officer[s], director[s], employee[s], or agent[s] of a person who provides' bankruptcy assistance" would be unfairly applied against law firms because it did not include "partners." Finally, Milavetz urged that the canon of constitutional avoidance required the Court to exclude attorneys from the scope of § 101(12A) so as to avoid doubts as to the validity of §§ 526 & 528.

The Court rejected each of Milavetz's arguments. The Court found that it was not "credibl[e] . . . that only professionals expressly included in the definition are debt relief agencies," but, rather, that such a professional could either be specifically listed or found in the umbrella category of anyone who "provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person." In terms of § 526(d)(2), the Court found the opposite congressional intent, noting that section "526(d)(2) supports the opposite conclusion, as Congress would have had no reason to enact that provision if the debt-relief-agency provisions did not apply to attorneys." The Court found Milavetz's unfairness argument unpersuasive, observing that "[t]o the extent that partners may be subject to the debt-relief-agency provisions by association, that result is consistent with the joint responsibilities that typically flow from the partnership structure." The Court also rejected the avoidance argument, holding that the canon only applied to constructions that were "fairly possible," and concluding that reading attorneys out of § 101(12A) was not. Later, when addressing the scope of the disclosure requirements, the Court limited the provisions to "govern only [those] professionals who offer bankruptcy-related services to consumers," further constraining the scope of § 101(12A).

How do the Restrictions of § 526(a)(4) Impact Debt Relief Agencies?

The Court next turned to § 526(a)(4) and the breadth of its restrictions on "advice." Recall that the Eighth Circuit had found § 526(a)(4) unconstitutionally overbroad because it "broadly prohibit[ed] a debt relief agency from advising an assisted person ... to incur any additional debt when the assisted person is contemplating bankruptcy." See 541 F.3d 785, 793 (8th Cir. 2008). Milavetz argued for this interpretation, further explaining that a broad interpretation "forb[ade] not only affirmative advice but also any discussion of the advantages, disadvantages, or legality of incurring more debt." Milavetz saw support for this broad view in the Court's opinion in Conrad, Rubin & Lesser v. Pender, 289 U.S. 472 (1933). Milavetz further argued that even a narrow interpretation of the clause would still be so vague as to chill permissible speech.

In response, the Court did not strike down § 526(a)(4) as unconstitutional, but, rather, distinguished the Pender decision and adopted a statutory interpretation limiting the scope of § 526(a)(4). The Court determined that § 526(a)(4) must be read in light of Congress' desire to target bankruptcy abuse, finding that "[i]n context, § 526(a)(4) is best understood to provide an additional safeguard against the practice of loading up on debt prior to filing." The Court observed that since the purpose of the provision was to protect consumer debtors, and a consumer debtor could risk his or her discharge (through other BAPCPA provisions) by abusively piling on debt before filing for bankruptcy, this was the only sensible reading of § 526(a)(4). The Court concluded that section "526(a)(4) prohibits a debt relief agency only from advising an assisted person to incur more debt when the impelling reason for the advice is the anticipation of bankruptcy." Later, the Court refined "advising" to mean only "instructing or encouraging," and provided a safe harbor for "full and frank" discussions "about the incurrence of debt in contemplation of filing a bankruptcy case." The Court also described that it would not be enough to merely advise a debtor to take on additional debt prior to filing, but that to be proscribed such advice would have to be "principally motivated by [the] likelihood" of later discharging the debt in bankruptcy, as opposed to for a legitimate purpose (such as "advice to refinance a mortgage or purchase a reliable car").

So refined, the Court dismissed Milavetz's vagueness challenge to the Court's narrowed statutory interpretation. The Court, however, specifically declined to address whether the narrowed interpretation "withstands First Amendment scrutiny."

What Sort of Disclosures Must Debt Relief Agencies Make?

Finally, the Court addressed Milavetz's challenge to the disclosure requirements under § 528. Despite the lack of "a developed record," Milavetz made an "as applied" challenge to the disclosure requirements, arguing that under an intermediate level of scrutiny they did not "'directly advance[e] a substantial governmental interest," and were "'n[o] more extensive than is necessary to serve that interest.'" In the alternative, Milavetz argued that certain disclosures required by § 528 were "confusing and misleading" and could not be "'reasonably related' to the Government's interest in preventing consumer deception."

The Court disagreed that § 528 falls under the higher intermediate scrutiny, concluding that the correct standard is the lower "reasonably related" standard articulated in Zauderer v. Office of Disciplinary Counsel of Supreme Court of Ohio, 471 U.S. 626, 651 (1985). The Court also rejected Milavetz's argument that the term "debt relief agency" was "confusing and misleading," noting that the required disclosure was only a minimum threshold and that Milavetz could easily provide "[o]ther information" that would ensure "that consumers will not misunderstand the term." Finally, the Court rejected Milavetz's contention that the statute was not reasonably related to a governmental interest by noting the potential for fraud without such disclosures.

Advocacy Tip:

As in so many cases, the plain meaning of a phrase in large part controlled the outcome of the first part of this decision. Had the Court determined that attorneys were not debt relief agencies, it would have ducked the other issues. Like it or not, familiarity with the Court's plain-meaning jurisprudence remains a staple of modern practice. On the other hand, when a plain meaning interpretation of § 526(a)(4) would have lead the Court to hold the statute unconstitutionally overbroad, the Court narrowly interpreted the statutory language to give effect to the purpose of the legislation. For an in depth discussion of "plain meaning" and other maxims of statutory construction, see Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court at 14-36.

Practice Tip:

Although the Court narrowly construed Bankruptcy Code § 526(a)(4) to proscribe debtors' attorneys from counseling clients to incur debts that would abuse the bankruptcy laws, Milavetz leaves a trap for the unwary. Regrettably, a debtor's counsel's advice will be viewed ex post, and what might seem like prudent advice ex ante for the debtor to take out a third mortgage or refinance an automobile loan might be viewed as abusive ex post. Just as debtors' lawyers have struggled for years over the appropriate scope of converting non-exempt assets into exempt property on the eve of filing, debtors' lawyers will struggle with the contours of Milavetz in counseling debtors whether to incur debts before a bankruptcy filing. Prudent practice might include documenting the attorney's advice with a memo to file memorializing the non-abusive legitimate reasons for the client to incur the debt.

Unanswered Questions:

Milavetz raises many unanswered questions, particularly with respect to Bankruptcy Code § 526(a)(4). The Court specifically left open whether the narrowly-construed § 526(a)(4) violates the First Amendment. Moreover, it remains to be seen whether the consumer debtor is the only party with standing to sue a consumer debtor's attorney for violating § 526(a)(4). Is it permissible for a creditor who extends credit shortly before bankruptcy to sue the debtor's attorney who counseled the debtor to incur such credit abusively? If there is such a private right of action, may or must the debtor's attorney assert attorney-client privilege to block discovery into the advice given to the consumer debtor with respect to the debt? Would counseling a debtor to incur abusive debt fall within the crime-fraud exception to assertion of the attorney-client privilege? As part of a settlement of nondischargeability litigation, may a creditor bargain with the debtor to waive the debtor's attorney-client privilege?

Bankruptcy Law Community PodcastClick link below for the Related Podcast Interview with Author

http://www.lexisnexis.com/Community/bankruptcylaw/blogs/podcasts/archive/2010/02/08/LexisNexis_AE00_-Bankruptcy-Law-Center-

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Kenneth N. Klee is a founding member of Klee, Tuchin, Bogdanoff & Stern LLP, in Los Angeles, specializing in corporate reorganization, insolvency, and bankruptcy law. He is also a professor at the University of California, Los Angeles School of Law, where he teaches courses in bankruptcy law and Chapter 11 business reorganizations law, as well as a business simulation/clinical course dedicated to the topic of creating value through the renegotiation of business agreements. He has served as an expert witness in over 40 matters and renders services as an arbitrator or mediator.

Mr. Klee is a fellow of the American College of Bankruptcy, serves as a member of the American Law Institute, and is a founding member of the International Insolvency Institute. He was a member of the executive committee of the National Bankruptcy Conference from 1985 to 1988 and 1992 to 2000 and served as Chair of the National Bankruptcy Conference's legislation committee from 1992 to 2000. Mr. Klee was Associate Counsel, Committee on Judiciary, U.S. House of Representatives 1974-1977, where he was a principal draftsman of the Bankruptcy Code. From 1992 to 2000, he served as a member of the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules of the United States Judicial Conference.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

12 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Ability of Creditor to Offset Preferential Transfers By New Value

2010 Emerging Issues 4922

Commentary on the Ability of Creditor to Offset Preferential Transfers By New Value

By Leslie Treff

March 23, 2010

SUMMARY: The circuits are split as to whether the "subsequent new value" defense in 11 U.S.C. § 547(c)(4) may be invoked by a creditor only when new value was unpaid at the end of the preference period, or only so long as the debtor does not make an otherwise unavoidable transfer on account of the new value. This commentary reviews the law and suggests that the "subsequent advance" approach is a preferable interpretation of Section 547(c)(4)(B).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Section 547(c)(4)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code has been interpreted by the Third, Seventh, and Eleventh Circuits to require that "new value" remain unpaid at the end of the preference period to be used by a creditor to offset its preference liability. The Fourth, Fifth, and Ninth Circuits, however, have held that Section 547(c)(4)(B) does not require that the "new value" remain unpaid. Rather, these latter circuits have interpreted the statute to focus only on whether or not the "new value" has been paid for by an otherwise unavoidable transfer, and if it has not, then those courts have allowed the creditor to invoke the "subsequent new value" defense. Although more circuits have employed the "remains unpaid" test, the "subsequent advance" approach used in the Fourth, Fifth, and Ninth Circuits is more consistent with the wording and intention of the statute.

The Statute

Section 547(c)(4) provides that a trustee may not avoid an otherwise avoidable transfer, "to the extent that, after such transfer, such creditor gave new value to or for the benefit of the debtor--(A) not secured by an otherwise unavoidable security interest; and (B) on account of which new value, the debtor did not make an otherwise unavoidable transfer to or for the benefit of such creditor."

The legislative history of the section indicates that when "the creditor and debtor have more than one exchange during the 90-day period, the exchanges are netted out according to the formula in paragraph (4). Any new value that the creditor advances must be unsecured in order for it to qualify under this subsection."

The section has two purposes. First, "[i]n the ordinary course of business, suppliers provide goods to businesses on credit. The financial pressure that would result if creditors were to force an ailing company to pay for supplies up front could turn many a troubled company into a bankrupt one. By allowing creditors to rely on payments of back debt in shipping new goods, Section 547(c)(4) serves the purpose of avoiding unnecessary bankruptcies." n1 Second, the section provides for fair treatment of creditors who deal with troubled companies. n2

History of the Split On Whether Subsequent New Value Must Go Unpaid

Since the 1980s, there has been a split in thinking as to whether the subsequent new value advanced by a creditor must go unpaid to take advantage of Section 547(c)(4)'s exception. At the time, the lower courts were in almost total agreement that the new value must be unpaid for the section to apply. n3 However, several courts held otherwise in the mid 1980s. n4

In In re Jet Florida System, Inc., n5 the Eleventh Circuit engaged in a thorough review of the section and its requirements; however, the "new value" remained unpaid in that case, and there was no in-depth discussion of the matter. The court in New York City Shoes, Inc. similarly discussed the three requirements for a creditor to invoke the exception in Section 547(c)(4). However, although that court is often cited for the proposition that "new value" must go unpaid, the Third Circuit was not called upon to rule on it. Instead, the court was giving background to the issue at hand, which concerned the presumption that post-dated checks were transferred either on the date on the face of the check or when the check clears the bank.

Despite the overwhelming majority of courts following the requirement that the "new value" remain unpaid in the 1990s, the "minority position" gained momentum as the courts undertook a more thorough analysis of the double negative language of the statute as well as the legislative history of the section. n6

The court in In re Transport Associates, Inc. determined that its method allowed "each advance of 'new value' to be used to offset all prior preferences, not limited to only the one immediately preceding preference." It continued that "[t]his approach better serves the legislative goal of encouraging creditors to continue doing business with financially troubled debtors." The concern of this court and the others that adopted the "minority position" was that requiring "new value" to remain unpaid discourages "creditors from advancing new value in excess of the amount of the prior invoice paid, regardless of debtor's need for an infusion of new value," n7 in essence, negating the agreed upon legislative intent of the section.

Section 547(c)(4) in the 2000s and Beyond

More courts began to defect from the requirement that "new value" remain unpaid in the 2000s. These courts claim to follow the unambiguous language of the statute to find that a "new value" defense is permitted unless the debtor repays the new value by a transfer that is otherwise unavoidable. n8 Over the past year, the debate over the proper implementation of Section 547(c)(4) has grown louder. Some courts are still following the "remains unpaid" test, n9 but more and more are moving toward the emerging approach, in which each advance of new value is offset against all prior preferences. n10

Nowhere has the divergence been more apparent than within the courts of the Third Circuit. In In re Winstar Communications, Inc. n11, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals addressed issues regarding Section 547(c)(4) and, once again, recited the requirements of the twenty-year old In re New York City Shoes, Inc. n12 decision. Significantly, the Winstar court stated, "[t]his court has held that § 547(c)(4) imposes three requirements: '1) the creditor must have received a transfer that is otherwise voidable as a preference under § 547(b); (2) after receiving the preferential transfer, the preferred creditor must advance 'new value' to the debtor on an unsecured basis; and (3) the debtor must not have fully compensated the creditor for the 'new value' as of the date that it filed its bankruptcy petition.'" n13 Not eight months later, the Delaware bankruptcy court held that, because the Winstar court was not required to consider directly the third element (§ 547(c)(4)(B)) of the subsequent new value defense, it could look at the plain language of the statute, apply a "subsequent advance" approach, and allow each extension of "new value" to be setoff against the total preference amount. n14

Conclusion

It remains to be seen where the Third Circuit will wind up on this issue, but the Delaware court makes a strong case for its "subsequent advance" approach. That approach, whereby a creditor is not penalized for continuing to make advances to a struggling business in hope of forestalling a bankruptcy petition, is in accordance with the universally agreed upon purpose of Section 547(c)(4)'s exception. Although the language of subsection (B), which includes a double negative, is complicated to read, it is not ambiguous. When a close reading of the statute is performed with an understanding of the workings of the "subsequent advance" approach, all becomes clear.

Return to Text

n1 In re New York City Shoes, Inc., 880 F.2d 679, 680-681 (3rd Cir. 1989); see also Matter of Kroh Bros. Development Co., 930 F.2d 648, 24 C.B.C.2d 1757 (8th Cir. 1991).

n2 See In re New York City Shoes, Inc., 880 F.2d 679, 680-681 (3rd Cir. 1989); see also In re Jet Florida System, Inc., 841 F.2d 1082 (11th Cir. 1988); In re IRFM, Inc., 52 F.3d 228, 33 C.B.C.2d 237 (9th Cir.1995); In re Gold Coast Seed Co., 30 B.R. 551 (9th Cir. BAP 1983).

n3 See Pettigrew v. Trust Company Bank (In re Bishop), 5 C.B.C.2d 1515, 17 B.R. 180 (Bankr. N.D. Ga.1982); see also Erman v. Armco, Inc. (In re Formed Tubes, Inc.), 46 B.R. 645 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1985); Bernstein v. RJL Leasing (In re White River Corp.), 50 B.R. 403 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1985); Remes v. Yeomans (In re Quality Plastics, Inc.), 11 C.B.C.2d 163, 41 B.R. 241 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1984); Columbia Packing Co. v. Allied Container Corp. (In re Columbia Packing Co.), 11 C.B.C.2d 1439, 44 B.R. 613 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1984); Keydata Corp. v. Boston Edison Co. (In re Keydata Corp.), 37 B.R. 324 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1983); Rovzar v. Prime Leather Finishes (In re Saco Local Development Corp.), 30 B.R. 859 (Bankr. D. Me. 1983).

n4 See In re Thomas W. Garland, Inc., 6 C.B.C.2d 1259, 19 B.R. 920 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1982); see also Matter of Isis Foods, Inc., 39 B.R. 645 (W.D. Mo. 1984); In re Paula Saker & Co., Inc., 53 B.R. 630 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1985).

n5 841 F.2d 1082 (11th Cir. 1988).

n6 See In re IRFM, Inc., 27 C.B.C.2d 321, 144 B.R. 886 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1992), aff'd, 52 F.3d 228, 33 C.B.C.2d 237 (9th Cir. 1995); see also Matter of Toyota of Jefferson, Inc., 14 F.3d 1088, 30 C.B.C.2d 1054 (5th Cir. 1994); In re Check Reporting Services, Inc., 140 B.R. 425 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1992); In re Transport Associates, Inc., 31 C.B.C.2d 994, 171 B.R. 232 (Bankr. W.D. Ky. 1994).

n7 In re Transport Associates, Inc., 31 C.B.C.2d 994, ___, 171 B.R. 232, 238-239 (Bankr. W.D. Ky. 1994).

n8 See In re Roberds, Inc., 315 B.R. 443 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2004); see also In re Intercontinental Polymers, Inc., 54 C.B.C.2d 710, 359 B.R. 868 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2005); Van Dyck/Columbia Printing v. Katz, 50 C.B.C.2d 560, 289 B.R. 304 (D. Conn. 2003).

n9 See In re Landreth Lumber Co., [8209][8209][8209] B.R. [8209][8209][8209][8209], 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 3686 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. Nov 23, 2009); see also In re JSL Chemical Corp., [8209][8209][8209] B.R. [8209][8209][8209][8209], 2010 Bankr. LEXIS 443 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. Feb 10, 2010);

n10 See In re Smith Min. and Material, LLC, 405 B.R. 589, 62 C.B.C.2d 103 (Bankr. W.D. Ky. 2009).

n11 554 F.3d 382, 402 (3rd Cir. 2009).

n12 880 F.2d 679, 680 (3rd Cir. 1989).

n13 Shubert v. Lucent Techs. Inc (In re Winstar Communs., Inc.), 554 F.3d 382, 402 (3rd Cir. Del. 2009).

n14 See In re Pillowtex Corp., 416 B.R. 123 (Bankr. D. Del. 2009).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Ms. Treff has been practicing commercial law in New York for 23 years. A specialist in the areas of debtor/creditor law, bankruptcy, and insurance coverage litigation, she is currently a senior court attorney at the Supreme Court, New York County, Civil Branch. Ms. Treff has held committee chairmanships at both the Bar Association of the City of New York and the New York County Lawyer's Association, and she is a regular contributor to Lexis Nexis/Matthew Bender bankruptcy and debtor-creditor law treatises.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

13 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Braucher on In re North Shore Hematology-Oncology Associates

2010 Emerging Issues 4871

Anne Braucher on In re North Shore Hematology-Oncology Associates P.C., 400 B.R. 7 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2008): A Bankruptcy Court Will Not Appoint a Healthcare Ombudsman Without Evidence of Patients' Dire Circumstances

By Anne Braucher

March 15, 2010

SUMMARY: In re North Shore Hematology-Oncology Associates held that appointment of a healthcare ombudsman is not necessary unless patients' rights to quality care and privacy have already been violated. The threshold for appointing a healthcare ombudsman is very high and requires evidence that patients are already in dire circumstances when a bankruptcy case is filed. This commentary discusses the import of this decision.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Anne Braucher on In re North Shore Hematology-Oncology Associates, P.C., 400 B.R. 7 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2008)

A Bankruptcy Court Will Not Appoint a Healthcare Ombudsman Without Evidence of Patients' Dire Circumstances.

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of New York has declined to appoint a healthcare ombudsman in the chapter 11 case of a physician-owned, for-profit healthcare practice with five offices located in the state of New York. The decision, In re North Shore Hematology-Oncology Associates, P.C., 400 B.R. 7 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2008), suggests that the threshold for appointing a healthcare ombudsman under 11 U.S.C. § 330(a) is very high and requires evidence of dire circumstances. The Court declined to appoint an ombudsman for the North Shore practice based upon evidence that the business was operating successfully and had a low ratio of patient complaints to patients served.

Background

Section 330(a) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a court will appoint an ombudsman to "monitor the quality of patient care and to represent the interests of the patients" no later than 30 days after a healthcare provider files a bankruptcy petition. 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(1). The court need not appoint an ombudsman within the first 30 days, however, if it finds that the debtor's patients do not need protection given the circumstances of the case. Id. A court can instead, on the motion of the United States Trustee or a party in interest, appoint an ombudsman at any time during the case that such appointment becomes necessary. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2007.2(b). Because the Code does not provide guidance on the circumstances under which ombudsmen should be appointed, courts have begun developing their own tests. The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Florida, for example, has laid out a list of non-exclusive factors for a court to consider:

- (1) The cause of the bankruptcy;
- (2) The presence and role of licensing or supervising entities;
- (3) Debtor's past history of patient care;
- (4) The ability of the patients to protect their rights;
- (5) The level of dependency of the patients on the facility;
- (6) The likelihood of tension between the interests of the patients and the debtor;
- (7) The potential injury to the patients if the debtor drastically reduced its level of patient care;
- (8) The presence and sufficiency of internal safeguards to ensure appropriate level of care; and
- (9) The impact on the likelihood of a successful reorganization.

See In re Alternate Family Care, 377 B.R. 754,758 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2007). Courts can exercise discretion in determining how much weight to give each of these factors. See In re Valley Health Sys., 381 B.R. 756, 762 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2008). n1

The debtor, North Shore Hematology-Oncology Associates, was a physician-owned healthcare practice that provided treatment for cancer and blood disorders. See In re North Shore Hematology-Oncology Assocs., 400 B.R. at 9. The debtor provided all of its services, including radiation therapy and chemotherapy, on an out-patient basis. See id. at 12. After filing its chapter 11 petition, the debtor remained in possession of its assets and continued to operate its business. See id. at 9. The court scheduled a hearing on the need for an ombudsman approximately two weeks after the case commenced. See id. Prior to the hearing, the debtor filed a statement that an ombudsman was not necessary. See id. The United States Trustee also stated its position that the debtor was a health care business, as defined by 11 U.S.C. § 101(27A), and that an ombudsman was not necessary. See id. at 10.

The Decision

Following hearing, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York waived the appointment of healthcare ombudsman without prejudice to reconsidering the matter at a later time. See id. at 8. The court first agreed with the United States Trustee that the debtor was a health care business because of the types of services the debtor provided to its patients. See id. at 10. This made it appropriate for the court to examine the need for a healthcare ombudsman.

The court then held that appointing an ombudsman was not necessary based upon the details of the debtor's healthcare practice. Specifically, the court found the following factors compelling:

- The debtor had a formal program for compliance with the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act;
- The debtor was able to pay for the medicines necessary to provide uninterrupted cancer treatment to its patients;
- The debtor did not plan to reduce its staff, so it could continue the historical level of service to its 30,000 patients;
- The debtor did not provide any in-patient services, so its patients were not dependent on the debtor's facilities for long-term treatment;
- The debtor had not received any complaints from its patients since the commencement of the case, and the bankruptcy had not affected the scheduling of appointments;

- The debtor's patients were able to file complaints with the New York state medical board, and the debtor had its own procedures in place to address patient complaints;
- The debtor complied with state and federal record keeping obligations;
- The debtor's senior physicians had considerable experience in hematology and cancer treatment;
- The debtor's operations were monitored and certified by state and federal health agencies; and
- The debtor had received only three to five patient complaints in the previous fourteen months.

See id. at 12.

After listing these factors, however, the court stressed the importance of some more than others. The court suggested that its decision not to appoint an ombudsman was based in particular on the debtor's low ratio of patient complaints to patients served. See id. at 13 (stating that "for a practice that serves more than 30,000 critically ill patients, having only three to five complaints, equating to a complaint rate that is a fraction of 1%, is very significant"). The court also suggested that the continued smooth operation of the debtor's business held particular significance. It noted that the debtor's business was healthy because it did not provide in-patient services that required long-term operational commitments, and appointing an ombudsman would impose costs on the estate that might affect the debtor's ability to operate at its current, successful level. See id.

The Effect of the Decision: The Threshold for Appointment of a Healthcare Ombudsman Appears to Require Evidence of Dire Circumstances.

Protecting patients' rights is obviously an important part of any healthcare-related bankruptcy case. Patients may suffer both physically and financially when a health care business liquidates because it cannot maintain a sufficient standard of care following its bankruptcy filing. The suffering may be particularly acute when the patients at issue need specialized care that is difficult to find and/or necessary on a regular basis.

The North Shore decision, however, suggests that a court will immediately appoint a healthcare ombudsman only on evidence that dire circumstances already exist. The Eastern District of New York Bankruptcy Court noted that the Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of California declined to appoint ombudsman in the Valley Health Systems case because there was no evidence that problems with the quality of its patient care or "tension between the interests of the patients and the [debtor] or actual conflicting interests of the [debtors'] employees" existed before the case was filed. Id. at 11 (quoting In re Valley Health Sys., 381 B.R. at 765). Similarly, the New York court noted that the Bankruptcy Court for the District of Colorado declined to appoint an ombudsman in the In re William L. Saber, M.D. case in part because "the Chapter 11 filing was not precipitated by concerns related to the quality of patient care or to patient privacy matters." In re North Shore Hematology-Oncology Assocs., 400 B.R. at 12. According to these decisions, an ombudsman is not immediately necessary unless a very high threshold is met - the debtor has a history of poor quality patient care or the case was filed because the debtor had already failed to provide quality patient care and protect patients' privacy rights. The debtor and its patients must be in dire circumstances before an ombudsman steps into a bankruptcy case.

Because the North Shore decision establishes this high threshold, the Bankruptcy Code's healthcare ombudsman provision appears somewhat weak. It will not prevent the violation of patients' rights to high quality care and privacy in a newly-filed case. It will perhaps affect patients only after their rights have already been violated. Congress may have taken a step in the right direction when it added the ombudsman provision to the Code, but it certainly did not establish a strong mechanism for protecting patients' rights in a healthcare-related bankruptcy case.

Return to Text

n1 The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Central District of California has provided additional factors: (1) the high quality of the debtor's existing patient care; (2) the debtor's financial ability to maintain high quality patient care; (3) the existence of an internal ombudsman program to protect the rights of patients; and/or (4) the level of monitoring and oversight by federal, state, local, or professional association programs which renders the services of an ombudsman redundant. See Valley Health Sys., 381 B.R. at 762.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Anne Braucher is a principal of The Law Offices of Anne Braucher located in Alexandria, Virginia. Ms. Braucher's practice focuses on creditors' rights, family law, and general commercial litigation. Prior to founding her own firm, Ms. Braucher spent 5 years as an associate in the Litigation and Bankruptcy Departments of DLA Piper LLP (US). From 2003 to 2004, Ms. Braucher clerked for Chief Judge Douglas O. Tice, Jr. of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Virginia. Ms. Braucher received a B.A. from Oberlin College in 1998 and a J.D. from the American University Washington College of Law, where she was Managing Editor of The American University International Law Review. Ms. Braucher is a member of the DC Bar Lawyers Assistance Program Committee and the DC Volunteer Lawyers Project.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

14 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on Commercial & Residential Maintenance, Inc. v. Abblitt (In re Abblitt)

2010 Emerging Issues 4898

Bankruptcy Court in In re Abblitt Ruled that treble damages award on default judgment in state RICO case was nondischargeable under section 523 of the Bankruptcy Code

By S. Andrew Jurs

March 2, 2010

SUMMARY: In Commercial and Residential Maintenance, Inc. v. Abblitt (In re Abblitt), 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 4084 (Bankr. D. Or. Dec. 21, 2009), the bankruptcy court was confronted with whether an award of treble damages under a state RICO statute could be the basis for a nondischargeable debt. Even though the treble damages had been awarded pursuant to a default judgment, the debt was nondischargeable pursuant to section 523 of the Bankruptcy Code.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: In Commercial and Residential Maintenance, Inc. v. Abblitt (In re Abblitt), 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 4084 (Bankr. D. Or. Dec. 21, 2009), the bankruptcy court determined that treble damages awarded pursuant to a default judgment under Oregon's RICO statute were nondischargeable in bankruptcy. According to the bankruptcy court, the state court had subject matter jurisdiction to enter the judgment, and the findings in support of the judgment were sufficient to support an award of treble damages. Accordingly, a creditor could obtain an order denying the dischargeability of the treble damages award under 11 U.S.C. § 523.

Facts and Procedural History

The Debtor was employed by Commercial and Residential Maintenance, Inc. d/b/a C & R Maintenance ("C&R"), and was in charge of inventory and purchasing. Between January and July 2005, Debtor ordered goods and equipment from various sources on C&R's account and converted them to his own benefit. In July 2005, Debtor was arrested, and he admitted to the unauthorized purchases for his own benefit.

On July 19, 2005, the Jackson County District Attorney filed an indictment against the Debtor for aggravated theft in the first degree. Debtor pleaded guilty two months later and was convicted of theft in the first degree. The Jackson County Circuit Court, as part of its sentencing, ordered Debtor to pay restitution to C&R in the amount of $ 23,714.36.

On July 27, 2005, C&R filed a civil complaint in Jackson County Circuit Court for fraud, conversion, unjust enrichment, and for violations of the Oregon Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, ORS §§ 166.715 - 735 ("ORICO"). Debtor failed to appear, and the state court entered a general money judgment in the amount of $ 63,792.33 on C&R's motion for default judgment. The judgment was based on ORICO violations which provide for treble damages pursuant to ORS § 166.725(7)(a).

Debtor filed a chapter 7 bankruptcy petition on April 21, 2009. C&R subsequently filed a Complaint pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2), (4), (6) and/or (7) objecting to the discharge of the debt owed to it by Debtor, and the Debtor filed an Answer denying its nondischargeability. C&R thereafter filed a motion for summary judgment, and the bankruptcy court decided the matter without hearing.

Legal Analysis

The ORICO statute provides:

(7)(a) Any person who is injured by reason of any violation of the provisions of ORS § 166.720(1) to (4) shall have a cause of action for three-fold the actual damages sustained and, when appropriate, punitive damages:

(A) If a criminal conviction for the racketeering activity that is the basis of the violation has been obtained, any rights of appeal have expired and the action is against the individual convicted of the racketeering activity; or

(B) If the violation is based on racketeering activity as defined in ORS § 166.715(6)(a)(B) to (J), (K) as it relates to burglary and criminal trespass, (L) to (P), (S), (T), (U), (V), (X) to (Z), (AA) to (DD), (KK), (LL) or (OO) to (VV).

ORS § 166.725(7)(a).

Section 523(a)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code provides for nondischargeability of debts "for fraud or defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity, embezzlement, or larceny," which would encompass the restitution award based on the criminal judgment for theft in the first degree.

Commentary

The bankruptcy court's holding in Abblitt is noteworthy in that it addresses the process for determining dischargeability of treble damages claims awarded pursuant to a default civil judgment. Additionally, the bankruptcy court engaged in a useful analysis of the extent to which a criminal conviction would have a preclusive effect in determining whether a debtor engaged in conduct which would render a civil judgment nondischargeable. To get there, however, the bankruptcy court first had to determine the viability of the state court's judgment. Only if the judgment was valid would the bankruptcy court have to decide whether a default judgment on RICO claims would be nondischargeable.

A. Subject Matter Jurisdiction of the Oregon Circuit Court

Oregon Circuit Courts "have subject matter jurisdiction over all actions unless a statute or rule of law divests them of jurisdiction." Oregon v. Daniel, 222 Ore. App. 362, 368, 193 P.3d 1021, 1025 (2008) (internal citation omitted). "Subject matter jurisdiction depends on whether a court has constitutional or statutory authority to make an inquiry." Matter of Marriage of Watanabe, 140 Ore. App. 85, 88, 914 P.2d 701, 702 (1996). A judgment issued from a court lacking subject matter jurisdiction is said to be void and is subject to collateral attack; however, "when a trial court has both subject-matter and personal jurisdiction, a judgment issued in excess of the court's authority is voidable, not void." Oregon v. McDonnell, 343 Ore. 557, 562, 176 P.3d 1236, 1240 (2007). See also Wood v. White, 28 Ore. App. 175, 178-79, 558 P.2d 1289, 1291 (1977) ("[T]here is a fundamental distinction between the absence of jurisdiction and the erroneous exercise of that jurisdiction."). A voidable judgment is subject only to direct attack. Oregon v. McDonnell at 562.

Debtor argued that C&R filed its ORICO action prematurely because the lawsuit was filed prior to Debtor's September 19, 2005 conviction for first degree theft, in which case the state circuit court did not have subject matter jurisdiction. If true, the judgment would be void. C&R countered that the actual civil judgment was not obtained until after the conviction, thus meeting the requirements of ORS 166.725(7)(a)(A). Moreover, according to C&R, the complaint filed in Circuit Court listed independent instances of racketeering conduct, thus allowing the filing of the ORICO complaint under subsection (B). Although the issue of whether an ORICO action can be filed prior to conviction if the judgment itself was obtained after conviction was one of first impression, the bankruptcy court found a statement by the Oregon Supreme Court, in dicta, that the phrase "has been obtained" states a condition that must exist when a plaintiff files an ORICO claim. Black v. Arizala, 337 Ore. 250, 271, 95 P.3d 1109, 1119-20 (2004). Even in light of this, however, the bankruptcy court determined that this in itself would not be sufficient to find that the Circuit Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the ORICO claim. According to the bankruptcy court, the Circuit Court had jurisdiction over the ORICO claim at the moment of filing, and the Circuit Court had the statutory and constitutional authority to make an inquiry into the merits of the ORICO claim. If the claim had not yet accrued under ORICO, it was Debtor's responsibility to bring it to the Circuit Court's attention through a motion to dismiss or an affirmative defense. Once the Circuit Court obtained subject matter and personal jurisdiction, any judgment awarded in excess of the court's jurisdiction would render the judgment only voidable, not void. For that reason, the ORICO judgment could not be subject to collateral attack in any court, including the bankruptcy court.

B. Nondischargeability of the treble damages award under ORICO

Debtor did not dispute that the actual damages awarded by the Circuit Court as restitution for the criminal offenses to which he pleaded guilty were nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523. Instead, he limited his arguments to the contention that the civil judgment of treble damages awarded under the ORICO claim was dischargeable.

The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, in a case involving nondischargeability under section 523(a)(2)(A), stated that

The preclusive effect of a state court judgment in a subsequent federal lawsuit generally is determined by the full faith and credit statute [28 U.S.C. § 1738], which provides that state judicial proceedings 'shall have the same full faith and credit in every court within the United States...as they have by law or usage in the courts of such...state from which they are taken.

Gayden v. Nourbakhsh (In re Nourbakhsh), 67 F.3d 798, 800 (9th Cir. 1995). Oregon courts give collateral estoppel effect to prior judgments when the issues in the two proceedings are identical, were actually litigated, and were essential to a final decision in the prior proceeding. Nelson v. Emerald Peoples' Utility District, 318 Ore. 99, 104, 862 P.2d 1293, 1296-1297 (1993). The party subject to preclusion must have been a party in the prior case, or in privity with a party, and must have had a full and fair opportunity to be heard on the issue. Id.

Under Oregon law, the issues in a case resulting in a default judgment are deemed to be fully litigated, and judgments entered in such cases "have the same solemn character as judgments entered after trial." See Watson v. State, 71 Ore. App. 734, 738, 694 P.2d 560, 562, rev. withdrawn 299 Ore. 204, 701 P.2d 432 (1985). A default judgment establishes the truth of all material factual allegations contained in the complaint. Kershner v. Smith, 121 Ore. 469, 256 P. 195 (1927), State ex rel. Nilson v. Cushing, 253 Ore. 262, 265, 453 P.2d 945, 947 (1969), Rajneesh Foundation International v. McGreer, 303 Ore. 139, 142, 734 P.2d 871, 873 (1987). Accordingly, under Ninth Circuit precedence and the "full faith and credit" clause, the bankruptcy court was required to apply the same standard of preclusiveness for default judgments, with respect to the ORICO judgment entered against Debtor, as Oregon courts would apply.

With regard to debts from arising from embezzlement or larceny, Bankruptcy Code section 523(a)(4) provides an exception to discharge when the debts result from "the fraudulent appropriation of another's property, whether the appropriation was unlawful at the onset, and therefore a larceny, or whether the appropriation took place unlawfully after the property was entrusted to the debtor's care, and therefore was an embezzlement." 4 Collier on Bankruptcy, 523.10[2] (Matthew Bender).

C&R's state court civil complaint alleged that the Debtor ordered goods and equipment on C&R's account and converted those items to his own personal use. According to the bankruptcy court, such conduct would constitute either embezzlement or larceny under section 523(a)(4). Additionally, the Debtor pleaded guilty to, and was convicted of, aggravated theft in the first degree. A person commits "theft," as defined at ORS § 164.015, when, "with intent to deprive another of property or to appropriate property to the person or to a third person, the person: (1) Takes, appropriates, obtains or withholds such property from the owner thereof." This definition is analogous to the definitions of larceny and embezzlement in Bankruptcy Code section 523(a)(4). Because the ORICO judgment was based on the same conduct for which the Debtor was convicted in the criminal action and for which restitution was ordered, it followed, according to the bankruptcy court, that the ORICO judgment would be similarly nondischargeable under section 523(a)(4).

Conclusion

The decision in Commercial and Residential Maintenance, Inc. v. Abblitt (In re Abblitt) is useful because it addresses several issues: (1) the dischargeability of default state court judgments, and (2) the preclusive effect of criminal convictions in assessing the dischargeability of debts arising from a civil judgment based on the same conduct that formed the basis for conviction. In its decision, the bankruptcy court identified that it was bound by the "full faith and credit" clause to give the conviction and default judgment the same preclusive effect as they would have had under state law, which meant that the Debtor's conduct, which formed the basis for the default civil judgment, could also be the basis for a determination that the treble damages awarded under the Oregon RICO statute were similarly nondischargeable.

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion related to the nondischargeability under 11 U.S.C. § 523, see Collier on Bankruptcy,

■ ch. 523

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the

■ Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For analysis of decisions relating to consumer bankruptcy, click

■ here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs, Gastonia, N.C., received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors' rights. An author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

15 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Lawniczak on Immunity of "Settlement Payments" from Fraudulent Transfer Suits

2010 Emerging Issues 4890

James M. Lawniczak on Immunity of "Settlement Payments" from Fraudulent Transfer Suits

By James M. Lawniczak

February 25, 2010

SUMMARY: In this Emerging Issues Analysis, author James M. Lawniczak looks at the 2009 appellate decisions establishing the majority view that buyout payments made to departing shareholders in leveraged buyout situations will be protected from avoidance actions under Code section 546(e) so long as the payments were made by a financial institution or other similar entity.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: In 2009, Three Courts of Appeals Held that Shareholders of Privately Held Corporations Who Receive Buyouts through "Settlement Payments" Are Immune from Fraudulent Transfer Suits

In 2009, the Courts of Appeals for the Eighth, Sixth and Third Circuits each considered whether 11 U.S.C. § 546(e) provides immunity to shareholders of privately held corporations against subsequent fraudulent transfer suits to recover buyout payments made in the form of settlement payments from financial institutions. In Brandt v. B.A. Capital Co. LP (In re Plassein Int'l Corp.), 590 F.3d 252 (3d Cir. 2009), 590 F.3d 252 (3d Cir. 2009), the trustee of a privately held corporation that had undergone a leveraged buyout prior to its bankruptcy filing sued former shareholders who had received the buyout payments. The shareholders asserted that where the payments were made by a third-party financial institution, section 546(e) of the Bankruptcy Code applied to prevent any fraudulent transfer suit against them. The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit agreed, joining 2009 cases from the Sixth and Eighth Circuits that held likewise.

The Facts of Brandt

Plassein International Corporation and its related corporations (collectively, "Plassein") were formed in 1999 to acquire privately held manufacturing corporations in a series of leveraged buyout transactions. The payments to the shareholders to buy out their interests were financed by loans taken out by the various Plassein entities with their assets pledged as collateral. Because each Plassein entity was liable for the entire debt to the bank, each entity had potential debts well in excess of its assets. 590 F.3d at 254-55.

The selling corporations were privately held, most with only a few shareholders. The selling shareholders delivered their shares to Plassein, which in turn directed Fleet Bank to wire the purchase price to the shareholders at accounts at their various banks. The parties did not make use of the typical third-party clearing agency "settlement system" customarily used in securities transactions. 590 F.3d at 255 n.1.

Plassein began defaulting on its obligations only a few months after the acquisitions. Eventually, the Plassein entities filed chapter 11 petitions, which cases were converted to chapter 7 proceedings. William Brandt was appointed as chapter 7 trustee.

Mr. Brandt instituted adversary proceedings against various selling shareholders, alleging that the amounts they received in payment for their stock in the leveraged buyouts were fraudulent transfers that could be avoided. The shareholders filed motions to dismiss, relying on section 546(e) of the Bankruptcy Code. The bankruptcy court dismissed the cases and district court affirmed on the initial appeal. 590 F.3d at 255.

Review of the Applicable Statutory Provisions

The trustee's suits in the Brandt case were brought under section 544(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code, which allows trustees to assert avoidance claims available to creditors under applicable state law, here Delaware fraudulent transfer law. The shareholders' motions to dismiss were premised on section 546(e) of the Bankruptcy Code, which provides in part that a trustee may not avoid transfers that are "settlement payments" as defined in either section 101 or 741 of the Bankruptcy Code, "made by or to (or for the benefit of) a commodity broker, forward contract merchant, stockbroker, financial institution, financial participant, or securities clearing agency."

The definition in section 101(51A) of the Bankruptcy Code applies to forward contract provisions and thus is not relevant to the Brandt case. However, section 741(8)'s definition is broader and refers to a "preliminary settlement payment, a partial settlement payment, an interim settlement payment, a settlement payment on account, a final settlement payment, or any other similar payment commonly used in the securities trade." This definition is a bit circular, for "settlement payment" is defined by adding various modifying phrases such as "preliminary" and "partial" but then simply uses the term "settlement payment" within the very definition itself.

Legal Analysis of the Brandt Court on the Issue of Whether the Payments to Shareholders of Privately Held Corporations Could Be Settlement Payments

The Brandt court began by noting that leveraged buyouts in corporate transactions are generally subject to fraudulent transfer laws. 590 F.3d 252, 256 (citing United States v. Tabor Court Realty Corp., 803 F.2d 1288, 1297 (3d Cir. 1986)). Certainly, in a leveraged buyout, the shareholders are paid on their equity in the corporation and do not give a reasonable equivalent value for the payment. Thus, if the corporation is either insolvent, unreasonably capitalized or unable to pay its debts as they become due as a result of the transaction, the transfer can be set aside as a constructive fraud on creditors.

Previously, in Lowenschuss v. Resorts International, Inc. (In re Resorts International, Inc.), 181 F.3d 505 (3d Cir. 1999), the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit had held that payments to a shareholder of a publicly held corporation who tendered his shares to his broker and then received payment from the tender agent were exempt from a fraudulent transfer suit under section 546(e) as a settlement payment. The Brandt case noted that Resorts International reached this result even though the clearing agency was not generally involved in the settlement of the shares and the financial institutions acted only as conduits. 590 F.3d at 257.

Thus, the issue before the court in Brandt was whether there should be a different result from that reached in Resorts International because the buyout was of a privately, rather than a publically, held company. The trustee argued that the term "securities trade" in the definition of settlement payment referred to the industry dealing with publicly held companies and the business of buying and selling publicly held shares. The Brandt court disagreed.

The court focused on how the term "settlement payment" was used by those who work in the securities trade, and noted that the Resorts International case determined that the securities trade used that term to refer to payments that complete a leveraged buyout. 590 F.3d at 258. Indeed, in the Resorts International case, the court had stated that "[i]n the securities industry, a settlement payment is generally the transfer of cash or securities made to complete a securities transaction," 181 F.3d 505, 515 (citing Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Charles Schwab & Co., Inc., 913 F.2d 846, 849 (10th Cir. 1990)).

Thus, in order to meet the statutory definition, settlement payments do not have to travel through the settlement system, but simply can be made, as here, by a "financial institution." The plain language of the Bankruptcy Code compels the result that the transfers to the shareholders are protected by section 546(e). 590 F.3d at 259.

Analysis of the Other Court of Appeals Cases Extending the 546(e) Exemption to Buyout Payments to Shareholders of Privately Held Companies

The issue whether leveraged buyout payments to shareholders of privately held companies are protected by section 546(e) was also discussed in two other 2009 court of appeals cases. In QSI Holdings, Inc. v. Alford (In re QSI Holdings, Inc.), 571 F.3d 545 (6th Cir. 2009), the court held that section 546(e) applied to protect buyout payments made by a financial institution. The trustee in QSI Holdings had argued that the purpose of section 546(e) was to protect the "nation's public securities markets" and that it was not intended to allow shareholders of privately held companies to avoid liability by merely funneling the payments through a financial institution. 571 F.3d at 549.

However, the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit determined, as the Third Circuit did in Brandt, that the statutory language was broad enough to cover the transactions. Despite the fact that the definition of "settlement payment" in section 741(8) is "somewhat circular," it is still extremely broad. 571 F.3d at 549. The QSI Holdings court noted that the securities trade was implicated as to a leveraged buyout transaction of a privately held company, which involved a merger of "nearly equal companies," with substantial value.

The court distinguished the case of In re Norstan Apparel Shops, Inc., 367 B.R. 68, 76 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2007), which found that a sale by two sole shareholders of a closely held Subchapter S corporation did not implicate public securities markets and lacked many of the indicia of transactions "commonly used in the securities trade." The QSI Holdings court thus suggested that the result likely would be different if a small, very privately held company was sold in a manner where a financial institution made the final payment to a very few retiring shareholders. 571 F.3d at 550. This is inconsistent with the facts and language of Brandt, where in some of the transactions only a few shareholders were involved and which recognized "that persons who work in the securities trade use the term 'settlement payment' when referring to the payment that completes a leveraged buyout." 590 F.3d at 258.

Similarly, in Contemporary Industries Corp. v. Frost, 564 F.3d 981 (8th Cir. 2009), the court ruled that section 546(e) applied to exempt leveraged buyout payments to shareholders of a privately held corporation from a fraudulent transfer claim. The court noted that nothing in the statute "suggests Congress intended to exclude these payments from the statutory definition of 'settlement payment' simply because the stock at issue was privately held." 564 F.3d at 986.

Courts That Applied the Section 546(e) Exemption to Buyout Payments to Shareholders of Public Companies

In addition to the Resorts International case, 181 F.3d 505 (3d Cir. 1999), which was relied upon heavily by the Brandt court and discussed in more detail above, the Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, in Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Pearl Brewing Co. (In re Kaiser Steel Corp.), 952 F.2d 1230, 1239-40 (10th Cir. 1991), also held that the section 546(e) exemption for settlement payments applies to protect buyout payments to shareholders of public companies made by financial institutions. The two cases discussed above focused on the "language of the statute itself," noting that "settlement payment" is a broad term that includes almost all securities transactions. Kaiser Steel, 952 F.2d at 1237; see Resorts Int'l, 181 F.3d at 515.

Courts Disagreeing with the Resorts International Holding That Leveraged Buyouts Are Governed by Section 546(e)

Some bankruptcy and district court cases have disagreed with the holdings of the four circuit courts of appeals that leveraged buyout payments are covered by section 546(e). Instead, those courts focus on the fact that "the system of intermediaries and guarantees" that are involved in normal securities transactions are not in play in a leveraged buyout. See, e.g., Zahn v. Yacaipa Capital Fund, 218 B.R. 656, 675-76 (D.R.I. 1998); Wieboldt Stores, Inc. v. Schottenstein, 131 B.R. 655, 664-65 (N.D. Ill. 1991); Norstan Apparel Shops, 367 B.R. 68, 76-77 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2007) (where a transfer "does not involve publicly traded securities or otherwise implicate the public securities markets, the transfer is not a 'settlement payment'").

Court of Appeals Case Holding That Leveraged Buyout Payments Made by a Financial Institution Were Not Protected by Section 546(e) Because the Institution Was Only a Conduit

In Munford v. Valuation Research Corp. (In re Munford, Inc.), 98 F.3d 604 (11th Cir. 1996), the Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit became the only court of appeals court to date to determine that leveraged buyout payments are not "settlement payments" protected by section 546(e). The Munford court held that the payments made to shareholders in a leveraged buyout were not actually made by a financial institution as required by the definition of "settlement payment" because those payments were actually made by the corporation itself to the shareholders involved. While "a section 546(e) financial institution was presumptively involved," it was nothing more than an intermediary or conduit, never acquiring a beneficial interest in the funds or the shares. 98 F.3d at 610.

This argument was made in each of the three 2009 court of appeal cases dealing with leveraged buyouts of privately held companies, and specifically rejected by each. In each of the three cases, the courts relied on the plain language of the statute, which requires only that the payments be made by a financial institution, not that the financial institution have a beneficial interest in the funds involved. Brandt, 590 F.3d at 257-58; QSI Holdings, 571 F.3d at 551; Contemporary Indus., 564 F.3d at 986-87.

Some Examples of Payouts to Shareholders That Are Not Protected as "Settlement Payments"

Although the cases discussed above have all noted that the definition of "settlement payment" is very broad, it is not unlimited. For example, in Kipperman v. Circle Trust F.B.O. (In re Grafton Partners, L.P.), 321 B.R. 527, 540-41 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2005), the court held that section 546(e) was not applicable to payments made by a company involved in a Ponzi scheme, because a transaction involving nonpublic securities was not in any way normal in the securities industries as it involved substantial illegalities. Likewise, in Enron Corp. v. Bear, Stearns Int'l Ltd. (In re Enron Corp.), 323 B.R. 857 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2005), payment by a corporation to acquire its own shares was not a "settlement payment" as there was no "securities trade" involved, particularly where the transaction was illegal under state law.

Practice Pointer

Because the courts have broadly applied section 546(e) to leveraged buyouts of both publicly and privately held companies, departing shareholders and their attorneys should make certain in each case that the payments for the shares are made by one of the entities described in section 741, such as a "financial institution." The payments should not come directly from the acquiring company.

Conclusion

As a result of the three courts of appeals cases decided in 2009, the majority view is that buyout payments made to departing shareholders in leveraged buyout situations will be protected from avoidance actions under section 546(e) of the Bankruptcy Code, so long as the payments are made by a financial institution or other similar entity. This is true whether the selling corporation is publicly or privately held.

RELATED LINKS: For analysis of other decisions relating to the bankruptcy estate, click

■ here.

For analysis of other decisions relating to corporate reorganizations, click

■ here.

For discussion of Code section 546(e), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ " 546.06.

For discussion of Code section 544(b), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ " 544.07.

For discussion of Code section 741, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ ch. 741.

For discussion of Code section 101(51A), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ " 101.51A.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

James M. Lawniczak is a partner at Calfee, Halter and Griswold LLP in Cleveland, Ohio. He concentrates his practice on corporate bankruptcy and creditors' rights, as well as commercial business and finance matters. His experience includes bankruptcy plans and related disclosure statements, cash collateral and financing orders, asset sales, executory contracts and unexpired leases, and bankruptcy litigation and appeals.

Mr. Lawniczak is a frequent author and lecturer in his field. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy, the leading national treatise on bankruptcy law. He is also the author of the bankruptcy chapters of the Matthew Bender treatises Asset Based Financing and Business Organizations with Tax Planning. He has been listed in multiple editions of Chambers USA as a Leading Lawyer for bankruptcy and restructuring and is recognized as one of the Best Lawyers in America.

Mr. Lawniczak is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, where he served as an editor of the Michigan Law Review.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

16 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on Jones v. Wells Fargo Home Mortgage, Inc. (In re Jones)

2010 Emerging Issues 4888

S. Andrew Jurs on Jones v. Wells Fargo Home Mortgage, Inc. (In re Jones), 418 B.R. 687 (Bankr. E.D. La. 2009)

By S. Andrew Jurs

February 24, 2010

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis examines a bankruptcy court's decision to order the implementation of certain accounting procedures where punitive damages alone would not make the mortgage company change its behavior. The court relied on its own inherent authority as well as the authority granted by 11 U.S.C. § 105(a).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Bankruptcy Court Ruled That It Had Inherent Authority and Authority Under Section 105 to Order Mortgage Company to Implement Certain Accounting Procedures

In Jones v. Wells Fargo Home Mortgage, Inc. (In re Jones), 418 B.R. 687, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 3317 (Bankr. E.D. La. Oct. 1, 2009), the bankruptcy court considered how to enforce its earlier judgment that a mortgage creditor willfully and egregiously violated the automatic stay imposed by 11 U.S.C. § 362 when it charged the debtor's account with unreasonable fees and costs. The court concluded that it could consider alternate remedies, such as punitive damages, but ultimately decided that punitive damages would not have the desired effect of getting this particular mortgage company to change its behavior. Accordingly, the court used its authority under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a), and its inherent authority, to order the implementation of certain accounting procedures designed to ensure that the pleadings filed by the mortgage creditor would be accurate or immediately corrected.

Facts and Procedural History

In August 2003, Michael L. Jones ("Jones" or "Debtor") filed a chapter 13 bankruptcy petition. At the time of his filing, Debtor was obligated to Wells Fargo on a debt secured by his residence. Wells Fargo filed a proof of claim setting forth the amounts owed by Debtor as of the petition date. In August 2005, Debtor filed a motion requesting authority from the court to refinance the Wells Fargo debt. As part of this process, Debtor requested a payoff of the amounts due. On January 3, 2006, Wells Fargo faxed a payoff statement indicating a payoff of $231,463.97. The payoff was itemized but contained no explanation or substantiation for the amounts owed.

When Debtor received the payoff statement, he questioned the amounts Wells Fargo alleged were due; however, he was unable to obtain an accounting from Wells Fargo explaining its calculations. Because Debtor's new loan could not be closed without a release of the Wells Fargo mortgage, Debtor was forced to pay the amount demanded or lose his loan.

Following the closing, Debtor requested an accounting from Wells Fargo. On January 12, 2006, Wells Fargo acknowledged that it had collected more money than necessary to satisfy the loan. Wells Fargo gave no explanation as to how much was due or why the amounts collected were in excess of the amounts owed. Debtor was advised that he would be reimbursed the excess amount.

On March 30, 2006, Debtor filed an adversary proceeding when no reimbursement was received. Thereafter, on April 20, 2006, Wells Fargo forwarded $7,598.64 as reimbursement. At trial, Wells Fargo offered into evidence an accounting from the date of the loan's inception to payoff, reflecting charges made against the loan, as well as the amounts received in payment.

Debtor disputed the accounting, particularly the accrual and payment of postpetition inspection fees, attorney's fees, and statutory expenses, as well as prepetition sheriff's commissions. Debtor also objected to the calculation of interest. Wells Fargo did not dispute Debtor's allegation that the charges were not previously disclosed to Debtor, the court, or the trustee. Wells Fargo alleged, though, that the amounts claimed were correctly calculated and that the postpetition charges were authorized under the loan documents. It further maintained that because Debtor voluntarily paid the sums owed, he could not recover any amounts improperly charged.

After trial, the bankruptcy court entered a partial judgment on April 13, 2007 (the "Partial Judgment"). In the Partial Judgment, the court found that Wells Fargo collected undisclosed, unapproved fees and costs and diverted estate property without authority to satisfy those fees and costs. Additionally, the court determined that Wells Fargo willfully and egregiously violated the automatic stay imposed by 11 U.S.C. § 362 when it charged the unreasonable fees and costs. The Partial Judgment ordered Wells Fargo to return $ 16,852.01 to Jones, representing the amount overcharged.

At a subsequent hearing to consider sanctions, on May 29, 2007, counsel for Wells Fargo stated that his client was prepared to implement accounting procedures and to audit every account before discharge. In fact, later in the hearing, Wells Fargo's Vice President for Bankruptcy stated that it was willing to enter into a consent order, which led to a lengthy discussion with court regarding the form and substance of potential accounting procedure changes. In light of those discussions, the bankruptcy court asked the parties to draft a consent agreement implementing accounting procedures and settling the Debtor's request for damages.

Eventually, the parties reported that they were unable to reach agreement, after which the bankruptcy court entered an Amended Judgment requiring Wells Fargo to implement procedures for: (1) proper application of payments and (2) improved notice to debtors of fees or charges assessed against their accounts (the "Accounting Procedures"). The court also ordered Wells Fargo to pay $ 67,202.45 to the Debtor as actual damages for attorney's fees and costs.

Wells Fargo appealed both the Partial Judgment and the Amended Judgment. The district court generally affirmed the judgments but remanded the case for additional findings regarding the Accounting Procedures. n1 The district court also determined that Wells Fargo, by filing the appeals, had withdrawn its consent to the imposition of the Accounting Procedures. Since the Accounting Procedures were a form of injunctive relief, the matter was remanded to the bankruptcy court to consider the propriety of the relief in light of Wells Fargo's lack of consent. Before the bankruptcy court could address the case on remand, Wells Fargo appealed the district court's judgment to the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. The bankruptcy court stayed the case until the Fifth Circuit dismissed the appeal for lack of jurisdiction, after which the bankruptcy court conducted a hearing on the appropriateness of the injunctive relief.

Legal Analysis

Authority Under Section 105. The authority of bankruptcy courts to issue civil sanctions is well settled. In re Terrebonne Fuel & Lube, Inc., 108 F.3d 609 (5th Cir. 1997). It springs from two sources: section 105 of the Bankruptcy Code, id. at 613, and the court's inherent authority, see, e.g., In re Yorkshire LLC, 540 F.3d 328 (5th Cir. 2008) (affirming bankruptcy court's inherent authority to issue sanctions); Citizens Bank & Trust Co. v Case, 937 F.2d 1014, 1023 (5th Cir. 1991). Section 105(a) provides:

The court may issue any order, process or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title. No provision of this title providing for the raising of an issue by a party in interest shall be construed to preclude the court from, sua sponte, taking any action or making any determination necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules, or to prevent an abuse of process.

While section 105(a) gives the court a broad range of power, any action executed under that section's authority "cannot be used in a manner inconsistent with the commands of the Bankruptcy Code." In re Ludlow Hosp. Society, Inc., 124 F.3d 22, 27 (1st Cir. 1997).

Inherent Authority. Bankruptcy courts also have inherent authority to sanction parties and control their courts. "It is well-settled that a federal court, acting under its inherent authority, may impose sanctions against litigants or lawyers appearing before the court so long as the court makes a specific finding that they engaged in bad faith conduct." Yorkshire LLC, 540 F.3d 328, 332. "Courts of justice are universally acknowledged to be vested, by their very creation, with power to impose silence, respect, and decorum in their presence and submission to their lawful mandates." Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 43, 111 S. Ct. 2123, 2132, 115 L. Ed. 2d 27 (1991). This inherent power is "governed not by rule or statute but by the control necessarily vested in courts to manage their own affairs so as to achieve the orderly and expeditious disposition of cases." Id.

A bankruptcy court has the power "to protect its jurisdiction and judgments and to control its docket." Ferguson v. Mbank Houston, N.A., 808 F.2d 358, 360 (5th Cir. 1986). It has been a long-standing rule that "[t]he power to issue an injunction when necessary to prevent the defeat or impairment of its jurisdiction is, therefore, inherent in a court of bankruptcy." Continental Illinois Nat'l Bank & Trust. Co. of Chicago v. Chicago R.I. & P. Ry. Co., 294 U.S. 648, 675, 55 S. Ct. 595, 606, 79 L. Ed. 1110 (1935). Finally, the Judicial Code provides that "[t]he Supreme Court and all courts established by Act of Congress may issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law." 28 U.S.C.A § 1651(a).

Appropriateness of Injunctive Relief. Where monetary sanctions are ineffective in deterring vexatious filings, injunctions are appropriate. The court's power to enter such orders flows not only from various statutes and rules relating to sanctions, but from the inherent power of the court to protect its jurisdiction and its judgments and to control its docket. Ferguson, 808 F.2d 358, 359 (confirming that this inherent power also resides with bankruptcy courts for bad faith conduct occurring in proceedings before them). To determine whether injunctive relief is appropriate, a court considers the party's history of litigation, whether or not it has a good faith basis for pursuing the litigation, the extent of the burden on the court and other parties resulting from the party's filings, and the adequacy of alternative sanctions. Baum v. Blue Moon Ventures, L.L.C., 513 F.3d 181, 189 (5th Cir. 2008).

Commentary

The decision in Jones is significant because, instead of simply penalizing a national mortgage company for its actions as creditor in the hope that future improper behavior will be deterred, the bankruptcy court went out of its way to establish its authority and to order the creditor to change how its business practices.

The Bankruptcy Court Could Consider the Adequacy of Alternative Remedies. Although the parties raised several tangential issues, the first real question before the bankruptcy court was whether an adequate, alternative legal remedy to injunctive relief existed. On remand, if the bankruptcy court concluded that alternative forms of relief were both available and adequate, then imposing the Accounting Procedures would be unwarranted. Additionally, the bankruptcy court was confronted with the issue of how to handle the substantial change in Wells Fargo's position since trial. According to the bankruptcy court, it had declined to award monetary punitive damages because of Wells Fargo's statements at the hearing that it would voluntarily change its practices. Once the Amended Judgment was entered, however, Wells Fargo changed its position with the possible result of avoiding monetary punitive damages.

Because of the possibility that Wells Fargo could avoid sanction, the bankruptcy court quickly dismissed Wells Fargo's argument that the imposition of alternative forms of relief were either beyond the scope of remand or barred by Jones's failure to seek them on appeal. According to the bankruptcy court, this result would be especially untenable given that Wells Fargo offered to implement the Accounting Procedures and consented to their inclusion in a court order in an effort to avoid punitive damages and other sanctions. Although the district court had allowed Wells Fargo another day in court on the issue because of this change of position, the bankruptcy court could not believe that the district court intended to foreclose all relief against Wells Fargo. As a result, the bankruptcy court concluded that the scope of the remand included considering the adequacy of alternative remedies and, if available, the imposition of those remedies.

The Bankruptcy Court Has Authority to Grant Injunctive Relief. The bankruptcy court also summarily rejected Wells Fargo's assertion that the bankruptcy court did not have "inherent authority" to issue an injunction. In fact, the bankruptcy court felt that Fifth Circuit precedent was so clear on this issue that it described the argument as a "blatant misstatement of the law." 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 3317, at *13 n.26; see also Franklin v Elliott, 15 F.3d 179 (5th Cir. 1994) (characterizing argument that bankruptcy courts lack inherent power to sanction as "totally without merit").

The Required Accounting Procedures Do Not Exceed the Bankruptcy Court's Authority.

Wells Fargo further argued that individual debtors, not the bankruptcy court itself, should enforce their rights by filing separate actions to challenge the proofs of claim or motions for relief filed by Wells Fargo. To the bankruptcy court, this argument might have had some merit under normal circumstances, but several factors weighed against Wells Fargo in this regard:

- (i) Wells Fargo had refused to audit its filings for errors and to voluntarily correct its errors despite the fact that it admitted that it regularly committed such errors;
- (ii) Wells Fargo insisted on limiting any change in its conduct prospectively, even as it continued to seek to collect on loans in other cases for amounts owed in error.

To the bankruptcy court, Wells Fargo's refusal to rectify its errors was particularly egregious because of the heavy burden it put on debtors to enforce their rights. "Naïve borrowers/debtors, trustees, and creditors rightly assume that Wells Fargo is complying with the plain meaning of its notes, mortgages, court orders, and confirmed plans. Why would anyone assume otherwise?" 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 3317, at *25.

In fact, Wells Fargo's refusal to verify and correct existing proofs of claim and pleadings put the bankruptcy court in the position of enforcing pleadings that it suspected were incorrect. For that reason, the bankruptcy court found that the injunctive relief was grounded in the bankruptcy court's inherent authority to control its proceedings and the integrity of the judicial system. At its core, the relief was needed as a means to ensure that the pleadings filed by Wells Fargo would be accurate or immediately corrected.

Adequacy of Alternative Remedies/ Punitive Damages. The parties agreed that a legal remedy to address stay violations already existed under Code section 362(k)(1), which provides that "an individual injured by any willful violation of a stay provided by this section shall recover actual damages, including costs and attorneys' fees, and, in appropriate circumstances, may recover punitive damages." See also In re Fisher, 144 B.R. 237 n.1 (Bankr. D.RI 1992) (noting that the compensatory and punitive damages provided for a willful stay violation under section 362 is a legal remedy). According to Wells Fargo, this meant that, because Debtor had been reimbursed for his actual damages, i.e., his attorney's fees, he had received an adequate legal remedy. Taking this argument to its logical conclusion, Wells Fargo maintained that punitive damages were not warranted and the Accounting Procedures were unnecessary. In contrast, the Debtor did not oppose the Accounting Procedures but argued that Wells Fargo's conduct warranted the imposition of substantial punitive damages.

The purpose of punitive damages is to punish and deter. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 908(1) (1977). While the bankruptcy court believed that punitive damages could be imposed, it did not believe that punitive damages would either deter or punish Wells Fargo sufficiently to change its behavior. This conclusion was based on Wells Fargo's conduct in the case of Slick v. Norwest Mortgage, Inc., 2002 Bankr. LEXIS 772 (Bankr. S.D. Ala. 2002), in which Wells Fargo was assessed $2 million in punitive damages for charging postpetition attorney's fees to debtors' accounts without disclosing the fees to anyone. Four years after the ruling in Slick, Wells Fargo continued to charge undisclosed postpetition fees despite the punitive damages. To the bankruptcy court, this conduct, as well Wells Fargo's behavior during the Jones case itself, constituted such an "arrogant defiance of federal law" that the bankruptcy court did not believe that Wells Fargo would change unless ordered to do so. 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 3317, at *32. By concluding that punitive damages alone would be insufficient to stop Wells Fargo's improper business practices, there could be no other adequate alternative legal remedy to force Wells Fargo's compliance with the Bankruptcy Code. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court concluded that it was acting with proper authority in imposing the injunctive relief of the Accounting Procedures. n2

Conclusion

The decision in Jones v. Wells Fargo Home Mortgage, Inc. (In re Jones), 418 B.R. 687, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 3317 (Bankr. E.D. La. Oct. 1, 2009), is important in that the bankruptcy court found that punitive damages would not make Wells Fargo change its behavior. With no other remedies available to it, the court was forced to use its authority under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a), and its inherent authority, to order the implementation of the Accounting Procedures and regulate how a national mortgage company operates its business.

Return to Text

n1 Wells Fargo also asserted as one of its assignments of error on appeal, and continued to assert in subsequent proceedings, that it never agreed to implement the Accounting Procedures ordered by the Amended Judgment. Addressing this contention, the district court found that Wells Fargo was "disingenuous." Wells Fargo Bank N.A. v. Jones (Jones III), 391 B.R. 577, 611 (E.D. La. 2008).

n2 Debtor urged the Bankruptcy Court to impose both punitive damages and the Accounting Procedures, arguing that the remedies are not exclusive. But the bankruptcy court disagreed on the grounds that if punitive damages would deter Wells Fargo's conduct, then the Accounting Procedures would be both unwarranted and unnecessary. Because the bankruptcy court found that punitive damages would not be adequate to curb Wells Fargo's behavior, any additional award of punitive damages would be inconsistent with this position.

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of Bankruptcy Code section 105, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 105.

For analysis of decisions relating to consumer bankruptcy, click here.

For analysis of decisions relating to bankruptcy litigation and procedure, click here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs, of Gastonia, N.C., received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors' rights. An author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

17 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Braucher on 9th Circuit's Interpretation of Inherent Power to Sanction Attorneys

2010 Emerging Issues 4877

Anne Braucher on the Ninth Circuit's Interpretation of a Bankruptcy Court's Inherent Power to Sanction Attorneys

By Ms. Anne Braucher

February 22, 2010

SUMMARY: Bankruptcy courts have broad authority to discipline attorneys pursuant to their inherent sanction power. In the recent Price v. Lehtinen (In re Lehtinen) decision, the Ninth Circuit stated that bankruptcy courts can exercise their inherent power to sanction attorneys in any way that is not punitive and that is based upon a finding of bad faith or willful misconduct. This commentary discusses the import of this significant decision.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: A Bankruptcy Court's Inherent Power Allows it to Suspend Attorneys Who Engage in Bad Faith or Willful Misconduct

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has upheld a bankruptcy court's decision to suspend an attorney for bad faith or willful misconduct during representation of a debtor in a Chapter 13 case. The decision, Price v. Lehtinen (In re Lehtinen), 564 F.3d 1052 (9th Cir. 2009), demonstrates that bankruptcy courts do not have to rely on statutory authority or rules of professional conduct in order to sanction attorneys for misconduct. The Circuit Court held that suspending the attorney from practicing before the bankruptcy court was a proper exercise of inherent authority because attorney suspension is not a punitive sanction. Further, the attorney's due process rights were properly protected because he received sufficient notice of the several instances of misconduct upon which his three-month suspension was based.

Background

Bankruptcy courts have the power to sanction attorneys pursuant to the civil contempt authority established in section 105(a) of the Bankruptcy Code or the inherent authority established by case law. See Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991); Caldwell v. Unified Capital Corp. (In re Rainbow Magazine, Inc.), 77 F.3d 278 (9th Cir. 1996). The two sources of sanctioning power differ in their reach and application. Civil contempt authority is limited to remedying violations of specific orders. With inherent authority, bankruptcy courts can sanction attorneys for a broad range of misconduct, even without express statutory authority to do so. Before exercising inherent authority, however, bankruptcy courts must make a finding of bad faith or willful misconduct. "[B]ad faith or willful misconduct consists of something more egregious than mere negligence or recklessness." In re Lehtinen, 564 F.3d at 1058 (quoting Fink v. Gomez, 239 F.3d 989, 993-94 (9th Cir. 2001)). Civil contempt authority does not require such a finding. According to the Supreme Court, inherent authority must be exercised with "restraint and discretion" because it is so much more potent than civil contempt authority. Chambers, 501 U.S. at 44. This means that courts exercising inherent authority cannot impose significant punitive sanctions. Such punitive sanctions would require due process protections that are usually available only to criminal defendants.

The debtor, Patricia Lehtinen, retained attorney Jim Price to represent her in her Chapter 13 case. After filing her petition, Price did not attend Lehtinen's § 341 meeting of creditors, but sent a contract attorney in his place. Price had not told Lehtinen that he would not be attending her creditor meeting. Price also referred Lehtinen to a lender who agreed to help her finance home improvements, but only if she retained Price as a broker for the later sale of her home. Then, Lehtinen appeared at her confirmation hearing alone, and her plan was confirmed. Price missed the hearing because he had agreed to appear in another court for another client, even though he knew it conflicted with Lehtinen's hearing. The next day, Price sent Lehtinen a letter telling her that her case had been dismissed, when it had not, and offering to help her file another case or sell her house. Price assumed that her case would be dismissed because he did not attend her confirmation hearing and she was behind on her payments to the trustee.

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of California then issued its first order to show cause why Price should not disgorge all or part of his $1,500 fee for failure to appear at the § 341 meeting and the confirmation hearing. Following the hearing, the court entered an order requiring Price to disgorge $300 of his fee. After the hearing, but before the court entered its order, Lehtinen sent a letter to the court outlining several instances of Price's misconduct and attaching the letter in which Price erroneously stated that her case had been dismissed. Based upon her letter, the bankruptcy court issued a second order to show cause why Price should not be suspended or disbarred for bad faith misconduct. The court identified four instances of Price's misconduct: (1) his failure to attend and inform Lehtinen of her confirmation hearing; (2) pressuring the debtor to list her house with his brokerage firm; (3) referring her to a lender who conditioned a home improvement loan on Lehtinen's retaining Price as a broker for the sale of her home; and (4) his letter falsely stating that her case had been dismissed. Following hearing, the court ordered Price to disgorge the rest of his $1,500 fee and suspended him from practicing in the bankruptcy court for three months. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel ("BAP") for the Ninth Circuit held that the bankruptcy court was within its power to sanction Price, but it vacated the suspension and remanded to the bankruptcy court for consideration of the American Bar Association standards in disciplining Price. Price appealed to the Ninth Circuit.

The Decision

Following a hearing, the Ninth Circuit determined that Price's suspension was proper. In re Lehtinen, 564 F.3d at 1062. In reaching its decision, the court engaged in a three-part analysis, including: (1) whether the bankruptcy court possessed inherent authority to suspend Price; (2) whether Price was accorded due process; and (3) whether the BAP should have referred the matter to a standing committee pursuant to a Northern District of California local rule. See id. at 1058.

The court first held that the bankruptcy court possessed inherent authority to suspend Price. Attorney discipline proceedings are neither civil nor criminal, but "an investigation into the conduct of the attorney-respondent." Id. at 1059 (quoting Cantanella v. California, 404 F.3d 1106, 1110 (9th Cir. 2005)). They are not, like criminal proceedings, undertaken for the purpose of punishment, but rather to "maintain the integrity of the courts and the profession." Id. (quoting Patterson v. Standing Comm. Of Discipline of Bar of the U.S. Dist. Court of Or. (In re Patterson), 176 F.2d 966, 968 n.1 (9th Cir. 1949)). Because attorney suspensions are not punitive in nature, it is within the inherent sanction authority of bankruptcy courts to impose them.

The court then held that Price was accorded due process by the bankruptcy court. According to the Ninth Circuit, "due process is accorded as long as the sanctionee is 'provided with sufficient, advance notice of exactly which conduct was alleged to be sanctionable, and [was] furthermore aware that [he] stood accused of having acted in bad faith.'" Id. at 1060 (quoting Miller v. Cardinale (In re DeVille), 361 F.3d 539, 549 (9th Cir. 2004)). The bankruptcy court protected Price's due process rights by giving him notice of the particular alleged misconduct - the four instances cited in the second order to show cause. See id. The bankruptcy court's failure to notify Price of any other alleged misconduct was harmless, especially given the egregious nature of the four instances cited in the second order to show cause. See id. at 1060-1. Further, the bankruptcy court's failure to cite specific rules on which it based its decision to suspend Price was not fatal. Invoking the court's inherent sanction power was sufficient to protect Price's due process rights. See id. at 1061. The bankruptcy court also made an implied finding of bad faith or willful conduct by Price that was sufficient grounds for the suspension. See id.

Finally, the court held that the BAP was not required to refer Price's suspension proceeding to a standing committee. On close reading, the Northern District of California local rule regarding discipline states that its procedures are discretionary and not mandatory. See id. at 1062.

The Effect of the Decision: Bankruptcy Courts Have Broad Authority to Discipline Attorneys.

The In re Lehtinen decision means that bankruptcy courts have extremely broad authority to discipline attorneys who engage in misconduct. Federal courts already have authority under section 105(a) of the Bankruptcy Code to impose sanctions on attorneys who defy specific court orders. Now, the Ninth Circuit has stated that inherent sanction authority includes the power to suspend attorneys from practicing in bankruptcy courts.

Because inherent authority is not codified but rather established by case law, it is difficult to determine the boundaries of this power to discipline attorneys. In Lehtinen, the court said only that sanctions imposed pursuant to inherent authority must not be punitive and must be based on a finding of bad faith or willful misconduct. The court also stated that attorney suspensions are, by definition, not punitive. Accordingly, there appears to be no real limit at all to the inherent authority of courts to suspend attorneys. The Lehtinen court also stated that "[a]lthough the bankruptcy court did not explicitly state that Price's conduct was performed in 'bad faith' or was 'willful,' it impliedly did so by finding that the 'conduct in this case was outrageously improper, unprofessional and unethical under any reading of California's ethical standards for attorneys.'" Id. at 1061. This means that it is not, in fact, necessary for a court to make an explicit finding of bad faith or willful misconduct. A court can exercise its inherent authority to suspend an attorney based on something less - a finding that the attorney acted unethically.

For the bankruptcy practitioner, the Lehtinen case is a cautionary tale. Bankruptcy attorneys, like all attorneys, need to ensure that they maintain regular communication with their clients. Given the volume of cases that debtors' attorneys often manage, maintaining this communication may be particularly difficult but also particularly important. Failure to timely inform debtors of hearings and deadlines may cost an attorney the privilege of practicing in a particular bankruptcy court. Bankruptcy attorneys also need to maintain a reliable calendaring system. Failure to attend hearings in person may, again, be grounds for suspension.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Anne Braucher is a principal of The Law Offices of Anne Braucher located in Alexandria, Virginia. Ms. Braucher's practice focuses on creditors' rights, family law, and general commercial litigation. Prior to founding her own firm, Ms. Braucher spent 5 years as an associate in the Litigation and Bankruptcy Departments of DLA Piper LLP (US). From 2003 to 2004, Ms. Braucher clerked for Chief Judge Douglas O. Tice, Jr. of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Virginia. Ms. Braucher received a B.A. from Oberlin College in 1998 and a J.D. from the American University Washington College of Law, where she was Managing Editor of The American University International Law Review. Ms. Braucher is a member of the DC Bar Lawyers Assistance Program Committee and the DC Volunteer Lawyers Project.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

18 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Mears, Gregg and Winge on the Saab Reorganization in Sweden

2010 Emerging Issues 4842

Patrick E. Mears, John T. Gregg and Mathias Winge on the Saab Reorganization in Sweden: The Expedited and Successful Restructuring and Sale of a Global Automobile Manufacturer

By Patrick E. Mears, John T. Gregg and Mathias Winge

January 22, 2010

SUMMARY: In 2009, two of the three primary American auto assemblers sought relief under Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, a European subsidiary of General Motors and its British sister company were sold to a multinational joint venture, although at the date of this writing the sale has yet to close, and Saab Automobile AG, another foreign subsidiary of General Motors, filed for reorganization under Sweden's Reorganization of Business Act.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Calendar year 2009 was a watershed time for reorganizing automobile manufacturers globally. Two of the three primary American auto assemblers, Chrysler LLC and General Motors Corporation, sought relief under Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code in the first six months of the year. General Motors' European subsidiary, Adam Opel GmbH, and its British sister company, Vauxhall Motors, Ltd., have been sold to a joint venture involving Magna International, an Austrian-Canadian auto supplier, and Sberbank Rossii OAO, a Russian commercial bank with ties to GAZ Group, a Russian automobile manufacturer, although at the date of this writing the sale has yet to close. Finally, Saab Automobile AG, another foreign subsidiary of General Motors, filed for reorganization in Sweden in February of 2009 under Sweden's Reorganization of Business Act. In these court proceedings, the administrator of Saab successfully restructured its debt and sold its assets to a consortium headed by Koenigsegg Automotive AB, a specialty automobile manufacturer. The goal of the Saab reorganization proceedings, i.e., the sale of Saab on a going concern basis, was accomplished in less than a year, and these proceedings were terminated in August 2009. This success story and an analysis of Sweden's Reorganization of Business Act follow.

I. History of Saab Automobiles

A. The Founding and Growth of Saab

Saab automobiles were first manufactured in 1947 by the automobile division of the Swedish Aeroplane Company, Svenska Aeroplan AB n1, that was established in the city of Trollhaettan, Vaestra Gotaland County, in the southwest of Sweden. That year, Saab produced its first vehicle, the Saab 92, with a two-cylinder engine that realized the lowest drag coefficient of any automobile produced that year. In 1969, during the expansion of the worldwide market for Saab vehicles, Saab merged with Scania AB, a Swedish manufacturer of heavy trucks, buses and diesel engines; this merger was uncoupled in 1995, and the two companies went their separate ways. n2

Saab gained an allure in the late 1970s and early 1980s as the maker of stylish, high-end and high-performance vehicles that generated significant consumer demand throughout the world, especially in the United States where the Saab 900 Turbo became one of the cars of choice of the "yuppie" generation. n3 In 1978, Saab entered into an agreement with Fiat S.p.a. to develop jointly a new car platform that resulted in the Alfa Romeo 164, Fiat Croma, Lancia Thema and the Saab 9000.

In December, 1989, General Motors purchased 50% of Saab's automotive division and, as a result, created Saab Automobile AB. General Motors was granted at the same time an option to purchase the remaining shares of Saab within a 10-year period. In 2000, General Motors exercised this option, and Saab became another one of its wholly-owned, European subsidiaries along with Adam Opel GmbH and Vauxhall Motors, Ltd. n4

B. The Global Recession of 2008-2009 and its Effect on Saab

The global recession of 2008-2009 and the accompanying worldwide credit crisis severely impacted sales of Saab vehicles, with Saab sharing the pain with its parent company and its other subsidiaries. In 2008, only 93,295 Saab vehicles were sold worldwide, 21,383 of them in the United States. n5 As of the end of 2008, Saab had production facilities in (i) Trollhaettan, Sweden, (ii) Graz, Austria, (iii) Moraine, Ohio (USA), and (iv) Uusikaupunki, Finland (a joint venture with Valmet Automotive, Inc., a Finnish manufacturer of specialty cars). Saab produced only 90,281 vehicles in 2008, a drop of approximately 35,000 from the previous year. n6 Saab was the worst selling General Motors brand during 2008.

During the fall of 2008, the chief executives of Chrysler and General Motors appeared at public hearings before the United States Congress and pressed for governmental financial assistance for their respective enterprises on account of the dismal state of the American economy and the North American automotive sector. At roughly the same time, Saab appealed to the Swedish government for similar state aid; Saab had experienced losses of approximately $3 billion Swedish Kronor ("SEK"), which translated at the then current exchange rates as $343 million (U.S.). General Motors requested a loan of 5 billion SEK or $565 million (U.S.) from the Swedish government in order to continue operations at Saab until the beginning of 2010, but this request was rejected. n7 Swedish Industry Minister Maud Olofsson was quoted as saying that Saab's survival was General Motors' responsibility and that GM's business plan for Saab was not "realistic." She continued by declaiming that the "Swedish state and taxpayers in Sweden will not own car factories. Sometimes you get the impression that this is a small, small company, but it is the world's biggest automaker, so we have a right to make demands." n8

Shortly after this request for state aid was turned down, Saab commenced a voluntary proceeding on February 10, 2009, under the Swedish Reorganization Act in the district court in Vanersborg, a city near Saab's manufacturing facilities in Trollhaettan. n9 After Saab filed its application for reorganization, Saab's Managing Director, Jan-Ake Jonsson, remarked that Saab would "continue to explore all available options for funding and/or selling Saab" and that Saab's board of directors had determined that "a formal reorganization would be the best way to create a truly independent entity that is ready for investment." n10 General Motors' Group Vice President for Purchasing, Bo Andersson, who began his career at Saab, contended that GM was "fully committed to maintaining a viable and successful local and global supplier base during the Saab reorganization." n11

II. Swedish Business Reorganization Law and the Saab Proceedings

A. Description and Analysis of Sweden's Reorganization of Business Act

1. Commencement of the Reorganization Proceedings

The Reorganization of Business Act (Sw: "foertagsrekonstruktion") adopted in Sweden in 1996 establishes special procedures for the reorganization of financially troubled businesses. These procedures are separate from those prescribed by the Swedish Bankruptcy Act that provide for the liquidation of insolvent corporations. A reorganization proceeding is commenced by the filing of an application by the business debtor with a Swedish district court, which filing must be approved by a resolution of the debtor's board of directors. The application need not contain proof of insolvency but must describe the debtor's economy, difficulties in paying its debts as they become due and facts indicating a reasonable possibility of a successful reorganization. n12 Upon the filing of the application, the district court may enter an order formally opening the reorganization case, appointing an administrator to examine the debtor's affairs with the power to negotiate with creditors the terms of a reorganization plan. n13 Upon being appointed, the administrator must promptly notify all known creditors of the debtor that the reorganization proceedings are pending and must provide the creditors with certain financial information concerning the debtor. n14 If the court determines that there is no valid reason to believe that the business can be reorganized, the court may decline to open the proceedings. n15 The length of these proceedings is three months, although the court may decide to extend the proceedings at three-month intervals upon the request of the debtor. n16

2. Pre-Plan Administrative Issues in Swedish Reorganization Proceedings

(i) Stays of Creditor Action

Upon the commencement of reorganization proceedings, unsecured creditors are prohibited from commencing actions to collect pre-filing debts and executing on the debtor's assets. However, litigation by creditors pending against the debtor as of the date the proceedings were opened is not stayed. Secured creditors holding a pledge of the debtor's property are also not stayed from realizing on their collateral although these creditors must follow a specific statutory procedure in doing so. n17

(ii) Operation of the Debtor's Business

Upon the opening of proceedings, the debtor will continue in possession and control of its assets but must consult with the administrator concerning their proposed use and disposition. The debtor, nonetheless, must conduct its business operations in a manner to protect against further deterioration of its financial condition. During this period, the debtor may not pay nonpreferential, pre-filing claims of creditors without the consent of the administrator. n18

(iii) Treatment of Executory Contracts

The Swedish reorganization statute establishes certain rules concerning contracts that are in existence as of the date the proceedings are opened. These rules permit the debtor, with the administrator's consent, to demand performance by all parties to each contract. If the contract was breached by the debtor before the proceedings were commenced but was not then terminated, the nondebtor party is prohibited from terminating after the filing. n19 However, unlike Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, Swedish reorganization law does not permit the debtor to reject executory contracts.

(iv) Post-Filing Loans

The debtor may, with the administrator's consent, obtain new loans during the proceedings that must be paid in full or receive a preferential status in future bankruptcy cases. n20

(v) Appointment of Creditors Committees

Upon the request of a creditor, the district court will appoint a creditor's committee consisting of three members. The administrator has the duty to consult with the committee on significant issues arising during the proceedings unless there is no opportunity to do so given the circumstances, e.g., in the case of an emergency requiring immediate action by the administrator. n21

3. Reorganization Plans

The administrator, in consultation with the debtor, will normally prepare a proposed reorganization plan describing how the debtor's financial and business problems will be addressed and resolved and then transmit that plan to the court and the creditors. n22 If the plan is accepted, then the plan will be implemented by the debtor, and when the reorganization has reached its goal, the administrator will be discharged and the reorganization proceedings will be terminated by the district court. n23 If no consensual plan is accepted by the creditors, then the debtor may file with the district court an application for a public (compulsory) composition proceeding wherein a "cram down" plan may be proposed and approved by the court that will pay less than 100% of the claims of nonpreferential creditors. The composition proceeding requires voting on the plan by the creditors. If the dividend will be less than 50% of claims, which is common, the composition must be approved by at least 75% of the voting creditors, and their claims must amount to at least the same percentage of the total amount of claims entitled to vote. n24 Alternatively, if the aim of the reorganization cannot be achieved, the process will be ended by the Court, and as a consequence, the debtor may then commence a liquidation proceeding. n25

B. Saab's Reorganization Proceedings and their Successful Conclusion

1. Appointment of Administrator

Upon the commencement of the Saab reorganization proceedings in the Vanersborg district court, that court appointed Guy Lofalk, an experienced insolvency lawyer with the Stockholm law firm of Lofalk Advokatbyrå, as the administrator of Saab. Also, Alix Partners, a global restructuring firm, was made available to Saab during the restructuring process. n26

2. Funding of Operations During Proceedings

In order to finance the operations of Saab during the reorganization proceedings, General Motors loaned $150 million (U.S.) to Saab shortly after the filing. General Motors has since declared that it will forgive this unpaid indebtedness even though it is classified as a preferential claim in the proceedings entitled to full payment. n27 Part of Saab's funding of the operations also has been made by the Swedish state-owned Wage Guarantee Fund that, in certain circumstances, will pay salaries to a company's employees during a reorganization. This state funding is capped at approximately 171,000 SEK per employee and reorganization proceeding. n28

3. Court-Ordered Extension of Three-Month Periods of Administration

On May 20, 2009, Saab requested from the district court of Vanersborg an extension of the time to accomplish the reorganization for an additional three months to August 20, 2009. The reason for the request was that Saab needed more time to implement its reorganization plan and to finalize the reorganization with respect to Saab's operative and financial divisions that had not been finished at the time of the application. The request was approved by the district court of Vanersborg on 29 May, 2009. n29

4. Marketing of Saab Assets for Sale as a Going Concern

General Motors and its adviser, Deutsche Bank, have since the beginning of Saab's reorganization searched for a new owner. A short information memorandum of Saab, a so-called "teaser", was transmitted to a selection of possible interested parties. n30 The selling-process began with 27 interested parties, of which 20 signed a confidentiality agreement. Of these 20, approximately 10 potential bidders were invited to Saab's plant in Trollhaettan. n31 Afterward, three candidates were selected to continue the negotiations for the acquisition of Saab, which finally concluded with the sale to the Koenigsegg Group.

5. Sale of Assets to Koenigsegg Group

On June 15, 2009, General Motors agreed to sell the Saab assets to a newly formed consortium led by Koenigsegg Automotive AB, a Swedish manufacturer of custom-made, luxury automobiles. This consortium, named "Koenigsegg Group", and General Motors executed a memorandum of understanding for the sale of Saab's assets, including the brand. n32 The investors in this new entity are (i) Koenigsegg Automotive AB, holding a 23.4% interest, (ii) Alprazz AB, another Swedish corporation controlled by the founder of Koenigsegg, with a 42.6% stake, (iii) Eker Group, a Norwegian holding company with an 11.8% share, and (iv) an American, Mark Bishop, who owns the remaining equity (22.2%). n33 Koenigsegg Automotive had been established in 1994 by Christian von Koenigsegg, the company's current CEO, who has been described as a "Swedish sports car fanatic and entrepreneur." n34 This company has historically manufactured and sold only 12 to 15 custom-made automobiles per year, employs only forty-five (45) workers and maintains its manufacturing facilities at a former Swedish air force base near Angelholm in southern Sweden. The prices of a Koenigsegg automobile are not advertised but are believed to range between 8 million and 18 million SEK, which translates to between $1 million and $2.3 million (U.S.). n35 The media reported when this sale was announced that General Motors would, after the closing of the sale, provide new Saab with automotive components and technology and that production of the new Saab 9-5 model would remain at the Trollhaettan plant and not be shifted to the Opel plant in Ruesselsheim, Germany. n36

6. Proposal of Reorganization Plan and its Approval

Saab's reorganization plan was presented to its creditors at the creditors meeting on April 6, 2009. The plan consisted of several measures designed to return Saab to profitability. Organic changes were proposed to make Saab independent of General Motors, to streamline the production and development of several new models, all of which are hoped to make Saab profitable at a lower yearly sales volume. n37 The financial reorganization included a composition agreement providing for the forgiveness of 75% of the pre-reorganization debts, new financing through a loan of approximately $600 million (U.S.) from the European Investment Bank and contributions on $400 million (U.S.), consisting of both forgiveness of debt and delivery of tools to manufacture new car models by General Motors. n38 The plan also included as a decisive factor a change of ownership through a sale of Saab to a new entity.

Saab's creditors thereafter overwhelmingly approved the composition, which involved writing off debts of approximately 8.3 billion SEK; only one creditor out of 473 voting creditors rejected the plan. n39 One explanation for this vote is that General Motors during the reorganization proceedings has repaid many of Saab's suppliers and thus was assigned these suppliers' claims and votes on the plan against Saab. n40 Of Saab's total debt of approximately 10.6 billion SEK, General Motors holds 9.7 billion SEK; the next largest creditor is the Government of Sweden with 347 million SEK. n41 The one creditor voting against the composition was the Swedish Tax Authorities. Sweden, through the Swedish Tax Authorities, is planning to demand payment of 75 million SEK for earlier payments from the state-owned Wage Guarantee Fund which the Tax Authorities do not consider to be part of the composition. However, Saab has argued that the composition includes this amount. n42 The dividend from the composition shall, according to Saab's managing director Jan Ake Jonsson, be paid from Saab's own cash. n43

7. Termination of Proceedings

On August 19, 2009, the administrator filed with the district court a notice that he would not seek another three-month extension of the Saab reorganization proceedings. This notice had the effect of terminating those proceedings. n44 At the same time, Augie Fabela, the American chairman of the Koenigsegg Group, announced to the media that, in order to close this asset purchase, 3 billion SEK ($413 million) in financing would be needed in addition to an anticipated loan of $593 million to be made by the European Investment Bank and guaranteed by the government of Sweden. n45 The Koenigsegg Group had previously applied to the government for a loan to close the sale transaction, but that request was denied. Frederik Reinfeldt, the Swedish prime minister, said at that time that he was "not prepared to mortgage Sweden or act as a venture capitalist for the well-to-do." n46

8. Anticipated Closing of Saab Asset Sale

On September 9, 2009, the Koenigsegg Group announced that a slice of its equity would be sold to Beijing Automotive Industry Holding, an automobile manufacturer owned by the Peoples Republic of China, in order to raise equity for the purchase of Saab from General Motors. At that time, a General Motors spokesman stated that the closing of the Saab sale was expected by the end of October, 2009. n47

III. Conclusion

Whether viewed up close or at a distance, the Saab reorganization proceedings under Sweden's Reorganization of Business Act were successful and were accomplished without stretching and bending that statute in order to achieve a socially desirable result. As noted above, Saab filed its application for reorganization in February, 2009, continued to operate smoothly with post-filing funding provided by its parent, General Motors. In June, 2009, a mere four months after the proceedings commenced, General Motors and Koenigsegg Group signed a memorandum of understanding for the sale of Saab's assets. The administrator, Guy Lofalk, with Saab's concurrence, proposed a reorganization plan in April 6, 2009, which was thereafter accepted by creditors, and on August 19, 2009, the district court terminated these proceedings upon the administrator's request. All that remains to be done is for the Koenigsegg Group to close this sale and acquire the Saab assets. Existing Swedish law provided the framework for the prompt reorganization of Saab. Throughout the course of these proceedings, there was little drama and no significant twists and turns of fortune, so unlike a thriller by Stieg Larsson or Henning Mankell.

The Chapter 11 cases of Chrysler LLC and General Motors, commenced only months apart in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York n48, provide both a point and counterpoint to the Saab proceedings. These cases resulted in the prompt reorganization of these two American auto assemblers. The Chrysler reorganization was completed on June 1, 2009, with its acquisition by Fiat, and the General Motors bootstrap restructuring was finished on July 5, 2009. However, in order to accomplish these restructurings in the form desired by the debtors and the United States Government, the two bankruptcy judges assigned to these cases were required to stretch and perhaps violate the existing law governing distributions in Chapter 11 cases. In distributing equity in these reorganized auto companies to groups of creditors, the courts allowed certain of these groups, in particular, the union employees, to receive a larger share of this equity than they would otherwise be entitled to receive to the prejudice of the unsecured bondholders of each debtor. n49 This questionable result was achieved under public pressure by the Obama Administration to reorganize the debtors in this fashion.

At the other end of the reorganization spectrum lies the case of Adam Opel, GmbH, the German subsidiary of General Motors and its British sister company, Vauxhall Motors, Ltd. Opel and Vauxhall are in the process of being restructured by means of a sale of 55% of their stock to a consortium consisting of Magna International, Inc. and Sperbank Rossii OAO. Under the agreement arrived at by GM, this joint venture and the European automobile workers' unions, General Motors will retain 35% of its equity interest in Opel/Vauxhall and the employees will receive the remaining 10% upon the closing of this restructuring. n50 The distribution of equity to the unions is in return for their consent to projected reductions in the workforce and the anticipated closing of at least one Opel plant, probably the Antwerp plant. This sale will be accomplished by the payment by Magna/Sperbank of 500 billion Euros and 4.5 billion Euros in loan guaranties by the German government. n51 This sale, which was long in the making and has not yet closed, did not happen without incident, however. The governments of Spain and Belgium have protested to the European Commission over what they characterized as the disproportionate impact on the plants and workforce in their countries of the projected costs reductions in contrast to the relatively light reductions affecting Opel's German plants and workforce. n52 Spain and Belgium argue that Angela Merkel's promise of German state aid in the form of these loan guaranties violates European Union antitrust law. n53 n1 [1 "Saab Automobile", Wikipedia, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Saab_Automobile; "Saab History", Swedecar Online, http://www.swedecar.com/saab_history.htm; Mark Chatterton, Saab the Innovator, David & Charles, London (1980).

n2 Id.; "Scania", Wikipedia, <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/scania>; Roy Erichs, et al., The Saab-Scania Story, Streiffert & Co. Bokförlag HB, Stockholm (1987).

n3 "Saab Automobile", Wikipedia, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Saab_Automobile; Anders Tunberg, From Two-Stroke to Turbo, Motor Racing Publications Ltd., London (1980); Anders Tunberg, Saab 900: A Swedish Story, Norden Publishing House Ltd., St. Gallen, Switzerland (1993).

n4 "Saab Automobile AB", New York Times Online, http://topics.nytimes.com/topics/news/business/companies/saab_automobile_ab/index.html

n5 "Saab Automobile", Wikipedia, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Saab_Automobile

n6 "Saab Bankruptcy Filing", Huffington Post Online,
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2009/02/20/saab-bankruptcy-filing_n_168492.html

n7 "Saab may go bust in 10 days, warns GM", Times Online, <http://business.timesonline.co.uk/tol/business/article5757562.ece>.

n8 "Saab in Bankruptcy Filing; G.M. Seeks More Aid", New York Times Online, <http://www.nytimes.com/2009/02/21/business/worldbusiness/21auto.html>

n9 "Saab Distances Itself From G.M.", New York Times Online, <http://www.nytimes.com/2009/02/21/business/worldbusiness/21saab.html?>

n10 "Saab Bankruptcy Filing", Huffington Post Online,
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2009/02/20/saab-bankruptcy-filing_n_168492.html.

n11 Id.

n12 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 2, paragraph 3.

n13 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 2, paragraph 10.

n14 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 2, paragraph 13.

n15 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 2, paragraph 6.

n16 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 4, paragraph 8.

n17 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 2, paragraph 17.

n18 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 2, paragraph 15.

n19 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 2, paragraph 20.

n20 "Restructuring and Insolvency 2009 Section for Sweden" by Odd Swarting, Setterwalls Advokatbyrå.

n21 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 2, paragraph 16.

n22 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 2, paragraph 12.

n23 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 4, paragraph 7.

n24 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 3, paragraph 4.

n25 Swedish Reorganization of Business Act at chapter 4, paragraph 7.

n26 The formal document of the application for reorganization for Saab Automobile AB.

n27 See "Funding for G.M.'s Saab Sale Still Up in the Air", New York Times Online, <http://www.nytimes.com/2009/08/21/business/global/21saab.html?>

n28 See "Staten kraver SAAB pa 75 miljoner", Svenska Dagbladet;
http://svd.se/naringsliv/nyheter/artikel_3456383.svd

n29 The formal document of the request for extension of the time for the reorganization procedure and the district court of Vanersborg's decision.

n30 The formal document of the preliminary reorganization plan for Saab Automobile AB.

n31 The formal document of the request for extension of the time for the reorganization procedure.

n32 See "G.M. Sells Saab to Swedish Automaker", New York Times Online, <http://www.nytimes.com/2009/06/17/business/global/17saab.html?>

n33 See "GM Saab Sale: Swedish Koenigsegg Will Buy Brand", Huffington Post Online, http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2009/06/16/gm-saab-sale-swedish-koen_n_216040.html.

n34 Id.

n35 Id.

n36 See "G.M. Sells Saab to Swedish Automaker", New York Times Online, <http://www.nytimes.com/2009/06/17/business/global/17saab.html?>

n37 The formal document of the preliminary reorganization plan for Saab Automobile AB.

n38 Id.

n39 Press release from Saab, August 20, 2009.

n40 "Medier kan avgöra Saabs öde", Svenska Dagbladet;
http://www.svd.se/opinion/brannpunkt/artikel_2516101.svd n41 "Saab-rekonstruktion far fortsätta", TT, <http://sydsvenskan.se/ekonomi/article424476/Saab-rekonstruktionen-far-fortsatta.html>

n42 "Staten kraver SAAB pa 75 miljoner", Svenska Dagbladet;
http://svd.se/naringsliv/nyheter/artikel_3456383.svd

n43 "Ackordet lattar Saabs skulder med 8 miljarder", DI.SE; http://di.se/Avdelningar/ArtikelUtskrift.aspx?ArticleId=2009 06 17 342000&type=art

n44 See "Funding for G.M.'s Saab Sale Still Up in the Air", New York Times Online, <http://www.nytimes.com/2009/08/21/business/global/21saab.html?>

n45 See "Funding for G.M.'s Saab Sale Still Up in the Air", New York Times Online, <http://www.nytimes.com/2009/08/21/business/global/21saab.html?>

n46 See "Funding for G.M.'s Saab Sale Still Up in the Air", New York Times Online, <http://www.nytimes.com/2009/08/21/business/global/21saab.html?>

n47 See "Chinese Carmakers Set Sights on Sweden", New York Times Online, <http://www.nytimes.com/2009/09/10/business/global/10saab.html?adxnnl=1&adxnnlx=1255547>. On October 21, 2009, the European Investment Bank approved a loan of $600 million (U.S.) to finance this acquisition. In order for this loan to close, however, the government of Sweden must issue a guaranty of payment for the loan and the European Union competition authorities must approve the loan. Financial Times, EIB Loan Opens the Door to Saab Sale, p.15 (October 22, 2009).

n48 In re Chrysler LLC, Case No. 09-50002 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. April 30, 2009); In re General Motors Corp., Case No. 09-50026 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. June 1, 2009).

n49 For the decisions authorizing distributions of equity in the "new" Chrysler and GM, see In re Chrysler LLC, 405 B.R. 84 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2009), stay granted by 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 12351 (2d Cir. June 5, 2009), cert. dismissed by Center for Auto Safety v. Chrysler LLC, --- U.S. ---, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 5099 (U.S. Aug. 24, 2009); In re General Motors Corp., 407 B.R. 463 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2009), cert. denied by 409 B.R. 24 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2009), stay denied by 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61279 (S.D.N.Y. July 9, 2009).

n50 See "Future of German Opel Plants Secure After GM Announcement", Deutsche Welle Online, http://www.dw-world.de/dw/article/0,,4676427,00.html?maca=en-newsletter_en_bulletin-2097-html; "GM Close to Deal to Sell Opel", The Detroit News Online, <http://detnews.com/article/20091014/Auto01/910140336>.

n51 Id.

N52 See "Freshly Minted Opel Deal Draws Critics", New York Times Online, <http://www.nytimes.com/2009/09/14/business/global/14opel.html?>; "Morgan European Cuts Face Further Scrutiny", Financial Times, p. 9, September 26/27, 2009.

n53 Id. Article 87 of the European Union Treaty generally prohibits aid by a member state or through "State resources in any form whatsoever which distorts or threatens to distort competition by favoring certain undertakings or the production of certain goods shall, insofar as it affects trade between Member States, be incompatible with the common market." On October 15, 2009, the EU Competition Commissioner, Neelie Kroes, advised German Economy Minister (Wirtschaftsminister) Theodor zu Guttenberg, that German state aid to facilitate the Opel/Vauxhall Sale may violate Article 87 of the EU Treaty, pointing to "significant indications that aid promised by the German government to New Opel was subject to the precondition that a specific bidder, Magna/Sberbank, was selected." "Opel's German Aid May Break Rules", BBC News Online, <http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/business/8311770.stm>.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Barnes & Thornburg LLP

With nearly 540 legal professionals throughout offices in Atlanta, Chicago, Delaware, Indiana, Michigan, Minneapolis, Ohio, and Washington, D.C., Barnes & Thornburg LLP is one of the largest law firms in the United States, offering clients virtually all the areas of concentration one would expect in a large, full-service law firm.

Patrick E. Mears

Partner, Barnes & Thornburg LLP

Patrick E. Mears is a Contributing Author to the treatise, Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide, and is the Chairperson of the Finance, Insolvency and Restructuring Department of Barnes & Thornburg, LLP, resident in its Grand Rapids, Michigan office. Mears is an elected member of the American Law Institute and an elected fellow of the American College of Bankruptcy. Mears has authored numerous articles and treatises on insolvency and creditors' rights law during his 33 years of practice. He and his colleague, John T. Gregg, are the principal authors of the treatise, Auto Supplier Insolvencies and Bankruptcies: Issues for Suppliers and Customers of Financially Troubled Auto Suppliers, published by the American Bankruptcy Institute in 2006.

John T. Gregg

Attorney, Barnes & Thornburg LLP

John T. Gregg is a member of Barnes & Thornburg, LLP's Finance, Insolvency and Restructuring Department. He has extensive experience representing secured creditors, debtors, committees, asset purchasers and other parties in interest in reorganizations, liquidations and other insolvency proceedings. He has been involved in numerous bankruptcies and workouts in various industries, including automotive, manufacturing, real estate, airline, investment banking and retail. Mr. Gregg has significant experience in the automotive industry and has represented parts suppliers, tool vendors, secured creditors, committees, health insurance providers, asset purchasers and landlords in numerous automotive-related matters.

Setterwalls

Setterwalls is one of Sweden's leading commercial law firms with over 150 lawyers, including 43 partners, working from offices in Stockholm, Gothenburg and Malmö. Setterwalls was established in 1878 and provides a full range of legal services to Swedish and international business clients.

Mathias Winge

Senior Associate, Advokat, Setterwalls

Mathias Winge has extensive experience in creditor, reconstruction and insolvency related questions within IT, financial, construction and hotel businesses and receives receiverships regularly. Mathias has been leading and assisting in a large number of bankruptcies, including several larger bankruptcies with international connections. Mathias gives advice in formal and informal reorganizations and on related issues, such as acquisitions of insolvent entities, the structuring of internal transactions within insolvent Groups, the purchasing of creditors' claims, debt to equity swaps, security realizations, etc. Mathias also regularly advises companies and business organizations within the forest and finance industries in general commercial matters. Finally, Mathias acts as counsel in insolvency related lawsuits, for example advising creditors in relation to the recovery of assets, personal liability for boards, etc.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

19 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Swartz on New Revenue Procedure 2009-37 & Cancellation Under I.R.C. Sec. 108(i)

2009 Emerging Issues 4761

Linda Z. Swartz on New Revenue Procedure 2009-37 and the Cancellation of Indebtedness Income Deferral Under I.R.C. Section 108(i)

By Linda Z. Swartz

December 28, 2009

SUMMARY: In 2009 Congress enacted I.R.C. Section 108(i), which permits a taxpayer to defer recognition of COD income when the taxpayer or a related person "reacquires" an "applicable debt instrument" in 2009 or 2010 pursuant to the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. The IRS issued Revenue Procedure 2009-37 (2009 TNT 157-4) to provide rules and procedures for making an election under new section 108(i).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Two temporary provisions were enacted recently in 2009 to provide relief from Cancellation of Indebtedness (COD) income recognition to certain taxpayers. First and foremost, Congress enacted I.R.C. Section 108(i), which permits a taxpayer to defer recognition of COD income when the taxpayer or a related person "reacquires" an "applicable debt instrument" in 2009 or 2010 pursuant to the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, effective February 17, 2009. n1 At the taxpayer's election, the COD income may be deferred until 2014 and then included ratably over a period of five years. n2 Once made, the election is irrevocable. n3 Generally, a taxpayer that elects to defer COD income through section 108(i) may not benefit from any other COD exclusions, including the title 11 and insolvency exclusions, with respect to the same debt instrument, or portion thereof, to which the election applies, for the tax year in which the election is made or any subsequent tax year. n4

Section 108(i) defines an applicable debt instrument as a debt instrument issued by a C corporation or by any other person in connection with the conduct of a trade or business by that person. n5 An applicable debt instrument is "reacquired" if the debtor, or a related person to the debtor, "acquires" the debt, which is defined to include an acquisition (i) for cash, (ii) in exchange for another debt instrument (including an exchange resulting from a modification of the debt instrument), (iii) in exchange for corporate stock or a partnership interest, and (iv) as a contribution to capital. A debt instrument is also treated as acquired if it is completely forgiven by the holder. n6

On August 18, 2009, the IRS issued Revenue Procedure 2009-37 (2009 TNT 157-4) to provide rules and procedures for making an election under new section 108(i). As discussed below, Revenue Procedure 2009-37 provides both additional guidance on theoretical questions the statute did not address and procedures for making the election. n7

More specifically, an election is generally made on an instrument-by-instrument basis, and a taxpayer may make a partial election for only a portion of COD income realized with respect to one or more instruments. n8 Revenue Procedure 2009-37 confirms that a taxpayer that makes a partial section 108(i) election and defers only a portion of COD income realized with respect to a debt instrument may exclude from income the remaining portion of COD income under another applicable COD exclusion, such as the insolvency exception. n9 In addition, if a taxpayer elects to defer COD income under section 108(i), original issue discount (OID) deductions in respect of the debt instrument issued to reacquire an applicable debt instrument n10 will be deferred until the five-year period during which the taxpayer takes the COD income into account, and then be included ratably during that five-year period. n11

An election under section 108(i) to defer COD income is made by including with the taxpayer's income tax return for the tax year in which the debt instrument is acquired a statement that provides (i) the name and any applicable taxpayer identification numbers of the issuer(s) of the debt instrument; (ii) a general description of the debt instrument; (iii) a general description and the date of the reacquisition transaction(s) generating the COD income; (iv) the amount of COD income resulting from the reacquisition and the amount of COD income the taxpayer is electing to defer; (v) in the case of a partnership or S corporation, a list of partners or shareholders, respectively, that have a deferred amount, their identifying information, and each partner's or shareholder's deferred amount or share of the deferred amount; (vi) in cases in which a new debt instrument is issued or deemed issued in exchange for the debt instrument, the issuer's name, taxpayer identification number, a general description of the new debt instrument and whether the new debt instrument has OID, a schedule of the OID that the issuer expects to accrue each taxable year on the instrument and the amount of OID that the issuer expects to defer each taxable year; and (vii) any other information required by the IRS. n12 A taxpayer that makes a section 108(i) election must also provide an information statement with its income tax returns beginning with the taxable year following the taxable year in which the taxpayer makes the election. n13 Partnerships, S corporations, and certain foreign corporations making a section 108(i) election are subject to additional reporting requirements. n14

Any COD income deferred by a partnership must be allocated among (and subsequently recognized by) the partners holding partnership interests immediately before the debt is discharged in the same manner as those amounts would have been included in the partners' income under section 704 if the COD income were immediately recognized. n15 Revenue Procedure 2009-37 provides that a partnership that makes a partial section 108(i) election may specify whether deferred or currently realized COD income is to be allocated to each partner. n16 Any decrease in the partner's share of partnership liabilities resulting from the debt discharge is only taken into account at that time to the extent it would not cause the partner to recognize gain under section 731; any excess amount subsequently taken into account by the partner at the same time, and to the extent remaining, in the same amount, as the deferred COD income is recognized. n17 Practitioners have voiced concern that the rules for allocated deferred COD income, particularly in a partnership situation, are somewhat ambiguous. For example, it remains unclear how section 108(i) applies to tiered partnerships, how partial transfers or redemptions of interest will be treated, and whether any amounts of deferred COD allocated to the partners in a partnership should be reflected in the partners' capital accounts. n18

Any COD income that is deferred under section 108(i) will be accelerated if the taxpayer (i) dies, (ii) liquidates or sells substantially all of its assets, or (iii) ceases to do business, or similar circumstances occur, to the taxable year in which the event occurs or in the case of a title 11 proceeding, the day before the petition is filed. n19 In the case of a pass-through entity, including a partnership, the COD income is also accelerated if there is a sale, exchange, or redemption of an interest in the pass-through entity by the person holding the ownership interest in the entity. n20

Congress also enacted an exception to the taxation of COD income arising from a taxpayer restructuring the debt on its principal residence or upon a foreclosure of its principal residence. n21 This exception excludes from COD income recognition "qualified principal residence indebtedness" discharged in calendar years 2007 through 2012 as a result of a decline in the value of the residence or the financial condition of the taxpayer. n22 "Qualified principal residence indebtedness" is up to $2 million of acquisition indebtedness with respect to the taxpayer's principal residence. n23 Any excluded qualified principal residence indebtedness will reduce the taxpayer's basis in its principal residence, although not below zero. n24

Return to Text

n1 American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009, Pub. L. No. 111-5 (2009); I.R.C. § 108(i)(1).

A related person is a person that would be related to the taxpayer under section 108(e)(4). I.R.C. § 108(i)(5)(A).

n2 I.R.C. § 108(i)(1); I.R.C. § 108(i)(3)(A).

n3 I.R.C. § 108(i)(5)(B)(ii).

n4 I.R.C. § 108(i)(5)(C).

n5 I.R.C. § 108(i)(3)(A). A debt instrument is defined to include a bond, debenture, note, certificate, or any other instrument or contractual arrangement constituting indebtedness within the meaning of section 1275(a)(1). I.R.C. § 108(i)(3)(B).

n6 I.R.C. § 108(i)(4)(A), (B).

n7 Rev. Proc. 2009-37, 2009-36 I.R.B. 309.

n8 I.R.C. § 108(i)(5)(B)(ii); Rev. Proc. 2009-37, 2009-36 I.R.B. 309.

n9 Rev. Proc. 2009-37, 2009-36 I.R.B. 309.

n10 If the proceeds of a debt instrument are used directly or indirectly by the issuer to reacquire an applicable debt instrument of the issuer, the debt instrument will be treated as issued for the applicable debt instrument. If only a portion of the proceeds are used, the original issue discount (OID) deferral rule will only apply to that portion of the debt instrument. I.R.C. § 108(i)(2).

n11 If the OID accruals during the five-year deferral period exceed the deferred COD income, the OID deductions are disallowed in the order the OID is accrued. I.R.C. § 108(i)(2).

n12 I.R.C. § 108(i)(5)(B)(i)(II); Rev. Proc. 2009-37, 2009-36 I.R.B. 309.

n13 See Rev. Proc. 2009-37, 2009-36 I.R.B. 309 (providing a description of, and the time and manner for reporting, the additional information).

n14 See Rev. Proc. 2009-37, 2009-36 I.R.B. 309.

n15 I.R.C. § 108(i)(6).

n16 Rev. Proc. 2009-37, 2009-36 I.R.B. 309.

n17 I.R.C. § 108(i)(6).

n18 See Jenks et al., Expert Commentary on the New COD Deferral Election, Collier on Bankruptcy Taxation, 2009 Supplement.

n19 I.R.C. § 108(i)(5)(D)(i).

n20 I.R.C. § 108(i)(5)(D)(ii).

n21 I.R.C. § 108(a)(1)(E); H.R. Rep. No. 110-356, at 56 (2007).

n22 The exception does not apply to debt discharged on account of services performed for the lender or any other factor not directly related to the decline in the value of the residence or the financial condition of the taxpayer. I.R.C. § 108(a)(1)(E), as amended by the Mortgage Forgiveness Debt Relief Act of 2007, Pub. L. No. 110-142 (2007), and extended by the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110-343 (2008); I.R.C. § 108(h)(3).

If a portion of a discharged loan is not qualified principal residence indebtedness, section 108(a)(1)(E) applies only to the extent that the amount discharged exceeds the non-qualifying portion of the loan (as determined immediately prior to the discharge). I.R.C. § 108(h)(4).

n23 I.R.C. § 108(h)(2). Acquisition indebtedness includes any debt incurred to acquire, construct or substantially improve the taxpayer's principal residence if the debt is secured by the residence, as well as any refinancing of that debt to the extent of the prior debt. I.R.C. § 163(h)(3)(B).

Principal residence has the same meaning as when used in section 121. I.R.C. § 163(h)(5).

n24 I.R.C. § 108(h)(1).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Linda Z. Swartz co-chairs Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft LLP's Tax Department. Her practice focuses on global mergers and acquisitions, spin-offs, joint ventures, restructurings and bankruptcies, and foreign tax planning strategies. She also has considerable experience advising clients on financings, derivative transactions, and executive compensation issues. Ms. Swartz frequently speaks and writes on transactional tax issues. She also authors the chapters on Debt Exchanges in Collier on Bankruptcy Taxation (LexisNexis Matthew Bender) and Securities Lending Transactions in Taxation of Financial Institutions (Clark Boardman Callaghan).

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

20 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Lawniczak on Ogle v. Fidelity & Deposit Co.

2009 Emerging Issues 4744

James M. Lawniczak on Ogle v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 586 F.3d 143 (2d Cir. 2009)

By James Lawniczak

December 21, 2009

SUMMARY: In this Emerging Issues Analysis, James Lawniczak considers the Second Circuit's holding that an unsecured creditor has a valid claim under a prepetition indemnity agreement for the expenditure of postpetition attorneys' fees related to the litigation of issues under the underlying contract. The decision is consistent with the SNTL decision of the Ninth Circuit and correctly applies the rationale of the Supreme Court Travelers case.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The Second Circuit Holds That a Creditor Has an Unsecured Prepetition Claim for Attorneys' Fees Incurred Postpetition to Enforce Rights Under an Indemnity Contract

In Ogle v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 586 F.3d 143, 145 (2d Cir. 2009), the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit considered an issue as to which "[c]ourts are closely divided." The court held that an unsecured creditor has a valid claim under a prepetition indemnity agreement for the expenditure of postpetition attorneys' fees related to the litigation of issues under the underlying contract.

The Facts

Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland ("Fidelity") provided surety bonds to various insurers of Agway, Inc., which ended up in chapter 11 bankruptcy proceedings. Agway had agreed to indemnify Fidelity for any attorneys' fees it incurred to enforce its rights against Agway. After Agway filed its chapter 11 petition, Fidelity incurred attorneys' fees of approximately $884,000 enforcing its state law contractual indemnity rights against Agway. In its opinion, the court did not identify exactly what rights Fidelity had been enforcing or in which court it was acting.

Eventually, a liquidating trust was established to handle the liquidation of Agway's assets. D. Clark Ogle was appointed trustee, and he challenged Fidelity's claim for postpetition attorneys' fees. Ogle admitted that Fidelity would be entitled to a claim for the fees under state law, but contended that the claim could not be allowed under federal bankruptcy law.

Review of the Applicable Statutory Provisions

The key statutory provision in the court's decision was 11 U.S.C. § 502, which deals with the allowance of claims against a debtor. Section 502(b) provides that, once an objection to a claim is filed, the court "shall determine the amount of such claim in lawful currency of the United States as of the date of the filing of the petition." There are then nine subsections of section 502(b), which list various types of claims against debtors that should not be allowed, e.g., subsection (2), which disallows claims for "unmatured interest," or that should only be allowed in part.

The term "claim" is very broadly defined in section 101(5)(A) of the Bankruptcy Code as any "right to payment," including rights that are unliquidated, contingent, unmatured or disputed. A "contingent" claim is one where the obligations may become due on the happening of a future event that was within the contemplation of the parties when the original relationship was created. Olin Corp. v. Riverwood Int'l Corp. (In re Manville Forest Prods. Corp.), 209 F.3d 125, 128-29 (2d Cir. 2000).

The other statutory provision that the court of appeals considered in its decision in the Ogle case was section 506(b). That section is part of the description of secured claims and provides that if an allowed secured claim is secured by collateral with a value greater than the amount of the secured claim, then the secured creditor is entitled to interest on its claim, as well as any reasonable fees, costs or charges provided for in the agreement or by state statute.

The Supreme Court Case of Travelers Casualty & Surety Co. of America

In Travelers Casualty & Surety Co. of America v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 549 U.S. 443, 127 S. Ct. 1199, 167 L. Ed.2d 178, 57 C.B.C.2d 314 (2007), the Supreme Court considered an issue very similar to the issue in the Ogle case. In Travelers, the creditor who had issued a surety bond and who had an indemnity covering attorneys' fees incurred such fees in connection with bankruptcy issues in the bankruptcy proceeding -- negotiating and then litigating appropriate language in the debtor's plan and disclosure statement. The creditor sought an unsecured claim for those postpetition attorneys' fees, and the debtor objected. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed the disallowance of those postpetition fees on the basis that postpetition attorneys' fees are not appropriately awarded when the fees are incurred in connection with issues peculiar to bankruptcy law, as opposed to basic contract enforcement.

The Supreme Court reversed and allowed the claim. The Court first noted that bankruptcy courts should enforce contracts allocating attorneys' fees among the parties, "except where the Bankruptcy Code provides otherwise," citing to 4 Collier on Bankruptcy, 506.04[3][a] (15th ed. rev. 2006). 549 U.S. at 448-49, 127 S. Ct. at 1203-04. The Court then went on to consider whether the Bankruptcy Code disallowed the claim and concluded that it did not.

The Travelers Court relied heavily on the nine exceptions to allowable claims in section 502(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, noting that none of the last eight exceptions applied to eliminate or reduce claims for postpetition attorneys' fees, except section 502(b)(4), which applied only to attorneys for the debtor. 549 U.S. at 449-50, 127 S. Ct. at 1204. Thus, the claim could be disallowed only if it were encompassed in the broad language of the first exception of section 502(b)(1), which disallows claims that are unenforceable against the debtor "under any agreement . . . for a reason other than because such claim is contingent or unmatured." The Court noted that this subsection made the claim allowable to the extent it was a valid claim under applicable state law, which it indeed was. 549 U.S. at 450-51, 127 S. Ct. at 1204-05.

The Travelers Court refused to consider whether section 506(b) would prevent the allowance of the claim, because the issue was not properly raised below. The Court also noted that it had only considered the issue whether there could be a categorical disallowance of claims for attorneys' fees for litigating bankruptcy issues, thus leaving open the issue of whether claims for litigating nonbankruptcy matters would or would not be allowable. 549 U.S. at 455-56, 127 S. Ct. at 1207-08.

Legal Analysis of the Ogle Court on the Issue of Whether the Creditor Had an Unsecured Claim for Postpetition Attorneys' Fees

The Ogle court's decision began where the Supreme Court's Travelers case ended, with the issue left open by the Supreme Court as to the allowance of postpetition attorneys' fees for litigating nonbankruptcy issues. The Ogle court's legal analysis paralleled that of the Supreme Court. Essentially, the Ogle court held that there was no specific provision in the Bankruptcy Code that disallowed claims for postpetition attorneys' fees, so that the claim was valid. 586 F.3d at 147-48.

The Ogle court then went on to consider the issue that the Travelers Court had not reached -- whether section 506(b) should be applied to disallow the claim. It is difficult to see how section 506(b) is applicable, for it describes circumstances where a secured creditor can add either interest or fees to its secured claim, and the claim in the case before the Second Circuit was an unsecured claim, not discussed in section 506(b). Indeed, the Ogle court noted that it was section 502(b)(2), disallowing claims for unmatured interest, that would disallow the first component of the two items discussed in section 506(b), but that there was no comparable provision to disallow an unsecured claim for fees. 586 F.3d at 148. Therefore, the claim for attorneys' fees that was valid under state law was not disallowed by the Bankruptcy Code.

Lastly, the court referred to a Bankruptcy Act of 1898 case in the Second Circuit, United Merchants & Manufacturers, Inc. v. Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States (In re United Merchants & Manufacturers, Inc.), 674 F.2d 134, 139 (2d Cir. 1982), which held that postpetition attorneys' fees under contractual loan agreements that are valid under state law are allowable claims in a bankruptcy proceeding. The Ogle court found nothing in the current Bankruptcy Code that would change the result reached by the United Merchants court. 586 F.3d at 149. Therefore, the court allowed the unsecured claim for postpetition attorneys' fees.

Legal Position Taken by Other Courts on the Issue of Allowance of Postpetition Attorneys' Fees for Litigating Nonbankruptcy Matters

As the Ogle court noted, its opinion was consistent with the decisions of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in SNTL Corp. v. Centre Ins. Co. (In re SNTL Corp.), 571 F.3d 826, 839-45 (9th Cir. 2009), decided after Travelers, and the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in Martin v. Bank of Germantown (In re Martin), 761 F.2d 1163, 1168 (6th Cir. 1985), decided before Travelers. Following the Travelers decision, lower bankruptcy courts have split on the issue. Compare Qmect, Inc. v. Burlingame Capital Partners II (In re Qmect, Inc.), 368 B.R. 882, 884-85 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2007) (unsecured creditor could include contract-based attorneys' fees as part of unsecured claim), with In re Electric Machinery Enterprises, Inc., 371 B.R. 549, 551 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2007) (disallowing unsecured creditor's claim for postpetition attorneys' fees, noting the general rule that "the time for determining the amount of a claim is 'as it existed as of the time of the filing of the case'").

There were also cases before the Travelers case that held that postpetition attorneys' fees could not be part of an unsecured claim. See, e.g., Adams v. Zimmerman, 73 F.3d 1164, 1177 (1st Cir. 1996) (fees incurred prior to insolvency are allowable; those incurred thereafter are not). It is unclear whether those courts would change their opinion based on the reasoning of the Travelers case.

Although the Second Circuit Ogle decision (586 F.3d at 146) cited Waterman v. Ditto (In re Waterman), 248 B.R. 567, 573 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2000), for the proposition that postpetition attorneys' fees are not allowable as part of a prepetition claim, the actual result in the Wasserman case was the allowance of claim for postpetition attorneys' fees under section 506(b) because Ditto was an oversecured creditor. The Wasserman court did note that as a general rule, "a creditor's claim is determined as of the date of the filing of the bankruptcy petition," and that "amounts incurred post-petition are not usually permitted as part of the claim," but this dictum describing a very general rule should not be taken as an indicator of the position that the Wasserman court might have taken on the issue before the Second Circuit in Ogle.

Conclusion

The decision of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in Ogle, consistent with the decision of the Ninth Circuit in SNTL Corp., applies the rationale of the Supreme Court Travelers case to allow unsecured claims for postpetition attorneys' fees for litigating issues under the indemnity contracts themselves. This is the correct result, properly interpreting the various sections of the Bankruptcy Code.

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of Code section 502(b), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ P 502.03.

For discussion of Code section 506(b), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ P 506.04.

For analysis of other decisions relating to creditors and claims, click here.

For analysis of decisions relating to corporate reorganization, click here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

James M. Lawniczak is a partner at Calfee, Halter and Griswold LLP in Cleveland, Ohio. He concentrates his practice on corporate bankruptcy and creditors' rights, as well as commercial business and finance matters. His experience includes bankruptcy plans and related disclosure statements, cash collateral and financing orders, asset sales, executory contracts and unexpired leases, and bankruptcy litigation and appeals.

Mr. Lawniczak is a frequent author and lecturer in his field. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy, the leading national treatise on bankruptcy law. He is also the author of the bankruptcy chapters of the Matthew Bender treatises Asset Based Financing and Business Organizations with Tax Planning. He has been listed in multiple editions of Chambers USA as a Leading Lawyer for bankruptcy and restructuring and is recognized as one of the Best Lawyers in America.

Mr. Lawniczak is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, where he served as an editor of the Michigan Law Review.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

21 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Bachman, Barnett, Loveland, Manzer & Shuster on Recent Treatment of "Stub Rent"

2009 Emerging Issues 4742

Katharine E. Bachman, Keith R. Barnett, Benjamin W. Loveland, Nancy L. Manzer, and George W. Shuster, Jr. on the Treatment of "Stub Rent" in the Goody's and Stone Barn Retail Apparel Bankruptcies

By Katherine E. Bachman, Keith R. Barnett, Benjamin W. Loveland, Nancy L. Manzer & George W. Shuster and Jr.

December 20, 2009

SUMMARY: Two recent decisions in retail apparel bankruptcy cases, in Delaware and New York, highlight the ongoing uncertainty regarding "stub rent". While the ultimate financial outcomes for the landlords in the two cases are similar, the different approaches taken by the courts leave open questions regarding when and to what extent those claims will be paid.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The two cases-Goody's n1 and Stone Barn/Steve & Barry's n2-involved nearly identical facts, yet the courts adopted different approaches for the mechanisms available for landlords to collect "stub rent" from tenants in bankruptcy.

When "Stub Rent" Claims Arise

A landlord's claim against a bankrupt tenant for "stub rent" arises when the lease calls for payment of rent in advance, i.e. the first of the month. If the tenant files its bankruptcy case later in the month without having paid that month's rent, the bankruptcy filing can be said to divide the monthly rent into two portions-first, the portion allocable to the days of the month before the bankruptcy filing, and second, the portion allocable to the days of the month remaining after the bankruptcy filing. The term "stub rent" refers to the amount of rent due under the lease for the second, or stub, period. When a tenant files for bankruptcy, landlords may assert a claim under Section 365(d)(3) of the Bankruptcy Code n3 for immediate payment of the "stub rent".

Two Approaches to Addressing "Stub Rent" Claims Under Section 365(d)(3)

The decisions in Goody's and Stone Barn illustrate the two main approaches courts have adopted for dealing with "stub rent" under Section 365(d)(3): n4

"Billing Date" Approach. The "billing date" approach, often preferred by tenants, n5 focuses on when the rent is due, usually prior to the petition date. Under the "billing date" approach, if the rent is due on the first of the month and the tenant files bankruptcy later in the month, none of the rent is considered a post-petition obligation subject to payment under Section 365(d)(3). Thus, under the "billing date" approach, there is no Section 365(d)(3) claim for "stub rent." n6

"Proration" Approach. The "proration" approach, often preferred by landlords, provides that the obligation to pay the month's rent should be allocated on a per diem basis to each day within the month, such that a bankruptcy filing on the fifteenth day of the month would create a "stub rent" claim for the second half of the month. Under the "proration" approach, there is a Section 365(d)(3) claim for immediate payment of rent allocable to the stub period.

"Back-up" Claims for "Stub Rent" under Section 503(b)(1)

When a court applies the "billing date" approach for purposes of Section 365(d)(3), the decision in Goody's instructs that landlords may nevertheless be entitled to payment of rent for the stub period under Section 503(b)(1). Section 503(b)(1) provides an administrative expense claim for "the actual, necessary costs and expenses of preserving the estate." n7 Administrative expenses ordinarily must be paid in a successful Chapter 11 bankruptcy case, but are generally not required to be paid until a Chapter 11 plan is confirmed and effective; by contrast, Section 365(d)(3) expressly requires "stub rent" to be paid on a "timely" basis, which is usually interpreted to mean immediately as it becomes due. As such, a Section 503(b)(1) claim may serve as a "back-up" for a landlord in the event that a Section 365(d)(3) claim is denied, although Section 503(b)(1) may pose additional hurdles to a landlord (discussed further below) and will result in later and perhaps more uncertain payment if a Chapter 11 plan of reorganization is delayed or at risk of failure.

The Recent Decisions in Goody's and Stone Barn

The pertinent facts in Goody's and Stone Barn are nearly identical. The tenants in each case, apparel retailers, filed voluntary Chapter 11 petitions on the ninth day of the applicable months. At the time of filing, none of the debtors had paid the rent due on the first of the month under their retail location leases, yet they continued to occupy the leased space to conduct retail sales.

In re Goody's Family Clothing, Inc.

The March 31, 2009 decision in Goody's by the United States District Court for the District of Delaware resulted from an appeal of a decision from the Delaware Bankruptcy Court. The Bankruptcy Court, relying on precedent from the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in the Montgomery Ward n8 case, summarily disposed of the landlords' argument for adoption of the "proration" approach. Instead, the Delaware Bankruptcy Court held that the plain meaning of Section 365(d)(3) commanded use of the "billing date" approach for "stub rent." The court interpreted the term "obligations" as used in Section 365(d)(3) to mean "something that one is legally required to perform under the terms of the lease." n9 The court went on to conclude that an obligation only arises when a party becomes legally obligated to perform it. Because the debtors' obligations to pay rent under the leases were due on the first of the month (about a week before the petition date), they could not be said to have arisen "after the order for relief" and, therefore, the landlords were not entitled to payment of "stub rent" under Section 365(d)(3).

The Delaware Bankruptcy Court rejected, however, the debtors' argument that Section 365(d)(3) renders Section 503(b)(1) inapplicable, holding that (1) the debtors' occupancy of the premises alone was sufficient to establish that payment for such occupancy was an actual and necessary expense of preserving the debtors' estates, and (2) absent evidence to the contrary, the fair market value of occupying the premises was the lease rate. The court did not, however, order immediate payment of the administrative expense claim, a ruling emphasizing that a Section 503(b)(1) claim may be only a second-best result for landlords.

The debtors appealed the Bankruptcy Court's holding that Section 503(b)(1) was available to landlords seeking "stub rent" after the enactment of Section 365(d)(3), as well as the Bankruptcy Court's holding that the debtors' mere presence in the property was sufficient to satisfy the landlords' burden under Section 503(b)(1). n10 The landlords did not cross-appeal.

Because the parties to the appeal did not dispute the Delaware Bankruptcy Court's application of the "billing date" approach, the Delaware District Court declined to revisit the lower court's ruling on that issue. The Delaware District Court went to substantial lengths, however, to explain that if it had reached the issue, it might have read Montgomery Ward more narrowly than did the Delaware Bankruptcy Court. The District Court, in an extended footnote, explained its basis for why a Section 365(d)(3) "proration" approach might apply to "stub rent" notwithstanding the Third Circuit Court of Appeals precedent adopting the "billing date" approach for tax claims. Given that the purpose of Section 365(d)(3) was to free landlords from having to comply with the administrative expense procedure, the District Court found it "a perverse result that debtor-tenants could use § 365(d)(3) offensively to avoid timely rent payments." n11 Moreover, the District Court found problematic the idea that the impact of Section 365(d)(3) would depend on a landlord's lease-drafting choices, i.e. under the "billing date" approach, a lease requiring that rent be due in full on the first day of the month deprives Section 365(d)(3) of any practical effect, whereas a lease requiring that rent be due each day would presumably lead to payment for the stub period under Section 365(d)(3).

The Delaware District Court proposed three ways of reconciling the Third Circuit's apparent rejection of the "proration" approach for tax claims in Montgomery Ward with the legislative intent for rent claims underlying Section 365(d)(3). First, the District Court noted that rent could be viewed as an obligation that "arises" in full each day of a tenant's occupancy. The result would be that a tenant who files for bankruptcy after the first of the month still owes rent for the full month (not a prorated portion) under Section 365(d)(3). However, the District Court did not explain how this would provide a basis for distinguishing the treatment of rent claims from the treatment of tax claims. Second, the District Court reasoned that if a lease provides a grace period for payment that expires post-petition, it could be argued that the payment obligation has arisen post-petition under Section 365(d)(3). Of course, this might only shift the timing of a debtor's bankruptcy filing to several days later in the month, after any applicable grace period expires, rather than result in a dramatic change in treatment of "stub rent." n12 Third, if a lease provides for a default penalty that accrues during the post-petition/pre-rejection period, "one might interpret the lease as creating a new obligation to which § 365(d)(3) would apply, namely, payment of the complete delinquent rent plus the penalty." n13

After a lengthy analysis, the Delaware District Court affirmed the Bankruptcy Court's conclusion that Section 365(d)(3) does not render Section 503(b)(1) inapplicable, holding that "[n]othing within the text of § 365, the legislative history, or other canons of interpretation, bars the collection of post-petition rent through the administrative expense procedure of § 503(b)(1)." n14 Applying Section 503(b)(1), the Delaware District Court held that the debtors' use of the premises to conduct normal business and rental of the premises to a liquidator to conduct profitable store closing sales was sufficient to establish the necessity of the debtors' use of the premises. The court noted that although there was no ambiguity in this case as to whether the debtors genuinely occupied and used the premises, "[h]ad the [debtors] vacated, or merely left idle the premises—a 'lights out' lease-[the landlords] would be faced with a more difficult claim." n15

In re Stone Barn Manhattan LLC

The court in Stone Barn did not require the landlords to follow as circuitous a path as the Goody's court to pursue "stub rent". The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York concluded that holding the debtor immediately responsible for "stub rent", measured on a daily basis as it accrued after the date of the order for relief until the end of that month, was the proper construction of Section 365(d)(3). The court reasoned that the "proration" approach is faithful to the purpose of Section 365(d)(3) because it "afford[s] landlords an enhanced right to timely performance under a commercial lease during [the post-petition, pre-rejection period]" and is faithful to the "purpose of the bankruptcy laws as a whole." n16

The court noted that although a number of bankruptcy courts have eschewed the "proration" method, "very few of these courts have been willing to draw the obvious conclusion that rent for the first month is a pre-petition claim only, based on the "billing date" approach, and that the debtor has the right to use the leased property during the stub period without further liability." n17 Instead, these courts fill the gap by allowing landlords an administrative claim for rent under Section 503(b). Indeed, that was the result in Goody's. Thus, the New York Bankruptcy Court implied that the "proration" approach under Section 365(d)(3) is a more straightforward mechanism of reaching a result that would likely be the same under Section 503(b)(1).

The court emphasized that Congress intended Section 365(d)(3) to nullify the requirement that a creditor prove benefit to the estate before it can obtain administrative expense status for a post-petition rent claim. Under the "billing date" approach, the landlords would have to prove, in order to prevail on a Section 503(b)(1) claim, that a debtor's use and occupancy was necessary and beneficial to the estate during the stub period. Therefore, the court reasoned that the "billing date" approach contradicts the plain purpose of Section 365(d)(3)-to give landlords an irrefutable right to rent at the contract rate during the bankruptcy. Still, the New York Bankruptcy Court noted that this is an issue on which different courts have come to different conclusions, and that its decision therefore may be an appropriate candidate for appeal to higher courts in the Second Circuit.

The Bottom Line

The contrast of Goody's and Stone Barn demonstrates the different approaches that courts may take to the stub rent issue under Section 365(d)(3). However, these different approaches are not polar opposites. Rather, the Delaware District Court's decision indicates a possible movement in the Third Circuit, which is a traditionally "billing date" jurisdiction, toward the "proration" approach used in New York. Moreover, the Delaware District Court's relatively brief treatment of the "actual" and "necessary" elements of the landlords' Section 503(b)(1) claims makes the Section 503(b)(1) process in Delaware appear very similar to the Section 365(d)(3) process in New York. Even assuming the Third Circuit retains the "billing date" approach for "stub rent," the primary disadvantage of that approach for landlords may be the timing and certainty of payment in a case where a Chapter 11 plan or reorganization is delayed or at risk of administrative insolvency.

Return to Text

n1 The U.S. District Court for the District of Delaware, in In re Goody's Family Clothing, Inc., No. 08-585 (D. Del. March 31, 2009), recently affirmed, in a lengthy opinion, the Bankruptcy Court's ruling in that case, 392 B.R. 604 (Bankr. D. Del. 2008).

n2 In re Stone Barn Manhattan LLC, 398 B.R. 359 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008). "Stone Barn" is often referred to by the trade name "Steve & Barry's."

n3 11 U.S.C. § 365(d)(3). Section 365(d)(3) provides, in relevant part, that "the trustee shall timely perform all obligations of the debtor...arising from and after the order for relief under any expired lease of nonresidential real property, until such lease is assumed or rejected, notwithstanding section 503(b)(1) of this title." 11 U.S.C. § 365(d)(3).

n4 Courts have disagreed on which approach to adopt with respect to the treatment of a debtor's post-petition lease obligations under Section 365(d)(3). Compare In re Handy Andy Home Improvement Centers, Inc., 144 F.3d 1125 (7th Cir. 1998), In re Furr's Supermarkets, Inc., 283 B.R. 60 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2002), and In re All For a Dollar, Inc., 174 B.R. 358 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1994) (applying "proration" approach), with Koenig Sporting Goods, Inc. v. Morse Road Co. (In re Koenig Sporting Goods, Inc.), 203 F.3d 986 (6th Cir. 2000), and HA-LO Industries v. CenterPoint Properties Trust, 342 F.3d 794 (7th Cir. 2003) (applying "billing date" approach).

n5 There are instances where a landlord may benefit from the billing date approach, for example, in the context of annual taxes that become due in arrears under a lease following the bankruptcy filing date. See infra note 8.

n6 The "billing date" approach is alternatively labeled the "performance" approach.

n7 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(1).

n8 In re Montgomery Ward Holding Corp., 268 F.3d 205 (3d Cir. 2001). The Third Circuit in Montgomery Ward held that where a lease obligates a debtor to pay a tax bill upon receipt and the bill is received post-petition for taxes allocable to both pre-petition and post-petition periods, the entirety of the tax payment must be made in a timely manner under Section 365(d)(3). Significantly, as described below, in footnote 8 of its Goody's decision the Delaware District Court indicated that Montgomery Ward's ruling on tax claims may not be binding precedent with respect to "stub rent" claims, reviving the possibility of a "proration" approach to "stub rent" claims in Delaware and elsewhere in the Third Circuit.

n9 In re Goody's Family Clothing, Inc., 392 B.R. 604, 609 (Bankr. D. Del. 2008).

n10 The debtors appealed multiple Bankruptcy Court orders granting landlords administrative claims for "stub rent". While some of the appeals were consolidated and dealt with by the Delaware District Court's opinion, others remain pending. In addition, the debtors have indicated in filings with the Bankruptcy Court their intention to appeal future orders granting landlords' administrative claims under Section 503(b)(1). The legal issues raised in the pending and possible future appeals will likely be disposed of, under the doctrine of collateral estoppel, by reference to the District Court's recent decision. The factual issues of whether the debtors' occupancy was necessary to the preservation of the estate, however, may need to be decided on a case-by-case basis. The need for such fact specific inquiry under Section 503(b)(1) highlights the consequence to landlords of the court's declining to adopt the "proration" approach.

n11 Goody's, No. 08-585, slip. op. at 12 n.8.

n12 Nevertheless, a landlord may be able to take other actions to structure lease obligations in a way that mitigates the effect of the "billing date" approach. For example, a landlord could require monthly payment in advance toward annual taxes due at year end.

n13 Id. (emphasis in original).

n14 Id. at 25.

n15 Id. at 33. Not only must a landlord satisfy the burdens of proof imposed by Section 503(b)(1), but a landlord asserting a Section 503(b)(1) administrative claim may be denied the benefit of its lease bargain if prevailing rental rates change so that the fair market rental value of the premises drops below the originally bargained-for rent-not an uncommon occurrence in a declining real estate market. In re Ames Dept. Stores, Inc., 306 B.R. 43, 68 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2004). Although not as common, the converse is also possible where a landlord can establish that the fair market rental value of the premises is greater than the lease rate. See In re Xonics, Inc., 65 B.R. 69, 74 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1986). While the Delaware District Court in the Goody's case did not press the landlords to prove the "actual" and "necessary" elements of their Section 503(b)(1) claims (indeed, the District Court declined to remand to the Bankruptcy Court for further consideration of those elements), relying on the debtors' use of the leased premises as prima facie evidence of those elements, other courts or other facts may require further proof of those elements.

n16 Stone Barn, 398 B.R. at 365-66.

n17 Id. at 366.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Ms. Bachman is a partner at WilmerHale and the vice chair of the Real Estate Practice Group. She joined the firm in 1978, and her practice covers a broad spectrum of real estate development and financial transactions, including the representation of investors and developers in office, industrial, and research and development facilities and residential developments. She also represents institutional lenders in loan collection matters and landlords and tenants in commercial leasing matters (including high technology and biotechnology facilities). Ms. Bachman is a member of the American College of Real Estate Lawyers and past president of New England Women in Real Estate, and she has served as a member of the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency Single Family Advisory Committee, the Board of Directors of Greater Boston Legal Services, and the Executive Committee of the Massachusetts Chapter of the National Association of Industrial and Office Properties.

Mr. Barnett is a partner in the Real Estate Practice Group at WilmerHale, and he joined the firm in 1991. Mr. Barnett has significant experience locally, nationally and internationally in representing clients in all aspects of commercial real estate, including real estate finance, development, acquisitions, sales and leasing. He is a member of the International Council of Shopping Centers and NAIOP, The Commercial Real Estate Development Association, the American Bar Association, the Massachusetts Bar Association and the Boston Bar Association.

Mr. Loveland is an associate in the Bankruptcy and Financial Restructuring Practice Group. He joined WilmerHale in 2008, and his practice focuses on both debt financing and bankruptcy-related litigation.

Ms. Manzer is a counsel in the Bankruptcy and Financial Restructuring Practice Group at WilmerHale. She joined the firm in 1989, and during her twenty years of practice, Ms. Manzer has garnered extensive experience in bankruptcy matters and civil litigation. Her practice for the past 10 years has focused primarily in the area of corporate restructuring and bankruptcy. She has represented debtors, creditors, and other parties in interest in every stage of reorganization proceedings, and she is a member of the American Bar Association and the American Bankruptcy Institute.

Mr. Shuster is a partner in the Bankruptcy and Financial Restructuring Practice Group at WilmerHale and a member of the Debt Finance Group. He joined the firm in 2000, and his practice focuses on the areas of bankruptcy, out-of-court restructurings and debt financing transactions. Mr. Shuster represents creditors, lenders, borrowers and debtors in finance, Uniform Commercial Code (UCC), bankruptcy and financial restructuring transactions and related litigation. He has particular experience in bond finance and cross-border transactions.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

22 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Terminal Valuation: 7th Cir. on Valuation of United Airlines Bond Collateral

2009 Emerging Issues 4743

Philip D. Anker, Craig Goldblatt, George W. Shuster, Jr. and John D. Sigel on Terminal Valuation: Will the Seventh Circuit Decision on Valuation of United Airlines Bond Collateral Bring Closure to Recharacterization Litigation?

By Philip D. Anker, Craig Goldblatt, George W. Shuster Jr. and John D. Sigel

December 20, 2009

SUMMARY: The Seventh Circuit's decision to reverse a ruling on valuation made by the Northern District of Illinois District Court regarding collateral for United Airlines bonds is an interesting one in its own right, for its approach to valuing collateral in bankruptcy. It is also an important development in nearly a decade of municipal conduit finance recharacterization litigation in the United Airlines, Delta, and Northwest bankruptcy cases.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: In its recent United Airlines decision, the Seventh Circuit held that the District Court had undervalued the collateral for bonds issued by the Los Angeles airport authority to finance improvements at facilities leased by United Airlines in Los Angeles International Airport (LAX) terminals. The Seventh Circuit increased the collateral value for the $60 million in bond claims from $35 million to over $60 million, dramatically increasing the recovery on the bonds. The Seventh Circuit found that the District Court had improperly tied its valuation methodology to the value of unimproved airport terminal space under constrained market conditions, rather than improved space like that comprising the bond collateral on an open market. In addition, the Seventh Circuit criticized the District Court's selection of a discount rate for the collateral value-the District Court had averaged the discount rates proposed by United Airlines and the representatives for the bonds, rather than choosing the legally correct discount rate.

Background Financing

The United Airlines litigation is grounded in the structure of the bond financing at issue. The bonds were issued not by United Airlines, as would be the case for ordinary corporate bonds, but rather by the Regional Airports Improvement Corporation (RAIC), a governmental entity created for the purpose of issuing such bonds and using the proceeds to finance airport improvements. However, United Airlines was the sole source of payment on the bonds, through payments made by United Airlines to RAIC under a lease for the LAX terminals, between United Airlines as lessee and the City of Los Angeles as lessor (who assigned its right to payment as lessor to RAIC). The reason for this "conduit finance" structure was to qualify the interest on the bonds for tax exemption as municipal bond interest.

Recharacterization Litigation

When United Airlines (and other airlines) filed bankruptcy cases, they challenged the status of the terminal leases providing the revenue stream for the bonds. The airlines argued that the leases were not "true leases" for the terminal space, subject to assumption or rejection in bankruptcy, but rather components of a financing transaction for terminal improvements. As a corollary, the airlines took the position that the terminal improvements were owned by the airlines, rather than owned by the airport authorities and leased to the airlines. The airlines argued-successfully in the case of United Airlines at LAX-that the bond claims were not lease claims but rather should be "recharacterized" as loan claims. n1 If the United Airlines bond claims were loan claims, RAIC would not own the lease improvements but would, at best, be able to argue that the loan claims should be secured loan claims and that the court should impose a retroactive lien to make the lease improvements collateral for the bond claims.

A key premise of United Airlines' recharacterization strategy was its need to maintain operations at the LAX terminals for business reasons. Had United Airlines been willing to vacate the leased terminals, it could have sought to treat the terminal leases as "true leases" and reject those leases under Section 365 of the Bankruptcy Code-leaving the bondholders with a general unsecured claim for rejection damages. But, since United Airlines needed to maintain the leased terminal space, "true lease" treatment would have required assumption of the leases and payment of the bonds in full under Section 365. Recharacterization was a potential means for United Airlines "to have its cake and eat it too" by remaining in the premises and reducing the amount payable on the bonds.

After the recharacterization was upheld by a separate decision of the Seventh Circuit, n2 the case was remanded to the Bankruptcy Court to determine the scope of the collateral for the deemed "secured loan" and to value that collateral. Each of these issues was both controversial and crucial to the bondholders' recovery. If the collateral were broadly defined and valued highly enough, the bonds would be fully secured and eventually paid in full. If the collateral were narrowly defined or valued low enough, the bonds would be undersecured and paid only a portion of their face amount.

The scope of the collateral was in dispute because no collateral was ever expressly granted to secure the loans, given that the claims were not structured as secured loans (or as loans at all)-they were simply "recharacterized." Thus, the court, in imposing a lien after the fact, was required to approximate what might have been the collateral had the lease structure been a loan structure-that is, what a lender might have required for collateral if the transaction had been initially structured as a secured financing. This approximation was not an easy task because while United Airlines was a tenant of LAX with respect to a large area of improved terminal space, only certain terminal improvements were financed with the proceeds of the bonds.

The Bankruptcy Court defined the scope of the collateral to include a portion of the United Airlines terminal space at LAX and valued the collateral at only $33 million, meaning that the remaining $27 million of the bond claims were unsecured. n3 Because United Airlines' right to the collateral was that of a tenant, the Bankruptcy Court valued the collateral by judging the cost of a replacement rental ($17 per square foot) and applying a discount rate to the term for which the collateral would be rented (11.64%). The District Court affirmed the Bankruptcy Court's decision. n4 The determination of the scope of the collateral was not appealed to the Seventh Circuit-only the determination of the rental rate and discount rate remained in dispute. n5

The Seventh Circuit focused first on the rental rate. The bond representatives argued that a rate of $17 per square foot was not the correct basis for the bond collateral valuation because the $17 rental rate did not reflect the fair market value of improved terminal space at the airport. The bondholders' collateral, however, included the improvements that United Airlines had made to the terminal space, which would necessarily increase the rental rate. Moreover, the $17 per square foot rate was the product of constrained market conditions. While the Seventh Circuit did not adopt a specific higher rate, it explained that the $17 rental rate was far too low and stated that the rate should be at least $30-a rate that would make the bond claims fully secured even at the discount rate selected by the lower courts. The Seventh Circuit also criticized the District Court's analysis in selecting a discount rate. The District Court selected a rate that simply split the difference between the competing experts, rather than seeking to determine the correct discount rate. The Seventh Circuit, in a more empirical analysis, determined the correct discount rate could not exceed 8% (the airport's actual cost of unsecured borrowing)-meaning even a rental rate of $23 per square foot would make the bond claims fully secured. Overall, the Seventh Circuit increased the value of the collateral by more than 100% as compared to the lower courts.

The Bottom Line

The Seventh Circuit decision in United Airlines is only the most recent event in a long saga of airline conduit finance recharacterization litigation. In a sense, it brings the initial litigation issues full-circle by ordering payment in full of the bond claims at issue in that case, a result that may have also occurred had the recharacterization litigation never been commenced. However, because of the years of recharacterization litigation leading up to the recent Seventh Circuit decision and the complicated facts that were components of each court decision along the way, the Seventh Circuit decision does not resolve all aspects of recharacterization. Instead, the Seventh Circuit's reliance on specific facts in determining the components of valuation-the rental rate and discount rate-emphasizes the importance of rigorous valuation analysis in bankruptcy litigation of this type.

Return to Text

n1 The results in the various recharacterization cases were not always the same as between different airlines or even as between different airports in which a single airline operated. The results varied on the basis, among others, of the details of the conduit finance structure and documentation.

n2 United Airlines, Inc. v. U.S. Bank National Association, Inc., City of Los Angeles, 447 F.3d 504 (7th Cir. 2006). This decision reversed a District Court decision to the contrary (finding no recharacterization), which in turn reversed a Bankruptcy Court decision (finding recharacterization).

n3 United Airlines, Inc. v. UMB Bank, N.A., 374 B.R. 625 (Bankr. N.D. Ill., August 24, 2007).

n4 UMB Bank, N.A. v. United Air Lines, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46553 (N.D. Ill. June 13, 2008).

n5 Under different circumstances, the scope of the collateral might have been determined to be narrower (e.g., only the lease improvements themselves, such as fixtures, and not the leased space) or broader (e.g., all of the leased terminal space and improvements occupied by United Airlines at LAX).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Mr. Anker is a partner in the Litigation/Controversy Department at WilmerHale and vice chair of the firm's Bankruptcy and Financial Restructuring Practice Group. He is a member of the Bankruptcy and Creditor Rights Litigation Practice Group and the Business Trial Group. He joined the firm in 1983. Mr. Anker is an experienced bankruptcy litigator and counselor, who has practiced for more than eighteen years in the field. Among other honors, he has been selected by his peers as one of the "Best Lawyers" in the areas of Bankruptcy and Creditor-Debtor Rights law in The Best Lawyers in America for each year from 2005-2010. He was also recently listed in the 2010 edition of Benchmark Litigation for his leading bankruptcy practice. Mr. Anker is a member of the American Bankruptcy Institute, a frequent speaker and panelist at bankruptcy law conferences, and author of articles on issues of bankruptcy and related law.

Mr. Goldblatt is a partner in the Litigation/Controversy Department at WilmerHale and a member of the Appellate and Supreme Court Litigation and Bankruptcy and Creditor Rights Litigation Practice Groups and the Business Trial Group. He is also a member of the firm's Management Committee. Mr. Goldblatt joined the firm in 1994. Mr. Goldblatt's practice focuses on complex civil and appellate litigation, with an emphasis on bankruptcy-related litigation and other restructuring matters. He represents parties in all stages of bankruptcy proceedings. Central to his practice are bankruptcy and insolvency related trial litigation and appeals. He has also been involved in a range of civil litigation matters outside of bankruptcy, with an emphasis on complex commercial disputes and appellate litigation.

Mr. Shuster is a partner in the Bankruptcy and Financial Restructuring Practice Group at WilmerHale and a member of the Debt Finance Group. He joined the firm in 2000, and his practice focuses on the areas of bankruptcy, out-of-court restructurings and debt financing transactions. Mr. Shuster represents creditors, lenders, borrowers and debtors in finance, Uniform Commercial Code (UCC), bankruptcy and financial restructuring transactions and related litigation. He has particular experience in bond finance and cross-border transactions.

Mr. Sigel is a partner at WilmerHale and the chair of the firm's Bankruptcy and Financial Restructuring Practice Group. He joined the firm in 1980, and his practice is concentrated on commercial law, advising clients on secured and unsecured lending and debt issuance, Chapter 11 reorganizations and the Uniform Commercial Code. He has dealt in particular with matters relating to debt financings of public and private companies and acquisitions and sales of distressed companies. Mr. Sigel has represented many clients in negotiating credit facilities with institutional lenders, including the private placement of debt securities. He also has advised corporate clients in connection with the public offering of debt securities. In Chapter 11 reorganization proceedings, Mr. Sigel has represented debtors, creditors and purchasers.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

23 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on Smith v. Pritchett (In re Smith)

2009 Emerging Issues 4734

S. Andrew Jurs on Smith v. Pritchett (In re Smith), 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 24439 (1st Cir. Nov. 6, 2009)

By S. Andrew Jurs

December 17, 2009

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis looks at the First Circuit's ruling that a late-payment penalty provided for in a separation agreement was not a "domestic support obligation" as that term is defined in the Bankruptcy Code. Although fact specific, the decision does provide some of the first circuit-court guidance as to what factors might cause a claim to qualify as a domestic support obligation and thus be nondischargeable.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The First Circuit Determined That a Late-Payment Penalty Was Not a Domestic Support Obligation and Thus Was Dischargeable in Bankruptcy

In Smith v. Pritchett (In re Smith), 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 24439 (1st Cir. Nov. 6, 2009), the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit considered whether a separation agreement that provided for a $50 per day late payment fee was intended as support to the ex-wife, such that it would not be dischargeable in the debtor's bankruptcy, or instead was intended as a punitive measure to deter the debtor from late payment and as such would be dischargeable. According to the appeals court, the late fee only encouraged payment of alimony and was not itself alimony. Of particular importance was the fact that the fee was contingent on tardy payment and was a fixed charge unconnected to the amount of actual alimony owed to the ex-wife. Additionally, under the agreement, the debtor's alimony payments decreased every year, but the late payment fee never changed. Accordingly, the ex-wife's claim was a general unsecured claim not entitled to priority status and could be discharged under 11 U.S.C.S. §§ 523(a)(15), 1328(a)(2).

Facts and Procedural History

On April 20, 1986, Nelson J. Smith ("Smith" or "Debtor") and Rita M. Pritchett ("Pritchett") were married. Just over nine years later, without having had any children, the parties filed for divorce. On October 26, 1995, the state court approved a joint Separation Agreement ("Agreement") and, in its order approving the Agreement, further provided that the Agreement survived as an independent contract.

The Agreement stated that it resolved all issues between the parties and that the parties' respective financial circumstances had been taken into account. Additionally, the Agreement provided for alimony payments from Smith to Pritchett beginning at $2,300 per month and decreasing to $1,600 per month on a set schedule ending after approximately five years. If Pritchett remarried, the alimony payments would decrease to $1,000 per month but still continue through the five-year period. The Agreement also included a provision requiring Smith to purchase and transfer to Pritchett a term life insurance policy on his life for the five-year term of the alimony payments to ensure that the alimony payments would survive Smith's death. The Agreement also stated that:

All alimony payments shall be due in funds available to the Wife on or before the first of each month, and shall be subject to a late payment penalty in the amount of $50.00 for each day after the first of each month upon which they are received by or become available to the Wife.

The Agreement further provided that "payments made by the Husband . . . shall be deductible for the Husband and taxable to the Wife for income tax purposes."

With one unrelated exception, Smith was responsible for the parties' marital debts. Under the Agreement, Smith also agreed to pay Pritchett $150 per month to maintain a health plan for her benefit. Finally, either party would be entitled to reasonable attorney's fees in the event of a breach of the Agreement.

Smith fell into arrears almost immediately, and, after several years of consistently late payments, Pritchett filed a Complaint for Contempt in the probate court seeking accrued late-payment penalties from Smith. The probate court found that although Smith was current on his alimony payments, and had only one remaining payment due, his payments had been constantly late. As a result, on September 16, 2005, the probate court entered judgment against Smith in the amount of $75,010, which represented just the late-payment penalties that had accumulated since a 1998 modification (the "Judgment").

In 2006, Pritchett commenced an action in the New Hampshire Superior Court to enforce the Judgment and obtained an ex parte attachment of Smith's homestead in New Hampshire. On March 2, 2007, the New Hampshire court approved a stipulation by the parties for a judgment of $75,010 plus applicable statutory interest and costs.

On October 5, 2007, Smith filed a voluntary petition under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. Smith's bankruptcy schedules listed Pritchett's claim to late-payment penalties in Schedule D, "Creditors Holding Secured Claims." Smith filed a proposed chapter 13 plan on October 11, 2007, disclosing his intent to file a motion to avoid Pritchett's lien pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 522(f), on the grounds that it impaired his homestead exemption under N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 480:1. On November 29, 2007, Pritchett filed a proof of claim in the amount of $81,932.04. Pritchett also filed an objection to confirmation of Smith's proposed chapter 13 plan asserting that her claim was (1) secured and (2) that it was a domestic support obligation entitled to priority under 11 U.S.C. § 507(a)(1)(A). See also 11 U.S.C. § 1328(a)(2) (excepting domestic support obligations from discharge). On December 6, 2007, Smith filed an objection to Pritchett's proof of claim, and a motion to avoid Pritchett's lien.

The bankruptcy court conducted a non-evidentiary hearing on the motions and held that Pritchett's claim was a domestic support obligation and, accordingly, denied Smith's motion to avoid Pritchett's lien. Conceding it was a "close call," the bankruptcy court concluded that the $50 fee "looks, smells, and feels too much like attorneys' fees collecting alimony and support payments, which have historically . . . been treated as in the same nature" as alimony. Smith appealed to the First Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel, which reversed the bankruptcy court on both counts, holding that the obligation at issue was not in the nature of support; therefore, the lien on Smith's home was avoidable and the claim was a general unsecured claim not entitled to priority status. See In re Smith, 398 B.R. 715 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2008). Subsequent to the appellate panel's decision, a lien holder senior to Pritchett foreclosed on Smith's residence, rendering the lien avoidance issue moot.

Legal Analysis

In 2005, the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act created a new group of preferred creditors: creditors with claims arising from domestic support obligations. Such creditors receive special treatment, such as priority over most other creditors, see 11 U.S.C. §§ 507(a)(1)(A), (B), and the domestic support obligation claims are also nondischargeable under chapters 7 and 13. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(b), 1328(a)(2). A new concept in bankruptcy, a "domestic support obligation" is defined in 11 U.S.C. § 101(14A) as a debt that accrues before, on, or after the date of the order for relief in a case under this title, including interest that accrues on that debt as provided under applicable nonbankruptcy law [owed to] a former spouse [and that is] in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support . . . without regard to whether such debt is expressly so designated.

Consequently, for an obligation to a former spouse to be considered a domestic support obligation, it must actually be in the nature of support. A party seeking to have a debt determined to be a domestic support obligation, and thus nondischargeable, bears the burden of proving that the obligation is in the nature of support. In re Werthen, 329 F.3d 269, 271-72 (1st Cir. 2003) (stating that moving party "bore the burden of showing that the debts were nondischargeable") (citing Grogan v. Garner, 498 U.S. 279, 287-88, 111 S. Ct. 654, 112 L. Ed. 2d 755 (1991)). The issue is one of federal bankruptcy law, and not state law. 329 F.3d 269, 272-73.

Commentary

The First Circuit's holding in Smith v. Pritchett is noteworthy in that it is one of the first circuit-court opinions to address the standards needed to determine which creditors will qualify for the preferred treatment given to domestic support obligation claims.

As an initial matter, the appeals court noted that the label applied to the obligation by the court or the parties is not necessarily controlling for Bankruptcy Code purposes. Instead, the principal issue is "whether the divorce court judge 'intended' a particular award to be for support or for something else." 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 24439, at *9 (quoting Werthen, 329 F.3d at 273). To discern the intent behind the obligation, "courts look to a range of factors, including the language used by the divorce court and whether the award seems designed to assuage need, as discerned from the structure of the award and the financial circumstances of the recipients." Id. There is not, however, a universally accepted multi-factor test to discern intent when determining whether an obligation is in the nature of support. See In re Soforenko, 203 B.R. 853, 859 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1997) (describing the multitude of multi-factor tests used in the First Circuit).

In Smith v. Pritchett, the First Circuit declined to adopt such a universal test, and instead agreed with the appellate panel that "[a]s in all fact intensive inquiries, the critical factors depend on the totality of circumstances of a particular case." In re Smith, 398 B.R. at 722. The First Circuit noted that, to determine the parties' intent, a trial court ordinarily may look beyond the separation agreement to discern the parties' relative financial circumstances at the time of the divorce. See, e.g., Werthen, 329 F.3d at 273-74. In Smith v. Pritchett, however, the parties did not dispute the bankruptcy court's finding that supplementing the record with additional information was unnecessary, because the issues relating to the parties' relative economic status were rendered moot by the fact that they had agreed to a court-approved fixed schedule of alimony payments.

The next step in the analysis, therefore, was to determine whether, given the language of the Agreement, the $50 per day late-payment fee provision was intended as support to Pritchett or, alternatively, was intended as a punitive measure to deter Smith from paying late. Pritchett argued that the Agreement's language supported her position that the $50 fee was intended to serve as alimony, maintenance, or support in that the fee provision was included in an Exhibit entitled "ALIMONY." The Agreement also did not distinguish between the alimony schedule and the $50 late fee; thus, any payments made by Smith under the "ALIMONY" Exhibit were to be treated the same way alimony is normally treated for income tax purposes, i.e., the payments were deductible as alimony to him and taxable to her.

For several reasons, the First Circuit rejected these arguments. As an initial point, the court noted that the labels parties give to obligations are not controlling. 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 24439, at *12; see also Werthen, 329 F.3d at 273 ("federal courts have been unwilling to treat the label applied by the divorce court as controlling for Bankruptcy Code purposes"). Accordingly, although the provision was located in the Agreement under a heading called "ALIMONY," the provision itself referred to it as a "late payment penalty." Furthermore, while the tax treatment of the provision constituted a factor favoring Pritchett, the appeals court was persuaded that, despite this treatment, the late fee was intended to encourage payment of alimony and was not itself alimony.

Of primary importance to the First Circuit was the fact that the fee was contingent on Smith's tardiness to pay. Because Pritchett had no expectation of this payment unless and until Smith was late, the only way this contingent payment could be considered alimony was if it was meant to compensate Pritchett for the time during which she was waiting for her alimony payment. This argument was unavailing, however, because the $50 fee was a fixed charge that had no connection to the amount of actual alimony owed to Pritchett. Whether Smith was late by a single dollar or by the entire alimony payment, he would still owe Pritchett the same $50.

Further evidence to the First Circuit that the parties did not intend the $50 fee to be alimony was the fact that the Agreement called for Smith's monthly alimony payments to decrease every year, from $2,300 to $1,600, and to go as low as $1,000 if Pritchett remarried. In contrast, the fee for a late payment was fixed throughout the term of the Agreement. "A $ 50 per day fee completely disconnected from any amount that Smith owed Pritchett cannot have been expected to be directly related to her recouping those costs." 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 24439, at *13-14. The appeals court hypothesized in dictum, however, that the scales might have tipped in Pritchett's direction if the parties had provided for an interest-based fee, contingent on the amount of alimony outstanding.

The substantial provisions for Pritchett's support outlined in the Agreement also weighed against any finding that the late-payment fee was intended to provide for Pritchett's support. In the First Circuit's opinion, the Agreement was relatively sophisticated, as could be seen in the fact that: (a) alimony continued even in the event of Pritchett's remarriage, (b) the Agreement provided for contributions toward her medical insurance premiums, and (c) the Agreement mandated that the support would outlive Smith's death. Additionally, attorney's fees incurred in enforcing the agreement, "a provision not always contemplated in such contracts," were clearly provided for in this instance. Id. at *14. Pritchett also received the only real estate owned by the parties that was not in foreclosure, and Smith was solely responsible for the parties' debts incurred prior to the divorce. According to the First Circuit, this sophistication meant that the obligation to pay a $50 fee per day that Smith was late in alimony payments was not itself intended to assuage Pritchett's needs, and was thus not alimony. Accordingly, the appeals court concluded that Pritchett's claim was a general unsecured claim not entitled to priority status and that the claim could be discharged in Smith's bankruptcy pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 523(a)(15), 1328(a)(2).

Conclusion

The decision in Smith v. Pritchett is significant because, although the court noted that each case is fact-dependent and that there is not a specific, multi-factor test, the decision provides some of the first circuit-court guidance as to what factors might cause a claim to qualify as a domestic support obligation such that it would receive preferential treatment, including priority of distribution and nondischargeability.

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of the definition of "domestic support obligation," see Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 101.14A.

For discussion of the discharge exception for domestic support obligations, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 523.11.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors' rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

24 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Limits on Discharge of Claims by One Debtor Against Another

2009 Emerging Issues 4736

John D. Sigel and George W. Shuster, Jr. on Debtor Against Debtor: Limits on the Discharge of Claims by One Bankruptcy Estate Against Another

By John D. Sigel and George W. Shuster Jr.

December 17, 2009

SUMMARY: As corporate bankruptcy filings increase, one debtor corporation is more likely to find that it has claims against another unaffiliated debtor corporation. The US Bankruptcy Code is generally not drafted with this situation in mind, and questions may arise regarding the effect of one debtor's bankruptcy on another's.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Recently, the Southern District of New York Bankruptcy Court considered whether the avoidance actions pursued in the bankruptcy of OneStar under Sections 547 and 549 of the Bankruptcy Code n1 could be maintained against WorldCom, which had confirmed in its own bankruptcy a Chapter 11 Plan of Reorganization discharging all claims against it under Section 1141 of the Bankruptcy Code. n2 The Bankruptcy Court held that the OneStar avoidance actions could be pursued against WorldCom, notwithstanding WorldCom's discharge, because the discharge is binding only on WorldCom's creditors and their successors, not on the bankruptcy estate represented by OneStar's bankruptcy trustee. n3

One Bankruptcy After Another

WorldCom filed its Chapter 11 cases in July 2002. During its Chapter 11 cases, WorldCom received payments from OneStar for telecommunications services purchased from WorldCom by OneStar. In October 2003, WorldCom confirmed its Chapter 11 Plan of Reorganization, which contained an extensive provision discharging all claims against WorldCom. Before that Chapter 11 Plan became effective, OneStar filed its own Chapter 11 case in December 2003. The WorldCom Chapter 11 plan became effective in April 2004, and the OneStar Chapter 11 reorganization was converted to a Chapter 7 liquidation in January 2005. In August 2005, the OneStar Chapter 7 Trustee sued WorldCom to avoid and recover under Section 547 payments made to WorldCom from October through December 2003, the 90-day "preference period" preceding OneStar's bankruptcy filing. n4

Whether Avoidance Actions Are Claims

The Chapter 7 Trustee for OneStar first argued that WorldCom's discharge did not apply to the OneStar avoidance actions because those actions were not "claims" that were subject to the discharge. The Bankruptcy Court ruled against the OneStar Trustee on this issue. The Bankruptcy Court held that the avoidance actions were "claims" of the type that could be subject to the WorldCom discharge under its Chapter 11 Plan and Section 1141 of the Bankruptcy Code authorizing that discharge. The Bankruptcy Court reached this conclusion notwithstanding the fact that the payments to WorldCom were made-and indeed OneStar's bankruptcy giving rise to the avoidance actions was filed-only after WorldCom filed its bankruptcy filing and after its Chapter 11 Plan was confirmed. This ruling has significance beyond the "debtor against debtor" context, as it confirms the principle that a Chapter 11 Plan can discharge claims arising both before and after a bankruptcy filing, and, in some circumstances, claims arising up until the date a Chapter 11 Plan becomes effective.

Whether the OneStar Trustee is Bound by the Discharge

The Chapter 7 Trustee for OneStar next argued that WorldCom's discharge was not binding on the OneStar Trustee because the OneStar Trustee brought the avoidance actions on behalf of OneStar's bankruptcy estate and not as a successor to OneStar itself. The Bankruptcy Court ruled that the OneStar Trustee was the successor in interest to OneStar, and was bound by the WorldCom discharge in that capacity. But the Bankruptcy Court ruled that the OneStar Trustee also acted in a separate capacity-as representative of OneStar's bankruptcy estate and the creditors of OneStar with an interest in that estate. In this separate capacity the OneStar Trustee was not a successor in interest to OneStar and was not bound by the WorldCom discharge. Because the OneStar Trustee brought the avoidance actions in its capacity as representative of OneStar's bankruptcy estate and not in its capacity as successor to OneStar, the OneStar Trustee's pursuit of the avoidance actions was not barred by the WorldCom discharge. This result followed from the Bankruptcy Court's holding that the avoidance actions only arose upon the filing of OneStar's bankruptcy and that those actions became a part of OneStar's bankruptcy estate "at their inception." At no time did OneStar hold the avoidance actions in its own right, and therefore at no time could the OneStar Trustee be a successor to OneStar in pursuing those actions. n5

The Bottom Line

In the current economic climate, the otherwise rare instance of one bankruptcy estate asserting claims against another bankruptcy estate may become more common. The WorldCom-OneStar decision demonstrates how the status of a claimant as a representative of a bankruptcy estate may allow it to assert claims against another bankruptcy estate without regard to a discharge, and how being a representative of a bankruptcy estate may change the litigation battlefield. Bankruptcy discharge is a powerful weapon with a broad reach-but some claims of a bankruptcy trustee or debtor in possession may be outside its range.

Return to Text

n1 11 U.S.C. §§ 547 and 549.

n2 11 U.S.C. § 1141.

n3 In re WorldCom, Inc., 401 B.R. 637 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2009).

n4 The OneStar Chapter 7 Trustee also sought to avoid and recover under Section 549 a smaller amount paid to WorldCom after OneStar's bankruptcy filing.

n5 Although the actions were pursued by the OneStar Trustee after conversion of the OneStar bankruptcy to a Chapter 7 liquidation, based on the Bankruptcy Court's reasoning, the result may have been the same if OneStar had pursued the actions as debtor-in-possession during its Chapter 11 reorganization.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Mr. Sigel is a partner at WilmerHale and the chair of the firm's Bankruptcy and Financial Restructuring Practice Group. He joined the firm in 1980, and his practice is concentrated on commercial law, advising clients on secured and unsecured lending and debt issuance, Chapter 11 reorganizations and the Uniform Commercial Code. He has dealt in particular with matters relating to debt financings of public and private companies and acquisitions and sales of distressed companies. Mr. Sigel has represented many clients in negotiating credit facilities with institutional lenders, including the private placement of debt securities. He also has advised corporate clients in connection with the public offering of debt securities. In Chapter 11 reorganization proceedings, Mr. Sigel has represented debtors, creditors and purchasers.

Mr. Shuster is a partner in the Bankruptcy and Financial Restructuring Practice Group at WilmerHale and a member of the Debt Finance Group. He joined the firm in 2000, and his practice focuses on the areas of bankruptcy, out-of-court restructurings and debt financing transactions. Mr. Shuster represents creditors, lenders, borrowers and debtors in finance, Uniform Commercial Code (UCC), bankruptcy and financial restructuring transactions and related litigation. He has particular experience in bond finance and cross-border transactions.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

25 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Lawniczak on In re Smart World Technologies, LLC

2009 Emerging Issues 4738

James M. Lawniczak on Riker, Danzig, Scherer, Hyland & Perretti v. Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors (In re Smart World Technologies, LLC), 552 F.3d 228 (2d Cir. 2009)

By James M. Lawniczak

December 17, 2009

SUMMARY: In this Emerging Issues Analysis, James Lawniczak considers the Second Circuit's holding that an unsecured creditor has a valid claim under a prepetition indemnity agreement for the expenditure of postpetition attorneys' fees related to the litigation of issues under the underlying contract. The decision is consistent with the SNTL decision of the Ninth Circuit and correctly applies the rationale of the Supreme Court Travelers case.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The Second Circuit Holds That Whether a Method of Payment of a Professional Has Been Pre-Approved Depends on the Totality of the Circumstances and Does Not in All Cases Require a Specific Reference to Section 328

In Riker, Danzig, Scherer, Hyland & Perretti v. Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors (In re Smart World Technologies, LLC), 552 F.3d 228 (2d Cir. 2009), the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit considered what must happen before a professional retained in a bankruptcy case can rely on a bankruptcy court's pre-approval of the nature and measure of professional compensation. Noting that the question was one of "first impression" in the Second Circuit, 552 F.3d at 229, the court posed the question as follows: "How does a court determine whether a bankruptcy court has 'pre-approved' a debtor's retention of a professional pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 328(a)?" Id. The court held that the "totality of the circumstances" must be considered to answer the question.

The Facts

A related group of "Smart World" entities filed chapter 11 petitions in 2000. The debtors' subscriber lists were the most valuable assets in the case, and those lists were sold to Juno Online Services, Inc. ("Juno") for an amount of compensation that varied depending upon the number of subscribers obtained. A dispute developed between debtors and Juno as to how much was owed under the asset purchase agreement. The law firm of Riker, Danzig, Scherer, Hyland &

Perretti, LLP ("Riker Firm") was retained as special counsel to pursue litigation against Juno.

The Riker Firm's proposed compensation—a contingency fee with a sliding compensation scale that varied depending upon both the amount recovered and the time taken to obtain recovery—was presented to the bankruptcy court as part of the application to approve the Riker Firm's retention. The application indicated that the Riker Firm was being retained pursuant to sections 327 and 328 of the Bankruptcy Code (11 U.S.C. §§ 327, 328). The proposal was approved by the bankruptcy court, although the court order did not specifically refer to section 328, and the order indicated that all compensation would be fixed only after further application to the court in accordance with the original retention application and the proposal letter. Thereafter, the Riker Firm began its work.

After considerable time, Juno reached a settlement with Smart World's creditors to pay $5.5 million, which was approved by the bankruptcy court over the debtors' objection. The Riker Firm took an appeal on behalf of Smart World, and the settlement was reversed by the Second Circuit, which held that it was inappropriate to approve it over the debtors' objection. See Smart World Techs., LLC v. Juno Online Services, Inc. (In re Smart World Techs., LLC), 423 F.3d 166 (2d Cir. 2005). On remand, the creditors proposed a plan of reorganization that included a $6.5 million settlement with Juno, which was approved.

Thereafter, the Riker Firm applied for a final fee award in accordance with the formula in the approved contingency fee agreement, in the amount of $2,320,959.02, plus expenses. The bankruptcy court held that the original retention order was indeed a pre-approval of the contingency fee arrangement but went on to determine that four events, including the unusually prolonged litigation, had occurred that triggered the court's authority under section 328(a) to reduce the professional fee, because it had proved to be "improvident in light of developments not capable of being anticipated at the time of the fixing of such terms and conditions." As a result, the bankruptcy court ordered a fee award of only approximately $1.2 million.

On appeal, the district court agreed that the contingency fee agreement was properly approved under section 328. However, the court disagreed with the bankruptcy court's position that developments had occurred that were incapable of being anticipated. Consequently, the district court awarded almost all of the fees requested, reducing them to approximately $2.1 million. Riker, Danzig, Scherer, Hyland & Perretti v. Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors (In re Smart World Techs., LLC), 383 B.R. 869 (S.D.N.Y. 2008). The debtors appealed, and the Riker Firm did not cross-appeal from the small percentage reduction in its fee award.

Review of the Applicable Statutory Provisions

Section 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a trustee, which includes the debtor in possession in a chapter 11 case, to retain, with bankruptcy court approval, professionals who will represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties under the Code. Sections 328 and 330 of the Code provide for the compensation of professionals retained under section 327(a). Section 328(a) allows the court to pre-approve the reasonable terms and conditions of the professionals' employment, on any reasonable basis, including "on a retainer, on an hourly basis, on a fixed or percentage fee basis, or on a contingent fee basis." Section 328(a) goes on to provide that once a professional has been retained on specific enumerated terms and conditions under that section, the compensation finally awarded may only differ from the pre-approved method "if such terms and conditions prove to have been improvident in light of developments not capable of being anticipated at the time of the fixing of such terms and conditions."

Where the terms and methods of professional compensation are not pre-approved in the retention order, then section 330(a)(1) of the Code governs. That section provides that the bankruptcy court awards reasonable compensation by reviewing what the professional did after the fact. Section 330(a)(3) lists six facts that a court should consider in awarding compensation under section 330. However, in general, courts use a "lodestar method" to award compensation under section 330(a), determining a reasonable number of hours spent on the matter and then multiplying that by a reasonable rate. See, e.g., 3 Collier on Bankruptcy, 330.04[3][c] (15th ed. rev. 2007).

The Two Methods of Retaining and Paying Professionals

In the Smart World case, the Second Circuit pointed out that the statutory scheme created two, mutually exclusive methods of compensating professionals in bankruptcy cases. Either a professional is retained under the pre-approval methodology of section 328(a) or the professional is only generally retained, with reasonable compensation to be determined later pursuant to section 330. See, e.g., Smart World, 552 F.3d at 232-33; Peele v. Cunningham (In re Texas Sec., Inc.), 218 F.3d 443, 445 (5th Cir. 2000) ("[s]ection 328 applies when the bankruptcy court approves a particular rate or means of payment, and § 330 applies when the court does not do so"). The section 330 review process is inappropriate if the court has already pre-approved the methodology of payment under section 328(a); Friedman Enterprises v. B.U.M. Int'l, Inc. (In re B.U.M. Int'l, Inc.), 229 F.3d 824, 829 (9th Cir. 2000).

Even if a retention is under section 328(a), the professional still needs to file a final fee application as provided in section 330(a) and attach as detailed a statement as is appropriate under the circumstances consistent with the retention order and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016(a). See In re Westbrooks, 202 B.R. 520, 522 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1996). It is through the final fee application process that any developments incapable of being anticipated will come to light.

Legal Analysis of the Court on the Issue of Whether the Retention Was Appropriately Made Under Section 328(a)

In concluding that the retention of the Riker Firm in the Smart World case was of the first type of retention discussed above, pre-approval under section 328(a), the court looked to the "totality of the circumstances." 552 F.3d 228, 233. Because section 328(a) does not contain any specific requirements that must be met in order to invoke its provisions, there is nothing that absolutely has to be done for a retention order to constitute a pre-approval of fees. On the other hand, pre-approval cannot be lightly granted; instead there must be an indication that "the court evaluated the propriety of the fee arrangement before granting final, and not merely preliminary, approval." 552 F.3d at 233.

Under the facts of the Smart World case, the retention order was a section 328(a) pre-approval, even though the order itself did not specifically reference that subsection. The Riker Firm's application for retention referenced 328(a). The order authorized payment in accordance with the contingency fee agreement. At the hearing, the bankruptcy judge made several comments about the reasonableness of the contingency fee and that section 330 was inapplicable. Therefore, the Second Circuit affirmed the decision of the lower courts that the original retention of the Riker Firm was an appropriate section 328(a) retention.

Approaches of the Other Circuits

The Second Circuit's adoption of a "totality of the circumstances" test was consistent with the decision of the Sixth Circuit in Nischwitz v. Miskovic (In re Airspect Air, Inc.), 385 F.3d 915 (6th Cir. 2004). In that case, the court noted that the most important elements to consider were the application for compensation and the court order approving compensation, and that the focus should be on whether (1) the application specifically requested the pre-approval, (2) the court order assessed the reasonableness of the fee methodology and (3) the application or order specifically referred to section 328. 385 F.3d at 922. In the Airspect Air case, the court held that there was no section 328 pre-approval where neither the application nor the order referred to section 328 and where there was no discussion of the reasonableness of the fee arrangement.

In Donaldson Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp. v. National Gypsum Co. (In re National Gypsum Co.), 123 F.3d 861, 862-63 (5th Cir. 1997), the court held that a bankruptcy court's approval of a detailed letter setting forth a particular method of compensation was a pre-approved retention entitled to the protection of section 328, even though section 328(a) was not specifically mentioned and the retention order reserved to the bankruptcy court the "right to consider and approve the reasonableness and amount" of the fees. The court viewed this reservation as simply allowing reconsideration in the event of subsequent and unanticipated circumstances described in section 328(a). The rationale of the National Gypsum court was that if the most competent professionals are to accept bankruptcy case matters, courts must protect their agreements and expectations. 123 F.3d at 863.

The approach of the Second, Fifth and Sixth Circuits is inconsistent with the approach of the Ninth Circuit. In Circle K Corp. v. Houlihan, Lokey, Howard & Zukin, Inc. (In re Circle K Corp.), 279 F.3d 669, 671 (9th Cir. 2001), the court held that there can be no section 328(a) retention with pre-approval of the fee methodology "unless a professional's retention application unambiguously specifies that it seeks approval under § 328." The court went on to state that as a matter of good practice, the retention order should do likewise, although that is not absolutely determinative. Thus, where the application requested authority to enter into a retention agreement with a fixed fee of $100,000 per month without reference to section 328(a), the professional was not appropriately retained under section 328(a) and subsequent fees were subject to the reasonableness test of section 330. 279 F.3d at 672.

An intermediate approach was taken by the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in Zolfo, Cooper & Co. v. Sunbeam-Oster Co., Inc., 50 F.3d 253 (3d Cir. 1995). There, the court stated that the burden was on the professional to ensure that the bankruptcy court notes "explicitly the terms and conditions" if the professional intends to rely upon the section 328(a) protections. Because the retention order merely established the nature and range of services, without more specifics, it could not bind the court to particular terms and conditions of retention. 50 F.3d at 262.

Analysis of the Second Circuit on Whether the Subsequent Developments Were Incapable of Being Anticipated at the Time of the Retention

The second issue before the Second Circuit in Smart World was whether the bankruptcy court correctly concluded that the fee could be adjusted under section 328(a) because of subsequent developments that were incapable of anticipation at the time of the retention. The court explained that the test was not whether the subsequent developments themselves were actually considered at the time of retention but whether they were capable of being considered. 552 F.3d at 234-35. In the court's estimation, this is a "high hurdle to clear" in order to reconsider the pre-approved fee methodology.

In Smart Word, the bankruptcy judge had relied on four factors to reconsider the fees, and the court of appeals rejected each of them as having been capable of being anticipated, even if not actually anticipated. Divergent positions taken in litigation and the fact that there might be benefits to equity holders rather than creditors could have been anticipated as some degree of antagonism between parties can be expected in any bankruptcy proceeding. 552 F.3d at 235. The fact that the proceedings were unusually prolonged and that the Riker Firm was an obstacle to the settlement were both also not determinative. The prospect of prolonged litigation always exists. Indeed, the Riker Firm's appeal of the initial settlement showed that they were not an obstacle but a benefactor-obtaining another million dollars.

It will indeed be the rare case where something happens that could not have been anticipated at the time of the retention. Thus, where the contingent fee lawyer recovered a substantial judgment, which was promptly paid with relative ease, these factors were capable of anticipation at the time of the retention and thus the fee could not be reduced. Daniels v. Barron (In re Barron), 325 F.3d 690 (5th Cir. 2003). Indeed, in In re Merry-Go-Round Enterprises, Inc., 244 B.R. 327 (Bankr. D. Md. 2000), the court approved a $71.2 million contingency fee, estimated at nearly 20 times the attorneys' hourly rates, because a high settlement, though viewed as highly unlikely at the time the retention was approved, was not wholly unanticipated.

On the other hand, in Gibbs & Bruns LLP v. Coho Energy Inc. (In re Coho Energy Inc.), 395 F.3d 198, 205 (5th Cir. 2004), the court approved the reduction of a section 328(a) contingent fee where the attorney was subsequently fired for cause, one of several factors that could not have been anticipated at the time of the retention.

The fee agreement can be limiting on the professional as well. It has been held that a professional retained under section 328(a) was not entitled to an enhanced fee without reference to "any unforeseen events necessitating an increase in pay." Smith v. Lounsbury (In re Amberjack Interests, Inc.), 326 B.R. 379, 387 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2005).

Practice Pointers

Notwithstanding the fact that most courts of appeals do not follow the strict approach of the Ninth Circuit, best practice is that all professionals being retained under anything but an hourly rate should be careful to ensure that both the application to the court and the retention order specifically reference section 328(a). The professional should also strive to be certain that the application and order discuss the reasonableness of the proposal with as much specificity as possible, including using broad language as to the payment of the fees on the conclusion of the engagement. It would be helpful to reference examples of what is being anticipated in the application as well, such as in connection with a contingency fee, that the parties recognize that there might be a quick, large recovery which would lead to a very large hourly rate for the professional.

Conclusion

There are two, mutually exclusive methods of compensating professionals. Retentions governed by Code section 328(a) are pre-approved methodologies of paying professional fees on the basis agreed to at the time of the retention. Retentions governed by section 330 require the court to determine the reasonableness of the professional fee at the end of the matter. The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit joined with the Sixth Circuit in holding that a "totality of the circumstances" test should be applied to determine which is which in any given case.

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of retention of counsel under Code section 328(a), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ P 328.02.

For discussion of a reasonable compensation under Code section 330, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ ch. 330.

For analysis of decisions relating to case administration, click
 ■ here.

For analysis of decisions relating to corporate reorganization, click
 ■ here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

James M. Lawniczak is a partner at Calfee, Halter and Griswold LLP in Cleveland, Ohio. He concentrates his practice on corporate bankruptcy and creditors' rights, as well as commercial business and finance matters. His experience includes bankruptcy plans and related disclosure statements, cash collateral and financing orders, asset sales, executory contracts and unexpired leases, and bankruptcy litigation and appeals.

Mr. Lawniczak is a frequent author and lecturer in his field. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy, the leading national treatise on bankruptcy law. He is also the author of the bankruptcy chapters of the Matthew Bender treatises Asset Based Financing and Business Organizations with Tax Planning. He has been listed in multiple editions of Chambers USA as a Leading Lawyer for bankruptcy and restructuring and is recognized as one of the Best Lawyers in America.

Mr. Lawniczak is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, where he served as an editor of the Michigan Law Review.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

26 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Lender Liability Claims Brought by Unsecured Creditors Committees

2009 Emerging Issues 4732

Commentary on the Effectiveness of Lender Liability Claims Brought by Unsecured Creditors Committees

By Leslie Treff

December 16, 2009

SUMMARY: Recently, unsecured creditors committees have found themselves spending less time negotiating with lenders and more time in litigation challenging secured creditors' claims. Success in bringing lender liability claims against secured creditors, however, is far from guaranteed. This commentary reviews the most commonly alleged lender liability claims and evaluates their effectiveness.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Over the last ten years, changing economic conditions have required unsecured creditors committees to refocus their recovery efforts. Such committees have often found themselves spending less time negotiating with lenders and more time in litigation challenging the secured creditors' claims. Several types of lender liability claims are commonly alleged, however, it has been extremely hard to recover as the result of such claims.

Unsecured creditors committees most often seek equitable subordination and recharacterization of the lenders' claims. Additionally, common allegations are that the secured creditors aided and abetted an insider's breach of fiduciary duty, deepening a borrower's insolvency, and improvident lending.

Standing

Prior to a court even addressing an unsecured creditors committee's lender liability claims, such committee must have standing to initiate an adversary proceeding. Such committees have a qualified right to bring a derivative suit, in a very narrow set of situations. First, the trustee or the debtor-in-possession must either unreasonably fail to bring suit, or the trustee or debtor-in-possession consents to such an action. In addition, no adversary proceeding may be commenced without permission of the court, which will hinge upon on a judicial determination that such claims benefit the estate, rather than just an individual creditor. See In re Commodore Intern. Ltd., 262 F.3d 96, 46 C.B.C. 2d 1120 (2nd Cir. 2001); Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors of Cybergenics Corp. ex rel. Cybergenics Corp. v. Chinery, 330 F.3d 548 (3rd Cir. 2003); In re Automotive Professionals, Inc., 59 C.B.C.2d 1611, 389 B.R. 630 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2008).

In an attempt to circumvent the requirement of court permission, committees have sought to use Bankruptcy Code section 510(c) to classify their equitable subordination claim as "direct," rather than "derivative." Thus far, however, such attempts have been unsuccessful and no courts have allowed direct standing. However, every circuit but one, has allowed an individual creditor to bring a direct action under Code section 510(c) because that individual asserts a particular harm, a creditors committee's interest is closer to that of the debtor-in-possession and, therefore, does not assert a particular harm. See In re Applied Theory Corp., 493 F.3d 82, 58 C.B.C.2d 351 (2nd Cir. 2007); In re Andrews, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 1052 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2009); In re Franklin Indus. Complex, Inc., 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3004 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 2007).

Therefore, unsecured creditors committees must seek court permission prior to alleging lender liability claims.

Equitable Subordination

One of the most widely sought lender liability claims is equitable subordination. An attempt to offset an inequality of claim position, equitable subordination is codified in Code section 510(c). See Collier on Bankruptcy, 510.05[1] (Matthew Bender). The doctrine allows for reordering of claims, but does not provide a vehicle for disallowance. Applicable mostly to insiders, those with a fiduciary duty to the debtor, and those in control of the debtor, equitable subordination is remedial, not penal, and is used only sparingly by the court. See Citicorp Venture Capital, Ltd. v. Committee of Creditors Holding Unsecured Claims, 323 F.3d 228 (3rd Cir. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 825, 124 S. Ct. 178, 157 L. Ed.2d 46.

Courts look for three conditions to order equitable subordination. See In Matter of Mobile Steel Co., 563 F.2d 692 (5th Cir. 1977); In re Lazar, 83 F.3d 306, 35 C.B.C.2d 1259 (9th Cir.1996). The secured creditor first must have been involved in "inequitable conduct," which has been held to include deceptive undercapitalization, as well as other "suspicious inequitable behavior." See Matter of Lifschultz Fast Freight, 132 F.3d 339, 32 C.B.C.2d 97 (7th Cir. 1997). As respects insiders, actual misconduct is not required, but for general creditors, the standard is much higher. Some courts have held that gross misconduct and egregious behavior must be shown, which includes fraud, misrepresentation, over-reaching, and/or spoliation. See In re Hedged-Investments Associates, Inc., 380 F.3d 1292 (10th Cir. 2004).

But others have embraced a more expanded definition of "inequitable conduct," requiring only that the creditor breach "an existing, legally recognized duty arising under contract, tort or other area of law." In commercial cases, that has meant a showing of "a substantial breach of contract and advantage-taking by the creditor." If there is no contract, however, the creditors committee need only show that there was conduct similar to fraud that justifies the intervention of equity. This can include pursuing one's legal rights in such a manner that the tactics harm the estate by causing it to incur excessive fees, or where one claimant's conduct may have been the direct or indirect cause for the other [creditors] having changed their positions. See In re Giorgio, 862 F.2d 933 (1st Cir. 1988); Matter of Cajun Elec. Power Co-op., Inc., 119 F.3d 349 (5th Cir. 1997); In re Racing Services, Inc., 571 F.3d 729 (8th Cir. 2009); In re First Alliance Mortg. Co., 471 F.3d 977 (9th Cir. 2006); In re Winstar Communications, Inc., 554 F.3d 382 (3rd Cir. 2009); In re 80 Nassau Associates, 31 C.B.C.2d 620, 169 B.R. 832 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1994).

In addition to "inequitable conduct," that misconduct "must have resulted in injury to the creditors of the bankrupt or conferred an unfair advantage on the claimant." Therefore, courts have held that equitable subordination is limited by the extent of the injury. See In re SI Restructuring, Inc., 532 F.3d 355, 59 C.B.C.2d 1723 (5th Cir. 2008); In re Kreisler, 546 F.3d 863 (7th Cir. 2008); In re Marketxt Holdings Corp., 361 B.R. 369 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007). In other words, a claim is only to be subordinated up to the amount of harm the inequitable conduct has done to the debtor or other creditors. Such harm must exist as the result of the secured creditors' misconduct, not because of the lender's status. Finally, the equitable subordination of the claim must not be inconsistent with the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code.

This is a very high standard for unsecured creditors committees to meet, and although it is always possible that a court will order a secured claim subordinated, absent egregious behavior, very few courts have allowed recovery under such claims.

Recharacterization

Unlike equitable subordination, where claims are adjusted because of the behavior of the parties involved in the claim, a bankruptcy court considering recharacterization examines the substance of the transaction. In recharacterization, a court recognizes the existence of a relationship between the debtor and the claimant, but, based upon the transaction between the parties, determines that the relationship is one between equity owners rather than that of a debtor and creditor. See In re Official Committee of Unsecured For Dornier Aviation (North America), Inc., 453 F.3d 225 (4th Cir. 2006). The court's inquiry seeks to discern whether the claim is truly a loan or is instead a capital contribution.

Many courts have looked to the "necessary or appropriate" clause of Code Section 105(a) for their authority to recharacterize claims. The courts that recognize recharacterization see it as necessary for the application of Code Section 726's system of prioritization of claims, where contributions to capital receive a lower priority than loans. At least one other court has held, however, that held Code Section 510's framework for equitable subordination already exists and that any attempt to use Code Section 105(a) to recharacterize a claim is an attempt to circumvent that framework. See In re Airadigm Communications, Inc., 376 B.R. 903 (Bankr. W.D. Wis. 2007), aff'd, 392 B.R. 392 (W.D. Wis. 2008); In re Pacific Exp., Inc., 69 B.R. 112, 16 C.B.C.2d 286 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1986).

If a creditors committee can get past the authority issue, courts then look at a list of factors to determine whether or not a claim should be recharacterized. Every transaction is looked at separately and in context, and a multi-factored test is applied to determine whether the parties "called an instrument one thing when in fact they intended it as something else." The factors are used to determine the intent of the parties at the time of the transaction. If it is clear that the transaction is a loan, both on the face of the loan documents and in the fact that the debtor was repaying it, attempts at recharacterization will not succeed. See In re SubMicron Systems Corp., 432 F.3d 448, 55 C.B.C.2d 1077 (3rd Cir. 2006); In re Hedged-Inv. Assocs., Inc., 380 F.3d 1292 (10th Cir. 2004); In re AutoStyle Plastics, Inc., 269 F.3d 726 (6th Cir. 2001); In re N & D Prop., Inc., 799 F.2d 726 (11th Cir. 1986).

Breach of Fiduciary Duty and Aiding and Abetting

Committee claims of breach of fiduciary duty or aiding and abetting an insider to breach their fiduciary duty seek monetary damages for interference with the affairs of the corporation prior to the bankruptcy filing. Courts hearing them rely on state law definitions to determine whether such allegations will be successful.

Ordinarily, lenders are not fiduciaries of borrowers. However, if the lender exerts substantial control over the borrower, a fiduciary duty may arise. See In re Fedders North America, Inc., 405 B.R. 527 (Bankr. D. Del. 2009); In re Adelphia Communications Corp., 365 B.R. 24 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007). Such control can be demonstrated when a lender was involved in the actual day-to-day management and operations of the borrower, or had the ability to compel the borrower to engage in unusual transactions. A creditors committee is well served to look to the state law at issue prior to making this claim and tailoring the allegations to the applicable state law. Questions have arisen as to whether there is a fiduciary duty on the part of a lender who knows that the borrower is near bankruptcy. Several cases have rejected this theory, and it is likely that such claims will be successful for creditor's committees outside those jurisdictions that have already ruled on this issue. See RSL Communs. PLC v. Bildirici, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72691 (S.D.N.Y. 2009); North American Catholic Educational Programming Foundation, Inc. v. Gheewalla, 930 A.2d 92 (Del. Sup. Ct. 2007).

Although successful prosecution of fiduciary duty claims is rare, in some states, alleging that the secured lender aided and abetted an insider breach their fiduciary duty has been more fruitful. Some states do not recognize such a cause of action, but in those that do, the creditors committee must show that a fiduciary relationship existed and that the fiduciary duty was breached. See Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors of PSA, Inc. v. Edwards, 437 F.3d 1145 (11th Cir. 2006). In addition, the committee must show that the lender, who was not a fiduciary, knowingly participated in a breach, and that damages to the unsecured creditors resulted from the concerted action of the fiduciary and the secured creditor. See In re Fedders North America, Inc., 405 B.R. 527 (Bankr. D. Del. 2009); In re Norvergence, Inc., 405 B.R. 709 (Bankr. D. N.J. 2009); In re The Brown Schools, 386 B.R. 37 (Bankr. D. Del. 2008).

Secured lenders have attempted to defend against aiding and abetting claims by asserting that recovery in such instances would violate the doctrine of in pari dilecto, in that the creditors committee, standing in the shoes of the debtor, is at equal fault, and of unclean hands. However, the doctrine, used to bar claims by plaintiffs who participate in the conduct giving rise to the claim, has generally not been applied to aiding and abetting claims where fiduciaries are found to have been acting outside the scope of their employment or to have been engaged in self-dealing. In such instances, the misconduct of a corporation's fiduciaries will not be imputed to the corporation as such fiduciaries have an interest adverse to the corporation. See Pinter v. Dahl, 486 U.S. 622, 636, 108 S. Ct. 2063, 100 L. Ed. 2d 658 (1988); Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors of Allegheny Health, Educ. & Research Found. v. Price Waterhouse Coopers, LP, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3331 (W.D. Pa. 2007); In re James River Coal Co., 360 B.R. 139 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2007); In re Verestar, Inc., 343 B.R. 444 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006); but see Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors v. R.F. Lafferty & Co., Inc., 267 F.3d 340 (3rd Cir. 2001).

Deepening Insolvency and Improvident Lending

Claims for deepening insolvency and improvident lending rely on state law, and both of these types of claims have been increasingly rejected by the courts. See In re CitX Corp., 448 F.3d 672 (3d Cir. 2006); In re SI Restructuring, Inc., 532 F.3d 355, 59 C.B.C. 2d 1723 (5th Cir. Jun 20, 2008); In re Fedders North America, Inc., 405 B.R. 527 (Bankr. D. Del. 2009); In re Propex Inc., 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 629 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2009); In Liquidating Trustee of the Amcast Unsecured Creditor Liquidating Trust v. Baker (In re Amcast Indus. Corp.), 365 B.R. 91 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2007); Limo v. Buerger (In re Del-Met Corp.), 322 B.R. 781, 813 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 2005). But, at least one court has held that improvident lending would be acceptable in cases where there is a duty of care in lending, and the lender had knowledge of the inadequacy of consideration received by the Debtor. Although not likely to be effective, it would behoove creditors committees to investigate the viability of these claim in the appropriate jurisdiction. See In re OODC, LLC, 321 B.R. 128 (Bankr. D. Del. 2005).

Conclusion

While many other possible lender liability claims exist, this review of the major claims indicates the difficulty committees face when attempting to maximum recovery for unsecured creditors. Most claims put forth by such creditors' committees are increasingly unsuccessful, unless the secured creditors have engaged in egregious behaviors or the transaction itself was put together in such a way as to present a fairly obvious conclusion that it was an equity contribution rather than a loan. Courts will continue to clarify the situations in which such claims will be allowed over the next few years, but if the trend continues, committees will not be very successful in pursuing recovery in this manner.

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion of injunctions under Bankruptcy Code section 510(c), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ " 510.05

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the
 ■ Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the
 ■ bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Ms. Treff has been practicing commercial law in New York for 23 years. A specialist in the areas of debtor/creditor law, bankruptcy, and insurance coverage litigation, she is currently a senior court attorney at the Supreme Court, New York County, Civil Branch. Ms. Treff has held committee chairmanships at both the Bar Association of the City of New York and New York County Lawyer's Association, and is a regular contributor to Lexis Nexis/Matthew Bender bankruptcy and debtor-creditor law treatises.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

27 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Braucher on Schubert v. Lucent Techs. (In re Winstar Communications, Inc.)

2009 Emerging Issues 4691

Anne Braucher on Schubert v. Lucent Techs. (In re Winstar Communications, Inc.), 554 F.3d 382 (3rd Cir. 2009): A Corporate Creditor is a Non-statutory Insider Subject to the One-year Preference Reach Back Period

By Anne Braucher

December 7, 2009

SUMMARY: Common sense dictates that a transaction is not at arms length when one of the transacting parties is coerced into purchasing inventory it does not need, does not have the cash to finance the purchase, and is forced out compliance with financial covenants by the purchase. So the Third Circuit held in the recent Winstar decision. This commentary discusses the import of this important decision.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has ruled that a corporate creditor is a non-statutory insider for purposes of a preference determination because the creditor engaged in coercive practices and forced one-sided transactions that were not in the best interests of the debtor. The decision, Schubert v. Lucent Techs. (In re Winstar Communications, Inc.), 554 F.3d 382 (3rd Cir. 2009), confirms that a corporate entity need not have actual managerial control over a debtor in order to be considered an insider subject to the longer reach back period under 11 U.S.C. § 547(b). Instead, a non-statutory insider exerts control over a debtor by forcing transactions with the debtor that are not at arm's length.

Background

Section 547 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a trustee can avoid a preferential transfer made to a creditor between ninety days and one year before a petition was filed if the creditor was, at the time of the transfer, an insider. See 11 U.S.C. § 547(b). The Code further provides that "the term insider" includes . . . [a] (i) director of the debtor; (ii) officer of the debtor; (iii) person in control of the debtor; (iv) partnership in which the debtor is a general partner; (v) general partner of the debtor; or (vi) relative of a general partner, director, officer or person in control of the debtor." 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B). Because section 101 contains a non-exhaustive list of insiders, courts have identified an additional category called "non-statutory insiders." Non-statutory insiders include individuals and entities whose close relationships with the debtor require closer scrutiny than those who deal with the debtor at arm's length. Alan M.

Resnick & Henry J. Sommer, 2-101 Collier on Bankruptcy P 101.31 (2009).

Winstar, a provider of local and long-distance telecommunications services, and Lucent, a designer of telecommunications services and products, entered into a strategic partnership in October 1998. As a result of the partnership, Lucent funded construction of Winstar's network and Winstar became a major customer for Lucent's products and services. In May 2000, Winstar obtained a $1.15 billion revolving credit and term loan from a consortium of banks (the "Bank Facility"). Winstar used the Bank Facility proceeds to pay off its existing obligations to Lucent. At the same time, Winstar executed a new agreement with Lucent through which it received a $2 billion line of credit (the "Second Credit Agreement"). In November 2000, Siemens joined the Bank Facility and loaned Winstar $200 million (the "Siemens Loan"). Winstar used the Siemens Loan proceeds to pay $188.2 million that it owed to Lucent under the terms of the Second Credit Agreement. Winstar and its subsidiary filed chapter 11 reorganization cases on April 18, 2001.

After the cases were converted to chapter 7, the trustee attempted to recover the $188.2 million payment as a preference. Because Winstar made the payment more than ninety days prior to the date it filed its petition, the trustee had to show that Lucent was an insider in order to satisfy § 547(b). Following a long trial, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware found that Lucent was an insider and held that the $188.2 million transfer was indeed an avoidable preference. The United States District Court for the District of Delaware upheld the bankruptcy court's decision, and Lucent appealed.

The Decision

The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit upheld the lower courts' rulings. The court agreed with Lucent that a person or entity must have actual control of a creditor in order to be considered a "person in control" insider under 11 U.S.C. § 101(31). The court held, however, that an entity need not have actual control in order to be considered a non-statutory insider for two reasons. First, "[t]o hold otherwise would render meaningless Congress's decision to provide a non-exhaustive list of insiders in 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B) because the person in control' category would function as a determinative test." 554 F.3d at 396. Second, not all of the categories of insiders enumerated in 11 U.S.C. § 101(31) have actual control of debtors. Neither a relative of a general partner, director, officer, or person in control of the debtor nor a partnership in which the debtor is a general partner will have actual control of the debtor at issue. The court therefore stated that "[i]n light of these enumerated categories, we hold that it is not necessary that a non-statutory insider have actual control; rather, the question is whether there is a close relationship [between the debtor and creditor] and . . . anything other than closeness to suggest that any transactions were not conducted at arm's length." 554 F.3d at 396-7 (quoting Anstine v. Carl Zeiss Meditec AG (In re U.S. Med.), 531 F.3d 1272, 1277 (10th Cir. 2008)).

Applying this arm's length standard to the facts, the court held that Lucent was an insider because it was able to coerce Winstar into many transactions that were not in Winstar's best interests. In 2000, for example, Lucent pressured Winstar to purchase $135 million of Lucent software when less than $20 million of the software was of any value to Winstar, Winstar paid the list price rather than a lower price it was entitled to by contract, and Lucent had to fund the purchase because Winstar did not have sufficient cash. The software purchase also forced Winstar out of compliance with its financial covenants under the Second Credit Agreement and made it necessary for Winstar to obtain the Siemens Loan. In other transactions, Lucent "'forced the purchase' of its goods well before the equipment was needed and in many instances . . . never needed at all;" treated Winstar as a captive buyer for Lucent's goods;" and used Winstar as a means for Lucent to inflate its own revenue." 554 F.3d at 397. The court stated that "[s]uch one-sided transactions refute any suggestion of arm's-length dealings." Id. at 399.

The Effect of the Decision: Creditors that exert too much influence over Debtors with whom they are strategic partners may be considered non-statutory insiders and subject to preference investigations.

In the current economic climate, strategic partnerships may be appealing because entities' complementary strengths and weaknesses make the combination greater than its parts. The Third Circuit's Winstar decision should, however, be a cautionary tale for potential strategic partners. Bankruptcy courts will not accept form over substance in defining control by an insider. Even if one partner does not have actual, managerial control of the other partner, failure to execute transactions at arm's length will render one a non-statutory insider.

While it may not be possible or even desirable to create a strategic partnership of equals, it is important that each entity maintain sufficient autonomy. When structuring a strategic partnership, corporate practitioners should attempt to put measures in place so that one partner does not exert too much influence over the other. Decision-making processes should be independent and, if possible, potential transactions should comport with whatever course of dealing existed before the strategic partnership was formed.

In the Winstar case, the record was filled with evidence of coercive tactics by executives, unusual courses of dealing, accounting irregularities, and completed transactions that severely impaired the financial condition of one strategic partner and greatly improved the condition of the other. A bankruptcy practitioner concerned about his creditor client's exposure to non-statutory insider preference claims should therefore carefully examine the relationship between his client and a strategic partner debtor. Did the creditor's executives exert undue influence over the debtor's decisions? Did the creditor's course of dealing with the debtor differ greatly than it would have with another entity? Were there allegations or investigations of irregular accounting practices by the creditor? Did each strategic partner benefit from transactions executed by the pair? Failure to ask these questions may leave the creditor client surprised by a preference claim that benefits from the year-long reach back period of section 547(b).

RELATED LINKS: For more information on section 547(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, see Collier on Bankruptcy ■ 547.03.

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the
 ■ Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the
 ■ bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Anne Braucher is a principal of The Law Offices of Anne Braucher located in Alexandria, Virginia. Ms. Braucher's practice focuses on creditors' rights, family law, and general commercial litigation. Prior to founding her own firm, Ms. Braucher spent 5 years as an associate in the Litigation and Bankruptcy Departments of DLA Piper LLP (US). From 2003 to 2004, Ms. Braucher clerked for Chief Judge Douglas O. Tice, Jr. of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Virginia. Ms. Braucher received a B.A. from Oberlin College in 1998 and a J.D. from the American University Washington College of Law, where she was Managing Editor of The American University International Law Review. Ms. Braucher is a member of the DC Bar Lawyers Assistance Program Committee and the DC Volunteer Lawyers Project.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

28 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on Sternberg v. Johnston

2009 Emerging Issues 4661

S. Andrew Jurs on Sternberg v. Johnston, 582 F.3d 1114 (9th Cir. Oct. 1, 2009)

By S. Andrew Jurs

December 1, 2009

SUMMARY: In this Emerging Issues Analysis, the author looks at a decision from the Ninth Circuit that effectively creates a circuit split on the issue of whether attorney's fees are available not only for remedying a stay violation but also for the efforts in collecting damages for the violation. The Ninth Circuit concluded that once the stay has been remedied, the debtor is responsible for fees to continue the prosecution of the violating party.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The Ninth Circuit Creates a Split of Authority Among the Circuits by Ruling That a Debtor Enforcing the Automatic Stay Can Recover as Actual Damages Only Those Attorney's Fees Related to Enforcing the Stay, Not the Fees Incurred in the Adversary Proceeding to Collect Damages.

In Sternberg v. Johnston, 582 F.3d 1114, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 21532 (9th Cir. Oct. 1, 2009), the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit was faced with two issues arising from an attorney's alleged violation of the bankruptcy automatic stay under 11 U.S.C. § 362 by pursuing a state court action on behalf of his client. The Ninth Circuit first considered whether an attorney has an affirmative duty to educate a state court on the extent of the bankruptcy stay, even if it is to the detriment of his client. Second, the court had to determine the quantum of damages for such a violation and decide whether such damages could include the attorney's fees incurred in prosecuting the action against the violating party.

Facts and Procedural History

In 1996, Logan Johnston ("Debtor") divorced Paula Parker and agreed to pay spousal maintenance, which obligation was incorporated in a state court order. Almost five years later, in 2001, Parker, through her attorney, Melvin Sternberg, returned to the state court seeking an order finding the Debtor in contempt for nonpayment of spousal support. Although the Debtor was himself an attorney, he obtained legal counsel for purposes of filing bankruptcy to contest the payment of this support.

On May 14, 2001, the Debtor filed a chapter 11 bankruptcy petition, but his bankruptcy counsel did not file a notice of bankruptcy in the state court support proceeding until May 17. That same day, the state court conducted a previously scheduled hearing on Parker's motion for contempt. The Debtor represented himself at that hearing, during which he advised the state court of the bankruptcy filing. Citing statements from his bankruptcy counsel, the Debtor told the state court that his bankruptcy stayed anything regarding the property settlement, attorney's fees, and sanctions. While objecting "in the abstract to anything that would contravene the bankruptcy laws," the Debtor agreed that the state court could establish the amount of the Debtor's arrears.

Sternberg did not know if the bankruptcy filing stayed the proceedings, but he believed that the stay would not be violated if the court moved forward on the arrears, attorney's fees, and contempt determination. The state court proceeded on the issue of contempt but declined to issue sanctions until it could research its jurisdiction to do so. On July 13, 2001, the state court filed a minute order ("State Court Order") finding the Debtor in violation of the divorce decree and granting judgment for Parker in the amount of $87,525.60. Additionally, the State Court Order set a deadline of August 1, 2001, for the Debtor to pay the full amount or be jailed. The extent of the State Court Order surprised all of the parties; Sternberg and Parker had expected that the state court would conduct further proceedings before ordering the Debtor to pay a sum certain.

The Debtor quickly filed in the state court a motion to stay the judgment, but the hearing date on that motion was set for the day after the August 1 deadline to pay or be jailed. The Debtor also sent Sternberg a letter alleging that Sternberg was violating the stay and asking Sternberg to cure the violation. Furthermore, the Debtor filed a petition with the Arizona court of appeals to stay and vacate the State Court Order. Sternberg took no action in response to the Debtor's letter, and in fact had a lawyer from his firm file a brief with the Arizona court of appeals against the Debtor's petition.

Contemporaneous with his efforts in the state courts, the Debtor also filed in the bankruptcy court (1) a motion to set aside the State Court Order and (2) an adversary proceeding against Parker and Sternberg for violating the automatic stay. One day before the Debtor's deadline, the bankruptcy court conducted a hearing on the Debtor's motion and concluded that the stay had been violated. In its order vacating the State Court Order, the bankruptcy court noted that the state court could have avoided violating the stay if it had qualified the State Court Order to reflect only the amount of arrearages or had been informed of what constituted non-estate property so that the arrearages would be collected only from that property.

At a later date, the adversary proceeding against Parker and Sternberg went to trial. After the Debtor's presentation of evidence, the bankruptcy court granted directed verdict to Parker and Sternberg after concluding that neither of them committed a separate violation of the stay other than obtaining the State Court Order. The Debtor appealed, and the district court reversed the bankruptcy court on the basis that Sternberg and Parker had an obligation to remedy the violation. Before the adversary proceeding went to trial again, Parker settled with the Debtor, leaving only Sternberg to defend against the Debtor's allegations.

In March 2006, the bankruptcy court filed its decision after retrying the adversary proceeding. According to the bankruptcy court, the district court's conclusion that "Sternberg willfully violated the automatic stay" limited the issues at trial. The final result was a determination that the Debtor had been injured to the extent of $2,883.20 in lost work, $20,000 for emotional distress, and attorney's fees of $69,986.

On appeal, the district court upheld the bankruptcy court, at which point Sternberg timely filed his appeal with the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Legal Background

Immediately on the filing of a bankruptcy petition, 11 U.S.C. § 362(a) provides an automatic stay that protects against, among other things, "the commencement or continuation . . . of a judicial, administrative, or other action or proceeding against the debtor . . . ; the enforcement . . . of a judgment . . . ; any act to obtain possession of property of the estate . . . ; [and] any act to create, perfect, or enforce any lien." There is a limited exception, however, to the automatic stay; it does not prevent civil actions "for the establishment or modification of an order for domestic support obligations" or "the collection of a domestic support obligation from property that is not property of the estate." 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(2)(A)-(B).

Under Ninth Circuit precedents, the automatic stay imposes on nondebtors an affirmative duty of compliance. See California Employment Development Dep't v. Taxel (In re Del Mission Ltd.), 98 F.3d 1147, 36 C.B.C.2d 1658 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that the state's knowing retention of disputed taxes violated the automatic stay when the burden to return estate property is placed upon the possessor and not the debtor); Knupfer v. Lindblade (In re Dyer), 322 F.3d 1178 (9th Cir. 2003) (finding that postpetition recording of a deed of trust violated the stay because the creditor had an affirmative duty to remedy the violation by attempting to undo the recording process). In Eskanos & Alder, P.C. v. Leetien, 309 F.3d 1210 (9th Cir. 2002), the Ninth Circuit affirmed a bankruptcy court decision that a law firm's failure to dismiss a collection action for 23 days after learning of the bankruptcy violated the stay.

Commentary

The Ninth Circuit's holding in Sternberg is noteworthy in that it addresses two important questions for lawyers dealing with the automatic stay:

(1) To what extent can a lawyer be liable for violating the stay while pursuing matters on behalf of his client?

(2) What damages can be assessed for such a violation. In fact, in determining the standard for damages, the Ninth Circuit disagreed with the Fifth Circuit and created a split between the circuits on that issue?

Violating the Automatic Stay. In light of the affirmative duty that a creditor has to remedy any possible violation of the automatic stay, the Ninth Circuit did not struggle much with the question of whether Sternberg's conduct constituted a violation of section 362. While the appeals court did not fault Sternberg for his conduct at the first hearing or for the issuance of the over-broad state court order, "Within a reasonable time . . . , however, the law required Sternberg to take correction action." 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 21532, at *13. Instead of complying with this affirmative duty, though, Sternberg filed a brief with the Arizona court of appeals defending the entire state court order: "Sternberg's defense of the order was absolute. He did not try to parse the valid from the invalid, but instead defended the order in its entirety ." In fact, Sternberg recognized the faults with the state court order but said nothing to the appellate court because "he did not think it was his duty to practice law on [the Debtor's] behalf." Id. at *15.

The Ninth Circuit disagreed, however, and noted that Sternberg's affirmative duty to remedy the violation trumped the normal operation of the adversarial process. "At a minimum, he had a obligation to alert the state appellate court to the conflicts between the order and the automatic stay." Id. The court also rejected Sternberg's arguments that he could not be liable for willfully violating the stay because the Debtor had not specifically requested that Sternberg modify the order and that Sternberg did not try to collect on the order. According to the Ninth Circuit, the Debtor "was not required to ask Sternberg to modify the order for Sternberg's violation to be willful." Id. at *17. All that was required for liability was that Sternberg "knew of the automatic stay and [his] actions in violation of the stay were intentional." Id. at *18 (quoting Eskanos & Alder, P.C. v. Leetien, 309 F.3d 1210, 1215 (9th Cir. 2002)).

Damages for Violating the Automatic Stay. The other issue facing the Ninth Circuit was the computation of the Debtor's damages to be awarded against Sternberg. On that issue, the Ninth Circuit agreed with Sternberg and reversed the award of damages to the extent that it awarded attorney's fees for both the work associated with remedying the stay violation and the adversary proceeding in which the Debtor sought to collect damages for the stay violation.

The applicable statute, 11 U.S.C. § 362(k)(1), provides that "an individual injured by any willful violation of a stay shall recover actual damages, including costs and attorneys' fees, and, in appropriate circumstances, may recover punitive damages." This language clearly allows recovery of attorney's fees for acts necessary to prevent a stay violation. See California Employment Development Dep't v. Taxel (In re Del Mission Ltd.), 98 F.3d 1147, 1152, 36 C.B.C.2d 1658 (9th Cir. 1996) (noting that section 362(k)(1) "mandates the award of actual damages to an individual injury by any willful violation of a stay"). According to the Ninth Circuit, however, the phrase "actual damages" is ambiguous. 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 21532, at *22; see also Dawson v. Washington Mut. Bank (In re Dawson), 390 F.3d 1139, 1146 (finding that "the text of the statute" does not define "actual damages").

Some courts have resolved this ambiguity by creating a rule that "actual damages" requires an award that returns the debtor to his previolation status. For example, in Havelock v. Taxel (In re Pace), 30 C.B.C.2d 48, 159 B.R. 890, 900 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1993), vacated in part on other grounds by 67 F.3d 187 (9th Cir. 1995), the court stated that "it is well established that the attorneys' fees and costs incurred in prosecuting an adversary proceeding seeking damages arising from a violation of the automatic stay is recoverable." Similarly, the Fifth Circuit has held that "it is proper to award attorney's fees that were incurred prosecuting a section 362(k) claim." Young v. Repine (In re Repine), 536 F.3d 512, 522 (5th Cir. 2008).

The Ninth Circuit, however, goes the opposite direction by relying on the standard definition of "actual damages" as "an amount awarded to compensate for a proven injury or loss; damages that repay actual losses." Blacks' Law Dictionary 416 (8th ed. 2004). According to the appeals court, "the proven injury is the injury resulting from the stay violation itself," and that once the violation is ended, any fees incurred thereafter by a debtor would not compensate for "actual damages." 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 21532, at *22. Therefore, under the American Rule that each party bears its own fees in the absence of a fee-shifting statute, awarding fees for a subsequent adversary proceeding would be improper even if it could be argued that he will not be made whole. Id. In further support of this position, the Ninth Circuit analogizes the stay violation to several different types of lawsuits, each of which requires a plaintiff to bear his own attorney's fees to remedy the wrong, such as torts, legal malpractice suits, bad faith actions against an insurer, and abuse of process suits.

The Ninth Circuit further states that its interpretation of the phrase "actual damages" is more consistent with several of the goals of the automatic stay. First, the stay is meant to help the debtor deal with his creditors, but is not meant as a tool for the debtor to pursue his creditors, even when they violate the stay. "The stay is a shield, not a sword." Id. at *24. Second, limiting damages in this manner has the potential for reducing stay litigation. Id. at *24-25.

Conclusion

The decision in Sternberg is significant for two reasons. First, it provides further guidance as to counsel's responsibility when confronted by the automatic stay to act affirmatively to avoid violations of the stay and to correct violations of the stay. It is not a debtor's responsibility to seek the remedy, even if it means that plaintiff's counsel must act, in a sense, as the debtor's lawyer and point out the effect of the stay to state courts that may not be familiar with the stay's broad scope. Second, the decision in Sternberg creates a split between the circuits on the question of whether a debtor is entitled to recover attorney's fees expended to collect on a violation of the stay. According to the Ninth Circuit, once the stay has been remedied, the debtor is responsible for his fees to continue the prosecution of the violating party, even if it means that the debtor will not necessarily be "whole" despite receiving a judgment in his favor.

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion related to remedies for violation of the automatic stay, see generally Collier on Bankruptcy, § 362.11.

For analysis of other decisions relating to consumer bankruptcy, click here.

For analysis of other decisions relating to case administration, click here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors' rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

29 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Baldwin on New Pleading Standards for Avoidance Actions in Bankruptcy Courts

2009 Emerging Issues 4649

Gerald L. Baldwin on New Pleading Standards for Avoidance Actions in Bankruptcy Courts

By Gerald Baldwin

November 30, 2009

SUMMARY: Pleading standards in bankruptcy avoidance actions have historically been set extremely low. The standards were so low that practitioners seldom saw a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). The rules have just changed. Gerald L. Baldwin, of Frost Brown Todd LLC, in Cincinnati, discusses the new pleading standards for avoidance actions in bankruptcy courts.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Introduction. Pleading standards in bankruptcy avoidance actions have historically been set extremely low. The standards were so low that practitioners seldom saw a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). The rules have just changed.

Sue First; Ask Questions Later. For decades, standard operating procedure has dictated that a bankruptcy trustee sue everyone whom the debtor has paid in the ninety (90) days preceding the bankruptcy filing. The cause of action? Preference. Those defendants always ask their counsel "What did I do wrong?" The answer, for the most part, is "Nothing."

Trustees have justified such blanket suits by invoking the time-honored rationale that there undoubtedly were preferences in the days or months before the filing and it simply costs the bankruptcy estate too much to thoroughly investigate and make an informed decision on which payments by the debtor should be recovered. After all, trustees have little or no idea when goods and services were received by the debtor, relative to when the payments were made. Making that investigation can be time consuming and expensive. Their approach has been to print out a list of all checks issued by the debtor for ninety (90) days and sue everyone on that list. Let the defendants prove that they have defenses.

As unfair as that position may seem to payees, the law has tended to support the trustees' approach. Typical defenses to a preference action, like contemporaneous exchange, have been characterized as affirmative defenses so trustees need not concern themselves with pleading around them. See, e.g., K-Mart Corp. v. Uniden American Corp., 318 B.R. 409 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2004). See also, U.S. v. Northern Trust Co., 372 F.3d 886 (7th Cir. 2004).

Historic Liberal Pleading Standards. Traditional pleading standards imposed few impediments on counsel for the trustees. In 1957, the Supreme Court ruled that unless "it appears without a doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief," a complaint was not to be dismissed under Rule 12 of the Rules of Federal Procedure for failure to state a claim. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41 (1957). The Conley standard meant that all a trustee had to plead was that the defendant had received a transfer from the debtor within the period of time applicable to a particular form of avoidance claim. The defendant then was forced to either repay the money to the trustee or retain counsel to examine the transaction, determine whether the claim was legitimate and then contest or settle the claim.

Settlement has always been the name of the game for trustees. If 50% of the defendants settled for 50% of the payment they had received, for little or no effort by the trustee, the estate received a cash fund equal to 25% of the total of all payments made to all vendors in the ninety (90) days prior to bankruptcy. What better way to fund important bankruptcy expenses like trustee's fees and counsel fees?

Changes In Non-Bankruptcy Standards. The tide has now turned in favor of the defendants. In 2007, the Supreme Court issued its opinion in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544 (2007), holding in an antitrust case that a pleading merely stating "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. at 555. Under the Twombly standard, the plaintiff must plead "factual allegations [sufficient] to raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that all of the complaint's allegations are true." Id. In 2009, the Supreme Court made it clear that the Twombly holding extended beyond the antitrust field. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 3472.

Specific Facts Now Must Be Plead. Following Ashcroft, at least one Bankruptcy Judge has applied the higher Twombly standard to lawsuits to recover avoidable transfers. In re Care America, Inc., Case No. 06-02913-8-JRL (Bankr. E.D.N.C. July 23, 2009). The trustee filed several complaints to recover both preferential transfers pursuant to § 547 and fraudulent conveyances pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 548. Basically, the trustee merely quoted the applicable provision of the code and alleged that various transfers took place on certain dates and that they were voidable because the debtor had been insolvent when the transfers occurred. The judge held that these pleadings failed to meet the minimum requirements to survive the defendants' motions to dismiss because the trustee had not pleaded adequate.

Applies To Both §§ 547 and 548. With respect to the preference claims brought under § 547, the court found the pleadings to be defective in several respects. First, because the trustee had failed to plead the nature of the debtor's interest in the funds allegedly transferred, the pleadings failed the new standards. The funds of the debtor appear to have been held in various accounts in several names and the transfers appear to have been indirect. Next, and more importantly, the pleadings failed to allege specific facts concerning the nature and amount of the antecedent debt to the recipients. Simply pleading the conclusory statement that the transfer had been made on account of an antecedent debt was held to be insufficient. This may be the most important holding in the opinion because investigation of the age and nature of the debt paid is precisely the type of work the typical trustee strives to avoid, placing that burden on the defendants. Finally, some of the defendants were described by the pleadings as "insiders" thereby extending the look-back period from ninety days to one year. The court held that merely labeling defendants as insiders was inadequate without pleading the facts that made the defendants "insiders" under the statutory definition.

In dismissing the § 548 fraudulent transfer claims, the court followed similar logic. Because § 548 permits recovery if the debtor "received less than reasonably equivalent value," the trustee must allege precisely what consideration was transferred between the parties and why that exchange constituted something other than equivalent value. Where cash is involved, there is no valuation problem. However, fraudulent transfers often involve property other than cash and valuation of non-cash property would now seem to be a prerequisite to the assertion of a fraudulent transfer claim.

Best Practices Today. The practice point is clear. A trustee bringing avoidance claims is now required to conduct sufficient factual investigation to enable him/her to plead facts that support the statutory basis for the avoidance claims. Pleading legal conclusions alone is inadequate. The burden is on the trustee as plaintiff to determine which pre-petition transfers are actually vulnerable under the code. Trustees no longer can require recipients of legitimate payments to establish the background facts in order to avoid the expense of defending the payments they have received.

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion of Bankruptcy Code sections 547 and 548, see Collier on Bankruptcy,

- 547.01;
- 548.01

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the
■ Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the
■ bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Gerald L. Baldwin is a Member of the law firm of Frost Brown Todd LLC, working in the Cincinnati, Ohio, office. He received his A.B. degree in 1966 from Thomas More College and his J.D. degree in 1969 from the University of Cincinnati. Mr. Baldwin has four decades of experience as a commercial litigator representing both lenders and borrowers in matters involving finance and insolvency. He has served as Chair of the Banking Commercial and Bankruptcy Committee of the Ohio Bar Association. He currently serves as head of the Banking Litigation Group of Frost Brown Todd.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

30 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Strochak and Yates on United States v. Apex Oil Co., Inc.

2009 Emerging Issues 4637

Adam Strochak and Erin Yates on United States v. Apex Oil Co., Inc.: Seventh Circuit Holds that Reorganized Debtors Must Comply with a RCRA Cleanup Order Because the Mandatory Cleanup Injunction Is Not a "Claim" Discharged in a Prior Chapter 11 Bankruptcy

By Adam Strochak and Erin Yates

November 25, 2009

SUMMARY: A RCRA cleanup order is not dischargeable in bankruptcy because the government cannot demand payment of cleanup costs in lieu of compliance with the order, says the Seventh Circuit in Apex Oil. In so holding, the court rejected the "expenditure test," explaining that discharge must be limited to claims that give rise to a right to payment because the equitable decree cannot be executed. This commentary discusses this important decision.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Seventh Circuit Holds that Reorganized Debtors Must Comply with a RCRA Cleanup Order Because the Mandatory Cleanup Injunction Is Not a "Claim" Discharged in a Prior Chapter 11 Bankruptcy

The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has provided some clarification on an issue at the intersection of environmental and bankruptcy law, holding that the obligation to comply with a Resource Conservation and Recovery Act ("RCRA") cleanup order was not a "claim" discharged in a prior chapter 11 bankruptcy. The decision, United States v. Apex Oil Co., Inc. 579 F.3d 734 (7th Cir. 2009), effectively required Apex Oil Company ("Apex Oil"), the successor to the reorganized debtor, to pay a contractor to perform the cleanup, at an estimated cost of $150 million, of contamination caused by the predecessor. The Seventh Circuit grappled with the difficult question of whether a mandatory cleanup injunction falls within the broad definition of "claim" in the bankruptcy laws. Under the Bankruptcy Code, only obligations that are "claims" are subject to payment and discharge when a plan of reorganization is confirmed by the bankruptcy court. See 11 U.S.C. § 1141(d). Non-claim obligations pass through the bankruptcy unaffected and continue to be retained as liabilities of the reorganized debtor. Finding that RCRA provides no cause of action for recovery of cleanup costs or payment of damages, only a right of injunctive relief, the Seventh Circuit held that the obligation under the cleanup order was not a "claim" for bankruptcy purposes and therefore passed through the prior bankruptcy.

Background. The Apex Oil case involves an action by the federal government against an oil refining company that reorganized under chapter 11 in the late 1980s. Fifteen years after the company's plan of reorganization was confirmed, the United States sued Apex Oil, seeking an injunction under section 7003(a) of RCRA, 42 U.S.C. § 6973(a), to compel Apex Oil to cleanup groundwater contamination resulting from the prepetition operations of Apex Oil's corporate predecessors at a site in Hartford, Illinois. In 2008, the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois held that Apex Oil was liable for the hydrocarbon plume at the Hartford site and ordered the company to abate the contamination and all conditions associated with it. See United States v. Apex Oil Co., Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59973 (S.D. Ill. July 28, 2008). Apex Oil appealed to the Seventh Circuit, arguing that the government's claim had been discharged in the bankruptcy 15 years earlier.

The Seventh Circuit's Analysis. The Court of Appeals rejected Apex Oil's argument and held that the obligation to perform a mandatory cleanup injunction under RCRA was not a "claim" discharged in Apex Oil's bankruptcy, even though the reorganized debtor could comply only by hiring a contractor to perform the cleanup at an estimated cost of $150 million. The Seventh Circuit reasoned that, because section 7003(a) of RCRA only provided the government with a right to injunctive relief, and not a right to cost recovery, the government's right to an injunction under the statute was not convertible into a right to payment. 579 F.3d at 736. Judge Posner, writing for the court, explained that the definition of a "claim" in section 101(5)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 101(5)(B) includes "a right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance" only if the breach "gives rise to a right to payment." According to the court, only two types of injunctions give rise to an alternate right of payment: (1) injunctions that are no longer capable of performance, such as an injunction to do something that is no longer possible and (2) injunctions that actually call for the payment of money, such as restitution orders. Id. at 735-36. Because the cleanup was capable of being performed, and because there is no authority under RCRA to require the payment of money in lieu of performance of a cleanup injunction, breach of the cleanup injunction did not give rise to a "right of payment" and therefore was not a "claim" discharged in the prior bankruptcy. The court rejected Apex Oil's argument that it could comply only by spending money, and therefore the injunction did give rise to a right of payment, reasoning that "virtually all equitable decrees" impose costs of the defendant. Id. at 738.

A Split Among the Circuits. By rejecting the argument that an injunction is a dischargeable "claim" if the debtor must spend money to comply, the Seventh Circuit split from the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals' decision in United States v. Whizco, Inc. that an injunction directing a mine operator to reclaim surface mines, which required the operator to purchase equipment in order to comply, was a dischargeable "claim." Compare 579 F.3d at 737-38 with United States v. Whizco, Inc., 841 F.2d 147, 150-51 (6th Cir. 1988). With its ruling in Apex Oil, however, the Seventh Circuit joined the Third Circuit Court of Appeals in holding that injunctions which require the expenditure of money to comply are not automatically dischargeable claims in bankruptcy. In In re Torwico Electronics, Inc., 8 F.3d 146 (3d Cir. 1993), the Third Circuit Court of Appeals held that an administrative order issued pursuant to New Jersey's Industrial Site Recovery Act, which required the debtor to clean up releases of hazardous substances from a former manufacturing facility, was not a dischargeable "claim" under the Bankruptcy Code, even though the debtor did not own the property in question and had ceased operations at the site four years prior to filing for bankruptcy.

Although the Seventh Circuit reached a similar conclusion to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals in Torwico, the court reached its decision by a different analytical approach. The Torwico court reasoned that the New Jersey's cleanup order was neither seeking money nor asserting a right to payment, but merely requiring the debtor to comply with the state's environmental laws. Hence, the court concluded that the state's cleanup order did not amount to a dischargeable "claim" in bankruptcy. The Torwico court also distinguished the United States Supreme Court's holding in Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274 (1985)—that a debtor's obligation under a prepetition court order to cleanup a hazardous waste disposal site was a "claim" in a chapter 7 bankruptcy case—on the basis that it applies only to situations where the state itself is seeking money directly from the debtor. See 8 F.3d at 150. Consequently, there continues to be uncertainty in the federal courts as to when mandatory injunctions create dischargeable claims in bankruptcy and the outcome of any particular case is highly dependent on both the specific environmental statute at issue and the federal judicial circuit in which the case is heard.

Unanswered Questions After Apex Oil. One issue that the Apex Oil court left unanswered is how are injunctions treated if they arise under a statute that provides the government with an alternative right to cost recovery, like the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act ("CERCLA"), 42 U.S.C. §§ 9601-9675. The analysis in Apex Oil relies, in part, on the fact that the Supreme Court previously had concluded that RCRA does create a cause of action for recovery of cleanup costs. Therefore, the Apex Oil decision suggests that CERCLA injunctions may be treated as "claims" and subject to discharge in bankruptcy because that statute expressly gives the government or private parties the right to sue for recovery of cleanup costs. The Seventh Circuit, however, also based its decision on the determination that the definition of "claim" only includes those equitable remedies which give "rise to a right to payment because the equitable decree cannot be executed." See 579 F.3d at 738. Contrary to the first part of the court's analysis, this suggests that a CERCLA injunction would not be treated as a "claim" if it is capable of execution. While Apex Oil provides some clarity on the narrow issue of whether a RCRA cleanup injunction may be discharged in bankruptcy, the law remains murky with respect to obligations under other environmental laws Effect of the Decision. The bankruptcy treatment of environmental cleanup obligations will be an increasingly important issue as the bankruptcy cases spawned by the 2008-09 financial crisis and recession work their way through courts. Dozens of manufacturing companies, real estate assets and other businesses with significant environmental cleanup liabilities currently are in bankruptcy. If federal courts follow Apex Oil, cleanup orders under RCRA will survive chapter 11 reorganization and debtors may find themselves emerging from chapter 11 with substantial environmental liabilities for historic operations unaffected by the bankruptcy. Environmental regulators and private parties seeking to impose environmental liabilities on debtors at least those in the Seventh Circuit may find that asserting only a RCRA claim for injunctive relief will maximize the likelihood of avoiding the discharge of their rights in bankruptcy, effectively obtaining a priority over the claims of competing creditors for limited assets. The Apex Oil decision thus may prompt the government to exercise its authority under section 7003 of RCRA more frequently than it has in the past and also may encourage private parties to assert rights under section 7002 of RCRA. As a practical matter, however, the Apex Oil decision is not likely to result in a large-scale change in government enforcement efforts. While proceeding under RCRA may provide some advantages in the bankruptcy context, other statutes like CERCLA provide more robust enforcement mechanisms. In cases where the government targets scores or hundreds of potentially responsible parties, as happens in many large-scale hazardous substance cleanups, the institutional preference of state and federal environmental authorities to proceed under CERCLA is not likely to change.

RELATED LINKS: For more discussion on the treatment of judicial and administrative cleanup orders in bankruptcy, see

- Collier Monograph: Environmental Issues in Bankruptcy Cases, § 6.

For information on environmental issues in bankruptcy, see - Environmental Law in Real Estate and Business Transactions (Matthew Bender).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Adam Stochak is a partner in the Washington, D.C. office of Weil, Gotshal & Manges. He has practiced with the firm since 1993 and concentrates in corporate restructuring, representing both debtors and creditors in restructuring matters both in and out of court. Mr. Stochak's practice focuses on litigation of high stakes disputes involving financial reorganization, bankruptcy and insolvency. He also has represented clients in a wide variety of industries on environmental, insurance coverage, contract disputes and commercial litigation matters.

In chapter 11 cases, Mr. Stochak has represented debtors from diverse industries, including real estate, banking, manufacturing, energy, telecommunications, computers, steel, healthcare, building products and retail sales. Major debtor representations include General Growth Properties, Washington Mutual, Lexington Precision, WorldCom, Silicon Graphics, Global Crossing, Genesis Health Ventures, Sun Healthcare, Enron, Eagle-Picher Industries, Republic Technologies, Brothers Gourmet Coffee and Metallurg. Mr. Stochak also has represented creditors, official committees, and ad hoc committees in both out-of-court workouts and court-supervised restructurings.

Mr. Stochak is a co-author, with David R. Berz, Stanley M. Spracker and Annemargaret Connolly, of a three-volume treatise entitled Environmental Law in Real Estate and Business Transactions, which focuses on the implications of environmental law in transactional and restructuring matters. He also has written for a variety of publications on current topics in restructuring, environmental law and insurance coverage.

Mr. Stochak received his undergraduate degree, with honors, from the University of Vermont. He received his J.D. degree, with honors, from the George Washington University Law School.

Erin K. Yates is an associate in the Washington, D.C., office of Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP. She is a member of the firm's Environmental practice group, focusing on the environmental aspects of business transactions. Ms. Yates received her Bachelor of Arts in Economics from St. Lawrence University and her Master of Studies in Environmental Law and J.D. degrees from Vermont Law School.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

31 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Weisz on Eligibility Requirements for High Income Earners in Bankruptcy

2009 Emerging Issues 4638

Richard L. Weisz on Eligibility Requirements for High Income Earners in Bankruptcy Under 11 U.S.C. § 109: When High Earners Go Bust

By Richard Weisz

November 25, 2009

SUMMARY: In this Emerging Issues Analysis, Richard L. Weisz, a partner with Hodgson Russ LLP, examines the bankruptcy choices for high income earners and how these choices have been significantly impacted by the adoption of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (BAPCPA).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: When a high income earner, or recently high income earner, runs into financial problems, their eligibility to file in bankruptcy, and their choices of what kind of bankruptcy to file, have been significantly impacted by the adoption of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA"). Contained within BAPCPA is the so-called means test (11 U.S.C. §707(b)(2)). If the debtor's Current Monthly Income (CMI) is higher than a detailed statutory formula, which is measured by income over the six (6) months prior to the last date of the calendar month preceding the filing of the bankruptcy petition (11 U.S.C. §101(10)(A)), the debtor is not eligible for a chapter 7 liquidation bankruptcy. This generally bars high income earners from filing in chapter 7 unless they are a family farmer, which, as defined, limits their aggregate debt to $3,544,525.00 and requires that not less than 50% of the debt arises out of farming operations (See U.S.C. §101(18)(A)).

The high income earner therefore is usually left with a choice of chapter 13, adjustment of debt of income of individuals, or chapter 11, the basic business reorganization procedures available to individuals (subject to narrow exceptions). In either event, they must take a credit counseling course within six (6) months of the bankruptcy filing and file the certificate with their bankruptcy petition like all consumer debtors (See 11 U.S.C. §109(h)). Generally, then, the high income debtor is left struggling to fit into the more consumer-friendly chapter 13 proceeding as opposed to being required to meet the considerable requirements of the business-oriented chapter 11 proceeding.

The eligibility to file in chapter 13 is determined by debt ceilings that adjust from time to time to reflect inflation. Under current 11 U.S.C. §109(3)

"Only an individual with regular income that owes, on the date of the filing of the petition, non-contingent, liquidated unsecured debt of less than $336,900.00 and non-contingent, liquidated secured debt of less than $1,010,650.00 n1, or an individual with regular income and such individual's spouse, except a stockbroker or commodity broker"

For purposes of the eligibility requirements, the terms "liquidated," "contingent," and "disputed" have distinctive meanings. Unfortunately, the legislative history of the origins of chapter 13 eligibility is silent as to the phrase "non-contingent, liquidated." See In re Crescenzi, 53 B.R. 374 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1985). Courts have therefore approached eligibility with some inconsistent results.

A debt is defined as a liability on a claim (11 U.S.C. §101(12)), a definition that the United States Supreme Court found sufficient to treat debt and claims as equivalent. See Pennsylvania Dept. of Welfare v. Davenport, 495 U.S. 552, 558, 110 S. Ct. 2126 (1990). Under contract law, an unmatured or contingent claim refers to obligations that will become due upon the happening of a future event that was within the actual or presumed contemplation of the parties at the time the original relationship was created. See In re Water Valley Finishing, Inc., 139 F.3d 325 (2nd Cir. 1998); In re Chateaugay, 944 F.2d 997 at 1004 (2nd Cir. 1991). Whether a debt is liquidated depends upon whether it is subject to a ready determination and precision in calculating the amount due. In re Reader, 274 B.R. 893 (Bankr. D. Co. 2002) and cases cited therein. A debt is non-contingent when all events giving rise to liability occurred prior to the debtor's filing for bankruptcy. In re Mazzeo, 131 F.3d 295, 303 (2nd Cir. 1997).

Secured debt has been treated as the face amount of any debt which is secured, to any extent, by collateral. In re Belknap, supra; In re Gorman, 58 B.R. 372 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1985). However, it has also more specifically held that "secured debts" as referenced in § 109(e) refer only to those debts secured by property of the estate and, therefore, guaranties of secured debt are unsecured debt. See, for example, Fuson, 404 B.R. 872 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2008).

Merely because the debtor disputes a debt does not render the debt contingent or unliquidated. See, for example, In re Murphy, 374 B.R. 73 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 2007); In re Crescenzi, 69 B.R. 64, 65 (S.D.N.Y. 1986). Filing bankruptcy before judgments can be entered on a money claim does not by itself make the claim contingent or unliquidated, even if the debtor disputes the claim. In re Jordan, 166 B.R. 201 (Bankr. D. Me. 1994).

Tort claims not reduced to judgment and where liability has not been conceded by the debtor prepetition or in the schedules do not count in determining eligibility. See In re Star, 2008 W.L. 324125 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2008); But see In re Pearson, 773 F.2d 751 (6th Cir. 1985), which indicates eligibility should be determined based on schedules if completed in good faith, and In re Nowakowski, 404 B.R. 789 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2009), and references therein. Therefore, if the debtor lists a liability arising from the tort without indicating that it is contingent or unmatured, eligibility in chapter 13 may be denied.

A guaranty is a secondary liability usually thought of as contingent. Yet it has been held in New York that when the true state of affairs indicates that the guarantor will ultimately be responsible for the debt, the amount of the guaranty liability can be used to bar eligibility in chapter 13. See, for example, In re Belknap, 174 B.R. 182 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1994). However, under New York State foreclosure law, the liability of any guarantor cannot be determined until the time of the foreclosure sale (See RPAPL 1371). Therefore, if a foreclosure has been started, the debtor may be able to file in chapter 13 if other debts do not make him or her ineligible.

It is now incumbent on both debtor's and creditor's attorneys to closely examine individual bankruptcy filings for eligibility requirements under 11 U.S.C. § 109 since the ultimate selection of the chapter under which the bankruptcy is filed in will determine the process and standard under which the debts may be discharged and the debtor allowed to keep assets.

n1 These limits will remain in effect until April 1, 2010 when new amounts will be determined [11 U.S.C. §104(a)].

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Richard L. Weisz

518.465.2333

rweisz@hodgsonruss.com

Partner

Bankruptcy & Commercial Litigation Practice Group

Business Litigation Practice Group

Education Practice Group

Albany Office

Areas of Practice: Bankruptcy, Commercial Litigation, Creditors' Rights and Foreclosure, Landlord and Tenant (Commercial), Corporate Dissolution, Unfair Competition and Trade Secret Litigation

Education: B.S., Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute

J.D., Albany Law School of Union University

Professional Experience: Mr. Weisz has represented debtors, creditors, and creditors' committees in Chapter 11 business reorganization proceedings. He has conducted trials on business valuation and corporate dissolutions, contested foreclosure proceedings, trade secret and unfair competition, administrative hearings, wrongful eviction, antitrust, and breach of contract. He has argued appeals to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals and the Appellate Division of the New York State Supreme Court.

Presentations/Articles: "Breakup of Business Partnership, Like Divorce, is Hard Thing to Do," Capital District Business Review, October 30, 2000; "The Biblical Basis for Bankruptcy," Capital Region Bankruptcy Bar Association Newsletter

Bar Associations: Member, Capital District Bankruptcy Bar Association (founding member and past president, 1995-1996), Albany County Bar Association; New York State Bar Association

Community Activities: Member, school board, Guilderland Central School District; past president, Congregation Ohav Shalom; coach, Guilderland Soccer Club

Honors/Awards: Sigma Pi Sigma, National Physics Honor Society; Justinian Society, Albany Law School of Union University

Admitted to Practice: New York; United States District Courts for the Northern, Southern, Eastern, and Western Districts of New York; United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit; United States Supreme Court; United States Tax Court

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

32 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on In re Shankman, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 2600 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2009)

2009 Emerging Issues 4525

S. Andrew Jurs on Cage v. Shankman (In re Shankman), 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 2600 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Sept. 1, 2009)

By S. Andrew Jurs

November 1, 2009

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis looks at a court's decision to allow a ch. 7 trustee to amend his complaint objecting to discharge to allege additional grounds for the denial, grounds that occurred after the 60-day deadline for objection. In doing so, the court adopted an "extended version" of the approach of the Second and Ninth Circuits. The decision is noteworthy precisely because the court did not leap immediately to an equitable solution.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Chapter 7 Trustee Allowed to Amend Complaint Objecting to Discharge in Order to Allege Additional Grounds That Occurred after the Deadline for Filing the Complaint

In Cage v. Shankman (In re Shankman), 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 2600 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Sept. 1, 2009), the bankruptcy court was called upon to determine whether a chapter 7 trustee could amend a complaint objecting to the debtor's discharge to include allegations regarding conduct that occurred after the deadline to file an objection to discharge had passed.

Facts and Procedural History

Because the issue confronting the court was a purely procedural matter, the underlying facts of the debtor's chapter 7 case need little elaboration. It is undisputed that the chapter 7 trustee (the "trustee") timely filed an adversary proceeding (the "Discharge Proceeding") in which the trustee objected to debtor's discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 727(a). In the Discharge Proceeding, the trustee alleged that the debtor:

- (1) failed to turn over documents relating to investments in closely-held enterprises that constituted assets of the estate;
- (2) failed to provide tax returns;
- (3) failed to provide documentation relating to his recent divorce;

(4) failed to disclose significant assets;

(5) failed to turn over other assets to the trustee; and

(6) attempted to sell estate property or to give estate assets to creditors in satisfaction of debt.

The trustee subsequently filed a motion seeking leave from the bankruptcy to amend the Discharge Proceeding to add two additional grounds for objection to debtor's discharge:

(7) that debtor did not comply with a bankruptcy court order to provide certain information such that his discharge should be denied pursuant to section 727(a)(6); and

(8) that, after the deadline to object to debtor's discharge had passed, the debtor received $14,000 cash that was property of the estate and failed to turn it over to the trustee, such that his discharge should be denied pursuant to section 727(a)(2).

Debtor objected to the trustee's motion to amend on the grounds that the amendments were untimely.

Legal Analysis

The deadline to file an objection to a chapter 7 debtor's discharge under section 727(a) is set forth in Rule 4004(a) of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure. Under Rule 4004(a), a party has 60 days after the first date set for the meeting of creditors to file an objection. The purpose of this deadline is to set an early and definitive date by which parties have to lay out the bases for their objections to discharge. To achieve this goal, Rule 4004(b) provides that the deadline for filing an objection to discharge cannot be extended unless a motion to extend the deadline is filed before the deadline has run. Additionally, there is substantial precedent that if an objection to discharge is filed, it cannot be amended after the deadline to substitute a successor party plaintiff or to add new bases for denial of the discharge. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 4004.02.

Under Rule 4004(c), if no objection is filed in a timely manner, the bankruptcy court is required to issue the discharge "forthwith." The entry of discharge is delayed until the conclusion of the adversary proceeding, however, if a complaint is timely filed. See Advisory Committee Notes to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004. If the discharge has already been entered, it will be revoked upon the request of a trustee, creditor, or United States trustee if:

(1) The debtor obtained the discharge through fraud and the party requesting the revocation of discharge did not know of the fraud until after issuance;

(2) The debtor acquired property that is property of the estate and knowingly and fraudulently failed to report the acquisition or to deliver the property to the trustee; [or]

(3) The debtor has refused to obey a bankruptcy court order.

11 U.S.C. § 727(d). Section 727(e) further provides that such a complaint must be filed within one year after the discharge was granted if the complaint is based on fraud; for a complaint alleging other grounds, the deadline is the later of one year after the granting of the discharge or the date that the case was closed.

Commentary

The bankruptcy court's holding in Shankman is noteworthy in that it provides a framework for analyzing cases that fall between the cracks in the process created in section 727. Although Rule 4004(c)(1) requires that a discharge issue "forthwith" after the passing of the 60-day objection period, there are several exceptions that could create a gap ("Gap") between the deadline for filing objections to discharge and the entry of the discharge. In fact, the length of such a Gap may be substantial when the adversary proceeding to prove the allegations of the objection moves at the same slow pace as other complex federal litigation, with extensive discovery, pretrial preparation, and clogged dockets.

The bankruptcy court in Shankman identified two problems that may arise during the Gap: (1) fraud discovered during the Gap, and (2) misconduct occurring during the Gap. Each of these issues needed to be addressed in the case at hand.

Fraud Discovered During the Gap. In this situation, a party entitled to object to discharge discovers debtor fraud during the Gap. Although the discharge has not been entered, the deadline to objecting to the discharge has passed. This means that revocation of the discharge is not possible because the objecting party learns of the conduct before entry of the discharge. This creates a perverse incentive for the debtor to obtain immunity from revocation of the discharge by disclosing fraudulent conduct during the Gap. According to the plain language of the statutes and rules, the bankruptcy court would know that a discharge should not be entered but would be forced to issue the discharge because the deadline for objecting had run.

Circuit courts have gone in two directions in deciding how to deal with this situation. The Seventh Circuit affirmed the lower courts' dismissal of a complaint objecting both to discharge under section 523(a) and, concurrently, seeking revocation of discharge under section 727(d). Zedan v. Habash, 529 F.3d 398 (7th Cir. 2008). The Second and Ninth Circuits, however, have created a legal fiction that the discharge has been entered "forthwith" as required by Rule 4004(c), meaning that a complaint to revoke the discharge was permissible even though a discharge had not yet actually been entered. In re Emery, 132 F.3d 892 (2d Cir. 1998); In re Dietz, 914 F.2d 161 (9th Cir. 1990).ⁿ¹ To resolve the split, the Rules Committee has proposed an amendment to Rule 4004 that would permit the bankruptcy court to extend the deadline for filing objections to discharge if the discharge has not been entered and if the objection to discharge would be a basis for revocation of a discharge if a discharge had been entered.

Misconduct Occurring During the Gap. The bankruptcy court in Shankman notes, however, that the proposed amendment to Rule 4004 still does not address how to handle situations where the conduct for which a discharge might be denied occurs after the deadline for objecting to discharge. Additionally, the proposed rule ignores the fact that the reasons for denial of discharge under section 727(a) are broader than the bases for revocation of discharge under section 727(d). For example, the elements that an objecting party must prove to revoke a discharge are more limited than the elements to deny discharge.

Application to the Case. To the bankruptcy court, resolution of these two dilemmas boils down to a simple question:

Very simply, why should a debtor, post-deadline, be immunized by the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure from the statutory consequences of mutilating property of the estate or from the statutory consequences of "permitting" the removal of property of the state with intent to hinder or delay the trustee or creditors?

2009 Bankr. LEXIS 2600, at *11. The self-evident answer to this question, according to the bankruptcy court, was that "Setting a deadline that effectively eliminates the ability to assert a statutory right renders a rule invalid." Id. at *12. In the event, though, that Rule 4004's time limitations cannot be invalidated, the bankruptcy court adopts an "extended version" of the Second and Ninth Circuits' "legal fiction" analysis. According to this "extended version":

When a discharge is not entered "forthwith" after the expiration of the Rule 4004(a) period and until a discharge is actually entered, although a complaint objecting to discharge under section 727(a) would be untimely, a party may properly file a complaint under section 727(d) to "revoke" a discharge for

1) Conduct occurring prior to the expiration of the Rule 4004(a) period of which the party did not have knowledge in time to file a timely complaint under section 727(a) due to the fraud of the debtor or

2) Conduct occurring after the expiration of the Rule 4004(a) period.

Id. at *12-13 (quoting In re Stevens, 107 B.R. 702, 705 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1989)).

In light of this analysis, the bankruptcy court had two options: (1) deny the amendment to the pleadings, hold a trial on the original allegations of the trustee's complaint, and then, if the trustee loses, allow the trustee to bring an action to revoke the discharge; or (2) adopt the solutions posited by the Second and Ninth Circuits and allow the trustee to seek to revoke a discharge that had not yet been entered. In the interests of efficiency, the bankruptcy court decided to allow amendment of the complaint to the extent that (1) the alleged misconduct could be a basis for revocation of discharge under section 727(d), or (2) the improper conduct occurred during the Gap.

It is interesting to note that, the above analysis notwithstanding, the bankruptcy court was always going to allow the claims against the debtor to proceed. Although statutes of limitation and deadlines are generally enforced in a strict manner, see Taylor v. Freeland v. Kronz, 503 U.S. 638, 112 S. Ct. 1644, 118 L. Ed. 2d 280 (1992), they are still subject to equitable modification by the courts. First, the bankruptcy court identified that the deadline for objections to discharge is not jurisdictional. Kontrick v. Ryan, 540 U.S. 443, 124 S. Ct. 906, 157 L. Ed. 2d 867 (2004). Following on that point, the bankruptcy court stated: "To the extent that interpretation of Rule 4004(a) would deny a creditor, the trustee, or the United States trustee a right established by statute, an equitable exception is appropriate and the Court will recognize it." 2009 LEXIS 2600, at *14-15.

Because the bankruptcy court recognized that other courts have handled similar matters differently, however, it hedged on its directions to the trustee. The bankruptcy court required the trustee to plead its new claims both as objections to discharge and as requests to revoke the discharge.

Conclusion

The decision in Shankman is noteworthy precisely because the bankruptcy court did not leap immediately to the equitable solution to its dilemma and, instead, sought to create a logical, statutorily justifiable basis for allowing the trustee to pursue his new claims. The bankruptcy court identified problems that could arise during the Gap and proposed a workable answer that would also set the table for appellate review on all issues.

Return to Text

ⁿ¹ According to the bankruptcy court in Shankman, this legal fiction works only if no objection to discharge was filed. In the event an objection had been filed, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(c)(1)(B) would prohibit entry of the discharge, thereby voiding the fiction. 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 2600, at *8-9 n.12.

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of Federal Rule of Bankruptcy 4004, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ ch. 4004.

For analysis of other decisions relating to bankruptcy litigation and procedure, click ■ here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors' rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

33 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Bernhardt on In re Solutia

2009 Emerging Issues 4515

Professor Roger Bernhardt on In re Solutia Inc., 379 B.R. 473 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007)

By Mr. Roger Bernhardt

October 29, 2009

SUMMARY: Get Emerging Issues Analysis on In re Solutia, Inc., 379 B.R. 473 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007), where bankruptcy debtors proposed a Ch. 11 reorganization that provided for payment of secured noteholders in full and for significant change in control; the debtors and a committee of unsecured creditors moved for partial summary judgment with regard to the amount of the noteholders' claim which included interest, which was granted.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: This decision conveys two ominous warnings to lenders regarding acceleration clauses.

First, it warns a lender that its attempt to draft an acceleration clause that appears both automatic and elective will not easily survive hostile judicial scrutiny. This loan agreement provided for acceleration of the loan automatically "without any declaration or other act" by the lender on the filing of a bankruptcy reorganization. (Since all other defaults lead to acceleration only after notice, this feature was clearly designed to avoid the effect of a bankruptcy stay.) However, since the lender also apparently desired to be able to de-accelerate if it so chose, the loan documents also included the following provision (much excerpted):

"Provided the Notes are not then due and payable by reason of a declaration of acceleration, the Holders may waive the any past Default with respect to such notes and its consequences by providing written notice thereof, except a default in the payment of interest or on the principle of any Note ..."

While these words do appear to permit an acceleration that has occurred automatically (rather than by declaration) to be undone by a written notice (although the unpaid amounts would not be waived), the bankruptcy court instead characterized the language of the section as "simply difficult to parse" and construed it otherwise. While the inclusion of far too many other clauses in that provision perhaps justified that judicial reaction, its fate should warn drafters how difficult it may be to employ language that judges will accept when it seems unfair to the borrower.

Second, the court's holding that the notice of the de-acceleration was void as in violation of the bankruptcy stay means that even more effective language would probably not help. A lender is therefore put to a hard choice: if the loan documents make acceleration optional on default, a timely filing for bankruptcy may prohibit it from being able to thereafter declare an acceleration. On the other hand, if they make acceleration automatic, that bankruptcy filing can prohibit it from de-accelerating, entailing costly effects such as those that fell on this lender.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Roger Bernhardt, Professor of Law at Golden Gate University in San Francisco, is author of Bernhardt's California Real Estate Codes (LexisNexis), California Mortgage and Deed of Trust Practice (CEB), as well as numerous books on Property and Mortgage Law for students. He is also Editor of CEB's California Real Property Law Reporter and Bernhardt's Mortgage Law Newsletter. (RBernhardt@GGU.edu)

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

34 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Bernhardt on Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. Knupfer

2009 Emerging Issues 4517

Professor Roger Bernhardt on Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. Knupfer (In re PW, LLC), 391 B.R. 25 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2008)

By Mr. Roger Bernhardt

October 29, 2009

SUMMARY: Get Emerging Issues Analysis on Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. Knupfer, a case from the bankruptcy appellate panel for the Ninth Circuit that found that outside a plan of reorganization, 11 U.S.C. § 363(f) does not permit a secured creditor to credit bid its debt and purchase estate property, taking title free and clear of valid, nonconsenting junior liens.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: This case was remanded by the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Ninth Circuit "to allow the parties to identify a qualifying proceeding under nonbankruptcy law (if one exists) that would enable them to strip Clear Channel's lien and make the sale of PW's property to DB free and clear under § 363(f)(5)." As such, the matter is not over.

However, is there any nonbankruptcy law that would permit the senior lienor or the debtor to strip away the junior's lien? Lien stripping is a function of bankruptcy law, not state law, which is not what 11 U.S.C. § 363(f)(5) demands. California's fair value provisions (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 726 and 580a) do reduce debts but perform their function only in the context of a foreclosure proceeding, which did not happen here. (And any foreclosure sale here would probably be conducted by the senior, which would make PW a sold out junior, not subject to fair value unless it became the high bidder at the senior sale).

If there is no identifiable proceeding to justify stripping away the junior's lien, that would make a free and clear sale improper. But one was already held. Thus, some questions arise:

- Should the bankruptcy court order it unwound and restore DB to its former status as lienor?
- Should it do the same for the $800,000 paid to the trustee?
- Or can it leave title in DB, as purchaser at the sale, but merely restore PW's lien to the property that DB now holds?
- If DB does now hold title subject again to PW's lien, what are its remedies? And can it now foreclose on PW, demanding that PW exercise its right of redemption and pay DB the $41 million that it was owed (or that it paid for the transfer)?

The alternative (if redemption is not made) is no longer likely to be a sale since DB may be both owner and creditor as a result of the improper free and clear sale. More likely, the foreclosure would be "strict," merely wiping out PW's redemption rights if they are not exercised, as is done in the case of a senior foreclosure action that fails to include the junior creditor as a party.

Assuming that the next highest bid for the property of only $25 million says something about the value of the property, it does not seem likely that the junior will get any benefit from its victory before the BAP.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Roger Bernhardt, Professor of Law at Golden Gate University in San Francisco, is author of Bernhardt's California Real Estate Codes (LexisNexis), California Mortgage and Deed of Trust Practice (CEB), as well as numerous books on Property and Mortgage Law for students. He is also Editor of CEB's California Real Property Law Reporter and Bernhardt's Mortgage Law Newsletter. (RBernhardt@GGU.edu)

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

35 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on Ransom v. MBNA, America Bank, N.A. (In re Ransom)

2009 Emerging Issues 4507

S. Andrew Jurs on Ransom v. MBNA, America Bank, N.A. (In re Ransom), 577 F.3d 1026, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 18179 (9th Cir. 2009)

By S. Andrew Jurs

October 26, 2009

SUMMARY: S. Andrew Jurs looks at the Ninth Circuit's decision in In re Ransom, where the court considered whether an above-median-income chapter 13 debtor is allowed to deduct from projected disposable income the vehicle "ownership cost" even though the vehicle is owned free and clear. The decision has created a circuit split, with both sides claiming that their positions are supported by the "plain language" of Code section 707.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The Ninth Circuit Denied a Chapter 13 Debtor's Plan to Take an Ownership Deduction for a Car Owned Free and Clear of All Liens

In Ransom v. MBNA, America Bank, N.A. (In re Ransom), 577 F.3d 1026, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 18179 (9th Cir. 2009), the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit was faced with a split between various courts regarding how to read the purportedly plain language of the Bankruptcy Code and the possible incorporation in the Bankruptcy Code of interpretative provisions of the Internal Revenue Manual (the "Manual"). In denying a chapter 13 debtor's plan to take an ownership deduction for a car owned free and clear, the court not only declined to utilize the Manual's interpretations of the IRS deduction rules, but rejected other courts' "plain language approach" in favor of its own purported plain reading of the statutory language.

Facts and Procedural History. The parties agreed on the underlying facts. On the petition date, the Debtor owned a 2004 Toyota Camry free and clear of all liens. On his official Statement of Current Monthly Income Form B22C, the Debtor, whose income was above-median, claimed an ownership expense deduction for the Toyota in the amount of $471.00. The Debtor's resulting monthly income was $210.55 after this deduction, but he proposed paying $500.00 per month for 60 months to give unsecured creditors a 25 percent distribution for general unsecured claims.

An unsecured creditor, MBNA America Bank ("MBNA"), objected to plan confirmation on the grounds that the Debtor was not allowed to claim an ownership expense deduction on a vehicle owned free and clear. If the allegedly improper ownership expense deduction was backed out, the Debtor would pay $680.55 per month.

The bankruptcy court upheld MBNA's objection and held that the Debtor was entitled to an ownership expense deduction only if he was making loan or lease payments on the Toyota. The bankruptcy court denied confirmation of the Debtor's chapter 13 plan, and the Debtor appealed the decision to the Ninth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel ("BAP"). The BAP affirmed the bankruptcy court but certified the decision to the Ninth Circuit for possible interlocutory appeal. Ransom v. MBNA Am. Bank, N.A. (In re Ransom), 380 B.R. 799 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2007). The Ninth Circuit subsequently granted leave for the interlocutory appeal to go forward.

Legal Analysis. Courts may not approve a proposed chapter 13 plan if an unsecured creditor objects and (a) the plan does not pay the claim in full or (b) does not provide for payment of "all of the debtor's projected disposable income to be received" during the plan period. 11 U.S.C. §1325(b)(1)(A)-(B). The Bankruptcy Code, however, does not define "projected disposable income." Instead, the closest analogous term is "disposable income," which, under section 1325(b)(2), is calculated for above-median debtors as "current monthly income" minus the standardized deductions.

The standardized deductions consist of reasonably necessary expenses for, among other things, maintenance or support of a debtor and the debtor's dependents. 11 U.S.C. §1325(b)(2). Additionally, according to section 1325(b)(3), for above-median debtors section 707(b)(2)(A) of the Code governs the determination of such expenses, and it provides:

The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards, and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtors resides. (Emphasis added.)

Determining transportation expenses is further complicated by the fact that the Local Standard has three components: (1) a single national allowance for public transportation costs available to everyone, even without proof of using public transportation; (2) a single national ownership cost allowance for one or two cars; and (3) an operating cost allowance for one or two cars that varies by place of residence.

The Debtor and MBNA disputed whether the second component, the ownership expense deduction, was a proper "applicable monthly expense amount" under section 707(b)(2)(A). According to the Debtor, the only factors to consider when determining "applicable monthly expense amounts" involve the Debtor's date of filing, family size, geographic location and number of vehicles. In contrast, MBNA argued that the Debtor was only allowed an automobile ownership interest deduction if he actually owed money on the vehicle as of the petition date.

Commentary. The Ninth Circuit's holding in Ransom is noteworthy in that it not only rejects the two most recent circuit court opinions on the issue, but posits a contradictory "plain language" interpretation of section 707. The end result was that the Ninth Circuit became the first circuit court to hold that an above-median income chapter 13 debtor does not get to deduct from his projected disposable income the vehicle "ownership cost" when he owns the vehicle free and clear of all liens.

As a preliminary matter, the Ninth Circuit acknowledges the "significant split in authority" on the issue identified by the BAP. Ransom, 380 B.R. at 803-06. In fact, the appeals court noted that it was in the "uncomfortable position" of disagreeing with the Fifth and Seventh Circuits and their readings of the statute. 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 18179, at *7, referring to Tate v. Bolen (In re Tate), 571 F.3d 423 (5th Cir. 2009); Ross-Tousey v. Neary (In re Ross-Tousey), 549 F.3d 1148 (7th Cir. 2008).

According to the Seventh Circuit in Ross-Tousey, the appropriate analysis involved a "plain language approach" of statutory interpretation, which led the appeals court to conclude that a vehicle not encumbered by a debt or lease still qualified for the "ownership cost" deduction. Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1157-58. This conclusion was based on the fact that section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) uses the word "applicable," and not "actual," to describe the "ownership cost" deduction. To the Seventh Circuit, "applicable" refers to the selection of an expense amount corresponding to the appropriate geographic region and number of vehicles owned by the debtor. . . . In other words, under [this] approach, the Local Standard vehicle ownership deduction applies' to the debtor by virtue of his geographic region and number of cars, regardless of whether that deduction is an actual expense.

Id. This "plain language approach" was sufficiently convincing that the Fifth Circuit described it as the "best reading of § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)," and accordingly adopted it. Tate, 571 F.3d at 427.

To counter this "plain language approach," the Ninth Circuit instead decided the issue on the "statutory language, plainly read," 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 18179, at *11 (citing Ransom, 380 B.R. at 806 n.18). n1 According to the appeals court, "[a]n ownership cost' is not an expense--either actual or applicable--if it does not exist, period." Id. (Emphasis added.) In support of this interpretation, it adopted the "cogent reasoning" of the BAP that the "statute is only concerned about protecting the debtor's ability to continue owning a car, and if the debtor already owns the car the debtor is adequately protected. . . . When the debtor has no monthly ownership expenses, it makes no sense to deduct an ownership expense to shield it from creditors." Id. at *12. Furthermore, according to the BAP, the adjective "applicable" modifies "monthly expense amounts" to indicate that the deduction for the expense "becomes relevant to the debtor (i.e., appropriate or applicable to the debtor) when he or she in fact has such an expense." Id. at *12-13. To the BAP and the Ninth Circuit, this reading of the word "applicable" is consistent with its ordinary sense of meaning "capable of or suitable for being applied." Id. at *13 (citing Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary 60 (11th ed. 2005)). According to these courts, it is inconceivable that the vehicle ownership expense allowance can be "capable of being applied to the debtor if he does not make any lease or loan payments on the vehicle []." Id. Any other interpretation, in these courts' opinion, would read "applicable" out of the Bankruptcy Code.

Yet neither the Ninth Circuit nor its BAP addresses the question of why Congress used the word "applicable" to modify "monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards," and the word "actual" to modify "monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses." Applying the same analysis as these courts, it seems that "applicable" runs the risk of being "read out of the Bankruptcy Code" by being replaced by "actual."

In the final part of its decision, the Ninth Circuit rejected the Debtor's argument that, on equitable grounds, he should be entitled to the vehicle ownership expense deduction. According to the Debtor, the age of the car, the likelihood of major repairs, and the costs of such repairs, will increase, but the allowable operating costs under the Local Standards do not cover these costs. The Ninth Circuit refuted this position, however, with the fact that section 707 already has safeguards to protect debtors with old or high mileage cars, including an extra $200 per month operating expense and possible additional expenses based on "special circumstances." 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 18179, at *14 (citing 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B)). In the appeals court's opinion, equity does require it to provide any additional protections to the Debtor.

Conclusion. The final result, therefore, is that the decision in Ransom creates a split between the circuits on the question of whether an above-median income chapter 13 debtor gets to deduct from projected disposable income the vehicle "ownership cost" when the debtor actually has no such costs. Both sides argue that their positions are supported by "plain language" readings of section 707 and the ordinary meanings of "applicable" and "actual." As the Ninth Circuit recognized at the end of its opinion: "The correct' answer to the question before us, which the courts have been struggling with for years--at the unnecessary cost of thousands of hours of valuable judicial time--depends ultimately not upon our interpretation of statute, but upon what Congress wants the answer to be." Id. at *15. For that reason, it pleaded for "legislation clearly answering [this] straightforward policy question," and took the unusual step directing its Clerk of Courts to forward copies of the opinion to the Senate and House Judiciary Committees.

n1 Going this route, the Ninth Circuit was able to avoid engaging in analysis of what it called the "IRM approach," which relies on the IRS's interpretation of "applicable" contained in the Internal Revenue Manual. See In re Talmadge, 371 B.R. 96, 100-01 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2007); In re Slusher, 359 B.R. 290, 308-09 (Bankr. D. Nev. 2007). Other courts have found it inappropriate to consider the Manual in interpreting these provisions. See In re Moorman, 376 B.R. 694, 697-98 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2007); In re Sawdy, 362 B.R. 898, 912-13 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2007); In re Barrett, 371 B.R. 855, 858-59 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 2007); In re Chamberlain, 369 B.R. 519, 525 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 2007); In re Swan, 368 B.R. 12, 18 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2007).

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion related to the determination of applicable deductions under Bankruptcy Code section 707(b)(2)(A), see Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 707.05.

For analysis of other decisions affecting consumer bankruptcy, click
 ■ here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts and creditors' rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

36 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Mears on Long Term Supply Contracts in Auto Supplier Bankruptcies

2009 Emerging Issues 4491

Patrick Mears on Long Term Supply Contracts in Auto Supplier Bankruptcies

By Patrick Mears

October 20, 2009

SUMMARY: In this LexisNexis Emerging Issues Analysis, author Patrick Mears examines long term supply contracts in auto supplier bankruptcies, posing the question: may the nondebtor seller change payment terms for postpetition sales to the chapter 11 debtor? [Note: This EIA was recently available as a free download on the Bankruptcy Law Center, <http://law.lexisnexis.com/practiceareas/BankruptcyLawCenter>]

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: In virtually all Chapter 11 cases of auto suppliers, particularly higher-tiered suppliers n1 such as Delphi Corporation and Lear Corporation, and original equipment manufacturers like Chrysler Corporation and General Motors Corporation, a clash of interests will occur between the Chapter 11 debtor-supplier, on the one hand, and the nondebtor, lower-tiered supplier, on the other hand. The Chapter 11 debtor will attempt to move mountains in order to keep its operations functioning at prebankruptcy levels so as to stabilize, maintain and increase its cash flow. One strategy employed by Chapter 11 debtors to achieve this goal involves insisting that the debtor's suppliers continue to supply goods n2 under the terms of their prepetition supply contracts. These contracts normally contain extended payment terms. The nonbankruptcy seller, however, is often reluctant to bet on the debtor's survival and may push for abbreviated payment terms including, in many cases, cash on delivery or cash in advance. How these competing interests are accommodated in Chapter 11 cases may make the difference between the debtor's successful reorganization or its uncontrolled liquidation.

A. The Economic Matrix: Long Term Supply Contracts and the Auto Industry

The prevalent type of supplier contract in the American automotive industry is the long term requirements contract. Under these contracts, manufacturers of discrete parts and assemblies agree in writing to sell those goods to higher-tiered suppliers or to OEMs normally on unsecured credit terms. Often, these contracts are "requirements" contracts n3 where Tier II Supplier sells to Tier I Supplier all of its requirements of certain goods for an extended time period which in most cases will be the anticipated life-span of the particular vehicle model assembled by an OEM. The normal term of these contracts is therefore 5 or 6 years. Many, if not most, of these sellers are "sole source suppliers," meaning that the buyer of the components will contract only with one seller. The universe of suppliers to OEMs for the production of a particular model is but a fraction of their number 60 to 80 years ago in the heady days of Alfred P. Sloan, Henry Ford and Walter Chrysler.

The combination of sole source suppliers for automotive parts with "just in time" inventory systemsⁿ⁴ creates an unstable brew in normal economic times. However, in a recessionary economic environment such as we have today, this admixture becomes explosive. The "resourcing" of parts manufacturing from a financially troubled, sole source supplier to an economically healthy one cannot be achieved overnight. Rather, this process may take six months or more because the parts to be fabricated by the replacement supplier must be approved by the purchaser through a procedure known as the "Production Part Approval Process" or "PPAP." In order for a part made by a new supplier to be "PPAPed," the parts must satisfy all of the specifications and tolerances demanded by the ultimate customer, the OEM.ⁿ⁵ In circumstances where production of a part is being resourced to a new supplier but where PPAP of the part has not occurred, there will be the constant threat of a line shutdown if (i) the financially troubled supplier is unable or unwilling to continue production pending resourcing; and (ii) an inadequate supply of parts, referred to as an "inventory bank," is not available to supply the OEM's production needs during the process of resourcing. A line shutdown is likely to cause the OEM to incur consequential damages of millions of dollars per day, the liability for which losses the OEM will attempt to assign to other members of the supply chain.ⁿ⁶

In this atmosphere, the commencement of a Chapter 11 case by a Tier I supplier has the potential of multiplying the potential for Armageddon on the assembly line. A Chapter 11 debtor will have an immediate and often overwhelming need for cash to pay its employees, lenders, suppliers, utilities, landlords and other entities that become creditors of the debtor in possession during the Chapter 11 case. In order to satisfy this critical need for cash, a Chapter 11 debtor will attempt to secure "debtor in possession financing" ("DIP financing")ⁿ⁷ from its existing secured lenders or new lenders and to negotiate with its existing secured creditors for its continued use of "cash collateral."ⁿ⁸ Once this postpetition financing is secured and use of cash collateral is permitted, the Chapter 11 debtor should be able to stabilize its business and negotiate a plan of reorganization with its creditors and other parties in interest. Without this stabilization, the debtor in possession will be hard pressed to convince its creditors that the debtor will survive long enough to negotiate and obtain confirmation of a Chapter 11 plan.

B. The Legal Matrix: The Treatment of Executory Contracts in Chapter 11 Cases

The Federal Bankruptcy Code contains an entire section defining the rights and obligations of Chapter 11 debtors and nondebtor counterparties under a class of contracts referred to as "executory contracts." This term is not defined in the Bankruptcy Code but was intended by the Code's drafters as those contracts which the parties thereto have duties of performance thereunder to some extent. Long-term auto supplier contracts that have not been terminated as of the date the debtor's Chapter 11 case was commenced fall within this category: the nondebtor party has the obligation to manufacture, sell and deliver goods to the debtor and the debtor has the duty to pay the contract price for these goods.ⁿ⁹

The overwhelming weight of reported case law prohibits the nondebtor counterparty from unilaterally terminating an executory supply contract once the debtor's case is commenced and, moreover, requires the nondebtor party to continue to perform its obligations under the contract until the debtor rejects the contract or the bankruptcy court enters an order authorizing the nondebtor to suspend or cease performance during the "limbo period."ⁿ¹⁰ A debtor in possession has the option of either assuming or rejecting an executory contract and may delay making this decision until the bankruptcy court confirms a Chapter 11 plan.ⁿ¹¹ However, the nondebtor party may file a motion with the bankruptcy court requesting it to fix an earlier date by which the debtor must either assume or reject the contract.ⁿ¹²

If a Chapter 11 debtor desires to assume an executory contract, it must file a motion with the bankruptcy court and serve the motion upon the other parties to the contract.ⁿ¹³ If the court grants this relief, the debtor will be bound to perform all of its contractual obligations thereafter and, if the debtor thereafter breaches the assumed contract prior to confirmation of a plan, the nondebtor's damages caused by the breach will be treated in the Chapter 11 case as administrative expenses.ⁿ¹⁴ Upon a Chapter 11 debtor's rejection of an executory contract, the contract will be deemed to have been breached as of the date the bankruptcy case was commenced and all damages arising from the rejection will be treated as prepetition unsecured claims. n15 However, any claims for unpaid goods sold and delivered to the debtor postpetition will be treated as postpetition administrative expenses entitled to priority under 11 USCS § 507(a)(2). n16

C. The Supplier's Dilemma: To Ship or Not to Ship in the Limbo Period

As previously noted, a nondebtor supplier under an executory supply contract containing extended payment terms may determine shortly after the debtor's Chapter 11 case is commenced that it does not wish to risk nonpayment for goods sold postbankruptcy to a financially shaky debtor. This nondebtor's insecurity will be heightened if the nondebtor holds a large claim for unpaid goods sold prior to bankruptcy. Nevertheless, if the nondebtor refuses to ship goods to the debtor postpetition altogether or insists upon the imposition of cash on delivery or cash in advance terms as a precondition to postpetition shipments, the debtor will likely claim that this action violates the automatic stay and the case law requiring nondebtors to perform their contractual obligations during the limbo between the bankruptcy petition date and the date on which the contract is assumed or rejected.

One "traditional" remedy available to suppliers in this situation is to file a motion with the bankruptcy court requesting it to fix a date by which the Chapter 11 debtor must assume or reject the supply contract. n17 If an early date is fixed in response to this motion and the lease is assumed, the supplier will be assured that the debtor is obligated to perform under the contract. If the contract is rejected, the nondebtor supplier will no longer be required to manufacture and ship goods to the debtor. However, Chapter 11 debtors and creditors committees will normally oppose these motions, especially when they are filed in the early stages of the case. Debtors and committees will argue that if they assume a contract and it is later determined that it was economically improvident to do so, any subsequent breaches by the debtor will result in damages being treated as administrative expenses. If the debtor improvidently rejects the executory contract at an early date, the debtor will have forfeited under creditor pressure a valuable asset. It is for these reasons that bankruptcy courts are often loath to fix an early date by which a debtor must assume or reject executory contracts. Creditors filing these motions at the outset of the Chapter 11 case often find themselves in the position of the Light Brigade charging the Russian cannon at Balaklava with virtually no chance of success.

D. A New Supplier Strategy: Requesting Adequate Assurance of Future Performance Under U.C.C. § 2-609

Recent auto supplier Chapter 11 cases have seen instances where nondebtor suppliers to a Tier I Chapter 11 debtor have adopted a different strategy in the early stages of these bankruptcy cases based upon provisions of Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code. These suppliers have filed motions early in these cases under U.C.C. § 2-609 asserting that they have reasonable grounds for insecurity concerning the debtor's ability to perform under the terms of the long-term supply contracts (especially under the extended payment terms of the contracts) and, therefore, these suppliers are entitled to receive from these debtors adequate assurance of future performance of their contract obligations. In addition, some of these suppliers have argued that, because their debtors are "insolvent," the suppliers are entitled to unilaterally impose COD or CIA payment terms in lieu of credit terms as explicitly permitted by U.C.C. § 2-702(1).

Applied frequently in situations prior to any bankruptcy filing, U.C.C. § 2-609 (the "UCC") authorizes a party, upon reasonable grounds for insecurity, to demand adequate assurances of due performance and until it receives such performance, . . . if commercially reasonable, to suspend any performance for which he has not already received the agreed return. However, the UCC does not require a party to request assurances as a condition precedent to recovery. The purpose of a demand under U.C.C. § 2-609 is to permit a party likely to be injured by the other party's nonperformance to take steps to protect itself without worrying that its own nonperformance will later be construed as a repudiation.

Whether a supplier has reasonable grounds for insecurity is generally a question of fact. Because the reasonableness of a supplier's insecurity is determined by commercial standards, an objective factual basis must exist for the supplier's insecurity, as opposed to a purely subjective fear that the customer will not perform.

A buyer who has recently filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy is likely to insist that its suppliers continue to ship goods and seek to compel performance by filing a motion to enforce the automatic stay and the underlying contract. n18 Debtors are increasingly seeking to enforce prepetition credit terms without any assurances of post-petition payment to suppliers. However, suppliers are not without recourse and legal argument, as illustrated by a recent motion filed by a supplier in In re Visteon Corp., Case No. 09-11786 (Bankr. D. Del.).

In the Visteon bankruptcy cases, Visteon suggested that suppliers were not entitled to cash on delivery or cash in advance, despite the fact that the debtors were insolvent and had no debtor in possession financing. In support of its position, Visteon sent letter to its allegedly recalcitrant suppliers stating:

Under section 362 of the Bankruptcy Code, an automatic stay has been imposed to prevent third parties from taking actions against the assets of the Debtors (including the Debtors' contracts) without prior approval of the Bankruptcy Court. [Supplier's] actions to unilaterally modify and interfere with the Debtors rights under the Debtors' contract[s] with [Supplier] . . . would violate the automatic stay.

Prior to Visteon's bankruptcy filing, one of Visteon's suppliers sent a demand for adequate assurance of future performance under U.C.C. § 2-609. The supplier subsequently received acceptable adequate assurance, but nonetheless was owed approximately $2.5 million, of which $179,000 was past due.

When Visteon filed for bankruptcy, the supplier informed Visteon that it was prepared to continue to ship post-petition, but only in the event that Visteon provided payment on cash in advance basis. Visteon, however, refused to agree to cash in advance terms and reiterated that such a demand was a violation of the automatic stay. The supplier aggressively disputed the debtors' position by filing a motion requesting, among other things, adequate assurance under U.C.C. § 2-609 on a post-petition basis.

The supplier argued that shipping post-petition on prepetition credit terms would unfairly expose it to significant economic harm, especially in light of the fact that Visteon (i) admitted it was administratively insolvent, (ii) had no debtor in possession financing or other long term source of working capital, and (iii) had a limited right to use cash collateral. The supplier further argued that if forced to adhere to prepetition credit terms, it would in essence be forced to finance Visteon's bankruptcy and suffer from the risk of an administratively insolvent estate. n19

The supplier's motion emphasized that Visteon's use of cash collateral alone was insufficient to assure the supplier that Visteon would continue to satisfy its obligations to the supplier post-petition by noting, among other things:

- (i) Visteon's lack of a post-petition working capital facility;
- (ii) Visteon's admitted insolvency;
- (iii) cash collateral financing could be terminated as a result of an event of default with no notice to the supplier;
- (iv) a cash collateral budget that failed to contain a line item for payment to the supplier and only a generic line item entitled "operating disbursements;"
- (v) no carveout from the secured lenders' post-petition liens for the payment of goods delivered by the supplier to Visteon prior to the occurrence of an event of default but unpaid as of the date of the default; and
- (vi) a cash collateral order structured to provide maximum protection for a particular OEM and creditors who supply parts for that OEM, when the supplier's parts are not used for that OEM.

The supplier also attempted to refute any claim of Visteon that it would be adequately assured of future performance as a result of the supplier's administrative expense under section 503(b) by stressing that Visteon has not demonstrated that it is not administratively insolvent or is not at risk of administrative insolvency. Finally, the supplier emphasized that its refusal to ship absent cash in advance or other forms of security was supported not only by U.C.C. § 2-609, but also U.C.C. § 2-702(1), U.C.C. § 2-703 and U.C.C. § 2-610(c). n20

Ultimately, Visteon and the supplier appear to have resolved the dispute before the bankruptcy court considered the supplier's motion. However, Visteon's assertion that a supplier cannot demand cash in advance or some other form of adequate assurance for post-petition shipments is likely to occur with a great deal of frequency in the future. In such instances, suppliers should take note of the aggressive posture assumed by Visteon's supplier in this particular instance and not hesitate to file a similar motion to protect against potential post-petition losses.

Return to Text

n1 The author wishes to thank his colleague, John T. Gregg, for his assistance in preparing this piece.

[1] In automotive industry parlance, an assembler of automobiles such as General Motors Corporation is referred to as an "original equipment manufacturer" or "OEM." Immediate suppliers of parts or modules to an OEM are called "Tier I Suppliers." Tier I Suppliers often purchase components from "Tier II Suppliers" for incorporation into systems that Tier I Suppliers sell to OEMs. Lower tiered suppliers may include parts manufacturers and tool and die fabricators. These relationships are commonly collectively referred to as the "automotive supply chain."

n2 Because these contracts involve the sale of "goods," these agreements, at least insofar as they are between American entities, will be governed by Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code ("UCC"). U.C.C. § 2-102. Article 2 has been adopted in all 50 states.

n3 U.C.C. § 2-306(1) addresses requirements contracts for the sale of goods. See also Metal One America Inc. v. Center Manufacturing Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40304 (W.D. Mich. July 14, 2005).

n4 In the 1990s, American OEMs adopted the Japanese lean manufacturing practice of "just in time" inventory supply, which required suppliers to deliver just enough inventory to OEMs in order to maintain uninterrupted vehicle assembly without building up an expensive "inventory bank."

n5 See generally, John T. Gregg, An Introduction to Tooling Liens in the Automotive Industry, American Bankruptcy Institute Journal, Vol. XXVIII, No. 6 (July/August 2009).

n6 See, e.g., In re Autostyle Plastics, Inc., 216 B.R. 784, 788 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1997).

n7 Financing of a Chapter 11 debtor involves the extension of new credit facilities, such as a revolving line of credit, after the commencement of the Chapter 11 case. This financing can be either on a secured or unsecured basis and must be approved by an order of the bankruptcy court. Section 364 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code governs this practice.

n8 The term "cash collateral" is defined in 11 U.S.C. § 363(a) and means cash or cash equivalents subject to a prepetition security interest that will normally be held by the Chapter 11 debtor's prebankruptcy secured lender. A Chapter 11 debtor may use "cash collateral" during the reorganization case on if the secured creditor consents to such use or if the lender's security interests in this collateral is adequately protected. 11 U.S.C. § 363(e).

n9 See generally In re Dana Corporation, 379 B.R. 449 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007).

n10 See, e.g., In re National Steel Corp., 316 B.R. 287, 305 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2004). But see In re Lucre, Inc., 339 B.R. 648 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 2006).

n11 11 U.S.C. § 365(d)(2).

n12 See, e.g., Adelphia Communications Corp., 291 B.R. 283, 293 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2003).

n13 USCS Bankruptcy R 6006.

n14 See, e.g., In re Parmenter, 527 F.3d 606 (2009).

n15 11 U.S.C. § 365(q)(1), 11 U.S.C. § 502(g).

n16 See, e.g., In re Collins & Aikman Corp., 384 B.R. 751 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2008).

n17 See Adelphia Communications Corp., 291 B.R. 283, 293 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2003).

n18 The Bankruptcy Code itself is silent on the rights and obligations of the parties of an executory contract during the period between the filing of the petition and the time of assumption or rejection. In re National Steel Corp., 316 B.R. 287, 305 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2004). However, it is widely accepted that an executory contract generally remains in effect pending assumption or rejection by a debtor. See, e.g., Pub. Serv. Co. of N.H., 884 F.2d 11, 14 (1st Cir. 1989).

n19 The supplier's contract with Visteon established payment terms of "Net 30th, Prox 10th, 20th Subsequent. These terms mean:

Net 30th: payments for goods received on the 1st through the 10th day of the month are due on the 30th day of the following month;

Prox 10th: payments for goods received on the 11th through the 20th day of month one are due on the 10th day of month three; and 20th Subsequent: payments for goods received on the 21st through the 30th/31st day of month one are due on the 20th day of month three.

n20 U.C.C. § 2-702(1) provides that a seller may refuse delivery except for cash when it discovers the buyer to be insolvent. U.C.C. § 2-703 provides that where a buyer refuses to make payment due on or before delivery, then with respect to any goods directly affected, the aggrieved seller may withhold delivery of goods. U.C.C. § 2-610 provides that when either party repudiates the contract with respect to performance not yet due, the loss of which will substantially impair the value of the contract to the other, the aggrieved party may suspend his own performance.

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion of Bankruptcy Code sections 362, 363, 364, 365, 502 and 507, see Collier on Bankruptcy

- 362.01;
- 363.01;
- 364.01;
- 365.01;
- 502.01;

■ 507.01

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Patrick E. Mears is a Contributing Author to the treatise, Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide, and is the Chairperson of the Finance, Insolvency and Restructuring Department of Barnes & Thornburg, LLP, resident in its Grand Rapids, Michigan office. Mears is an elected member of the American Law Institute and an elected fellow of the American College of Bankruptcy. Mears has authored numerous articles and treatises on insolvency and creditors' rights law during his 33 years of practice. He and his colleague, John T. Gregg, are the principal authors of the treatise, Auto Supplier Insolvencies and Bankruptcies: Issues for Suppliers and Customers of Financially Troubled Auto Suppliers, published by the American Bankruptcy Institute in 2006.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

37 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Hedayat on Emotional Distress Damages for Violations of the Automatic Stay

2009 Emerging Issues 4495

Mazyar M. Hedayat on Emotional Distress Damages for Violations of the Automatic Stay

By Mazyar Hedayat Esq.

October 20, 2009

SUMMARY: In this LexisNexis Emerging Issues Analysis, Mazy Hedayat examines the issue of emotional distress damages for violations of the automatic stay, as well as the burdens of proof and persuasion to be met by any who wish to seek such damages.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The signature feature of bankruptcy is the automatic stay -- an automatic, universal, self-executing injunction against all actions to collect, enforce, commemorate, or advance claims against property of the bankruptcy estate. 11 U.S.C. § 362(a) ("Automatic Stay" or "Stay"). The Stay serves the dual purposes of safeguarding debtor peace of mind and maximizing value for unsecured creditors. How does it manage to do both? By forcing a quiet period on all creditors while the Trustee examines and evaluates property of the bankruptcy estate ("Estate").

Once the Stay is in effect all attempts to secure claims against property of the Estate are forbidden: thereafter the onus is on the creditor to show that it has not acted in defiance of the Stay. Even the creation, perfection, or enforcement of a lien on property of the Estate is a violation of the Stay.

This article will examine the recovery of emotional distress damages for violations of the Automatic Stay, as well as the burdens of proof and persuasion to be met by any who wish to seek such damages.

Establishing Automatic Stay Violations

The elements of a cause of action for violation of the Automatic Stay are modest. To establish a violation the party must show the following by a preponderance of evidence: (a) that a petition was filed; (b) that a creditor attempted to exercise dominion or control over property; and (c) that said property belonged to the bankruptcy estate at the time. Intent to violate the Stay is not an element and need not be shown in order to establish that the Stay was violated. Awards in such circumstances are limited to damage to the Estate: generally, disgorgement of Estate property.

Establishing Intentional Violations

Intent need to be shown to allow for the Estate to recover from violator since the Stay must often be used to dramatic effect (stopping foreclosure, curtailing the sale of a home or car), such delay would render it useless. However, where a violation is shown to have been intentional, the Debtor may also recover damages. These damages are aimed at discouraging further violations by creditors such as the one at bar and include expenses incurred by the Debtor and punitive damages.

Step One: Establishing Willful Violation

Debtors who establish by clear and convincing evidence that they have been injured due to a willful violation of the Automatic Stay may recover actual damages. 11 U.S.C. 362(k). An obvious example is the creditor that receives actual notice of a bankruptcy filing but takes steps to collect anyway. Of course such flagrant violation is not always necessary, and specific intent to violate the Automatic Stay is not required at all for an action to be willful. Merely having the general intent to commit the complained of act (making a phone call, issuing a demand letter) justifies these damages. Whether or not the creditor knew that the offending action violated the Automatic Stay is irrelevant. Thus, creditors identified on a mailing matrix were deemed to have constructive notice of the case and their actions constituted willful violations of the Stay. See, Fleet Mortgage Group v. Kaneb, 196 F.3d 265, 268-69 (1st Cir. 1999); see also, Giochman v. Bloom (In re Bloom), 875 F.2d 224 (9th Cir. 1989) (when creditor has actual notice of the Stay, court presumes the violation was deliberate).

Step Two: Distinguishing Actual Damages

The first courts that considered damages for intentional violations of the Automatic Stay had to grapple with the fact that the Bankruptcy Code did not define "actual damages" at all. Relying instead on the definition of the term "actual" those courts concluded that: (a) individuals can sustain emotional injuries; (b) the Code therefore treats such damages as "actual" ones; and (c) there was no limitation in the Code on what, or how much, "actual damages" could be recovered. Holden v. IRS (In re Holden), 226 B.R. 809 (Bankr. D. Vt. 1998), and In re Carrigan, 109 B.R. 167 (W.D.N.C. 1989).

Soon after the issue began to be explored, the First Circuit concluded that emotional distress constituted a form of actual damages. Fleet Mortgage Group v. Kaneb, 196 F.3d 265 (1st Cir. 1999). A few years later the Ninth Circuit agreed in Dawson v. Washington Mutual Bank, 390 F.3d 1139 (9th Cir. 2004). The court first concluded that emotional distress damages were allowed as recovery under 363(k) was limited to individuals, who could suffer emotional damages, as distinct from corporations. The court then pointed out that the Automatic Stay traditionally had two aims. The first was to maximize the value of the estate (financial), and the second was to provide a quiet period for the debtor (non-financial). Damages for emotional distress were therefore among the actual damages that arose from violating the "non-financial" aim of the Stay. Hence, emotional distress damages could be granted in and of themselves -- not necessarily in combination with other forms of damages. The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals disagreed.

In Aiello v. Providian Financial, the Seventh Circuit concluded that emotional injuries were actual damages but relied on the legislative history of 11 U.S.C. 362(k) and the traditional hesitancy of Bankruptcy Courts to entertain claims of emotional injury to conclude that such damages could only be granted as part of a broader scheme, including non-emotional damages. Aiello, 239 F.3d 876 (7th Cir. 2001). In that case the Seventh Circuit pointed out that emotional distress was a tort cause of action and rightfully belonged in state court -- not being ruled upon by a bankruptcy court. Id.

Step Three: Proving Emotional Distress

While consensus has developed on the recoverability of damages for emotional distress, there has been disagreement on the subject of how best to establish the existence of genuine distress. Is a doctor's opinion needed? How about a non-MD psychologist? Could other disciplines be called upon to answer the question? While a majority of courts still require medical testimony to establish distress, since 1999, several courts of appeal have started to reconsider the issue. See generally, In re Brockington, 129 B.R. 68 (Bankr. D.S.C. 1991), see also, In re Diviney, 211 B.R. 951 (Bankr. N.D. Okla 1997), In re Skeen, 248 B.R. 312 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2000), In re Mercer, 48 B.R. 562 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1985), In re Jacobs, 100 B.R. 357 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1989); but see In re Putnam, 167 B.R. 737 (Bankr. D.N.H. 1994).

The First Circuit took up the question determining emotional distress damages in Fleet Mortgage Group v. Kaneb, 196 F.3d 265 (1st Cir. 1999). In that case the debtor had filed a chapter 13 petition and converted his case to one under chapter 7. A mortgage lender with respect to one of the debtor's homes instituted foreclosure proceedings without first modifying the Automatic Stay. Although the foreclosure action was withdrawn 6 weeks later, the debtor sought damages for emotional distress. The court found in favor of the debtor and assessed emotional distress damages of $25,000 based solely on the debtor's testimony. In drawing its conclusion, the court observed that emotional distress damages were "actual" ones and that testimony regarding the decline in the debtor's social life and changes in his eating and sleeping habits since the foreclosure was sufficient proof. No further showing or expert testimony was needed.

The Seventh Circuit considered the issue and came to the same conclusions -- albeit with a different outcome -- in Aiello v. Providian Financial. There the debtor had filed a petition under chapter 7 and her creditor sent a letter requesting that she sign a reaffirmation agreement or face fraud charges. The court wrote that the debtor could not recover damages for emotional distress because she had not also alleged financial damages. However, the court pointed out that if the debtor had shown financial damages she might be able to recover emotional distress damages as well under the "clean-up" doctrine of equity. Aiello, 239 F.3d 876 (7th Cir. 2001).

The next circuit to consider the issue was the Ninth Circuit. There, in Dawson v. Washington Mutual Bank, the court found that emotional distress damages are actual damages and therefore recoverable, but in order to do so the debtor must clearly show that he or she suffered significant harm and demonstrate a causal connection between that harm and the complained-of violation of the Stay. Dawson, 390 F.3d 1139 (9th Cir. 2004). In addition, that distress would have to be distinct from the anxiety inherent in the bankruptcy process.

Finally, the Fifth Circuit considered the issue in a case involving a debtor's ex-wife's divorce attorney refusing to agree to an order releasing him from prison, after the debtor had filed a petition under chapter 13, until the attorney's fees were paid by the debtor. Young v. Repine, No. 06-20807 (5th Cir. 2008). The court agreed with the other circuits in finding that emotional distress damages were actual damages and recoverable. The court articulated the evidentiary standard that the debtor must present "specific information concerning the damages caused by the emotional distress rather than relying only on generalized assertions." Id.

Securing Damages Due to Emotional Distress

All circuit courts that have considered the issue have determined that damages for emotional distress are proper where there are violations of the automatic stay. For practitioners, the questions remains: what evidence must be present to justify a finding of those damages?

First, the question is: can emotional damages can be recovered without a showing of financial damages? The only circuit to consider the issue directly on point was the Seventh Circuit, who rejected the idea, stating the reasons for the automatic stay were financial and not for peace of mind. It is likely that the other courts would allow for emotional damages without a showing of financial damages, although the findings for emotional distress have generally been low. As a practical matter, without a showing of financial loss, it is unlikely that a finding of emotional distress alone would compensate a debtor for the costs of the litigation.

Second, what must an attorney present as evidence of the emotional distress to recover damages? The courts have rejected the requirements that a debtor, or other plaintiff, show medial evidence of a physical manifestation of emotional distress. Therefore, a debtor need not present medical testimony or other evidence regarding the extent of the distress. However, the debtor must present specific evidence of the distress. This evidence includes descriptions of changes in the debtor's social life, belief of those around them, or changes in the debtor's other habits. This evidence has been accepted by the courts as specific enough to justify awarding damages for emotional distress. The other option, instead of showing specific effects of the emotional distress, a debtor could show that the actions by the creditor were so extreme that there must have been emotional distress on the part of the debtor. Instances where this argument was accepted by the court include forcing the debtor to cancel her eight year-old's birthday party, reposing the debtor's car during the section 341 meeting, or coming to the debtor's home and banging on the door for several minutes to repossess property inside. Obviously, these situations are extreme and hopefully rare, but if a debtor has experienced similar action, the specific evidence related to the distress is likely not required for a finding of damages.

Conclusions

Section 362 provides that the Automatic Stay goes into effect immediately when a petition in bankruptcy is filed, remains in force during the case, and is replaced by a permanent injunction following discharge. Creditors that violate the Stay can be ordered to disgorge property of the estate, pay actual damages such as lost wages, attorneys' fees, and court costs, and even pay punitive damages. Debtors have even been able to secure damages for emotional distress following a Stay violation.

Almost all courts to consider this issue have found that emotional distress damages are recoverable for violations of the automatic stay. They have found that these damages are actual damages as required in the statute and that Congress intended that language to have a broad meaning. Even the courts that did not find emotional damages to be recoverable as actual damages have found that they can likely be awarded by a court in connection with other damages, notably financial damages. Courts also require detailed evidence as to the emotional distress suffered by the debtor. While most courts no longer require medical evidence, they do require specific testimony as to the changes that they emotional damage caused in the lives of the debtors. However, once the evidentiary standard has been met, courts have been willing to grant emotional distress damages for violations of the automatic stay as part of the award to debtors.

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion of Bankruptcy Code sections 341, 362, and 363, see Collier on Bankruptcy

- 341.01;
- 362.01;
- 363.01

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the

- Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Mazyar (Mazy) Hedayat is an attorney and blogger in Chicago. Over the years he has developed a network of blogs and websites including www.practicehacker.com (legal technology) and <http://illinoisbankruptcylawyerblog.com/> (bankruptcy law). Mazy presents to professional groups and writes about law, business, and the web. He also consults with clients about using web 2.0, enterprise 2.0, and semantic search to practice more effectively. Most recently Mazy has had the opportunity to work with a variety of companies entering the legal technology space. Mazy went to college at the University of Chicago and University of Michigan, got his MBA from U.M.'s Ross School of Business, and obtained his law degree from DePaul University. He is president of M. Hedayat & Associates, P.C. and Aegis Title Services, Inc., started elawcentral, one of the first legal web-portals, and co-developed document sharing and collaboration site lawfiles. Mazy has held Series 7 and 63 securities licenses as well as a business broker's license. In his "free time" he tries his hand at Halo 3: ODST and Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2 with his 10-year old son (who usually wins).

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

38 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Piazza on In re R. Ring Enterprises, Inc.

2009 Emerging Issues 4478

Deborah J. Piazza on In re R. Ring Enterprises, Inc., 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 685 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. Feb. 18, 2009): Can a debtor's time to assume or reject unexpired leases of nonresidential real property be indefinitely extended?

By Deborah Piazza

October 14, 2009

SUMMARY: In this LexisNexis Emerging Issues Analysis, Deborah J. Piazza examines In re R. Ring Enterprises, Inc., 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 685 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. Feb. 18, 2009), in which the issue was whether a debtor could indefinitely extend the time to assume or reject its nonresidential real property leases under 11 U.S.C. § 365(d)(4) if it filed, but did not confirm, a plan which included the assumption of such leases.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Can a debtor indefinitely extend the time to assume or reject its nonresidential real property leases under 11 U.S.C. § 365(d)(4) if it files, but does not confirm, a plan which includes the assumption of such leases? According to the Bankruptcy Court in the Northern District of California, the answer may be yes!

BAPCPA

Since the enactment of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA"), there has been extensive analysis and discussion regarding a debtor's time to assume or reject nonresidential real property leases under section 365(d)(4) of title 11 (the "Bankruptcy Code"). Prior to BAPCPA, a debtor would routinely request, and often be granted, several extensions of time to assume or reject its unexpired nonresidential real property leases. This was typical of a chapter 11 debtor, especially in large retail cases where a debtor's leasehold interests were often the most valuable asset in the bankruptcy estate. BAPCPA has changed that strategy for debtors.

Under BAPCPA, section 365(d)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code was revised to provide that a debtor must assume or reject its nonresidential real property leases within 210 days (120 days, plus a 90 day extension for cause). The debtor may only receive a further extension if the landlord consents to such extension. In today's depressed real estate market, it may not be a problem to receive the landlord's consent to an extension of time. However, once the market turns, will landlords be willing to allow debtors to continue to extend their time to assume or reject leases and maintain control over the landlord's property? While many debtors and debtors' attorneys have had much anxiety over such time restrictions, the Bankruptcy Court in In re R. Ring Enterprises, Inc., 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 685 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. Feb. 18, 2009) may have offered everyone a solution.

In re R. Ring Enterprises, Inc.

In In re R. Ring Enterprises, Inc., the court made clear that for a debtor to assume or reject a nonresidential real property lease in a timely manner the debtor need only act within the time limitations set forth in the Bankruptcy Code, not the Court. Hence, as long as the debtor has filed a motion or plan which provides for the assumption or rejection of its leases prior to the expiration of the time as set forth in the Bankruptcy Code, the debtor will have effectively extended its time to assume or reject its leases. The quandary will then arise where, as in In re R. Ring Enterprises, Inc., the debtor has not obtained an order prior to the expiration of the applicable time period. Can a debtor be permitted to adjourn such motion or plan confirmation in perpetuity, thereby allowing for an unlimited extension of time? According to the court in In re R. Ring Enterprises, Inc., the answer is yes.

The Bankruptcy Court in relying upon In re Victoria Station, Inc., 840 F. 2d 682 (9th Cir. 1988), which addressed the issue in a pre-BAPCPA case, found that while BAPCPA did amend the rules regarding an extension of time to assume or reject leases to provide that the debtor must now have an order entered prior to the expiration of such time period, an order to assume a lease is not required prior to the expiration of such time. Other courts have followed In re R. Ring Enterprises, Inc. with support. See e.g., In re Amerlink, Ltd., 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 2349 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. Aug. 12, 2009).

High Risk Strategy

However, before relying upon such a strategy, one must proceed with caution. If a debtor were to file a motion or plan which provides for the assumption or rejection of leases without being certain of the ultimate disposition of the leases, the court could refuse any adjournments and require the debtor to go forward on its motion or plan confirmation. At that time, if the disposition of the debtor's leasehold interests is still unresolved and the debtor withdraws the motion or plan to avoid assumption, its leases could be deemed rejected and the debtor could lose potentially valuable assets of the estate. Further, whether the rejection is effective as of the date of the withdrawal of the plan or motion, the date the plan or motion were filed, or the date the time to assume or reject originally expired could also have a significant impact on the value of the debtor's estate. While the courts in both In re R. Ring Enterprises, Inc. and In re Victoria Station, Inc. dealt with the assumption of leases, the same analysis could apply to a lease rejection so that a debtor seeking to reject its leases through a motion or plan could subsequently amend its motion or plan to provide for assumption of its leases prior to its approval.

Lenders' Growing Trend of Seeking Immediate Liquidation Sales

Further, in In re R. Ring Enterprises, Inc., it was the landlord which sought an order compelling the rejection of the leases. However, in this economic market, it may well be the debtor's lenders who are more concerned with the debtor's treatment of its leasehold interests than the landlord. While there is no specific time period set forth in the Bankruptcy Code by which a debtor must sell its assets, many lenders today are requiring that the debtors sell their assets by a date certain or risk losing their debtor in possession financing. Because lenders are demanding immediate liquidation sales in many cases, debtors now have a limited ability to formulate a restructuring plan within the time constraints set by the lender. Consequently, if the time constraints of the lender are more stringent than those set forth in the Bankruptcy Code, a debtor may have very few options in its chapter 11 case. The court in R. Ring Enterprises, Inc. may have broadened such options for a debtor.

Burden of Proof to Show Debtor's Motives Improper

Assuming a debtor files a motion or plan providing for the assumption of leases before it was certain of the disposition of its leases to allow for additional time to market and analyze the value, would a party be able to prove the debtor's motives were improper? How would one prove such motivations? While it may be very difficult to prove the debtor did not intend to assume or reject its leases as it proposes in its plan or motion, debtors and debtors' attorneys should still be cautioned that such practice could result in costly litigation.

Conclusion

Of course, none of the above analysis applies if the debtor is simply seeking an extension of time to assume or reject nonresidential real property leases in the traditional matter under section 365(d)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code. Since the enactment of BAPCPA, a debtor must now obtain an order of the court granting the extension of time prior to the expiration of the applicable time period. While filing a motion or plan which provides for the assumption or rejection of leases and perpetually adjourning the disposition of such motion or plan may seem attractive as a strategy if you are representing a debtor who wishes to extend its time to assume or reject leases, it is always prudent to obtain an order of the bankruptcy court granting the extension of time as opposed to taking a risk. While the debtor may need to address some objections, such actions will less likely result in the forfeiture of your client's leasehold interests.

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion of injunctions under Bankruptcy Code section 365(d), see Collier on Bankruptcy,

- 365.04 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the

- Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the

- bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Deborah J. Piazza is a partner at Hodgson Russ LLP. She concentrates her practice in complex transactional, litigation, and advisory work relating to various types of restructurings, commercial finance, chapter 11 bankruptcies, and workouts. She has experience representing corporate debtors, creditors, and other related parties in restructurings, asset-based financings, and real and personal property acquisitions and dispositions. Ms. Piazza also sits on the panel of chapter 7 bankruptcy trustees in the Southern District of New York. She can be reached at dpiazza@hodgsonruss.com or 646.218.7560.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

39 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Kenneth Klee. All Rights Reserved.

Klee on Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Bailey

2009 Emerging Issues 4472

Professor Kenneth N. Klee on the Supreme Court's holding in Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Bailey, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 4537, 129 S. Ct. 2195 (2009)

By Kenneth Klee

October 13, 2009

SUMMARY: In this LexisNexis Emerging Issues Analysis, Professor Kenneth N. Klee discusses the holding in Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Bailey, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 4537, 129 S. Ct. 2195 (2009), the most recent in a long line of five other Supreme Court cases consistently precluding collateral attack on final bankruptcy court judgments, even where the scope of the judgments arguably exceed the subject matter jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The Lesson To Be Learned: Parties challenging a bankruptcy court's final order almost always must take a direct appeal or be forever barred from collateral attack.

In Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Bailey, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 4537, 129 S. Ct. 2195 (2009), the Supreme Court granted certiorari to review the decision of the Second Circuit in In re Johns-Manville, 517 F.3d 52 (2d Cir. 2008), interpreting the 1986 confirmation order and injunction in the Manville chapter 11 plan. As provided in the plan, Bankruptcy Judge Burt Lifland approved a settlement providing that Manville's insurers, including petitioner The Travelers Indemnity Company, would contribute $770 million to the corpus of an asbestos claimants' trust in exchange for a release from any "Policy Claims" channeled to the trust. Some asbestos claimants, however, filed direct or independent action claims against Travelers based on Travelers' alleged wrongdoing, independent of any wrongdoing of Manville. Travelers asked Bankruptcy Judge Lifland to enjoin the direct action claims based on the 1986 confirmation order and injunction. In settlement of this matter, Travelers agreed to pay the direct action claimants $445 million for a 2004 bankruptcy court order "clarifying" that the direct or independent actions are, and always have been, permanently barred by the 1986 confirmation order and injunction. In issuing its 2004 order, Judge Lifland found that the direct action claims were inextricably intertwined with Travelers' long relationship as Manville's insurer. As such, they were barred by the 1986 confirmation order and injunction.

Some individual asbestos claimants and Chubb Indemnity Insurance Company objected to the 2004 settlement and appealed. The district court affirmed, but the Second Circuit reversed, holding that the direct actions were not enjoined by the 1986 order or injunction and that the 2004 clarifying order was beyond the subject matter jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. The Court granted certiorari, 129 S. Ct. 1606, to consider whether the bankruptcy court had subject matter jurisdiction to authorize the inclusion in a chapter 11 confirmation order of a release of non-debtor claims and to enjoin their prosecution against a non-debtor, if the claim asserted does not seek a recovery from the debtor estate or give rise to a claim for indemnity or contribution from the debtor estate, even though the released entity contributed major funding necessary to confirm the chapter 11 plan.

The Court ducked the issue of jurisdiction over third party releases and decided the case narrowly based on the finality of the 1986 Confirmation order. Under the Court's precedent in Local Loan v. Hunt, 292 U.S. 234, 239 (1934), the bankruptcy court clearly had jurisdiction to enforce its prior order. The Second Circuit erred in holding that the order could be collaterally attacked.

Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Bailey is the most recent in a long line of five other Supreme Court bankruptcy and insolvency cases consistently precluding collateral attack on final bankruptcy court judgments, even where the scope of the judgments arguably exceed the subject matter jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. As explained more fully in my recent book Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court (LexisNexis 2008), if a court renders a final judgment in a contested action, res judicata precludes the parties from litigating the question of the court's subject matter jurisdiction in a subsequent litigation, unless the subject matter of the action was so plainly beyond the court's jurisdiction that its entertaining the action was a manifest abuse of authority. Beginning in Oriel v. Russell, 278 U.S. 358, 363 (U.S. 1929), the Court held that a turnover order issued under the Bankruptcy Act could not be collaterally attacked in a later contempt proceeding. About a decade later, in Stoll v. Gottlieb, 305 U.S. 165, 171 (U.S. 1938), 305 U.S. 165 (1938) the Court precluded collateral attack on a reorganization plan which eliminated a creditor's right to proceed against a third party guarantor. Even if the bankruptcy court lacked jurisdiction to issue such an order, the creditor's sole remedy was to object to plan confirmation and take a direct appeal rather than engage in a collateral attack. Likewise, in Chicot County Drainage Dist. v. Baxter State Bank, 308 U.S. 371, 375 (U.S. 1940), the Court held that a bondholder could not collaterally attack an order confirming a municipal readjustment plan, even when the statute on which the plan was based was later declared unconstitutional. The Court reasoned that the district court that confirmed the plan had jurisdiction to determine its own jurisdiction, and if the bondholder wanted to challenge the jurisdiction, it was required to do so in the bankruptcy case or in a direct appeal, not in a collateral attack. In a similar vein, the Court has held that when creditors fail to appeal a sale order, they may not later ask for return of property transferred under the order. See New Haven Inclusion Cases, 399 U.S. 392, 481 (U.S. 1970) "[W]e agree with Penn Central that the Committee's request for the return of the stock is foreclosed by res judicata. For the Committee-as well as all the other bondholders-took no appeal from the order of the reorganization court directing the transfer of the New Haven assets subject to a later determination of value." (footnote omitted). More recently, in Celotex Corp. v. Edwards, 514 U.S. 300, 307 (U.S. 1995), 514 U.S. 300 (1995) the Court upheld as within the bankruptcy court's "related to" jurisdiction, the bankruptcy court's issuance of an injunction in a Bankruptcy Code case against a judgment creditor proceeding to execute on a surety bond posted by the debtor. In so holding, however, the Court noted in dictum that if the creditor contended the power to issue the injunction was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, its recourse was to object to the injunction in the court that issued it and challenge it on direct appeal rather than through a collateral attack. See id. at 306-307, 313.

Based on this long line of precedent, the Court had little trouble deciding Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Bailey. Justice Souter, writing the opinion of the Court for a seven judge majority, held squarely that Bankruptcy Judge Burt Lifland's 2004 order clarifying his previous 1986 final confirmation order did not open the original confirmation order to collateral attack. 129 S. Ct. at 2203, 2205. Thus, the Second Circuit could not properly consider whether the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction and authority to enter the injunction in 1986. Nor could the Second Circuit preclude the bankruptcy court from interpreting and enforcing its 1986 confirmation order and injunction. See id. at 2205.

Justice Stevens authored a dissent, which Justice Ginsburg joined, noting that the bankruptcy court's 2004 order expanded the 1986 injunction rather than clarifying it. This is why Travelers paid $445 million in 2004 in exchange for the order. Plainly the 1986 injunction which enjoined actions arising out of Manville's insurance policies did not preclude actions against insurers for their own misconduct. See id. at 2207-09. Thus, the Second Circuit had jurisdiction to consider the 2004 "clarifying" order and concluded correctly that the bankruptcy court lacked jurisdiction to enjoin state-law claims against insurers for their own wrongdoing.

Advocacy Tip: As in so many cases, the majority and dissent disagree about the plain meaning of a phrase and whether the Court should look behind the four corners of the court's order to determine its meaning. Like it or not, familiarity with the Court's plain-meaning jurisprudence is a staple of modern practice. For an in depth discussion of "plain meaning" and other maxims, see Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court at 14-36.

LexisNexis Emerging Issues Analysis: Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Bailey, 129 S. Ct. 2195 (2009), Copyright 2009 Kenneth N. Klee, All Rights Reserved.

RELATED LINKS: To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the

- Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the

- bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

For an in depth discussion of "plain meaning" and other maxims, see

- Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court at 14-36.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Kenneth N. Klee is a nationally recognized expert on bankruptcy law. He is a tenured professor at the UCLA School of Law and a founding partner of Klee, Tuchin, Bogdanoff & Stern LLP, specializing in corporate reorganization, insolvency, and bankruptcy law. From 1974 to 1977, Professor Klee served as associate counsel to the Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. House of Representatives, where he was one of the principal drafters of the 1978 Bankruptcy Code. He served as a consultant on bankruptcy legislation to the U.S. Department of Justice in 1983-1984. From 1992-2000, he served as a member of the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules to the Judicial Conference of the United States. From 2000-2003, and previously from 1988-1990, Professor Klee served as a lawyer delegate to the Ninth Circuit Judicial Conference. From 2005 to 2008 he served as member of the executive committee of the National Bankruptcy Conference, a capacity in which he previously served from 1985 to 1988, and 1992-1999. He also served as chair of the NBC's legislation committee from 1992 to 1999. Professor Klee is a past president and member of the board of governors of the Financial Lawyers Conference. From 2003-2008 he was named by the Daily Journal as one of California's Top 100 Lawyers. In the February 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, and 2008 editions of Los Angeles Magazine, he was named one of the Top 10 Super Lawyers for Los Angeles County. Law Dragon has included him among the top 500 lawyers in the United States in 2005, 2007, and 2008. In March 2005, he was named by the Century City Bar as Bankruptcy Lawyer of the Year. In November 2006, the Central District of California Consumer Bankruptcy Attorneys Association bestowed on him the Calvin Ashland Award as consumer bankruptcy attorney of the year. In October, 2007 he received the Excellence in Education Award from the Endowment for Education of the National Conference of Bankruptcy Judges. Professor Klee has recently authored Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court (2009). He also has co-authored Business Reorganization in Bankruptcy (with Scarberry, 1995, 2d ed. 2001, 3d ed. 2006) and Fundamentals of Bankruptcy Law (4th ed., with Treister, 1996), and has authored or co-authored numerous articles on bankruptcy law. Professor Klee's Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court was published in 2008 by LexisNexis.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

40 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

S. Andrew Jurs on Wirum v. Warren (In re Warren)

2009 Emerging Issues 4188

S. Andrew Jurs on Wirum v. Warren (In re Warren), 568 F.3d 1113 (9th Cir. 2009)

By S. Andrew Jurs

August 28, 2009

SUMMARY: The Ninth Circuit in Wirum v. Warren (In re Warren) considered whether the 45-day filing requirement of Code section 521(i)(1) is a hard and fast deadline that the bankruptcy court may not extend. Going against numerous lower court decisions, the Ninth Circuit held that the automatic dismissal of section 521(i)(1) is not quite automatic if the bankruptcy court decides to waive the section 521(a)(1) filing requirements and retain the case.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Following the "Minority" Approach, the Ninth Circuit Holds That the 45-Day Filing Requirement of Code Section 521(i)(1) Is Subject to Extension by the Bankruptcy Court

Section 521(i)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code requires a debtor to file a list of creditors and financial information within 45 days of filing the petition or face dismissal of the bankruptcy case. In Wirum v. Warren (In re Warren), 568 F.3d 1113, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 13062 (9th Cir. June 18, 2009), the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit was asked to determine, in a matter of first impression in the circuit, whether this requirement constitutes a hard and fast deadline depriving the bankruptcy court of its power to extend the deadline.

Facts and Procedural History

In September 2006, the State of California froze the bank accounts of Steven Jay Warren (the "Debtor") in an attempt to obtain over $93,330.46 owed by the Debtor in overdue child support payments. Shortly thereafter, on October 11, 2006, the Debtor filed bankruptcy under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. According to the Ninth Circuit, this filing was "an apparent attempt to avoid his child support obligations." Attached to Debtor's chapter 7 petition was a list of creditors, but he did not include any of the other financial information required by 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(1).

The next day, the bankruptcy court issued its standard order notifying the Debtor that his case might be dismissed if he did not submit the required financial information within fifteen days. The Debtor did not respond to this order, nor did he file any additional financial information. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court issued an order setting for hearing on November 17, 2006, the determination of whether to dismiss the Debtor's case and whether to sanction the Debtor and/or his counsel for failure to file the required information in a timely manner.

Two days before the scheduled hearing, Andrea Wirum, the chapter 7 trustee (the "Trustee"), filed a response to the bankruptcy court's show cause order and requested that the bankruptcy court not dismiss the case. In her response, the Trustee asserted that she needed additional time to investigate the circumstances surrounding the filing of the Debtor's petition and whether assets existed for distribution to creditors. When the Debtor did not appear at the hearing, the bankruptcy court granted the Trustee's request and did not dismiss the case.

Almost four months later, on March 6, 2007, the Debtor filed a motion to dismiss his bankruptcy case on the grounds that he failed to obtain prepetition credit counseling or apply for a waiver of this requirement, such that he failed to qualify as a "debtor" under 11 U.S.C. § 109(h). Subsequently, before the bankruptcy court even had a chance to rule, the Debtor moved again to dismiss his case due to his failure to file the required financial information of 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(1) within 45 days of filing his petition as required by 11 U.S.C. § 521(i).

On April 9, 2007, the bankruptcy court denied both of the Debtor's motions to dismiss. Four days later, the bankruptcy court issued an order waiving the requirement that Debtor file the financial information required by section 521(a)(1). This order was issued by the bankruptcy court nunc pro tunc to November 15, 2006.

Debtor timely filed a notice of appeal to the district court, which reversed the bankruptcy court's decision and remanded with instructions to dismiss the Debtor's case. According to the district court, the bankruptcy court did not have discretion to waive the requirements of section 521(a)(1) after the 45-day deadline of section 521(i)(1) had passed; therefore, dismissal was mandatory. The Trustee timely appealed the district court's decision to the Ninth Circuit.

Legal Analysis

When Congress enacted the 2005 Act, it revised section 521 and increased a debtor's duties of financial disclosure. Section 521(a) requires a debtor to:

- (1) file
 - (A) a list of creditors; and
 - (B) unless the court orders otherwise
 - (i) a schedule of assets and liabilities;
 - (ii) a schedule of current income and current expenditures;
 - (iii) a statement of the debtor's financial affairs and, if section 342(b) applies, a certificate . . .;
 - (iv) copies of all payment advices or other evidence of payment received within 60 days before the date of the filing of the petition, by the debtor from any employer of the debtor;
 - (v) a statement of the amount of monthly net income itemized to show how the amount is calculated; and
 - (vi) a statement disclosing any reasonably anticipated increase in income or expenditures over the 12-month period following the date of the filing of the petition. . .

The enforcement mechanism for these requirements is section 521(i)(1), which provides that, if a debtor fails to file the required financial information within 45 days after filing his petition, the case will be "automatically dismissed effective on the 46th day after the date of the filing of the petition." The issue, therefore, is whether a bankruptcy court has the authority, after the passing of the 45-day filing deadline of section 521(i)(1), to extend or to waive the section 521(a)(1) filing requirements.

The majority of bankruptcy courts and district courts considering the matter have concluded that the language of section 521(i)(1) makes dismissal of a debtor's bankruptcy case mandatory if the requirements of section 521(a)(1) have not been waived within the 45-day period. See, e.g., In re Bonner, 374 B.R. 62, 64-65 (Bankr. W.D. N.Y. 2007) (holding that dismissal is automatic under section 521(i) such that an order waiving the section 521(a)(1) filing requirements must be filed before the 45-day period expires); In re Calhoun, 359 B.R. 738, 740-41 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2007); In re Lovato, 343 B.R. 268, 270 (Bankr. D. N.M. 2006); In re Ott, 343 B.R. 264, 268 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2006); In re Fawson, 338 B.R. 505, 514 (Bankr. D. Utah 2006). In contrast, one circuit court has held that a bankruptcy court has discretion to waive the section 521(a)(1) filing requirement even after the filing deadline of section 521(i)(1) has passed. See Segarra-Miranda v. Acosta-Rivera (In re Acosta-Rivera), 557 F.3d 8, 9 (1st Cir. 2009).

Commentary

Warren is significant in that it is another example of circuit courts, who do not handle bankruptcy cases on a regular basis, differing from the majority of bankruptcy courts in interpreting the 2005 Act and its confusing provisions. In one sense, the decision in Warren seems results-driven, as if the circuit court was going to make sure that this debtor did not "escape" from bankruptcy court scrutiny. Another reading, however, could be that bankruptcy courts had issued decisions with unpalatable results as a way of emphasizing the defects of the 2005 Act and that circuit courts went the opposite direction as a way of bringing some reasonableness and practicality to the legislation.

In either case, the appeals court first had to circumvent the explicit directive of section 521(i)(1) that a debtor's case will be "automatically dismissed effective on the 46th day." To do so, the court first had to find an ambiguity that would allow other sources, such as congressional intent, to influence the statutory interpretation. According to the Ninth Circuit, this ambiguity arises from a conflict between the mandatory language of section 521(i)(1) and section 521(a)(1)'s statement that bankruptcy courts have the power to "order[] otherwise," without a statutory deadline to enter such an order. 568 F.3d 1113, 1117. "Nor does any other subsection of § 521 state that there is a time limit within which a court may order[] otherwise." Id. In fact, the court found that the filing requirement of section 521(i)(1) is directed only at debtors, not at bankruptcy courts, thus making them not subject to such limitations on their power. Id. Because of the potential that section 521(i)(1)'s 45-day filing deadline does not limit the bankruptcy court's authority to "order[] otherwise" and waive the section 521(a)(1) filing requirements, the circuit court found that a statutory ambiguity exists.

With the ambiguity established, the Ninth Circuit could engage in an examination of the alternative interpretations, in light of the purpose of section 521, id. at 1117-18 (citing Burns v. Stone Forest Indus., Inc., 147 F.3d 1182, 1184 (9th Cir. 1998)), to determine Congress's reasonable purpose. The first factor that the court identified as bearing on Congress's intent was the fact that the 2005 amendments did not change section 521's grant of power to bankruptcy courts to "order[] otherwise." Id. at 1118. According to the appeals court, Congress's silence in this regard constituted an affirmative decision not to include a hard deadline for issuing such an order and that it would, in fact, be improper to imply that the 45-day deadline of the new section 521(i)(1) applied to and limited the bankruptcy court's existing authority. Id.

In the Ninth Circuit's opinion, this reading is consistent with Congress's intent to limit abusive bankruptcy filings. Id. According to the appeals court, not allowing bankruptcy courts to retain the authority to waive financial filing requirements, when the putative filing deadline has passed, will invite frivolous filings because inaction on the debtor's part will be sufficient to guarantee dismissal of the case. "[W]e are reluctant to read into the statute by implication a new limit on judicial discretion that would encourage rather than discourage bankruptcy abuse. It is safe to say that Congress, in acting BAPCPA, was not bent on placing additional weapons in the hands of abusive debtors." Id. (quoting Segarra-Miranda v. Acosta-Rivera (In re Acosta-Rivera), 557 F.3d 8, 13 (1st Cir. 2009)).

Given its interpretation of Congress's intent, the Ninth Circuit rejected the "majority approach" under which lower courts have found that the language of section 521(i)(1) should be applied, as written, to both debtors and bankruptcy courts. According to the Warren court, the bankruptcy and district courts overreached by implying that section 521(i)(1) applied to section 521(a)(1) in such a way as to limit the bankruptcy court's power to combat abusive bankruptcy filings.

The Ninth Circuit held that in this case the bankruptcy court acted within its discretion when it issued the order waiving the section 521(a)(1) filing requirements notwithstanding the passage of the 45-day filing period of section 521(i)(1).

Conclusion

In sum, whatever the Ninth Circuit's motivation, the decision in Warren is important in that it and the First Circuit's decision in Acosta-Rivera have become the majority rule among those courts of appeals considering the issue. Despite the numerous bankruptcy and district court cases to the contrary, the rule now appears to be that the "automatic dismissal" of section 521(i)(1) is not quite automatic if, at any point in time, the bankruptcy court decides to waive the section 521(a)(1) filing requirements and retain the case.

Return to Text

n1 Bankruptcy Abuse and Consumer Protection Act, Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005).

n2 Although it has no bearing on the final decision, the appeals court's discussion of the appropriate use of nunc pro tunc orders also is worthwhile reading on its own. According to the Ninth Circuit, a court's inherent power to rectify the record through the use of nunc pro tunc "is a limited one, and may be used only where necessary to correct a clear mistake and prevent injustice." 568 F.3d 1113, 1116 n.1 (quoting United States v. Sumner, 226 F.3d 1005, 1009-10 (9th Cir. 2000)). That power, however, does not allow a court to change what occurred, or to backdate an order to serve some other purpose. 568 F.3d 1113, 1116 n.1. Instead, nunc pro tunc is only appropriate where the court is making the record reflect what was actually intended. Id. Because there is nothing indicating that the bankruptcy court intended to waive the section 521(a)(1) filing requirements at any point in time prior to its rulings in April 2007 on the motions to dismiss, the Ninth Circuit felt that the bankruptcy court improperly used its nunc pro tunc power to backdate the order in an attempt to fall within the 45-day period. Id. at 1116. In other words, the bankruptcy court was wrongly trying to "alter the substance of that which actually transpired." Id. (quoting Sumner, 226 F.3d 1005, 1010).

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of Code section 521(a)(1), see

- Collier on Bankruptcy, 521.04.

For discussion of Code section 521(i), see

- Collier on Bankruptcy, 521.24.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs, of Gastonia, North Carolina, received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors' rights. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute

Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

41 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Paul H. Zumbro on In re Chrysler LLC

2009 Emerging Issues 4189

Paul H. Zumbro on In re Chrysler LLC, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 17441 (2d Cir. Aug. 5, 2009)

By Paul Zumbro

August 28, 2009

SUMMARY: Paul H. Zumbro, of Cravath, Swaine & Moore LLP, analyzes the Second Circuit's Chrysler decision, in which the court held that a dissenting minority lender could not object to a "free-and-clear" sale in circumstances where the loan documents authorized the agent to act on behalf of the secured lenders and a majority in interest of the lenders consented.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Agent May Consent to a "Free-and-Clear" Sale or Credit Bid under Section 363 of the Bankruptcy Code over Objection of Dissenting Minority Secured Lenders

It has become increasingly popular for a debtor to utilize section 363 of the Bankruptcy Code to sell all or substantially all of its assets. Given the highly leveraged capital structure of many debtors, the agent for the secured lenders is often playing a primary role in the section 363 sale process by acting at the direction of the secured lenders to consent to a sale free and clear of interests or to use the secured lenders' claims as currency to buy the debtor's assets in a "credit bid." n1 A recent decision from the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, In re Chrysler LLC, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 17411 (2d Cir. Aug. 5, 2009), held that a dissenting minority lender could not object to a "free-and-clear" sale in circumstances where the loan documents authorized the agent to act on behalf of the secured lenders and a majority in interest of the lenders consented.

Background

Section 363(f) of the Bankruptcy Code permits a debtor to sell assets out of the ordinary course of business free and clear of any lien or other interest in such property under specified circumstances. In the case of the sale of Chrysler's assets, the debtors relied in part on section 363(f)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code, which permits a sale free and clear of an entity's interest if the entity consents to the sale. In In re Chrysler LLC, the court considered whether the consent requirement of section 363(f)(2) could be satisfied without the unanimous consent of the secured lenders.

The secured parties' relationship in Chrysler was governed by three related agreements: (1) a credit agreement, (2) a collateral trust agreement, under which the collateral securing Chrysler's obligations under the credit agreement was held by a designated trustee (the collateral trustee) for the benefit of the secured lenders and (3) a security agreement, under which Chrysler and the other obligors granted to the administrative agent a security interest in substantially all of their assets.

Upon the commencement of Chrysler's chapter 11 cases, Chrysler moved to sell substantially all of its assets free and clear of interests under section 363. Chrysler argued that section 363(f)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code had been satisfied because secured lenders holding 92.5 percent of the outstanding principal amount of the loans under the credit agreement had directed the administrative agent, who, in turn, directed the collateral trustee, to consent to the sale of the debtors' assets. Three Indiana state funds holding less than 1 percent of the indebtedness (the "Indiana Funds") objected to Chrysler's sale motion. The Indiana Funds argued that the elements of section 363(f)(2) were not satisfied because the credit agreement required the unanimous consent of the secured lenders in order to "release all or substantially all of the Collateral," including in connection with a section 363 sale of the debtors' assets.

The Decision

The bankruptcy court dismissed the Indiana Funds' objection because the collateral trustee had the authority to act on behalf of the secured lenders in accordance with the loan documents, even though the secured lenders under the credit agreement did not unanimously consent to the sale. The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision on similar grounds. n2

The courts concluded that, through a series of agreements, the collateral trustee had been empowered to take any action necessary to realize upon the collateral, including consenting to a sale of the collateral free and clear of all interests under section 363 of the Bankruptcy Code at the direction of the administrative agent. By the terms of the credit agreement, the administrative agent was authorized to act, including to direct the collateral trustee, at the request of lenders holding a majority of the indebtedness. The courts found that each of these elements had been satisfied in accordance with the terms of the loan documents in connection with the collateral trustee's consent to the sale. Accordingly, having agreed to the framework created by the credit agreement and related security documents, the Indiana Funds were bound by the decision of the majority of the lender group to consent to the sale of the debtors' assets under section 363. n3

The courts rejected the Indiana Funds' argument that the amendment and waiver provision of the credit agreement required that the administrative agent receive the consent of all lenders before it could authorize the collateral trustee to release all or substantially all of the collateral. Rather, the transfer of the debtors' assets to New Chrysler pursuant to section 363 of the Bankruptcy Code was simply a "collective action to enforce rights as authorized under the agreed-upon specific provisions of the parties' loan agreements," n4 which did not require any amendment, supplement or modification of the loan documents. The Second Circuit stated that "[b]ecause the Sale required no amendment to loan documents, Chrysler was not required to seek, let alone receive, the [dissenting lenders'] written consent." n5 Moreover, the consent to the sale was not a "release" of collateral because the secured lenders' lien would attach to the proceeds of the sale, which remained as collateral to secure the loan made by the lenders. n6

Effect of the Decision

Although the decision in Chrysler was based on specific provisions in the applicable loan documents, the language relied upon by the court of appeals and the bankruptcy court is fairly customary in U.S. syndicated credit facilities, in which collateral enforcement actions taken by the agent may typically be authorized by the majority in interest of the lenders. The courts appear to be saying that this contract-based "majority rule" approach overrides what could be argued to be individual statutory rights under the Bankruptcy Code.

Other recent bankruptcy court decisions are consistent with this approach. For example, a recent Delaware bankruptcy court decision reached a similar conclusion in the credit bid context, holding that the administrative agent had the authority to enter a credit bid on behalf of the secured lenders pursuant to section 363(k) of the Bankruptcy Code, over the objection of some of the secured lenders. n7 The court in GWLS concluded that credit bidding by the collateral agent, acting at the direction of the secured lenders holding a majority of the indebtedness in accordance with the loan documents, fell within the collateral agent's delegated powers to "dispose of or deliver the Collateral" on behalf of the secured parties pursuant to any applicable law, which the court determined included the Bankruptcy Code. Accordingly, the dissenting lender was forced to have its claim included in the credit bid along with the rest of the syndicate. The bankruptcy court in the Southern District of New York relied on Chrysler and GWLS in reaching a similar conclusion in approving a credit bid made by the agent for substantially all of the assets of Metaldyne Corporation over the objection of a dissenting lender. n8

These recent decisions suggest that when secured lenders broadly delegate to an agent or trustee the power to take collateral enforcement actions or to exercise any other remedies against the collateral, an objecting secured creditor will likely be bound by the decision of lenders holding a majority of the indebtedness. When a secured lender enters into syndicated loan agreement containing provisions like the ones examined in Chrysler and GWLS, it is agreeing to a collective arrangement under which the agent or trustee may be authorized to exercise remedies under section 363 of the Bankruptcy Code, including to consent to the sale of all or substantially all of a debtor's assets free and clear of any liens or interests or to credit bid for a debtor's assets, without receiving the unanimous consent of the secured lenders.

Return to Text

n1 Section 363(k) of the Bankruptcy Code allows a secured creditor to offset an allowed secured claim against the "purchase price of property" in a section 363 sale, referred to as "credit bidding."

n2 In certain circumstances, an appeal may be taken directly to the court of appeals (bypassing the district court) if the court of appeals authorizes the direct appeal. 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2). The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit granted a motion for direct appeal in Chrysler.

n3 In re Chrysler, 405 B.R. 84, 101-03 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2009), aff'd, Chrysler, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 17411.

n4 405 B.R. 101, 103.

n5 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 17411, at *31.

n6 405 B.R. 101, 103.

n7 In re GWLS Holdings, Inc., 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 378 (Bankr. D. Del. Feb. 23, 2009) (appeal pending).

n8 In re Metaldyne, No. 09-13412 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Aug. 12, 2009) (unpublished opinion).

RELATED LINKS: For discussion in Collier on Bankruptcy on sales free of liens or interests, click here.

For discussion in Collier on Bankruptcy on section 363(b) sales, click here.

For discussion in Collier on Bankruptcy on section 363(c) sales, click here.

For the American College of Bankruptcys Circuit Review of Asset Sales, click here.

For the American College of Bankruptcys Best Practices Report on 363(b) Sales, click here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Paul H. Zumbro is a partner in the Cravath, Swaine & Moore LLP Restructuring and Corporate Departments. He has experience in all phases of capital raising and balance sheet restructurings, including out-of-court debt exchanges and debtor-in-possession financings. His restructuring practice draws on his extensive experience in leveraged finance, as well as his experience with disputes that have arisen post-credit crunch. Mr. Zumbro represented the financing sources in many of the most significant LBO financing transactions over the past several years, including the acquisition of Neiman Marcus by TPG Inc. and Warburg Pincus LLC and the acquisition of Freescale Semiconductor by The Blackstone Group. Following the collapse of the credit markets, he advised the financing sources in a number of high-profile LBO transactions that encountered difficulties or collapsed, including the multi-billion dollar proposed acquisitions of United Rentals, Alliance Data Systems, Clear Channel and Huntsman Corporation. More recently, Mr. Zumbro has been involved with a number of high-profile bankruptcy and restructuring matters, including representing Goldman Sachs in connection with Lyondell Chemical Company's $8.015 billion DIP facility.

Mr. Zumbro received a B.A., cum laude, from Yale College in 1992, and his J.D. in 1997 from Columbia Law School, where he was a Stone Scholar. He has been recognized by The Legal 500 for his skill in the National Bank Lending arena. In May 2009, he co-chaired a panel entitled Know Your Counterparty--Learning Lessons from the Credit Crunch at the International Bar Association's 26th International Financial Law Conference, in Rome, Italy. More recently, he gave a seminar presentation at the LSTA entitled Section 363 Bankruptcy Sales: Is There a New Trend that Could Undermine Creditors' Rights?.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

42 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Adam P. Storchak on the Automatic Stay and Environmental Claims

2009 Emerging Issues 4024

Adam P. Storchak on Application of the Automatic Stay Against Environmental Claims

By Adam P. Storchak

July 16, 2009

SUMMARY: Adam P. Storchak, of Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP, considers the extent to which an environmental action is precluded by application of the Bankruptcy Code section 362 automatic stay or the bankruptcy court's discretionary power under Code section 105. This analysis is an excerpt from Collier Monograph: Environmental Issues in Bankruptcy Cases (LexisNexis Matthew Bender 2009).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Adam P. Storchak on Application of the Automatic Stay Against Environmental Claims n1

Adam P. Storchak, of Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP, considers the extent to which an environmental action is precluded by application of the 362 automatic stay or the bankruptcy court's discretionary power under Code section 105. This analysis is an excerpt from Collier Monograph: Environmental Issues in Bankruptcy Cases (LexisNexis Matthew Bender 2009).

Under section 362(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, a bankruptcy petition imposes an automatic stay of all judicial, administrative or other actions or proceedings against the debtor or the enforcement of any judgment obtained before the filing of the petition. n2 Certain governmental proceedings are exempt from the automatic stay under the police or regulatory power exception. n3 Actions brought for the enforcement of monetary judgments, however, are not subject to the police powers exception and are therefore barred by the automatic stay. n4 Where environmental claims are not subject to the automatic stay, a debtor may under certain circumstances petition the bankruptcy court for a discretionary stay of governmental enforcement proceedings and injunctions pursuant to section 105(a).

Certain Environmental Actions Are Subject to the Automatic Stay

Section 362(b)(4) provides that the filing of a bankruptcy petition does not operate as a stay of any action by a governmental unit "to enforce such governmental unit's . . . police and regulatory power, including the enforcement of a judgment other than a money judgment, obtained in an action or proceeding by the governmental unit to enforce such governmental unit's . . . police or regulatory power." n5 Thus, even an action subject to the police power exception to the automatic stay must cease before execution of any resulting "money judgment." n6

An important controversial issue is what type of environmental proceedings, and what stage in the proceeding, constitutes the "enforcement of a money judgment." Notwithstanding debtors' arguments that CERCLA section 107 costs recovery actions and actions to impose fines are merely attempts to collect on prepetition debts and are therefore actions for "enforcement of a money judgment," courts generally have held that the government may pursue the litigation to judgment, but is barred by the automatic stay from enforcing that judgment. n7

The courts have reached conflicting results over whether the automatic stay prevents the government from enforcing a judgment for injunctive relief if that injunction would require the debtor to spend money to clean up environmental contamination. The issue is similar to the dispute over whether a mandatory injunction constitutes a "claim." In Penn Terra, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit held that an injunction requiring cleanup was not a money judgment, even if compliance requires the debtor to spend money. n8 The court interpreted the phrase "money judgment" narrowly to mean an order that identifies the parties against whom judgment is being entered and specifies the amount such parties owe. n9 Because CERCLA injunctions or administrative orders under section 106 require the defendants or respondents to perform the work prescribed in the order, without specifying the amount to be spent, CERCLA actions do not meet the Penn Terra "money judgment" test. The Third Circuit also held that an injunction aimed at protecting against potential harm, rather than at compensation of past wrongful acts, was not a "money judgment." n10 This appears to be the majority view. n11

Other courts have held that a cleanup injunction is a "money judgment" if it requires the debtor to spend money to comply. n12 Accordingly, these courts have enjoined the enforcement of cleanup injunctions.

Police or Regulatory Power Exception

Generally, courts have treated environmental enforcement actions and other governmental claims under the environmental laws as invoking the government's police or regulatory powers, thus exempting the action from the automatic stay. n13 Section 362(b)(4) allows the government to pursue such actions against a debtor, determine the debtor's liabilities and fix the penalties, damages or costs.

To fall under the police or regulatory power exception, an action brought to enforce an environmental law must address a present threat to public health, safety or welfare. In In re W.R. Grace & Co., an action brought against the debtor by the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection (NJDEP) was found not to fall within the police or regulatory power exception to the automatic stay, because it did not address any "risk to public health, safety or welfare" where the contaminated site already had been cleaned up. n14 The court cited the holding in Penn Terra that "police/regulatory power is a limited exception to the automatic stay designed solely to protect public health and safety." n15 In the W.R. Grace case, the EPA had already cleaned up the site, so no risk to public health or safety continued to exist, and the court found that the sole purpose of the NJDEP action was to "liquidate its monetary claim for penalties." n16 As such, the action did not fall under the section 362(b)(4) exception to the automatic stay and was "null and void." n17

The "police or regulatory" exception does not apply to actions by nongovernmental claimants, such as citizen suit actions or private cost recovery actions against the debtor. n18

Discretionary Stays under Section 105

Given that the police power exception to the automatic stay generally permits governmental authorities to prosecute environmental claims and to obtain cleanup injunctions against the debtor that may be enforced outside of the bankruptcy case, and may not be dischargeable, environmental enforcement has the potential to impede a debtor's ability to reorganize. Under appropriate circumstances, the debtor may seek to limit these risks by petitioning the bankruptcy court for a discretionary stay of government enforcement proceedings and injunctions pursuant to section 105(a).

Court's Equitable Powers under Section 105. Under section 105(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, the court is empowered to "issue any order, process or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title." This provision has been interpreted as granting the court in a bankruptcy case broad equity powers. n19 These powers include the ability to enjoin other judicial or administrative proceedings when they threaten the assets of the estate or unduly interfere with the bankruptcy case. n20 Thus, under section 105 the court has the discretionary power to stay actions or proceedings that otherwise would be exempt from the automatic stay, including environmental enforcement actions. n21

Some courts have even used their equitable powers under section 105 in certain circumstances to extend an automatic stay to nondebtor third parties, given the potential interference with the debtor's reorganization that a suit against the third party might cause. In In re W.R. Grace & Co., the court employed the "unusual circumstances" test to extend the protection of an automatic stay to a nondebtor party. n22 The test considers "(1) whether the non-debtor and debtor share an identity of interest such that action against the non-debtor is essentially an action against the debtor, and (2) whether the third party action will have an adverse impact on the debtor's ability to accomplish reorganization." n23 The third party, BNSF, faced potential liability in asbestos-related personal injury actions connected to the debtor's former mining operations in Montana. The debtor, W.R. Grace, had contractual indemnification obligations to BNSF for any such liability, and was precluded from seeking contribution in the event of a damages award, so any damages awarded against BNSF would in turn be borne by W.R. Grace. The court found that suits against BNSF would have "an adverse impact on the debtor's ability to accomplish reorganization," and consequently extended the automatic stay to the suits against BNSF. n24

Standard for Granting Stay of Government Proceedings under Section 105. The test a debtor must meet in order to obtain a section 105 injunction is similar to that imposed on parties seeking a preliminary injunction: n25 (1) irreparable harm; (2) undue interference with the bankruptcy case (in lieu of the likelihood of success on the merits requirement in a nonbankruptcy action); (3) a balance of equities favoring the debtor; and (4) a lack of adverse effect on the public interest.

Courts are generally reluctant, however, to enjoin pending environmental enforcement proceedings pursuant to section 105, and some have pointed to the obligation of a debtor to comply with law under 28 U.S.C. § 959(b) as a direct requirement that the bankruptcy court has no authority to contravene by using its equitable powers under section 105 of the Bankruptcy Code. n26

In fact, at least one court simply refused to use the equitable powers granted in section 105 to stay a state air permit proceeding that resulted in the denial of the debtor's permit and the closure of the debtor's entire plant. n27

In the most well-reasoned opinion on this issue; the court in In re Security Gas & Oil, Inc. n28 acknowledged that the state's interest in protecting the public from serious environmental risk needed to be balanced against the policies of the Bankruptcy Code. The court recognized that permitting a state to enforce an environmental cleanup order or injunction based upon prepetition contamination could deny the debtor the "breathing space" needed to successfully accomplish a reorganization, and interfere with the priorities established for creditors' claims under the Bankruptcy Code. n29 At the same time, the court must weigh against these considerations the "immediacy, severity and certainty of danger to the public," as well as the state's interest in seeing its laws obeyed. n30

Nine Factors Recognized for a Ruling on a Motion for Stay of Environmental Enforcement. In view of the balance that must be struck between bankruptcy and environmental law principles, the court in In re Security Gas & Oil, Inc. identified nine factors to be considered in ruling on a motion for a stay of environmental enforcement activities under section 105:

- the immediacy, severity and certainty of the danger posed by the potential hazard;
- the extent to which the debtor is uniquely able to effect the cleanup (e.g., is the Superfund available to fund the cleanup);

- the extent to which enforcement would distort creditor priorities;
- the effect of enforcement on the likelihood of successful reorganization;
- the length of time the bankruptcy case has remained open;
- the length of time the government has delayed enforcement of the law or regulation;
- the extent to which the debtor continues to operate a similar business;
- the extent to which a compromise other than full prohibition of cleanup orders can better accommodate safety concerns with bankruptcy law policies; and
- any other factors relevant to whether injunctive relief should be granted, including the good or bad faith of the parties.

Return to Text

n1 This material is excerpted from Collier Monograph: Environmental Issues in Bankruptcy Cases, by Adam P. Storchak, Jennifer L. Wine and Erin K. Yates, and available at the LexisNexis online store: <http://www.lexisnexis.com/store/us/>.

n2 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(4); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 362.05[5].

n3 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(4); see also Penn Terra Ltd. v. Department of Env'tl. Resources, 733 F.2d 267, 272 (3d Cir. 1984); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 362.05[5][b][ii].

n4 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(4) (emphasis added).

n5 See Penn Terra Ltd. v. Department of Env'tl. Resources, 733 F.2d 267, 272 (3d Cir. 1984) (noting that section 362(b)(5) created an " 'exception to the exception,' [from the automatic stay] in that actions to enforce money judgments are affected by the automatic stay even if they otherwise were in furtherance" of police and regulatory powers). Section 362(b)(5) was repealed on October 21, 1998, and the language regarding money judgment was added to section 362(b)(4). n6 City of New York v. Exxon, 932 F.2d 1020, 1026 (2d Cir. 1991); United States v. Nicolet, Inc., 857 F.2d 202, 209 (3d Cir. 1988); In re Commerce Oil Co., 847 F.2d 291, 295 (6th Cir. 1988); United States v. Mattiace Indus, Inc., 73 Bankr. 816 (E.D.N.Y. 1987).

n7 Penn Terra Ltd. v. Dep't of Env'tl. Resources, 733 F.2d 267, 275 (3d Cir. 1984).

n8 733 F.2d 267, 275.

n9 733 F.2d 267, 277.

n10 Accord United States v. F.E. Gregory & Sons, Inc., 58 B.R. 590, 591-92 (W.D. Pa. 1986); United States v. Ilco, Inc., 48 B.R. 1016, 1023 (N.D. Ala. 1985); In re Security Gas & Oil, Inc., 70 B.R. 786, 790 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 1987); In re Williston Oil Corp., 54 B.R. 10, 11-12 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1984).

n11 See, e.g., Johns-Manville Sales Corp., 13 Env'tl. L. Rep. 20310 (D.N.H. 1982); In re Thomas Solvent Co., 44 B.R. 83 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1984).

n12 See, e.g., City of New York v. Exxon, 932 F.2d 1020 (2d Cir. 1991) (holding City's claim under section 107(a)(4)(B) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (CERCLA) for reimbursement of cleanup costs is not stayed by section 362(a) because the City is a governmental unit which is merely attempting to fix liability and damages in the district court action, and not attempting to execute or enforce a money judgment; also, affirming injunction against California bankruptcy court proceeding on same claim under "first filed" rule); United States v. Nicolet, Inc., 857 F.2d 202 (3d Cir. 1988); In re Commerce Oil Co., 847 F.2d 291 (6th Cir. 1988); Penn Terra, Ltd. v. Dep't of Env'tl. Resources, 733 F.2d 267 (3d Cir. 1984) (lifting the automatic stay and allowing enforcement of an injunction sought by Pennsylvania governmental authorities requiring compliance with state environmental laws governing strip mining activities); In re Wilner Wood Prods. Co. v. Maine Dep't of Env'tl. Protection, 128 B.R. 1, 3 (D. Me. 1991) (section 362 does not authorize court to stay proceeding by state environmental agency to grant or deny any emissions permits for debtor's facility); In re Commonwealth Oil Refining Co., 23 Env't Rep. Cas. (BNA) 1069 (W.D. Tex. 1983) (automatic stay under section 362(a) held inapplicable to a Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA) compliance suit against and interim status facility); United States v. Ilco, Inc., 48 B.R. 1016 (N.D. Ala. 1985) (RCRA section 7003 and CERCLA section 106 claims are excepted from stay under section 362(a)(4) and (5) as actions to enforce police or regulatory powers). But see United States v. Johns-Manville Sales Corp., 13 Env'tl. L. Rep. (Env'tl. L. Inst.) 20310 (D.N.H. 1982) (holding that an injunction action to undertake an asbestos cleanup was stayed because the government's remedy would require the debtor to spend money).

n13 In re W.R. Grace & Co., 384 B.R. 678, 682 (Bankr. D. Del. 2008).

n14 384 B.R. 678, 681.

n15 384 B.R. 678, 682.

n16 384 B.R. 678, 682; see also Penn Terra Ltd. v. Department of Environmental Resources, 733 F.2d 267 (3d Cir. 1984).

n17 City of New York v. Exxon, 932 F.2d 1020, 1026 (2d Cir. 1991) (application of the section 362(b)(4) exception "requires that [CERCLA] suits be brought by governmental units, not private persons."); In re Revere Copper & Brass, Inc. 32 B.R. 725 (S.D.N.Y. 1983).

n18 See, e.g., In re Ranch House of Orange-Brevard, 773 F.2d 1166, 1169 (11th Cir. 1985); Missouri v. United States Bankr. Court, 674 F.2d 761, 776-777 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1162 (1981); see also Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 105.

n19 In re Sec. Gas & Oil, Inc., 70 B.R. 786 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 1987); In re Tuscon Yellow Cab Co., 8 C.B. C.2d 261, 27 B.R. 621 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1983).

n20 In re Baldwin-United Corp. Litig., 765 F.2d 343, 348 (2d Cir. 1985); NLRB v. Superior Forwarding, Inc., 762 F.2d 695, 698 (8th Cir. 1985); In re Bel Air Chateau Hosp., Inc., 611 F.2d 1248, 1251 (9th Cir. 1979); see Penn Terra, Ltd. v. Dep't of Env'tl. Res., 733 F.2d 267, 274-279 (3d Cir. 1984). But see In re Big Muddy Oil Processors, Inc., No. 82-00293 (D. Wyo. Jan. 15, 1986).

n21 In re W.R. Grace & Co., 386 B.R. 17 (Bankr. D. Del. 2008).

n22 386 B.R. 17, 30.

n23 386 B.R. 17, 31; see also In re Combustion Engineering, 391 F.3d 190 (3d Cir. 2004); In re Zale Corp., 62 F.3d 746 (5th Cir. 1995); A.H. Robins Co. v. Piccinin, 788 F.2d 994 (4th Cir. 1986).

n24 In re Sec. Gas & Oil, Inc., 70 B.R. 786, 793 n.3 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 1987); In re Commonwealth Oil Ref. Co., 805 F.2d 1189 (5th Cir. 1986); In re Norwesco Dev. Corp., 68 B.R. 123 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1986); In re Beker Indus. Corp., 57 B.R. 611 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1986)

n25 In re Environmental Waste Control, Inc., 125 B.R. 546 (N.D. Ind. 1991) (denying injunction to halt EPA's enforcement of RCRA cleanup order, despite debtor's lack of funds to comply in full, because 28 U.S.C. § 959(b) mandates compliance with law regardless of debtor's finances and because of imminent threat to environment); In re Beker Indus. Corp., 57 B.R. 611, 624 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1986) (holding that section 105 does not excuse compliance with law as required by section 959(b)).

n26 Wilner Wood Prods. Co. v. Maine Dep't of Env'tl. Prot., 128 B.R. 1, 3 (D. Me. 1991) (holding that 28 U.S.C. § 959(b) is a clear mandate to comply with state laws that cannot be overridden by section 105).

n27 70 B.R. 786, 795-96 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 1987).

n28 70 B.R. 786, 795-96.

n29 70 B.R. 786, 796. Accord In re Env'tl. Waste Control, Inc., 125 B.R. 546 (N.D. Ind. 1991) (section 105 injunction denied in part based upon imminent danger to environment).

n30 70 B.R. 786, 796-97.

RELATED LINKS: For the complete Collier monograph on environmental issues in bankruptcy cases, click here.

For discussion of Code section 362, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 362.

For discussion of Code section 105, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 105.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

ADAM P. STROCHAK is a partner in the Washington, D.C., office of Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP, where he has practiced since 1993. He concentrates his practice on corporate restructuring, representing both debtors and creditors in restructuring matters in and out of court. Mr. Strochak also has represented clients in a wide variety of industries on environmental, insurance coverage, and commercial litigation matters, focusing particularly on the intersection of these disciplines with the bankruptcy laws.

In chapter 11 cases, Mr. Strochak has represented debtors from diverse industries, including telecommunications, steel, healthcare, building products and retail sales. Major debtor representations include WorldCom, Inc., Silicon Graphics, Inc., Genesis Health Ventures, Inc., Sun Healthcare Group, Inc., Enron Corporation, G-I Holdings Inc. (former known as GAF Corporation), Eagle-Picher Industries, Inc., Republic Technologies International, LLC, Brothers' Gourmet Coffee and Metallurg Inc. Mr. Strochak also regularly represents creditors in both out-of-court workouts and court-supervised restructurings. Creditor representations include the Official Committee of Asbestos Property Damage Claimants in the Federal-Mogul bankruptcy, the Senior Lenders of Owens Corning, General Electric Capital Corporation in the Kmart Corporation Chapter 11 case, GE Capital Aviation Services, Inc. in the Fairchild Dornier Corporation bankruptcy, and ChevronTexaco Corporation in the American Western Refining bankruptcy.

Mr. Strochak is a co-author, with David R. Berz and Stanley M. Spracker, of the three-volume treatise Environmental Law in Real Estate and Business Transactions (Matthew Bender), which focuses on the implications of environmental law in transactional and restructuring matters. He also has written for a variety of publications on current topics in restructuring, environmental law and insurance coverage.

Mr. Strochak is a graduate of the University of Vermont (B.A.) and George Washington University (J.D.).

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

43 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Environmental Obligations and the Code's Definition of "Claims"

2009 Emerging Issues 4026

Adam P. Stochak on Determining When Environmental Obligations Constitute "Claims" Within the Meaning of Section 101(5) of the Bankruptcy Code

By Adam P. Stochak

July 16, 2009

SUMMARY: Whether an environmental obligation constitutes a "claim" as that term is defined by the Bankruptcy Code is a significant issue because only a "claim" is potentially subject to discharge. Here, Adam P. Stochak, of Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP, examines cleanup costs, administrative and judicial cleanup orders, and fines and penalties. This analysis is an excerpt from the Collier monograph on environmental Issues in bankruptcy cases.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: In enacting the Bankruptcy Code in 1978, Congress took a broad view of what constitutes a "claim" to ensure that "all legal obligations of the debtor, no matter how remote or contingent will be able to be dealt with in the bankruptcy case." n1 Thus, "claim" is broadly defined to include any "right to payment, whether or not such right is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured or unsecured." n2 Courts accordingly have given an expansive reading of the term "claim." n3

Cleanup Costs

Obligations to pay cleanup costs under federal and state environmental programs may constitute "claims" against the bankruptcy estate within the meaning of section 101(5) of the Bankruptcy Code. EPA, state governments and private citizens can seek reimbursement for incurring cleanup costs from certain categories of responsible parties under environmental statutes, such as CERCLA and RCRA. Debtors' monetary obligations to governmental units and private parties that arise under these statutes can constitute dischargeable prepetition claims. For example, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit concluded in In re Chateaugay Corp. that an obligation to pay the EPA for cleanup costs under CERCLA is a dischargeable "claim" in bankruptcy, whenever the obligation is based on prepetition conduct resulting in the release or threatened release of hazardous substances. n4

Administrative and Judicial Cleanup Orders-Injunctions

The Bankruptcy Code's broad definition of a "claim" also reaches certain types of debtors' obligations under administrative and judicial cleanup orders. Federal and state governments may enforce environmental laws not only by punishing offenders, but by ordering compliance through the issuance of direct administrative orders or by seeking injunctive relief in court. n5 Section 101(5)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code specifies that a "claim" includes a "right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if such breach also gives rise to a right to payment." n6 For purposes of determining whether an injunctive remedy under environmental cleanup statutes constitutes a "claim" within the meaning of section 101(5), courts generally distinguish between those that prohibit a polluting activity and those that create a "right to payment." If an environmental injunction is not a "claim," either the debtor will be required to comply or the obligation passes through to the reorganized entity. n7

Prohibitory injunctions that require the debtor simply to cease and desist from some polluting activity and do not give rise to a right to payment (e.g., an injunction against further discharges of waste water into a river) clearly fall outside the scope of a "claim." Therefore, prohibitory injunctions may be enforced against the debtor in possession to the extent the debtor is in control of the prohibited activity. n8

The more complex question, however, is whether a mandatory injunction, such as a court order under state or federal law directing the debtor in possession to clean up its property, constitutes a "claim." The majority of courts have applied a simple test, looking at whether the order required the debtor to spend money to comply. In Ohio v. Kovacs, n9 the U.S. Supreme Court held that a state injunction ordering the individual owner of a site to clean up hazardous waste was converted to a right to payment when the state obtained the appointment of a receiver for the site, thus dispossessing the owner and preventing him from performing the mandated cleanup work himself. Since the individual would be forced to spend money to comply, the cleanup injunction was therefore a dischargeable "claim" in bankruptcy. n10

Applying the same "expenditure" test in United States v. Whizco, Inc., n11 the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit held that an injunction directing a mine operator to reclaim surface mines required the operator to purchase equipment in order to comply and therefore was a dischargeable "claim." In an important test case involving the LTV Steel bankruptcy, however, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held in In re Chateaugay Corp. that neither a prohibitory injunction nor a mandatory injunction directing the debtor to remediate contamination currently existing on or emanating from property held by the debtor is a "claim" for purposes of bankruptcy and, therefore, the debtor's obligation to comply with such injunctions at its own property passes through to the reorganized company without being discharged. n12

According to the Chateaugay court, an injunction is a "claim" only if it "does no more than impose an obligation entirely as an alternative to a payment right," such as an order to remove drums from the debtor's property that are not leaking, provided the EPA could have incurred the costs itself and sued for reimbursement. n13 On the other hand, a "non-claim" injunction is "any order that to any extent ends, or ameliorates current pollution." n14 Unfortunately, the court provides no guidance as to what constitutes "current pollution," except to say that most injunctions will fall under the non-claim side of the line. n15

Many environmental statutes allow private litigants to seek injunctions to compel a cleanup or prohibit a polluting activity. Like government injunctions, private claims for injunctive relief may be dischargeable in bankruptcy where they in fact do nothing more than require the debtor to spend money for a cleanup. For example, in In re Cottonwood Canyon Land Co., n16 the debtor sold contaminated property to the claimant. The claimant brought an action under the citizen suit provision of RCRA, seeking a mandatory injunction requiring the debtor-seller to come onto the property and clean it up. The court held that the suit was a "claim" for purposes of bankruptcy law because the debtor could do nothing more than pay someone to clean up the site if the claimant was successful. n17 Accordingly, the debtor's liability was discharged by confirmation of the reorganization plan and the claimant was barred from seeking injunctive relief against the reorganized company.

There is still, however, considerable confusion in the federal courts as to when mandatory injunctions create dischargeable claims for purposes of CERCLA liability. In Ohio v. Kovacs,ⁿ¹⁸ the U.S. Supreme Court held that the debtor's obligation under a prepetition state court order to clean up a hazardous waste disposal site created a claim that can be discharged in chapter 7 bankruptcy case. But in *In re Torwico Electronics, Inc.*ⁿ¹⁹ the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit held that an administrative order from a state environmental agency requiring the debtor to clean up releases of hazardous substances from a former manufacturing facility did not constitute a "claim" under section 101(5).

In Torwico, the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection and Energy (NJDEPE) ordered Torwico, already under chapter 11 protection, to clean up property Torwico had ceased leasing five years earlier. Relying on Kovacs,ⁿ²⁰ Torwico contended that its obligations under NJDEP's order amounted to a "claim" because the company could comply with the order only by spending money and it was no longer in possession of the polluted site. New Jersey opposed, arguing that the debtor's obligation to clean up its former property under the state's Environmental Cleanup Responsibility Act (ECRA) constituted an ongoing regulatory obligation rather than a claim for the payment of money. The bankruptcy court agreed with Torwico, holding that NJDEP's order should be treated as an unsecured claim.ⁿ²¹ On appeal, the district court reversed, relying on Chateaugay for the proposition that "[a] cleanup order that accomplishes the dual objectives of removing accumulated wastes and stopping or ameliorating on-going pollution emanating from such wastes is not a dischargeable claim."ⁿ²² Under the district court's reasoning, NJDEP's order, even though framed as a mandatory order to clean up pollution already released to the environment, did not amount to a "claim" because it was intended to halt ongoing pollution.

The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit affirmed on these grounds, seemingly departing from the Supreme Court's decision in Kovacs. The Torwico court reasoned that the fact the debtor could comply with the state's cleanup order only by paying money did not make the order a "claim" under Kovacs.ⁿ²³ Rather, the court limited Kovacs, reasoning that it applied only to situations where the state itself was seeking money directly from the debtor. "What the state cannot do is force the debtor to pay money to the state; at that point the state is no longer acting in its role as regulator, it is acting as a creditor."ⁿ²⁴ Because the Third Circuit accepted New Jersey's argument that it was neither seeking money nor asserting a right of payment but, rather, merely requiring the debtor to comply with the state's environmental laws, the court concluded NJDEP's order did not amount to a "claim."ⁿ²⁵

Although the Third Circuit's decision in Torwico is an apparent conflict with the Supreme Court's own holding in Kovacs and with the decision of the Sixth Circuit in United States v. Whizco, Inc.,ⁿ²⁶ the Supreme Court denied a petition for certiorari in the case in April 1994. Accordingly, Torwico is the law in the Third Circuit (New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Delaware). In light of this decision, debtors facing cleanup obligations on previously owned or leased property are virtually certain to see state environmental regulators issue administrative orders requiring the debtor to conduct the cleanup, rather than spend the money themselves and seek reimbursement. Although the two remedies would appear to be different sides of the same coin, the Third Circuit has created a de facto bankruptcy priority for the former over the latter.

Fines and Penalties

Courts have had little difficulty finding that actions brought by environmental agencies or private parties against the debtor seeking reimbursement of costs incurred to clean up a site, or civil penalties, constitute "claims."ⁿ²⁷ The Bankruptcy Code explicitly recognizes civil penalties as a category of claims that are not dischargeable against an individual, but are dischargeable against a reorganized corporate debtor.ⁿ²⁸ When environmental fines and penalties fit within the exception for "a fine, penalty or forfeiture payable to and for the benefit of a governmental unit" and not in compensation for actual pecuniary loss under section 523(a)(7), they are not dischargeable in a case of an individual debtor.ⁿ²⁹

Return to Text

n1 H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 309; see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 101.

n2 11 U.S.C. § 101(5) (emphasis added).

n3 See Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274, 279, 105 S. Ct. 705, 83 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1985).

n4 944 F.2d 997 (2d Cir. 1991).

n5 Compare 42 U.S.C. § 9607(a) (authorizing cost recovery), with 42 U.S.C. § 9606 (authorizing administrative orders or injunctions).

n6 11 U.S.C. § 101(5)(B).

n7 11 U.S.C. § 1141(d)(1). Generally speaking, if an injunction is not a "claim," it will also be exempt from the automatic stay.

n8 11 U.S.C. § 101(5)(B); see also Industrial Salvage, Inc. v. Illinois, 1996 Bankr. LEXIS 643 (S.D. Ill. June 6, 1996) (two debtors' obligations under a state administrative order to close three landfills and mitigate associated environmental damage is not a "claim" under section 101(5) of the Bankruptcy Code because it did not involve money damages, and thus was not discharged by confirmation of the debtors' reorganization plan).

n9 469 U.S. 274, 105 S. Ct. 705, 83 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1985).

n10 Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274, 282-83, 105 S. Ct. 705, 83 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1985).

n11 841 F.2d 147, 150-51 (6th Cir. 1988); see also In re Robinson, 46 B.R. 136, 138 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1985) rev'd. on other grounds, 55 B.R. 355 (M.D. Fla. 1985) (injunctive obligation to restore wetlands discharged because restoration would require expenditure of money).

n12 944 F.2d 997, 1006-09 (2d Cir. 1991).

n13 In re Chateaugay Corp., 944 F.2d 997, 1008 (2d Cir. 1991).

n14 Id.

n15 944 F.2d 997, 1007.

n16 146 B.R. 992 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1992)

n17 In re Cottonwood Canyon Land Co., 146 B.R. 992, 999 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1992).

n18 Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274, 105 S. Ct. 705, 83 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1985).

n19 8 F.3d 146 (3d Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1046 (1994).

n20 Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274, 105 S. Ct. 705, 83 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1985).

n21 In re Torwico Electronics, Inc., 131 B.R. 561, 567 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1991), vacated in part on other grounds, 153 B.R. 24 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1992).

n22 Torwico Electronics, Inc. v. New Jersey Dep't of Env'tl. Prot. & Energy, 153 B.R. 24, 26 (D.N.J. 1992) (quoting In re Chateaugay Corp., 944 F.2d 997, 1008 (2d Cir. 1991)).

n23 In re Torwico Electronics, Inc., 8 F.3d 146, 150 (3d Cir. 1993).

n24 8 F.3d 146, 150.

n25 8 F.3d 146, 151.

n26 841 F.2d 147 (6th Cir. 1988).

n27 See, e.g., In re Chateaugay Corp., 944 F.2d 997 (2d Cir. 1991) (federal government's right to recover hazardous waste cleanup costs under CERCLA was a "claim" within the meaning of Bankruptcy Code section 101(4)); Worcester R.R. v. Penn Central Corp., 30 Env't Rep. Cas. (BNA) 1309 (E.D. Pa. 1989) (private cost recovery action under CERCLA § 107 for prepetition conduct of debtor constituted a "claim" against the debtor).

n28 11 U.S.C. §§ 523(a)(7), 1141(d)(1)-(2).

n29 Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274 (1985); In re Tinkham, 59 B.R. 209 (Bankr. D.N.H. 1986).

RELATED LINKS: For additional discussion of the definition of "claim," see Collier on Bankruptcy, ■ 2-101 Collier on Bankruptcy P 101.05.

For discussion of when a claim is subject to discharge, see Collier Monograph: Environmental Issues in Bankruptcy Cases, ■ SP3-Monograph3 Collier on Environmental Law and Bankruptcy Section 6[2].

For the complete Collier Monograph: Environmental Issues in Bankruptcy Cases, click

■ here.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

ADAM P. STROCHAK is a partner in the Washington, D.C., office of Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP, where he has practiced since 1993. He concentrates his practice on corporate restructuring, representing both debtors and creditors in restructuring matters in and out of court. Mr. Strochak also has represented clients in a wide variety of industries on environmental, insurance coverage, and commercial litigation matters, focusing particularly on the intersection of these disciplines with the bankruptcy laws.

In chapter 11 cases, Mr. Strochak has represented debtors from diverse industries, including telecommunications, steel, healthcare, building products and retail sales. Major debtor representations include WorldCom, Inc., Silicon Graphics, Inc., Genesis Health Ventures, Inc., Sun Healthcare Group, Inc., Enron Corporation, G-I Holdings Inc. (former known as GAF Corporation), Eagle-Picher Industries, Inc., Republic Technologies International, LLC, Brothers' Gourmet Coffee and Metallurg Inc. Mr. Strochak also regularly represents creditors in both out-of-court workouts and court-supervised restructurings. Creditor representations include the Official Committee of Asbestos Property Damage Claimants in the Federal-Mogul bankruptcy, the Senior Lenders of Owens Corning, General Electric Capital Corporation in the Kmart Corporation Chapter 11 case, GE Capital Aviation Services, Inc. in the Fairchild Dornier Corporation bankruptcy, and ChevronTexaco Corporation in the American Western Refining bankruptcy.

Mr. Strochak is a co-author, with David R. Berz and Stanley M. Spracker, of the three-volume treatise Environmental Law in Real Estate and Business Transactions (Matthew Bender), which focuses on the implications of environmental law in transactional and restructuring matters. He also has written for a variety of publications on current topics in restructuring, environmental law and insurance coverage.

Mr. Strochak is a graduate of the University of Vermont (B.A.) and George Washington University (J.D.).

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

44 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Lawniczak on In re Airadigm Communications, Inc.

2009 Emerging Issues 4019

James M. Lawniczak on Airadigm Communications, Inc. v. F.C.C. (In re Airadigm Communications, Inc.), 519 F.3d 640 (7th Cir. 2008)

By James M. Lawniczak

July 14, 2009

SUMMARY: James M. Lawniczak comments on In re Airadigm Communications, Inc., where the Seventh Circuit considered whether a chapter 11 bankruptcy plan can provide for releases of nondebtor parties, regardless of a lack of consent of the creditors and other parties in interest that are bound by the releases. This was an issue of "first impression in this circuit," as well as an issue that has split the circuits, resulting in a "variety of approaches."

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The Seventh Circuit Holds That a Chapter 11 Plan Can Include Nonconsensual Nondebtor Releases If Appropriate for the Reorganization

In Airadigm Communications, Inc. v. F.C.C. (In re Airadigm Communications, Inc.), 519 F.3d 640, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 5260 (7th Cir. Mar. 12, 2008), the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit considered whether a chapter 11 bankruptcy plan can provide for releases of nondebtor parties, regardless of a lack of consent of the creditors and other parties in interest that are bound by the releases. The court noted that this was an issue of "first impression in this circuit," as well as an issue that has split the circuits, resulting in a "variety of approaches." 519 F.3d at 655.

Facts. The chapter 11 debtor, Airadigm Communications, Inc. ("Airadigm"), went into business as a cellular-service provider. Its second chapter 11 proceeding involved a variety of disputes with the Federal Communications Commission. A plan of reorganization was proposed and confirmed in that proceeding, which provided for certain treatment of the FCC's claims. It also provided that a third party, Telephone and Data Systems ("TDS"), would finance the reorganization and in return would receive a release from liability for "any act or omission arising out of or in connection with the . . . confirmation of this Plan . . . except for willful misconduct." 519 F.3d at 647.

The bankruptcy court held that the release was "reasonable given both TDS's centrality to the reorganization and the potential for liability should TDS engage in 'willful misconduct.'" Id. Both the FCC and Airadigm appealed the bankruptcy court's determinations to the district court, which affirmed, and a further appeal was taken to the Seventh Circuit.

Legal Analysis of the Seventh Circuit. After it first addressed several issues related to the disputes between Airadigm and the FCC, the court turned to the issue of the third-party release. The court first determined that 11 U.S.C. § 524(e) does not preclude third-party releases because it does not contain any limit on the bankruptcy court's power. 519 F.3d at 656. The court then considered whether a bankruptcy court had the affirmative power to grant third-party releases without consent, finding that the court's equity powers were sufficient. 519 F.3d at 657.

Having reached the conclusion that third-party releases were possible, the court next considered under what circumstances they would be allowed. The court noted that whether a release is appropriate "is fact intensive and depends on the nature of the reorganization." Id. The court focused on whether the release "was necessary for the reorganization and appropriately tailored." Id. The court pointed out that the release was narrowly tailored—it applied to claims arising out of or in connection with the reorganization and excluded willful misconduct. That, coupled with the fact that the reorganization could not have occurred without TDS's involvement, made this release appropriate. Id.

Expansion of Releases to Cover Claims of Non-Creditors. Following Airadigm, in In re Ingersoll, Inc., 562 F.3d 856, 865 (7th Cir. 2009), the court indicated that under appropriate circumstances, where a release is "narrowly tailored and critical to the plan as a whole," the release could even cover claims of entities that were not creditors of the debtor, so long as the affected party received appropriate notice and an opportunity to be heard. The court cautioned, however, that because third party releases are limited to unusual circumstances, in most cases, compelled releases against non-creditors will not pass muster.

Consensual Releases. The Airadigm court noted that the Seventh Circuit had previously approved consensual releases as part of a chapter 11 plan. In In re Specialty Equipment Cos., Inc., 3 F.3d 1043, 1047 (7th Cir. 1993), creditors who rejected the plan or who abstained from voting were not obligated under the releases. The Specialty Equipment court held that 11 U.S.C. § 524(e) does not apply to prevent consensual releases because it does not directly prohibit third-party releases in chapter 11 plans, rather it only provides that a bankruptcy discharge does not affect the liability of third parties. Id.; accord Food Lion, Inc. v. S.L. Nusbaum Ins. Agency, Inc., 202 F.3d 223, 228 (4th Cir. 2000) (section 524(e) does not preclude the consensual settlement of claims; a voluntary, consensual release is not a discharge in bankruptcy).

In a quote that suggested the outcome in the instant Airadigm case, the Specialty Equipment court stated: "While a third-party release, like the one in Union Carbide releasing a co-debtor from liability, may be unwarranted in some circumstances, a [per] se rule disfavoring all releases in a reorganization plan would be similarly unwarranted, if not a misreading of the statute." Id.

Even in circuits and courts that hold that a bankruptcy court does not have the power to provide for a third-party release, a consensual release is likely to be binding on the consenting party. See, e.g., In re Arrowmill Dev. Corp., 211 B.R. 497, 506-07 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1997) (although holding that third-party releases were improper under section 524(e), a creditor can nonetheless consent to the release). The consenting creditor will likely be bound by res judicata principles in any event. See Trulis v. Barton, 107 F.3d 685, 691 (9th Cir. 1995) (confirmation order is res judicata as to the third-party releases; indicating that creditors who do not wish to be bound must object, even though the Ninth Circuit line of cases holding that third-party releases are not permitted in bankruptcy cases predated this case by a number of years); Republic Supply Co. v. Shoaf, 815 F.2d 1046, 1054 (5th Cir. 1987) (res judicata operated to bar action against the third-party guarantor, but pointing out that the plan release of the third party was "beyond the statutory grant of the Code").

Approaches of the Other Circuits

No Power to Grant Release. Two courts of appeals, the Ninth and the Tenth Circuits, have held that section 524(e) precludes bankruptcy courts from granting releases to nondebtors. Resorts Int'l, Inc. v. Lowenschuss (In re Lowenschuss), 67 F.3d 1394, 1401 (9th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1243, 116 S. Ct. 2497, 135 L. Ed. 2d 189 (1996); American Hardwoods, Inc. v. Deutsche Credit Corp., 885 F.2d 621 (9th Cir. 1989); Landsing Diversified Properties-II v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Tulsa (In re Western Real Estate Fund, Inc.), 922 F.2d 592, 600 (10th Cir. 1990).

In a case decided about a year and a half after the Airadigm Communications case, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals essentially adopted the no third-party release concept. Bank of New York Trust Co., NA v. Official Unsecured Creditors' Committee (In re Pacific Lumber Co.), 584 F.3d 229, 252-53 (5th Cir. 2009). The court noted that the fresh start that Bankruptcy Code section 524(e) provides debtors was not intended to absolve parties who are not jointly liable with the debtor from "any negligent conduct that occurred during the course of the bankruptcy." The court did allow releases for creditors' committee members which contained an exception for willfulness and gross negligence. 584 F.3d at 253. On an interesting related point, the court determined that the appeal taken from the grant of the third-party releases was not equitably moot due to the consummation of the plan and the fact that the parties being released had already provided the consideration they were to provide under the plan. The court stated: "the goal of finality sought in equitable mootness analysis does not outweigh a court's duty to protect the integrity of the process." 584 F.3d at 252. Two prior Fifth Circuit cases strongly suggested that the rule in the Fifth Circuit is that third-party releases are inappropriate. See Republic Supply Co. v. Shoaf, 815 F.2d 1046 (5th Cir. 1987), discussed in the Consensual Release section above and Feld v. Zale Corp. (In re Zale Corp.), 62 F.3d 746 (5th Cir. 1995), discussed in the Bankruptcy Settlement section below.

Releases Appropriate Under Unusual, Narrow Circumstances. The Second and Sixth Circuits have approved third-party releases, but have cautioned that they require "extraordinary cases" or "unusual circumstances"; this standard may not be as liberal in favor of the releases as the one set forth in the Airadigm case. The Second Circuit held in Deutsche Bank AG v. Metromedia Fiber Network, Inc. (In re Metromedia Fiber Network, Inc.), 416 F.3d 136, 142-43 (2d Cir. 2005), that third-party releases were allowable if "important" to the reorganization, but went on to point out that such releases should be limited to "rare cases" where "truly unusual circumstances render the release terms important to success of the plan."

On the other hand, the factors referred to in the Second Circuit Metromedia case suggest that there may not be that great a difference between the Seventh Circuit's approach in Airadigm and the Second Circuit's approach. The Metromedia court looked to substantial financial contributions, which are themselves important to the plan. Id. A Delaware Bankruptcy Court case discussed the requirement of substantial financial contribution in more detail in In re Genesis Health Ventures, Inc., 266 B.R. 591, 607 (Bankr. D. Del. 2001) ("The question of necessity requires demonstration that the success of the debtor's reorganization bears a relationship to the release of the non-consensual parties, and that the releasees have provided a critical financial contribution to the debtor's plan that is necessary to make the plan feasible in exchange for receiving a release of liability.").

In Class Five Nevada Claimants v. Dow Corning Corp. (In re Dow Corning Corp.), 280 F.3d 648, 658 (6th Cir. 2002) ("unusual circumstances"), the court noted that a release would be appropriate when all seven of the following factors were present: (1) an identity of interests between the debtor and the third party, usually an indemnity relationship so that actions against the third party are closely related to actions against the debtor; (2) the third party's contribution of substantial assets to the reorganization; (3) the releases are essential to the reorganization; (4) the impacted class or classes have overwhelmingly voted for the plan; (5) all or substantially all of the claims of the affected creditors will be paid; (6) there is an opportunity for those claimants who choose not to settle to recover in full; and (7) the bankruptcy court has made a record of specific factual findings in support of the release. Those extensive seven factors go well beyond the standard set by the Seventh Circuit in Airadigm.

In In re AOV Industries, Inc., 792 F.2d 1140, 1152 (D.C. Cir. 1986), the D.C. Circuit court found that a third-party release was appropriate, although the court did not consider the section 524(e) issue. There, the court indicated that the third-parties "could not have been expected to commit millions of dollars to a reorganization plan and still remain liable to individual creditors for the full amount of their claims."

The Fourth Circuit approved nonconsensual releases in Menard-Sanford v. Mabey (In re A.H. Robins Co., Inc.), 880 F.2d 694, 701-02 (4th Cir. 1989). Although the court held that section 524(e) did not prohibit the injunction, it did so in a context where the plan was overwhelmingly approved, where the reorganization hinged on the debtor's freedom from indirect claims and where the affected creditors were being paid in full. Thus, the court did not determine the circumstances under which such injunctions would be proper.

Issue Remains Open in the Third Circuit. Although the Airadigm opinion included the Third Circuit with the circuits that have approved third-party releases under various circumstances, 519 F.3d at 657, a careful reading of the referenced Third Circuit case, Gillman v. Continental Airlines (In re Continental Airlines), 203 F.3d 203, 213-14 (3d Cir. 2000), reveals that the court did not actually decide the issue. After a thorough analysis of the current state of the law, the court there noted that the releases provided for in the case before it could not stand under "even the most flexible tests for the validity of non-debtor releases." 203 F.3d at 214. Therefore, the court indicated that "we do not establish our own rule regarding the conditions under which non-debtor releases and permanent injunctions are appropriate or permissible." Id. However, if third-party releases are allowed in the Third Circuit, then at a minimum there must be the "hallmarks of permissible non-consensual releases-fairness, necessity to the reorganization, and specific factual findings to support those conclusions. Id.; see United Artists Theatre Co. v. Walton, 315 F.3d 217, 227 (3d Cir. 2003).

In a case subsequent to Continental Airlines, the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware noted a five-factor test to determine when third-party releases would be appropriate: (1) identity of interest between debtor and nondebtor so that a suit against the nondebtor will deplete the estate; (2) substantial contribution to the plan by the nondebtor; (3) necessity of the release to the reorganization; (4) overwhelming acceptance of the plan and release by creditors; and (5) payment of all or substantially all of the claims of the creditors. In re Coram Healthcare Group, 315 B.R. 321, 335 (Bankr. D. Del. 2004).

Bankruptcy Settlements That Result in Third-Party Releases. Two courts of appeals, the Fifth and the Eleventh, that have not weighed in on the issue of third-party releases in plans have addressed third-party releases in the context of settlement agreements. The Fifth Circuit refused to approve the releases, while the Eleventh Circuit approved them.

In Feld v. Zale Corp. (In re Zale Corp.), 62 F.3d 746, 754-55, 760 (5th Cir. 1995), the court considered the bankruptcy court's approval of a settlement that enjoined third-parties, including appellants, from pursuing claims related to the settlement against the insurance company that was contributing to the settlement. The court reversed the approval of the settlement, holding that the bankruptcy court lacked both jurisdiction and power to grant the requested third-party injunction. The court stated: "[W]e must overturn a § 105 injunction if it effectively discharges a nondebtor." 62 F.3d at 760 (citing section 524(e)). Thus, based on the Zale case, it is likely that the Fifth Circuit would join the Ninth and Tenth Circuits in rejecting nonconsensual third-party releases in plans of reorganization, if that issue were to come before it.

On the other hand, in Munford v. Munford, Inc. (In re Munford, Inc.), 97 F.3d 449, 455 (11th Cir. 1996), the court affirmed the approval of a settlement that released a third party from contribution and indemnity claims by co-defendants. The court did not discuss section 524(e) in ruling that bar orders are appropriate "where such orders are integral to settlement in an adversary proceeding."

What Happens When the Third Party Seeks to Enforce the Release or Injunction? In Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Bailey, 129 S. Ct. 2195, 174 L. Ed. 2d 99, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 4537 (2009), the Supreme Court held that a plan injunction issued in 1986 barring third party suits against the debtor's insurance companies was effective to prevent asbestos claimants from bringing actions against those insurance companies, even though the allegations in the lawsuit raised direct, independent causes of action against the insurance companies. The Court found that the language of the 1986 plan injunction applied, and that the plan was res judicata as to the issue of whether the suits were barred. The Court pointed out that there was no longer any issue before it or any other court as to whether the bankruptcy court appropriately entered the injunction back in 1986, as the confirmation order had become final, so that the Court's decision provides no guidance on whether or when third party releases are appropriate. See In re Ingersoll, Inc., 562 F.3d 856 (7th Cir. 2009) (holding that non-debtor individuals with equity interests in the debtors were entitled to enforce releases contained in the corporation's plan of reorganization against an attorney who was seeking to collect attorney fees, even though the attorney was not a creditor in the corporation's bankruptcy case).

In general, the parties that have been released would prefer to litigate the enforcement of the release in the bankruptcy court that approved the plan, rather than in the subsequent action that is brought against it, which could be in a state court. In fact, if the action against the third party is brought in state court and the defendant cannot involve the bankruptcy court in the process, the only way for the beneficiary of the bankruptcy release to obtain a federal court's interpretation of the release is through appeal to the Supreme Court after losing the case before the highest court of the state, which is an unlikely prospect.

So long as a bankruptcy case is open, the bankruptcy court would be a proper place to seek to enforce the release of the injunction. Thus, the Supreme Court in the Travelers Indemnity Co. case noted that "the Bankruptcy Court plainly had jurisdiction to interpret and enforce its own prior orders." 174 L. Ed.2d at 110, 2009 U.S. Lexis 4537 at *26; see In re Spiegel Inc., 2006 Bankr. LEXIS 2158 at *19 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Aug. 16, 2006), aff'd on other grounds, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19633 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 26, 2007), aff'd still on other grounds, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 5339 (2d Cir. Mar. 13, 2008) (finding jurisdiction over determination whether claims were or were not released and denying motion of proposed plaintiffs for declaratory judgment that they can bring claims).

However, once the bankruptcy case has been closed, it is problematic whether it can be reopened to assert a claim that an injunction or a release has been violated. See, e.g., Zerand-Bernal Group, Inc. v. Cox, 23 F.3d 159 (7th Cir. 1994) (the bankruptcy court had no jurisdiction to enforce its injunction in favor of the purchaser of assets in sale order after the completion of the bankruptcy proceeding). But see Thomas & Betts Corp. v. Myers Power Products, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3492 (D.N.J. Jan. 27, 2006).

Releases in Asbestos Trusts. Third-party releases are appropriate in asbestos trusts under the specific provisions in 11 U.S.C. § 524(g)(4)(A)(ii). This provision was added by the 1994 amendments to the Bankruptcy Code. For a discussion on asbestos trusts, see Collier on Bankruptcy, 524.07 (Matthew Bender).

Practice Pointers

Based on the approaches in those circuits that allow third-party releases, a third party seeking a release in a plan of reorganization must make an important, perhaps even vital, contribution to the reorganization. In addition, the release cannot be overbroad: it must be narrowly tailored and probably limited to matters related to the reorganization. Excluding "willful misconduct" from the release will be important. Finally, based particularly on the Johns-Manville case, the third party receiving the release should carefully consider the circumstances under which it will be able to enforce the release going forward.

Consensual third-party releases are generally allowed. However, as a matter of due process, they should be highlighted in the materials, probably in the ballot itself right next to the vote, and certainly in the initial executive summary of the plan in the disclosure statement. If the information on the release is buried on page 88 of the plan and page 156 of the disclosure statement, a creditor might have a due process argument with which to collaterally attack the release.

Conclusion

The Seventh Circuit has joined the majority of circuits holding that third-party releases can be included in a chapter 11 plan of reorganization under appropriate circumstances. At the same time, it is the only case to approve a third-party nonconsensual release without noting that such releases should only be given in extraordinary, rare circumstances. The Seventh Circuit only required that the release be necessary for the reorganization and appropriately tailored for the situation.

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion of Bankruptcy Code section 524, see ■ Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 524.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

James M. Lawniczak is a partner at Calfee, Halter and Griswold LLP in Cleveland, Ohio. He concentrates his practice on corporate bankruptcy and creditors' rights, as well as commercial business and finance matters. His experience includes bankruptcy plans and related disclosure statements, cash collateral and financing orders, asset sales, executory contracts and unexpired leases, and bankruptcy litigation and appeals.

Mr. Lawniczak is a frequent author and lecturer in his field. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy, the leading national treatise on bankruptcy law. He is also the author of the bankruptcy chapters of the Matthew Bender treatises Asset Based Financing and Business Organizations with Tax Planning. He has been listed in multiple editions of Chambers USA as a Leading Lawyer for bankruptcy and restructuring and is recognized as one of the Best Lawyers in America. Mr. Lawniczak is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, where he served as an editor of the Michigan Law Review.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

45 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Chrysler Bankruptcy

2009 Emerging Issues 3781

Chrysler Bankruptcy

By Publisher's Editorial Staff 2009

June 16, 2009

SUMMARY: This product provides access to the order granting Chrysler's petition to declare bankruptcy and related documents.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Choose an option below to search for information regarding the Chrysler bankruptcy:

RELATED LINKS: To view the May 26, 2009 decision of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York,

■ click here.

To view the June 5, 2009 decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit,

■ click here.

To view the June 8, 2009 decision of the Supreme Court of the United States,

■ click here.

To view the June 9, 2009 decision of the Supreme Court of the United States,

■ click here.

To view motions relating to the Chrysler bankruptcy from the source Federal and State Bankruptcy Briefs and Motions, Combined,"

■ click here.

To view news from the past week relating to the Chrysler bankruptcy from the source "Mega News, Most Recent 90 Days (English, Full Text),"

■ click here.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

46 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

John J. Gallagher and Todd C. Duffield on In re City of Vallejo

2009 Emerging Issues 3624

John J. Gallagher and Todd C. Duffield on In re City of Vallejo, 403 B.R. 72; 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 705 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. Mar. 13, 2009)

By John J. Gallagher and Todd C. Duffield

May 14, 2009

SUMMARY: John Gallagher & Todd Duffield, of Paul, Hastings, Janofsky & Walker LLP, consider the ruling by a California bankruptcy court that a chapter 9 debtor is not bound by the requirements of Code section 1113 or any state law in rejecting a collective bargaining agreement. The decision, however, leaves some important issues unresolved, including whether a municipal debtor can unilaterally reject a CBA and subsequently seek bankruptcy court approval.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Municipal Bankruptcies: The Battle Rages on Between State Sovereignty and Federal Bankruptcy Law

In In re City of Vallejo, 403 B.R. 72, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 705 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. Mar. 13, 2009), the Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of California ruled that a municipal debtor in chapter 9 reorganization proceedings is not required to comply with section 1113 of the Bankruptcy Code in order to reject a collective bargaining agreement. The decision leaves uncertain whether a municipal debtor can unilaterally reject such an agreement without prior judicial approval or without compliance with state law.

In deference to state sovereignty, when Congress extended the federal bankruptcy law to municipalities, ⁿ¹ it deferred to the states the right to decide whether to allow their municipalities to take advantage of the federal law. ⁿ² This ongoing role for state law has led to uncertainty about the interplay of state law with other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. The recent City of Vallejo decision illustrates this uncertainty, disagreeing with a prior decision and finding state law completely preempted.

Congress enacted section 1113 in 1984, in response to a Supreme Court decision holding that (1) a collective bargaining agreement is an executory contract subject to rejection by a chapter 11 debtor under section 365 of the Bankruptcy Code and (2) the debtor does not commit an unfair labor practice when it unilaterally modifies or terminates the agreement after filing for bankruptcy but before the court approves rejection of it. ⁿ³ Section 1113 creates certain procedural and substantive requirements which a chapter 11 debtor must satisfy prior to making unilateral changes to or rejecting a collective bargaining agreement. Congress, however, did not make section 1113 applicable to chapter 9.

While the courts have uniformly agreed that section 1113 is inapplicable in chapter 9 cases, they have taken different views with regard to the consequences of the Bildisco decision in chapter 9 proceedings. The first case to consider the consequences issue, In re County of Orange, 179 B.R. 177, 184 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1995), held that while Bildisco permits rejection of a collective bargaining agreement by a municipal debtor, the debtor must still comply with state labor law requirements for adjustment of collective bargaining agreements. In re City of Vallejo now takes a very different approach, holding that section 365 provides the exclusive authority for a municipal debtor in chapter 9 to reject a collective bargaining agreement and preempts any otherwise applicable state law requirements.

As a result of these rulings, it remains uncertain (1) whether a municipal debtor can unilaterally reject a collective bargaining agreement, as was done in Bildisco; (2) whether a union can strike in response to the municipal debtor's unilateral action; and (3) what law, state or federal, governs the parties' conduct following rejection of the collective bargaining agreement.

Rejection of Collective Bargaining Agreements in Bankruptcy

In NLRB v. Bildisco & Bildisco, 465 U.S. 513, 104 S. Ct. 1188, 79 L. Ed. 2d 482 (1984), the Supreme Court held that unexpired collective bargaining agreements are executory contracts subject to rejection under section 365 of the Bankruptcy Code. n4 The Supreme Court clarified the legal standard for such rejection, i.e., the debtor must show that (1) the collective bargaining agreement burdens the estate, and (2) after careful scrutiny, the equities balance in favor of rejecting the labor contract. 456 U.S. at 526. The Supreme Court added that "the Bankruptcy Court should be persuaded that reasonable efforts to negotiate a voluntary modification have been made, and are not likely to produce a prompt and satisfactory solution." Id.

In response to the decision in Bildisco, Congress promptly amended chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code to add section 1113, which imposes certain procedural and substantive requirements on a debtor before the debtor is allowed to make unilateral changes to or reject a collective bargaining agreement. n5 Despite multiple opportunities, Congress has not extended section 1113 to chapter 9 cases. n6

Deferral to State Law in In re County of Orange

In re County of Orange, 179 B.R. 177 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1995), was the first case to consider the implications of Bildisco in a chapter 9 case. After filing for bankruptcy, the County unilaterally set aside certain provisions of its collective bargaining agreements, including procedural prerequisites for layoffs. A group of ten employee organizations (the "Coalition") sought an injunction from the bankruptcy court to stop the layoffs, arguing that California state law precluded the County from unilaterally changing the bargaining agreements without bargaining. The County argued that Bildisco controlled and allowed the County to make the unilateral changes.

The bankruptcy court noted that the "history of Chapter 9 reflects concern on the part of Congress not to overstep the boundary between legislation necessary for municipalities to reorganize and the rights of states to control the functions of their municipalities." Id. at 183. The court then proceeded to a compromise position, agreeing with the County that Bildisco applies in chapter 9 cases but finding that "Bildisco does not excuse attempts by the County to comply with the requirements of California law." Id. at 184. n7 Applying California law, the court found that the County's dire fiscal emergency did not necessitate the complete abrogation of the applicable layoff provisions. Id. Consequently, the court entered a temporary restraining order, enjoining the County from treating any of the employees as permanently laid off, and ordered the parties to meet and confer and attempt to resolve their differences. Id.

In re City of Vallejo* Finds State Law Preempted

More recently, in In re City of Vallejo, the Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of California held that once a municipal debtor is properly in chapter 9 proceedings, section 365 preempts any state law that would otherwise interfere with rejection of collective bargaining agreements under the Bankruptcy Code.

In resolving the City's motion to reject certain collective bargaining contracts, the court agreed with In re County of Orange that a municipality's rejection of a collective bargaining agreement in a chapter 9 proceeding is not governed by section 1113. n8 The court, also consistent with In re County of Orange, noted that Congress enacted chapter 9 of the Bankruptcy Code "to harmonize . . . two competing interests-reservation of powers to the states and the supremacy of federal bankruptcy law." 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 705, at *3. Congress did so, according to the court, by requiring states to specifically authorize a municipality to take advantage of the Bankruptcy Code. n9 When a state does so, the court stated, "it declares that the benefits of chapter 9 are more important than state control over its municipalities." 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 705, at *4. Additionally, "by authorizing the use of chapter 9 by its municipalities, California must accept chapter 9 in its totality; it cannot cherry pick what it likes while disregarding the rest." Id. (quoting In re County of Orange, 191 B.R. 1005, 1021 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1995)). This is the point at which the decisions in In re City of Orange and In re City of Vallejo diverge.

The court in In re City of Vallejo held that when a state authorizes its municipalities to avail themselves of the benefits of chapter 9, it would be unconstitutional to superimpose a state's own law onto federal bankruptcy law. 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 705, at *7. This is so because federal law preempts contrary state law under the Supremacy Clause, the Bankruptcy Clause and the Contract Clause of the United States Constitution. See U.S. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 4; U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2; U.S. Const. art. IV.

Thus, the In re City of Vallejo court rejected the holding in In re County of Orange that deferred to California state law in relation to rejection of collective bargaining agreements under section 365. Instead, the court held that the factors established by the Supreme Court in Bildisco provide the exclusive standard for rejecting an unexpired collective bargaining agreement under section 365. 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 703, at *11.

Unresolved Issues

The first issue that remains unresolved is whether a municipal debtor in a chapter 9 bankruptcy can act unilaterally to reject a collective bargaining agreement and then seek bankruptcy court approval after the fact, as in Bildisco. In re City of Orange suggests that the answer is "no," because the court reversed the County's unilateral action by converting the permanent layoffs to temporary layoffs and ordering the parties to meet and confer. In contrast, In re City of Vallejo's answer would seem to be "yes," although, the court in that case also ordered the parties to continue their negotiations and report back to the court before the court would rule on whether the Bildisco standard had been satisfied.

Related unresolved issues in chapter 9 cases are: (1) what law governs the parties' conduct post-rejection; and (2) whether the union can strike in response to rejection, which is a subset of what law applies. When a debtor in chapter 11 is subject to the National Labor Relations Act and is permitted to reject a collective bargaining agreement, the courts have generally held that, although the contract has been abrogated, the debtor thereafter remains subject to all other obligations under the National Labor Relations Act (including the duty to bargain in good faith), n10 and that rejection of the collective bargaining agreement frees the union to strike. n11 Assuming a municipal debtor is permitted to reject a collective bargaining agreement, any continuing duty to bargain or right to strike would likely depend on the controlling labor law, which would often be state law.

In light of the current economic climate, other municipalities may turn to chapter 9 for relief. If they do so, these unresolved issues may be brought to the forefront sooner rather than later. Additionally, in light of the current labor movement and pending and contemplated labor legislation, Congress may get yet another opportunity to consider extending section 1113-like prerequisites to chapter 9 cases.

Return to Text

n1 The Municipal Bankruptcy Act of 1937, Pub. L. No. 302, 50 Stat. 653 (1937). Congress first enacted federal municipal bankruptcy law in 1934, to assist struggling municipalities during the Great Depression. Pub. L. No. 251, 48 Stat. 798 (1934). The Supreme Court struck down that law as an unconstitutional infringement on state sovereignty. Ashton v. Cameron County Water Improvement District, 298 U.S. 513, 531, 56 S. Ct. 892, 80 L. Ed. 1309 (1936). Congress subsequently tried again, and the 1937 Municipal Bankruptcy Act was upheld as constitutional by the Supreme Court in Bekins v. Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation District, 304 U.S. 27, 58 S. Ct. 811, 82 L. Ed. 1137 (1938). Congress continued to reform municipal bankruptcy law, making both substantive and procedural amendments to the law, in 1976, 1978 and 1988. See Pub. L. No. 94-260, 90 Stat. 315 (1976); Pub. L. No. 95-598, 92 Stat. 2549 (1978); and Pub. L. No. 100-597, 102 Stat. 3028 (1988). In 1994, Congress amended the Bankruptcy Code to clarify how state consent could be authorized, providing that a municipal entity "may be a debtor under chapter 9 of this title if and only if ..specifically authorized, in its capacity as a municipality or by name, to be a debtor under such chapter by State law..." 11 U.S.C. § 109.

n2 Section 903 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that it does not "limit or impair the power of a State to control, by legislation or otherwise, a municipality of or in such State in the exercise of the political or governmental powers of such municipality" And section 904 provides that the bankruptcy court may not, "unless the debtor consents or the plan so provides," interfere with (1) any of the political or governmental powers of the debtor; (2) any of the property or revenues of the debtor; or (3) the debtor's use or enjoyment of any income-producing property. Due to Constitutional restraints and state sovereignty, municipal bankruptcy proceedings under chapter 9 are significantly different than corporate reorganizations under chapter 11. For example, under chapter 9 there is no provision for liquidation of the assets of the municipality and distribution of the proceeds to creditors. Additionally, the bankruptcy court does not take as active a role in managing a chapter 9 case as it does in a chapter 11 case.

n3 See NLRB v. Bildisco & Bildisco, 465 U.S. 513, 104 S. Ct. 1188, 79 L. Ed. 2d 482 (1984).

n4 Section 365(a) provides: "Except as provided in sections 765 and 766 of this title and in subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section, the trustee, subject to the court's approval, may assume or reject any executory contract or unexpired lease of the debtor." Section 365 is commonly referred to as the "business judgment" standard for rejection of collective bargaining agreements.

n5 Most courts adhere to the following nine requirements that must be satisfied for court approval of the rejection of a collective bargaining agreement under section 1113:

1. The debtor-in-possession must have made a proposal to the union;

2. The proposal must be based on the most complete and reliable information available at the time of the proposal;
3. The proposed modifications must be necessary to permit reorganization;
4. The modification must provide that all affected parties are treated fairly and equitably;
5. The debtor-in-possession must provide the union with such relevant information as is necessary to evaluate the proposal;
6. The debtor-in-possession must have met with the collective bargaining representative at reasonable times subsequent to making the proposal;
7. The debtor-in-possession must have negotiated with the union in good faith concerning the proposal;
8. The union must have refused to accept the proposal without good cause; and
9. The balance of the equities must clearly favor rejection of the agreement.

See 7 Collier on Bankruptcy, 1113.04 (Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer eds. 15th ed. rev.).

n6 For example, in 1991, Congress introduced the Municipal Employee Protection Amendments of 1991, which contemplated adding certain section 1113-like provisions to chapter 9 and would have required municipalities to comply with state labor laws as a prerequisite to rejecting a collective bargaining agreement. See H.R. No. 3949, 102d Cong., 1st Sess. (1991). The bill died in committee.

n7 California law provided that before the County could take the contemplated unilateral action with regard to the employee bargaining agreements, it had to satisfy the following four-part test: (1) a declared emergency must be based on an adequate factual foundation; (2) the agency's action must be designed to protect a basic social interest and not benefit a particular individual; (3) the law must be appropriate for the emergency and obligation; and (4) the agency decision must be temporary, limited to the immediate exigency that cause the action. The court noted that "[i]n my view, any unilateral action by a municipality to impair a contract with its employees must satisfy these factors if not as a legal matter, certainly from an equitable standpoint." 179 B.R. at 184.

n8 Like the court in In re City of Orange, the court noted that Congress has had multiple opportunities to extend section 1113 to chapter 9 proceedings, but has not done so, and stated that "this court will not presume to do what Congress has not done, whether by incorporating section 1113-like provisions into chapter 9, or by requiring compliance with state labor law." Vallejo, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 705, at *11.

n9 The state of California grants specific authorization by statute in Cal. Gov't Code § 53760 (1995): "Except as otherwise provided by statute, a local public entity in this state may file a petition and exercise powers pursuant to applicable federal bankruptcy law." Additionally, Section 53760 was amended in 2002 to include the following: "This section is intended to provide the broadest possible state authorization for municipal bankruptcy proceedings, and thus provides the specific state law authorization for municipal bankruptcy filing required under federal law."

n10 See 7 Collier on Bankruptcy, 1113.06[1][b].

n11 See Id. at 1113.06[2].

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of Bankruptcy Code section 365, see ■ Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 365 (Matthew Bender).

For discussion of Bankruptcy Code section 113, see ■ Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1113 (Matthew Bender).

For a circuit-by-circuit review of section 365 and collective bargaining agreements, click

■ here.

For discussion of the National Labor Relations Act and the bankruptcy laws, see ■ Labor and Employment, ch. 42 (Matthew Bender).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

John J. Gallagher is a partner in the Washington, D.C., office of Paul, Hastings, Janofsky & Walker LLP(<http://www.paulhastings.com/>), where his practice includes a wide variety of litigation, negotiations, and counseling on behalf of large employers in virtually all aspects of the employment relationship, with particular focus on collective bargaining and federal court litigation on labor and employment issues and on labor law issues in bankruptcy. Mr. Gallagher has extensive experience in employment discrimination litigation, strategic planning for the labor and employment aspects of mergers, acquisitions and bankruptcy. His clients have included railroads, airlines, manufacturers, service providers and retail businesses. Mr. Gallagher has served as Special Labor Counsel on behalf of the debtor in Continental Airlines I (S.D. Tex.1983); Eastern Airlines (Ionosphere) (S.D.N.Y. 1991); Continental Airlines II (D. Del. 1991); United Airlines (N.D. Ill. 2002); ATA Airlines (D. Ind. 2004); Delta Air Lines (S.D.N.Y. 2005); Northwest Airlines (S.D.N.Y. 2005); and Comair Airlines (S.D.N.Y. 2005). Mr. Gallagher has also represented other major air carriers in preparing for bankruptcy proceedings which were avoided by settlement with the unions involved. Mr. Gallagher is a graduate of the University of Scranton (B.S.) and Cornell University (J.D., With Distinction, Order of the Coif), where he served on the board of editors of the Cornell Law Review. He served as law clerk to U.S. District Judge Aubrey E. Robinson, Jr. (D.D.C. 1972?74). Mr. Gallagher also served as a Teaching Fellow at Boston College Law School (1974?75); Assistant Professor at the Indiana University School of Law-Indianapolis (1975-76); and Adjunct Professor at the Columbus School of Law, Catholic University of America (1976?77). Mr. Gallagher is a Fellow of The College of Labor and Employment Lawyers and is a former Employer Co-Chair of the Committee on Railroad and Airline Labor Law of the Section of Labor and Employment Law of the American Bar Association.

Todd C. Duffield is an associate in the Atlanta office of Paul, Hastings, Janofsky & Walker LLP. His practice involves all aspects of labor and employment law. He represents employers before administrative agencies, arbitration tribunals, and state and federal courts throughout the country in both single plaintiff and multi-plaintiff employment actions. He recently concluded the fourth-longest unfair labor practice trial in the history of the National Labor Relations Board. Mr. Duffield regularly advises employers with regard to labor issues under the National Labor Relations Act in connection with labor disputes and corporate mergers and acquisitions. His practice also includes proactive counseling on a broad range of employment issues, including hiring (and rehiring), employee discipline, covenants not to compete, personnel policies, procedures and handbooks, reductions in force, plant closings, and discrimination issues. Mr. Duffield is a graduate of Brigham Young University (B.A.) and the University of Pittsburgh (J.D., cum laude).

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

47 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Eric English on In re Gulf Coast Oil Corp.

2009 Emerging Issues 3629

Eric English on In re Gulf Coast Oil Corp., 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 313 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Feb. 11, 2009)

By Eric English

May 14, 2009

SUMMARY: Eric English, of King & Spalding, looks at a bankruptcy court's rejection of a request to approve a 363(b) sale. Section 363 sales have never been more popular, and the decision in In re Gulf Coast Oil Corp. is significant because it demonstrates the narrow approach some courts favor, despite existing case law of a more expansive nature. As Mr. English notes, the decision will perhaps encourage the Fifth Circuit to revisit the issue.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Texas Bankruptcy Court Rejects Chapter 11 Debtors' Request to Sell All of Their Assets and Calls for Fifth Circuit to Clarify Legal Standard

In In re Gulf Coast Oil Corp., 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 313 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Feb. 11, 2009), the Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Texas denied the debtors' motion to sell all of their assets pursuant to section 363(b) of the Bankruptcy Code. The opinion is notable primarily for its thorough discussion of Fifth Circuit precedent, its attempt to provide a framework for considering section 363 sales by identifying thirteen relevant factors, and its arguably narrow interpretation of the applicable legal standard.

The prevalence of sales under section 363 of the Bankruptcy Code involving all or substantially all of a debtor's assets is well documented. The popularity of such sales is unsurprising given section 363's obvious advantages over filing and seeking approval of a disclosure statement and reorganization plan. Because section 363 sales typically are faster, less expensive and provide the debtor more flexibility than obtaining approval of a plan, the popularity of section 363 sales shows no signs of diminishing.

Section 363 sales can raise a number of issues, but no issue is more important than the familiar threshold question of whether a court will permit the sale of all or substantially all of a debtor's assets in the first place. Section 363(b) provides that a debtor in possession "after notice and a hearing may use, sell, or lease, other than in the ordinary course of business, property of the estate." This language does not address whether all or substantially all of a debtor's assets may be sold pursuant to section 363, and that question has been left to the courts. Many courts have recognized that such sales are permitted by section 363 when the debtor is able to articulate a legitimate business purpose. n1 This standard generally has been adopted by the Fifth Circuit, although few Fifth Circuit opinions have directly applied it. n2 And despite the widespread acceptance of the legitimate business purpose test, some courts remain hesitant to approve section 363 sales of all or substantially all of a debtor's assets absent compelling or special circumstances. n3

Facts of In re Gulf Coast Oil Corp.

The debtors, affiliated oil and gas exploration and production companies, filed for chapter 11 in July 2008. The debtors listed real property assets (consisting of mineral leases and oil and gas wells) of $30,000,000 and unsecured debts of $120,000 in their amended schedules, and stipulated that they owed at least $66,000,000 to Laurus Master Fund, Ltd. ("Laurus"), the debtors sole prepetition secured lender. However, the court noted that the value of the debtors' oil and gas interests had changed considerably given the unprecedented volatility in commodities markets that took place during the debtors' chapter 11 case.

Shortly after filing a chapter 11 plan and disclosure statement in November 2008, the debtors concluded that a corporate reorganization was not feasible. Falling prices for oil and gas had deteriorated the value of the debtors' assets to a level substantially below the amount of Laurus's secured claim and Laurus did not support the debtors' reorganization efforts. Further, the debtors' cash flow was inadequate to proceed with the proposed reorganization. Faced with these hurdles, the debtors abandoned their previously filed plan and sought approval to sell substantially all of their assets at an auction pursuant to section 363(b). As the court noted, however, there was little hope for a meaningful auction given the debtors' inability to attract interested purchasers for their assets. With no other interested buyers, Laurus became the only legitimate potential purchaser of the debtors' assets. n4

Court's Analysis

In considering the debtors' motion to sell all of their assets pursuant to section 363, the court reviewed the Fifth Circuit case law and the leading treatises, discussed recent developments regarding section 363 sales, and considered the views of various commentators. The court then distilled this authority into a list of factors courts can consider in approving section 363 sales. Finally, the court briefly applied these factors to the case at hand and concluded that the proposed sale was inappropriate under section 363.

The court commenced its analysis with a survey of the Fifth Circuit's treatment of section 363 transactions, starting with the venerable and oft-cited In re Braniff Airways, 700 F.2d 935 (5th Cir. 1983). In In re Braniff Airways, the Fifth Circuit rejected a transaction proposed under section 363 because the transaction went beyond a mere sale of assets, would have required creditors to vote for a certain plan, and required the release of claims against the debtor. Id. at 939. Because the section 363 "sale" was more akin to a reorganization plan-without the protections provided by section 1121-the court labeled it a "plan sub rosa" that was inappropriate under section 363. However, as the court noted in In re Gulf Coast Oil Corp., the Fifth Circuit did not condemn the practice of selling all of a debtor's assets under section 363. 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 313, at *16 ("The [In re Braniff Airways] court held that when a transaction materially interfered with 'that carefully crafted scheme,' the transaction could not be authorized by a bankruptcy court under § 363(b). But the Fifth Circuit also expressly declined to hold that the sale of all property of the estate was per se improper." (quoting In re Braniff Airways, 700 F.2d at 940)).

The court then discussed several subsequent Fifth Circuit cases, including Richmond Leasing Co. v. Capital Bank N.A., 762 F.2d 1303, 1313 (5th Cir. 1985), which distinguished In re Braniff Airways on the basis that the proposed lease assumption did not "alter creditors' rights, dispose of assets, and release claims to the extent proposed in [Braniff]," and In re Continental Airlines, Inc., 780 F.2d 1223, 1227 (5th Cir. 1986), which also involved a lease transaction under section 363(b) and established the rule that objectors to section 363(b) transactions must state with particularity which procedural protections are being denied. n5

Unfortunately, neither Richmond Leasing nor In re Continental Airlines Inc. squarely addresses sales of all of a debtors' assets under section 363. However, the discussion of section 363 in those cases is generally in accord with the leading treatises, which confirm that section 363 sales of all or substantially all of a debtor's assets are widely approved upon a showing of a sound business justification. See In re Gulf Coast Oil, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 313, at *21-*24 (discussing treatises). For example, Collier concludes that "[i]t is now generally accepted that section 363 allows such sales [involving substantial assets] in chapter 11, as long as the sale proponent demonstrates a good, sound business justification for conducting the sale before confirmation" Id. at *22 (quoting 3 Collier on Bankruptcy 363.02[3] (15th ed. rev. 2005)). And Norton observes that "[n]otwithstanding the heightened scrutiny of substantial asset sales, courts will generally approve such sales without the procedural protections of a plan and disclosure statement when a debtor can establish a sound business justification for the sale." Id. at *23-*24.

Although the court cited authorities that generally approve section 363 sales of all a debtors' assets, the court also considered commentary that is critical of such sales and voiced its own concerns about several trends. For example, the court noted the increase in significant claims trading in large cases, "loan to own" lending strategies, venue selection, and in the Lehman Brothers case, the sale of assets that were not estate property. Id. at *24-*25, *32-*33. With these concerns in mind, and given the limited guidance provided by the Fifth Circuit, the court observed that "[i]t would be very helpful if the Fifth Circuit were to take another look at the boundaries of § 363(b) sales to provide more guidance to bankruptcy courts in the circuit." Id. at 34. n6 Thus, several themes emerge that persist throughout the opinion: (1) the court has several important concerns about section 363 sales of all of a debtor's assets; and (2) bankruptcy courts would benefit from more guidance from the Fifth Circuit regarding such sales.

Without the benefit of additional guidance here, the court attempted to distill the applicable authorities into a list of factors courts can consider in determining whether to approve a section 363 sale:

1. Is there evidence of a need for speed?
2. What is the business justification?
3. Is the case sufficiently mature to assure due process?
4. Is the proposed asset purchase agreement sufficiently straightforward to facilitate competitive bids . . . ?
5. Have the assets been aggressively marketed in an active market?
6. Are the fiduciaries that control the debtor truly disinterested?
7. Does the proposed sale include all of a debtor's assets and does it include the "crown jewel"?
8. What extraordinary protections does the purchaser want?
9. How burdensome would it be to propose the sale as part of confirmation of a chapter 11 plan?
10. Who will benefit from the sale?
11. Are special adequate protection measures necessary and possible?
12. Was the sale hearing a true adversary presentation?
13. Are any other factors applicable?

Id. at *36-*51.

Finally, the court applied some of these factors to the case at hand. First, the court concluded that no exigency existed that would preclude submission of a plan. Id. at *50. The court also found it irrelevant that the result of a sale would likely be the same as the result of a plan (i.e., Laurus would become the owner of the assets). Id. at *50-*51.

Next, the court construed the relief sought as a "foreclosure," release, assignment of certain executory contracts, elimination of liability, and preservation of a going concern, and held that these results could only be achieved through a reorganization plan, which was not possible here. Id. at *51-*53. The court also expressed concern that it could not accurately determine whether the proposed price was fair because there was no active market for the assets. n7 Id. at 52. Finally, the court voiced its concern that the sale involved all of the debtors' assets and observed that if the sale was approved "[t]he only effect of the bankruptcy process would be to transfer the debtors' assets to its secured creditor with benefits that the creditor could not achieve through foreclosure." Id. at *52-*53. After reaching these conclusions the court denied the debtors' motion.

Critique

As with virtually every case dealing with section 363 sales of all of a debtor's assets, there is the potential for considerable disagreement with the result of In re Gulf Coast Oil Corp. The debtors' proposal involved a relatively straightforward free and clear sale of their assets and the transaction did not limit voting rights or include many of the other restrictions associated with a "plan sub rosa." There is no mention that the objecting party specifically identified the protections being denied them, as required. n8 Further, there was no discussion that the debtors proposed the plan in bad faith or that a prompt asset sale would have limited the recovery for creditors. Moreover, it is unfortunate that, despite the court's comprehensive discussion of authority and its listing of numerous relevant factors, only a few paragraphs are devoted to applying the law to the facts. Perhaps this is because many of the concerns that the court expressed about section 363 sales-widespread claims trading, "loan to own" lending strategies, venue selection, sales involving assets not belonging to the estate, and the like-simply were not present.

Criticism aside, the opinion in In re Gulf Coast Oil Corp. is clearly defensible given the discretion provided by the applicable legal standard. And differences of opinion about cases involving section 363 sales are the inevitable and direct result of the vague standards in place. Nonetheless, at the end of the day, the opinion in In re Gulf Coast Oil Corp. demonstrates that some courts construe section 363 and the applicable Fifth Circuit precedent rather narrowly. Whether the court's approach is a harbinger of things to come is unclear, but given the prominent place that section 363 sales occupy in chapter 11 cases, this decision will give debtors some pause and hopefully will encourage the Fifth Circuit revisit this issue in a substantive way.

Return to Text

n1 See, e.g., Stephens Indus. Inc. v. McClung, 789 F.2d 386, 390 (6th Cir. 1986); In re Lionel Corp., 722 F.2d 1063, 1071 (2d Cir. 1983); see also, e.g., In re Bombay Co., 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3218, at *6 (N.D. Tex. Sept. 26, 2007) ("[T]here is also ample authority that section 363(b)(1) may be used to dispose of all or most of a chapter 11 debtor's assets through a sale in a going concern configuration or by liquidation.").

n2 See, e.g., In re Continental Airlines, Inc., 780 F.2d 1223, 1227 (5th Cir. 1986).

n3 See 2 Norton Bankr. L. & Prac. § 44:17 & n. 10 (3d rev. 2009).

n4 The debtors' financial advisors objected to the proposed sale on the basis that administered expenses would not be paid in full.

n5 The court also briefly considered two other decisions that did not involve section 363(b) sales. In re Cajun Elec. Power Co-op., Inc., 119 F.3d 349 (5th Cir. 1997). In In re Cajun Electric, the court again distinguished In re Braniff Airways, this time in approving a settlement involving certain estate property that was actually an impediment to reorganization. Id. at 355. In In re Babcock and Wilcox Co., 250 F.3d 955 (5th Cir. 2001), meanwhile, the court again distinguished In re Braniff Airways: "Braniff merely stands for the proposition that the provisions of § 363 . . . do not allow the debtor to gut the bankruptcy estate before reorganization or to change the fundamental nature of the estate's assets in such a way that limits a future reorganization." Id. at 960.

n6 To support its view that the Fifth Circuit should clarify the appropriate legal standard, the court summarized the rules from the Fifth Circuit's previous cases: a debtor's fiduciary duties must be considered, a valid business justification must be present, sales of all of a debtor's assets are subject to special scrutiny, those opposing such a sale must specifically articulate their objections, section 363 sales cannot be used as "scheme" to avoid the plan confirmation process (unless the court is able to protect creditors), and In re Braniff Airways type transactions are not allowed. 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 313, at *34.

n7 The court recognized, however, that the sale price probably did not matter because Laurus was substantially undersecured. See 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 313, at *52.

n8 See In re Continental Airlines, Inc., ., 780 F.2d 1223, 1227 (5th Cir. 1986).

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of section 363, see ■ Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender).

For the American College of Bankruptcys Best Practices Report on Section 363 Sales, click
■ here.

For the American College of Bankruptcys Circuit-by-Circuit Review of 363 Sales, click
■ here.

For an introduction to sales outside the ordinary course of business, see ■ Collier Handbook for Debtors in Possession, ch. 24A (Matthew Bender).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Eric English is an associate in King & Spalding LLP's Houston office, where he is a member of the firm's Financial Restructuring group. Mr. English received a J.D. from Pepperdine University School of Law, magna cum laude, and a bachelor's degree in business administration from Seattle Pacific University, magna cum laude. Prior to joining King & Spalding, Mr. English clerked for the Honorable Harold R. DeMoss, Jr. on the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

48 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Richard Levin on PBGC v. Oneida Ltd.

2009 Emerging Issues 3623

Richard Levin on PBGC v. Oneida Ltd., 562 F.3d 154, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 7176 (2d Cir. Apr. 8, 2009)

By Richard Levin

May 13, 2009

SUMMARY: Richard Levin, of Cravath, Swaine & Moore LLP, considers the significance of the first appellate decision holding that a company is liable to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation for pension termination premiums after it emerges from a chapter 11 reorganization. Because of continuing obligations to the PBGC, chapter 11 may not provide meaningful relief from pension liabilities. However, the decision does not address successor liability.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: PBGC's Right to Pension Plan Termination Premium Survives a Chapter 11 Reorganization

The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has ruled that a company that terminates its defined benefit pension plan in a chapter 11 reorganization case is liable to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC) for pension termination premiums after it emerges from a chapter 11 reorganization. The decision, PBGC v. Oneida Ltd., 562 F.3d 154, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 7176 (2d Cir. Apr. 8, 2009), though expected, is the first appellate court decision applying the termination premium provisions that Congress enacted in the Deficit Reduction Act of 2005 (DRA 2005) to protect the PBGC from employer bankruptcies, in which a pension plan termination usually gave the PBGC only a dischargeable general unsecured claim on which it recovered little, if anything.

Background

The DRA 2005 imposes an annual termination premium of $1,250 per plan participant for three years after a distress or involuntary termination of a single-employer defined benefit plan, whether or not the termination occurs in a chapter 11 case. If a plan is terminated while the employer or a member of its controlled corporate group is undergoing reorganization under chapter 11, the DRA 2005 contains a "Special Rule" that defers application of the general rule, and therefore the start of the three-year period for premiums, until the date of discharge or dismissal of the chapter 11 case, apparently with the intent of ensuring that the termination premium obligation is a post-bankruptcy obligation that is not affected by the bankruptcy discharge.

In its chapter 11 reorganization case, Oneida Ltd. stipulated with the PBGC for a distress termination of one of its single-employer defined benefit plans. Oneida then argued to the bankruptcy court that the termination premium was a claim that arose before bankruptcy and therefore was discharged in Oneida's chapter 11 case. Oneida reasoned that the Bankruptcy Code's definition of "claim" is broad, including contingent claims, that Oneida and the PBGC had a relationship with respect to the pension plan before bankruptcy and that the parties could contemplate before bankruptcy that this additional premium could arise. The bankruptcy court agreed with Oneida and discharged the PBGC's premium claim. 383 B.R. 29 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

The Decision

The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit reversed. The court of appeals agreed that the definition of "claim" is broad, but concluded that it is not unlimited. A claim's existence depends on whether the claimant had a right to payment, and the claim is a prepetition claim only if that right arose prepetition. "No matter how broadly the term 'claim' is construed," the court explained, "it cannot extend to a right to payment that does not yet exist under federal law." 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 7176, at *8. Nonbankruptcy law determines whether and when a claimant has a right to payment. The DRA 2005 established the PBGC's right to the termination premium as of "the date of discharge" specifically to prevent employers from evading the premium by a bankruptcy filing, and treating the termination premium as a dischargeable prepetition claim would directly thwart Congress's goals under the DRA 2005. Therefore, the PBGC's right to the termination premium survived Oneida's chapter 11 discharge.

The Effect of the Decision: Chapter 11 May Not Provide Meaningful Relief from Pension Liabilities

In the current economic environment, many companies are facing both financial distress and declining value in their pension assets, such that previously well-funded defined benefit pension plans are becoming seriously underfunded. The cost of bringing a company's plan back to fully funded status may prevent the company from surviving its general financial distress. A company's obligation to fund its pension plans is dischargeable in chapter 11. However, with this decision, which other courts are expected to follow, chapter 11 reorganization may not provide meaningful relief from pension liabilities because of continuing obligations to the PBGC. The result is likely to be either fewer successful reorganizations, as many companies with a substantial number of plan participants (including retirees and other inactive participants) who could otherwise reorganize will not be able to support the full amount of the termination premium, or lower recoveries for creditors of companies that are still able to reorganize.

The decision does not address the application of the termination premium to successors in interest following a sale of all or substantially all of a chapter 11 company's assets, and the statute appears not to apply the termination premium to a purchaser of all or substantially all of a company's assets. Thus, a buyer of a distressed company's assets, whether through a bankruptcy section 363 sale or otherwise, should not be liable for the termination premium. Even a company that undergoes a successful reorganization may be able to avoid the termination premium by structuring its reorganization as a sale to a new entity. The securities of the new entity and other consideration to be distributed under the plan would have to be distributed through the old company, which would continue to exist for the purpose of distributing creditor recoveries and other chapter 11 case closing administrative purposes. The buyer then would have two defenses to payment of the termination premium. First, a buyer is generally not liable for a termination premium under DRA 2005. Second, a company that liquidates in chapter 11 and does not continue in business does not receive a discharge, so the termination premium, which applies only upon discharge of the old company's debts, would never apply. However, all members of a controlled corporate group are jointly and severally liable for pension obligations. So any controlled group members that are left behind in their current form may continue to be liable for the termination premium.

Return to Text

n1 Deficit Reduction Act of 2005, Pub. L. 109-171, 120 Stat. 4 (2006), 29 U.S.C. § 1306(a)(7)(B).

n2 The court stated:

If there is any ambiguity in the statutory language of the Special Rule-and we perceive none-it is resolved in the PBGC's favor by the legislative history of the Deficit Reduction Act and the Pension Protection Act. The Termination Premiums were established in response to mounting financial pressure on the PBGC as a result of an increasing number of pension plan terminations. See H.R. Rep. 109-276, at 345-48 (2005). 2 Congress recognized, however, that its Termination Premium program could be jeopardized by employers seeking bankruptcy protection. It thus created the Special Rule.

2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 7176, at *8.

RELATED LINKS: For more discussion on protecting pension plan benefits, see ■ Labor and Employment Law, ch. 152 (Matthew Bender).

For discussion of defined benefit plans in bankruptcy and interactions with the PBGC, see ■ Collier Monograph: Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation, 7 (Matthew Bender).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Richard Levin is a partner in the Restructuring Department of Cravath, Swaine & Moore LLP, in New York City. Mr. Levin's practice focuses on creditors' rights, insolvency, reorganization and bankruptcy. He has negotiated and structured complex domestic and international transactions involving distressed or insolvent companies and guided corporate debtors, creditors and acquirers through Chapter 11 and out-of-court restructurings. He has also conducted bankruptcy-related litigation both in connection with and independently of restructuring transactions. Before joining Cravath, Swaine & Moore, Mr. Levin spent 10 years as a partner in the Corporate Restructuring Department of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP and 16 years as a member of the Los Angeles insolvency and corporate reorganization firm of Stutman, Treister & Glatt P.C.. From 1975 to 1978, Mr. Levin served as counsel to a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee and was one of the principal authors of the Bankruptcy Code and the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978. Mr. Levin received an S.B. from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1972, and a J.D. from Yale Law School in 1975, where he was an editor of the Yale Law Journal. Mr. Levin has served as a consultant to the World Bank and to the Central Bank of Brazil regarding new Brazilian bankruptcy legislation (2001-2004), as Faculty at the Federal Judicial Center (2001-present) and as a Lecturer in Law at Harvard Law School (2004, 2006). He is also a Fellow of the American College of Bankruptcy and a member of its Board of Trustees (2007-2009). Since 2004, he has been the vice chair of the National Bankruptcy Conference.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

49 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Herrick, Feinstein LLP on the Madoff Litigation Landscape

2009 Emerging Issues 3571

Herrick, Feinstein, LLP: Madoff Victims Face Litigation Landscape Filled With Uncertain or Unsatisfying Recoveries and, Worst of All, the Prospect of Losing More

By Therese Doherty, Howard Elisofon and John Oleske

April 30, 2009

SUMMARY: In this Emerging Issues Analysis, Therese M. Doherty, Howard R. Elisofon and John Oleske of the New York City-based law firm Herrick, Feinstein, LLP examine the litigation strategies and courses of action for the victims of Bernard Madoff's Ponzi scheme and conclude that the best that most can hope for is not to actually lose even more.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Any meaningful discussion of Madoff-related legal action is bound to be both complicated and problematic, arising from the likelihood that for victims, attempts at recovery figure to be unsatisfying or unlikely. Those who lost their investment in Madoff's Ponzi scheme have several potential avenues to pursue restitution, but those options involve a return of mere pennies on the dollar, years of protracted litigation, or both. In fact, the more likely a litigation strategy is to lead to recovery, the less it will probably yield. While victims and their counsel contemplate that inverse relationship between likelihood of recovery and the amount to be recovered, the real battle -- with the most interesting legal arguments and possibly the most aggregate money on the line -- will be in the clawback arena.

Victims who redeemed all or part of their investment before the scheme's collapse face the prospect of being preyed on a second time. The SIPC trustee, Irving Picard, has already begun to pursue clawback redemptions to enlarge the estate for the benefit of the Madoff brokerage's estate and eventual pro rata distribution to the redeemers' fellow victims. In late April, he sent notices to more than 200 individual investors, funds, and former Madoff employees, demanding that they return redemptions made over the past six years. More notices are likely to follow.

Whether the discussion turns to offense (victims seeking recompense) or defense (trying to hold on to what they still have) practitioners and laypersons should realize that the Madoff-related litigation landscape is a minefield. Navigating it requires not only a thorough understanding of the opportunities, pitfalls, and precious few safe havens, but also a perspective and understanding that even generally favorable outcomes will be not be entirely satisfying.

This is the question on the mind of every Madoff victim, and the answers generally supplied by lawyers is "maybe nobody" and "you won't get much back anyway." For the most part, these are sound predictions. Each investor's situation is different, however, and the potential for recovering part of their investment can vary widely. Although the likelihood of seeing the return of a substantial part of their losses may be small, at least there are several options available, some of which will be more promising or attractive than others, depending on an investor's circumstances and tolerance for a long-term legal strategy that may end up resulting in nothing but frustration and steep legal fees. We address each option in turn, in rough order of likelihood of success and prompt resolution.

SIPC Claims

For those victims who invested directly in the Madoff brokerage, SIPC is bound by statute to provide $500,000 in coverage for losses in securities, and $100,000 for losses in cash. The relevant case law indicates that because Madoff brokerage victims received statements indicating that they owned securities (even though they did not), they should be paid the $500,000 maximum and not limited to the $100,000 cash coverage payout. See In re New Times Securities Services, Inc., 371 F.3d 68 (2d Cir. 2004). To date, the trustee has paid on only a handful of claims -- the most obvious ones at that, albeit at the $500,000 level -- leaving us uncertain as to how he will proceed on the bulk of the claims. Given that SIPC is a private insurer and that being statutorily eligible for coverage is not tantamount to receiving it, we find it conceivable that SIPC will seek to deny coverage on claims, spawning coverage litigation.

Although it is not at all clear that the $1.6 billion SIPC trust fund and $1 billion in additional borrowing power will cover payments to all victims, it is possible, if not likely, that those funds or borrowing power will be expanded to ensure that at least the SIPC coverage promised to investors will actually be paid out.

In addition to those who invested directly and lost, there are thousands who invested indirectly, lost just as badly, and are statutorily ineligible for SIPC coverage by virtue of having invested through "feeder funds" that in turn invested in Madoff. These investors can hope only for a pro rata share of the $500,000 that will presumably be paid to each of the investing funds -- in other words, a negligible recovery. See Sec. Investor Prot. Corp. v. Morgan, Kennedy & Co., 533 F. 2d 1314 (2d Cr. 1976) (only trust fund, and not an individual investor in the fund, is eligible for SIPC coverage).

Finally, although there is additional relief available to brokerage investors beyond the SIPC payouts, that relief is not only limited but to the extent it is available it could benefit SIPC to the exclusion of the investors. Specifically, one of the SIPC trustee's duties is to gather all of the assets of the estate for pro rata distribution. As discussed below, this will include amounts "clawed back" from investors who made redemptions. But this is likely to provide the estate with a mere fraction of the losses taken by the non-redeeming investors, and the trustee may attempt to use these funds to offset SIPC payments to victims, which would likely make those distributions meaningless.

Class Action Lawsuits

Plaintiffs' firms have already begun flooding the courts with putative class-action lawsuits against virtually every individual or entity to have touched the Madoff scheme. The most obvious targets are Madoff, his immediate family, and professionals who assisted Madoff, such as the two-man accounting firm that was supposed to audit Madoff's books.

One degree of separation removed -- but still vulnerable -- are the hedge funds that invested in Madoff, plus their managers, advisers, and accountants. Indeed, one of these fund managers, Ezra Merkin, has already been charged by New York's Attorney General, which seems to bolster the civil lawsuits that already have been filed against him.

The potential merits of these lawsuits are readily apparent, and in some cases -- with fact patterns unfavorable to the defendants -- establishing liability can be a reasonably likely proposition. But it remains to be seen what kind of a recovery can actually be had, given the likely insolvency of many of the entities involved, and the relatively small amount of money that could be recovered from the others when compared to the losses sustained by the class-action plaintiffs. Moreover, plaintiffs' counsel in these lawsuits will be entitled to a substantial portion of any recovery, further reducing the recompense that their clients can expect to receive, even if the claims are successful.

Tax and Insurance Recoveries

These are examples of likely sources of recovery, but probably small comfort to victims.

Many investors will have an opportunity to recover some past tax payments, or offset future gains, through theft-loss claims on amended or future returns. The amount and timing of such recoveries will depend on each investor's tax circumstances, and can be reliably determined only with the assistance of an accountant and tax counsel. Be aware that an IRS ruling in March provides a safe harbor for victims to take an immediate deduction for losses without having to make a determination of their potential recovery of claims against Madoff or third parties. For more extended treatment of the tax issues, see our firm's client alert at <http://www.herrick.com/sitecontent.cfm?pageID=29&itemID=12800>.

Many homeowners' insurance policies, especially those written after the advent of the age of identity theft, cover losses due to theft and/or fraud. Some victims have already claimed under these policies, and issuers have in some cases paid out without objection. In cases where the amount of redemption exceeds the amount invested, however, we are aware of outright denials of coverage. Furthermore, the policy limits for these kinds of losses are usually minimal relative to the total amount of losses, often paying out as little as $5,000 and sometimes less -- again, little comfort to those whose losses far exceed the policy limits. Still, for those who have lost everything, being able to pay another several months' bills will make submission of a claim well worth the time.

Suing the SEC

Some victims have retained our firm to bring actions against the Securities and Exchange Commission on a theory of negligence. They allege that if the SEC had performed its auditing, information-reporting, and investigative functions with ordinary care, the Madoff Ponzi scheme would have been exposed long ago, and, as a result, they never would have made the investments that led to their massive losses. At this time, we have filed two such claims, and anticipate filing at least a half-dozen more in the near future.

The upside to this course of action is that the SEC's liability, if proven, would be backed by the resources of the federal government -- the deepest of deep pockets. In theory, success on these claims would result in total restitution of victims' actual losses.

However, there are serious legal challenges as well. The first is timing. The Federal Tort Claims Act, which permits private citizens to bring actions for money damages against the federal government and its various agencies, requires that before filing a lawsuit in federal court, the claimants must first file administrative claims for relief. That gives the SEC six months to reject or ignore the claim -- as it certainly will -- before claimants can convert their administrative claims to lawsuits. Second, once the dispute moves to court, the SEC will assert the doctrine of sovereign immunity, which will trigger a motion-practice battle in which it will be difficult -- although hardly impossible -- for the plaintiff investors to prevail. Finally, regardless of the outcome of the motions to dismiss, the litigation would probably drag on for years, given the inevitability of multiple appeals, particularly if the government were to lose any of the motions that could establish adverse precedent on the sovereign immunity issue.

In the end, claims against the SEC may end up being more about leverage than an ultimate victory in litigation. If enough victims pursue this route, if enough pressure is brought to bear on the government, and if the government has enough fear of the possibility of losing key legal battles, it is conceivable that it might establish a victims' settlement fund. That would provide at least some compensation in exchange for a release of the negligence claims, as has been done in at least some other cases involving government agencies' negligence.

It is bitterly ironic that the victims have narrow avenues to recovery, but those who redeemed all or part of their investments face the danger of additional losses. The SIPC trustee began sending notices of clawback actions in April, and will likely begin filing lawsuits in late summer or the fall of 2009. Under current law, the best that victims who receive these demands can hope for is to keep their principal.

The Law of Clawbacks

The size of the clawback claims -- and the likelihood that Mr. Picard will file them against any particular investor -- turn on several key factors. Most critical are the sizes of the redemptions, their characterization as profits as opposed to principal, and their relative proximity to the time that the Madoff brokerage failed.

Redemptions that were made shortly before the collapse allow the SIPC trustee to invoke the "preferential transfer" bankruptcy statute, meaning that the trustee can avoid the entire transfer without distinguishing between profits and principal, or indeed, without making any other showing. The trustee has already instituted one such action, demanding the return of $150 million that was redeemed less than two months prior to the collapse. (Under the preferential transfer law, the trustee can avoid transfers made within 90 days of his appointment). The trustee is likely to go after these easy targets first, but even redemptions made outside the 90-day preferential transfer window remain highly vulnerable to clawback.

Redemptions of profits made within six years under New York law are automatically recoverable by the estate; there appears to be no defense. Investors who made redemptions that could be characterized as profits anytime within the six-year period should expect to be the next-priority targets after the preferential transfers made within the 90-day period.

But even redemptions of principal made within those same time frames are not safe from a clawback. Indeed, some of the victims who have already received demand letters from the SIPC trustee redeemed only principal, and are double victims, because they lost money in the fraud as well and never took out profits. Whether this is the trustee's intent, or is the result of Madoff's faulty recordkeeping, remains to be seen. In what redeeming investors will undoubtedly see as a perversion of justice, the ability of investors to defend those redemptions will depend largely on their ability to bear the burden of proving that they made the redemptions in good faith for purposes unrelated to any suspicions that Madoff was a fraud. In a series of recent cases in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York -- the same court administering the Madoff brokerage estate -- the court reaffirmed investors' obligation to "prove a negative" and show they had no knowledge of Madoff's criminal activities when they redeemed their principal. See In re Bayou Group LLC, 2008 U.S. Bankr. LEXIS 3261 (S.D.N.Y. Bankr. 2008).

However, the Bayou case provided something of an escape route for investors. Rather than requiring the usual proofs of good faith -- lack of knowledge of any red flags, or diligent investigation of such warning signs that were reasonably assuaged -- the court allowed for a shortcut to proving good faith. Specifically, the court noted that various circumstances indicated a lack of awareness of any fraud, including: redemptions to satisfy specific pre-existing obligations, such as tax liabilities; redemption of substantially less than the entire investment; or redemptions significantly before any "red flags" became evident.

On a final note, investors should keep in mind that although SIPC payouts will go only to direct investors in the Madoff brokerage, the trustee can seek clawbacks from any investor, direct or not, whose money was invested in the Madoff scheme and who redeemed. That means that although "feeder fund" investors can hope to share only pro rata in a single $500,000 SIPC payout to their fund, every dollar they redeemed from that fund that could be attributable to the fund's investment with Madoff is vulnerable to a clawback. It will bear watching whether Mr. Picard attempts to pierce the feeder funds and go after the funds' individual investors who redeemed money.

Practical Considerations Limiting Clawbacks

The trustee's power to claw back redemptions is undeniably far-reaching. The existence of that power, however, does not necessarily mean that it should, or will, be exercised with respect to any particular investor. Indeed, it is reasonable to hope that the trustee, who is charged with administering the estate in the spirit of equity, will be sparing in seeking recovery from all but the most culpable and most well-resourced of those investors who made substantial redemptions. But we do know that some of the victims who have received clawback notices clearly do not meet this description.

For one thing, there is the issue of what the trustee can reasonably hope to recover. Even if an investor made significant and recent redemptions of profits, those funds may have been dissipated or invested in illiquid assets. For example, an investor who liquidated $1 million in profits to purchase a home may not have a significant pool of cash to repay the estate. It remains to be seen whether the trustee will pursue judgments and foreclosures against such victims, putting them out-of-house, just to enlarge the overall corpus of the estate

Moreover, some investors' redemptions will undoubtedly be so relatively small, or partial, or in arguable good faith, that the trustee may not deem it worthwhile to file a claim and pursue repayment. Like any administrator, the trustee can be expected to attempt to maximize efficiencies, and the evaluation of prospective litigations against victims should be no different. Of course, that is not to say that the trustee might not attempt to secure easy settlements by making compromise offers prior to making a claim. But victims should evaluate the likely cost and outcome of a claim before agreeing to such a compromise, given the unlikelihood that the trustee will pursue the entire universe of potential clawback targets.

Finally, there is the issue of fairness and equity. The trustee is not bound to any particular moral calculation, but some general guidelines seem obvious. For example, a number of Madoff's victims were charitable foundations, many of which lost everything after having redeemed money to advance their public-service missions. Other victims might be viewed in similarly sympathetic terms. Again, given the relatively low utility of the clawbacks it is difficult to see how the trustee could avoid public outrage (and potential reversal by the courts) if he seeks to inflict more pain on Madoff's most vulnerable victims.

Conclusion -- What Should I Do?

The trustee has been granted $28 million to administer the estate and has an incentive to use those resources to exploit all possible avenues for additional discovery and adversary proceedings that might lead to significant returns.

Victims who redeemed will need sophisticated counsel, speedy action and the development of strong exculpatory evidence. The evidence should go to showing their good-faith use of the redemptions to meet financial obligations rather than maintaining a lifestyle or making optional purchases; that the redemptions were partial; and/or that redemptions were made significantly prior to the collapse of the scheme. Where an investor and their counsel detect vulnerabilities, they should consider settling with the trustee early, when it may be possible to avoid being caught up in unwanted, protracted, costly and painful involvement in the Madoff bankruptcy.

For those investors looking to be compensated, at least in part, and not merely to avoid clawbacks, there are the various options discussed above. They should be considered in consultation with counsel specialized in the relevant fields.

The headlines about Madoff-related litigation will inevitably center on victims' attempts to retrieve money they lost. But those are likely to result in pyrrhic victories of little recovery, or represent uphill legal battles, or both. The weightier matter for victims -- at least for those who made direct or indirect redemptions -- seems to be just holding on to what they have.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see www.lexis.com/research Legal > Area of Law -- By Topic > Bankruptcy

For bankruptcy litigation news, podcasts from leading attorneys and industry professionals, blogs, and much more, visit the LexisNexis Bankruptcy Law Center. <http://www.lexisnexis.com/community/bankruptcylaw/>

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion of fraudulent transfers in bankruptcy, see, generally, ■ Chapter 548, Collier on Bankruptcy, 15th Edition, Revised.

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the
■ Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Therese M. Doherty and Howard R. Elisofon are litigation partners at NYC-based law firm Herrick, Feinstein LLP, where John Oleske is a litigation associate.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

50 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

James M. Lawniczak on Statutory Interpretation in Bankruptcy Matters

2009 Emerging Issues 3542

James M. Lawniczak on Statutory Interpretation in Bankruptcy Matters

By James Lawniczak

April 21, 2009

SUMMARY: In this analysis, James Lawniczak surveys the Supreme Court's evolving approach to the interpretation of bankruptcy statutes. He explains how the Courts common law method has evolved into a "plain meaning" approach, where the Court reviews the statute and does its best to give effect to the language of the statute and the intent of Congress. This in turn has broadened, in some cases, into a "better meaning" method of statutory interpretation.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: The U.S. Supreme Court's approach to the interpretation of bankruptcy statutes has changed over time. Quite some time ago, the Court used a common law approach. It would indeed start its consideration with the statutory language, just as a common law court starts its consideration with a prior court decision in another case. The Court would then use common law principles to seek out the fair and equitable result in the case pending before it, even though the statute did not necessarily lead to that result.

The Supreme Court's method of statutory interpretation then evolved into the current "plain meaning" approach, where the Court reviews the statute and does its best to give effect to the language of the statute and the intent of Congress, leaving the determination of what is fair and appropriate to Congress. This latter approach has been broadened in several cases, which have used a "better meaning" approach to interpret ambiguous statutory language, by choosing the better of the possible meanings solely from the structure of the statutory language itself.

The Constitution gives Congress the power to legislate on bankruptcy matters. Thus, the Constitution itself has determined that policy decisions on what is appropriate and fair in bankruptcy matters are for Congress and not the courts. Therefore, the appropriate approach in bankruptcy cases is indeed to give effect to the language that Congress has used in the statute.

Bank of Marin v. England--A Common Law Approach

When the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 was passed and became effective for cases filed on and after October 1, 1979, an important Supreme Court case dealing with interpretation of bankruptcy statutes was Bank of Marin v.

England, 385 U.S. 99, 87 S. Ct. 274, 17 L. Ed. 2d 197 (1966). In that case, the Court considered a provision in the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 providing that anyone who delivered property of the estate to a third party after a bankruptcy proceeding had been filed would be liable to the trustee, with no exception for whether the party had any notice or knowledge of the bankruptcy filing. The Bank of Marin had cleared the bankrupt's checks after the filing, but before the bank had any actual knowledge of the filing. The trustee sought, successfully in all courts below, to recover against the bank for the amounts transferred out of the bankrupt's account.

The Supreme Court reversed. Even though Congress's language unambiguously made the bank liable, the Court found that result inequitable and inappropriate, stating: "Yet we do not read these statutory words with the ease of a computer. There is an overriding consideration that equitable principles govern the exercise of bankruptcy jurisdiction." 385 U.S. at 103, 87 S. Ct. at 277. The Court indicated that it believed the force of the statute would be maintained by allowing the trustee to proceed against the third party rather than the bank. The Court's approach was akin to the way courts resolve cases under the common law, using the statute only as a starting point, just as common law courts use legal principles and prior cases as the beginning of their analysis.

In a similar vein, the Court in Kelly v. Robinson, 479 U.S. 36, 43-44, 107 S. Ct. 353, 357-58, 93 L. Ed. 2d 216 (1986), indicated that the text of a statute is only the "starting point," and that a court must also consider the "whole law" and "its object and policy." In that case, the Court held that a criminal restitution obligation was not dischargeable, noting a "deep conviction that federal bankruptcy courts should not invalidate the results of state criminal proceedings." 479 U.S. at 47, 107 S. Ct. at 360.

The Bank of Marin case has never been overruled, so it remains theoretically available to support an argument that a court should do the right thing, notwithstanding an unambiguous statutory directive to the contrary. Indeed, in the early years of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, Bank of Marin was often cited by the party who had the losing statutory argument. However, in my experience, such an argument was never successful. Interestingly, if the same facts were to arise in a bankruptcy case today, the result would be the same as the result in Bank of Marin. That is because Congress itself changed the law when it adopted the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, enacting 11 U.S.C. § 542(c), which allows an entity acting in good faith with neither "actual notice nor actual knowledge of the commencement of the case" to transfer property of the estate without liability for turnover.

Bank of Marin represents one of the last instances of federal courts using a common law approach to statutory interpretation. With the great proliferation of federal and state statutes in modern times, creating many different kinds of "codes," not just the Bankruptcy Code, the courts have become comfortable allowing Congress the right to make equity and policy determinations. Thus, as will be seen in the cases cited below, our legal system has generally stopped using a common law approach when statutory interpretation is involved. See Antonin Scalia, Common-Law Courts in a Civil-Law System: The Role of United States Federal Courts in Interpreting the Constitution and Laws, in A Matter of Interpretation: Federal Courts and the Law 3-47 (A. Gutmann ed., Princeton Univ. Press 1997).

Recently, in Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Massachusetts, 549 U.S. 365, 127 S. Ct. 1105, 166 L. Ed. 2d 956 (2007), the Supreme Court allowed common sense and policy to affect its interpretation of bankruptcy legislation. The issue was whether a chapter 7 debtor had an absolute right to convert the case to one under chapter 13. A review of the relevant statute, 11 U.S.C. § 706(a), suggested that he did. The issue before the Court was whether the bankruptcy court, in deciding whether to allow conversion, could consider that the resultant chapter 13 case would be in bad faith and subject to dismissal.

The Court noted that its decision required it to review more of the Bankruptcy Code than just section 706(a), which allows the conversion. Section 706(d) provides that a case cannot be converted to another chapter unless the debtor may be a debtor under that chapter. The Court observed that case law nearly unanimously accepts the proposition that a debtor's pre-filing bad faith prevents that person from having a right to proceed in bankruptcy. See, e.g., In re Alt, 305 F.3d 413, 418-19 (6th Cir. 2002). Thus, this debtor was not a person entitled to be a debtor under chapter 13 and therefore did not have a right to convert the case to chapter 13.

In addition, the Court found that 11 U.S.C. § 105 (allowing a bankruptcy court to issue orders "necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title") and the "inherent power of every federal court to sanction 'abusive litigation practices'" supported its decision to deny an absolute right to convert. 549 U.S. at 375-76, 127 S. Ct. at 1112. The Court's decision allowed "a prompt, rather than a delayed, ruling on an unmeritorious attempt to qualify as a debtor under Chapter 13." Id.

Although the Court in Marrama certainly weighed and considered practicality and policy in its decision, the way in which it did so contrasts markedly from the way "equity" was done in Bank of Marin. In Bank of Marin, the Court determined that one of its functions was to do equity, despite a recognition that there was no support whatsoever in the statute for its decision. On the other hand, in Marrama, the Court premised its decision on a review of the entire statutory scheme, coming to the conclusion that the statute itself supported its decision. Similarly, in an Ohio state court case where the court used policy considerations to expand a statute, the court nonetheless still reached its decision by interpreting the language of the statute. Covington v. HKM Direct Market Communications, Inc., 2003 Ohio App. LEXIS 5645, 2003 Ohio 6306 (Ohio App. 10th Dist. Nov. 25, 2003) (discussing "policy considerations" in incorporating an ordinary course of business defense to the Ohio insurance insolvency preference section, even though the statute did not contain one, but doing so by holding that payments made in the ordinary course were not made on "antecedent debt"). Contra State ex rel. Wagner v. Gilbane Building Co., 276 Neb. 686, 694 757 N.W.2d 194, 201 (2008) (where insurance insolvency preference statute did not contain an ordinary course of business defense, there was none, because it is the legislature's function to "declare what is the law and public policy").

The "Plain Meaning" Doctrine-a Statutory Approach

Following the adoption of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, the "plain meaning" doctrine of statutory interpretation became the appropriate and recognized method of interpreting the Bankruptcy Code. This change from the approach in Bank of Marin to something more akin to a method of bankruptcy statutory interpretation that would be appropriate in a civil law code system is consistent with the constitutional grant to Congress in Article I, Section 8 to establish "uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States."

The Supreme Court has often noted that if the meaning of a statute is unambiguous, then the inquiry has ended. See, e.g., Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 534, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 1030, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1024 (2004) (interpreting 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(1) so that a debtor's attorney is not entitled to compensation unless retained by the trustee and indicating that just because the statute is "awkward, and even ungrammatical" does not make it "ambiguous on the point at issue"); Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Union Planters Bank, 530 U.S. 1, 6, 120 S. Ct. 1942, 1947, 147 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2000) (finding 11 U.S.C. § 506(c) available only to the trustee or debtor in possession); Connecticut Nat'l Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 253-54, 112 S. Ct. 1146, 1149, 117 L. Ed. 2d 391 (1992) (28 U.S.C. § 1292 authorizes appeals of interlocutory orders of district courts sitting as an appellate court under certain circumstances, stating that "courts must presume that a legislature says in a statute what it means and means in a statute what it says there"); Patterson v. Shumate, 504 U.S. 753, 759, 112 S. Ct. 2242, 2247, 119 L. Ed. 2d 519 (1992) (determining that 401(k) retirement accounts are not part of a debtor's bankruptcy estate under 11 U.S.C. § 541(c)(2), indicating that "[w]e must enforce the statute according to its terms"). See generally K. Klee, Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court 14-36 (LexisNexis 2009); W. Effross, Grammarians at the Gate: The Rehnquist Court's Evolving "Plain Meaning" Approach to Bankruptcy Jurisprudence, 23 Seton Hall L. Rev. 1636 (1993).

In United States v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 109 S. Ct. 1026, 103 L. Ed. 2d 290 (1989), the Court considered a potentially ambiguous statute, 11 U.S.C. § 506(b), which allows an oversecured creditor to add interest and certain costs to its secured claim. The oversecured creditor is entitled to "interest on such claim, and any reasonable fees, costs, or charges provided for under the agreement under which such claim arose." The statutory interpretation issue was whether the modifier at the end of the clause requiring that the agreement must so provide applied only to the closer antecedent, "reasonable fees, costs, or charges," or whether it applied to both antecedents, including the right to interest. If the modifier applied to the right to interest, then the government would not be entitled to interest on its secured tax claim, because there was no agreement at all, as the tax lien was a statutory, not a consensual, lien.

Language of the form (a) and/or (b) followed by a modifier is often ambiguous and requires careful drafting. The language of 11 U.S.C. § 506(b) is not an example of such careful drafting because it is not 100 percent clear whether the modifier applies to just the last antecedent or to both of the prior antecedents. The language of 11 U.S.C. § 1328(f)(1), which provides that a chapter 13 discharge is not available if the debtor received a discharge in a case filed under chapter 7, 11 or 12 within four years of the filing of the current chapter 13 case, is also ambiguous, but in a different way. There the modifier (within four years) could logically apply only to one of the two prior antecedents (filing of the previous case, or discharge entered in the previous case), but not to both. See Carroll v. Sanders (In re Sanders), 551 F.3d 397 (6th Cir. 2008) (holding that the modifier applied to the closer antecedent, the filing of the previous case).

In Ron Pair, the Supreme Court determined that it could interpret section 506(b) according to its plain language, despite its ambiguity, holding that the modifier applied only to the closer antecedent "fees, costs, or charges," and did not apply to the further removed antecedent, "interest." See Barnhart v. Thomas, 540 U.S. 20, 26, 124 S. Ct. 376, 380-81, 157 L. Ed. 2d 333 (2003) (using the "last antecedent" canon, which requires that the subsequent modifier be applied, in most cases, to the noun or phrase that it immediately follows and not to a noun or phrase that came earlier in the sentence, to reverse the Third Circuit's holding that the modifier unambiguously applied to both prior antecedents); In re Sanders, 551 F.3d at 399. Moreover, the comma in the statute between after "interest on such claim" and "and any reasonable fees," and the use of the words "and any" played a large factor in the Court's decision. Ron Pair, 489 U.S. at 241, 109 S. Ct. at 1030-31. Indeed, the dissent pointed out that the Court was able to read section 506(b) as it did "only because of the comma." 489 U.S. at 249-50, 109 S. Ct. at 1035. But cf. United States v. Bass, 404 U.S. 336, 340 n.6, 92 S. Ct. 515, 518, 30 L. Ed. 2d 488 (1971) (pointing out that "many leading grammarians" do not give credence to omitted commas, so that the Court did not "attach significance to an omitted comma").

Courts Use "Plain Meaning" Even Where There Is Some Ambiguity in the Statutory Language. Ron Pair shows that courts are willing to use the "plain meaning" doctrine even if a statute could be interpreted in two different ways, so long as the court finds that its way is a better or more reasonable interpretation of the statutory language. In Carrieri v. jobs.com Inc., 393 F.3d 508, 519-20 (5th Cir. 2004), the court interpreted 11 U.S.C. § 101(16)(C), which provides that an "equity security" includes a "warrant or right, other than a right to convert, to purchase, sell or subscribe to a share" The bankruptcy court had read the language to contain four exceptions to rights that are equity securities—rights to convert, to purchase, to sell or to subscribe. The district court read the language to contain only one exception to rights, the right to convert, and that "to purchase, sell or subscribe" described warrants or rights that were equity securities. The court of appeals chose the district court's interpretation, indicating that it was applying the "plain meaning" rule, even though it only found that the district court's reading was "the more logical one," and notwithstanding an applicable canon of construction that supported the bankruptcy court's interpretation.

Thus, in certain circumstances when statutes are ambiguous, courts, like the Ron Pair Court, are actually using a "better meaning" rule rather than the announced "plain meaning" rule. See Carroll v. Sanders (In re Sanders), 551 F.3d 397 (6th Cir. 2008) (finding the statutory meaning using only the statutory language and the "last antecedent" canon of construction to interpret the ambiguous language of section 1328(f), an example of a "better meaning" rule). However, they are finding the "better meaning" by reference to more objective language interpretation methods, rather than subjective fairness or other common law type determinations.

Use of Extrinsic Evidence, Going Beyond the Text

Legislative History. In Ron Pair, 489 U.S. 235, 242, 109 S. Ct. 1026, 1031, 103 L. Ed. 2d 290, the Supreme Court noted that the "plain meaning" of a statute is conclusive, except in the rare case where "the literal application of a statute will produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intentions of its drafters." However, in Barnhill v. Johnson, 503 U.S. 393, 401, 112 S. Ct. 1386, 1391, 118 L. Ed. 2d 39 (1992), the Court used a more liberal standard, allowing the use of legislative history "to resolve 'statutory ambiguity.'" In Tennessee Valley Authority v. Hill, 437 U.S. 153, 185 n.29, 98 S. Ct. 2279, 2297, 57 L. Ed. 2d 117 (1978), the Court accepted that it ordinarily did not review legislative history as to "plain and unambiguous" language, but that it did so in the case before it to address the dissent's contention that the result reached was "absurd" and "not in accord with congressional intent."

Legislative history should not be construed to be the collective intent of the entire legislative body. Both legislative reports and individual statements on the floor of Congress usually represent the views of only a few members of Congress, indeed often only one. See West Virginia Univ. Hospitals, Inc. v. Casey, 499 U.S. 83, 98-99, 111 S. Ct. 1138, 1146, 113 L. Ed. 2d 68 (1991) (statutory language should not be permitted to be expanded or contracted "by the statements of individual legislators or committees during the course of the enactment process"). Indeed, speaking about a specific piece of tax legislation, then Senator Danforth recalled "one night literally following one of my colleagues around the floor of the Senate for fear that he would slip something into the Congressional Record, and I would have to slip something else in." Washington Post, May 11, 1993, at A4.

Conclusion

The bankruptcy laws enacted by Congress pursuant to its constitutional Article I powers are interpreted by federal courts under the "plain meaning" rule. Extrinsic evidence, such as legislative history, is used only when the statutory language leads to absurd results or is, at least, ambiguous. Sometimes courts interpret ambiguous statutory language without reference to any extrinsic evidence, instead determining the meaning of the statute solely by reference to the statutory language itself—a type of "better meaning" approach.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

James Lawniczak is a partner at Calfee, Halter and Griswold LLP in Cleveland, Ohio. He concentrates his practice on corporate bankruptcy and creditors' rights, as well as commercial business and finance matters. His experience includes bankruptcy plans and related disclosure statements, cash collateral and financing orders, asset sales, executory contracts and unexpired leases, and bankruptcy litigation and appeals.

Mr. Lawniczak is a frequent author and lecturer in his field. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy, the leading national treatise on bankruptcy law. He is also the author of the bankruptcy chapters of the Matthew Bender treatises Asset Based Financing, Franchising and Business Organizations with Tax Planning. He has been listed in multiple editions of Chambers USA as a Leading Lawyer for bankruptcy and restructuring and is recognized as one of the Best Lawyers in America, and an Ohio Super Lawyer.

Mr. Lawniczak is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, where he served as an editor of the Michigan Law Review.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

51 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Lawniczak on Carroll v. Sanders

2009 Emerging Issues 3494

James M. Lawniczak on Carroll v. Sanders (In re Sanders), 551 F.3d 397 (6th Cir. 2008)

By James Lawniczak

March 30, 2009

SUMMARY: In this Emerging Issues Analysis, James M. Lawniczak looks at a decision of first impression from the Sixth Circuit interpreting Bankruptcy Code section 1328(f)(1), added in 2005. Relying solely on the text of the statute and "familiar canons" of statutory construction, the court considered whether the section's four-year period runs from the date of filing of the original chapter 7 case or the date the discharge was entered.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: In a Case of First Impression, the Sixth Circuit Rules That the Four-Year Period of Section 1328(f)(1) Begins to Run From the Filing of the Original Chapter 7 Case

In Carroll v. Sanders (In re Sanders), 551 F.3d 397, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 26421 (6th Cir. Dec. 29, 2008), the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit interpreted section 1328(f)(1), which prevents a chapter 13 debtor from obtaining a discharge if that individual had previously obtained a discharge in a prior chapter 7 case "during the 4-year period preceding the date of the order for relief under this chapter." The issue before the court was whether the four-year period commences on the filing of the original chapter 7 case or on the date the chapter 7 discharge was entered. Noting that this was an issue of first impression in the circuit courts of appeals, 551 F.3d at 400, the court held that the appropriate interpretation of the statute was that the four-year period begins to run from the date of the filing of the original chapter 7 case. In reaching its result, the court relied solely on the text of the statute and "familiar canons of construction," rejecting a review of supplemental materials such as legislative history and legislative purpose. 551 F.3d at 402-03.

The Facts and Rulings Below

Jason Sanders filed a chapter 7 petition on July 29, 2002, and obtained a chapter 7 discharge on February 5, 2003. On January 5, 2007, he filed a chapter 13 petition and proposed a plan. The chapter 13 trustee objected to confirmation and to the second discharge, on the grounds that Sanders had obtained a discharge in a chapter 7 case within four years of the filing of the chapter 13 case. The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Michigan confirmed the plan but denied Sanders his discharge, holding that the four-year period of section 1328(f)(1) begins to run from the date of discharge in the chapter 7 case. 368 B.R. 634, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 1900 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. May 18, 2007). Because the discharge was entered in February 2003, the January 2007 filing was a month too soon.

Sanders appealed, and the district court reversed. The court determined that the four-year period begins to run from the date of the filing of the original chapter 7 case, in July 2002, and that the January 2007 chapter 13 filing was more than four years later. Therefore, Sanders was entitled to a chapter 13 discharge. 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6994 (E.D. Mich. Jan. 31, 2008). The chapter 13 trustee, Krispen Carroll, then took a further appeal to the Sixth Circuit.

Framing the Issue Before the Court

The sole issue before the Sixth Circuit was a pure question of law-the correct interpretation of section 1328(f)(1), specifically, whether the trigger for the start of the four-year period in the statute is the filing of the original chapter 7 case or the discharge in that case. Section 1328(f), added by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA"), provides as follows:

Notwithstanding subsections (a) and (b), the court shall not grant a discharge of all debts provided for in the plan or disallowed under section 502, if the debtor has received a discharge-

(1) in a case filed under chapter 7, 11, or 12 of this title during the 4-year period preceding the date of the order for relief under this chapter, or

(2) in a case filed under chapter 13 of this title during the 2-year period preceding the date of such order.

The Sixth Circuit's Interpretation of the Statute-Modifiers Apply to the Closer Antecedent

The court noted that the structure of the language in question was one of a modifier (here, "during the 4-year period") which linguistically relates back to one of two possible antecedents (here "received a discharge" or "a case filed under chapter 7"). In this case, unlike in the Supreme Court case of United States v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 109 S. Ct. 1026, 103 L. Ed.2d 290 (1989), discussed in detail below, the modifier had to apply to either one or the other of the antecedents and could not logically be applied to either the closest antecedent or to both of the antecedents. Whenever a modifier follows two or more antecedents, the language (as here) is often ambiguous and susceptible to multiple reasonable meanings, unless the drafter is very careful to make it clear which antecedent the modifier applies to, or in the case where logically the modifier could apply to both antecedents, whether it indeed applies to both.

The court determined that a filing-to-filing period was established by the language of section 1328(f). The court used a canon of statutory construction called the "last antecedent" rule, which requires that a subsequent modifier be applied, in most cases, to the noun or phrase that it immediately follows and not to a noun or phrase that came earlier in the sentence. 551 F.3d at 399; see, e.g., Barnhart v. Thomas, 540 U.S. 20, 26, 124 S. Ct. 376, 380-81, 157 L. Ed. 2d 333 (2003) (using the "last antecedent" rule and reversing the Third Circuit's holding that the modifier unambiguously applied to both prior antecedents); National Surety Corp. v. Midland Bank, 551 F.2d 21, 33-34 (3d Cir. 1977) (describing the "last antecedent" rule, including its application under New Jersey state law).

Additional Statutory Evidence in Support of the Sixth Circuit's Conclusion-Use of the Word "Filed"

The Carroll court further noted that if the four-year period began on the date of discharge, the use of the word "filed" in the statute was unnecessary. If the statute was intended to refer to the date of discharge as the beginning of the period, the phrase "if the debtor has received a discharge in a case under chapter 7" would have been sufficient. Thus, the court found that the addition of the word "filed" supported the interpretation that it was indeed the filing of the chapter 7 case that began the relevant period. 551 F.3d at 400.

Use of Extrinsic Evidence, Going Beyond the Text

Legislative History. According to the Carroll court, the legislative history of section 1328(f) presented a "truly peculiar view." The House Report, H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I), at 76 (2005), reprinted in E-2 Collier on Bankruptcy at App. Pt. 10-341 (15th ed. rev.), described section 1328(f)(1) as having a four-year discharge-to-filing time period (contrary to the Carroll court's conclusion), while section 1328(f)(2) is described as having a two-year filing to filing period. The Carroll court could not understand how Congress might believe that essentially identical statutory language could be interpreted in two contrary ways, and also found it strange that it would be (f)(2), where it makes the "least sense," that a filing-to-filing rule would apply. 551 F.3d at 403. Thus, the court ignored the legislative history.

Congressional Desire to Limit "Chapter 20" and "Chapter 26" Filings. One of the purposes for the addition of section 1328(f) was to limit a debtor's ability to file bankruptcy petitions back to back. This purpose was discussed in the bankruptcy court's decision in the Carroll case, where the court noted that an individual debtor could file a chapter 7 case and discharge most debt there, and then immediately follow with a chapter 13 case to deal with debts (usually secured debts, often debts secured by residential mortgages) that could not have been affected in the chapter 7 case. This is known in bankruptcy vernacular as a "chapter 20." Back to back chapter 13s, called a chapter 26, were viewed as less of a problem (a reason why the time period is shorter in section 1328(f)(2)). See 368 B.R. at 638; In re Grydzuk, 353 B.R. 564, 568 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 2006) (holding that for purposes of section 1328(f)(1), a case originally filed under chapter 13 but converted to chapter 7 was nonetheless "filed under chapter 7" as of the date of the chapter 13 filing); 12 Business Organizations with Tax Planning §156.05 n.20 (Matthew Bender 2007) (pointing out that section 1328(f)'s prohibition against successive discharges would not eliminate the right of a debtor to file a chapter 7 case to eliminate debt and then follow it with a chapter 13 case to cure defaults or to modify secured debt where no additional debt will be "discharged" in the subsequent chapter 13 proceeding).

The Carroll court used a different chapter 20 argument to support its decision. It reasoned that a discharge-to-filing ruling would encourage what would be a reverse chapter 20 filing—chapter 13 followed by chapter 7—because debtors who had received a chapter 13 discharge would then not be able to file a second chapter 13 case for two more years. 551 F.3d at 404. However, this reverse chapter 20 (with chapter 13 first) is very uncommon because it is hard to imagine circumstances where a discharged chapter 13 debtor would benefit from a chapter 7 filed shortly after the chapter 13. Thus, the Carroll court's reliance on the evils of a chapter 13 case followed by a chapter 7 case was not well taken.

The Court's Struggle with Whether Its Decision Is Consistent with Congressional Intent—A Look at Section 1328(f)(2). After discussing the canons of statutory interpretation, the Carroll court went on to consider whether there was evidence that its decision might be inconsistent with congressional intent. The chapter 13 trustee argued that the purpose of enacting 1328(f) was to discourage serial filings to obtain multiple discharges, but that the decision of the court below to use a filing-to-filing rule not only shortens the period Congress was worried about, but that its application to 1328(f)(2) would essentially eliminate all use of that section. 551 F.3d at 401.

Section 1328(f)(2) is not directly applicable to the case at issue because it applies to serial chapter 13 filings. However, because its language structure is identical to section 1328(f)(1), the two subsections must logically be interpreted the same way. Thus, if section 1328(f)(1) establishes a filing-to-filing period, so too must section 1328(f)(2).

The court noted that the bankruptcy court below had accepted the argument that the filing-to-filing interpretation essentially rendered section 1328(f)(2) a nullity and therefore was contrary to congressional intent. 551 F.3d at 401. Because most chapter 13 cases take three to five years from filing to discharge, in those cases there cannot be a two-year period between successive filings. It is only in the rare chapter 13 case where a discharge is quickly achieved that a two-year filing to filing period might be relevant. The only way that a discharge can be obtained in less than two years is to pay creditors in full, and in that case it would appear inappropriate to prevent a debtor who paid creditors in full from obtaining a discharge in a subsequent case. Thus, in the bankruptcy court's view, the only way to give effect to congressional intent and to give section 1328(f)(2) meaning would be to use a discharge-to-filing rule, and if a discharge-to-filing rule was required in section 1328(f)(2), it must also be required in section 1328(f)(1) due to the fact that the equivalent statutory structure was used. 551 F.3d at 401-02.

The Sixth Circuit struggled with this issue. It was bound to acknowledge that its interpretation left section 1328(f)(2) relatively useless, noting that cases where section 1328(f)(2) would apply "will be few and far between." 551 F.3d at 402. However, the court stressed that the statute as so interpreted would not be a complete nullity, as there were still some circumstances when the statute could apply, for example, when a chapter 13 debtor receives a hardship discharge or when all debts are paid off within two years. Id.

In discussing the use of non-textual materials to determine Congress's purpose, the court indicated that "the most conspicuous place to look for the purpose of a law" is the text of the statute. If a court is to "leave the safety of the statutory terms," it must then account for "all the clues," even if they do not all point in the same direction. 551 F.3d at 402-03. The court was unable to obtain a clear view of congressional intent from the clues it examined, which included legislative history (discussed more fully above) and many of the effects the statute has on chapter 7 and chapter 13 discharge issues, 551 F.3d at 403-04. The court thus concluded: "Searching for signals from competing policies, surrounded by perplexing results on all sides, brings us little closer to grasping Congress's intent than relying on text and familiar canons of construction." 551 F.3d at 404.

Other Case Law on the Issue Before the Sixth Circuit.

Although it was the first court of appeals case to consider section 1328(f)(1), the court noted that, except for the bankruptcy court decision in the case below, "every federal court to decide the question definitively has held that § 1329(f)(1)'s four-year embargo begins on the date of filing, not the date of discharge." 551 F.3d at 400; see, e.g., In re Ybarra, 359 B.R. 702, 709 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 2007). Support for that proposition is also found in 8 Collier on Bankruptcy 1328.06[1] (15th ed. rev. 2007).

On the other hand, the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has indicated in dictum that BAPCPA amended the Bankruptcy Code to bar "relief under Chapter 13 within four years of receiving a discharge under Chapters 7, 11, or 12." In re Sidebottom, 430 F.3d 893, 897 n.1 (7th Cir. 2005). Several bankruptcy courts have also made similar statements in dicta. See, e.g., In re Perkins, 381 B.R. 530, 536 n.6 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 2007). The fact that these courts, as well as the bankruptcy court in the Carroll case, read section 1328(f) as providing a four-year discharge to filing provision shows, at a minimum, that the statute is subject to conflicting interpretation and therefore ambiguous. See Carrieri v. jobs.com Inc., 393 F.3d 508, 519 (5th Cir. 2004) (for language to be ambiguous it must be "susceptible to more than one reasonable interpretation").

The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit considered whether section 1328(f)(2) created a discharge-to-filing or a filing-to-filing two-year period in Branigan v. Bateman (In re Bateman), 515 F.3d 272, 277-78 (4th Cir. 2008). The court stated that it was interpreting the statute according to its "plain meaning," indicating that the "logical sequence of the language used" requires a filing-to-filing rule and that the "doctrine of the last antecedent" also lends support to the result. Accord Gagne v. Fessenden (In re Gagne), 394 B.R. 219, 227-28 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2008).

A Plea for Concise Language.

The Carroll court returned at the end of its opinion to discuss why it would adhere to a strict canon of statutory construction, pointing out that "policy judgments" are for Congress, and not the courts, to make. By creating and consistently applying a strict set of "clear interpretative rules," the courts could help Congress to "say exactly what it means" in a statute. 551 F.3d at 404.

However, it is possible to draft statutory language that is absolutely clear and not ambiguous even when two nouns and a modifier are involved in a situation like this one. For example, here is an alternative method drafting the statute at issue that would not be in any way ambiguous:

The court shall not grant a discharge if the debtor received a discharge in a prior chapter 7, 11 or 12 case where the chapter 7, 11 or 12 case was filed within four years of the entry of the order for relief under this chapter.

Or if the interpretation of the bankruptcy court in the Carroll case is what is intended:

The court shall not grant a discharge if the debtor received a discharge in a prior chapter 7, 11 or 12 case where the discharge in that case was entered within four years of the entry of the order for relief under this chapter.

Indeed, Congress should be encouraged to draft clear and concise language when it legislates rather than to be given rules to apply when it creates ambiguous language. I cannot imagine that a drafter who is busily crafting ambiguous language, and thus not taking the time and effort to reflect carefully and clearly as to the language being drafted, will nonetheless take the time to review rules of construction on how to interpret ambiguous language and be accordingly guided in the drafting process. On the other hand, as the court correctly pointed out, mistakes are going to be made from time to time, and the courts will have to interpret less than precise language. 551 F.3d at 404. In those cases, like the case before the court, strict rules of statutory interpretation make courts' tasks of statutory interpretation both easier and also more uniform.

RELATED LINKS: For discussion of Code section 1328(f), see

■ Collier on Bankruptcy, § 1328.06.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

James Lawniczak is a partner at Calfee, Halter and Griswold LLP in Cleveland, Ohio. He concentrates his practice on corporate bankruptcy and creditors' rights, as well as commercial business and finance matters. His experience includes bankruptcy plans and related disclosure statements, cash collateral and financing orders, asset sales, executory contracts and unexpired leases, and bankruptcy litigation and appeals.

Mr. Lawniczak is a frequent author and lecturer in his field. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy, the leading national treatise on bankruptcy law. He is also the author of the bankruptcy chapters of the Matthew Bender treatises Asset Based Financing, Franchising and Business Organizations with Tax Planning. He has been listed in multiple editions of Chambers USA as a Leading Lawyer for bankruptcy and restructuring and is recognized as one of the Best Lawyers in America, and an Ohio Super Lawyer.

Mr. Lawniczak is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, where he served as an editor of the Michigan Law Review.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

52 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Kenneth Klee. All Rights Reserved.

The Supreme Court's Use of Statutory Construction in Bankruptcy Decisions

2009 Emerging Issues 3476

Kenneth N. Klee on the Supreme Court's Use of Statutory Construction in Bankruptcy Decisions

By Kenneth Klee

March 24, 2009

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis is an excerpt from the recently published book "Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court." Authored by UCLA law professor Kenneth N. Klee, the work is a comprehensive desk reference for lawyers, judges, and scholars examining the Courts bankruptcy decisions since 1898. Chapter 1, from which this excerpt is drawn, examines the Court as a governmental and political institution.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Kenneth N. Klee on the Supreme Court's Use of Statutory Construction in Bankruptcy Decisions n1

"The bankruptcy law has now been so thoroughly construed that there is not much doubt about any of its provisions" n2

Numerous articles and books discuss statutory construction, and some analyze the Supreme Court's use of statutory construction to decide cases. n3 A few do so specifically with respect to the Court's use of statutory construction in bankruptcy cases. n4 Although this article does not have the depth or breadth of analysis contained in articles and books dedicated solely to this topic, it might provide the reader with interesting insights about the Supreme Court's use of statutory construction in bankruptcy decisions.

The analysis begins by identifying and then examining the Court's use of maxims of statutory construction in bankruptcy cases. An illustration of their uses with specific examples, noting the use of conflicting maxims, and concluding with a discussion whether the Court uses the maxims as a basis for decision or to rationalize a decision ex post, follows.

During the twentieth century, the Court used several maxims of statutory construction in bankruptcy decisions generally reflective of the guiding principle that the Court is to interpret statutes, not make them. n5 Among the more important and frequently used are the following:

1. When the language of the statute is unambiguous, courts must interpret the language in accordance with its plain meaning n6 without regard to legislative history, n7 except in the rare case in which the literal application of the

"statute will produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intentions of its drafters." n8

2. When the language of the statute is clear, the court must enforce it in accordance with its terms notwithstanding prior practice. n9

3. Even when the language of the statute is clear, courts must consider the legislative history and issues of policy and previous practice to determine congressional intent. n10

4. The Court must not erode a past bankruptcy practice absent a clear indication in the legislative history that Congress intended such a departure. n11

5. When Congress uses different language in a successor statute, the Court presumes that Congress has changed its intent. n12

6. A later statute that does not apply retroactively cannot be invoked to influence construction of an earlier statute. n13

7. Under the rule of stare decisis, once the Supreme Court has decided an issue of statutory construction, the decision is final and binding in future cases, even if the plain meaning of the text is to the contrary. n14

8. If possible, every word of a statute must be given meaning. n15

9. Redundancy is not the same as surplusage. n16

10. That a statute is awkward and ungrammatical does not make it ambiguous. n17

11. A court must not interpret a statute to produce an absurd result. n18

12. If literal interpretation of the statute produces an unfair result, it is up to Congress to amend the statute to remedy the problem. n19

13. Congress "says in a statute what it means and means in a statute what it says there." n20

14. Different parts of a statute must be interpreted together (in pari materia). n21

15. A word is presumed to have the same meaning in all parts of the same statute. n22

16. As a general proposition, the Court will construe a statute to affect only property rights created after the date of enactment. n23

17. In a statute, "includes" is illustrative, not limiting or exclusive. n24

The Court has used conflicting maxims of statutory construction in numerous bankruptcy cases and sometimes within the same case. n25 For example, in Keppel v. Tiffin Savings Bank 197 U.S. 356 (1905) n26 the Court was required to interpret the meaning of "surrender" in section 57g of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898. n27 Under that statute, "the claims of creditors who have received preferences shall not be allowed unless such creditors shall surrender their preferences." The Sixth Circuit certified to the Supreme Court three questions, the first of which was "[c]an a creditor of a bankrupt, who has received a merely voidable preference, and who has in good faith retained such preference until deprived thereof by the judgment of a court upon a suit of the trustee, thereafter prove the debt so voidably preferred?" n28 In a 5-4 opinion, the Court held that even creditors who involuntarily "surrender" their preferences may prove claims in bankruptcy. n29 Both the majority n30 and dissent n31 focused on the plain meaning of the statute and the policy it was intended to accomplish. The majority looked to the dictionary definition of "surrender" and determined that it applied to both voluntary and involuntary actions. n32 The majority buttressed its statutory construction by noting that the fundamental purpose of the provision was to secure an equality of distribution among creditors, and that denying a creditor who disgorge a preference the opportunity to prove a claim would create an inequality. n33 The dissent countered that a creditor who resists the trustee and disgorges a preference after judgment has nothing left to surrender; to hold otherwise would defeat the statute's policy of a prompt, equal, and inexpensive distribution of the estate. n34 The majority believed that to deprive the preferred creditor of a claim after disgorgement of the preference would be punitive and would "disregard the elementary rule that a penalty is not to be readily implied . . . unless the words of the statute plainly impose it." n35 Thus, each side passionately used maxims of statutory construction to support different interpretations and meanings of the same word. n36

More recently, in United States v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., 489 U.S. 235 (1989) n37 the Court decided whether Bankruptcy Code § 506(b) n38 entitles a creditor to receive postpetition interest on an allowed, nonconsensual, oversecured claim. To resolve this issue, both the majority and dissent invoked different maxims of statutory construction. The war of the maxims resulted in a 5-4 decision in favor of granting postpetition interest to the oversecured-nonconsensual lien creditor. The majority invoked the maxim that a statute must be construed in accordance with its plain meaning. n39 In this case, the placement of the second of four commas in section 506(b) meant that interest was available to any oversecured creditor and did not have to be provided in an agreement. "The language and punctuation Congress used cannot be read in any other way." n40 The dissent noted that based on the position of a comma in the statute, the majority had adopted a statutory construction that reversed a clear past practice and Supreme Court ruling without any clear evidence that Congress intended a different result when it adopted Bankruptcy Code § 506(b). n41 The dissent contended that the majority's approach violated the maxims that "[p]unctuation is not decisive of the construction of a statute" and "if Congress intends for legislation to change the interpretation of a judicially created concept, it makes that intent specific." n42

Indeed, several Supreme Court cases have held that as a matter of statutory construction, courts should "not read the Bankruptcy Code to erode past bankruptcy practice absent a clear indication that Congress intended such a departure." n43 Sometimes the Court will go to an extreme to find such a past practice. For example, in Midlantic National Bank v. New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection, 474 U.S. 494 (1986) n44 despite "unequivocal language" n45 in the statute authorizing a trustee to abandon "any property of the estate that is burdensome," the Court held that Bankruptcy Code § 554(a) n46 does not authorize a trustee to abandon hazardous property in contravention of a state statute or regulation reasonably designed to protect the public health or safety. Relying on only three pre-Code cases (including one that did not deal with state laws and another in which the relevant language was arguably dicta), the Court concluded that under pre-Code bankruptcy law there were restrictions on a trustee's power to abandon property." n47 On the other hand, the Court has limited the maxim of reliance on prior practice by noting that "where the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code's text is itself clear . . . its operation is unimpeded by contrary . . . prior practice." n48

The Court also has adhered to the maxim that in the absence of express language, courts will not construe statutes to affect property rights established before they were passed. For example, in Holt v. Henley, 232 U.S. 637 (1914) n49 Justice Holmes wrote for a unanimous Court in refusing to apply the trustee's newly enacted lien rights n50 to defeat the pre-existing rights of a vendor who installed a sprinkler system for the debtor. "[T]he reasonable and usual interpretation of such statutes is to confine their effect, so far as may be, to property rights established after they were passed." n51 The Court relied on this precedent 62 years later in Security Industrial Bank n52 when it refused to retroactively apply the Bankruptcy Code's newly-created section 522(f) n53 power to avoid liens in household goods and furnishings: n54 "No bankruptcy law shall be construed to eliminate property rights which existed before the law was enacted in the absence of an explicit command from Congress."

The rule of stare decisis plays a large role in Supreme Court decisions. Even if a statute has a plain meaning, if the Court previously has ruled against the plain meaning, a later court generally will not overturn the result. n55 The Court's recent Eleventh Amendment jurisprudence illustrates this point nicely. For example, the Eleventh Amendment, by its terms, plainly applies only to suits against a state by a citizen of another state. n56 But long ago, in Hans v. Louisiana 134 U.S. 1 (1890) n57 the Court construed the amendment to cover suits against a state by its own citizens.

n58 This expansive construction served the policy that it would be unseemly for a state to be sued by its own citizens even more than foreign citizens. n59 It also violated the maxim of statutory construction that every word must be given meaning or significance. n60 In Hans the Supreme Court effectively read "other" out of the Eleventh Amendment. Despite this plain departure from textualist principles, after Hans, Justices who adhere to textualism have followed stare decisis and refused to use textualism to overrule Hans. n61 Yet on other occasions, the Court has changed its position despite stare decisis. For example, in Perez v. Campbell, 402 U.S. 637 (1971) n62 the Court overruled its earlier decisions in Kesler v. Department of Public Safety 369 U.S. 153 (1962) n63 and Reitz v. Mealey 314 U.S. 33 (1941) n64 as misinterpreting the Supremacy Clause of the Constitution. In his April 9, 1971 letter to Justice Blackmun regarding Perez, Justice Harlan urges Justice Blackmun to turn his draft opinion into a dissent upholding Kesler with greater emphasis on stare decisis. n65

Some commentators hold the view that the Supreme Court's bankruptcy jurisprudence adopts "a 'plain meaning' posture where the language of the statute meets with judicial approval, and use[s] legislative intent to contradict the language of the statute where a literal reading is not kind to the desired result." n66 This pragmatic, perhaps somewhat cynical, view of the Court is borne out by the research of the decisions by most, but not all, Justices. n67 Over the years, a significant number of Justices appear to care deeply about the legislative history n68 and view their role as interpreting statutes to achieve congressional intent even when the statutory language is inconsistent with the desired outcome. For example, Bankruptcy Act § 75(s)(3) n69 permitted the debtor to redeem an encumbered farm by paying its appraised value. But the remedy was subject to two provisos, the second of which authorized the secured creditor to demand a public sale of the property. n70 In Wright v. Union Central Life Insurance Co. 311 U.S. 273 (1940) n71 the Court was asked to decide whether a debtor could redeem farmland at a value fixed by the court before the secured creditor could cause the farm to be sold in a public sale. n72 In deliberating about the Court's decision in Wright, Justice Roberts wrote Justice Douglas a letter specifically referencing congressional debates to influence the Court's interpretation of the statute. Justice Roberts writes to Justice Douglas as follows: n73

This was the congressional view: "Under existing language of the bill, whether or not there may be foreclosure in a case where the award is less than the debt secured is left to the discretion of the judge. Now, that is not a clear explanation, but it will suffice for the present purpose. I would make it clearer if it were important. However, the amendment proposed removes the judge's discretion, if the original debt has not been fully paid, and gives the creditor the right, as a matter of right, to have a foreclosure of the property in the event his debt has not been in full." (79 Cong. Rec. 14333)

This concern is evidenced in the unanimous reported opinion which states that "the [Bankruptcy] Act must be liberally construed to give the debtor the full measure of the relief afforded by Congress, lest its benefits be frittered away by narrow formalistic interpretations which disregard the spirit and the letter of the Act." n74

Similar themes pervade other Supreme Court bankruptcy decisions. For example, "[i]n expounding a statute, we must not be guided by a single sentence or member of a sentence, but look to the provisions of the whole law, and to its object and policy." n75 Justice Douglas made this point quite clearly in Bank of Marin v. England 385 U.S. 99 (1966) n76 when he wrote, "[y]et we do not read these statutory words with the ease of a computer." n77

Certain Justices are devoted textualists even when their politics would appear to favor a different outcome. For example, in Dewsnup v. Timm, 502 U.S. 410 (1992) n78 Justice Scalia, an avowed textualist, wrote a scathing dissent to a majority opinion that forbade lien-stripping of liens securing claims of undersecured creditors. n79 The substance of the dissent was that Congress could not have intended to use "secured claim" one way in Bankruptcy Code § 506(a) and another way in § 506(d). In Bank of Marin, Justice Harlan chided the Court for disregarding "both the proper principles of statutory construction and the most permanent interests of bankruptcy administration" in fashioning a pragmatic result "in its haste to alleviate an indisputable inequity to the bank." n80

Yet, if the policy at stake is overwhelmingly important, even the most ardent textualist might compromise his principles of statutory interpretation. n81 For example, in BFP v. Resolution Trust Corp., 511 U.S. 531 (1994) n82

Justice Scalia wrote for the Court interpreting "reasonably equivalent value" in Bankruptcy Code § 548. n83 In order to protect 400 years of real estate mortgage foreclosure practices from fraudulent transfer attack, Justice Scalia wrote that the value received at a regularly conducted real property foreclosure sale is per se reasonably equivalent to the value of the property sold. n84 Outside the real property foreclosure context, however, "the 'reasonably equivalent value' criterion will continue to have independent meaning (ordinarily a meaning similar to fair market value)." n85

The dissent made two textualist arguments, both of which had been used by Justice Scalia in other cases, to refute the soundness of the majority opinion. First, the dissent noted that engrafting a "foreclosure-sale exception" onto Bankruptcy Code § 548 was "in derogation of the straightforward language used by Congress," n86 noting that neither congressional intent nor the plain meaning of the statute support the conclusion that the distressed prices normally fetched at foreclosure sales qualify for "reasonably equivalent value" in section 548. In fact, "rejecting such a reading of the statute is as easy as statutory interpretation is likely to get." n87 Second, the dissent noted that the Court's construction of the statute to only permit avoidance of collusive or procedurally deficient foreclosure sales rendered several congressional amendments to the Bankruptcy Code superfluous. n88 This interpretation transgresses a well-known rule of statutory construction that every part of a statute must be given some meaning. n89 Moreover, the Court eviscerates another canon of statutory construction by interpreting the same words in section 548 to have one meaning for real property foreclosures and another meaning for all other transfers. n90 As Justice Scalia wrote in his dissent in Dewsnup v. Timm, "'Normal rule[s] of statutory construction'" require that "identical words [used] in the same section of the same enactment" must be given the same effect. n91

Instead of simply resting the BFP decision on policy grounds, however, Justice Scalia went to great efforts to answer the dissent's textualist attack on his opinion. n92 He countered that the meaning of the statute is not plain because it creates an ambiguity by failing to define what a foreclosed property is worth. n93 He wrote that the Court's opinion does not render congressional amendments superfluous because "[p]rior to 1984, it was at least open to question whether § 548 could be used to invalidate even a collusive foreclosure sale It is no superfluity for Congress to clarify what had at best been unclear, which is what it did here by making the provision apply to involuntary as well as voluntary transfers and by including foreclosures within the definition of 'transfer.'" n94 Finally, he noted that his opinion did not give two inconsistent meanings to "reasonably equivalent value." n95 The inquiry whether the debtor received reasonably equivalent value is "the same for all transfers"; but the fact that "a piece of property is legally subject to a forced sale . . . necessarily affects its worth [and] completely redefin[es] the market in which the property is offered for sale" n96

The exchange among the Justices in BFP is not an isolated example of sharp differences over statutory construction. For example, in FCC v. NextWave Personal Communications, Inc., 537 U.S. 293 (2003) n97 Justice Scalia, writing for the Court, takes sharp issue with Justice Breyer's dissent, n98 at one point writing that "[i]n addition to distorting the text of the provision, the dissent's interpretation renders the provision superfluous." n99 Justice Breyer's dissent attacks the majority opinion in kind, largely based on issues of statutory construction, n100 at one point writing that the majority's reasoning "rests too heavily upon linguistic deduction and too little upon human purpose." n101

In fact, Justice Breyer's observation is characteristic of some of the Court's bankruptcy decisions. On occasion, the Court will adhere to plain meaning and overturn a pragmatic result that departs from the language of the statute. For example, the Court's per curiam opinion in Central Trust Co. v. Official Creditors' Committee 454 U.S. 354 (1982) n102 interpreted section 403(a) of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 to prohibit dismissal of a chapter XI case filed under the Bankruptcy Act and refiling it as a chapter 11 case under the Bankruptcy Code. n103 Even if the dismissal was in the best interests of the estate and would conserve judicial resources, the bankruptcy court was not free to disregard a clear congressional directive. n104 "While the Court of Appeals may have reached a practical result, it was a result inconsistent with the unambiguous language used by Congress." n105

In other instances, however, the Court will doggedly adhere to a plain meaning rule of statutory interpretation even when the result is harsh. For example, in Laime v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004) n106 in a straight forward manner, the Court dealt with Congress' 1994 deletion of an award of compensation from the bankruptcy estate "to the debtor's attorney" under section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code. n107 Even though the 1994 deletion left the statute "awkward, and even ungrammatical," the Court found it unambiguous. n108 The Court relied on its previous statement in Hartford Underwriters Insurance Co. v. Union Planters Bank, N.A. and previous opinions that "when the statute's language is plain, the sole function of the courts--at least where the disposition required by the text is not absurd--is to enforce it according to its terms." n109 The plain meaning of the statute did not lead to absurd results because the statute does not prevent debtors from engaging counsel before filing for chapter 7, even though those same attorneys could not be compensated out of the estate after the filing. n110 The Court recognized that deference to the supremacy of the Legislature caused its "unwillingness to soften the import of Congress' chosen words even if . . . the words lead to a harsh outcome" n111

Sometimes the Court will adopt a sensible rule of construction that Congress later codifies. For example, in American Surety Co. v. Marotta, n112 the Court interpreted the meaning of the word "includes" in the definition of "creditor" in section 1(9) of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898. n113 The Court rejected the interpretation of the lower court which had interpreted "the word 'include' to be one of limitation, the equivalent of 'include only,' and to exclude every person not having a demand presently provable." n114 Rather, the Court noted that "[i]n definitive provisions of statutes and other writings, 'include' is frequently, if not generally, used as a word of extension or enlargement rather than as one of limitation or enumeration." n115 In the context of the Bankruptcy Act, the Court contrasted "shall include" with "shall mean" and concluded that in the context of section 1(9), "it is plain that 'shall include' . . . cannot reasonably be read to be the equivalent of 'shall mean' or 'shall include only.' " n116 Congress later adopted this reasonable rule of construction for the entire 1978 Bankruptcy Code. n117 n1 This material is excerpted from Kenneth N. Klee, Bankruptcy and the Supreme Court (LexisNexis 2009), available at <http://www.lexisnexis.com/store/us/>.

Return to Text

n2 See H.R. Rep. No. 1182, 63d Cong., 2d Sess. 1 (1914), reprinted in 52 Cong. Rec. 435.

n3 See, e.g., Antonin Scalia, Common-Law Courts in a Civil-Law System: The Role of United States Federal Courts in Interpreting the Constitution and Laws, in A Matter of Interpretation 3 (Amy Gutmann ed., 1997); Michael H. Koby, The Supreme Court's Declining Reliance on Legislative History: The Impact of Justice Scalia's Critique, 36 Harv. J. Legis. 368-95 (1999). See generally, H.L.A. Hart, The Concept of Law 121-44 (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1961) (arguing for "open texture" position on judicial interpretation between formalism and rule-skepticism).

n4 See, e.g., Daniel J. Bussel, Textualism's Failures: A Study of Overruled Bankruptcy Decisions, 53 Vand. L. Rev. 889 (2000) (discussing legislatively overruled Supreme Court and lower court decisions); Karen M. Gebbia-Pinetti, Interpreting the Bankruptcy Code: An Empirical Study of the Supreme Court's Bankruptcy Decisions, 3 Chapman L. Rev. 173 (Spring 2000) (discussing the interpretive conflict and the Bankruptcy Code and reviewing bankruptcy cases from the Court's 1981 through 1998 terms).

n5 See N.Y. County Nat'l Bank v. Massey, 192 U.S. 138, 146 (1904) ("We are to interpret statutes, not to make them."). See generally Abner J. Mikva & Eric Lane, An Introduction to Statutory Interpretation and the Legislative Process 24-27 (Aspen Law & Business 1997) (explaining and criticizing the use of canons because "canons are not a coherent, shared body of law from which correct answers can be drawn, and . . . viewed individually, many canons are wrong." Id. at 25); Karl N. Llewellyn, Remarks on the Theory of Appellate Decision and the Rules or Canons About How Statutes Are To Be Construed, 3 Vand. L. Rev. 395-406 (1950) (describing 28 pairs of canons of statutory construction and their opposites and how the current temper of the Court and needs to be addressed affects their use).

n6 See, e.g., Patterson v. Shumate, 504 U.S. 753, 760 (1992) (party seeking to defeat plain meaning of the Bankruptcy Code bears an "exceptionally heavy burden") (internal quotation marks omitted); Conn. Nat'l Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 254 (1992) ("When the words of a statute are unambiguous, then . . . 'judicial inquiry is complete.'") (citation omitted); Gleason v. Thaw, 236 U.S. 558, 560 (1915) ("[T]he Bankrupt Law is a prosy thing intended for ready application to the everyday affairs of practical business, and when construing its terms we are constrained by their usual acceptation in that field of endeavor."); Citizens Banking Co. v. Ravenna Nat'l Bank, 234 U.S. 360, 368 (1914) ("The advantages and disadvantages have been balanced by Congress, and its will has been expressed in terms which are plain and therefore controlling."); Crawford v. Burke, 195 U.S. 176, 189 (1904) ("The language of this section is so clear as to require no construction.").

n7 See, e.g., Barnhill v. Johnson, 503 U.S. 393, 401 (1992) ("[W]e note that appeals to statutory history are well taken only to resolve 'statutory ambiguity.'") (citation omitted); Toibb v. Radloff, 501 U.S. 157, 162 (1991) ("[T]his Court has repeated with some frequency: 'Where, as here, the resolution of a question of federal law turns on a statute and the intention of Congress, we look first to the statutory language and then to the legislative history if the statutory language is unclear.'"); United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 240-41 (1989) ("[A]s long as the statutory scheme is coherent and consistent, there is generally no need for a court to inquire beyond the plain language of the statute. The task of resolving the dispute over the meaning of [the statute] begins where all such inquiries must begin: with the language of the statute itself.") ("Ron Pair"); Kuehner v. Irving Trust Co., 299 U.S. 445, 449 (1937) ("The legislative history of this provision . . . cannot affect its interpretation, since the language of the act as adopted is clear.").

n8 See Ron Pair, 489 U.S. at 242 (quoting Griffin v. Oceanic Contractors, Inc., 458 U.S. 564, 571 (1982)); United States v. Am. Trucking Ass'ns, 310 U.S. 534, 543 (1940) ("There is, of course, no more persuasive evidence of the purpose of a statute than the words by which the legislature undertook to give expression to its wishes. Often these words are sufficient in and of themselves to determine the purpose of the legislation. In such cases we have followed their plain meaning. When that meaning has led to absurd or futile results, however, this Court has looked beyond the words to the purpose of the act. Frequently, however, even when the plain meaning did not produce absurd results but merely an unreasonable one 'plainly at variance with the policy of the legislation as a whole' this Court has followed that purpose, rather than the literal words." (citation omitted); quoted with approval in Perry v. Commerce Loan Co., 383 U.S. 392, 400 (1966)). Cf. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 122, 202-03 (1819) (adopting a rule of contract construction that overrides plain meaning to avoid "absurdity and injustice").

n9 See, e.g., Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Union Planters Bank, N.A., 530 U.S. 1, 10 (2000) ("[W]hile pre-Code practice 'informs our understanding of the language of the Code,' it cannot overcome that language. It is a tool of construction, not an extratextual supplement.") (citation omitted); BFP v. Resolution Trust Corp., 511 U.S. 531, 546 (1994) ("Where the 'meaning of the Bankruptcy Code's text is itself clear,' . . . its operation is unimpeded by contrary state law or prior practice."); Pa. Dep't of Pub. Welfare v. Davenport, 495 U.S. 552, 563 (1990); United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 245-46 (1989).

n10 See, e.g., Kelly v. Robinson, 479 U.S. 36, 43 (1986) ("[T]he text is only the starting point In expounding a statute, we must not be guided by a single sentence or member of a sentence, but look to the provisions of the whole law, and to its object and policy.") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); Bank of Marin v. England, 385 U.S. 99, 103 (1966) ("[We] do not read these statutory words with the ease of a computer. There is an overriding consideration that equitable principles govern the exercise of bankruptcy jurisdiction."); Wright v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 311 U.S. 273, 279 (1940) ("And so long as that right is protected the creditor certainly is in no position to insist that doubts or ambiguities in the Act be resolved in its favor and against the debtor. Rather, the Act must be liberally construed to give the debtor the full measure of the relief afforded by Congress, lest its benefits be frittered away by narrow formalistic interpretations which disregard the spirit and the letter of the Act.") (internal citations omitted); Wright v. Vinton Branch of Mountain Trust Bank, 300 U.S. 440, 459 (1937); ("The new Act does not in terms provide for 'The right to protect its [the mortgagee's] interest in the property by bidding at such sale whenever held.' But the committee reports and the explanations given in Congress make it plain that the mortgagee was intended to have this right. We accept this view of the statute.") (footnote omitted; parenthetical in original); City of Lincoln v. Ricketts, 297 U.S. 373, 376 (1936) ("In construing the words of an act of Congress, we seek the legislative intent. We give to the words their natural significance unless that leads to an unreasonable result plainly at variance with the evident purpose of the legislation.") (citations omitted); Wis. Pub. Intervenor v. Mortier, 501 U.S. 597, 611 n.4 (1991) ("[C]ommon sense suggests that inquiry benefits from reviewing additional information rather than ignoring it."); United States v. Am. Trucking Ass'ns, 310 U.S. 534, 543-44 (1940) ("When aid to construction of the meaning of words, as used in the statute, is available, there certainly can be no 'rule of law' which forbids its use, however clear the words may appear on 'superficial examination.'") (footnotes omitted); Williams v. U.S. Fid. & Guar. Co., 236 U.S. 549, 555 (1915) ("And nothing is better settled than that statutes should be sensibly construed, with a view to effectuating the legislative intent.") (citations omitted). Cf. Corn Exch. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Klauder, 318 U.S. 434, 438 (1943) ("[W]e find nothing in Congressional policy which warrants taking this case out of the letter of the Act."); United States v. Emory, 314 U.S. 423, 430 (1941) ("We are aware of no canon of statutory construction compelling us to hold that the word 'first' in a 150 year old statute means 'second' or 'third', unless Congress later has said so or implied it unmistakably.").

n11 See, e.g., Cohen v. de la Cruz, 523 U.S. 213, 221 (1998) ("We . . . will not read the Bankruptcy Code to erode past bankruptcy practice absent a clear indication that Congress intended such a departure.") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); Dewsnup v. Timm, 502 U.S. 410, 419 (1992) ("[T]his Court has been reluctant to accept arguments that would interpret the Code, however vague the particular language under consideration might be, to effect a major change in pre-Code practice that is not the subject of at least some discussion in the legislative history."); Midlantic Nat'l Bank v. New Jersey Dep't of Env'tl. Protection, 474 U.S. 494, 501 (1986) ("The normal rule of construction is that if Congress intends for legislation to change the interpretation of a judicially created concept, it makes that intent specific. . . . The Court has followed this rule with particular care in construing the scope of bankruptcy codifications.") (citation omitted) (cited with approval in United States v. Noland, 517 U.S. 535, 539 (1996)).

n12 See Crawford v. Burke, 195 U.S. 176, 190 (1904) ("Our own view, however, is that a change in phraseology creates a presumption of a change in intent, and that Congress would not have used such different language . . . without thereby intending a change in meaning."). Cf. Williams v. Austrian, 331 U.S. 642, 661-62 (1947) ("This negation of long-standing policy should be given effect . . . and should not be hedged by judge-made principles not in accord with those aims. Congress need not document its specific actions in elaborate fashion in order to direct this Court's attention to statutory policy and purpose. The failure to provide appropriate fanfare for . . . the consequent expansion of federal jurisdiction, hardly invites our opinion as to the advisability of the action which Congress has taken."). But see Maynard v. Elliott, 283 U.S. 273, 277 (1931) ("Only compelling language in the statute itself would warrant the rejection of a construction so long and so generally accepted, especially where overturning the established practice would have such far reaching consequences as in the present case."); Van Huffel v. Harkelrode, 284 U.S. 225, 227 (1931) (finding the right to sell free and clear of encumbrances by implication under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 even though the Bankruptcy Act of 1867 contained an express provision allowing the power to sell free and clear).

n13 See Levy v. Indus. Fin. Corp., 276 U.S. 281, 284 (1928) ("But that statute did not govern this case and cannot be invoked for the construction of the earlier law."). But cf. United States v. Emory, 314 U.S. 423, 430 (1941) ("We are aware of no canon of statutory construction compelling us to hold that the word 'first' in a 150 year old statute means 'second' or 'third,' unless Congress later has said so or implied it unmistakably.").

n14 Technically speaking, the doctrine of stare decisis is not a rule of statutory construction but is a court-created doctrine that applies to preclude the Court from reconsidering its previous interpretation of statutory language. As with rules of statutory construction, however, the Court appears to invoke stare decisis only when its application suits the outcome that a majority of the Court want's to reach. For example, in Tenn. Student Assistance Corp. v. Hood, 541 U.S. 440, 446 (2004), the Court construed the Eleventh Amendment of the United States Constitution to apply to suits against a state by citizens of its own state even though the text of the Eleventh Amendment "refers only to suits against a State by citizens of another State." But see, e.g., Perez v. Campbell, 402 U.S. 637 (1971) (overruling Kesler and Reitz as misinterpreting the Supremacy Clause of the Constitution). Accord Washington v. W. C. Dawson & Co., 264 U.S. 219, 238 (1924) (Frankfurter, J., dissenting) ("Stare decisis is ordinarily a wise rule of action. But it is not a universal, inexorable command. The instances in which the Court has disregarded its admonition are many.") (footnote omitted).

n15 See, e.g., Rake v. Wade, 508 U.S. 464, 471 (1993) ("To avoid deny[ing] effect to a part of a statute we accord significance and effect . . . to every word.") (citations and internal quotation marks omitted); Hoffman v.

Conn. Dep't of Income Maintenance, 492 U.S. 96, 103 (1989) ("It is our duty to give effect, if possible, to every clause and word of a statute . . .") (citations and internal quotation marks omitted); D. Ginsburg & Sons, Inc. v. Popkin, 285 U.S. 204, 208 (1932) ("[I]f possible, effect shall be given to every clause and part of a statute.") (citations omitted). But see Chickasaw Nation v. United States, 534 U.S. 84, 94 (2001) ([T]he Court's preference for avoiding surplusage "is sometimes offset by the canon that permits a court to reject words 'as surplusage' if 'inadvertently inserted or if repugnant to the rest of the statute.'" (citation omitted).

n16 See, e.g., Conn. Nat'l Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 253 (1992) ("Redundancies across statutes are not unusual events in drafting, and so long as there is no positive repugnancy between two laws . . . a court must give effect to both.") (internal citation and quotation marks omitted).

n17 See Laime v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 534 (2004) ("The statute is awkward, and even ungrammatical; but that does not make it ambiguous . . .").

n18 See, e.g., Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Union Planters Bank, N.A., 530 U.S. 1, 6 (2000) (It is well established that "when the statute's language is plain, the sole function of the courts--at least where the disposition required by the text is not absurd--is to enforce it according to its terms.") (internal quotation marks omitted); INS v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421, 452 (1987) (Scalia, J., concurring) (nonbankruptcy case).

n19 See Cent. Trust Co. v. Official Creditors' Comm. of Geiger Enters., Inc., 454 U.S. 354, 360 (1982) (per curiam) ("While the Court of Appeals may have reached a practical result, it was a result inconsistent with the unambiguous language used by Congress."). But see Tinker v. Colwell, 193 U.S. 473, 490 (1904) ("[W]e think Congress did not intend to permit such an injury [criminal conversation] to be released by a discharge in bankruptcy. An action to redress a wrong of this character should not be taken out of the exception [to discharge] on any narrow and technical construction of the language of such exception.").

n20 See Conn. Nat'l Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 253-54 (1992) ("In any event, canons of construction are no more than rules of thumb that help courts determine the meaning of legislation, and in interpreting a statute a court should always turn first to one, cardinal canon before all others. We have stated time and again that courts must presume that a legislature says in a statute what it means and means in a statute what it says there."). Accord Ron Pair, 489 U.S. at 241-42.

n21 See, e.g., Duparquet Huot & Moneuse Co. v. Evans, 297 U.S. 216, 218 (1936) ("There is need to keep in view also the structure of the statute, and the relation, physical and logical, between its several parts."); Lockwood v. Exch. Bank, 190 U.S. 294, 300 (1903) ("The two provisions of the statute must be construed together, and both be given effect."); Pirie v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 182 U.S. 438, 449 (1901) ("Undoubtedly all the sections of the act must be construed together . . ."). The same rule does not hold for words in other statutes. Although "[h]ere and there in the Bankruptcy Code Congress has included specific directions that establish the significance for bankruptcy law of a term used elsewhere in the federal statutes," in the absence of such specific directions the Court will not look to other statutes to define bankruptcy law terms. See Howard Delivery Serv., Inc. v. Zurich Am. Ins. Co., 547 U.S. 651, 662 (2006) (citing United States v. Reorganized CF&I Fabricators of Utah, Inc., 518 U.S. 213, 219-20 (1996)).

n22 See Cohen v. de la Cruz, 523 U.S. 213, 220 (1998) (there is a presumption in the Bankruptcy Code that "equivalent words have equivalent meaning when repeated in the same statute . . .") (citation omitted); Patterson v. Shumate, 504 U.S. 753, 758 n.2 (1992) (citing Morrison-Knudsen Constr. Co. v. Director, Office of Workers' Comp. Programs, 461 U.S. 624, 633 (1983) ("[A] word is presumed to have the same meaning in all subsections of the same statute."). But see Dewsnup v. Timm, 502 U.S. 410, 417 n.3 (1992) ("[W]e express no opinion as to whether the words 'allowed secured claim' have different meaning in other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code.").

n23 See United States v. Sec. Indus. Bank, 459 U.S. 70, 79-81 (1982) ("The principle that statutes operate only prospectively . . . is familiar to every law student. . . . This principle has been repeatedly applied to bankruptcy statutes affecting property rights. . . . Holt v. Henley, 232 U.S. 637 (1914) No bankruptcy law shall be construed to eliminate property rights which existed before the law was enacted in the absence of an explicit command from Congress."); Holt v. Henley, 232 U.S. 637, 639 (1914) ("[T]he reasonable and usual interpretation of statutes is to confine their effect, so far as may be, to property rights established after they were passed."). The same principle does not apply to contract rights where the bankruptcy statutes usually are construed to apply to pre-existing rights. See, e.g., Hanover Nat'l Bank v. Moyses, 186 U.S. 181, 188 (1902) (cited with approval in Sec. Indus. Bank, 459 U.S. at 80).

n24 See Am. Sur. Co. v. Marotta, 287 U.S. 513, 517 (1933).

n25 One commentator has concluded that "the Court does not apply a single interpretive method in its Bankruptcy Code cases." See Karen M. Gebbia-Pinetti, Interpreting the Bankruptcy Code: An Empirical Study of the Supreme Court's Bankruptcy Decisions, 3 Chapman L. Rev. 173, 298 (Spring 2000).

n26 197 U.S. 356 (1905) ("Keppel 197 U.S. 356 (1905)").

n27 11 U.S.C. § 93g (1976) (repealed 1979). Section 57g of the Bankruptcy Act is the predecessor of Bankruptcy Code § 502(d). See Staff of Subcomm. on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the House Comm. on the Judiciary, 95th Cong., Table of Derivation of H.R. 8200, 7 (Comm. Print 1977).

n28 See Keppel, 197 U.S. at 359.

n29 See id. at 374.

n30 See id. at 361. ("Let us first consider the meaning of this provision, guided by the cardinal rule which requires that it should, if possible, be given a meaning in accord with the general purpose which the statute was intended to accomplish.").

n31 See id. at 380 (Day, J., with whom Harlan, Brewer, and Brown, JJ., joined, dissenting). ("Therefore the sole question here is: What is meant by the term 'surrender' as used in the act of 1898?").

n32 See id. at 362. ("The word 'surrender,' however, does not exclude compelled action, but, to the contrary, generally implies such action.").

n33 See id. at 361.

n34 See id. at 378, 384.

n35 See id. at 362.

n36 For a more recent example of a 5-4 decision that follows a similar pattern of disagreement over statutory interpretation, see United States v. Sotelo, 436 U.S. 268 (1978).

n37 489 U.S. 235 (1989).

n38 11 U.S.C. § 506(b) (2000).

n39 See Ron Pair, 489 U.S. at 241 ("[W]here, as here, the statute's language is plain, 'the sole function of the courts is to enforce it according to its terms.'") (quoting Caminetti v. United States, 242 U.S. 470, 485 (1917)).

n40 See Ron Pair, 489 U.S. at 242.

n41 See id. at 252-53 (O' Connor, J., with whom Brennan, Marshall, and Stevens, JJ., joined, dissenting).

n42 See id. at 250, 252 (citations omitted).

n43 Pa. Dep't of Pub. Welfare v. Davenport, 495 U.S. 552, 563 (1990). Accord, e.g., Cohen v. de la Cruz, 523 U.S. 213 (1998); United States v. Reorganized CF&I Fabricators of Utah, Inc., 518 U.S. 213, 221 (1996); United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 244-45 (1989); United Sav. Ass'n v. Timbers of Inwood Forest Assocs., Ltd., 484 U.S. 365, 380 (1988); Kelly v. Robinson, 479 U.S. 36, 53 (1986).

n44 474 U.S. 494 (1986).

n45 See United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 251 (1989) (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

n46 11 U.S.C. § 554(a) (1988).

n47 See United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 251-52 (1989) (O'Connor, J., dissenting). In Midlantic, Justice Rehnquist's dissent, in which Justice O'Connor joined, made plain that a close reading of the three cases relied on by the majority "reveals that none supports the rule" of Midlantic. See Midlantic, 474 U.S. at 510 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

n48 See Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Union Planters Bank, N.A., 530 U.S. 1, 10 (2000) (quoting BFP v. Resolution Trust Corp., 511 U.S. 531, 546 (1994)).

n49 232 U.S. 637 (1914) ("Holt 232 U.S. 637 (1914)").

n50 The Act of June 25, 1910, ch. 412, § 8, 36 Stat. 838, 840 amended section 47a(2) of the Bankruptcy Act to give the trustee the rights of a lien creditor.

n51 See Holt, 232 U.S. at 639.

n52 See United States v. Sec. Indus. Bank, 459 U.S. 70, 80 (1982).

n53 See 11 U.S.C. § 522(f)(2) (Supp. 1980).

n54 Sec. Indus. Bank, 459 U.S. at 81.

n55 Of course, stare decisis does not preclude the Supreme Court from overturning previous holdings, but this is seldom done on the basis of textualism as opposed to policy concerns. See United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 241-43 (1989).

n56 See U.S. Const. amend. XI ("The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.").

n57 134 U.S. 1 (1890).

n58 See id. at 20 ("[T]he obligations of a State rest for their performance upon its honor and good faith, and cannot be made the subjects of judicial cognizance unless the State consents to be sued, or comes itself into court . . .").

n59 See Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706, 749 (1999) ("In some ways, of course, a congressional power to authorize private suits against nonconsenting States in their own courts would be even more offensive to state sovereignty than a power to authorize the suits in a federal forum.").

n60 See, e.g., Rake v. Wade, 508 U.S. 464, 471 (1993) ("To avoid deny[ing] effect to a part of a statute we accord significance and effect . . . to every word.") (citations and internal footnotes omitted); Hoffman v. Conn. Dep't of Income Maintenance, 492 U.S. 96, 103 (1989) ("It is our duty to give effect, if possible, to every clause and word of a statute . . .") (citations and internal footnotes omitted); D. Ginsburg & Sons, Inc. v. Popkin, 285 U.S. 204, 208 (1932) ("[I]f possible, effect shall be given to every clause and part of a statute.") (citations omitted). But see Chickasaw Nation v. United States, 534 U.S. 84, 94 (2001) ("[T]he Court's preference for avoiding surplusage 'is sometimes offset by the canon that permits a court to reject words 'as surplusage' if 'inadvertently inserted or if repugnant to the rest of the statute.'") (citation omitted).

n61 "Regardless of what one may think of Hans, it has been assumed to be the law for nearly a century. During that time, Congress has enacted many statutes--including the Jones Act and the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) which it incorporates--on the assumption that States were immune from suits by individuals." Welch v. Tex. Dep't of Highways & Pub. Transp., 483 U.S. 468, 496 (1987) (Scalia, J., concurring).

n62 402 U.S. 637 (1971).

n63 369 U.S. 153 (1962).

n64 314 U.S. 33 (1941).

n65 See April 9, 1971 letter from Justice Harlan to Justice Blackmun (contained in Blackmun papers) ("From my standpoint Kesler was correctly decided, and, further, I think that stare decisis should stand in the way of overruling.").

n66 See Kenneth N. Klee & Frank A. Merola, Ignoring Congressional Intent: Eight Years of Judicial Legislation, 62 Am. Bankr. L.J. 1, 2 (1988). See also Justice Powell's notes on a clerk's memorandum dated September 19, 1986 regarding congressional intent and Kelly v. Robinson, 479 U.S. 36 (1986) ("Congress could not have intended that restitution orders, analogous to criminal fines, are dischargeable.").

n67 The tendency of courts to sometimes depart from "plain meaning" has caused one Supreme Court Justice to "question whether our legal culture has so far departed from attention to text, or is so lacking in agreed-upon methodology for creating and interpreting text, that it any longer makes sense to talk of 'a government of laws, not of men.'" See Patterson v. Shumate, 504 U.S. 753, 766 (1992) (Scalia, J., concurring).

n68 In the context of the Bankruptcy Code, the Court has recognized that "[b]ecause of the absence of a conference and the key roles played by Representative [Don] Edwards and his counterpart floor manager Senator DeConcini, we have treated their floor statements on the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 as persuasive evidence of congressional intent." See Begier v. I.R.S., 496 U.S. 53, 64 n.5 (1990). See also Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 350 (1985) (quoting statements made by members of Congress). But see Fid. Fin. Servs. v. Fink, 522 U.S. 211, 220 (1998) ("Whatever weight some Members of this Court might accord to floor statements about proposals actually under consideration, remarks that purport to clarify 'related' areas of the law can have little persuasive force, and in this case none at all."); Hoffman v. Connecticut, 492 U.S. 96, 103-04 (1989) (in refusing to rely on floor statements, the Court noted that "'legislative history generally will be irrelevant to a judicial inquiry into whether Congress intended to abrogate the Eleventh Amendment.'") (citation omitted). The Court also has relied on House and Senate Reports in construing bankruptcy statutes. See, e.g., Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 351 (1985) ("Both the House and the Senate Reports state that § 542(e) 'is a new provision'"'). But see Begier, 496 U.S. at 69 (Scalia, J., concurring) ("I think it both demeaning and unproductive for us to ponder whether to adopt literal or not-so-literal readings of Committee Reports, as though they were controlling statutory text."). When congressional reports are silent, the Court has even looked at hearing testimony to determine legislative history. See United States v. Whiting Pools, Inc., 462 U.S. 198, 207 (1983) ("Although the legislative reports are silent on the precise issue before us, the House and Senate hearings . . . provide guidance."). In some instances, even when the congressional reports address the issue, the Court will refer to hearing testimony. See, e.g., Norwest Bank Worthington v. Ahlers, 485 U.S. 197, 205 n.5 (1988). But see Kelly v. Robinson, 479 U.S. 36, 51 n.13 (1986) ("We acknowledge that a few comments in the hearings . . . may suggest that the language bears the interpretation adopted [below] But none of those statements was made by a Member of Congress, nor were they included in the official Senate and House Reports. We decline to accord any significance to these statements.").

n69 The Frazier-Lemke Act, ch. 869, 48 Stat. 1289 (1934) (formerly codified at 11 U.S.C. § 203(s)) (repealed 1949) (adding subsection (s) to Bankruptcy Act § 75).

n70 See id. ("[U]pon request in writing by any secured creditor or creditors, the court shall order the property upon which such secured creditors have a lien to be sold at public auction.").

n71 311 U.S. 273 (1940).

n72 See id. at 275-76 ("The narrow issue presented . . . is whether under § 75(s)(3) the debtor must be accorded an opportunity . . . to redeem the property at the reappraised value or at a value fixed by the court before the court may order a public sale.").

n73 See December 2, 1940, letter from Justice Roberts to Justice Douglas regarding Wright v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 311 U.S. 273 (1940).

n74 See Wright v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 311 U.S. 273, 279 (1940) (citations omitted). Accord Wright v. Logan, 315 U.S. 139 (1942).

n75 Kelly v. Robinson, 479 U.S. 36, 43 (1986) (quoting United States v. Heirs of Boisdor, 49 U.S. [8 How.] 113, 122 (1850)).

n76 385 U.S. 99 (1966) ("Bank of Marin 385 U.S. 99 (1966)").

N77 See id. at 103.

n78 502 U.S. 410 (1992).

n79 See id. at 420-36 (1992) (Scalia, J., dissenting).

n80 See Bank of Marin, 385 U.S. at 103 (Harlan, J., dissenting).

n81 See, e.g., Young v. United States, 535 U.S. 43 (2002) (Scalia, J., writing for a unanimous Court).

n82 511 U.S. 531 (1994) ("BFP" 511 U.S. 531 (1994)).

n83 11 U.S.C. § 548 (2000).

n84 See BFP, 511 U.S. at 542-43.

n85 See id. at 545.

n86 See id. at 549 (Souter, J., with whom Blackmun, Stevens, and Ginsburg, JJ., joined, dissenting).

n87 See id. at 550-51.

n88 See id. at 555.

n89 See supra n.14 and accompanying text.

n90 See BFP, 511 U.S. at 556-57.

n91 See Dewsnup v. Timm, 502 U.S. at 422 (Scalia, J., dissenting) (emphasis in original).

n92 See BFP, 511 U.S. at 546. ("The dissent's insistence here that no doubt exists--that our reading of the statute is 'in derogation of the straight-forward language used by Congress,' . . . does not withstand scrutiny.") (emphasis in original).

n93 See id. at 547. ("But what is the 'value'? The dissent has no response . . .") (emphasis in original).

n94 See id. at 543 n.7 (emphasis in original).

n95 See id. at 548.

n96 See id.

n97 537 U.S. 293 (2003).

n98 See id. at 305-07.

n99 See id. at 307.

n100 See id. at 313-21.

n101 See id. at 321.

n102 454 U.S. 354 (1982).

n103 See id. at 359-60.

n104 See id. at 359.

n105 See id. at 360.

n106 540 U.S. 526 (2004).

n107 See Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394, 108 Stat. 4106, 4130-31 (§ 224(b) of the Act amending 11 U.S.C. § 330(a) (1994)).

n108 See Laime, 540 U.S. at 534.

n109 See Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Union Planters Bank, N.A., 530 U.S. 1, 6 (2000) (internal quotation marks omitted).

n110 See Laime, 540 U.S. at 535-36.

n111 See id. at 538; Corn Exch. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Klauder, 318 U.S. 434, 437-38 (1943) ("Such a construction is capable of harsh results . . . but we find nothing in Congressional policy which warrants taking this case out of the letter of the Act."). But see Duparquet Huot & Moneuse Co. v. Evans, 297 U.S. 216, 223 (1936) ("Such a reading of the act will help at the same time in the avoidance of other consequences too harsh or incongruous to have been intended by the Congress.").

n112 See Am. Sur. Co. v. Marotta, 287 U.S. 513 (1933).

n113 See id. at 516 ("(9) 'creditor' shall include anyone who owns a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy, and may include his duly authorized agent, attorney, or proxy.").

n114 See id. at 516-17.

n115 See id. at 517.

n116 See id.

n117 See 11 U.S.C. § 102(3) (1978) ("In this title, 'includes' and 'including' are not limiting."). See also H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 315 (1977) ("Paragraph (3) is a codification of American Surety Co. v. Marotta, 287 U.S. 513 (1933)."). The Table of Derivation of the Bankruptcy Code also indicates this rule of construction was taken from American Surety Co. v. Marotta. See Table of Derivation of H.R. 8200, Subcomm. on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the House Comm. on the Judiciary, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 2 (Comm. Print No. 6 1977).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Kenneth N. Klee is a founding member of Klee, Tuchin, Bogdanoff & Stern LLP, in Los Angeles, specializing in corporate reorganization, insolvency, and bankruptcy law. He is also a professor at the University of California, Los Angeles School of Law, where he teaches courses in bankruptcy law and Chapter 11 business reorganizations law, and a business simulation/clinical course dedicated to the topic of creating value through the renegotiation of business agreements. He has served as an expert witness in over 40 matters and renders services as an arbitrator or mediator.

Mr. Klee is a fellow of the American College of Bankruptcy, serves as a member of the American Law Institute, and is a founding member of the International Insolvency Institute. He was a member of the executive committee of the National Bankruptcy Conference from 1985 to 1988 and 1992 to 2000 and served as Chair of the National Bankruptcy Conference's legislation committee from 1992 to 2000. Mr. Klee was Associate Counsel, Committee on Judiciary, U.S. House of Representatives 1974-1977, where he was a principal draftsman of the Bankruptcy Code. From 1992 to 2000, he served as a member of the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules of the United States Judicial Conference.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

53 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

American College of Bankruptcy on 363(b) Sales

2009 Emerging Issues 3334

American College of Bankruptcy on Determining Whether to Sell Assets Outside or Pursuant to a Chapter 11 Plan

By American College of Bankruptcy

February 2, 2009

SUMMARY: A sale of assets in a bankruptcy case is often the best route for maximizing recovery to a debtor's creditors and equity interest holders. There are two ways to sell assets during a bankruptcy case -- through a sale under Code section 363(b) or pursuant to a confirmed chapter 11 plan. This Emerging Issues Analysis focuses on the factors to be considered in determining whether to sell assets outside or under a chapter 11 plan.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: American College of Bankruptcy on Determining Whether to Sell Assets Outside or Pursuant to a Chapter 11 Plan

The following material is an excerpt from the Best Practices Report "Selling Assets Outside a Chapter 11 Plan Under Section 363(b) of the Bankruptcy Code," prepared by Marcia L. Goldstein, n1 Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP, for the American College of Bankruptcy. The full Report is available in American College of Bankruptcy, 2008 Circuit Review and Best Practices Reports, published by LexisNexis.

Reorganizing under chapter 11 of title 11 of the United States Code offers financially distressed entities distinct advantages that are not available in an out-of-court restructuring or a straight liquidation under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. One advantage of chapter 11 is the ability to sell assets of a company without court approval under section 363(b) of the Bankruptcy Code either as a mechanism to dispose of assets that are not core to the reorganizing entity or to effect a sale of substantially all the entity's assets without shareholder approval as an alternative to a reorganization plan. Over the past few years, section 363(b) increasingly has been used to effect a sale of all or substantially all a chapter 11 debtors assets for a variety of reasons.

A sale of a debtor's assets, in whole or in part, often is required where other avenues of financing are not available. With the proliferation of private equity, venture capital, buyout, and vulture funds, as well as other forms of investments, junior debtholders have taken on a more active role in the restructuring process. These creditors typically seek to assert control in the chapter 11 process, particularly with respect to advocating the sale or other disposition of a debtor's assets. Alternatively, secured lenders, which also may be comprised of such funds, often seek a quick monetization of assets through a section 363(b) sale to enable them to recover on their claims expeditiously, particularly when the value of the assets is deteriorating as a result of continuing losses from business operations.

In some instances, a creditor's desire to sell the company's assets as quickly as possible may collide with the debtor's desire to preserve its business as a going concern and maintain jobs for its employees or with the interests of junior creditors seeking long-term recovery opportunity from reorganization securities. In other instances, a debtor may be desirous of selling all or substantially all its assets under section 363(b).

Selling assets under section 363(b) basically involves (i) negotiation of an asset purchase agreement; (ii) a motion seeking approval of bidding procedures; (iii) a motion seeking approval of the asset sale pursuant to the terms of the asset purchase agreement; (iv) a hearing to approve the bidding procedures and the sale motion; and (v) entry of an order approving the sale. It offers numerous benefits not provided by a sale outside the bankruptcy process. For example, a sale of assets outside of bankruptcy does not convey assets to a purchaser free and clear of liens, claims, and other interests and may require a favorable vote of stockholders. Additionally, assets sold by a financially distressed entity prior to the commencement of a case under the Bankruptcy Code may be avoided as a fraudulent transfer if it was not for reasonably equivalent value and the seller was insolvent at the time of the sale or became insolvent as a result of the sale.

On the other hand, a sale of assets in a bankruptcy case might be the best avenue to maximize recovery to a debtors creditors and equity interest holders. The filing of a chapter 11 case often creates a market for the debtors assets that might not have otherwise existed. Companies often become more attractive once a chapter 11 case is commenced because it creates a forum for addressing the future of the entity's business operations as well as the liquidation of assets to pay creditors. The debtor in possession ("DIP")ⁿ² has the duty to seek the highest price or best overall benefit to the estate for the debtor's assets. As such, potential purchasers are given the opportunity to submit higher or better offers. Potential purchasers also are attracted by the Bankruptcy Code's ability to cleanse a debtor's assets, removing the cloud of uncertainty with respect to the purchase of such assets.

There are two ways to sell assets during a bankruptcy case: (i) outside a chapter 11 plan pursuant to section 363(b) of the Bankruptcy Code; or (ii) pursuant to a confirmed chapter 11 plan. Unlike selling assets pursuant to a chapter 11 plan, which preserves the democratic aspects of chapter 11 reorganization by requiring approval by a vote of the requisite majorities of impaired creditor and equity classes, selling assets outside a plan pursuant to section 363(b) may be approved over the objections of creditors and equity security holders.

What follows are "best practices" guidelines on determining whether to sell assets outside or pursuant to a chapter 11 plan. The full Best Practices Report should be consulted for an overview of the relevant provisions of the Bankruptcy Code and for the best practices guidelines on the fiduciary duties of directors and management; sales free and clear of liens, claims, and encumbrances; appellate review of a finding of good faith; proper notice; adequate protection; the rights of purchasers outside a chapter 11 plan; and the avoidance of collusive bidding. ⁿ³

v v v

Selling assets outside a chapter 11 plan pursuant to section 363(b) of the Bankruptcy Code sometimes results in the inability to provide value to junior creditors and equity security holders, which can hinder the ability to obtain a consensus among parties in interest. A section 363(b) sale monetizes a debtor's assets such that creditors ultimately will receive cash instead of reorganization securities. Reorganization securities typically take the form of equity or debt securities in the reorganized debtor and are issued by the debtor pursuant to a plan of reorganization as partial payment for claims of creditors, who would benefit from any returns of the reorganized debtor. Plans that distribute cash and no reorganization securities typically favor senior creditors, with junior creditors receiving little recovery because they would not benefit from any increase in reorganization values. As a result, junior creditors may not be in favor of a sale outside a chapter 11 plan. In addition, a number of courts have expressed concern over the use of section 363 to effect a sale of a debtors assets solely for the benefit of secured lenders. In effect, agreeing to a recovery for unsecured or junior creditors may be the price that secured lenders pay for the relative speed and certainty of a sale of assets in bankruptcy versus a foreclosure sale.

Selling assets under a chapter 11 plan that provides for the issuance of reorganization securities by the reorganized company or the acquiror, in contrast, provides more flexibility. Junior creditors, and sometimes equity security holders, have a greater chance of participating in the post-chapter 11 success of the reorganized entity and, therefore, may favor a sale of assets under a plan.

In light of these principles, factors that should be considered in determining whether to sell assets outside or under a chapter 11 plan include (i) whether the sale involves a substantial portion of the debtor's assets, which would predetermine the type of plan (i.e., whether the sale would leave the debtor with insufficient operating asset value to reorganize as an ongoing enterprise that can issue reorganization securities); (ii) whether there is any alternative to a sale or loss of control of the debtor's business (i.e., whether the business is viable and, if yes, whether management has access to adequate means to fund a plan and operate the business); (iii) whether the potential purchaser will include cash or noncash consideration, if necessary, for distribution to subordinated debt or equity security holders; n4 (iv) whether the potential purchaser has any affiliation or contractual relationship with any existing junior creditor or equity security holder; (v) whether management has any general concerns about the views of equity security holders; (vi) whether the debtor and purchaser are able to avoid or resolve objections to a sale of substantially all a debtor's assets outside a plan (i.e., creditors or equity security holders frequently object to a sale of substantially all the debtor's assets under section 363(b) on the basis that the sale predetermined the terms of a chapter 11 plan, pre-empted the creditor protections inherent in the plan process, or constituted a sub rosa plan).

In general, while it is more difficult to derail a plan or sever an integral asset sale from a plan, a sale of assets outside a plan provides different benefits. It typically is quicker and less expensive because it does not involve the complexities of the plan confirmation process. While historically it was difficult to overcome objections to a sale of substantially all a debtors assets, such sales are now generally accepted so long as the debtor demonstrates sound business reasons, provides adequate and reasonable notice of a proposed sale, negotiates and conducts the sale in good faith, and receives fair and adequate consideration for the assets.

It should be noted, however, that in light of the Supreme Court's recent decision in Florida Department of Revenue v. Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc., 128 S. Ct. 2326, 171 L. Ed. 2d 203 (2008), some chapter 11 debtors who would have chosen to sell their assets under section 363(b) may consider delaying the sale until plan confirmation, especially when the stamp tax exemption would provide a significant benefit to the debtor's estate and creditors. In order to do this, a debtor would have to have adequate financing to operate its business. In situations where the debtors' assets are fully encumbered or the business continues to generate losses, DIP lending may be limited and likely conditioned on a prompt sale.

Return to Text

n1 * The report was completed in September 2008 and was co-authored with Michele J. Meises, Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP.

n2 Upon the filing of a chapter 11 case, the board of directors, through the management of the debtor corporation, continues to operate the business and manage the assets as a DIP. 11 U.S.C. § 1108. A DIP acts qua trustee under the Bankruptcy Code. Section 1107 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a DIP "shall perform all the functions and duties . . . of a trustee serving in a case under" chapter 11, with certain exceptions. Id. § 1107.

n3 These guidelines should not be construed as prescribing or advocating particular solutions because the issues discussed herein are too complex for there to be one universal solution. Each financially distressed entity must devise its own specific solution to the issues it faces, subject to the requirements of the Bankruptcy Code and approval of the bankruptcy court.

n4 It is easier to accomplish this in a chapter 11 plan, where warrants or other debt or equity instruments can be issued under the exemption from the registration requirements of section 5 of the Securities Act of 1933, as provided in section 1145 of the Bankruptcy Code.

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion of section 363 of the Bankruptcy Code, see

■ Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 363

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

The American College of Bankruptcy is an honorary association, founded in 1989, of bankruptcy and insolvency professionals, including attorneys, judges, law professors, accountants, investment bankers and others involved in the bankruptcy and insolvency community. Nominees for positions as fellows of the College are extended an invitation to join based on a proven record of the highest standards of professionalism and service. The College contributes to pro bono and educational projects, working through committees of fellows.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

54 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Am. College of Bankruptcy on Employee Compensation Programs

2009 Emerging Issues 3336

American College of Bankruptcy on Debtor Employee Retention and Incentive Compensation Programs

By American College of Bankruptcy

February 2, 2009

SUMMARY: Bankruptcy Code section 503(c) severely limits a debtors ability to pay management retention bonuses, severance, and other amounts. Holding on to valuable employees during a bankruptcy case can be a daunting task, and this Emerging Issues Analysis offers specific best practices guidelines for corporate debtors seeking to formulate compensation programs that comply with section 503(c).

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: American College of Bankruptcy on Debtor Employee

Retention and Incentive Compensation Programs

The following material is an abridgement of Best Practices Report "Debtor Employee Retention and Incentive Compensation Programs in Light of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005," prepared by the Executive Compensation Committee of the American College of Bankruptcy. The full Report n1 is available in American College of Bankruptcy, 2008 Circuit Review and Best Practices Reports, published by LexisNexis.

Among the many changes to federal bankruptcy law effectuated by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA" or the "Act") was the creation of a new Section 503(c). Section 503(c) imposes a variety of restrictions on the compensation that can be paid both to executives and other employees of companies that are in bankruptcy. Specifically, Section 503(c)(1) limits retention payments that can be made to insiders n2 of the debtor, imposing strict--and exceedingly difficult--requirements that must be met before such payments may be made. Section 503(c)(2) establishes strict limitations upon the payment of severance to insiders of the debtor. Finally, Section 503(c)(3) places limitations on the payment of other obligations outside of the ordinary course of business that are not covered by subsection (c)(1) or (c)(2). n3

Faced with these restrictions and the possibility of large-scale attrition among their most valuable employees, debtors have sought to adopt programs that are (a) designed to provide key employees with incentives to work to enhance value (and, by implication, remain in the debtors' employ) and (b) consistent with Section 503(c). Each debtor, after weighing all relevant factors, must arrive at its own solution consistent with the Bankruptcy Code's requirements. The "best practices" guidelines articulated below are, therefore, not intended to prescribe particular solutions to the executive compensation issues faced by debtors. Rather, they are intended to outline those factors that might be considered in developing and analyzing debtor compensation programs.

Determining the Need for, and Propriety of, a Compensation Program

In determining whether to approve a debtor employee compensation program (whether structured as an initiative to motivate enhanced performance or a traditional pre-BAPCPA "pay-to-stay" retention initiative), among the factors that courts consider is the due diligence that has been undertaken in investigating the need for and propriety of such a program. A debtor should not blindly presuppose that a bankruptcy-specific compensation program is necessary or appropriate. The debtor, by way of the independent directors serving on its compensation committeeⁿ⁴ (ideally working in consultation with independent professionals), should inform itself of the relevant facts and make a determination about whether an employee compensation program is necessary and appropriate in light of those facts.

While they will vary from case to case, relevant facts for determining whether a bankruptcy-specific compensation program is needed may include (i) the extent to which the debtor's bankruptcy filing and/or financial condition has decreased morale and distracted key employees from the performance of their duties, (ii) the elimination in value of employee stock options and other equity-based awards and whether those options and awards have historically constituted a significant portion of employee compensation, (iii) the degree to which the debtor's bankruptcy might cause key employees to seek other employment, and (iv) the additional burdens and duties imposed upon employees as a result of the bankruptcy and whether current compensation levels are sufficient to compensate employees to perform such duties.

Similarly, the facts of the debtor's case will determine whether a bankruptcy-specific compensation program is appropriate. While the adoption of a bankruptcy-specific compensation program may be desirable to retain and motivate employees ceteris paribus, the adoption of such a program may not be appropriate if it imperils the debtor's ability to achieve important reorganization objectives.

For example, the success of the debtor's reorganization may depend upon achieving reductions in benefits offered under collective bargaining agreements and/or in retiree medical and death benefits.ⁿ⁵ The debtor's negotiations with its unions and retirees may be prejudiced if the debtor seeks bonuses for management while simultaneously asking unions and retirees for sacrifices. Furthermore, although not necessarily precluding a debtor from rejecting a collective bargaining agreement or reducing protected retiree benefits, seeking a compensation program may also make it more difficult for the debtor seeking such a rejection or reduction to establish to the satisfaction of the bankruptcy court that all parties are being treated "fairly and equitably" in the Chapter 11 case.ⁿ⁶ Conversely, the sacrifices made, or that will need to be made, by the debtor's unionized workforce and retirees may (again, depending upon the facts and circumstances of the case) impact upon the debtor's ability to persuade the court that a compensation plan should be approved.

Accordingly, a debtor may find that the adoption of a bankruptcy-specific compensation program may be inappropriate if it imperils the debtor's ability to achieve important reorganization objectives. Nevertheless, there may be instances in which a compensation program, while complicating or imperiling the achievement of certain important reorganization objectives, is necessary to ensure that the debtor's workforce is sufficiently motivated to undertake the additional burdens imposed by Chapter 11 and to achieve a successful reorganization. In this context, failing to institute a compensation program that will sufficiently motivate key employees (whose efforts are needed to successfully reorganize) may, itself, unduly threaten the debtor's reorganization prospects and the debtor may conclude that the pursuit of such a program is essential to its reorganization efforts. In such instances, the debtor should, to the extent reasonably possible, seek to achieve consensus among the principal constituencies in its case so as to minimize the threat to its other reorganization objectives. In all cases, however, the process by which decisions are made regarding a compensation program and the identity and independence of the decision-makers will continue to remain of great importance. Determining Which Employees Should Participate in the Compensation Program

Another factor that courts consider in determining whether to approve a debtor employee compensation program is the due diligence that has been undertaken in determining which employees should be included in the program. Thus, the debtor, again by way of its compensation committee (working in consultation with independent professionals), should apprise itself of the relevant facts and determine participation in the program based upon those facts. Facts that might be considered in determining participation in the compensation program include, but are not necessarily limited to, (i) the importance of the employee's job functions to the debtor's business and reorganization efforts; (ii) whether the employee possesses unique or special skills; (iii) the importance of the employee's individual performance to the debtor's prospects for success; (iv) the extent to which the bankruptcy has imposed additional burdens and duties upon the employee; (v) how the employee's pay, absent the compensation program, compares to competitive practice; (vi) whether the employee has historically received incentive compensation; (vii) whether the employee's current compensation level is in line with the tasks that the employee is performing; and (viii) the strength of the job market demand for people whose skill set is the same as, or similar to, that of the employee. Structuring Programs for Insiders

Section 503(c)(1) establishes an extraordinarily difficult--if not de facto impossible--standard that must be met before a debtor may make a transfer to, or incur an obligation for the benefit of, "an insider of the debtor for the purpose of inducing such person to remain with the debtor's business ." n7 This statutory language is extremely broad and could conceivably apply to any payment made to an insider employee, including wages and salary. n8 The courts, however, have adopted a restrained interpretation and limited application of Section 503(c)(1) to payments that have retention as a primary or material purpose. n9 In this regard, the courts have also held that Section 503(c)(1) restricts payments to insiders under retention programs but does not impact upon payments made to insiders under incentive programs designed to enhance value, which are subject to Section 503(c)(3). n10 This distinction applies even if an ancillary effect of the incentive plan is that the plan promotes retention. n11

Given the onerous standard imposed by Section 503(c)(1), a debtor seeking to establish a bankruptcy-specific compensation program for the benefit of its insiders should structure the program as an incentive--as opposed to a retention--program so as to avoid the limitations of Section 503(c)(1) and, instead, fall within the purview of Section 503(c)(3). In practice, this means that the program should be structured in such a way as to tie awards to the achievement of meaningful goals that will enhance the value of the debtor's estate and otherwise support the debtor's business strategy. In this regard, there is some authority for the proposition that, given an appropriate set of facts, insider payments that are tied to the filing or consummation of a plan of reorganization, disclosure statement, or business plan may constitute incentive payments subject to Section 503(c)(3). n12 However, the existing case law does not provide extensive guidance on what those circumstances might be and there is authority that suggests that courts are likely to apply heightened scrutiny in analyzing insider bonuses that are tied to these metrics. n13

Furthermore, the debtor's bankruptcy-specific incentive program should not include any guaranteed payments to insiders, condition payment to insiders solely upon their remaining in the debtor's employ, or provide for insider payments that are based upon "soft" goals that are easily achieved. Such payments are hallmarks of a retention program and, thus, will be subject to the restrictions of Section 503(c)(1). n14 Instead, the program should condition payments to insider participants upon the achievement of objectives that are meaningful based upon the facts and circumstances of the debtor's case. n15

The development of a bankruptcy-specific incentive program for insiders represents only one mechanism by which a debtor may compensate insiders while avoiding the strict limitations of Section 503(c)(1). One alternative might be for the debtor to (i) institute an ordinary course management incentive program that is similar to programs adopted by the debtor prepetition or (ii) continue an ordinary course prepetition management incentive program. Courts have held that the institution, modification, or continuation of an ordinary course incentive program in a manner that does not differ significantly from the debtor's ordinary prepetition practice is not subject to the restrictions of Section 503(c) but is, instead, an ordinary course transaction that falls within the debtor's discretion under Code Section 363(c)(1). Of course, a debtor may not have a prepetition management incentive program and even if it does, the prepetition program may not be sufficient to address the debtor's needs in the bankruptcy context. Accordingly, the viability of this alternative as a means of addressing the debtor's post-bankruptcy employee needs will depend upon the facts and circumstances of the case. Moreover, notwithstanding the foregoing, it is important to emphasize that the restrictions of Section 503(c)(1) seemingly do apply to ordinary course insider retention programs. n16 Accordingly, while the case law indicates that a debtor has discretion to institute or modify an ordinary course insider incentive program without being subject to the restrictions of Section 503(c), it also suggests that a debtor does not have the same flexibility with respect to ordinary course insider retention programs.

A second alternative might be the continuation/assumption of insider pension benefits. At least one court has held that true pension benefits are not for the purpose of retention (as that term is used in Section 503(c)(1)) and, thus, that a debtor's assumption of such benefits is subject to Section 503(c)(3) (as opposed to the strict limitations of Section 503(c)(1)). n17 It is also important to note, however, that the court in that case cited as being significant to its decision the fact that the assumption of insider pension benefits was conditioned upon continuation of the debtor's salaried and bargained unit defined benefit pension plans, which ensured parity of treatment among all employee pension plans. n18 Accordingly, a debtor should not necessarily expect that it will be allowed to selectively continue/assume only certain pension benefits while discontinuing others.

A third alternative might be to structure a program that does not create administrative expenses for the debtor's estate. At least two courts have held that the provisions of Section 503(c) are applicable only to administrative expenses of the debtor's estate. n19 Thus, the restrictions of Section 503(c) have been deemed inapplicable to a debtor's decision to provide its chief executive officer with an unsecured claim of $4 million in the event that he is terminated prior to emergence. n20 The restrictions of Section 503(c) have also been deemed inapplicable to payment of retention bonuses to senior executives by one of the debtor's creditors, since such payments are not administrative expenses of the debtor's estate. n21 Accordingly, while Section 503(c) has been held to apply only to administrative expenses of the debtor's estate, a transparent attempt by the debtor (or another party) to structure a compensation proposal for the purpose of circumventing Section 503(c) may not meet with success. Furthermore, absent unusual circumstances, it may be inappropriate to allow one party in interest, such as a secured creditor, to pay bonuses to managers who have a duty to all parties in interest. It should also be noted that a court is likely to hold that incentive payments and/or retention payments made by the debtor are subject to the restrictions of Section 503(c) even if such payments have been funded by a non-debtor third party who has advanced sums to the debtor for the purpose of funding the payments. n22

Moreover, depending upon its needs, the debtor might consider entering into independent contractor relationships for limited consulting services with select former insider employees. Such arrangements may preserve the debtor's access to valuable knowledge possessed by such persons. While not specifically deciding the issue, the events of one case suggest that the requirements of Section 503(c)(1) are not applicable to independent contractor consulting relationships. n23 Depending upon its particular needs and the facts of the case, it may be appropriate for a debtor to consider pursuing an independent contractor relationship with select former insider employees. Structuring Programs for Non-Insiders

Debtors have greater flexibility in structuring compensation programs for non-insider employees than in structuring programs for insider employees. By its terms, Section 503(c)(1) applies only to retention payments made to insiders. n24 Accordingly, a debtor may propose a retention payment program for its non-insider employees without being subject to the restrictions of Section 503(c)(1). n25 Instead, such a program will be evaluated under Section 503(c)(3). Of course, the fact that a non-insider retention program will not be subject to the rigors of Section 503(c)(1) does not, in and of itself, mean that the debtor should structure its non-insider program as a retention program. Depending upon the facts and circumstances of the case, an incentive or other structure might be more appropriate than a retention structure. A determination regarding the appropriate structure for a non-insider program should, therefore, be made by the debtor's compensation committee (preferably working in consultation with independent professionals) based upon the particular facts and circumstances of the debtor's case. Developing Compensation Programs

Whether intended for insider or non-insider employees, an employee compensation program should be developed by the debtor's compensation committee working in consultation with independent professionals (if possible) and, to the extent reasonably possible, negotiated with other major constituencies in the case. The development of the program should be informed and based upon the relevant available facts. In developing the program, care should be taken to ensure, among other things, that (i) there is a reasonable relationship between the program that is being proposed and the results that are sought to be obtained (or, stated another way, that the program is appropriately calculated to motivate employees to achieve the desired goal), (ii) the scope of the program is fair and reasonable and does not discriminate unfairly, (iii) the program is consistent with industry standards, (iv) the cost of the program is reasonable in the context of the debtor's assets, liabilities, and earning potential, and (v) the overall compensation offered to program participants (including compensation received outside of the scope of the program) is reasonable. n26The Importance of Support Among Major Constituencies

The case law addressing debtor employee compensation programs following the enactment of Section 503(c) has highlighted the importance of support by major constituencies. For example, one court has emphasized that determinations under Section 503(c) are to be made based upon the particular circumstances of the case and that the issues raised by objecting constituencies constitute a significant aspect of those circumstances. n27 Furthermore, in approving the incentive programs there at issue, other courts have attached great significance to the fact that the programs had the support of the relevant creditors committees and/or other constituencies. n28 It is also worth noting that parties in interest who oppose employee compensation programs have the right to appeal any bankruptcy court approval of such programs, and that in light of the statute's broad language and the lack of appellate guidance in this area to date, the pendency of an appeal may create significant uncertainty among key employees as to whether they will receive their proposed compensation. A debtor's attempts to pay executive bonuses at the same time as it seeks major sacrifices from other constituencies (such as unionized employees or retirees) may also make it more difficult to accomplish important reorganization efforts.

Accordingly, the debtor should, to the extent reasonably possible, seek to secure the support of appointed committees and, to the extent applicable, other major constituencies for employee compensation programs. This is not to say, however, that the debtor must or should seek consensus at all costs. The cost of consensus may well prove to be too high. Thus, while the debtor should seek to build consensus among major constituencies regarding its compensation program, there may be instances in which consensus becomes unattainable and a debtor nevertheless concludes that a compensation program is still required given the facts and circumstances of the case. The Debtor's Evidentiary Burden

Courts have proven reluctant to approve employee compensation programs in the absence of strong evidentiary showings regarding the propriety of such programs. n29 In light of the stringent evidentiary demands that have been made by courts, a debtor should be prepared to present an extensive evidentiary record touching upon the various factors that courts consider in determining whether to approve employee compensation programs.

Return to Text

n1 * The Report was originally prepared in 2007.

n2 Section 101(31) of the Bankruptcy Code contains a non-exhaustive definition of "insider."

n3 For a complete overview of the provisions of Section 503(c), the reader should consult the full Report.

n4 Absent exceptional circumstances, the NYSE, the NASDAQ, and the AMEX require that the compensation committees of listed companies be composed entirely of independent directors and impose additional guidelines and standards to be followed by such committees. Each of these entities has its own definition of "independent director." Additional norms/standards regarding director independence may also be derived from applicable federal or state law. See supra note 2.

n5 A debtor may modify its collective bargaining agreements under Section 1113 and may modify or terminate its retiree medical and death benefit plans under Section 1114. But both Sections impose stiff requirements, requiring that (i) the debtor seriously bargain with its unions and retirees, (ii) the relief be "necessary" to the reorganization of the debtor, and (iii) all affected parties, including management, be treated "fairly and equitably," and that "the balance of the equities" favor the requested relief.

n6 See, e.g., In re Northwest Airlines Corp., 346 B.R. 307, 326 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006); In re Jefley, Inc., 219 B.R. 88, 89, 91-94 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1998); In re Pierce Terminal Warehouse, Inc., 133 B.R. 639, 647-648 (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 1991); In re Indiana Grocery Co., Inc., 136 B.R. 182, 194-195 (Bankr. S.D. Ind. 1990). But see Truck Drivers Local 807 v. Carey Transp. Inc., 816 F.2d 82, 90-91 (2d Cir. 1987) (affirming the rejection of a collective bargaining agreement and indicating that the debtor was not required to show that management had sustained pay cuts where management's prepetition compensation levels were below-market); United Food & Commercial Workers Local Union Nos. 455, 408, 540 & 1000 v. Appletree Mkts., Inc. (In re Appletree Mkts., Inc.), 155 Bankr. 431, 439 (S.D. Tex. 1993) (same); In re Ormet Corp., 324 B.R. 655, 661 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2005), aff'd, 355 B.R. 37 (S.D. Ohio 2006); In re Texas Sheet Metals, Inc., 90 B.R. 260, 268-271 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1988).

n7 11 U.S.C. § 503(c)(1).

n8 See, e.g., In re Nellson Nutraceutical, Inc., 369 B.R. 787, 802 (Bankr. D. Del. 2007).

n9 See In re Nellson Nutraceutical, Inc., 369 B.R. at 802; In re Global Home Prods., LLC, 369 B.R. 778, 786 (Bankr. Del. 2007); In re Dura Automotive Sys., Inc., Case No. 06-11202 (KJC), Hr'g Tr., at 50 (Bankr. D. Del. June 28, 2007) ("June 28 Hr'g Tr."); In re Advanced Mktg. Serv., Inc., Case No. 06-11480 (CSS), Hr'g Tr., at 41 (Bankr. D. Del. Mar. 13, 2007) ("Mar. 13 Hr'g Tr.").

n10 See, e.g., In re New Century TRS Holdings Inc., Case No. 07-10416 (KJC), Order Authorizing Payment of Sale-Related Incentive Pay to Senior Management and (ii) Retention and Incentive Pay to Certain Employees Pursuant to Sections 105(a), 363(b)(1) and 503(c)(3) of the Bankruptcy Code, at F (Bankr. D. Del. May 25, 2007); In re Global Home Prods. LLC, Case No. 06-10340 (KG), Order Authorizing and Approving Payments Under Incentive Bonus Plan, at E (Bankr. D. Del. Oct. 6, 2006); In re Global Home Prods. LLC, Case No. 06-10340 (KG), Order Authorizing and Approving Payments Under Management Sale Incentive Plan for Wearever Debtors, at F (Bankr. D. Del. Aug. 8, 2006); In re Global Home Prods. LLC, Case No. 06-10340 (KG), Order Authorizing and Approving Payments Under Management Sale Incentive Plan for Burnes Group Debtors, at F (Bankr. D. Del. May 30, 2006).

n11 See In re Nellson Nutraceutical, Inc., 369 B.R. at 802; In re Global Home Prods., LLC, 369 B.R. at 786; In re Dura Automotive Sys., Inc., June 28 Hr'g Tr., supra note 8, at 50; In re Advanced Mktg. Serv., Inc., Mar. 13 Hr'g Tr., supra note 8, at 41.

n12 See In re Dura Automotive Sys., Inc., Case No. 06-11202 (KJC), Hr'g Tr., at 41-43 (Bankr. D. Del. May 30, 2007); In re Musicland Holding Corp., Case No. 06-10064 (SMB), Order Approving, and Authorizing Payments Under Debtors' Incentive Plan (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Aug. 10, 2006) (approving program that tied bonuses to, either, the consummation of a plan of reorganization or a sale of substantially all of the debtor's assets, and under which bonuses would be paid from proceeds of secured trade creditor collateral and would not increase the unsecured debt of the debtor's estate).

n13 See, e.g., In re Dana Corp., 351 B.R. 96, 102 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006).

n14 See In re Dana Corp., 351 B.R. at 102 (characterizing the disapproved program as a retention program, and citing as factors in this characterization that the program included guaranteed payments and payments tied to the achievement of artificially low targets).

n15 See In re Dana Corp., 358 B.R. 567, 583 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006) (noting that the debtor's revised program goals were difficult and not "lay-ups," and holding that the program was an incentive program) appeal docketed Case No. 07-CV-01888 (PKC) (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 5, 2007); In re Apton Corp., Case No. 06-10510 (CSS), Order Authorizing Payment of Salary Deferral and Sale-Related Incentive Pay to Debtor's Employees Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 105, 363(b) and 503(c)(3) (Bankr. D. Del. June 15, 2006) (finding that proposed salary deferral/sale incentive program was designed to encourage participating employees to act above and beyond the level required by their normal fiduciary duties and approving the program under Section 503(c)(3)); In re Nobex Corp., Case No. 05-20050 (MFW), Hr'g Tr., at 88 (Bankr. D. Del. Jan. 12, 2006) (approving the proposed sales incentive program and noting that, by conditioning payment upon the achievement of a sale price that was higher than the stalking horse bid already in hand, the program gave participants incentives to go above and beyond their duties as fiduciaries).

n16 See In re Nellson Nutraceutical, Inc., 369 B.R. at 800-01.

n17 See In re Dana Corp., 358 B.R. at 577-578.

n18 See id. at 578.

n19 See id.; Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors v. Airway Indus., Inc. (In re Airway Indus., Inc.), 354 B.R. 82, 87-88 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 2006).

n20 See In re Dana Corp., 358 B.R. at 578.

n21 See In re Airway Indus., Inc., 354 B.R. at 87-88. However, in Airway the court also cautioned that the bonuses at issue had to be "closely scrutinized so that they [were] not used to circumvent [Section] 503(c) or to compromise the fiduciary duties of insiders." Id. at 90. The court found that, under the circumstances of that case (where the bonuses were negotiated prepetition, before BAPCPA took effect, and where the debtor had expected to close the contemplated sale of its assets prior to filing bankruptcy or to file bankruptcy prior to BAPCPA taking effect), the payment of the bonuses was in good faith and was for the benefit of the entire creditor body. See id.

n22 See In re Advanced Mktg. Serv., Inc., Case No. 06-11480 (CSS), Hr'g Tr., at 7-10 (Bankr. D. Del. Feb. 28, 2007) ("Feb. 28 Hr'g Tr.") (analyzing under Section 503(c)(3), and approving, retention plan for non-insider employees where payments would be made by the debtor but funded by purchaser of the debtor's business).

n23 See In re L.G. Philips Displays USA, Inc., Case No. 06-10245 (BLS), Hr'g Tr., at 38, 44-45 (Bankr. D. Del. Apr. 13, 2006).

n24 See 11 U.S.C. § 503(c)(1).

n25 See, e.g., In re Nellson Nutraceutical, Inc., 369 B.R. at 801; In re Scotia Dev. LLC, Case No. 07-20027, Order Granting Joint Motion by the Pacific Lumber Company and Britt Lumber Co., Inc. for Entry of an Order Authorizing and Approving Payments Under (I) Bonus Plan for Mill Employees and (II) Bonus Plan for Non-Officer Employees (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Aug. 28, 2007)); In re Scotia Dev. LLC, Case No. 07-20027, Unopposed Order Granting Scotia Pacific Company LLC's Motion for Entry of an Order Authorizing and Approving Payments Under (I) Scopac Bonus Plan for Non-Insider Employees and (II) Scopac Management Incentive Plan (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Aug. 24, 2007).

n26 See In re Dana Corp. 358 B.R. at 576-77.

n27 See In re Dana Corp., 351 B.R. at 102.

n28 See In re Advanced Mktg. Serv., Inc., Mar. 13 Hr'g Tr., supra note 8, at 47; In re Advanced Mktg. Serv., Inc., Feb. 28 Hr'g Tr., supra note 21, at 9; In re Global Power Equip. Group, Inc., Case No. 06-11045 (BLS), Hr'g Tr., at 40 (Bankr. D. Del. Dec. 20, 2006); In re Radnor Holdings Corp., Case No. 06-10894 (PJW), Hr'g Tr., at 46-47 (Bankr. D. Del. Oct. 4, 2006); In re L.G. Philips Displays USA, Inc., Hr'g Tr., supra note 22, at 73; In re Nobex Corp., Hr'g Tr., supra note 14, at 87.

n29 See, e.g., In re PlusFunds Group, Inc., Case No. 06-10402 (JMP), Hr'g Tr., at 52-54 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Apr. 18, 2006); In re Riverstone Networks, Inc., Case No. 06-10110 (CSS), Hr'g Tr., at 115-116 (Bankr. D. Del. Mar. 23, 2006).

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion of executive compensation, see

- Collier Monograph: Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation in Corporate Bankruptcy.

For further discussion of section 503 of the Bankruptcy Code, see

- Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 503.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

The American College of Bankruptcy is an honorary association, founded in 1989, of bankruptcy and insolvency professionals, including attorneys, judges, law professors, accountants, investment bankers and others involved in the bankruptcy and insolvency community. Nominees for positions as fellows of the College are extended an invitation to join based on a proven record of the highest standards of professionalism and service. The College contributes to pro bono and educational projects, working through committees of fellows.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

55 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Glosband on In re Ran and In re Loy

2009 Emerging Issues 3329

Daniel Glosband on In re Ran and In re Loy: Habitual Residence and the Center of Main Interests Test

By Daniel Glosband

January 30, 2009

SUMMARY: In this Emerging Issues Analysis, Daniel Glosband discusses In re Loy and In re Ran, which suggest that the center of main interests of a peripatetic debtor will be in the United States in instances in which the debtor maintains a permanent residence here, while it will be outside of the United States in instances in which the debtors U.S. residence is temporary.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Chapter 15 of the Bankruptcy Code allows U.S. bankruptcy courts to recognize foreign insolvency proceedings if they are pending in a country where the debtor has its center of main interests (COMI) or an establishment. For COMI purposes, the location of an entity's principal place of business (as opposed to its country of registration) might be debatable, the location of an individual's habitual residence would ostensibly be self-evident. Individuals cannot physically be in more than one place at a time but, as two recent decisions demonstrate, the determination of an individual's center of main interests may not be perfectly straightforward. In re Loy and In re Ran suggest that the center of main interests of a peripatetic debtor will be in the United States in instances in which the debtor maintains a permanent residence here, while it will be outside of the United States in instances in which the debtors U.S. residence is temporary. n1

A foreign proceeding can be recognized under Chapter 15 of the Bankruptcy Code for purposes of obtaining ancillary assistance from a United States Bankruptcy Court if it meets the definitional requirements of a foreign proceeding, if the foreign representative also satisfies the definitional criteria and the proceeding is a foreign main proceeding or a foreign nonmain proceeding. n2 A foreign proceeding can be recognized as a foreign main proceeding if it is pending in the debtors COMI. n3 In proving eligibility for recognition of a foreign main proceeding, the foreign representative may be aided by the evidentiary presumption of § 1516(c): In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the debtors registered office, or habitual residence in the case of an individual, is presumed to be the center of the debtors main interests.

COMI is not defined in the Bankruptcy Code, leaving room for development through case law, both within and outside of the United States. n4 In re Loy and In re Ran both involved individuals living in the United States at the time that a petition for recognition of their foreign insolvency proceedings was filed but the cases had different outcomes on the issue of whether the U.S. or the foreign country was the debtors COMI. Taken together the cases suggest that an individuals COMI will be in the United States when the debtor maintains a permanent residence here, while it will be outside of the United States when the debtors U.S. residence is temporary.

Jonathan Loy was a British citizen who lived in Hampton, Virginia. n5 Before living in Virginia, Loy lived and worked in Exeter, England. n6 While in England, Loy and his brother established a furniture making company, Cider House Furniture, in May 2000. n7 The furniture business never succeeded and Loy found himself in debt. n8 Loy individually filed a proceeding in England under the Insolvency Act of 1986 for a voluntary arrangement (the IVA). n9 The IVA required that Loy sell certain property in France to help satisfy his debts but anticipated that he would retain his Hampton, Virginia property. n10 The IVA was approved on July 31, 2003 with Anthony OSullivan appointed as its trustee. When Loy failed to meet its terms because of additional debt, OSullivan filed a default petition with the Exeter court and Loy was declared bankrupt. n11 After Loy moved to the United States, OSullivan first filed a lis pendens in Virginia, a subject of some controversy and much discussion in the opinion, but not the subject of this commentary. n12

OSullivan then filed a petition for recognition of a foreign main proceeding under Chapter 15. n13 The U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Virginia (the Loy Bankruptcy Court) held a preliminary hearing on the trustees petition for recognition of a foreign proceeding. n14 OSullivan had presented the Loy Bankruptcy Court with a certified copy of the English Order declaring Loy bankrupt and appointing OSullivan as trustee of Loys estate. n15 OSullivan therefore met the initial two requirements for recognition of a foreign proceeding; he proved that he was a properly appointed foreign representative and that the English proceeding was properly a foreign proceeding. n16 Additionally, Loy had testified under oath that he was declared bankrupt in a foreign proceeding and that OSullivan was the trustee in the matter. n17

Before the Loy Bankruptcy Court could grant recognition as a foreign main proceeding, it had to find that the foreign proceeding satisfied the third criterion for recognition, that England was Loys COMI. As noted, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the bankruptcy court is entitled to presume that the habitual residence of an individual is his/her COMI. Relying on the Blacks Law Dictionary, the court noted that habitual is understood to be customary or usual. n18 Bankruptcy courts have also relied on additional factors in determining COMI. For example, in In re SPhinX, Ltd., the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York said the location of the debtors primary assets, the location of the majority of the debtors creditors and the jurisdiction whose law would apply to the disputes involved were all determinative factors in establishing the COMI. n19

The Loy Bankruptcy Court found that Loys COMI was in England and not the United States and that, consequently, the foreign proceeding qualified as a foreign main proceeding. n20 While Loy was resident in the United States, his habitual residence was in the United Kingdom. n21 Loy owned the Hampton property and had been living in the United States with his family, but his and his familys visas were temporary, and they had to return to Britain to renew their visas. n22 The Loy Bankruptcy Court also applied the SPhinX factors to corroborate its conclusion that the debtors COMI was in the United Kingdom. n23 SPhinX stated that the location of the debtors creditors was relevant for determining COMI and almost all of Loys creditors were in the United Kingdom. n24 SPhinX also held that the jurisdiction whose law was most relevant also helped determine COMI, and both Loys initial IVA and later bankruptcy proceeding, as well as the law that the trustee followed, were English. n25

In contrast to In re Loy, the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Texas (the Ran Bankruptcy Court) denied recognition to the trustee of Yuval Rans Israeli bankruptcy proceeding by concluding that Rans habitual residence was in Texas. Rans procedural history is a bit complicated. The Ran Bankruptcy Court denied an application for recognition based on a finding that Rans habitual residence and, consequently, his COMI was in Texas. n26 Zuriel Lavie, the Israeli Trustee and foreign representative, appealed to the District Court. The District Court accepted the Bankruptcy Courts finding that Rans habitual residence was Texas but remanded the case to the Ran Bankruptcy Court for a more extensive consideration of the evidence of COMI and of whether the Trustee had rebutted the presumption that Rans habitual residence was his COMI. n27

Ran had been the chief executive officer of Israel Credit Lines Supplementary Financial Services, Ltd., a publicly traded Israeli company (ICL). n28 Ran came into financial trouble in 1997 which caused Bank Hapoalim of Israel to approach him about settling his personal debts with the bank. n29 Bank Hapoalim hired Lavie to negotiate with Ran to settle his debts. n30 After meeting with Ran and his attorneys on a few occasions, Lavie claims that he was told in April 1997 that Ran was going on a short business trip outside of Israel, but that Ran would be returning to Israel. n31 Ran never returned to Israel, which led Bank Hapoalim to seek an ex parte temporary attachment order over Rans assets in June 1997. n32 The Israeli court appointed Lavie as a temporary receiver and began bankruptcy proceedings over Rans assets on July 10, 1997. n33 In making his argument to the Israeli court that Ran should be declared a bankrupt, Lavie argued that Rans departure from Israel constituted an act of bankruptcy, an intent component of Israeli bankruptcy law, and was genuine and permanent. n34 The Israeli court declared Ran bankrupt on October 28, 1999 and appointed Lavie as trustee. n35

In seeking recognition of the Israeli proceeding as a foreign main proceeding, Lavie cited the following factors in support of Rans COMI being in Israel; (i) Ran owed debts to Israeli creditors; (ii) Ran left as a fugitive to escape the reach of Israeli justice; (iii) Ran continued to manage ICL from the United States; (iv) Ran is guilty of forum shopping; (v) Rans creditors chose Israel as their favored jurisdiction in which to initiate bankruptcy proceedings against Ran; and (vi) the court should defer to the jurisdiction of the Israeli bankruptcy court under principles of equity. n36

The Ran Bankruptcy Court engaged in an extensive examination of European law on the subject of habitual residence and of the implications of the debtor having relocated. n37 It then reviewed U.S and Israeli law on the determination of an individuals domicile as a proxy for his/her COMI. n38 In the end, the Ran Bankruptcy Court was not convinced by Lavies arguments, ruling that Lavie was not entitled to recognition of the Israeli bankruptcy because Rans COMI was in the United States and not Israel. The court found that Rans relocation to the U.S. might have been problematic if his motives were improper and if the chapter 15 petition were filed on the heels of the individuals flight. n39 However, the Court found that Ran had legitimate reasons to relocate to the U.S. and that the chapter 15 filing was certainly not on the heels of his flight, coming some ten years after Rans relocation and eight years after the Israeli bankruptcy ruling. n40

More stinging for Lavie, the Ran Bankruptcy Court borrowed his own words from the Israeli bankruptcy proceeding and characterized Rans move as so genuine and permanent that there was no question Rans COMI was in the United States. n41 The Ran Bankruptcy Court found 10 factors as evidence that Rans move was permanent, including the following: Ran owned a home in the United States in which he lived with his wife and five children; Rans wife and children were U.S. citizens and Ran himself was a permanent resident of the United States and was awaiting approval on his application for U.S. citizenship at the time of trial; Ran worked in the United States and maintained his bank accounts only here. n42 These factors all combined to indicate that Rans stay in the United States was permanent and not temporary, meaning that his COMI was here and that this case did not qualify for Chapter 15 recognition.

Even though the Bankruptcy Code does not provide a definition for COMI, the Ran and Loy cases together suggest that a debtors COMI will be where he maintains his permanent residence. First, permanent residence can depend on a variety of factors, but U.S. bankruptcy courts will only recognize those foreign proceedings in which the debtors permanent residence is outside of the United States. Second, U.S. bankruptcy courts will give more weight to objective criteria in determining the COMI, rather than subjective criteria.

The objective facts underlying Loy and Ran explain in large part why they came out as they did. Loys COMI remained in the United Kingdom because he and his family only had temporary visas to be in the United States and had to return to England to renew these visas. In contrast, Ran had purchased and was maintaining a home in Texas, his wife and children were citizens of the United States and Ran himself was in the process of becoming an American citizen

For the practitioner, these cases underscore the point that U.S. bankruptcy courts will decide COMI on a case-by-case basis and their decisions will be based on not just a few, but several factors. They also confirm the courts willingness to follow the instruction of § 1508 and look to foreign law for guidance. n43 n1 In re Loy, 380 B.R. 154 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2007); In re Ran, 390 B.R. 257 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2008).

Return to Text

n2 11 U.S.C. § 1517.

n3 11 U.S.C. § 1502(4).

n4 11 U.S.C. § 1508 (In interpreting this chapter, the court shall consider its international origin, and the need to promote an application of this chapter that is consistent with the application of similar statutes adopted by foreign jurisdictions.).

n5 In re Loy, 380 B.R. at 159.

n6 Id.

n7 Id.

n8 Id.

n9 Id.

n10 In re Loy, 380 B.R. at 159.

n11 Id.

n12 Id passim.

n13 Id. at 158.

n14 Id.

n15 Id.

n16 See In re Loy, 380 B.R. at 161-62. See also 11 U.S.C. § 102(23) (The term foreign proceeding means a collective judicial or administrative proceeding in a foreign country, including an interim proceeding, under a law relating to insolvency or adjustment of debt in which proceeding the assets and affairs of the debtor are subject to control or supervision by a foreign court, for the purpose of reorganization or liquidation.); 11 U.S.C. § 101(24) (The term foreign representative means a person or body, including a person or body appointed on an interim basis, authorized in a foreign proceeding to administer the reorganization or the liquidation of the debtors assets or affairs or to act as a representative of such foreign proceeding.).

n17 Id. at 163.

n18 Id. at 162.

n19 351 B.R. 103, 117 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006).

n20 In re Loy, 380 B.R. at 163.

n21 Id.

n22 Id.

n23 Id.

n24 Id.

n25 Id.

n26 Order Denying Recognition of Foreign Proceeding Under 11 U.S.C. § 1515, In re Ran, No. 06-37067 (Bankr. S.D. Tex., May 22, 2007).

n27 Order, In re Ran, Civil Action H-07-1906 (S.D. Tex., February 6, 2008).

n28 In re Ran, 390 B.R. at 260.

n29 Id.

n30 Id. at 285.

n31 Id. at 286.

n32 Id.

n33 Id.

n34 In re Ran, 390 B.R. at 286

n35 Id.

n36 Id. at 288.

n37 Id. at 267-281. This overseas tour was invited by § 1508; see note 4.

n38 Id. at 281-285.

n39 Id. at 294.

n40 In re Ran, 390 B.R. at 295.

n41 Id. at 300.

n42 Id. at 295.

n43 * John T. Mulcahy, an associate at Goodwin Procter LLP, contributed to the research, drafting and editing of this article.

RELATED LINKS: For more information on sections 101(24), 1502, 1508, 1515, 1516(c) and 1517 of the Bankruptcy Code, see Collier on Bankruptcy

- § 101(24);
- § 1502(4);
- § 1508;
- § 1515;
- § 1516(c);
- § 1517

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Daniel Glosband is a partner in Goodwin Procter LLP's Financial Restructuring Practice, www.goodwinprocter.com. He recently represented the lead investors in the confirmed Chapter 11 plan of US Airways and its merger with America West and the fiduciaries for the employee stock plan in the Delta case.

Mr. Glosband is a Vice President of the American College of Bankruptcy and a conferee of the National Bankruptcy Conference, which advises Congress on bankruptcy legislation. He was a draftsman of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency and one of two primary draftsmen of Chapter 15 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, Ancillary and Other Cross-Border Cases. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy 15th Ed. Revised, Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide and Collier International Business Insolvency Guide.

He is admitted to practice in New York, Massachusetts, the U.S. District Courts in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and the Southern District of New York, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court. He received a J.D. from Cornell University in 1969 and a B.A. from University of Massachusetts in 1966.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

56 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Overview of Bankruptcy Crimes

2009 Emerging Issues 3290

Bankruptcy: Overview of Bankruptcy Crimes

By Publishers Editorial Staff 2009

January 19, 2009

SUMMARY: In the first quarter of 2008, the total number of bankruptcies has increased 26.9 percent over the same period in 2007. Thus, there is a likelihood of an increase in the commission of bankruptcy crimes. This Emerging Issues Commentary will provide an overview of the different bankruptcy crimes as well as discuss the elements, the necessary evidence, and the punishment for these crimes. Click on link for PDF version.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE:

RELATED LINKS: For a discussion of Bankruptcy Crimes, see

- 1-7 Collier on Bankruptcy-15th Edition Rev. P 7.02;
- 1-7 Collier on Bankruptcy-15th Edition Rev. P 7.03;
- 1-7 Collier on Bankruptcy-15th Edition Rev. P 7.04;
- 1-7 Collier on Bankruptcy-15th Edition Rev. P 7.05;
- 1-7 Collier on Bankruptcy-15th Edition Rev. P 7.06;
- 1-7 Collier on Bankruptcy-15th Edition Rev. P 7.07

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

57 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Sommer on Marrama v. Citizens Bank

2010 Emerging Issues 4930

Sommer on Marrama v. Citizens Bank

By Publisher's Editorial Staff

January 9, 2009

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis contains links to documents related to Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Massachusetts.

ARTICLE: Choose an option below to search Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Massachusetts documents.

RELATED LINKS: To view the decision of the United States Supreme Court,
■ click here.

To view briefs filed with the United States Supreme Court,
■ click here.

To view the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit,
■ click here.

To view the opinion of the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the First Circuit,
■ click here.

To view recent news concerning the Supreme Court's decision,
■ click here.

To view the transcript of the oral arguments before the United States Supreme Court,
■ click here.

To view the Emerging Issues Analysis, "Sommer on Marrama v. Citizens Bank,"
■ click here.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

58 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Director and Officer Liability Insurance in Subprime Mortgage Bankruptcies

2008 Emerging Issues 2987

Bankruptcy's Effect on Director and Officer Liability Insurance in Subprime Mortgage Litigation

By Publishers Editorial Staff 2008

October 3, 2008

SUMMARY: The insurance market will be affected by the subprime mortgage crisis as corporate officers and directors seek coverage under director and officer (D&O) and errors and omissions (E&O) liability policies. This commentary examines whether insurance proceeds are the property of the corporation (and thus belong to the bankruptcy estate) or of directors and officers (and thus fall outside the reach of creditors). Click on link for PDF version.

PDF LINK: Core Emerging Issues Commentary ($)

ARTICLE: Introduction

The collapse of the subprime mortgage market has resulted in a wave of litigation between borrowers, lenders, brokers, and investment banks with allegations of negligent misrepresentation, fraud, and securities violations frequently being pled. With allegations of malfeasance being asserted against the corporate officers and directors, the insurance market will be affected by the subprime mortgage market crises as corporate officers and directors seek coverage under their director and officer (D&O) and errors and omissions (E&O) liability policies. Whether coverage is afforded under a particular policy or whether claims fall under an exception to coverage may themselves be the subjects of litigation, and resolution of coverage issues may become hindered if the corporation is forced into bankruptcy. This article discusses D&O insurance coverage, exceptions to coverage, and the impact that corporate bankruptcy may have in resolving coverage disputes.

Subprime Lending Explained

Subprime lending refers to the practice of making loans to borrowers who do not meet traditional credit underwriting standards. In general, subprime borrowers have poor or limited credit histories. According to federal banking agencies, subprime borrowers display a range of credit characteristics that may include one or more of the following:

At least two 30-day delinquencies on loans within the past year or at least one 60-day delinquency within the past two years;

Judgment, foreclosure, repossession, or non-payment of a loan within the past two years;

Bankruptcy within the past five years;

Relatively high default probability as evidenced by a low credit score; and

Debt service-to-income ratio of 50 percent or more or otherwise limited ability to cover living expenses after deducting monthly debt-service requirements from income.

Expanded Guidance for Subprime Lending Program, 2001 FDIC Interp. Ltr. LEXIS 9 (FDIC Interp. Ltr. 2001) (Jan. 31, 2001); LexisNexis: Backgrounder on Subprime Lending (September 2007).

Because these loans involve greater risk, the interest rates and loan fees charged are higher than the rates and fees assessed to prime borrowers. Subprime borrowers obtain loans from financial institutions that specialize in subprime lending or that deal with subprime loans as part of their broader business. In general, most subprime lenders are not subject to traditional banking regulations.

The Subprime Mortgage Lending Crisis

The subprime mortgage lending crisis began when lenders started offering mortgages to high-risk borrowers and then selling the riskier mortgages to investment banks, which profited by turning the loans into mortgage-backed securities for large investors. Bill Marsh, Housing Busts and Hedge Fund Meltdowns: A Spectator's Guide, N.Y. Times, Aug. 5, 2007 (Week in Review). Pieces of mortgage-backed securities were then transformed from high-risk to low-risk by repackaging them as collateralized debt obligations, which were sold by investment banks to investors. Id. As the number of foreclosures increased significantly in late 2006 and early 2007, questions arose about subprime mortgage-backed securities, and several hedge funds that were heavily invested in risky securities with mostly borrowed money collapsed when investors wanted to take their money out. Id. The detrimental market collapse has been blamed on those who profited from the subprime mortgage market growth, especially subprime lenders, as subprime mortgage originations grew between 2001 and 2005 from $173 billion to $665 billion, an increase of nearly 300%. Eric Petroff, Who is to Blame for the Subprime Crisis?, Investopedia, 2008. Subprime borrowers are not without blame, having purchased homes that they could not afford. Investment banks worsened the situation by buying subprime mortgages from lenders and selling them as collateralized debt obligations (CDOs) with superficially high ratings to attract investors. Some blame the rating agencies for failing to assign more accurate ratings, which would have resulted in fewer investors having purchased the CDOs, while others blame the investors for purchasing the CDOs without conducting due diligence. Id. Finally, some blame the government for failing to regulate the subprime mortgage industry. Opening Statement of Chairman Chris Dodd, Hearing on Mortgage Market Turmoil Causes and Consequences, U.S. Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, Mar. 22, 2007.

Lawsuits Arising from the Subprime Mortgage Lending Crisis

With so many varied parties sustaining significant pecuniary losses, litigation was inevitable, and a number of suits implicate D&O and E&O insurance liability, including:

Borrower Lawsuits: Borrowers are instituting suits against lenders and against investment banks. The former lawsuits accuse lenders of predatory lending, as borrowers were burdened with mortgage loans with unreasonably high interest rates, while lawsuits against investment banks typically allege malfeasance in providing backing to lenders engaged in questionable, if not unethical, business practices.

Lender Lawsuits: Mortgage lenders are filing lawsuits against banks after being forced into bankruptcy when they were asked to buy back loans. These suits claim that the banks imposed improper margin calls and valued the lender's underlying collateral incorrectly.

Investor Lawsuits: Investors who purchased subprime mortgages are asserting claims against the lenders from whom they purchased the mortgages, asserting that the over-valuation of underlying collateral resulted in losses upon mortgagor default.

Shareholder Lawsuits: Shareholders of bankrupt subprime lenders are asserting claims against the lenders, accountants, trustees, and underwriters, alleging misrepresentation and omission related to accounting for residuals, as well as claims of bad valuation and poor underwriting standards.

Insurer Lawsuits: With the filing of claims by corporate officers and directors under D&O and E&O insurance policies when they are made parties to the aforementioned suits, insurers are seeking rescission of insurance contracts based upon exclusionary conduct on the part of the insureds.

Kevin LaCroix, This Year's Model (2007 Edition): Subprime Lending Lawsuits, The D & O Diary, July 12, 2007; Faten Sabry, The Subprime Meltdown, NERA Economic Consulting, NERA Insights Series, June 21, 2007; Alistair Barr, Subprime Crisis May Spark D&O Claims, Marketwatch, Aug. 20, 2007.

D&O and E&O Policies of Liability Insurance

Coverage. Liability protection is afforded to corporate directors and officers under Directors and Officers liability policies of insurance (D&O insurance), while Errors and Omissions liability policies (E&O insurance) afford protection to members of management for losses attributed to unintentional and negligent acts, errors, omissions, or breaches of duty giving rise to claims. D&O insurance traditionally affords coverage to corporate directors and officers and the corporate-policyholder. Traditional E&O insurance affords coverage to a corporations directors, officers, employees and affiliates, including securities brokers and dealers working for financial institutions and investment banks, for losses arising from alleged wrongful acts committed in their capacities as managers, representatives, or agents of the corporation. R. Mark Keenan and Craig M. Hirsch, Insurance Coverage for Subprime Lending and Securities Litigation, FinAlternatives Weekly, Dec. 11, 2007.

D&O insurance policies often contain three separate insuring agreements: (1) Insuring Agreement A, which provides liability coverage paid to, or on behalf of, the individual officers and directors when a corporation does not, or is not allowed to, provide reimbursement to such officers and directors; (2) Insuring Agreement B, which provides corporate indemnification coverage, which reimburses a corporation for losses, judgments or other related expenses it may incur as a result of indemnifying its officers and directors for liability of covered wrongful acts and (3) Insurance Agreement C, which provides entity coverage, direct liability protection for the corporation's own losses from claims not otherwise covered, and typically includes coverage for securities claims. Leonard P. Goldberger, Five Easy Pieces: A Guide to Dealing with D&O Insurance in Subprime Mortgage Bankruptcy Cases, 26-8 ABIJ 18 (Oct. 2007).

Notice of Claims. Most D&O and E&O policies are claim-made policies, meaning that coverage is afforded only for claims made during a particular policy period, and notice of claim is an obligation the insured or policyholder must complete before seeking coverage. Most D&O and E&O policies put a specific time limitation on how late notice can be provided after the claim is filed, while others require notice as soon as practicable and forwarding of legal papers immediately. R. Mark Keenan and Craig M. Hirsch, Insurance Coverage for Subprime Lending and Securities Litigation, FinAlternatives Weekly, Dec. 11, 2007. Failure to comply with the policy's notice provision generally vitiates coverage. For example, in National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Talcott, 931 F.2d 166 (1st Cir. 1991), the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit held that the failure of the insureds counsel to notify the professional liability insurer of a claim against him until after the expiration date of applicable policy period precluded coverage, even though the insurer suffered no prejudice as a result of the untimely notice.

Some D&O and E&O policies contain a notice of circumstances provision, which permits the insured to report informal complaints as to its subprime practices to lock into the policy period if a subsequent lawsuit develops from these circumstances at a later date. R. Mark Keenan and Craig M. Hirsch, Insurance Coverage for Subprime Lending and Securities Litigation, FinAlternatives Weekly, Dec. 11, 2007.

Proper notice generally requires (1) a report to the insurer (2) during the policy period (3) including certain details, specifically (a) the reasons for anticipating the claim, (b) the nature and dates of the alleged wrongful act, (c) the alleged damages sustained, (d) the names of potential claimants, (e) any director or officer involved in the wrongful act, and (f) the manner in which the insureds first became aware of the specific wrongful act. Asche v. Hartford Ins. Co., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70192 (D. Conn. 2006).

Coverage for Investigations. Many D&O and E&O policies define claim to encompass investigations by any governmental entity into possible violation of law, and the insurance policies normally afford coverage for the costs incurred in responding to a government or regulatory examination as well. For example, the policy at issue in Nat'l Stock Exch. v. Fed. Ins. Co., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23876 (N.D. Ill. 2007) defined "claim" as "a formal administrative or regulatory proceeding commenced by the filing of a notice of charges, formal investigative order, or similar document." The United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois determined that attorney fees and costs incurred in defending an SEC investigation constituted a loss in defending a claim as defined by the policy. The court found that SEC proceedings are legal in nature because they are commenced by a commission order in which witnesses are sworn and because officers may be designated to take testimony and receive evidence in formal investigative proceedings. However, an informal government request may not constitute a claim. At least one court has held that an informal document request from the Securities and Exchange Commission regarding a hedge fund or private equity funds subprime activities--as opposed to a formal investigation with the exercise of subpoena power--is not considered a claim as that term is defined by most D&O and E&O policies. R. Mark Keenan and Craig M. Hirsch, Insurance Coverage for Subprime Lending and Securities Litigation, FinAlternatives Weekly, Dec. 11, 2007.

Exclusions from Coverage

Dishonesty and Fraud. One of the most prominent exclusions found in D&O and E&O policies is a bad acts exclusion, under which coverage is not afforded for fraudulent acts, criminal acts, or intentional conduct arising from improper subprime practices. However, under typical policy language, the exclusion is not triggered merely by allegations of fraud or other unethical or illegal acts; rather, the insurer may rely upon the exclusion only after the underlying claim is adjudicated in a court of law. Despite the allegations of fraud or other wrongdoing, the insureds are entitled to advancement of legal costs, which are subject to recoupment by the insurance company only if a final adjudication shows the claim is not covered. Because recoupment becomes an issue only upon a final determination of fraud, an insured may want to settle subprime litigation. When the suit is settled, there is no final adjudication or fact finding of a wrongdoing that would trigger the exclusionary clause. Further, the exclusionary defense does not entitle the insurance company to relitigate the settled action in the subsequent coverage dispute with its insured. Id. See also Matthew R. Wildermuth, Repercussions of the Subprime Mortgage Crisis on D&O Insurance, Part II of III, 2008 Emerging Issues LEXIS 112 (Feb. 1, 2008).

Prior Acts. The prior acts exclusion precludes coverage for any claim alleging any wrongful act that the insured knew or could have reasonably foreseen could lead to a claim. For the exclusion to apply, an insurer must demonstrate that the insured had knowledge of a wrongful act such that it could have reasonably foreseen the action's filing, thereby leading to a claim under the policy. The date of occurrence of the acts giving rise to the claim will determine whether coverage is afforded. If the allegations concern acts occurring prior to the specified policy date, the insurer has a basis for denying the claim. Daniel W. Gerber, Joanna M. Roberto and Carrie P. Appler, Coverage Implications of the Subprime-Mortgage Meltdown, 12-22 Mealey's Emerg. Ins. Disps. 17 (2007)

Illegal Profit or Advantage. This exclusionary clause bars coverage where a director or officer has received an illegal profit or advantage. This type of exclusion requires an "in fact" trigger, meaning that an insurance company must prove that the wrongful conduct actually occurred before it can deny coverage. The in fact language contained in profit advantage exclusionary provisions requires a final adjudication before an insurance company can assert exclusion as a bar to coverage. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. v. Foster, 268 F. Supp. 2d 1035 (C.D. Ill. 2003). See also Matthew R. Wildermuth, Repercussions of the Subprime Mortgage Crisis on D&O Insurance, Part II of III, 2008 Emerging Issues LEXIS 112 (Feb. 1, 2008).

Rescission. If a D&O or E&O insurance policy was procured based on alleged misrepresentations made in the insurance application, the insurer may seek to rescind the policy in its entirety. Many subprime litigations and investigations could yield a finding that the insured made misstatements in its public financial filings by overestimating the value of its subprime loan assets. While the insurer may argue that such misrepresentations provide a basis for rescission, the burden of proof to establish a right to rescission is a heavy one. The insurer must show that the insureds misrepresentation was material to the decision to issue the liability policy and that the misrepresentation was in fact made by the policyholder. Most rescission actions are unsuccessful. R. Mark Keenan and Craig M. Hirsch, Insurance Coverage for Subprime Lending and Securities Litigation, FinAlternatives Weekly, Dec. 11, 2007.

Effect of Corporate Bankruptcy on D&O Coverage

As if the litigation of subprime mortgage lawsuits wasn't complex enough, the filing of a bankruptcy petition by a party to the suit has a profound impact upon the continued progress of the litigation. Important issues to be resolved include ownership of the D&O Insurance policy, the effect of the automatic stay, and the benefit of settling the claim.

Ownership of the D&O Insurance Policy. Issues that are imbued in uncertainty include the ability of directors and officers to access coverage under a D&O policy and the ability of non-debtors to claim that such a policy or the proceeds of such a policy are not an asset of the bankruptcy estate. Deborah D. Williamson and Ronald Hornberger, Benchnotes, 24-5 ABIJ 3 (June 2005). While the courts generally agree that a D&O insurance policy held by a corporate debtor is "property of the estate" within the meaning of 11 USCS § 541, they are divided on the issue of whether the proceeds of a D&O insurance policy belong to the bankruptcy estate or to the individual directors and officers. Determining whether insurance proceeds are property of the estate is fact-sensitive and turns on whether the proceeds at issue are generated by D&O conduct, which the individual directors and officers are deemed to own, or for indemnification obligations or direct claims, which the corporate debtor is deemed to own. Leonard P. Goldberger, Five Easy Pieces: A Guide to Dealing with D&O Insurance in Subprime Mortgage Bankruptcy Cases, 26-8 ABIJ 18 (Oct. 2007)

In In re Medex Reg'l Labs., LLC, 314 B.R. 716 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2004), Bankruptcy Judge Richard Stair Jr. held that in making such determinations, the court must analyze the facts of each particular case, focusing primarily upon the terms of the actual policy and the identity of the named insured(s) under the liability insurance policy, keeping in mind that the purpose behind a D&O policy is to provide protection for individual directors and officers. If only the debtor has a direct interest in receiving the proceeds, the proceeds are property of the estate. If only the directors and officers have a direct interest in the proceeds, they are not property of the estate. The conflict arises if the debtor has indemnification coverage or otherwise enjoys "entity" coverage. Relying on In re Allied Digital Techs. Corp., 306 B.R. 505 (Bankr. D. Del. 2004), Judge Stair held that "when there is coverage for the directors and officers and the debtor, the proceeds will be property of the estate if depletion of the proceeds would have an adverse effect on the estate to the extent the policy actually protects the estate's other assets from diminution." Further, if the policy also provides the debtor with indemnification coverage "but indemnification either has not occurred, is hypothetical or [is] speculative, the proceeds are not property of the estate." The policy before the court provided indemnification coverage, but the debtor had not made any payments or agreed or committed itself to paying any indemnification other than for acts that did not constitute gross negligence or willful misconduct. Thus, any indemnification was found to be hypothetical and/or speculative. The policy did provide coverage for any security claims received during the policy period, but the parties stipulated that no notices, claims or demands had been made or received. The court found that as the proceeds were not an asset of the estate and thus not covered by 11 USCS § 362(a), the carrier was not precluded from disbursing the costs of defense directly to the directors and officers in accordance with the terms of the policy. The same conclusion, on slightly different facts, was reached in Holloway v. Dane, 316 B.R. 876 (S.D. Miss. 2004).

Effect of the Automatic Stay of Proceedings. If an insured corporation files for bankruptcy, the insurer may initiate insurance coverage litigation in the bankruptcy court or may remove pending litigation to the bankruptcy court. This effort is required by the operation of the automatic stay, which prevents the continued prosecution of any pending insurance coverage litigation by insurers that was filed pre-petition in a non-bankruptcy forum. Id. Despite the issuance of the automatic stay, however, an insurer may nevertheless be required to pay costs of a director or officer involved in litigation. If an exclusion is ultimately found to be applicable, any defense costs advanced would be subject to reimbursement. However, this right to reimbursement does not affect the insurer's obligation to advance defense costs, even in instances where the ability of the director or officer to repay the insurer is dubious. When a D&O policy includes coverage for a debtor corporation, a bankruptcy court may find that the proceeds of the policy are property of the estate. Even if the automatic stay does not apply, a bankruptcy court may extend the stay to apply to those proceeds. A director or officer would then be required to seek the approval of the bankruptcy court for the payment of defense costs. Susan N. Gummow, D&O Insurer Beware: Payment of Defense Costs May Be Required Pending the Stay of Claims for Rescission and Determination of Exclusions, 23-9 ABIJ 32 (Nov. 2004).

Advantages of Settlement. The bankruptcy court provides an hospitable environment for effecting comprehensive settlements that offer legal certainty and financial finality for insurers, insureds, and claimants. The bankruptcy court can provide the legal framework for approving compromise settlements pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 9019(a) by which third parties can be bound. There are additional bankruptcy-specific features, such as settlement bar orders and channeling injunctions, which foster effective settlements by immunizing settling insurers against direct or collateral attacks by claimants and non-settling insurers. A carefully crafted settlement agreement can provide the appropriate balance between maximizing the value of D&O insurance assets and providing benefits to both settling and non-settling insurers. There is also the possibility that the bankruptcy estate may be negotiating with D&O and E&O insurers of third parties against whom the estate has claims. In that event, many of the same considerations would also apply to the extent that such claims against third parties are ultimately resolved by such parties' insurance-funded settlements. The certainty and finality sought by a debtor's insurers will be equally important to other insurers as well. Leonard P. Goldberger, Five Easy Pieces: A Guide to Dealing with D&O Insurance in Subprime Mortgage Bankruptcy Cases, 26-8 ABIJ 18 (Oct. 2007).

Conclusion

The fallout of the subprime mortgage crisis has been financial devastation for many corporations and individuals. Borrowers have lost their homes and financial security, corporations have been forced into bankruptcy, and investors and shareholders have suffered profound pecuniary losses as well. With so many suffering such profound losses, litigation was inevitable, and with many of the targeted corporations having to declare bankruptcy, turning to their directors and officers permits aggrieved parties to target another source of recovery--the D&O and E&O insurance liability policies. While such litigation is merely in its infancy, whether the conduct of directors and officers involved in the subprime mortgage market constituted exclusionary conduct, or whether their conduct falls outside of exclusionary language, is already the subject of extensive litigation. These issues are complicated by entry of the insured corporation into bankruptcy, where these issues can become subject to the automatic stay. Whether a case remains in state or federal court or is removed to bankruptcy court, it will take years to sort through the blame, to determine the source of the underlying problems, and to ultimately determine which parties will shoulder the burden of the financial losses.

59 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Land Bank Agreements in Bankruptcy Court

2008 Emerging Issues 69

Land Bank Agreements in Bankruptcy Court

By Publisher's Editorial Staff 2008

October 2, 2008

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Commentary examines the rights of the developer and the land banker depending on whether the agreement is found to be an executory contract or the agreement is recharacterized as a loan.

PDF LINK: Core Emerging Issues Commentary ($)

ARTICLE: ARTICLE: Introduction

A land bank agreement (LBA) is a form of alternative financing or, perhaps more accurately, an alternative to financing employed by residential developers. Rather than financing the purchase of land to be developed, a developer will enter into an agreement with another entity, the land banker, who acquires and holds title to the real estate. The use of an LBA decreases the developer's risk because the risk of the mortgage and other incidents of ownership of the real property fall on the land banker. An added benefit to the developer is the fact that the mortgage debt does not appear on the developer's books, because it is held by the land banker. Patricia A. Redmond & Jessica D. Gabel, The Tip of the Iceberg: What Lies Beneath for Homebuilder Bankruptcies in the Wake of United Airlines, American 26-9 ABIJ 20 (Nov. 2007).

The land banker makes the mortgage payments on the real property. The LBA typically requires the developer make option payments to the land banker, the amount of which may be measured by, and timed to coincide with, the mortgage payments due. The developer proceeds with development of the property under a "takedown schedule" until all planned units are built and sold. In the event of an uncured default by the developer, the developer's rights in the property and any improvements made are forfeited. Patricia A. Redmond & Jessica D. Gabel, The Tip of the Iceberg: What Lies Beneath for Homebuilder Bankruptcies in the Wake of United Airlines, 26-9 ABIJ 20 (Nov. 2007). No foreclosure would be required because the land banker already holds title.

Why Are LBAs Important Now?

The downturn in the housing market means that developers may be filing for bankruptcy and bringing LBAs before bankruptcy courts. It is unclear if LBAs will be regarded as executory contracts governed by 11 USCS § 365, or if they will be "recharacterized" as disguised loans pursuant to 11 USCS § 105. The rights of debtor developers, the land bankers, and other creditors will vary depending upon which tact is taken by the courts. A typical scenario would be the filing of a voluntary Chapter 11 reorganization bankruptcy by a developer. If the LBA is advantageous to the developer, it will be assumed as an executory contract and the land banker's rights are relatively unaffected. If the LBA is unprofitable, the developer will likely reject the LBA as an executory contract. A somewhat different scenario will be presented if the developer or an appointed trustee claims that the LBA is actually a financing arrangement that created a debtor/creditor relationship between the parties. In such a case, the developer or trustee would be taking the position that the LBA is actually a secured loan arrangement, thereby enabling the developer to retain the property without curing the default, compensating the land banker for losses, and providing adequate assurances of future performance as required by 11 USCS § 365.

Executory Contracts in Bankruptcy

A contract is considered "executory" if performance remains to be completed on both sides such that failure of either to complete performance would be a material breach that excused the other party's complete performance. Counties Contracting & Constr. Co. v. Constitution Life Ins. Co., 855 F.2d 1054 (3d Cir. 1988). An LBA would seem to fit this definition if a bankruptcy occurs at any time prior to completion of the development and sale of all lots. Executory contracts in bankruptcy are governed by Section 365 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 USCS § 365, which allow a Chapter 7 trustee, or a Chapter 11 debtor-in-possession, to assume or reject such contracts, 11 USCS § 365(a).

Time and Procedure for Assumption or Rejection

A Chapter 7 trustee must assume or reject an executory contract within 60 days or it is deemed to be rejected, unless a longer period is set by the court, 11 USCS § 365(d)(1). Under Chapters 9, 11, 12, or 13, an executory contract may be assumed or rejected at any time prior to confirmation of a plan, but a party to the contract may ask the court to set a time for assumption or rejection, 11 USCS § 365(d)(2). Proceedings concerning rejection or assumption of executory contracts are governed by Bankruptcy Rule 6006, which references Bankruptcy Rule 9014, meaning that proceedings to assign or reject an executory contract other than as part of a plan, or to compel a trustee to act within a certain time, are contested matters initiated by motion. An attempt to recharacterize an LBA as a secured loan transaction requires an adversary proceeding.

Rights of the Parties upon Assumption

Although bankruptcy gives the developer an opportunity to get out of an LBA or other executory contract that has proved to be unprofitable, assumption will be the preferable route for the land banker in most cases.

If the LBA is to be assumed as an executory contract, the debtor/developer or its trustee must:

Cure any default or provide adequate assurance of a prompt cure, 11 USCS § 365(b)(1)(A);

Compensate the non-bankruptcy party for any actual pecuniary loss resulting from the default, 11 USCS § 365(b)(1)(B);

Provide adequate assurance of future performance under the contract, 11 USCS § 365(b)(1)(C).

Another provision important to the non-bankrupt party to an LBA is 11 USCS § 365(e), which prevents modification of executory contracts in bankruptcy.

Rights upon Rejection

If the debtor or developer is in trouble and unable to fulfill the requirements of the LBA, rejection will be the result. However, a debtor and developer has the incentive to act quickly because an executory contract must be performed until it is assumed or rejected, 11 USCS § 365(d)(3). If the LBA is to be rejected, the debtor and developer must surrender the property, United Air Lines, Inc. v. HSBC Bank USA (In re United Air Lines, Inc.), 453 F.3d 463 (7th Cir. 2006), which means the land banker will obtain the benefits of any improvements made and is free to dispose of the real estate unencumbered by any interest of the debtor, developer, or a trustee in bankruptcy.

Remedies of a Loan Creditor

As long as an LBA is treated as an executory contract, the non-bankrupt land banker will be relatively well-positioned in the event of a developer's bankruptcy. If, however, the LBA is recharacterized and treated as a loan, the rights of the land banker are very different.

If the LBA is construed as a loan and the land banker is considered a loan creditor, the land banker would have to file a claim to receive any compensation for damages resulting from the builder's default. This is in contrast to the affirmative duty to cure any default and to compensate the land banker for any losses if the LBA is considered to be an executory contract that is to be assumed.

Furthermore, the land banker's claim may be unsecured, at least in part, depending on the value of the collateral. If the transaction is construed as a loan from the land banker to the developer, the land banker's interest in the real property may also be subject to administration by the bankruptcy trustee. Unlike an executory contract that is protected from modification, even the LBA itself could be subject to modification of its terms and conditions of payment under a confirmed plan.

The Threat of Recharacterization

Court Authority to Recharacterize an LBA

The power of a bankruptcy court to recharacterize an LBA as a loan is based on 11 USCS § 105. This statute has been construed to confer general equitable powers on the Bankruptcy Court as necessary to carry out the other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. Miller v. Farmers Home Admin. (In re Miller), 16 F.3d 240 (8th Cir. 1994). Although the statute gives the Bankruptcy Court general equitable powers, it does not confer substantive rights, Miller v. Farmers Home Admin. (In re Miller), 16 F.3d 240 (8th Cir. 1994), and it merely gives power to enforce other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, In re GGC Assocs., 178 B.R. 862 (Bankr. D. Fla. 1995).

The power to recharacterize an executory contract such as an LBA as a loan is based on the Bankruptcy Court's power over property of the estate, 11 USCS § 541, and creditors' claims, Bayer Corp. v. Mascotech, Inc. (In re Autostyle Plastics, Inc.), 269 F.3d 726, 748 (6th Cir. 2001). Recharacterization can take place in a variety of contexts, such as recharacterization of debt as an equity contribution, 56 Wash & Lee L. Rev. 689, 715. Because recharacterization turns on whether a debt actually exists, Bayer Corp. v. Mascotech, Inc. (In re Autostyle Plastics, Inc.), 269 F.3d 726 (6th Cir. 2001), there is no reason why the process could not be applied to a challenge as to whether an executory contract actually exists, or whether it is actually a loan. As a court of equity, a bankruptcy court has the power to determine the true nature of a transaction, but bankruptcy courts should use their equitable powers sparingly. Mirant Mid-Atlantic, LLC v. Morgantown OL1 LLC (In re Mirant Corp.), 327 B.R. 262 (Bankr. D. Tex. 2005).

Recharacterization Cases

Recharacterization has also been employed to "lease" transactions involving personal property, which were deemed to be disguised security interests instead, In re G. A. Giancaterin & Associates, Inc., 9 B.R. 26 (Bankr. D.N.Y. 1981), In re Tillery, 571 F.2d 1361, 1363 (5th Cir.-OLD 1978). As to leases of real property, decisions are varied. In Mirant Mid-Atlantic, LLC v. Morgantown OL1 LLC (In re Mirant Corp.), 327 B.R. 262 (Bankr. D. Tex. 2005), the court found no basis for recharacterizing real property leases as a debtor/creditor relationship. In Westship, Inc. v. Trident Shipworks, Inc., 247 B.R. 856, 863 (D. Fla. 2000), the court found that the leases of real property were true leases, not security instruments for a sale, and noted that the most significant factor was whether the lessor retained a residual interest in the property at the end of the lease. The posture of such cases is closely analogous to an executory contract such as an LBA, because executory contracts are given much the same treatment was unexpired leases under 11 USCS § 365.

Finding that a sale or lease-back of real property was not a true lease, but was in fact a financing arrangement, the court in Big Buck Brewery & Steakhouse, Inc. v. Eyde (In re Big Buck Brewery & Steakhouse, Inc.), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10754 (D. Mich. 2005), looked at three factors: (1) whether the transaction actually transferred the risks and responsibilities of a landlord to the lessor; (2) whether the payments under the lease were designed to compensate the lessor for the use of the property, or rather, reflected the repayment of the lessor's acquisition costs plus interest; and (3) whether the lessor retained a significant interest in the property.

Controlling Law in Recharacterization Cases

Property interests are generally defined by state law, not federal bankruptcy law. A federal bankruptcy court should ensure that a property interest receives, in federal bankruptcy court, the same protection it would receive under state law if no bankruptcy had occurred. Butner v. United States, 440 U.S. 48 (U.S. 1979). Therefore, whether a transaction is a bona fide lease, executory contract, or a disguised financing instrument is a matter for state law to determine. In re Nite Lite Inns, 13 B.R. 900, 908 (Bankr. D. Cal. 1981).

The United Airlines Cases

The application of state law explains the different results reached in the same court in the same case, considering multiple leases entered into by United Airlines. In all three cases, municipal bond authorities sold bonds and provided the funds to the airline to construct facilities at the airports. The airline agreed to retire the bonds. Rent payments from the airlines represented repayment of the loaned funds. In the two cases involving leases on airport property in California, the 7th Circuit accepted the claim that the leases were actually loan transactions. United Airlines, Inc. v. HSBC Bank USA, N.A., 416 F.3d 609, 610 (7th Cir. 2005) (UAL San Francisco); In re United Airlines, 447 F.3d 504 (7th Cir. 2006) (UAL Los Angeles). This enabled the airline to continue operating without having to comply with the requirements for assumption of the leases, including curing any defaults. The court approached each case with two consistent principles: (1) case law required the courts to examine and base the decision on the substance of a transaction over its form, and (2) state law governed the substance of the transaction.

It was this second principle and a factual difference that resulted in the different result in the third case, United Air Lines, Inc. v. HSBC Bank USA (In re United Air Lines, Inc.), 453 F.3d 463 (7th Cir. 2006) (UAL Denver). In the third case, Colorado law applied rather than California law, which governed the first two. In the Colorado case, there was a single agreement that included elements of a ground lease and a lease of facilities that were to be constructed with the bond proceeds. The ground lease portion was conceded to be a true lease. Because Colorado law prohibited severing the ground lease provisions from the facilities lease, the entire agreement was considered to be a true lease. By contrast, in the California cases, there were separate agreements for the ground lease and the facilities lease.

Factors to be Considered

Although severability was the deciding factor in the UAL Denver case, a number of factors were discussed by the court leading to its decisions in the UAL San Francisco and UAL Los Angeles cases. In determining if a lease was a true lease or a financing arrangement, the court looked at:

Are payments based on the market value of the real property or a dollar amount?

Does the agreement contain a "hell or high water clause" requiring payment even if the property is unusable?

Does the agreement provide for reversion?

Does the agreement contain a balloon payment?

Does the agreement contain a pre-payment provision?

Is the property being developed the same property for which payments are made?

Discussion of Factors Considered

In the California cases, the court noted that the "rent" payments were based on the interest payable on the bonds that were issued to finance construction of the facilities, not the rental value of the property. This indicated that the transaction was a loan rather than a true lease. The existence of a balloon payment at the end of the lease term equal to the principal amount raised by the bonds and provided to the airline also indicated that this was a loan, not a lease, since balloon payments were typical provisions of loans but not of leases. The lease documents also contained "hell or high water clauses," which required payments to continue in all circumstances, even in the event that the property was unusable for any reason. Again, this would be typical of a loan, but not of a lease, which would generally permit a lessee to terminate a lease if the leased property became unusable for the purpose intended. If the lease document fails to provide for a reversion of the property to the lessor at the end of the lease, or allows the lessee to purchase it for a nominal sum, this indicates that the transaction was a loan disguised as a lease because a lender would normally not have any right or interest in the property upon completion of the payment schedule. The existence of a pre-payment provision was also found to be indicative of a loan transaction, because lease payments are typically spread out evenly over the term of the lease, while loan transactions often contain pre-payment provisions.

Conclusion

While the treatment of LBA in bankruptcy is far from certain, it is clear that they may be subject to recharacterization claims just as leases have been. An attorney representing a land banker under such an agreement should advise the client of the possibility that what seemed a straightforward agreement could end up in cutting edge litigation. In order to avoid the possibility of recharacterization, the parties' intent should be clearly expressed that the transaction is not considered to be loan. The draftsman should take care to avoid the factors that would result in recharacterization. If the developer does file for bankruptcy protection, the land banker's counsel should consult with a bankruptcy practitioner. Negotiation with the debtor and developer, even working out a compromise on the requirements for curing the default on an executory contract would be preferable to facing a recharacterization challenge. In the event of such a challenge, however, the land banker should be prepared with appraisals of the property in order to prove that the claim is secured to the maximum extent possible if it is found to be a disguised loan.

Need more information on this topic? Want to request a chart covering your specific issue? LexisNexis now offers custom charts. Simply call 1-800-227-9597 x55441 to learn more.

Emerging Issues Commentaries are editorially created by attorneys, and are not intended to provide legal advice but to provide information on legal matters. This commentary is current as of December 2007.

60 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Creditor Duty to Update Credit Report

2008 Emerging Issues 84

Creditor Duty to Update Credit Report

By Publisher's Editorial Staff 2008

October 2, 2008

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Commentary examines credit reporting and the relevant litigation along with proposed legislation.

PDF LINK: Core Emerging Issues Commentary ($)

ARTICLE: ARTICLE: Introduction

Robert Smith never managed his finances well. Robert earned a decent wage, but his spending was out of control and it had been for many years. Although he continued in his efforts to repay his substantial debts, it never seemed as though he made any measurable headway. Eventually, Robert was not able to make even the minimum payments on his numerous credit cards. Robert sought bankruptcy relief in 2003. Now, in 2007, Robert still cannot obtain credit. Just last month, four creditors turned down his applications for credit cards. When Robert recently reviewed his credit report, he noticed that his old debts remained on it. In fact, the old debts still reflected a "past due" status, even though the balance as to each debt was reported as a zero balance. Although filing for bankruptcy relief helped Robert, he wondered how he would ever again obtain credit.

In recent years, record numbers of consumers have sought a financial "fresh start" by seeking relief under either Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. In 2005, consumers initiated more than 2 million bankruptcy filings. While the number of bankruptcy filings fell significantly in 2006, the number of filings is again on the rise for 2007. Based on current economic conditions, including the increase in consumer defaults on sub-prime mortgage loans, it is likely that the number of bankruptcy filings will continue to increase in the coming years. Many consumers find, however, that the concept of a "fresh start" guaranteed by the Bankruptcy Code eludes them even after they seek bankruptcy relief. Quite often, creditors continue to report derogatory tradelines, as well as judgments that have been discharged in a bankruptcy proceeding. The significance of a strong credit report is indisputable. It is not possible to obtain a mortgage loan, an automobile loan, an education loan, or even a small personal loan, without a creditor conducting a credit check. Once a consumer initiates a bankruptcy proceeding and a creditor receives notice of it, what are the creditor's reporting obligations?

Bankruptcy Filing

A consumer may seek relief under either Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. A Chapter 7 bankruptcy, initiated pursuant to 11 USCS § 701 et seq., is often referred to as a "straight" bankruptcy and allows a consumer to liquidate his or her debts. The end result of a Chapter 7 filing is that the consumer is relieved of all dischargeable debts at the completion of the bankruptcy proceeding. In a bankruptcy filed under Chapter 7, 11 USCS § 727 sets forth the heart of the "fresh start" concept. Pursuant to § 727(a), the court must grant a consumer a discharge unless one of eight conditions is met. Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 USCS § 1301 et seq., affords relief to consumers with some ability to repay their debts and is commonly referred to as a "wage-earner plan." Under Chapter 13, a consumer makes payments on his or her debts based on a court-approved plan. Upon completion of the plan, the consumer receives a discharge similar to that afforded under Chapter 7. Chapter 13 contemplates a similar "fresh start" for the consumer. Accordingly, whether a consumer files under Chapter 7 or under Chapter 13, the Bankruptcy Code contemplates that the financially-distressed debtor will receive a "fresh start" at the close of the bankruptcy proceeding.

Credit Reporting

The federal statute that governs credit reporting is the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA), 15 USCS § 1681 et seq. The statute provides for the accuracy and fairness of credit reporting. Of particular relevance is § 1681(b):

Reasonable procedures. It is the purpose of this title [15 USCS §§ 1681 et seq.] to require that consumer reporting agencies adopt reasonable procedures for meeting the needs of commerce for consumer credit, personnel, insurance, and other information in a manner which is fair and equitable to the consumer, with regard to the confidentiality, accuracy, relevancy, and proper utilization of such information in accordance with the requirements of this title [15 USCS §§ 1681 et seq.].

Creditors provide information on consumer debts to three credit reporting agencies:

Experian (<http://www.experian.com>)

TransUnion (<http://www.transunion.com>)

Equifax Credit Information Service (<http://www.equifax.com>).

The agencies collect the information about a consumer's debts and about how a consumer pays his or her debts, including whether debts are paid on time and whether a creditor ever took adverse action against the consumer in an effort to collect a debt. The credit reporting agencies then produce credit reports which set forth a compilation of all of the information available on a given consumer.

The FCRA sets forth limitations on the amount of time a credit reporting agency may report adverse information on a credit report. Generally, a bankruptcy may be reported for a period of 10 years; however, all other negative information may remain on the report for a period of 7 years only. 15 USCS § 1681c. In the event a consumer initiates a bankruptcy proceeding and then voluntarily dismisses it prior to discharge, the credit reporting agency must report both the bankruptcy filing and the dismissal.

Often, when a consumer initiates a bankruptcy proceeding, creditors fail to report an update in status for discharged accounts or continue to report the same status and balance reported prior to the consumer's discharge. In other words, if a creditor reported an account as 120 days past due at the time it received notice of the consumer's bankruptcy filing, the creditor may simply change its internal coding to reflect the bankruptcy and note its records to discontinue any efforts to collect the debt in order to avoid a violation of the automatic stay provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 USCS § 362. After the internal re-coding, the creditor may never again report anything on the account to any of the three credit reporting agencies. Absent updated information, the credit reporting agencies often report the last known status and balance or, in this example, an account status of 120 days past due. Worse yet, some creditors continue to report a debt after discharge of the debt in a bankruptcy proceeding in an effort to unlawfully collect the debt. Such practices have become the source of extensive litigation.

Review of Relevant Litigation

While the FCRA provides creditors with some guidance as to the length of time negative information may be reported to credit reporting agencies and provides remedies for a creditor's non-compliance, the Bankruptcy Code is silent on the issue. To the extent that inaccurate credit reporting has been litigated, it has largely related to the question of whether inaccurate credit reporting, during the post-petition stage, violates either the automatic stay provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 USCS § 362, or the Code's guarantee of a discharge upon completion of the proceedings, 11 USCS § 524.

In the case of In re Sommersdorf, 139 B.R. 700 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1992), a consumer initiated bankruptcy proceedings under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. In accordance with the plan, the consumer agreed to make 100 percent repayment of a debt to the creditor at issue. Nevertheless, the creditor furnished the credit reporting agencies with information as to the consumer, as well as the consumer's co-obligor, that the debt had been charged off as a result of the consumer's bankruptcy. The court held that such action on the part of the creditor constituted a "flagrant" violation of the automatic stay provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, particularly in light of the fact that the consumer agreed to 100 percent repayment of the debt. In reaching its decision, the court noted that "[s]uch a notation on a credit report is, in fact, just the type of creditor shenanigans intended to be prohibited by the automatic stay." Id. at 701. Following the Sommersdorf decision, numerous other cases have addressed the same issue.

Most recently, several cases have considered whether furnishing credit information constituted an attempt to collect a debt in violation of either § 362 or § 524. Courts have held that credit reporting in and of itself, that is a creditor's failure to provide updated information to credit reporting agencies with regard to a consumer's bankruptcy, does not constitute a violation of either § 362 or § 524. Bruno v. First USA Bank, N.A. (In re Bruno), 356 B.R. 89, 92 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 2006); Irby v. Fashion Bug (In re Irby), 337 B.R. 293, 295 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2005); In re Goodfellow, 298 B.R. 358 (Bankr. D. Iowa 2003); Vogt v. Dynamic Recovery Servs. (In re Vogt), 257 B.R. 65 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2000); Singley v. American Gen. Fin. (In re Singley), 233 B.R. 170 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1999). In all of the cases cited, there was some other action on the part of the creditor, such as collection efforts, beyond merely reporting or failing to report information concerning the consumer's bankruptcy.

Presently, two related cases are pending which squarely address claims by consumers against credit reporting agencies based on the agencies' failure to update reported information concerning the consumers' bankruptcies: White v. Trans Union, LLC, 462 F. Supp. 2d 1079 (C.D. Cal. 2006) and Acosta v. Trans Union, LLC, 240 F.R.D. 564 (C.D. Cal. 2007).

In White, the consumers sought relief under the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA), 15 USCS § 1681e(b), 15 USCS § 1681i(a), the California Consumer Credit Reporting Agency Act (CCRAA), Cal Civ Code § 1785.14(b), Cal Civ Code § 1785.16, and California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal Bus & Prof Code § 17200 et seq. With regard to each of the consumers named in the litigation, the credit reporting agency erroneously reported the consumers' discharged debts as due and owing on the consumer's credit report. The consumers initiated the class action litigation on behalf of themselves, as well as other similarly situated consumers. The credit reporting agency contended that the consumers failed to state a cause of action upon which relief could be granted and sought dismissal under USCS Fed Rules Civ Proc R 12(b)(6). On October 13, 2006, the United States District Court for the Central District of California denied the motion. The outcome of the litigation has yet to be determined by the court.

In the related case of Acosta, the proposed class of consumers presented similar claims before the same court adjudicating the White litigation referenced above. The consumers sought an order granting approval of their class, preliminary approval of the class action settlement, appointment of a class representative, appointment of class counsel, approval of notice and claim forms, scheduling of the final fairness hearing, and consolidation of Acosta with yet another case for settlement. On May 31, 2007, the court denied approval of the proposed class and denied approval of the proposed settlement. The court also held that because the other relief sought by the consumers was dependent upon the court's approval of the proposed class and the proposed settlement, the court denied the remaining requests for relief.

sought by the consumers.

When the United States District Court for the Central District of California reaches the merits of either the White or Acosta cases, the court may provide some guidance as to how similar claims will be dealt with in the future.

Review of Proposed Legislation

In the present Congress, several pieces of legislation deal with the FCRA; notably, however, the bills do not address the issue of whether a creditor's failure to report updated information concerning a consumer's bankruptcy violates the consumer's right to a "fresh start" as contemplated by the Bankruptcy Code. Furthermore, no relevant amendments to the federal regulatory schematic have been introduced at this time. The same is true on the state level.

Without a doubt, the issue of credit reporting agencies accurately reporting information concerning a consumer's bankruptcy will continue to be a serious concern and a source of litigation. Presently, consumer advocacy groups such as the National Consumer Law Center and the National Association of Consumer Advocates are encouraging consumers to litigate claims against credit reporting agencies for inaccurate reporting. Moreover, many attorneys now specialize in litigating such claims on behalf of consumers. For creditors and credit reporting agencies, the most prudent approach at this point is to report current, accurate information with regard to a consumer's account status during the pre-petition stage, as well as the post-petition stage.

Need more information on this topic? Want to request a chart covering your specific issue? LexisNexis now offers custom charts. Simply call 1-800-227-9597 x55441 to learn more.

Emerging Issues Commentaries are editorially created by attorneys, and are not intended to provide legal advice but to provide information on legal matters. This commentary is current as of December 2007.

61 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Bankruptcy Trustee Suits Against Law Firms

2008 Emerging Issues 86

Bankruptcy Trustee Suits Against Law Firms

By Publisher's Editorial Staff 2008

October 2, 2008

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Commentary examines the claims that lawyers may be subject to including malpractice, negligence in the form of deepening insolvency, aiding and abetting, breach of fiduciary duties by corporate management, and conspiracy. Also examined are the defenses of the Wagoner Rule, in pari delicto, the business judgment rule, and the incentives to settle.

PDF LINK: Core Emerging Issues Commentary ($)

ARTICLE: ARTICLE: Introduction

Law suits by bankruptcy trustees, who oversee a bankrupt company's estate, against the law firms representing debtors are growing. Since these suits benefit creditors, which are usually banks and investment funds, there is more aggressive litigation in an attempt to recoup losses. Claims for professional malpractice, negligence, aiding and abetting of breach of fiduciary duties, and civil conspiracy may be brought against debtors' complicit professional advisors.

In the wake of major bankruptcy cases and scandals involving corporations such as Enron, DVI, Inc., and Refco, Inc., lawyers must pay attention to the escalation of such suits against them. It has been found that even sham corporations may have interests separate from their promoters such that they may suffer injuries cognizable for the purpose of standing in such suits. Lifeblood Biomedical, Inc., Opt-In Trust v. Mann (In re Sender), 423 F. Supp. 2d 1155, 1172 (D. Colo. 2006).

Some courts have come to the conclusion that the remote chance that a debtor might receive distribution of estate property should not deter the more fundamental policy of allowing a bankruptcy trustee to maximize the value of the estate so claims against it can be paid as fully as possible. Logan v. JKV Real Estate Servs. (In re Bogdan), 414 F.3d 507, 515 (4th Cir. 2005). In order to do just that, many bankruptcy trustees are looking to the deeper pockets of law firms and other professional advisors or their debtors.

Applicable Statutes

11 U.S.C.S. § 704

Under 11 USCS § 704(a)(1), a bankruptcy trustee has a duty to collect and reduce to money the property of the debtor's estate. Moratzka v. Morris (In re Senior Cottages of Am., LLC), 482 F.3d 997 (8th Cir. 2007). The trustee has standing under § 704 to assert causes of action belonging to the debtor at time of filing of the bankruptcy petition.

11 U.S.C.S. § 541

This statute provides that the bankruptcy trustee succeeds to the rights of the debtor and has standing to bring any suit that the debtor could have brought outside of bankruptcy. The Bankruptcy Code provides that property of the estate includes "all legal or equitable interests of the debtor in property as of the commencement of the case." 11 USCS § 541(a)(1). Legal interests or equitable interests include any causes of action the debtor may have had at the time the bankruptcy petition was filed, as well as any interest acquired after commencement of the suit under § 541(a)(7), such as assignments of claims by creditors to the bankruptcy trustee. Luzinski v. Peabody & Arnold LLP (In re Gosman), 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 899 (Bankr. D. Fla. 2007); Logan, 414 F.3d 507.

11 U.S.C.S. § 544

Under 11 USCS § 544, a bankruptcy trustee has standing to pursue derivative claims on behalf of creditors of the debtor. The Eighth, Ninth, and Eleventh Circuits construe this power narrowly, holding that a trustee lacks standing to assert claims for damages on behalf of the debtor's creditors. The Second, Fifth, and Seventh Circuits take a more expansive view. Hill v. Gibson Dunn & Crutcher, LLP (In re MS55, Inc.), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65791 (D. Colo. 2007). When a trustee chooses to act under § 544, the trustee may invoke the state law remedies provided to judgment lien creditors to satisfy judgments against the debtor. Lifblood Biomedical, Inc., 423 F. Supp. 2d at 1172, supra.

Choice of § 541 or § 544

Whether a bankruptcy trustee can bring an action pursuant to either statute depends on the nature of the claim asserted. What a trustee must do to support his claims differs depending on the statute. If making a claim under § 541, the trustee must allege that the debtor was injured and the trustee is asserting rights on the debtor's behalf. If making a claim under § 544, he must assert that a hypothetical judgment lien creditor was injured, and the trustee is asserting rights on the creditor's behalf. Hill v. Gibson Dunn & Crutcher, supra. If a trustee takes unconditional assignments from creditors, the trustee must remember that as an assignee, he makes the claim on behalf of the estate, not the creditors. Logan, 414 F.3d at 511, supra.

Potential Claims Against Law Firms

Malpractice

Legal malpractice is characterized as a failure to perform. Steve H. Nickles, Behavioral Effect of New Bankruptcy Law on Management and Lawyers: Collage of Recent Statutes and Cases Discouraging Chapter 11 Bankruptcy, 59 Ark. L. Rev. 329, 392 (2006). A claim of malpractice that arose during the performance of services for a debtor or a debtor in possession in a chapter 11 proceeding is property of the bankruptcy estate because the debtor had a cognizable interest in the claim and the time of filing. Maxfield v. Quarles & Brady LLP (In re Jennings), 2006 Bankr. LEXIS 4481 (Bankr. D. Fla. 2006); Helbling v. Josselson (In re Almasri), 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3973 (Bankr. D. Ohio 2007). The bankruptcy trustee is the right party to assert malpractice against the debtor's lawyers. Moratzka, 482 F.3d at 1006, supra.

Breach of Fiduciary Duties

Breach of fiduciary duties is characterized as failure to give undivided loyalty. Nickles, 59 Ark. L. Rev. at 392, supra. Corporate attorneys owe professional duties to their corporate client, not the corporation's management. If the management breaches fiduciary duties to the corporation, lawyers risk breaching duties to the corporation by not protecting the corporation. Id. at 389. When the corporation becomes insolvent, fiduciary duty expands to the corporation's creditors. Lawyers' liability exposure derives from the corporation's spiraling descent into insolvency.

Douglas R. Richmond, et al., Lawyer Liability and the Vortex of Deepening Insolvency, 51 St. Louis L.J. 127 (Fall 2006).

The Tenth Circuit implicitly found that bankruptcy trustees have standing to bring actions of breach of fiduciary duty when it barred a creditor from bringing such action. Hill v. Gibson Dunn & Crutcher, supra.

Aiding and Abetting

Liability for aiding and abetting is based solely on duty the attorney's client owes to creditors. Therefore, absolution of malpractice does not preclude a finding of aiding and abetting, even though the same piece of legal advice is at the center of both claims. Michael David Delcour, Colorado Lawyers Beware: Anstine v. Alexander and the Attorney's New Duty to Non-Clients, 78 U. Colo. L. Rev. 989, 995 (Summer 2007). Further, if a debtor owned a cause of action against a principal who breached a duty, it also owns a cause of action against its lawyers for aiding and abetting that breach. Moratzka, 482 F.3d at 1002.

This claim is based on state law. Under Colorado law, for example, a creditor may bring a breach of fiduciary duty claim against a director of a debtor corporation; therefore, there is no bar to an aiding and abetting or civil conspiracy claim against the debtor's counsel for their assistance in that breach. Hill v. Gibson Dunn & Crutcher, supra. However, Georgia does not recognize an aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duties claim, Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors of PSA, Inc. v. Edwards, 437 F.3d 1145 (11th Cir. 2006); and Pennsylvania does not recognize aiding and abetting fraud, Buckley v. Deloitte & Touche USA LLP, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37107 (S.D.N.Y. 2007). Claims akin to aiding and abetting and deepening insolvency seem not to be a debtor's claim under New York law; it is owned by creditors. Wallach v. McDermott, Will & Every (In re Promedica Health Group, LLP), 359 B.R. 45 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 2006).

Deepening Insolvency

Deepening insolvency is described as an injury to a debtor's corporate property from the fraudulent expansion of corporate debt and prolongation of corporate life. A lawyer's liability derives from debtor's spiraling descent into insolvency. "When a corporation enters the zone of insolvency or becomes insolvent, its directors' and officers' fiduciary duties expand to include creditors. The directors and officers are obligated to protect creditors' financial interest in the company. If through fraud or other tortious conduct they prolong the company's life beyond insolvency and harm the creditors by increasing the corporation's debt or by dissipating its assets, liability may follow on a 'deepening insolvency' theory." Richmond, 51 St. Louis L.J. 127, supra.

Deepening insolvency potentially sucks in a debtor's lawyers through allegations that they aided and abetted the directors' and officers' breach of fiduciary duties or that they conspired with them to accomplish unlawful purposes. Id. at 128. This is not a clearly defined or limited tort claim. It seeks to hold lawyers liable to non-clients to whom they otherwise owe no duties and whose interests may conflict with the lawyer's corporate client.

Deepening insolvency is a matter of state law and is not universally recognized. Courts that do recognize it tend to treat it in one of two ways. First, it can be a theory of damages by which damages are measured by the failed corporation's increased debt or by the dissipation of its assets after the time it became insolvent. Id. at 131. Second, it can be treated as a separate cause of action. The Third Circuit found that Pennsylvania would recognize a theory of deepening insolvency as a cause of action because it may give rise to a cognizable injury. Id. at 136.

Courts that have rejected this theory have found directors and officers negligent, but good faith decisions to operate an insolvent business will not expose them to liability on a deepening insolvency theory. The business judgment rule applies to negate any liability. Id. at 145.

Other problems with deepening insolvency as a tort claim include proximate cause and foreseeability. Lawyers are not guarantors of clients' business judgments. This turns causation into speculation, which, given that proximate cause is an essential element of all tort claims, defeats a deepening insolvency tort claim. Further, lawyers acting in line with ethical and professional mandates cannot be said to have foreseen an injury if the business fails.

To avoid liability under a deepening insolvency claim, it is recommended that lawyers document interactions with the management and shareholders of their corporate clients, and diligently follow through on troublesome developments. Lawyers should be especially careful to communicate to corporate clients all options for addressing particular situations and document all communications carefully and accurately. Any forewarnings must be fair, informed, and reliable. Lawyers should encourage detailed board minutes, and be sensitive to insider dealing or fraud. If the lawyer's lawful advice to avoid self-dealing or fraud goes unheeded, the lawyer may need to report up the ladder, to a court, or withdraw representation.

Defenses

Wagoner Rule

The Wagoner rule is a rule of standing. It states that "when a bankrupt corporation has joined with a third party in defrauding its creditors, the trustee [lacks standing to] . . . recover against the third party for the damage to the creditors." Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc. v. Wagoner, 944 F.2d 114, 118 (2d Cir. 1991). Under this rule, inquiry begins in determining whether a bankruptcy trustee's cause of action is grounded in what the third party defendant had allegedly done to injure the innocent debtor. Wallach v. McDermott, supra.

The opposing inquiry is whether the wrongdoing the trustee complains of arose when the third party defendant acted in concert with the entity that later became the debtor. In that setting, the trustee lacks standing because of wrongdoing imputed to the debtor, and the claim against third parties for defrauding debtor with cooperation of management accrues to creditors only. Id. "'Johnny-Come-Lately' attestations by insiders to the effect that they would have been 'Whistle Blowers' or would have otherwise sought to prevent harm to the Debtor's creditors cannot be permitted to establish 'standing' in this Debtor (and therefore in the Chapter 7 Trustee) to overcome a Wagoner Defense." Id.

In Pari Delicto

Senate and House Reports accompanying the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 suggest that Congress did intend for defenses like in pari delicto to follow causes of action into the debtor's estate. Claybrook v. Broad & Cassel, P.A. (In re Scott Acquisition Corp.), 364 B.R. 562 (Bankr. D. Del. 2007); Buckley v. Deloitte & Touche, supra. The Tenth Circuit concluded that a bankruptcy trustee is subject to all defenses that could have been asserted against the debtor. Mosier v. Ray Quinney & Nebeker, P.C., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67599 (D. Utah 2007).

The in pari delicto doctrine is the main, and most successful, defense against bankruptcy trustee suits. It is based on basic principles of agency law, which state that the actions of an agent acting within the scope of his employment are imputed to the principle. It applies "to prevent culpable parties from benefitting from their wrongdoings, and to ensure that courts do not lend their good offices to mediating disputes among wrongdoers." Claybrook v. Broad & Cassel, supra. Insofar as a debtor corporation's officers' wrongdoing is imputed to the debtor, the debtor itself is guilty of the wrongdoing and claims by or on behalf of the debtor are subject to the in pari delicto defense.

This doctrine is equitable, not absolute, and not applied blindly regardless of circumstances. Courts have discretion whether to apply the defense in any particular situation. Buckley v. Deloitte & Touche, supra. Courts may apply in pari delicto where (1) as a direct result of his own actions, the plaintiff bears at least substantially equal responsibility for the violations he seeks to redress, and (2) preclusion of suit would not significantly interfere with the effective enforcement of the securities laws and protection of the investing public. Id. The doctrine generally bars a trustee from bringing claims on behalf of a debtor against a third party in a ponzi scheme situation. Lifeblood Biomedical, Inc., 423 F. Supp. 2d at 1174; Mosier, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67599, at 2. Where in pari delicto applies because of imputation of wrongdoing, the debtor did not possess the cause of action when bankruptcy commenced. Luzinski, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS

899 at 7-8.

While the doctrine applies to claims a bankruptcy trustee brings on behalf of the debtor, it does not apply to claims brought on behalf of creditors because creditors are not culpable for the misconduct of the debtor or its management. Lifeblood Biomedical, Inc., 423 F. Supp. 2d at 1174.

Some courts are realizing that it is unfair to knock out claims on the basis of in pari delicto. In Buckley v. Clifford Chance, (E.D. Pa.) (06-CV-1003), the court declined to dismiss on in pari delicto grounds, citing the adverse interest exception. The adverse interest exception is a narrow one and applies only when the agent has totally abandoned the principal's interests. This exception cannot be invoked merely because the agent has a conflict of interest or because he is not acting primarily for his principal. The fact that the predominant motive of the agent is to benefit himself or a third person does not prevent the act from being within the scope of employment. Jonathan Witmer-Rich & Mark Herrmann, Corporate Complicity Claims: Why There Is No Innocent Decision-Maker Exception to Imputing an Officer's Wrongdoing to a Bankrupt Corporation, 74 Tenn. L. Rev. 47, 60 (Fall 2006). Management misconduct will not be imputed to the corporation if the wrongdoing officer acted entirely in his own interests and adversely to those of the corporation. Claybrook v. Broad & Cassel, supra; Buckley v. Deloitte & Touche, supra.

The adverse interest exception does not apply to cases in which the principal is a corporation and the agent is its sole shareholder. This creates a counter-exception called the sole actor rule. If the agent is the sole representative of the principal, his actions are imputed to the principal notwithstanding adverse interest. Claybrook v. Broad & Cassel, supra. When the sole actor counter-exception does not apply, the issue of imputation depends upon whether the wrongdoer acted only in his own interests. If his actions benefitted the principal at all, the wrongdoing is imputed to the principal.

Courts apply the sole actor rule to larger business organizations when all relevant shareholders and decisionmakers were involved in the fraud. Courts look to complaints to see whether the plaintiff has alleged an innocent member or management or shareholder who could or would have prevented the fraud had he known. This is known as the innocent decisionmaker exception. Under this exception, in pari delicto and the Wagoner rule would not apply if there were someone involved in the debtor's management who was ignorant of the ongoing fraud and could and would, if advised thereof, have taken steps to bring the fraudulent conduct to an end.

Some courts reject the innocent decisionmaker exception as a radical alteration of state law that clearly deviates from traditional agency doctrine. Jonathan Witmer-Rich & Mark Herrmann, 74 Tenn. L. Rev. at 79, supra. Other commentators argue that this exception may be doctrinal error because it is inconsistent with the basic principles of agency law underlying imputation. Id. at 50. The Tenth Circuit has rejected the doctrine on the grounds that "Congress intended the trustee to stand in the shoes of the debtor and take no greater rights than the debtor himself had." Mosier v. Callister, Nebeker & McCullough, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75102 (D. Utah Oct. 9, 2007).

Other courts have declined to apply in pari delicto in other situations. The Eighth Circuit aligned itself with the First, Third, Fifth, and Eleventh Circuits in holding that in pari delicto could not be used at the dismissal stage of a suit. Moratzka v. Morris, supra. In Buckley v. Deloitte & Touche, the U.S. District Court of the Southern District of New York declined to apply the doctrine against tort claims because that would have lessened the deterrence of future wrongdoing. The U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado found that where a debtor was not complicit in conduct that damaged it, in pari delicto did not apply. Lifeblood Biomedical, Inc., 423 F. Supp. 2d at 1175, supra.

Business Judgment Rule

Lawyers must supervise management of their debtor in possession clients to ensure that management does not obstruct the debtor's performance of its fiduciary duties to creditors. The lawyer must guide management to ensure the debtor properly maintains the estate. Nickles, 59 Ark. L. Rev. at 403, supra. The business judgment rule may aid the lawyer in a trustee suit against him, as long as the lawyer has acted lawfully and documented his actions well. The business judgment rule will not protect a lawyer who acted in a fraudulent or self-interested manner. Richmond, 51 St.

Louis L.J. at 156, supra.

The role of the lawyer assisting an insolvent corporation is to promote the corporation's best interests within the limits of his engagement. In doing so, the lawyer gives advice and makes recommendations on less-than-perfect information and often on urgent timetables. If the corporation's fiduciaries approve such advice before any action is taken and are protected against liability for harm caused by their own mistakes of judgment, the lawyer providing such advice deserves the same protection. This defense, however, remains untested.

Incentives to Settle

Getting past a motion to dismiss is often enough incentive to settle. Bankruptcy trustees often have access to multimillion-dollar litigation trusts and attorneys or law firms may not make sympathetic defendants at trial. Such suits are also highly disruptive of a law firm's business and may be damaging to the firm's or lawyer's reputation. Even baseless claims are expensive to defend and harm reputation. Enron's lawyers, Vinson & Elkins, settled with the bankruptcy for $30 million without any suit being filed against them. Anthony Lin, Bankruptcy Trustee Suits Cause Increasing Concern for Law Firms, ___ N.Y.L.J. ___ (Nov. 27, 2007). This is a testament to the strength that such trustee suits have been gaining.

Conclusion

The bankruptcy trustee succeeds to the rights of the debtor and has standing to bring any suit the debtor could have brought outside of bankruptcy. As such suit is considered the property of the estate, and it is the duty of the trustee to maximize the estate assets, trustees are looking more and more at the debtor's professional advisors for potential assets. Therefore, lawyers representing corporate clients must be aware of their potential liability, even to non-clients, if the client slips into insolvency. Depending largely on state law, lawyers can be subject to claims of malpractice, negligence in the form of deepening insolvency, aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duties by corporate management, and even conspiracy.

While there are defenses to these actions, the main defense of in pari delicto appears to be eroding. Although mainly still at the trial court level, courts are beginning to limit or completely reject the use of in pari delicto in such suits. As an affirmative defense, it cannot be used at the dismissal stage. Public policy concerns about innocent parties, such as creditors, the bankruptcy trustee, and even the debtor in some circumstances, are figuring into the application of this defense. Further, some courts are recognizing and expanding the use of exceptions to in pari delicto, such as the adverse interest exception and innocent decisionmaker exception.

The main defense for lawyers representing insolvent corporations is to take a cover all bases approach. Lawyers need to remember that, while their actions or advice may not be considered malpractice, they may be enough to establish liability for aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duties. Lawyers should document everything they do and say with regard to their representation, be willing to report wrongdoing, and even end representation if fraud or self-dealing of corporate management becomes an issue.

Need more information on this topic? Want to request a chart covering your specific issue? LexisNexis now offers custom charts. Simply call 1-800-227-9597 x55441 to learn more.

Emerging Issues Commentaries are editorially created by attorneys, and are not intended to provide legal advice but to provide information on legal matters. This commentary is current as of December 2007.

62 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Effect Of Pending Legislation On Chapter 11 Business Bankruptcies

2008 Emerging Issues 87

Effect Of Pending Legislation On Chapter 11 Business Bankruptcies

By Publisher's Editorial Staff 2008

October 2, 2008

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Commentary discusses the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code that permit a Chapter 11 debtor to assume or reject an executory contract, case law that permitted the rejection of collective bargaining agreements and their pension plans as executory contracts, legislative changes intended to reverse that case law, and recently proposed legislation.

PDF LINK: Core Emerging Issues Commentary ($)

ARTICLE: Introduction

According to an article in the September 25, 2007 edition of the Wall Street Journal, (Kris Maher, Democrats to Push Bill to Protect Workers), approximately 55,000 steel workers lost their jobs when 42 steel companies declared bankruptcy between 1997 and 2003. In addition, nearly 240,000 steel workers and retirees had their pensions cut when the government took them over, and 200,000 retirees and their spouses lost retiree health benefits entirely. In response to these statistics, unions have complained that notwithstanding the loss of jobs and worker benefits, executive compensation has remained largely protected.

A classic case of executive preservation involved the Chapter 11 bankruptcy filings by K-Mart Corporation in 2002 and by the Enron Corporation in 2001. K-Mart, formerly the nation's second largest discounter, in the months before it declared bankruptcy, loaned $30 million to nine top executives and approved lucrative executive compensation packages. After the filing, in which 22,000 store employees lost their jobs, K-Mart received bankruptcy court approval to pay up to $150 million in retention bonuses to its top executives. Enron, which was rife with executive fraud, received court approval to pay up to $140 million to key employees as retention bonuses -- extra money for not quitting. Enron's employees' pension plan, of course, became worthless because of the fraud. See Bankrupt Bosses Sitting Pretty, CNNFN April 18, 2002.

On the heels of the Enron (2001) and K-Mart (2002) preservation filings, was the 2003 bankruptcy filing of U.S. Airways, which terminated its pilots' pension plan as part of its bankruptcy reorganization, and imposed over $600 million in liabilities on the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC), the quasi-corporate governmental agency created under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), codified at 29 USCS § 1001 to 29 USCS § 1461, to insure pension plans. Chapter 11 bankruptcy was being used with increasing frequency as a tool to enable corporations to rid themselves of burdensome collective bargaining agreements and employee pension plans, while enabling them to retain top executives' compensation and benefit plans.

The beneficiaries of pension plan terminations in bankruptcy are unsecured and priority creditors who usually receive more than they would have if the debtor's pension plan had been maintained and funded. Although the business creditors may receive reduced value for their claims, they consider the loss as a cost of doing business, and are most likely to recoup the loss by tax write offs and by passing it on to customers. The losers are employees and retirees who have to "take the hit," and who have the most difficult, if not impossible task of recovering from the loss. Executives rarely lose when pension plans are terminated, primarily because many of them receive separate plans from the firms they head. See Theo Francis & Ellen E. Schultz, Guess Whose Retirement Benefits Aren't Endangered?; Many Companies Set Up Trusts to Protect Huge Pensions for Top Executives, Wall St. J., Apr. 6, 2003. Note, At the Crossroads of Three Codes: How Employers Are Using ERISA, the Tax Code, and Bankruptcy to Evade Their Pension Obligations, 65 Ohio St. L.J. 1577 (2004).

The purpose of this commentary is to explore and discuss: (1) the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code that permit a Chapter 11 debtor to assume or reject an executory contract, (11 USCS § 365); (2) case law that permitted the rejection of collective bargaining agreements and their pension plans as executory contracts, (NLRB v. Bildisco & Bildisco, 465 U.S. 513 (U.S. 1984) and its progeny); (3) legislative changes intended to reverse that case law, (11 USCS § 1113 and 11 USCS § 1114); and finally (4) recently proposed legislation, the Protecting Employees and Retirees in Business Bankruptcies Act of 2007, (2007 S. 2092 and 2007 H.R. 3652), a congressional response to perceived blatant abuses of the Bankruptcy Code.

Section 365 of the Bankruptcy Code

In a Chapter 11 bankruptcy reorganization, § 365 of the Bankruptcy Code permits a debtor-in-possession to reject, assume, or assign executory contracts and unexpired leases of the debtor. If there has been a default in an executory contract or unexpired lease of the debtor, the debtor-in-possession may not assume such contract or lease unless, at the time of assumption, the debtor-in-possession cures the default or provides adequate assurance that the default will be promptly cured. 11 USCS § 365(b)(1)(A). For additional substantive discussion concerning the right to assume or reject executory contracts, see 3-365 Collier on Bankruptcy-15th Edition Rev. P 365.03. For discussion of other aspects of the treatment of executory contracts under § 365, see generally, 3-365 Collier on Bankruptcy-15th Edition Rev. 365.syn. Prior to 1984, § 365 was utilized by Chapter 11 debtors-in-possession primarily to assume or reject real and personal property leases, equipment leases, rental-purchase agreements, contracts for goods and services rendered by or for the debtor, and similar types of agreements that were unfulfilled prior to the filing of the petition for relief. Most motions filed under § 365 were of a routine nature. In determining whether certain contracts should be assumed or rejected, the decision rested on the business judgment of the debtor, and upon the assumption of the contract, the debtor was required to comply with subsection (b)(1) of 11 USCS § 365. In re McLouth Steel Corp., 20 B.R. 688 (Bankr. D. Mich. 1982).

National Labor Relations Board v. Bildisco & Bildisco

In 1984, the scope of heretofore permissible unfulfilled contracts that could be assumed or rejected under § 365 was dramatically changed when the United States Supreme Court decided NLRB v. Bildisco & Bildisco, 465 U.S. 513 (U.S. 1984).

Bildisco & Bildisco, a New Jersey partnership engaged in selling and distributing building supplies, filed a voluntary petition for reorganization on April 14, 1980, under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Bildisco and Local 408 of the Teamsters Union were parties to a collective bargaining agreement that on the date of the petition covered 18 of Bildisco's employees. Subsequently, the debtor-in-possession sought bankruptcy court permission to reject the collective bargaining agreement under subsection (a) of 11 USCS § 365.

The bankruptcy court granted permission to reject, retroactive to the date immediately preceding the date of the petition. The union appealed to the U.S. District Court, which affirmed the rejection order. The case was eventually appealed to the United States Supreme Court. During that process, the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) was permitted to intervene. The NLRB had ruled, on the union's complaint, that Bildisco's rejection of the collective bargaining contract constituted an unfair labor practice in violation of the National Labor Relations Act in that it had made unilateral changes in the collective bargaining agreement.

The United States Supreme Court upheld the rejection of the collective bargaining agreement. The Supreme Court held that the collective bargaining agreement was an executory contract subject to rejection by the debtor-in-possession, and that Bildisco was not guilty of an unfair labor practice for rejecting the collective bargaining agreement before formal rejection by the bankruptcy court. The Court also held that collective bargaining agreements could be rejected if a debtor could show that the collective bargaining agreement burdened the estate and that after careful scrutiny, the equities balanced in favor of rejecting the labor contract. The Bildisco decision opened the doors to employers who sought to reject their labor contracts when the contracts became too burdensome.

The stream of contract rejection matters eventually led to the rejection of pension plans. A 1995 bankruptcy court ruling held that a pension plan could be terminated as an executory contract under 11 USCS § 365 because the termination provisions of Title IV of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) were not exclusive, and a bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over termination because it was requested by a debtor. In re Bastian Co., 45 B.R. 717 (Bankr. D.N.Y. 1985). However, ERISA § 4041(a)(1), 29 USCS § 1341, was added to title IV of ERISA by the Single-Employer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1986 in order to overturn the decision of In re Bastion, which allowed a bankruptcy estate to reject a pension plan as an executory contract. Therefore, ERISA-covered pension plans may generally not be rejected as executory contracts, but rather must be terminated in accordance with the appropriate procedures set forth in ERISA. Pension Benefit Guar. Corp. v. Pritchard (In re Esco Mfg.), 33 F.3d 509 (5th Cir. 1994). For a detailed explanation on how a corporation may terminate multiple pension plans under the "distress test" during reorganization, see 25-8 ABII 26.

Bankruptcy Code §§ 1113 and 1114

Congress reacted to the decision in the Bildisco case by adding § 1113 to the Bankruptcy Code. 11 USCS § 1113. Section 1113 was signed into law on July 10, 1984 as part of the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984. Section 1113 sets forth the standards and procedures for rejection of collective bargaining agreements in Chapter 11 cases; its use is the only statutory authority for the rejection of a collective bargaining agreement. Section 1113 expressly confirms the obligation of a trustee or debtor-in-possession to adhere to the terms of a collective bargaining agreement unless relieved of that obligation pursuant to § 1113, and it creates an emergency mechanism by which a trustee or debtor-in-possession can seek judicial approval of temporary changes to the terms of a collective bargaining agreement. 7-1113 Collier on Bankruptcy-15th Edition Rev. P 1113.01. The legislative history of this section reveals that the preferred outcome under § 1113 is a negotiated solution rather than contract rejection. Thus, although the addition of § 1113 to the Bankruptcy Code did not eliminate an employer's right under § 365 to reject a collective bargaining agreement, it did force the employer, the union, and retirees to bargain in good faith, and to the satisfaction of the bankruptcy court, before an agreement would be terminated. The lower federal courts have taken two different approaches to determining when modification or rejection of a collective bargaining agreement is necessary to the debtor's reorganization. The approach most favorable to unions and employees is the approach of the Third Circuit, which is that modification or rejection is only necessary if the alternative is the debtor's immediate liquidation. The approach most favorable to debtors and creditors is the approach of the Second Circuit, which focuses on the debtor's long-term goal of successful reorganization. 2001 L. Rev. M.S.U.-D.C.L. 1145, 1157.

Included in many collective bargaining agreements is the employer's obligation to maintain an employee pension fund. A pension plan that is incorporated by reference into a collective bargaining agreement is not excluded from the scope of 11 USCS § 1113. In re Bunting Bearings, 302 B.R. 210 (Bankr. D. Ohio 2003). When such a plan is covered by the collective bargaining agreement, the appropriate sections of ERISA, supra, must also be complied with before the pension plan could be terminated by the employer.

Bankruptcy Code § 1114, 11 USCS § 1114, was added to the Bankruptcy Code by the Retiree Benefits Bankruptcy Protection Act of 1988 (Retiree Benefits Act) to protect the rights of retirees to continue to receive certain benefits. To afford protection of retiree benefits, the Retiree Benefits Act: (a) added paragraph (13) to the plan confirmation standards of Bankruptcy Code § 1129(a) to require that the plan must provide for the continued funding of retiree benefits at the level set by agreement or court approval; (b) granted administrative expense status under Bankruptcy Code § 503 to the payment of retiree benefits required to be made prior to the effective date of a confirmed chapter 11 plan; and (c) excluded retiree benefit claims from the limitations on damages of Bankruptcy Code § 502(b)(7).

2007 S. 2092: "Protecting Employees and Retirees in Business Bankruptcies Act of 2007"

Twenty-three years have elapsed since Congress responded to the Bildisco decision by enacting 11 USCS § 1113. Since then, Congress has addressed varying types of abuse and misuse of the bankruptcy system. For a listing of some of the legislative reform initiatives that culminated in the 2005 amendments, including the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-008 (2005), see, Susan Jensen, A Legislative History of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, 79 Am. Bankr. L.J. 485.

Over the past several years, members of Congress have become increasingly aware of not only consumer abuses, but also what has been perceived as the overreaching effects that major corporate reorganizations have had on employees, employee pension plans, and retirees. In response to the mounting outcry against the abuses, a bill entitled the "Protecting Employees and Retirees in Business Bankruptcies Act of 2007 " ("Bankruptcy Bill of 2007" or "Bill"), 2007 S. 2092, was introduced in the U.S. Senate on September 25, 2007, and in the U.S. House of Representatives as 2007 H.R. 3652. The stated purpose of the Bankruptcy Bill of 2007 is:

To amend title 11, United States Code, to improve protections for employees and retirees in business bankruptcies.

The Bill sponsors detailed their reasons for the proposed legislation in the Bill's findings:

Recent corporate restructurings have exacted a devastating toll on workers through deep cuts in wages and benefits, termination of defined benefit pension plans, and the transfer of productive assets to lower wage economies outside the United States. Retirees have suffered deep cutbacks in benefits when companies in bankruptcy renege on their retiree health obligations and terminate pension plans.

The sponsors went on to say that the current Bankruptcy Code was designed to protect jobs and enhance enterprise value for all who have an interest in the business. The Code was not designed to be used as a "strategic weapon" to eliminate good paying jobs, strip employees and their families of a lifetime's worth of earned benefits, and hinder their ability to participate in a prosperous and sustainable economy. The sponsors' findings recognized that it was the workers and retirees who were forced to make "substantial economic sacrifices" while the debtor corporation's top executives (who put the company into bankruptcy) continued to benefit from their compensation packages. The sponsors bluntly stated that "Bankruptcy should not be a haven for the excesses of executive pay."

During a press conference held to announce the legislation, Representative John Conyers, (D., Mich.) lashed out at Chapter 11's inequitable playing field, wherein unions are busted; workers lose their jobs; and retiree health care benefits, medical benefits, prescription drug benefits, disability benefits and death benefits are eliminated, while executives reap the benefits of the savings gained by the elimination of the jobs and benefits. Representative Conyers specifically stated:

We need to restore the level playing field that the drafters of Chapter 11 originally envisioned and to ensure that workers and retirees receive fair treatment when their company is in bankruptcy. It is time that we include the interests of working families in the bankruptcy law and consider how we can add a measure of fairness to a playing field that is overwhelmingly tilted against workers.

For the full text of Representative Conyers' comments, see (c) 2007 Federal Information & News Dispatch, Inc., Congressional Documents and Publications, Conyers Introduces Legislation Protecting the Rights of Workers and Retirees in Corporate Bankruptcies Congressional Documents and Publications, September 25, 2007.

The Bankruptcy Bill of 2007 would add several new sections and modify a number of existing provisions of Title 11. In particular, there are a number of proposed changes to 11 USCS § 1113:

Subsections (a) through (c), which set forth the basic requirements for the debtor-in-possession or trustee to meet with an authorized representative of the employees, are deleted, and replaced with a much more comprehensive (and presumably onerous) series of tests to terminate a collective bargaining agreement. The Act also mandates that only terminations of collective bargaining agreements can be obtained under § 1113; assumptions must be under 11 U.S.C.S. § 365.

The time limitations are increased in subsection (d).

Subsection (f) has the following language added: "Any payment required to be made under this section before the date on which a plan confirmed under § 1129 is effective has the status of an allowed administrative expense, as provided in 11 U.S.C.S. § 503."

New subsections (g) through (i) treat the rejection of a collective bargaining agreement as a breach of contract with the same effect as a rejection of such contract under 11 U.S.C.S. § 365. The new subsections give greater rights to parties aggrieved by the termination of the contract.

Section 365, 11 U.S.C.S. § 365, is amended by adding subsection (q):

(q) No deferred compensation arrangement for the benefit of insiders or senior management of the debtor shall be assumed if a defined benefit plan for employees of the debtor has been terminated pursuant to §§ 4041 or 4042 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, on or after the date of the commencement of the case or within 180 days prior to the date of the commencement of the case.

Section 502 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

(l) The court shall allow a claim asserted by an active or retired participant in a defined benefit plan terminated under §§ 4041 or 4042 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, for any shortfall in pension benefits accrued as of the effective date of the termination of such pension plan as a result of the termination of the plan and limitations upon the payment of benefits imposed pursuant to § 4022 of such Act, notwithstanding any claim asserted and collected by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation with respect to such termination.

Section 1114 of title 11, United States Code, is amended, inter alia, by deleting subsection (f) and replacing it, in part, with the following:

(f)(1) Where a trustee seeks modification of retiree benefits, a motion seeking modification of such benefits shall not be filed, unless the trustee has first met with the authorized representative (at reasonable times and for a reasonable period in light of the complexity of the case) to confer in good faith in attempting to reach mutually satisfactory modifications.

The remainder of the modified subsection (f) sets forth the substantive and procedural provisions necessary for a trustee or debtor-in-possession to surmount before the bankruptcy court could modify retiree benefits.

The listed additions and changes are the most significant portions of the proposed Bill. Other portions modify existing law in an effort to make a fairer distribution and balance the equities between the reorganizing employing corporation and its executives, its employees, and its retirees.

Conclusion

Labor representatives have argued that the bankruptcy process has become an all-too-common strategy for employers who want to void labor contracts. Corporations take the position that high labor costs have helped push them into bankruptcy and need to be lowered in order for a reorganized company to compete. Maher, Democrats to Push Bill to Protect Workers, supra. The number of plans terminated, the pension obligations assumed by the PBGC, and the number of retirees receiving benefits from the PBGC rose between 2000 and 2004 to levels never previously seen in the 29 year history of the agency, creating a demand for reform. See, At the Crossroads of Three Codes: How Employers Are Using ERISA, the Tax Code, and Bankruptcy to Evade Their Pension Obligations, supra. The Bankruptcy Bill of 2007 is arguably an ambitious effort to re-adjust the burden of employer-provided pension plans when a corporate employer files for Chapter 11 reorganization.

Need more information on this topic? Want to request a chart covering your specific issue? LexisNexis now offers custom charts. Simply call 1-800-227-9597 x55441 to learn more.

Emerging Issues Commentaries are editorially created by attorneys, and are not intended to provide legal advice but to provide information on legal matters. This commentary is current as of December 2007.

63 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Glosband on In re Oversight & Control Comm'n of Avanzit, S.A.

2008 Emerging Issues 2796

Daniel Glosband on In re Oversight & Control Comm'n of Avanzit, S.A., 385 B.R. 525 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008): Does a Foreign Proceeding Lose its Eligibility for Chapter 15 Recognition Before a Final Decree Enters? Bankruptcy Court Recognizes a "Post-Confirmation" Foreign Proceeding.

By Daniel Glosband

September 3, 2008

SUMMARY: A United States Bankruptcy Court recently clarified that a foreign proceeding in which a repayment plan had been approved and court supervision reduced was still eligible for recognition under chapter 15 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. This commentary discusses the "court supervision" and "pending proceeding" requirements for chapter 15 recognition and analyzes the arguments in In re Oversight and Control Commission of Avanzit, S.A.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Does a Foreign Proceeding Lose its Eligibility for Chapter 15 Recognition Before a Final Decree Enters? Bankruptcy Court Recognizes a Post-Confirmation Foreign Proceeding.

A United States Bankruptcy Court recently clarified that a foreign proceeding in which a repayment plan had been approved and court supervision reduced was still eligible for recognition under chapter 15 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. The Court rejected a challenge to recognition on grounds that the foreign court no longer exercised control and supervision over the debtors assets and affairs and that the foreign proceeding was no longer pending. This commentary discusses the court supervision and pending proceeding requirements for chapter 15 recognition and analyzes the arguments made by the parties in In re Oversight and Control Commission of Avanzit, S.A. n1

Background of Avanzit Foreign Proceeding

Avanzit S.A. (Avanzit), a global provider of technology and telecommunications services in 25 countries, filed a petition seeking a suspensin de pagos in a Spanish insolvency court on May 31, 2002. n2 Under the relevant Spanish law, a suspensin de pagos allows a court to stay litigation and collection actions against the insolvent company and appoint temporary trustees who control the debtors business operations jointly with existing management. These restrictions are lifted once the court approves a convenio, a repayment plan negotiated by the debtor and approved by a majority of its creditors. The convenio contains limitations on the debtor but continues the stay of creditor actions except as provided in the convenio. The proceeding does not terminate until the payment plan is fully consummated, and the Spanish court continues to exercise limited control in a manner analogous to a chapter 11 proceeding following confirmation of a plan. n3

Avanzits convenio, approved by the Spanish court in January of 2004, created a five member Oversight Commission to represent Avanzits creditors. The Oversight Commission does not control the daily operations of the company, but monitors compliance with the convenio until Avanzit repays its debts. The Spanish court retains the power to transform the suspensin de pagos into a quiebra consecutiva, an asset liquidation proceeding, if Avanzit cannot meet the terms of the convenio.

The conflict between Avanzit and a Peruvian bank, BNP Paribas Andes, S.A. (BNPP), originated several years before the suspensin de pagos and was manifested by two pending arbitrations. After one of the arbitrations resulted in an award to BNPP (several months after the suspension de pagos had been filed), BNPP set off $25 million (U.S.) that Avanzit had deposited into a New York bank account under an agreement with the bank. The convenio required Avanzit to report its liabilities and assets and the report included as an asset the $25 million that BNPP had previously set off. n4 In March of 2004, Avanzit brought a civil suit in Spain alleging that the setoff violated Spanish Bankruptcy law and was invalid. n5 A Spanish civil court dismissed this suit for lack of jurisdiction, indicating that Peru, where the bank had already commenced an action, was the proper venue to determine the validity of the setoff. n6 The Peruvian court had not issued its ruling by the time of the Avanzit chapter 15 petition. n7

The chapter 15 petition

The Oversight Commission then filed a motion in the Spanish insolvency court seeking permission to file a chapter 15 proceeding to investigate the facts relevant to the disputed $25 million and to recover it for distribution according to Spanish law. n8 The Oversight Commission emphasized that the convenio had classified the funds as an asset of Avanzit, without which Avanzits liabilities would be greater than its assets, preventing resolution of the convenio and potentially forcing the insolvency court to transform the suspensin de pagos proceeding into a quiebra consecutiva. n9 The Spanish insolvency court authorized the Oversight Commission to commence the chapter 15 proceeding and designated the Oversight Commission as the authorized foreign representative of the Avanzit foreign proceeding. n10

The Oversight Commission filed a petition in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York on November 29, 2007 seeking recognition of the suspensin de pagos as a foreign main proceeding and the Oversight Commission as its foreign representative. n11 BNPP opposed recognition, attempting to ensure that the Peruvian court proceeding would control the status of the disputed fund. n12 The bank claimed that the suspensin de pagos was no longer a pending foreign proceeding and that the Oversight Commission was not a proper foreign representative. n13 However, Chief Judge Stuart Bernstein rejected each of the banks arguments.

Chapter 15 eligibility issues

BNPPs objection focused on two elements of eligibility of a foreign proceeding for recognition under chapter 15. The first element resides within the definition of foreign proceeding while the second is within the specified requirements for recognition. A foreign proceeding is defined as follows :

§ 101(23) The term foreign proceeding means a collective judicial or administrative proceeding in a foreign country, including an interim proceeding, under a law relating to insolvency or adjustment of debt in which proceeding the assets and affairs of the debtor are subject to control or supervision by a foreign court, for the purpose of reorganization or liquidation. n14 (emphasis supplied)

For a foreign proceeding to be recognized, it must be either a foreign main proceeding or a foreign nonmain proceeding. n15 A foreign main proceeding is defined as follows:

§ 1502(4) foreign main proceeding means a foreign proceeding pending in the country where the debtor has the center of its main interests; n16 (emphasis supplied)

BNPP argued that the suspensin de pagos did not qualify as a foreign main proceeding because the Spanish court no longer exercised control and supervision of Avanzits assets and affairs for purposes of reorganization after the convenio was approved. In the same vein, it asserted that the Spanish proceeding was no longer pending. n17 Upon approval of the convenio, the court dissolved the temporary trusteeship and approved the Oversight Commission, allegedly returning Avanzit to full control over the companys operations. n18 The foreign representatives replied that the convenio remains in place for six years from the time of signing, during which time the Spanish court retains authority over disputes and the Avanzit insolvency docket remains open. n19

Rejecting BNPPs argument, Judge Bernstein ruled that as a general matter, a suspensin de pagos fits squarely within the definition of a foreign proceeding. n20 A suspensin de pagos governs insolvency and debt adjustment and is a collective judicial proceeding in which the assets and affairs of the debtor are subject to control or supervision by a Spanish court, for the purpose of reorganization. n21 As to whether the proceeding was still a foreign proceeding, the court noted the similarity of the situation to a chapter 11 case during the period after confirmation but before final decree. n22 In a chapter 11 case, the bankruptcy court continues to exercise jurisdiction post-confirmation but in more limited fashion. Dispute and issue resolution may actually increase. Under BNPPs approach, an analogous U.S. proceeding would be denied assistance by courts in other countries that had adopted the Model Law, a result not required by chapter 15. n23

BNPP argued that the Spanish docket remained open only for procedural purposes, but the court rejected this claim, noting that the Spanish insolvency court continued to rule on matters relating to the convenio, including approval of the Oversight Commission as the foreign representative. n24 The court noted that the Spanish tribunal retains authority over the Avanzit bankruptcy proceeding, as a U.S. bankruptcy court would in a post-confirmation chapter 11 case, and therefore the foreign proceeding remains pending until the convenio is complete and the Spanish court enters an order formally closing the case. n25

The court dispatched the pending argument with a chapter 11 analogy as well: a bankruptcy case in general, and a chapter 11 case in particular, is pending until it is closed. n26 In addition, the Judge stated that pending refers to situs [of a proceeding,] not status. n27 The court declared that the reference to pending in section 1502(4) has the same meaning as the analogous section 2(b) of the U.N. Model Law, which describes a proceeding as taking place in a foreign country instead of pending there. n28

Having concluded that the Avanzit suspensin de pagos was a foreign proceeding pending in the Spanish court, the court recognized the suspensin de pagos as a foreign main proceeding. Avanzits center of main interests was in Spain: it was organized under Spanish law, its registered address was in Spain and it leased a large office building in Madrid for its management offices. n29

BNPP also questioned whether the Oversight Committee qualified as a foreign representative. n30 Judge Bernstein concluded that because it was a body authorized in the foreign proceeding to act as representative of that proceeding, the Oversight Committee was indeed a foreign representative. n31 The definition of a foreign representative includes the words person or body and may include artificial persons created by a legal authority, as well as the individual, partnership or corporation included with the definition of person in section 101(41). n32

BNPP also argued that the rules of comity barred the United States from controlling the setoff, because the Spanish civil court had already dismissed one attempt by Avanzit to have the setoff declared contrary to that countrys law. n33 Judge Bernstein rejected this logic, pointing out that the Spanish civil court dismissed that suit for want of jurisdiction, rather than on the merits, and thus its ruling did not bind a U.S. court. n34 Judge Bernstein did not rule, however, on the merits of the actual setoff dispute, confining his order to recognition of the Avanzit suspensin de pagos as a foreign main proceeding and of the Oversight Commission as foreign representative. n35 It remains to be seen how the court will rule with respect to the disputed fund itself.

For practitioners, Judge Bernsteins analysis confirms that a foreign proceeding remains pending and the debtor and its assets remain subject to sufficient supervision and control until the relevant tribunal enters an order closing its case. n36 The decision also confirms that a body not necessarily familiar in title or function to a U.S. court may be a foreign representative when so-designated and authorized by the foreign court. n37

The Oversight Commission and Avanzit itself both face further hurdles. Judge Bernstein's order recognized the Avanzit insolvency hearing as a foreign main proceeding and the decision contemplates that the dispute over the set-off may continue in both Peru and in the chapter 15 case. n38 The Order accompanying the decision provides that the automatic stay imposed by § 1520(a)(1) will not stay the Peruvian litigation. n39 The Court gives no hint as to how the two matters might be coordinated or reconciled. Ongoing proceedings in both jurisdictions will determine the final outcome of this dispute.

Return to Text

n1 385 B.R. 525 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n2 Id. at 529.

n3 Id. at 528-29.

n4 Id. at 529.

n5 Id. at 530.

n6 Id.

n7 Id.

n8 Id.

n9 Id.

n10 Notice of Foreign Representative's Intent to Commence Case at Exhibit A (Ancillary Case Order of Court of First Instance No. 26, Madrid, Spain), Avanzit, 385 B.R. 525 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008) (No. 07-13765).

n11 Chapter 15 Petition for Recognition of Foreign Proceeding of Avanzit, S.A., Avanzit, 385 B.R. 525 (No. 07-13765).

n12 Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion to Dismiss Chapter 15 Petition or for Summary Judgment Dismissing the Petition, Avanzit, 385 B.R. 525 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008) (No. 07-13765).

n13 385 B.R. at 531.

n14 11 U.S.C. § 101(23).

n15 11 U.S.C. § 1517.

n16 11 U.S.C. § 1502(4).

n17 Id. at 536.

n18 Id.

n19 Response in Opposition to BNP Paribas Andes, S.A.'s Motion to Dismiss Chapter 15 Petition or for Summary Judgment Dismissing the Petition at 7, Avanzit, 385 B.R. 525 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008) (No. 07-13765).

n20 385 B.R. at 533.

n21 Id.

n22 385 B.R. at 535-36.

n23 Id.

n24 Id. at 536.

n25 Id. at 538.

n26 385 B.R. at 537.

n27 Id. at 537.

n28 Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency, (United Nations Commission on International Trade Law 1997).

n29 385 B.R. at 539.

n30 Motion to Dismiss, supra, note 12, at 21.

n31 385 B.R. 540; see also 11 U.S.C. § 101(24) (the term foreign representative means a person or body, including a person or body appointed on an interim basis, authorized in a foreign proceeding to administer the reorganization or the liquidation of the debtors assets or affairs or to act as a representative of such foreign proceeding).

n32 385 B.R. at 540.

n33 Motion to Dismiss, supra, note 12.

n34 385 B.R. at 534.

n35 Id. at 540-41.

n36 Id. at 538.

n37 385 B.R. at 531.

n38 385 B.R. at 540.

n39 Order Denying Motion To Dismiss And Granting Recognition, Avanzit, 385 B.R. 525 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008) (No. 07-13765).

RELATED LINKS: To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the
■ Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the

■ bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Daniel Glosband is a partner in Goodwin Procter LLPs Financial Restructuring Practice, www.goodwinprocter.com. He recently represented the lead investors in the confirmed Chapter 11 plan of US Airways and its merger with America West and the fiduciaries for the employee stock plan in the Delta case.

Mr. Glosband is a Vice President of the American College of Bankruptcy and a conferee of the National Bankruptcy Conference, which advises Congress on bankruptcy legislation. He was a draftsman of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency and one of two primary draftsmen of Chapter 15 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, Ancillary and Other Cross-Border Cases. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy 15th Ed. Revised, Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide and Collier International Business Insolvency Guide.

He is admitted to practice in New York, Massachusetts, the U.S. District Courts in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and the Southern District of New York, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court. He received a J.D. from Cornell University in 1969 and a B.A. from University of Massachusetts in 1966.

64 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on Tidewater Finance Co. v. Kenney

2008 Emerging Issues 2778

S. Andrew Jurs on Tidewater Finance Co. v. Kenney, 531 F.3d 312 (4th Cir. June 25, 2008)

By S. Andrew Jurs

September 1, 2008

SUMMARY: In this Expert Commentary, S. Andrew Jurs discusses Tidewater Finance Co. v. Kenney, in which the court determined, in a matter of first impression in the circuit, whether the "hanging paragraph" in 11 U.S.C. § 1325(a) prevents a purchase money secured creditor from asserting its contractual right to an unsecured claim against a chapter 13 debtor for the deficiency portion of the debt owed after the collateral has been surrendered and sold.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: The Fourth Circuit Adopts the Minority Approach for Dealing with the Hanging Paragraph of 11 U.S.C. § 1325(a), Holding That the Provision Does Not Deprive Undersecured 910 Creditors of Their Deficiency Claims

In Tidewater Finance Co. v. Kenney, 531 F.3d 312, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 13377 (4th Cir. June 25, 2008), the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit determined, in a matter of first impression in the circuit, whether the hanging paragraph in 11 U.S.C. § 1325(a) prevents a purchase money secured creditor from asserting its contractual right to an unsecured claim against a chapter 13 debtor for the deficiency portion of the debt owed after the collateral has been surrendered and sold.

Facts and Procedural History. On September 29, 2006, Jennifer Lee Kenney (the Debtor) purchased a 2003 Chevy Impala under a Retail Installment Sales Contract (the Contract). Under the Contract, the Debtor made a down payment of $700 and financed the remaining $12,102.24 via a loan from the automobile dealership. In return, the dealership received a purchase money security interest in the Impala to secure the entire debt. The dealership timely perfected the security interest and assigned the Contract and perfected security interest to Tidewater Finance Company (Tidewater). Tidewater's lien was noted on the vehicle's title.

Less than three months later, on December 19, 2006, the Debtor filed bankruptcy under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. In her amended chapter 13 plan, the Debtor proposed to surrender the Impala in full satisfaction of the debt owed to Tidewater despite the fact that the vehicle was worth less than the total amount owed. For this reason, Tidewater objected to the Debtor's proposed amended plan and filed a proof of claim asserting a secured debt of $12,341.84. Subsequently, Tidewater obtained relief from stay and sold the Impala, leaving a deficiency balance due of $5,271.34 according to Tidewater's amended proof of claim.

Relying on the rule adopted by the majority of bankruptcy courts ruling on the issue in other circuits, the bankruptcy court overruled Tidewater's objection to confirmation. In doing so, the court concluded that the hanging paragraph of section 1325(a) prevented Tidewater from bifurcating the claim to assert an unsecured deficiency claim for the portion of the debt not covered by the sale of the collateral.

Tidewater timely filed a notice of appeal, and, pursuant to Rule 8001(f) of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure and 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2)(A), the bankruptcy court certified that a direct appeal of this decision presented a question of law as to which there was no controlling Fourth Circuit or U.S. Supreme Court decision and that resolution of conflicting decisions among bankruptcy courts in various circuits was required. The Fourth Circuit granted the petition for direct appeal.

Legal Background. A bankruptcy court will confirm a chapter 13 reorganization plan so long as it meets the requirements of section 1325(a). Regarding a debtor's proposed treatment of secured claims, section 1325(a)(5) provides that such treatment will be confirmed if the plan can provide that:

(1) the debtor and secured creditor agree on how the claim will be paid (§ 1325(a)(5)(A)); or

(2) the debtor retains the collateral while the creditor retains the lien until either the debt is repaid under the plan or until the debtor receives a discharge, whichever occurs first, and the debtor pays adequate protection payments to the secured creditor, the total of which must not be less than the allowed amount of the claim as of the effective date of the plan (§ 1325(a)(5)(B)); or

(3) the debtor surrenders the secured collateral to the creditor holding the lien (§ 1325(a)(5)(C)).

When Congress enacted the 2005 amendments to the Bankruptcy Code, it revised section 1325(a) by adding to the end of the subsection an unnumbered paragraph, i.e., the hanging paragraph. The hanging paragraph provides:

For purposes of paragraph (5), section 506 shall not apply to a claim described in that paragraph if the creditor has a purchase money security interest securing the debt that is the subject of the claim, the debt was incurred with the 910 days preceding the date of the filing of the petition, and the collateral for that debt consists of a motor vehicle . . . acquired for the personal use of the debtor, or if collateral for that debt consists of any other thing of value, if the debt was incurred during the 1-year period preceding that filing.

The reference to section 506(a) incorporates that section's rules for dealing with secured claims by allowing a secured creditor to divide its claim into secured and unsecured amounts, with the unsecured amount equaling the amount by which the debt exceeds the collateral's value or equity. By allowing this bifurcation of secured claims, section 506(a) permits an undersecured creditor to become an unsecured creditor and seek a deficiency claim.

Under the pre-amendment section 1325(a)(5), an undersecured creditor who received and sold a surrendered 910 vehicle had a remedy under federal law (section 506(a)), to seek a deficiency after sale of the collateral. After the addition of the hanging paragraph, however, bankruptcy courts have disagreed as to the hanging paragraph's effect on an undersecured creditor's ability, under state law governing the creditor's contractual rights, to pursue a deficiency claim. The majority of bankruptcy courts considering the matter have concluded that the hanging paragraph's explicit elimination of the application of section 506(a) to 910 claims means that such creditors are without any remedy or basis to bifurcate their loans into secured and unsecured portions. The end result is that the loans are rendered non-recourse despite the language of the underlying contract and security agreement.

In contrast, the minority rule holds that Article 9 of the U.C.C. and contract law, both statutory and common, entitle 910 creditors to an unsecured deficiency judgment, unless the contract states that it is a non-recourse loan, even after surrender of the vehicle. Calling it the minority rule, however, is somewhat disingenuous, because a growing number of circuit courts have adopted this minority rule and recognize a 910 creditor's right to assert an unsecured deficiency claim. See DaimlerChrysler Fin. Serv. Americas LLC v. Ballard (In re Ballard), 526 F.3d 634 (10th Cir. 2008); Capital

One Auto Fin. v. Osborn, 515 F.3d 817 (8th Cir. 2008); In re Matter of Wright, 492 F.3d 829 (7th Cir. 2007); cf. In re Long, 519 F.3d 288 (6th Cir. 2008) (filling statutory gaps according to the rule of the equity of the statute rather than nonbankruptcy law to preserve deficiency claims).

Commentary. For that very reason, the Fourth Circuits holding in Kenney is less noteworthy or contrarian than it appears at first glance. Instead, Kenney is simply one more example of the circuit courts, who do not deal regularly with bankruptcy law, going the opposite direction in interpreting the 2005 amendments than the majority of bankruptcy courts tasked with implementing its confusing provisions on a daily basis.

To begin its analysis, the appeals court clears the field by recognizing that: Based on a plain reading of the hanging paragraph, there is no question that Congress has unambiguously eliminated the 910 creditors access to a federal remedy under § 506(a). 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 13377, at *13. The question, therefore, is whether there is any other body of law providing a 910 creditor recourse for the remainder of the debt after surrender of the vehicle. According to the Fourth Circuit, the Tenth, Eighth, and Seventh Circuits provide the correct answer by holding that the parties still have their contractual rights and obligations after surrender, and that a creditor may pursue an unsecured deficiency claim under state law. Id. at *14.

By posing the question in this way, the Fourth Circuit presumes that the hanging paragraph is incomplete and needs another body of law to fill in the gaps. The principle that state law determines the rights and obligations of debtors and creditors when the Bankruptcy Code fails to supply a federal rule is well recognized. Id. (citing Butner v. United States, 440 U.S. 48, 55, 99 S. Ct. 914, 59 L.Ed. 2d 136 (1970)). In support, the appeals court cites the Seventh Circuit for the proposition that it is a mistake to assume . . . that § 506 is the only source of authority for a deficiency judgment when the collateral is deficient. Wright, 492 F.3d at 832. In fact, according to the Seventh Circuit, (1) nothing in the Bankruptcy Code prohibits or qualifies an unsecured deficiency claim under state law following the surrender of collateral; (2) creditors don't need § 506 to create, allow, or recognize security interests, which rest on contracts (and the UCC) rather than federal law; and (3) section 502 tells bankruptcy courts to allow claims that stem from contractual debts, and nothing in § 502 disfavors or curtails secured claims. Id. at 832-33.

The Fourth Circuit rejects the majority approach in which bankruptcy courts found that the language of the hanging paragraph should be applied as written. As noted in In re Pinti, 363 B.R. 369 (Bankr. S.D. N.Y. 2007), while poorly drafted, the Hanging Paragraph is not ambiguous. Thus, under standard rules of statutory interpretation, there would have been no need to resort to nonbankruptcy law as a gap-filler to deal with situations not addressed in the Bankruptcy Code.

Also left undiscussed by the Fourth Circuit were other alternative arguments, such as alleged congressional intent to elevate the rights of secured 910 creditors, or the assertion that the hanging paragraph allows arbitrary treatment of deficiency claims and provides a windfall to the debtor. Instead, by agreeing that section 506 is not the exclusive method for separating out the deficiency as an unsecured portion of the 910, the end result was readily apparent to the Fourth Circuit: 910 deficiency claims must be allowed to the extent permitted by state law.

Therefore, because Tidewater's contract with the Debtor provided Tidewater with a security interest in the vehicle to secure payment of all sums owed under the contract, Tidewater was entitled under state law and the contract to a deficiency judgment against the Debtor. When the Debtor surrendered the vehicle, he gave Tidewater the full market value of the collateral, and any deficiency after the vehicle's sale was an unsecured claim in the Debtors chapter 13 plan.

In sum, despite pretensions to contrariness, the decision in Kenney further confirms that the putative minority rule has become the majority rule among those courts of appeals considering the issue. In the Fourth Circuit, as in the Tenth, Eighth, and Seventh Circuits, the rule is that a 910 creditor will be entitled to a deficiency claim against a chapter 13 debtor who surrenders a vehicle to the extent that the creditor would be entitled to a deficiency judgment under the applicable contract and state law.

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion related to the hanging paragraph in 11 U.S.C. § 1325(a), see generally Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender),

■ 1325

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the

■ Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the

■ bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

65 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Cornell, Hagen, Jesner & Eschbach-Hall on Employee Benefits in Corporate Bankr.

2008 Emerging Issues 2777

John R. Cornell, Daniel C. Hagen, Lisa Rothman Jesner and Tricia Eschbach-Hall on Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation in Corporate Bankruptcy

By John R. Cornell, Daniel C. Hagen, Lisa Rothman Jesner and Tricia Eschbach-Hall

September 1, 2008

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis provides brief excerpts from the Collier Monograph Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation in Corporate Bankruptcy on (1) the treatment of defined benefit plans and interactions with the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, (2) executive compensation and claims related to non-qualified retirement benefits and (3) modification of retiree welfare benefits under section 1114 of the Bankruptcy Code.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: The following material is excerpted from the Collier monograph Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation in Corporate Bankruptcy, written by John R. Cornell, Daniel C. Hagen, Lisa Rothman Jesner and Tricia Eschbach-Hall.

There are unique issues that arise with respect to employee benefits and executive compensation when a business entity, typically a corporation, files for bankruptcy.

Employees of a company that enters bankruptcy are likely to be concerned about their livelihood and may seek more secure employment opportunities. Executives of the company may have personal interests very different from the interests of the debtor, and unless those interests are balanced, they may have difficulty envisioning the proper course for the reorganization and negotiating with creditors. Handling executive compensation issues can thereby become a challenge much larger than protecting the financial wellbeing of individual employees.

Unions generally present significant issues in a bankruptcy case where employee benefits of the debtor are collectively bargained. Labor laws are complex and negotiations are difficult outside of bankruptcy. The Bankruptcy Code imposes even more legal hurdles on modifying labor contracts, and the interests of labor unions (who may have a seat on the creditors committee) result in more challenging negotiations. At the same time, the escalating cost of union benefits, including retiree medical and retirement plans, may be a substantial contributing factor in the decision to file.

Debtors need to consider compensation and benefits issues carefully during the prepetition period, and will address these issues at the outset of the case, in first-day motions. Once in bankruptcy, the debtor will determine which benefits can be paid, and which benefits will remain as claims on the estate. Benefits that are claims will have differing levels of priority under the Bankruptcy Code, and will receive differing treatment. For benefits that the debtor wishes to establish during the course of the case, restrictions often apply, and negotiations with creditors may be necessary, as well as approval by the bankruptcy court.

The recently published Collier monograph Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation in Corporate Bankruptcy presents a complete discussion of the intersection of bankruptcy and employee benefits law. It walks through the prepetition period to first-day motions and actions, discusses the priority of compensation and benefit claims and treatment of compensation and benefits in bankruptcy, including challenges to benefit plan contributions, and then turns to specific areas of concern. These areas include defined benefit pension plans, executive compensation, retiree benefits, voluntary employees beneficiary associations, and the group health plan continuation of coverage requirements of the COBRA. n1 Finally, the monograph discusses recent changes to the Bankruptcy Code affecting benefits and compensation.

This Expert Commentary provides brief excerpts from the monograph on (1) the treatment of defined benefit plans and interactions with the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, (2) executive compensation and claims related to non-qualified retirement benefits and (3) modification of retiree welfare benefits under section 1114 of the Bankruptcy Code.

Treatment of Defined Benefit Plans and Interactions with the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

Underfunded defined benefit pension plans often play a major role in bankruptcy, particularly in traditionally unionized industries, such as steel and other primary metals, rubber, airlines and automotive. In some cases, serious underfunding may be one driving factor in a debtors decision to restructure.

Liability for both pension funding obligations and defined benefit plan termination underfunding extends to controlled group members. For companies not protected by the automatic stay in bankruptcy, a lien may arise for termination liability (essentially, underfunding at time of termination) and for missed minimum required contributions in excess of $1 million. n2 As a result, at the outset of the case, and at such time as the debtor does not make minimum required contributions during the case, underfunded defined benefit pension plans may impact whether subsidiaries, including foreign subsidiaries, decide to file for chapter 11 protection so that the automatic stay will protect against the imposition of liens. Once the debtor is in bankruptcy, the PBGC will file contingent claims for underfunding and for contributions and premiums, and as a result, may play an important role on the creditors committee. If the PBGC is concerned about plan funding, it may threaten termination. If the debtor wants to terminate and the PBGC does not agree to the terms, it may threaten plan restoration. As a result, the PBGC can play a major role in the course of the bankruptcy case.

Termination Premium. As part of the Deficit Reduction Act of 2005 (DRA), ERISA was amended to include a termination premium, also known as an exit premium for companies that undergo a distress termination or involuntary termination in or out of bankruptcy. The premium is $1,250 per participant for three years and is payable by the debtor after emergence from bankruptcy. n3 For debtors that elect special airline funding rules, this premium may be greater. While the DRA provision had a sunset date of 2010, the Pension Protection Act made this provision permanent. n4

The federal district court for the Southern District of New York recently held that the obligation to pay the premium was unenforceable following emergence, as the obligation was a prepetition claim under the Bankruptcy Code. Defining a claim as including a right to payment that is contingent and unmatured, the court concluded that the premium was a contingent claim in bankruptcy that was discharged at the time of confirmation of the plan of reorganization. If a debtor was permitted to contract with a private party for a payment to be made after confirmation of the plan of reorganization, it would essentially be a preference created by the parties, rather than by the Bankruptcy Code. The court refused to allow such a preference to arise in favor of the PBGC, as it was not clear that an explicit amendment of the Bankruptcy Code was intended by the DRA. Based on the specific facts of the case, where the DRA was in effect at the time of filing, and a plan termination was contemplated prior to bankruptcy (debtor and PBGC had two prepetition meetings), the court found that the exit premium was a prepetition claim. n5

Executive Compensation. Under the Bankruptcy Code there are several options for the treatment of employment agreements and other executive agreements after filing. Under certain circumstances, it is possible to assume or reject existing contracts with the approval of the bankruptcy court. In addition, it may be possible to modify contracts in the ordinary course of business. Similarly, if a debtor wishes to put in place a new employment or other executive agreement, court approval is necessary, unless it is in the ordinary course of business. The court is constrained by provisions of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (2005 Act) that severely restrict retention and severance payments for insiders.

In addition to the legal requirements regarding such arrangements, more practical concerns govern. Executive compensation in bankruptcy typically involves intense negotiations with stakeholders, including creditors and unions. If creditors consent, it is more likely that the bankruptcy court will approve the compensation arrangement; on the other hand, the bankruptcy court is less likely to approve compensation over the objections of creditors.

There is often pressure to cut back preexisting employment arrangements with executives to show creditors that the executives are making sacrifices along with the creditors and other employees. n6

Non-Qualified Retirement Benefits--Claims. Non-qualified plan benefits that vest prior to the bankruptcy filing are an unsecured prepetition claim on the estate. n7 Treatment of the portions of non-qualified benefits that vest during the course of the bankruptcy case is less clear. Caselaw does not establish whether priority depends on whether an award (or part of an award) vested prepetition or postpetition. However, it is possible that a court would analyze the arrangement to determine which portion relates to postpetition service, and might use vesting as a guide. It is often difficult to determine an individual's accrued benefit under a non-qualified plan at any particular point in time, and therefore it is difficult to establish which portion of the benefit is vested at the time of filing, and also to establish the amount of the claim for any benefits determined to be prepetition claims. For example, some non-qualified plans provide benefits that cannot be provided under qualified benefit plans due to limits under IRC section 401(a)(17) (limit on compensation that may be taken into account under a qualified plan) or IRC section 415 (limit on annual benefits payable to a retiree). n8 Decreases in compensation can cause the IRC section 401(a)(17) limits to have less of an impact in one year than it had in an earlier year, thus decreasing benefits payable under the non-qualified plan. Also, the limit under section 415 is generally reduced (and thus non-qualified plan benefits increase) if an employee retires before age 65. Therefore, non-qualified plan benefits depend to some extent on unknown future events.

A debtor may choose to reject its non-qualified benefit plans. Upon rejection, all claims for accrued benefits under the plans might be treated as prepetition unsecured claims. Alternatively, claims for benefits might be allocated between prepetition unsecured claims and postpetition administrative expenses, depending on when the benefits accrued. A debtor that rejects its non-qualified benefit plans may face employee morale problems, especially since the plans often cover executives critical to the success of the reorganization.

The debtor may request bankruptcy court approval for payment of prepetition non-qualified plan benefits (in either the first-day motions or at some subsequent date). For benefits that are payable to former employees, such approval is unlikely to be granted since the terminated employees are not providing any value to the estate of the debtor. More often, non-qualified benefits payable to terminated employees that accrued prepetition are simply treated as general unsecured claims of the debtor. Bankruptcy law does not typically allow rejection of a plan for former employees and assumption for current employees. n9

With respect to arrangements that cover only active employees who continue to be covered by the non-qualified plans and who terminate employment after the filing date, a debtor may request bankruptcy court approval to pay the prepetition benefits for these employees. Depending on the amount involved, a court may agree to such payments (and the creditors will not object to such payments) in order to help employee morale. Due to the controversy likely to surround such a request (i.e., the amounts involved and the fact that the benefits are only paid to highly compensated employees), this request is almost never included in the first-day motion. If made, it generally occurs sometime later during the administration of the case.

If (a) an executives employment contract specifically provides for payment of non-qualified plan benefits and (b) the debtor assumes the employment contract, a court could provide for the full payment of the benefits by treating the executives employment contract as an executory contract. n10 Accordingly, if the executives employment contract is assumed, the debtor would have to cure any default in the contract, which, if the contract specifically requires payment of the non-qualified plan benefits, would include paying any claim for damages arising from the loss of those benefits. Payments would be treated as a second priority administrative claim. n11 If the benefit is a vested prepetition, however, the benefit will likely be classified as non-executory, and therefore it may not be assumed. n12

Following the amendments to the Bankruptcy Code in the 2005 Act, n13 approval to pay prepetition non-qualified plan benefits for insiders n14 may be more difficult to obtain. Payments made to induce insiders to remain in the employ of the debtor may not receive administrative priority unless it is proven that the insider has a bone fide job offer for the same or greater compensation, and only where employment of that insider is essential to the survival of the business. Even when this standard is met, payment must be less than 10 times the incentive payments provided to non-management employees in that year, or, if no incentive payments have been made in that year, no greater than 25 percent of the amount of any similar payment made to that insider in the previous year. n15

Prior to the 2005 amendments, a debtor could argue that assumption of the non-qualified plan benefit was required to retain executives critical to the success of the restructuring. Today, with respect to an insider, the principal purpose of the assumption can no longer be retention. n16

In one case, a bankruptcy court approved assumption (and therefore payment as an administrative priority claim) of a non-qualified pension benefit to a CEO (with respect to 60 percent of his prepetition benefit) and three senior management employees (with respect to the entire benefit) on the condition that all prepetition accruals would revert to prepetition unsecured claims in the event of a termination of the debtors defined benefit plan. All postpetition accruals were granted administrative priority. n17

Modification of Retiree Welfare Benefits under Section 1114 of the Bankruptcy Code. Retiree welfare benefits are given special protection in an employers chapter 11 bankruptcy case. Section 1114 of the Bankruptcy Code ensures that a chapter 11 debtor continues to pay certain retiree benefits postpetition and that the debtors plan of reorganization adequately provides for the claims of retired employees. Section 1114 provides generally that a chapter 11 debtor shall timely pay and shall not modify any retiree benefits. n18 Modification (including termination) of retiree benefits is permitted if the debtor and the retirees authorized representative agree to the modification or if a court orders the modification pursuant to statutory procedures. n19 Section 1114(a) defines retiree benefits as:

payments to any entity or person for the purpose of providing or reimbursing payments for retired employees and their spouses and dependents, for medical, surgical, or hospital care benefits, or benefits in the event of sickness, accident, disability, or death under any plan, fund, or program (through the purchase of insurance or otherwise) maintained or established in whole or in part by the debtor prior to filing a petition commencing a case under this title. n20

The definition of retiree benefits therefore includes retiree health and life insurance premiums, contributions to multi-employer welfare funds on behalf of retirees and payments made directly to retirees under self-insured plans. Section 1114 does not apply to any retiree, or the spouse or dependents of such retiree, if such retirees gross income for the twelve months preceding the filing of the bankruptcy petition equals or exceeds $250,000 unless the retiree is able to demonstrate that he or she is unable to obtain comparable coverage to that provided prepetition, elsewhere. n21

A debtor is permitted to modify its retiree benefit plans subject to the procedures set forth in section 1114. These procedures: (a) provide for the appointment of an authorized representative n22 for retirees (a union or a committee of retirees appointed by the U.S. trustee) for negotiation purposes; n23 (b) require the debtor to make a proposal for modification to the authorized representative based upon certain relevant information and to confer in good faith with the authorized representative and provide it with relevant information regarding the debtors proposal; n24 (c) permit the authorized representative to approve or reject such proposal; n25 (d) in the case of rejection, require the court to hold a prompt hearing on the proposal; n26 and (e) set forth certain standards by which the court may approve the rejected proposal for modification. n27 Section 1114 was modeled after section 1113 of the Bankruptcy Code, which governs the debtors ability to assume or reject a collective bargaining agreement. As a result, the procedural requirements of section 1114 are nearly identical to those under section 1113. n28

Retiree benefits that were modified during the 180-day period prior to filing may be subject to reinstatement. Reinstatement may occur if the employer was insolvent at the time of the modification, unless a court determines that the balance of the equities favors the modification. n29 n1 Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, Pub. L. No. 99-272 § 10002(a), 100 Stat. 227 (codified at 29 U.S.C. §§ 1161-1168).

Return to Text

n2 I.R.C. § 430(k); ERISA §§ 303(k), 4068, 29 U.S.C. § 1083(k), 1368.

n3 ERISA § 4006(a)(7), 29 U.S.C. § 1306(a)(7), as amended by the Deficit Reduction Act of 2005 § 8101(b), Pub. L. No. 109-171.

n4 ERISA § 4006(a)(7), 29 U.S.C. § 1306(a)(7).

n5 Oneida Ltd. v. PBGC (In re Oneida Ltd.), 383 B.R. 29 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n6 Allison K. Verderber Harriott, Comment: Toward an Understanding of the Dialectical Tensions Inherent in CEO and Key Employee Retention Plans During Bankruptcy, 98 Nw. U. L. Rev. 579, 593-94 (2004).

n7 In re Merry-Go-Round Enterprises, Inc., 1999 WL 33457180, at *4 (Bankr. D. Md. Dec. 21, 1999) (holding that [b]ecause the Executives were fully vested prior to the petition, their postpetition employment with the Debtor did not entitle them to have these claims treated as an administrative expense.); Kucin v. Devan, 251 B.R. 269, 272 (D. Md. 2000) ([t]he court found that the agreement was properly characterized as a nonexecutory contract since the retirement agreement had already vested, quoting In re Stewart Foods, Inc. 64 F.3d 141, 145 n.2 (4th Cir. 1995)); see also In re Bethlehem Steel Corp., 479 F.3d 167 (2d Cir. 2007) (treating prepetition accruals as unsecured claims on the estate).

n8 I.R.C. § 401(a)(17).

n9 Section 365(f) requires a debtor to assume a contract subject to the benefits and burdens thereunder. In re ANC Rental Corp., 277 B.R. 226, 238 (Bankr. D. Del. 2002) (quoting In re Italian Cook Oil Corp., 190 F.2d 994, 997 (3d Cir. 1951): The [debtor] ... may not blow hot and cold. If he accepts the contract he accepts it cum onere. If he receives the benefits he must adopt the burdens. He cannot accept one and reject the other."). The cum onere rule "prevents the [bankruptcy] estate from avoiding obligations that are an integral part of an assumed agreement." United Air Lines, Inc v. U.S. Bank Trust Nat'l Ass'n (In re UAL Corp.), 346 B.R. 456, 468 n.11 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2006), quoted in In re Fleming Companies, Inc., 499 F.3d 300, 308 (3d Cir. 2007); see also N.L.R.B. v. Bildisco, 465 U.S. 513, 104 S. Ct. 1188, 79 L. Ed. 2d 482 (1984); In re Italian Cook Oil Corp., 190 F.2d 994, 997 (3d Cir. 1951).

n10 The Bankruptcy Code provides that subject to court approval, the debtor may assume or reject any executory contract or lease. See 11 U.S.C. § 365. For a general discussion of a debtors right to assume or reject executory contracts or leases, see 3 Collier on Bankruptcy, 365.03.

Any decision by a debtor to assume an executory contract will be governed by the business judgment test. The business judgment test consists of analyzing whether assuming the contract would be a good business decision using the type of judgment a business person would exercise. See Orion Pictures v. Showtime Networks, Inc. (In re Orion Pictures Corp.), 4 F.3d 1095, 1099, 29 C.B.C.2d 1341 (2d Cir. 1993); see also 3 Collier on Bankruptcy, 365.03[2]. Furthermore, in order to assume an executory contract, the debtor must cure, or provide adequate assurance that the debtor will promptly cure any default in the contract that may exist at the time of assumption. See 11 U.S.C. § 365(b)(1)(A); see also 3 Collier on Bankruptcy, 365.

n11 11 U.S.C. § 507(a)(2).

n12 Kucin, 251 B.R. 269, 271-72 (D. Md. 2000).

n13 Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005).

n14 For definition of insider, see 11 U.S.C. § 101(31); see also 2 Collier on Bankruptcy, 101.31.

n15 11 U.S.C. § 503(c)(1), as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 331 (2005).

n16 Id.

n17 In re Dana Corp., 358 B.R. 567 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006).

n18 11 U.S.C. § 1114(e)(1). For a complete discussion of section 1114, see 7 Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1114.

n19 Id.; 11 U.S.C. § 1114(g). The requirements of section 1114 may not need to be followed if the retirees do not have a vested contractual right to the applicable benefits.

n20 11 U.S.C. § 1114(a).

n21 11 U.S.C. § 1114(m).

n22 11 U.S.C. § 1114(b)(1).

n23 11 U.S.C. § 1114(c), (d).

n24 11 U.S.C. § 1114(f)(1)(A), (B).

n25 11 U.S.C. § 1114(g)(2).

n26 11 U.S.C. § 1114(k)(1).

n27 11 U.S.C. § 1114(g)(3).

n28 Soon after section 1113 was added to the Bankruptcy Code, courts distilled these statutory procedural requirements into nine requirements that must be satisfied for court approval of rejection of a collective bargaining agreement.

n29 11 U.S.C. § 1114(l).

RELATED LINKS: For further discussion of Bankruptcy Code sections 1113 and 1114, see Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender), ch.

- 1113;
- 1114

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the
 ■ Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the
 ■ bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

The authors of the Collier Monograph Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation in Corporate Bankruptcy are lawyers with the international firm of Jones Day, and practice in the firm's Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation practice in New York and Cleveland.

John R. Cornell advises Jones Day clients on all aspects of their executive compensation and employee benefits programs. With more than 35 years of experience, he provides both balanced judgment and technical guidance on the most difficult business and legal issues that employers face in designing and administering benefits and compensation programs and in managing those programs through business and regulatory change. Mr. Cornell routinely handles the benefits and compensation issues arising in bankruptcy matters when corporations prepare for, enter, and emerge from chapter 11 proceedings under the Bankruptcy Code. His experience includes termination of underfunded defined benefit plans and retiree welfare plans and related negotiations with the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, creditor groups, and other stakeholders. He is also involved in designing and implementing compensation and retention programs covering key executives and other senior management of companies in financial distress. He has been and is involved in the negotiation, establishment and funding of voluntary employees beneficiary associations (VEBAs) for union represented retirees and nonrepresented retirees for the provision of health, disability and life insurance benefits. These VEBAs involve legacy liabilities in the automotive, steel, aluminum and rubber industries. Mr. Cornell has lectured on ERISA fiduciary issues and pension, welfare, and bankruptcy compensation issues, and has written on ERISA litigation and fiduciary issues and benefits in bankruptcy proceedings. Mr. Cornell is admitted in New York and Maine. He received bachelors and masters (hon.) degrees from Colby College in 1965 and 1997, respectively. He graduated from Georgetown University Law Center in 1968, where he was an Executive Editor of the Law Journal, and he received an L.L.M. in Taxation from New York University in 1972.

Daniel C. Hagen is a partner at Jones Day and chairs the firms employee benefits and executive compensation practice. He advises Jones Day clients on all aspects of their executive compensation and employee benefits programs, with special emphasis on restructurings, mergers and acquisitions and executive compensation programs and agreements. Mr. Hagen's experience in bankruptcy and other restructuring matters has covered the full range of benefits and compensation issues that need to be handled in those settings, including terminations of defined benefit and pension plans, negotiations with the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, the redesign or elimination of retiree welfare benefits and the design and implementation of compensation programs for debtors and reorganized companies. Mr. Hagen also has advised numerous clients on their purchases of businesses from debtors in bankruptcy proceedings, and has dealt with bankruptcy related issues for controlled group affiliates of debtors and companies undergoing restructurings, including private equity and venture capital funds. Mr. Hagen has spoken and written on employee benefits and executive compensation topics on many occasions.

Mr. Hagen received his B.A. from Baldwin-Wallace College (summa cum laude) in 1977 and his J.D. from the University of Virginia, where he was a member of Law Review, in 1980. Dan is listed in the Best Lawyers in America and in Chambers USA (Americas Leading Lawyers for Business).

Lisa Rothman Jesner is an associate at Jones Day in the employee benefits and executive compensation group. Her practice includes counseling clients on benefits and compensation issues, and on matters that arise in the course of corporate transactions and restructurings. Ms. Rothman Jesner has counseled clients on various aspects of bankruptcy matters, including negotiations and litigation with the PBGC and establishment of VEBAs in connection with modification of retiree benefits in bankruptcy. She also has experience designing, drafting and implementing compensation programs for senior management of distressed companies. She has represented debtors and creditors in bankruptcy proceedings, including Copperweld, Kaiser Aluminum, WHX Corporation, Williams Communications, Globalstar and Dana Corporation. Ms. Rothman Jesner received her bachelors cum laude from Brandeis University in 1995, and her J.D. cum laude from Georgetown University Law Center in 1999. She held a leadership position on the employee benefits and executive compensation committee of the Business Law Section of the ABA and from 2003 through 2006 co-authored the ERISA litigation chapter for the ABA Annual Review of Developments in Business and Corporate Litigation.

Tricia Eschbach-Hall is an associate at Jones Day and practices in the areas of employee benefits and executive compensation. She counsels clients on the administration and legal compliance of qualified and nonqualified retirement plans, welfare benefit plans, and compensation programs. Ms. Eschbach-Hall has considerable experience providing advice to distressed employers with respect to the benefits and compensation issues raised during corporate reorganizations. She has provided benefits-specific advice in several bankruptcy proceedings, including Oglebay Norton Company, LTV Corporation, Teleglobe and as counsel to the official Retiree Committee of Tower Automotive, Inc. In addition, she has counseled several clients with respect to the special employee benefits issues related to their purchase of assets from debtors in bankruptcy proceedings. Ms. Eschbach-Hall received her B.A. from Kenyon College (cum laude) in 1996 and her J.D. (with honors) in 1999 from The Ohio State University, where she was a Managing Editor of the Ohio State Law Journal.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

66 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

In re Bear Stearns: Court Slams Door on Subjective Approach to Ch. 15

2008 Emerging Issues 2739

Daniel M. Glosband on In re Bear Stearns High-Grade Structured Credit Strategies Master Fund, Ltd: District Court Slams Door on Subjective Approach to Chapter 15 Eligibility -- Court Can Question Presumption Even if No One Objects

By Daniel Glosband

August 20, 2008

SUMMARY: The liquidators of hedge funds appealed the bankruptcy courts refusal to grant recognition to foreign proceedings that did not satisfy chapter 15s eligibility requirements. The District Court rejected their assertions that the bankruptcy court was wrong to even consider the eligibility issues in the absence of any objections to the chapter 15 petition. Daniel M. Glosband examines In re Bear Stearns, 389 B.R. 325 (S.D.N.Y. 2008).

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Daniel M. Glosband on In re Bear Stearns High-Grade Structured Credit Strategies Master Fund, Ltd: District Court Slams Door on Subjective Approach to Chapter 15 Eligibility -- Court Can Question Presumption Even if No One Objects

The liquidators of two Cayman registered hedge funds appealed the bankruptcy courts refusal to grant recognition to foreign proceedings that did not satisfy chapter 15s strict eligibility requirements. The District Court rejected their assertions that comity should add discretionary flexibility to the eligibility rules and that the bankruptcy court was wrong to even consider the eligibility issues in the absence of any objections to the chapter 15 petition. n1

The Bankruptcy Court was correct in rejecting the chapter 15 petition.

At the end of July 2007, Bear Stearns High-Grade Structured Credit Strategies Master Fund, Ltd. and Bear Stearns High-Grade Structured Credit Strategies Enhanced Leverage Master Fund, Ltd. (collectively, the "Funds") began voluntary winding up proceedings in the Cayman Islands. The liquidators appointed by the Cayman court immediately sought the assistance of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York by seeking recognition (or an approval of the eligibility of the Cayman proceedings) under chapter 15 of the Bankruptcy Code.

Honorable Burton R. Lifland, United States Bankruptcy Judge, denied the petitions for chapter 15 recognition of the Cayman Islands liquidation proceedings, ruling that the Funds did not satisfy the eligibility criteria for assistance from the U.S. court. n2 Neither fund had its center of main interests (principal place of business) in the Cayman Islands as required for the Cayman proceeding to be recognized as a foreign main proceeding and entitled to full relief in the U.S. Neither did they have an establishment (place of business) in the Caymans, as required for recognition as a foreign nonmain proceeding. n3 Instead, the documents filed with the chapter 15 petition disclosed that the funds assets, administrator, investment advisor and sponsors were all in the United States; there was nothing in the Cayman Islands but registration documents.

Registration did arm the petitioners with an evidentiary presumption:

§ 1516. Presumptions concerning recognition.

(c) In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the debtor's registered office, or habitual residence in the case of an individual, is presumed to be the center of the debtor's main interests.

The presumption only holds, however, [i]n the absence of evidence to the contrary. As noted by the court in the Tri-Continental Exchange case : if the foreign proceeding is in the country of the registered office, and if there is evidence that the center of main interests might be elsewhere, then the foreign representative must prove that the center of main interests is in the same country as the registered office. n4 Judge Lifland disagreed with dicta in the earlier SPhinX case which hinted that, absent any improper motives, the court should grant recognition if there were no objections: To the extent that non-objection would make the recognition process a rubber stamp exercise, this Court disagrees with the dicta in the SPhinX decision. n5

With the door to the presumption short cut firmly locked, the focus narrowed to the issue of whether Congress meant to impose objective eligibility criteria for recognition under the Model Law and chapter 15. Critics of Judge Liflands decision including the appellants -- argued that the strict eligibility criteria for chapter 15 recognition should be tempered by subjective factors comity and flexibility. Chapter 15 should, in their view, provide an additional and not exclusive basis for assistance to foreign proceedings, augmenting the pre-existing ability of U.S. courts to grant comity based on subjective factors. The only change made by chapter 15 would be to focus all of the requests for assistance in the bankruptcy court in the first instance. Otherwise, Congress thought that it was making only procedural changes by enacting chapter 15. n6

The statute and its legislative history refute this argument. Section 1502(7) defines recognition as the entry of an order granting recognition of a foreign main proceeding or foreign nonmain proceeding under this chapter. The foreign proceeding, then, must be either a foreign main proceeding or foreign nonmain proceeding. As Judge Lifland put it: In other words, the recognition must be coded as either main or nonmain. n7 Sections 1502(4) and 1502(5) state:

(4)foreign main proceeding means a foreign proceeding pending in the country where the debtor has the center of its main interests;

(5) foreign nonmain proceeding means a foreign proceeding, other than a foreign main proceeding, pending in a country where the debtor has an establishment.

Finally, establishment means any place of operations where the debtor carries out a nontransitory economic activity. § 1502(2)

Applying the definitions, Section 1517 provides as follows:

§ 1517. Order granting recognition

(a) Subject to section 1506 [public policy exception], after notice and a hearing, an order recognizing a foreign proceeding shall be entered if--

(1) such foreign proceeding for which recognition is sought is a foreign main proceeding or foreign nonmain proceeding within the meaning of section 1502;

(2) the foreign representative applying for recognition is a person or body; and

(3) the petition meets the requirements of section 1515.

(b) Such foreign proceeding shall be recognized

(1) as a foreign main proceeding if it is pending in the country where the debtor has the center of its main interests; or

(2) as a foreign nonmain proceeding if the debtor has an establishment within the meaning of section 1502 in the foreign country where the proceeding is pending. [emphasis added]

Section 1517 distills to the following list of findings necessary to grant recognition:

1. There is a foreign proceeding (as defined in § 101(23));
2. The foreign representative is a person or body (as defined in § 101(24));
3. The petition for recognition meets the requirements of § 1515;
4. The foreign proceeding is a foreign main proceeding or a foreign nonmain proceeding (as defined in §§ 1502(4),(5)).

Consequently, eligibility under chapter 15 requires more of a jurisdictional basis in the foreign country than former section 304. This change was intentional and more than procedural. While access to the United States courts under section 304 was not dependent on recognition, all relief under section 304 was discretionary and based on subjective, comity-influenced factors. Subsection 304(c) specifically included restrictive factors that limited the grant of relief.

Under section 304, the foreign proceedings as then defined that were eligible for bankruptcy court assistance included foreign proceedings whose jurisdiction was based solely on the presence of assets or domicile in the foreign country. By changing the definition of foreign proceedings to remove asset and domicile-based proceedings, Congress elevated the required level of jurisdictional connection between the debtor and the foreign country. The revised definition, blacklined against the prior version, is as follows:

§ 101(23): The term foreign proceeding means proceeding, whether a collective judicial or administrative and whether or not under bankruptcy law, in a foreign country in which the debtor's domicile, residence, principal place of business, or principal assets were located at the commencement of such proceeding, for the purpose of liquidating an estate, adjusting debts by composition, extension, or discharge, or effecting a proceeding in a foreign country, including an interim proceeding, under a law relating to insolvency or adjustment of debt in which proceeding the assets and affairs of the debtor are subject to control or supervision by a foreign court, for the purpose of reorganization or liquidation.

Congress cannot have acted inadvertently, as accused by the appellants and other critics of Judge Liflands Bear Stearns Bankruptcy Decision, since it specifically revised and augmented the definitions of foreign main proceedings and foreign nonmain proceedings to eliminate definitional provisions that were inconsistent with the new eligibility criteria.

The House Report confirms the significance of the revisions:

The drafters of the Model Law understood that only a main proceeding or a nonmain proceeding meeting the standards of section 1502 (that is, one brought where the debtor has an establishment) were entitled to recognition under this section. The Model Law has been slightly modified to make this point clear by referring to the section 1502 definition of main and nonmain proceedings, as well as to the general definition of a foreign proceeding in section

101(23). A petition under section 1515 must show that the proceeding is a main or a qualifying non-main proceeding in order to obtain recognition under this section. n8

Neither Congress, nor the Model Law nor chapter 15 leave room for misinterpretation. The words center of main interests cannot plausibly be construed as place of incorporation or place as to which no objection is made or place that is irrelevant if the court wishes to grant comity. If the plain meaning of sections 1502, 1515, and 1516 were not plain enough, the House Report confirms the shift away from subjective section 304 factors to the new objective test of chapter 15:

This section closely tracks article 17 of the Model Law, with a few exceptions. The decision to grant recognition is not dependent upon any findings about the nature of the foreign proceedings of the sort previously mandated by section 304(c) of the Bankruptcy Code. The requirements of this section, which incorporates the definitions in section 1502 and sections 101(23) and (24), are all that must be fulfilled to attain recognition. n9

The District Court Agreed With Judge Lifland

Honorable Robert W. Sweet, United States District Judge for the Southern District of New York endorsed Judge Lifland's adoption of this strict interpretation:

Thus, Judge Lifland was right to reject Appellants' position that this Court should accept the proposition that the Foreign Proceedings are main proceedings because the Petitioners say so and because no [one] else says they aren't. 374 B.R. at 129.

He also recognized Judge Robert Gerbers denial of the unopposed summary judgment of recognition requested by the foreign representatives in the Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master) case n10 because [the] foreign representatives of debtor had failed to submit sufficient information for the court to make a determination. 381 B.R. 37.

Judge Sweet agreed that comity did not affect the eligibility determination; instead, comity came into play in granting post-recognition relief:

Chapter 15 and the Model Law are designed to optimize disposition of international insolvencies by facilitating appropriate access to the court system of a host country (the United States, in the case of Chapter 15) by a representative of an insolvency proceeding pending in a foreign country. See § 1521; Model Law art. 21. If access is granted, then a wide range of relief from the host country's courts may be available. See § 1521; Model Law art. 21. "Recognition," the statutory parlance for such access, is distinct from the relief that may be granted post-recognition. Recognition turns on the strict application of objective criteria. See § 1517; Model Law art. 17. Conversely, relief is largely discretionary and turns on subjective factors that embody principles of comity. See, e.g., §§ 1507, 1521, 1525; Model Law art. 7, 21, 25. n11

Why did Congress (and UNCITRAL) impose strict eligibility criteria? Both chose an economic presence as one of the validation criteria for the foreign proceeding: a center of main interests test for a foreign main proceeding and an establishment test for a nonmain proceeding. The author recalls discussion at the UNCITRAL Working Group that drafted the Model Law that reflected concerns about forum shopping and a need to anchor the eligible foreign proceeding to an objective standard that would not be easily manipulated; they chose economic presence. Judge Sweet subscribed to this analysis as well:

The objective criteria for recognition reflect the legislative decision by UNCITRAL and Congress that a foreign proceeding should not be entitled direct access to or assistance from the host country courts unless the debtor had a sufficient pre-petition economic presence in the country of the foreign proceeding. See House Report at 110; § 1509(b)(3). If the debtor does not have its center of main interests or at least an establishment in the country of the foreign proceedings, the bankruptcy court should not grant recognition and is not authorized to use its power to effectuate the purposes of the foreign proceeding. See House Report 113; Guide paras. 73, 75, 128. Implicitly, in such an instance the debtor's liquidation or reorganization should be taking place in a country other than the one in which the foreign proceeding was filed to be entitled to assistance from the United States. n12

When Judge Lifland issued the Bear Stearns Bankruptcy Decision, the offshore legal community howled in offense. Comity, they said, trumped the strict eligibility requirements of chapter 15. Congress could not have intended to limit access to the United States bankruptcy courts by its enactment of the UNCITRAL Model Law since the purpose of the Model Law was to increase cross-border assistance. n13 The evidentiary presumption that a debtors place of registration was its center of main interests (COMI) sufficed, they argued, to require recognition of a foreign proceeding emanating from the country of registration if no objection was filed, notwithstanding facts suggesting that the COMI was elsewhere. n14

Judge Liflands decision, as affirmed by Judge Sweet and reinforced by Judge Gerber in Basis Yield, should put an end to the polemics but may only serve to raise the volume. Is the United States being hypocritical, as suggested by critics of the Bear Stearns decisions, by imposing an economic test for the recognition of foreign proceedings while opening its court to chapter 7 and chapter 11 proceedings by a debtor that has a domicile, a place of business, or property in the United States...? n15 The question implies a forced imposition of U.S. bankruptcy law on unconsenting parties; i.e. the U.S. is exporting its bankruptcy law through proceedings of debtors with evanescent connections to the country while refusing to recognize foreign proceedings grounded on a similarly intangible basis. While the charge of double standards is theoretically appealing, in practice most examples of U.S. bankruptcy cases of debtors with insubstantial economic presence are ultimately consensual. Yukos and Fargo are recent examples of U.S. courts declining to entertain a non-U.S. debtor whose presence in bankruptcy court was opposed and whose lack of property in the U.S. led the courts to conclude that they could not effectively exercise their jurisdiction. n16

Consent may suffice for a U.S. bankruptcy court to apply its laws and procedures to a debtor that technically qualifies for jurisdiction and interested parties who accept that application and who consent to the courts jurisdiction. It is not inconsistent for that same court, as bound to enforce legislation enacted by Congress, to decline to extend its hospitality to a foreign proceeding whose jurisdictional basis is non-economic. U.S. bankruptcy laws are decidedly in rem and a lack of significant property in the foreign proceeding suggests a proceeding that may not effectively control the debtors assets. n17 Consent to recognition of a foreign proceeding is not a general solution to eligibility since the U.S. court cannot always know the extent of notice and due process afforded to persons who are not before it and who may be affected by the foreign proceeding. The chapter 15 eligibility criteria are, as suggested by UNCITRAL and adopted by Congress, objective. In light of the Bear Stearns decisions, they will remain so.

The Bear Stearns decisions do not signal an end to cross-border cooperation and coordination. Chapter 15, as interpreted in those decisions and as applied since its adoption, is working just fine. The only foreign proceedings to be denied recognition have been those that are pending in countries where the debtor either never had or no longer has the requisite presence. It seems neither irrational nor unduly limiting to require an economic connection between the debtor and the venue of the foreign proceeding as a condition to extending the effects of that proceeding through the courts of another country. Debtors similar to the Bear Stearns funds could commence proceedings under chapter 11 or 7 of the United States Bankruptcy Code in the United States, where their assets and operations were located. If the debtors were already in liquidation in another country, the liquidators would have the governance power necessary to commence the case in the United States. The U.S. proceedings could be coordinated with offshore proceedings if necessary. Chapter 15s provisions on coordination and cooperation, which do not turn on recognition, would then apply. n18 n1 In re Bear Stearns High-Grade Structured Credit Strategies Master Fund, Ltd., 389 B.R. 325 (S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n2 In re Bear Stearns High-Grade Structured Credit Strategies Master Fund, Ltd., 374 B.R. 122 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007).

n3 In re Tri-Continental Exch. Ltd., 349 B.R. 627, 634 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 2006).

n4 Id. at 635.

n5 374 B.R. at 130; see In re SPhinX, Ltd., 351 B.R. 103, 117 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006), affd, 371 B.R. 10 (S.D.N.Y. 2007).

n6 See, e.g., Gabriel Moss, Refusal of Recognition and Bear Stearns: Is the U.S. Denying to Others That Which It Expects for Itself, INSOL World, Second Quarter 2008, at 14.

n7 374 B.R. at 126-27.

n8 H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, at 114 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 173.

n9 H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, at 113 (emphasis added).

n10 In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n11 389 B.R. 325, at 333.

n12 Id. at 333-34.

n13 See Moss, supra note 6, at 14.

n14 [T]he bankruptcy court wrongfully declined to honor the COMI presumption because there were no objections filed, creditors and investors should have expected Cayman law to control the debtors' insolvency proceedings and the debtors, as hedge funds have no 'operations' in the traditional sense.

See Appellants Opening Brief at 30, 389 B.R. 325 (No. 07-12383).

n15 11 U.S.C.S. § 109(a); see Moss, supra note 6, at 16.

n16 In re Compania de Alimentos Fargo, S.A., 376 B.R. 427 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007); In re Yukos Oil Co., 321 B.R. 396 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2005).

n17 Cent. Va. Cmty. Coll. v. Katz, 546 U.S. 356 (2006); see Tenn. Student Assistance Corp. v. Hood, 541 U.S. 440 (2004).

n18 11 U.S.C.S. §§ 1525-1527.

RELATED LINKS: For more information on sections 1502, 1506, 1507, 1509, 1515, 1516, 1521 and 1525 of the Bankruptcy Code, see Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender), ch.

- 1502;
- 1506;
- 1507;
- 1509;
- 1515;
- 1516;
- 1521;
- 1525.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com

- bankruptcy area of law page.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Daniel Glosband is a partner in Goodwin Procter LLPs Financial Restructuring Practice, www.goodwinprocter.com. He recently represented the lead investors in the confirmed Chapter 11 plan of US Airways and its merger with America West and the fiduciaries for the employee stock plan in the Delta case.

Mr. Glosband is a Vice President of the American College of Bankruptcy and a conferee of the National Bankruptcy Conference, which advises Congress on bankruptcy legislation. He was a draftsman of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency and one of two primary draftsmen of Chapter 15 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, Ancillary and Other Cross-Border Cases. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy 15th Ed. Revised, Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide and Collier International Business Insolvency Guide.

He is admitted to practice in New York, Massachusetts, the U.S. District Courts in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and the Southern District of New York, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court. He received a J.D. from Cornell University in 1969 and a B.A. from University of Massachusetts in 1966.

67 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Barack Obama: Bankruptcy Law and Consumer Protection Proposals

2008 Emerging Issues 2668

Barack Obama: Bankruptcy Law and Consumer Protection Proposals

By S. Andrew Jurs

August 12, 2008

SUMMARY: S. Andrew Jurs comments on Senator Barack Obamas outline for several new proposals to ease the effect of bankruptcy laws on military families, victims of natural disasters, and seniors, in addition to Obamas plans to reform the countrys bankruptcy laws, ostensibly to protect consumers in dire financial straits.

PDF LINK: Enhanced Emerging Issues Commentary ($)

ARTICLE: On Tuesday, July 8, in a 15-minute speech, Senator Barack Obama, the presumptive Democratic nominee for president, outlined several new proposals to ease the effect of bankruptcy laws on military families, victims of natural disasters, and seniors. Additionally, he offered new plans to reform the countrys bankruptcy laws, ostensibly to protect consumers in dire financial straits. These new proposals go beyond anything Congress has discussed so far in light of the recent economic slump, and confirm that Obama would seek to undo or modify the 2005 amendments to the Bankruptcy Code. These proposals include:

Military Families. According to Obama, he would create a fast-track bankruptcy procedure for military families in several ways. First, he would ease restrictions against declaring bankruptcy by exempting service members from a harsh means test, cutting unnecessary paperwork, and removing the requirement for token counseling. Obama further said he would help service members and military families struggling financially after multiple moves, lengthy deployments and, in some cases, predatory lenders, by enacting a minimum federal homestead exemption to help them keep a greater share of their homes value, regardless of their state of residence, a significant departure from current law allows debtors to use federal bankruptcy exemption laws only if their state allows it.

Senior Citizens. Obama also seeks to help seniors over 62 keep their homes in bankruptcy, purportedly as cornerstones of a secure retirement, by promising a larger minimum homestead exemption equal to the median cost of a home in their state.

Mortgages on Debtors Primary Residence. In his Blueprint for Change, Obama proposes to close the alleged Bankruptcy Loophole for Mortgage Companies by eliminating the provision of the Bankruptcy Code that prevents bankruptcy courts from modifying an individuals mortgage payments. In Obamas opinion, the subprime mortgage industry, which has engaged in dangerous and sometimes unscrupulous business practices, should not be shielded by outdated federal law. Instead, under Obamas plan, courts would be able to renegotiate mortgages on a debtors primary residence. Financial industry opponents, however, contend that this change would ultimately raise interest rates and loan costs due to increased lender risk.

Exemptions. Obama also proposes to waive some of the hurdles to filing personal bankruptcy, such as mandatory credit counseling and means testing, and to impose a 120-day moratorium on bad-credit reporting. Furthermore, Obama would make debtor-protection laws more equitable across states. In support of this proposal, Obama contends that state exemptions are uneven, sometimes nonexistent, and often too small. Instead, Obama would establish a minimum national homestead level of equity for certain homeowners that would be protected against creditors.

Bankruptcy Due to Health Costs. While Obama had previously proposed measures to alleviate bankruptcys effects on people who were facing bankruptcy as a result of illness, he has now proposed to create an exemption for individuals who can prove they filed bankruptcy because of medical expenses. This exemption would create a process to forgive the debt.

Bankruptcy Due to Natural Disaster. Similarly, Obama said he would help families recovering from a natural disaster by streamlining the bankruptcy process for those in certified natural disaster areas by eliminating unnecessary paperwork and waiving unneeded credit counseling requirements. He also promised to enact a 120-day moratorium on adverse credit actions from collectors, such as foreclosure for such families. His campaign further proposed amending the Equal Credit Opportunity Act to include protection for disaster victims so that lenders do not unfairly restrict credit to such families.

Predatory Credit Card Practices. Although not technically part of his bankruptcy law reforms, as part of his push for consumer protection, Obama proposes to create a credit card rating system, similar to the five-star systems used for other consumer products, to provide consumers an easily identifiable ranking of credit cards based on the cards features. Credit card companies would be required to display the rating on all application and contract materials, enabling consumers to quickly understand all the major provisions of a credit card without having to interpret the fine print.

Furthermore, Obama promises to create a Credit Card Bill of Rights to protect consumers by:

Banning unilateral changes;

Applying interest rate increases only to future debt;

Prohibiting interest on fees;

Prohibiting universal defaults; and Requiring prompt and fair crediting of cardholder payments.

Payday and Small Consumer Loans. In an effort to cap outlandish interest rates on payday loans, Obamas Blueprint for Change supports extending a 36 percent interest cap throughout the country. Additionally, lenders would be required to provide clear and simplified information during the application process about loan fees, payments and penalties.

Obama also would encourage banks, credit unions and community development financial institutions to provide affordable short-term and small-dollar loans in the hope of driving unscrupulous lenders out of business.

Pensions and Retirement Savings. In Obamas eyes, current bankruptcy laws protect banks before workers, so he proposes to protect pensions by giving such promises to workers a higher priority on the list of debts that companies cannot shed. He also proposes barring bankrupt companies from issuing executive bonuses while cutting worker pensions. He further plans to increase the amount of unpaid wages and benefits workers can claim while limiting the circumstances under which retiree benefits can be reduced.

RELATED LINKS: To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the

- Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the

- bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

For more news on lexis.com concerning Barack Obama and the Bankruptcy Code,

- click here.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

68 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on Schultz v. United States

2008 Emerging Issues 2644

S. Andrew Jurs on Schultz v. United States, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 11686 (6th Cir. June 2, 2008)

By S. Andrew Jurs

July 30, 2008

SUMMARY: S. Andrew Jurs comments on Schultz v. United States, 529 F.3d 343, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 11686 (6th Cir. June 2, 2008), in which the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit was confronted by a challenge to the constitutionality of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Cite as: Jurs, S. Andrew. Schultz v. United States. LexisNexis Expert Commentary, (Insert date you accessed the document online).

The Sixth Circuit Rules That the Means Test Does Not Violate the Uniformity Requirement of the Bankruptcy Clause of the United States Constitution

In Schultz v. United States, 529 F.3d 343, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 11686 (6th Cir. June 2, 2008), the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit was confronted by a challenge to the constitutionality of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 on the grounds that, to the extent BAPCPAs means test relies on state and county income calculations, it is not a uniform bankruptcy law for the entire United States. The appellate court concluded that BAPCPA was a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcy in that BAPCPA focused only on two classes of debtors: those with family income above the family median income for the debtors state, and those debtors with income below the state median. In doing so, the Sixth Circuit rejected the argument that differences in state median income rendered BAPCPA unconstitutional.

Facts and Procedural History. On November 21, 2006, Bernard Francis Schultz and Elizabeth Mary Sabatine (the debtors) filed a chapter 13 bankruptcy petition. At the time of filing, the debtors had an annualized current monthly income of $89,975.84. This amount clearly was greater than the median income for a family of five in Tennessee, or $63,174, thereby subjecting debtors to BAPCPAs more rigorous standards for above-median debtors. For example, by virtue of being above-median, the debtors were required to use a five-year repayment period and could not benefit from the more generous income exclusions available to below-median chapter 13 debtors.

The bankruptcy court subsequently confirmed the debtors chapter 13 plan and its required payments for 60 months. The chapter 13 plan anticipated a pro-rata distribution to unsecured creditors of less than 100 percent of allowed claims.

At the time of the confirmation of the debtors chapter 13 plan, they also filed a lawsuit against the United States in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee seeking a declaratory judgment that the five sections of BAPCPA that use the means test are unconstitutional. Ruling on the parties cross-motions for summary judgment, the district court rejected the debtors arguments and concluded that the uniformity requirement does not proscribe different results in different states because of state law variations. Schultz v. United States, 369 B.R. 349, 352 (E.D. Tenn. 2007). The debtors timely filed their notice of appeal, and the appellate court reviewed de novo the grant of summary judgment. Miller v. Admin. Office of the Courts, 448 F.3d 887, 893 (6th Cir. 2006).

Standing. As an initial matter, the Sixth Circuit had to address an issue that had not been raised by the United States before the district court: whether the debtors even had standing to bring the lawsuit. Because standing is not a use it or lose it affirmative defense, Community First Bank v. NCUA, 41 F.3d 1050, 1053 (6th Cir. 1994), the failure to argue the debtors lack of standing did not automatically bar the United States from asserting the defense at the appellate level.

To establish standing under Article III of the Constitution, a plaintiff must show: (1) an injury-in-fact that (2) was fairly traceable to the defendants allegedly unlawful conduct, and (3) is likely to be redressed via a favorable decision. Prime Media, Inc. v. City of Brentwood, 485 F.3d 343, 349 (6th Cir. 2007) (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992)). According to the government, the debtors, as debtors under chapter 13, could not show an injury-in-fact, and therefore lacked standing to challenge the two BAPCPA provisions applicable only to chapter 7 cases: sections 707(b)(2) and 704(b). The Sixth Circuit, however, determined that it did not need to resolve this issue because its resolution of the debtors challenges to the chapter 13 provisions addressed identical claims for the chapter 7 provisions. To put it simply, we could not invalidate some of the means test provisions without invalidating the others. 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 11686, at *13.

BAPCPA as a Uniform Bankruptcy Law. The Bankruptcy Clause of the Constitution provides that Congress has the power to establish . . . uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4. This specific reference and emphasis on uniformity, according to Chief Justice Marshall, deserve[s] notice. Congress is not authorized merely to pass laws, the operation of which shall be uniform, but instead to establish uniform laws on the subject throughout the United States. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 122, 193-94, 4 L. Ed. 529 (1819). The question before the Sixth Circuit, therefore, was whether BAPCPA's classification system based on the median income of a debtors particular state violates the Bankruptcy Clause because debtors with the same income might receive different bankruptcy relief based solely on the state or county in which they reside.

Commentary. The Sixth Circuit's decision in Schultz is significant in that it is the first appellate decision resolving BAPCPA's constitutionality under the uniform Laws provision of the Bankruptcy Clause. Accordingly, it had to look to that sections historical roots to determine how much uniformity is required under bankruptcy law.

The first question faced by the Sixth Circuit in its historical analysis was whether uniformity pertained to persons, such that similar results would occur no matter where a debtor lived, or to states or regions. According to the Supreme Court, the Bankruptcy Clause's uniformity requirement is geographical, and not personal, Hanover Natl Bank v. Moyses, 186 U.S. 181, 188, 22 S.Ct. 857, 46 L. Ed. 1113 (1902), which is wholly satisfied when existing obligations of a debtor are treated alike by the bankruptcy administration throughout the country regardless of the State in which the bankruptcy court sits, Vanston Bondholders Protective Comm. v. Green, 329 U.S. 156, 172, 67 S. Ct. 237, 91 L. Ed. 162 (1946) (Frankfurter, J., concurring). This means that different results are allowed in different states due to differences in state law, so long as federal law applies uniformly among classes of debtors. See, e.g., Moyes, 186 U.S. at 189-90 (upholding incorporation of varying state exemptions into the 1898 Bankruptcy Act); Stellwagen v. Clum, 245 U.S. 605, 613, 38 S. Ct. 215, 62 L. Ed. 507 (1918) (allowing Bankruptcy Acts incorporation of different state fraudulent conveyance statutes although the laws may lead to different results in different states).

As an extension of this principle, Congress may enact non-uniform laws to handle geographically isolated problems as long as the law operates uniformly upon a given class of creditors and debtors. Blanchette v. Connecticut Gen. Ins.

Corp., 419 U.S. 102, 95 S.Ct. 335, 42 L. Ed. 2d 320 (1974). In holding that the Regional Rail Reorganizational Act (the Rail Act) satisfied the uniformity requirement, although it operated only in a single statutorily defined region of the northeast United States, the Supreme Court in Blanchette concluded that the uniformity provision does not deny Congress power to take into account differences that exist between different parts of the country, and to fashion legislation to resolve geographically isolated problems, so long as the law applies equally to all creditors and debtors. Id. at 159-60. As an example of the narrow limits of the uniformity clause, the Supreme Court has only once struck down a statute as non-uniform. In Railway Labor Executives Assn v. Gibbons, 455 U.S. 457, 470-71, 102 S. Ct. 1169, 71 L. Ed. 2d 335 (1982), the Court held that Congress overstepped its authority when it passed a private bankruptcy law concerning only a single company, the Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Company, and its employees.

In light of these standards, the Sixth Circuit concluded that BAPCPA is a uniform law under the Bankruptcy Clause because it distinguishes only among classes of debtors. The provisions of BAPCPA applying the means test distinguish between only two classes of debtors: those above the median income, and those below the median income. All chapter 13 debtors who are below the median income have only a three-year repayment period and more advantageous treatment for calculating disposable income, whereas all above-median debtors have a five-year repayment period and more rigorous standards for disposable income. Consequently, [t]he general operation of the law is uniform although it may result in certain particulars differently in different states. Moyses, 186 U.S. at 190.

Additionally, the Sixth Circuit rejected the debtors argument that, even if a federal bankruptcy law may vary in application from state to state, employing federal income standards enables preferential treatment of debtors in some states over debtors in other states in a discriminatory manner. According to the appellate court, there is no Supreme Court precedent for such a federal versus state distinction, and the Sixth Circuit was unable to find any other case law explaining why using federal variations somehow makes a bankruptcy law non-uniform. The lesson of Moyses and its progeny--that Congress may permissibly address regional variations--would apply equally to variations based on either state laws or federal statistics. 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 11686 at 23. In fact, in light of the motivations at the time the Constitution was adopted, the purpose of uniformity in the Bankruptcy Clause was to safeguard the nations interest in establishing and maintaining a single system of debt and credit without interference from the parochial or otherwise obstreperous action on the part of the fifty states. Id. at 27 (citing In re Dehon, Inc., 327 B.R. 38, 56 n. 34 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2005)).

As a final matter, the appellate court determined that it did not need to apply a heightened scrutiny to its interpretation of the Bankruptcy Clause. Whereas, in United States v. Ptasynski, 462 U.S. 74, 84, 103 S. Ct. 2239, 76 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1983), the Court presumed that the uniformity provision of the Taxing Power required a form of heightened scrutiny, the Sixth Circuit concluded that the background and text of the Bankruptcy Clause was sufficiently different that no such heightened scrutiny was necessary. While the Taxing Power limits congressional authority by stating that all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States, U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1 (emphasis added), the Bankruptcy Clause grants Congress an additional power at the expense of the states that would otherwise be imposing a wide array of conflicting debt collection laws. Consequently, the debtors argument that BAPCPA should receive close examination similar to the Taxing Powers uniformity provision was overruled.

All told, the Sixth Circuits decision in Schultz is important because it provides the first appellate court decision upholding the constitutionality of BAPCPAs means test. By finding that the means test fit within the uniformity requirement of the Bankruptcy Clause, the Sixth Circuit upheld perhaps the provision in BAPCPA most hated by debtors and their attorneys, and forced them to seek other avenues to challenging the new, more rigorous standards under BAPCPA.

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

69 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Glosband on In re Bancredit Cayman Ltd.

2008 Emerging Issues 2600

Daniel Glosband on In re Bancredit Cayman Limited (In Liquidation), No-06-11026, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3805 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Nov. 2, 2007)

By Daniel Glosband

July 24, 2008

SUMMARY: Despite a ruling by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Mississippi in In re Condor Insurance Limited that applied section 108(a) of the Bankruptcy Code in a chapter 15 case, both a bankruptcy court and a district court for the Southern District of New York clipped Condors wings.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Cite as: Glosband, Daniel. In re Bancredit Cayman Limited (In Liquidation). LexisNexis Expert Commentary, (Insert date you accessed the document online).

No Comfort in Condor: Bancredit Bankruptcy Court and District Court Clip Condors Wings Regarding Applicability of Bankruptcy Code Section 108

Bancredit Cayman Limited (Bancredit) is a Cayman Islands financial institution with banking affiliates located in Central America. n1 In May 2004, a Cayman Islands court entered a winding-up order regarding Bancredit and appointed Joint Official Liquidators (the JOLs or Foreign Representatives). n2 Two years later on May 10, 2006, the JOLs filed a petition in the Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York (the Bankruptcy Court) for recognition under chapter 15 as a foreign main proceeding to investigate the existence of assets in the United States, including causes of action, and to liquidate such assets. n3 In June 2007, the Bankruptcy Court entered a Recognition Order recognizing the Cayman proceeding as a foreign main proceeding and thereafter entered a Supplemental Recognition Order. This Supplemental Recognition Order authorized the JOLs as foreign representatives under chapter 15 to take discovery and file suit in the United States to the extent permitted under section 1509 of the Bankruptcy Code. n4

On August 15, 2007, the Foreign Representatives filed an application (the Application) with the Bankruptcy Court seeking clarification of the Supplemental Recognition Order to declare that the Foreign Representatives were entitled to the benefits of extensions of statutes of limitations pursuant to section 108 n5 of the Bankruptcy Code. The Foreign Representatives conceded that both section 108 and case law under chapter 15 and its predecessor section 304 of the Bankruptcy Code are silent as to whether a foreign representative is to be treated as a trustee for the purpose of section 108. Nevertheless, they sought a declaration that section 108(a) applied, invoking the courts power under section 1521(a)(7) to grant them any additional relief that may be available to a trustee...[.] n6 They argued in their Application that, because they were entitled pursuant to the Supplemental Recognition Order to both operate Bancredits business and exercise certain powers of a trustee pursuant to section 1520 n7 and to file suit within the United States pursuant to section 1509 n8 of the Bankruptcy Code, the Bankruptcy Court should also grant them a general extension of statutes of limitations.

The Bankruptcy Court denied the Application on grounds that it essentially sought an ex parte extension of the statute of limitations. n9 At a hearing on the matter, Chief Judge Stuart Bernstein raised both the inapplicability of the statutory language of section 108 and procedural concerns with respect to the relief sought. Judge Bernstein noted that a foreign representative is not a trustee as contemplated by section 108(a) and that, because there is no order for relief from which to measure the two year extension in a chapter 15 proceeding, the clarification sought by the Foreign Representatives could possibly result in [an] endless statute of limitations. n10 In response, the Foreign Representatives argued that Judge Bernstein could construe the order of recognition as the order for relief[.] n11 But Judge Bernstein was concerned that to grant the Foreign Representatives the protections of section 108 would strip someone of a possible defense and not give them the opportunity to argue that [section] 108 has no application based upon the plain language of the statute. n12

The Foreign Representatives countered, arguing that section 108 relief is automatic in cases under both chapters 7 and 11 and analogizing the automatic effect of section 108 to the imposition of the automatic stay under each of chapters 7, 11, and 15 where there are parties who can be impacted . . . by that stay that arent heard at the time. n13 Noting that unlike the relief sought by the Foreign Representatives the automatic stay does not affect substantive rights, Judge Bernstein suggested that the Foreign Representatives file any actions prior to the running of the relevant statute of limitations because he would not extend the statute of limitations as to parties that were not before the Bankruptcy Court. n14

Judge Bernstein denied the Application. The Foreign Representatives filed a Motion For Reargument (the Motion) on the grounds that there had been only limited opposition to the Application that did not raise the section 108 issue. Consequently, the Foreign Representatives did not adequately address the Bankruptcy Courts concerns about application of section 108. In addition, subsequent to Judge Bernsteins ruling on the Application, the bankruptcy court in the Condor case entered the same relief as that sought by the Bancredit Foreign Representatives. n15

The Foreign Representatives argued that an examination of the Bankruptcy Code and its prior history support the position that the filing of a chapter 15 recognition petition is itself the order for relief that Judge Bernstein noted was literally absent in chapter 15. The Foreign Representatives argued that section 301 n16 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that the commencement of a voluntary case under a chapter of title 11 constitutes an order for relief by virtue of section 301(b). This argument ignores the language of section 301(a) that requires that the petition be filed by an entity that may be a debtor while a chapter 15 petition is filed by a foreign representative, not a debtor. It also ignores the applicability provisions of sections 103(a) and 152 which do not make section 301 applicable to chapter 15 cases. Somehow, the Bancredit foreign representatives asserted that the definition of debtor in section 1502 n17 leapt this chasm: the term debtor includes an entity that is the subject of a foreign proceeding. n18 But the debtor in the foreign proceeding is not the entity that filed the petition! The court did not address this argument since it disposed of the case on procedural grounds and did not reach substantive issues.

While section 108 applies only to trustees, the Foreign Representatives next argued that section 108 is routinely applied to parties that are the functional equivalents of trustees[,] including chapter 11 and 12 debtors in possession, creditors appointed by the bankruptcy court to bring actions, and state court appointed receivers. n19 The Foreign Representatives also relied on precedent from the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals which reasoned that non-trustee fiduciaries charged with pursuing the interests of all creditors of an estate should be accorded the protections given to the bankruptcy estate on behalf of all creditors under section 108. n20 The court did not reach this argument either, specifically noting that [n]othing in this decision should be read to decide the ultimate issue: whether section 108 is available to the foreign representative. n21 The lack of a case or controversy and lack of notice to potentially affected parties were enough to warrant denial.

The court In re Condor Insurance Limited received a nearly identical request to that made in Bancredit. In Condor, the foreign representatives were the Joint Official Liquidators (JOLs) appointed by the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court in the High Court of Justice of St. Christopher and Nevis (the Nevis Court). The Condor foreign representatives asserted that they had been recently appointed, had discovered a substantial transfer of assets but had not yet learned the details of the timing and recipients. They were concerned that statutes of limitation would run out before they had concluded their investigation and sought a determination that section 108 applied to them. Application of section 108(a) was warranted, they argued, based on either (a) a determination that Congress intended that all of section 108 apply in chapter 15 or (b) the courts determination that it should be applied as a matter of comity under section 1507(a)(7).

The Foreign Representatives in Condor (and later in Bancredit) advanced a rather insidious argument based on an erroneous application of the legislative history to section 1520. Section 1520, Effects of Recognition of a Foreign Main Proceeding, applies the automatic stay of section 362. Section 1520(b) contains an exception to stay to permit commencement of actions in foreign countries to the limited extent necessary for the plaintiff to preserve claims (which, under the laws of some countries might otherwise expire). The language of section 1520(b) specifies that the stay does not affect the right to commence an individual action or proceeding in a foreign country to the extent necessary to preserve a claim against the debtor[.] n22 The exception was limited to actions in foreign countries n23 because Congress believed that, for actions in the United States, section 108 n24 provided for the tolling protection intended by Article 20 of the Model Law. n25

The legislative history to section 1520 states Section 108 provides the tolling protection intended by Model Law article 20(3), so no exception is necessary for claims that might be extinguished under United States law. n26 In other words, section 1520(b) protects creditors with claims in foreign countries while section 108(c) protects creditors with claims in the United States; ergo, all creditors with claims to be asserted anywhere in the world are protected against losing their rights while they are stayed from commencing an action.

The Condor motion, later adopted in the Bancredit Motion, then takes a wholly unjustified leap of logic and statutory construction and asserts: The legislative history, although in the context of section 108(c) rather than 108(a), indicates that Congress deviated from the Model Law because it intended and even assumed that all of section 108 applies in Chapter 15 cases. n27 As one of those who assisted Congress with the drafting, the author disagrees strongly. This assertion ignores the logic of sections 1520(b) and 108(c), which is to insure that parties who are stayed from acting against a debtor by section 362 do not lose their rights to make a claim against the debtor as a consequence of the stay. Section 108(c) does not create a benefit to a trustee, as does section 108(a), but rather creates a benefit to a holder of a claim against the debtor. Section 108(c) is triggered by the termination of the section 362 stay not by the entry of an order for relief.

There is no logic in applying any aspect of section 108(c) or section 1520(b) or its history to section 108(a). The two subsections of section 108 serve completely different purposes. It insults the intelligence of Congress to suggest that it conflated the two and then neglected to reflect that improbable conflation in the legislative drafting.

The Condor court apparently did not rely on the Foreign Representatives flawed argument that section 108(a) applied automatically since its order granted the motion on the alternative section 1521(a)(7) grounds, as relief available to a trustee. n28 The Order entered by the Condor court indicates a lack of objections and a finding that proper notice was given, but it is not clear that the notice included possible defendants to be affected by the relief. n29

Judge Bernstein was unpersuaded by the Condor citation and issued a written memorandum denying reargument to the Bancredit foreign representatives. He noted that the root problem with the Application was that the Foreign Representatives failed to give notice of same to any party that might contest it, namely the parties which section 108(a)s extension of the statute of limitations may have affected. n30 Describing the relief sought in the Application as presently unnecessary and plainly inappropriate, at least as a procedural matter[.] n31 Judge Bernstein noted that no controversy was present before the court and that the clarification requested would provide comfort to the Foreign Representatives at the expense of those who may be adversely affected by the relief [. . .], even though those persons did not receive notice or the chance to oppose the relief sought. n32 Judge Bernstein summarily dismissed the arguments of the Foreign Representatives as without merit, but stopped short of deciding whether section 108 is available to foreign representatives generally. n33 The Foreign Representatives were free to argue that issue, reasoned Judge Bernstein, in the appropriate forum, at the appropriate time and upon appropriate notice. n34

The Foreign Representatives appealed both the denial of the Application and the Motion to the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. In their appeal, the Foreign Representatives placed at issue (i) whether Judge Bernstein erred by abstaining to decide an issue arising in a core proceeding under the Bankruptcy Code, and (ii) whether the Foreign Representatives were entitled to (A) a determination that section 108 would have automatic application in any action they might subsequently commence, or (B) a discretionary determination pursuant to section 1521(a)(7) as to whether they should have been granted the benefit of section 108. n35 The District Court found that Judge Bernstein did not err in his rulings because Judge Bernstein had concluded that there was no live controversy before the Bankruptcy Court where no action had been commenced and no statute of limitations defense was asserted against the Foreign Representatives. n36

Noting that the Bankruptcy Court had subject matter jurisdiction to the extent that an ancillary case had been commenced under chapter 15 and assuming the dubious assertion of the Foreign Representatives that the issues raised in the Bankruptcy Court related to a core proceeding, the District Court held that what the Foreign Representatives in substance sought here was an advisory opinion[.] n37 Recognizing that Article III of the United States Constitution limits the judicial power of the courts to live cases and controversies, the District Court stated that [n]either the district courts nor the bankruptcy courts [. . .] have the power to grant such relief. n38 Accordingly, the District Court affirmed the denial of the Application and Motion. n39

So what is the insolvency practitioner to make of this nascent split of authority of the availability of section 108 relief to foreign representatives in the absence of a case or controversy? Perhaps the Condor facts were further advanced in terms of a potential recovery action, but in neither case was a defendant named or noticed. The real question, whether section 108(a) can be applied to extend a foreign representatives statute of limitations, went unanswered in Bancredit and, while affirmatively answered in Condor, went unexamined. In a real case or controversy situation, after notice to an affected potential defendant, a court might decide to apply section 108(a). The decision should analyze the introductory purposes of chapter 15 in section 1501 and the qualifying requirements of section 1521(a). Would applying section 108(a) effectuate the purposes of chapter 15 and protect the assets of the debtor or the interests of the creditors?

The arguments in both cases that Congress intended section 108(a) to apply automatically in chapter 15 cases hold no water and are specifically refuted by principles of plain language jurisprudence and by the omission of section 108(a) from the applicability sections of the Bankruptcy Code.

A foreign representative may be hard pressed to overcome the procedural and live case and controversy requirements propounded by both the Bankruptcy Court and District Court in Bancredit and must therefore be prepared to act quickly. In Bancredit, the Foreign Representatives waited over two years from the commencement of the Cayman liquidation to seek recognition from United States courts. As statutes of limitations were slowly slipping away, the Foreign Representatives could have, concurrently with the Cayman liquidation, investigated possible causes of action in the United States. With such a head start, the advisory relief sought from Judge Bernstein could have been unnecessary.

A foreign representative under pressure of a soon-to-expire statute of limitations may also, prior to the expiration of the statute of limitations, commence cases against everyone and anyone against whom the foreign representative supposes he may have a claim, subject to having enough of a basis to satisfy Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Although neither efficient nor the best use of court resources, it would certainly avoid the procedural and Article III questions raised in Bancredit. The uncertainty of whether a bankruptcy court would indeed grant section 108 relief to a foreign representative may also mitigate in favor of commencing a full blown chapter 7 or chapter 11 case, where there will be an order for relief and a trustee or a debtor in possession who automatically receive section 108(a) benefits.

As a potential defendant, an argument that a literal reading of section 108 prohibits anyone but a trustee in a case where an order for relief has been entered from receiving the extension of statutes of limitations seems most appropriate. Or, if the unlucky potential defendant is in the Southern District of Mississippi and is sued subsequent to what he or she expected to be the running of the statute of limitations, the procedural arguments touched upon in Bancredit should be made in an affirmative defense or in a motion to dismiss in answer to a foreign representatives complaint.

Whether the ruling in Condor has been permanently grounded by the reasoning of the Bancredit decisions remains to be seen. Neither the Condor ruling nor any one of the Bancredit decisions are binding precedent outside those particular courtrooms. That may change, however, as the Foreign Representatives in Bancredit have appealed the District Courts ruling to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals. Stay tuned. n40

For further discussion of Bankruptcy Code section 108, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 108 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

Return to Text

n1 . In re Bancredit Cayman Limited (In Liquidation), No-06-11026, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3805, at 2 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Nov. 2, 2007).

n2

[2]. Id.

n3

[3]. Id.

n4

[4]. Id.

n5

[5]. Specifically, the Foreign Representatives sought relief under section 108(a), which provides in relevant part:

If applicable nonbankruptcy law, an order entered in a nonbankruptcy proceeding, or an agreement fixes a period within which the debtor may commence an action, and such period has not expired before the date of the filing of the petition, the trustee may commence such action only before the later of

(1) the end of such period, including any suspension of such period occurring on or after the commencement of the case; or

(2) two years after the order for relief.

11 U.S.C. § 108 (2008).

n6

[6]. 11 U.S.C. 1521(a)(7).

n7

[7]. Specifically, section 1520(a)(3) provides that [u]pon recognition of a foreign proceeding that is a foreign main proceeding [], unless the court orders otherwise, the foreign representative may operate the debtors business and may exercise the rights and powers of a trustee under and to the extent provided by sections 363 and 552[.] 11 U.S.C. 1520(a)(3).

n8

[8]. Section 1509(b) provides in particular:

(b) If the court grants recognition under section 1517, and subject to any limitations that the court may impose consistent with the policy of this chapter--

(1) the foreign representative has the capacity to sue and be sued in a court in the United States;

(2) the foreign representative may apply directly to a court in the United States for appropriate relief in that court; and

(3) a court in the United States shall grant comity or cooperation to the foreign representative.

11 U.S.C. § 1509(b) (2008).

n9

[9]. In re Bancredit Cayman Limited (In Liquidation), No-06-11026, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3805, at 2 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Nov. 2, 2007).

n10

[10]. Tr. at 6, In re Bancredit Cayman Limited (In Liquidation), No-06-11026 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Oct. 11, 2007) (Docket No. 30).

n11

[11]. Id. at 7.

n12

[12]. Id. at 8.

n13

[13]. Id. at 9.

n14

[14]. Id.

n15

[15]. In re Condor Insurance Limited (In Official Liquidation), No. 07-51045 (Bankr. S.D. Miss. Oct. 10, 2007). Notably, the foreign representative in the case where the relief sought under section 108 was granted was also one of the Foreign Representatives in the Bancredit case.

n16

[16]. Section 301 provides:

(a) A voluntary case under a chapter of this title is commenced by the filing with the bankruptcy court of a petition under such chapter by an entity that may be a debtor under such chapter.

(b) The commencement of a voluntary case under a chapter of this title constitutes an order for relief under such chapter.

11 U.S.C. § 301 (2008).

n17

[17]. Section 1502 provides that for purposes of chapter 15, debtor is defined as an entity that is the subject of a foreign proceeding[.] 11 U.S.C. § 1502(1) (2008).

n18

[18]. See Mot. at 5-6, In re Bancredit Cayman Limited (In Liquidation), No. 06-11026 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Oct. 29, 2007) (Docket No. 31).

n19

[19]. Id. at 6-8.

n20

[20]. Id. at 8.

n21

[21]. In re Bancredit Cayman Limited (In Liquidation), No-06-11026, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3805, at 2 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Nov. 2, 2007).

n22

[22]. 11 U.S.C. § 1520(b).

n23

[23]. Unlike Article 20 of the Model Law on Cross Border Insolvency (the Model Law) of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (upon which section 1520 of the Bankruptcy Code was based) which provides for an exception to the stay for a creditor to bring and preserve a claim against the debtor anywhere.

n24

[24]. Specifically, section 108(c) provides as follows:

Except as provided in section 524 of this title, if applicable nonbankruptcy law, an order entered in a nonbankruptcy proceeding, or an agreement fixes a period for commencing or continuing a civil action in a court other than a bankruptcy court on a claim against the debtor, or against an individual with respect to which such individual is protected under section 1201 or 1301 of this title, and such period has not expired before the date of the filing of the petition, then such period does not expire until the later of

(1) the end of such period, including any suspension of such period occurring on or after the commencement of the case; or

(2) 30 days after notice of the termination or expiration of the stay under section 362, 922, 1201, or 1301 of this title, as the case may be, with respect to such claim.

11 U.S.C. § 108(c).

n25

[25]. Although the Foreign Representatives did concede that the legislative history only appears in the context of section 108(c) and not 108(a), they argued that it nonetheless showed Congress deviated from the Model Law because it assumed and intended that section 108 would apply in toto to chapter 15 cases. See Mot. at 10, In re Banccredit Cayman Limited (In Liquidation), No. 06-11026 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Oct. 29, 2007) (Docket No. 31).

n26

[26]. H.R. Rep. 109-31(I) at 115, 109th Cong., 1st Sess. 2005, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 178.

n27

[27]. See Mot., In re Condor Insurance Limited (In Official Liquidation), No. 07-51045 (Bankr. S.D. Miss. August 30, 2007) (Docket No. 39).

n28

[28]. See Order, In re Condor Insurance Limited (In Official Liquidation), No. 07-51045 (Bankr. S.D. Miss. October 10, 2007) (Docket No. 44).

n29

[29]. Id.

n30

[30]. In re Bancredit Cayman Limited (In Liquidation), No-06-11026, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3805, at 3 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Nov. 2, 2007).

n31

[31]. Id.

n32

[32]. Id. at 4.

n33

[33]. Id. at 5.

n34

[34]. Id. at 6.

n35

[35]. In re Bancredit Cayman Limited (In Liquidation), No. 07-11338, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30596, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. March 31, 2008).

n36

[36]. Id.

n37

[37]. Id. at *4.

n38

[38]. Id.

n39

[39]. Id. at *5.

n40

[40]. Jonathan P. Olsson, an associate at Goodwin Procter LLP, contributed to the research, drafting and editing of this article.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Daniel Glosband is a partner in Goodwin Procter LLPs Financial Restructuring Practice, www.goodwinprocter.com. He recently represented the lead investors in the confirmed Chapter 11 plan of US Airways and its merger with America West and the fiduciaries for the employee stock plan in the Delta case.

Mr. Glosband is a Vice President of the American College of Bankruptcy and a conferee of the National Bankruptcy Conference, which advises Congress on bankruptcy legislation. He was a draftsman of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency and one of two primary draftsmen of Chapter 15 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, Ancillary and Other Cross-Border Cases. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy 15th Ed. Revised, Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide and Collier International Business Insolvency Guide.

He is admitted to practice in New York, Massachusetts, the U.S. District Courts in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and the Southern District of New York, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court. He received a J.D. from Cornell University in 1969 and a B.A. from University of Massachusetts in 1966.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

70 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on In re Geiger

2008 Emerging Issues 2506

S. Andrew Jurs on IRS v. Geiger (In re Geiger), 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 1287 (Bankr. C.D. Ill., April 28, 2008)

By S. Andrew Jurs

July 8, 2008

SUMMARY: S. Andrew Jurs comments on IRS v. Geiger (In re Geiger), 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 1287 (Bankr. C.D. Ill., April 28, 2008), in which the bankruptcy court had to determine whether husband and wife debtors (the Debtors) could discharge the husbands tax liabilities for the years 1993, 1995, 1997, and 1998, and the Debtors joint tax obligations for 2000 and 2001, when the IRS contended that the debtors willfully attempted to defeat or evade payment.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Cite as: Jurs, S. Andrew. IRS v. Geiger (In re Geiger). LexisNexis Expert Commentary, (Insert date you accessed the document online).

The bankruptcy court holds that husbands tax liabilities and interest were not dischargeable, but that the penalties were dischargeable. The bankruptcy court further held that the wifes liabilities for such amounts were fully dischargeable despite the fact that she signed certain returns

In IRS v. Geiger (In re Geiger), 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 1287 (Bankr. C.D. Ill., April 28, 2008), the bankruptcy court had to determine whether husband and wife debtors (the Debtors) could discharge the husbands tax liabilities for the years 1993, 1995, 1997, and 1998, and the Debtors joint tax obligations for 2000 and 2001, when the IRS contended that the debtors willfully attempted to defeat or evade payment.

Facts

The debtor husband, Richard, was 53 years old and had only a tenth grade education. From 1993 to 2001, he worked as a trader in the stock brokerage industry. Beginning in the early 1990s, however, he developed a cocaine addiction which consumed much of his disposable income. He did not timely file federal income tax returns for 1993, 1995, and 1997.

After he married the female debtor, Stephanie, in 1998, Richards cocaine use slowed, and he began trying to resolve his issues with the IRS. He retained an accountant and obtained an extension of time to file his 1998 return. He timely filed his individual 1998 return on May 17, 1999. Although Richards 1998 individual return showed a tax due of $51,234, no payment was made with the return. The next day, Richard filed his 1993 individual tax return showing unpaid tax of $28,843. In August 1999, he filed his 1995 and 1997 returns, showing unpaid tax of $9,932 and $19,333 respectively. No payments were made when these individual returns were filed. n1

On June 14, 1999, the IRS issued a statutory Notice of Assessment for the 1998 taxes. Subsequent Notices of Assessment were filed on October 4, 1999, for the 1993 taxes, and October 11, 1999, for the 1995 and 1997 taxes. The IRS also issued notices of intent to levy.

Relying on a customers tip, Richard, Stephanie, Richards mother, and Richards brother acquired shares of BluePoint stock, which was cleared for trading on March 6, 2000. By that afternoon, the trading account holding all of their contributions had profited by $600,000, of which 60% went to Richard. In the next three months, Richard purchased a 1999 Cadillac for almost $65,000, and Stephanie and Richard purchased a new home for roughly $238,000. According to Richard, his mother contributed $120,000 to the homes purchase price, and the title was in her and Stephanies name. The Debtors then spent between $75,000 and $90,000 on improvements to the house. In Richards words, their spending during this time was completely amazing and ridiculous.

The Debtors timely filed their 1999 joint income tax return on April 15, 2000. Prior to the filing of this return, the Debtors had made three estimated tax payments totaling $25,309, and they made a further payment of $57,628 at the time of the filing of the 1999 return. Because this still left the Debtors short by $11,898, they made a subsequent tax payment in July 2000, with penalties added, to fully satisfy their 1999 tax liability.

As to their 2000 joint income tax liability, the Debtors made four estimated tax payments in 2000 totaling $56,252, and a fifth payment in April 2001 of $21,875. After obtaining an extension, the Debtors timely filed their 2000 tax return on August 14, 2001. That return showed a tax due of $324,483, but no payment accompanied the return on the $246,356 still owed. By November 2001, the Debtors had no more cash and were forced to take out a $179,000 mortgage on their house to make a payment of $100,000 toward their 2000 taxes and an estimated payment of $12,000 toward their 2001 tax liability.

Despite obtaining the automatic extension for filing their 2001 tax return, the Debtors were unable to file it in a timely manner; in fact, it was not filed until May 21, 2003. On June 23, 2003, the IRS assessed interest, an estimated tax penalty, a late filing penalty, and a failure to pay tax penalty on the Debtors for their 2001 tax liability. Around the same time, the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) sued Richard and others for problems arising from the BluePoint stock trades, including a claim against Richard for approximately $545,000 and up to $1,250,000 in penalties.

Procedural History

The Debtors filed an adversary proceeding as part of their bankruptcy case seeking a determination of the dischargeability of their federal income tax liabilities for 2001 and previous years. The Debtors asserted that the taxes were dischargeable because the returns were filed, and the taxes were both due and assessed, well outside the lookback periods of §§ 523(a)(1) and 507(a)(8). The IRS answered by invoking the tax evasion exception, and the matter went to trial in December 2007.

At trial, Richard testified that he knew he had an obligation to file tax returns for 1993, 1995, and 1997, and that he knew he would owe taxes for each of those years. Because of his cocaine addiction and the expense of maintaining residences in Ohio and Illinois, however, he failed to file the returns. Additionally, the accountant who eventually prepared the tax returns did not advise Richard on how to resolve his tax liability delinquencies. Although Richard believed that his good fortune from 2000 would continue such that he would be able to pay these delinquencies from future income, he was unable to account for the nearly $500,000 that was consumed after the BluePoint trades. The Debtors did not contest the amount of taxes, penalties, and interest claimed by the IRS.

Legal Analysis

Although one of the general goals of the Bankruptcy Code is to give debtors a fresh start, there are several exceptions to ensure that undeserving debtors do not benefit from the general discharge. Section 523(a)(1)(C) provides that a debtor is not discharged from any tax debt with respect to which the debtor . . . willfully attempted in any manner to evade or defeat such tax. Courts have interpreted the phrase in any manner expansively and found that it covers a broad range of conduct. Dalton v. I.R.S., 77 F.3d 1297 (10th Cir. 1996). The tax evasion exception encompasses both actions to avoid assessment and actions to evade payment, Smith v. U.S., 202 B.R. 277 (S.D. Ind. 1996), including acts of commission and omission. In re Toti, 24 F.3d 806 (6th Cir. 1994). n2

To meet its burden of proving that a debtors tax is nondischargeable under § 523(a)(1)(C), the United States must satisfy two requirements: a conduct requirement showing that the debtor attempted to evade or defeat a tax, and a mental state requirement revealing that the attempt was done willfully. Matter of Birkenstock, 87 F.3d 947, 951-52 (7th Cir. 1996). See also In re Fretz, 244 F.3d 1323 (11th Cir. 2001); In re Fegeley, 118 F.3d 979 (3rd Cir. 1997) (agreeing with the two-requirement interpretation of § 523(a)(1)(C) in Birkenstock). Mere nonpayment of taxes is, in itself, insufficient to prove conduct to evade or defeat taxes; however, nonpayment coupled with a pattern of failure to file tax returns or affirmative acts to conceal assets or income could satisfy the conduct requirement. Id.

Courts judge the totality of circumstances to determine whether the conduct requirement is met. Indicia of tax evasion include: (1) understatement of income; (2) extensive cash dealings; (3) inadequate record keeping; (4) intra-family transfers for insufficient consideration; (5) failure to acquire significant assets relative to earnings; and (6) a lavish and extravagant lifestyle. In re Hamm, 356 B.R. 263 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2006); In re Klayman, 333 B.R. 695 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2005). Similarly, as with fraud, courts use various badges to determine whether the mental state requirement is met, which the IRS may establish by showing that the debtor: (1) knew he had a duty to file income tax returns and pay taxes, and (2) voluntarily and intentionally violated that duty. Such badges include: (1) the recurrence of the understatement of income for more than one tax year; (2) the understatement of income; (3) implausible or inconsistent explanations of behavior; (4) inadequate records; (5) transfer of assets to a family member; (6) transfer for inadequate consideration; (7) transfers which greatly reduce assets subject to IRS execution; and (8) transfers made in the face of serious financial difficulties. In re Spiwak, 285 B.R. 744 (S.D. Fla. 2002); In re Sommers, 209 B.R. 471 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1997). A rebuttable presumption of willful evasion arises if multiple factors are present. In re Peterson, 317 B.R. 556 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 2004). Additionally, the IRS must meet its burden of proving nondischargeability with regard to each individual tax year. In re Lynch, 299 B.R. 62, 83 (S.D. N.Y. 2003).

Commentary

The bankruptcy courts holding in Geiger is useful for practitioners because of its analytical thoroughness, presenting a clear outline of the burdens, standards, and factors to be used in these types of cases. Furthermore, it provides a useful contrast between the application of these standards and factors to both the bad actor and the innocent spouse.

Richards Individual Tax Liability. As to Richards individual tax liability for 1993, 1995, and 1997, the court found that his failure to file his tax returns, along with his failure to pay those taxes at all, established an attempt on his part to evade his tax obligations for those years. The court further dismissed his late filing of those returns, and determined that the late filings did not rectify the initial failure to file and pay. Accordingly, the IRS met its burden of meeting the conduct requirement for those tax years.

With regard to the willfulness requirement, the court noted that Richard admitted he knew he was required to file tax returns and to pay taxes for those years. Richards cocaine addiction did not mitigate this finding. In re Berzon, 145 B.R. 247 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1992) (finding debtor acted willfully in failing to file tax returns not precluded by drug abuse). Nor did Richards drug abuse render his failure to pay taxes involuntary and unintentional; instead, Richard voluntarily chose to spend his money on things other than his tax liability. Even though Richard did file a timely return for 1998, the court noted that his failure to pay taxes for a sixth year in a row was a strong indication that this year was simply one more in an ongoing pattern of tax evasion.

The court further held that Richards subsequent actions left no doubt that he willfully attempted to evade his taxes. Even though the Debtors income in 1999 and 2000 was sufficient to pay both Richards individual and the Debtors joint tax liabilities, the Debtors did not do so. Instead, Richard left his name off of the house title even though one-half of the price was paid with his commissions. The Debtors also maintained inadequate records, could not explain checks written for significant amounts, and spent money recklessly. The end result was a finding by the court that Richards tax debts, of principal and interest, for 1993, 1995, 1997, and 1998 were nondischargeable. As described more fully below, Richards tax debt for 2000 was also found nondischargeable; however, the penalty amounts for those years were dischargeable because, under § 523(a)(7), tax penalties are dischargeable if they are imposed for an event or transaction occurring more than three years before the petition date.

Debtors Joint Tax Liability and Stephanies Tax Liability. As to the Debtors joint tax liability for 2001, the court found that the IRS failed to meet its burden of showing that the Debtors did not intend to pay their taxes for that year. Of particular importance to the court was the fact that the Debtors made a substantial estimated tax payment of $12,000 in November 2001, even though they were broke according to Richard, which left them only $4,690 short of satisfying their tax liability. To the court, this evidenced intent to pay which was clearly different than the intent shown in previous years.

In contrast, the Debtors conduct for tax year 2000 was problematic because the substantial income that year could have been used to satisfy tax liability but was not. The Debtors estimated tax payments covered only 17% of the tax due, which the court considered to be only a token amount. Thus, the court concluded that Richard also willfully evaded his tax obligations for that year.

With regard to Stephanies liability for tax year 2000, the IRS failed to meet its burden of proving nondischargeability when the IRS offered no explanation for Stephanies failure to appear at trial. In fact, the IRS never asserted that Stephanie had been required to appear and testify, nor did the IRS mention Stephanie in its closing argument or contend that the record supported a determination of willful misconduct on her part. Accordingly, the tax liability for tax year 2000 was dischargeable as to Stephanie.

Conclusion

In sum, the decision in Geiger is useful because it addresses so many different aspects of the discharge of tax indebtedness and the tax evasion exception in § 523(a)(1)(C). The court deals with late filed returns, which could have been construed as attempts to cure past deficiencies, a taxpayers potential incapacitation and lack of intent or willfulness due to drug addiction, asset protection, inadequate record keeping, profligate spending and consumption instead of paying debts, and a possibly innocent spouse. In doing so, the court lays out the burdens, standards, and factors in a useful and organized way, thereby providing practitioners and courts with a blueprint for analyzing other cases and situations arising at the sometimes confusing crossroads of tax and bankruptcy law.

For further discussion related to the discharge of tax indebtedness under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a), see generally Collier on Bankruptcy ch. 523 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

Return to Text

n1 . Richard also did not file tax returns for 1994 and 1996, but the IRS did not make a claim for unpaid taxes for those years. According to Richards testimony, there were several years in which he earned no income.

n2 . Section 523(a)(1)(C) also excepts from discharge debts arising from fraudulent returns; however, the IRS did not contend that any of the Debtors tax returns were fraudulent.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs, Gastonia, N.C., received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

71 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Noel on Florida Dept of Revenue v. Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc.

2008 Emerging Issues 2498

Charolette F. Noel on Florida Dept of Revenue v. Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc.: U.S. Supreme Court Limits the Bankruptcy Code's Transfer Tax Exemption to Transfers That Occur "After" Confirmation of the Chapter 11 Plan

By Charolette F. Noel

July 7, 2008

SUMMARY: Florida Dept of Revenue v. Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc. limits the Bankruptcy Codes transfer tax exemption to transfers that occur after confirmation of the Chapter 11 plan. Charolette Noel, a state tax partner with Jones Day, comments on the Piccadilly decision and its impact on real estate owners and investors, states and local governments, and tax practitioners.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: From a practical perspective, n1 real estate and other tax costs for bankruptcy acquisitions recently increased as a result of the U.S. Supreme Courts June 16, 2008 decision in Piccadilly. n2 The decision limits the Bankruptcy Codes transfer tax exemption to transfers that occur after confirmation of the Chapter 11 plan. Despite acknowledging that most bankruptcy sales occur before confirmation, the Supreme Court imposed the temporal limitation based on the natural reading of the statute in light of competing canons of statutory construction. n3

Will this decision affect the ability of cash-strapped real estate owners to reorganize and restructure their debts through bankruptcy sales? Possibly, but probably not significantly. Will the increased costs affect the price of sales in bankruptcy? Probably, at least in some locations. The increased tax costs, if any, will likely be paid either (i) out of the purchase price, which otherwise would be available to creditors, or (ii) by investors who may seek to recover the cost through a lower purchase price. Thus, from a practical perspective, the creditors and/or investors lose and the states, counties, and municipalities win. n4

Investors expecting bargains in bankruptcy should consider the potential increased tax costs resulting from Piccadilly. Unfortunately, quantifying the increase is not easy. As discussed below, if and how much tax costs of bankruptcy sales increased after Piccadilly depends primarily on the location of the property and the timing of the transaction. The costs may also vary based on controlling authority of the particular bankruptcy court, the investors assumption of transfer-tax risk, and the eventual outcome of any further disputes over the scope of transfer-tax exemptions available under state law or Bankruptcy Code § 1146(a). n5

The Bankruptcy Codes Transfer Tax Exemption under § 1146(a). Bankruptcy Code § 1146(a) provides in its entirety:

The issuance, transfer, or exchange of a security, or the making or delivery of an instrument of transfer under a plan confirmed under Section 1129 of this title, may not be taxed under any law imposing a stamp tax or similar tax.

The provision generally applies as an exemption to certain state and local taxes. Courts typically apply a three-part test when determining if the tax is exempt under § 1146(a). For a tax to be exempt: (i) the tax must be a stamp or similar tax; (ii) the tax must be imposed upon the making or delivery of an instrument transferring an interest in property; and (iii) the transfer taxed must be made in connection with a confirmed bankruptcy plan. ⁿ⁶ Like all multi-part tests, each prong comes with its own set of questions (e.g., what is a stamp tax and what state transfer taxes are sufficiently similar to a stamp tax?). The exact scope of this exemption has been debated in courts of all levels for decades.

The Piccadilly Decision. Shortly after filing for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection, Piccadilly asked the court for permission to sell substantially all its assets and requested that the sale be exempted from state transfer taxes under § 1146(a). An auction was conducted to find the highest bidder for Piccadilly's assets. The winner of the auction agreed to pay $80 million for the assets, which were packaged as a going concern in order to maximize value.

Prior to closing the asset sale, Piccadilly entered into a Global Settlement Agreement with its creditors to distribute the proceeds of the assets. The court approved the sale, the Global Settlement Agreement, and the request for § 1146(a) exemption from Florida's stamp tax and other taxes.

Ten days after the sale closed, Piccadilly filed a plan to distribute the proceeds of the sale consistent with the Global Settlement Agreement. Before the plan was confirmed, Florida timely objected, seeking a declaration that § 1146(a) did not exempt $39,200 of stamp taxes Florida assessed Piccadilly on the sale of its assets.

The bankruptcy court granted summary judgment to Piccadilly, finding that the words under a plan confirmed can indeed mean before the plan is confirmed if the sale is necessary to the ultimate confirmation of the plan. The district court and the Eleventh Circuit both affirmed the bankruptcy court's ruling, although under differing rationales. Florida appealed, and the Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve a split between the circuits as to whether § 1146(a) applies to transfers prior to confirmation.

The case presented a chance for the court to sift through what it termed dueling canons of statutory construction. Citing Sierra Summit, Inc., ⁿ⁷ Florida argued that the court should proceed carefully when asked to recognize an exemption from state taxation that Congress has not clearly expressed. ⁿ⁸ Not to be outdone, Piccadilly cited its own canons, arguing that Sierra Summit does not apply because § 1146(a) is a clear expression of an exemption from state taxation, that a remedial statute such as the Bankruptcy Code should be liberally construed, and that the objectives of Chapter 11 include preserving going concerns and maximizing property available to satisfy creditors. ⁿ⁹

Relying on the substantive canon created by Sierra Summit, the Supreme Court narrowly construed § 1146(a) to apply only to transfers made pursuant to a Chapter 11 plan that has been confirmed. ⁿ¹⁰ States, counties, and municipalities may impose taxes on transfers in bankruptcy that occur before the plan is confirmed.

This is not, however, the last we will see of debates on the scope of § 1146(a). The Piccadilly case addresses only one of the debated interpretations of § 1146(a) described in the general three-part test described above. The case did not address the scope of what constitutes a stamp or similar tax or making or delivery of an instrument. In light of Piccadilly, we are left to ponder the appropriate canon of construction and natural reading for those phrases. Until Congress or the Supreme Court step in to clearly define the scope of transfer tax exemptions in bankruptcy, debates will continue. Nevertheless, it is hard to imagine further debate of a significant national interest to cause the Supreme Court to take another § 1146(a) case.

Prior Interpretations of § 1146(a). Prior to Piccadilly, the circuit courts split over whether § 1146(a) prevented debtors from using the exemption when selling assets during a Chapter 11 bankruptcy case. In practice, most jurisdictions allowed the § 1146(a) tax exemption even if the sale occurred prior to the time the bankruptcy plan was confirmed. Most courts, including the Second Circuitⁿ¹¹ and the Eleventh Circuit,ⁿ¹² found the phrase under a plan confirmed to be ambiguous because the word under has several meanings and does not necessarily imply a timing restriction (i.e., that the sale must occur after confirmation). In 1999, the Fourth Circuit held that § 1146(a) applied only to transfers occurring after the date of confirmation.ⁿ¹³ In 2003, the Third Circuit similarly held that § 1146(a) does not apply to transactions that occur prior to the confirmation of a plan under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code.ⁿ¹⁴

In most jurisdictions, bankruptcy attorneys regularly asserted in sale motions that the § 1146(a) exemption should be construed more broadly.ⁿ¹⁵ From a practical perspective, the decision whether to sell or retain assets inherently needed to be made prior to confirmation of the plan.ⁿ¹⁶ A relatively small percentage of sales in bankruptcy occur postconfirmation. Thus, many bankruptcy lawyers argued that the general policy behind § 1146(a), to facilitate reorganizations and maximize the value of the estate, is frustrated if the exemption were limited to the relatively few sales that occur postconfirmation.

Historically, there were relatively few objections to the broader assertions of exemption under § 1146(a). In many jurisdictions, transfers in bankruptcy are exempt from tax under state law so the Bankruptcy Code exemption is moot.ⁿ¹⁷ Some state tax administrators themselves interpreted the § 1146(a) exemption broadly. Sometimes states desire to maintain sovereign immunity from appearing before a federal bankruptcy court. In many situations, the cost to object may exceed the disputable tax. Thus, for a variety of reasons, most taxing jurisdictions failed to timely object.ⁿ¹⁸

Impact of the Narrowly Constructed § 1146(a). Because of cash flow needs, it seems unlikely that many bankruptcy sales would be delayed until plan confirmation to take advantage of the § 1146(a) exemption. If enough tax is at issue, creative minds will find ways to decide to sell before confirmation but have the sale take effect postconfirmation. Investors are now more likely to carefully evaluate the state and local transfer-tax costs of bankruptcy acquisitions (and any related requirements for exemption) before submitting bids on assets in bankruptcy.

In several states it is easier to satisfy the state law transfer tax exemption than the Bankruptcy Code exemption in § 1146(a).ⁿ¹⁹ The exemptions and procedures for claiming exemptions vary by state (and sometimes locality) and by tax type. Since they can no longer rely on broad § 1146(a) language in the sale motion and confirmation order, debtors and investors (who are typically jointly and severally liable for transfer taxes) should take care to identify and satisfy the relevant state exemptions that are typically broader than the § 1146(a) exemption. Several states have broad occasional or casual sale exemptions that apply to sales and use tax, and less often to real estate and motor vehicle transfer taxes. For the majority of bankruptcy sales that occur preconfirmation, the only current option for exemption is state law.

If Congress does not step in, states and local governments, many themselves in financial distress, may view the Piccadilly decision as an opportunity to raise revenue by enacting new taxes or denying previously-allowed exemptions for sales in bankruptcy. Twenty-seven states joined in filing an amicus brief in support of the State of Florida urging the Courts narrow interpretation of the § 1146(a) exemption. Particularly in the current economic environment, states are regularly seeking revenue opportunities.

Conclusion. Although Congress did not enact a tax increase, the transfer tax costs in bankruptcy have increased. Fewer sales in bankruptcy will escape transfer tax. States, counties, and municipalities expect more revenue from the future sales of distressed properties. Although debtors counsel wonder if equity will demand a return to broader transfer-tax exemptions in bankruptcy, the Supreme Court has ruled that bankruptcy sales occurring before the Chapter 11 plan is confirmed are not exempted from tax under § 1146(a). State and local tax practitioners will likely be in higher demand to evaluate and reduce the tax costs of large bankruptcy sales.

Return to Text

n1 . This article focuses on the practical and economic effects of the Supreme Courts recent interpretation of the Bankruptcy Codes transfer tax exemption. Technically, the relevant statute has not changed.

n2

[2]. Florida Dept of Revenue v. Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc., No. 07-312, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 5025 (June 16, 2008).

n3

[3]. Id. at *15, 30-35.

n4

[4]. This could be an important victory for cash-strapped taxing authorities that have lost significant tax revenue streams as a result of declining property values and have limited options for raising revenue promptly.

n5

[5]. 11 U.S.C. § 1146(a) (2000 ed. Supp. V). Former Bankruptcy Code § 1146(c) was redesignated as § 1146(a) by the 2005 Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act, P.L. 109-8, § 719, effective for cases beginning on or after October 17, 2005. Consistent with the Supreme Courts references in Piccadilly, this article refers to the former and current versions of this provision as § 1146(a).

n6

[6]. See, e.g., In re The Baldwin League of Indep. Schools, 110 B.R. 125, 126 (S.D.N.Y. 1990); In re Amsterdam Ave. Dev. Assocs., 103 B.R. 454, 456 (S.D.N.Y. 1989).

n7

[7]. California State Bd. of Equalization v. Sierra Summit, Inc., 490 U.S. 844 (1989).

n8

[8]. Piccadilly at *26.

n9

[9]. Id. at *28-30.

n10

[10]. Id. at *30-35.

n11

[11]. In re Jacoby-Bender, Inc., 758 F.2d 840, 841 (2nd Cir. 1985).

n12

[12]. In re Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc., 484 F.3d 1299 (11th Cir. 2007), revd and remanded by Florida Dept of Revenue v. Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc., 2008 U.S. LEXIS 5025 (June 16, 2008) (No. 07-312).

n13

[13]. In re NVR, L.P., 189 F.3d 442, 447 (4th Cir. 1999).

n14

[14]. In re Hechinger Investment Co. of Delaware, Inc., 335 F.3d 243, 246 (3rd Cir. 2003).

n15

[15]. Sale orders and confirmation orders often exempted bankruptcy sales from real estate transfer, sales/use and other transfer taxes that occurred before or after confirmation of the plan.

n16

[16]. See Piccadilly at *23 (In the context of § 1146(a), the decision whether to transfer a given asset under a plan confirmed must be made prior to submitting the Chapter 11 plan . . .).

n17

[17]. See, e.g., Fla. Admin. Code 12B-4.013(19) and 12B-4.014(15) (The sale of real property by debtors in federal bankruptcy proceedings is subject to tax unless the transfer is made pursuant to a plan confirmed under § 1129 of the Bankruptcy Code, is a precondition or essential to the confirmation of the plan, or is necessary to consummate or implement a confirmed plan and the debtor is a party to the transfer. If the bankruptcy court does not ultimately confirm the plan under 11 U.S.C. 1129, the transfer would not be exempt pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1146(c), and would be subject to tax.); 35 Ill. Comp. Stat. 200/31-45(i) (A stamp tax exemption is provided for deeds or trust documents made pursuant to mergers, consolidations or transfers or sales of substantially all of the assets of corporations under plans of reorganization under the Federal Internal Revenue Code or Title 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Act.); and Tenn. Code § 67-4-409(e) (Instruments made pursuant to mergers, consolidations, sales or transfers of substantially all of the assets in this state of corporations, pursuant to plans of reorganization are exempt from the recordation tax.).

n18

[18]. For those taxing authorities that had notice or filed claims in the respective bankruptcy case for which a plan was subsequently confirmed, claims for erroneously exempted tax are likely procedurally barred.

n19

[19]. Compare the exemptions described in footnote 15 above to § 1146(a).

RELATED LINKS: For more information on section 1146 of the Bankruptcy Code,

- see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1146 (Matthew Bender).

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research,

- see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Charolette F. Noel is a partner at Jones Day in Dallas, Texas, where she practices in the area of state and local taxation. She wishes to acknowledge the invaluable assistance of Carl Jenks, the head of Jones Days bankruptcy tax team. The view set forth in this article are the personal views of the author and do not necessarily reflect the opinions of Jones Day, its clients, or any other organizations with which the author is associated.

Ms Noel is the adjunct professor of state and local taxation at Dedman School of Law, Southern Methodist University, an active member of the State Tax Committee of the Tax Section of the State Bar of Texas, and a frequent speaker at COST, Tax Executives International, Institute for Professionals in Taxation, Georgetown University Law Center and other seminars. She has written and edited numerous published works on state and local taxation, including contributions as the State and Local Contributor for Jones Days bankruptcy tax portfolio, published as Jenks, Ridgway, and Purnell, "Corporate Bankruptcy," Tax Mgmt. (BNA) No. 790.

Ms. Noel regularly advises clients on state and local tax aspects and structuring of acquisitions and dispositions, some of which included International Steel Group's acquisition of the Bethlehem Steel business, Burlington Industries' bankruptcy buyout by WL Ross & Co. LLC, Direct Trading Corporation's sale of its assets to Knight Trading Group, Inc., the acquisition of the Engineered Products and Power Products businesses of Stewart & Stevenson Services, and numerous asset acquisitions by Arctic Glacier Inc. She has provided state and local tax advice in numerous bankruptcy proceedings, including debtor representations of Dana Corporation, Kaiser Aluminum, FLYi/Independence Air, Williams Communications, NationsRent, HQ Global, Loewen Group International, and LTV Corporation.

She is a member of the State Bar of Texas bar and a licensed Texas CPA. Ms. Noel received her accounting degree from The University of Oklahoma (B.B.A with distinction), her law degree from The University of Texas School of Law (J.D. with honors), and her LL.M. in Taxation from Southern Methodist University. She can be reached at cfnoel@jonesday.com.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

72 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Glosband on In re Manhattan Fund Ltd.

2008 Emerging Issues 2456

Daniel Glosband on In re Manhattan Fund Ltd.: Not Just Cocktail Party Talk: Prime Brokers and the Need to Know Your Hedge Fund Clients

By Daniel Glosband

July 2, 2008

SUMMARY: At a time when Wall Street firms are earning billions of dollars by acting as prime brokers to hedge funds, what do these firms need to know about their hedge funds clients? Is having no actual knowledge of fraud still considered sufficient protection? Or do you need to ask questions? Daniel Glosband examines these issues in light of the decision in In re Manhattan Investment Fund Ltd., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92194.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Not Just Cocktail Party Talk: Prime Brokers and the Need to Know Your Hedge Fund Clients

Wall Street firms earn billions of dollars by servicing hedge fund clients, many of whom often use multiple prime brokers and rely on short selling strategiesⁿ¹ to enhance returns. Bear Stearns Securities Corp. (Bear Stearns) recently came under fire when one of its clients, the Manhattan Investment Fund (the Fund), was found to have perpetrated a fraud on its investors and was forced into bankruptcy. On December 17, 2007, The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (the District Court) partially overturned a recent bankruptcy court decision that found that transfers made by the Fund to its margin account at Bear Stearns should be avoided because: (1) the transfers were made with actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the Funds creditors as defined by section 548(a)(1)(A) of the Bankruptcy Code (the Code); (2) Bear Stearns was an initial transferee under section 550(a) of the Code; and (3) Bear Stearns did not prove that it accepted the transfers in good faith.ⁿ² On appeal, the District Court held that actual intent to defraud existed as to all transfers related a Ponzi scheme and that Bear Stearns was in fact the initial transferee of the fraud-tainted funds. Consequently, it was potentially liable to return the funds. However, the District Court concluded that genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether Bear Stearns diligently investigated the Fund and thus could prevail on a good faith defense.ⁿ³

The Facts and Postsure of Manhattan Investment Fund. Bear Stearns served as prime broker for the Fund, a hedge fund controlled by Michael Berger. As prime broker, Bear Stearns facilitated the Funds strategy of short selling technology stocks by borrowing stocks from third parties, selling them for the Fund and depositing the proceeds in a short account which credited the proceeds to the Fund. The Fund would then direct Bear Stearns to repurchase the stocks and return them to the third party lenders in order to close out its short positions. In addition to the short account, the Fund was required to maintain a margin account, which served to protect Bear Stearns from the risk associated with fluctuations in the value of the stock loaned to the Fund. Bear Stearns was given a security interest in the money in the margin account as well other controls over the account. In the year preceding the Funds bankruptcy, the Fund transferred $141.4 million into the margin account. The monies transferred into the margin account at issue in this case.

Berger hid the losses of the Fund from its brokers, auditors and service providers, and solicited new funds by reporting high returns to prospective investors while paying off old investors with newly acquired funds. In December 1998, a Bear Stearns executive, Frederik Schilling, overheard at a cocktail party that the Fund was reporting a 20% profit for the year. Schilling believed that the Fund was losing money on transactions conducted with Bear Stearns as prime broker and confirmed with other Bear Stearns executives that the Fund had lost between $150 and $200 million in 1998. Upon inquiry by Bear Stearns, Berger explained the discrepancy between the losses in the Funds Bear Stearns account and the Funds reported performance as being due to the fact that the Fund used as many as eight other prime brokers; its transactions with others implicitly offset its losses with Bear Stearns. Although Bear Stearns viewed this explanation as reasonable, it contacted the Funds administrator to ensure that the Funds daily trading reports were being received. Bear Stearns also notified the Funds auditor, Deloitte & Touche (Deloitte), of its inquiry and of Bergrers explanation.

According to Bear Stearns, in the spring of 1999, it was informed by Deloitte that the Funds audit reflected the Fund to be in good standing. By November 1999, however, Bear Stearns was making nearly daily margin calls to the Fund. Bear Stearns spoke with another Deloitte auditor and again urged caution. In December of that year, Bear Stearns made a series of discoveries which prompted it to run a credit check. n4 The credit check did not reveal more than one prime broker and calls to various other prime brokers confirmed that none of them had a relationship with the Fund. After signing a confidentiality agreement, Bear Stearns was permitted to view the Funds financial statements. Subsequently, Bear Stearns reported the Fund to the Securities and Exchange Commission (the SEC). This led to the Fund eventually seeking protection under chapter 11 of the Code.

The Funds chapter 11 Trustee sought to avoid the transfers made to the Funds Bear Stearns margin account on the grounds that the transfers were fraudulent transfers and to have the funds returned to the estate. Upon cross motions for summary judgment, the bankruptcy court denied Bear Stearns motion for summary judgment to dismiss and granted the Trustees motion for summary judgment finding Bear Stearns accountable for $125 million plus interest, or approximately $160 million. n5 Applying the standard for summary judgment which requires that the District Court resolve all evidentiary conflicts and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of Bear Stearns, the District Court partially overturned the bankruptcy courts decision. n6 The bankruptcy court had ruled that Bear Stearns response to the cocktail party notice was not sufficient to entitle it to the good faith defense. The District Court was not so sure.

The Manhattan Investment Fund Opinion. First, the District Court affirmed that actual fraud existed as a matter of law under Section 548(a)(1)(A) n7, which provides for avoidance of any transfer made by the debtor in the year prior to the filing of its bankruptcy petition as a fraudulent conveyance provided that the transfer was made with actual fraudulent intent. The District Court concurred with the bankruptcy courts finding that the Fund operated as a Ponzi scheme n8, and the transfers to its margin account were made in furtherance of the scheme because the Fund had to maintain its margin account in order to continue with its strategy of short-selling stocks. n9 Under the Ponzi scheme presumption, such a scheme demonstrates actual intent as a matter of law because transfers made in the course of a Ponzi scheme could have been made for no purpose other than to hinder, delay or defraud creditors. n10

The District Court further affirmed that Bear Stearns was an initial transferee under section 550(a)[11] of the Code because Bear Stearns, while not a mere conduit, had dominion and control over the transferred funds. n12 The District Court reasoned that Bear Stearns had control over the transfers while the Funds short positions were open, had the ability to close out the Funds short positions at any time and that Bear Stearns in fact used the money to cover certain of the Funds positions. n13 Accordingly, Bear Stearns was an initial transferee. Under section 550(a), a transfer which can be avoided under the Code can be recovered from an initial transferee, unless the transferee can establish that it accepted such transfers in good faith. n14

Good Faith Defense. Turning to the good faith defense, the District Court applied a two prong test: (1) was Bear Stearns on inquiry notice of the Funds fraud and (2) was Bear Stearns diligent in its investigation of the Fund. n15 The District Court considered whether the information Bear Stearns knew or should have known triggered an obligation to investigate further and whether its investigation was reasonable under the circumstances. n16

First, the District Court affirmed the bankruptcy courts decision that Bear Stearns was put on inquiry notice of the Funds fraudulent activity beginning the day after the cocktail party where Schilling was alerted to a potential issue with the Fund. n17 Schilling investigated the cocktail party information further by confirming with his superiors that Bear Stearns records did not match the Funds reported performance. He confirmed the Funds losses with other Bear Stearns executives and then investigated further by arranging a conference call with the Funds introducing broker and Berger. Despite Bergers reasonable explanation for the discrepancies, Bear Stearns took further action by contacting Deloitte and putting it on notice. After learning of the Funds investor redemptions in 1999, Bear Stearns continued its investigation and eventually reported the Fund to the SEC. Applying a reasonable prime broker standard, the District Court found that while Bear Stearns was on inquiry notice, its actions to investigate the Fund may serve as evidence of its good faith. n18

Next, the District Court considered whether Bear Stearns could prevail on its good faith defense by showing that its investigation was diligent. n19 The Trustee argued that Bear Stearns was not diligent because the Funds fraudulent activity would have been exposed earlier had the actions taken by Bear Stearns in December 1999 of running a credit check and contacting other prime brokers been taken in 1998. Under the summary judgment review standard, viewing the facts and inferences in favor of Bear Stearns, the District Court could not find as a matter of law that Bear Stearns should have taken the actions in December 1998 that it eventually took in December 1999. First, the circumstances changed between 1998 and 1999 in that Bear Stearns begin to witness investor redemptions, increased margin calls and correspondence with an investor about its inquiries into the Fund. Additionally, Bear Stearns took other steps such as notifying Deloitte of a potential problem, obtaining the Funds financial statements and informing the SEC of the Funds misrepresentation. Therefore, the District Court could not find that no reasonable jury could find Bear Stearns actions diligent. n20

Given that there existed questions of material fact as to whether the steps taken by Bear Stearns amounted to a diligent investigation, the District Court partially overturned the bankruptcy courts ruling and found that a trial on the issue was necessary. n21

Commentary on Manhattan Investment Fund. Bear Stearns close call with being responsible for almost $160 million is a lesson to practitioners that prime brokers must know their hedge fund clients or risk liability for transfers made in furtherance of such clients trading activities. The risk that an innocent party can be exposed for transfers made as part of a fraud is not generally perceived. With the subprime debt crisis looming in the background of a deteriorating economy and volatile marketplace, hedge fund implosions are a genuine concern. It is no longer sufficient for a prime broker to rely on the defense that it had no actual knowledge of fraud. In todays landscape, a prime broker should consider whether, acting as a reasonable prime broker, it has an obligation to investigate into whether there is a fraud being carried out by its customer. Prime brokers should be cautious to not ignore questionable performance reports and to inform themselves, at the least, of the credit background of their hedge fund clients including determining whether particular clients rely on multiple prime brokers. Only putting Bear Stearns actions to test at trial will answer the greater question of how much investigating is enough. Stay tuned.

For more information on sections 548 and 550 of the Bankruptcy Code, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 548, 550. (Matthew Bender).

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 . Short selling, or shorting, refers to the practice of selling securities that are borrowed from a third party in the hope of repurchasing them later at a lower price and returning them to that third party. This strategy is used where the investor expects a decline in the security's price.

n2

[2]. In re Manhattan Investment Fund Ltd., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92194, 1-2 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007).

n3

[3]. Id. at 64-69.

n4 . Among other discoveries, Schilling learned that a former marketer of the Fund was suing Berger alleging that he had not been paid by Berger for his work. Additionally, Schilling discovered that the Deloitte entity which he believed was the Fund's auditor was not in fact the Fund's auditor and that answers provided to another investor's questions by the Fund were not adequate. Id. at 10, n 8.

n5 . Julie Creswell, Bear Stearns Told to Pay $160 Million to Investors, N.Y. Times, February 16, 2007.

n6

[6]. 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92194, at 68-69.

n7

[7]. Section 548(a)(1)(A) provides that the trustee may avoid any transfer (including any transfer to or for the benefit of an insider under an employment contract) of an interest of the debtor in property, or any obligation (including any obligation to or for the benefit of an insider under an employment contract) incurred by the debtor, that was made or incurred on or within 2 years before the date of the filing of the petition, if the debtor voluntarily or involuntarily made such transfer or incurred such obligation with actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud any entity to which the debtor was or became, on or after the date that such transfer was made or such obligation was incurred, indebted. 11 U.S.C. § 548(a)(1)(A).

n8

[8]. The District Court held that the Fund was a Ponzi scheme because it had at least two characteristics of such a scheme. It required and secured new investors to perpetuate the scheme, and it also used new monies to make redemption payments to earlier investors. Id. at 26-27.

n9

[9]. Id. at 30-31.

n10

[10]. Id. at 14 (citations omitted).

n11

[11]. Section 550(a) of the Code provides:

Except as otherwise provided in this section, to the extent that a transfer is avoided under section 544, 545, 547, 548, 549, 553(b), or 724(a) of this title, the trustee may recover, for the benefit of the estate, the property transferred, or, if the court so orders, the value of such property, from--

(1) the initial transferee of such transfer or the entity for whose benefit such transfer was made; or

(2) any immediate or mediate transferee of such initial transferee.

11 U.S.C. § 550(a).

n12

[12]. 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92194, at 55.

n13

[13]. Id. at 54-55.

n14

[14]. Section 548(c) of the Code provides that, even if a transfer is voidable, a transferee that takes for value and in good faith may retain any interest transferred to the extent that such transferee gave value to the debtor in exchange for such transfer or obligation.

11 U.S.C. § 548(c).

n15

[15]. 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92194, at 59.

n16

[16]. Id.

n17

[17]. Id. at 59-60.

n18

[18]. Id. at 63-64.

n19

[19]. Id. at 64.

n20

[20]. Id.

n21

[21]. Id. at 69.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Daniel Glosband is a partner in Goodwin Procter LLPs Financial Restructuring Practice, www.goodwinprocter.com. He recently represented the lead investors in the confirmed Chapter 11 plan of US Airways and its merger with America West and the fiduciaries for the employee stock plan in the Delta case.

Mr. Glosband is a Vice President of the American College of Bankruptcy and a conferee of the National Bankruptcy Conference, which advises Congress on bankruptcy legislation. He was a draftsman of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency and one of two primary draftsmen of Chapter 15 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, Ancillary and Other Cross-Border Cases. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy 15th Ed. Revised, Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide and Collier International Business Insolvency Guide.

He is admitted to practice in New York, Massachusetts, the U.S. District Courts in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and the Southern District of New York, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court. He received a J.D. from Cornell University in 1969 and a B.A. from University of Massachusetts in 1966.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

73 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Hunt on the Application of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act of 2003

2008 Emerging Issues 357

Peggy Hunt on the Application of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act of 2003 in Bankruptcy

By Peggy Hunt

June 26, 2008

SUMMARY: Service in the armed forces can have an adverse impact on a servicemembers finances and on his or her ability to defend civil actions. The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act of 2003, as amended in 2004 (SCRA), is the most recent provision, updating previous relief laws enacted during times of war. SCRA is generally applicable in any action or proceeding commenced in any court, including in bankruptcy courts.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Service in the armed forces can have an adverse impact on a servicemember's finances and on his or her ability to defend civil actions. Accordingly, in times of war, Congress has enacted legislation to protect servicemembers. The Servicemembers' Civil Relief Act of 2003, as amended in 2004 (SCRA), n1 is the most recent provision, updating previous relief laws enacted during times of war. n2 SCRA is generally applicable in any action or proceeding commenced in any court, including in bankruptcy courts. n3 This Emerging Issue Commentary discusses the application of the Servicemembers' Civil Relief Act on bankruptcy cases and proceedings. The SCRA provides protection to servicemembers against the entry of default judgments and empowers the court to stay proceedings against military debtors where the debtors have notice and to stay or vacate the execution of judgments, attachments and garnishments against servicemembers.

I. General Background on SCRA

SCRA provides for a temporary suspension of judicial and administrative proceedings and transactions that may adversely affect the civil rights of servicemembers during military service n4 so as to provide for, strengthen, and expedite the national defense by enabling servicemembers to devote their entire energy to the defense needs of the Nation n5 unhampered by obligations prior to their call to service. n6 Enacted in 2003, SCRA updates similar provisions enacted in former times of war, n7 and it applies in any civil case or proceeding that was pending as of December 19, 2003. SCRA applies to persons in military service, which includes: (1) persons on active duty in the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard; (2) active duty in the National Guard when called to service by the President or Secretary of Defense for a period of more than 30 consecutive days for purposes of responding to a national emergency; and (3) commissioned officers of the Public Health Service and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration when in active service. n8 In addition, SCRA extends to a servicemember's dependants if the dependant's ability to comply with a lease, contract, bailment, or other obligation is materially affected by reason of the servicemember's military service. n9 SCRA protections also may be afforded to persons who are liable on an obligation with a servicemember. Finally, SCRA provides that a servicemember's assets may not be available during his or her military service to satisfy business obligations or liabilities on which the servicemember is personally liable. n10

It is uniformly held that SCRA should be liberally construed to effectuate its purpose. n11 Its provisions apply in the context of judicial or administrative proceedings in any court n12 where the matters being adjudicated affect the rights of a servicemember, or in some instances, co-debtors with a servicemember n13 and/or a servicemember's dependents. n14 Thus, SCRA is applicable in bankruptcy cases and proceedings adjudicated in bankruptcy courts involving servicemembers, and/or co-debtors with and dependants of servicemembers. n15

Servicemembers are given notice of their rights and the protections afforded under SCRA by the government. n16 They may waive SCRA rights and protections, but restrictions exist if the waiver applies to: (1) the modification, termination or cancellation of a contract, lease, bailment, or an obligation secured by a mortgage, trust, deed, lien or other security; or (2) the repossession, retention, foreclosure, sale, forfeiture or taking possession of property that is security for an obligation, or that was purchased or received under contract, lease or bailment. n17 In these instances, the waiver is effective only if it is in writing and is executed as an instrument separate from the obligation or liability to which it applies. n18 Additionally, such written agreement must be executed during or after the servicemember's period of military service . . . specify the legal instrument to which the waiver applies and identify the servicemember concerned. n19

Under SCRA section 518, a servicemember's assertion of SCRA rights and protections may not be used in isolation to affect his or her future financial transactions. n20 Thus, generally speaking, a servicemember may not be denied credit or insurance and his or her credit rating should not be adversely affected due to the use of SCRA rights and protections. Likely, however, section 518 will not be very effective because that section expressly states that adverse actions may be taken if other considerations (e.g., late payments outside of the service period, the filing of a bankruptcy petition) warrant such action, and SCRA has no built-in enforcement provisions to provide a servicemember quick relief for a creditor or insurer's violation of section 518. For those servicemembers who have filed or are contemplating filing a bankruptcy petition, consideration should be given to section 518 and section 524 of the Bankruptcy Code, which governs the effect of a bankruptcy discharge. n21

II. Protections Afforded by SCRA in the Context of Bankruptcy

A. Bankruptcy Cases and Proceedings

To understand the application of protections afforded to servicemembers by SCRA in the context of bankruptcy, one must first understand the difference between a bankruptcy case and an adversary proceeding filed within a bankruptcy case.

A bankruptcy case is commenced by the filing a petition in the bankruptcy court under one of the applicable chapters of the Bankruptcy Code. This petition may be filed voluntarily by the debtor, or it may be filed against the debtor involuntarily by creditors. When an involuntary petition is filed, the petitioning creditors must show that the petition is warranted at which time the court will enter an order for relief. For purposes of this article, it is assumed that the petition would be one filed under chapter 7 (liquidation) or chapter 13 (individual reorganization) of the Bankruptcy Code.

Individuals who seek bankruptcy relief typically must file a statement with their petition declaring that they have complied with Bankruptcy Code provisions requiring credit counseling prior to filing. Servicemembers on active military duty in a military combat zone do not need to comply with these provisions, but must declare themselves to be servicemembers as part of their petition. n22

While many disputes in a bankruptcy case are adjudicated on motion, certain matters require the filing of a civil lawsuit. Debtors, creditors and parties in interest may commence lawsuits that relate to the debtor and/or the debtor's bankruptcy case by filing a complaint in the bankruptcy court. These lawsuits are referred to as adversary proceedings. Adversary proceedings typically are adjudicated by the bankruptcy court in conjunction with the bankruptcy case, and for the most part, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure apply by reference in the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure. n23 The most typical matters involving individual debtors that must be adjudicated by adversary proceeding, as opposed to motion, are those related to the validity and/or priority of liens (Lien Actions), matters related to the debtor's right to a discharge of a single debt or all debts (Discharge Actions), proceedings where the sale of property co-owned by the debtor and a non-debtor is sought (Co-owner Sale Actions), and declaratory judgment requests (Declaratory Judgment Actions).

B. SCRA Protections

SCRA offers servicemembers three fundamental protections: (1) protection against the entry of default judgments; (2) the stay of proceedings where the servicemember has notice of the proceeding; and (3) the stay or vacation of execution of judgments, attachments and garnishments. Each of these major protections in the context of bankruptcy is discussed in subparagraphs (1)-(3) below. Subparagraph (4) contains a short analysis of the interaction between certain miscellaneous SCRA protections and bankruptcy.

(1) Default Judgments

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 55, which governs the entry of default judgments in federal district courts and which is made applicable in bankruptcy proceedings pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 7055, does not reference SCRA. But, section 521 of SCRA protects servicemembers from having default judgments entered against them by mandating courts to require that plaintiffs file an affidavit stating (1) whether or not a defendant who has not made an appearance in the proceeding is in military service and showing necessary facts to support the affidavit, or (2) that the plaintiff is unable to identify whether the non-appearing defendant is in military service. n24 This section applies to all civil actions and proceedings in which a defendant fails to enter an appearance and, therefore, applies in bankruptcy adversary proceedings, including in Lien Actions, Discharge Actions, Co-Owner Sale Actions, and Declaratory Judgment Actions, all discussed above. Thus, most bankruptcy courts have adopted local rules related to default, mandating the filing of an affidavit that conforms to SCRA section 521 with an application seeking a default judgment. n25 Presumably, the affidavit requirement also would apply to requests for the entry of an order for relief against an individual who has not appeared to contest the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition.

The requirement for an affidavit under section 521 may be satisfied by a statement, declaration, verification, or certificate, in writing, subscribed and certified or declared to be true under penalty of perjury. n26 The affidavit must be based on personal knowledge and it will not be sufficient to submit an affidavit that is based on information and belief. n27

Under section 521, if an adversary proceeding is filed against a servicemember, the bankruptcy court may not enter a default judgment against that person until it appoints an attorney to represent the defendant. The bankruptcy court may, and if requested by the servicemember's appointed attorney, must stay the proceeding for a minimum of 90 days if a defense exists and the servicemember must be present to defend, or if counsel is unable to contact the servicemember or determine if a meritorious defense exists.

In the event that a default judgment is entered against a servicemember, it is not void per se, but SCRA authorizes the bankruptcy court to vacate it or set it aside upon application made by or behalf of the servicemember. This application must be made within 90 days after the servicemember's military service. But, even if a judgment is vacated or set aside, the bankruptcy court has no power to affect the rights, title or interest in property acquired by a party who is deemed to be bona fide purchaser. n28

(2) Stay of Proceedings

Servicemembers who are bankruptcy debtors or who are co-debtors with a person who has filed a chapter 13 petition receive certain protections staying proceedings under bankruptcy law. In addition, section 522 of SCRA provides a more general stay of proceedings. Each are discussed below.

(a) Bankruptcy Code Stays

Servicemembers who are bankruptcy debtors are protected by the automatic stay set forth in section 362 of the Bankruptcy Code. n29 This stay applies upon the filing of the servicemember's petition, or in an involuntary case, upon the filing of the involuntary petition. While some exceptions exist, this stay serves as a statutory injunction, prohibiting creditors and parties in interest from attempting to collect claims against the debtor or property of the debtor. Thus, for instance, garnishments and foreclosure proceedings are stayed by the automatic stay. Parties seeking to collect claims or proceed with foreclosure must obtain an order of the bankruptcy court granting relief from this stay. n30

The section 362 Bankruptcy Code stay also prevents servicemembers who are creditors of a bankruptcy debtor from taking certain actions, including debt collection. The administration of a bankruptcy case likely will not be stayed as a result of a servicemember's inability to be present during matters related to the case. n31

A separate stay also applies to servicemembers who are not bankruptcy debtors, but rather, are co-debtors on a debt with an individual who has filed a chapter 13 petition, such as a child or a spouse. n32 This co-debtor stay applies as long as the debtor's chapter 13 case is pending, but does not apply to co-debts incurred by the servicemember in the ordinary course of his or her business. Creditors may not collect on debts on which the servicemember is a co-debtor with a chapter 13 debtor unless it obtains relief from the co-debtor stay from the bankruptcy court.

(b) SCRA Section 522 Stay

SCRA section 522 authorizes courts, including bankruptcy courts, to stay proceedings on its own motion when the servicemember is (a) in military service or is within 90 days after termination of or release from military service; and (b) has received notice of the action or proceeding. n33 Furthermore, when a servicemember submits an application with supporting letters from both the servicemember and his or her commanding officer stating that the servicemember's military duty materially affect[s] his or her ability to appear and that military leave is not authorized, the bankruptcy court must issue at least a 90-day stay. n34 Additional stays may be granted upon further application, and if an additional stay is not granted, the court is required to appoint counsel to represent the servicemember. n35

As discussed above, the Bankruptcy Code automatically stays the collection of debts existing as of the date that the bankruptcy petition is filed n36 when servicemembers are bankruptcy debtors or persons entitled to the protection of a co-debtor stay. In such cases, the SCRA section 522 stay, which is not automatic, may supplement the Bankruptcy Code by authorizing the bankruptcy court to stay a creditor's request for relief from any applicable Bankruptcy Code stay. n37 The section 522 stay may also be invoked by a servicemember debtor or co-debtor who has been named as a defendant in an adversary proceeding commenced in the bankruptcy court. n38 Furthermore, because the Bankruptcy Code stays only apply to debts related to the period of time prior to the filing of a bankruptcy petition, SCRA section 522 may serve to stay proceedings for the collection of debts that have arisen after the date the debtor files his or her petition, although such relief may need to be requested in a court other than the bankruptcy court, as that court typically has jurisdiction only over matters related to pre-petition debts. n39

The automatic Bankruptcy Code stays discussed above only apply to servicemembers who have filed a bankruptcy petition or who are co-debtors with an individual who has filed a chapter 13 petition. When a servicemember is not a bankruptcy debtor or a co-debtor, the application of the SCRA section 522 stay may be invoked in the bankruptcy court if a person entitled to its protection is a non-debtor defendant in an adversary proceeding commenced in the bankruptcy court. When the servicemember is a creditor or party in interest, it is unlikely that a SCRA section 522 stay will be used to delay administration of the case in general. n40

Note that the SCRA section 522 stay only prevents the collection of the servicemember's debts that existed prior to military service. Thus, the section 522 stay does not stay the collection of debts that a servicemember, or more likely his or her dependants, has incurred while on active duty. Furthermore, the SCRA section 522 stay is not automatic, it may be costly to have imposed, and it may not be timely in cases of self-help repossession and non-judicial foreclosure. In such instances, the servicemember and/or any dependants may want to consider filing a bankruptcy petition to obtain the benefits of the Bankruptcy Code's automatic stay.

(3) Stay of Execution or Vacation of Judgment, Attachment or Garnishment

SCRA section 524 allows a court on its own motion, or upon application, (a) to stay the execution of any judgment or order entered against the servicemember, and (b) to vacate or stay a prejudgment or post judgment attachment or garnishment of property, money, or debts in the possession of the servicemember or a third party. Such action may only be taken if the court determines that the servicemember is materially affected by reason of military service in complying with a judgment or order . . . n41 This relief may apply to an action or proceeding commenced in a court against a servicemember before or during the period of the servicemember's military service or within 90 days after such service terminates. n42 The court may order the servicemember to make installment payments to the plaintiff during the stay period. n43

When an adverse judgment or order has been entered against a servicemember, the servicemember may be better served by filing a bankruptcy petition, thus being afforded the protection of the broader and automatic stay that applies under the Bankruptcy Code. n44

Note that the provisions of SCRA section 524 do not apply to codefendants with the servicemember who are not in military service. n45 In such cases, such as when a servicemember's spouse is a codefendant, consideration should be given to the appropriateness of filing a bankruptcy petition. If the spouse/codefendant files individually under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code, the co-debtor stay may apply to the servicemember regardless of SCRA section 524. n46 Furthermore, if both the spouse and the servicemember file a bankruptcy petition, whether under chapter 7 or chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code, the automatic stay will apply, which as noted, is broader than the protections afforded under SCRA section 524.

(4) Miscellaneous SCRA Protections

(a) Tolling of Statute of Limitations

Other than any statute of limitations under the Internal Revenue Code, SCRA section 526(a) states that: The period of a servicemember's military service may not be included in computing any period limited by law, regulation, or order for the bringing of any action of proceeding in a court . . . by or against the servicemember or the servicemember's heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns. n47 Also, the period of military service may not be included in computing any period provided by a law for the redemption of real property sold or foreclosed to enforce an obligation, tax, or assessment. n48 In the context of bankruptcy, consideration should also be given to section 108 of the Bankruptcy Code, n49 which governs extensions of time that apply when a bankruptcy petition is filed.

When a servicemember is a bankruptcy debtor, SCRA section 526(a) may serve to extend the time for the debtor or trustee to file avoidance actions under section 546 of the Bankruptcy Code. n50 It may also apply in computing critical deadlines applicable to individual debtors under, for example, sections 362, 365, 521, and 522 of the Bankruptcy Code. n51

The tolling provisions in SCRA may also affect time limits applicable to servicemembers who are creditors in a bankruptcy case. For instance, SCRA section 526(a) may automatically extend the bar date by which a servicemember must file a proof of claim against a debtor, the deadline to file Discharge Actions against a debtor, and the deadline to file objections to a debtor's claimed exemptions. n52

(b) Interest Rate Cap

SCRA section 527 states that debts bearing interest at a rate in excess of 6 percent per year that is incurred by the servicemember, or the servicemember and the servicemember's spouse jointly, before the servicemember enters military service shall not bear interest at a rate in excess of 6 percent per year during the period of military service. n53 This excess interest is forgiven, and payments must be reduced to reflect this forgiveness of interest. n54 The servicemember must provide written notice and documentation to the creditor for the interest rate cap to apply. n55 This protection is significant because, even if a servicemember or servicemember spouse has filed a chapter 13 bankruptcy petition, the contract rate of interest continues accrue on the debt. Thus, in chapter 13, SCRA section 527 may allow for a reduction in interest on debts being paid off as part of the bankruptcy case during the period of military service. n56 Furthermore, although interest does not accrue post-petition in most chapter 7 cases, the amount of a creditor's claim may be reduced if the interest rate cap applies during the pre-filing period. Note, however, that a court, including a bankruptcy court, may grant a creditor relief from the interest rate cap if the creditor demonstrates that the servicemember's ability to pay the contract rate of interest on the obligation is not materially affected by military service. n57

(c) Other SCRA Protections in the Context of Bankruptcy

In addition to those provisions expressly discussed above, individuals covered by SCRA are afforded with numerous tools related to debt relief, protection of insurance coverage, treatment of tax debts and the stay of proceedings related, among other things, eviction, foreclosure, repossession and redemption. n58 If any of these provisions apply to a servicemember who qualifies for relief under the Bankruptcy Code, n59 consideration should also be given to filing a bankruptcy petition because the protections afforded in bankruptcy may be broader than those under SCRA, and less expensive. The stay relief afforded by the Bankruptcy Code occurs automatically upon the filing of a petition and, therefore, may provide the servicemember and his or her dependants with a stay in a more timely fashion than by invoking rights under SCRA. Additionally, because SCRA typically only applies to debts arising prior to a servicemember's military service, filing bankruptcy may protect a servicemember in matters related to the collection of debts incurred during service. Note that seeking bankruptcy relief will not aid a servicemember with regard to certain types of debt. Specially, most student loan and divorce-related debts are not dischargeable in bankruptcy. n60 Also, debts incurred as a result of a servicemember's bad acts typically will not be dischargeable in bankruptcy. n61

If bankruptcy is an option, one may consider the timing of the petition in relation to SCRA remedies. Under SCRA, for example, penalties on a contract may not accrue while the enforcement of the contract is subject to a SCRA stay. n62 Thus, obtaining a SCRA stay prior to filing a bankruptcy petition may serve to reduce a debt administered in the bankruptcy case. Once the servicemember files a bankruptcy petition, the automatic stay in bankruptcy typically prevents further accrual of penalties.

Once a bankruptcy petition is filed, SCRA may intersect with federal bankruptcy law to define a servicemember's rights within the bankruptcy case, whether the servicemember is a bankruptcy debtor or creditor. Section 541 of the Bankruptcy Code defines the property of the estate administered in a bankruptcy case. n63 This definition is expanded in chapter 13 cases where debtors use property that they obtain after their filing date to fund a reorganization plan. n64 Although these sections define what is included within a bankruptcy estate, nonbankruptcy law determines the extent of a debtor's and creditor's respective interests in the property. Thus, to the extent that SCRA applies, it may serve to govern the rights of a servicemember as a debtor or as a creditor. For instances, the interest rate cap discussed supra, may serve to impact the amount of lender's claim against a debtor.

Bankruptcy law governs the treatment of allowed claims and the administration of the property of the debtor's estate, and bankruptcy administration is not affected by SCRA, with one exception. Section 547(b)(3) of SCRA provides that debts payable to the United States by a servicemember as a result of the United States' payment of the servicemember's unpaid life insurance premiums n65 are not dischargeable in bankruptcy. n66 Thus, even if a servicemember files a bankruptcy petition, he or she will be liable for any debt asserted by the United States related to such payments.

III. Pending Bankruptcy Relief for Servicemembers

In addition to the relief provided for servicemembers under the SCRA, Congress is currently considering legislation directly amending the Bankruptcy Code to make it easier for National Guard members and Reservists to file for bankruptcy. On June 23, 2008, the House of Representatives passed H.R. 4044, the National Guard and Reservists Debt Relief Act of 2008. n67 This Act excuses National Guard members and Reservists called to active duty or a homeland defense activity from the chapter 7 means test, which requires debtors to prove their inability to pay their debts. n68

Specifically, the Act amends section 707(b)(2)(D) of the Bankruptcy Code n69 to prohibit the bankruptcy court from dismissing or converting a case based on presumptive-means testing while the debtor: (1) is either on active duty in the military service of the United States or performing a homeland defense activity for at least 90 days, and during the 540 days following the end of such period; and (3) was called to such active duty or performed such homeland defense activity after September 11, 2001, as a member of a reserve component of the Armed Forces or the National Guard. n70

The Act was passed by voice vote in the House of Representatives and was referred to the Senate Committee. n71 The Act was received in the Senate, read twice, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. n72

Return to Text

n1 50 U.S.C. App. § 501 et seq.

n2 See e.g., The Soldiers' Civil Relief Act of 1940, 50 U.S.C. App. § 501 et. seq.

n3 50 U.S.C. App. § 511(5).

n4 50 U.S.C. App. § 502(2).

n5 50 U.S.C. App. § 502(1).

n6 Omega Indus., Inc. v. Raffaele, 894 F.Supp. 1425 (D. Nev. 1995) (servicemembers must have peace of mind that they will not be subject to civil actions during times of service); see In re Templehoff, 339 B.R. 49, 53 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2005).

n7 See n.2 supra.

n8 50 U.S.C. App. § 511(2).

n9 50 U.S.C. App. § 538.

n10 50 U.S.C. App. § 596.

n11 See, e.g., Omega Indus., Inc. v. Raffaele, 894 F.Supp. 1425 (D. Nev. 1995); In re Watson, 292 B.R. 441 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2003).

n12 50 U.S.C. App. § 512(b).

n13 50 U.S.C. App. § 513 (protection afforded to persons secondarily liable).

n14 See 50 U.S.C. App. § 511 (defining dependent, servicemember, and military service).

n15 See, e.g., In re Cockerham, 336 B.R. 592 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2005).

n16 50 U.S.C. App. §§ 515--515a.

n17 50 U.S.C. App. § 517(b).

n18 50 U.S.C. App. § 517(a); see id. § 513(d) (waivers by co-debtors).

n19 50 U.S.C. App. § 517(a).

n20 50 U.S.C. App. § 518.

n21 11 U.S.C. § 524; see also id. § 525.

n22 See Official Form 1 (Petition), Exhibit D.

n23 See, e.g., Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001--7087, 9023 & 9024.

n24 When a court cannot determine the defendant's military status based upon the required section 521 affidavit, it may require the plaintiff to post a bond before entry of a default judgment. If it is later discovered that the defendant is a servicemember, the bond would serve to indemnify the servicemember against any loss or damage that he or she has incurred in the event that the default judgment entered is set aside.

n25 See, e.g., Bankr. S.D.N.Y. LBR 7055-1; Bankr. D. Ut. LBR 7055-1.

n26 50 U.S.C. App. § 521(b)(4).

n27 See, e.g., United States v. Simmons, 508 F. Supp. 552, 552-53 (D. Tenn. 1980); In re Templehoff, 339 B.R. 49, 53 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2005).

n28 50 U.S.C. App. § 521(h).

n29 11 U.S.C. § 362.

n30 11 U.S.C. § 362(d).

n31 See, e.g., In re Wlaschin, 260 B.R. 306 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2000).

n32 11 U.S.C. § 1301.

n33 50 U.S.C. App. § 522(a).

n34 50 U.S.C. App. § 522(b)(2).

n35 50 U.S.C. App. § 522(d).

n36 Debt in bankruptcy is very broadly defined to include contingent and unliquidated debts existing as of the petition date. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(5) & (12) (defining claim and debt).

n37 See In re Burrell, 230 B.R. 309 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 1999) (discussing application of SCRA stay to servicemember-debtor in relief from stay matter); but see 11 U.S.C. § 362(e)(1) (stay terminates within 30 days of request unless bankruptcy court orders stay continued pending a final hearing).

n38 See supra for discussion of adversary proceedings.

n39 See 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b) & 1334 (bankruptcy courts have jurisdiction over bankruptcy cases and all civil proceedings arising under the Bankruptcy Code or arising in or related to bankruptcy cases).

n40 See, e.g., In re Wlaschin, 260 B.R. 306 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2000).

n41 50 U.S.C. App. § 524(a).

n42 50 U.S.C. App. §§ 524(b) & 525(a).

n43 50 U.S.C. App. § 525(a).

n44 11 U.S.C. § 362(a); see discussion supra on the Bankruptcy Code stay.

n45 50 U.S.C. App. § 525(b).

n46 11 U.S.C. § 1301; see discussion supra on co-debtor stay.

n47 50 U.S.C. App. § 526.

n48 50 U.S.C. App. § 526(b).

n49 11 U.S.C. § 108.

n50 11 U.S.C. § 546.

n51 11 U.S.C. §§ 362, 365, 521, 522.

n52 See, e.g., In re A.H. Robins Co., 996 F.2d 716 (4th Cir. 1993) (deadline for filing proof of claim extended); In re Wlaschin, 260 B.R. 306 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2000) (deadline to file Discharge Action and exemption objection extended).

n53 50 U.S.C. App. § 527(a)(1).

n54 50 U.S.C. App. § 527(a) (1)-(2).

n55 50 U.S.C. App. § 527(b).

n56 See, e.g., In re Watson, 292 B.R. 441 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2003).

n57 50 U.S.C. App. § 527(c); see In re Watson, 292 B.R. 441 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2003) (explaining burden of proof).

n58 See 50 U.S.C. App. §§ 531--596.

n59 See 11 U.S.C. § 109.

n60 11 U.S.C. §§ 523 & 1328.

n61 11 U.S.C. §§ 523, 727 & 1328.

n62 50 U.S.C. App. § 523(a); see discussion supra on SCRA stay.

n63 11 U.S.C. § 541.

n64 11 U.S.C. § 1306.

n65 See 50 U.S.C. App. §§ 541--49.

n66 50 U.S.C. App. 547(b)(3).

n67 2008 H.R. 4044. See also The Library of Congress, THOMAS, National Guard and Reservists Debt Relief Act of 2008 (Engrossed as Agreed to or Passed by House) (last visited June 29, 2008) <<http://thomas.loc.gov/>>.

n68 Subcommittee Approves Service Member Bankruptcy Relief, Revisions to Congressional Review Act (last visited June 29, 2008) <<http://www.lindasanchez.house.gov/news.cfm/article/417>>.

n69 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(D).

n70 2008 H.R. 4044. See also The Library of Congress, THOMAS, H.R. 4044, Summary as of 6/20/2008 Reported to House amended (last visited June 29, 2008) <<http://thomas.loc.gov/cgi-bin/bdquery/z?d110:HR04044:@@@D&summ2=m&>>.

n71 Govtrack.us, H.R. 4044: National Guard and Reservists Debt Relief Act of 2008 (last visited June 29, 2008) <<http://www.govtrack.us/congress/bill.xpd?bill=h110-4044>>.

n72 2008 H.R. 4044. See also The Library of Congress, THOMAS, H.R. 4044, Summary as of 6/20/2008 Reported to House amended (last visited June 29, 2008) <<http://thomas.loc.gov/cgi-bin/bdquery/z?d110:HR04044:@@@D&summ2=m&>>.

RELATED LINKS: For more information on sections 101, 108, 109, 362, 365, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 541, 546, 727, 1301, 1306, and 1328 of the Bankruptcy Code, see

- Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 101;
- 108;
- 109;
- 362;
- 365;
- 521;
- 522;
- 523;
- 524;
- 525;
- 541;
- 546;
- 727;
- 1301;
- 1306;
- 1328

For the full text of The Soldiers Civil Relief Act of 1940, see

- 50 U.S.C. App. § 501, et seq.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Peggy Hunt is currently of Counsel to Ray Quinney and Nebeker, P.C., Salt Lake City, Utah, www.rqn.com. Ms. Hunt received her law degree from the University of Pittsburgh School of Law where she was Head Notes and Comments Editor of the University of Pittsburgh Law Review. Ms. Hunt has served as a Judicial Law Clerk for the Honorable Robert J. Callahan of the Connecticut Supreme Court, for the Honorable Glen E. Clark, Chief Judge of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Utah, and for several of the judges serving on the Tenth Circuit BAP.

Prior to joining Ray Quinney, Ms. Hunt practiced law with LeBoeuf, Lamb, Greene & MacRae, LLP. Both at LeBoeuf and now at Ray Quinney, Ms. Hunt's practice focuses on complex workout, bankruptcy, reorganization, receivership and litigation matters, as well as appellate practice. She has counseled debtors (notably, USA Commercial Mortgage Co., et al.; CF&I Fabricators of Utah, et al.; America West Airlines, Inc.), creditors, trustees (Cajun Electric Power Cooperative), committees

(equity committee counsel in Columbia Gas System), unions (TWA) and equity holders in both large and small bankruptcy-related matters, and receivers in SEC enforcement actions (Novus Technologies, LLC and RCH2, LLC).

Ms. Hunt has served as an adviser to the Utah Bankruptcy Court on amendments to its Local Rules, and as a Judicial Law Clerk, she played an integral role in developing and amending the Tenth Circuit BAP's Local Rules. She is a Contributing Author to Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide, and has written and lectured extensively on bankruptcy-related issues.

Ms. Hunt serves on numerous Boards of professional and community organizations, including the Boards of the Mountain/Desert Network for the International Womens Insolvency and Restructuring Confederation (IWIRC) and Women Lawyers of Utah. She also has served as the Chair of the Bankruptcy Section of the Utah State Bar and on the Board of Trustees for the Utah Bankruptcy Lawyers Forum, Inc. The Utah State Bar presented Ms. Hunt with the Pro Bono Lawyer of the Year Award in 1996 for her service and for her work on numerous committees formed to address access to justice issues in Utah.

Ms. Hunt is a member of the Massachusetts and Utah Bars, and is admitted to practice in the Court of Appeals for the Fifth, Tenth and Ninth Circuits.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

74 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on In re Lanier

2008 Emerging Issues 2415

S. Andrew Jurs on In re Lanier

By S. Andrew Jurs

June 25, 2008

SUMMARY: In re Lanier is noteworthy in that it had the potential to deal in a substantial manner with the bankruptcy systems opposing goals of paying a debtors creditors and not rewarding an undeserving debtor with a discharge. However, Laniers value as a precedent is undermined because the opinion appears result-driven rather than the product of an even-handed and thoughtful balancing of the evidence.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: The bankruptcy court denies the Chapter 7 trustees motion for approval of a compromise settlement with the debtor in which the Chapter 7 trustee would permit the debtor to obtain his discharge upon the debtors payment of a sum in quarterly installments over a three-year period.

In In re Lanier, 383 B.R. 302, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 609 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. Feb. 29, 2008), the bankruptcy court determined whether a proposed settlement of litigation between the chapter 7 trustee and a debtor, in which the trustee sought to deny the debtors discharge, was in the best interests of the creditors and whether such a settlement was appropriate when it appeared that the debtor was buying his discharge despite his bad acts.

Facts and Procedural History

Randy and Phyllis Lanier filed their chapter 7 petition for relief on September 8, 2006. On April 27, 2007, their chapter 7 trustee (the Trustee) filed an adversary proceeding (the Discharge Proceeding) against Randy Lanier in which the Trustee objected to Mr. Laniers discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(3), (a)(2)(b), (a)(5), and (a)(7). According to the Trustee, he filed the discharge proceeding against Mr. Lanier after conducting a Rule 2004 examination and discovering unusual activity with regard to Mr. Laniers bank account during the year before the bankruptcy filing. Such discoveries included the fact that Mr. Lanier did not segregate his personal bank accounts from the bank accounts of his corporation. Additionally, Mr. Lanier had taken several trips to Russia, Paris, and Rome during this one-year period. Finally, the accounts were garnished by the North Carolina Department of Revenue just prior to the bankruptcy filing, and there was no money or assets available in the debtors estate to pay creditors.

The Trustee and Mr. Lanier subsequently agreed to settle the discharge proceeding. According to the terms of the settlement, Mr. Lanier would receive his discharge after paying $36,000 in 12 quarterly installments of $3,000. If Mr. Lanier ever was more than 20 days delinquent on an installment payment, his discharge would be denied.

On January 3, 2008, the Trustee filed a motion seeking bankruptcy court approval of this settlement. Several creditors filed objections to the motion to compromise. These objections alleged fraud on the part of Mr. Lanier, and these allegations had been known by the Trustee at the commencement of the discharge proceeding.

In support of his motion for approval of the settlement, the Trustee contended that, although he did not generally believe that debtors should be permitted to purchase a discharge, he believed that Mr. Lanier was judgment proof and that settlement of the discharge proceeding was the only means of making a return to creditors. Furthermore, the Trustee noted that the objecting creditors had failed to take advantage of the opportunity to file their own adversary proceedings objecting to the dischargeability of the debts owed them by Mr. Lanier.

Taking upon itself the burden to test the Trustees evidence, the bankruptcy court questioned the Trustee (but not Mr. Lanier) at the hearing on the motion to compromise. In response to the bankruptcy courts inquiries, the Trustee revealed that Mr. Lanier stated he had lost a boat and SUV in Mexico, abandoning them there to return to the United States for a medical emergency. The Trustee admitted that he had not sought proof to verify Mr. Laniers story because the property was fully encumbered by a lien to GMAC such that there was no equity to be realized for the estates unsecured creditors. The Trustee further acknowledged that he was unsure of the amount of priority claims held by the North Carolina Department of Revenue, which already had garnished Mr. Laniers accounts, and had not even sent out a notice to file claims.

Debtors counsel also argued in favor of approving the compromise settlement. The arguments included the assertion that Mr. Lanier believed he had some defenses to the Discharge Proceeding. Furthermore, the total amounts claimed by the objecting creditors totaled less than the $36,000 offered by Mr. Lanier to settle the discharge proceeding. In fact, most of the Debtors potential unsecured debt was actually corporate debt which could be assessed to the Debtor only if the creditors could pierce the corporate veil.

Legal Analysis

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9019(a), On motion by the trustee and after notice and a hearing, the court may approve a compromise or settlement. This rule is augmented, in these circumstances, by Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 7041, which provides:

Rule 41 F.R. Civ. P. applies in adversary proceedings, except that a complaint objecting to the debtor's discharge shall not be dismissed at the plaintiff's instance without notice to the trustee, the United States trustee, and such other persons as the court may direct, and only on order of the court containing terms and conditions which the court deems proper.

The Bankruptcy Code, however, does not provide any standards for bankruptcy courts to apply when determining whether to approve a compromise. Instead, courts have created three basic approaches to reviewing proposed settlements of section 727 complaints. In re de Armond, 240 B.R. 51, 55 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1999).

The first approach is the per se rule. It holds that no settlement of a section 727 objection is permissible. See In re Levine, 287 B.R. at 692-93 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2002); In re Vickers, 176 B.R. at 290 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1994) (Discharges are not property of the estate and are not for sale.).

The second approach is the trustee approach, which recognizes the tension between the public interest in the policies behind section 727 and the public interest in the peaceful, just, speedy and inexpensive resolution of disputes.

In re Margolin, 135 B.R. at 673 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1992). Because the objection to discharge is for the benefit of all creditors, the trustee may discharge his fiduciary duties and resolve this tension by giving notice of the settlement, making full disclosure of the terms of the proposed settlement and affording all the opportunity to become the plaintiff and conclude the litigation. If there is no objection or motion to substitute, the settlement will generally be approved. Id.

The third approach has been characterized as the cautious but pragmatic approach. It is similar to the trustee approach, but the terms of settlement are carefully reviewed to assure that they are in the best interests of the estate and that the settlement is not tainted. See In re Traxler, 277 B.R. at 705 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2002); Hass v. Hass (In re Hass), 273 B.R. 45 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2002). The best interests of the estate are met by considering the same factors a court considers in reviewing any proposed settlement: (1) the probability of success on the merits in the litigation; (2) possible difficulties of collecting any judgment which might be obtained; (3) the complexity, expense, and likely duration of any ensuing litigation; and (4) the interests of the creditors, giving proper deference to their reasonable views. In re Martin, 91 F.3d at 393 (3d Cir. 1996) (citing Protective Comm. for Indep. Stockholders of TMT Trailer Ferry, Inc. v. Anderson, 390 U.S. at 424-25, 88 S. Ct. 1157, 1163-64, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1968)).

In Lanier, the bankruptcy court purported to apply the four factors of the cautious but pragmatic test without discussion or acknowledgment of the other approaches. Nonetheless, the court spent the greatest part of the opinion judging the probability of success on the merits in the discharge proceeding, with the interests of the creditors receiving little mention, and the second and third factors not discussed at all.

Commentary

The bankruptcy courts holding in In re Lanier is noteworthy in that it had the potential to deal in a substantial manner with the bankruptcy systems opposing goals of providing money to pay a debtors creditors and not rewarding an undeserving debtor with a discharge. Bankruptcy trustees often operate in this gray area, entering settlements with debtors whose discharge might be denied due to various bad acts in exchange for payments that are often the bankruptcy estates only assets for distribution. These settlements can easily have the unwanted appearance of a debtors purchasing his discharge, so Lanier could have been helpful in setting limits on this questionable practice. The Lanier decisions value as precedent is diminished, however, by the bankruptcy courts failure to discuss the evidentiary standards and burdens of proof to be met in approving such a compromise, as well as the decisions minimal analysis of all four factors of the cautious but pragmatic test.

Code Section 727(a)(3). As a starting point, the bankruptcy court took the interesting step of finding sua sponte, based solely on the allegations in the complaint and answer in the Discharge Proceeding, that there was prima facie evidence that Mr. Laniers discharge could be denied pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(3). That section provides for a denial of discharge in the case of concealment, destruction, falsification, or failure to keep or preserve recorded information, including financial and business records.

In his answer, Mr. Lanier admitted that, at times, he paid personal expenses from his corporate account and did not segregate the accounts, but he further stated that these failures were not done with intent to defraud. He further confessed that he sent money to his mistress in Russia for English lessons and to meet him in Paris and Rome and also acknowledged that he did not adequately maintain records after his bookkeeper left his company. Instead, sometimes he would meet his subcontractors at the bank, withdraw money, and pay them in cash. These withdrawals and payments, however, could not be substantiated by invoices from subcontractors. Similarly, cash payments were made to Mr. Laniers son, purportedly for work performed for Mr. Laniers company, without supporting documentation.

According to the bankruptcy court, these admissions by Mr. Lanier were grounds for denial of discharge under section 727(a)(3) because he failed to maintain personal business records and corporate business records in such a manner as to avoid commingling of assets. What makes this finding by the bankruptcy court interesting, and potentially questionable, is the fact that a vast majority of chapter 7 debtors do not keep good business records and often commingle personal and corporate monies. The bankruptcy court, however, did not engage in any discussion of how Mr. Laniers acts were more egregious, and therefore an appropriate basis for denial of discharge, than those of other chapter 7 debtors who receive discharges as a matter of course.

Code Section 727(a)(2)(B). Similarly questionable was the bankruptcy courts finding that there was prima facie evidence that Mr. Laniers discharge could be denied pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B), which provides for denial of discharge if:

The debtor, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or an officer of the estate charged with custody of property under this title, has transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed, or has permitted to be transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated or concealed--

...

(B) property of the estate, after the date of the filing of the petition.

According to the bankruptcy court, this finding was based solely on evidence to suggest that the debtor concealed the location of a sport utility vehicle and boat, which would be property of the estate. 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 609, at *10. Left undiscussed, though, is why a mere suggestion of evidence of concealment should be grounds for denial of the compromise between the debtor and the Trustee.

Code Section 727(a)(5). The bankruptcy court further determined that there was prima facie evidence that Mr. Laniers discharge could be denied under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5). Under that section, a discharge can be denied if the debtor has failed to explain satisfactorily, before determination of denial of discharge under this paragraph, any loss of assets or deficiency of assets to meet the debtors liabilities. Here, the bankruptcy court did not explain what the prima facie evidence was to support this finding, nor did the bankruptcy court state why such prima facie evidence was sufficient to deny the desired settlement.

Piercing the Corporate Veil. The bankruptcy court also concluded that Mr. Laniers unsecured debt was $779,819, some of which arose from alleged corporate debts. Per the bankruptcy court, sufficient facts existed to support an action to pierce the corporate veil to make Mr. Lanier liable for his companys debts, but the bankruptcy court did not explain how this finding impacted the approvability of the settlement.

Best Interests of the Creditors. Finally, the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Lanier had significant tax liabilities, which, in addition to the Trustees commissions and reasonable attorneys fees, would have priority over the unsecured creditors claims. Thus, the bankruptcy court concluded that it was unlikely that the unsecured creditors would receive any distribution from the settlement.

Conclusion

The decision in Lanier is disappointing, not so much because of its final outcome, but because of its lack of analytical thoroughness. While it is perfectly likely that Mr. Lanier may have engaged in conduct for which denial of discharge would be appropriate, it was incumbent on the bankruptcy court to explain in greater detail who bore the burden of proof and why that burden was not met. The bankruptcy court similarly failed to explain why prima facie evidence derived solely from the pleadings, or just the suggestion of evidence, was sufficient to judge the likelihood of success on the merits in the Discharge Proceeding and deny the Trustees motion. Most significantly, the bankruptcy court did not analyze at all the second and third factors of its stated test for approval; there is no consideration of possible difficulties of collecting on a judgment or the complexity, expense, and likely duration of continuing the litigation. Because of this deficient analysis, the bankruptcy court gave the appearance that its denial of the motion to approve the settlement was result-driven and not the product of an even-handed and thoughtful balancing of the evidence and the interests of all parties.

For further discussion related to the approval of settlements of objections to discharge under Code section 727 and Bankruptcy Rules 7041 and 9019, see generally Collier on Bankruptcy, chs. 727, 7041, and 9019 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors rights and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

75 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Lawniczak on Walker v. Walden

2008 Emerging Issues 2344

Lawniczak on Walker v. Walden

By James M. Lawniczak

June 2, 2008

SUMMARY: The Eleventh Circuit has joined the majority of circuits and ruled that the removal of a chapter 7 trustee is a final, appealable order. In particular, the Walker court was influenced by the Third Circuit's pragmatic and flexible subjective approach. As James Lawniczak discusses in his Emerging Issues Analysis, the court weighed the interests of judicial efficiency and judicial economy and found that the former was more significant.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: The Eleventh Circuit Joins a Majority of the Circuits Holding that Decisions to Appoint or Remove a Trustee Are Final Orders Subject to Immediate Appeal

In Walker v. Walden, 515 F.3d 1204, 1210 (11th Cir. 2008), the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit resolved an issue it called one of first impression in this circuit, namely, whether an order removing a chapter 7 trustee is a final order. In its opinion, the court generally discussed finality in the context of contested matters and adversary proceedings in bankruptcy cases. It then considered both judicial economy and judicial efficiency in holding that the order removing the trustee was a final, appealable order. 515 F.3d at 1210-11.

The court noted that cases dealing with the removal of a trustee require the same finality analysis as cases dealing with the appointment of a trustee. 515 F.3d at 1210, n.4. The court also observed a split in authority among the various circuit courts of appeals as to whether orders appointing or removing trustees are, or are not, final. The court then discussed the positions of the various circuits, noting that the Third and Fourth Circuits have held that such orders are final; the Seventh disagrees, holding that such orders are not final; while the Fifth Circuit has concluded both ways. n1

Facts. Linda Walden was appointed trustee for James Walkers chapter 7 bankruptcy case, after election by the creditors under 11 U.S.C. § 702(b). The court held a ratification hearing at which time the issue of the trustees connections with a creditor, Florida Caliper Manufacturers, and its owner (the Creditor) was raised. The trustee testified that she did not have any direct business relationship with that Creditor.

However, the chapter 7 debtor later discovered that the trustee had performed accounting services, prepared an expert report in a 2000 state-court action and had served as registered agent for two related businesses of the Creditor. He filed an Emergency Motion to Remove the Trustee, which was granted. In re Walker, 2004 Bankr. LEXIS 2187 (Bankr. S.D. Fla., Dec. 1, 2004). The order was affirmed on appeal, and an appeal to the Eleventh Circuit followed.

Court Must Consider Appellate Jurisdiction Sua Sponte. The courts discussion on the finality issue began with its recognition that neither party to the appeal had raised the jurisdictional issue. The court pointed out, however, that it is the duty of a court to determine its jurisdiction over a matter, even if the issue is not raised by the parties. 515 F.3d at 1210.

Appellate Court Jurisdiction Is Not Co-Extensive With District Court Jurisdiction. The court then discussed the principal that a court of appeals will not necessarily have jurisdiction over a bankruptcy appeal just because the district court, the first level of appeal, had jurisdiction. This is because the court of appeals has jurisdiction only over final orders, 28 U.S.C. § 158(d), while the district court is given jurisdiction over both final and interlocutory orders. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a); see Lockwood v. Snookies, Inc. (In re F.D.R. Hickory House, Inc.), 60 F.3d 724, 725 (11th Cir. 1995).

Finality in the Context of Bankruptcy Court Proceedings. The finality rule is not always easy to apply in the context of a bankruptcy case. This is because a bankruptcy case ordinarily consists of a number of discrete matters, all of which are dealt with in a single bankruptcy case. Therefore, there is no requirement that the entire bankruptcy case be completed before appeals can be entertained, only that the discrete matter under consideration be resolved, with nothing further for the court to do as to that matter. See 1 Collier on Bankruptcy, 5.07[1][b] (Matthew Bender); Martin Bros. Toolmakers, Inc. v. Industrial Dev. Bd. (In re Martin Bros. Toolmakers, Inc.), 796 F.2d at 1435, 1437-38 (11th Cir. 1986); cf. Catlin v. United States, 324 U.S. 229, 233, 65 S. Ct. 631, 633-34, 89 L. Ed. 911, 916 (1945) (a final decision is one that ends the litigation and leaves nothing for the court to do but execute its judgment).

Thus, all courts dealing with orders in bankruptcy cases have generally noted that there is a broader concept of finality from those bankruptcy decisions than from other civil matters. Virtually all such cases note that some flexibility is necessary. See, e.g., Millers Cove Energy Co., Inc. v. Moore (In re Millers Cove Energy Co., Inc.), 128 F.3d 449, 451 (6th Cir. 1997) (district court order remanding matter to bankruptcy court was not final; court noted split in court of appeals authority on how to approach the issue); In re Devlieg, Inc., 56 F.3d 32, 33 (7th Cir. 1995) (per curiam) (myriad are the cases which say that finality is to be interpreted more liberally in bankruptcy cases); 1 Collier on Bankruptcy, 5.07[1][b] (Matthew Bender).

The Third and Second Circuits Flexible Approach. The Third and Second Circuit, in particular, use a very liberal, pragmatic view of finality of orders in bankruptcy matters. See, e.g., In re Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 432 F.3d 507, 511 (3d Cir. 2005); Bank Brussels Lambert v. Coan (In re Arochem Corp.), 176 F.3d 610, 619-20 (2d Cir. 1999). The Armstrong World Industries case discussed four factors to be considered in determining the finality of a bankruptcy appeal: (1) the impact on the assets of the estate; (2) the need for further fact finding on remand; (3) the preclusive effect of a decision on the merits; and (4) the interests of judicial economy.

The Second Circuit also uses what it calls a flexible test, although it has a different focus than the Third Circuits test. In Bank Brussels Lambert, 176 F.3d at 619-20, the court discusses a flexible and relaxed approach to finality in bankruptcy matters. As a result, an order retaining counsel was determined by the court to be final in a bankruptcy case, although a similar order would not have been final in nonbankruptcy litigation. The courts focus, following the analysis of U.S. Trustee v. Bloom (In re Palm Coast, Matanza Shores Ltd. Partnership), 101 F.3d 253, 256 (2d Cir. 1996) (retention of trustees firm as a real estate consultant to the estate was a final order that could be appealed), was whether there was any indication in the disposition of the matter below that the decision could be reconsidered.

The Third and Second Circuits flexible approach to finality takes into account pragmatic matters that go beyond answering the question whether the order at issue finally resolves a discrete matter in the bankruptcy case. Thus, it is more likely that orders will be found to be final in those two circuits. For example, in the Second Circuit Bank Brussels Lambert case, the court held that an order authorizing retention of counsel in bankruptcy was final. In doing so, the court pointed out that four circuits, the Seventh, Ninth, Fifth and First have all determined that orders involving retention of bankruptcy counsel are not final orders. See, e.g., Brouwer v. Ancel & Dunlap (In re Firstmark Corp.), 46 F.3d 653, 657-59 (7th Cir. 1995). On the other hand, the Third (no surprise given its pragmatic approach) and the Fourth Circuits hold to the contrary. See, e.g., Committee of Dalkon Shield Claimants v. A.H. Robins Co., 828 F.2d 239, 241 (4th Cir. 1987).

The Eleventh Circuits citation to the Third Circuit cases in Walker, and its discussion of the principles of judicial economy and judicial efficiency show that the Eleventh Circuit, at least in this case, has joined the Third Circuit in using a pragmatic and flexible subjective approach.

The Tenth Circuit Approach. Other circuits are not willing to be quite as flexible as the Third and Second Circuits. The Tenth Circuit uses what it also refers to as a flexible approach, but does so in the context of a more objective determination of whether a discrete dispute within the bankruptcy proceeding has come to the appellate court in a posture that objectively satisfies traditional finality principles. See, e.g., Mason v. Young (In re Young), 237 F.3d 1168, 1172-73 (10th Cir. 2001); Cascade Energy & Metals Corp. v. Banks (In re Cascade Energy & Metals Corp.), 956 F.2d 935, 939 (10th Cir. 1992); Eddleman v. U.S. Dept of Labor, 923 F.2d 782, 786 (10th Cir. 1991). The flexibility of the Tenth Circuit approach lies in its willingness not to require finality of the entire proceedings, focusing instead on a distinct subset thereof.

Eleventh Circuits Analysis--Majority Position. In reaching its conclusion that decisions appointing and removing trustees are final opinions entitled to immediate review, the Walker court relied primarily on the Third Circuit decision in In re Marvel Entertainment Group, Inc., 140 F.3d 463, 470-71 (3d Cir. 1998). In that case, the court noted that if the appeal on the appointment of a trustee were to be put off until the entire bankruptcy proceeding was over, it would effectively eliminate the right to appellate review, because it would be impossible to take the case back to the point where the trustee had been appointed (or removed). 140 F.3d at 470.

The underpinnings of the decision of the Eleventh Circuit in the Walker case are the same. The court believed that judicial efficiency outweighed judicial economy, for the same reason as given in the Marvel Entertainment case: to wait to the end of the case to review the decision appointing or removing the trustee would preclude review. Review of those orders cannot be meaningfully postponed; the reviewing court could not jettison years of bankruptcy infighting because the wrong trustee had been handling the matter. 515 F.3d at 1210-11.

Cases Supporting the Eleventh Circuits Majority Position. As noted above, the Third Circuit has held that the appointment of a trustee is a final order subject to appeal. Marvel Entertainment, 140 F.3d 463, 470-71. The Third Circuit has also held that an order removing a trustee is a final order. In re B H & P Inc., 949 F.2d 1300, 1307 (3d Cir. 1991).

The Fourth Circuit has held that an order denying a creditors committees request for the appointment of a trustee is a final order. Committee of Dalkon Shield Claimants v. A.H. Robins Co., Inc., 828 F.2d 239, 241 (4th Cir. 1987). That court has also held that a decision not to remove a bankruptcy trustee is final for collateral estoppel purposes. Turshen v. Chapman, 823 F.2d 836, 839 (4th Cir. 1987).

Although the Walker court claimed that the Fifth Circuit had concluded both ways, 515 F.3d at 1210, the two cited Fifth Circuit cases are actually reconcilable. In the first case, the court concluded that the appointment of an interim trustee was not a final order. Foster Securities, Inc. v. Sandoz (In re Delta Services Industries), 782 F.2d 1267, 1270-71 (5th Cir. 1986) (the nature of the role an interim trustee plays shows that the appointment of such a trustee is only a preliminary step). In the subsequent case, Cajun Electric Power Cooperative v. Central Louisiana Electric Co., Inc. (In re Cajun Electric Power Cooperative, Inc.), 69 F.3d 746, 748 (5th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 808, 117 S. Ct. 51, 136 L. Ed.2d 15 (1996), the court held that the appointment of a permanent trustee is a final appealable order, and specifically distinguished the Delta Services case because it involved an interim trustee.

Although not noted by the court in the Walker case, one other circuit court of appeals has also found that orders appointing a trustee are final. In In re Plaza De Diego Shopping Center, Inc., 911 F.2d 820, 825-26 (1st Cir. 1990), the court held that the order appointing a trustee was final and appealable because it was a final decision of a significant and discrete dispute (i.e., a dispute over the authority and procedure for appointing a trustee[]). In addition, the court noted that an appeal could not be meaningfully postponed. 911 F.2d at 826.

Finally, in Oklahoma Refining Co. v. Blaik (In re Oklahoma Refining Co.), 838 F.2d 1133 (10th Cir. 1988), the court affirmed an order appointing a trustee, without discussion of whether the order it was affirming was indeed a final order. Thus, it could be said that the Tenth Circuit has, by implication, determined that such orders are final, particularly because the issue may be raised by the court sua sponte. See Walker, 515 F.3d at 1210.

Minority Position--the Seventh Circuit. As noted by the Walker court, the Seventh Circuit has held that the appointment of a trustee is not a final order that can be immediately appealed to a court of appeals. Cash Currency Exchange, Inc. v. Shine (In re Cash Currency Exchange, Inc.), 762 F.2d 542, 546 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 904, 106 S. Ct. 233, 88 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1985). In that case, the court found that orders permitting limited intervention, denying a motion to dismiss the case and appointing a bankruptcy trustee were interlocutory. The court did not comment further on this issue. The court went on to decide that the orders, including the order to appoint a trustee, could not be reviewed under the collateral order doctrine, which does, under certain circumstances allow interlocutory appeals. On that issue, the court pointed to the three-part test of Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 468, 98 S. Ct. 2454, 57 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1978), which requires that the order (1) conclusively determine the disputed question, (2) resolve an important issue separate from the merits of the action and (3) be effectively unreviewable on appeal from an eventual final judgment. The Seventh Circuit held that the order appointing the trustee failed the third part of the test because it could be reversed on appeal from the approval of a plan of reorganization. 762 F.2d 542, 547.

Were the specific issue of the finality of the appointment of a bankruptcy trustee to come before the Seventh Circuit today, it is quite possible that the court might reconsider the matter. The Cash Currency Exchange case was the first case to decide the issue of the finality of the appointment or removal of a trustee. Since that decision came down, all four circuits considering the issue have concluded otherwise. In addition, the decision of the Seventh Circuit was made with no legal analysis.

Additional Issue Before the Court--Standing of the Debtor. The trustee in the Walker case challenged the standing of the debtor, as a party without a pecuniary interest in the chapter 7 estate, to move for her removal. The court sidestepped the issue, pointing out instead that the bankruptcy court itself had the power, without need for a request by a party in interest to remove a trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 324. 515 F.3d at 1211-12.

Conclusion. The Eleventh Circuit has joined the majority of the circuit courts of appeal in holding that an order removing a bankruptcy trustee is a final order. Moreover, it indicated in dictum that an order appointing a bankruptcy trustee is also final.

For further discussion of appeals in bankruptcy cases, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 4 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

Return to Text

n1 . However, as noted below, the Fifth Circuit cases are reconcilable--the case holding that the order was not final dealt with the appointment of an interim trustee, while the case holding that the order was final dealt with a permanent trustee.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

James M. Lawniczak is a partner at Calfee, Halter and Griswold LLP in Cleveland, Ohio. He concentrates his practice on corporate bankruptcy and creditors rights, as well as commercial business and finance matters. His experience includes bankruptcy plans and related disclosure statements, cash collateral and financing orders, asset sales, executory contracts and unexpired leases, and bankruptcy litigation and appeals.

Mr. Lawniczak is a frequent author and lecturer in his field. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy, the leading national treatise on bankruptcy law. He is also the author of the bankruptcy chapters of the Matthew Bender treatises Asset Based Financing and Business Organizations with Tax Planning. He has been listed in multiple editions of Chambers USA as a Leading Lawyer for bankruptcy and restructuring and is recognized as one of the Best Lawyers in America.

Mr. Lawniczak is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, where he served as an editor of the Michigan Law Review.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

76 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on In re McCormick

2008 Emerging Issues 2247

S. Andrew Jurs on In re McCormick

By S. Andrew Jurs

April 30, 2008

SUMMARY: A chapter 13 debtor who was the sole owner of a limited liability company (LLC) was not entitled to have the automatic stay extended to the LLC. Under no provision of the Bankruptcy Code was the LLC, as a nondebtor, entitled to the shield of the stay. Nor was it appropriate that the court exercise its extraordinary powers under Code section 105, because there were no immediate adverse consequences of leaving the LLC unprotected.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Cite as: Jurs, S. Andrew. In re McCormick. LexisNexis Expert Commentary, (Insert date you accessed the document online).

S.D.N.Y Bankruptcy Court Refuses to Extend the Automatic Stay to a Limited Liability Company of Which the Chapter 13 Debtor Was the Sole Owner

In In re McCormick, 381 B.R. 594, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 298 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Feb. 8, 2008), the bankruptcy court confronted whether the court could use its equitable powers under 11 U.S.C. § 105 to extend protection under the automatic stay to a limited liability company (LLC) of which a chapter 13 debtor was the sole member. In its decision, the bankruptcy court rejected the debtors application and found that the LLC was not eligible for protection under chapter 13 and had not filed its own petition under chapters 7 or 11. Furthermore, the debtor had not provided evidence of pending actions against the LLC that would have immediate adverse economic consequences for the debtors bankruptcy estate.

The decision in In re McCormick is noteworthy in that it puts the brakes on debtors attempts to push the limits of the automatic stay under 11 U.S.C. § 362. Increasingly, bankruptcy courts had been invoking their powers under section 105(a), at the behest of debtors, to extend the automatic stay to nondebtors for equitable reasons. By denying the debtors Application in McCormick, the bankruptcy court reaffirmed the tenet that such equitable exceptions are limited and that if a third party wants the protection of the automatic stay, it should file for bankruptcy itself.

Facts and Procedural History. The underlying facts were not disputed, although there was some confusion. The debtor was a self-employed general contractor and also the sole member of his LLC. n1 In the section of his chapter 13 bankruptcy petition labeled Type of Debtor, the debtor selected only the first option, Individual (includes joint debtors).

The second option, Corporation (including LLC and LLP), was not selected.

In his petition, the debtor further indicated that his debts were not primarily consumer debts, a fact which was borne out by his schedules. Among the various creditors listed, there were numerous commercial entities that would have dealt with the debtor as part of his construction business. Many of these claims also were purportedly shared with codebtors, including his spouse and the LLC. Furthermore, according to the petition, the LLC was the debtors employer, from which he earned an individual monthly income of $2,150.26. After deductions, however, the debtor had a total monthly disposable income of $4,255.31. The debtors plan proposed 60 monthly payments of $100.

Eighteen days after submitting his chapter 13 petition, the debtor filed an Application for an extension of the automatic stay to the LLC. In his Application, the debtor predicted imminent irreparable harm to the LLC and his ability to reorganize under chapter 13 if the LLC was not protected by the automatic stay. Although he did not identify exactly what harm would occur, the debtor alluded to creditors collection actions against the LLC and implied that these actions would impact his ability to reorganize.

Legal Background. With the exception of the codebtor stay under 11 U.S.C. § 1301, the general rule is that the automatic stay created at the filing of the bankruptcy petition covers only debtors and not nonfiling codefendants. See Teachers Ins. & Annuity Assn v. Butler, 803 F.2d 61, 65, 15 C.B.C.2d 952 (2d Cir. 1986). Several bankruptcy courts, however, have recognized circumstances in which the bankruptcy courts could use their extraordinary powers under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) to extend the automatic stay to nondebtors. In such cases, the bankruptcy courts foresaw adverse economic consequences that would negatively impact the debtors ability to reorganize if the relief were not granted. In his Application, the debtor contended that his situation was similar to the circumstances in this line of cases in that collection actions against the LLC would render him unable to reorganize under chapter 13.

Bankruptcy Courts Analysis. In reaching its decision to reject the debtors Application, the bankruptcy court engaged in a multipart analysis. At the outset, the bankruptcy court recognized the basic statutory limitations on its ability to shield the LLC under the automatic stay in this case. First, a limited liability company is not qualified to be a debtor under chapter 13, as eligibility to be a debtor under that chapter is limited to only an individual with regular income, 11 U.S.C. § 109(e), and limited liability companies are not individuals under the Bankruptcy Code. Additionally, a limited liability company may not be a codebtor or joint debtor under chapter 13. The codebtor stay of 11 U.S.C. § 1301(a) bars actions to collect all or any part of a consumer debt of the debtor from any individual that is liable on such debt with the debtor. Because the debtor conceded that his debts were not consumer debts, and because the LLC was not an individual under the Bankruptcy Code, it was improper to list the LLC as a codebtor, and the LLC was not entitled to protection under the codebtor stay. Lastly, the bankruptcy court noted that there is [n]o provision in the Code [permitting] an individual and a business to file jointly. Thus, when an LLC and one of its members both seek to file a bankruptcy petition, they must do so separately. 200 Bankr. LEXIS 298, at *8 (quoting In re Calhoun, 52 C.B.C.2d 1060, 312 B.R. 380, 383 (N.D. Iowa 2004)).

The debtor made several other arguments in favor of extending the automatic stay to the LLC, which the bankruptcy court rejected in turn. With regard to the debtors contention that 11 U.S.C. § 1304 allowed him as a chapter 13 debtor to engage in business, the court explained that section 1304 does not, by its terms, extend the automatic stay to limited liability companies. Instead, that sections purpose is to allow a self-employed debtor in a sole proprietorship to continue in that capacity. Although the debtor was self-employed, he had chosen to avail himself of the protection for his assets offered by the limited liability company form. Thus, he excluded himself from the class of self-employed debtors covered by section 1304, and the automatic stay could not be extended to the LLC on that basis.

The bankruptcy court also declined to extend the automatic stay to the LLC under the extraordinary powers granted to the court under section 105(a). In doing so, the bankruptcy court recognized that some courts have extended the automatic stay to nondebtors who are officers, guarantors, sureties, and/or directors of corporations when necessary. See

A.H. Robins Co. v. Piccinin, 788 F.2d 994, 999, 15 C.B.C.2d 235 (4th Cir. 1986) (holding that automatic stay could be extended to enjoin civil proceedings against nondebtors in unusual circumstances); Calpine Corp. v. Nevada Power Co. (In re Calpine Corp.), 354 B.R. 45, 49 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006) (using its section 105 powers to extend the automatic stay and preliminarily enjoin litigation against the chapter 11 debtors surety); Gucci, America, Inc. v. Duty Free Apparel, Ltd., 328 F. Supp. 2d 439 (S.D.N.Y. 2004).

According to the bankruptcy court in McCormick, the extraordinary relief sought by the debtors in these cases can only be granted in limited circumstances. These limited circumstances can occur where the debtor is a corporation and the nondebtor is an individual or related corporation deemed necessary for the reorganization of the debtor corporation. McCormick, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 298, at *16 (citing generally A.H. Robins and Calpine supra). These limited circumstances also can arise in an individual chapter 11 debtors case where the bankruptcy court expands the automatic stay to the debtors wholly owned corporation. Queenie, Ltd. v. Nygard Intl, 321 F.3d 282, 287 (2d Cir. 2003). According to the Second Circuit, though, the automatic stay can apply to nondebtors, but normally does so only when a claim against the nondebtor will have an immediate adverse economic consequence for the debtors estate. Id. Such immediate adverse economic consequences may include (1) a claim against a nondebtor for an obligation for which the debtor is a guarantor, (2) a claim against a debtors insurer, and (3) actions where a judgment against the third-party defendant will have the effect of being a judgment or finding against the debtor. Id.

Applying that standard, and its emphasis on limiting the circumstances under which such relief would be available, to the case at hand, the bankruptcy court found itself unpersuaded that immediate adverse consequences would result from leaving the LLC unprotected by the automatic stay. Although it recognized the debtors concerns that adverse consequences might result and that any action against the LLC may impact the debtors employment and ability to reorganize, the bankruptcy court felt that the debtor did not carry his burden of showing immediate adverse consequences. In particular, the bankruptcy court was troubled by the fact that the debtor never satisfactorily explained why he could not cause the LLC to file its own bankruptcy case, thereby staying all of the pending collection actions. Furthermore, the bankruptcy court observed that the debtors in Calpine and Queenie filed for protection under chapter 11, rather than chapter 13. Without any precedent for expanding the automatic stay in a chapter 13 case, the bankruptcy court stated that it could not enlarge the holdings of Queenie and Calpine to extend the automatic stay to the debtors LLC.

Altogether, the decision in McCormick adds a useful precedent restraining debtors attempts to extend the reach of the automatic stay under section 362. By declining to invoke its equitable powers under section 105(a), the bankruptcy court confirmed that equitable exceptions to the precise statutory boundaries of the automatic stay are limited to extraordinary circumstances. In doing so, the court reinforced the rule that a party is entitled to the protection of the automatic stay only if it files for bankruptcy itself.

For further discussion related to limits on the reach of the automatic stay, see generally Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 362 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

n1 . The debtor actually included two limited liability companies on his Schedule H: Donald J. McCormick Const. and McCormick Construction, LLC. In his Application, though, the Debtor identified an LLC not named in Schedule H, but the bankruptcy court stated that it appeared that Debtor meant Donald J. McCormick Const. when referring to the LLC. Accordingly, the use of the term LLC herein refers only to that LLC.

n2 . At the hearing, the debtor proposed an additional new argument that the automatic stay for the LLC was not only necessary to protect his employment, but that the LLC was also protected as property of the estate. The bankruptcy court admitted that the debtors membership interest in the LLC was personal property which became property of the bankruptcy estate at the filing of his bankruptcy petition. 11 U.S.C. § 541. The bankruptcy court, however, also noted that Debtors property interest in the LLC was restricted to the intangible rights of ownership allowed under the New York limited liability company statute. The impact of collection actions on such intangible rights of ownership were particularly unclear because, according to the debtors petition, the shares in the LLC had no value and the debtor admitted that the LLC was essentially a shell. The debtor simply was unable to provide the bankruptcy court with satisfactory evidence that actions against the LLC would have an immediate adverse consequence on the estates interest in the LLCs stock.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

77 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on In re Lanning

2008 Emerging Issues 2250

S. Andrew Jurs on In re Lanning

By S. Andrew Jurs

April 30, 2008

SUMMARY: The Tenth Circuit BAP held that an above-median debtor's projected disposable income under Code section 1325(b)(1)(B) means something more than current monthly income multiplied by the anticipated number of monthly payments. The decision ameliorates the rigidity of BAPCPAs reliance on formulas to calculate plan payment and allows bankruptcy courts to consider a debtors present financial reality and ability to pay.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Cite as: Jurs, S. Andrew. In re Lanning. LexisNexis Expert Commentary, (Insert date you accessed the document online).

The Tenth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel Holds That Projected Disposable Income Under Section 1325(b)(1)(B) Means More Than Simply Multiplying Current Disposable Income by the Anticipated Number of Monthly Payments

In In re Lanning, 380 B.R. 17 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. Dec. 13, 2007), the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Tenth Circuit (the Tenth Circuit BAP) faced an unusual combination of litigants on the narrow issue of whether projected disposable income under 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B) means more than simply multiplying current disposable income, as calculated on the debtors Form 22C, by the anticipated number of monthly payments. The chapter 13 trustee had appealed the decision of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the District of Kansas affirming the debtors chapter 13 plan, and the United States trustee weighed in (probably to the surprise of many debtors attorneys) with an amicus curiae brief in opposition to the chapter 13 trustees position and in support of the debtors chapter 13 plan. In a concise opinion, the Tenth Circuit BAP affirmed the bankruptcy courts decision and adopted the United States trustees argument that determining projected disposable income requires a forward-looking and reality-based analysis by the bankruptcy court rather than an artificial mathematical computation based on solely historical income figures.

Facts and Procedural History. The parties did not contest the underlying facts, which were presented to the bankruptcy court by stipulation. In 2004, the debtors annual income was $43,147, which increased to $56,516 in 2005. She filed her petition for chapter 13 relief on October 16, 2006, and subsequently filed her Statement of Financial Affairs and schedules in a timely manner. This annual income was above the median annual income for a family of one in Kansas.

Calculating debtors current monthly income, though, was complicated by the fact that, during the six months prior to filing her bankruptcy petition, she received a buy-out as part of her termination by her employer. This buy-out increased debtors monthly income to $11,990 in April 2006 and $15,356 in May 2006. At the time of debtors filing, her actual monthly income (as shown on Schedule I) was $1,922, for an annualized amount of $23,604. Because of the bump in income during April and May as part of the buy-out, however, debtors current monthly income (as determined on her Statement of Current Monthly Income, or Form 22C) was $5,344, or $64,124 annually. Obviously, this annualized current monthly income was well above-median, thereby subjecting debtor to the more rigorous standards for above-median debtors mandated by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (BAPCPA).

According to her Schedule J, the debtors actual monthly expenses were $1,773, while her deductions on Form 22C totaled $4,228. Under the pre-BAPCPA formula of I minus J, the debtor would have $149 in excess monthly income available for plan payments. In contrast, calculating debtors monthly disposable income, under BAPCPA's new rules, on Form 22C shows $1,114 available for plan payments ($5,344 current monthly income minus $4,228 using the standardized deductions).

In its final Order confirming debtors chapter 13 plan (the plan), n1 the bankruptcy court held that the appropriate starting point was to presume that the number resulting from the debtors Form 22C was the debtors projected disposable income unless the debtor could show that there had been a substantial change in circumstances such that the Form 22C figures were not a fair projection of the debtors future budget. The chapter 13 trustee appealed this decision. At the appellate level, the debtor, understandably, declined to participate, so the BAP invited the United States trustee to file an amicus curiae brief on behalf of the debtors position.

Legal Analysis. Section 1325(b)(1)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code allows court approval of a proposed chapter 13 plan over the chapter 13 trustees objection only if the plan provides for payment of all of the debtors projected disposable income to be received during the plan period (emphasis added). The Bankruptcy Code, however, does not define projected disposable income. Instead, the closest analogous term is disposable income, which, under section 1325(b)(2), is calculated for above-median debtors as current monthly income minus the standardized deductions. This computation involves another term, current monthly income, which is defined under section 101(10A) as the average monthly income from all sources that the debtor receives . . . during the 6-month period preceding filing of the petition.

In her appeal, the chapter 13 trustee contended that an above-median debtors projected disposable income is simply a multiple of the debtors disposable income as determined on Form 22C. Under this analysis, the debtors plan would have been required to provide for 60 payments of $1,115, for a total payout of $66,900 over five years. In other words, the trustees interpretation of section 1325(a)(5)(B) would require the debtor to commit to payments she cannot possibly make in order to obtain the protections afforded by bankruptcy. 380 B.R. at 20. n2 The question before the Tenth Circuit BAP, therefore, was whether an above-median debtors projected disposable income could deviate from the debtors current disposable income as determined on Form 22C when there had been a significant change in circumstances. As noted, the Tenth Circuit BAP affirmed the bankruptcy courts decision and adopted the United States trustees argument that determining projected disposable income requires something more than a purely artificial mathematical computation based solely on historical income figures.

Commentary. The BAPs decision in In re Lanning is significant in that it is the first appellate decision resolving whether modifications to projected disposable income are permitted when the debtors current monthly income is above-median. Both earlier decisions by appellate courts regarding projected disposable income involved below-median debtors who experienced a change in circumstances just before the filing of their petitions such that the debtors had actual income substantially greater than their current monthly income.

For example, in In re Kibbe, 361 B.R. 302 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2007), the debtor calculated a negative disposable income on her Form 22C, so she proposed a plan that provided no payments for the benefit of unsecured creditors. The trustee objected because the debtor had obtained a higher paying job shortly before filing her petition, and her actual income was nearly $2,400 more than her expenses. The chapter 13 trustee in Kibbe took a position counter to the position offered by the chapter 13 trustee in Lanning and argued that a bankruptcy court may still consider significant changes in circumstances that cause Form 22Cs monthly disposable income to be an inaccurate projection of a debtors future ability to make plan payments. Both the bankruptcy court and the First Circuit BAP agreed, specifically rejecting the debtors interpretation of projected as a synonym for multiplied.

Similarly, in Pak v. eCast Settlement Corp. (In re Pak), 378 B.R. 257 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. Nov. 7, 2007), the Ninth Circuit BAP was confronted by the case of a below-median debtor whose income increased significantly right before his bankruptcy filing, and who proposed plan payments well below his actual ability to pay. Again, the bankruptcy court and the Ninth Circuit BAP refused to confirm the debtors proposed plan, and the debtors case was in fact dismissed when he refused to propose a new plan paying more to his unsecured creditors.

In both Kibbe and Pak, the appellate panels noted that, although BAPCPA added a definition of disposable income in section 1325(b)(2), BAPCPA linked the new disposable income definition to Form 22Cs calculation of current monthly income, which is a historically based figure, but left unchanged the well-established body of pre-BAPCPA law pertaining to projected disposable income. BAPCPA neither defined nor modified the preexisting term projected disposable income. Before BAPCPA, bankruptcy courts determined projected disposable income by starting with Schedules I and J and then considering other evidence if those schedules did not accurately predict the debtors ability to pay. Consequently, before BAPCPA, projected disposable income was not determined solely by rote application of a mathematical formula.

In reaching its conclusion that, post-BAPCPA, projected disposable income still is not determined only by formula, the Tenth Circuit BAP followed what it considered to be the majority position among bankruptcy courts. Typically, these courts reasoned that the use of the word projected and the phrase to be received by the debtor in section 1325(a)(5)(B) indicates a congressional intent that bankruptcy courts include in their analysis a debtors future ability to pay when determining projected disposable income. If bankruptcy courts did not engage in this forward-looking analysis, the word projected would be superfluous; to these courts, projected disposable income must mean something more than simply disposable income.

Furthermore, in reaching its decision in Lanning, the Tenth Circuit BAP rejected the reasoning of courts which insisted on a narrower interpretation of projected disposable income and the calculations from Form 22C. According to these courts, BAPCPA eliminated bankruptcy courts discretion and made the Form 22C computations binding, regardless of changed circumstances. Such courts refuse to find that the word projected in projected disposable income is as important as the majority of bankruptcy courts have determined. To this minority of courts, projected simply means multiplied.

Agreeing with the decisions in Kibbe and Pak, the Tenth Circuit BAP held that BAPCPA did not affect the practice of inquiring about other factors when computing projected disposable income. Instead, BAPCPA changed only the starting point of the analysis from Schedules I and J to the Form 22C calculation. The Tenth Circuit BAP simply was not willing to believe that Congress, through BAPCPA, intended to eliminate the discretion of bankruptcy courts to deviate from an application of the Form 22C formula when significant changed circumstances support doing so. Therefore, parties contending that the Form 22C disposable income figure does not accurately project the debtors future ability to make plan payments will have to provide documentation supporting their position in order to use this exception to the general rule that the Form 22C figures are binding.

All told, the Tenth Circuit BAPs decision in Lanning adds another precedent ameliorating the rigidity of BAPCPAs reliance on formulas to calculate plan payment rather than allowing a bankruptcy court to use its discretion and consider a debtors present financial reality and ability to pay. If the significant change in circumstances means a debtor should either be paying more or less than the amount calculated on Form 22C, such calculation can be modified to reflect reality in a reasonable manner.

For further discussion related to the determination of projected disposable income for purposes of computing necessary chapter 13 plan payments under BAPCPA, see generally Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1325 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

Return to Text

n1 . The bankruptcy court actually sustained the trustees objection to the debtors plan, but only on the grounds that the debtors plan allowed for the possibility of discharge without making payments for the full five years in violation of section 1325(b)(4). Because the bankruptcy court allowed the debtor to simply notify the chapter 13 trustee and court that she would allow the standard confirmation order to reflect that the plan would run five years, though, she was not required to file an amended plan and the original plan would be confirmed as so modified.

n2 . In its decision, the BAP clearly was upset by the almost punitive nature of the chapter 13 trustees position. For example, the BAP took pains to note that the trustee sought to have the debtor make payments that would leave her only $807 (her actual income of $1,922 minus a monthly plan payment of $1,115) to pay $1,773 in actual expenses. Because the trustee neither alleged that the debtor lacked good faith in filing her petition, nor disputed the debtors actual income and expenses as shown on her Schedules I and J, the BAP remarked that such an outcome seem[s] especially unreasonable. 380 B.R. at 21 n. 11.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

78 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on In re White

2008 Emerging Issues 2225

S. Andrew Jurs on In re White

By S. Andrew Jurs

April 24, 2008

SUMMARY: In In re White, the court considered whether a chapter 13 debtor can take an ownership deduction for a car owned free and clear of any liens. Unlike some courts that have relied on the Internal Revenue Manual in ruling that an ownership expense is not available in that circumstance, the White court rejected incorporation of the IRS's internal standards and held that a deduction is permissible even if the debtor owes no lease of finance payment.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Cite as: Jurs, S. Andrew. In re White. LexisNexis Expert Commentary, (Insert date you accessed the document online).

In Allowing a Chapter 13 Debtor to Take an Ownership Deduction for Two Cars, One of Which Was Owned Free and Clear of All Liens, the Bankruptcy Court Declined to Utilize the Internal Revenue Manual's Interpretations of the IRS Deduction Rules

In In re White, 382 B.R. 751, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 449 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. Feb. 28, 2008), the bankruptcy court clarified the confusing interplay between the Bankruptcy Code and the Internal Revenue Manual, particularly with regard to whether portions of the Manual and its interpretative provisions may have become incorporated in various standards under the Bankruptcy Code.

Facts and Procedural History. On the petition date, the debtors in White owned two automobiles: a Chevrolet pickup truck and a Ford SUV. The Ford was subject to a lien held by debtors' credit union, but the Chevy was owned free and clear of all liens. On their Official Form 22C, debtors, whose income was above-median, claimed an ownership expense deduction for the Ford as Vehicle 1 in the amount of $471.00 and for the Chevy as Vehicle 2 in the amount of $332.00.

The chapter 13 trustee objected to plan confirmation on the grounds that debtors were not allowed to claim an ownership expense deduction on a vehicle owned free and clear. If the allegedly improper ownership expense deduction was backed out, the chapter 13 trustee believed that the plan would fail to provide the minimum payment required by section 1325(b)(1)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code.

The United States trustee supported the chapter 13 trustee's objection and filed a brief espousing this same argument. The United States trustee further argued that Congress's goal under the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act (BAPCPA) was to guarantee that chapter 13 debtors repay creditors the maximum the debtors could afford. In light of this goal, the United States trustee felt that the ownership deduction should be disallowed to debtors not actually making a car payment.

Legal Background. Under Bankruptcy Code section 1325(b)(1)(B), courts may not approve a proposed chapter 13 plan over a chapter 13 trustee's objection if the plan does not provide for payment of all of the debtors projected disposable income to be received during the plan period. The Bankruptcy Code, however, does not define projected disposable income. Instead, the closest analogous term is disposable income, which, under section 1325(b)(2), is calculated for above-median debtors as current monthly income minus the standardized deductions.

The standardized deductions consist of reasonably necessary expenses for, among other things, maintenance or support of a debtor and the debtors dependents. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). Additionally, section 1325(b)(3) provides that section 707(b)(2)(A) governs the determination of such expenses for above-median debtors. Under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), [t]he debtors' monthly expenses shall be the debtors' applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards, and the debtors' actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtors reside. (Emphasis added.)

Debtors and the chapter 13 trustee disputed whether the ownership expense deduction for the unencumbered Chevy was a proper applicable monthly expense amount under this subparagraph and the National and Local Standards. According to debtors, the only factors to consider when determining applicable monthly expense amounts from the IRS's tables involve debtors' date of filing, family size, geographic location, and number of vehicles.

In contrast, the chapter 13 trustee argued that debtors were allowed an automobile ownership interest deduction only if they actually owed money on the vehicle as of the petition date. To reach this conclusion, the chapter 13 trustee contended that BAPCPA not only has incorporated the IRS expense standards by reference, but that by doing so, Congress intended to further incorporate the instructions of the Internal Revenue Manual (the Manual) that accompany those standards. The Manual provides that a taxpayer may not take an ownership expense unless he has an actual debt service or lease payment for the vehicle. The trustee argued that if the National and Local Standards must be applied in bankruptcy, they should be applied in the same manner as they would be by the IRS such that a debtor who has no debt or lease payment may not receive an ownership deduction. In support, the trustee cited the IRS explanatory statement: [T]ransportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments referred to as ownership costs. Thus, according to the trustee, an ownership expense is not applicable unless the debtor has a car payment.

Bankruptcy Court Opinion. As a starting point, the bankruptcy court noted that interpreting the IRS expense allowances is itself a difficult task. n2 It is unclear, according to the bankruptcy court, whether they function:

- (1) As fixed allowances, that are both an entitlement and a cap, whereby a debtors' actual expenditures are disregarded, no matter whether they are more or less than the IRS amounts;
- (2) As a cap but not an entitlement, such that a debtor may deduct only the lesser of his actual expenses or the IRS amount;
- (3) As an entitlement, but not a cap, such that a debtor is allowed to deduct his actual expenses or the IRS amount, whichever is greater.

2008 Bankr. LEXIS 449, at *6. After analyzing both the IRS's National and Local Standards, the bankruptcy court determined that the National Standards, as used by the IRS, are entitlements. Every taxpayer receives the standard full allowance even when the taxpayer's actual expenditures are less. Furthermore, under the National Standards, the taxpayer has the possibility of substantiating a claim for a greater amount. In contrast, the Local Standards for housing and utilities function as a cap, because taxpayers get the lesser of actual expenses or the standard amount. Taxpayers, though, may rebut this presumptive cap and substantiate a higher amount.

Transportation expenses are more complicated because the Local Standard has three components: (1) a single national allowance for public transportation costs available to everyone, even without proof of using public transportation; (2) a single national ownership cost allowance for one or two cars; and (3) an operating cost allowance for one or two cars that varies by place of residence. The transportation Local Standard for the third component, the operating cost allowance, is a presumptive cap, with the taxpayer receiving the lesser of actual expense or the standard expense. Consequently, a taxpayer who owns a car and has a car payment gets an allowed operating expense and an ownership expense, while a taxpayer who owns a car but has no car payment receives only the operating allowance.

To interpret and apply the Local Standards, the bankruptcy court next confronted the question of whether it should consider the IRS Manual as a resource. Some courts have used the Manual to interpret section 707(b)(2)(A) and the term applicable. See In re Talmadge, 371 B.R. 96, 100-01 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2007); In re Slusher, 359 B.R. 290, 308-09 (Bankr. D. Nev. 2007). Other courts have found it inappropriate to consider the Manual in interpreting these provisions. See In re Moorman, 376 B.R. 694, 697-98 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2007); In re Sawdy, 362 B.R. 898, 912-13 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2007); In re Barrett, 371 B.R. 855, 858-59 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 2007); In re Chamberlain, 369 B.R. 519, 525 (Bankr. D.Ariz. 2007); In re Swan, 368 B.R. 12, 18 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2007).

The bankruptcy court in White concurred with this second line of cases and found that use of the Manual would be inappropriate. The court based this conclusion on the fact that the Bankruptcy Code provision refers only to monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Standards, and does not expressly incorporate by reference the Manuals instructions or commentary. In doing so, the bankruptcy court rejected the argument that the Manuals explanatory text is implicitly incorporated in the Bankruptcy Code provision. Instead, the bankruptcy court noted that the Manual simply provides informal, flexible guidelines for field agents negotiating with taxpayers and is only an internal agency rule that is not even enforceable against the IRS. See United States v. Michaud, 860 F.2d 495, 499 (1st Cir. 1988); Groder v. United States, 816 F.2d 139, 142 (4th Cir. 1987). Furthermore, the use of the Manual by the IRS is not similar in the least to its purported use in bankruptcy, nor does the IRS itself use the Standards in a single, uniform manner. Finally, the use of the term applicable, according to the bankruptcy court, indicates intent to disregard the debtors actual circumstances when determining the debtors applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the Standards. In sum, all of these factors weigh against incorporating the Manual into the Bankruptcy Code, a finding which the bankruptcy court believed was consistent with BAPCPAs intended goals:

It is highly unlikely that Congress would elevate a non-mandatory internal IRS guideline, created by an agency with no regulatory authority in bankruptcy, to the status of federal bankruptcy law, and would not do so explicitly but through the obtuse vehicle of the term applicable. . . . Instead, it is much more likely that Congress intended to incorporate only the expressly referenced monthly expense amounts, i.e., the numbers set forth in the Standards, unadorned by any IRS accoutrements.

2008 Bankr. LEXIS 449, at *16.

As to the chapter 13 trustees policy arguments, the bankruptcy court seemed troubled by the fact that, under the trustees reasoning, a debtor would be entitled to take the full amount of the ownership expense deduction for the life of the chapter 13 plan no matter how much or how little was owned on the vehicle, i.e., that the only criteria to be satisfied was that a debtor owed money. As a result, a debtor with only one remaining car payment on the petition date would be entitled to the full deduction for the life of his plan, whereas a debtor who made that car payment one day before the petition date would be entitled to no deduction ever. With this in mind, the bankruptcy court summarily rejected the chapter 13 trustees argument that allowing a debtor with no car payment to deduct the standard ownership allowance would be absurd.

Conclusion. The bankruptcy courts holding in In re White is noteworthy in that it systematically analyzes and limits the extent to which the post-BAPCA Bankruptcy Code has incorporated the IRS's standards and interpretative regulations. In doing so, the bankruptcy court limits the extent of such incorporation to what is expressly contained in section 707(b)(2)(A) and does not allow consideration of the supplemental interpretative guidelines promulgated by the IRS for its own use. As such, the decision in White affirms the position of many bankruptcy courts that the reference to and adoption of the IRS's National and Local Standards under section 707(b)(2)(A) does not mean that the camels nose is under the tent. In the words of the court, the most natural reading of the term applicable, in the context of the IRS standard expense tables, is as a directive to the debtor to choose the amounts that correspond to his particular circumstances. 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 449, at *18.

For further discussion related to the determination of applicable deductions under section 707(b)(2)(A), see generally Collier on Bankruptcy, 7.05 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

Return to Text

n1 . There is a formula for determining current monthly income under section 101(10A) of the Bankruptcy Code, but for purposes of the bankruptcy courts decision in White it was unnecessary to discuss this additional computation.

n2 . With all due respect to Congress and apologies to Winston Churchill, discerning the intended function of the IRS expense allowances is like trying to solve a riddle wrapped in a mystery inside an enigma. 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 449, at *6.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

79 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Mabey on In re Bryan Road

2008 Emerging Issues 2170

Hon. Ralph R. Mabey on In re Bryan Road

By Hon. Ralph R. Mabey

April 17, 2008

SUMMARY: A Florida bankruptcy court enforced a waiver of the automatic stay contained in a prepetition forbearance agreement. While the decision was thoughtfully and cogently considered, the result is questionable for a number of reasons and inflicts unnecessary violence upon the delicate structure of the Bankruptcy Code. Until it is superseded, the decision is a warning signpost for debtors and a guiding signpost for secured creditors.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Cite as: Mabey, Hon. Ralph R. In re Bryan Road, LLC. LexisNexis Expert Commentary, (Insert date you accessed the document online).

Florida Bankruptcy Court Enforces Waiver of the Automatic Stay

Contained in a Prepetition Forbearance Agreement

As creditors lawyers and debtors will attest, the automatic stay is unquestionably among the most important provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. In a recent decision, In re Bryan Road, LLC, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 483 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. Feb. 12, 2008), the bankruptcy court endorsed the long-controversial conclusion that a prepetition waiver of the automatic stay may, in at least some circumstances, be enforced in a subsequent bankruptcy case. Given that the recent tumult in the global capital markets--particularly domestic credit markets--is likely to prompt a fresh wave of defaults and possible bankruptcies, many of which will involve similar prepetition forbearance agreements, Bryan Road is a warning signpost for debtors, and a guiding signpost for secured creditors.

Framing the Debate. One of the overarching functions of the federal bankruptcy law is to provide forums and mechanisms for collective resolution of debtor-creditor matters. Bankruptcy cases resolve the collective action problems created under traditional, nonbankruptcy grab rules. See, e.g., Thomas H. Jackson, The Logic and Limits of Bankruptcy Law 7-19 (1986). Toward this end, 11 U.S.C. § 362(a) provides for an automatic stay of various actions against the debtor and the property of its bankruptcy estate, without which creditors would have every incentive to indulge in the value-destroying race to the courthouse that justifies the enactment of a broad federal regime in the first instance.

The automatic stay, of course, is not all-encompassing. Congress has seen fit to codify a list of actions that are categorically excepted from the stay in section 362(b). Congress periodically expands that list, most recently by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (particularly as to certain financial transactions). Likewise, 11 U.S.C. § 362(d) provides bankruptcy courts with authority to grant relief from the automatic stay on a case-by-case basis, including when cause is present or when the debtor has a filed a single asset real estate case and does not move forward smartly.

Notably, nothing in section 362 provides for the enforcement of a prepetition waiver of the automatic stay. Nevertheless, certain courts have enforced such waivers, particularly when they were executed as part of an earlier bankruptcy case. Bryan Road reinvigorates the debate over this issue as to first lien mortgage foreclosures. In parallel, the debate rages as to the permissible impact of intercreditor agreements upon statutory rights in bankruptcy, such as the automatic stay. See, e.g., Ralph R. Mabey, Enforceability of Intercreditor Provisions: Legal and Practical Considerations, New York University School of Law, The Lawrence P. King and Charles Seligson Workshop on Bankruptcy and Business Reorganization (2006); Mark Berman, Second-Lien Financings: Good, Bad and Ugly, 25-5 Am. Bankr. Inst. J. 1 (June 2006); John C. Murray, Intercreditor Agreements: Are They Enforceable in Bankruptcy, SL004 ALI-ABA 3193, 3204 (July 2005); David Line Batty & Jo Ann J. Brighton, Silent Second Liens--Will Bankruptcy Courts Keep the Peace?, 9 N.C. Banking Inst. 1, 22 (April 2005).

The Facts and Posture of Bryan Road. The debtor (Debtor) in Bryan Road was a real estate developer. The Debtors business involved a dry stack boat storage facility in southern Florida, a warehouse-type building containing 210 separate condominiumized storage spaces. In March 2006, the Debtor borrowed nearly $9 million from Florida Community Bank (the Bank) on a secured basis. Although the relevant security documents were properly executed and filed, the Debtor maintained that the legal description of the storage facility contained in those documents failed to convey a perfected lien to the Bank.

Upon a payment default, the Bank commenced foreclosure proceedings in Florida state court, which resulted in a May 2007 final judgment in the Banks favor. That final judgment scheduled a foreclosure sale for July 25, 2007. Hopeful that it could locate a lender to take the Bank out, the Debtor negotiated a two-month forbearance agreement with the Bank. In that agreement the Debtor agreed that the Bank should be accorded relief from the automatic stay in the event the Debtor filed [sic] for bankruptcy protection as consideration for the Bank entering into the Forbearance Agreement. During negotiations over the forbearance agreement, the Debtor was represented by a very experienced bankruptcy lawyer.

After the Debtor could not locate new financing, it chose to file a chapter 11 bankruptcy petition. The petition was filed the day before the rescheduled foreclosure sale. On the petition date, in addition to the Banks loan, the Debtor also owed approximately $2 million secured by purported second liens to individuals who had posted CDs as collateral for the Debtors construction lender. General unsecured creditors had further filed proofs of claim totaling approximately $973,000.

On October 12, 2007, the Bank filed a motion for relief from the automatic stay, arguing, inter alia, that the Debtors waiver in the forbearance agreement mandated relief from stay. The Banks motion was opposed by the Debtor, the unsecured creditors committee, and the junior secured creditors.

The Bryan Road Opinion. From the considerable case law on the enforceability of prepetition agreements under which a debtor purports to consent to stay relief in the event of a subsequent bankruptcy filing, the court distilled the following general rule:

[P]repetition waivers of stay relief will be given no particular effect as part of initial loan documents; they will be given the greatest effect if entered into during the course of prior (and subsequently aborted) chapter 11 proceedings. Although I agree that stay relief provisions in prior chapter 11 plans are entitled to great respect because they have been negotiated in a plan context and approved after notice to all parties in interest, I conclude that the existence of a prior confirmed reorganization plan is not a condition precedent to the enforceability of a stay relief agreement.

Bryan Road, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 483, at *9.

Having concluded that the enforceability of a stay relief agreement does not necessarily turn on the existence of a prior confirmed reorganization plan, the court further adopted the test used in In re Desai, 282 B.R. 527, 532 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2002). Under that test, four factors should be considered in deciding whether stay relief should be granted pursuant to a prepetition waiver: (1) the sophistication of the party making the waiver; (2) the consideration for the waiver, including the creditors risk and the length of time the waiver covers; (3) whether other parties are affected including unsecured creditors and junior lienholders; and (4) the feasibility of the debtors plan. 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 483, at *10. The Bryan Road court noted that these four factors are not necessarily the only factors which might properly be taken into account but did not expressly reference any additional factors. Id.

As to the first Desai factor, the court thought it weighs heavily in favor of enforcement of the waiver, since the Debtor had present at the signing of the forbearance agreement a very experienced bankruptcy lawyer fully capable of understanding the implications of the Forbearance Agreement. Id.

As to the second factor, the court found it more problematic:

What the Debtor got in exchange for the waiver was a two month breathing space, not a very lengthy period. At the time, however, the Debtor was engaged in refinancing efforts and expected to be able to refinance the Banks loan with another lender. It was unable to do so. Although the consideration given to the Debtor in exchange for the Forbearance Agreement was not in retrospect particularly great, it was what the Debtor wanted at the time the Forbearance Agreement was signed. I cannot say that this consideration was de minimis in this context.

Id. at *1011.

While the third factor appear[ed]--at least on its face--as militating against stay relief due to the adverse effects that could be suffered by the junior lienholders and unsecured creditors, the court essentially collapsed that factor into the fourth factor via a lengthy critique of the Debtors proposed plan. At bottom, the court was quite skeptical of the Debtors valuation expert and was concerned that the viability of the Debtors Plan from a legal standpoint is premised upon litigation. See id. at *15; see also id. (the Debtor proposes to engage in massive litigation as the fundamental basis for its Plan). These twin failings led the court to conclude that the Debtors Plan is speculative at best and not sufficiently feasible to pass muster under the third and fourth Desai factors. See id. at *24.

In summary, the court enforced the waiver contained in the prepetition forbearance agreement, and granted the Banks motion for relief from stay, because the Debtor (1) was represented by sophisticated bankruptcy counsel, (2) received adequate consideration in the form of two months forbearance, and (3) put forth a chapter 11 plan that was little more than a house of cards. See id. at *28.

Commentary on Bryan Road. Although the court thoughtfully and cogently considered the issues raised in Bryan Road, there are several reasons to question whether it reached the proper result.

First, it is fundamental that a chapter 11 filing creates an estate distinct from the debtor, which contains all the debtors legal and equitable property interests as of the petition date. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 541(a); Hamm v. James (In re James), 406 F.3d 1340, 1342 (11th Cir. 2005); Bell v. Bell (In re Bell), 225 F.3d 203, 215 (2d Cir. 2000) (the property of the estate is distinct from the property of the debtor). Although a chapter 11 debtor, as debtor in possession, may enjoy all the rights and powers of a bankruptcy trustee pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1107(a), it always does so as a representative of the bankruptcy estate--a separate legal entity that may have interests at odds with the debtor. n1

It is the bankruptcy estate--the corpus of property and other interests essentially held in trust for the collective good of all creditors--that is the beneficiary of the automatic stay. As such, the rights created by the stay generally should be waivable only by the representative of that estate, not by the prepetition debtor. This is particularly so in light of the fact that neither the right nor the estate itself exists prior to the petition date. Cf. Bank of Am. v. N. LaSalle St. L.P. (In re 203 N. LaSalle St. Pship), 246 B.R. 325, 33032 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2000) (refusing to allow senior creditor to vote junior creditors claim in bankruptcy since [i]t is generally understood that prebankruptcy agreements do not override contrary provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, and it would defeat the purpose of the Code to allow parties to provide by contract that the provisions of the Code should not apply). Indeed, a prepetition contractual waiver of the automatic stay seems dangerously close to a prepetition release of any avoidance actions under 11 U.S.C. §§ 544, 547, 548 or 549, which virtually no court would countenance. In sum, the fundamental remaining rights of the estate, which are unique products of federal bankruptcy law, should not be lightly discarded--particularly since Congress itself has already pruned those rights back to their roots. n2

Second, it is not obvious that the court fully considered the implications of the facts before it. Numerous courts have been reticent to enforce purported contractual waivers of important rights when there is an asymmetrical bargaining relationship between the parties, particularly when one party is in dire financial straits. See, e.g., First Union Natl Bank v. United States, 164 F. Supp. 2d 660, 665 (E.D. Pa. 2001) (refusing to enforce waiver of jury rights in a loan agreement where there was evidence of skewed bargaining power and the debtor was in poor financial straits); OHC Liquidation Trust v. Credit Suisse (In re Oakwood Homes Corp.), 378 B.R. 59, 7273 (Bankr. D. Del. 2007) (same). Under the facts of Bryan Road, there would appear to be a colorable argument that the Debtor did not willfully agree to the purported waiver of the stay, but rather simply acceded to whatever terms the Bank proposed in order to gain a temporary respite. While the fact that a borrower may be on the brink of insolvency ought not be a reason to invalidate every term of a negotiated forbearance agreement (such as an increase in interest rates or the provision of access to insider information), creditors similarly should not be allowed to use their overwhelming leverage in such situations to extract waivers of fundamental rights, particularly when those rights ultimately inure to the benefit of nonparties to the forbearance agreement (as does the automatic stay).

Third, even assuming that the result reached by the court was the proper one, there were alternative routes, within the structures of the Bankruptcy Code itself, that the court could have used to reach that result. For instance, if the courts analysis of the flaws in the Debtors plan and unduly optimistic valuation of the storage facility was correct, then those factors might have constituted cause to grant relief under section 362(d)(1). Furthermore, the storage facility itself appears to have been real property constituting a single property or project that may have met the other elements that Code section 101(51A) provides for the term single asset real estate. If so, the Bank in Bryan Road could have asked the court to hold the Debtors feet to the fire pursuant to section 362(d)(3), which may also have resulted in relief from the stay. The important point is that either of these paths would have proceeded under the plain terms of the Bankruptcy Code, and would not have required the court to give effect to the prepetition waiver. Beyond preserving the internal integrity of the statute, these alternative approaches would also have ensured that the Debtors other creditors--the parties in interest who were most affected by the Banks relief from the stay--enjoyed the procedural protections required under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4001(a).

In sum, Bryan Road is an important opinion that may inflict unnecessary violence upon the delicate structure codified in the Bankruptcy Code. Until the decision is superseded, attorneys representing lenders seem well advised to request that waivers of the stay be part of all prepetition forbearance agreements; the downside to including such a term seems minimal, and the upside may be significant if a court later enforces the waiver. Debtors attorneys, particularly those likely to be labeled sophisticated, now have a fresh reason to be quite skeptical of requests for these types of waivers. In the meantime, broader debate about the issue will undoubtedly continue.

For further discussion of the automatic stay, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 362 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

Return to Text

n1 . The possibility of the debtor acting in a fashion at odds with the estates interests is highlighted by the presence of 11 U.S.C. § 549, which allows the trustee to avoid an unauthorized post-petition transfer of property of the estate.

n2 . See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(6), (7), (17), (27); 11 U.S.C. § 546(e), (f), (g), (j); 11 U.S.C. §§ 555, 556, 559, 560, 561. Notwithstanding the extraordinarily broad language of certain of these provisions, courts have rightly attempted to anchor them to underlying policy principles so as to avoid absurd results. See, e.g., Hutson v. Smithfield Packing Co. (In re Natl Gas Distribs., LLC), 369 B.R. 884 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. 2007) (limiting the scope of swap agreement in the context of simple commodity supply agreement); see also, e.g., Redback Networks, Inc. v. Mayan Networks Corp. (In re Mayan Networks Corp.), 306 B.R. 295 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2004) (refusing to allow parties to use letter of credit agreements to contract around the section 502(b)(6) cap).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Ralph R. Mabey is Senior of Counsel to Stutman Treister & Glatt P.C., www.stutman.com, Professor of Law at the S. J. Quinney College of Law, University of Utah, and a Contributing Author to Collier on Bankruptcy. He received his law degree from Columbia University, where he served on the Board of Editors of the Columbia Law Review. Judge Mabey served with distinction as a United States Bankruptcy Judge before returning to private practice and teaching. His judicial opinions have been cited frequently by courts and scholars.

Judge Mabey is the past President and Chair of the American College of Bankruptcy. He served as an appointee of the Chief Justice of the United States to the U.S. Judicial Conferences Advisory Committee on the Bankruptcy Rules. He also served as the managing editor of the Norton Bankruptcy Law Adviser and on the Editorial Advisory Board of the American Bankruptcy Law Journal.

He is a member of the National Bankruptcy Conference, the American Law Institute, and the American Bar Associations Select Advisory Committee on Business Reorganization (SABRE).

Judge Mabey's service in complex workout, bankruptcy, reorganization, and litigation matters includes A.H. Robins Company (as examiner with expanded powers); Dow Corning (as counsel for certain bondholders); Columbia Gas System (as equity committee counsel); Federated Department Stores (as counsel for the official pre-merger bondholders committee); TWA (as counsel for the pilots); American Airlines (as counsel for the pilots); Enron (as special counsel for the debtor); Cajun Electric Power Cooperative (as chapter 11 trustee); Boston Chicken (as an expert witness); and At Home/Excite (as an expert witness).

Courts, parties, and the Department of Justice (U.S. Trustee Program) have appointed Judge Mabey to serve as mediator, arbitrator, examiner, or trustee in Alaska, Arizona, California, Louisiana, Michigan, New York, Texas, Utah, Virginia, and Washington, D.C.

Judge Mabey is a member of the New York and Utah Bars.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

80 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Jurs on In re Barfknecht

2008 Emerging Issues 2157

S. Andrew Jurs on In re Barfknecht

By S. Andrew Jurs

April 16, 2008

SUMMARY: In evaluating a trustees objection of a debtors chapter 13 plan, the court is to consider whether all of the debtors projected disposable income is being used to fund the plan. This term is not explicitly defined in the Bankruptcy Code, and in deciding whether it includes Social Security benefits, a bankruptcy court in the Western District of Texas has taken a common-sense approach.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Cite as: Jurs, S. Andrew. In re Barfknecht. LexisNexis Expert Commentary, (Insert date you accessed the document online).

Social Security Benefits Should Not Be Included When Calculating a Below-Median Debtors Projected Disposable Income under 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b), and Exclusion of Such Benefits from a Plan Is Not Bad Faith Per Se under Section 1325(a)(3)

In In re Barfknecht, 378 B.R. 154 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. Nov. 7, 2007), the bankruptcy court wrestled with the issue of whether projected disposable income under 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b) includes Social Security benefits, including supplemental security income benefits for a disabled person. In its opinion, the bankruptcy court rejected the chapter 13 trustees effort to include the Social Security benefits as projected disposable income and further held that the debtors were not obligated to include the Social Security benefits; nor was it bad faith per se for them to retain the Social Security benefits even though their unsecured creditors would not be paid in full.

Facts and Procedural History. The debtors n1 earned income below the median family income for households of the same size and locality, and received monthly benefits under the Social Security Act. The debtors did not list their monthly Social Security benefits on Form 22C, in accordance with the forms directions and the specific language of section 101(10A) of the Bankruptcy Code. On each debtors Schedule I, though, Social Security benefits were listed as income in light of that official forms directions. In an effort to make sure that the schedules accurately (in the debtors view) reflected the debtors actual disposable income, the debtors in both cases backed out some or all of that income line item as an expense on their Schedule J forms.

More specifically, on the Barfknechts Schedule I, they listed a total of $1,759 in monthly Social Security benefits.

In their initial Schedule J, the Barfknechts backed out only $800 of these Social Security benefits as a purported expense with a notation that the Social Security benefits were not considered income. In an amended Schedule J, they voluntarily reduced this figure to $180, thus providing an even greater amount of their benefits to fund their chapter 13 plan. In his objection to confirmation, the chapter 13 trustee contended that the Bankruptcy Code required the Barfknechts to commit the entire amount of their Social Security benefits to their chapter 13 plan.

In her case, Ms. DeMattios initial Schedule I did not list any Social Security benefits, but she later amended her Schedule I to list monthly Social Security benefits of $945. In her amended Schedule J, though, Ms. DeMattio backed out all of these Social Security benefits with a notation that they are Not Considered Income. Accordingly, Ms. DeMattio apparently intended to fund her chapter 13 plan with only monthly wages and none of her Social Security benefits.

In each case, the debtors did not offer enough money to pay their unsecured indebtedness in full.

Legal Analysis. Under Bankruptcy Code section 1325(b)(1)(B), courts may not approve a proposed chapter 13 plan over a chapter 13 trustee's objection if the plan does not provide for payment of all of the debtors projected disposable income to be received during the plan period (emphasis added). Because the Bankruptcy Code, however, does not define projected disposable income, the chapter 13 trustee argued that the forward-looking nature of this term makes it independent of the definitions of current monthly income (CMI) and disposable income which specifically exclude benefits received under the Social Security Act. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(10A), 1325(b)(2). According to this argument, Form 22C and its calculation of disposable income from CMI involve only historical figures as of the filing date of the petition without any inquiry into a debtors future ability to pay (which is the debtors projected disposable income).

In contrast, the debtors contended that the language of the statute is clear and cannot be ignored. Even assuming that projected disposable income is forward-looking, the debtors assert that the phrase incorporates disposable income, which is a defined term under the Bankruptcy Code that explicitly excludes Social Security benefits. Thus, according to this argument, the analysis of the debtors ability to pay can be forward-looking while still excluding Social Security benefits from income before the analysis even begins.

A further question before the bankruptcy court involved the trustee's allegation that the debtors refusal to use all of their benefits to pay creditors, who will not receive 100 percent payment, constitutes bad faith. Simply following the Bankruptcy Codes technical requirements does not constitute good faith, the trustee maintained, if the debtors actually retain any form of revenue that could go to the benefit of the unsecured creditors. The debtors countered by asking how it could be bad faith to retain Social Security benefits, which the Bankruptcy Code does not consider income, and to do exactly what the Code permits.

Commentary

Social Security Benefits Are Not Included in Computing Projected Disposable Income. The decision in In re Barfknecht is significant in that it uses common sense to analyze how the undefined term projected disposable income is not independent from other definitions and provisions in the Bankruptcy Code.

A minority of bankruptcy courts have used a narrow interpretation of projected disposable income and determined that Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (BAPCPA) eliminated bankruptcy courts discretion to assess a debtors changed circumstances. The majority of bankruptcy courts, however, have found that the term projected disposable income is sufficiently forward-looking to allow bankruptcy courts to look beyond the historical figures contained on a debtors Form 22C and consider changes in the debtors circumstances, as reflected on Schedules I and J, in computing the debtors projected disposable income. For example, in In re Kibbe, 361 B.R. 302 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2007), a debtor calculated a negative disposable income on her Form 22C, so she proposed a plan that provided no payments for the benefit of unsecured creditors. The trustee in Kibbe objected because the debtors new job, obtained shortly before the petition date, gave her an actual income nearly $2,400 more than her expenses. The bankruptcy court and First Circuit BAP agreed that a bankruptcy court may consider significant changes in circumstances that cause a Form 22Cs monthly disposable income calculation to be an inaccurate projection of a debtors future ability to make plan payments. See also In re Lanning, 380 B.R. 17 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2007) (projected disposable income under section 1325(b)(1)(B) means more than simply multiplying current disposable income by the anticipated number of monthly payments); Pak v. eCast Settlement Corp. (In re Pak), 378 B.R. 257 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. Nov. 7, 2007) (refusing to confirm plan of below-median debtor whose income increased significantly right before bankruptcy filing but who proposed plan payments well below actual ability to pay).

In Barfknecht, the trustee was attempting to push the envelope of this majority position even further by arguing that the bankruptcy court not only is free to ignore prepetition figures in determining projected disposable income, but that the bankruptcy court should rely only on forward-looking data.

In rejecting the trustees argument, the court in Barfknecht noted that it was unnecessary to read current monthly income (and its limitations as to what constitutes income) out of the statute in order to arrive at a sensible understanding of projected disposable income. Instead, the court found that it could not (and should not) ignore the definition of CMI:

[Considering forward-looking figures to determine projected disposable income] does not mean that § 101(10A)s definition of current monthly income is irrelevant to the calculation of projected disposable income. Section 101(10A) continues to apply inasmuch as it describes the sources of revenue that constitute income, as well as those that do not.

378 B.R. 154, 161 (emphasis in original; quoting In re Hardacre, 338 B.R. 718, 723 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2006)). Thus, the clear directive in section 101(10A) that current monthly income explicitly exclude Social Security benefits is binding as to what constitutes income for purposes of computing projected disposable income. According to Bankruptcy Judge Clark, a plain reading of the statute demands that benefits received under the Social Security Act do not count as income for any purposes. . . . An exclusion is an exclusion, whether looking backward or looking forward. Id. at 16162.

It Was Not Bad Faith Per Se for the Debtors to Propose Plans in Which Unsecured Creditors Would Not Be Paid In Full and the Debtors Would Retain Some or All of Their Social Security Benefits. Once it determined that the debtors Social Security benefits were not income to be included in the debtors projected disposable income, the bankruptcy court faced the additional question of whether the debtors chapter 13 plans were proposed in bad faith. The trustee based this allegation of bad faith on a small number of decisions holding that, notwithstanding the express exclusion of Social Security benefits from disposable income, debtors engage in bad faith when they accumulate savings over the life of their plans while paying unsecured creditors less than 100 percent. See, e.g., In re Upton, 363 B.R. 528, 53637 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2006) (requiring debtor to demonstrate that plan was not in bad faith when debtor did not commit $539 in Social Security benefits).

Bankruptcy Judge Clark rejected the trustees allegation of bad faith, first, on the grounds that the trustee sought to have the bankruptcy court create a per se rule that any retention of income must necessarily be bad faith. As the bankruptcy court noted, a per se rule would run counter to the Fifth Circuits requirement that bad faith be judged only under a totality of the circumstances test. In re Chaffin, 816 F.2d 1070, 1074 (5th Cir. 1987). The bankruptcy court also rejected the allegation of bad faith because, according to the court, the explicit treatment of Social Security benefits in the Bankruptcy Code would be swallowed up by a per se rule and thus be rendered a nullity.

Applying the totality of circumstances test to the facts at hand, the bankruptcy court observed that the trustee had not alleged any peculiar circumstances, other than the retention of Social Security benefits, demonstrating debtors lack of good faith. There was no allegation that the debtors proposed their plans with intent not to fulfill them, nor did the trustee argue that the debtors had proposed the plans for any purpose not permitted by the Bankruptcy Code. Instead, [i]f anything, the enactment of BAPCPA calls into doubt whether a debtors retention of Social Security benefits may ever be a factor to consider under the good faith standard, 378 B.R. at 164, because the Bankruptcy Code specifically excludes Social Security benefits from income for purposes of satisfying the debtors ability to pay test. [I]t strikes this court at least as an odd reading of the Code indeed to conclude that a debtors following the Code, without more, could constitute abuse of the bankruptcy process. Id. at 165 (emphasis in original).

All told, the decision in Barfknecht adds another precedent, although on a very limited issue, clarifying what BAPCPA and its new rules and forms have changed regarding the calculation of projected disposable income. By rejecting the trustees attempts to extend BAPCPAs new terms, the bankruptcy court in Barfknecht upheld its ability to apply common sense to the Bankruptcy Codes provisions relating to (1) what constitutes disposable income and (2) good faith in retaining money that is not included in disposable income.

For further discussion related to the determination of projected disposable income for purposes of computing necessary chapter 13 plan payments under BAPCPA, see generally Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1325 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

Return to Text

n1 . The decision actually covers two bankruptcy cases. In one matter, debtors Joel and Mary Barfknecht filed their bankruptcy case on July 17, 2007. In the other case, Julia DeMattio filed her voluntary chapter 13 petition on June 4, 2007. For simplicity sake, they shall be collectively referred to as debtors unless referenced individually.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

S. Andrew Jurs received his B.A. for both Economics and History in 1991 from Duke University, and his J.D. in 1994 from the Emory University School of Law. For the two years after graduation from law school, Mr. Jurs had the honor of clerking for United States District Court Judge James G. Carr of the Northern District of Ohio. Since 1996, Mr. Jurs has gained substantial experience in bankruptcy, workouts, and creditors rights, and has become a Board Certified Specialist in Consumer and Business Bankruptcy Law. Author of numerous short pieces on bankruptcy law in various publications, including the American Bankruptcy Institute Journal and the Banking Law Journal, Mr. Jurs also has lectured widely on bankruptcy issues. He resides in Gastonia, North Carolina.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

81 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Glosband on In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master)

2008 Emerging Issues 2158

Daniel M. Glosband on In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master)

By Daniel M. Glosband

April 16, 2008

SUMMARY: May a bankruptcy judge question the presumption that a debtors place of registration is its centre of main interests if the debtor has met the requirements for recognition of a foreign proceeding as a foreign main proceeding under 11 U.S.C. § 1517(a)(2) and (3) and there are no objections to the debtors chapter 15 petition? A bankruptcy judge denied chapter 15 recognition of a foreign-registered hedge fund's Cayman Islands liquidation.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: A Cold Day in the Caymans: Bankruptcy Court Denies Recognition of Basis Yield Funds Cayman Proceedings Under Chapter 15 of the Bankruptcy Code

In In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37 (Bankr. D.N.Y. 2008), a United States Bankruptcy Judge affirmed his authority to question the presumption that a debtors place of registration is its center of main interests (COMI) even if there are no objections to the chapter 15 petition. In determining a motion for summary judgment on a petition for chapter 15 recognition of the Cayman liquidation proceedings of Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master) (Basis Yield or the Fund), the bankruptcy court reflected a proper understanding that eligibility for recognition under chapter 15 of the United States Bankruptcy Code (the Code), and the assistance that flows from such recognition, should be reserved for those cases where the debtor has provided evidence that it has a tangible presence in the foreign jurisdiction.

The Facts and Posture of Basis Yield. Basis Yield, which invested in various structured credit securities, was incorporated by Basis Capital Fund Management, an Australian firm based in Sydney, in the Cayman Islands as an exempted limited liability company pursuant to section 193 of the Companies Law and maintains its registered office in the Cayman Islands. Subsequent to the volatility in the global credit markets, in an all too familiar pattern, Basis Yield suffered a significant devaluation of the assets in its portfolio and the Funds trade counterparties made margin calls which Basis Yield was unable to satisfy. Following the issuance of default notices and the exercise by trade counterparties of their contractual rights to seize or sell assets of Basis Yield subject to secured repurchase agreements, Basis Yields shareholders authorized the filing of a voluntary petition to liquidate the Fund in the Cayman Islands. The Grand Court of the Cayman Islands entered an order appointing joint provisional liquidators (the JPLs) of Basis Yield (the Cayman proceeding).

The JPLs filed a petition (the Petition) in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York (the Court) seeking recognition of the Cayman proceeding as a foreign main proceeding under section 1517(b)(1) n1 of the United States Bankruptcy Code (the Code). n2 In the Petition, the JPLs set forth that Basis Yield was registered in the Cayman Islands pursuant to section 193 of the Companies Law (2004 Revision) and maintained a registered office there. The JPLs also advised the Court that the Funds financial books and records were maintained in the Cayman Islands and provided information regarding Basis Yields investors, administrator, investment manager, attorneys and auditors all of which were also Cayman Island entities.

As noted by the Court, the Petition was, however:

Strikingly silent as to the nature or extent of any business activity Basis Yield conducts (or in the relevant times conducted) in the Cayman Islands. Likewise, it was silent, inter alia, as to whether Basis Yield staffed any employees or managers in the Cayman Islands; whether any of its assets were in the Cayman Islands; and the location from which Basis Yields Funds were in fact managed. n3

Subsequent to a hearing on the JPLs Request for Entry of Preliminary Injunction (the Request) to block the continuation of litigation and the seizure of assets, the Court granted the Request and issued an Order re Upcoming Hearing on Motion for Recognition concerning the factual matters that were raised, as well as those factual matters not addressed, in the Petition (the Factual Matters Order). Pursuant to the Factual Matters Order, the JPLs were to use best efforts to introduce evidence sufficient for the Court to make factual findings at an evidentiary hearing regarding recognition of the Cayman proceeding with respect to specified matters relevant to a determination of whether Basis Yield had its COMI or maintained an establishment in the Cayman Islands. n4

Prior to the recognition hearing, the JPLs obtained permission from the Court to file a motion for summary judgment (the Motion) in which they relied solely on the information proffered in the Petition without introducing the evidence called for in the Factual Matters Order. Relying on the facts that Basis Yield is registered in the Cayman Islands and that no objections to recognition had been filed, n5 the JPLs argued in support of the Motion that the Cayman Islands was the COMI of Basis Yield pursuant to section 1516(c) n6 of the Code because in the absence of evidence to the contrary, a debtors COMI is presumed to be the location of its registered office. Accordingly, the JPLs argued, the Court must grant the Motion and recognize the Cayman proceeding as a foreign main proceeding as a matter of law. The Motion sharply focused the issue of the strength of the section 1516(c) presumption and the Courts right to question and require evidence on the debtors COMI in the absence of any objections.

The Basis Yield Opinion. The Court found that there was no question that the JPLs had satisfied two of the three requirements for recognition contained in section 1517(a) of the Code, namely that (i) the JPLs met the definitions of person n7 and foreign representative n8 in satisfaction of section 1517(a)(2) and (ii) that the JPLs fulfilled the application prerequisites of section 1515 n9 in satisfaction of section 1517(a)(3). To prevail on a petition for recognition, however, the Court noted the JPLs must satisfy each of the three requirements of section 1517(a) of the Code n10, i.e., was the foreign proceeding a foreign main proceeding, a foreign non-main proceeding or neither?

Accordingly, the recognition sought by the JPLs on summary judgment turned on whether the JPLs had shown that the Cayman proceeding was a foreign main proceeding as defined in Section 1502 n11 of the Code. The Court framed the issues before it as:

whether, on the evidence before the Court, the [JPLs] have shown the propriety of such as a matter of law, and without regard to any other facts and whether the Court has the right to consider all of the facts when the JPLs elected not to put them forth and instead elected to rely on a statutory presumption embodied in section 1516 of the Code. n12

The Court repeated the array of factors that the bankruptcy court in In re SPhinX, LTD., 351 B.R. 103 (Bankr. D.N.Y. 2006), found probative regarding such determination; n13 in contrast, the Court noted the silence is deafening with respect to such factors or the lack of any other pertinent facts to support the existence of the foreign main proceeding. n14 Given the insufficiency of facts in the record supporting a foreign main proceeding, the Court turned its inquiry as to whether the presumption embodied in section 1516(c) legally excused the JPLs from proffering such evidence.

Pursuant to section 1516(c), the JPLs argued that so long as they have met the requirements for recognition set forth in sections 1517(a)(2) and (3) summary judgment and recognition of the Cayman proceeding as a foreign main proceeding must be granted by the Court absent any objections or facts before the Court to the contrary. The Court rebuked the JPLs argument and noted that there indeed was evidence to the contrary in the record, namely, that the registration of Basis Yield as an exempted company under sections 193 n15 and 184 n16 of the Cayman Companies Law raised red flags as to whether the Cayman Islands could be Basis Yields COMI. n17 While careful not to rule out circumstances under which Basis Yield could engage in activities in the Cayman Islands sufficient to make a COMI showing and still comply with the requirements applicable to exempted companies, Judge Gerber found that no facts to support such circumstances had been shown by the JPLs to support summary judgment. n18

The Court next examined whether the lack of objection by other parties in interest or section 1516(c) itself bound the Court to close its eyes to the lack of evidentiary support to find that the Cayman proceeding was a foreign main proceeding. n19 Noting that a textual analysis of Code sections 1516 and 1517 was inconclusive as to whether the Court was so bound, the Court looked to the discussion in the Guide to Enactment of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Insolvency on the Model Laws corollary provision to section 1516(c) of the Code which affirms the proposition that a court can question the presumption of COMI and call for or assess other evidence. n20 The Court further relied upon Judge Liflands rejection in In re Bear Stearns High-Grade Structured Credit Strategies Master Fund, Ltd., 374 B.R. 122 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007), of the notion that the failure of interested parties to object is binding upon the bankruptcy court in determining whether the requirements of section 1517 have been satisfied. The Court agreed with Judge Lifland that dicta in the SPhinX decision to the contrary was not controlling to the extent that it would make the recognition determination by a bankruptcy court a rubber stamp exercise. n21 Finally, the Court turned to the endorsement of commentators, including the author, who have agreed with the view that a bankruptcy court always has the power to make its own determination under section 1517 regardless of the section 1516(c) presumption and the lack of objection by interested parties. n22

In specifically addressing whether the section 1516(c) presumption bound the Courts determination, the Court reiterated the statements contained in the Guide and by Judge Lifland in Bear Stearns. Furthermore, the Court found that section 1516(c) merely creates a rebuttable presumption and does not shift the burden of proof in supporting a petition for recognition away from the moving party, the JPLs. n23 Lastly, the Court relied on the well established authority of a court to call witnesses, on its own motion, as embodied in Federal Rule of Evidence 614. n24

Before reaching his holding on the Motion, Judge Gerber gave helpful examples to practitioners of the simple allegations that a movant can make which would normally be more than sufficient to give a court comfort that reliance on the section 1516 presumption is appropriate n25 and comport with the purposes of the presumption--speed and convenience, and to save stakeholders costs in straightforward cases. n26 Among these simple allegations, inter alia, are: (i) location of the debtors headquarters, (ii) primary location of the debtors assets, (iii) when the debtor began transacting business in the asserted COMI, and (iv) the location where the majority of the contracts relating to the debtors business were written. n27 According to the Court, such basic statements will make apparent that the jurisdiction of the debtor is its COMI in most cases and that the section 1516 presumption would be useful, and would rarely, if ever, be second guessed. n28

As such simple allegations were absent from the JPLs Petition and Motion, and in light of the Courts analysis that the Court is not bound in making its recognition determination pursuant to section 1517 by either the failure of interested parties to object or the section 1516(c) presumption where insufficient evidence has been put forth or evidence to the contrary exists, the Court properly denied the Motion upon grounds that genuine issues of material fact existed with respect to Basis Yields COMI and recognition could not be granted as a matter of law. n29

Commentary on Basis Yield. While the holding in Basis Yield may cause companies registered in foreign countries some concern regarding the prospects for U.S. recognition of their foreign proceeding, the jurisprudence that has emerged from cases like Basis Yield and Bear Stearns, properly reflects, as the author has previously stated, that there is a U.S. legislative policy to provide the assistance of its bankruptcy courts only to those foreign bankruptcy proceedings that are premised on a tangible presence of the debtor in the foreign jurisdiction. n30 Here, the record is not yet clear on whether the foreign domicile of the debtor is only a technicality or whether the debtor has the requisite economic presence in the Cayman Islands to qualify the foreign proceeding for recognition. The JPLs still have an opportunity to present their case.

What Basis Yield correctly makes clear is that the absence of objection by interested parties is irrelevant to the courts duty: (i) under chapter 15 of the Code to determine whether a debtors petition for recognition and other documents on the record satisfy the procedural requirements of section 1515 and the definitional requirements of sections 1501 and 1517, n31 and (ii) to determine if the movant on a motion for summary judgment has met its burden to establish the absence of any genuine issues of material facts. As seen in Bear Stearns, a judge may deny recognition subsequent to an evidentiary hearing on recognition where evidence to the contrary exists on the record. n32 Here, Judge Gerber points out that the election of the debtor not to proffer proper evidence may be fatal, even if unopposed, when possibly contradicted by the very foreign statutes under which the debtor is organized.

Off-shore registration may have real benefits to a debtor resulting from foreign tax and regulatory schemes, but if the debtor cannot make even the simple allegations highlighted by Judge Gerber in support of a COMI or an establishment in the foreign domicile, the debtor may be well advised to contact its American lawyers instead of, or in addition to, Cayman liquidators. Indeed, Basis Yield is encouraging to those debtors who have a colorable argument to a foreign COMI or establishment and have put forth the basic facts. In such cases, as Judge Gerber notes, a bankruptcy court would be unlikely to second guess the presumption embodied in section 1516(c) absent the objection of an interested party.

For more information on sections 1502, 1515, 1516, 1517 of the Bankruptcy Code, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1502, 1515, 1516 and 1517 (Matthew Bender).

For more information on Chapter 15 of the Bankruptcy Code in general, see Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide, ch. 19 (Matthew Bender) and Collier International Business Insolvency Guide, ch. 8, ch. 9 and ch. 10 (Matthew Bender).

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 The provisions of section 1517 relevant to this article provide:

(a) Subject to section 1506, after notice and a hearing, an order recognizing a foreign proceeding shall be entered if--

(1) such foreign proceeding for which recognition is sought is a foreign main proceeding or foreign nonmain proceeding within the meaning of section 1502;

(2) the foreign representative applying for recognition is a person or body; and

(3) the petition meets the requirements of section 1515.

(b) Such foreign proceeding shall be recognized--

(1) as a foreign main proceeding if it is pending in the country where the debtor has the center of its main interests; or n2 In the alternative, the JPLs sought recognition in the Petition of the Cayman proceeding as a foreign non-main proceeding, but did not seek such relief in the Motion (defined infra) subject to the Courts decision.

(2) as a foreign nonmain proceeding if the debtor has an establishment within the meaning of section 1502 in the foreign country where the proceeding is pending.

n3 In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 42 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n4

[4] In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 43 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n5

[5] One creditor, Citigroup, noted the deficiencies with respect to the evidence proffered by the JPLs in the Petition concerning the establishment of Basis Yields COMI or whether it has an establishment in the Cayman Islands in Citigroups Response to the Request. Citigroup did not, however, object to recognition of the Cayman proceeding as a foreign main proceeding.

n6

[6]. Section 1516 of the Code provides that [i]n the absence of evidence to the contrary, the debtors registered office . . . is presumed to be the center of the debtors main interests.

n7

[7] As such term is defined in section 101(41) of the Code.

n8

[8] As such term is defined in section 101(24) of the Code.

n9

[9] Section 1515 of the Code provides:

(a) A foreign representative applies to the court for recognition of a foreign proceeding in which the foreign representative has been appointed by filing a petition for recognition.

(b) A petition for recognition shall be accompanied by--

(1) a certified copy of the decision commencing such foreign proceeding and appointing the foreign representative;

(2) a certificate from the foreign court affirming the existence of such foreign proceeding and of the appointment of the foreign representative; or

(3) in the absence of evidence referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2), any other evidence acceptable to the court of the existence of such foreign proceeding and of the appointment of the foreign representative.

(c) A petition for recognition shall also be accompanied by a statement identifying all foreign proceedings with respect to the debtor that are known to the foreign representative.

(d) The documents referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) shall be translated into English. The court may require a translation into English of additional documents.

n10 In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 46 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n11

[11] Section 1502(4) of the Code defines a foreign main proceeding as a foreign proceeding pending in the country where the debtor has the center of its main interests.

n12 In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 47 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n13

[13] Specifically, the Court quoted the factors from the SPhinX case:

the location of the debtor's headquarters; the location of those who actually manage the debtor (which, conceivably could be the headquarters of a holding company); the location of the debtor's primary assets; the location of the majority of the debtor's creditors or of a majority of the creditors who would be affected by the case; and/or the jurisdiction whose law would apply to most disputes.

In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 47 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008) citing In re SPhinX, LTD., 351 B.R. 103, 117 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006).

n14 In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 48 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n15

[15] Section 193 of the Cayman Companies Law states:

An exempted company shall not trade in the Islands with any person, firm or corporation except in furtherance of the business of the exempted company carried on outside the Islands:

Provided that nothing in this section shall be construed so as to prevent the exempted company effecting and concluding contracts in the Islands and exercising in the Islands all of its powers necessary for the carrying on of its business outside of the Islands.

n16 Section 184 of the Cayman Companies Law states:

A proposed exempted company applying for registration as an exempted company shall submit to the Registrar a declaration signed by a subscriber to the effect that the operation of the proposed exempted company will be conducted mainly outside the islands.

n17 In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 48 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n18

[18] In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 49 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n19

[19] In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 50 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n20

[20] In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 51 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n21

[21] In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 52 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n22

[22] In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 52 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008) citing, among others, Daniel Glosband, Sphinx Chapter 15 Opinion Misses the Mark, 25-10 ABIJ 44. As the Motion before the Court was for summary judgment, Judge Gerber noted that the procedural posture was also relevant, as the absence of objections to recognition of Basis Yields COMI neither obviated the burden of proof of the JPLs to establish that no genuine issues of material fact existed nor precluded the Court from concluding that such genuine issues of material fact exist on the record with respect to the recognition of the Cayman proceeding. In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 52 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n23

[23] In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 53 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n24

[24] Federal Rule of Evidence 614 states:

Calling and Interrogation of Witnesses by Court

a) Calling by court. The court may, on its own motion or at the suggestion of a party, call witnesses, and all parties are entitled to cross-examine witnesses thus called.

b) Interrogation by court. The court may interrogate witnesses, whether called by itself or by a party.

n25 In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 54 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008). Albeit, in the absence of any objection or evidence to the contrary. In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 54 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n26

[26] In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 52 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n27

[27] In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 52 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n28

[28] In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 55 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

n29

[29] In re Basis Yield Alpha Fund (Master), 381 B.R. 37, 55 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008)

n30

[30] Daniel Glosband, Bankruptcy Court Rejects Cayman Proceedings of Bear Stearns Hedge Funds, 26-8 ABIJ 38.

n31 See Daniel Glosband, Sphinx Chapter 15 Opinion Misses the Mark, 25-10 ABIJ 44.

n32

[32] See In re Bear Stearns High-Grade Structured Credit Strategies Master Fund, Ltd., 374 B.R. 122 (Bankr. D.N.Y. 2007).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Daniel Glosband is a partner in Goodwin Procter LLPs Financial Restructuring Practice, www.goodwinprocter.com. He recently represented the lead investors in the confirmed Chapter 11 plan of US Airways and its merger with America West and the fiduciaries for the employee stock plan in the Delta case.

Mr. Glosband is a Vice President of the American College of Bankruptcy and a conferee of the National Bankruptcy Conference, which advises Congress on bankruptcy legislation. He was a draftsman of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency and one of two primary draftsmen of Chapter 15 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, Ancillary and Other Cross-Border Cases. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy 15th Ed. Revised, Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide and Collier International Business Insolvency Guide.

He is admitted to practice in New York, Massachusetts, the U.S. District Courts in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and the Southern District of New York, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court. He received a J.D. from Cornell University in 1969 and a B.A. from University of Massachusetts in 1966.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

82 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Lawniczak on Thompson v. Greenwood

2008 Emerging Issues 2151

Lawniczak on Thompson v. Greenwood

By James M. Lawniczak

April 16, 2008

SUMMARY: The Sixth Circuit has become the first circuit court to rule on the issue of whether 28 U.S.C. § 1412 allows a bankruptcy court to retain jurisdiction of an improperly venued case, coming down firmly on the side of strict statutory construction. In Thompson v. Greenwood, it holds that in the face of improper venue a bankruptcy court must dismiss the case or transfer it to a district where it originally could have been brought.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Cite as: Lawniczak, James M. Thompson v. Greenwood. LexisNexis Expert Commentary, (Insert date you accessed the document online).

The Sixth Circuit Strictly Interprets the Venue Statute, Holding That 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a) Applies to Cases Where Venue Is Incorrect and Requires Dismissal or Transfer to a District Where the Case Could Have Been Brought

In Thompson v. Greenwood, 507 F.3d 416 (6th Cir. 2007), the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit addressed an issue of first impression among the circuit courts of appeals: whether a bankruptcy court faced with a timely motion could retain a bankruptcy case, even though venue was improper, in the interests of justice or for the convenience of the parties. 507 F.3d at 417. The court framed the issue as requiring a determination whether 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a) or § 1412 applied to bankruptcy cases where venue was improper under 28 U.S.C. § 1408. The court stated that § 1406(a) controlled and that a bankruptcy court could only do one of two things once it determined that original venue was improper: dismiss the case or transfer the case to a district where the case could originally have been brought. The court concluded:

(1) the venue requirements of 28 U.S.C. § 1408 are mandatory, not optional; (2) 28 U.S.C. § 1412 applies only to bankruptcy cases filed in a proper venue; (3) 28 U.S.C. § 1406 applies to cases, including bankruptcy cases, filed in an improper venue; and (4) Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1014(a)(2) must be interpreted as authorizing the transfer of an improperly venued case only to a district in which the case could have originally been brought.

507 F.3d at 424.

Facts and Procedural History. The Thompson case arose as a consolidated appeal from two individual chapter 7 bankruptcy cases filed by two sets of debtors, all residents of the northern Mississippi suburbs of Memphis, Tennessee. Both cases were filed by Mississippi residents in the Western District of Tennessee, at Memphis, for reasons of geographic convenience. The United States trustees office for the Northern District of Mississippi moved to transfer both cases to the Northern District of Mississippi.

In one of the two cases, In re Jordan, 313 B.R. 242 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 2004), Chief Bankruptcy Judge Kennedy denied the United States trustees motion, holding that a bankruptcy court could retain a case filed in an improper district, for the convenience of the parties or in the interest of justice. In contrast, Bankruptcy Judge Latta, in the case of In re MacDonald, 356 B.R. 416 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 2006), ordered the case transferred to Mississippi, after finding that there was no venue in Tennessee.

Both cases were appealed to the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, which held that the United States trustees position was the most coherent reading of the [venue] statute as a whole in conformity with accepted norms of statutory construction. In re MacDonald, 356 B.R. 416, 428 (W.D. Tenn. 2006). The appeal to the Sixth Circuit followed.

Statutory Analysis. Section 1408(1) of title 28 provides for venue in title 11 cases, which may be commenced in the district court for the district where an individual has had a domicile or residence for the last 180 days prior to the filing, or if the debtor resided or was domiciled in more than one district, then in the district where the debtor resided or was domiciled for the longer portion of the 180-day period. Therefore, none of the individual Mississippi debtors could argue that venue was proper in Tennessee.

Section 1412 of title 28 allows for a change of venue in title 11 cases. It provides that the court may transfer a bankruptcy case to another district in the interest of justice or for the convenience of the parties. For a case describing § 1412 and the criteria for transferring venue, see, e.g., In re Dunmore Homes Inc., 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 44, at *15-17 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Jan. 14, 2008). There is no requirement in § 1412 that the court receiving the transferred case be a court of proper venue. Aranha v. Winfield (In re Emerson Radio Corp.), 52 F.3d 50, 55 (3d Cir. 1995).

In contrast, 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a), which applies to all federal cases, not just title 11 cases, provides that the district court of a district in which venue is improper shall dismiss, or if it be in the interest of justice, transfer such case to any district or division in which it could have been brought.

Sixth Circuits Analysis--Majority Position. The Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit first noted that the debtors agreed that venue was improper under the plain language of 28 U.S.C. § 1408. 507 F.3d at 419. The court next turned its attention to the proper interpretation and application of 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a), which governs improperly venued cases. The court began its analysis by observing that, although § 1406 does not specifically mention title 11 bankruptcy cases, it is generally applicable to all district court cases. Because the bankruptcy judges constitute a unit of the district court under 28 U.S.C. § 151, title 11 cases are indeed included within the scope of § 1406. Therefore, the court of appeals found that, where venue is improper and an interested party timely objects, a district court can either (1) dismiss the case or (2) transfer the case to a jurisdiction of proper venue. 507 F.3d at 419-20.

Yet the debtors argued that § 1406 is inapplicable to bankruptcy proceedings and that the more specific title 11 transfer-of-venue section, 28 U.S.C. § 1412, should apply instead. The debtors further argued that the use of the word may in § 1412 indicates that a court considering convenience may retain the case itself in addition to transferring it to another district. 507 F.3d at 420.

The court of appeals disagreed, concluding that the case was governed by the plain text of 28 U.S.C. § 1406. 507 F.3d at 423. The court cited the U.S. Supreme Court case of Connecticut National Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 112 S. Ct. 1146, 117 L. Ed.2d 391 (1992), for the proposition that a court must give effect to the plain language of congressional enactments.

The court determined that § 1412 applies only in properly venued cases. To interpret § 1412 as applying to improperly venued cases would nullify, or at least greatly reduce, the venue requirements of 28 U.S.C. § 1408 and permit a debtor to commence a title 11 case in any venue so long as the bankruptcy judge later determined the venue to be convenient. 507 F.3d at 420.

Finally, the court looked at the implications of Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1014 to bolster its holding, although duly noting that the rule does not carry the weight of a statute. 507 F.3d at 420. Rule 1014(a)(1) concerns dismissal and transfer of cases filed in a proper district, while subdivision (a)(2) deals with filings in an improper district, as in Thompson. Rule 1014(a)(2) provides that on timely motion the case may n1 be dismissed or transferred to any other district in the interest of justice or for convenience. The court stated in dictum that while Rule 1014 supported its decision in the case before it, the rule's broad language allowing an improperly venued case to be transferred to any district, even one where venue did not originally lie, was inconsistent with the statute (§ 1406) and that the statute trumps the rule. 507 F.3d at 422.

In summary, the court focused on 28 U.S.C. § 1406, holding that if a case is brought in an improper venue and an interested party timely objects, n2 a district court has only two options: (1) dismiss the case, or (2) transfer the case to a jurisdiction of proper venue, if it be in the interest of justice. 507 F.3d at 416 (footnote omitted).

Minority Position. In reaching its decision, the Sixth Circuit noted that the Thompson decision is the first by a court of appeals on the issue of retention of improper venue. According to the court, its ruling that a bankruptcy court cannot keep an improperly venued case is in agreement with the majority view of the lower courts.

However, a minority of the lower courts have held that under 28 U.S.C. § 1412 a bankruptcy court can keep a case filed in an incorrect venue, in the interest of justice or for the convenience of the parties. Generally, courts adopting the minority position rely upon two fairly similar arguments: (1) that § 1412 specifically applies to title 11 cases and permits a bankruptcy court to retain the case; and (2) that bankruptcy courts possess the authority to make independent determinations with regard to motions for transfer of venue.

The proponents of the minority view point out that § 1412 contains no limiting language requiring that a transfer be made only to a district where the action might have been originally brought. See, e.g., In re Lazaro, 128 B.R. 168, 173-74 (Bankr. W.D. Texas 1991). These courts favor a practical approach over a strict legislative analysis, commenting that by allowing a court to transfer venue to any district, even one that did not have original venue, § 1412 should logically be read also to allow a court to retain venue. If one federal bankruptcy judge could transfer the case to another district, in the interest of justice or for convenience, then why cannot the judge in that district retain the case, for the same reasons? 128 B.R. at 172.

Alternatively, courts embracing the minority position have held that they possess authority to determine transfer of venue motions in their sound discretion. See, e.g., In re Brazzle, 321 B.R. 893, 895-96 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 2005). This line of reasoning is supported by cases such as In re Mahurkar Double Lumen Hemodialysis Catheter Patent Litigation, 140 B.R. 969 (N.D. Ill. 1992), in which Circuit Judge Easterbrook, sitting by designation, stated that any court has jurisdiction to determine its own jurisdiction, and this court unquestionably has the authority to determine what effect the bankruptcy stay has on [the litigation before it]. 140 B.R. at 972. This adverse affect on a courts judicial independence combined with the ambiguities in §§ 1406 and 1412 result in some courts holding that the express requirements of § 1406 are inapplicable in bankruptcy proceedings.

Pre-1987 minority cases supporting the right of a bankruptcy court to retain an improper venued case are less persuasive, the Thompson court explained, because they were decided before the 1987 amendments to Rule 1014(a)(2) and the issuance of an advisory committee note that clearly favors the majority interpretation. 507 F.3d at 418, n.1. For this reason, one bankruptcy judge changed from supporting the minority view to the majority view after 1987. See In re

Pick, 95 B.R. 712, 715 (Bankr. D.S.D. 1989).

Application of Thompson Rationale to Corporate Cases. Despite the fact that the underlying cases that gave rise to the Sixth Circuit appeal were individual consumer bankruptcy proceedings, the rationale and decision of the Thompson case applies with equal validity to corporate cases. Thus, if a corporation files a bankruptcy case in an improper venue and a party in interest objects, then under the Thompson case rationale, the bankruptcy court must either dismiss the case or transfer it to a court where venue lies.

Lower courts addressing improper venue in corporate bankruptcy proceedings have previously adopted both the majority and the minority positions. Compare In re Columbia Western, Inc., 183 B.R. 660, 665 (Bankr. N.D. Mass. 1995) (majority view: holding that under § 1406, transfer or dismissal are the only available options), and EDP Medical Computer Sys., Inc. v. United States (In re EDP Medical Computer Sys., Inc.), 178 B.R. 57, 63 (M.D. Pa. 1995) (majority view), with In re Capital Hotel Group, Inc., 206 B.R. 190, 192 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1997) (minority view: stating that the court possessed the ability to retain an improperly venued case in the proper circumstances, but ultimately transferring the case to the proper venue, so that the courts views on the issue were dictum), and United States Aviox Co., Inc. v. Aviox International, Inc. (In re United States Aviox Co., Inc.), 96 B.R. 874, 882 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1988) (minority view: discussing § 1412 in support of its position). Because the venue analysis of corporate bankruptcy proceedings involves the same bankruptcy statutes and rules as consumer bankruptcy proceedings, the venue statutes applicable to consumer bankruptcy proceedings, and thus the Thompson case, should be equally applicable to corporate bankruptcy proceedings.

United States Trustee as Interested Party Entitled to Object and Appeal. In its holding, the Thompson court indicated that the bankruptcy case must be dismissed or transferred to a court of proper original venue when an interested party timely objects. 507 F.3d at 420. The court then noted in a footnote that the United States trustee is an interested party under 11 U.S.C. § 307, which allows the United States trustee to raise and appear on any issue in a case or proceeding. Id. n.3. Although the court does not cite to its own decision dealing with whether this standing to appear includes the right to appeal, the Sixth Circuit previously held in Morgenstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990), that the United States trustee has the right to appeal even though § 307 does not explicitly say so. This is the unanimous view of the courts of appeals that have weighed in on the issue. See United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138, 141 (3d Cir. 1994); United States Trustee v. Clark (In re Clark), 927 F.2d 793, 796 (4th Cir. 1990).

One related issue that went unmentioned in the case was whether the United States trustee for the Northern District of Mississippi was entitled to go out of its jurisdiction and appear and be heard in cases pending in the Western District of Tennessee. Section 581 of title 28 creates 21 regions, each with its own United States trustee. Section 586(a) of title 28 describes the duties of each United States trustee but prefaces the list of duties with a limitation, within the region for which such United States trustee is appointed. Thus, it appears that an argument could have been made that only the United States trustee with responsibility for Tennessee had the statutory authority to appear in the cases. Cf. Citicorp North America, Inc. v. Finley (In re Washington Manufacturing Co.), 123 B.R. 272, 275 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1991) (pointing out that the right of the United States trustee to appear on any issue in 28 U.S.C. § 307 contrasts with the specificity of the United States trustees duties spelled out in 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)).

Strict Statutory Construction. Ultimately in the Thompson case, the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit indicated that it was taking the majority approach because of the plain text of the applicable statutes. 507 F.3d at 423. In doing so, however, the Sixth Circuit did not discuss the most recent U.S. Supreme Court case on statutory interpretation in a bankruptcy context, Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Massachusetts, 127 S. Ct. 1105, 166 L. Ed. 2d 956, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 2651 (2007).

In Marrama, the Supreme Court appeared to disregard the plain language of 11 U.S.C. § 706(a), which provides an unconditional right for a debtor to convert a chapter 7 case to either chapter 11, 12 or 13 at any time, holding that the debtor had forfeited his right to convert his case to a chapter 13 proceeding due to his prepetition bad faith conduct. In doing so, the Supreme Court indicated that the broad authority granted to bankruptcy judges is sufficient to allow a judge to deny a motion to convert when the conversion order merely postpones the eventual relief of dismissal of the converted chapter 13 case for bad faith. 2007 U.S. LEXIS 2651, at *18.

This result-oriented decision lends support to the minority view on the venue issue that was before the Thompson court. Just as the Marrama Court determined that the bankruptcy court did not need to undertake a meaningless exercise--allow conversion of the case to chapter 13, then dismiss that converted case for bad faith--it could be argued that the bankruptcy court need not similarly engage in a circular exercise on the venue issue--first transfer the case to a proper original venue court, then have the case come back to the original court for the convenience of the parties.

On the other hand, before Marrama, there were numerous Supreme Court cases on bankruptcy issues where the Court adhered to the plain-meaning method of statutory application. See, for example, Connecticut National Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 112 S. Ct. 1146, 117 L. Ed.2d 391 (1992), which was cited by the Thompson court. The Thompson decision certainly signals a reluctance on the part of the court to depart from that prior line of case law, applying instead a strict construction analysis to the question of statutory interpretation.

The Sixth Circuit has spoken on the issue of retaining improper venue and the message is clear: The venue statutes mean what they say and they say what they mean.

For further discussion of venue in bankruptcy cases, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 4 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

Return to Text

n1 . The court went on to discuss whether use of the permissive word may in Rule 1014 rather than must would allow a court authority to retain a case. The court rejected that view, pointing out that it was foreclosed by the 1987 Advisory Committee Note to the rule, which noted that the right to retain a case was intentionally deleted. 507 F.3d at 421.

n2 . The courts comment that its holding is premised on the fact that an interested party has timely objected is dicta in that there was a timely objection in the case before the court, so that the court did not consider whether a bankruptcy court can act sua sponte to dismiss or transfer a case filed in the wrong venue. In In re Langston, 291 B.R. 872, 875-76 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 2003), the court held that it could transfer the cases to the proper venue, even in the absence of any such motion.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

James M. Lawniczak is a partner at Calfee, Halter and Griswold LLP in Cleveland, Ohio. He concentrates his practice on corporate bankruptcy and creditors rights, as well as commercial business and finance matters. His experience includes bankruptcy plans and related disclosure statements, cash collateral and financing orders, asset sales, executory contracts and unexpired leases, and bankruptcy litigation and appeals.

Mr. Lawniczak is a frequent author and lecturer in his field. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy, the leading national treatise on bankruptcy law. He is also the author of the bankruptcy chapters of the Matthew Bender treatises Asset Based Financing and Business Organizations with Tax Planning. He has been listed in multiple editions of Chambers USA as a Leading Lawyer for bankruptcy and restructuring and is recognized as one of the Best Lawyers in America.

Mr. Lawniczak is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, where he served as an editor of the Michigan Law Review.

Expert Commentary is the title of this LexisNexis publication. All information provided in this publication is provided for educational purposes only and use of the term Expert Commentary is not intended to describe or designate the authors qualifications as a lawyer or in a subspecialty of the law. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

83 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Glosband on In re Compaa de Alimentos Fargo, S.A.

2008 Emerging Issues 1937

Glosband on In re Compaa de Alimentos Fargo, S.A.

By Daniel Glosband

February 21, 2008

SUMMARY: A bankruptcy court in the Southern District of New York found that considerations of comity, fairness and efficiency supported dismissal of an involuntary U.S. chapter 11 proceeding in favor of a foreign proceeding. If a foreign debtor chooses to file an insolvency proceeding in a forum which does not provide identical protections of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, will U.S. bankruptcy courts provide protection? On what grounds can a U.S. bankruptcy court abstain from hearing an insolvency proceeding when there is simultaneous proceeding in a foreign forum?

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: A Bankruptcy Court Finds that Considerations of Comity, Fairness and Efficiency Support Dismissal of an Involuntary Chapter 11 Case Under 11 U.S.C. § 305(a) in Favor of the Foreign Insolvency Proceeding

In today's environment of pervasive global transactions and cross-border relationships, parties should be aware that the doors of the United States bankruptcy courts may not remain open to all debtors that satisfy the eligibility requirements of section 109 of the Bankruptcy Code (the Code). Bankruptcy courts have discretion under section 305(a) of the Code to abstain from hearing an insolvency proceeding, by suspending or dismissing the proceeding, based on considerations of comity and other factors including whether a foreign forum is available which will determine the parties' rights fairly, the relative benefits and burdens of exercising the courts' jurisdiction and, in the case of an involuntary petition, the reasons for filing such petition. Recently, the bankruptcy court in In re Compaa de Alimentos Fargo, S.A. (Fargo) decided to exercise its discretion to abstain from hearing an involuntary Chapter 11 case and dismissed the case in favor of a reorganization proceeding that was pending in Argentina. n1

The Facts and Posture of Fargo. Following Argentina's delinking of the dollar-to-peso exchange rate in early 2002, the Argentine economy plunged into a recession as the value of the peso fell. Compaa de Alimentos Fargo, S.A. (the Debtor), Argentina's largest commercial producer of bread products, defaulted on interest payments due to holders of unsecured notes (the Noteholders) issued under United States law (the Notes) pursuant to an indenture agreement, dated July 27, 1998, with Citibank, N.A., as Trustee (the Indenture Trustee). Approximately 65% of the Debtors public debt is held by Argo Capital Investors Fund SPC, Rainbow Global High Yield Fund, Rainmac Fund and the Star Fund (collectively, the Petitioners), off-shore Caribbean investors. In June of 2002, to address its default, the Debtor began a concurso preventivo (the Concurso) in the National Commercial Court in Buenos Aires. A concurso preventivo is a reorganization proceeding under Argentine Insolvency Law that triggers an automatic stay of unsecured creditor actions against the Debtor and its property, wherever located. Secured creditors were exempt from the stay. n2

Upon commencement of the Concurso, the Indenture Trustee filed aggregate proofs of claim on behalf of the Noteholders in the full U.S. dollar amount of principal and unpaid pre-petition interest. The Debtor commenced an ancillary proceeding (also apparently in an Argentine court) seeking to limit the Indenture Trustees claim for voting and distribution purposes to the amounts that the Noteholders paid for the Notes in the secondary market. The Debtor also sought to have the liabilities under the Notes converted from dollars to pesos. The Argentine bankruptcy court rejected the Debtors arguments and allowed the proofs of claim in the amounts filed by the Indenture Trustee. n3

On appeal, the National Court of Appeals on Commercial Matters (the Court of Appeals) reversed the bankruptcy courts decision and decided an issue that had been neither argued nor briefed. The Court of Appeals agreed that the claims should be denominated in dollars but limited the Indenture Trustees claim for voting purposes to the amount of unpaid pre-petition interest (the Appeals Decision). n4 Therefore, while the Indenture Trustees claim remained fixed at U.S. $134,000,000 for distribution purposes, the claim was reduced by U.S. $120,000,000 for voting purposes. According to the Petitioners, the Debtor did not present this argument to the Court of Appeals and the Indenture Trustee did not have the opportunity to be heard on this issue.

The Indenture Trustee appealed the Appeals Decision to the National Supreme Court (the Supreme Court). After letting the matter languish for two years, the Debtor filed a waiver (the Waiver) stating that it would agree to allow the Indenture Trustee to vote the full value of the claims and the issues raised by the Waiver were remanded to the bankruptcy court in August 2007. In the meanwhile, the Petitioners had filed an involuntary chapter 11 petition in the Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York (the Court) in September 2006. The Court ultimately dismissed the involuntary case under section 305(a) of the Code. n5

The Fargo Opinion. In its October 12, 2007 decision, the Court reasoned first that the Argentine insolvency system is procedurally and substantively fair and that the concurso preventivo is similar to a chapter 11 case under the Code. n6 A court-appointed trustee supervises debtors in possession, and there is oversight from a creditors committee. Creditors claims are further protected by the automatic stay, judicial remedies which regulate the claims process, avoidance powers and statutory fiduciary duties punishable by criminal penalties.

Practitioners should take notice that, to afforded comity, the foreign proceeding and the foreign forum need not provide identical remedies to those available under the Code. For example, according to the Debtors expert testimony, under Argentine insolvency law the automatic stay does not apply to the debtors secured creditors. Additionally, Argentine law does not provide for equitable subordination of claims or broad discovery similar to that of Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004. The Petitioners asserted that the Argentine courts were corrupt, emphasized the differences from U.S. law and alleged irregularities in the Appeals Decision to challenge the fairness and efficiency of the Argentine bankruptcy system. The Court found no admissible or convincing evidence of corruption. Further, the Court ruled that the differences from U.S. law did not render the Argentine law in conflict with fundamental notions of fairness. The foreign bankruptcy system must only be substantially similar and not repugnant to United States law. n7 The Court found that the Petitioners were unable to show that the Concurso treated their interests unfairly or that the Argentine judicial system was corrupt in any fashion. n8

Petitioners made much out of the Appeals Decision, but the Court noted that there was an appeals process in place and an appeal was underway to address alleged mistakes in the Appeals Decision. n9 The Debtors waiver of the voting limitation resulted in a remand by the Supreme Court to the Argentine bankruptcy court.

The Court also weighed the benefits of a parallel chapter 11 proceeding and determined that it would be inefficient and not beneficial. The Debtors business operations, customers and employees are located in Argentina, and its only assets located in the United States consist of one trademark and three pending trademark applications. While providing a technical basis for debtor eligibility under section 109 of the Code (presence of property in the United States), the Court would likely not have jurisdiction over all creditors unlike the Argentine bankruptcy court. Furthermore, for a chapter 11 plan confirmed in the U.S. to be enforced in Argentina, an Argentine court would have to grant comity. The Argentine court would be unlikely to grant comity for several reasons, including the Petitioners violation of the Argentine automatic stay by filing the chapter 11 petition in the first place and the requirement in the Petitioners proposed plan for equitable subordination, a remedy that Argentine law does not provide. Thus, permitting the chapter 11 case to proceed might be largely futile since the Court would have limited ability to enforce its jurisdiction.

Practitioners should be further aware that courts will look through the involuntary chapter 11 petition to examine the motives behind the filing. In Fargo, the Petitioners claimed that they filed the petition in order to expedite a convoluted Argentine process which had been hijacked by a hostile takeover scheme perpetrated by the Debtors competitor. n10 The Court took notice, however, that three of the Petitioners purchased substantial amounts of Notes long after commencement of the Concurso and even after the supposedly unfair Appeals Decision. It therefore questioned whether the Petitioners were really all that concerned about the fairness of the Concurso. n11 Perhaps, the Court reasoned, the Petitioners themselves were trying to hijack the Concurso by substantially increasing their negotiating power by triggering the U.S. automatic stay; unlike the Argentine stay, the U.S. stay included secured creditors. n12 The Debtors secured creditor is a Delaware limited liability company subject to the Courts jurisdiction and thus subject to the stay.

Against the backdrop of the Petitioners possibly questionable motives, the Court held that the factors of comity, fairness and efficiency favored abstention and dismissal of the involuntary petition. n13 The lesson for practitioners is that U.S. courts may choose to deny use of the U.S. insolvency system to entities that are eligible to be debtors under the Bankruptcy Code but that are also debtors in foreign proceedings. Factors in the decision will include the fairness and efficiency of the foreign insolvency system, the ability of the U.S. court to enforce its jurisdiction and the motives of the parties.

Applicability of Chapter 15 of the Code. There was no discussion in the Fargo opinion of the possible applicability of Chapter 15 of the Bankruptcy Code. Presumably, the issue was not raised by the parties. The decision notes that the debtor continued in possession subject to a supervisory trustee. The Concurso appears to be a foreign proceeding as defined in section 101(23) of the Code and either of the Debtor or the trustee might meet the definition of a foreign representative under section 101(24) of the Code. Superficially, at least, it appears that section 1509(c) of the Code would have required the Debtor to file a petition for recognition under chapter 15 and to obtain recognition before seeking comity by way of dismissal of the involuntary chapter 11 petition.

The facts discussed in the Fargo decision support recognition as a foreign main proceeding under section 1517. Upon recognition, the more succinct grounds for dismissal under section 305(a)(2) would have applied: the purposes of chapter 15 would be best served by such dismissal. Practitioners should always consider the applicability of chapter 15 when they encounter a cross-border insolvency situation.

For a complete discussion of section 109 and 305 of the Bankruptcy Code, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 109 and ch. 305 (Matthew Bender).

For more information on Chapter 15 of the Bankruptcy Code, see Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide, ch. 19 (Matthew Bender) and Collier International Business Insolvency Guide, ch. 8, ch. 9 and ch. 10 (Matthew Bender).

For more information on the concurso preventivo and Argentine insolvency law, see Collier International Business Insolvency Guide, ch. 13 (Matthew Bender).

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 . In re Compania de Alimentos Fargo, S.A., 376 B.R. 427, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3445 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007).

n2

[2]. 376 B.R. at 430. For information on concurso preventivo, see Collier International Business Insolvency Guide, 13.05 (Matthew Bender). For information on insolvency law in Argentina, see Collier International Business Insolvency Guide, ch. 13 (Matthew Bender).

n3

[3]. 376 B.R. at 431.

n4

[4]. 376 B.R. at 431.

n5

[5]. 376 B.R. at 441.

n6

[6]. 376 B.R. at 435, citing In re Bd. of Dirs. of Compania Gen. De Combustibles S.A., 269 B.R. 104 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2001).

n7

[7]. 376 B.R. at 437 (citations omitted).

n8

[8]. 376 B.R. at 437.

n9

[9]. 376 B.R. at 436. The Debtor and its expert conceded that there were procedural irregularities and flaws with the Appeals Decision. 376 B.R. at 436.

n10

[10]. 376 B.R. at 440.

n11

[11]. 376 B.R. at 440-441.

n12

[12]. 376 B.R. at 441.

n13

[13]. 376 B.R. at 441.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Daniel Glosband is a partner in Goodwin Procter LLP's Financial Restructuring Practice, www.goodwinprocter.com. He recently represented the lead investors in the confirmed Chapter 11 plan of US Airways and its merger with America West and the fiduciaries for the employee stock plan in the Delta case.

Mr. Glosband is a Vice President of the American College of Bankruptcy and a conferee of the National Bankruptcy Conference, which advises Congress on bankruptcy legislation. He was a draftsman of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency and one of two primary draftsmen of Chapter 15 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, Ancillary and Other Cross-Border Cases. He is a contributing author to Collier on Bankruptcy 15th

Ed. Revised, Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide and Collier International Business Insolvency Guide.

He is admitted to practice in New York, Massachusetts, the U.S. District Courts in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and the Southern District of New York, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court. He received a J.D. from Cornell University in 1969 and a B.A. from University of Massachusetts in 1966.

84 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Hon. Ralph R. Mabey on In re Excel Innovations

2008 Emerging Issues 1860

Hon. Ralph R. Mabey on In re Excel Innovations

By Hon. Ralph R. Mabey

February 5, 2008

SUMMARY: The courts of appeals do not agree on the standard for issuing an injunction to stay litigation against a nondebtor party. Many lower courts have followed the lead of the Fourth Circuit in granting a section 105 injunction against litigation that interferes with the reorganization of the debtor. In a case of first impression, In re Excel Innovations, however, the Ninth Circuit has rejected this standard, holding that the traditional preliminary injunction standard applies in bankruptcy cases. In this Expert Commentary, the Hon. Ralph R. Mabey speculates as to the reasons for the disconnect between the approaches of the lower courts in this case (which followed the Fourth Circuit) and the Ninth Circuit and concludes that it may simply reflect the fact that appellate judges are far removed from the immediate practical considerations facing bankruptcy court judges as they manage large, complex cases.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: The Ninth Circuit Holds That the Traditional Injunction Standard Applies for Granting a Section 105(a) Injunction Staying an Action Against a Nondebtor Party

The financial, legal, or liquidity crisis that forces a company to seek protection under the Bankruptcy Code often also spawns litigation by creditors or shareholders against the directors and officers of the debtor. Even when the debtor is not a party to the action or the matter has been automatically stayed against the debtor, litigation against the directors and officers may be disruptive to the debtor, especially during the early stages of a chapter 11 case, or costly to the bankruptcy estate, either due to dissipation of shared insurance coverage between the debtor and the directors and officers or due to the expense and burden of responding to discovery. As a result, it is common for the debtor or the individual directors and officers to request the bankruptcy court to enjoin or stay the litigation against the nondebtor parties.

More than twenty years ago, the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in two published opinions in the A.H. Robins bankruptcy cases established a comprehensive standard for enjoining litigation against nondebtor parties. See A.H. Robins Co. v. Piccinin, 788 F.2d 994 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 876 (1986); Oberg v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. (In re A.H. Robins Co.), 828 F.2d 1023 (4th Cir. 1987). In the Piccinin case, the Fourth Circuit found four independent grounds for staying or enjoining litigation against nondebtor parties, two of which were based on the extension of the automatic stay under subsections 362(a)(1) and (a)(3) of the Bankruptcy Code and two of which were based on an injunction issued under the authority of section 105(a) of the Bankruptcy Code and 28 U.S.C. § 1334. This commentary will focus only on the standards for issuing an injunction under section 105(a) because the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit previously held that extension of the automatic stay under Bankruptcy Code section 362(a) is not available to stay nondebtor party litigation. See Chugach Timber Corp. v. Northern Stevedoring & Handling Corp. (In re Chugach Forest Prods., Inc.), 23 F.3d 241, 246-47, 30 C.B.C.2d 1877 (9th Cir. 1994). In addition to the traditional preliminary injunction standard, the Fourth Circuit in Piccinin and Oberg held that, pursuant to section 105(a) and 28 U.S.C. § 1334, a bankruptcy court may enjoin a lawsuit against a nondebtor party where such litigation could interfere with the reorganization of the debtor.

Although the Fourth Circuits A.H. Robins cases are often cited and followed by many courts, other circuit courts have developed their own standards for staying or enjoining litigation against nondebtor parties. The Second, Third, and Eighth Circuits favor the traditional preliminary injunction standard. See Manville Corp. v. Equity Sec. Holders Comm. (In re Johns-Manville Corp.), 801 F.2d 60 (2d Cir. 1986); Wedgewood Inv. Fund, Ltd. v. Wedgewood Realty Group Ltd. (In re Wedgewood Realty Group Ltd.), 878 F.2d 693 (3d Cir. 1989); NLRB v. Superior Forwarding, Inc., 762 F.2d 695 (8th Cir. 1985). The Seventh Circuit, on the other hand, does not require a showing of irreparable harm to the moving party. Fisher v. Apostolou, 155 F.3d 876 (7th Cir. 1998).

After canvassing the existing case law from the other circuits, the Ninth Circuit, in a case of first impression in that court, has held that only the traditional preliminary injunction standard applies to enjoin litigation against a nondebtor party. Solidus Networks, Inc. v. Excel Innovations, Inc. (In re Excel Innovations, Inc.), 502 F.3d 1086 (9th Cir. 2007). Having previously rejected the extension of section 362(a) to third parties, the Ninth Circuit in Excel Innovations also explicitly rejected the Fourth Circuits interference with reorganization standard and the Seventh Circuits relaxation of the showing of irreparable harm as a requirement for an injunction. As explained further below, the holding in Excel Innovations appears to be the product of the Ninth Circuits long-held reluctance to use the Bankruptcy Code to benefit insiders of the debtor.

Facts. Ned Hoffman was the founder and a major shareholder of both Excel Innovations, Inc. and Indivos Corporation. Excel Innovations in turn also separately owned shares of Indivos. In 2000, Hoffman and Indivos entered into a series of agreements for the purpose of removing Hoffman from the management of Indivos. These agreements prohibited Hoffman from directly or indirectly managing Indivos, and both Hoffman and Excel Innovations pledged their Indivos shares in a voting trust as collateral for their obligations to Indivos. The agreements also contained a provision requiring all disputes to be arbitrated before the American Arbitration Association (AAA).

In 2003, Indivos initiated an arbitration before the AAA against Hoffman and Excel Innovations. Indivos alleged that Hoffman and Excel Innovations wrongfully attempted to disrupt a merger between Indivos and Solidus Networks, Inc. by, among other things, initiating multiple shareholder derivative actions, a proxy contest, and a patent infringement lawsuit. In May 2004, the arbitrator granted partial summary judgment for Indivos, finding that Hoffman breached his contracts with Indivos by wrongfully attempting to disrupt the merger and also found Excel Innovations liable as Hoffmans alter ego. Later in the month, Hoffman and Excel Innovations also suffered a serious defeat in the patent infringement litigation when the United States District Court found that Indivos, not Excel Innovations, owned all the disputed patents.

Shortly after these setbacks, Hoffman and Excel Innovations filed bankruptcy petitions under chapters 13 and 11, respectively, which stayed both the arbitration and the patent infringement litigation. After several months, Hoffmans chapter 13 case was dismissed, and he resigned as an officer and director of Excel Innovations. Following the dismissal of Hoffmans chapter 13 case, Indivos recommenced the arbitration proceeding solely against Hoffman, but Hoffman objected, arguing that Indivoss claims against him were so intertwined with claims against Excel Innovations that continuing the arbitration would be inequitable and would violate the automatic stay of Excel Innovations. The arbitrator disagreed and scheduled new briefing deadlines and evidentiary hearings.

Bankruptcy Courts Decision. Unable to persuade the arbitrator, Hoffman initiated an adversary proceeding in the Excel Innovations chapter 11 case to seek declaratory and injunctive relief on the grounds that the arbitration violated the automatic stay. Hoffman, joined by Excel Innovations, argued that the arbitration should be enjoined because (1) Hoffman might reveal information subject to the attorney-client privilege of Excel Innovations and (2) Hoffman would seek indemnification against Excel Innovations for any damages assessed against him. After overcoming certain procedural hurdles, Hoffman convinced the bankruptcy court first to issue a temporary restraining order and then a preliminary injunction under section 105(a) of the Bankruptcy Code enjoining the arbitration from proceeding against him. In issuing the preliminary injunction, the bankruptcy court, echoing the Fourth Circuit, stated that a section 105(a) injunction is proper if the arbitration could conceivably have any effect on the administration of the bankruptcy case. See Excel Innovations, 502 F.3d at 1091-92. Although the bankruptcy court also held that the preliminary injunction would be granted under the traditional standard, it failed to make any findings on Hoffmans likelihood of success, but merely concluded that a stay would protect Excel Innovations from possible injury while causing no harm to Indivos or Solidus.

Ninth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panels Decision. Indivos and Solidus appealed the bankruptcy courts preliminary injunction order to the Ninth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel (the BAP), which affirmed the bankruptcy court. The BAP first recognized that the Ninth Circuit had not adopted a standard for granting injunctions under section 105(a). The BAP, after looking for guidance from other circuit courts, followed the Fourth Circuit and held that enjoining actions against nondebtor parties is appropriate where the debtor and nondebtors interests are so intertwined that an action against the nondebtor is in effect a claim against the debtor. Id. at 1092. The BAP further held that section 105(a) is the appropriate statutory basis for granting injunctions in matters that are related to the underlying bankruptcy case. The BAP also found that Hoffman satisfied the traditional preliminary injunction standard: the Excel Innovations reorganization had a fair chance of success, and allowing the arbitration to proceed would have caused irreparable harm to Excel Innovations. Although the BAP affirmed the granting of the preliminary injunction on slightly different grounds than the bankruptcy court, both courts reasons appear to be rooted in one of the four grounds for a third-party injunction set forth in the Fourth Circuits Piccinin decision. Indivos and Solidus once again appealed, this time to the Ninth Circuit.

Ninth Circuits Decision. Recognizing that the issue on appeal presented a case of first impression in the circuit, the Ninth Circuit took the opportunity to lay out its standard for granting a section 105(a) injunction to enjoin litigation against a nondebtor party. The Ninth Circuit began with a thorough discussion of the standards applied by the other circuit courts and concluded that the majority of the circuits (Second, Third, and Eighth) apply the usual preliminary injunction standard, with the Fourth and the Seventh Circuits being the primary exceptions.

The Ninth Circuit once again explicitly rejected the principle followed in the Fourth Circuit, that section 362(a)s automatic stay could be extended to nondebtor parties. Excel Innovations, 502 F.3d at 1094-95. The Ninth Circuit then rejected the standards applied by the BAP and the bankruptcy court. Both the BAP and the bankruptcy court held that a preliminary injunction would be proper whenever an action in another forum could conceivably have any effect on the administration of the bankruptcy estate. In rejecting that approach, the Ninth Circuit found that the standard cited by the BAP and the bankruptcy court is actually the standard for determining subject matter jurisdiction over a motion for preliminary injunction, not the standard for actually issuing the injunction. The Ninth Circuit also criticized the BAPs reliance on the Fourth Circuits Piccinin decision, under which a preliminary junction was granted upon a finding that unusual circumstances existed to make the interests of the debtor and the nondebtor inextricably intertwined. Because the automatic stay cannot be extended in the Ninth Circuit, the unusual circumstances doctrine, which has been applied to extend section 362(a), cannot constitute an independent basis for a preliminary injunction.

The Ninth Circuit then held that the traditional preliminary injunction standard applied in bankruptcy cases. That standard requires a showing of (1) a strong likelihood of success on the merits, (2) the possibility of irreparable harm to the plaintiff if the injunction is not granted, (3) a balance of hardships favoring the plaintiff, and (4) advance of the public interest (in certain cases). Excel Innovations, 502 F.3d at 1093 (citing Save Our Sonoran, Inc. v. Flowers, 408 F.3d 1113, 1120 (9th Cir. 2005)). The Ninth Circuit next addressed the application of the traditional preliminary injunction standard in a bankruptcy context. For the purposes of meeting the first element of the traditional preliminary injunction standard, the plaintiff must show a reasonable likelihood of a successful reorganization, instead of the likelihood of succeeding in the adversary proceeding. 502 F.3d at 1095.

In applying the traditional preliminary injunction standard, the Ninth Circuit found that the lower courts (1) failed to determine whether Excel Innovations had a reasonable likelihood of successfully reorganizing and (2) ignored the potential harm to Indivos and, as a result, failed to balance the harm between Excel/Hoffman and Indivos. The Ninth Circuit, therefore, vacated the preliminary injunction and remanded the case for further proceedings below.

Commentary. The Ninth Circuit's decision in Excel Innovations cannot be viewed in isolation. The opinion reflects, and is a product of, the Ninth Circuit's long-established policy against granting in effect a discharge, extending the automatic stay, or enjoining litigation against nondebtor parties, especially for the benefit of insiders of debtors. See Resorts Int'l v. Lowenschuss (In re Lowenschuss), 67 F.3d 1394, 140102 (9th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1243 (1996) (no discharge for nondebtor parties under a plan of reorganization); In re American Hardwoods, Inc., 885 F.2d 621 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that the bankruptcy court lacks jurisdiction to issue a section 105(a) injunction for the benefit of a nondebtor party); Underhill v. Royal, 769 F.2d 1426 (9th Cir. 1985) (bankruptcy court lacks the power to enjoin litigation against a nondebtor party by another nondebtor party); Chugach Timber Corp. v. Northern Stevedoring & Handling Corp. (In re Chugach Forest Prods., Inc.), 23 F.3d 241, 246, 30 C.B.C.2d 1877 (9th Cir. 1994) (automatic stay cannot be extended to enjoin litigation against a nondebtor party). Similarly, the Ninth Circuit, as shown by Excel Innovations, concludes that the traditional preliminary injunction standard must be applied in bankruptcy cases so that injunctions for the benefit of nondebtor parties will not be granted lightly.

Despite the fact that a majority of the circuits, including the Ninth Circuit now, have adopted the narrower, traditional preliminary injunction standard, the Fourth Circuit's broader approach to third-party injunctions set forth in Piccinin and Oberg are still frequently cited and followed. In fact, it appears that both the bankruptcy court and the BAP in Excel Innovations case extensively followed the Fourth Circuit, even though the Ninth Circuit long ago rejected the extension of the automatic stay under the unusual circumstances doctrine. The disconnect between the lower courts and the Ninth Circuit's approach may reflect a more practical approach employed by bankruptcy court judges who are in the trenches dealing with large, complex bankruptcy cases, and the appellate judges in the Ninth Circuit, who are far removed from the underlying bankruptcy cases and only review the issue long after the emergency that may have prompted the request for an injunction.

Although a director or officer of a debtor may succeed in obtaining an injunction before the bankruptcy court, ultimately on appeal, the injunction may become harder to defend. As a result of a lack in uniformity on the standard for issuing a preliminary injunction under section 105(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, a debtor with multiple venue options will weigh carefully these differences. By way of example, consider the following: In order to obtain contributions necessary to its plan of reorganization, the Dow Corning plan in effect permanently enjoined the claims of some nondebtor parties against other, plan-contributor nondebtor parties. The Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit upheld these provisions based upon the unusual circumstances of that mass-tort case, an outcome apparently not available in the Ninth Circuit. Class Five Nev. Claimants v. Dow Corning Corp. (In re Dow Corning Corp.), 280 F.3d 648, 658 (6th Cir. 2002).

For further discussion of injunctions under Bankruptcy Code section 105, see Collier on Bankruptcy, 105.02 and 105.03 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Ralph R. Mabey is Senior of Counsel to Stutman Treister & Glatt P.C., www.stutman.com, Professor of Law at the S. J. Quinney College of Law, University of Utah, and a Contributing Author to Collier on Bankruptcy. He received his law degree from Columbia University, where he served on the Board of Editors of the Columbia Law Review. Judge Mabey served with distinction as a United States Bankruptcy Judge before returning to private practice and teaching. His judicial opinions have been cited frequently by courts and scholars.

Judge Mabey is the past President and Chair of the American College of Bankruptcy. He served as an appointee of the Chief Justice of the United States to the U.S. Judicial Conferences Advisory Committee on the Bankruptcy Rules. He also served as the managing editor of the Norton Bankruptcy Law Adviser and on the Editorial Advisory Board of the American Bankruptcy Law Journal.

He is a member of the National Bankruptcy Conference, the American Law Institute, and the American Bar Associations Select Advisory Committee on Business Reorganization (SABRE).

Judge Mabey's service in complex workout, bankruptcy, reorganization, and litigation matters includes A.H. Robins Company (as examiner with expanded powers); Dow Corning (as counsel for certain bondholders); Columbia Gas System (as equity committee counsel); Federated Department Stores (as counsel for the official pre-merger bondholders committee); TWA (as counsel for the pilots); American Airlines (as counsel for the pilots); Enron (as special counsel for the debtor); Cajun Electric Power Cooperative (as chapter 11 trustee); Boston Chicken (as an expert witness); and At Home/Excite (as an expert witness).

Courts, parties, and the Department of Justice (U.S. Trustee Program) have appointed Judge Mabey to serve as mediator, arbitrator, examiner, or trustee in Alaska, Arizona, California, Louisiana, Michigan, New York, Texas, Utah, Virginia, and Washington, D.C.

Judge Mabey is a member of the New York and Utah Bars.

85 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2008, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Mark Broude and George Royle V on Al Perry Enterprises, Inc.

2008 Emerging Issues 1826

Mark Broude and George Royle V on Al Perry Enterprises, Inc.

By Mark Broude and George Royle V

January 25, 2008

SUMMARY: The scope of Code section 353(f) remains unclear thirty years after its enactment. The section authorizes a trustee to sell estate assets free and clear of any interest in such property, but courts do not agree on whether interests includes non-in rem interests, such as claims against the estate. The Sixth Circuits decision in Al Perry Enterprises v. Appalachian Fuels is the latest in a series of cases applying section 363(f) to a debtors prepetition liabilities. In their Expert Commentary, Mark Broude and George Royle V explain that, although the decision muddies the waters, it does offer some lessons that counsel in a section 363(f) sale would do well to keep in mind.

PDF LINK: Click Here for Enhanced PDF of Commentary

ARTICLE: Free and Clear Sales Under 11 U.S.C. § 363(f): The Sixth Circuit Muddies the Waters

Sales of substantially all of a debtors assets are increasingly common in Chapter 11 cases. Section 363(f) of the Bankruptcy Code permits a trustee to sell estate assets free and clear of any interests in such property, provided certain conditions are met and subject to the interest-holders right to adequate protection. Debtors and their purchasers rely on this Bankruptcy Code section to ensure that the purchaser is not acquiring the debtors liabilities, thereby maximizing the sale price of estate assets.

The Bankruptcy Code, however, does not define the term interests, and now, thirty years after section 363(f) was enacted, it is still unclear just how broad section 363(f) is, and just what liabilities a purchaser of estate assets can be assured it will not have to face. Courts have consistently interpreted interests to include in rem interests, such as a liens; however, courts are at odds as to whether interests also encompasses claims against the estate.

In September 2007, the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit issued a decision in Al Perry Enterprises, Inc. v. Appalachian Fuels, LLC, 503 F.3d 538 (6th Cir. 2007), the latest in a series of cases from the circuit courts applying section 363(f) to a debtors prepetition liabilities. Unfortunately, Al Perry largely fails to resolve the controversy surrounding the scope of section 363(f). It does, however, illustrate the competing concerns that a court faces when a trustee sells estate property and seeks to extinguish a successor liability claim, and it suggests some lessons that counsel to parties in a section 363(f) sale would do well to keep in mind.

Overview and History of Section 363(f) Free and Clear Sales. Bankruptcy Code section 363(f) provides that

(f) The trustee may sell property under subsection (b) or (c) of this section free and clear of any interest in such property of an entity other than the estate, only if--

- (1) applicable nonbankruptcy law permits sale of such property free and clear of such interest;
- (2) such entity consents;
- (3) such interest is a lien and the price at which such property is to be sold is greater than the aggregate value of all liens on such property;
- (4) such interest is in bona fide dispute; or
- (5) such entity could be compelled, in a legal or equitable proceeding, to accept a money satisfaction of such interest.

Before Congress enacted this provision in 1978, courts had widely interpreted the bankruptcy statutes to mean that bankruptcy courts had the power to extinguish in rem interests in estate property. As early as the Bankruptcy Act of 1867, Congress explicitly extended the bankruptcy courts jurisdiction to the ascertainment and liquidation of the liens and other specific claims on estate property. ⁿ¹ Interpreting this provision in Ray v. Norseworthy, 90 U.S. 128, 23 L. Ed. 116 (1874), a case involving a real estate mortgage, the Supreme Court held that [b]eyond all doubt the property of a bankrupt may, in a proper case, be sold by order of the bankrupt court free of encumbrance upon proper notice to the holder of the encumbrance. 90 U.S. at 135.

The Bankruptcy Act of 1898, which succeeded to the 1867 act, did not contain a similar explicit authorization of sales free and clear. Nonetheless, in Van Huffel v. Harkelrode, 284 U.S. 225, 52 S. Ct. 115, 76 L. Ed. 256 (1931), the Supreme Court again recognized the power of bankruptcy courts to make such sales. Noting the absence of an explicit provision in the statute to sell property of the bankruptcy free from encumbrances, Justice Brandeis wrote that, nevertheless, [w]e think it clear that the power was granted by implication. The lower federal courts have consistently held that the bankruptcy court possesses the power, stating that it must be implied from the general equity powers of the court and the duty to collect, reduce to money and distribute the estates of bankrupts, and to determine controversies with relation thereto. 284 U.S. at 227-28. As in Norseworthy, the encumbrance at issue--a state tax lien--was an in rem interest. Id. at 226.

Evolution of Free and Clear Sales to Encompass Claims of Successor Liability. Despite the apparently narrow view taken by the courts of section 363(f)'s predecessor statutes, courts have increasingly read the Bankruptcy Code to authorize more than a sale of estate property free and clear of merely in rem interests. Although a minority of courts have asserted the traditional view that the section applies only to specific interests in property, ⁿ² the majority have taken a broader view of the statute and held that some--but not all--claims (as defined by section 101(5)(A) of the Bankruptcy Code) are also covered by section 363(f). The Fourth and Third Circuits decisions in United Mine Workers of America v. Leckie Smokeless Coal Co (In re Leckie Smokeless Coal Co.), 99 F.3d 573 (4th Cir. 1996), and In re Trans World Airlines, Inc., 322 F.3d 283 (3d Cir. 2003), respectively, are among the most often cited cases for this proposition. Both hold that the phrasing of section 363(f), which explicitly mentions liens as but one form of interest in property subject to a free and clear sale, indicates that the term interest must also encompass certain bankruptcy claims that have a relationship with, ⁿ³ or are connected to, or arise from, the estate property being sold. ⁿ⁴ In addition to this textual analysis, courts endorsing a broad reading of section 363(f) have also cited two policy-based reasons for it: (1) maximizing the value of estate property; and (2) adhering to the Bankruptcy Codes priority scheme. ⁿ⁵

In practice, courts have employed this somewhat loose definition of interests to extinguish certain types of claims of successor liability against the purchaser of estate assets. In Leckie, for example, the Fourth Circuit found that pension funding liabilities arising under the Coal Industry Retiree Health Benefit Act of 1992, 26 U.S.C. §§ 9701-9722, could be affected by section 363(f) when the debtor sold its mining assets to a purchaser free and clear. Likewise, in Trans World, the Third Circuit held that the debtors former employees successor liability claims of employment discrimination and entitlement to the use of certain travel vouchers had been subject to a section 363(f) sale free and clear. Other courts have concluded that personal injury claims n6 and product liability claims n7 also can be stripped from property sold free and clear pursuant to section 363(f).

That is not to say that the case law supports the transfer of property free and clear of all successor liability claims in a section 363(f) sale. As noted above, some courts, based on an asserted plain reading of the statutory language, reject completely the notion that a sale under section 363(f) conveys assets being sold free and clear of any non-in rem interests--and specifically successor liability claims. n8

Other courts have refused to find that successor liability claims are subject to section 363(f) if they did not arise before the free and clear sale. n9 In these cases, the courts have expressed concern that claimants whose successor liability claims arise after a section 363(f) sale would be deprived of due process protections if their claims were covered by the statute because they could not receive the constitutionally requisite notice for deprivation of their property right. n10

Adding to this chorus of disagreement, commentators have staked out opposing viewpoints of the constitutionality of subjecting n11 and not subjecting n12 successor liability claims to a section 363(f) free and clear sale. Moreover, the Bankruptcy Codes guarantee that holders of interests affected by a section 363(f) sale must be afforded adequate production n13 also raises some conceptual questions about how and whether non-in rem claims (which may be contingent and unliquidated, and by definition do not attach to specific property) could be adequately protected. n14

Al Perry Enterprises, Inc. v. Appalachian Fuels, LLC. The Sixth Circuits decision in Al Perry does little to resolve any of these issues. Although the holding pays lip service to the broad scope of section 363(f), it contains no meaningful discussion of that Bankruptcy Code section. Nonetheless, the case serves as a useful illustration of the competing concerns that courts face as they continue to wrestle with the scope of section 363(f), and of some practical considerations lawyers should keep in mind when representing parties in connection with a free and clear sale of estate assets.

In Al Perry, Al Perry Enterprises, Inc. (Perry) entered into a contract with Bowie Resources, Ltd. (Bowie) for Perry to procure coal supply contracts for Bowie on commission (the Commissions Contract). In accordance with their agreement, Perry procured a coal supply contract for Bowie to supply coal to the Tennessee Valley Authority (the TVA Contract). For several years, Bowie paid commissions on the TVA Contract, as agreed. Bowie subsequently filed a petition under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, assumed the Commissions Contract, and continued to make payments. Perry accordingly did not make a claim against the estate.

Once in bankruptcy, Bowie negotiated to sell substantially all of its assets to JJM Energy, LLC (JJM). The proposed asset purchase agreement provided that the assets were to be delivered free and clear of all Liens except [liabilities JJM agreed to assume] pursuant to section 363 and 365 of the Bankruptcy Code. The proposed agreement further provided that JJM would agree to assume all of Bowies liabilities relating to the Purchase Assets or to the Business arising after the Closing Date, including all Liabilities and obligations arising in connection with the Executory Contracts [which included the TVA Contract]. Perry objected to the sale, arguing that the Commissions Contract would be wiped out by this language. Ultimately, JJM and Bowie did not consummate the sale.

Later, however, Bowie found a new buyer in Appalachian Fuels, LLC (Appalachian), which agreed to purchase substantially all of Bowies assets on terms identical to the JJM sale. Perry did not object to this new sale, and the bankruptcy court entered an order authorizing the sale free and clear of all liens, claims, interests and encumbrances, with the exception of any liabilities Appalachian agreed to assume. Once the sale was consummated, Appalachian refused to make any commission payments to Perry on its sales of coal under the TVA Contract. Perry sued for breach of contract. On the parties cross-motions for summary judgment, the district court adopted the bankruptcy courts recommended decision and rejected Perrys claim.

On appeal, the Sixth Circuit held that Al Perry was not entitled to its commissions under the Commissions Contract. The court wove though its opinion three distinct rationales for denying Perrys claim (with varying degrees of articulation): (1) the broad scope of section 363(f); (2) common law principles of successor liability; and (3) Perrys own failure to file a claim or object to the Appalachian sale.

With respect to section 363(f), the court held that the bankruptcy court has clear power to approve the sale of debtors assets free and clear of any interest or claims that could be brought against the bankrupt estate during bankruptcy pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 363(f) and that the effect of the bankruptcy courts order [approving the section 363(f) sale] was to extinguish Perrys claim unless it was expressly assumed by Appalachian Fuels as part of the purchase agreement. 503 F.3d at 543. Citing a bankruptcy courts opinion in Autostyle Plastics, Inc. v. Car-Tec, Inc., 227 B.R. 797 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1998), which contains a similarly broad statement of a trustees (and courts) section 363(f) powers, the court concluded that because Perry claimed entitlement to commissions for work it had completed prior to the bankruptcy, its claim for payment was a claim as defined by section 101(5)(A) of the Bankruptcy Code, and therefore could not be asserted against Appalachian by virtue of section 363(f). Al Perry, 503 F.3d at 543.

Al Perry therefore appears to reflect the degree to which the Sixth Circuit takes for granted the view that section 363(f) may apply to claims that are not in rem interests. Indeed, neither party disputed that the court had that authority--and perhaps for that reason, the court did not discuss the issue in depth. As a result, however, it may prove too much to argue that Al Perry represents a full-throated rejection of the alternate readings of section 363(f), or an endorsement of the policy rationales articulated in other cases for interpreting the section to include successor liability claims.

Indeed, most of the Sixth Circuits opinion is spent discussing the second and third rationales identified above. Perrys sole argument on appeal was that it was entitled to commissions under the Commissions Contract because Appalachian had expressly assumed that liability in the purchase agreement. Perry pointed to language in the purchase agreement providing that Appalachian would assume liabilities relating to the assets being purchased, including those arising in connection with the TVA contract.

Without specifically discussing the common law doctrine of successor liability, but impliedly adopting its precepts, n15 the Sixth Circuit accepted the premise that Appalachian could be held liable on the Commissions Contract if it had agreed to do so. The court concluded, however, that the obligation to pay commissions to Perry is related to and arising in connection with the [Commissions Contract], and that no language in the purchase agreement constitutes an assumption of the obligation of Bowie relating to and arising in connection with the TVA Contract, which the court described as a totally separate contract on a totally different subject matter. 503 F.3d at 54344.

The Sixth Circuit also repeatedly faulted Perry for not having filed a proof of claim or objected to the Appalachian sale. The court specifically adopted the holding in Car-Tec that claims such as Perrys should have been brought forward during the bankruptcy and could not be asserted against Appalachian once Perry failed to do so. Id. at 54243. n16 Significantly, the court also noted that Perry had previously objected to the JJM sale but had not objected to the sale to Appalachian. Id. at 543 n.4. Lessons of Al Perry. Despite its lack of clarity on the issue of the definition of the term interests in section 363(f), Al Perry suggests some guidelines for attorneys on all sides of a section 363(f) sale. Counsel representing debtors or purchasers of estate assets should draft purchase agreements in broad terms, n17 and be explicit about what liabilities, if any, are being assumed. Counsel should be mindful that this will not necessarily insulate the purchaser from all successor liability claims (especially claims arising after the sale), but it may reduce litigation risk. On the flip side, lawyers representing creditors with claims at risk of being affected by a sale pursuant to section 363(f) should preserve their claim at every opportunity--by filing a proof of claim (if procedurally proper) and objecting to or otherwise seeking to protect their interest in connection with any proposed sale. Creditors counsel whose clients claims are at risk of being subject to a free and clear sale may also want to consider invoking section 363(e)s guarantee of adequate protection, despite the conceptual difficulties that such a request would entail. Although it is not clear how adequate protection would be supplied in the context of a non-in rem claim, a creditor may contend that the logical extension of treating claims as interests under section 363(f) of the Bankruptcy Code is that he is entitled to such relief, a position that may garner more favorable treatment than would otherwise be the case.

For further discussion of Bankruptcy Code section 363, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 363 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

Return to Text

n1 . 14 Stat. 517 (1867) (emphasis added). The power to sell estate property free and clear may also be inferred from earlier, short-lived bankruptcy statutes. The Bankruptcy Act of 1800, 2 Stat. 19 (1800) (repealed 1803), permitted the bankruptcy assignee (a precursor to the trustee) to dispose of all the bankrupts estate, real and personal, at public auction or venue, without being subject to any tax, duty, imposition or restriction, any law to the contrary notwithstanding. Id. at 33, § 44. Likewise, the Bankruptcy Act of 1841 contemplated that district courts could order the assignee to sell estate property, the proceeds of which would be paid into the court. 9 Stat. 447 at § 9 (1841) (repealed 1843). Each statute distributed the estate pro rata to creditors without regard to their security interests. 2 Stat. at 30, § 31; 9 Stat. at 444, § 5.

n2

[2]. See, e.g., Fairchild Aircraft Inc. v. Cambell (In re Fairchild Aircraft Corp.), 184 B.R. 910 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 1995) (holding that section 363(f) applies only to in rem interests in estate property), vacated on other grounds, 220 B.R. 909 (Bankr.W.D.Tex. 1998).

n3

[3]. Leckie, 99 F.3d at 582.

n4

[4]. Trans World, 322 F.3d at 289. Both also agree, however, that this is not a limitless category. As the Fourth Circuit put it in Leckie, an interest subject to extinguishment under section 363(f) does not arise simply [because] one has a right to demand money from the debtor. Leckie, 99 F.3d at 581.

n5

[5]. See, e.g., Ninth Ave. Remedial Group. v. Allis-Chalmers Corp., 195 B.R. 716, 731 (N.D. Ind. 1996) (citing cases).

n6

[6]. See Myers v. United States, 297 B.R. 774 (S.D. Cal. 2003) (personal injury claim that arose before free and clear sale of estate property was subject to section 363(f), despite lack of notice to the claimant of the sale)

n7

[7]. See In re All American of Ashburn, Inc., 56 B.R. 186 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1986) (product liability claim arising before sale of property was subject to section 363(f))

n8

[8]. See, e.g., Schwinn Cycling & Fitness, Inc. v. Benonis (In re Schwinn Bicycle Co.), 210 B.R. 747 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1997) (finding that section 363(f) in no way protects the buyer from current or future product liability; it only protects the purchased assets from lien claims against those assets); Fairchild, 184 B.R. at 91718 (The sorts of interests impacted by a sale free and clear are in rem interests which have attached to the property Section 363(f) is not intended to extinguish in personam liabilities.).

n9

[9]. See, e.g. In re Savage Ind., Inc., 43 F.3d 714 (1st Cir. 1994) (holding product liability claims that arose before free and clear sale were not covered by section 363(f) where claimant had no notice of sale); Zerand-Bernal Group v. Cox, 23 F.3d 159 (7th Cir. 1994) (purchaser was not free and clear of product liability claim arising after section 363(f) sale, although stating in dicta that section 363(f) would extinguish claim that could have been brought against the debtor).

n10

[10]. A potential solution to this problem is the appointment of a future claims representative to represent the interests of as-yet unidentified, but anticipated, future plaintiffs.

n11

[11]. See George W. Kuney, Misinterpreting Bankruptcy Code Section 363(f) and Undermining the Chapter 11 Process, 76 Am. Bankr. L.J. 235 (2002) (arguing that section 363(f) is limited to in rem interests, and criticizing application of section to in personam claims on constitutional and policy-based grounds).

n12

[12]. See Hon. William T. Bodoh & Michelle M. Morgan, Inequality Among Creditors: The Unconstitutional Use of Successor Liability to Create a New Class of Priority Claimants, 4 Am. Bankr. Inst. L. Rev. 325 (1996) (arguing that permitting successor liability claims to survive a section 363(f) sale is an unconstitutional infringement on the powers granted to Congress under the Bankruptcy Clause); see also Michael H. Reed, Successor Liability and Bankruptcy Sales Revisited--A New Paradigm, 61 Bus. Law. 179 (2005).

n13

[13]. 11. U.S.C. § 363(e).

n14

[14]. For instance, Bankruptcy Code section 361, which defines the types of adequate protection available under section 363, states that adequate protection is necessary to the extent the use, sale, or lease of estate property results in a decrease in the value of [an interest holders] interest in such property. 11 U.S.C. § 361(1). It may be difficult for courts to value an interest for the purposes of this section where the interest is something other than an in rem interest, particularly an unliquidated, future claim against the purchaser of the debtors assets.

n15

[15]. Although successor liability doctrine varies slightly from state to state, the general rule with respect to successor liability is that a purchasing corporation does not accept the liabilities of the selling corporation unless one of four exceptions is present: (1) the purchaser expressly or impliedly agrees to assume such debts or other liabilities; (2) the transaction amounts to a consolidation or merger of the seller and purchaser; (3) the purchasing corporation is merely a continuation of the selling corporation; or (4) the transaction is entered into fraudulently in order to escape liability for such debts. See, e.g., Parker v. Henry A. Petter Supply Co., 165 S.W.3d 474, 479 (Ky. App. 2005).

n16

[16]. As in Al Perry, the claimant in Car-Tec did not file a proof of claim or object to the asset sale. It is not clear whether either court would treat failure to file the proof of claim, alone, as a reason for subjecting the claim to a free and clear sale. If section 363(f) is as broad as the Sixth Circuit contends, then Perrys claim would presumably have been affected by the law in any event.

n17

[17]. But see In re Automationsolutions Intl, LLC, 274 B.R. 527 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2002) (criticizing counsel for overreaching in broadly drafted proposed order).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Mark Broude is a partner in the New York office of Latham & Watkins, where he is a member of the Insolvency Practice. His practice focuses primarily on business reorganization, creditors' rights, representation of unsecured creditors' committees and bank finance with particular focus on representing prepetition and post-petition lenders in workouts and chapter 11 cases; bondholders, both individually and formal and informal committees; and potential acquirers of assets of companies in chapter 11, both under section 363 and pursuant to plans of reorganization.

Mr. Broude has had extensive experience on a variety of major bankruptcy transactions. He has regularly represented prepetition and post-petition lenders in a substantial number of workouts and chapter 11 cases. Mr. Broude represents bondholders, both individually and formal and informal committees, as well as statutory committees, including most recently the official committee of unsecured creditors of Delphi Corporation, the largest industrial bankruptcy in United States history. He has represented Debtors in complex chapter 11 cases, including Spring Air Partners and Trump Hotels & Casino Resorts. He also represents potential acquirers of assets of companies in chapter 11, both under section 363 and pursuant to plans of reorganization. Mr. Broude has received recognition of his expertise in the bankruptcy field, including his being named one of the leading practitioners in the restructuring and insolvency arena by Chambers USA and Chambers Global.

Mr. Broude is a co-author of Collier Lending Institutions and the Bankruptcy Code (Matthew Bender). His articles have appeared in numerous publications, including Global Insolvency and Restructuring Review, International Business Lawyer, and New York Law Journal.

He speaks frequently on a variety of bankruptcy-related topics for the Association of the Bar for the City of New York and the International Bar Association.

Mr. Broude is a graduate of Williams College (B.A., cum laude) and the University of Chicago (J.D., Order of the Coif).

George Royle V is an associate in the Litigation Department in the New York office of Latham & Watkins. His practice involves representing plaintiffs and defendants in complex commercial litigation matters before state and federal courts, bankruptcy courts, and national and international arbitration tribunals. Mr. Royle also represents corporate clients in connection with internal and external investigations relating to regulatory compliance issues. Mr. Royle is a member of the firms Pro Bono Committee. Mr. Royle has taken a lead or important supporting role in a number of complex commercial litigation matters, including the firms representation of a multi-national pharmaceutical device manufacturer before a New York state court, in the defense of claims of breach of contract and business torts and the pursuit of counterclaims for breach of contract and fraud.

Mr. Royle is a graduate of Amherst College (B.A., magna cum laude) and New York University (J.D.), where he was Symposium Editor of the Annual Survey of American Law.

86 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on Remedies for Violation of the Automatic Stay

2008 Emerging Issues 1618

Collier on Remedies for Violation of the Automatic Stay

By Collier

December 18, 2007

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis covers whether a violation of the automatic stay is void or voidable, the annulment of automatic stays, the punishment for violation of a stay by contempt of court sanctions, and the payment of damages, costs, and attorneys fees under Bankruptcy Code section 362(k) for willful violations of automatic stays.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: The automatic stay of section 362 is effective immediately upon the filing of the petition, whether voluntary, joint or involuntary. Formal service of process is not required. Because the stay is imposed automatically, and often without notice to parties who may be stayed, a party may violate the stay without realizing that it has taken effect. In other cases, a party may knowingly violate the stay, either in the erroneous belief that the partys action is permitted or in disregard of the stay. At least one court has held that only a party protected by the stay may seek enforcement of the stay. n1

Action Violating the Stay is Void. Most courts have held that actions taken in violation of the stay are void and without effect. n2 However, some courts have found that actions taken in violation of the stay are voidable, not void, permitting an action to take effect if it is not objected to. n3 The cases draw support for this proposition from the fact that one of the alternatives under section 362(d), when a request for relief from the stay is made, is to annul the stay and thus apparently to validate actions otherwise taken in violation of it. n4

The better approach is to view the annulment option as a means of avoiding the effect of the stay, rather than as an indication that acts taken in violation are voidable. If such acts were merely voidable, then the debtor would have the obligation to avoid acts taken in violation. n5 In view of the importance of the stay, it is preferable to treat any such acts as void and of no effect, subject to being given effect by annulment or modification of the stay. n6 Although a court may use the annulment power to give retroactive relief from the stay, relief should be granted sparingly. n7 The breathing room provided by the stay would be limited if debtors feared regular retroactive validation. Debtors would be forced to defend all actions, even those stayed, because the stay might be retroactively annulled and a default by the debtor might become binding. Thus, retroactive relief should be granted only in extraordinary circumstances, such as when a creditor acted without knowledge of the stay, under circumstances in which relief from the stay would have been available, and where the creditor changed its position in reliance on the validity of its action.

Violation of Stay Is Contempt of Court. A violation of the stay is punishable as contempt of court. n8 Most courts will impose contempt sanctions for a knowing and willful violation of a court order, and the automatic stay is considered as equivalent to a court order. n9 If the conduct is willful, even if based upon advice of counsel, contempt is an appropriate remedy. n10 When a violation of the stay is inadvertent, contempt is not an appropriate remedy. n11 Nevertheless, the creditor has a duty to undo actions taken in violation of the automatic stay. n12 Failure to undo a technical violation may elevate the violation to a willful one. n13 In In re Crysen/Montenay Energy Co., n14 the court described the standard governing the imposition of sanctions in contempt proceedings as follows:

[Prior to the enactment of section 362(k)] the standard that governed the imposition of sanctions was that which governed contempt proceedings: a party generally would not have sanctions imposed for its violation of an automatic stay as long as it had acted without maliciousness and had a good faith argument and belief that its actions did not violate the stay.

It should be noted that contempt and other remedies may not be available against states that violate the automatic stay. In Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, n15 the Supreme Court held that in the absence of a waiver of sovereign immunity, Congress may waive a states sovereign immunity only through an express waiver pursuant to a valid exercise of power. It has been held that although Bankruptcy Code section 106 contains an express waiver of sovereign immunity, the waiver may be an invalid and unconstitutional exercise of congressional power. n16

Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9020 sets out a procedure for dealing with contempt. In general, it provides that contempt committed in the presence of the bankruptcy judge may be determined summarily by the judge. Other contempt may be determined by the judge after a hearing on notice. An order of contempt has the same force and effect as an order entered by the district court unless, within 10 days after the order, the entity held in contempt serves and files objections, in which case the district court may review the findings and order de novo. Thus, contempt matters need not necessarily be referred to the district court; the bankruptcy court retains some power to deal with contempt. n17

In some cases, courts have been persuaded to annul the automatic stay when the filing of the case was in bad faith. In this event, an innocent action in apparent violation of the stay will not be void. n18 In all but the rarest case, it will be prudent for the creditor to undo the effect of its innocent action and thereafter to assert the debtors bad faith as a basis for relief. n19

Recovery of Damages for Willful Violation of the Stay. Section 362(k) provides for a recovery of damages, costs and attorneys fees by an individual damaged by a willful violation of the stay. n20 Under section 362(k)(1), which was designated as section 362(h) prior to the 2005 amendments, in an appropriate case, an individual injured by a stay violation may also recover punitive damages. n21 Once the creditor becomes aware of the filing of the bankruptcy petition and therefore the automatic stay, any intentional act is willful.' n22 The bankruptcy court has exclusive jurisdiction over sanctions for a stay violation. n23

Several amendments to the Bankruptcy Code made in 2005 limit the relief available under section 362(k)(1). Section 362(k)(2) was added as a companion provision to section 362(h), which provides for the termination of the stay as to personal property based on the debtors failure to take certain action related to the statement on intention under section 521(a)(2). n24 If a violation of the stay is based on an action taken by an entity in the good faith belief that the stay had been terminated as to the debtor under section 362(h), section 362(k)(2) provides that the recovery under section 362(k)(1) shall be limited to actual damages. Recovery of actual damages, based on the language of section 362(k)(1), may include an award of attorneys fees and costs. There also appears to be an emerging consensus that emotional distress damages may be recovered in an award of actual damages under section 362(k)(1). n25

In addition, section 342(g)(2), added in 2005, provides that a monetary penalty may not be imposed on a creditor under section 362(k) for violation of the stay unless the conduct that is the basis for the violation occurs after the creditor has received effective notice as provided under section 342 of the order for relief. n26 Since actual damages are typically viewed as compensatory in nature, and generally do not serve as a penalty, this provision appears to preclude only the recovery of punitive damages under section 362(k)(1). This limitation on the award of punitive damages applies only to the creditor who has not received effective notice under section 342, not others who have violated the stay.

Several courts have considered whether section 362(k) provides all debtors with a remedy against stay violators or whether its scope is limited by the reference in section 362(k) to an individual injured by a stay violation. The question is of some importance because, although a stay violation may be punished as contempt, the imposition of a remedy under a civil contempt procedure may be subject to a stricter standard than is imposed by section 362(k) and does not afford the availability of punitive, in addition to compensatory, damages. Moreover, the power of a bankruptcy court to impose a civil contempt sanction is subject to more extensive procedural requirements than are present in affording a remedy under section 362(k).ⁿ²⁷ In particular, an action seeking a remedy under section 362(k) is a core proceeding that may be decided by the bankruptcy court. Under Bankruptcy Rule 9020, contempt is treated as similar to a noncore proceeding, the result of which may be subject to de novo review by the district court.

Some courts have held that the section 362(k) remedy is available only to natural persons.ⁿ²⁸ For example, in In re Chateaugay Corp.,ⁿ²⁹ the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held that the remedy under section 362(k) is not available to corporate debtors and instead is limited to debtors who are natural persons. The court suggested that the context in which the term individual is used generally suggests a natural person, not a partnership or a corporation. For example, only an individual with regular income may file a chapter 13 petition. Apparently, Congress intended that only natural persons could use chapter 13 and that partnerships and corporations must generally reorganize under chapter 11. The court also pointed to section 101, which defines relative as an individual related by affinity or consanguinity within the third degree. The court dryly observed that corporations and partnerships are not related by affinity or consanguinity; thus, individual must be limited to a natural person. The court also found that there was no legislative history to suggest that the term individual was intended to refer to a person. Thus, there was no reason to believe that rejection of the broader interpretation would defeat the legislative intent.

Other courts have permitted corporate debtors to take advantage of section 362(k). The leading case in this respect is *Budget Serv. Co. v. Better Homes of Virginia, Inc.*ⁿ³⁰ The court stated that it seems unlikely that Congress meant to give a remedy only to individual debtors against those who willfully violate the automatic stay provisions of the Code as opposed to debtors which are corporations or other like entities. Such a narrow construction of the term would defeat much of the purpose of the section.ⁿ³¹ Thus, the court held that the term individual as used in section 362(k) includes corporate debtors and that the provision gave the bankruptcy court the authority to impose the sanctions.

There is also a split of authority over whether a bankruptcy trustee is an individual for purposes of section 362(k). In In re Pace,ⁿ³² the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit read individual narrowly to exclude a trustee because, while the trustee was a natural person, the interest the trustee represented was that of the bankruptcy estate, not a natural person. In In re Garofalos Finer Foods, Inc., the district court rejected the Ninth Circuit's narrow reading of the term individual in favor of a broader definition that would assure that the estate, through the trustee, could recover costs and attorneys fees incurred by the trustee in, among other things, recovering property in the possession of a recalcitrant third party.ⁿ³³

Although the automatic stay is of critical importance in bankruptcy cases, the better approach is to recognize that section 362(k) provides a remedy only for natural persons. The provision was enacted in 1984 as part of a package of consumer amendments intended to deal with individual bankruptcy.ⁿ³⁴ If Congress had intended to provide a damage remedy for all debtors, it could easily have chosen a word other than individual to denominate the beneficiaries of the remedy. In fact, although the standards and procedures for contempt may be slightly more demanding, courts have had little difficulty dealing with and punishing stay violations even without the availability of section 362(k).ⁿ³⁵ There is little reason to adopt a tortured reading of the statute in order to provide corporate or partnership debtors or trustees with a remedy for stay violations.

For a complete discussion of the automatic stay, see Collier on Bankruptcy ch. 362.

Return to Text

n1 1. In re New Era, Inc., 135 F.3d 1206 (7th Cir. 1998) (debtor may not enforce automatic stay to protect estate).

n2

2. Kalb v. Feuerstein, 308 U.S. 433, 60 S. Ct. 343, 84 L. Ed. 370 (1940); Soares v. Brockton Credit Union (In re Soares), 107 F.3d 969 (1st Cir. 1997); In re Schwartz, 954 F.2d 569, 26 C.B.C.2d 649 (9th Cir. 1992); Smith v. First America Bank, N.A. (In re Smith), 876 F.2d 524 (6th Cir. 1989); In re 48th Street Steakhouse, Inc., 835 F.2d 427, 17 C.B.C.2d 1415 (2d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 1035, 108 S. Ct. 1596, 99 L. Ed. 2d 910 (1989); Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 804 F.2d 1487 (9th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 929, 107 S. Ct. 3213, 96 L. Ed. 2d 700 (1987); In re Advent Corp., 24 B.R. 612 (Bankr. 1st Cir. 1982). An exception may exist in rare cases on equitable grounds. Matthews v. Rosene, 739 F.2d 249 (7th Cir. 1989); In re Albany Partners, Ltd., 749 F.2d 670, 12 C.B.C.2d 244 (11th Cir. 1984) (dictum); In re Smith Corset Shops, Inc., 696 F.2d 971, 7 C.B.C.2d 1009 (1st Cir. 1982); Borg-Warner Acceptance Corp. v. Hall, 685 F.2d 1306, 7 C.B.C.2d 209 (11th Cir. 1982).

n3

3. In re Jones, 63 F.3d 411 (5th Cir. 1995); Bronson v. United States, 46 F.3d 1573 (Fed. Cir. 1995); Easley v. Pettibone Michigan Corp., 990 F.2d 905, 911, 28 C.B.C.2d 1002, 1008 (6th Cir. 1993) (actions taken in violation of the stay are invalid and voidable and shall be voided absent limited equitable circumstances); Job v. Calder (In re Calder), 907 F.2d 953, 23 C.B.C.2d 677 (10th Cir. 1990); Sikes v. Global Marine, Inc., 881 F.2d 176 (5th Cir. 1989).

n4

4. In re Siciliano, 13 F.3d 748, 30 C.B.C.2d 667 (3d Cir. 1994).

n5

5. Soares v. Brockton Credit Union (In re Soares), 107 F.3d 969 (1st Cir. 1997); In re Schwartz, 954 F.2d 569, 26 C.B.C.2d 649 (9th Cir. 1992).

n6

6. In re Schwartz, 954 F.2d 569, 26 C.B.C.2d 649 (9th Cir. 1992).

n7

7. Soares v. Brockton Credit Union (In re Soares), 107 F.3d 969 (1st Cir. 1997).

n8

8. Jove Eng'g, Inc. v. IRS, 92 F.3d 1539 (11th Cir. 1996); Mountain Am. Credit Union v. Skinner (In re Skinner), 917 F.2d 444 (10th Cir. 1990) (stay violations may be punishable under this subsection, if applicable, or as contempt under 11 U.S.C. § 105).

n9

9. See, e.g., Hubbard v. Fleet Mortgage Co., 810 F.2d 778 (8th Cir. 1987); In re Xavier's of Beville, 172 B.R. 667 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1994); In re Fry, 122 B.R. 427 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 1990); see also Fidelity Mortgage Investors v. Camelia Builders, Inc., 550 F.2d 47 (2d Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1093, 97 S. Ct., 1107, 51 L. Ed. 2d 540, reh'g denied, 430 U.S. 976, 97 S. Ct. 1670, 52 L. Ed. 2d 372 (1977).

n10

10. See Homer Nat'l Bank v. Namie, 96 B.R. 652, 654 (W.D. La. 1989); see also Fidelity Mortgage Investors v. Camelia Builders, Inc., 550 F.2d 47 (2d Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1093, 97 S. Ct., 1107, 51 L. Ed. 2d 540, reh'g denied, 430 U.S. 976, 97 S. Ct. 1670, 52 L. Ed. 2d 372 (1977).

n11

11. Vahlsing v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. 928 F.2d 486, 489 (1st Cir. 1991) (Violation of the stay, is not a strict liability tort.); see also Smith v. First America Bank, N.A. (In re Smith), 876 F.2d 524 (6th Cir. 1989); In re Smith Corset Shops, Inc., 696 F.2d 971, 7 C.B.C.2d 1009 (1st Cir. 1982); Foreston Coal Int'l, Inc. v. Red Ash Coal & Coke Corp., 18 C.B.C.2d 1414, 83 B.R. 399 (W.D. Va. 1988).

n12

12. In re Wright, 75 B.R. 414 (M.D. Fla. 1987).

n13

13. See In re Taylor, 190 B.R. 459 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1995); Mitchell Constr. Co. v. Smith (In re Smith), 180 B.R. 311 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1995).

n14

14. 902 F.2d 1098, 1104, 22 C.B.C.2d 1385, 1392-93 (2d Cir. 1990).

n15

15. 517 U.S. 44, 116 S. Ct. 1114, 134 L. Ed. 2d 252 (1996).

n16

16. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 106.02[2][b].

n17

17. See Brown v. Ramsey (In re Ragar), 3 F.3d 1174, 29 C.B.C.2d 1005 (8th Cir. 1993) (collecting cases on divergent views of bankruptcy court's contempt power). The Advisory Committee Notes to the 1987 amendments state that the amended Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9020 recognizes that bankruptcy judges may not have the power to punish for contempt. See also In re Just Brakes Corporate Sys., Inc., 108 F.3d 881 (8th Cir. 1997) (Congress has conferred no power to punish for a violation of § 362(a), other than the punitive damage authority in § 362(h); the court found that the bankruptcy court retains the power to remedy, but not to punish, stay violations).

n18

18. Mataya v. Kissinger (In re Kissinger), 72 F.3d 107 (9th Cir. 1995); Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Pinetree, Ltd., 876 F.2d 34 (5th Cir. 1989); In re Washtenaw/Huron Inv. Corp. No. 8, 160 B.R. 74 (E.D. Mich. 1993).

n19

19. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 362.07[6][a].

n20

20. 11 U.S.C. § 362(k) has been held to create a private right of action for one damaged by a willful violation of the stay. Pettitt v. Baker, 876 F.2d 456 (5th Cir. 1989). An award of damages under 11 U.S.C. §362(k) must have a sufficient factual foundation. Goichman v. Bloom (In re Bloom), 875 F.2d 224 (9th Cir. 1989); Archer v. Macomb County Bank, 853 F.2d 497, 19 C.B.C.2d 1279 (6th Cir. 1988) (award of compensatory damages not supported by evidence).

n21

21. Promower, Inc. v. Scuderi (In re Promower, Inc.), 74 B.R. 49 (D. Md. 1987).

n22

22. Fleet Mortgage Group, Inc. v. Kaneb, 196 F.3d 265 (1st Cir. 1999); In re Lansdale Family Restaurants, Inc., 977 F.2d 826, 829 (3d Cir. 1992) (act done intentionally with knowledge that bankruptcy petition has been filed is willful violation of stay).

n23

23. Halas v. Platek, 239 B.R. 784 (N.D. Ill. 1999) (state court denial of section 362(b) was not res judicata).

n24

24. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 362.10A.

n25

25. In re Dawson, 390 F.3d 1139, 1148 (9th Cir. 2004); Fleet Mortgage Group, Inc. v. Kaneb, 196 F.3d 265 (1st Cir. 1999). But see Aiello v. Providian Fin. Corp., 239 F.3d 876 (7th Cir. 2001).

n26

26. 11 U.S.C. § 342(g)(2), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n27

27. See Mountain Am. Credit Union v. Skinner (In re Skinner), 917 F.2d 444 (10th Cir. 1990). It appears that assessment of damages under 11 U.S.C. § 362(k) is a core proceeding. See, e.g., Budget Serv. Co. v. Better Homes of Virginia, Inc., 804 F.2d 289, 15 C.B.C.2d 1025 (4th Cir. 1986).

n28

28. See, e.g., In re Just Brakes Corporate Sys., Inc., 108 F.3d 881 (8th Cir. 1997); Jove Eng'g, Inc. v. IRS, 92 F.3d 1539, 36 C.B.C.2d 1270 (11th Cir. 1996); Environmental Corp. v. Knight (In re Goodman), 991 F.2d 613 (9th Cir. 1993).

n29

29. 920 F.2d 183 (2d Cir. 1990).

n30

30. 804 F.2d 289, 15 C.B.C.2d 1025 (4th Cir. 1986); see also In re Atlantic Business and Community Corp., 901 F.2d 325, 22 C.B.C.2d 1176 (3d Cir. 1990).

n31

31. 804 F.2d 289, 292, 15 C.B.C.2d 1025, 1028.

n32

32. 67 F.3d 187 (9th Cir. 1995) (trustee not an individual).

n33

33. 186 B.R. 414 (E.D. Ill. 1995) (trustee is an individual).

n34

34. Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 304 (1984), reprinted in Collier on Bankruptcy, App. Pt. 6(a).

n35

35. See, e.g., In re Pace, 67 F.3d 187 (9th Cir. 1995) (although trustee could not recover costs under section 362(h), trustee could recover similarly upon a finding of contempt); In re Ormond Beach Assocs. Ltd. Partnership, 185 B.R. 408 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1995).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

87 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on the Disallowance of Interest as of the Petition Date

2008 Emerging Issues 1619

Collier on the Disallowance of Interest as of the Petition Date

By Collier

December 18, 2007

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis covers prepaid interest that represents an original discounting of a claim, the operation of section 502(b)(2) as a bankruptcy rule of liquidation, the effect on interest when a debt is found to be nondischargeable, and the operation of section 502(b)(2) as to solvent debtors, secured creditors, and tax claims.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Bankruptcy Code section 502(b)(2) states the general rule that there is a suspension of the accrual of interest on claims as of the date of the filing of the petition. Section 502(b)(2) provides that a claim is disallowed to the extent that such claim is for unmatured interest. n1 Thus, section 502(b)(2) prohibits payment of postpetition interest on prepetition unsecured claims, including claims for prepetition taxes. n2 Although different methods of considering and computing interest in bankruptcy cases are conceivable, fixing the cutoff point for the accrual of interest as of the date of the filing of the petition is a rule of convenience providing for equity in distribution. This rule combines the advantage of practicability with equality of distribution. To take into account contractual interest would not only entail considerable administrative inconvenience but also violate the equitable principle that the delay in liquidation and subsequent distribution necessitated by the bankruptcy process should result in neither gain nor loss for similarly situated creditors. n3 Interest on debts is to be computed as of the date of the filing of the petition. n4 This policy is clear not only from the sparse, unambiguous statement expressed in section 502(b)(2), but also from the identical comments made by both the House and the Senate Judiciary Committees in the legislative histories of this section. n5

Effect of Disallowance of Interest as of Petition Date. The disallowance of interest as of the petition date has several implications. First, section 502(b) does not provide a mechanism for a creditor to receive postpetition interest at the post-default rate. n6 Additionally, whether interest is considered to be matured or unmatured for the purpose of this section is to be determined without reference to any ipso facto bankruptcy clause in the agreement creating the claim. Thus, the mere filing of the petition serves to accelerate the unpaid portion of the debt on the date of the petition. n7 It does not, however, accelerate or allow the accrual of interest that is unmatured as of the date of the filing. Simply stated, the filing of a petition accelerates the principal amount of all unmatured claims against the debtor, whether or not a clause in a prepetition agreement provides that a bankruptcy filing accelerates the maturity date.

Original Issue Discount. Section 502(b)(2) disallows not only postpetition interest not yet due and payable as of the date of the filing, but also prepaid interest representing an original discounting of the claim that was not fully earned on the petition date. Courts, in analyzing these transactions, have considered evidence outside the terms of the document in order to focus on substance over form. n8 Prepaid interest must be prorated and then disallowed to the extent not accrued as of the petition date. Unamortized original issue discount (OID) is unmatured interest within the meaning of section 502(b)(2). n9 However, because unamortized OID on new debt that results from a face value debt-for-debt exchange consists only of the discount carried over from the old debt at the time of the exchange, it is not subject to section 502(b)(2), for that section affects only the old OID. n10 A debt-to-debt face value exchange does not generate original issue discount, and the full face amount of a debt instrument is the proper amount of claim in a bankruptcy case which may not be reduced on the ground that the discount is unmatured interest. n11 The leading and most cited case for the method used to calculate unamortized OID is In re Chateaugay Corp., n12 The Chateaugay court found that interest should be calculated under a constant interest method that allows for compounding and is closer to the economic realities of the transaction. n13 The Chateaugay court also considered a straight line method for calculating interest that had been adopted by an earlier court, n14 but criticized that court for its lack of analysis on how to prorate interest. n15

Operation of Section 502(b)(2) as Bankruptcy Rule of Liquidation. The principle that interest stops running from the date of the filing of the petition can be viewed as a bankruptcy rule of liquidation rather than as a rule of substantive law. n16 In the overwhelming majority of cases, a final distribution to creditors is far less than even the principal amount owed, let alone the interest thereon. Therefore, disputes over interest are often academic. n17 In liquidating interest-bearing claims, the computation of interest must be made as of some fixed date. Bankruptcy law selects the petition date and disregards, for purposes of the liquidation of the debtors assets, interest accruing beyond that date. This is primarily a technical policy device to cope with the debtors insolvency in the most convenient, equitable and economical way. n18

Interest Continues to Accrue Even If Not Allowable Against Estate. Most courts find that interest continues to accrue on all prepetition debt even if such interest cannot be charged against the estate. This is important in instances where a debt becomes nondischargeable. The effect of the intervening bankruptcy case was merely to delay payment of the interest on the nondischargeable debt and not to relieve that payment. n19 In such a circumstance, since interest continues to accrue, it is unavailing for a codebtor or a guarantor of debtors debt to assert that the debtor's bankruptcy case might relieve them from the obligation of payment of interest on the codebt or guarantee.

Allowance of Interest Where Debtor Is Solvent. In rare cases, estate assets are sufficient to pay interest accrued after the filing date. In these cases, it would seem inappropriate for the trustee to return the surplus assets, after accommodating all creditor claims but without distributing any amount for postpetition interest, to the debtor. n20 Therefore, in these cases, the Code does require that postpetition interest be paid to creditors before distributing the excess assets to the debtor.

Section 726(a), in listing the order of priority of payment from the debtors estate, provides in paragraph (5) for the payment of interest at the legal rate from the date of the filing of the petition on any claim paid under the preceding paragraphs of that section, before any surplus will be returned to the debtor. Thus, under section 726(a), n21 distribution of the property of the estate is first made to the kinds of claims described in section 507 (claims entitled to priority) and then, in order, to timely filed unsecured claims other than priority claims, to tardily filed unsecured claims, to claims for fines, penalties or forfeiture, and finally to creditors for postpetition interest. Only following full application of this distributive scheme of section 726(a) may any payment at all be made to the debtor under section 726(a)(6). This scheme illustrates that the disallowance of claims for unmatured interest as of the petition date is based on policy and convenience as much as on substantive law. n22

Interest does not survive the debt from which it stemmed; if the debt was extinguished, so was any interest relating to it. n23 Also, when interest is payable because a debtor proves to be solvent, the proper rate of interest is the statutory or legal rate. n24 The purpose for this rule is because allowing a contractual rate over the statutory rate would benefit some creditors over others.

Allowance of Interest to Secured Creditors. Secured creditors are no less affected by the cessation of interest after the filing date than are unsecured creditors. Yet, in some respects they enjoy, by reason of their security, a superior position. A secured creditor whose security is insufficient to cover both the debt and interest may not increase its deficiency claim by applying the proceeds realized from the sale of the security first against interest accrued after the filing date. To that extent, its rights remain similar to those of the unsecured creditor. n25 It has always been a fundamental principle of bankruptcy law, however, that valid liens are not impaired in the administration of the estate. n26 This principle is reflected in section 506(b) of the Code. Consequently, the payment of interest that accrues after the date of the petition is permitted when the security for the debt is sufficient. This is true because the collateral is security for the payment of interest as much as for the payment of the principal debt. n27 When a secured creditor is thus oversecured, however, courts may adjust the interest rate for postpetition interest if the contractual rate is viewed as excessive. n28

There is another historical exception to the rule against allowance of interest, which has not been recognized by all courts and is not explicitly set out in the Code. If a secured creditor possesses collateral of a kind that yields interest, dividends, or other income in the interval between the date of the filing of the petition and the liquidation of the collateral, this income may be applied to the payment of interest on the debt accruing after the date of the filing of the petition. n29

The Bankruptcy Code was amended by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994 to prevent the award of interest on interest (unless contained in the agreement or provided by nonbankruptcy law) and the attendant court contrived windfall to secured creditors at the expense of unsecured creditors in cases in which the debtor's plan proposed to cure a default. n30

Disallowance of Interest on Tax Claims. There is no indication that tax claims, with respect to unmatured interest, are to be treated differently from other claims under the Bankruptcy Code. n31 Thus, interest does not continue to accrue on tax claims.

Tax Claims Not Accorded Distinct Treatment. Before 1949, the custom of treating tax claims differently from the standpoint of interest was accepted by some courts but repudiated by others. In 1949, the matter was settled by the United States Supreme in City of New York v. Saper. n32 The Court observed that no section of the 1898 Act even obliquely suggested that postpetition interest would be permitted on tax claims but, rather, that the Bankruptcy Act specifically provided that claims by taxing authorities were to be treated no differently than other claims except for the fact that tax claims were given a priority under Section 64a(4). In thus equating tax claims to other claims on the question of whether postpetition interest would be authorized, the Saper case dealt only with an unsecured tax claim. It in no way dealt with or altered the rule giving secured creditors interest to the date of payment when the security was sufficient to cover both principal and interest. n33 As there is nothing in the Code to suggest a rule contrary to that announced by the Supreme Court in Saper, it follows that the mere fact that a tax claim is involved does not presuppose the claim will be allowable to the extent it is for unmatured interest, nor that the rule is altered that stops interest from accruing as of the date of the filing of the petition.

Nonconsensual Liens Not Treated Differently from Consensual Liens. Before 1989, some courts drew a distinction between claims secured by a statutory lien and claims involving a specific piece of property given as collateral to secure a debt. n34 Those cases equated lien tax claims with non-lien tax claims and disallowed postpetition interest. n35 Other courts permitted recovery of postpetition interest where the government had a perfected statutory lien on all of the property. n36 The controversy ended with United States v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc. n37 The Supreme Court, addressing primarily section 506(b), held that there was no significant reason why Congress would have intended, nor any policy reason which would compel, that consensual and nonconsensual liens be treated differently with respect to postpetition interest. n38 Therefore, it is now settled that secured creditors are entitled to receive postpetition interest on oversecured statutory liens as well as on oversecured consensual liens. n39

This principle was further discussed and analyzed in Rake v. Wade. n40 In Rake, the Supreme Court further held that an oversecured creditor was due both pre- and postconfirmation interest arrearages in a chapter 13 plan.

For a complete discussion of Code chapter 502, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 502.

Return to Text

n1 1. See In re Republic Fin. Corp., 12 C.B.C.2d 646, 47 B.R. 766 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 1985); In re Christian, 8 C.B.C.2d 14, 25 B.R. 438 (Bankr. D.N.M. 1982); In re Standard Furniture Co., 2 C.B.C.2d 274, 3 B.R. 527 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1980); see also Blum, Treatment of Interest on Debtor Obligations in Reorganizations Under the Bankruptcy Code, 50 U. Chi. L. Rev. 430 (1983); Fortgang & King, The 1978 Bankruptcy Code: Some Wrong Policy Decisions, 56 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 1148 (1981). But see In re Kentucky Lumber Co., 860 F.2d 674, 676-77 (6th Cir. 1988) (discussing cases which recognize three nonexclusive exceptions: (1) where the debtor proves solvent; (2) where the collateral produces income postpetition; and (3) where the collateral is sufficient to pay interest as well as the principal of the claim); In re Twin Parks, Ltd., 720 F.2d 1374, 10 C.B.C.2d 564 (4th Cir. 1983) (allowance of interest accruing after the commencement of the case is permissible when the debtor is solvent, the debtors property continues to earn money, or the debt is nondischargeable) (decided under the former Bankruptcy Act).

n2

2. In re Del Mission Ltd., 998 F.2d 756, 29 C.B.C.2d 347 (9th Cir. 1993); In re Fullmer, 962 F.2d 1463, 27 C.B.C.2d 92 (10th Cir. 1992) (unmatured interest, including interest accruing postpetition on prepetition tax debt, not allowable); see also In re Fesco Plastics Corp. Inc., 996 F.2d 152, 28 C.B.C.2d 1503 (7th Cir. 1993).

n3

3. In re Fesco Plastics Corp Inc., 996 F.2d 152, 155, 28 C.B.C.2d 1503 (7th Cir. 1993).

n4

4. Vanston Bondholders Protective Comm. v. Green, 329 U.S. 156, 67 S. Ct. 237, 91 L. Ed. 162 (1946), in which the Court said:

Accrual of simple interest on unsecured claims in bankruptcy was prohibited in order that the administrative inconvenience of continuous recomputation of claims could be avoided. The bases for disallowing unmatured interest are concerns pertaining to administrative convenience and fairness to creditors, and collateral estoppel should not apply to prevent actions attempting to enforce such claims.

See also In re Hanna, 872 F.2d 829, 20 C.B.C.2d 1452 (8th Cir. 1989).

n5 5. The relevant legislative history reads as follows:

Paragraph (2) requires disallowance to the extent that the claim is for unmatured interest as of the date of the petition. Whether interest is matured or unmatured on the date of bankruptcy is to be determined without reference to any ipso facto or bankruptcy clause in the agreement creating the claim. Interest disallowed under this paragraph includes postpetition interest that is not yet due and payable, and any portion of prepaid interest that represents an original discounting of the claim, yet that would not have been earned on the date of bankruptcy. For example, a claim on a $1,000 note issued the day before bankruptcy would only be allowed to the extent of the cash actually advanced. If the original discount was 10% so that the cash advanced was only $900, then notwithstanding the face amount of note, only $900 would be allowed. If $900 was advanced under the note some time before bankruptcy, the interest component of the note would have to be pro-rated and disallowed to the extent it was for interest after the commencement of the case.

See S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 62 (1978), reprinted in Collier on Bankruptcy, App. Pt. 4(e)(i); H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 352 (1977), reprinted in Collier on Bankruptcy, App. Pt. 4(d)(i).

n6

6. In re Southeast Co., 868 F.2d 335, 20 C.B.C.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1989). See In re Christian, 8 C.B.C.2d 14, 25 B.R. 438 (Bankr. D.N.M. 1982). But see In re Moore, 9 B.C.D. 1246, (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1982) (the provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(C) should prevail over the general prohibition of 11 U.S.C. § 502(b)(2)). Computation of finance charge rebates using the Rule of 78s method may result in higher interest rates, however, it does not result in an unallowable claim for unmatured interest. In re Watson, 9 C.B.C.2d 345, 32 B.R. 491 (Bankr. W.D. Wis. 1983).

n7

7. In re Allegheny Intl, Inc., 100 B.R. 247 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1989); In re Manville Forest Prods. Corp., 11 C.B.C.2d 735, 43 B.R. 293 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1984) (long-term debt was automatically accelerated by the filing of the bankruptcy petition regardless of any contractual clause requiring notice to the debtor that acceleration was to occur).

n8

8. Thrifty Oil Co. v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust Sav. Ass'n, 322 F.3d 1039, 1047 (9th Cir. 2003).

n9

9. In re Allegheny Int'l, Inc., 23 C.B.C.2d 71, 100 B.R. 247 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1989).

n10

10. In re Chateaugay Corp., 961 F.2d 378, 26 C.B.C.2d 1174 (2d Cir. 1992); see also Brown v. Sayyah (In re I.C.H. Corp.), 230 B.R. 88 (N.D. Tex. 1999).

n11

11. In re Pengo Indus., Inc., 962 F.2d 543, 27 C.B.C.2d 119 (5th Cir. 1992).

n12

12. 961 F.2d 378, 26 C.B.C.2d 1174 (2d Cir. 1992).

n13

13. 961 F.2d 378, 383.

n14

14. See In re Allegheny Intl Inc., 23 C.B.C.2d 71, 100 B.R. 247 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1989).

n15

15. 961 F.2d 378, 384.

n16

16. Bursch v. Beardsley & Piper, 971 F.2d 108 (8th Cir. 1992); In re Hanna, 872 F.2d 829, 20 C.B.C.2d 1452 (8th Cir. 1989) (because the general rule disallowing unmatured interest is a rule of administrative convenience and fairness to all creditors, when concerns for such convenience and fairness are not present, postpetition interest will be allowed).

n17

17. Bruning v. United States, 376 U.S. 358, 84 S. Ct. 906, 11 L. Ed. 2d 772 (1964); In re John Osbornes Sons & Co., Inc., 177 F. 184 (2d Cir. 1910).

n18

18. Vanston Bondholders Protective Comm. v. Green, 329 U.S. 156, 67 S. Ct. 237, 91 L. Ed. 162 (1946).

n19

19. In re Fullmer, 962 F.2d 1463, 27 C.B.C.2d 92 (10th Cir. 1992), revd on other grounds, Raleigh v. Illinois Dept of Revenue, 530 U.S. 15, 120 S. Ct. 1951, 147 L. Ed. 2d 13, 43 C.B.C.2d 869 (2000) (interest on prepetition debt nondischargeable, but continues to accrue postpetition and survives as personal obligation of debtor); Kitrosser v. CIT Group/Factoring, Inc., 177 B.R. 458 (S.D.N.Y. 1995); In re Dow Corning Corp., 270 B.R. 393 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2001).

n20

20. See In re Kentucky Lumber Co., 860 F.2d 674, 677, 19 C.B.C.2d 1292, 1295 (6th Cir. 1988) ([t]his exception to the general rule helps to prevent [solvent] debtors from abusing the bankruptcy process by merely using it to delay payments and avoid interest penalties); In re Manville Forest Prods. Corp., 11 C.B.C.2d 735, 43 B.R. 293 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1984).

n21

21. As amended by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394 (1994), reprinted in Collier on Bankruptcy, App. Pt. 9(a).

n22 22. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 726.02[5] .

n23

23. See In re Chiapetta, 159 B.R. 152 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1993) (award of claim is prerequisite to award interest); In re Churchill, 109 B.R. 863 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 1990) (interest must arise from legal basis which gives rise to claim); In re Nite Lite Inns, 5 C.B.C.2d 1, 13 B.R. 900 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1981) (an allegedly secured creditor was found not to be secured and therefore not entitled to postpetition interest; accordingly, its claim was disallowed under section 502(b)(2)).

n24

24. Debentureholders Protective Comm. v. Continental Inv. Corp., 679 F.2d 264, 271 (1st Cir. 1982).

n25

25. Sexton v. Dreyfus, 219 U.S. 339, 31 S. Ct. 256, 55 L. Ed. 244 (1911); Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Dobbins, 35 F.3d 860 (4th Cir. 1994) (general rule is if creditor is not oversecured, interest stops running on creditor's claim upon bankruptcy filing).

n26

26. Oppenheimer v. Oldham, 178 F.2d 386 (5th Cir. 1949); see also United Sav. Ass'n of Tex. v. Timbers of Inwood Forest Assocs., Ltd. (In re Timbers of Inwood Forest Assocs., Ltd.), 484 U.S. 365, 108 S. Ct. 626, 98 L. Ed. 2d 740, 17 C.B.C.2d 1368 (1988).

n27

27. In re Laguna, 944 F.2d 542, 25 C.B.C.2d 727 (9th Cir. 1991), cert. denied sub nom. Shearson Lehman Mortgage Corp. v. Laguna, 503 U.S. 966, 112 S. Ct. 1577, 118 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1992); Littleton v. Kincaid, 179 F.2d 386 (4th Cir. 1950).

n28

28. See generally Collier on Bankruptcy, 506.05. See, e.g., Invex Holdings, N.V. v. Equitable Life Ins. (In re Invex Holdings, N.V.), 179 B.R. 111 (N.D. Ind. 1993), aff'd, 27 F.3d 241 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 948, 115 S. Ct. 360, 430 L. Ed. 2d (1994) (court did not err in considering all factors relevant to proper interest rate on mortgagee's notes).

n29

29. See Sexton v. Dreyfus, 219 U.S. 339, 31 S. Ct. 256, 55 L. Ed. 244 (1911); see also In re Jenson, 980 F.2d 1254, 1259 (9th Cir. 1992) (a secured claim which included postpetition interest earned on funds held pursuant to a prejudgment writ of attachment represented allowable postpetition appreciation of the collateral rather than unmatured interest); In re Chiapetta, 159 B.R. 152 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1993) (recognizing that interest may be allowable where collateral securing debt produces income after filing of petition). But see In re Fesco Plastics Corp., Inc., 966 F.2d 152, 28 C.B.C.2d 1503 (5th Cir. 1993) (recognizing only two instances in which postpetition interest is paid on prepetition claims: when estate is solvent, permissible under section 726(a)(5), and when secured creditor is oversecured, permissible under section 506(b)).

n30

30. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1123(d), 1222(d), 1322(e), added by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394 (enacted on October 22, 1994, and applicable to agreements entered into after the date of enactment), reprinted in Collier on Bankruptcy, App. Pt. 9(a) (legislatively overruling Rake v. Wade, 508 U.S. 464, 113 S. Ct. 2187, 124 L. Ed. 2d 424 (1993)); see also Section-by-Section Description of H.R. 5116, 140 Cong. Rec. H10,770 (daily ed. October 4, 1994), reprinted in Collier on Bankruptcy, App. Pt. 9(b).

n31

31. 11 U.S.C. § 502(b)(2); United States v. Victor, 121 F.3d 1383 (10th Cir. 1997).

n32

32. 336 U.S. 328, 69 S. Ct. 554, 93 L. Ed. 710 (1949).

n33

33. 11 U.S.C. § 502(b); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 506.03.

n34

34. Section 101 of the Code defines statutory lien and security interest. See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 101; see also United States v. Harrington, 269 F.2d 719 (4th Cir. 1959); In re Cameron, 166 F. Supp. 400 (S.D. Cal.

1958), aff'd sub nom. United States v. Bass, 271 F.2d 129 (9th Cir. 1959) (a tax lien was not a specific encumbrance on a specific piece of property in the same sense as a mortgage or a deed of trust); In re Lykens Hosiery Mills, Inc., 141 F. Supp. 895 (S.D.N.Y. 1956). For discussion of the difference between a tax lien and a consensual lien from the standpoint of the allowance of interest, see C. Seligson, Creditors Rights, 1958 Ann. Surv. Am. L. 426-31 and C. Seligson, Creditors Rights, 1959 Ann. Surv. Am. L. 375-83.

n35

35. In re Cameron, 166 F. Supp. 400-06 (S.D. Cal. 1958).

n36

36. In re Parchem, 166 F. Supp. 724 (D. Minn.), appeal dismissed an stipulation sub nom. United States v. Mussman, 261 F.2d 839 (8th Cir. 1958).

n37

37. 489 U.S. 235, 109 S. Ct. 1026, 103 L. Ed. 2d 290, 20 C.B.C.2d 267 (1989).

n38

38. 489 U.S. 235, 109 S. Ct. 1026, 103 L. Ed. 2d 290, 20 C.B.C.2d 267 (1989).

n39

39. In re Schreiber, 30 C.B.C.2d 1105, 163 B.R. 327 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1994) (right of holder (IRS) of unsecured claim to postpetition interest was unqualified).

n40

40. 508 U.S. 464, 113 S. Ct. 2187, 124 L. Ed. 2d 424, 28 C.B.C.2d 983 (1993). The holding in Rake was legislatively overruled by Congress with the enactment of section 1322(e). See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1322.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

88 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Administrative Expense Priority of Certain Wages, Salaries & Commissions

2008 Emerging Issues 1620

Collier on the Administrative Expense Priority of Certain Wages, Salaries and Commissions

By Collier

December 18, 2007

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis covers the priorities that are accorded for postpetition and prepetition wages, wages for employees that are hired by the trustee or the debtor in possession to preserve the estate, and the impact of section 503(b)(1)(A) on vacation pay, severance pay, back pay awards, pension plan obligations, and obligations to indemnify corporate officials.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Bankruptcy Code section 503(b)(1)(A) makes clear that among the actual necessary costs and expenses of preserving an estate are wages, salaries or commissions for services rendered after the commencement of the case.

The Different Priority Accorded Postpetition and Prepetition Wages. The distinction between prepetition and postpetition wages should be kept in mind. Those expenses for wages, salaries or commissions incurred postpetition in an effort to preserve the estate or operate the debtors business can qualify as administrative expenses. Those incurred prior to the filing of the petition are not. Courts have emphasized that for employment compensation to receive administrative priority, the services must be rendered after commencement of the bankruptcy case. n1

Wage claims are entitled to a second priority by section 507(a)(2) to the extent they are administrative expense claims. A different priority is given by section 507 to prepetition unsecured claims for wages, salaries or commissions earned within 180 days before the filing of the petition. Such prepetition claims are accorded a fourth priority under section 507(a)(4). n2 Section 507(a)(4) of the Code grants a fourth priority to allowed unsecured claims for wages, salaries, or commissions, including vacation, severance, and sick leave pay¹ earned within 180 days before the petition, but limits such priority claims to $10,950. n3 Wage claims not falling in one of these priorities are general unsecured claims against the debtor.

Employees Hired by Trustee or Debtor in Possession. If necessary to preserve the estate, the trustee or debtor in possession may hire employees to operate and manage the debtors business. Employees may include the debtors former personnel or the individual debtor. In the case of a sole proprietorship operating under chapter 11, the individual debtor may draw a salary in the ordinary course of business, subject to the general requirements of section 503(b)(1)(A). n4 The expenses for the compensation to such employees are expressly entitled to priority under section 503(b)(1)(A) as an actual, necessary cost and expense of preserving the estate. The employment of people by a trustee or debtor in possession may prove a necessary step even in the process of a liquidation under chapter 7. But such employment will be subject to extensive scrutiny. It should be borne in mind that although a prepetition wage claim entitled to priority is limited in amount, there is no inherent restriction on compensation for services of employees rendered to a trustee after the institution of the proceedings by the filing of a petition, and therefore compensation obligations should be incurred carefully. In one case, the court denied administrative claims for bonuses asserted by certain of the debtors postpetition employees because, although the services were rendered postpetition, the employees did not meet their burden of proving that their bonus payments were necessary to preserve the estate.ⁿ⁵ In particular, the court stated that there should have been testimony to support findings as to whether the Employees would have rendered the necessary services without the bonuses, and, if not, whether others could have been found to do the work at a lesser cost.ⁿ⁶

Vacation Pay. Among the most difficult questions relating to the reach of the priority given by section 503(b)(1)(A) are those involving claims for vacation and severance pay by employees of the debtor who were discharged at some point during the administration of the case. The courts seem to have had less difficulty with the rules regarding vacation pay. The general rule seems to be that originally set forth by the Second Circuit under the Bankruptcy Act in Straus-Duparquet, Inc. v. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.ⁿ⁷ In that case, the debtors employees were employed for about a month after the bankruptcy petition was filed and were then discharged. The employees asserted claims for the Bankruptcy Act equivalent of an administrative priority expense for vacation pay in accordance with the terms of a collective bargaining agreement. The court allowed an administrative expense priority but only to the extent of the proportionate part of total vacation pay earned during the period from the beginning of the bankruptcy case to the date of termination of employment. This approach has generally been followed in cases under the Bankruptcy Code.ⁿ⁸

Severance Pay. A business enterprise operating after bankruptcy may find it necessary to offer severance pay or another form of employee retention program to keep employees from leaving the business. Payments under a severance program established after the commencement of the case ought certainly to qualify as administrative expenses. Because such a program is unlikely to be in the ordinary course of the companys postpetition business, adoption would require court approval,ⁿ⁹ or at least notice and a hearing under section 363(b).

Whether severance pay based on a prepetition severance program qualifies as an administrative expense has been the subject of many cases. In Lines v. Syustem Board (In re Health Maintenance Foundation),ⁿ¹⁰ the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals noted that there are two general types of severance pay. The first is a payment at termination in lieu of advance notice of termination.ⁿ¹¹ The second is a payment at termination based on length of employment. The first type of severance is generally accorded administrative priority status. The latter, at issue in Health Maintenance Foundation, was considered by the Ninth Circuit as not qualifying for administrative expense status. Such benefits, it reasoned, were earned prior to the bankruptcy filing. The only benefits that could receive administrative expense status are those, if any, earned after the commencement of the case. The Ninth Circuit view seems to be the majority view.ⁿ¹² There have, however, been other approaches adopted by various courts.ⁿ¹³ In particular, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals has held that severance pay is compensation for termination and is entitled to administrative expense status in full.ⁿ¹⁴

Back Pay Awards. The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the 2005 Act) added clause (ii) to section 503(b)(1)(A) to provide that certain back pay awards qualify as administrative expenses.ⁿ¹⁵ To qualify, the award must consist of wages or benefits awarded pursuant to a judicial proceeding or a proceeding of the National Labor Relations Board. The back pay must be attributable to a period of time occurring after the commencement of the case as a result of a violation of federal or state law by the debtor. It does not matter when the conduct on which the award is based began or whether any services were rendered. Accordingly, if a judicial or NLRB award of back pay spans a period covering conduct occurring both prepetition and postpetition based on employer conduct commencing during the prepetition period, the postpetition portion would qualify as an administrative expense. The language added by the 2005 Act contains a qualification that mitigates the impact of such an award that will be primarily applicable in chapter 11 cases. In order for the back pay claim to be accorded administrative priority, the court must find that payment of such wages and benefits will not substantially increase the probability of layoff or termination of current employees or of nonpayment of domestic support obligations. This process probably will often involve a two-stage process. A court may be asked to make such a finding at the time that the back pay award is granted. If the outcome of the case is too uncertain for the court to make such a finding, it should not mean that administrative expense status should be denied. Rather, the court should defer the matter until plan confirmation at which time a final determination can be made in light of the outcome of the chapter 11 case.

Pension Plan Obligations. A priority wage issue involving the termination of employees arises from claims for withdrawal liability from a multiemployer pension plan established pursuant to the Employees Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), as amended by the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980. Under ERISA, when an employer withdraws from a multiemployer plan, its withdrawal liability is based on its allocable portion of the unfunded vested benefits for the plan. n16 The issue of whether and to what extent withdrawal liability should be accorded an administrative priority has been answered differently in the cases, but most cases allow administrative status for only that portion of the withdrawal liability which relates to the postpetition labor of the debtors employees. In In re Cott Corp., n17 the court devised a method of dividing the withdrawal liability into prepetition and postpetition amounts and then accorded the postpetition withdrawal liability priority status under section 503(b)(1)(A). n18 In the case of In re United Department Stores, Inc. n19 the court held that withdrawal liability would not be given administrative expense priority because that would have the undesirable effect of benefitting other employer-participants in the plan who are not creditors of the debtor ahead of the debtors bona fide creditors. n20

A related issue is the extent to which claims arising from the postpetition termination of a pension plan give rise to an administrative expense claim in favor of the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC). In Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. v. Skeen (In re Bayly Corp.), the Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit held that a claim by the PBGC for unfunded benefit liabilities based on benefits accrued by employees prior to filing a case was not incurred by the bankruptcy estate and not entitled to administrative priority. n21 In Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. v. Sunarhauserman, Inc. (In re Sunarhauserman, Inc.), n22 the PBGC argued that all ERISA minimum funding contributions accrued after commencement of the case ought to be entitled to administrative priority status. It reasoned that such contributions were a requirement of continuing to do business and thus were like other regulatory costs of continuing to operate a business. The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals disagreed. It limited administrative expense priority to that portion of the minimum funding contribution attributable to pension benefits actually earned by the debtors employees who worked after commencement of the case. n23

Obligations to Indemnify Corporate Officials. Pursuant to corporate bylaws or contractual provisions, corporate officials may be entitled to indemnity from a debtor corporation for costs incurred in acting for the corporation, such as by personally defending a lawsuit. Courts have treated these rights as similar to administrative expense claims for wages. For example, courts have denied administrative expense priority to corporate officials seeking indemnification under the corporate bylaws when the acts or services which gave rise to the claims occurred prepetition. In contrast, when the acts or services requiring indemnification occurred postpetition, indemnification has been granted administrative expense status. n24 One court held that section 503(b)(1)(A) does not permit corporate debtors to advance, as administrative expenses, attorneys fees of their former officers and directors for the defense of actions against them alleging misconduct, even though indemnification provisions are contained in the debtors bylaws. n25 Section 503(b)(1)(A) may permit corporate debtors to advance such fees to current directors on a sufficient showing that the current directors services are necessary and beneficial to the estate and that the directors willingness to serve is expressly contingent upon payment of such fees. n26

For a complete discussion of Code section 503, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 503.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 1. See In re Continental Airlines, Inc., 148 B.R. 207 (D. Del. 1992) (court denied administrative expense status for award of back pay under National Labor Relations Act constructively earned postpetition, because unlike with general administrative claims, Congress was quite specific about which wage claims were to receive administrative priority and made it clear that the only wages which were to be given priority under section 503(b)(1)(A) were those for services rendered post-petition); In re Palau Corp., 139 B.R. 942 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1992), aff'd, 18 F.3d 746, 30 C.B.C.2d 1204 (9th Cir. 1994) (same); see also In re La Electronica, Inc., 995 F.2d 320 (1st Cir. 1993); In re Beverage Enters., Inc., 225 B.R. 111 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1998) (WARN Act claims entitled to administrative expense priority).

n2

2. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 507.05.

n3

3. This dollar amount is effective for cases commenced on or after April 1, 2007. The 2005 Act had set the amount at $10,000, effective in cases commenced on or after April 20, 2005, the enactment date of the 2005 Act. Pub. L. No. 109-8, §§ 1401(2), 1406 (2005). Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 104(b), the amount is adjusted every three years to account for changes in the cost of living. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 104.03. For cases commenced between April 1, 2004, and April 19, 2005, the dollar amount was $4,925. For cases commenced during the three-year period beginning April 1, 2001, the amount was $4,650. The amount for the three-year period beginning April 1, 1998, was $4,300. For cases commenced before April 1, 1998, the amount in effect was $4,000.

n4

4. In re Herberman, 24 C.B.C.2d 1105, 122 B.R. 273 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 1990).

n5

5. In re Regensteiner Printing Co., 122 B.R. 323, 326 (N.D. Ill. 1990).

n6

6. In re Regensteiner Printing Co., 122 B.R. 323, 326; see also In re Bartley Lindsay Co., 137 B.R. 305 (D. Minn. 1991) (consultants fee for postpetition service, which totaled over $244,000 according to a prepetition agreement, was reduced to $60,000 because the consultant was entitled to compensation only for the actual and necessary services he provided); In re Baldwin-United Corp., 13 C.B.C.2d 709, 52 B.R. 549 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1985) (claims based on prepetition stock option plan are not analogous to wages or severance pay and are thus not allowable as administrative claims).

n7

7. 386 F.2d 649 (2d Cir. 1967).

n8

8. In re Schatz Fed. Bearings Co., 2 C.B.C.2d 624, 5 B.R. 549 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1980).

n9

9. See Bagus v. Clark (In re Buyer's Club Markets, Inc.), 5 F.3d 455, 29 C.B.C.2d 1295 (10th Cir. 1993) (denying administrative expense status to severance pay claims based on a severance program adopted by a chapter 11 debtor without court approval).

n10

10. 680 F.2d 619 (9th Cir. 1982).

n11

11. See In re Tucson Yellow Cab Co., 789 F.2d 701 (9th Cir. 1986) (collective bargaining agreement required employer to provide either two weeks notice of layoffs of two weeks severance pay; severance pay upheld as administrative expense).

n12

12. The same reasoning has been used in Lasky v. Phones for All, Inc. (In re Phones for All, Inc.), 288 F.3d 730 (5th Cir. 2002); In re Commercial Fin. Servs., 246 F.3d 1291 (10th Cir. 2001); In re Roth American, Inc., 975 F.2d 957 (3d Cir. 1992); In re Mammoth Mart, Inc., 536 F.2d 950 (1st Cir. 1976); Rawson Food Servs. Inc. v. Creditors Committee, 67 B.R. 351 (M.D. Fla. 1986); In re Public Ledger, Inc., 161 F.2d 762 (3d Cir. 1947);

In re M Group, Inc., 268 B.R. 896 (Bankr. D. Del. 2001) (denying priority for severance provision not falling into either category, but due in fixed amount whenever employment contract terminated); In re Yarn Liquidation, Inc., 217 B.R. 544 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1997); In re Northwest Eng'g Co., 11 C.B.C.2d 831, 43 B.R. 603 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 1984).

n13

13. In re Uly-Pak, Inc., 24 C.B.C.2d 1989, 128 B.R. 763 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 1991) (there are more than simply two categories of severance pay and rather than forcing a claim into one category or another, court should focus on whether the severance claim arises from a postpetition transaction with, or is beneficial to, the estate).

n14

14. Straus-Duparquet, Inc. v. Local Union No. 3, Int'l Bd. of Elec. Workers, 386 F.2d 649 (2d Cir. 1967) (full amount of severance pay due as administrative expense upon termination). The Second Circuit reiterated this holding in Rodman v. Rinier (In re W.T. Grant Co.), 620 F.2d 319 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 983, 100 S. Ct. 2963, 64 L. Ed. 2d 839 (1980). See also In re Campo Electronics, Inc., 247 B.R. 646 (E.D. La. 1998) (severance pay is an administrative expense where persons employment contract was entered into shortly before bankruptcy and as an inducement to continue employment with debtor).

n15

15. Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 329 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n16

16. 29 U.S.C. §§ 1381, 1391.

n17

17. 12 C.B.C.2d 735, 47 B.R. 487 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1984).

n18

18. 12 C.B.C.2d 735, 743-45.

n19

19. 12 C.B.C.2d 1424, 1429, 49 B.R. 462, 466 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1985).

n20

20. See In re Kessler, 23 B.R. 722 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1982).

n21

21. 163 F.3d 1205 (10th Cir. 1998).

n22

22. 126 F.3d 811 (6th Cir. 1997).

n23

23. See also Trustees of Amalgamated Ins. Fund v. McFarlin's, Inc., 789 F.2d 98 (2d Cir. 1986) (the consideration supporting employers lump sum payment in satisfaction of its withdrawal liability was the past labor of the employees; thus, administrative priority was denied); LTV Corp. v. PBGC (In re Chateaugay Corp.), 130 B.R. 690 (S.D.N.Y. 1991), vacated, 1993 WL 388809 (rejecting argument that statutory obligations arising from postpetition termination of pension plan were entitled to administrative status, and holding that retirees were not induced to provide postpetition services by the promise of pension benefits; only pension liabilities arising from postpetition labor of employees were entitled to administrative priority); Columbia Packing Co. v. PBGC, 81 B.R. 205 (D. Mass. 1988) (debtors obligation for contributions to employee pension fund entitled to administrative priority to the extent it arises from services rendered after the commencement of the case); In re Pulaski Highway Express, Inc., 14 C.B.C.2d 417, 57 B.R. 502 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1986); In re Silver Wheel Freightlines, Inc., 14 C.B.C.2d 328, 57 B.R. 476 (Bankr. D. Or. 1985).

n24

24. See In re Mid-American Waste Systems, Inc., 228 B.R. 816 (Bankr. D. Del. 1999) (denying administrative expense to indemnification claim of former officers and directors incurred in litigation arising out of prepetition activities); In re Hecks Properties, Inc., 151 B.R. 739 (S.D. W. Va. 1992) (citing cases).

n25

25. In re Baldwin-United Corp., 11 C.B.C.2d 1391, 43 B.R. 443 (S.D. Ohio 1984).

n26

26. See In re Hecks Properties, Inc., 151 B.R. 739 (S.D. W. Va. 1992) (section 503(b)(1)(A) priority allowed for costs of indemnifying current officers and directors); In re Consolidated Oil & Gas, Inc., 22 C.B.C.2d 1423 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1990).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

89 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on the Limitation of Key Employee Retention Plans

2008 Emerging Issues 1621

Collier on the Limitation of Key Employee Retention Plans

By Collier

December 18, 2007

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis covers the scope of section 503(c), the test for the narrow exception to the operation of section 503(c), the limitation on severance payments, the limitation on payments outside the ordinary course of business, and the likely consequences of section 503(b) on employment contracts and business cases.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Bankruptcy Code section 503(c) was enacted in 2005. n1 Its purpose was to limit the scope of key employee retention plans and other programs providing incentives to management of the debtor as a means of inducing management to remain employed by the debtor. Section 503(c) covers three general areas. First, it prohibits payments to insiders to induce those insiders to remain with the debtors business. Second, it limits severance payments to insiders. Finally, it limits any transaction outside the ordinary course of business, especially those that benefit officers, managers, and consultants hired after the date of the filing of the petition. The language of section 503(c) is not well drafted, and it is difficult to discern the scope of the exceptions to the restrictions placed on insider retention and severance payments. Those exceptions seem to be so narrowly drawn, however, that very few insider retention or severance plans will meet the necessary qualifications. The result is that these plans are likely to be eliminated as a common feature of chapter 11 cases.

Limitation on Retention Payments. Section 503(c)(1) limits transfers made to, or an obligation incurred for the benefit of, an insider of the debtor for the purpose of inducing such person to remain with the debtors business. A narrow exception can arise if the court finds, based on evidence in the record, that three tests have been satisfied.

The first test is that the transfer or obligation is necessary to retain the insider because the insider has a bona fide job offer from another business at the same or a greater rate of compensation. The test will not be met if the person merely threatens to quit or to retire. The person must have received a legitimate job offer at an equal or higher rate of compensation. The reference is to compensation rather than salary and so all components of compensation can be taken into account, including benefits and the potential for incentive compensation. The latter point might be important if a large portion of the compensation consists of commissions, incentive pay, stock options or other contingent forms of compensation.

The second test is that the services provided by the insider are essential to the survival of the business. Unlike the other two tests, this one is largely subjective. The reference to survival suggests, however, that the person seeking to justify such a payment will have a heavy burden. The moving party will not merely need to show that the insiders continued retention is valuable or beneficial to creditors. Rather, the moving party must show that continued employment is necessary for the business to survive. As a practical matter, this will be a nearly impossible standard to meet for companies that are not founder dominated and that are run by professional managers.

The third test sets a limit on the amount of the payment or obligation. The amount of the transfer or obligation cannot be greater than 10 times the amount of the mean transfer or obligation of a similar kind given to nonmanagement employees for any purpose during the calendar year in which the transfer is made or the obligation incurred. If no such similar transfers were made or obligations incurred regarding nonmanagement employees during such calendar year, the amount of the transfer or obligation cannot be greater than 25 percent of the amount of any similar transfer made or obligation incurred for the benefit of such insider for any purpose during the previous calendar year. The reference to a similar kind and any similar transfers suggests that the transfers or obligations against which the proposed award is to be measured are earlier awards that are in the nature of retention payments. The reference to for any purpose probably refers to all programs regarding retention of employees, even though it is not likely that any company would have more than one such program in effect during any year. The language of section 503(c)(1)(C) can probably be simplified as follows: If a retention program is put in place during a calendar year that covers nonmanagement employees, the amount awarded to the insider cannot be greater than 10 times the mean award to nonmanagement employees. If no such program for nonmanagement employees is in effect, the award to the insider cannot exceed 25 percent of any retention award granted to the insider during the previous year. If no retention program existed during such previous calendar year, then the third test cannot be satisfied. Every clause of section 503(c)(1)(C) awkwardly refers to both the making of a transfer and the incurring of an obligation. Since a transfer will not be made unless an obligation has previously been incurred, this could be interpreted to mean that the tests have to be met at both the time that the obligation is incurred and then again at the time that the transfer is made. This would lead to an absurd result, however. In the unlikely event that a retention program for an insider ever qualified under section 503(c)(1)(C), it would be unfair to the insider to eliminate the retention award after it has been earned because it then failed to meet a subsequent application of the same test. Also, the first two portions of the test can be fulfilled at the time a retention program is enacted but they seemingly could never be met at the time that the retention payment would become due to the insider.

Limitation on Severance Payments. Section 503(c)(2) prohibits severance payments to an insider of the debtor unless two tests are satisfied. First, the payment must be part of a program that is generally applicable to all full-time employees. This requirement at first appears extremely difficult to fulfill in a debtor of any size. It is a rare severance plan that will apply to all full-time employees of a large company. For example, employees covered by collective bargaining agreements are likely to be covered by a different severance plan than management employees. The purpose of the limitation, however, is to ensure that the insider severance is not specially created for those insiders and that a severance program is in effect for all full-time employees. Accordingly, it would make sense to interpret the reference to a severance program to mean a series of plans so long as the series covers all full-time employees of the debtor. The second requirement is that the amount of the payment to the insider is not greater than ten times the amount of the mean severance pay given to nonmanagement employees during the calendar year in which the payment is made. If read literally, the requirement would preclude any payment of severance to an insider until the end of the calendar year in which the insiders employment is terminated. Only at the end of the year would it be possible to know the mean severance pay given to nonmanagement employees during the year. Courts may perhaps interpret the language to mean the period then elapsed during the calendar year. This could lead to anomalies, however, if the layoffs occur during the early part of the year. The language also makes no distinction between the period before and the period after filing of the petition. Accordingly, both prebankruptcy and postbankruptcy layoffs will need to be taken into account if the payment to the insider is proposed to be made during the year in which the petition is filed. It should also be noted that the language refers to the amount given to nonmanagement employees. This indicates that the calculation will be made with respect to the actual amount paid as severance to such employees as opposed to a calculation based on the mean payment for which employees are eligible. If the layoffs on which the calculation is based involves low salaried employees, the cap on insider severance will be quite small.

Section 503(c)(2) does not distinguish between severance programs enacted before bankruptcy and those enacted after the commencement of the case. Therefore, it would probably limit severance payments to insiders under programs that are in place before bankruptcy and either assumed or followed during the bankruptcy case. It is not clear, however, whether it would apply to a payment that is in the nature of severance but that arises under an employment contract rather than a severance plan. If a corporate officer is entitled to a payment upon the officer's departure based on a clause in the officer's employment contract, such a payment can be viewed as severance but it can also be viewed as a damages claim for the debtor's failure to fulfill the contract. When assumption of a prepetition employment contract is under consideration, the impact of section 503(c)(2) on any severance provisions will need to be considered.

Limitation on Payments Outside the Ordinary Course of Business. Section 503(c)(3) prohibits transfers or obligations that are outside the ordinary course of business and not justified by the facts and circumstances of the case, including transfers made to or obligations incurred for the benefit of, officers, managers, or consultants hired after the date of the filing of the petition. Section 503(c)(3) is a catch all provision but one that is much narrower than would first appear. It prohibits administrative expense status to any obligation that is both outside the ordinary course of business and not justified by the facts and circumstances of the case. If a transaction is entered into in the ordinary course of the debtor's business, it would not be proscribed by section 503(c). If it is outside the ordinary course of business, but is nonetheless justified by the facts and circumstances of the case, it would likewise not be proscribed by section 503(c)(3). Section 503(c)(3) will thus have limited applicability. This test does not seem any narrower than the test that already exists under section 503(b)(1) which requires that administrative expenses be actual, necessary costs and expenses of preserving the estate. A transaction qualifying under that test is likely to also qualify under the test imposed by section 503(c)(3). The reference in section 503(c)(3) to officers, managers, or consultants hired after the date of the filing of the petition is largely surplusage. The rules of construction in section 102(c) indicate that the term including is not a limitation. Accordingly, section 503(c)(3) is not limited to such persons and is a general restriction on postpetition transactions. If a transaction with any such person is within the ordinary course of business, such transaction is not implicated by the beginning language of section 503(c)(3). If any such transaction is outside the scope of the ordinary course of business, court approval would be necessary in any event and the standard for approval to be employed under section 503(c)(3) is unlikely to be much different than the standard for approval that would otherwise be applied by the court. If the intent behind section 503(c)(3) was to provide special limitations on postpetition employment of officers, managers and consultants, that intent may not have been achieved.

The Effect of Section 503(c) on Business Cases. The narrow scope of subsections 503(c)(1) and (c)(2) will basically result in the elimination of programs that provide compensation to officers for remaining employed with the debtor or that provide severance when such persons leave. The elimination of such programs will have consequences that are difficult to predict. In order to prevent the loss of managers that are necessary to deliver a successful outcome, different methods of inducing those managers to remain with the debtor will need to be found. One likely consequence is that employment contracts will get richer. Nothing in section 503(c) limits the amount of salary, bonus or incentive compensation to be paid to managers unless such compensation is both outside the ordinary course of business and not justified by the facts and circumstances of the case. The latter language is subjective and allows the court to approve all manner of compensation arrangements deemed to be justified. Thus, while severance payments and retention payments to insiders are likely to disappear from chapter 11 cases, they will probably be replaced by richer employment contracts that are designed to achieve the same goals as retention and severance programs but award compensation through different mechanisms. Another likely consequence is that the key individuals will serve as consultants or advisors rather than officers and thus avoid fitting within the definition of insider.

For a complete discussion of Code section 503, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 503.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

n1 1. Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 331 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

90 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Priority Status for Wages Earned Within 180 Days Before Filing the Petition

2008 Emerging Issues 1622

Collier on the Priority Status for Wages Earned Within 180 Days Before Filing the Petition

By Collier

December 18, 2007

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis covers the purpose of this fourth priority, the scope of the fourth priority, who may assert the fourth priority, when fourth priority claims may be assigned, the applicable time period for the operation of the fourth priority, and the impact of section 507(a)(4) on vacation pay, severance benefits, and payments due as a result of the Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: A fourth priority is available under Bankruptcy Code section 507(a)(4) for allowed unsecured claims for wages, salaries and commissions, including vacation, severance and sick leave pay earned by an individual. n1 It is also available for sales commissions earned by an individual, or a corporation with only one employee, acting as an independent contractor in the sale of goods or services for the debtor in the ordinary course of the debtors business if, and only if, during the 12 months preceding that date at least 75 percent of the amount that the individual or corporation earned by acting as an independent contractor in the sale of goods or services was earned from the debtor. The third priority is available only for wages, salaries and commissions earned within 180 days before the earlier of the date of the filing of the petition or the date the debtor ceased business. n2 The maximum dollar limit on the priority is $10,950 for each individual and corporation. n3 Any excess claim for wages, salaries and commissions will be a general unsecured claim.

Purpose of the Fourth Priority. A priority for wages was included as part of the Bankruptcy Act upon its original enactment in 1898 and has been a feature of the bankruptcy law since that time. The purpose of allowing a priority for wages is to alleviate hardship on workers who lose their jobs or part of their salary by bankruptcy. Employees are usually the hardest hit financially by a bankruptcy because the debtor/employer is typically the only source of income for the employees. When a debtor fails to pay debts to its other creditors, those creditors presumably have other sources of income and do not rely on the debtor as their sole source of income. Another distinction is that other creditors presumably knowingly extended credit to the debtor. Employees do not typically view themselves as extending credit by waiting for their paychecks. One additional purpose of the wage priority is to encourage employees to stand by an employer in financial difficulty. Still another advantage of the wage priority is one not cited by the legislative history or explicitly recognized by cases in which the scope of the priority has been litigated. Because wages are priority claims, courts have often permitted debtors to pay prepetition wage claims in the ordinary course in response to a motion filed by a debtor in possession at the commencement of a chapter 11 case. The ability to ensure that the employees receive their unpaid prepetition salary and do not miss a paycheck is critical to obtaining the stability necessary for the transition to operating as a debtor in possession. If wage claims were not entitled to priority, it would be difficult to justify first day orders approving payment of prepetition wages. There is no clear statutory authority for such first day orders, although a court with some confidence in the debtors ability to satisfy claims through the third priority could justify the order under section 105.

Scope of Fourth Priority. The fourth priority is available for wages, salaries and commissions earned by an employee within the applicable 180-day period. n4 The scope of the priority covers all types of wages, however they may be denominated in the contract between the debtor and the employee. It includes regular salaries, whether the employee is paid by the hour, the week or the month. It covers bonuses so long as the bonus is in the nature of compensation for work performed. n5 It also extends to piecework for employees who are paid by what they produce rather than by the time spent working. The priority also encompasses all types of commissions, however they may be calculated. In addition to salary and commissions, the priority under section 507(a)(4) also extends to certain benefits that are considered akin to compensation, such as vacation, severance and sick leave pay. n6 It does not extend to other fringe benefits or other perks of employment. It also does not extend to obligations that may be related to employment, but that are not referred to in the language of section 507(a)(4). n7 Most notable among these are payments owed with regard to workers compensation benefits. These have uniformly been held to be outside the scope of section 507(a)(4). n8

Who May Assert Fourth Priority. By its terms, the priority under section 507(a)(4) is, with one exception, available only to individuals. It may not be asserted for wages, salaries or commissions owed to a corporation, partnership or association. n9 The one exception is that a corporation with only one employee may be eligible to receive a priority for commissions if it qualifies as an independent contractor under the language of section 507(a)(4)(B).

Employees of Debtors. The priority may be asserted by any individual who is an employee of the debtor. It is not limited to subordinate employees and may be asserted by employees who also happen to be officers, directors, stockholders or partners. n10 An employee seeking a priority for wages or salary must be a direct employee of the debtor and have a direct claim against the debtor arising from such employment. n11 In determining whether an individual is an employee of the debtor, the court should look to state law. n12

Independent Contractor Commissions. Prior to the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, there was a split among the courts as to whether commissions owed to an independent contractor working for the debtor qualified for a section 507(a)(4) priority. n13 The Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994 ended the dispute by creating a new clause (B) to section 507(a)(4) providing that commissions owed to independent contractors are eligible for priority if certain conditions are met. For commissions owed to independent contractors to qualify for priority, the independent contractor must have been acting as such for the debtor with regard to the sale of goods or services in the ordinary course of the debtors business. In addition, during the 12 months preceding the earlier of the date of the filing of the petition or the cessation of the debtors business, the independent contractor must have earned from the debtor at least 75 percent of the total amount earned by such independent contractor from the sale of goods or services. Commissions owed to independent contractors are also subject to the general rules governing priority under section 507(a)(4). They must be earned within the applicable 180-day period n14 and cannot exceed the maximum dollar limitation.

Assigned Fourth Priority Claims. There is nothing that prohibits an employee from assigning a fourth priority claim to another person, and an assignee may assert a priority claim obtained from an employee. n15 Only an assigned claim may be asserted, however. If an entity succeeds to the rights of the debtor through subrogation, section 507(d) prohibits the subrogee from obtaining the benefit of the priority claim. n16 It has been held that a grocery store that cashed payroll checks of the debtor that were subsequently dishonored is an assignee of the employees wage priority claims and entitled to assert the priority. n17 The same result did not apply when the debtors bank cashed payroll checks that the debtor had insufficient funds to cover; rather than being an assignee of the employees, the bank was held to have extended credit to the debtor by honoring the overdraft. n18

Numerous attempts have been made on behalf of employment agencies to assert priority claims for wages paid to individuals furnished to the debtor by the employment agencies. While each situation needs to be evaluated on its own merits, these assertions typically fail. n19 If the individual is working for the debtor and receives payment directly from the debtor, wages owed to the individual obviously qualify for priority and there is no issue. If the individual receives payment from the agency, however, and the agency collects from the debtor, the employees do not belong to the debtor and the agency's status is the same as any other contractual vendor of services to the debtor.

Applicable 180-Day Period. A claim is entitled to priority under section 507(a)(4) only if earned during the 180 days prior to the earlier of the filing of the petition or the cessation of the debtors business. n20 The reason that cessation of the business is used as an alternative measuring date is to protect the wage priority of employees if the debtor shuts down its business but delays the filing of a bankruptcy case. The 180-day priority period is the same as the 180-day priority period provided under the fifth priority for contributions to employee benefit plans.

In order for cessation of the business to be used as a measuring date, the debtor must cease business altogether. It is not enough that the debtor shut down the division or line of business that employed a particular employee. n21 The standard for determining when to use cessation of the business as the measuring date is the same as under the fifth priority for contributions to employee benefit plans. Cases under the fifth priority analyzing when cessation is considered to have occurred are relevant to the same issue under the fourth priority. n22

Extent to Which a Claim Has Been Earned. For a claim to be eligible for priority, it must have been earned within the applicable 180-day period. The general rule is that wages, salaries and commissions are earned when the employee obtains a right to payment under the employment contract rather than at the time that payment is to be made. n23 If the employee's right to receive a salary payment is absolute at a particular point in time but payment is deferred until a later date, the salary is earned when the right to receive payment occurred. If a bonus is awarded in December, but not payable until the following March, the bonus was earned in December. If a commission was earned for sales during the month of December, but is not payable to an independent contractor until the following March, it likewise was earned in December. n24 Determining when wages, salaries and commissions were earned is usually relatively straightforward. It is often much more difficult to determine when vacation pay and severance pay have been earned. Nothing in the Code sheds any light on how to calculate when vacation or severance pay have been earned. n25

Vacation Pay. If the employment contract or collective bargaining agreement between the debtor and its employees provide that an employee earns a pro rata share of the employees annual vacation each day during a year that the employee works, determining the amount of the vacation pay earned within the 180-day period is a relatively simple endeavor. For an employee employed during all of the relevant 180-day period, the employee will be entitled to a percentage of the employees annual vacation pay equal to 180 divided by whatever denominator, 360 or 365 days, is used in the employment contract or collective bargaining agreement to calculate vacation pay.

The calculation becomes more difficult when the contract provides for vacation pay to vest in a different manner. For example, if an employee first vests in a right to vacation pay after the conclusion of a calendar year, and the employee is dismissed prior to the end of the year, the employee may not have a contractual right to receive any vacation pay at all. If that is so, there is no claim for which priority needs to be determined. Upon the date of vesting, however, the employee may vest all at once with an entire years worth of vacation pay. It would seem anomalous to allow an employee to assert a priority for an entire years vacation pay merely because the annual vesting occurred during the 180-day measuring period. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has held that vacation pay will be deemed to have been earned continuously throughout the year and that, so long as the employee has a valid contractual claim for the vacation pay, 180 days worth will be considered to have been earned during the 180-day period regardless of the vesting schedule. n26

Severance Benefits. Severance benefits are also entitled to priority under section 507(a)(4), and are specifically mentioned in the statutory language. Severance benefits are payments due to an employee as a result of the termination of the employee's employment or some other significant adjustment to or change in the employee's circumstances. Only those severance payments earned within the appropriate 180-day period are eligible for priority. If the employee is terminated before the 180-day period, any severance benefits due to the employee will not qualify for priority under section 507(a)(4) because the benefits were not earned within the 180-day period. This is so even if the severance benefits were by contract payable during the 180-day period. n27 As with wages, it is the date that the severance benefits are earned--not the date on which they are payable--that is important.

If the employee is terminated within the 180-day period, or if the employee is terminated after the filing of the bankruptcy case, then some or all of the severance benefits owed to the employee may qualify for priority treatment under section 507(a)(4). The extent to which the benefits qualify for priority will depend in part upon the nature of the particular severance program. There are three general types of severance benefits that may be payable to an employee. The first and most common are severance benefits in compensation for job loss, where the amount of benefits is calculated by a formula usually based on the employee's number of years of service. These benefits are typically payable at termination regardless of the extent to which the employee had prior notice of the termination. The second are severance benefits that are provided to the employee in lieu of notice of termination. These benefits are typically payable only if the employee is terminated without receipt of sufficient notice. The third are severance benefits payable under an employment contract that arise automatically upon termination. An employee typically becomes entitled to this type of severance benefit if the employee is terminated without cause before expiration of the contract period.

Severance Benefits in Compensation for Loss of Employment. If a severance program provides benefits to employees in compensation for termination of employment, those severance benefits are typically payable either in a lump sum at termination or over a period of time. The amount of benefits typically varies depending upon the number of years of employment. The question arises as to when the severance pay is considered to be earned for purposes of section 507(a)(4). Employees will contend that the severance benefits are earned at the time of termination on the theory that no right to severance exists until an employee is involuntarily terminated. If this reasoning is adopted, as it has been by some courts, the full amount of severance owed to an employee terminated during the 180-day period would be considered earned during the 180-day period and would be eligible for priority. If the employee were terminated after the filing of the petition, the severance pay obligation would constitute an administrative expense and the employee would not need the wage priority at all. n28 Courts rejecting that argument have determined that severance benefits are earned pro rata over the period of the employee's employment. Such courts hold that administrative priority will be granted for that portion of the severance benefits earned after the filing of the petition, a priority claim will be granted for that portion of the severance benefits earned during the 180 days prior to bankruptcy, and a general unsecured claim will be granted for the balance. n29 In determining what portion was earned during the 180 days prior to the filing, the typical approach is to take a fraction of the total severance benefits payable and multiply the total by a fraction, the numerator of which is 180 and the denominator is the total period over which severance benefits vested in the employee. n30

Severance Benefits in Lieu of Notice of Termination. Where the agreement between the employer and the employee provides that the employee is entitled to severance only if the employer fails to give advance notice to the employee of termination of employment, the analysis is different. Severance of this type is payable only if the employee is terminated without the prescribed notice. If the notice is given, no severance benefits are due. The employee has continued employment for a specified period in lieu of severance pay. If the employee is summarily terminated, the employee is entitled to either payment of wages for the prescribed period or a lump sum of an equal amount. This payment is considered to be earned at the time that the employee is terminated since no right to any type of severance benefit exists unless the summary termination occurs. If termination occurs within the 180-day period, then the full amount of termination, up to the maximum dollar limitation, is eligible for priority treatment. n31

Contractual Severance Benefits. A third category of severance claims are those that arise under employment contracts and are based neither on length of service nor lack of notice. Under many employment contracts, an employee is entitled to a specified payment if the employee is terminated without cause before expiration of the employment period under the contract. This type of severance payment is most commonly found in employment contracts for managers and other senior employees. Most cases involve a termination after commencement of the case, and the courts have held that the severance benefits were earned when the contract was executed rather than during the 180 days preceding the bankruptcy filing. n32 Any such claim is subject to the limitation on damages for breach of an employment contract found in section 502(b)(7).

Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification (WARN) Act. An analogous situation arises under the Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification (WARN) Act. That statute requires that payments are owed by an employer to certain employees who are terminated without the notice prescribed by the WARN Act. Those payments are very similar to payments due to employees under severance contracts in which benefits become payable only if termination occurs without notice. These payments have been considered earned at the time of termination and the full amount of WARN Act payments are eligible for priority if termination occurs during the 90-day period. n33

For a complete discussion of Code section 507, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 507.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 1. This section was renumbered from 507(a)(3) to 507(a)(4) by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 212 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005. Decisions in cases filed before the effective date will thus refer to what was then section 507(a)(3).

n2

2. This time period was increased from 90 days to 180 days by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1401(1) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after April 20, 2005. For cases commenced before April 20, 2005, the 90-day limit will be applicable.

n3

3. This dollar amount is effective for cases commenced on or after April 1, 2007. Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 104(b), the amount is adjusted every three years to account for changes in the cost of living. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 104.03. The 2005 Act had set the amount at $10,000, effective in cases commenced on or after April 20, 2005. For cases commenced between April 1, 2004, and April 19, 2005, the dollar amount was $4,925. For cases commenced during the three-year period beginning April 1, 2001, the amount was $4,650. The amount for the three-year period beginning April 1, 1998, was $4,300. For cases commenced before April 1, 1998, the amount was $4,000.

n4

4. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 507.06[5], regarding when benefits are earned, and Collier on Bankruptcy, 507.06[4], regarding calculation of the 180-day period.

n5

5. In re Cardinal Indus. Inc., 160 B.R. 83 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1993) (bonus considered within scope of section 507(a)(4) (which at the time was numbered 507(a)(3))).

n6

6. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 503.05.

n7

7. See In re Baldwin-United Corp., 13 C.B.C.2d 709, 52 B.R. 549 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1985) (cash guarantee related to stock option plan not eligible for priority; more akin to a perk rather than compensation); Keim v. Growers Seed Assn, 49 B.R. 17 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1985) (claim for reimbursement of moving expenses outside scope of the priority). But see In re Columbia Packing Co., 35 B.R. 447 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1983) (claim for expense reimbursement considered close enough to salary and wages to be included within priority).

n8

8. See In re Bersaglia, 254 B.R. 376 (Bankr. E.D. Ky. 2000) (workers compensation benefits outside the scope of wage priority); In re Lull Corp., 30 C.B.C.2d 927, 162 B.R. 234 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1993) (same); In re Webster, 126 B.R. 4 (Bankr. D. Me. 1991) (same); In re Redford Roofing Co., 54 B.R. 254 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1985) (same).

n9

9. In re Wang Lab., Inc., 164 B.R. 404 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1994); In re Dahlman Truck Lines, Inc., 59 B.R. 218 (Bankr. W.D. Wis. 1986).

n10

10. See In re Jade West Corp., 13 C.B.C.2d 680, 53 B.R. 16 (Bankr. D. Or. 1985) (officers and directors of corporate debtor entitled to assert wage priority). In re Comtec Indus. Inc., 91 B.R. 344 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1988), is to the contrary, but is incorrect. See also In re Hutchison, 223 B.R. 586 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1998) (claim of debtor's attorney not entitled to wage priority status because the attorney was not an employee of the debtor).

n11

11. In re Alroco, Inc., 92 B.R. 523 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1988) (employee must be direct employee of the debtor to qualify for priority). But see In re Konidaris, 87 B.R. 846 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1988) (when state statute makes debtor liable for wages of employees of corporation owned/managed by debtor, such wages entitled to priority).

n12

12. In re Dahlman Truck Lines, Inc., 59 B.R. 218 (Bankr. W.D. Wis. 1986); see also In re Kasson, Inc., 109 B.R. 352 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 1989) (milk suppliers not employees under state law).

n13

13. At the time, the wage priority was numbered section 507(a)(3). It was renumbered as section 507(a)(4) by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 212 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005. See In re Wang Lab., Inc., 164 B.R. 404 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1994) (commissions owed to independent contractors qualified for priority); In re Lynnwear Corp., 28 B.R. 532 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1983) (same); In re American Shelter Sys., Inc., 40 B.R. 793 (Bankr. W.D. La. 1984) (commissions owed to independent contractors did not qualify for priority); In re St. Josephs Hosp., 126 B.R. 37 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1991) (same).

n14

14. The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1401(1) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after April 20, 2005, increased the number of days from 90 to 180. In In re Myer, 197 B.R. 875 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1996), the court held that a claim for lost commissions (commissions the creditor never had a chance to earn) due to the debtor's breach of sales agreement was not entitled to priority status because it was not earned within the applicable period. In re Myer sets forth the inexplicable assertion that a claim reduced to judgment prior to the bankruptcy loses its eligibility for priority. There is no justification in the Code, however, for a claim otherwise entitled to priority to lose its priority status because it was reduced to judgment.

n15

15. Wilson v. Brooks Supermarket, Inc. (In re Missionary Baptist Found.), 667 F.2d 1244, 5 C.B.C.2d 1442

(5th Cir. 1982); In re Paris Indus. Corp., 95 B.R. 258 (Bankr. D. Me. 1989) (entity that purchased assignment of right to vacation pay eligible to assert priority); In re Dahlman Truck Lines, 59 B.R. 218 (Bankr. W.D. Wis. 1986); Peninsula Nat'l Bank v. Allen Carpet Shops, Inc. (In re Allen Carpet Shops, Inc.), 8 C.B.C.2d 671, 27 B.R. 354 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1983).

n16

16. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 507.14.

n17

17. Wilson v. Brooks Supermarket, Inc. (In re Missionary Baptist Found.), 667 F.2d 1244 (5th Cir. 1982).

n18

18. Peninsula Nat'l Bank v. Allen Carpet Shops, Inc. (In re Allen Carpet Shops, Inc.), 8 C.B.C.2d 671, 27 B.R. 354 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1983) (debtors bank that cashed payroll checks not an assignee of wage claims; in cashing checks, bank was extending credit to debtor by making an overdraft available).

n19

19. See In re Mel-Hart Prods., Inc., 156 B.R. 606 (Bankr. E.D. Ark.1993) (company that made employees available to debtor and then billed debtor for employment costs plus markup not an assignee of wage claims, but held its own contract claim); In re Alroco, Inc., 92 B.R. 523 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1988) (same); In re Grant Indus., Inc., 133 B.R. 514 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1991) (firm supplying debtor with temporary employees not entitled to wage priority); In re Dahlman Truck Lines, 59 B.R. 218 (Bankr. W.D. Wis. 1986) (no wage priority for company whose employees are on loan to debtor); see also In re Aurora Graphics, Inc., 255 B.R. 612 (Bankr. D.N.H. 2000) (denying priority to co-employer because co-employer had legal obligation to pay the wage claims).

n20

20. The time period was increased from 90 days to 180 days by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1401(1) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after April 20, 2005. For cases commenced before April 20, 2005, the 90-day limit will be applicable.

n21

21. See Davidson Transfer & Storage Co. v. Teamsters Pension Trust Fund, 817 F.2d 1121, 17 C.B.C.2d 76 (4th Cir. 1987) (cessation of business means ceasing all business operations and not merely shutting down major operations); Plaintiff's Class Claimants v. Elsinore Corp. (In re Elsinore Corp.), 228 B.R. 731 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1998) (a debtor that remained in business as a holding company for several years after ceasing active operations was held not to have ceased business); Boatwright v. Rau (In re Rau), 113 B.R. 619 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1990) (cessation of business did not occur when debtor shut down mining business, even though debtor's only remaining business was a restaurant having no connection to the mining business); In re Sullivan Sales Corp., 146 B.R. 623 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1992) (cessation did not occur where subsidiary shut down, but transferred all its assets to parent which continued in business).

n22

22. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 507.06[2].

n23

23. See In re Murray Indus. Inc., 114 B.R. 749 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1990) (claim for damages/lost wages due to employer's breach of employment contract accrues at time of termination and claim not entitled to priority where termination occurred prior to the applicable period).

n24

24. See In re Cardinal Indus. Inc., 160 B.R. 83 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1993) (bonus earned when right to bonus established, even though bonus not payable until later date).

n25

25. Where collective bargaining agreements are involved, there is a tension between the language of section 1113 and the priority requirements of section 507. Unions have maintained that section 1113 requires vacation and severance benefits under collective bargaining agreements to be treated as postpetition claims, rather than as prepetition priority claims, absent a proper rejection of the collective bargaining agreement. See, e.g., Air Line Pilots Assn Intl v. Shugrue (In re Ionosphere Clubs, Inc.), 22 F.3d 403, 30 C.B.C.2d 1627 (2d Cir. 1994) (section 1113 does not preclude prepetition claims for vacation pay arising under collective bargaining agreement from being classified in chapter 11 plan as unsecured claims entitled to wage priority); In re Roth Am., Inc., 975 F.2d 949, 27 C.B.C.2d 1125 (3d Cir. 1992) (same); In re Spirit Holding Co., 157 B.R. 879 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1993) (same).

n26

26. Northwest Engg Co. v. United Steelworkers, 863 F.2d 1313 (7th Cir. 1988). This approach was also followed in Roeder v. United Steelworkers (In re Old Electralloy Corp.), 167 B.R. 786 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1994); In re Crouthamel Potato Chip Co., 52 B.R. 960 (E.D. Pa. 1985), rev'd on other grounds, 786 F.2d 141, 14 C.B.C.2d 502 (3d Cir. 1986) (union contract provided that union members vested in holiday pay 45 days prior to holiday; no priority where debtor filed bankruptcy and shut down prior to holiday since pay could not have been earned in advance of holiday).

n27

27. See In re General Info. Servs., Inc., 68 B.R. 419 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1986) (no priority for severance benefits payable within applicable period because employee terminated prior to applicable period and employee's right to payments earned at that time).

n28

28. See, e.g., In re Golden Distribs., Ltd., 134 B.R. 760 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1991), aff'd, 152 B.R. 35 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (full amount of severance pay for employees discharged after bankruptcy entitled to administrative priority).

n29

29. In re Roth Am., Inc., 975 F.2d 949, 27 C.B.C.2d 1125 (3d Cir. 1992); In re Russell Cave Co, Inc., 44 C.B.C.2d 131, 248 B.R. 301 (Bankr. E.D. Ky. 2000); In re Lykes Bros. Steamship Co., 213 B.R. 401 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1997); Barto Tech. Servs., Inc. v. Named Persons (In re Wean, Inc.), 171 B.R. 528 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1994); Roeder v. United Steelworkers (In re Old Electralloy Corp.), 167 B.R. 786 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1994); Jeannette Corp. v. Gilardi (In re Jeanette Corp.), 23 C.B.C.2d 1075, 118 B.R. 327 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1990).

n30

30. This calculation was undertaken in Roeder v. United Steelworkers (In re Old Electralloy Corp.), 167 B.R. 786 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1994). A variation of this method was employed in In re Yarn Liquidation, Inc., 217 B.R. 544 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1997), where the employees vested in additional severance benefits each six months.

n31

31. See In re Guardianship Trust & Home Program, Inc., 80 B.R. 268 (Bankr. D.N.H. 1987) (full amount of severance owed to employee due to failure to give advance notice of termination occurring in applicable period entitled to wage priority); McCloskey v. Division of Labor, 200 F.2d 402 (9th Cir. 1952) (under Bankruptcy Act, severance owed due to failure to give notice of termination earned at termination); In re Public Ledger, Inc., 161 F.2d 762 (3d Cir. 1947) (same).

n32

32. See, e.g., Dullanty v. Selectors, Inc. (In re Selectors, Inc.), 19 C.B.C.2d 157, 85 B.R. 843 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1988); In re M Group, Inc., 268 B.R. 896 (Bankr. D. Del. 2001); In re Uly-Pak, Inc., 24 C.B.C.2d 1989, 128 B.R. 763 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 1991).

n33

33. International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. Kitty Hawk Intl, Inc. (In re Kitty Hawk, Inc.), 255 B.R. 428 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2000); In re Riker Indus. Inc., 151 B.R. 823 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1993); In re Cargo, Inc., 138 B.R. 923 (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 1992).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

91 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on Reaffirmation Agreements and Discharge Hearings

2008 Emerging Issues 1623

Collier on Reaffirmation Agreements and Discharge Hearings

By Collier

December 18, 2007

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis covers the requirements for an enforceable reaffirmation agreement, the disclosure statement required by Bankruptcy Code subsection 524(k), the rescission of a reaffirmation agreement by a debtor, and whether voluntary payments by a debtor pursuant to Bankruptcy Code subsection 524(f) constitute a reaffirmation of a discharged debt.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Subsections (c) and (d) of Bankruptcy Code section 524 prohibit enforcement of the reaffirmation of a discharged debt unless specific requirements have been met. n1 If an agreement to pay a discharged or dischargeable debt does not meet the requirements of subsections (c) and (d), it is without legal effect. These subsections grew out of a long history of coercive and deceptive actions by creditors to secure reaffirmation of discharged debts. n2 The subsections have been applied strictly by the courts to carry out their remedial purposes and to ensure that they are not evaded by agreements which, though not labeled as reaffirmations, have the effect of waiving the protections of the discharge. n3 The debtor cannot enter into an agreement, other than a valid reaffirmation agreement, that would create personal liability for the discharged debt. For example, a postdischarge agreement to pay a secured debt after bankruptcy in exchange for the creditors forbearance in repossessing the collateral is an agreement that recreates the debtors personal liability for the debt and is not valid notwithstanding the creditors claim that the agreement is for the new consideration of the creditors forbearance. n4

The Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit misinterpreted the requirements of subsections (c) and (d) in DuBois v. Ford Motor Credit Co., n5 holding that debtors who, after bankruptcy, had continued to make payments on an automobile lease did not enter into a reaffirmation agreement when they thereafter entered into a new lease that included charges still owing from the prior lease. The court held that the new agreement was voluntary and that it was therefore permitted by subsection 524(f), which permits a creditor to accept voluntary payments on a discharged debt. n6 In doing so, the court equated a payment with an agreement to pay, despite the fact that the statute treats them very differently. Although a voluntary payment of a discharged debt is allowed by subsection 524(f), any agreement to pay a discharged debt is a reaffirmation agreement subject to the requirements of subsection (c). If an agreement to pay a discharged debt were permitted simply because it is voluntary, the reaffirmation requirements of the Code would be eviscerated.

The debtor may rescind a reaffirmation within 60 days after the reaffirmation agreement is filed. n7 Additionally, before reaffirmation becomes effective as to an individual debtor, if the debtor is not represented by an attorney who has negotiated and certified the agreement as voluntary, informed and manageable for the debtor, the court must advise the debtor of the effects of reaffirmation and approve the reaffirmation as not imposing a hardship on the debtor and as being in the debtors best interest. n8 Typically, an allowable reaffirmation agreement yields a concrete benefit to the debtor, such as the right to retain collateral. n9 Only the debtor, not the creditor, may apply for court approval of a reaffirmation agreement. n10 However, if the debt is a consumer debt secured by real property, court approval is not required, even in cases of individuals not represented by an attorney during the course of negotiating the reaffirmation agreement. n11

Requisites of an Enforceable Reaffirmation Agreement. Subsections 524(c) and (d), except under very limited circumstances, render unenforceable reaffirmation agreements based upon dischargeable debts. To be enforceable, a reaffirmation must be made before the granting of a discharge, n12 and the debtor may rescind a reaffirmation agreement at any time up to 60 days after the agreement is filed in court, n13 in which case any monies paid by the debtor pursuant to the agreement must be returned by the creditor. n14 Of course, to be an enforceable agreement, the reaffirmation agreement must also be one to which both the debtor and creditor agree. n15 Applying this general principle, the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, in Jamo v. Katahdin Fed. Credit Union (in Re Jamo), n16 held that a creditor is permitted to refuse to enter into a reaffirmation agreement of one debt if the debtor refuses to reaffirm another debt. It is unclear how far courts will allow creditors to extend this concept, which in theory could allow creditors to demand additional charges and other concessions in exchange for a reaffirmation demanded under a threat of repossession or foreclosure. Notably, the court in Jamo held that creditors may not engage in coercive or harassing tactics and that threats of foreclosure could violate this rule. n17

Section 524(c)(2), as amended in 2005, n18 provides that a reaffirmation agreement is not enforceable unless the debtor received the disclosures described in section 524(k), enacted by the same legislation, at or before the time the debtor signed the reaffirmation agreement. Section 524(k)(2) requires the disclosures to be made clearly and conspicuously and in writing. The terms Amount Reaffirmed and Annual Percentage Rate must be disclosed more conspicuously than other terms or information, except that the phrases Before agreeing to reaffirm a debt, review these important disclosures and Summary of Reaffirmation Agreement may be equally conspicuous.

Courts have differed regarding what is required to make language clear and conspicuous. In American General Finance, Inc. v. Bassett, n19 the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed a decision of the bankruptcy appellate panel n20 that had found that a creditors notice of the right to rescind was not clear and conspicuous because it was in lower-case letters and was located very near another statement in upper-case letters. The court of appeals held that the statement was conspicuous because it was the first sentence of an agreement that took up less than one side of a page and no aspect of formatting or appearance of the statement made it difficult or less visible to read. n21 These conflicting interpretations of the word conspicuous suggest that creditors should be careful to emphasize in some way the language that is required to be conspicuous.

The disclosures that must be given in connection with a reaffirmation agreement are set forth in section 524(k), enacted by the 2005 amendments. n22 According to section 524(k)(1), the disclosures consist of a combination of the disclosure statement described in section 524(k)(3), completed as required by that paragraph, and the agreement, statement, declaration, motion and order described in section 524(k)(4)(8). Thus, unless all of these documents conform to the statutory requirements, the disclosures required by section 524(c)(2) have not been given. Section 524(k)(1) also provides that these are the only disclosures that are required. The disclosures required by section 524(k)(3), designated as Part A, are in some ways similar to those required for consumer credit transactions under the Truth In Lending Act, and incorporate certain concepts from that law. n23 They require the use of particular terms and phrases, including Amount Reaffirmed and Annual Percentage Rate, as well as standard statements. The required disclosures are far more lengthy and confusing than the form promulgated by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts that was previously used in many courts. It is likely that many debtors will not understand them, and it is also likely that many law firms will be hired to draft forms that comply with these complicated new provisions. There is also a potential for much litigation, similar to that under the Truth in Lending Act, if creditors do not strictly comply with the disclosure requirements. The form of the reaffirmation agreement, designated as Part B, is dictated by section 524(k)(4). It must include a brief description of the credit agreement, a task that may not be easy in light of the complicated agreements utilized by consumer creditors. The creditor and the debtor(s) must both sign and date the agreement. If an attorney represents the debtor in negotiating the agreement, Part C, required by section 524(k)(5), is the attorneys declaration, discussed below. Under section 524(k)(6), the debtor must also sign a form statement, designated Part D. The statement requires the debtor to compute whether the debtor has sufficient disposable income to make the payments required under the reaffirmation agreement and, if not, to explain how the debtor can afford to make the payments. However, this computation and explanation is not required if the debtor is represented by an attorney and the creditor is a credit union. n24 Section 524(k)(7), Part E, sets forth the form of a motion that may be used to obtain court approval of a reaffirmation agreement that must be approved by the court. Such approval is necessary if the debtor is not represented by an attorney with respect to the reaffirmation, unless the debt is secured by real property. n25 Lastly, section 524(k)(8) sets out a form of order that may be used to grant court approval of a reaffirmation agreement.

The agreement must be filed with the court, within 30 days after entry of an order granting a discharge or confirming a chapter 11 plan of an individual debtor. n26 If applicable, the agreement must be accompanied by a declaration or affidavit of the attorney who represented the debtor during the course of negotiating the agreement. The declaration or affidavit must state that the agreement represents a fully informed and voluntary agreement by the debtor and does not impose a hardship on the debtor or a dependent of the debtor. n27 The declaration or affidavit must also state that the attorney fully advised the debtor of the legal effect and consequences of the reaffirmation agreement and of any default under that agreement. n28 And, if the debtors budget as reflected in Part D does not demonstrate adequate income to make the payments required by the reaffirmation agreement, the declaration must also state that in the attorneys opinion the debtor is able to make those payments. n29 Courts are likely to continue to scrutinize reaffirmation agreements, especially when the debtors budget appears inadequate, due to concerns that attorneys signing them have not adequately investigated the debtors situation and have misrepresented whether the agreement would cause hardship to the debtor or the debtors dependents. n30

Court Approval Required for Certain Reaffirmation Agreements. If the debtor is an individual who was not represented by an attorney in the course of negotiating a reaffirmation agreement, subsection (d) requires the court to hold a discharge hearing, which the debtor must attend, at which the court must explain reaffirmation to the debtor. Normally, such a hearing is triggered by the debtors filing a motion for approval of the reaffirmation agreement. Courts have held that only the debtor has standing to seek approval of a reaffirmation agreement, n31 but any party may file a reaffirmation agreement with the court.

Section 524(c)(6)(A) requires the court to determine at the discharge hearing whether the agreement imposes an undue hardship on the debtor or a dependent of the debtor, and whether it is in the best interest of the debtor. The court must also make such a determination if the debtor is represented by an attorney but the attorney did not negotiate the reaffirmation agreement. In either case, the court may approve the reaffirmation agreement only if it does not impose a hardship. Section 524(c)(6)(A) does not apply, however, to the extent that the debt is a consumer debt secured by real property.

Under section 524(m), added by the 2005 amendments to the Bankruptcy Code, n32 the court may also disapprove certain reaffirmation agreements in cases in which the debtor is represented by an attorney, although a hearing is not required in every such case. If the debtors declaration shows a budget insufficient to make payments under the agreement, a presumption arises that the reaffirmation agreement is an undue hardship, and the court is required to review the matter. n33 In support of the reaffirmation, the debtor may submit a written explanation of how additional funds will be obtained to make the payments in order to rebut the presumption. If the presumption is not rebutted, the court may disapprove the agreement after notice to the debtor and creditor and a hearing concluded before the discharge. n34 However, the standard for approval of a reaffirmation agreement remains unchanged in section 524(c)(6)(A). The agreement must not impose an undue hardship on the debtor and must be in the debtors best interest, which suggests that the court should never approve an agreement when the presumption of undue hardship has not been satisfactorily rebutted. In order to fully review all agreements in which the presumption arises, courts may have to delay the discharge in many cases. But these presumption of hardship provisions do not apply if the creditor is a credit union and in such cases court review is required only if the debtor is not represented by an attorney. n35

In past cases in which court approval has been required, courts have looked to a number of factors to decide whether a reaffirmation agreement is in the best interest of the debtor. n36 When it is doubtful that a debtor can make the payments called for by the agreement, the agreement is normally disapproved. n37 If an agreement is intended to prevent repossession of property subject to a nonavoidable lien, and the debtor could better accomplish the purpose of the agreement in some other manner, the agreement is also unlikely to win court approval. n38 For example, if the security agreement is invalid, the court may decline to approve such a reaffirmation agreement. n39 Some courts refuse to permit reaffirmation of a secured debt in an amount in excess of the value of the collateral. n40 A reaffirmation agreement not in the debtors best interest may not be coerced by threats to embroil the debtor in costly foreclosure proceedings. n41 A bankruptcy court should not permit reaffirmation of a debt in exchange for the creditors forbearing to press criminal bad check charges, because the customary practice of collecting debts through such criminal proceedings should not be abetted. n42

In many courts, it has been held that property securing a discharged debt cannot be repossessed as long as the debtor remains current in payments on the debt, n43 so in those courts it is unnecessary to reaffirm a secured debt to retain the property if the debtor is current on payments. n44 Similarly, if the agreement purports to be one entered into to avoid dischargeability litigation, and the creditor has not timely filed a dischargeability complaint, the agreement will not be approved. n45 Reaffirmation should rarely, if ever, be recommended by an attorney or approved by the court if the sole reason for it is the debtors desire to pay the discharged debt, n46 since the debtor already has the absolute right to pay the debt without giving up the protections of the discharge. n47 Courts will likely look to similar considerations in determining whether an agreement will pose an undue hardship for the debtor in deciding whether to approve agreements with respect to which a presumption of undue hardship arises under section 524(m)(1). n48

In order to fully assess the circumstances surrounding a reaffirmation, some courts have required a good deal of information about the debtors circumstances, including the nature of any security for the debt and its value. To facilitate the reaffirmation process, the Administrative Office of the United States Courts promulgated a form of reaffirmation agreement requiring such information. n49 It is unclear whether courts will still require this information in every reaffirmation agreement, now that the statute provides a different form for the agreement. n50 However, nothing prevents a court from requiring such additional information in order to evaluate whether an agreement should be approved.

Once a court has entered an order approving a reaffirmation agreement, relief from that order, beyond the statutory right to rescind the agreement, is governed by normal rules of procedure. n51

Reaffirmation Agreements and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4004(c). Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4004(c)(2) n52 provides that on motion of the debtor, the court may defer the entry of an order granting a discharge for 30 days and, on motion within this period, the court may further defer entry of the order to a date certain. The purpose of this rule is to give the debtor the opportunity to obtain automatically an additional 30 days to conclude a reaffirmation agreement. n53 In explaining the provision, the 1983 Advisory Committee Note to Bankruptcy Rule 4004 states, in part:

The last sentence of subdivision (c) takes cognizance of § 524(c) of the Code which authorizes a debtor to enter into enforceable reaffirmation agreements only prior to entry of the order of discharge. Immediate entry of that order after expiration of the time fixed for filing complaints objecting to discharge may render it more difficult for a debtor to settle pending litigation to determine the dischargeability of a debt and execute a reaffirmation agreement as part of a settlement.

The Discharge Hearing. In a case concerning an individual who seeks to reaffirm a debt, there must be compliance with the provisions of subsection (d). n54 However, in many cases subsection (d) requires nothing.

Subsection (d) provides that if the court has decided to grant a discharge, the court may hold a discharge hearing. n55 If the court holds such a hearing, the debtor must appear in person. However, the court is not required to hold a discharge hearing unless the debtor desires to reaffirm a debt and was not represented by an attorney in negotiating the reaffirmation agreement. n56

Most courts do not hold discharge hearings in cases in which there are no reaffirmation agreements. However, bankruptcy courts may still wish to exercise their discretion to hold discharge hearings in all cases in which the debtor agrees to reaffirm a debt. Many courts have found that even debtors who have been represented by counsel have made unwise reaffirmation agreements and benefit greatly from an explanation of the risks of such agreements. n57

In cases in which the court does hold a discharge hearing, the court must inform the debtor that a discharge has been granted, that a reaffirmation agreement is not required by any applicable law, and of the legal consequences and effects of a reaffirmation agreement and of a default under it. n58

Unless the debtor has been represented by an attorney in negotiating a reaffirmation agreement, the court must also decide whether to approve the agreement. n59 This determination is not required to the extent the agreement is secured by real property. The agreement can be approved only if the court finds that it is in the best interest of the debtor and that it will not impose an undue hardship on the debtor or the debtors dependents, as discussed above. n60

If a discharge hearing is required, n61 and the court does not hold a discharge hearing at which the debtor receives the admonitions described in section 524(d), the language of section 524(c) leaves no doubt that the reaffirmation agreement is not enforceable. Section 524(c)(5) requires compliance with section 524(d), and section 524(d) requires the court to hold a hearing in certain specified cases at which the debtor must appear in person. Therefore, in Arnhold v. Kyrus, n62 a case in which the debtor failed to bring a reaffirmation agreement to the attention of the court and never received the admonitions about reaffirmation, the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit held that the reaffirmation agreement was invalid. n63

As to the time at which the reaffirmation and discharge hearing under section 524(d) must be held, Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4008 provides that it be held not more than 30 days following the entry of an order granting or denying a discharge, or confirming a plan in a chapter 11 reorganization case concerning an individual debtor, and on not less than 10 days notice to the debtor and trustee. The rule also provides that a motion by the debtor for approval of a reaffirmation agreement must be filed before or at the hearing. n64

For a complete discussion of Code section 524, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 524.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 1. 11 U.S.C. § 524(c), (d). In re Johnson, 148 B.R. 532 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1992); Lindale Natl Bank v.

Artzt (In re Artzt), 145 B.R. 866 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 1992). 11 U.S.C. § 524(c) was amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (enacted on April 20, 2005, and effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005).

n2

2. See H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 162-164 (1977), reprinted in Collier on Bankruptcy, App. Pt. 4(d)(i); Report of the Bankruptcy Commission, H.R. Doc. 137, 93d Cong., 1st Sess., Part I, 177.

n3

3. Renwick v. Bennett (In re Bennett), 298 F.3d 1059 (9th Cir. 2002) (creditors offer of new consideration for repayment of the discharged debt was inconsequential); Republic Bank California, N.A. v. Getzoff (In re Getzoff), 33 C.B.C.2d 1281, 180 B.R. 572 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1995) (fact that additional consideration may have been given was irrelevant when consideration given by debtor included promise to pay discharged debt); Chilcoat v. Minor (In re Minor), 115 B.R. 690 (D. Colo. 1990) (agreement to settle dischargeability by repaying prepetition debt could not be characterized as waiver of discharge under section 727(a)(10) to avoid reaffirmation requirements); In re Zarro, 47 C.B.C.2d 203, 268 B.R. 715 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2001) (agreement is reaffirmation if any part of consideration given by debtor involves promise to pay discharged debt); In re Lowery, 187 B.R. 761 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1995) (new postbankruptcy note which included discharged debt was disguised reaffirmation agreement); Light v. Adkins (In re Adkins), 151 B.R. 458 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1992) (divorce agreement clause purporting to make certain obligations nondischargeable in bankruptcy held invalid); In re Bowling, 116 B.R. 659 (Bankr. S.D. Ind. 1990) (transaction in which part of postpetition loan proceeds, in amount of discharged debt, were immediately paid back to lender to pay that debt, and debtors were then again liable for amount of discharged debt they had just borrowed, constituted prohibited reaffirmation); see also In re Barnes, 969 F.2d 526 (7th Cir. 1992) (predischARGE oral promise to pay unscheduled creditor who had notice of the bankruptcy was not enforceable, even if fraudulent); In re Johnson, 114 B.R. 799 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1990) (statement of intention to reaffirm did not constitute reaffirmation agreement if valid reaffirmation agreement was never made). But see Rein v. Providian Fin. Corp. (In re Rein), 270 F.3d 895 (9th Cir. 2001) (settlement of adversary proceeding approved by court order stipulating that portion of debt not discharged precluded claim that actions to collect debt violated discharge injunction).

n4

4. Bankruptcy Receivables Mgmt. v. Lopez (In re Lopez), 345 F.3d 701 (9th Cir. 2003) (postdischarge asset retention agreement was reaffirmation despite creditors claim that forbearance from repossession was new consideration, because part of consideration from debtor was agreement to repay discharged debt); In re Brown, 220 B.R. 101 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1998); cf. Arruda v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 310 F.3d 13 (1st Cir. 2002) (redemption agreement providing that creditor would not repossess if debtor paid agreed value of collateral and clearly providing that no personal liability existed did not violate statute); Gordon v. Hines (In re Hines), 147 F.3d 1185, 40 C.B.C.2d 684 (9th Cir. 1998) (suggesting that postpetition services of a chapter 7 debtors attorney could be consideration for new postpetition debt).

n5

5. 276 F.3d 1019 (8th Cir. 2002).

n6

6. 276 F.3d at 1023.

n7

7. 11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(2), as amended to include disclosure of the right to rescind in section 524(k) by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n8

8. 11 U.S.C. §524(c)(3), (6).

n9

9. See, e.g., Green v. National Cash Register Co. (In re Green), 5 C.B.C. 2d 733, 15 B.R. 75 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1981); Bank v. Sholos (In re Sholos), 11 B.R. 782 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1981).

n10

10. Peoples Bank of Pound v. Newsome (In re Newsome), 1 C.B.C.2d 1000, 3 B.R. 626 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 1980).

n11

11. 11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(6)(B).

n12

12. 11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(1); Chase Auto. Fin., Inc. v. Kinion (In re Kinion), 207 F.3d 751 (5th Cir. 2000); In re Collins, 243 B.R. 217 (Bankr. D. Conn. 2000); In re Brinkman, 123 B.R. 611 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1991). A bankruptcy court should not vacate a discharge that has already been entered so that a reaffirmation agreement may then be filed before the granting of the discharge. Winters Natl Bank and Trust Co. v. McQuality (In re McQuality), 2 C.B.C.2d 723, 5 B.R. 302 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1980).

n13

13. 11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(4).

n14

14. McAuliffe v. GMAC Mtg. Corp. (In re McAuliffe), 180 B.R. 336 (Bankr. D. Me. 1995).

n15

15. In re Turner, 156 F.3d 713, 40 C.B.C.2d 1105 (7th Cir. 1998).

n16

16. 283 F.3d 392, 48 C.B.C.2d 70 (1st Cir. 2002).

n17

17. 283 F.3d 392, 399-402.

n18

18. Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n19

19. 285 F.3d 882 (9th Cir. 2002) (9th Cir. 2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1002, 123 S. Ct. 496, 154 L. Ed. 2d 398 (2002).

n20

20. Bassett v. Am. Gen Fin., Inc. (In re Bassett), 255 B.R. 747 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2000).

n21

21. 285 F.3d 882, 887.

n22

22. 11 U.S.C. § 524(k), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n23

23. 15 U.S.C. § 1601 et seq.

n24

24. 11 U.S.C. § 524(k)(6)(B). The statute refers to a creditor defined in section 19(b)(1)(a)(iv) of the Federal Reserve Act, which defines credit unions.

n25

25. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 524.04[2] (Matthew Bender).

n26

26. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4008, as amended by the 2005 amendments to the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure; Vazquez v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (In re Vazquez), 221 B.R. 222 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1998) (unfiled reaffirmation agreements are void); In re Latanowich, 207 B.R. 326 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1997); see also In re Davis, 273 B.R. 152 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2001) (bankruptcy could be reopened to permit filing of reaffirmation agreement because Code does not require agreement to be filed before discharge).

n27

27. 11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(3).

n28

28. Id. The form for such a certification is set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 524(k)(5), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (enacted on April 20, 2005, effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005).

n29

29. 11 U.S.C. § 524(k)(5)(B), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005. This statement is not required if the creditor is a credit union exempted from the presumption of undue hardship provision by section 524(m)(2), enacted by the same legislation.

n30

30. See, e.g., In re Melendez, 224 B.R. 252 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1998) (attorney declaration subject to Rule 9011 requirement of reasonable inquiry under the circumstances); In re Bruzzese, 214 B.R. 444 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1997); In re Izzo, 197 B.R. 11 (Bankr. D.R.I. 1996).

n31

31. See 2005 Advisory Committee Note to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4008; In re Carlos, 215 B.R. 52 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1997) (citing Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4008). But see McClellan Fed. Credit Union v. Parker (In re Parker), 139 F.3d 668, 670-71 (9th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1041, 119 S. Ct. 592, 142 L. Ed. 2d 535 (1998) (creditor has standing to appeal denial of reaffirmation approval); BankBoston, N.A. v. Claflin (In re Claflin), 44 C.B.C.2d 676, 249 B.R. 840 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2000) (same).

n32

32. Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n33 33. 11 U.S.C. § 524(m)(1), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n34

34. Id.

n35

35. 11 U.S.C. § 524(m)(2), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n36

36. See BankBoston, N.A. v. Claflin (In re Claflin), 44 C.B.C.2d 676, 249 B.R. 840 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2000) (listing factors to be considered and holding that schedules indication of inability to pay is only prima facie evidence that reaffirmation will impose undue hardship, which may be rebutted).

n37

37. See In re Melendez, 224 B.R. 252 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1998); In re Bryant, 43 B.R. 189 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1984).

n38

38. In re Sampson, 51 B.R. 13 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1984) (debtor might have better options through converting case or redeeming property).

n39

39. E.g., In re Carlos, 215 B.R. 52 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1997).

n40

40. In re Delano, 3 C.B.C.2d 259, 7 B.R. 72 (Bankr. D. Me. 1980); In re Jenkins, 2 C.B.C.2d 307, 4 B.R. 651 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1980). However, a court may not, by local rule, preemptively preclude all reaffirmations of unsecured debts. Chase Auto. Fin., Inc. v. Kinion (In re Kinion), 207 F.3d 751 (5th Cir. 2000).

n41

41. In re Farmer, 4 C.B.C.2d 1461, 13 B.R. 319 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1981).

n42

42. American Express Co. v. Griffin (In re Griffin), 4 C.B.C.2d 1507, 13 B.R. 591 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1981).

n43

43. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 521.10[2] (Matthew Bender).

n44

44. E.g., In re McDaniel, 129 B.R. 301 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1991).

n45

45. In re Hirte, 71 B.R. 249 (Bankr. D. Or. 1986).

n46

46. In re Berkich, 7 B.R. 483 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1980); In re Long, 2 C.B.C.2d 23, 3 B.R. 656 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1980).

n47

47. 11 U.S.C. § 524(f); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 524.07 (Matthew Bender).

n48

48. 11 U.S.C. § 524(m)(1), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n49

49. See Collier on Bankruptcy, Form CS20.13-7; In re Brown, 248 B.R. 784 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2000) (use of form strongly recommended; court could not approve reaffirmation without information required by form or attachment of underlying contract to be reaffirmed).

n50

50. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 524.04[1] (Matthew Bender).

n51

51. Missoula Fed. Credit Union v. Reinertson (In re Reinertson), 43 C.B.C.2d 130, 241 B.R. 451 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1999) (reversing order granting relief from order approving reaffirmation agreement because relief was not sought within one year as required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b), incorporated in Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9024).

n52

52. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(c), as amended in 2000.

n53

53. See In re Long, 6 C.B.C.2d 1370, 1373, 22 B.R. 152, 154 (Bankr. D. Me. 1982) (Judicious use of that rule [Local Rule 4002: the forerunner of Rule 4004] by debtors counsel largely should obviate the need for future motions to vacate a discharge.).

n54

54. 11 U.S.C. § 524(c)(5).

n55

55. 11 U.S.C. § 524(d).

n56

56. 11 U.S.C. § 524(d).

n57

57. See In re Melendez, 224 B.R. 252 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1998).

n58

58. See In re Garber, 2 C.B.C.2d 390, 4 B.R. 684 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1980); In re Keefe, 3 C.B.C.2d 385, 7 B.R. 270 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1980).

n59

59. 11 U.S.C. § 524(d)(2).

n60

60. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 524.04[2] (Matthew Bender).

n61

61. A discharge hearing was required in all cases filed prior to Oct. 22, 1994, in which there was a reaffirmation agreement, and is required in cases filed after that date in which the debtor reaffirms a debt without being represented by an attorney in the course of negotiating the reaffirmation agreement. 11 U.S.C. § 524(d), as amended by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394 (enacted on October 22, 1994 and effective with respect to cases filed on or after that date).

n62

62. 851 F.2d 738 (4th Cir. 1988).

n63

63. See also Midlothian State Bank v. Roth (In re Roth), 12 C.B.C.2d 53, 43 B.R. 484 (N.D. Ill. 1984); In re Marletter, 236 B.R. 281 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1999) (although reaffirmation of debt secured by real estate need not be approved by court, lack of discharge hearing rendered reaffirmation unenforceable); Bankers Trust Co. v. Hunt (In re Hunt), 124 B.R. 200 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1991). But see Sweet v. Bank of Oklahoma (In re Sweet), 954 F.2d 610 (10th Cir. 1992) (debtors failure to attend reaffirmation hearing did not render reaffirmation agreement unenforceable); cf. In re Mensch, 7 B.R. 804 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1980) (debtor may be excused from attending discharge hearing if there is good cause presented at time of hearing).

n64

64. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 4008.05 (Matthew Bender). The 1991 amendments to the Bankruptcy Rules and Official Forms amended Rule 4008 to conform to 524(d) of the Code as amended in 1984. A hearing under section 524(d) is not mandatory unless the debtor desires to enter into a reaffirmation agreement. 1991 Advisory Committee Note to Rule 4004. The Advisory Committee Note to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4008 states that the notice of the section 524(d) hearing may be combined with the notice of the meeting of creditors or entered as a separate order.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

92 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on Appointment of An Attorney for a Special Purpose

2008 Emerging Issues 1534

Collier on Appointment of An Attorney for a Special Purpose

By Collier

December 15, 2007

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis discusses 11 U.S.C. § 327(e), which provides that, when it is in the best interest of the estate, the trustee may employ an attorney who has represented the debtor for a "specified purpose" other than to represent the trustee in conducting the bankruptcy case. It also reviews the split in opinion as to whether section 327(e) is limited to situations in which an attorney has previously represented the debtor.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Employment for Specified Special Purpose of Attorney Who Represented the Debtor; 11 U.S.C. § 327(e). Although an attorney's lack of disinterestedness may preclude employment by the estate for general purposes in conducting a bankruptcy case, the attorney may still be retained by the estate for a special purpose. Thus, Bankruptcy Code section 327(e) provides that, when it is in the best interest of the estate, the trustee may employ, for a specified purpose, other than to represent the trustee in conducting the case, an attorney who has represented the debtor. Such attorney need not be disinterested, n1 as is otherwise required by section 327(a), provided that the attorney represents or holds no interest adverse to the debtor or to the estate in respect of the matter upon which the attorney is to be engaged. n2 Indeed, one court has stated:

The Court believes where employment is sought only for specific limited purposes, that subsection (e) of § 327 not only eliminates the disinterestedness requirement for a professional who has formerly represented the debtor, but also narrows the conflict of interest issue to one of factual evaluation of actual or potential conflicts only as related to the particular matters for which representation is sought. n3

Special Purpose Retention Limited to Attorneys. The exception for the retention of special purpose services applies exclusively to attorneys. n4 The plain language of section 327(e) dictates such an explicit limitation, which may not be expanded by a bankruptcy court's equitable powers. n5 While § 105(a) does allow the Bankruptcy Court some latitude in interpreting the Bankruptcy Code, it cannot be used to ignore specific and unambiguous provisions of the Code. n6 Thus, while a court may find it equitable to include a nonattorney professional within the parameters of section 327(e), it may not broaden language that is otherwise unambiguous. n7

In In re Andover Togs, Inc., the District Court for the Southern District of New York ruled that section 327(e) does not contemplate the appointment of an accountant for specified special purposes. n8 While the court acknowledged the sound reasoning of the bankruptcy court in its extension of section 327(e) to encompass a debtor's accountant, the court rejected any application of the statute other than to attorneys. n9 This position also has been adopted by the Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Texas, n10 which dismissed the appointment of consultants under section 327(e). Section 327 (e) is inapplicable to the case at bar. The plain language of the statute limits its application to attorneys. n11 These rulings illustrate the relatively straightforward and literal approach that has been adopted by courts in interpreting this and other requirements of section 327.

Requirement That Attorney Previously Have Represented the Debtor. Courts are split with regard to whether section 327(e) is limited to situations in which the attorneys previously represented the debtor. n12 Consistent with the literal approach that most courts have adopted in interpreting section 327, the majority approach imposes an express requirement of prior representation of the debtor. n13 This is also consistent with the legislative history of section 327(e), which recognizes that section 327(e) will most likely be used when the debtor is involved in complex litigation, and changing attorneys in the middle of the case after the bankruptcy case has commenced would be detrimental to the progress of that litigation. n14 Yet some courts have ruled otherwise, and have permitted retention of counsel under section 327(e) where such counsel had not been retained by the debtor previously. n15 Other courts have reasoned by analogy to section 327(e) to permit attorneys who have represented creditors to be retained for special purposes under section 327(c). These courts are persuaded that the attorneys can be retained as long as their representation of the creditor does not create a conflict with the limited purpose for which they are being retained. n16

Section 327(e) has been examined in light of its statutory counterpart, section 327(a). The two sections address the retention of professionals, and each sets forth a distinct conflict-of-interests standard. One court has reconciled the requirement of prior representation of the debtor by explaining that a lack of prior representation does not automatically disqualify such an attorney. Instead, section 327 offers an alternative subsection in section 327(a) for the retention of professionals generally. n17 A debtor may retain an attorney who has not previously represented the debtor if such attorney meets the stricter standards of disinterestedness in section 327(a). n18

The courts that have not enforced the prior representation language in section 327(e) have reasoned that the language purporting to strictly require that an attorney have previously represented the debtor requires only that the attorney have no actual conflict of interest with the estate and that the attorney's services are in the best interest of the estate. n19 Such an interpretation seems to focus on the best interest of the estate language of section 327(e), and infers that the prior representation language merely serves as guidance to further this general goal. n20

Attorney Retained as Special Counsel Compensated for Limited Duties. The reference to conducting the case in section 327(e) includes those matters that form a part of the administration of the case under the Code. In a reorganization case, these matters include assisting in formulating a plan n21 and assisting the trustee in carrying out required investigations; in a liquidation case, these matters may include examining the validity of liens and claims n22 and collecting the assets of the estate when legal action is required. Thus, an attorney retained as special counsel may receive compensation only for those services directly related to the limited scope of retention and not for services rendered generally to the debtor in connection with its bankruptcy case. n23 Attorneys who render services beyond the specified scope of their retention risk denial of compensation for such unauthorized services.

Definition of Specified Special Purpose. An example of the specified special purpose referred to in section 327(e) is a situation where it is advisable to retain an attorney who has been employed by the debtor to handle a specific legal action for which that attorney may be particularly suited (e.g., securities litigation, personal injury lawsuits, labor negotiations). The special purpose must be unrelated to the reorganization of the debtor and must be explicitly defined or described in the application seeking approval of the attorney's employment. n24 As noted, the disinterested test of section 327(a) does not apply to section 327(e) because the attorney may, in fact, be a creditor of the debtor for fees related to such prepetition representation of the debtor. n25

Subsection (e) does not authorize the employment of the debtor's attorney to represent the estate generally or to represent the trustee in the conduct of the case. n26 Instead, the subsection authorizes employment of an attorney in certain cases, notwithstanding the attorney's prior connection with the debtor, in order to permit the estate to take advantage of that attorney's special knowledge and experience if it may substantially benefit the estate. n27 Subsection (e) will most likely be used when the debtor is involved in complex litigation, and changing attorneys in the middle of the case after the bankruptcy case has commenced would be detrimental to the progress of that other litigation. n28

When an attorney is not disinterested but purports to act under the exception of section 327(e), approval by the court must be explicit; it cannot take the form of silent acquiescence by the court. n29 In addition, local rules may establish supplementary requirements. n30

A court may look at the totality of the circumstances, including the role of counsel prior to the filing and the actual services performed by counsel during the case, to determine whether the scope of its work will be (or has been) limited to a specified purpose under section 327(e). For example, if counsel assisted in the preparation of a prepackaged plan of reorganization prior to the filing, the court should take those services into consideration in determining whether retention under section 327(e) is appropriate. n31

For a complete discussion of Code section 327, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 327.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 1. In re EBW Laser, Inc., 333 B.R. 351, 359 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. 2005) (counsel not disqualified under section 327(e) because it holds prepetition claim); In re Albert, 206 B.R. 636, 644 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1997) (distinguishing the disinterested requirement in subsection 327(a) from the adverse interest requirement of subsections 327(c) and (e)); In re Black & White Cab Co., 175 B.R. 24, 25 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1994); In re Hub Business Forms, Inc., 146 B.R. 315 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1992) (because of limited scope of employment, special counsel need not be disinterested; however, special counsel may not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate); In re G & H Steel Serv., Inc., 76 B.R. 508 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1987). For a discussion of the concept of disinterestedness, see Collier on Bankruptcy, 327.04[3].

n2

2. I.G. Petroleum, L.L.C. v. Fenasci (In re West Delta Oil Co., Inc.), 432 F.3d 347 (5th Cir. 2005) (counsel with financial interest in bidder for estate's assets had disqualifying potential conflict when part of its services to estate included threatening litigation against competing bidder); In re Bolton-Emerson, Inc., 200 B.R. 725, 732 (D. Mass. 1996); DeVlieg-Bullard, Inc. v. Natale (In re DeVlieg, Inc.), 174 B.R. 497, 503 (N.D. Ill. 1994); In re Lease-A-Fleet, Inc., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 407 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 15, 1992) (rejecting argument that section 327(e) requires disqualification whenever a potential conflict exists.); Schwartz v. Prudential Ins. Co. (In re Kridlow), 233 B.R. 334 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1999) (finding no actual conflict of interest due to special counsel's prior representation of a creditor against debtor.); Buckley v. TransAmerica Inv. Corp. (In re Southern Kitchens), 216 B.R. 819 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1998) (special counsels prior representation of one of the members of debtor's board of directors is in violation of section 327(e)); In re Imperial Corp. of Am., 181 B.R. 501, 506-07 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1995); In re Black & White Cab Co., 175 B.R. 24, 25-27 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1994); In re Servico, Inc., 149 B.R. 1009 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1993) (no violation of section 327(e) because receipt of the alleged preferential payment did not cause the law firm to hold any interest adverse to the debtor or the estate on the matter on which it was employed); In re Hub Business Forms, Inc., 146 B.R. 315 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1992).

n3

3. In re Statewide Pools, Inc., 79 B.R. 312, 314 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1987).

n4

4. In re Andover Togs, Inc., 45 C.B.C.2d 1258 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (only attorneys may qualify for the section 327(e) exception). But see In re South Shore Golf Club Holding Co., 182 B.R. 94, 95 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1995) (suggesting that there may be circumstances in which an accountant may be appointed under section 327(e)). The district court in In re Andover Togs, Inc., however, held that its narrow reading of section 327(e) is in accord with In re South Shore Golf Club.

n5

5. In re Federated Dep't Stores, Inc., 44 F.3d 1310, 1318 (6th Cir. 1995); United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse (In re Sharon Steel Corp.), 19 F.3d 138, 142 (3d Cir. 1994); In re Andover Togs, 45 C.B.C.2d 1258, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2690, at *13-14 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); In re Johns-Manville Corp., 26 B.R. 405, 414 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1983), aff'd, 40 B.R. 219 (S.D.N.Y. 1984).

n6

6. In re Andover Togs, 45 C.B.C.2d 1258, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2690, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (citing In re Johns-Manville Corp., 26 B.R. 405, 414 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1983), and In re Federated Dep't Stores, Inc., 44 F.3d 1310, 1318 (6th Cir. 1995)).

n7

7. see note 6, supra.

n8

8. 45 C.B.C.2d 1258, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2690, at *13-14 (S.D.N.Y. 2001).

n9

9. Id.

n10

10. In re Quality Beverage Co., Inc., 216 B.R. 592 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1995).

n11

11. 216 B.R. 592, 594.

n12

12. Compare In re Abrass, 250 B.R. 432, 435-36 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2002), In re Black & White Cab. Co., 175 B.R. 24, 26 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1994), and In re Genco, Inc., 105 B.R. 620, 621 (Bank. D. Colo. 1988), with In re Covenant Fin. Group of Am., Inc., 243 B.R. 450, 457 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1999) (illustrating the diverging interpretations of the prior representation language in section 327(e)), and Schwartz v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. (In re Kridlow), 233 B.R. 334 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1999).

n13

13. Meespierson, Inc. v. Strategic Telecom, Inc., 202 B.R. 845, 848-49 (D. Del. 1996) (representing shareholder and creditor is conflict under section 327(a) and not allowed under section 327(e)); In re Abrass, 250 B.R. 432, 436 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2002); In re Black & White Cab Co., 175 B.R. 24, 26 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1994); In re French, 139 B.R. 485, 489 (Bankr. D.S.D. 1992).

n14

14. In re Abrass, 250 B.R. 432, 436 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2002).

n15

15. In re Scranton Electric Constr. Co., 105 B.R. 1 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 1989).

n16

16. Bank Brussels Lambert v. Coan (In re AroChem Corp.), 176 F.3d 610, 622 (2d Cir. 1999) (subsection (e) limited to prior representation of debtor but supports analyzing adverse interest with respect to the limited role for which counsel engaged); Stoumbos v. Kilimnik, 988 F.2d 949, 964-65 (9th Cir. 1993) (under section 327(c), conflict may not exist with respect to the matter for which special counsel retained by analogy to section 327(e)); In re Peters Contracting, Inc., 301 B.R. 857 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 2003) (same); In re Development Corp. of Plymouth, Inc., 283 B.R. 464 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2002) (same).

n17

17. Colorado National Bank of Denver v. Genco Inc., 105 B.R. 620, 621 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1988).

n18

18. Id.

n19

19. See Schwartz v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. (In re Kridlow), 1999 Bankr. LEXIS 126 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Feb. 19, 1999); see also In re Covenant Fin. Group of Am., Inc., 243 B.R. 450, 457 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1999) (stating that the prior representation language of section 327(e) is not a prerequisite for representation.); In re Scranton Elec. Constr. Co., 105 B.R. 1, 3 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 1989) (only the no adverse interest requirement need be satisfied under section 327(e)) (citations omitted).

n20

20. See Schwartz v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. (In re Kridlow), 1999 Bankr. LEXIS 126 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Feb. 19, 1999).

n21

21. See In re Tidewater Mem. Hosp., Inc., 22 C.B.C.2d 793, 802, 110 B.R. 221, 228 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1989) (special purpose to be served by counsel appointed under § 327(e) must not be related to the debtor's reorganization since this is tantamount to representing the debtor in the conduct of the case).

n22

22. In re Neuman, 138 B.R. 683 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (appointment of special counsel to advise and assist trustee in determining allowability of government claims was improper since investigating validity of government claims was a large part of conducting the case.).

n23

23. See In re Imperial Corp. of Am., 181 B.R. 501 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1995); In re B-T Productions, Inc. 104 B.R. 599 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1989); In re Vladic Corp., 103 B.R. 802 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1989).

n24

24. See Bank Brussels Lambert v. Coan (In re AroChem Corp.), 176 F.3d 610 (2d Cir. 1999) (trustee retained special counsel to pursue a related litigation against a creditor); In re Geilsinger, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1026 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 4, 2000) (affirming the bankruptcy court's approval of the retention of special counsel to litigate a products liability claim.); In re Warner, 141 B.R. 762 (M.D. Fla 1992) (debtor retained special counsel to represent him in various civil matters and in appealing criminal convictions for securities fraud); In re McGrath Mfg. Co., 95 F. Supp. 825 (D. Neb. 1951) (attorney denied any compensation for services on behalf of trustees because a large part of such services concerned the administration of the reorganization case, a purpose for which the attorney had not been appointed); In re Statewide Pools, Inc., 17 C.B.C.2D 927, 79 B.R. 312 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1987) (trustee sought to appoint attorney as special counsel specifically to collect certain of the debtor's accounts receivable and for the continued representation of the debtor in a lawsuit.); In re Macon Prestressed Concrete Co., 61 B.R. 375 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1986) (former partner of law firm representing the debtor, and currently representing the creditors' committee, was authorized to act as debtor's special litigation counsel); In re Iorizzo, 35 B.R. 465 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1983) (appropriate for the trustees of separate affiliated debtors to engage the same special counsel for the purpose of conducting a limited investigation); cf. In re Mortgage Guar. Co., 40 F Supp. 226 (D. Md. 1941).

n25

25. DeVlieg-Bullard, Inc. v. Natale (In re DeVlieg, Inc.), 174 B.R. 497, 503 (N.D. Ill. 1994), appeal dismissed, 56 F.3d 32 (7th Cir. 1995); In re G & H Steel Serv., Inc., 76 B.R. 508 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1987).

n26

26. In re NRG Resources, Inc., 64 B.R. 643, 647 (W.D. La. 1986); H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 328; S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 38; see In re Neuman, 138 B.R. 683, 686 (S.D.N.Y. 1992).

n27

27. See In re Statewide Pools, Inc., 17 C.B.C.2D 927, 930-31, 79 B.R. 312, 315 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1987).

n28

28. H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 328; S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 38-39. But see Stapleton v. Woodworking Warehouse, Inc. (In re Woodworkers Warehouse, Inc.), 323 B.R. 403 (D. Del. 2005) (counsel unable to be retained under section 327(a) may be retained under section 327(e) when services included approval of financing, sale of assets and key employee retention program).

n29

29. See In re Progress Lektro Shave Corp., 117 F.2d 602, 604 (2d Cir.), reh'g denied, 118 F.2d 751 (2d Cir. 1941); see also In re D.L. Enterprises, 89 B.R. 107 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1988) (court reduced fee award to special counsel for nondisclosure of dual representation of debtor partnership and nondebtor general partner in action against limited partner).

n30

30. For example, Local Bankruptcy Rule 2014-1 of the Southern District of New York provides: An application for the employment of a professional person pursuant to §§ 327 and 328 of the Bankruptcy Code shall state the specific facts showing the reasonableness of the terms and conditions of the employment, including the terms of any retainer, hourly fee, or contingent fee arrangement. In addition, Delaware's Local Bankruptcy Rule 2014-1 sets forth the procedural requirements that are necessary for court approval of any professional employed by the debtor. See Collier Bankruptcy Practice Guide Local Rules Pamphlet: Second Circuit (Matthew Bender).

n31

31. Century Indem. Co. v. Congoleum Corp. (In re Congoleum Corp.), 426 F.3d 675 (3d Cir. 2005).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

93 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Employment of a Disinterested Professional With No Adverse Interest

2008 Emerging Issues 1535

Collier on the Employment of a Disinterested Professional With No Adverse Interest

By Collier

December 15, 2007

SUMMARY: Under Bankruptcy Code section 327(a), a trustee may employ only attorneys, accountants, appraisers and other professional persons not holding or representing an interest adverse to the estate. Additionally, a trustee may employ only professional persons who are disinterested persons. Courts have recognized that there is an overlap in the two prongs of section 327(a). This article discusses the Courts disagreement as to the rigidity of the application of these tests.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Under Bankruptcy Code section 327(a), the trustee may employ only attorneys, accountants, appraisers and other professional persons not holding or representing an interest adverse to the estate. n1 In addition, a trustee may employ only professional persons who are disinterested persons.

Courts have recognized that there is an overlap in the two prongs of section 327(a), persons holding or representing an interest adverse to the estate and persons who are not disinterested, n2 and observe that they form one hallmark with which to evaluate whether professionals seeking court-approved retention (or to remain retained by the estate) meet the absence of adversity requirements embodied in the Bankruptcy Code. n3

The Disinterestedness Prong: When a Person Is Not Disinterested; 11 U.S.C. §101. Disinterested person is defined in section 101 of the Code, which sets forth the affiliations, connections and interests that disqualify professional persons from being employed by trustees. n4 Numerous cases have construed section 101's definition of disinterested. n5 These and other courts tend to analyze aspects of disinterestedness (e.g., the professionals status as a creditor of the estate) in the context of conflicts of interest. n6

Section 101 and the Definition of Disinterested Person. Section 101 prescribes three tests that, if satisfied by a person under consideration, renders that person disinterested. Otherwise, that person, except as provided in section 327(c), 327(e), or 1107(b), is ineligible for employment by a trustee. The section provides that a person is a disinterested person if the person:

(A) is not a creditor, an equity security holder, or an insider;

(B) is not and was not, within 2 years before the date of the filing of the petition, a director, officer, or employee of the debtor; and does not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or of any class of creditors or equity security holders, by reason of any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in, the debtor, or for any other reason. n7

Note that for cases commenced prior to October 17, 2005, there is still an additional category of those who are not disinterested, certain investment bankers and their advisers. n8

Courts disagree as to the rigidity of the application of these tests. The majority of courts demand per se application of the statute; lack of disinterestedness results in automatic disqualification, including situations in which a law firm represents the debtor in bankruptcy proceedings while also acting for creditors in nonbankruptcy proceedings. n9 But some courts have held that judges have latitude to depart from per se application of the statute and make case-by-case decisions looking to the totality of the circumstances. n10

In In re Pierce, n11 the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit rejected a rule that would allow a case-by-case analysis in favor of a per se rule in disqualifying an attorney for the debtor simply because the attorney had a mortgage on the debtors property securing a claim for prepetition bankruptcy services rendered to the debtor. The court reasoned that the intent of the Code is clear; if a professional is a creditor, then that person is not disinterested under [section 101] and is subject to disqualification under Section 327(a). n12 The Third Circuit has disqualified counsel when a facially plausible claim of a substantial preference existed. n13 Similarly, the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit held that [b]y forbidding employment of all interested persons, section 327 prevents individual bankruptcy courts from having to make determinations as to the best interest of the debtors in these situations. n14

The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit has followed the Sixth Circuit in holding that the bankruptcy court may only approve the employment of a professional who has represented a creditor of the estate if that person no longer represents the creditor in connection with the bankruptcy case, § 327(c). These are congressionally established per se rules that a bankruptcy court must apply in exercising its approval power over the appointment of professionals. n15

In contrast, the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit has held that there is no per se rule mandating disqualification of a professional who fails the disinterested test. n16 The court identified a nonexhaustive list of 10 factors to consider in determining whether a relationship with the debtor, such as the holding of a security interest in the debtors property, renders a professional disinterested:

- (1) the reasonableness of the arrangement and whether it was negotiated in good faith;
- (2) whether the security demanded was commensurate with the predictable magnitude and value of the foreseeable services;
- (3) whether it was a needed means of ensuring the engagement of competent counsel;
- (4) whether there are telltale signs of overreaching;
- (5) the nature and extent of any conflict arising from the taking of a security interest as well as the likelihood that a potential conflict might turn into an actual one;
- (6) the influence the putative conflict may have in subsequent decision-making;
- (7) how the matter likely appears to creditors and to other parties in legitimate interest, given the importance of perceptions by the creditor body and the problem at large;
- (8) whether the existence of the security interest threatens to hinder or to delay the effectuation of a plan;

(9) whether the security interest granted is (or could be perceived as) an impediment to reorganization; and

(10) whether the fundamental fairness of the proceedings might be unduly jeopardized either by the actuality of the arrangement or by the reasonable public perception of it. n17

Other bankruptcy courts also have held that there is no per se rule mandating disqualification. n18 Similar to determinations of disinterestedness concerning other professional persons, some courts have rejected a vigorous application of the section 101 definition of disinterested. n19 Indeed, the court in In re Pacific Express rejected a literal application of the disinterested standard set forth in section 101 as incorporated into sections 327(a) and 328(c) of the Code. n20 The court found that the application of the standard of disinterestedness is not to be prophylactic but must be judged in the perspective of the particular case and the facts presented. Given the incidence of public corporations resorting to protection under chapter 11, this more pragmatic construction of the definition may be justified.

Section 1104 and the Requirement of Disinterestedness. The Code requires the same degree of disinterestedness on the part of an attorney or other professional person employed by the trustee that is required of the trustee in a reorganization case under section 1104(d) of the Code. Section 1104(d) provides that the United States trustee, after consultation with parties in interest, and subject to court approval, shall appoint a disinterested person to serve as trustee or examiner (if one is ordered in a reorganization case). n21 It would be anomalous to require a trustee to be aloof from all connection with the debtor or its management, yet permit the trustee's attorney, who necessarily would be active in furthering the trustee's duties of investigation, management, prosecution, development of plans and the like, to have a close relationship with the debtor, its management or associates. n22

Who Is Not Disinterested as Defined by Section 101?

Creditor of the Debtor. Section 101 provides that a person is not disinterested if the person is a creditor of the debtor. n23 Creditor is defined in section 101 and includes holders of prepetition claims.

Equity Security and Equity Security Holder. Under section 101, a person is not disinterested if the person is an equity security holder of the debtor. n24 Equity security is defined in section 101 and includes shares or stock in a corporation, a limited partner's interest in a limited partnership, and warrants or rights to subscribe in an equity security. The term does not include securities, such as convertible debentures, that are convertible into equity securities, but that have not been converted. n25 Equity security holder is the holder of an equity security of the debtor.

Insider. An insider of the debtor also is not a disinterested person. n26 Although section 101 defines insider, the definition is open-ended because the term is not precise. An insider is one who has a sufficiently close relationship with the debtor that his or her conduct is made subject to closer scrutiny than those dealing at arms length with the debtor.

If the debtor is a corporation, then a controlling person, a relative of a controlling person, a partnership in which the debtor is a general partner and a general partner of the debtor are all insiders. If the debtor is a partnership, then a general partner of or in the debtor, a relative of a general partner in the debtor and a person in control are all insiders. If the debtor is a municipality, then an elected official of the debtor is an insider. In addition, affiliates of the debtor and managing agents are insiders. n27

Section 101 might be construed to preclude persons who are acting as trustees of a parent corporation from appointment as trustees of the parent's wholly owned subsidiary, since they are not disinterested. However, this would be contrary to considerations of judicial economy. It would result in unwieldy administration of large reorganization cases involving many affiliated entities. Courts, therefore, generally evaluate each case on its facts and permit trustees to jointly administer parent and subsidiary companies. n28

It is presumed by the statute that a person who is a creditor, equity security holder or insider is incapable of the impartial judgment required of a professional in the conduct of a case under the Code. n29 This reasoning is equally applicable to the employment of professional persons by the trustee.

Person Holding an Interest Materially Adverse to Interest of the Estate or Class of Creditors or Equity Security Holders. Section 101 provides that a person is not disinterested if the person has an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or of any class of creditors or equity security holders, by reason of any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in, the debtor or for any other reason. [Emphasis added.] This subsection of section 101 is adopted from former Rule 10-202(c)(2)(D), which has been described as a catch-all clause. n30 It appears broad enough to include anyone who in the slightest degree might have some interest or relationship that would color the independent and impartial attitude required by the Code. n31 The purpose of the catch-all clause is to prevent a conflict even if the professional person under consideration promises to report such conflict if it arises. n32 Examples of such materially adverse interests include

- a prepetition claim against the debtor; n33
- representation of a shareholder; n34
- representation of an adversary; n35
- representation of certain investors of the debtors; n36 and
- performance of services for an entity whose subsidiary is a member of the creditors committee. n37

Although these representations have been considered by courts to render the professional person not disinterested, the more correct analysis is to conclude that, as a result of such representations, the person represents an interest adverse to the estate, which is the second prong of the analysis under section 327(a). n38

Caution must be exercised to avoid the application of the catch-all provision to the detriment of the case. Relationships remote from the pending case that do not involve confidential information should not serve as the basis for disqualifying competent professional persons. For example, in In re Allegheny Int'l, Inc., n39 the possibility that a conflict could arise was an insufficient basis to deny the retention of an otherwise qualified professional to act as an independent special advisor to assist the debtor in its business operations. The court stated that the possibility that [the advisor] may eventually play a managerial role in an as-yet speculative reorganization plan does not mean that [the advisor] would fall prey to conflicting loyalties while employed under the special advisor agreement, or that his interest would be materially adverse to those of the estate, creditors or equity security holders. n40 In In re Wingspread Corp., n41 the court considered a successor parents objection to the continued representation by the chapter 7 trustees law firm in an adversary proceeding against the successor-parents subsidiary. The bankruptcy court approved the continued employment of the law firm, based in part on the lack of evidence demonstrating that the law firms prior representation of the second subsidiary provided it with confidential information related to the trustees action against the other subsidiary. n42

In In re Marvel Entertainment Group, Inc., n43 the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit clarified that the catch-all provision for any other reason does not sanction disqualification of a professional merely upon the basis of an appearance of a conflict. Instead, the court adopted the following tests for disqualification: (1) section 327 imposes a per se disqualification of any professional who has an actual conflict of interest; (2) the court may, within its discretion, disqualify a professional who has a potential conflict of interest; and (3) the court may not disqualify a professional solely on the basis of an appearance of conflict.

The Adverse Interest Prong: Persons Must Not Hold or Represent an Interest Adverse to the Estate. Section

327(a) requires that, in addition to being disinterested, the professional retained by the trustee not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate. An interest adverse to the estate has been defined as any economic interest that would tend to lessen the value of the bankruptcy estate or that would create either an actual or potential dispute, n44 or a predisposition under circumstances that render such bias against the estate. n45

The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has held that the distinction between the interest adverse and disinterested prongs of section 327(a) is that the interest adverse prong forbids persons who represent interests adverse to the estate from also being employed by the trustee under section 327(a); in contrast, the disinterestedness prong does not forbid persons who represent interests adverse to creditors or equity security holders from also representing the estate. n46 Thus the interest adverse prong adds to the disinterestedness prong the requirement that the person to be employed not represent an interest adverse to the estate.

Adverse interests have been found in instances where the professional person represented the debtor corporations officers, n47 served as an officer and director of the debtor, n48 was a prepetition creditor of the debtors estate, n49 was actually acting on behalf of a major equity holder of the estate, n50 co-owned land with the debtor n51 and offered financing to one of the bidders for estate assets. n52

A provision similar to section 327(a) of the Code with respect to the disqualifying effect of holding or representing an interest adverse to the estate was found in former Bankruptcy Rule 215(a). Former Rule 215(a) also contained the requirement that the employment of the attorney or accountant be in the best interest of the estate. This requirement is not found in section 327(a), but appears in section 327(d) when the court may authorize the trustee to act as attorney or accountant for the estate and section 327(e) when the trustee may, for a specified special purpose, employ an attorney who has previously represented the debtor.

Nevertheless, courts may conclude there is no materially adverse interests even in instances in which the professional is a mortgagee of the debtors estate, n53 a special advisor involved in the postconfirmation management of the debtor n54 or has provided prior services to the debtors competitor n55 or has asserted prior legal positions inapposite to positions in the current representation of the debtor. n56 The reasons supporting these conclusions are the same, of course, as those previously recounted.

Indirect or remote associations or affiliations, as well as direct, may engender conflicting loyalties. n57 Thus, a debtors attorney is not eligible for employment as a disinterested attorney for the trustee. n58 However, section 327(e) authorizes the trustee to employ for a special purpose, other than representation of the trustee in the overall bankruptcy case, an attorney that has represented the debtor if such attorney does not represent or hold any adverse interest to the estate and if the appointment is in the best interest of the estate. n59

For a complete discussion of Code section 327, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 327.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 1. See Miller v. United States Trustee (In re Independent Engg Co.), 197 F.3d 13, 17 (1st Cir. 1999); Bank Brussels Lambert v. Coan (In re AroChem Corp.), 176 F.3d 610, 621 (2d Cir. 1999); In re Martin, 817

F.2d 175, 179, 16 C.B.C.2d 672 (1st Cir. 1987); In re Tauber on Broadway, Inc., 271 F.2d 766 (7th Cir. 1959); In re Kendavis Indus. Intl, Inc., 91 B.R. 742 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1988); Sholer v. Bank of Albuquerque (In re Gallegos), 68 B.R. 584 (Bankr. D.N.M. 1986); In re Gray, 64 B.R. 505 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1986); In re Patterson, 53 B.R. 366 (Bankr. D. Neb. 1985); In re Wells Benrus Corp., 48 B.R. 196 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1985); see also In re Pacific Express Inc., 14 C.B.C.2d 157, 56 B.R. 859 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1985) (investment in debtor by partners of law firm, service as corporate officer and director by a partner and participation of law firm partners with debtor in a business venture did not constitute an interest adverse to debtors or their estates).

n2

2. In re Vebeliunas, 231 B.R. 181, 189 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1999); see also In re Envirodyne Indus., Inc., 150 B.R. 1008, 1017 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1993); In re Tinley Plaza Assocs., L.P., 142 B.R. 272, 277 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1992).

n3

3. In re Vebeliunas, 231 B.R. 181, 189 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1999); see also In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 179 n.6 (1st Cir. 1987) (with respect to the requirement of no adverse interest the two prongs of this test are duplicative); In re Mercury, 280 B.R. 35, 53 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2002) (quoting from In re Martin); In re Roberts, 46 B.R. 815, 828 (Bankr. D. Utah 1985); In re Cropper Company, Inc., 35 B.R. 625, 631 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1983) (either prong requires an attorney employed by a debtor in possession to be free of conflicts of interest).

n4

4. For a case involving several obvious grounds for disqualification, see In re McGrath Mfg. Co., 95 F. Supp. 825 (D. Neb. 1951).

n5

5. See, e.g., In re Federated Dept Stores, Inc., 44 F.3d 1310, 32 C.B.C.2d 1391 (6th Cir. 1995); In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 16 C.B.C.2d 672 (1st Cir. 1987); Pierce v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 809 F.2d 1356 (8th Cir. 1987); Merrimac Assocs., Inc. v. Daig Corp. (In re Daig Corp.), 799 F.2d 1251 (8th Cir. 1986); Smith v. Marshall (In re Hot Tin Roof, Inc.), 205 B.R. 1000 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 1997); In re Roberts, 75 B.R. 402 (D. Utah 1987); In re Gulf Coast Orthopedic Ctr., 265 B.R. 318 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2001); In re LKM Indus., Inc., 252 B.R. 589 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2000); In re Princeton Med. Mgmt., Inc., 249 B.R. 813 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2000); In re Amdura Corp., 121 B.R. 862 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1990); In re Flying E Ranch Co., 81 B.R. 633 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1988); In re Kendavis Indus. Intl, Inc., 91 B.R. 742 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1988); In re Viking Ranches, Inc., 19 C.B.C.2d 354, 89 B.R. 113 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1988); In re Sixth Ave. Car Care Ctr., 81 B.R. 628 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1988); In re Global Marine, Inc., 108 B.R. 998 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1987); In re Michigan General Corp., 17 C.B.C.2d 846, 78 B.R. 479 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1987), affd in part, revd in part, sub nom. Diamond Lumber, Inc. v. Unsecured Creditors Comm. of Diamond, 88 B.R. 773 (N.D. Tex. 1988); In re Gray, 64 B.R. 505 (Bankr. E.D.

Mich. 1986); In re Estes, 14 C.B.C.2d 58, 57 B.R. 158 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1986); In re Pacific Express, Inc., 14 C.B.C.2d 157, 56 B.R. 859 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1985); In re OConnor, 52 B.R. 892 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1985); In re Wells Benrus Corp., 48 B.R. 196 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1985).

n6

6. In re Bolton-Emerson, Inc., 200 B.R. 725, 732 (D. Mass. 1996); In re Southern Kitchens, Inc., 216 B.R. 819, 826 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1998); In re Roberts, 46 B.R. 815, 827 (Bankr. D. Utah 1985).

n7

7. 11 U.S.C. § 101(14); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 101.14.

n8

8. The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 414 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005, deleted from those who were disinterested a person that (1) is not and was not an investment banker for any outstanding security of the debtor, (2) has not been, within three years before the date of the filing of the petition, an investment banker for a security of the debtor, or an attorney for such an investment banker in connection with the offer, sale, or issuance of a security of the debtor, and (3) is not and was not, within two years before the date of the filing of the petition, a director, officer or employee of the debtor or of an investment banker of the type described in clauses (1) and (2) above. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 101.14 and Collier on Bankruptcy, 327.LH[9].

n9

9. In re Consolidated Bancshares, Inc., 785 F.2d 1249, 1256 n.6 (5th Cir. 1986); In re Envirodyne Indus., Inc., 28 C.B.C.2d 747, 150 B.R. 1008 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1993); In re American Printers & Lithographers, Inc., 28 C.B.C.2d 242, 245, 148 B.R. 862, 864 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1992). Although these courts state the issue in such situations as one of disinterestedness, representation of an entity adverse to the debtor is more appropriately analyzed under the adverse interest prong of section 327(a). See Bank Brussels Lambert v. Coan (In re AroChem Corp.), 176 F.3d 610 (2d Cir. 1999).

n10

10. In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 180-83, 16 C.B.C.2d 672 (1st Cir. 1987); In re Pacific Express, Inc., 14 C.B.C.2d 157, 56 B.R. 859 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1985); In re OConnor, 52 B.R. 892, 899 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1985).

n11

11. 809 F.2d 1356 (8th Cir. 1987).

n12

12. 809 F.2d 1356, 1362.

n13

13. Staiano v. Pillowtex, Inc. (In re Pillowtex, Inc.), 304 F.3d 246 (3d Cir. 2002) (even if firm agrees to waive claim if transfer is avoided, the conditional waiver does not resolve conflict); see also Movitz v. Baker (In re Triple Star Welding, Inc.), 324 B.R. 778, 795 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2005) (facially plausible preference claim must be resolved before proposed counsel can be employed (or compensated)).

n14

14. In re Middleton Arms, L.P., 934 F.2d 723, 725 (6th Cir. 1991).

n15

15. In re Harold & Williams Dev. Co., 977 F.2d 906, 909 (4th Cir. 1992).

n16

16. In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 16 C.B.C.2d 672 (1st Cir. 1987).

n17

17. In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 182, 16 C.B.C.2d 672 (1st Cir. 1987) (allowing professional with retainer to be retained).

n18

18. See, e.g., In re Leypoldt, 95 I.B.C.R. 220 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1995) (security for retainer does not disqualify in absence of evidence of overreaching although additional safeguards needed when retainer in form of security interest in estate property); In re Quincy Air Cargo, Inc., 155 B.R. 193 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1993).

n19

19. In re GHR Energy Corp., 60 B.R. 52 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1985); In re Pacific Express, Inc., 14 C.B.C.2d 157, 56 B.R. 859 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1985).

n20

20. 14 C.B.C.2d 157, 56 B.R. 859 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1985).

n21

21. In re Marvel Entertainment Group, 140 F.3d 463, 39 C.B.C.2d 1315 (3d Cir. 1998).

n22

22. In re McGrath Mfg. Co., 95 F. Supp 825, 834 (D. Neb. 1951).

n23 23. See United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138, 30 C.B.C.2d 1522, (3d Cir. 1994); In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 16 C.B.C.2d 672 (1st Cir. 1987); In re Siliconix, Inc., 135 B.R. 378 (N.D. Cal. 1991); In re Roberts, 75 B.R. 402 (D. Utah 1987); In re LKM Indus., Inc., 252 B.R. 589 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2000); In re Princeton Med. Mgmt., Inc., 249 B.R. 813 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2000); In re Hub Business Forms, Inc., 146 B.R. 315 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1992); In re Viking Ranches, Inc., 19 C.B.C.2d 354, 89 B.R. 113 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1988); In re Flying E Ranch Co., 81 B.R. 633 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1988); In re Boro Recycling, Inc., 67 B.R. 3 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1986); In re Gray, 64 B.R. 505 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1986); In re Estes, 14 C.B.C.2d 58, 57 B.R. 158 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1986); In re Nashville Union Stockyard Restaurant, Co., 54 B.R. 391 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1985); In re Patterson, 53 B.R. 366 (Bankr. D. Neb. 1985); In re Codesco, Inc., 18 B.R. 997 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1982).

n24

24. See In re Anver Corp., 11 C.B.C.2d 1171, 44 B.R. 615 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1984); In re The Cropper Co., 35 B.R. 625 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1983); see also Merrimac Assocs., Inc. v. Daig Corp. (In re Daig Corp.), 799 F.2d 1251 (8th Cir. 1986) (holder of stock purchase warrant held not to be disinterested); In re Ocean City Auto.

Bridge Co., 184 F.2d 726, 729 (3d Cir. 1950) (trustee who was a stockholder of the debtor was found to be not disinterested under former section 158 of the Act). But see In re Pacific Express, Inc., 14 C.B.C.2d 157, 56 B.R. 859 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1985); In re OConnor, 52 B.R. 892 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1985) (attorney holding only 1,000 out of 12 million outstanding shares of debtor corporation satisfied the disinterestedness test).

n25

25. H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 311; S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 24.

n26

26. See In re Prado Verde Ranch, Inc., 250 B.R. 126 (Bankr. D.N.M. 2000); In re Hub Business Forms, Inc., 146 B.R. 315 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1992) (court denied employment of law firm nunc pro tunc because a member of the firm was on the debtors board of trustees); In re Patterson, 53 B.R. 366 (Bankr. D. Neb. 1985) (attorneys co-ownership of real estate with debtor could be viewed as a partnership, and thus attorney was an insider under section 101); In re Wells Benrus Corp., 48 B.R. 196 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1985) (member of law firm served as officer and director of debtor for 17 years); In re Roger J. Au & Son, Inc., 65 B.R. 322 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1984), aff'd, 64 B.R. 600 (N.D. Ohio 1986) (attorney who was director and secretary to the debtor and its affiliates was disqualified as debtors attorney); see also United States Trustee v. S.S. Retail Stores Corp. (In re S.S. Retail Stores Corp.), 211 B.R. 699, 704 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1997) (member of firm who was corporate secretary did not disqualify law firm); cf. In re Middleton Arms, L.P., 934 F.2d 723 (6th Cir. 1991). But see In re All Seasons Indus., Inc., 121 B.R. 822 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1990) (disinterestedness requirement under section 327 does not apply to a debtors inside management because debtors management is, by definition, an insider and not disinterested); In re GHR Energy Corp., 60 B.R. 52 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1985) (sole fact that two of debtors lawyers served as officers of debtor purely for ministerial functions should not serve as basis for reducing compensation of debtors attorneys due to conflict of interest); In re Pacific Express, Inc., 14 C.B.C.2d 157, 56 B.R. 859 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1985) (court did not question law firms purportedly disinterested status under section 101 despite service by one of its members on debtors board of directors and as debtors corporate secretary).

n27

27. See note 35 infra; H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 312; S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 25.

n28

28. See In re International Oil Co., 427 F.2d 186 (2d Cir. 1970); In re G.E.C. Sec., Inc., 331 F.2d 655 (2d Cir. 1964); Katz v. Kilsheimer, 327 F.2d 633 (2d Cir. 1964); In re National Pub. Serv. Corp., 68 F.2d 859 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 292 U.S. 641, 54 S. Ct. 774, 78 L. Ed. 1492 (1934); In re Covenant Fin. Group of Am., 243 B.R. 450 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1999); In re Ben Franklin Retail Stores, 214 B.R. 852 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1997); In re Global Marine, Inc., 108 B.R. 998 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1987); see also In re H&S Transportation Co., 55 B.R. 786, 791 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1982); Hassett v. McColley (In re O.P.M. Leasing Servs., Inc.), 5 C.B.C.2d 1503, 16 B.R. 932, 937-40 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1982); cf. Grubbs v. Pettit, 282 F.2d 557 (2d Cir. 1960) (two trustees of parent appointed as trustees of subsidiary and third trustee appointed for both parent and subsidiary). Note, however, that the Code permits only single trustees. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 701, 702, 1104(c).

n29

29. In a Securities and Exchange report, it was noted: A trustee who is a stockholder or a creditor can hardly be expected to take action which may result in invalidating or impairing the worth of his own stock in the debtor or of his own claim against it, regardless of the advantage of such action to the estate as a whole. Securities & Exchange Commn, Report on the Study and Investigation of the Work, Activities, Personnel and Functions of Protective and Reorganization Committees, pt. VIII, at 110 (1937-1940) [hereinafter SEC Report].

n30

30. Note, Bankruptcy: Corporate Reorganization: Survey of Chapter X in Operation, 18 N.Y.U.L.Q. Rev. 399, 436 (1941).

n31

31. See In re Pierce, 809 F.2d 1356 (8th Cir. 1987); Smith v. Marshall (In re Hot Tin Roof, Inc.), 205 B.R. 1000 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 1997); Beal Bank, S.S.B. v. Waters Edge Ltd. Pship, 248 B.R. 668 (D. Mass. 2000); In re Temp-Way Corp., 95 B.R. 343 (E.D. Pa. 1989); In re Vebeliunas, 231 B.R. 181 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1999); In re Envirodyne Indus., 28 C.B.C.2d 747, 150 B.R. 1008 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1993); In re Hub Business Forms, Inc., 146 B.R. 315 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1992); In re Carrousel Motels, Inc., 97 B.R. 898 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1989); Sholer v. Bank of Albuquerque (In re Gallegos), 68 B.R. 584 (Bankr. D.N.M. 1986); In re Hoffman, 53 B.R. 564, 845 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 1985). But see In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 180-83, 16 C.B.C.2d 672 (1st Cir. 1987); In re Film Ventures Intl, 75 B.R. 250 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1987); In re Allegheny Intl, Inc., 117 B.R. 171 (W.D. Pa. 1990); In re Roberts, 75 B.R. 402 (D. Utah 1987); In re Aircraft Instrument & Dev., Inc., 151 B.R. 939 (Bankr. D. Kan. 1993); In re Maddox, 92 B.R. 707 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 1988).

n32

32. Meredith v. Thralls, 144 F.2d 473, 475 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 323 U.S. 758, 64 S. Ct. 92, 89 L. Ed. 607 (1944).

n33

33. Sholer v. Bank of Albuquerque (In re Gallegos), 68 B.R. 584 (Bankr. D.N.M. 1986). Of course, this is already expressly covered in the definition of disinterested under section 101.

n34

34. In re Temp-Way Corp., 95 B.R. 343 (E.D. Pa. 1989); In re Carrousel Motels, Inc., 97 B.R. 898 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1989); In re Hoffman, 53 B.R. 564 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 1985).

n35

35. In re Johore Inv. Co., 49 B.R. 710 (Bankr. D. Haw. 1985).

n36

36. In re Envirodyne Indus., 28 C.B.C.2d 747, 150 B.R. 1008 (Bankr. N.D. Il. 1993).

n37

37. In re Hub Business Forms, Inc., 146 B.R. 315 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1992).

n38

38. See also Bank Brussels Lambert v. Coan (In re AroChem Corp.), 176 F.3d 610 (2d Cir. 1999).

n39

39. 117 B.R. 171 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

n40

40. 117 B.R. 171, 179.

n41

41. 28 C.B.C.2d 1050, 152 B.R. 861 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1993).

n42

42. 28 C.B.C.2d 1050, 152 B.R. 861, 865.

n43

43. 140 F.3d 463, 39 C.B.C.2d 1315 (3d Cir. 1998).

n44

44. In re American Printers & Lithographers, Inc., 28 C.B.C.2d 242, 245, 148 B.R. 862, 864 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1992).

n45

45. Kravit, Gass & Weber, S.C. v. Michel (In re Crivello), 134 F.3d 831, 835 (7th Cir. 1998) (quoting from In re Roberts, 46 B.R. 815, 827 (Bankr. D. Utah 1985)).

n46

46. Bank Brussels Lambert v. Coan (In re AroChem Corp.), 176 F.3d 610 (2d Cir. 1999); In re Huntco Inc., 288 B.R. 229 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2002) (following Second Circuit approach).

n47

47. See, e.g., In re Tauber on Broadway, Inc., 271 F.2d 766 (7th Cir. 1959).

n48

48. See, e.g., In re Wells Benrus Corp., 48 B.R. 196 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1985).

n49

49. See, e.g., Sholer v. Bank of Albuquerque (In re Gallegos), 68 B.R. 584 (Bankr. D.N.M. 1986); In re Gray, 64 B.R. 505 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1986).

n50

50. See, e.g., In re Kendavis Indus. Intl, Inc., 91 B.R. 742 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1988).

n51

51. See, e.g., In re Patterson, 53 B.R. 366 (Bankr. D. Neb. 1985).

n52

52. I.G. Petroleum, L.L.C. v. Fenasci (In re West Delta Oil Co., Inc.), 432 F.3d 347 (5th Cir. 2005).

n53

53. In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 16 C.B.C.2d 672 (1st Cir. 1987) (mortgage taken as retainer for postpetition services); In re Film Ventures Intl, 75 B.R. 250 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1987); In re Advanced Imaging Technologies, Inc., 306 B.R. 677, 682 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. 2003) (lien for postpetition services does not disqualify counsel per se).

n54

54. In re Allegheny Intl, Inc., 117 B.R. 171 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

n55

55. In re Aircraft Instrument & Dev., Inc., 151 B.R. 939 (Bankr. D. Kan. 1993).

n56

56. In re Westside Creek Ltd. Pship, 93 B.R. 177 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1988).

n57

57. See In re Progress Lektro Shave Corp., 117 F.2d 602 (2d Cir. 1941); In re Chicago Rapid Transit Co., 93 F.2d 832 (7th Cir. 1937); In re Envirodyne Indus., 28 C.B.C.2d 747, 758, 150 B.R. 1008, 1017 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1993).

n58

58. See In re Progress Lektro Shave Corp., 117 F.2d 602 (2d Cir. 1941).

n59

59. See 11 U.S.C. § 327(e).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

94 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on the Exception to the Automatic Stay Arising From a Prior Bankr. Case

2008 Emerging Issues 1536

Collier on the Exception to the Automatic Stay Arising From a Prior Bankruptcy Case

By Collier

December 15, 2007

SUMMARY: In some situations, the automatic stay might not apply by reason of a prior case under the Bankruptcy Code. This Emerging Issues Analysis covers the requirements and procedure for and duration of an in rem order under Bankruptcy Code section 362(d)(4), and the exemption from the stay after a bankruptcy filing by an ineligible debtor or in violation of court order.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: In some situations, the automatic stay might not apply by reason of a prior case under the Bankruptcy Code. For example, if a prior case is dismissed under Bankruptcy Code section 349(a) n1 with prejudice to the filing of a petition under any chapter of the Bankruptcy Code for a period of twelve months, a petition commencing a subsequent case within the prohibition period will not operate as an automatic stay of actions against the debtor. n2 Courts have also dealt with abusive serial filings that attempt to gain the benefit of the automatic stay to protect a piece of real property from foreclosure by granting relief from the stay in the case and in rem against the property for a fixed period of time. n3

The 2005 amendments to section 362(b) added subsections (20) and (21), which expressly delineate the particular acts or actions in connection with serial filings that will result in an exception to the automatic stay with respect to the enforcement of a real property security interest. Sections 362(c)(3) and (c)(4), added in 2005, also limit the duration of the stay or prevent its application when there have been repeat bankruptcy filings by an individual debtor. n4

In Rem Orders; 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(20) & (d)(4). Section 362(b)(20) creates an exception for the enforcement of a lien against or security interest in real property following the entry of an order in a prior bankruptcy case prohibiting the application of the automatic stay as to that property. n5 An in rem order of this kind must be entered in accordance with section 362(d)(4). Unless relief from the order is granted in a subsequent case, the order shall remain in effect for a period of two years after the date of entry.

Section 362(d)(4) provides that upon the request of a creditor whose claim is secured by an interest in real property, and after notice and hearing, the court may grant relief from the stay with respect to an act against the property if the court finds that the filing of the petition was part of a scheme to delay, hinder and defraud creditors that involved either (1) the transfer of all or part ownership of or interest in the property without the consent of the secured creditor or court approval; or (2) multiple bankruptcy filings affecting the property. n6 The stay exception provided in section 362(b)(20) is limited to acts to enforce a lien or security interest in real property and the relief under section 362(d)(4) is available only to a creditor whose claim is secured by an interest in real property. Therefore, these provisions generally will not apply to proceedings involving the enforcement of a rental agreement. n7

While courts may be inclined to look to case law construing the hinder, delay or defraud language found in sections 548(a)(1) and 727(a)(2) for guidance in applying section 362(d)(4), these other provisions are substantively different, as the words in the pertinent phrase in section 362(d)(4)--delay, hinder and defraud--are joined by the conjunction and rather than or. Significantly, at the same time that Congress added section 362(d)(4) as part of the 2005 amendments, it also enacted two other provisions in which the disjunctive form of the hinder, delay or defraud phrase was used, in sections 522(o) and 548(e). This clearly suggests that, since Congress used the non-exclusive disjunctive form in the other provisions, n8 the language in section 362(d)(4) was deliberately chosen to impose a substantial burden of proof on secured creditors before an in rem order may issue. n9 Given the extraordinary nature of in rem relief, extending for a period of two years, it is reasonable that Congress purposely selected this language so that in rem orders would be entered only in the rare case in which a creditor can prove that the debtor's filing of the petition was part of a scheme not only to hinder and delay, but also to defraud the creditor. n10 This view is consistent with the apparent purpose of this provision, which is to provide a remedy for addressing the abusive practices of certain mortgage consultants and foreclosure specialists involving serial bankruptcy filings to delay home foreclosures and whose intent is to defraud creditors. n11

By requiring that the scheme to hinder, delay and defraud a creditor must involve either an unauthorized transfer of the property or multiple bankruptcy filings affecting the property, section 362(d)(4) addresses conduct that could be indicative of an abusive filing in relation to a real property foreclosure. For example, a court may find that the transfer of a fractional interest of property to a bankruptcy debtor by a property owner facing foreclosure, done for the purpose of gaining the automatic stay, was part of a scheme to hinder, delay and defraud a foreclosing creditor. However, an innocent transfer of the property, such as the court ordered transfer of a former spouses property interest to the debtor as part of a domestic court proceeding, should not by itself form the basis for an in rem order under section 362(d)(20). Similarly, the filing of multiple bankruptcy cases by the debtor or others holding an interest in the property for the purpose of delaying a foreclosure could be part of the requisite scheme. But a single case, or even several cases filed over an extended period of time or which do not all affect the property, may fail to support the findings required for the entry of an in rem order.

In any event, while the circumstances described in section 362(d)(4) are not exhaustive of the conduct that could be deemed abusive, n12 section 362(d)(20) applies only when the particular circumstances described therein exist. If an order entered under section 362(d)(4) is recorded in compliance with applicable state law governing the recordation of real property documents, n13 it shall be binding in all future bankruptcy cases that might affect the subject property for a period of two years after the date of the entry of the order. Section 362(d)(4) does not appear to limit the scope of the in rem order to the secured creditor who obtained the order or to the debtor in whose case the order entered, though the court should be free to impose restrictions on the order's application that do not conflict with section 362(b)(20) and 362(d)(4). In any event, by conditioning the binding effect of an in rem order on its proper recordation, an innocent purchaser of the property should have notice that the property is subject to an such an order and that a stay in regard to the property will not be obtained for the two year period should that the purchaser file bankruptcy. Moreover, section 362(d)(4) provides that a debtor may move in a subsequent case for relief from an in rem order based upon changed circumstances or for good cause shown, after notice and a hearing. Presumably, this provision would apply to any purchaser or transferee of the property affected by the order.

Filing by Ineligible Debtor or in Violation of Court Order; 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(21). Section 362(b)(21) exempts from the stay the enforcement of a lien against or security interest in real property in a case filed by a debtor who is ineligible to be a debtor under section 109(g), or if the case is filed in violation of a bankruptcy court order in a prior case prohibiting the debtor from being a debtor in another case. n14 In a joint case, this provision would apply as to property jointly held by both debtors only if both debtors are ineligible under section 109(g) or subject to the prior court order. n15

An individual debtor is not eligible to file a petition under section 109(g) if the debtor, within 180 days preceding the filing of the petition, was the debtor in a bankruptcy case dismissed for willful failure to abide by orders of the court or to appear before the court in proper prosecution of the case, or the debtor requested and obtained the voluntary dismissal of a bankruptcy case following the filing of a request for relief from the automatic stay. n16

It remains to be seen what practical effect this provision will have because the question of whether section 109(g) is applicable is not always clear, and often is not resolved until a motion to dismiss is filed in the subsequent case. This is because the court rarely makes express findings, in dismissing the prior case, that the debtor willfully failed to prosecute the case or willfully failed to obey a court order. And the clerk will normally accept the petition filed in the later case because no determination has been made that the debtor is ineligible under section 109(g). Thus, secured creditors may be reluctant to enforce a real property security interest in reliance upon section 362(b)(21) when no section 109(g) findings have been made, and therefore may instead seek relief from the stay under section 362(d). This is because a creditor who mistakenly relies upon section 362(b)(21), believing that the debtor was ineligible under section 109(g), may be subject to sanctions under section 362(k), and there is no applicable good faith belief exception limiting damages recoverable by the debtor as is found in section 362(k)(2).

Section 362(b)(21) is also applicable if the debtor files a case in violation of a bankruptcy court order in a prior case prohibiting the debtor from being a debtor in another case. Unlike an order entered under section 349(a) dismissing a bankruptcy case with prejudice, which precludes the debtor from obtaining a discharge of debts that could have been discharged in the dismissed case, n17 section 362(b)(21) is applicable when the prior order specifically bars the filing of a new case.

For a complete discussion of Code section 362, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 362.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 1. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 349.02[2].

n2

2. In FDIC v. Cortez, 96 F.3d 50 (2d Cir. 1996), the subsequent petition was an involuntary petition. The bar was held applicable because the debtor colluded in the filing of the petition.

n3

3. In Great Western Bank v. Snow (In re Snow), 201 B.R. 968 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1996), the order ran for 180 days, enough time to permit the benefitted secured lender to complete foreclosure against the property.

n4

4. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 362.06[3] and [4].

n5

5. 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(20), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8, effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n6

6. 11 U.S.C. § 362(d)(4), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8, (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n7

7. See In re McCray, 342 B.R. 668 (Bankr. D.D.C. 2006).

n8

8. 11 U.S.C. § 102(5).

n9

9. Perhaps it is noteworthy that Congress changed the order of the words, leading with delay in section 362(d)(4) and hinder in the other sections, suggesting that Congress intended the phrase to have a different meaning.

n10

10. See In re Muhaimin, 343 B.R. 159, 17071 (Bankr. D. Md. 2006) (creditor satisfied burden of proving scheme to hinder, but failed to prove fraud).

n11

11. See Final Report of the Bankruptcy Foreclosure Scam Task Force, 32 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1063 (1999).

n12

12. See, e.g., Final Report Of The Bankruptcy Foreclosure Scam Task Force, 32 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1063 (1999).

n13

13. Section 362(d)(4) provides that federal, state, or local governmental units that accept notices of interests or liens in real property shall accept for indexing and recording any certified copy of an order entered under the subsection.

n14

14. 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(21), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n15

15. Section 362(b)(21) should be compared with the refiling provision in section 362(c)(3), which expressly states that the provision is applicable in a single or joint case filed by an individual debtor. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 362.06[3].

n16

16. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 109.08.

n17

17. Frieouf v. United States (In re Frieouf), 938 F.2d 1099, 1103 (10th Cir. 1991). But see In re Casse, 198 F.3d 327 (2d Cir. 1999); see also Collier on Bankruptcy, 109.08.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

95 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on the Admin. Expense Priority Afforded to Taxes Incurred by the Estate

2008 Emerging Issues 1537

Collier on the Admin. Expense Priority Afforded to Taxes Incurred by the Estate

By Collier

December 15, 2007

SUMMARY: Bankruptcy Code section 503(b)(1)(B) provides that all taxes "incurred by the estate" are administrative expenses entitled to second priority under section 507(a)(2), excepting only the kind of taxes specified as eighth-priority claims under section 507(a)(8). This Emerging Issues Analysis covers when taxes are determined to have been "incurred by the estate".

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Bankruptcy Code section 503(b)(1)(B) provides that all taxes incurred by the estate are administrative expenses entitled to second priority under section 507(a)(2), excepting only the kind of taxes specified as eighth-priority claims under section 507(a)(8), n1 which are to be treated under that provision and are denied administrative priority under section 503(b)(1)(B) even if incurred by the estate. n2 Taxes entitled to priority can be secured or unsecured and includes property taxes for which liability is in rem, in personam, or both. n3 Administrative priority under section 503(b)(1)(B) is also extended to certain tax claims relating to tentative carryback adjustments.

Determining When Tax Is Incurred. Only taxes incurred by the estate can be administrative expenses. Therefore, first priority for tax claims extends only to postpetition taxes because before the petition is filed, there is no estate. n4 Whether a particular tax has been incurred by the estate is not always easy to determine. The time of assessment or payment may not necessarily be equivalent to the time the tax is incurred for the purpose of establishing priority under section 503(b)(1)(B). Rather, the significant event is the date the tax accrues and becomes a fixed obligation. n5

For instance, in Costello Bros. v. Pawtucket Institution for Savings (In re Melino Cigar & Cando Co.), n6 the question was whether a guarantors postpetition payment on a surety bond for cigarette tax stamp liability that was incurred prepetition constituted a priority administrative expense pursuant to section 503(b)(1)(B). The bankruptcy court held that the claim did not qualify under section 503(b)(1)(B) because the tax was deemed paid when the stamps were affixed prepetition and therefore there never was a liability of the estate. n7 (Alternatively, the court held the tax was an excise tax on a transaction occurring within three years of the filing of the petition as then specified in section 507(a)(6) [now section 507(a)(8)] and thus was excluded under section 503(b)(1)(B)(i).)

The question of whether the bankruptcy estate survives after plan confirmation in a chapter 11 or chapter 13 case presents an obstacle to any administrative expense claim for taxes incurred after confirmation. For instance, in In re

Westholt Manufacturing, Inc.,ⁿ⁸ the debtors case had been converted after confirmation from chapter 11 to chapter 7, and the IRS filed an administrative expense claim for taxes incurred postconfirmation but preconversion. The court held that taxes incurred after confirmation were not incurred by the estate and, accordingly, would be treated as prepetition claims with sixth priority under then section 507(a)(6) (now eighth priority under section 507(a)(8)).ⁿ⁹ In other words, a tax claim incurred after confirmation of a chapter 11 plan but prior to conversion of the case to chapter 7 may be entitled to priority under section 507(a)(8), but not administrative priority in the superseding chapter 7 case.ⁿ¹⁰

No Administrative Priority for Taxes Described in Section 507(a)(8). To determine whether taxes are entitled to administrative expense status requires not only a finding that the taxes were incurred by the estate postpetition, but also a finding that the taxes do not fit within any of the categories specified in section 507(a)(8). Thus, the reference in section 503(a)(1)(B)(i) to section 507(a)(8) means that, to the extent a debtors prepetition liability becomes a tax claim after the petition, it is not for that reason alone to be given administrative expense status.ⁿ¹¹

The interaction among section 507(a)(8), section 502(i) and section 503(b)(1)(B) is somewhat confusing.ⁿ¹² Pursuant to section 502(b), the amount of a claim is determined as of the date the petition is filed, suggesting that all claims described in section 507(a)(8) must have arisen prepetition. Section 502(i) further clouds matters by providing that [a] claim that does not arise until after the commencement of the case for a tax entitled to priority under section 507(a)(8) shall be allowed or disallowed the same as if such claim had arisen before the date of the filing of the petition.

Categories of taxes enumerated in section 507(a)(8), which must be considered in determining whether a tax is entitled to administrative priority under section 503(b)(1)(B), include income taxes, property taxes, withholding taxes, employment taxes, excise taxes and custom duties.

Income Taxes. Whether income taxes are entitled to administrative expense status may depend on whether the tax was measured on income earned prepetition or postpetition, whether the debtor is an individual, a partnership or a corporation, and the chapter under which a case is filed. It is clear that any taxes measured by income earned postpetition will be administrative expenses. However, it is unclear whether income taxes measured by income earned prepetition when the close of the taxable year occurs postpetition will be allowed as administrative expenses.

Section 507(a)(8)(A) appears to limit income taxes entitled to eighth priority to those measured by income for a taxable year ending on or before the date of the filing of the petition. Because the taxable year ends on the petition date for an individual filing under chapter 7 or 11--under sections 728(a) and 1146(a)--any tax on income earned by the debtor prepetition should be entitled to allowance as an eighth priority claim under section 507(a)(8)(A), but not as an administrative expense. However, pursuant to section 346(c)(1), the taxable year of a corporation or partnership remains unchanged. The same result appears to follow in the case of an individual filing under chapter 13 pursuant to section 346(d). In those instances, then, taxes on income earned prepetition might be entitled to administrative expense status if the taxable year closes postpetition and the court determines that the taxes were incurred at the close of the taxable year.ⁿ¹³

Two cases decided in 1995 addressed whether a claim for income tax for the tax year that straddles the petition date qualifies for first priority as an administrative expense or then seventh (now eighth) priority as a prepetition tax claim. While both courts stated that the full amount of income tax for a tax year which ends postpetition is incurred by the estate, they split on whether the entire claim would qualify for administrative priority. The Eighth Circuit held that the portion of the tax which related to postpetition income was not of the kind given priority under section 507, and therefore it was entitled to administrative priority.ⁿ¹⁴ The Ninth Circuit held that the tax for the entire tax year was within the scope of section 507(a)(7)(A)(iii) that that, therefore, no portion of it was entitled to administrative priority.ⁿ¹⁵ The Eighth Circuit approach has been adopted by the Eleventh Circuit as well.ⁿ¹⁶

Property Taxes. Property taxes covering a period that straddles a bankruptcy filing raise issues similar to those arising with respect to income taxes as to whether some of the tax qualifies for administrative priority. Section 507(a)(8)(B) grants priority to property taxes for a tax that is incurred before commencement of the case. The word incurred was inserted by the 2005 Act in place of the word assessed, which had been part of the Code since enactment. Before the amendment, numerous cases considered the issue of whether a property tax was assessed before the commencement of the case. n17 Because there was no necessary correlation between when a property tax is assessed and when the payment obligation arises, the cases tended to be inconsistent in outcome and varied considerably from jurisdiction to jurisdiction.

Changing the focus from when a tax is assessed to when it is incurred ought to make the determination easier and the outcome more consistent. A property tax is presumably incurred at the time that the debtor becomes obligated to pay the tax.

The 2005 Act also clarified that all types of property taxes can qualify for administrative expense priority. The 2005 Act added language to section 503(b)(1)(B) making it clear that secured and unsecured ad valorem property taxes are entitled to administrative expense priority. n18 This is true whether the tax liability is in rem, in personam, or both.

Withholding Taxes. Withholding taxes attributable to postpetition administrative expense wages or to sales made after the filing of the petition are entitled to an administrative expense priority. Where withholding taxes are attributable to wages earned prepetition, the taxes are not entitled to administrative expense status, even if paid postpetition. The Supreme Court's decision in Otte v. United States (In re Freedomland, Inc.) n19 leaves no room for doubt that a bankruptcy trustee is the equivalent to a wage claimant's employer for both the employee and employer taxes. That case also made plain that the so-called employee taxes, i.e., the portion withheld from the dividend given the priority wage claimant, was given the same Bankruptcy Act priority as the dividend from which the withholding was made. Section 64a(2) of the Bankruptcy Act gave employee claims priority to the extent described therein. In the Otte case, the Supreme Court ruled that federal taxes withheld from priority wage claim dividends were to be given the same priority treatment as the underlying wage claims, rather than general administrative priority under Section 64a(1) or administrative tax priority under Section 64a(4).

Employment Taxes. Employment taxes, which are those taxes imposed on an employer based on wages or salaries paid, are entitled to administrative expense status only when the wages or salaries to which the taxes relate are earned by employees postpetition. n20 When employment taxes relate to wages or salaries earned prepetition but not paid until after the filing in bankruptcy, they are specifically excluded from administrative expense status by virtue of sections 503(b)(1)(B)(i) and 507(a)(8)(D). Thus, these taxes are only entitled to an eighth priority. The specific intended purpose of section 503(b)(1)(B) may have been to ensure that claims for employment taxes based upon postpetition payment of wages that were earned prepetition will receive an eighth, rather than a first priority. By making such taxes an eighth priority, section 503(b)(1)(B) negates the argument that payment of a general or, at most, a third-priority claim (prepetition wages) could give rise to a first-priority claim (taxes on such wages).

Excise Taxes. An excise tax will be entitled to administrative expense status if the transaction, event or occurrence on which the tax is based occurs postpetition and the tax is thus incurred by the estate. In 1996, the Supreme Court held that characterization of an assessment as an excise tax under the Internal Revenue Code is not necessarily determinative for purposes of determining priority under the Bankruptcy Code. n21 Examples of covered excise taxes under Bankruptcy Code section 507(a)(8)(E) are sales taxes, estate and gift taxes, gasoline and special fuel taxes, wagering and truck taxes, and stamp and transfer taxes. n22 In addition, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit determined that the debt of an employer to a state fund for workers compensation benefits is an eighth priority excise tax. n23

In LTV Corp. v. United States (In re Chateaugay Corp.), n24 the court held an exaction labeled as an excise tax under the Internal Revenue Code, but which was in reality a penalty imposed for pension plan underfunding, was not entitled to priority under section 503(b) even though it arose postpetition because it provided no benefit to the estate. The district court attempted to distinguish a decision of the Second Circuit in a related proceeding, In re Chateaugay Corp., n25 in which the Second Circuit had found that cleanup costs assessed postpetition for a prepetition release or threatened release of hazardous substances were necessary to preserve the estate in the sense that they enable the estate to maintain itself in compliance with applicable environmental laws. n26 Rather than distinguishing the two cases, the district court summarily stated: The same concerns do not apply here. The IRS 1986 excise tax claim is in no way necessary to preserve the estate. In fact, if anything, imposition of the 1986 excise tax would make more difficult the successful implementation of a reorganization plan. n27 But the same was true of the administrative expense for hazardous waste cleanup that the Second Circuit allowed. The district court did not acknowledge the Reading line of cases which does not require a benefit to the estate in all circumstances. n28

Custom Duties. Although a customs duty is not technically a tax, its inclusion in section 507(a)(8) would probably entitle it to administrative expense status as a tax if goods were imported postpetition. In any case, it would seem that customs duties would be an administrative expense as an actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate.

Tax Carryback Adjustments. Section 503(b)(1)(B)(ii) allows as an administrative claim a tax which is attributable to an excess allowance by the Internal Revenue Service of a tentative carryback adjustment that the trustee has received. This is regardless of whether the taxable year to which that adjustment relates ended before or after the filing of the petition commencing the case under the Bankruptcy Code. This is the so-called quickie refund. n29

To measure the priority period from the earlier year to which the loss was carried back would cost the taxing authority its right to an administrative expense claim even though the government did not have adequate opportunity to audit the claimed loss before it granted the refund adjustment. Accordingly, section 503(b)(1)(B)(ii) confers administrative expense status to an excessive allowance of a carryback adjustment received by the estate regardless of the taxable year in which the loss occurred and to which the adjustment related. Whether the taxable year ended before or after the commencement of the case is irrelevant.

For a complete discussion of Code section 503, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 503.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 1. The Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353 (1984), redesignated former section 507(a)(6) as section 507(a)(7). Section 507(a)(7), as redesignated in 1984, was redesignated again as section 507(a)(8) by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394 (1994). A governmental unit is not required to file a request for payment of an administrative expense for tax-related fines, penalties, and interest subject to section 503(b)(1)(C) as a condition to being allowed an administrative expense. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 503.02[3].

n2

2. In re Burlington Motor Holdings, Inc., 235 B.R. 741 (Bankr. D. Del. 1999) (holding that registration in licensing fees of a motor carrier paid postpetition in connection with an international registration plan for carrier is not a tax under section 503(b)(1)(B) but is an administrative expense allowable under section 503(b)(1)(A)).

n3

3. The 2005 Act added language to clause (i) of section 503(b)(1)(B) to clarify that all such taxes are entitled to administrative expense priority. Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 712(b) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n4

4. See United States v. Friendship College, Inc. (In re Friendship College, Inc.), 737 F.2d 430, 10 C.B.C.2d 1151 (4th Cir. 1984); Still v. United States (In re W.L. Jackson Mfg. Co.), 12 C.B.C.2d 1365, 50 B.R. 498 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1985); see also In re Chateaugay Corp., 21 C.B.C.2d 135, 102 B.R. 335 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1989) (claim for indemnification on a Tax Benefit Transfer not entitled to administrative priority when agreement arose prepetition and did not benefit estate).

n5

5. See, e.g., In re Bondis Valu-King, Inc., 126 B.R. 47 (N.D. Ohio 1991) (tax is incurred for § 503(b)(1)(B) purposes when all the acts necessary to create the tax liability have occurred). But see United Mine Workers v. Rushton (In re Sunnyside Coal Co.), 146 F.3d 1273 (10th Cir. 1998) (premiums assessed against coal mining operators under Coal Industry Retiree Health Benefit Act are considered newly assessed during each statutory period, even after debtor has ceased operations and converted to chapter 7); In re Soltan, 234 B.R. 260 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1999) (holding that real property taxes accrued postpetition even though secured by operation of law can be an administrative expense under section 503(b)(1)(B)).

n6

6. 7 C.B.C.2d 71, 22 B.R. 703 (Bankr. D.R.I. 1982).

n7

7. See also In re Higgins, 8 C.B.C.2d 500, 29 B.R. 196 (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 1983) (investment credit recapture tax assessed postpetition was not incurred by the estate because it was a revival of a prepetition tax liability); In re Scrap Disposal, Inc., 7 C.B.C.2d 822, 24 B.R. 178 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1982), affd, 38 B.R. 765 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1984) (tax incurred prepetition but only correctly assessed postpetition was denied administrative expense status on the ground that it was not incurred by the estate). But see Perpetual Am. Bank, FSB v. District of Columbia (In re Carlisle Court), 10 C.B.C.2d 77, 36 B.R. 209 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1983) (property tax that accrued prepetition was treated as administration expense).

n8

8. 6 C.B.C.2d 1068, 20 B.R. 368 (Bankr. D. Kan. 1982), affd sub nom United States v. Redmond, 10 C.B.C.2d 1428, 36 B.R. 932 (D. Kan. 1984).

n9

9. See also In re Johnson, 901 F.2d 513 (6th Cir. 1990) (upon conversion of a chapter 11 case to a chapter 7 case, administrative expense claims for taxes incurred postpetition but preconversion must comply with the chapter 7 bar date); In re Bondis Valu-King, Inc., 126 B.R. 47 (N.D. Ohio 1991) (tax liability incurred during chapter 11 case cannot be an administrative expense in a superseding chapter 7 case).

n10

10. See, e.g., In re Hirsch-Franklin Enterprises, Inc., 15 C.B.C.2d 672, 63 B.R. 864 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1986).

n11

11. See, e.g., United States v. Friendship College, Inc. (In re Friendship College, Inc.), 737 F.2d 430, 10 C.B.C.2d 1151 (4th Cir. 1984) (FICA and income taxes withheld from the colleges employees, as well as the colleges own share of FICA, were administrative expenses); see also In re Lumara Foods of Am., Inc., 13 B.C.D. 409 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1985) (examining the former Act and the legislative history of the Code and concluding that postpetition withholding and sales taxes are administrative expenses); In re Carlisle Court, Inc., 10 C.B.C.2d 77, 36 B.R. 209 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1983) (real estate taxes incurred by the estate were administrative expenses); Waldschmidt v. Commissioner, 9 C.B.C.2d 673, 33 B.R. 11 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1983) (capital gains taxes incurred by the trustees sale of the estates assets were administrative expenses).

n12

12. See In re Carlisle Court, Inc., 10 C.B.C.2d 77, 84-87, 36 B.R. 209, 218-20 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1983) (discussing the conflicts among section 502(i), section 503(b)(1)(B)(i) and section 507(a)(7) [now section 507(a)(8)]).

n13 13. But see In re Higgins, 8 C.B.C.2d 500, 29 B.R. 196 (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 1983).

n14

14. In re L.J. O'Neill Shoe Co., 64 F.3d 1146 (8th Cir. 1995).

n15

15. In re Pacific-Atlantic Trading Co., 64 F.3d 1292 (9th Cir. 1995).

n16

16. United States v. Hillsborough Holdings Corp. (In re Hillsborough Holdings Corp.), 116 F. 3d 1391 (11th Cir. 1997).

n17

17. See, e.g., City of White Plains v. A&S Galleria Real Estate, Inc. (In re Federated Department Stores, Inc.), 270 F.3d 994 (6th Cir. 2001); Marion County Treasurer v. Blue Lustre Products, Inc. (In re Blue Lustre Products, Inc.), 214 B.R. 188 (S.D. Ind. 1997); In re Mansfield Tire & Rubber Co., 18 C.B.C.2d 1138, 85 B.R. 437 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1987); In re Kamstra, 13 C.B.C.2d 266, 51 B.R. 560 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1985); see also Bachman v. Commercial Fin. Servs., Inc. (In re Commercial Fin. Servs., Inc.), 246 F.3d 1291 (10th Cir. 2001) (A debt is not entitled to priority simply because the right to payment arises after the debtor in possession has begun managing the estate.) (quoting Isaac v. Temex Energy, Inc. (In re Amarex, Inc.), 853 F.2d 1526, 1530 (10th Cir. 1988)).

n18

18. Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 712(b) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n19

19. 419 U.S. 43, 95 S. Ct. 247, 42 L. Ed. 2d 212 (1974).

n20

20. In re Friendship College, 34 B.R. 126 (Bankr. W.D.N.C. 1983), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. United States v. Friendship College, 737 F.2d 430, 10 C.B.C.2d 1151 (4th Cir. 1984).

n21

21. United States v. Reorganized CF&I Fabricators of Utah, Inc., 116 S. Ct. 2106, 135 L. Ed. 2d 506, 35 C.B.C.2d 463, 29 B.C.D. 2d 271 (1996); see also In re Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp., 103 B.R. 672 (W.D. Pa. 1989) (characterizing the liability imposed under section 4971 of the Internal Revenue Code for an employers failure to make pension plan contributions for prepetition tax periods as a penalty in the employer/debtors bankruptcy case, thus denying administrative priority despite fact that tax returns and payments were due postpetition and that the liability is designated a tax in the tax code). One case, In re Mansfield Tire & Rubber Co., 942 F.2d 1055 (6th Cir. 1991) reached the opposite conclusion, but was effectively overruled by the Supreme Courts decision in CF&I Fabricators, supra.

n22

22. 124 Cong. Rec. H11,113 (daily ed. Sept. 28, 1978); see also United Mine Workers v. Rushton (In re Sunnyside Coal Co.), 146 F.3d 1273 (10th Cir. 1998) (premiums assessed against coal mining operators under Coal Industry Retiree Health Benefit Act constitute excise taxes and continue to accrue during each new statutory period, even after debtor has ceased operations and converted to chapter 7).

n23

23. Industrial Commn of Ariz. v. Camilli (In re Camilli), 94 F.3d 1330, 36 C.B.C.2d 833 (9th Cir. 1996). The court relied on the decision in County Sanitation Dist. No. 2 of Los Angeles County v. Lorber Indus. of California (In re Lorber Indus. of California), 675 F.2d 1062 (9th Cir. 1982), for the definition of a tax. For a contrary view, see Ohio Bureau of Workers Compensation v. Yoder (In re Suburban Motor Freight, Inc.), 36 F.3d 484 (6th Cir. 1994).

n24

24. 146 B.R. 626 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (granting the IRSs motion to vacate the judgment and dismiss the complaint on the ground that settlement made the underlying controversy moot).

n25

25. 944 F.2d 997, 25 C.B.C.2d 620 (2d Cir. 1991).

n26

26. 944 F.2d 997, 1009, 25 C.B.C.2d 620, 635.

n27

27. 146 B.R. 626, 633.

n28

28. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 503.06[3].

n29

29. See S. Rep. No. 1106, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 20 (1978).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

96 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on New Confirmation Requirements for Individual Debtors in a Ch. 11 Case

2008 Emerging Issues 1497

Collier on New Confirmation Requirements for Individual Debtors in a Chapter 11 Case

By Collier

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis covers the section 1129(a) requirements that the individual debtor must be current on all domestic support obligations that accrue postpetition, that the individual debtor must pay five years worth of disposable income to unsecured creditors, and that the individual debtor must file all requested tax documents.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Substantive Requirements of Section 1129(a) of the Bankruptcy Code; Consensual Confirmation. The 13 requirements of Bankruptcy Code section 1129(a) are the focus of all confirmation hearings. The plan proponent, as indicated above, n1 bears the burden of proof of establishing that each of these requirements have been satisfied. When these requirements are satisfied, the court will confirm the plan. n2 Individual Debtor Must Pay Postpetition Domestic Support Obligations in Full; 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(14).

Congress added section 1129(a)(14) in 2005. n3 It applies to individual chapter 11 debtors n4 who are required by a judicial or administrative order, or by statute, to pay a domestic support obligation n5 If so, then the debtor must, as a condition of confirmation, pay all amounts payable under such order or such statute for such obligation that first become payable after the date of the filing of the petition. n6

The key term here is domestic support obligation, a defined term also added by the 2005 legislation. n7 Its essence is that it be a debt that is in the nature of alimony, maintenance, or support of [a] spouse, former spouse, or child of the debtor or such child's parent, without regard to whether such debt is expressly so designated. n8

Section 1129(a)(14) thus requires the individual debtor to be current on all domestic support obligations that accrue postpetition. Prepetition arrearages may be paid over the term of the plan in accordance with section 1129(a)(9)(B).

Individual Debtor Must Pay Five Years Worth of Disposable Income to Unsecured Creditors; 11 U.S.C. § 1129 (a)(15). Section 1129(a)(15), also added in 2005, n9 requires either that the individual chapter 11 debtor pay all unsecured claims in full n10 or that the debtors plan devote an amount equal to five years worth of the debtors projected disposable income to unsecured creditors. n11 As with the best interest of creditors test found in section 1129(a)(7), standing to object on this ground is given to any single unsecured creditor; it is irrelevant that the plan proponent obtained the consent of the class of unsecured creditors of which the objecting unsecured creditor is a member.

Central to the application of paragraph (15) is the concept of disposable income, and the amounts of such disposable income that must be devoted to the implementation of the plan.

Disposable Income. Disposable income is a concept borrowed from chapter 13. Indeed, section 1129(a)(15) itself refers to section 1325(b)(2) for a definition of the concept. n12 Reference to a fuller discussion of that section is appropriate, n13 but the following can serve as a rough guide.

Disposable income is essentially the difference between a debtors income and the debtors reasonably necessary necessary expenses. The Code, as amended by the 2005 Act, which added section 1129(a)(15), however, defines such income, and possibly such expenses, in nonintuitive ways.

Under section 1325(b)(2), income and expenses are determined on a monthly basis. The income side is determined by a generally applicable definition, current monthly income. n14 It is basically the debtors average income or receipts from any source (including income that would not be taxed) for the last six full months preceding the commencement of the case. Section 1325(b)(2) then alters this sweeping definition by specifically providing that income for purposes of that section, and derivatively for purposes of section 1129(a)(15), does not include any funds received by way of child support, foster care or disability payments for a dependent child. n15

Expenses differ depending on whether the debtor is in business. If the debtor is not in business, expenses are those amounts reasonably necessary to be expended for the maintenance or support of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor or for any postpetition domestic support obligation. n16 Such expenses also may include charitable contributions so long as the contributions do not exceed 15 percent of the debtors gross income for the year in which such contributions are made. n17

If the debtor is in business, expenses are those amounts reasonably necessary to be expended for the payment of expenditures necessary for the continuation, preservation, and operation of such business. n18 As section 1129(a)(15) incorporates section 1325(b)(2), cases construing that section will be relevant in determining whether what expenses may be used to calculate disposable income under chapter 11.

An argument might be made that the cross-reference in section 1129(a)(15) to section 1325(b)(2) also makes section 1325(b)(3) applicable in construing permissible expenses under section 1129(a)(15). This would make calculation of such expenses conform to the chapter 13 method of expense calculations, in which debtors whose annualized current monthly income exceed the debtors state median income would have to calculate expenses with reference not to actual expenses, but to expense categories established by the Internal Revenue Service. n19 In short, under this construction the cross-reference to section 1325(b)(2) would implicitly incorporate paragraph (3) of section 1325(b) and treat that paragraph as a necessary rule of construction rather than a separate paragraph. n20

This reading is flawed, however, as the reference in section 1129(a)(15) is explicitly to, and only to, paragraph (2) of section 1325(b). Congress had it within its power to draft the cross-reference more broadly, but did not. It presumably took into account the business orientation of most chapter 11s, as well as the increased levels of creditor involvement in a chapter 11 cases. These factors, together with the requirement that the debtor obtain the consent of all unsecured creditor classes under section 1129(a)(8), would tend to indicate that individual creditor insistence on the artificial expenses standards found in chapter 7 are neither necessary nor appropriate in chapter 11 cases.

Amounts and Timing. The confirmation requirement is that the debtors plan distribute property equal in value to the debtors projected disposable income over the five-year period commencing with the date that the first payment is due under the plan. The confirmation requirement thus specifies the amount and the timing of all payments.

Although based on chapter 13 practice, this confirmation requirement differs from that practice in several respects. First, it differs as to time. Under chapter 13, a debtors plan must extend for three years (in some cases five years) unless the plan provides for payment in full of all unsecured claims sooner. n21 Section 1129(a)(15) does not specify a minimum period, but does specify that the value of the property to be distributed under the plan is not less than the projected disposable income of the debtor to be received during the 5-year period commencing with the start of plan payments. n22 Thus, if property from any other source such as loans or gifts, or from exempt property is used to supplement the payments to unsecured creditors, the plan may be shorter than five years. n23

Chapter 13 also limits the maximum plan length to five years. n24 Section 1129(a)(15) explicitly permits longer plans by making the provision of five years worth of disposable income the minimum amount. If any unsecured creditor objects to the plan, the statute conditions confirmation on the continued payment of disposable income over a five-year period, or the period for which the plan provides payments, whichever is longer. n25

Finally, chapter 13 requires payments to begin within 30 days of the commencement of the case, regardless of whether the plan is confirmed, n26 and then measures the plan period from the first scheduled payment to unsecured creditors. n27 Under section 1129(a)(15)(B), however, the minimum five year period commences on the date that the first payment is due under the plan, n28 which usually will be after confirmation, which will almost certainly be longer than 15 days.

Restrictions on Transfers of Property of Nonprofit Entities; 11 U.S.C. §1129(a)(16). Congress added section 1129(a)(16) in 2005. n29 It conditions confirmation of a plan on the fact that all transfers under the plan will be made in accordance with applicable nonbankruptcy law that govern the transfer of property by a corporation or trust that is not a moneyed, business, or commercial corporation or trust. n30 Although the wording is not felicitous, in that a plausible reading can be put forward that the provision seems to apply to all transfers, and then imposes on all such transfers the same restrictions place on transfers by nonprofit entities, Congress was clear that this provision was meant to restrict the authority of a trustee to use, sell, or lease property by a nonprofit corporation or trust. n31

This provisions limits the permissible transfers by any nonprofit entity, and this could be significant in some hospital or other similar reorganizations. It keeps in place the state law restrictions on such nonprofit entities, and buttresses this rule by giving standing to state attorneys general to raise this issue. n32

Another uncodified portion of the 2005 Act states that, notwithstanding the prominent place state law has in such determinations, [n]othing in this section shall be construed to require the court in which a case under chapter 11 of title 11, United States Code, is pending to remand or refer any proceeding, issue, or controversy to any other court or to require the approval of any other court for the transfer of property. n33

Individual Debtor Must File All Requested Tax Documents. Section 1228(b) of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, n34 which is uncodified, provides: The court shall not confirm a plan of reorganization in the case of an individual under chapter 11 or 13 of title 11, United States Code, unless requested tax documents have been filed with the court. n35 Neither section 1228(b) nor its legislative history n36 indicates whether the request that triggers this requirement is a simple request, backed by nothing other than the curiosity of the person making the request, a request made pursuant to some process (such as in a request for production of documents or a request made pursuant to subpoena), or a request made pursuant to a statutory right. It also does not define the scope of documents; for example, it is unclear whether copies of the return, without accompanying work papers, would suffice.

The 2005 Act, however, amended several parts of section 521 of the Code to require the provision of tax information, n37 and it is likely that this new confirmation requirement relates to duties added concurrently with the new requirement. There are at least two such requirements. Section 521(e)(2)(A)(ii), for example, requires a debtor to furnish his or her latest federal tax return to any creditor who requests it so long as such request is timely made. In this context timely means made before the debtor is required to furnish the same information to the trustee, which is not later than 7 days before the date first set of the first meeting of creditors. n38 It may be, however, that provision of this tax information is not the information to which section 1129(a)(16) refers. The confirmation requirement is that the requested tax documents must be filed with the court, and not provided to creditors. This mismatch between the confirmation requirement of filing with the court and the statutory requirement to provide the same information directly to creditors likely eliminates section 521(e)(2) as a candidate for the applicable request.

It is more likely that this uncodified confirmation requirement refers to the duties, newly added in 2005, n39 specified in section 521(f). n40 This section requires an individual debtor to file federal income tax returns, and any amendments thereto, with the court [a]t the request of the court, the United States trustee, or any party in interest in a case under chapter 7, 11, or 13. n41 The duty extends to all returns, and amended returns, filed during the pendency of the case, and which relate to: (i) the three tax years immediately preceding the commencement of the case; n42 and (ii) all tax years which elapse during the pendency of the case. n4343 Since section 521(f) refers to the same delivery location as does the confirmation requirement--the courts docket--it is the most likely source of the triggering request under section 1228(b) of the 2005 Act.

For further discussion of Code section 1129, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1129.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.02[3].

n2 See United States ex rel. Farmers Home Admin. v. Arnold & Baker Farms (In re Arnold & Baker Farms), 177 B.R. 648, 33 C.B.C.2d 31 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1994).

n3 Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 213(1) (2005). This provision is effective in all cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005. Id. § 1501(b)(1).

n4 Although the paragraph does not use the term individual debtor, the nature of domestic support obligations are such that it will be the rare case when a non-individual (such as a corporation or partnership) will be liable for such a debt.

n5 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(14).

n6 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(14).

n7 11 U.S.C. § 101(14A), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 211(2) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n8 11 U.S.C. § 101(14A).

n9 Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 321(c)(1) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n10 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(15)(A).

n11 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(15)(B). This requirement is buttressed by section 1123(a)(8) which requires individual debtors to devote all earnings from personal services performed by the debtor after commencement of the case or other future income of the debtor as is necessary for the execution of the plan. 11 U.S.C. § 1123(a)(8); see also 11 U.S.C. § 1115, which classifies such postpetition earnings as property of the estate.

n12 Section 1129(a)(15)(B) specifically provides that disposable income of the debtor is used as defined in section 1325(b)(2).

n13 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1325.

n14 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A).

n15 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2).

n16 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A)(i).

n17 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A)(ii).

n18 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(B).

n19 Section 1325(b)(3) incorporates the means test expense standard found in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 707(b)(2), which in turn incorporates the expenses standards developed by the Internal Revenue Service.

n20 The strongest argument for this reading is that section 1325(b)(3) states that [a]mounts reasonably necessary to be expended under paragraph (2) shall be determined in accordance with section 707(b)(2) if the debtors annualized current monthly income exceeds certain median income levels in the state in which the debtor resides.

n21 11 USCS § 1325(b)(4).

n22 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(15)(B).

n23 This view is supported by section 1123(a)(8), which requires an individual debtor's plan to include all postpetition earnings from services, but without specification of any minimum period.

n24 11 U.S.C. §§ 1322(d), 1325(b)(4)(A)(i)(ii).

n25 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(15)(B).

n26 11 U.S.C. § 1326(a)(1). The plan must be filed within 15 days of the commencement of the case. Fed.

R. Bankr. P. 3015(b).

n27 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B).

n28 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(15)(B).

n29 Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1221(b) (2005). It is applicable to all cases regardless of the date the case commenced. Id. § 1221(d). With respect to cases pending on the date of enactment, April 20, 2005, the statute provides that the court shall not confirm a plan under chapter 11 of title 11, United States Code, without considering whether this section would substantially affect the rights of a party in interest who first acquired rights with respect to the debtor after the date of the filing of the petition. Section 1129(a)(16) was added as a package of similar amendments to sections 363 and 541. Id.

n30 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(16).

n31 H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, 109th Cong., 1st Sess. 145 (2005).

n32 Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1221(d) (2005).

n33 Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1221(e) (2005).

n34 Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1228(b) (2005).

n35 Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1228(b), 119 Stat. 23, 183 (2005).

n36 See, e.g., H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, 109th Cong., 1st Sess. 146-47 (2005).

n37 Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 315 (2005).

n38 11 U.S.C. § 521(e)(2)(A)(ii).

n39 Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 315(b)(2) (2005).

n40 11 U.S.C. § 521(f)(1)(3).

n41 11 U.S.C. § 521(f).

n42 11 U.S.C. § 521(f)(2).

n43 11 U.S.C. § 521(f)(1).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

97 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on Duration of a Chapter 13 Plan

2008 Emerging Issues 1498

Collier on Duration of a Chapter 13 Plan

By Collier

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis covers when Chapter 13 debtors may be required to propose a five-year plan, when Chapter 13 debtors who have current monthly income that is less than the applicable state median income may propose a five-year plan, and when three-year and five-year plans commence and conclude.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE:

Bankruptcy Code Section 1322(d), formerly section 1322(c) and amended substantially in 2005, n1 was an innovation of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978. n2 Under Chapter XIII of the former Bankruptcy Act, n3 there was no limit placed on the duration of a Chapter XIII plan, but the practice of proposing extension wage earner plans of not less than three years' duration became widespread and many extended much longer. n4

Plan May Propose Payments Up to Three Years, or Up to Five Years, Depending on Circumstances.

Cases Filed Prior to Effective Date of 2005 Amendments. For cases filed prior to October 17, 2005, the effective date of the 2005 amendments to the Bankruptcy Code, n5 section 1322(d) provides that no plan, including subsequent modifications, n6 may propose payments over a period of more than three years, unless the court, for cause shown, authorizes the debtor to propose a plan, including any modifications, n7 calling for payments extending up to five years. n8 No chapter 13 plan may propose payments over a period of more than five years under any circumstances. n9 The rationale underlying section 1322(d) is clearly expressed in the House Judiciary Committee Report.

On the other hand in certain areas of the country, inadequate supervision of debtors attempting to perform under wage earner plans have (sic) made them a way of life for certain debtors. Extensions on plans, new cases, and newly incurred debts put some debtors under court supervised repayment plans for seven to ten years. This has become the closest thing there is to involuntary servitude n10

The usual reason for extension of plan payments beyond three years is the debtor's inability to cure a default under section 1322(b)(5) n11 or to pay priority or allowed secured claims in a shorter time. n12 Extensions up to the five-year maximum should be allowed without difficulty in these circumstances, since without them the debtor may be unable to obtain effective relief under chapter 13. They may also be allowed in cases in which the debtor wishes to pay a somewhat higher dividend to unsecured creditors. n13

However, a court considering confirmation of such a plan must ensure that the extension beyond three years is completely voluntary, and not imposed on the debtor by creditors or the chapter 13 trustee. n14 To require plans longer than three years when they are not required by the statute would be renewing the very practices to which Congress objected and would be contrary to section 1325(b), which for all cases filed before the effective date of the 2005 amendments and for most cases thereafter, n15 requires only three years of payments to assure plan confirmation. n16

Cases Filed after Effective Date of 2005 Amendments for Debtors with Current Monthly Income at or Above Applicable State Median Income; 11 U.S.C. § 1322(d)(1). Because the 2005 legislation amended section 1325(b) to require an applicable commitment period of five years for certain chapter 13 debtors, n17 it was necessary to also amend the maximum plan length provisions of section 1322(d). For a debtor who could be subject to a five-year commitment period if the trustee or unsecured creditor files an objection under section 1325(b), the maximum plan length was changed from three years to five years.

Section 1322(d)(1) describes those debtors, using the same language as section 1325(b)(4)(A)(ii), which requires a five-year commitment period if (1) the trustee or the holder of an allowed unsecured claim objects to confirmation, (2) the plan does not provide for payment in full of all allowed unsecured claims over a shorter period and (3) the current monthly income n18 of the debtor and the debtor's spouse combined is over specified state median family income n19 thresholds. The issues of interpretation regarding these income thresholds are the same for both sections. n20

Cases Filed after Effective Date of 2005 Amendments for Debtors with Current Monthly Income Below Applicable State Median Income; 11 U.S.C. § 1322(d)(2). For debtors whose current monthly income n21 is below the applicable state median family income n22 threshold set forth in section 1322(d)(2), the law remains the same as it was for all debtors prior to the 2005 amendments. n23 These debtors must obtain court approval of a plan that proposes payments over a period in excess of three years, and the plan may not propose payments over a period in excess of five years. n24

Commencement and Conclusion of Three- or Five-Year Period. Finally, there is some doubt as to when the three-year and five-year periods begin and end. Although section 1326(a)(1) requires plan payments to begin within 30 days of when the plan is filed, unless the court orders otherwise, n25 at least one court of appeals has held that the five-year maximum period for plan payments does not commence until confirmation of the plan. n26 In most cases there will not be a large difference between these two dates and, in any event, it is clear that payment periods under plans in prior chapter 13 cases are not counted. n27

In addition, the fact that a debtor does not actually conclude the payments within the stated period does not constitute a violation of section 1322(d). n28 The subsection focuses on the payments provided for by the plan. If payments are late, but the debtor is substantially complying with the plan, the court should allow the plan to be completed within a reasonable time after the stated term.

For further discussion of Code section 1322, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1322.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 The subsection was redesignated in connection with the enactment of current section 1322(c) by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394 (effective with respect to cases filed on or after October 22, 1994). It was amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n2 Pub. L. No. 95-598 (1978).

n3 See Hearings on H.R. 8046 Before the Subcomm. on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, 75th Cong., 1st Sess. 53 (1937) (statement of Referee Charles True Adams) (I think we have something that was not in the others. We do not want to make wage slaves out of these men, we do not want them bound for life when they are under this plan.).

n4 See Hearings on H.R. 8046 Before the Subcomm. on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, 75th Cong., 1st Sess. 53 (1937).

n5 Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n6 See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1323(a), 1329(c); Collier on Bankruptcy, 1323.02, Collier on Bankruptcy, 1329.04.

n7 See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1323(a), 1329(c); Collier on Bankruptcy, 1323.02, , Collier on Bankruptcy, 1329.04[1].

n8 11 U.S.C. § 1322(d).

n9 11 U.S.C. §§ 1322(d), 1323(a), 1329(c) as in effect for cases filed prior to October 17, 2005; see Christensen v. Black (In re Black), 292 B.R. 693 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2003) (reversing modification of plan which deemed debtors first 28 monthly payments to be a lump sum contribution made on the date of plan modification, thereby extending period from actual first payment date well beyond sixty months).

n10 H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 117 (1977).

n11 11 U.S.C. § 1322(b)(5); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1322.09.

n12 11 U.S.C. §§ 1322(a)(2) and 1325(a)(5), both before and after the effective date of Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005) require certain minimum payments to particular creditors; see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1322.03 and Collier on Bankruptcy, 1325.06.

n13 See, e.g., In re Fries, 68 B.R. 676 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1986).

n14 See In re Porter, 102 B.R. 773 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1989); In re Burris, 208 B.R. 171 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1997).

n15 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1322.17[1][b], [c].

n16 In re Greer, 60 B.R. 547 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1986); see also 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b); Collier on Bankruptcy, 1325.08[4].

n17 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(4), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005; see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1325.08.

n18 Current monthly income is defined in section 101, as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 102(b) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005; see Collier on Bankruptcy, 101.10A.

n19 Median family income" is defined in section 101, as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 102(k) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005; see Collier on Bankruptcy, 101.39A.

n20 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1325.08.

n21 Current monthly income is defined in § 101, as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005; see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 101.

n22 Median family income is defined in § 101, as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005; see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 101.

n23 Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n24 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1322.17[1][a].

n25 11 U.S.C. § 1326(a)(1); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1326.02[1].

n26 West v. Costen, 826 F.2d 1376 (4th Cir. 1987); see also In re Martin, 156 B.R. 47 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1993).

n27 In re Martin, 156 B.R. 47 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1993).

n28 See In re Henry, 343 B.R. 190 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2006) (debtor allowed to complete plan payments beyond 60-month period to accommodate unexpected secured claim); Aubain v. LaSalle Natl Bank (In re Aubain), 296 B.R. 624 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2003) (case reinstated so debtor could complete payments even though 60 months had run); In re Brown, 296 B.R. 20 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2003) (fact that debtor would not complete payments in 60 months did not require dismissal of case); In re Black, 17 C.B.C.2d 602, 78 B.R. 840 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1987) (construing former section 1322(c)).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

98 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on Permissible Modifications of a Chapter 13 Plan After Confirmation

2008 Emerging Issues 1500

Collier on Permissible Modifications of a Chapter 13 Plan After Confirmation

By Collier

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: After confirmation and before completion of all payments under the confirmed plan, a chapter 13 debtor, the trustee, or the holder of an unsecured claim may propose to modify the confirmed plan pursuant to Bankruptcy Code section 1329, usually in response to altered circumstances following confirmation.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: After confirmation and before completion of all payments under the confirmed plan, a chapter 13 debtor, trustee or holder of an unsecured claim may propose to modify the confirmed plan, n1 usually in response to altered circumstances following confirmation. Bankruptcy Code section 1329(a) identifies the kinds of modifications permitted following confirmation, while sections 1329(b) and (c) impose many of the same requirements respecting plan duration, contents and acceptance as are applicable ab initio.

Alteration of Amount of Payments; 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(1). Section 1329(a)(1) provides that the chapter 13 debtor, trustee or holder of an unsecured claim may propose to increase or decrease the aggregate amount of the payments, that is, the percentage payable, on claims belonging to one or more classes designated by the confirmed plan. n2 Section 1329 does not authorize the debtor to designate classes of claims different from the classifications defined by the confirmed plan. n3

The Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit n4 and some bankruptcy courts n5 have held that section 1329(a)(1) does not permit a debtor to surrender collateral to a secured creditor and modify the plan to reduce cash payments to that creditor. The Sixth Circuit in Chrysler Finance Corp v. Nolan held that such a modification would change the amount of an allowed claim or the classification of a claim, and that such modifications are not permitted. The court also found it unfair, and contrary to the intent of section 1327, that the secured creditor would be put at risk of the collaterals depreciation after confirmation. The same court extended its holding, in In re Adkins, n6 to cover the situation in which property is repossessed and the debtor seeks to have the remaining claim deemed unsecured.

Other courts have held to the contrary, based on a more careful and complete reading of the Code. n7 Typically, a secured claim is in a separate class from other claims, and section 1329(a)(1) specifically permits a modification to decrease the payments on claims in a particular class, i.e., to the amount already paid. Section 1329(a)(3), which the Nolan court did not consider, provides that the amount of the distribution to a creditor may be modified to take into account any payment of such claim other than under the plan. Thus, a reduction of the amount owed to a creditor may be the basis for a modification that has the effect of changing the amount or classification of a claim after confirmation. Further, section 502(j) permits a court to reconsider a claim for cause, n8 and under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 3008, the court may allow or disallow a claim, increase or decrease the amount of a prior allowance, accord the claim a different priority or enter any other appropriate order. n9 Contrary to the Nolan court's conclusion, a claim may be altered after confirmation, a secured claim may be reclassified as unsecured and section 1329 permits modification of the amount of payments on such a claim. n10 If there were no way to modify a plan to take into account such a reconsideration, the debtor could be required to make payments on a claim in excess of the amount of the claim or in excess of the percentage paid to other similar claims.

Moreover, section 1329(b) specifically makes applicable to postconfirmation modifications the provisions of section 1325(a), including subsection (a)(5). If there were no possibility under section 1329(a)(1) of altering the amount paid to a secured creditor or the debtors choice to retain the collateral, there would be no need to import the standards of section 1325(a)(5), which govern only those issues. With respect to the Nolan courts citation of the binding effect of a plan under section 1327(a), the ability to modify under section 1329 is obviously a limited exception; otherwise, no plan could ever be modified and section 1329 would be rendered meaningless. n11 And a creditor would normally be harmed by depreciation of the collateral only if the creditor did not exercise its right to demand adequate protection under section 363. n12 A creditor's failure to exercise remedies available to it should not preclude a debtor from utilizing other Code provisions.

The 2005 amendments to section 1325(a)(5) support these conclusions. Section 1325(a)(5), as amended, states that, when the debtor does not surrender the property and the creditor does not accept the plan, the plan is entitled to confirmation only if the plan provides certain protections for the creditor. n13 These protections include adequate protection, n14 ameliorating the concern of the Nolan court about harm from depreciation during the plan. And the plan is to provide that the holder of the allowed secured claim retains its lien until the claim is paid in full under applicable nonbankruptcy law or until the discharge. n15 These protections indicate the extent to which Congress wished to restrict the debtor's flexibility in dealing with secured claims in chapter 13. They do not prevent a debtor from surrendering collateral at some point in the case through a plan modification. The creditor, which would have had the specifically granted right to demand adequate protection, would through such a surrender realize the benefit of the lien that Congress protected. The amendments also do not prevent the value of the collateral from being credited as payment on the debt, providing cause for reconsideration of the claim. In fact, applicable nonbankruptcy law, to which section 1325(a)(5), as amended, would look, almost always would require such value to be credited toward the debt. Congress, which enacted numerous provisions sought by creditors to resolve conflicting case law, including those described above, could easily have adopted the holding in the Nolan case; it chose not to do so.

Alteration of Time of Payments; 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(2). Section 1329(a)(2) provides that the confirmed plan may be modified so as to extend or shorten the time within which payments on one or more classes of claims were to have been made under the previously confirmed plan, n16 but any protraction of the extension period during which distributions were to have been made to creditors may not extend the period over which the debtor is required to make payments under the plan in contravention of section 1329(c). n17 Thus, for example, the court may suspend payments temporarily due to unanticipated medical expenses necessary for the debtor's well-being. n18

One situation in which the time of payments may be reduced is when the debtor seeks to refinance a mortgage, often at a lower rate, and complete plan payments in a shorter time. As the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Ninth Circuit held in Sunahara v. Burchard (In re Sunahara), n19 there is no reason such a modification should not be allowed. If the refinancing proceeds are used to pay creditors the amount to which they are entitled under the plan more quickly than originally contemplated, the creditors benefit from the earlier payment and the elimination of the risk the plan will fail. Such a modification is therefore proper, even if it does not comport with a district's form plan provision that a plan must extend for at least 36 months. The provisions of a form plan are no less modifiable than any other provisions of a plan. n20

The Sunahara court found that the section 1325(b) disposable income test does not apply to a modification under section 1329. But even if the court looks to the debtor's disposable income, the proceeds of a refinancing should not be considered income, but rather transformation of an asset into cash, with a corresponding increase in the debtor's mortgage liability, and therefore should not be considered to increase the debtor's ability to pay creditors. n21

Alteration of Distribution to Particular Holder; 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(3). Under Section 1329(a)(3), the debtor may modify the confirmed plan to alter the amount of any distribution to the holder of a particular claim as required to reflect proper credit for any payment received by the holder outside of the chapter 13 plan. n22 Sources of outside payment include codebtors, sureties, guarantors and the reclamation or disposition of collateral.

Modification of Plan in Order to Purchase Health Insurance; 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(4). Section 1329(a)(4), added by the 2005 amendments to the Bankruptcy Code, n23 provides for the situation in which the debtor desires to purchase health insurance. Presumably in recognition of the social policy favoring families purchasing health insurance, Congress made clear the right of a debtor to modify the plan and reduce plan payments by the amounts expended to purchase health insurance for the debtor and for any dependent of the debtor without insurance. The debtor may wish to purchase such insurance during a plan for any of several reasons. The debtors previous insurance through an employer may have been terminated. The debtor's income may have increased to enable the debtor to purchase insurance the debtor could not previously afford. The debtors employer may have begun demanding employee contributions for health insurance. Or the debtor may have decided for other reasons to purchase health insurance.

Whatever the reason, the debtor may take advantage of section 1329(a)(4) provided certain requirements are met.

-- The debtor must document the cost of the insurance. n24

-- The debtor must demonstrate that the expenses are reasonable and necessary. n25 In light of the specific provision for health insurance in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), it is hard to conceive of a case where this could not be demonstrated other than a case in which the debtor already had adequate insurance. Thus, this test should require the debtor only to demonstrate the lack of other insurance.

-- If the debtor previously had insurance, the cost of insurance is not materially larger than the cost the debtor previously paid or the cost necessary to maintain the lapsed policy. n26

-- If the debtor did not previously have health insurance, the cost is not materially larger than the amount that would be incurred by a debtor with similar income, expenses, geographic location, health status, and number of dependents who do not otherwise have health insurance. n27

-- The amount is not otherwise allowed for the purposes of determining disposable income under section 1325(b). n28 Presumably, this requirement is simply a recognition that the court will usually consider health insurance expenses to be reasonable and necessary expenses even without the operation of this provision, and that section 1329(a)(4) is designed to supplement the debtor's rights but not to permit double-counting of insurance expenses. A debtor cannot modify the plan to reduce plan payments to purchase insurance if amounts were already allowed in the debtors budget for that purpose.

-- If a party in interest requests, the debtor must provide proof that a health insurance policy was actually purchased. n29

The provision allowing modification of a plan to purchase health insurance recognizes the importance of health insurance to the stability of a family's budget. Like the requirements of credit counseling and credit education, n30 it is designed to encourage debtors to begin sound personal financial practices during the chapter 13 case, in this case practices that will reduce the risk that future medical expenses will once more force them into financial difficulties and possibly another bankruptcy.

For a complete discussion of Code section 1329, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1329.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 11 USCS § 1329(a).

n2 11 USCS § 1329(a)(1); cf. former Rule 13-214(a).

n3 See In re White, 169 B.R. 526 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1994) (even if modified plan may not reclassify allowed secured claim as unsecured, amount of secured claim may be reduced to zero to reflect creditor's decreased security interest after repossession of collateral); In re Powell, 5 C.B.C.2d 775, 15 B.R. 465 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1981) (provision for discount and lien retention for rejecting secured creditor permissible under section 1329(a)(1)).

n4 Chrysler Fin. Corp. v. Nolan (In re Nolan), 232 F.3d 528 (6th Cir. 2000).

n5 E.g., In re Dunlap, 39 C.B.C.2d 13, 215 B.R. 867 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1997); In re Banks, 161 B.R. 375 (Bankr. S.D. Miss. 1993).

n6 Ruskin v. DaimlerChrysler Servs. N. Am. (In re Adkins), 425 F.3d 296, 55 C.B.C.2d 10 (6th Cir. 2005).

n7 Bank One, NA v. Leuellen (In re Leuellen), 322 B.R. 648 (S.D. Ind. 2005); In re Knappen, 281 B.R. 714 (Bankr. D.N.M. 2002); In re Townley, 256 B.R. 697 (Bankr. D.N.J. 2000); Day v. Systems & Servs. Techs., Inc. (In re Day) 247 B.R. 898 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 2000); see also In re Zieder, 263 B.R. 114 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 2001) (granting modification in light of reconsideration of claim that reduced allowed secured claim to zero).

n8 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 502.11; see also In re Morris, 289 B.R. 783 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2002) (announcing policy that relief from stay for repossession of vehicles would include provision that creditor's claim deemed satisfied unless amended claim filed). However, a trustee may not unilaterally alter a creditor's claim or the payments to a creditor based upon a repossession without a court order. System & Servs. Techs., Inc. v. Davis (In re Davis), 314 F.3d 567 (11th Cir. 2002).

n9 Advisory Committee Note to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3008.

n10 See In re Zieder, 263 B.R. 114 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 2001); In re Williams, 108 B.R. 119 (Bankr. N.D. Miss. 1989) (surrender of collateral can be payment other than under the plan justifying modification).

n11 Day v. Systems & Servs. Techs., Inc. (In re Day), 247 B.R. 898 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 2000).

n12 In re Townley, 256 B.R. 697 (Bankr. D.N.J. 2000).

n13 11 U.S.C. § 1325(a)(5)(B), as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n14 11 U.S.C. § 1325(a)(5)(B)(ii)(II).

n15 11 U.S.C. § 1325(a)(5)(B)(i)(I).

n16 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(2); cf. former Rule 13-214(a).

n17 See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1322(d), 1329(c), as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005. Section 1322(d), formerly section 1322(c), was redesignated by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1329.07.

n18 In re Kapp, 52 C.B.C.2d 1433, 315 B.R. 87 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2004).

n19 54 C.B.C.2d 1048, 326 B.R. 768 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2005). The court noted that a debtor who refinances can often simply complete payments on a plan early, without modification, but that in this case the debtor could not obtain the refinancing without an order that the plan would be completed. 326 B.R. 768, 773 n.5; see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1329.08.

n20 326 B.R. 768, 783-84.

n21 In re Brown, 332 B.R. 562 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2005); Miller v. Loan Star Mortg., Inc. (In re Miller), 54 C.B.C.2d 433, 325 B.R. 539 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 2005).

n22 In re Tucker, 35 B.R. 35 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1983); cf. former Rule 13-214(a).

n23 Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 102(i) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n24 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(4).

n25 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(4)(A).

n26 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(4)(B)(i).

n27 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(4)(B)(ii).

n28 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(4)(C).

n29 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(4).

n30 11 U.S.C. §§ 109(h), 1328(g); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 109.09 and Collier on Bankruptcy, 1328.08.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

99 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on the Appointment and Role of a Consumer Privacy Ombudsman

2008 Emerging Issues 1513

Collier on the Appointment and Role of a Consumer Privacy Ombudsman

By Collier

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis covers the expansion of this appointment authority by bankruptcy courts that seek assistance even when the trustee is able to comply with the debtors privacy policy, the qualifications of and fees for a consumer privacy ombudsman, and the role of the ombudsman under section 332 and as read in conjunction with section 363(b)(1)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code, which governs the use, sale, or lease of property.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Bankruptcy Code section 332 of the Bankruptcy Code provides for the appointment of a consumer privacy ombudsman in cases in which the trustee (or debtor in possession) proposes to sell personally identifiable information in a manner inconsistent with the debtors privacy policy. n1 If so, the court must order the United States trustee to appoint one disinterested person to serve as the ombudsman, whose role is to appear and be heard on the proposed sale in order to provide the court information about the debtors privacy policy in connection with the sale of the information. Consistent with the privacy protection policy of the section, the ombudsman is prohibited from disclosing any personally identifiable information that the ombudsman receives in connection with the case. The ombudsmans fees may be paid in the same manner as the fees of other professionals in the case.

Appointment of Ombudsman. Section 332(a) of the Bankruptcy Code requires the court to order the United States trustee to appoint one disinterested person to serve as a consumer privacy ombudsman if a hearing is required under section 363(b)(1)(B). n2 Section 363(b)(1) authorizes the trustee to use, sell or lease property of the estate, after notice and a hearing. It contains a limitation, however, if the property is personally identifiable information. Personally identifiable information is defined in section 101(41A). n3 Generally speaking, it is identifying information that a business debtor gathers from an individual consumer in connection with the individuals purchase of consumer goods or services that can identify the individual. In short, it is the debtors consumer customer list.

Under section 363(b)(1)(B), the trustee may sell or lease the debtors consumer customer list or any of the information contained in the list if the sale or lease complies with the debtors privacy policy that was in effect as of the commencement of the case. If the sale or lease does not comply, then trustee may sell only if the court approves the sale after appointment of a consumer privacy ombudsman under section 332 and after making certain other findings unrelated to any privacy issue. n4 Section 332 requires the court to order the United States trustee to appoint an ombudsman in such a circumstance. The order must require the United States trustee to make the appointment not later than five days before the commencement of the hearing under section 363(b)(1)(B). The appointee must be a disinterested person and may not be the United States trustee. n5 The order must require that notice of the hearing on the sale of the personally identifiable information be timely given to the ombudsman.

Although the statute authorizes the appointment of a consumer privacy ombudsman when a trustee proposes to sell or lease of personally identifiable information in a manner that is not consistent with the debtors privacy policy, it does not expressly authorize it only in that circumstance or prohibit the appointment in other circumstances. If courts interpret the statute as authorizing the appointment only in the circumstance stated in section 363(b)(1)(B), appointments are likely to be rare, because in most cases, the trustee will be able to comply with the privacy policy. Bankruptcy courts often expand upon a statutory authorization such as section 332 to order the appointment of officers or professionals at the expense of the estate when the court feels that it could benefit from the additional information or assistance that a neutral third party might provide. Appointment in this context for the purposes of assisting the court, when the statutory prerequisite is not present, seems inconsistent with the statute, would impose additional costs on an estate, and, although the statute does not expressly prohibit it, should not be the favored interpretation.

Section 332 does not appear to contain any limits on whom the United States trustee may appoint as the consumer privacy ombudsman, other than the disinterestedness requirement. Common sense suggests that a candidate with knowledge of and experience with consumer privacy laws would be preferred. If the facts and circumstances of a particular case require the appointment of a consumer privacy ombudsman on more than one occasion, it would also seem to make sense to appoint the same individual, who would, by the time of the second or later occasion, already have familiarity with the debtors privacy policy and practices. These matters are committed, however, to the sound discretion of the United State trustee. The statute does not contemplate court approval of the appointment.

The consumer privacy ombudsman will be somewhat of an independent agent in the case, similar to an examiner. The ombudsman does not have a client and does not appear to be required to take direction from any of the parties in interest. Of course, the ombudsman will be subject to the courts orders, but the statute does not appear to contemplate supervision or control of the ombudsman either by the court or the United States trustee. The ombudsmans fees will be subject to court approval, and the United States trustee may object to a fee request. n6 There is no other statutory mechanism, however, for supervision or for court ordered limitations on the ombudsmans duties or activities.

Role of Ombudsman. Section 332(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, when read with section 363(b)(1)(B), describes a consumer privacy ombudsmans role. An ombudsman is to be appointed when a trustee proposes to sell or lease personally identifiable information in a way that is not consistent with the debtors privacy policy. In that situation, the court must give due consideration to the facts, circumstances, and conditions of such sale or such lease. and may approve the sale or lease if no showing was made that such sale or such lease would violate applicable nonbankruptcy law. n7 It is apparent that the ombudsmans role is to inform the court of the relevant facts, circumstances and conditions.

Section 332(b) makes that role explicit. It requires the ombudsman to provide to the court information to assist the court in its consideration of the facts, circumstances, and conditions of the proposed sale or lease of personally identifiable information. Section 332(b) provides examples of the kind of such information, including (1) the debtors privacy policy; (2) the potential losses or gains of privacy to consumers if such sale or such lease is approved by the court; (3) the potential costs or benefits to consumers if such sale or such lease is approved by the court; and (4) the potential alternatives that would mitigate privacy losses or potential costs to consumers. Also, the section provides that the ombudsman may appear and be heard at the hearing on the proposed sale or lease. Because the ombudsman is required to provide the court with information but is not expressly required to appear and be heard, the ombudsman may file a written report and not attend the hearing on the proposed sale or lease.

It seems clear that the ombudsman, both from the officers title itself n8 as well as from the tasks described, is to protect the interests of consumers in the privacy of their personally identifiable information. It is not clear, however, how the functioning of this provision adds to the achievement of that goal. Section 363(b)(1)(B) requires that the trustee comply with the debtors privacy policy in selling or leasing personally identifiable information or that the court find that no showing was made that the sale would violate applicable nonbankruptcy law. If there is such a showing, then the sale may not be approved, and it should not matter what the facts, circumstances and conditions of the sale or lease are nor the effects on the debtors privacy policy, on privacy gains or losses, potential costs or benefits, or potential alternatives to mitigate privacy losses or consumer costs. Even if there are no material privacy losses and no material consumer costs, the sale or lease may not be approved.

The examples of matters of the kinds of matters on which the ombudsman is to report add something substantive to the analysis only if the provision in section 363(b)(1)(B)(ii) is read very narrowly, not as requiring a finding that applicable nonbankruptcy law is not violated, but only that there is no showing that it would be violated. Read as such, it could be viewed as an evidentiary analysis alone: the court should consider the matters on which the consumer privacy ombudsman is to report only if no party in interest offers any evidence of a privacy law violation. That is, the court need not find that the proposed sale or lease does not violate such laws, only that no one offered anything to show that it would. Conversely, if a party in interest makes any showing to that effect, then the sale or lease may not be approved, even if the court ultimately determines that the law would not be violated. That reading could give the ombudsman or other parties in interest in the case an effective veto over a proposed sale or lease, even if it did not actually violate any consumer privacy law. Alternatively, there may be situations in which there is no applicable law. In such a situation, there would be no showing of a violation.

Unfortunately, this reading seems as crabbed as the alternative, which could effectively read section 332(b) out the statute. Congress has simply not provided adequate guidance on how the ombudsmans duties should be read consistent with the statutory requirement in section 363(b)(1)(B)(ii) for the approval of a proposed sale or lease. Particular cases in the future may tease out meaning from these seemingly contradictory or procedurally awkward provisions.

For a complete discussion of Code section 332, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 332.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 Section 332 was added to the Code by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 232(a) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n2 11 U.S.C. § 363(b), as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 231(a) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n3 11 U.S.C. § 101(41A), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 231(b), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n4 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 363.

n5 For the definition of disinterested person, see 11 U.S.C. § 101(14), as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 414 (2005).

n6 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 330.

n7 11 U.S.C. § 363(b), as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 231(a) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n8 An appointed official whose duty is to investigate complaints, generally on behalf of individuals such as consumers or taxpayers, against institutions such as companies and government departments. Wiktionary, definition of ombudsman, at <http://en.wiktionary.org/wiki/Ombudsman> (last visited July 25, 2005).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

100 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on the Effect of a Conversion of a Chapter 13 Case

2008 Emerging Issues 1514

Collier on the Effect of a Conversion of a Chapter 13 Case

By Collier

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: Section 348 of the Bankruptcy Code governs the effect of conversion of a case from one chapter of the Code to another chapter. It provides, in general, that conversion of a case constitutes a new order for relief under the chapter to which the case is converted, but, except as specifically provided in section 348, conversion does not change the date the petition is considered to have been filed.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Overview of Section 348. Conversion Section 348 of the Bankruptcy Code governs the effect of conversion of a case from one chapter of the Code to another chapter. It provides, in general, that conversion of a case constitutes a new order for relief under the chapter to which the case is converted, but, except as specifically provided in section 348, conversion does not change the date the petition is considered to have been filed. n1

A claim against the estate or the debtor that arose after the original order for relief but before conversion is treated as a prepetition claim in a case converted from chapter 11, 12 or 13, except that it may be entitled to priority as an administrative expense under section 503(b). n2 Conversion also terminates the service of any trustee or examiner who was serving in the case before conversion. n3

When a debtor converts from chapter 13 to chapter 7, the property of the estate will consist of the property the debtor had on the date the original chapter 13 petition was filed, to the extent that the property is still in the debtor's possession. n4 But this rule does not apply if the debtor converted from chapter 13 in bad faith: if the conversion was in bad faith, the property of the estate will consist of the property of the chapter 13 estate as of the date of conversion. n5 In any event, after conversion from chapter 13 to chapter 11 or chapter 12, valuations of property and allowed secured claims are preserved from the chapter 13 case, and allowed secured claims are reduced to the extent that they have already been paid during the chapter 13 case. n6 In cases converted from chapter 13 to chapter 7, the claim of a creditor holding security continues to be secured unless the full amount of the claim, as determined under applicable nonbankruptcy law, has been paid as of the date of conversion. In addition, prebankruptcy defaults are given the effect that they have under applicable nonbankruptcy law unless they have been fully cured under the chapter 13 plan prior to conversion. n7

Except for cases under chapter 9, a case under any chapter may be converted. There may be conversion of a liquidation case under section 706, n8 conversion of a reorganization case under section 1112, n9 conversion of a chapter 12 case under section 1208 n10 or conversion of a chapter 13 case under section 1307. n11. These four sections set forth the grounds for converting a case from one chapter to another. The one limitation on conversion common to all four is that a case may not be converted to a case under another chapter unless the debtor may be a debtor under such chapter. Section 109 sets forth the qualifications for those who may be debtors under chapters 7, 11, 12 and 13. n12

Section 706 provides that the debtor may convert a case under chapter 7 to a case under chapter 11, 12 or 13 at any time if the case has not previously been converted under section 1112, 1208 or 1307. n13 Thus, except for this restriction, the debtor is given one absolute right of conversion of a liquidation case to a reorganization or individual or family farmer debt adjustment plan case. The policy underlying this provision is that the debtor should have the right to repay his or her debts. n14 In addition, the court may convert a chapter 7 case to a chapter 11 reorganization case, after notice and hearing, upon request of any party in interest. In contrast, conversion to a chapter 12 or 13 case is conditioned upon the debtor's request. This condition follows from the requirement that a chapter 12 or 13 case must be initiated by the debtor. n15

A debtor may convert a chapter 11 reorganization case to a chapter 7 liquidation case under section 1112 unless a trustee has been appointed, the case was commenced by an involuntary petition, or the case was previously converted from another chapter on the request of a party other than the debtor. n16 Upon the request of a party in interest the court may, in some cases, convert a chapter 11 case to a chapter 7 case. n17 Conversion from chapter 11 to chapter 12 or 13 is conditioned upon request by the debtor. It may occur only when the debtor has not been discharged under section 1141(d) and, in the case of conversion to chapter 12, when conversion is equitable. n18

Under section 1208, n19 a debtor may convert a chapter 12 case to a chapter 7 liquidation case at any time. Any waiver of the right to convert is unenforceable. The case may not be converted at the request of any other party unless the debtor has committed fraud in connection with the case. n20

Under section 1307, the debtor may convert a chapter 13 case to a chapter 7 case at any time. n21 A waiver of the right to convert is unenforceable. The court may convert a chapter 13 case to a chapter 7 case upon request of a party in interest or the United States trustee after notice and a hearing. n22 Before confirmation of a plan, the court may also convert the case to a case under chapter 11 or chapter 12, upon the request of a party in interest or the United States trustee. n23 But if the debtor is a farmer, a chapter 13 case may not be involuntarily converted to another chapter. n24

Rules for Conversion of a Chapter 13 Case; 11 U.S.C. § 348(f). The Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994 added new subsection (f) to section 348. n25 The amendment was intended to clarify the Code to resolve a split in the law about what property is in the bankruptcy estate when a debtor converts from chapter 13 to chapter 7. n26 Substantial amendments were made to section 348(f) in 2005. n27

General Rule Regarding Property of the Estate after Conversion to Chapter 7; § 348(f)(1)(A). Subsection (f)(1)(A) provides that when a chapter 13 case is converted to another chapter, property of the estate in the converted case shall consist of property of the estate, as of the date of filing of the petition, that remains in the possession of or is under the control of the debtor on the date of conversion.

The addition of this subsection clarified that Congress had intended the result reached by cases that had not included in the postconversion chapter 7 estate the property acquired by the debtor during the preconversion chapter 13 case. n28 As the House Report on the amendment pointed out, this result was in accord with the statute's language, since section 1306, which makes such property property of the estate in chapter 13 cases, is inapplicable to chapter 7 cases. n29 The Report further explained that the Committee was concerned that the contrary rule would create a serious disincentive to chapter 13 filings because debtors would fear that property attained after filing, including equity created by payment of secured debts, could be lost if the case were converted. n30 The legislative history also states that equity created during the chapter 13 case is not property of the estate. n31

In accordance with section 348(f)(1), the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit held, in In re Stamm, n32 that postpetition wages in the hands of the chapter 13 trustee should be returned to the debtors because they were not a part of the chapter 7 estate. n33 Other courts have also held that property acquired during the pendency of the chapter 13 case does not, absent bad faith, become property of the chapter 7 estate after conversion. n34

Exception for Bad Faith Filing; 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(2). Under section 348(f)(2), n35 there is an exception to the general rule about property of the estate after conversion from chapter 13 to chapter 7 if conversion is in bad faith. If conversion is in bad faith, property of the chapter 7 estate is the property of the estate as of the date of conversion.

It is unclear what would constitute bad faith such as to trigger this exception. One situation in which bad faith might be found would be if the debtor never really intended to proceed with a chapter 13 case and had filed it simply to protect assets the debtor knew would soon be acquired. Courts are also likely to find bad faith under an all of the circumstances test when the debtor has been repeatedly dishonest and has manipulated the system unfairly. n36 Courts clearly should not find bad faith if the debtor is unable to complete a plan due to a change in circumstances or financial hardship. Moreover, simply taking advantage of the statute's provisions excluding property acquired during the chapter 13 case from the chapter 7 estate after conversion is not bad faith. n37 Valuation of Property after Conversion from Chapter 13; 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(1)(B) & (C). Section 348(f)(1)(B), also enacted by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, n38 clarified the law with respect to valuation of property after conversion from chapter 13: valuations of property and of allowed secured claims in the chapter 13 case shall apply in the converted case. However, this paragraph was amended in 2005 to apply only to conversions to chapter 11 or to chapter 12 and not to conversions to chapter 7. n39 The amended subsection clearly applies to the valuations used in determining allowed secured claims in such cases. Once the value of an item of property is established for that purpose, whether by court order, agreement or otherwise, it will not be changed after the case is converted to chapter 11 or chapter 12.

The 2005 amendments to section 348(f) n40 added a new paragraph 348(f)(1)(C), applicable to conversions from chapter 13. Subdivision (i) of this paragraph provides that, with respect to cases converted from chapter 13, the claim of any creditor holding security n41 shall continue to be secured by that security unless the full amount of such claim determined under applicable nonbankruptcy law has been paid in full as of the date of conversion, notwithstanding any valuation or determination of the amount of the allowed secured claim made for purposes of the case under chapter 13. This language raises a number of questions. First, although it appears to contradict section 348(f)(1)(B) in at least some instances, n42 it is not limited to chapter 7 cases. On its face it, seems to apply to all cases converted from chapter 13. The language does not conflict with the first portion of section 348(f)(1)(B), since it contains no dictate concerning the valuation of property. However, for chapter 7 cases this means that valuation of property must be determined by reference to some other source, since section 348(f)(1)(B) is made explicitly inapplicable to cases converted to chapter 7. This may be advantageous to debtors who have converted to chapter 7 because, at least with respect to personal property, the property's value is likely to have gone down during the pendency of the chapter 13 case. n43

In any event, subsections 348(f)(1)(B) and (C) have no applicability with respect to valuation of property for exemption purposes, since exemption values are determined as of the date the petition is filed n44 (which does not change upon conversion). n45 Paragraphs (B) and (C) concern valuations of and treatment of secured claims after conversion. Exemption valuations should be determined consistent with section 348(f)(1)(A), which provides that increases in value during the chapter 13 case do not become property of the chapter 7 estate after conversion. n46 The subsection serves judicial efficiency, by preventing relitigation of valuation issues.

Reduction of Allowed Secured Claims to the Extent Paid Prior to Conversion from Chapter 13; 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(1)(B) & (C). Subsections 348(f)(1)(B) and (C) also control at least to some degree the treatment of allowed secured claims that have been paid, in part or in full, in chapter 13 cases prior to conversion. In cases converted from chapter 13 to chapter 11 or chapter 12, secured claims are reduced to the extent that they have been paid in the chapter 13 case. This provision too, as originally enacted, resolved a split in the case law.

Some courts had held that debtors seeking to redeem under section 722 n47 in a converted case had to pay the full value of the property even though they had made payments on the allowed secured claim in the chapter 13 case. n48 That result was rejected by the 1994 amendments. Instead, Congress agreed with those courts that had held that the payments on the allowed secured claim made during the chapter 13 case should be credited in the chapter 7 case to reduce the redemption amount so that the debtor does not pay a total that is greater than the value of the property. n49 Therefore, if the debtor had paid a portion of the allowed secured claim through the chapter 13 plan, the debtor could redeem by paying the remainder of the allowed secured claim. n50 If the full allowed secured claim had been paid before conversion, it did not spring back into existence simply because the case has been converted to chapter 7. n51

In 2005 Congress muddled the waters it had cleared by enacting amendments to section 348(f)(1) that create new confusion. The amendments retained the language of the 1994 amendments for cases converted to chapter 11 and chapter 12, but not for cases converted to chapter 7. Section 348(f)(1)(C)(i), added by those amendments, n52 provides that with respect to cases converted from chapter 13, the claim of any creditor holding security n53 shall continue to be secured by that security unless the full amount of such claim determined under applicable nonbankruptcy law has been paid in full as of the date of conversion, notwithstanding any valuation or determination of the amount of the allowed secured claim made for purposes of the case under chapter 13.

There is a potential conflict with section 348(f)(1)(B) for cases converted to chapter 11 and chapter 12 to the extent that subparagraph provides that allowed secured claims are to be reduced to the extent they were paid in chapter 13, because section 348(f)(1)(C)(i) provides that, at least in some cases, even if an allowed secured claim has been paid in full in a chapter 13 case, the creditor continues to be secured by its security. Moreover, the new language does not describe how any reduction in the amount of the creditor's allowed secured claim is to be determined in such cases, either in cases where there is a conflict with section 348(f)(1)(B) or in other cases. Courts may decide that in cases converted to chapter 11 or chapter 12 the more specific provisions of section 348(f)(1)(B) apply. The two sections can be reconciled, by reasoning that even if a creditor continues to be secured by its security, a chapter 7 debtor may still redeem the property by paying the remainder of the allowed secured claim.

In cases in which section 348(f)(1)(B) does not apply, courts will have to look to other sources to decide the amount of the allowed secured claim in the converted case. The amendment of the 1994 provision with respect to conversion of chapter 13 cases to chapter 7 means that the pre-1994 situation is re-created and courts will probably take positions similar to those they had taken prior to the 1994 amendments. The amendment should not be read as creating a negative implication that the allowed secured claim should not be reduced by payments in a chapter 13 plan, because Congress clearly could have stated that rule if it had desired that result. Instead, Congress has said nothing about how the allowed secured claim after conversion is determined in such cases.

The language full amount of such claim determined under applicable nonbankruptcy law also may be a source of disputes. At what point in time is the full amount of the claim determined? Normally claims are determined as of the petition date. Does the reference to nonbankruptcy law concern only possible reductions in the claim under particular provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, such as section 502(b)(6) n54 or 502(d)? n55 Does the provision require that there have been some prior determination under nonbankruptcy law? As with so much of the 2005 legislation, the language is simply unclear.

Cure of Prebankruptcy Defaults; 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(1)(C)(ii). Paragraph 348(f)(1)(C)(ii), added in 2005, n56 provides that unless a prebankruptcy default has been fully cured under a chapter 13 plan at the time of conversion, in any proceeding under title 11 or otherwise, the default will have the effect it has under applicable nonbankruptcy law. Again, the import of this provision is not entirely clear. With what effects is it concerned? It does not state.

What does seem clear from the language is that the determination of whether the default has been cured is made by reference to the chapter 13 plan. If the terms of the plan provide that a default is cured upon certain payments, then a debtor who has made those payments has cured the default. Under the language of the provision the debtor may have cured otherwise as well, perhaps under a foreclosure loss mitigation agreement with the lender independent of the bankruptcy. When a debtor has not made such payments or otherwise cured, under the law prior to the 2005 amendments, no one would have argued that a default had been cured, so this provision seems to make no significant change, except perhaps to clarify that a cure under a chapter 13 plan continues to be effective even if the plan is not completed.

For a complete discussion of Code section 348, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 348.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 11 U.S.C. § 348(a)(c); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 348.02 Collier on Bankruptcy, 348.04 infra.

n2 11 U.S.C. § 348(d); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 348.05.

n3 11 U.S.C. § 348(e); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 348.06.

n4 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(1)(A); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 348.07[1].

n5 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(2), as amended by a technical amendment in Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005; see Collier on Bankruptcy, 348.07[2].

n6 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(1)(B), as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n7 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(1)(C), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n8 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 706.

n9 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1112.

n10 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1208.01.

n11 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1307.

n12 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 109.

n13 11 U.S.C. § 706; see Collier on Bankruptcy, 706.02[1].

n14 H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 380 (1977); S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 94 (1978).

n15 H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 428 (1977); S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 141 (1978).

n16 11 U.S.C. § 1112, as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005; see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1112.02.

n17 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b), as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005, (c); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1112.02.

n18 11 U.S.C. § 1112(d); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1112.02.

n19 11 U.S.C. § 1208(a); see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1208.

n20 11 U.S.C. § 1208(d); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1208.04.

n21 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1307.02.

n22 11 U.S.C. § 1307(c), as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005, gives the court discretion either to convert a chapter 13 case into a chapter 7 case or dismiss the chapter 13 case. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1307.04.

n23 11 USCS § 1307(d); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1307.05.

n24 11 USCS § 1307(f), formerly § 1307(e), as redesignated by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005; see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1307.06; see also 11 U.S.C. § 303(a).

n25 Pub. L. No. 103-394 (enacted on October 22, 1994, effective in cases commenced on or after the date of enactment).

n26 See Section-by-Section Description of H.R. 5116, 140 Cong. Rec. H10,770 (daily ed. Oct. 4, 1994); see also Collier on Bankruptcy, 348.02.

n27 Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n28 E.g., In re Bobroff, 766 F.2d 797, 12 C.B.C.2d 1491 (3d Cir. 1985); see also In re Young, 66 F.3d 376 (1st Cir. 1995) (following Bobroff in case not governed by amendment because Congress had since clarified the statute).

n29 H.R. Rep. No. 835, 103d Cong., 2d Sess. 57 (1994).

n30 H.R. Rep. No. 835, 103d Cong., 2d Sess. 57 (1994).

n31 H.R. Rep. No. 835, 103d Cong., 2d Sess. 57 (1994).

n32 222 F.3d 216 (5th Cir. 2000).

n33 See In re Zamora, 274 B.R. 268 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2002) (because funds remaining in trustees hands upon conversion belonged to debtor, debtor had power to assign funds to debtor's attorney and trustee required to honor assignment).

n34 E.g., Farmer v. Taco Bell Corp., 242 B.R. 435 (W.D. Tenn. 1999) (personal injury cause of action which accrued after chapter 13 petition belonged to debtors, not estate, absent bad faith).

n35 A technical amendment to section 348(f)(2), adding the words of the estate after property, the first time it appears, was made by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n36 In re Siegfried, 39 C.B.C.2d 1449, 219 B.R. 581 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1998).

n37 In re Wiczek-Spaulding, 223 B.R. 538 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1998).

n38 Pub. L. No. 103-394 (1994).

n39 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(1)(B), as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n40 Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n41 Security is defined in section 101; see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 101. In light of the definition of security, it is not clear what claims would be affected by the new language.

n42 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 348.07[4].

n43 See also 11 U.S.C. § 506(a)(2), which provides that with respect to property acquired for personal, family, or household purposes replacement value shall be determined considering the age and condition of the property at the time value is determined. [emphasis supplied] n44 11 U.S.C. § 522(a)(2); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 522.03[2]; see also Collier on Bankruptcy, 348.02[5].

n45 11 U.S.C. § 348(a); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 348.02.

n46 See In re Slack, 290 B.R. 282 (Bankr. D.N.J. 2003) (value of property stated in schedules, which was not challenged and was therefore implicitly accepted in confirmation of chapter 13 plan, was value of property after conversion to chapter 7); In re Page, 250 B.R. 465 (Bankr. D.N.H. 2000) (confirmation of chapter 13 plan was implicit valuation, which was binding for exemption purposes after conversion to chapter 7); Collier on Bankruptcy, 348.07[1]. But see In re Kuhlman, 254 B.R. 755 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2000) (when property was partially nonexempt in chapter 13 case and no plan was confirmed, appreciation in value was appreciation of nonexempt portion that was property of estate as of petition date and belonged to chapter 7 estate because there had been no contrary valuation in chapter 13 case).

n47 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 722.

n48 E.g., In re Gammon, 155 B.R. 15 (W.D. Okla. 1993).

n49 E.g., In re Stoddard, 167 B.R. 98 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1994); In re Tluscik, 122 B.R. 728 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1991).

n50 In re Dean, 281 B.R. 912 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 2002); In re Rodgers, 273 B.R. 186 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2002).

n51 See In re Archie, 240 B.R. 425 (Bankr. S.D. Ala. 1999) (debtors who had paid full allowed secured claim on car loan before conversion permitted to redeem vehicle postconversion for $0.00); In re Pickett, 151 B.R. 471 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1992).

n52 Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n53 Security is defined in section 101; see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 101. In light of the definition of security, it is not clear what claims would be affected by the new language.

n54 Section 506(b)(6) caps the claim of a landlord against the debtor. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 502.03[7].

n55 Section 502(d) bars the claim of a transferee of an avoidable transfer unless the transferee has turned over property for which it is liable. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 502.05.

n56 Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

101 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on Reopening a Case Under Title 11

2008 Emerging Issues 1515

Collier on Reopening a Case Under Title 11

By Collier

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: Bankruptcy Code section 350(b) permits the bankruptcy court to reopen a case under title 11 to administer assets, to accord relief to the debtor, or for other cause. However, the case must be reopened in the court in which it was closed. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit and other courts have held that a case cannot be reopened unless it was closed pursuant to section 350(a) after it has been administered.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Bankruptcy Code section 350(b) permits the bankruptcy court to reopen a case under title 11 to administer assets, to accord relief to the debtor, or for other cause. However, the case must be reopened in the court in which it was closed. n1 The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit and other courts have held that a case cannot be reopened unless it was closed pursuant to section 350(a) after it has been administered. Therefore , a dismissed case could not be reopened under section 350(b). n2 A dismissal could be undone only through an appeal or a motion under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9023 or 9024.

The language of section 350(b) gives the court broad discretion in the reopening of a case. n3 Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 5010 is also broadly worded: A case may be reopened on motion of the debtor or other party in interest pursuant to § 350(b) of the Code.

Reopening a Case to Administer Assets. Under section 350(b) and Rule 5010, the discovery of unadministered assets, which was once the sole basis for reopening a case, continues to be a sufficient reason for the court to exercise its power. However, the assets must be assets that were not known at the time the case was closed. For example, in Miller v. Shallowford Community Hospital, n4 a lawsuit properly abandoned by the trustee did not constitute unadministered asset for purposes of section 350(b). Section 350(b) thus corresponds to section 554(c), which provides that properly scheduled assets that are not administered at the time the case is closed are deemed abandoned. It is the trustees duty to investigate properly scheduled assets, and the fact that the debtor does not volunteer information about changes in the value of such assets, when information is not requested by the trustee, does not justify reopening the case after the trustee discovers such changes. n5 However the Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, in In re Woods, n6 held that an inadvertent technical abandonment of assets by a trustee could be cause for reopening the case pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9024, which incorporates Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60. n7 Other courts have held that Rule 9024 cannot be used to overcome the abandonment resulting from application of the statutory provisions of section

554. n8

On the other hand, it is clear that assets that are not properly disclosed on the schedules are not abandoned and remain property of the estate that can be administered if the case is reopened. n9 In addition, assets may come into the estate for the first time after the case is closed under section 541(a)(5), which includes in the estate inheritances, property settlements and life insurance proceeds acquired within 180 days after the petition. n10

On occasion, debtors have moved to reopen a case in order to schedule a cause of action after a defendant has argued that the debtor is judicially estopped from raising the cause of action because it was not disclosed in a bankruptcy case. Some courts have looked to whether the debtors nondisclosure was intentional in determining whether the case can be reopened to amend the schedules. n11 However, the better view is that creditors in the bankruptcy case should not be deprived of their ability to be paid from proceeds of the asset regardless of the debtors intent, and that the bankruptcy case should ordinarily be reopened so the asset can be administered to prevent a windfall to the defendant. n12

To justify reopening, the likelihood of recovering additional assets must be substantial. If there is only a remote possibility of obtaining assets that would provide a meaningful distribution, the bankruptcy court may decline to reopen the case. n13

Reopening a Case to Amend Schedules. Motions to reopen are often filed by debtors seeking to amend schedules to list an additional creditor. Such motions are generally liberally granted. n14 The courts have held that no prejudice will accrue to the creditor in a no-asset case when creditors have been notified under Rule 2002(e) that it is not necessary to file a claim. In such a case, the omitted creditor is not prejudiced if the case is reopened and the creditor is scheduled because the creditor would not have received a distribution in any event. If additional assets are subsequently found, the creditor has not lost its opportunity to file a claim; if that were to occur, all creditors would be notified and given reasonable time to file their claims under Rule 3002(c)(5). n15 Thus, in Stark v. St. Marys Hospital (In re Stark), n16 a no-asset case, the debtor was allowed to reopen to add an omitted creditor; there was no evidence of fraud or intentional design and the debt in question was a medical bill that the debtor had mistakenly believed to have been covered by insurance.

Motions to reopen for the purpose of adding creditors to the schedules are often filed by debtors in the mistaken belief that adding the creditor to the schedules is necessary for the debt to be discharged. In fact, as explained by the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in Judd v. Wolfe, n17 the belated scheduling of a creditor after the case has been closed has no effect on whether the debt is discharged. Under section 523(a)(3), a nonscheduled debt is excepted from the discharge only if the failure to schedule resulted in the creditors lacking knowledge of the case in time to file a proof of claim or, if the creditor holds a claim that would have been found nondischargeable under subsection 523(a)(2), (4) or (6), in time to file a dischargeability complaint. n18 If the debt falls within this exception, reopening the case to schedule the debt does not render it dischargeable. If it does not fall within the exception, the debt is discharged regardless of whether it ever was scheduled.

Moreover, nowhere in section 523(a)(3) is the reason why a debt was not scheduled made relevant to the discharge of the debt. n19 As the Judd court explained, the plain language of section 523(a)(3) represents a choice by Congress that the discharge of a debt omitted from the schedules does not depend on the debtors good faith in making the omission. n20 Therefore, the court held, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse the debtors motion to reopen a case that was filed as an attempt to affect the dischargeability of a debt.

Recognizing that a reopening of the case would not affect whether the debt was discharged, the court of appeals in Judd went on to consider whether the case should be reopened for the limited purpose of adding a creditors name to the list of creditors. The debtor asserted that this was important in her attempts to acquire new credit. The court remanded the case for a determination of whether reopening the case would serve this or any other purpose, such as assuring the creditor would be notified if assets were later discovered. n21

Some courts have conditioned reopening for the purpose of scheduling an additional creditor on the debtors payment of the reasonable attorneys fees the creditor expended in pursuing its claim prior to discovery that a debtor had filed a bankruptcy petition from which that creditor was omitted. n22 Like those courts that condition reopening on a finding that the debtors omission of a creditor on the schedules was unintentional and nonfraudulent, n23 many of these courts incorrectly assume that the debt will not be discharged if the schedules are not amended. As discussed above, reopening a case and adding a creditor to the schedules does not affect whether a debt is discharged. While a court may choose not to reopen a case to permit amendment of the schedules because the debtor has not acted in good faith, the debtors inability to amend the schedules does not affect the dischargeability of the nonscheduled debt.

Reopening a Case to File a Lien Avoidance Motion. Additional grounds for reopening include the debtors desire to file a motion to avoid a lien under section 522(f) of the Code. The majority of courts hold that a debtor may reopen a bankruptcy case to file a lien avoidance action unless the creditor has been unduly prejudiced by delay on the debtors part. n24 Unlike other provisions in the Code and rules, n25 neither section 522(f) nor Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4003(d), both governing lien avoidance motions, sets a deadline for the filing of these motions. Indeed, because the power to avoid a lien is a personal right of the debtor, having no bearing on the administration of the bankruptcy case, it is doubtful that the case has to be reopened at all to hear such a motion, which is clearly within the jurisdiction of the court. n26

However, in Hawkins v. Landmark Finance Co. (In re Hawkins), n27 the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit held that because of prejudice to the creditor, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to reopen a chapter 7 case to permit debtors to file a lien avoidance action. The creditor had incurred costs and attorneys fees in instituting foreclosure proceedings in state court in reliance on the debtors failure to reopen the case for eight months after discharge.

Therefore, a key factor in deciding a motion to reopen to allow late avoidance of a lien is whether the creditor would be so prejudiced that it would be inequitable to grant the motion. n28 Absent such prejudice, the case should be reopened. n29 Laches, a long delay in reopening the case, may be an equitable defense to a motion by the debtor to reopen to pursue a section 522(f) action. n30 Some courts have conditioned a debtors right to file a postdischarge lien avoidance action on the debtors reimbursing the creditor for costs and attorneys fees incurred in enforcing its judicial lien in state court, which eliminates any prejudice to the creditor due to unreasonable delay by the debtor. n31 The majority of cases have held that there is no time limit in the Code within which a motion for lien avoidance must be filed, as long as the creditor has not been prejudiced by the delay. n32 On the other hand, when the Code does set a time limit that is marked by or runs from the closing of the case, such as that set by section 546(a)(2) or section 727(e)(2)(B), it is not clear that reopening the case vitiates the time limit. n33

Reopening a Case to Grant a Discharge or Other Relief to the Debtor. The court may reopen a case to grant the debtor a discharge if the case has been closed before a discharge is granted. As indicated above, the court under the Code and Rule 5010 may reopen a case to accord relief to the debtor or to a creditor or other interested party. n34 The rule of law that had been applied before the promulgation of former Bankruptcy Rule 515 (from which Rule 5010 has been adapted), that the closing of a case without the grant of a discharge was the legal equivalent of a denial of discharge, n35 is no longer valid as a result of section 349(a) and therefore cannot be used as a ground for refusing to reopen a case. In general, reopening for this purpose is not available to a debtor whose discharge has been denied under section 727, 1141(d)(3)(C), 1228 or 1328 of the Code. n36

One situation in which a court is likely to reopen a case to grant a discharge is when the debtors case has been closed without a discharge because the debtor did not take a required personal financial management course. Under sections 727(a)(11) and 1328(g), added in 2005, n37 if a chapter 7 or chapter 13 individual debtor does not take such a course, the debtor cannot be granted a discharge. n38 The requirement may also be applicable to individual chapter 11 debtors under section 1141(d)(3). If a debtor subsequently completes the course in personal financial management, there is no reason why a court should not reopen the case and grant the discharge.

More common is the situation in which discharge-related postclosing events give rise to a motion to reopen. The debtor may seek to reopen the case to enforce the discharge injunction of section 524(a) n39 after a creditor has attempted to collect a discharged debt. Similarly, a debtor may be subjected to discrimination prohibited by section 525 n40 and seek enforcement of rights guaranteed by that section in the bankruptcy court. In these situations, which do not concern administration of the case, a motion to reopen may not be necessary for the court to render a decision; these issues clearly are within the courts jurisdiction under section 1334 of title 28. However, many courts require that a motion to reopen be filed, if only to provide a mechanism to instruct the clerk to retrieve a case file from storage. If a motion to reopen is required in such circumstances, it should be granted as a matter of course; only rarely should the bankruptcy court decline to exercise its jurisdiction to enforce rights arising under the Bankruptcy Code.

Debtors, or occasionally creditors, may also file motions to reopen to determine the dischargeability of a debt. The bankruptcy court has concurrent jurisdiction with other courts to decide if particular debts were discharged in a bankruptcy case, other than debts alleged to be nondischargeable under subsection 523(a)(2), (4), (6) or (15), which can be found nondischargeable only by the bankruptcy court. n41 Therefore a motion to reopen the case is probably not even necessary for the court to exercise its jurisdiction. n42 The bankruptcy court should normally grant a motion to reopen to determine the dischargeability of a debt. In any event, the court may choose to abstain if proceedings in another court are well advanced before the issue is brought to the bankruptcy court. n43

Reopening a Case for Other Cause. In addition to the specified causes of the need to administer assets or to accord relief to the debtor, the court may reopen a case for other cause. n44 For example, courts have granted motions to reopen a case to modify a reorganization plan n45 and to determine the validity of lien. n46 The court has discretion, after considering all the circumstances, to refuse to reopen a case. n47 While the Code does not define other cause for purposes of reopening a case under section 350(b), the decision to reopen is discretionary with the court, which may consider numerous factors, including equitable concerns, and ought to emphasize substance over technical considerations. n48

Because section 350(b) gives the bankruptcy court broad discretion in deciding whether to reopen a case, the decision to grant or deny a motion to reopen is binding on review absent a clear showing that there was an abuse of discretion. n49 The bankruptcy court, having broad discretion to reopen a case, may allow a case to be reopened so long as there is no evidence of fraud or intentional design on the part of the moving party or those in privity with the moving party. n50

Limitations on the Right to Reopen a Case. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9024(1) provides that a motion to reopen under Rule 5010 is not subject to the one-year time limit that generally applies to motions for relief from an order of the court under Rule 60(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9024(1) codified case law under the former Bankruptcy Act that had held Rule 60(b) inapplicable to a petition to reopen the estate pursuant to Section 2a(8) of the Bankruptcy Act. n51 Moreover, the debtor need not remain eligible for relief under section 109 for a case to be reopened. In some cases, reopening may be proper even if the debtor is deceased. n52 Still, a motion to reopen must be made within a reasonable time. Laches are valid grounds for denial of the motion if the delay has been unreasonable and has prejudiced the party opposing reopening. n53 In the case of a small claim, the court may refuse to go to the time, trouble and expense of reopening the estate. n54

Procedure for Reopening a Case. The Bankruptcy Code does not expressly provide a formal procedure under section 350(b) for the reopening of a case, but the legislative history indicates that Congress intended that the Bankruptcy Rules would prescribe the procedure by which a case is reopened and how it would be conducted after reopening. n55 Bankruptcy Rule 5010 provides that a case is to be reopened on motion, n56 and this procedure replaces the earlier one.

The moving party must pay a filing fee in the same amount as the fee for filing a case under the same chapter on the date of reopening. The fee need not be paid if the reopening is to file a dischargeability complaint or to seek enforcement of the discharge order. n57 The court may waive this fee under appropriate circumstances or may defer payment of the fee from trustees pending discovery of additional assets. If payment is deferred, the fee shall be waived if no additional assets are discovered.

Verification of a motion to reopen is not explicitly required by Rule 5010; therefore, pursuant to Rule 9011(b), a motion to reopen need not be verified. The motion should state facts that reasonably satisfy the court of the requisite cause for reopening. n58 The court may take judicial notice of the record of the original proceeding before it. n59 The limited nature of the proceeding, however, indicates that the order of reopening is not a final adjudication of the substantive issues raised by the party who sought to reopen the case. n60 The order reopening an estate itself cannot be attacked in a collateral action instituted by the trustee after the estate has been reopened. n61 Under prior law, the reopening did not reinstate the discharged trustee. n62 This is also the case under the Bankruptcy Code. Rule 5010 provides that in a chapter 7, 12 or 13 case, a trustee shall not be appointed by the United States trustee unless the court determines that a trustee is necessary to protect the interests of creditors and the debtor or to insure efficient administration of the case. n63 If a trustee is necessary, the United States trustee will appoint a new trustee under the operative provisions in the applicable chapters of the Code.

Who May Move to Reopen a Case. Rule 5010 gives the debtor or any other party in interest the right to file a motion to reopen. n64 In addition, the bankruptcy court may reopen a case sua sponte. n65 Courts have disagreed about whether a former trustee has standing to move to reopen. n66 Neither the debtor n67 nor an adverse claimant n68 to the property has standing to oppose the reopening of the case to administer newly discovered assets or for the allowance of valid claims. When a case is reopened, for example, to recover and administer property fraudulently transferred, the order is conclusive as to the debtor and not subject to collateral attack by the debtor or the alleged fraudulent grantee on the ground of error or irregularity in the order appointing a trustee. n69 But a debtor has been held to have the right to oppose an attempt to reopen the case for the purpose of further examining the debtor to discover assets, n70 and the application to reopen on these grounds should be granted only if the moving papers reasonably satisfy the court that there are some unadministered assets belonging to the estate. n71

Although the debtor and creditors usually have standing to reopen a case, parties who are not in any of these categories may not have standing. For example, in Nintendo Co. v. Patten (In re Alpex Computer Corp.), n72 the Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit held that a corporation allegedly owing money to the debtor did not have standing to reopen the case, even if it might be affected by how the trustee interpreted the plan as permitting litigation against the corporation.

For a complete discussion of Code section 350, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 350.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 338 (1977); S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 49 (1978).

n2 In re Income Property Builders, Inc., 699 F.2d 963, 7 C.B.C.2d 4 (9th Cir. 1982); In re King, 214 B.R. 334 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 1997).

n3 In re Shondel, 950 F.2d 1301, 26 C.B.C.2d 193 (7th Cir. 1991).

n4 767 F.2d 1556, 1559 n.4 (11th Cir. 1985).

n5 In re Adair, 253 B.R. 85 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2000).

n6 173 F.3d 770 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 878, 120 S. Ct. 187, 145 L. Ed. 2d 157 (1999).

n7 See also Mendelsohn v. Ozer, 241 B.R. 503 (E.D.N.Y. 1997) (inadvertent closing report did not preclude reopening when trustee was actively pursuing asset through special counsel).

n8 See In re Halstead, 228 B.R. 915 (Bankr. S.D. Ind. 1999) (language of Rule 9024 providing that one-year limit does not apply to motions to reopen indicates intent that rule does not apply to motion to reopen).

n9 See In re Arboleda, 224 B.R. 640 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1998); In re Ozer, 38 C.B.C.2d 10, 208 B.R. 630 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1997).

n10 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 541.16 supra.

n11 E.g., Burnes v. Pemco Aeroplex, Inc., 291 F.3d 1282 (11th Cir. 2002).

n12 Lopez v. Specialty Restaurants Corp. (In re Lopez), 283 B.R. 22 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2002).

n13 In re Herzig, 96 B.R. 264 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1989).

n14 In re Soult, 894 F.2d 815 (6th Cir. 1990); Samuel v. Baitcher (In re Baitcher), 781 F.2d 1529 (11th Cir. 1986); Rosinski v. Boyd (In re Rosinski), 759 F.2d 539, 12 C.B.C.2d 923 (6th Cir. 1985); Stark v. St. Marys Hospital (In re Stark), 717 F.2d 322, 324, 9 C.B.C.2d 319, 321 (7th Cir. 1983).

n15 See Rosinski v. Boyd (In re Rosinski), 759 F.2d 539, 12 C.B.C.2d 923 (6th Cir. 1985).

n16 717 F.2d 322, 324, 9 C.B.C.2d 319, 321 (7th Cir. 1983). Accord In re Hendricks, 87 B.R. 114 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1988); In re Hood, 11 C.B.C.2d 819, 44 B.R. 775 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1985); see also In re Rivers, 89 B.R. 30 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1988); In re Rhodes, 88 B.R. 199 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1988).

n17 78 F.3d 110, 35 C.B.C.2d 698 (3d Cir. 1996).

n18 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 523.09.

n19 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3); Collier on Bankruptcy, 523.09; Judd v. Wolfe, 78 F.3d 110, 116 (3d Cir. 1996). Accord Watson v. Parker (In re Parker), 313 F.3d 1267 (10th Cir. 2002); In re Madaj, 149 F.3d 467 (6th Cir. 1998); In re Beezley, 994 F.2d 1433, 1439 (9th Cir. 1993).

n20 78 F.3d 110, 116, 35 C.B.C.2d 698, 706 (3d Cir. 1996).

n21 78 F.3d 110, 117, 35 C.B.C.2d 698, 707 (3d Cir. 1996); see also In re Moyette, 231 B.R. 494 (E.D.N.Y. 1999) (reopening warranted because Code places a premium on accurate scheduling of creditors).

n22 See In re Brown, 60 B.R. 983 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1986); In re Scism, 11 C.B.C.2d 137, 41 B.R. 384 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1984); La Bate & Conti, Inc. v. Davidson (In re Davidson), 10 C.B.C.2d 46, 36 B.R. 539 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1983).

n23 E.g., In re Stone, 10 F.3d 285, 30 C.B.C.2d 634 (5th Cir. 1994); Rosinski v. Boyd (In re Rosinski), 759 F.2d 539, 12 C.B.C.2d 923 (6th Cir. 1985).

n24 See In re Yazzie, 9 C.B.C.2d 62, 24 B.R. 576 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1982); Noble v. Yingling, 8 C.B.C.2d 1188, 29 B.R. 998 (D. Del. 1983); In re Quackenbos, 71 B.R. 693 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1987); In re Skakalski, 67 B.R. 448 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1986); In re Carilli, 15 C.B.C.2d 798, 65 B.R. 280 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1986); In re Palmquist, 54 B.R. 24 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1985); In re Moser, 27 B.R. 144 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1983); In re Hall, 7 C.B.C.2d 69, 22 B.R. 701 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1982).

n25 E.g., 11 U.S.C. § 546(a); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(a), (b). Rule 4003(b) was amended in 2000.

n26 In re Keller, 24 B.R. 720 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1982); see In re Menk, 241 B.R. 896 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1999) (reopening case is not necessary for court to exercise jurisdiction not relating to administration); Collier on Bankruptcy, 350.03[4].

n27 727 F.2d 324, 10 C.B.C.2d 94 (4th Cir. 1984).

n28 ITT Financial Servs. v. Ricks (In re Ricks), 19 C.B.C.2d 1437, 89 B.R. 73 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1988).

n29 In re Bianucci, 4 F.3d 526, 29 C.B.C.2d 948 (7th Cir. 1993); In re Chabot, 992 F.2d 891, 893 (9th Cir. 1993); In re McDonald, 30 C.B.C.2d 564, 161 B.R. 697 (D. Kan. 1993) (local rule setting strict deadline for lien avoidance was invalid).

n30 See Hawkins v. Landmark Fin. Co. (In re Hawkins), 727 F.2d 324, 10 C.B.C.2d 94 (4th Cir. 1984); Serafini v. Union Bank & Trust Co. (In re Serafini), 8 C.B.C.2d 1334, 30 B.R. 606 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1983), affd, 41 B.R. 880 (W.D. Pa. 1984); H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 338 (1977); S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 49 (1978).

n31 In re Parker, 64 B.R. 402 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1986); Noble v. Yingling, 37 B.R. 647 (D. Del. 1984); see also In re Ricks, 62 B.R. 681 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1986), affd, 19 C.B.C.2d 1437, 89 B.R. 73 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1988); Webb v. Robert A. Boroughs, Ltd. (In re Webb), 48 B.R. 454 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1985) (court will not condition postdischarge relief under section 522(f) on payment of attorneys fees and costs unless creditor can demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that debtor was guilty of unreasonable delay which prejudiced creditor).

n32 See, e.g., In re Skakalski, 67 B.R. 448 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1986); In re Carilli, 15 C.B.C.2d 798, 65 B.R. 280 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1986); In re Yazzie, 9 C.B.C.2d 62, 24 B.R. 576 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1982). But see In re Williams, 17 B.R. 204 (Bankr. W.D. Ky. 1982); In re Ridill, 1 B.R. 216 (C.D. Cal. 1979).

n33 Compare In re Cortez, 255 B.R. 324 (Bankr. D. Or. 2000), and In re Dolliver, 255 B.R. 251 (Bankr. D. Me. 2000), with In re White, 104 B.R. 951 (S.D. Ind. 1989). See also Collier on Bankruptcy, 546.02[2][b].

n34 In re Mesta Machine Co., 67 B.R. 147 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1985) (union was party in interest qualified to request case be reopened within Rule 5010); see also Board of Trustees v. Wright (In re Wright), 3 C.B.C.2d 284, 7 B.R. 197 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1980) (bankruptcy courts authority to accord relief even after the case is closed gives it the power to entertain a creditors petition to reopen the bankruptcy case to consider dischargeability of a student loan). In In re Danley, 5 C.B.C.2d 296, 14 B.R. 493 (Bankr. D.N.M. 1981), the bankruptcy court refused to reopen the case when no relief could be granted.

n35 See Perlman v. 322 West Seventy-second Street Co., 127 F.2d 716, 718-19 (2d Cir. 1942); In re Butts, 123 F.2d 250, 251 (2d Cir. 1941).

n36 See In re Lowerree, 157 F.2d 831 (2d Cir. 1946).

n37 Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n38 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 727.12A and Collier on Bankruptcy, 1328.08.

n39 11 U.S.C. § 524(a); In re Schneider, 126 B.R. 626 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1991); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 524.02[2][c].

n40 11 U.S.C. § 525; see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 525.

n41 11 U.S.C. § 523(c)(1); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 523.03 and Collier on Bankruptcy, 523.26; see also In re Wilborn, 37 C.B.C.2d 917, 205 B.R. 202 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1996) (creditor could reopen to seek dischargeability determination under section 523(a)(3)); In re Sobh, 61 B.R. 576 (E.D. Mich. 1986) (debtor could reopen case to seek new determination of whether student loan was dischargeable based on changed circumstances); In re Higgins, 161 B.R. 993 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1993) (court could reopen for determination under section 523(a)(9)).

n42 Staffer v. Predovich (In re Staffer), 306 F.3d 967 (9th Cir. 2002) (reopening case is not necessary for court to exercise jurisdiction not relating to administration).

n43 See In re Iannacone, 21 B.R. 153 (D. Mass. 1982); In re Brice, 79 B.R. 310 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1987); In re Dabbs, 72 B.R. 73 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1987); In re Coppi, 75 B.R. 81 (Bankr. S.D. Iowa 1987); see also In re Strano, 248 B.R. 493 (Bankr. D.N.J. 2000) (decision not to reopen because of pending state court litigation of same issue is a decision to abstain).

n44 See In re Frontier Enterprises, 70 B.R. 356 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1987) (blatant error in distribution of proceeds of estate was compelling cause to reopen); In re Mesta Mach. Co., 67 B.R. 147 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1985) (unions motion to reopen to provide for accounting was cause within section 350(b)).

n45 In re Case, 937 F.2d 1014, 25 C.B.C.2d 368 (5th Cir. 1991). But see In re Zurn, 290 F.3d 861 (7th Cir. 2002) (affirming refusal to reopen case after judgment which had been paid through chapter 11 plan was reversed; debtor left to state court remedies).

n46 In re Walters, 22 C.B.C.2d 1747, 113 B.R. 602 (Bankr. D.S.D. 1990); see also In re Weber, 283 B.R. 630 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2002) (case reopened to void judgment obtained in violation of automatic stay).

n47 See, e.g., Hawkins v. Landmark Fin. Co. (In re Hawkins), 727 F.2d 324, 10 C.B.C.2d 94 (4th Cir. 1984), in which the Fourth Circuit held that a bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to reopen a case for a lien avoidance complaint when the debtor did not seek reopening until after the creditor had incurred court costs and counsel fees in seeking lien enforcement in state court.

n48 In re Shondel, 950 F.2d 1301, 26 C.B.C.2d 193 (7th Cir. 1991) (case reopened to modify discharge injunction so that creditor could proceed against insurance policy not scheduled by debtor).

n49 Virgin Islands Bureau of Internal Revenue v. St. Croix Hotel Corp., 14 C.B.C.2d 1098, 60 B.R. 412 (D.V.I. 1986).

n50 In re Young, 16 C.B.C.2d 1090, 70 B.R. 968 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1987); see also In re Peterson, 24 C.B.C.2d 571, 118 B.R. 801 (Bankr. D.N.M. 1990).

n51 See Perlman v. 322 West Seventy-second Street Co., 127 F.2d 716 (2d Cir. 1949); Grand Union Equipment Co. v. Lippner, 167 F.2d 958 (2d Cir. 1948); In re Lowerree, 157 F.2d 831 (2d Cir. 1946); In re Consolidated Textile Corp., 89 F. Supp. 315 (S.D.N.Y. 1949). The power to reopen estates for cause shown was conferred without qualification by Section 2a(8) of the Bankruptcy Act. The general rule was that upon seasonable application, the court in its discretion and for good cause shown could reopen the estate and set aside the decree, unless rights of third persons had intervened so as to make reopening inequitable.

n52 In re Walters, 22 C.B.C.2d 1747, 113 B.R. 602 (Bankr. D.S.D. 1990).

n53 H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 338 (1977); S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 49 (1978); see In re Plumlee, 236 B.R. 606 (E.D. Va. 1999) (no fixed time limit, but longer delay requires more compelling reason to reopen); In re Ashe, 228 B.R. 457 (C.D. Cal. 1998); In re Borer, 73 B.R. 29 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1987) (debtors former attorney who withdrew from case and did not file application for attorneys fees for eight months and otherwise failed to pursue payment was guilty of laches and motion to reopen was denied); In re Pagan, 59 B.R. 394 (D.P.R. 1986) (creditors motion to reopen was barred by laches because, although they received no formal notice, creditors were aware of the bankruptcy and discharge and waited four years before seeking to reopen); see also In re Yazzie, 9 C.B.C.2d 62, 24 B.R. 576 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1982); Noble v. Yingling, 8 C.B.C.2d 1188, 29 B.R. 998 (D. Del. 1983); In re Quackenbos, 71 B.R. 693 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1987); In re Skakalski, 67 B.R. 448 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1986); In re Carilli, 15 C.B.C.2d 798, 65 B.R. 280 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1986); In re Palmquist, 54 B.R. 24 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1985); In re Moser, 27 B.R. 144 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1983); In re Hall, 7 C.B.C.2d 69, 22 B.R. 701 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1982).

n54 In re Smith & Co., 52 F.2d 212 (D. Neb. 1931).

n55 Pub. L. No. 95-598, § 405(d) (1978); H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 338 (1977); S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 49 (1978).

n56 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 5010 infra; see also In re Collins, 173 F.3d 924 (4th Cir.) (motion to reopen is not filed against any particular party and therefore is not a suit against a state barred by Eleventh Amendment).

n57 Bankruptcy Court Miscellaneous Fee Schedule, Item 11, promulgated pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1930(b), reprinted in Ch. App. 9 supra; see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4007(b) (A case may be reopened without payment of an additional filing fee for the purpose of filing a complaint to obtain a determination [of a debts dischargeability.]).

n58 Schofield v. Moriyama, 24 F.2d 473 (9th Cir. 1928); In re Snyder, 4 F.2d 627 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 269 U.S. 556, 46 S. Ct. 19, 70 L. Ed. 409 (1925); In re Graff, 250 F. 997 (2d Cir. 1918); In re Newton, 107 F. 429 (8th Cir. 1901).

n59 Pollack v. Meyer Bros. Drug Co., 233 F. 861 (8th Cir. 1916).

n60 In re Dixon, 49 F. Supp. 977 (S.D. Ga. 1943); see In re Leigh, 272 F. 678 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, Davis v. Baechtel, 256 U.S. 698, 41 S. Ct. 537, 65 L. Ed. 1177 (1921); In re Ryburn, 145 F. 662 (D. Conn. 1906).

n61 Tuffy v. Nichols, 120 F.2d 906 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 314 U.S. 660, 62 S. Ct. 113, 86 L. Ed. 528 (1941); see In re Joslyn 171 F.2d 159 (7th Cir. 1948) (order of reopening not subject to collateral attack before another district judge).

n62 In re Rochester Baths Co., 222 F. 22 (2d Cir. 1915); In re Hannevig, 25 F. Supp. 335 (S.D.N.Y. 1938) (it is for the creditors to elect a trustee to act for the reopened estate); In re Minners, 253 F. 300 (S.D.N.Y. 1918); Stephan v. Merchants Collateral Corp., 256 N.Y. 418, 176 N.E. 824 (1931).

n63 The 1991 Advisory Committee Note to Rule 5010 states that in most reopened cases, a trustee is not needed because there are no assets to be administered and that, in the interest of judicial economy, the rule was amended so that a trustee would not be appointed unless the United States trustee or a party in interest seeks the appointment of a trustee in the reopened case.

n64 See Nintendo Co. v. Patten (In re Alpex Computer Corp.), 71 F.3d 353 (10th Cir. 1995) (notwithstanding expansive definition of party in interest, for purposes of reopening a bankruptcy case, the concept of standing is implicitly confined to debtors, creditors, or trustees, each with a particular and direct stake in reopening cognizable under the Bankruptcy Code); In re Ayoub, 72 B.R. 808 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1987) (only creditors have standing to seek to reopen for the purpose of administering additional assets; debtor did not have standing to file motion to reopen to assert exemption claim to state court jury verdict obtained by debtor during bankruptcy case); see also In re Young, 16 C.B.C.2d 1090, 70 B.R. 968 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1987) (representative of the successor-in-interest to the most significant asset in the former estate had standing to reopen case).

n65 In re Mullendore, 741 F.2d 306 (10th Cir. 1984) (construing former Rule 515); In re Searles, 70 B.R. 266 (D.R.I. 1987); In re Tall, 79 B.R. 291 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1987); In re Warren, 7 C.B.C.2d 842, 24 B.R. 846 (Bankr. W.D. Ky. 1982); see also In re Thomas, 204 F.2d 788 (7th Cir. 1953).

n66 See In re DeLash, 260 B.R. 4 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 2000) (it is United States trustee who should make decision whether to seek reopening because trustee's appointment was terminated); In re Ayoub, 72 B.R. 808 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1987), in which a former trustee who had been discharged when the case was closed was held to have no cognizable interest in the case. But see Mendelsohn v. Ozer, 241 B.R. 503 (E.D.N.Y. 1997) (trustee has standing to move to reopen inadvertently closed case); White v. Boston, 104 B.R. 951 (S.D. Ind. 1989); In re Stanke, 11 C.B.C.2d 79, 41 B.R. 379 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1984) (former trustee was a party in interest who could move to reopen).

n67 Williams v. Rice, 30 F.2d 814 (5th Cir. 1929). But see In re Hopkins, 11 F. Supp. 831 (W.D.N.Y. 1934) (discharged debtor had the right to move for vacation of an ex parte order reopening his estate).

n68 Hunter v. Commerce Trust Co., 55 F.2d 1 (8th Cir. 1932); In re Hopkins, 11 F. Supp. 831 (W.D.N.Y. 1934).

n69 Ivester v. McNicholas, 157 Ga. 755, 122 S.E. 417 (1924).

n70 In re Chapman, 55 F.2d 965 (N.D.N.Y. 1930).

n71 In re Chapman, 55 F.2d 965 (N.D.N.Y. 1930).

n72 71 F.3d 353, 357 (10th Cir. 1995).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

102 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on Denial of Compensation and Reimbursement under Section 328(c)

2008 Emerging Issues 1520

Collier on Denial of Compensation and Reimbursement under Section 328(c)

By Collier

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: Just as no man is an island, rarely can one area of the law be fully understood without also considering another area of the law. This concept can likewise be applied to the Bankruptcy Code. In the following article, section 328(c) of the Code is considered in conjunction with sections 327(a) and 1103(b) and case law interpreting the same is explored and analyzed.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Bankruptcy Code Section 328(c) should be read in conjunction with sections 327(a) and 1103(b) of the Code. Those sections govern the employment of professional persons by a trustee or debtor in possession and a creditors committee, respectively, and require that professionals be disinterested and not hold adverse interest to the debtors estate. Sections 327(a) and 1103(b) set forth the standards for the employment of professionals; section 328(c) sets forth the sanctions for violations. Accordingly, many cases analyzing the appropriate remedy when a professional is not disinterested or has an actual conflict of interest tainting employment discuss not only the standards under 327 or 1103, but also the permissible sanctions under section 328(c).

Exceptions Specified in Section 328(c). Three exceptions are listed in section 328(c). The exceptions permit the retention of a professional who might otherwise be unable to comply strictly with the requirements of section 327. They also make clear that certain relationships do not, per se, create an appearance of impropriety on the professionals part:

(1) Section 327(c) provides that the representation of, or employment by, a creditor will not, in and of itself, disqualify a professional person for employment by a trustee in a liquidation case under chapter 7 or a reorganization case under chapter 11 absent an actual conflict of interest; n1

(2) The trustee is permitted, subject to court approval under section 327(e), to employ, for a specified special purpose, other than to represent the trustee in conducting the bankruptcy case, an attorney who has previously represented the debtor. The employment must be in the best interest of the estate and the attorney may not hold or represent an interest adverse to the debtor or to the estate regarding the subject of such attorneys employment; n2 and

(3) Section 1107(b) provides that a person is not disqualified for employment by a debtor in possession under section 327 solely because of employment by or representation of the debtor before the commencement of the case. n3

Requirement of Disinterestedness; Waiver. The requirement that a professional be disinterested cannot be waived or circumvented by agreement or consent among creditors and the debtor. In In re Amdura Corp.,ⁿ⁴ the bankruptcy court specifically rejected the notion that the debtors law firms could obtain a waiver from the debtors and a lender concerning a possible conflict of interest. It noted that a court:

must also recognize that activities and multiple representation that may be acceptable in commercial settings, particularly with the informed consent of clients, may not be acceptable in bankruptcy.

Section 327 of the Code does not permit excusing the limitation of those provisions by waiver or by the trustees consent to the representation of dual interests. [W]hat may be acceptable in a commercial setting, where all of the entities involved are solvent and creditors are being paid, is not acceptable when those entities are insolvent and there are concerns about intercompany transfers and the preference of one entity and its creditors at, perhaps, the expense of another.ⁿ⁵

Holding or Representing an Adverse Interest. Professional persons holding or representing an interest adverse to that of the estate with respect to the subject matter of their employment may be denied compensation and reimbursement pursuant to section 328(c).ⁿ⁶ In Rome v. Braunstein,ⁿ⁷ the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit denied fees to an accounting firm retained by the creditors committee due to a conflict of interest arising from the accounting firms representation of the committee as well as one of the debtors largest creditors. The court also withheld compensation for the debtors attorney for failing to provide the bankruptcy court with spontaneous, timely and complete disclosureⁿ⁸ of the adverse interest to the debtors estate. In Rome, the attorney, after being retained as counsel for the debtor, also began counseling the debtors president and sole shareholder, as well as the presidents secretary. The court found that the attorneys failure to make full and spontaneous disclosure of financial transactions and to obtain explicit court authorization [for additional representations], provided sufficient ground for the discretionary denial of compensation under section 328(c).ⁿ⁹

Similarly, in In re Paine,ⁿ¹⁰ the court withheld all compensation for the debtors attorney who failed to disclose representation of the unsecured creditors in the case. The court stated:

One Court has explained that the policy behind the fee penalty is that of preventing the dishonest practitioner from [engaging in] fraudulent conduct, to preclude the honest practitioner from putting himself in a position where he may be required to choose between conflicting duties .

In other words, the penalty serves a prophylactic purpose. It strikes not only at the actual evil, but at the tendency of divided loyalty to create evil.ⁿ¹¹

The mere appearance of impropriety is sufficient to disqualify the attorney for the debtor regardless of whether an actual conflict exists.ⁿ¹²

In In re Paine,ⁿ¹³ the court found that an actual conflict existed, which could not be cured by mere disclosure. All compensation sought by the attorney was denied, and the attorney was directed to reimburse the estate for all fees received during the period when the conflict existed.ⁿ¹⁴ Other courts have also held that when a debtors attorney fails to disclose representation of the debtor prepetition and that it also simultaneously represented the debtor and its president in a questionable stock redemption transaction, disgorgement of fees previously paid, denial of compensation and disqualification is warranted.ⁿ¹⁵

The provisions of section 328(c) are consistent with those of section 327(a), which permit the trustee to employ only professional persons who do not have or represent an interest adverse to the estate. Because the denial of compensation and reimbursement of expenses after services have been performed may be draconian and inherently unfair, this sanction should not be rigidly applied in the absence of actual injury or prejudice to the debtors estate.ⁿ¹⁶

Penalty for Conflicts of Interest. Section 328(c) provides a penalty for conflicts of interestⁿ¹⁷ by authorizing the court to deny compensation for services and reimbursement of expenses if the professional person is not disinterested or if such professional person represents or holds an interest adverse to the estate on the matter on which such person is employed. n18

Available sanctions include disqualification and the denial or disgorgement of all fees. n19 Disallowance may occur if a professional at any time either is not a disinterested person or represents or holds an interest adverse to the interest of the estate with respect to the matter on which such professional person is employed. n20 If the court finds that the trustee failed to make diligent inquiry into facts that would require denial of compensation under section 328(c) or, with knowledge of such facts, employed a professional person who is not disinterested, or holds or represents an interest adverse to the estate with respect to the subject matter of the employment, the trustee also may be denied compensation and reimbursement payments.

The decision whether to deny fees to a professional who is not disinterested is within the discretion of the bankruptcy court. For example, in Electro-Wire Products, Inc. v. Sirote & Permutt, P.C. (In re Prince), n21 the Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit held that the bankruptcy courts power to deny fees under section 328(c) is permissive and should not be rigidly applied in the absence of actual injury or prejudice to a debtors estate. n22 The court stated that the language of 11 U.S.C. § 328(c) permits a court to deny compensation to professionals found not to be disinterested persons, but does not require a denial of fees in those instances. n23 The court found, however, that denial of fees was appropriate in an egregious case, such as Prince, in which the debtors attorney failed to advise the court of multiple representation of the individual debtor and spouse in estate planning matters and the corporation owned by the debtor. n24

Under section 328(c), the court may deny compensation for services rendered and reimbursement of expenses incurred by a professional person if the professional was not a disinterested person during the period of employment. n25 The sanction contained in section 328(c) ensures the enforcement of the Codes requirement that professional persons be disinterested. The Code enumerates certain disqualifying affiliations, connections and interests that may prevent a professional person from receiving compensation for services rendered and reimbursement of expenses incurred.

The sanctions for violating the prohibition against conflicts of interest ensures that a professional person employed by a trustee or creditors or equity security holders committee not have any personal interest concerning matters of the debtors estate that might impair the impartial and detached judgment required in the administration of a case. n26

The term disinterested person is defined in section 101 of the Bankruptcy Code. n27 A creditor, an equity security holder or an insider cannot be a disinterested person. Before the 2005 amendments to the Code, a person could not have been disinterested if the person had acted as an investment banker for any outstanding security of the debtor. Neither could an investment banker have been disinterested if it had had anything to do with the offer, sale or issuance of a security of the debtor within three years of the date of the filing of the petition. That prohibition was eliminated by the 2005 amendments. n28 The definition continues to provide that a former director, officer or employee of the debtor who served in such capacity within two years before the date of the filing of the petition cannot be considered disinterested. And, of course, the requirement remains that the person not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate of any class of creditors or equity security holders by reason of any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in, the debtor.

For a complete discussion of Code section 328, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 328.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

n1 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 327.03.

n2 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 327.03.

n3 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 327.05.

n4 121 B.R. 862 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1990).

n5 121 B.R. 862, 866 (citations omitted); see also In re American Printers & Lithographers, Inc., 148 B.R. 862, 867 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1992) (A [law] firm that is not disinterested may not represent a debtor even if that debtor has consented to such representation and waived the conflict.). But see Kaiser Group Intl, Inc. v. Nova Hut a.s. (In re Kaiser Group Intl, Inc.), 272 B.R. 846 (Bankr. D. Del. 2002) (waiver approved); In re Lee, 20 C.B.C.2d 510, 517, 94 B.R. 172, 179 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1988) (a written waiver of conflict from the debtor, all creditors and the United States trustee may be permissible).

n6 For a discussion of whether a professional person holds or represents an adverse interest, including cases discussing professionals disqualification for potential versus actual conflicts of interest, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 327.

n7 19 F.3d 54, 30 C.B.C.2d 1346 (1st Cir. 1994).

n8 19 F.3d 54, 59, 30 C.B.C.2d 1346, 1352.

n9 19 F.3d 54, 60, 30 C.B.C.2d 1346, 1352-53.

n10 14 B.R. 272 (W.D. Mich. 1981).

n11 14 B.R. 272, 274-75 (citations omitted); see In re 765 Assocs., 14 B.R. 449, 451 (Bankr. D. Haw. 1981) (compensation denied to attorneys for the debtor since counsel had a conflict of interest due to simultaneous representation of a corporation which was controlled by a major creditor of the estate).

n12 See, e.g., In re Leslie Fay Cos., Inc., 175 B.R. 525 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1994) (failure of debtors counsel to disclose potential conflicts which might have impaired its investigation into fraud by the debtors senior management warranted disgorgement of fees but not disqualification).

n13 14 B.R. 272 (W.D. Mich. 1981).

n14 See In re American Energy Trading, Inc., 291 B.R. 154 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2003); In re CVC, Inc., 120 B.R. 874 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1990) (debtors accountants denied all fees and discharged from further services); see also In re Temp-Way Corp., 95 B.R. 343 (E.D. Pa. 1989) (representation of debtor corporation as well as current and former shareholder constituted an impermissible conflict requiring disqualification in light of potential avoidance actions against the shareholders); In re Condor Sys., Inc., 302 B.R. 55, 73-5 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2003) (negotiations between financial advisor and principals of debtor regarding business venture was undisclosed connection warranting denial of $500,000 in fees and expenses); In re Carrousel Motels, Inc., 97 B.R. 898 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1989) (corporate debtors attorneys denied fees for conflict of interest for also representing sole shareholder and owner of debtor; the debtor paid a $3.9 million dividend to sole shareholder represented by the debtors law firm); cf. In re Maddox, 92 B.R. 707 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 1988) (partial denial of fees to debtors attorneys for representation of both the debtor corporation and one of its principals who undertook a battle for corporate control of the debtor in possession; a complete denial would serve only to punish the law firm, which believed that it was diligently representing the client as instructed by the clients owner and manager); Collier on Bankruptcy, 327.03.

n15 In re Granite Sheet Metal Works, 159 B.R. 840 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 1993); see also In re American Energy Trading, Inc., 291 B.R. 154 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2003).

n16 See In re National Liquidators, Inc., 182 B.R. 186, 192 (S.D. Ohio 1995) (although disclosure is inadequate, denial of all compensation is inequitable and draconian); cf. In re Laurent Watch Co., 539 F.2d 1231 (9th Cir. 1976); Stolkin v. Nachman, 472 F.2d 222 (7th Cir. 1973); In re Olson, 10 C.B.C.2d 798, 36 B.R. 74 (D. Neb. 1983).

n17 See Kravit, Gass & Weber, S.C. v. Michel (In re Crivello), 134 F.3d 831, 839 (7th Cir. 1998) (finding that bankruptcy court should punish a willful failure to disclose conflicts as severely as an attempt to put forth a fraud upon the court); accord Miller v. United States Trustee (In re Independent Engg Co.), 197 F.3d 13 (1st Cir. 1999); Law Offices of Nicholas A. Franke v. Tiffany (In re Lewis), 113 F.3d 1040 (9th Cir. 1997); Mapother & Mapother, P.S.C. v. Cooper (In re Downs), 103 F.3d 472 (6th Cir. 1996); United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138 (3d Cir. 1994); In re McNar, 116 B.R. 746, 750 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1990) (The only truly safe harbor for those professionals subject to the stringent fiduciary standards of §§ 327 and 1103, is to represent only a single client when that client is in, or likely headed for bankruptcy court.).

n18 H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 329 (1977); S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 39 (1978); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 326.04.

n19 Law Offices of Nicholas A. Franke v. Tiffany (In re Lewis), 113 F.3d 1040 (9th Cir. 1997) (finding that all postpetition fees are properly ordered to be disgorged upon failure to supplement initial disclosure); Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 30 C.B.C.2d 1346 (1st Cir. 1994); Schroeder v. Rouse (In re Redding), 263 B.R. 874 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2001); In re El San Juan Hotel Corp., 239 B.R. 635 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 1999); see also LeBlanc v. Salem (In re Mailman Steam Carpet Cleaning Corp.), 212 F.3d 632, 636 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 960, 120 S. Ct. 2661, 147 L. Ed. 2d 275 (2000).

n20 11 U.S.C. § 328(c); see Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 30 C.B.C.2d 1346 (1st Cir. 1994) (the fact that an attorney was not disinterested at the commencement of the case is immaterial since section 328(c) permits disallowance of compensation at any time a professional ceases to be disinterested or represents an interest adverse to the estate); Pruss v. Pelofsky (In re Sauer), 222 B.R. 604 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 1998).

n21 40 F.3d 356, 32 C.B.C.2d 998 (11th Cir. 1994).

n22 See, e.g., In re XGW Excavating Co., Inc., 111 B.R. 469 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1990) (the denial of compensation is discretionary with the court and not mandated by section 328(c)).

n23 40 F.3d 356, 359, 32 C.B.C.2d 998, 1002 (11th Cir. 1994) (emphasis in original).

n24 See also, e.g., Gray v. English, 30 F.3d 1319, 31 C.B.C.2d 1278 (10th Cir. 1994); Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 30 C.B.C.2d 1346 (1st Cir. 1994).

n25 The definition of disinterested person found in section 101 of the Code is adopted from section 158 of former Chapter X of the Bankruptcy Act and former Rule 10-202(c)(2), with some modifications. H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 310 (1977); S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 23 (1978); see also Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 101.

n26 The Law Offices of Ivan W. Halperin v. Occidental Fin. Group, Inc. (In re Occidental Financial Group, Inc.), 40 F.3d 1059, 32 C.B.C.2d 515 (9th Cir. 1994) (disgorgement of compensation paid to debtors attorney after attorney failed to also disclose representation of the debtors controlling shareholders, partners, officers and directors during the debtors cases); In re Chestnut Hill Mortgage Corp., 158 B.R. 547 (D. Mass. 1993) (denying compensation to the debtors attorney due to undisclosed conflicts of interest including representation of the debtors president and sole shareholder, the purchaser of the debtors assets, and service as an officer of the debtor postpetition), aff'd, Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 30 C.B.C.2d 1346 (1st Cir. 1994); see also In re National Liquidators, Inc., 182 B.R. 186, 192 (S.D. Ohio 1995) (although disclosure may be inadequate, denial of all compensation is inequitable and draconian).

n27 11 U.S.C. § 101(14); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 101.14.

n28 Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 414 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

103 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on Denial of Discharge Based on Previous Discharge in a Chapter 7 Case

2008 Emerging Issues 1522

Collier on Denial of Discharge Based on Previous Discharge in a Chapter 7 Case

By Collier

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: Debtors beware: if you have previously been granted a discharge in a Chapter 7 case, you can be denied a discharge in your current case if it is filed too soon after your previous discharge. What are the relevant time periods that prevent successive discharges? The following article explains the applicability of different time periods as they apply to Chapter 7, 11 and 12 cases.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE:

Bankruptcy Code section 727(a)(8) provides that a debtor should be denied a discharge in the current case if the debtor has been granted a discharge under chapter 7 or 11 in a case commenced within eight years before the date of the filing of the petition. The relevant time period was changed from six years to eight years by a 2005 amendment to section 727(a)(8). n1 Section 727(a)(9) provides for a discharge denial if the debtor has been granted a discharge under chapter 12 or 13 in a case commenced within six years before the date of the filing of the petition unless the payments under the plan in the chapter 12 or 13 case totaled at least 100 percent of the allowed unsecured claims, or if payments totaled 70 percent of the claims and the debtors plan was proposed by the debtor in good faith and was the debtors best effort.

Prior Case Under Chapter 7 or 11; 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(8). Section 727(a)(8) may be invoked only when a discharge has been granted in a prior chapter 7 or 11 case under the Code. n2 It had been held under the former Act that a court could take judicial notice of a discharge in a prior proceeding and deny a discharge in the second proceeding even in the absence of an objection. n3 Although section 727(a)(8) could be read to permit a sua sponte denial, Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4004(c) n4 seems to preclude such an action. Rule 4004(c) permits a sua sponte dismissal only if the debtor is not an individual n5 or if the debtor has filed a waiver of discharge. n6

The fact that a discharge has been granted does not preclude a debtor from again becoming a debtor within eight years of commencement of the prior case, although no discharge may be granted in the second proceeding. Even in a proceeding in which the debtor is not entitled to a discharge, a debtor may still obtain protection for property, since the exemptions and lien avoidance powers provided by section 522 of the Code would apply as in any other case. n7

In chapter 11 cases, confirmation of a plan operates as a discharge. n8 Section 727(a)(8) expressly provides that if a debtor has been granted a discharge by having a plan confirmed under section 1141 in a case commenced within eight years before the date of the filing of the petition, the debtor must be denied a discharge on account of the confirmation of a plan in the prior case.

Prior Case Under Chapter 12 or 13; 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(9). Section 727(a)(9) bars the discharge of a debtor who has been granted a discharge by the confirmation of a plan under section 1228 or 1328 of the Code in a case commenced within six years before the date of the filing of the petition in the earlier case, unless (1) the payments under the plan in the chapter 12 or 13 case totaled at least 100 percent of the allowed unsecured claims, or (2) payments totaled 70 percent of the claims and the debtors plan was proposed by the debtor in good faith and was the debtors best effort. However, in the reverse situation, a debtor who has been discharged in a chapter 7 case filed less than six years before the commencement of a chapter 13 case is not prevented from obtaining confirmation of a chapter 13 plan n9 or, unless the debtor received a chapter 7, 11 or 12 discharge in a case filed within four years before a subsequent chapter 13 case, from obtaining a discharge under section 11 USCS § 1328. n10 Instead, the debtors chapter 13 plan is subject simply to the good faith requirement in section 1325(a)(3) as well as the other confirmation standards. n11 When the debtors plan represents a disguised liquidation filed under chapter 13 to avoid section 727, it is likely to be held not to be in good faith. n12 When the debtors plan proposes some payments to creditors or is otherwise distinguishable from a liquidation, however, it may be confirmed despite a previous bankruptcy discharge. n13 Section 1225(a)(3) applies similarly to a chapter 12 debtor. n14

With regard to the exception that allows a chapter 7 discharge within six years of the earlier chapter 12 or 13 case if the debtor paid 100 percent of the allowed unsecured claims or paid at least 70 percent of them in a good faith plan in which the debtors best effort was applied, the legislative history indicates that what constitutes best effort was to be decided on a case-by-case basis:

In determining whether a plan is the debtors best effort the court will evaluate several factors. Different facts and circumstances in cases under chapter 13 operate to make any rule of thumb of limited usefulness. The court should balance the debtors assets, including family income, health insurance, retirement benefits, and other wealth, a sum which is generally determinable, against the foreseeable necessary living expenses of the debtor and the debtors dependents, which unfortunately is rarely quantifiable. In determining the expenses of the debtor and the debtors dependents, the court should consider the stability of the debtors employment, if any, the age of the debtor, the number of the debtors dependents and their ages, the condition of equipment and tools necessary to the debtors employment or to the operation of his business, and other foreseeable expenses that the debtor will be required to pay during the period of the plan, other than payments to be made to creditors under the plan. n15

The debtor should be able to obtain a ruling on whether the plan is the debtors best effort in the initial chapter 13 case, n16 perhaps by inclusion of a provision constituting a finding of best effort in either the plan or the order confirming the plan.

Measurement of Time Period. The eight years begins to run as of the date the first case is commenced, i.e., the date the petition is filed, n17 and ends as of the date that the subsequent case is begun by the filing of the petition. n18

For a complete discussion of Code chapter 727, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 727.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

n1 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(8), as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 312(1) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n2 See Patterson Dental Co. v. Mendoza (In re Mendoza), 6 C.B.C.2d 48, 16 B.R. 990 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1982) (holding that a debtor who had been discharged in a case commenced within six years of a subsequent case could receive a discharge in the later case if the prior discharge had been revoked; however, under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(9), the debts that had been scheduled in the prior case were ruled to be nondischargeable).

n3 In re Hammond, 9 F. Supp. 628 (D. Kan. 1934). But see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(c), discussed at Collier on Bankruptcy, 727.01[2].

n4 Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(c), as amended by the 2000 and 2002 amendments to the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure.

n5 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 727.01.

n6 See Collier on Bankruptcy, 727.12.

n7 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 522.

n8 11 U.S.C. § 1141(d)(1); see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1141.05.

n9 See Johnson v. Home State Bank, 501 U.S. 78, 87, 111 S. Ct. 2150, 2156, 115 L. Ed. 2d 66, 24 C.B.C.2d 1171 (1991); In re Baker, 736 F.2d 481 (8th Cir. 1984) (reversing a bankruptcy court's summary dismissal of a chapter 13 case based solely on the fact that the debtor had obtained a bankruptcy discharge four years earlier; holding that a prior discharge does not automatically bar a chapter 13 case); In re Hurd, 2 C.B.C.2d 190, 4 B.R. 551 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1980) (analyzing the relationship between section 727 and section 1325); Collier on Bankruptcy, 1300.40[4]; see also Perry v. Commerce Loan Co., 383 U.S. 392, 86 S. Ct. 852, 15 L. Ed. 2d 827 (1966), reh'g denied, 384 U.S. 934 (1966) (holding that a previous discharge in bankruptcy would not bar confirmation of a wage earner's extension" type plan under former Chapter XIII; result followed by the Code in all chapter 13 and chapter 11 cases).

n10 11 U.S.C. § 1328(f), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 312(2) (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n11 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1325.

n12 Tenney v. Terry (In re Terry), 630 F.2d 634, 2 C.B.C.2d 1237 (8th Cir. 1980) (plan with no payments to any creditor).

n13 In re Baker, 736 F.2d 481 (8th Cir. 1984).

n14 See Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1225.

n15 124 Cong. Rec. H11,098 (Sept. 28, 1978); S.17415 (Oct. 6, 1978).

n16 124 Cong. Rec. H11,098 (Sept. 28, 1978); S.17415 (Oct. 6, 1978).

n17 See 11 U.S.C. §§ 301303, as amended by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n18 Riske v. Lyons (In re Lyons), 162 B.R. 242 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1993) (denying a discharge in a case that had been commenced as a chapter 13 case within the six year period and converted to chapter 7 after the expiration of the six-year period).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

104 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Exceptions to the Stay Involving Certain Residential Property Evictions

2008 Emerging Issues 1531

Collier on Exceptions to the Stay Involving Certain Residential Property Evictions

By Collier

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: This Emerging Issues Analysis covers the issues under which the automatic stay does not apply, the filing of a certification with the petition by the debtor that negates the effect of section 362(b)(22) for at least a period of 30 days, the filing of an objection by the lessor to the certification, and the inapplicability of the automatic stay if the residential property eviction involved the endangerment of or illegal drug the property.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: Residential Property Evictions Involving Prepetition Judgment for Possession; 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(22). Bankruptcy Code section 362(b)(22) provides that the automatic stay under section 362(a)(3), subject to the provisions of section 362(l), does not apply to the continuation of an eviction, unlawful detainer action, or similar proceeding involving residential property in which the debtor resides as a tenant under a lease or rental agreement if the lessor has obtained a judgment for possession of such property against the debtor before the commencement of the bankruptcy case. n1 This stay exception is limited to the continuation of proceedings stayed under section 362(a)(3), which are proceedings that seek to obtain possession of property of the estate or of property from the estate, or to exercise control over property of the estate. n2 Thus, if the lessor has obtained a judgment for possession that includes a money judgment against the debtor for back rent owed, relief from the stay under section 362(a)(6) must still be sought in order to enforce the judgment against the debtor, or at least that portion of the judgment representing the claim for back rent. Section 362(b)(22) also does not apply to actions stayed under section 362(a)(1) to recover a prepetition claim against the debtor, including further proceedings that may be necessary to enforce the judgment for possession.

The stay exception under subsection (b)(22) applies only if the prepetition judgment for possession relates to rental property in which the debtor resides under a lease or rental agreement. It does not apply, for example, to an eviction judgment obtained by a purchaser of property at foreclosure who does not have a lease or rental agreement with a debtor occupying the property. n3

Since the stay exception under subsection (b)(22) is based on the existence of a prepetition judgment for possession, it should not apply if the judgment for possession has been vacated or is no longer valid under applicable nonbankruptcy law at the time the petition is filed. This could occur, for example, if the judgment for possession has been appealed prepetition and the effect of the appeal under applicable nonbankruptcy law is that the judgment is vacated pending a de novo trial or other proceeding on appeal.

Section 362(l)(1) provides that the stay exception under section 362(b)(22) will not apply until 30 days after the commencement of the case if the debtor files with the petition and serves on the lessor a certification under penalty of perjury that (1) circumstances exist in which the debtor would be permitted under applicable nonbankruptcy law to cure the entire monetary default that gave rise to the judgment for possession, and (2) the debtor, or an adult dependent of the debtor, has deposited with the clerk of the bankruptcy court any rent that would become due during the 30-day period after the filing of the petition. Thus, the filing of a certification with the petition by the debtor negates the effect of section 362(b)(22), at least for a period of 30 days, and the pending eviction proceeding is automatically stayed under section 362(a)(3) upon the filing of the petition.

Section 362(l)(2) provides that the automatic stay which takes effect as a result of section 362(l)(1) may remain in force, even beyond the 30-day period following the filing of the petition, if the debtor, or an adult dependent of the debtor, files with the court and serves on the lessor within the 30-day period after the filing of the petition, an additional certification attesting that the entire monetary default that gave rise to the judgment for possession has been cured under applicable nonbankruptcy law.

The lessor may file and serve on the debtor an objection to any certification filed under section 362(l)(1) or (l)(2).ⁿ⁴ The court shall then hold a hearing within 10 days of the filing of the objection to determine whether the certification is true. If the court grants the lessors objection, the stay exception under section 362(b)(22) shall apply immediately and the lessor may proceed with court process to recover possession of the property without seeking relief from the stay provided under section 362(a)(3). The clerk shall also immediately serve upon the lessor and the debtor a certified copy of the courts order upholding the lessors objection.

Section 362(l)(5)(A) requires the debtor to indicate on the petition whether a judgment for possession against the debtor has been obtained by a residential lessor, and to provide the name and address of the lessor on the petition and on any certification filed under the subsection.ⁿ⁵ If the debtor indicates on the petition that a lessor has obtained a judgment for possession, the stay exception under section 362(b)(22) shall apply immediately upon the failure of the debtor to file a certification under section 362(l)(1).ⁿ⁶ Similarly, if the debtor does not file a certification under section 362(l)(2), the stay exception takes effect after the 30-day period following the petition has expired. In this event, the clerk shall immediately serve upon the lessor and the debtor a certified copy of the docket indicating the absence of a filed certification and the applicability of the stay exception under section 362(b)(22).ⁿ⁷

In addition to the notification requirements concerning whether the stay is applicable, section 362(b)(22) will impose new administrative burdens on bankruptcy court clerks who have not previously accepted deposits by debtors of rental payments. Section 362(l)(5)(D) also requires the clerk of the court to arrange for the prompt transmittal to the lessor of any rent deposited with the court.

Residential Property Evictions Involving Endangerment of Property or Illegal Drug Use; 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(23). Section 362(b)(23) provides that the automatic stay under section 362(a)(3), subject to the provisions of section 362(m), does not apply to an eviction, unlawful detainer action, or similar proceeding involving residential property in which the debtor resides as a tenant under a lease or rental agreement, if the eviction is based on the endangerment of such property or the illegal use of controlled substances on such property.ⁿ⁸ This stay exception applies only if the lessor files with the bankruptcy court and serves on the debtor a certification under penalty of perjury that such an eviction action has been filed, or that during the 30-day period preceding the filing of the certification, the debtor has endangered the property or illegally used or allowed to be used a controlled substance on the property.

Section 362(m)(1) provides that this stay exception shall apply 15 days after the lessor files and serves the certification described in section 362(b)(23). Unlike other provisions of section 362(b) that create an exception to the stay upon the filing of the petition, section 362(b)(23) does not prevent the automatic stay provided under section 362(a)(3) from taking effect immediately upon the filing of the debtors petition.

If the debtor files and serves on the lessor an objection challenging the truth or legal sufficiency of the lessors certification, the stay exception under section 362(b)(23) does not apply unless the court orders otherwise at a hearing that shall be held within 10 days after the filing of the objection. n9 At the hearing, the debtor may demonstrate that the situation which gave rise to the lessors certification of alleged property endangerment or illegal drug use either did not exist or has been remedied. Since section 362(m)(2)(C) does not specify when the cure must occur, presumably the debtor may remedy the improper activity alleged in the lessors certification at any time prior to the hearing. If the court finds that the situation did not exist or has been remedied, the stay provided under section 362(a)(3) shall remain in effect.

In the event that the court rules against the debtor on the objection to the lessors certification, or if the debtor fails to file an objection to the lessors certification within 15 days after its service, the stay exception under section 362(b)(23) shall apply and the clerk shall immediately serve upon the lessor and the debtor a certified copy of the order denying the debtors objection or of the docket indicating the absence of a filed objection. n10 The lessor may then proceed with the eviction without the need to file a motion for relief from the stay provided under section 362(a)(3). However, since the exception is limited to the stay provided under section 362(a)(3), the lessor may not proceed with an eviction or other action that seeks to recover on a claim against the debtor that arose prepetition, such as a claim for damages to the rental property, without first obtaining relief from the stay provided under subsections 362(a)(1) and (a)(6). In addition, the stay provided under section 362(a)(3) should continue to apply, even if the lessors certification is upheld, to any unrelated attempt by the lessor to obtain possession of the rental property that is not based on the endangerment of the property or the illegal use of controlled substances.

The lack of specificity in sections 362(b)(23) and (m) relating to procedural matters leaves several questions unanswered. Although the lessors certification filed under section 362(b)(23) can trigger a contested matter not unlike that which would follow the filing of a motion, it is not clear whether the procedures outlined in Bankruptcy Rule 9014 will apply, particularly given the unusually brief time frame within which the court must conduct a hearing on the debtors objection to the certification. However, unlike the certification filed by the debtor under section 362(l)(1), which attests simply to whether the debtor has a right to cure a monetary default under state law and whether the debtor made the required deposit of rent with the court, a lessors certification under section 362(b)(23) may involve contested allegations concerning drug use and property endangerment, which would require the court to hear oral testimony, make findings on disputed facts and rule on the factual or legal sufficiency of the certification or of any alleged cure of the offending behavior. It would thus seem that the lessor should be required to state in the certification sufficient facts that will provide fair notice to the debtor. Presumably Bankruptcy Rule 9014(c) will be applicable so that the parties may conduct discovery, albeit on an expedited schedule if the court does not continue the hearing beyond the 10-day period. n11 Furthermore, though the existence of affirmative defenses should be considered by the court in deciding whether the certification should be upheld and the stay terminated, the expedited nature of the proceeding would not make it appropriate for there to be a res judicata determination of the issues, should the issues later be litigated in a state eviction proceeding. n12 Some or all of these matters may be addressed in the future by the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure or by local court rules.

It is also worth noting that the statutory language in subsections (b)(23) and (m) provides no guidance to the court in making findings about the truth or legal sufficiency of a lessors certification that the debtor has endangered the property or used or allowed to be used a controlled substance on the property. These terms and phrases are not defined in the Bankruptcy Code, n13 and are subject to varying interpretations. For example, by stating that the illegal drug use must be on the property, it is not clear whether this consists simply of the immediate rental premises occupied by the debtor or whether it includes other apartments, parking facilities or common areas in a rental complex or manufactured-home community in which the debtor resides. Nor is it clear that courts should look to nonbankruptcy law for direction in applying these terms or in determining what constitutes a sufficient cure by the debtor of the alleged property endangerment or illegal drug use.

In many respects, subsections (b)(23) and (m) function much as a stay relief motion does under section 362(d) if the lessor files a certification. However, and perhaps as an unintended consequence of the amendment, courts may be called upon to conduct contested hearings and make findings of fact on issues that they would previously have permitted state courts to deal with by granting relief from the stay under section 362(d) on the basis that the eviction litigation should be initiated or concluded in another forum. Thus, despite the possible advantage to the lessor of an expedited stay termination under subsections (b)(23) and (m), lessors may prefer to file a stay relief motion rather than submit a certification.

For a complete discussion of Code section 362, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 362.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 1. 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(22) and 362(l), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n2

2. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 362.03[5].

n3

3. See In re McCray, 342 B.R. 668 (Bankr. D.D.C. 2006).

n4 4. 11 U.S.C. § 362(l)(3), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n5

5. Section 362 (l)(5)(C) states that the bankruptcy forms (electronic and otherwise) shall be amended to reflect the requirements of section 362(l)(5). Official Form 1 was amended upon implementation of the 2005 Act to include a box containing the required information that the debtor must provide, if applicable.

n6

6. 11 U.S.C. § 362(l)(4)(A), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n7

7. 11 U.S.C. § 362(l)(4)(B), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n8

8. 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(23) and 362(m), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n9

9. 11 U.S.C. § 362(m)(2)(A) and (B), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n10

10. 11 U.S.C. § 362(m)(2)(D) and (m)(3), added by Pub. L. No. 109-8 (2005), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005.

n11

11. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014(c).

n12

12. E.g., Grella v. Salem Five Cent Sav. Bank, 42 F.3d 26, 31, 32 C.B.C.2d 1303, 1309-10 (1st Cir. 1994).

n13

13. Curiously, neither the term endanger nor the phrase endangerment of property are used or defined in the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

105 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on Administrative Claims Priorities Under Section 1129(a)(9) of the Code

2008 Emerging Issues 1532

Collier on Administrative Claims Priorities Under Section 1129(a)(9) of the Code

By Collier

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: The 13 requirements of Bankruptcy Code section 1129(a) are the focus of all confirmation hearings. Section 1129(a) (9) contains a system of priorities in chapter 11 for certain unsecured claims. This article discusses the distinctions that Section 1129(a)(9) draws among administrative and gap claims, priority nontax claims, priority unsecured tax claims, and secured tax claims that, but for their secured status, would qualify as priority tax claims.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: The 13 requirements of Bankruptcy Code section 1129(a) are the focus of all confirmation hearings. The plan proponent, n1 bears the burden of proof of establishing that each of these requirements have been satisfied. When these requirements are satisfied, the court will confirm the plan. n2 Section 1129(a)(9) contains a system of priorities in chapter 11 for certain unsecured claims. In particular, it draws distinctions among administrative and gap claims, n3 priority nontax claims, n4 priority unsecured tax claims, n5 and secured tax claims that, but for their secured status, would qualify as priority tax claims. n6 These distinctions require numerous references to other provisions of the Code which create the priorities for all bankruptcies.

Section 1129(a)(9) represents a departure from practice under Chapters X and XI of the Bankruptcy Act. In former Chapter XI cases, Rule 11-38(a) required the court, after the plan had been accepted and prior to confirmation, to fix a time before confirmation within which the debtor was required to deposit the money necessary to pay all priority debts and costs of administration unless such claimants waived such deposit or consented to provisions in the plan otherwise dealing with their claims. The deposit is not required by chapter 11 of the Code. n7 Under Chapter XI of the Act, the debtor was not permitted to classify priority claims and bind a minority of priority claimants to treatment acceptable to the majority of such claimants. Of course, if any particular priority claimant was willing to accept satisfaction of its priority claim on terms other than cash payment at confirmation, such claimant was free to negotiate whatever payment terms were satisfactory to it. This remains true under section 1129(a)(4) of the Code.

Administrative Claims and Gap Claims. Section 1129(a)(9)(A) requires that holders of administrative claims n8 and gap claims n9 be paid cash equal to the allowed amount of such claim on the effective date of the plan, unless the holder of a particular claim agrees to different treatment. With respect to these types of priority claims, paragraph (9)

thus constitutes the only essential confirmation requirement. Section 1123(a)(1) recognizes this, and does not even allow such claims to be classified in the plan, n10 since there is no reason to create a class or classes for such claims in light of the fact that a majority of such classes cannot bind a minority to less favorable payment terms than those provided under section 1129(a)(9). Accordingly, such payment must be in cash on the effective date. The only exception will be if the holder of a particular claim has agreed to a different treatment of such claim. n11 This may be the case with professionals or other entities connected with the case. n12

Since section 1129(a)(9)(A) also covers, because they are administrative claims, postpetition trade claims of the debtor, the literal terms of this paragraph would seem to require payment in cash of all such trade claims on the effective date. n13 This unwelcome result can be avoided by either moving the effective date to a date after which most preconfirmation claims are payable, or by providing in the plan that in the absence of objection such claims will be paid in the ordinary course of business. The later option would require a finding of implied waiver, normally not desirable, but in this case would seem to conform to the spirit of the section since the creditors will be paid their cash.

Other Priority Nontax Claims. Section 1129(a)(9)(B) handles other priority, nontax claims. Because these claims may be classified under a plan, the Code provides for different possible treatments depending on whether classes so created accept or reject the plan.

Coverage. Subparagraph (B) authorizes deferred payments of prepetition domestic support obligations, n14 employee, n15 pension, n16 certain farmer and fisherman claims and n17 consumer priority claims, n18 provided that the requisite majority of the priority class consents to the treatment accorded its classes under the plan and the present value of deferred cash payments to members of the class equal the allowed amount of their claims. Thus, unlike administrative and gap claimants, a majority of these other priority claimants in each class can bind a minority to accept deferred cash payments. n19 Section 1129(a)(9) does not make any reference to ninth priority claims, n20 added by the Crime Control Act of 1990. n21 The drafters of the Crime Control Act made no amendments to section 1129(a)(9) and other sections (e.g., section 1123(a)(1)) that refer to section 507, and, as a result, it is unclear as to how section 507(a)(9) claims should be treated in a reorganization plan. n22

Treatment. Subparagraph (B) allows a plan proponent to offer a class of claimants treatment other than payment in cash. If the class accepts the plan, the proponent may offer the each holder of the class deferred cash payments of a value, as of the effective date of the plan, equal to the allowed amount of such claims. This language, common in the Code, is interpreted to allow the proponent to offer a promise whose present value is equal to the amount of the claim, which will usually require payment of interest at the market rate. n23 Proponents may attempt this treatment for feasibility concerns. In addition, the section permits the class to make the election, under the rules for class acceptance set forth in section 1126, thus binding dissidents in the minority to accept the deferred payments. n24 If, however, the class does not accept, the plan must treat each member of the class the same as with section 1129(a)(9)(A): they must receive cash on the effective date of the plan equal to the allowed amount of such claim. n25

Unsecured Priority Tax Claims in Cases Filed on or after October 17, 2005. Section 1129(a)(9)(C) provides for special treatment of eighth priority unsecured tax claims. n26 This subparagraph (C) was extensively revised by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the 2005 Act), n27 which is effective for all bankruptcy cases filed on or after its effective date of October 17, 2005. n28 As revised, section 1129(a)(9)(C) offers fewer options to bankruptcy estates than did the law in effect prior to the effectiveness of the 2005 Act.

There are several features of section 1129(a)(9)(C) that are worth of initial note. First, it applies only to unsecured tax claims. n29 If the governmental entity is secured through a tax lien, the secured portion of any such claim is unaffected by section 1129(a)(9)(C), although section 1129(a)(9)(D), explored below, n30 applies directly to secured tax claims and incorporates the treatment specified in section 1129(a)(9)(C). Second, like the claims subject to subparagraph (A), the unsecured tax claims that are affected by this section may not be classified in the plan. n31 The reason for this is that they receive full payment, and thus are not impaired. n32 As a consequence, so long as the treatment proposed in the plan conforms with that specified, the class need not be solicited for its vote, and also does not count as an impaired class for section 1129(a)(10) purposes. n33 Finally, given that the stretch out permitted by this subparagraph will often be favorable to plan proponents, the Code permits the debtor or trustee to file a proof of claim on behalf of the taxing authority, and have the unsecured tax claim administered under the plan. n34

Treatment Under Section 1129(a)(9)(C).

Total Payments Must Equal Allowed Claim; 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(C)(i). The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 amended section 1129(a)(9)(C) to delete the language previously used in the Code to indicate a discount to present value--deferred cash payments of a value, as of the effective date of the plan, equal to the allowed amount of the claim. n35 In its place is a different locution; the present requirement is to provide regular installment payments in cash, (i) of a total value, as of the effective date of the plan, equal to the allowed amount of the claim. n36 The issue is thus whether the insertion of total as a qualifier for value adds to, or is declarative, of previous law. The legislative history of this section is of little help. n37 Also compounding the confusion is the 2005 Acts requirement that nonmarket rates of interest be used with respect to any claim of a governmental entity. n38

There is some indication, that with section 511's addition of nonmarket rates of interest--which tend to be higher than market rates--the addition of total means that the stream of payments have to have a nominal total value equal to the allowed amount of the claim, and that the revested debtor would have to pay interest on that payment stream at the rate selected by section 511. This reading leads to systematic overpaying or underpaying of governmental entities depending on the difference between market rates of interest and the rate selected by section 511, a result previously not contemplated under section 1129. If section 511's interest rate is greater than the market rate, for example, then the present value of the property distributed to the governmental entity will be greater than the allowed amount of the claim; if lower, then the present value of the claim will be less than the allowed amount. n39

This variability can be seen from an oversimplified example. Assume that a plan proposes to pay a $100 priority unsecured claim in five equal annual installments of $20, commencing one year after confirmation. Assume further that the relevant market rate of interest, used in other parts of the plan, is 10 percent. If section 511 points to an applicable nonbankruptcy interest rate of 15 percent, then under this reading the proponent would have to pay $20 per year in principal payments, and then 15 percent interest on the unpaid balance. Such a payment stream would have a present value of approximately $112, or 12 percent more than the allowed amount of the claim, n40 resulting in an overpayment of $12.

The change in language, however, is probably best read to require a standard present value analysis, as in other parts of section 1129, n41 albeit not at a market rate, but at whatever rate section 511 indicates is appropriate. As an example, if a governmental entity is owed $100 in priority taxes, and if section 511 indicates an interest rate of 10 percent when market rates are 15 percent, a plan proponent could propose treatment that, assuming it meets section 1129(a)(9)(C)(iii)'s most favored class requirement, would pay the governmental entity a present value of $100 based upon interest on the unpaid balance at the section 511 rate of 10 percent. n42

Repayment Period Limited to Five Years from Order for Relief; 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(C)(ii). Section 1129(a)(9)(C), effective in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005, greatly restricts the ability of a bankruptcy estate to stretch out or otherwise modify obligations that constitute priority tax claims. Previously, a plan proponent could extend the maturity of any due priority tax for up to six years, while paying a market rate of interest on all unpaid amounts. n43 Under section 1129(a)(9)(C) as revised, however, a plan proponent may only stretch out the payments for five years from the date of the order for relief. n44

Manner of Payment Must Be as Favorable as Any Unsecured, Nonpriority Class; 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(C)(iii). Of equal significance is that section 1129(a)(9)(C)(iii) now restricts the terms of the repayment scheme offered to the taxing entity. This clause limits the terms of repayment to a manner not less favorable than the most favored nonpriority unsecured claim provided for by the plan (other than cash payments made to a class of creditors under section 1122(b)). n45 As a consequence, governmental entities will be able to scour a plan and require the plan proponent to offer them the best set of repayment terms offered any other class.

At one level, this test may be easy to apply. If general unsecured creditors are proposed to be paid in full in three years from filing, section 1129(a)(9)(C) will require that priority tax claims also be paid in three years, and not the maximum five years otherwise applicable. Also clear is the fact that governmental entities will not be able to look to convenience classes of creditors and force terms equal to those received by such claimants. n46 After these relatively easy questions, however, consensus as to the meaning of section 1129(a)(9)(C)(ii) is lost. Unanswered questions will arise in sophisticated plans in which creditors negotiate for quicker payouts in lieu of higher interest rates or greater recoveries (two attributes that cannot be negotiated with governmental entities under section 1129(a)(9)(C)). n47 If, for example, after negotiations a plan proponent offers a class of general unsecured creditors a two-year payout at a below-market rate instead of a six-year payout at a market rate, or offers a two-year payout of 50 percent of claims instead of a five-year payout at 100 percent of claim, would the governmental entity be able to insist on two-year payouts in either or both instances? Technically put, does the manner of payment include or exclude those payment terms which cannot be negotiated or altered with respect to priority tax claims? The issue is open. n48

Unsecured Priority Tax Claims in Cases Filed Before October 17, 2005. Section 1129(a)(9)(C) provides for special treatment of eighth priority unsecured tax claims. n49 Several things are peculiar to this subparagraph. First, it applies only to unsecured tax claims. n50 If the governmental entity is secured through a tax lien, the secured portion of any such claim is unaffected by section 1129(a)(9)(C). n51 Second, like the claims subject to subparagraph (A), the unsecured tax claims that are affected by this section may not be classified in the plan. n52 The reason for this is that they receive full payment, and thus are not impaired. n53 As a consequence, so long as the treatment proposed in the plan conforms with that specified, the class need not be solicited for its vote, and also does not count as an impaired class for section 1129(a)(10) purposes. n54

This subparagraph also provides for deferred cash payments, and expressly incorporates a maximum repayment period--six years from the date of assessment in cases commenced before October 17--and mandates that the stream of payments have a present value equal to the allowed amount of the claim. n55 The calculation of the amount and payment terms have caused the most litigation. Finally, given that the stretch out permitted by this subparagraph will often be favorable to plan proponents, the Code permits the debtor or trustee to file a proof of claim on behalf of the taxing authority, and have the unsecured tax claim administered under the plan. n56

Deferred Payment; Market Rate of Interest. Section 1129(a)(9)(C), as applicable in cases commenced before October 17, 2005, states that a plan may give a holder of an unsecured tax claim deferred cash payments of a value, as of the effective date of the plan, equal to the allowed amount of such claim. This language is the Codes signal that the present value of the payment stream offered must equal the allowed amount of the claim. This is typically accomplished by providing a payment stream that will equal in principal payments the allowed amount of the claim and which carries a market rate of interest. Many governmental entities have special interest rate provisions which are, in nonbankruptcy cases, applied to tax claims. n57 Section 1129(a)(9)(C), however, has been interpreted to require a market rate of interest, to which the tax rate may be relevant, but is certainly not determinative. n58 Moreover, in Till v. SCS Credit Corp., n59 the Supreme Court indicated that its adoption of a formula-based rate of interest would likely be applicable to determinations of the appropriate interest rate under section 1129(a)(9) (C). n60 Reference is made to the general section on rates of interest for a more expanded discussion of the calculation of a market rate of interest. n61

Deferred Payment; No More Than Six Years from Date of Assessment. The subparagraph prescribes a maximum period for the payment of the claim. The entire amount of the claim must be paid over a period not exceeding six years after the date of assessment of such claim. The first item of note is that the period runs from the date of assessment, not the date of filing or the date of confirmation. Thus, claims which are stale at filing will have much shorter periods for payment.

Deferred Payment; Amortization. Before the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 amendments, the statute was silent as to whether the payments must be made in level or equal amounts, or whether the plan proponent may offer a balloon payment at the end of the six year period. The few courts that have looked at this have permitted balloon payments, but only in circumstances in which it is clear that payment will be made. n62 To the extent that priority continues in any subsequent reorganization, this would appear to be less of a problem, but the continued priority of such claim is as yet unresolved. n63

Secured Tax Claims. Section 1129(a)(9)(D), added by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, requires plan proponents to treat secured tax claims in the same manner as unsecured tax claims, if, but for the security, the tax claim would qualify for treatment as a priority unsecured tax claim within the meaning of section 1129(a)(9)(C). n64 In essence, this means that the secured tax claim must receive at least as favorable treatment in the plan as the most favored unsecured, nonpriority class of claims. The implications of this most favored class treatment are explored above. n65

For a complete discussion of Code section 1129, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 1129.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 1. See Collier on Bankruptcy-15th Edition Rev. P 1129.02[3].

n2

2. See United States ex rel. Farmers Home Admin. v. Arnold & Baker Farms (In re Arnold & Baker Farms), 177 B.R. 648, 33 C.B.C.2d 31 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1994).

n3

3. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(A).

n4

4. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(B).

n5

5. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(C).

n6

6. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(D).

n7

7. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3020(a), permitting the court to order a deposit of the consideration to be distributed on confirmation.

n8

8. Administrative claims are provided for in section 507(a)(1). They include not only claims for postpetition expenses of operation, such as salaries and supplies, but also include claims by professionals, claims by members of official committees and claims of any indenture trustees. See generally Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 507 and Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 503.

n9

9. Gap claims are those expense incurred by the estate between the time of the filing of an involuntary petition (if any) and the entry of an order for relief. See 11 U.S.C. § 502(f).

n10

10. 11 U.S.C. § 1123(a)(1).

n11

11. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9).

n12

12. In In re Teligent, Inc., 282 B.R. 765 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2002), the court adopted a novel approach to securing the agreement of some 2006 administrative claimants. Through a combination of offering a convenience class, and through implementing a well-staffed campaign to induce creditors to return ballots electing to take less than they were owed (since the debtor was administratively insolvent), the court found that all administrative creditors who had not returned a ballot were deemed to have agreed to the lesser treatment offered in the plan. Since no creditor had affirmatively objected, this questionable fiction allowed the court to confirm the plan.

n13

13. The concept of the effective date of the plan is undefined in the Code. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.06[1][e].

n14

14. Section 507(a)(1), as amended in 2005, provides for a first priority for prepetition unsecured domestic support obligations, a term defined in section 101(14A). This provision is to be contrasted with section 1129(a)(14), also added in 2005, which requires all domestic support obligations which become due and payable post petition to be paid in full as a condition of confirmation.

n15

15. Section 507(a)(4), as amended, grants fourth priority status to certain allowed unsecured claims for unpaid wages, salaries, or commissions, including vacation, severance and sick leave pay, of up to $10,000 for each employee. This amount is subject to adjustment every three years to account for changes in the cost of living. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 104.03 and Collier on Bankruptcy, 507.05.

n16

16. Section 507(a)(5), as amended, grants fifth priority status to certain allowed unsecured claims for unpaid contributions to employee benefit plans of up to $10,000 per covered employee. This amount is subject to adjustment every three years to account for changes in the cost of living. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 104.03 and Collier on Bankruptcy, 507.06.

n17

17. See 11 U.S.C. § 507(a)(6), which is similar in structure to the priorities granted in subsections 507(a)(4) and (a)(5) to employee compensation claims.

n18

18. Section 507(a)(7) grants seventh priority status to certain allowed unsecured claims of consumers arising from the deposit of money in connection with the executory and unfulfilled purchase, lease or rental of property or the purchase of services.

n19

19. For a description of the method of computation of the present value of deferred cash payments, see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.06[1].

n20

20. The ninth priority set forth in section 507(a)(9) was originally added as an eighth priority in section 507(a)(8) by the Crime Control Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-647; this provision, as amended in 1994, grants a priority to allowed unsecured claims based upon any commitment by the debtor to a Federal depository institutions regulatory agency (or predecessor to such agency) to maintain the capital of an insured depository institution. In 1994, the insertion of a priority for certain alimony and support claims as a seventh priority caused a renumbering of subsections 507(a)(7) and (a)(8) as subsections 507(a)(8) and (a)(9), respectively. The Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394 (enacted on October 22, 1994, and effective in cases commenced on or after that date).

n21

21. Pub. L. No. 101-647 (1990).

n22 22. Before 1986, section 1129(a)(9) did not make any mention of the fifth priority created pursuant to the 1984 Bankruptcy Amendments. Pub. L. No. 98-353, title II, § 350(3) (1984). The fifth priority, 11 U.S.C. § 507(a)(5), as added by the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, was for priority to certain farmers and fishermen against loss due to the bankruptcy of entities which store or care for the gain they grew or the fish they caught. This was an oversight by the drafters who failed to pick up the cross-reference. The 1986 amendments, however, made the correction and the section 507(a)(5) priority claims are treated under a plan in a manner consistent with the treatment of section 507(a)(3), (a)(4) and (a)(6) claims. The Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. (1986).

n23

23. See e Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.06[1].

n24

24. If, however, an objection to a claim is made which postpones the payment beyond the effective date, the plan proponent will have to pay interest on the claim. Terex Corp. v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (In re Terex Corp.), 984 F.2d 170 (6th Cir. 1993).

n25

25. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(B)(ii).

n26

26. Section 507(a)(8) grants an eighth priority to certain allowed unsecured claims of governmental units. All tax claims subject to section 1129(a)(9)(C) are nondischargeable tax claims, 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(1)(A), although not all nondischargeable tax claims fit within section 1129(a)(9)(C).

n27

27. Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 710(2) (2005).

n28

28. Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1501(b)(1) (2005).

n29 29. Conversely, if the unsecured claims are priority claims, the plan proponent must treat them in the plan in accordance with this subparagraph, and attempts to treat them as regular unsecured claims in order to meet feasibility concerns will be denied. Small Bus. Admin. v. Preferred Door Co. (In re Preferred Door Co.), 990 F.2d 547 (10th Cir. 1993) (plan may not classify priority claims as unsecured claims to achieve confirmation; plan which cannot pay priority claims in full is not feasible).

n30

30. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.03[9][e].

n31

31. 11 U.S.C. § 1123(a)(1).

n32

32. Under the pre-2005 Act version of the statute, the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit had held that Congress has specified in section 1129(a)(9)(C) a means for fully satisfying tax creditors . Through these provisions, Congress has legislated the equivalent of payment as of the date the bankruptcy petition was filed that discharges the debt by virtue of the confirmation of a plan. Michigan Employment Sec. Commn v. Wolverine Radio Co. (In re Wolverine Radio Co.), 930 F.2d 1132, 1150, 24 C.B.C.2d 1702, 1723-24 (6th Cir. 1991).

n33

33. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Bryson Props., XVIII (In re Bryson Props., XVIII), 961 F.2d 496, 501 n.8, 26 C.B.C.2d 1290, 1296 n.8 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 866, 113 S. Ct. 191, 121 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1992).

n34

34. 11 U.S.C. § 501(c). After such a claim is filed, however, the taxing authority may step in and control its prosecution. United States v. Kolstad (In re Kolstad), 928 F.2d 171 (5th Cir. 1991).

n35

35. As indicated below, see Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.06[1], the quoted language has been the congressional indication that a present value analysis should be used.

n36

36. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(C)(i).

n37

37. The change from value to total value is not discussed in the legislative history regarding section 710 of the 2005 Act, which section added the new phrase to section 1129(a)(9)(C). See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, 109th Cong., 1st Sess. 102 (2005). The legislative history for section 511, which imposes applicable nonbankruptcy rates of interest, simply states: [T]he Act amends the Bankruptcy Code to add section 511 for the purpose of simplifying the interest rate calculation. It provides that for all tax claims (federal, state, and local), including administrative expense taxes, the interest rate shall be determined in accordance with applicable nonbankruptcy law. Id. at 101.

n38

38. 11 U.S.C. § 511(a).

n39

39. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1111.03[6][b] for an example of where the Code explicitly adopts a similar type of analysis with respect to nonrecourse secured claims in chapter 11.

n40 40. If there is one annual payment of principal, and that payment is combined with the interest accrued over the year (that is, the interest is payable in arrears), the five annual payments would be $35 ($20 principal plus $15 interest), $32 ($20 principal plus $12 interest), $29 ($20 principal plus $9 interest), $26 ($20 principal plus $6 interest), and $23 ($20 principal plus $3 interest). At a given market rate of interest of 10%, this stream of payments would have a present value of $112.09.

On the same assumptions, were the market rate of interest 15%, the present value of the stream of payments would decrease to $100. If the market rate of interest increased to 20% (so that the applicable rate under section 511 were less than the market rate), the present value of the payment stream would be $89.95.

n41

41. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.06[1], for a discussion of the use of present value in section 1129.

n42

42. One example of such treatment might be a 10% note with a face amount of $112.35, and equal amortization over five years. The present value of such a note is approximately $100.

n43

43. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.03[9][d].

n44

44. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(C)(ii). The previous period had been six years from the date of assessment of the tax. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.03[9][d][ii].

n45 45. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(C)(iii).

n46

46. Section 1129(a)(9)(C)(iii) specifically excludes classes that offer cash payments made to a class of creditors under section 1122(b) from the comparison.

n47

47. Section 1129(a)(9)(C) requires payment in full as a condition of using its provisions, and section 511 will specify the applicable nonbankruptcy rate of interest that must be applied.

n48

48. Similar but significantly different issues are raised under the unfair discrimination cases arising under section 1129(b)(1). See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.04[3].

n49

49. Section 507(a)(8) grants an eighth priority to certain allowed unsecured claims of governmental units. All tax claims subject to section 1129(a)(9)(C) are nondischargeable tax claims, 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(1)(A), although not all nondischargeable tax claims fit within section 1129(a)(9)(C).

n50

50. Conversely, if the unsecured claims are priority claims, the plan proponent must treat them in the plan in accordance with this subparagraph, and attempts to treat them as regular unsecured claims in order to meet feasibility concerns will be denied. Small Bus. Admin. v. Preferred Door Co. (In re Preferred Door Co.), 990 F.2d 547 (10th Cir. 1993) (plan may not classify priority claims as unsecured claims to achieve confirmation; plan which cannot pay priority claims in full is not feasible).

n51

51. The claim is then treated as a secured claim under section 506(a).

n52

52. 11 U.S.C. § 1123(a)(1).

n53

53. Michigan Employment Sec. Comm'n v. Wolverine Radio Co. (In re Wolverine Radio Co.), 930 F.2d 1132, 1150, 24 C.B.C.2d 1702, 1723-24 (6th Cir. 1991) (Thus, Congress has specified in section 1129(a)(9)(C) a means for fully satisfying tax creditors. Through these provisions, Congress has legislated the equivalent of payment as of the date the bankruptcy petition was filed that discharges the debt by virtue of the confirmation of a plan.).

n54

54. In re Bryson Props., XVIII, 961 F.2d 496, 501 n.8, 26 C.B.C.2d 1290, 1296 n.8 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 866, 113 S. Ct. 191, 121 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1992).

n55

55. See United States v. Arrow Air, Inc. (In re Arrow Air, Inc.), 101 B.R. 332 (S.D. Fla. 1989) (holding that section 1129(a)(9)(C) requires interest to be paid on lump sum payment made after effective date). The plan proponent must state a date by which the proposed deferred payments will begin. In re Made in Detroit, Inc., 299 B.R. 170, 181 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2003).

n56

56. 11 U.S.C. § 501(c). After such a claim is filed, however, the taxing authority may step in and control its prosecution. United States v. Kolstad (In re Kolstad), 928 F.2d 171 (5th Cir. 1991).

n57

57. See, e.g., 26 U.S.C. § 6621.

n58

58. Even before Till v. SCS Credit Corp., 541 U.S. 465, 124 S. Ct. 1951, 158 L. Ed. 2d 787 (2004), most circuit courts had adopted a formula approach based upon a market-based rate of interest. Mississippi State Tax Comm'n v. Lambert (In re Lambert), 194 F.3d 679, 684 (5th Cir. 1999) (rejecting Mississippi's 12% fixed rate on tax obligations, and holding that the proper rate of interest under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(C) is the current market rate equivalent to the rate the debtor would have to pay to borrow the same amount in the commercial loan market. In so holding, we recognize that the statutory rates may be relevant to, but not dispositive of, the bankruptcy court's determination of the current market rate under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(C).); United States v. Camino Real Landscape Maintenance Contractors, Inc. (In re Camino Real Landscape Maintenance Contractors, Inc.), 818 F.2d 1503, 16 C.B.C.2d 1341 (9th Cir. 1987) (rate should be based on what debtor would pay to borrow in commercial loan market; neither rate on treasury obligations nor 26 U.S.C. § 6621 should be used because the former represents government's creditworthiness, not the debtors, and the latter does not take into account the risk factor or other factors relevant to debtor); United States v. Southern States Motor Inns, Inc. (In re Southern States Motor Inns, Inc.), 709 F.2d 647, 8 C.B.C.2d 1283 (11th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1022, 104 S. Ct. 1275, 79 L. Ed. 2d 680 (1984).

n59

59. 541 U.S. 465, 124 S. Ct. 1951, 158 L. Ed. 2d 787 (2004).

n60

60. The Court indicated that the language of the statute before it, section 1325(a)(5)(B)(ii) of the Code, was the same language used in section 1129(a)(9)(C). 124 S. Ct. 1951, 1958 n.10, 158 L. Ed. 2d 787, 797 n.10. Till is analyzed in more depth at Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.06.

n61

61. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.06[1].

n62

62. See United States v. Volle Elec., Inc. (In re Volle Elec., Inc.), 139 B.R. 451 (C.D. Ill. 1992) (permitting balloon payment at end of six-year period).

n63

63. See United States v. Conston, Inc. (In re Conston, Inc.), 33 C.B.C.2d 1466, 181 B.R. 769 (D. Del. 1995) (holding that priority status survives confirmation, and collecting cases pro and con).

n64

64. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(D).

n65

65. See Collier on Bankruptcy, 1129.03[9][c][ii].

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

106 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Collier on Nunc Pro Tunc Retention Orders

2008 Emerging Issues 1533

Collier on Nunc Pro Tunc Retention Orders

By Collier

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: To be compensated pursuant to Bankruptcy Code section 330, a professionals employment must be approved under section 327. Although there is no express requirement that the retention be approved before the services are rendered, courts generally read such a requirement into the statute. However, bankruptcy courts, as courts of equity, are empowered to grant nunc pro tunc retention orders. This commentary explains the circumstances under which a bankruptcy court is likely to grant a nunc pro tunc retention order.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

ARTICLE: To be compensated pursuant to Bankruptcy Code section 330, a professionals employment must be approved under section 327. n1 Although there is no express requirement that the retention be approved before the services are rendered, courts generally read such a requirement into the statute. n2 However, bankruptcy courts, as courts of equity, are empowered to grant nunc pro tunc retention orders. n3 The Latin phrase nunc pro tunc translated literally means now for then. When applied to orders, it means that a thing is now done which should have been done on the specified date. n4

Proscription against the granting of nunc pro tunc employment orders has been stated in the following terms: the purpose of a nunc pro tunc order is to record a prior but unrecorded act of the court, one unrecorded due to inadvertence or mistake. n5 In situations where a professional is seeking compensation for work that was never authorized, however, what is required is not a correction of the records, but a brand new substantive decision. n6 As such, some courts have stated that after-the-fact approval to retain a professional is more clearly understood as a post facto retention order. n7

Courts have permitted the use of nunc pro tunc and post facto orders to validate a previous failure to obtain the requisite court approval and obviate an oversight that otherwise would result in unfair and inequitable consequences. n8 While some courts purport to adhere to a per se approach and other courts have enunciated fact-specific tests, the ultimate decisions are based upon the equitable considerations discussed below. n9 Because the relief is equitable in nature and courts conduct a case-by-case analysis, courts place varying emphasis on different factors in conducting an analysis. n10

Notwithstanding the equitable considerations used to justify the entry of nunc pro tunc orders, courts are leery that this practice will lead to volunteerism and abuse. n11 Accordingly, at a minimum, the professional seeking to be retained should demonstrate that the retention would have been approved had it been timely filed n12 and that the applicants services have benefited the estate in some manner. n13 One court has imposed a requirement that the denial of retention and the concurrent denial of related fees do not result in a windfall benefit to the estate for enjoying services rendered by the professional without paying for them. n14 Other courts, however, simply rely on a nonexclusive list of factors. n15 The better approach to determine whether a nunc pro tunc order should be granted is to rely on a nonexclusive list of factors to address the untimely application, but still require that all other substantive requirements of section 327 be met. Section 327s requirements of disinterestedness and that the services are reasonably necessary to the administration of the estate will minimize the danger of volunteerism and abuse. n16

The prevailing approach is that a bankruptcy court should grant retroactive retention orders in extraordinary or exceptional circumstances to deter attorneys and other professionals from general nonobservance of section 327. n17 The circumstances that will qualify as sufficiently extraordinary to warrant a retroactive order approving retention have generated split authority. The majority of courts hold that simple neglect or inadvertence on the part of the applicant in failing to file a timely retention application under section 327 is not a sufficient basis for granting retroactive approval of employment. n18 One court held that a real estate broker who entered into a prepetition agreement to sell the debtors property was not entitled to nunc pro tunc approval of its employment since it could not explain the delay in requesting such approval and should have been aware of the requirement for court approval before performing work. n19 Another court denied a nunc pro tunc retention order to a consultant assisting debtors counsel because the consultant was familiar with bankruptcy rules and requirements. n20

Other courts have indicated that neglect or inadvertence may constitute a sufficient basis for granting a nunc pro tunc order. n21 These courts have rejected the strict application of the rule against nunc pro tunc orders permitting retention of professionals, particularly when the professional has rendered valuable service to the benefit of the estate in good faith. n22

Some courts have required only that the professional satisfactorily explain the failure to obtain court approval, and to otherwise comply with the requirements of section 327. n23 For example, in In re Coast Trading Co., the court entered a nunc pro tunc order for a professional who claimed that he did not realize that the term debtor in possession meant that the debtor was in bankruptcy. n24

Hardship to the applicant caused by another partys inaction is an additional basis upon which courts have granted retroactive employment applications provided that prior approval would have been appropriate and the delay in seeking approval was due to circumstances beyond the control of the professional. n25 For instance, a protracted negotiation with the creditors committee over the retention terms and compensation agreement was held to justify a nunc pro tunc order. n26 Another common consideration in such cases is the applicants justifiable reliance on another party to prepare the employment application. n27

The Courts of Appeals for the Second and Eighth Circuit previously adhered to a per se rule that a professional seeking compensation from the debtors estate may not receive compensation for work done before the filing of the required application for employment. n28 More recently, however, both the Second Circuit and lower courts in the Eighth Circuit have retreated from this approach and have indicated that an order approving a nunc pro tunc retention can be granted in extraordinary circumstances or for equitable considerations. n29 The approach of the lower courts in the Eighth Circuit is consistent with the statement in Lavender v. Wood Law Firm that, in limited circumstances, the bankruptcy court as a matter of fundamental fairness may exercise its discretion and enter a nunc pro tunc order authorizing compensation. n30 As such, some lower courts in the Second and Eighth Circuits have permitted the retroactive approval of a professionals employment where the failure to file a timely application has been explained, and the explanation has been found reasonable, n31 for excusable neglect or hardship, n32 in exceptional circumstances n33 or as a matter of fundamental fairness. n34 Notwithstanding the above exceptions, these courts are reluctant to grant nunc pro tunc orders when the requesting party is somehow responsible for the failure to make a timely application. n35

Some courts have recognized that circumstances may require that a professional render services before obtaining court approval. In that regard, these courts permit a 30-day period from the commencement of the bankruptcy case within which a professional must submit an application for retention, which constitutes a reasonable gap period for the professionals delay. n36 But the grace period is not absolute, for courts may still require that the debtor demonstrate the delay was caused by extraordinary circumstances. n37

Courts have also considered such factors as the professionals good faith, the urgency for services to be rendered, the party responsible for obtaining authorization and the applicants sophistication. n38 The applicants sophistication depends upon whether the applicant is an attorney, professional consultant or one who regularly appears before the bankruptcy court. n39 When courts use nunc pro tunc orders as an equitable device to enable a professional to obtain compensation from the estate, they have scrutinized the professionals activities to ascertain whether any misconduct, other than the failure to obtain prior court approval, has transpired. n40 For example, in In re Arkansas Co, Inc., n41 the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit delineated factors for the bankruptcy court to consider in determining whether the circumstances of a particular case adequately excuse the failure to seek prior court approval. Those factors include (1) whether the applicant or some other person bore responsibility for approval, (2) whether the applicant was under time pressure to begin service without approval, (3) the amount of delay after the applicant learned that initial approval had not been granted and (4) the extent to which compensation to the applicant will prejudice innocent third parties. n42

Another set of criteria was delineated in In re Twinton Properties Partnership, n43 which required that an applicant for nunc pro tunc employment affirmatively demonstrate certain factors by clear and convincing evidence. Subsequent cases have followed Twinton Properties, expanded on these factors or used the factors nonexclusively. n44 Those nine factors are as follows:

- (1) The debtor, trustee or committee expressly contracted with the professional person to perform the services which were thereafter rendered;
- (2) The party for whom the work was performed approves of the entry of the nunc pro tunc order;
- (3) The applicant has provided notice of the application to creditors and parties in interest and has provided an opportunity to file objections;
- (4) No creditor or party in interest offers a reasonable objection to the entry of the nunc pro tunc order;
- (5) The professional satisfies all the other criteria for employment pursuant to section 327 and Bankruptcy Rule 2014 at or before the time the services were actually commenced and remained qualified during the period for which services were provided;
- (6) The work was performed properly, efficiently and to a high standard of quality;
- (7) No actual or potential prejudice will inure to the estate or other parties in interest;
- (8) The applicants failure to seek employment approval is satisfactorily explained;
- (9) The applicant exhibits no pattern of inattention or negligence in soliciting judicial approval for the employment of professionals. n45

For a complete discussion of Code section 327, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 327.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 1. Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1024 (2004); see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 330.

n2

2. See In re Singson, 41 F.3d 316, 320 (7th Cir. 1994); Guerin v. Weil, Gotshal & Manges, 205 F.2d 302 (2d Cir. 1953); In re Shirley, 134 B.R. 940, 944 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1992); In re Anicom, Inc., 273 B.R. 756, 761 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2002); see also Collier on Bankruptcy, 330.03[2], discussing need for retention under section 327 as a condition to compensation under section 330.

n3

3. In re Albrecht, 233 F.3d 1258, 1261 (10th Cir. 2000) (court acknowledged the equitable power to grant post facto orders for the failure to conform to section 327 but would not equitably use other sections of the Code to circumvent the requirements of section 327); In re Jarvis, 53 F.3d 416, 418 (1st Cir. 1995); In re Triangle Chems., Inc., 697 F.2d 1280, 1289 (5th Cir. 1983) (We thus find that neither bankruptcy statute nor rule preclude the bankruptcy judge in the exercise of its sound discretion, and as a court of equity administering equitable principles, from entering an order nunc pro tunc authorizing the employment of an attorney for the debtor in possession even after the attorney (who should have secured prior approval for his retainer) has performed valuable services for the debtor's estate that have increased the common funds available for distribution to the creditors. (emphasis in original)); In re Laurent Watch Co., 539 F.2d 1231 (9th Cir. 1976); Stolkin v. Nachman, 472 F.2d 222 (7th Cir. 1973); In re St. Vrain Station Co., 151 B.R. 549 (D. Colo. 1993); In re Cormier, 35 B.R. 424, 425 (D. Me. 1983) ([N]either § 327 nor the Bankruptcy Rules by their terms, or by any necessary implication, prohibit the court from exercising its sound discretion in deciding whether to approve employment of a professional after the fact to the end that the deserving professional may be compensated by the estate for valuable services performed for it . The bankruptcy court is governed by equitable principles and need not read statutory language woodenly.).

n4

4. Black's Law Dictionary (8th ed. 2004) (citing 35A C.J.S. Federal Civil Procedure § 370, at 556 (1960)).

n5

5. In re Carolina Sales Corp., 45 B.R. 750, 753 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. 1985) (citing In re Call, 36 B.R. 374 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1984)); see also In re Mork, 6 C.B.C.2d 1334, 19 B.R. 947 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1982).

n6

6. In re Singson, 41 F.3d 316, 318-19 (7th Cir. 1994).

n7

7. In re Albrecht, 233 F.3d 1258 (10th Cir. 2000); In re Jarvis, 53 F.3d 416 (1st Cir. 1995) (phrase nunc pro tunc is a misnomer because what is being sought is not a correction of an order but a new order altogether); In re Ponce Marine Farm Inc., 259 B.R. 484 (D.P.R. 2001).

n8

8. In re Wallingford Fruit House, Inc., 35 B.R. 426 (D. Me. 1983); In re Glinz, 36 B.R. 17 (Bankr. D.N.D. 1983); In re Wolsky, 35 B.R. 481 (Bankr. D.N.D. 1983); In re Tom's Variety & Hardware, Inc., 30 B.R. 298 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1983); see In re NWFEX, Inc., 267 B.R. 118, 247 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2001) (nunc pro tunc retention granted because all parties were on notice of professionals retention); In re First Sec. Mortg. Co., 117 B.R. 1001, 1007 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 1990) (criticizing the strict application of the rule against nunc pro tunc retention, the bankruptcy court stated that such a rule tends to confer an unjust enrichment on the estate which has received valuable services without having to pay anything for them, and inflicts a substantial penalty for a wrong that may be merely technical in nature, innocent in intention, and otherwise harmless in effect"); In re Saybrook Mfg. Co., 22 C.B.C.2d 454, 459-60, 108 B.R. 366, 369 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1989) (while ignorance of the law is no excuse for failure to obtain court approved retention, the applicant, an investment and merchant banking firm, had relied upon the debtor to handle technical matters [concerning their retention] with the bankruptcy court).

n9

9. See, e.g., Cushman & Wakefield, Inc. v. Keren Ltd. Pshp. (In re Keren Ltd. Pshp.), 189 F.3d 86 (2d Cir. 1999); Lavender v. Wood Law Firm, 785 F.2d 247, 248-49 (8th Cir. 1986) (in limited circumstances, the bankruptcy court as a matter of fundamental fairness may exercise its discretion); In re Piecuil, 145 B.R. 777 (W.D.N.Y. 1992).

n10

10. F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon, 844 F.2d 99 (3d Cir. 1988); In re Triangle Chemicals, Inc., 697 F.2d 1280 (5th Cir. 1983); In re Piecuil, 145 B.R. 777 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1992); see, e.g., In re Lillian Laurence Ltd., 136 B.R. 1 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1992) (court denied nunc pro tunc retention and interim compensation of law firm that failed to justify its delay in submitting its initial and revised application for retention and to disclose its representation of the debtor's principal).

n11

11. In re Laurent Watch Co., 539 F.2d 1231, 1233 (9th Cir. 1976) (Nunc pro tunc is an incantation to permit the correction of yesterday's oversight, not yesterday's failure on the part of experienced counsel to abide by plain and unambiguous rules); see also In re Grabill Corp., 983 F.2d 773, 776, 28 C.B.C.2d 346, 350 (7th Cir. 1993) ([a] lawyer who was concerned that he might be disapproved if he applied under 327(a) might take a chance on not applying and instead seeking [sic] compensation later in the hope that the bankruptcy judge would be reluctant to deny all compensation for work well done); In re Albrecht, 245 B.R. 666, 671 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2000), affd, 233 F.3d 1258 (10th Cir. 2000) (without court approval, the person rendering services may be considered an officious intermeddler or a gratuitous volunteer).

n12 12. See In re Keren Ltd. P'ship, 189 F.3d 86 (2d Cir. 1999); In re Jarvis, 53 F.3d 416 (1st Cir. 1995); In re Arkansas Co. Inc., 798 F.2d 645, 650 (3d Cir. 1986); Stolkin v. Nachman, 472 F.2d 222 (7th Cir. 1973); In re Princeton Med. Mgmt., Inc., 249 B.R. 813 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2000); In re Tidewater Mem. Hosp., Inc., 22 C.B.C.2d 793, 110 B.R. 221, 227 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1989); In re McKinney Ranch Assocs., 62 B.R. 249 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1986); In re Lindo's Tours, U.S.A., Inc., 55 B.R. 475 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1985); In re Mahoney, Trocki & Assocs., Inc., 13 C.B.C.2d 1004, 54 B.R. 823 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1985); In re Roaring Creek Mining Co., 51 B.R. 866 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1985).

n13

13. In re Lee, 27 C.B.C.2d 1559, 1562, 146 B.R. 13, 15-17 (E.D. Cal. 1992); see In re F/S Airlease II, Inc., 844 F.2d 99 (3d Cir. 1988) (noting that, in all applications for nunc pro tunc approval, a benefit has accrued to the estate).

n14

14. See In re Martin, 102 B.R. 653 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 1989). But cf. In re Welch, 244 B.R. 802, 804 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2000) (benefit to estate is immaterial because presumably all work done on behalf of the debtor will benefit the estate).

n15

15. See Farinash v. Vergos (In re Aultman Enters.), 264 B.R. 485 (E.D. Tenn. 2001); In re Freehold Music Ctr., Inc., 49 B.R. 293, 296 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1985) (court approved retention of accountants nunc pro tunc when they believed in good faith that prior court approval of their employment had been obtained by the debtors attorneys); In re Twinton Props. P'ship, 27 B.R. 817 (M.D. Tenn. 1983); see also In re Arkansas Co. Inc., 798 F.2d 645 (3d Cir. 1983); In re Fidelity Standard Mortgage Corp., 43 B.R. 654, 657 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1984)

(although Plaintiff's services were never expressly authorized by the Court, it is obvious that these services were rendered at the request of, and with the knowledge and consent of, the Debtor in Possession. Upon equitable grounds, the Court therefore finds that Plaintiff is entitled to an award).

n16

16. See 11 U.S.C. § 327; Collier on Bankruptcy, 327.02[1]; see also, e.g., In re Jarvis, 53 F.3d 416 (1st Cir. 1995) (bankruptcy court may grant post facto application if employment meets statutory requirements).

n17

17. See, e.g., In re Jarvis, 53 F.3d 416 (1st Cir. 1995); In re Arkansas Co., 798 F.2d 645 (3d Cir. 1986); In re Triangle Chems., Inc., 697 F.2d 1280, 8 C.B.C.2d 116 (5th Cir. 1983); Ibbetson v. United States Trustee, 100 B.R. 548 (D. Kan. 1989); In re Kroeger Prop. and Dev., Inc., 14 C.B.C.2d 382, 57 B.R. 821 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1986); In re Ponce Marine Farm, Inc., 259 B.R. 484 (D.P.R. 2001); In re W/B Assocs., 226 B.R. 832 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1998); In re Metropolitan Hosp., 24 C.B.C.2d 648, 119 B.R. 910 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1990); In re Wellington Dev. of Florida, Inc., 119 B.R. 65 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1990); In re Bicoastal Corp., 118 B.R. 855 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1990); In re Robotics Resources R2, Inc., 117 B.R. 61 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1990); In re Doctors Hosp., Inc., 117 B.R. 38 (Bankr. D.P.R. 1990); In re Platinum Power Co., 105 B.R. 381 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1989); In re Samford, 21 C.B.C.2d 656, 102 B.R. 724 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1989); In re B.E.S. Concrete Prods., Inc., 19 C.B.C.2d 1172, 93 B.R. 228 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1988) (the size of fee request itself does not constitute extraordinary circumstances); In re McDaniels, 86 B.R. 128 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1988) (court awarded nunc pro tunc retention when extraordinary circumstances present); In re Hospitality Ltd., 86 B.R. 59 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1988) (nunc pro tunc retention denied when applicant suffered no hardship beyond his control); In re Aladdin Petroleum Co., 85 B.R. 738 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 1988) (no extraordinary circumstances present); In re Fleeman, 73 B.R. 579 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1987); In re McKinney Ranch Assocs., 62 B.R. 249, 252 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1986); In re Roaring Creek Mining Co., 51 B.R. 866 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1985); In re Carolina Sales Corp., 45 B.R. 750 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. 1985).

n18 18. See, e.g., In re Land, 943 F.2d 1265, 1268 (10th Cir. 1991) (simple neglect will not justify nunc pro tunc approval); In re Arkansas Co., 798 F.2d 645, 649 (3d Cir. 1986); Botech Mktg., Inc. v. Primary Health Sys. (In re Primary Health Sys.), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5954 (D. Del. Mar. 28, 2002) (rejects view that inadvertence or neglect constitutes an extraordinary circumstance); Farinash v. Vergos (In re Aultman Enters.), 264 B.R. 485, 493 (E.D. Ten. 2001) (simple oversight does not suffice as a satisfactory explanation under the Twinton Properties test); In re Platinum Mgmt. Corp., 226 B.R. 762 (W.D.N.Y. 1998) (attorney oversight or simple neglect does not constitute a reasonable explanation); Ibbetson v. United States Trustee, 100 B.R. 548 (D. Kan. 1989) (nunc pro tunc retention denied due to inadvertence which did not constitute excusable neglect); In re Kroeger Prop. & Dev., Inc., 14 C.B.C.2d 382, 57 B.R. 821 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1986) (negligence is an unsatisfactory excuse for filing untimely retention application); In re Princeton Med. Mgmt., Inc., 249 B.R. 813 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2000); In re The Music Store Inc., 241 B.R. 752 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 1999) (counsel's neglect does not justify nunc pro tunc retention); In re Lillian Laurence, Ltd., 136 B.R. 1, 3-4 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1992) (law firms belief that its retention application was either misplaced or returned by the clerks office for some reason did not constitute extraordinary circumstances warranting a nunc pro tunc order); In re Robotics Resources R2, Inc., 117 B.R. 61 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1990) (nunc pro tunc employment of debtors attorney denied as attorneys vacation and inability to complete expeditiously his admission to the court pro hac vice did not constitute excusable neglect or unavoidable hardship); In re Brown, 40 B.R. 728 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1984); In re BSJ Tower Assocs., 35 B.R. 131 (Bankr. D.P.R. 1983); In re Bear Lake West, Inc., 32 B.R. 272 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1983); In re Johnson, 21 B.R. 217 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1982); see also In re Crook, 79 B.R. 475 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1987) (court denied entry of nunc pro tunc order because of attorneys negligent conduct).

n19

19. In re Timberline Property Dev., Inc., 115 B.R. 787 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1990); see also In re Princeton Med. Mgmt., Inc., 249 B.R. 813, 816 (M.D. Fla. 2000) (debtor failed to explain why he failed to file an application for an accountants employment).

n20

20. In re Grimes, 115 B.R. 639, 644 (Bankr. D.S.D. 1990); see also In re Keren Ltd. Pship, 225 B.R. 303, 307 (S.D.N.Y. 1998), affd, 189 F.3d 86 (2d Cir. 1999) (sophisticated real estate broker should be familiar with bankruptcy procedure).

n21

21. See, e.g., In re Singson, 41 F.3d 316, 320 (7th Cir. 1994) (lower court did not abuse its discretion in applying an excusable neglect standard); In re King Elec. Co., 6 C.B.C.2d 1273, 1275 n.2, 19 B.R. 660 (E.D. Va. 1982); In re Sayegh, 62 B.R. 601, 603 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1986); In re Vlachos, 61 B.R. 473, 479 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1986).

n22

22. In re Triangle Chems., Inc., 697 F.2d 1280, 1289, 8 C.B.C.2d 116 (5th Cir. 1983) ([N]either bankruptcy statute nor rule preclude the bankruptcy judge in the exercise of its sound discretion, and as a court of equity administering equitable principles, from entering an order nunc pro tunc authorizing the employment of an attorney for the debtor in possession even after the attorney (who should have secured prior approval for his retainer) has performed valuable services for the debtor's estate that have increased the common funds available for distribution to the creditors.); In re St. Vrain Station Co., 151 B.R. 549 (D. Colo. 1993) (rule requiring that a court approve an attorney before he or she can be compensated should not be curmudgeonly and dogmatically applied).

n23

23. In re Microwave Products of Am., Inc., 104 B.R. 900 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 1989); In re Marathon Home Loans, 101 B.R. 221 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1989); In re Coast Trading Co., 62 B.R. 664 (Bankr. D. Or. 1986).

n24

24. 62 B.R. 664 (Bankr. D. Or. 1986).

n25

25. In re Arkansas Co., 798 F.2d 645, 650 (3d Cir. 1986); In re Saybrook Mfg. Co. 108 B.R. 366 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1989); In re Freehold Music Ctr., Inc., 49 B.R. 293 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1985).

n26

26. In re ICG Communications, Inc., 2001 Bankr. LEXIS 1251 (Bankr. D. Del. Aug. 2, 2001); cf. In re United Companies Fin. Corp., 241 B.R. 521, 526 (Bankr. D. Del. 1999) (court denied application where the delay was caused by the applicants insistence on unusual terms).

n27

27. See In re Saybrook Mfg. Co., 22 C.B.C.2d 454, 457-58, 108 B.R. 366, 369 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1989) (holding that, while ignorance of the law is no excuse for failure to obtain court approved retention, the applicant, an investment and merchant banking firm, had relied upon the debtor to handle technical matters [concerning their retention] with the bankruptcy court); In re Freehold Music Ctr., Inc., 49 B.R. 293 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1985) (court approved retention of accountants nunc pro tunc when they believed in good faith that prior court approval of their employment had been obtained by the debtor's attorneys); In re Kero-Sun, Inc., 44 B.R. 121, 124 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1984) (compensation granted for services performed prior to entry of nunc pro tunc order approving employment; applicant had relied on debtors general counsel who had assumed responsibility for filing the applicants retention application); In re Malden Mills, Inc., 42 B.R. 476, 485 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1984) (court entered nunc pro tunc order authorizing employment of accountant to perform work that went beyond the scope of the original limited appointment; court held that the accountant should not be penalized for counsels mistake); In re Brown, 40 B.R. 728, 731 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1984); In re Seatrain Lines, Inc., 15 B.R. 583, 584 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1981). But see F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon, 844 F.2d 99, 18 C.B.C.2d 959, (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 852, 109 S. Ct. 137, 102 L. Ed. 2d 110 (1988) (nunc pro tunc compensation denied to airplane broker who provided services to debtor because, notwithstanding his belief that the debtor was primarily responsible for filing the application, the broker had an independent obligation to see that the application was timely filed).

n28 28. See Lavender v. Wood Law Firm, 785 F.2d 247 (8th Cir. 1986); Futuronics Corp. v. Arutt, Nachamie & Benjamin (In re Futuronics Corp.), 655 F.2d 463, 4 C.B.C.2d 1277 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 941, 102 S. Ct. 1435, 71 L. Ed. 2d 653 (1982); Albers v. Dickinson, 127 F.2d 957 (8th Cir. 1942); In re Progress Lektro Shave Corp., 117 F.2d 602, 604 (2d Cir.), reh'g denied, 118 F.2d 751 (2d Cir. 1941) (There is no question but that the appellant acted in good faith throughout and a denial to him of compensation is a harsh conclusion. However, the law is unquestionably settled that the order of the district court was correct.); In re Rogers-Pyatt Shellac Co., 51 F.2d 988 (2d Cir. 1931); In re Eureka Upholstering Co., 48 F.2d 95 (2d Cir. 1931); see also Weil v. Neary, 278 U.S. 160, 49 S. Ct. 144, 73 L. Ed. 243 (1929); In re Am. Express Warehousing, Ltd., 525 F.2d 1012 (2d Cir. 1975); In re Sapphire Steamship Lines, Inc., 509 F.2d 1242 (2d Cir. 1975); In re Porto Rican Am. Tobacco Co., 117 F.2d 599 (2d Cir. 1941); In re Luchka, 152 B.R. 18, 19 (Bankr. D.R.I. 1993) (court denied nunc pro tunc employment of a law firm even though the firm's work was of benefit to the estate; the court did not have the authority to rescue professionals who fail to comply with the statutory and procedural red tape there appears to be little latitude or discretion within which the Court may act to correct the omission). But cf. In re Piecuil, 145 B.R. 777 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1992) (It is fair to note that in most of these decisions some additional reason for disallowing payment of fees is shown absent the mere failure to secure a prior order, a reason that would have precluded proper issuance of the order authorizing the employment.) (quoting In re Triangle Chems., Inc., 697 F.2d 1280 (5th Cir. 1983)).

n29

29. In re Keren Ltd. P'ship, 189 F.3d 86 (2d Cir. 1999); In re NWFEX, Inc., 267 B.R. 118 (W.D. Ark. 2001).

n30

30. 785 F.2d 247, 248 (8th Cir. 1986).

n31

31. See, e.g., In re Rainbow Press of Fredonia, 197 B.R. 428, 429, 431 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1996) (quoting In re Piecuil, 145 B.R. 777, 783 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1992)) ([F]ailure to effect appointment of [counsel for the trustee] was fully explained by both the character of case administration and the special circumstances which delayed the need for legal representation.).

n32

32. See In re 245 Assocs., LLC, 34 C.B.C.2d 866, 188 B.R. 743 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1995); In re Rundlett, 137 B.R. 144, 146 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1992); In re Robotics Resources R2, Inc., 117 B.R. 61 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1990); In re French, 111 B.R. 391, 394 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 1989); In re Brown, 40 B.R. 728, 731 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1984).

n33

33. In re Rich Joyce Enters., Inc., 76 B.R. 42 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1987); In re Kero-Sun, Inc., 44 B.R. 121, 124 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1984); In re C.H. Stuart, Inc., 16 B.R. 296 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1981).

n34

34. In re Hasset, Ltd., 283 B.R. 376 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2002) (nunc pro tunc disfavored but permissible, retention approved where all parties knew of attorneys services and services benefited the estate); In re Interco Inc., 135 B.R. 363, 366 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1991) (compensation and retroactive employment of attorney for debenture holders committee was warranted when prepetition services of counsel significantly benefited the estates).

n35

35. In re Welch, 244 B.R. 802, 803 (W.D. Ark. 2000) (court denied order even though attorneys may have acted in good faith); In re Keren Ltd. Pship, 225 B.R. 303, 307 (S.D.N.Y. 1998), affd, 189 F.3d 86 (2d Cir. 1999) (repeated assurances from the debtor to a broker that the fees would be paid did not relieve the broker of the obligation to obtain prior court approval).

n36

36. See In re Metropolitan Hosp., 119 B.R. 910, 920 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1990) (30 days from commencement of case is presumed reasonable); In re Martin, 102 B.R. 653 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 1989) (30 days from the commencement of the case, rather than the commencement of the services, is appropriate as an outer limit for a reasonable gap period between the commencement of the bankruptcy case and obtaining court approval; after 30 days, the applicant has the burden of showing a reasonable explanation for the delay). But see In re Sinor, 18 C.B.C.2d 1263, 87 B.R. 620 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1988) (30 days from commencement of services to application for appointment is presumed as a reasonable time within which a professional must seek retroactive employment, as professionals may need to provide services before obtaining court approval).

n37

37. In re United Companies Fin. Corp., 241 B.R. 521 (Bankr. D. Del. 1999) (notwithstanding the local practice of the United States trustee not objecting to nunc pro tunc applications filed within 30 days of the petition date, the court required the applicant to come forward with an explanation for the delay when the United States trustee did object to a late application).

n38

38. In re Freehold Music Ctr., Inc., 49 B.R. 293, 296 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1985) (court approved retention of accountants nunc pro tunc when they believed in good faith that prior court approval of their employment had been obtained by the debtors attorneys); see In re Arkansas Co., 798 F.2d 645 (3d Cir. 1986); In re Keren Ltd. Pship, 225 B.R. 303 (S.D.N.Y. 1998), affd, 189 F.3d 86 (2d Cir. 1999); In re Fidelity Standard Mortgage Corp., 43 B.R. 654, 657 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1984) ([A]lthough Plaintiff's services were never expressly authorized by the Court, it is obvious that these services were rendered at the request of, and with the knowledge and consent of, the Debtor in Possession. Upon equitable grounds, the Court therefore finds that Plaintiff is entitled to an award).

n39

39. See In re Hydro Servs., Inc., 277 B.R. 309 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2001) (substantial and immediate matters for a large and sophisticated law firm experienced in bankruptcy law did not constitute exceptional circumstances); In re United Companies Fin. Corp., 241 B.R. 521, 526 (Bankr. D. Del. 1999) (experienced law firm should be aware of the requirements); In re Little Greek Restaurant, 205 B.R. 484 (Bankr. E.D. La. 1996) (court approved nunc pro tunc retention of accountants who performed nonbankruptcy work and were unaware of the need for court approval); In re Martin, 102 B.R. 653, 655 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 1989) (the court is sympathetic to counsel who are not experienced in bankruptcy matters). But see In re Carolina Sales Corp., 45 B.R. 750, 755 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. 1985) (ignorance of Code did not excuse consultant from making a timely application).

n40

40. See Hunter Savings Ass'n v. Baggott Law Offices Co., 34 B.R. 368, 374 (S.D. Ohio 1983) (absent other misconduct on the part of the professional, a nunc pro tunc order authorizing engagement is appropriate where the sole ground urged for denial of compensation to an attorney who actually performed services of value to the debtor's estate is that the trustee or debtor in possession neglected to secure prior court approval of the employment of such attorney), revd on other grounds, 750 F.2d 536 (6th Cir. 1984).

n41

41. 798 F.2d 645 (3d Cir. 1986).

n42

42. 798 F.2d 645, 650; see also F/S Airlease II, Inc. 844 F.2d 99 (3d Cir. 1988); In re Schachter, 228 B.R. 359, 365 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1999).

n43

43. 27 B.R. 817 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1983), affd, 33 B.R. 111 (M.D. Tenn. 1983).

n44

44. In re Kroeger Properties & Dev., Inc., 57 B.R. 821 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1986); Farinash v. Vargos (In re Aultman Enters.), 264 B.R. 485 (E.D. Tenn. 2001); In re Gutterman, 42 C.B.C.2d 1768, 239 B.R. 828, 830 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 1999) (factors are to be considered in determining extraordinary circumstances); In re Martin, 102 B.R. 653 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 1989); In re Sinor, 87 B.R. 620 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1988); In re McDaniels, 86 B.R. 128 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1988).

n45

45. 27 B.R. 817, 819 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1983), affd, 33 B.R. 111 (M.D. Tenn. 1983).

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Collier on Bankruptcy. This Emerging Issues Analysis was adapted from material appearing in Collier on Bankruptcy (Matthew Bender). Written and edited by leading scholars and practitioners, Collier on Bankruptcy is the preeminent treatise in the bankruptcy field. Long recognized as the most authoritative and comprehensive single source of bankruptcy law information, and available both in print and online, Collier is an indispensable resource for any firm with a substantial bankruptcy practice. Cited in hundreds of opinions each year, Collier is a benchmark authority. For more information on Collier on Bankruptcy, consult the online LexisNexis bookstore.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

107 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Hon. Ralph R. Mabey on In re Seven Fields Development Corp.

2008 Emerging Issues 1496

Hon. Ralph R. Mabey on In re Seven Fields Development Corp.

By Hon. Ralph R. Mabey

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: Limitations on a bankruptcy courts post-confirmation jurisdiction are a matter of judicial interpretation and have not been subject to well-defined parameters. The Third Circuit's decision is significant because it provides much needed refinement to the evolving standards. In this Emerging Issues Analysis, there is little doubt that the Third Circuit reached the correct result, yet the decision leaves unresolved numerous tricky issues.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Third Circuit Provides Needed Clarity on the Scope of Post-Confirmation Bankruptcy Jurisdiction

Few tasks carry the potential to perplex even experienced bankruptcy practitioners like the project of defining the precise scope of federal bankruptcy subject matter jurisdiction following the confirmation of a chapter 11 plan of reorganization. In a recent decision, Geruschat v. Ernst Young LLP (In re Seven Fields Development Corp.), 505 F.3d 237 (3d Cir. 2007) ("Seven Fields"), the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit held that the "close nexus" test for post-confirmation jurisdiction applies only in the context of "related to" jurisdiction, and not in the context of "arising in" jurisdiction, thereby providing needed clarity regarding this difficult and important issue. The Third Circuit further clarified that the "close nexus" test limits "related to" jurisdiction over all disputes raised post-confirmation, regardless of when the conduct complained of occurred.

Framing the Debate. As Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes famously wrote, "Jurisdiction is power." Michigan Trust Co. v. Ferry, 228 U.S. 346, 356, 33 S. Ct. 550, 57 L. Ed. 867 (1913). Indeed, as every law student learns in the first-year civil procedure course, the issue of subject matter jurisdiction is hardly a procedural nicety, but rather a fundamental threshold question in virtually every case. Without subject matter jurisdiction, a "court cannot proceed at all." Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 94, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1998).

The scope and limits of bankruptcy jurisdiction and bankruptcy courts' power have long been freighted with constitutional implications, as dramatically illustrated by Northern Pipeline Construction Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 102 S. Ct. 2858, 73 L. Ed. 2d 598 (1982). Nevertheless, the post-1984 regime--in which the limits of federal district courts' bankruptcy jurisdiction are defined by 28 U.S.C. § 1334 and the limits of federal bankruptcy courts' adjudicative authority are defined by 28 U.S.C. § 157--is a familiar one for most bankruptcy attorneys. Under this framework, there are three distinct types of bankruptcy subject matter jurisdiction: (1) those matters "arising under" the Bankruptcy Code; (2) those matters "arising in" a bankruptcy case; and (3) those matters "related to" a bankruptcy case. See 28 U.S.C. § 1334(b). Any of these three types of proceedings may be--and almost uniformly are--"referred" to bankruptcy courts by federal district courts under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a). While a bankruptcy court may then properly exercise jurisdiction over all such matters, its ability to enter final orders is generally restricted by 28 U.S.C. § 157(c) to only those matters that are "core" to the bankruptcy process.

This delicately balanced structure is further complicated by the effects of confirmation of a plan of reorganization, which generally operates to terminate the bankruptcy "estate" itself under 11 U.S.C. § 1141. n1 In the eyes of many, the confirmation of a plan is a "bookend" of similar import to the "petition date"--confirmation signals the end of most of the formal "bankruptcy" process. Seizing on this basic idea, many courts have reasoned that the effects of confirmation ought to limit the scope of federal bankruptcy jurisdiction, although their specific approaches have not been uniform. n2 Thus was born the concept of limited post-confirmation jurisdiction.

Because the definition of limited post-confirmation jurisdiction is a product of the federal courts rather than of Congress--nothing in the relevant statutory provisions addresses the effects of confirmation vis--vis jurisdiction or suggests that confirmation has any jurisdictional ramification whatsoever--it is a definition that is still being refined. In Seven Fields, the Third Circuit took two sizable steps in that process of refinement by (1) holding that its limiting test for post-confirmation jurisdiction--i.e., the matter must bear a "close nexus" to the confirmed plan--applies only in the context of "related to" jurisdiction; and (2) declaring that this "close nexus" test limits "related to" jurisdiction over all disputes that are raised post-confirmation, even if the conduct complained of occurred preconfirmation (or even prepetition). n3

The Facts and Posture of Seven Fields. Seven Fields arose from the 1986 bankruptcy cases of several corporations that were in the business of developing real property in Pennsylvania (collectively, the "Debtors"). As is unfortunately too often the case, the Debtors were not legitimate businesses, but rather a sophisticated Ponzi scheme that had duped a number of innocent investors.

Weeks after the Debtors filed for bankruptcy, the bankruptcy court appointed a predecessor entity to the global accounting firm now known as Ernst & Young LLP as the Debtors' financial advisor. Ernst & Young performed a variety of services that are typically rendered by financial advisors in bankruptcy, including preparation of the Debtors' schedules and analyses of the Debtors' solvency.

On the basis of financial analysis performed by Ernst & Young, the bankruptcy court confirmed a liquidating plan of reorganization (the "Plan") on October 21, 1987. Under the Plan, the Debtors would each be merged into a successor entity, Seven Fields Development Corp., which would then liquidate the Debtors' assets and distribute the proceeds to the investors who had invested in the Ponzi scheme. Unfortunately, those proceeds ultimately were insufficient to satisfy all of the investors' claims in full.

Nearly seventeen years later--on September 29, 2004--a group of former investors (the "Appellants") sued Ernst & Young in Pennsylvania state court, asserting claims for professional negligence, fraud, and negligent misrepresentation. The gravamen of the Appellants' suit was that Ernst & Young improperly performed its financial services during the Debtors' bankruptcy case, which resulted in confirmation of a plan that caused the Appellants significant economic harm.

Soon after the suit was initiated, Ernst & Young filed a notice of removal of the suit from Pennsylvania state court to the federal bankruptcy court. The Appellants subsequently filed a motion requesting that the bankruptcy court either (1) remand the matter back to the Pennsylvania state court or (2) abstain from exercising jurisdiction over the matter. Among the arguments the Appellants made to support their requested relief was that the bankruptcy court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the Appellants' post-confirmation claims asserting state law causes of action.

The bankruptcy court (after sua sponte reopening the bankruptcy case) concluded that the Appellants' action was one "arising in" a bankruptcy case, as well as a "core" proceeding, which gave the bankruptcy court subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1334(b) and adjudicative authority under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1). Geruschat v. Ernst & Young, LLP (In re Earned Capital Corp.), 331 B.R. 208, 21720 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 2005). The Appellants then appealed to the district court, which affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision. Geruschat v. Ernst & Young LLP, 346 B.R. 123 (W.D. Pa. 2006). Having lost twice, the Appellants elected to try a third time by appealing to the Third Circuit.

The Seven Fields Opinion. As framed by the Third Circuit, the "central issue in [Seven Fields] implicates the question of whether the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334." 505 F.3d at 244. Or, more specifically (1) was there post-confirmation subject matter jurisdiction over the Appellants' action, and (2) was that action "core" or "non-core"? After extensively discussing the bases for its own jurisdiction and the relevant background framework, id. at 24459, the Third Circuit analyzed each question in turn.

The Appellants' first argument was that the Third Circuit's prior opinion in Binder v. Price Waterhouse & Co. (In re Resorts International, Inc.), 372 F.3d 154 (3d Cir. 2004), established a "close nexus" test that must be met in all instances for there to be post-confirmation bankruptcy jurisdiction. Such a "close nexus" was not present in Seven Fields, the Appellants argued, because their action had little to do with the plan that had been confirmed nearly two decades earlier, but rather was based on state law claims against a nondebtor entity. The Third Circuit categorically rejected this argument:

The bankruptcy and district courts were not required to address the "close nexus" test because the test was not applicable in this "arising in" proceeding. As we discussed in Resorts, the "close nexus" standard only applies for the purposes of determining whether a federal court has jurisdiction over a non-core "related to" proceeding in the post-confirmation context. Appellants seem to believe that any time a party files a case post-confirmation, the "close nexus" test is triggered. This is plainly not the case. While courts may choose to rely on "related to" jurisdiction because it is the broadest category of federal bankruptcy jurisdiction when examining their own jurisdiction, it certainly is not incumbent upon them to do so, because, as occurred here, a party may argue and a court may decide that a proceeding falls within one of the narrower categories of jurisdiction, such as "arising in" jurisdiction, in which case "related to" jurisdiction and the corresponding "close nexus" test are not implicated.

505 F.3d at 260 (emphasis added; citation and footnote omitted). The Third Circuit then concluded that because the Appellants' allegations were based upon the theory "that in reliance upon the negligent work Ernst & Young performed during the bankruptcy, the bankruptcy court wrongly deemed the Debtors to be insolvent and caused the liquidation of the estate's assets in a manner that contravened the Amended Plan," the proceeding stemmed from conduct "arising in" a chapter 11 case, which provided independent subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1334(b). 505 F.3d at 26062.

The Third Circuit then considered, and affirmed, the lower courts' conclusion that the Appellants' case was "core" under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(A) & (O), reasoning that it is clear to us that a malpractice action against an accountant for misconduct during the bankruptcy on which the bankruptcy judge relied in confirming the plan of reorganization, and in reliance on which the bankruptcy court approved the fees to the accountants, and on which appellants' representatives relied to their detriment in selling the assets to pay their claims, in a manner that contravenes the terms of the reorganization plan, constitutes a core proceeding, more specifically a proceeding "arising in" the bankruptcy, which is subject to federal jurisdiction and the final adjudicative authority of the bankruptcy court.

505 F.3d at 26263.

Finally, although its resolution of the two foregoing questions did not require it to address this issue, the Third Circuit went further in an attempt to help resolve open questions about "the applicability of the close nexus' test in the related to' post-confirmation context." Id. at 263. More specifically, the Appellants had argued that application of the "close nexus" test turned on when the litigation was initiated, not on when the underlying alleged misconduct occurred. Some courts have concluded that the "close nexus" test applies only when the alleged misconduct itself had occurred post-confirmation. On this non-necessary issue, the Third Circuit agreed with the Appellants, concluding "that the close nexus' test is applicable to related to' jurisdiction over any claim or cause of action filed post-confirmation, regardless of when the conduct giving rise to the claim or cause of action occurred." Id. at 26465 (emphasis added). The Third Circuit again stressed, albeit in a footnote, that this distinction and application of the respective tests applies only when the parties seek to establish jurisdiction on the grounds that the cause of action is "related to" the bankruptcy, the broadest jurisdictional hook. . . . [I]n such situations the court must impose limits in the post-confirmation context. In contrast, cases that "rise in" the bankruptcy case must satisfy a stringent standard in which the matter must have an intimate connection to the bankruptcy proceedings, and thus the stage at which the complaint is filed is not determinative.

Id. at 265 n.26 (internal alteration omitted).

Commentary on Seven Fields. Seven Fields represents an important step forward in the doctrine regarding post-confirmation jurisdiction. While numerous courts have endorsed the notion that bankruptcy jurisdiction generally ought to be narrower following the confirmation of a plan, few courts have specifically applied this inchoate idea to each of the three distinct types of bankruptcy jurisdiction--"arising in," "arising under," and "related to." Seven Fields provides needed clarity by holding that limitations on post-confirmation jurisdiction--such as the Third Circuit's "close nexus" test--are germane only vis--vis questions of "related to" jurisdiction.

Beyond being doctrinally significant, there is little doubt that the Third Circuit reached the correct result. Actions that "arise under" the Bankruptcy Code--such as preferences, fraudulent transfers, or claims for equitable subordination--are unique products of federal bankruptcy law and thus properly belong before bankruptcy judges (at least in the first instance) irrespective of when a suit is brought under those provisions. Likewise, actions that relate to events occurring during a bankruptcy case, and thus "arise in" bankruptcy, should be pressed before the court that is most familiar with those prior proceedings--i.e., the bankruptcy court. Despite some suggestions to the contrary, these considerations seem sufficiently weighty to justify the rejection of any uniquely post-confirmation limitation on "arising under" or "arising in" jurisdiction, which is essentially what the Third Circuit held in Seven Fields.

In contrast, it seems appropriate to apply some limiting considerations in the context of post-confirmation "related to" jurisdiction. The words "related to" necessarily invoke a fairly sensitive, context-dependent analysis. The notion that a relationship between a bankruptcy case and a nonbankruptcy issue is tighter during the heat of the case--much like the moon's gravitational pull is strongest when it is closest to the Earth--and weaker as the bankruptcy case draws to a close post-confirmation is an intuitive one. Moreover, the notion is consistent with the fact that Congress's enactment of a bankruptcy system with exceptional procedural aspects--such as nationwide jurisdiction and service of process--was justified by the great social good that can be accomplished by successful bankruptcy cases. Once the bulk of that process is completed, however, the considerations that motivated Congress seem substantially weaker, which in turn makes it appropriate to require a far stronger relationship between a nonbankruptcy matter and a bankruptcy case if that matter is to proceed in a federal bankruptcy court or in a federal district court sitting in bankruptcy.

Although Seven Fields is an important decision that reaches the right result, numerous tricky issues of bankruptcy jurisdiction remain to be resolved, two of which are worth noting here.

First, courts have yet to define precisely the scope of bankruptcy jurisdiction over a post-confirmation "litigation" or "liquidation" trust. n4 These entities--which have been the products of numerous large bankruptcies of recent vintage, including Enron, Refco, and Oakwood Homes--are creatures of bankruptcy plans and are vested with, among other things, all causes of action held by the bankruptcy estate. Following confirmation, these entities--on behalf of their creditor-beneficiaries--usually pursue a wide-range of litigation, often against the debtor's prepetition lenders and professionals, under a range of theories. Such litigation can involve a mix of traditional bankruptcy claims, such as fraudulent transfers or preferences, and nonbankruptcy claims, such as aiding and abetting fraud, breach of fiduciary duty, or (the now largely discredited) "deepening insolvency." The question then becomes whether such nonbankruptcy, prepetition causes of action properly belong in federal bankruptcy courts. It is unclear what is the right answer regarding those claims that are, at best, "related to" the bankruptcy case. On the one hand, these claims were property of the bankruptcy estates asserted by entities created by the plan and thus have a "close nexus" to both the case and the plan itself. On the other hand, however, resolution of these claims usually requires reference to neither the specific text of the plan nor any provision of the Bankruptcy Code, which suggests there may be no "close nexus." This significant tension continues today and, one hopes, eventually will be resolved in future cases.

Second, a significant split exists among the circuits about whether bankruptcy courts can, in any instance (pre- or post-confirmation), exercise supplemental jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1367. ⁿ⁵ This issue is an important one because such powers could conceivably allow bankruptcy courts to exercise jurisdiction over matters that are "related to" matters "related to" a bankruptcy case. To the extent that there are weighty rationales for limiting the scope of "related to" jurisdiction generally following the confirmation of a chapter 11 plan, such rationales would seem to apply with even greater force to the scope of post-confirmation bankruptcy jurisdiction, if any, under section 1367.

For further discussion of bankruptcy court jurisdiction, see Collier on Bankruptcy, ch. 3 (Matthew Bender).

To access articles on recent bankruptcy developments, search the Mega News, Bankruptcy Law file on lexis.com.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the bankruptcy area of law page on lexis.com.

Return to Text

ⁿ¹ . Among other things, unless otherwise provided in the plan or the confirmation order, plan confirmation vests all property of the estate in the debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 1141(b).

ⁿ² . See, e.g., Boston Reg'l Med. Ctr., Inc. v. Reynolds (In re Boston Reg'l Med. Ctr., Inc.), 410 F.3d 100 (1st Cir. 2005); Montana v. Goldin (In re Pegasus Gold Corp.), 394 F.3d 1189 (9th Cir. 2005); Binder v. Price Waterhouse & Co. (In re Resorts Int'l, Inc.), 372 F.3d 154 (3d Cir. 2004); U.S. Brass Corp. v. Travelers Ins. Group (In re U.S. Brass Corp.), 301 F.3d 296 (5th Cir. 2002); Pettibone Corp. v. Easley, 935 F.2d 120 (7th Cir. 1991).

ⁿ³ . Thus the Third Circuit in Seven Fields limits to only those disputes raised preconfirmation the application of its broader "related to" jurisdictional test announced in Pacor, Inc. v. Higgins, i.e., whether "the outcome of the proceeding could conceivably have any effect on the estate being administered in bankruptcy." 743 F.2d 984, 994 (3d Cir. 1984); see Seven Fields, 505 F.3d at 265 ("[W]e conclude that with respect to related to' jurisdiction, the Pacor test applies in all disputes raised preconfirmation and the close nexus' test applies in all disputes raised post-confirmation, regardless of when the conduct alleged in the complaint occurred.").

n4 . See generally, e.g., In re WRT Energy Corp., 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3369, at *15-23 (Bankr. W.D. La. Sept. 28, 2007) (providing a detailed overview of the case law addressing this issue).

n5

[5]. Compare, e.g., Montana v. Goldin (In re Pegasus Gold Corp.), 394 F.3d 1189 (9th Cir. 2005) (bankruptcy courts may exercise jurisdiction under section 1367), with, e.g., Walker v. Cadle Co. (In re Walker), 51 F.3d 562 (5th Cir. 1995) (bankruptcy courts may not exercise jurisdiction under section 1367); see also Enron Corp. v. Citigroup, Inc. (In re Enron Corp.), 353 B.R. 51 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006) (discussing the issue in some detail and concluding that bankruptcy courts may not exercise supplemental jurisdiction).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

Ralph R. Mabey is Senior of Counsel to Stutman Treister & Glatt P.C., www.stutman.com, Professor of Law at the S. J. Quinney College of Law, University of Utah, and a Contributing Author to Collier on Bankruptcy. He received his law degree from Columbia University, where he served on the Board of Editors of the Columbia Law Review. Judge Mabey served with distinction as a United States Bankruptcy Judge before returning to private practice and teaching. His judicial opinions have been cited frequently by courts and scholars.

Judge Mabey is the past President and Chair of the American College of Bankruptcy. He served as an appointee of the Chief Justice of the United States to the U.S. JudicialConference's Advisory Committee on the Bankruptcy Rules. He also served as the managing editor of the Norton Bankruptcy Law Adviser and on the Editorial Advisory Board of the American Bankruptcy Law Journal.

He is a member of the National Bankruptcy Conference, the American Law Institute, and the American Bar Association's Select Advisory Committee on Business Reorganization (SABRE).

Judge Mabey's service in complex workout, bankruptcy, reorganization, and litigation matters includes A.H. Robins Company (as examiner with expanded powers); Dow Corning (as counsel for certain bondholders); Columbia Gas System (as equity committee counsel); Federated Department Stores (as counsel for the official pre-merger bondholders committee); TWA (as counsel for the pilots); American Airlines (as counsel for the pilots); Enron (as special counsel for the debtor); Cajun Electric Power Cooperative (as chapter 11 trustee); Boston Chicken (as an expert witness); and At Home/Excite (as an expert witness).

Courts, parties, and the Department of Justice (U.S. Trustee Program) have appointed Judge Mabey to serve as mediator, arbitrator, examiner, or trustee in Alaska, Arizona, California, Louisiana, Michigan, New York, Texas, Utah, Virginia, and Washington, D.C.

Judge Mabey is a member of the New York and Utah Bars.

Information referenced herein is provided for educational purposes only. For legal advice applicable to the facts of your particular situation, you should obtain the services of a qualified attorney licensed to practice law in your state.

108 of 197 DOCUMENTS

Emerging Issues Copyright 2009, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group. All Rights Reserved.

Glosband on In re Iida

2008 Emerging Issues 1524

Glosband on In re Iida

By Daniel Glosband

December 14, 2007

SUMMARY: Is a foreign representative of a foreign bankruptcy proceeding required to obtain permission from a court in the United States before exercising ownership rights over property in the U.S.? The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Ninth Circuit properly answered this question in the negative on September 26, 2007 in Iida v. Kitahara (In re Iida), BAP No. HI-07-1006-DKS, 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3574 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. Sept. 26, 2007).

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ARTICLE: Bankruptcy Appellate Panel Affirms Court Order Not Required for Foreign Representative to Exercise Control Over Property Located in the United States

The Facts and Posture of In re Iida. The issue before the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Ninth Circuit (the "Panel") arose retrospectively in a case under Chapter 15 where the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Hawaii (the "Bankruptcy Court") recognized a Japanese bankruptcy case as a foreign main proceeding. The Japanese debtor, Katsumi Iida ("Iida"), was the sole stockholder of several Hawaii corporations (the "Hawaii Corporations") which held ownership interests in limited partnerships that, in turn, owned two luxury hotels in Hawaii. Iida was declared bankrupt under Japanese law in August 2004 (about a month after the first of the two hotels had been sold) and a trustee (the "Foreign Representative") was appointed in the Japanese bankruptcy to administer Iida's bankruptcy estate and liquidate assets.

In January 2005, the Foreign Representative (i) presented his credentials as bankruptcy trustee to the Hawaii Corporations, assuming the role of sole stockholder, and (ii) removed the existing officers and directors (including Iida) and replaced them with a single director and officer, all as permitted by the corporations' by-laws and Hawaii law. The following September, on request of the Foreign Representative, the Japanese bankruptcy court authorized him to (i) sell the remaining luxury hotel and (ii) exercise decision making power with respect to the stock of all companies that Iida owned. The sale of the second hotel was to close on November 30, 2005. All of this activity transpired before either Iida or the Foreign Representative set foot in a courtroom in the United States.

Nearly seven months after the Japanese bankruptcy court authorized the hotel sale and over a year after the management changes, Iida filed a complaint in Hawaii state court. The April 2006 complaint sought a declaratory judgment against the Foreign Representative and the Hawaii Corporations' current management (the "Declaratory Judgment Action") recognizing Iida as sole shareholder and reinstating him to corporate management. The complaint also sought to enjoin the Foreign Representative from removing Iida from management and distributing the proceeds of sales of the Hawaii Corporations' assets.

To deal with the Declaratory Judgment Action, the Foreign Representative filed a chapter 15 petition on June 13, 2006 in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Hawaii, seeking recognition of the Japanese bankruptcy proceeding as a foreign main proceeding pursuant to 11 USCS § 1515 and 11 USCS § 1517 and commencement of an ancillary case under 11 USCS § 1504. Iida, relying on 11 USCS § 1506, opposed the petition on the grounds that recognition would be manifestly contrary to the public policy of the United States because the Foreign Representative failed to obtain permission from the Bankruptcy Court under chapter 15 or its antecedent 11 USCS § 304 before removing Iida as officer and director of the Hawaii Corporations. n1

Iida did not prevail and, on July 14, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court entered its order recognizing the Japanese bankruptcy as a foreign main proceeding. 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3574, at *16. The Foreign Representative then removed the Declaratory Judgment action to the Bankruptcy Court and filed a Motion to Dismiss on grounds that comity required deference to Japanese bankruptcy law and the orders of the Japanese bankruptcy court which authorized the Foreign Representative's actions. Iida opposed the motion on the grounds that the Foreign Representative lacked the authority to remove the officers and directors of the Hawaii Corporations because he did not comply with federal bankruptcy or state law, which Iida contended required prior recognition of the Foreign Representative's status as a trustee in the Japanese bankruptcy.

The Bankruptcy Court treated Iida's Motion to Dismiss as a summary judgment motion, granting summary judgment to the Foreign Representative. 2007 Bankr. LEXIS 3574, at *18-19. The court held that the Foreign Representative had been authorized to take action with the Hawaii Corporations because (i) the Japanese bankruptcy court orders authorized the Foreign Representative to act as sole shareholder in place of Iida and restructure management, (ii) the Foreign Representative had complied with the corporations' by-laws and Hawaii law with respect to his exercise of shareholder rights, and (iii) no provision of the United States Bankruptcy Code or Hawaii state law required an order recognizing the Foreign Representative's authority to act. Id. Iida appealed the ruling to the Panel.

The Appeal. The issue before the Panel was "whether a Foreign Representative must obtain permission from a court in the United States before exercising shareholder rights to vote to remove and replace the directors and officers of the Hawaii Corporations." Id. at * 19. Iida contended that both federal and Hawaii law required orders from a United States court before the Foreign Representative had authority to act in the United States and that Hawaii law did not recognize the exercise of shareholder voting rights by a foreign trustee. The Panel was unconvinced:

As we explain below, nothing in either the Bankruptcy Code or Hawaii state law requires the Foreign Representative to obtain a further order from a court within the United States recognizing his authority as trustee before exercising ownership rights.

Id. at *20-21. The Panel noted that the historical application of principles of comity provided "a basic mode of analysis" for a United States court to consider a case or controversy regarding a foreign bankruptcy. Id. at *22. In the absence of controversy, courts are not involved:

Measures taken by a foreign representative in the United States that do not require invoking the machinery of the courts and that all counterparties accept as legitimate do not present a controversy and are presumptively valid. If, however, the foreign representative's authority or capacity is challenged, then there is a controversy that would be appropriate for judicial application of principles of comity.

Id. The Panel's decision contains a thorough and thoughtful analysis of comity as it developed under common law and progressed after adoption of 11 U.S.C. § 304 in 1978. Id. at *22-29. Enactment of chapter 15 was not seen as a change in the basic approach of honoring principles of comity. However, chapter 15 added the structural requirement of recognition as a condition to the Foreign Representative's access to the courts:

[11 USCS § 1509] erects a structure in which the foreign representative passes through the bankruptcy court for a recognition decision, the specified consequences of which are that the foreign representative gains the capacity to sue and be sued in United States courts and the authority to apply directly to a court in the United States for appropriate relief, and that all courts in the United States must grant comity or cooperation to the foreign representative.

Id. at *31. Section 1509's gating requirement only applies when the Foreign Representative needs the assistance of a court in the United States. In sharp contrast, "[n]othing in the statute requires prior judicial permission for acts that do not implicate matters of comity or cooperation by courts It follows that chapter 15 does not constrain a foreign representative from acts that do not require judicial assistance." Id. at *36.

The Foreign Representative's actions regarding the exercise of his rights as shareholder of the Hawaii Corporations and his removal of their officers and directors had not been opposed by the Hawaii Corporations or Iida and did not require judicial assistance until Iida filed the Declaratory Judgment Action in Hawaii state court. Iida's argument that the recognition sought by the Foreign Representative subsequent to the Declaratory Judgment Action would be manifestly contrary to the public policy of the United States was without merit as Iida failed to identify a fundamental policy of the United States that is offended by recognition of the Japanese bankruptcy. Id. at *37.

As to state law, Iida argued that, under Hawaii law, the Foreign Representative failed to obtain recognition of his authority to exercise his rights as shareholder of the Hawaii Corporations under Hawaii's version of the Uniform Foreign Money-Judgments Recognition Act. The Panel rejected this argument on the grounds that the statute was inapplicable by its plain meaning as the orders of the Japanese bankruptcy court were not foreign money-judgments. Id. at *42. Iida also took issue with the Bankruptcy Court's determination that the Foreign Representative was authorized to vote the Hawaii Corporations' stock, despite not being the shareholder of record on the Hawaii Corporations' books. While there is statutory permission for a "trustee in bankruptcy" to vote such shares, Iida argued that the term "trustee in bankruptcy" did not include the Foreign Representative under state law. The Panel dismissed this argument by finding no material difference between an American chapter 7 trustee and a trustee in a Japanese bankruptcy. Id. at *44.

Upon undertaking an analysis of the proof regarding whether any genuine issues of material fact remained, the Panel found that Iida failed to show that any such genuine issues of material fact existed and affirmed the Bankruptcy Court's grant of summary judgment for the Foreign Representative. Id. at 52.

Practical Implications. The Iida decision suggests to foreign representatives that they explore fully their ability to act without judicial assistance. Asset recovery and administration may be possible without ever having to go court, particularly if there is no need for protection against creditor action or for discovery. On the debtor's side, prompt action would be required to initiate a proceeding seeking to block the foreign representative from acting if there were a dispute. That would likely provoke an earlier recourse to chapter 15 and permit any genuine issues to be raised before they had become moot.

The Iida decision is a positive step in the development of chapter 15 jurisprudence. It focuses clearly on the distinction between actions that do not require judicial assistance and those that do; it contains an informative recitation of the history and application of the doctrine of comity; it properly articulates chapter 15's structural requirement for recognition by the bankruptcy court as a predicate for the granting of comity or cooperation; and, it reinforces the limitation of the "manifestly contrary to public policy" exception to the most fundamental policies of the United States.

For a one-stop source for all bankruptcy research, see the lexis.com bankruptcy area of law page.

Return to Text

n1 . The Japanese bankruptcy and the management change occurred while 11 U.S.C. § 304 of the Bankruptcy Code applied to ancillary proceedings; 11 U.S.C. § 304 was repealed as part of the October 17, 2005 BAPCPA amendments that added chapter 15 to the Bankruptcy Code.

PDF LINK: Click here for enhanced PDF of this Emerging Issues Analysis at no additional charge

RELATED CONTENT: Click here for more Emerging Issues Analysis related to this Area of Law

ABOUT THE AUTHOR(S):

