Thus, the attorney conducting a deposition may ask questions about any relevant, non-privileged matters so long as the questioning is reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Although questioning at trial will be limited to admissible matters, deposition questioning may extend to information that is not admissible so long as the information may lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. In practice, Rule 30 means that a witness at a deposition can be questioned without regard to many of the rules of evidence and without regard to the "personal knowledge" requirement of Rule 56(e). n1.1 Although it is wise to address some evidentiary concerns at the deposition, such as laying a proper foundation for testimony, the attorney taking a deposition need not always feel constrained by some of the more complex evidentiary rules, such as the hearsay and best evidence rules.

[2] Using Objections and Protective Orders to Limit Scope of Deposition

Rule 32(d) sets forth the basic rules concerning objections at depositions. It provides, in pertinent part:

(3) As to Taking of Deposition.

(A) Objections to the competency of a witness or to the competency, relevancy, or materiality of testimony are not waived by failure to make them before or during the taking of the deposition, unless the ground of the objection is one which might have been obviated or removed if presented at that time.

(B) Errors and irregularities occurring at the oral examination in the manner of taking the deposition, in the form of the questions or answers, in the oath or affirmation, or in the conduct of parties, and errors of any kind which might be obviated, removed, or cured if promptly presented, are waived unless seasonable objection thereto is made at the taking of the deposition.

Even though the right to object to questioning and to instruct a witness not to answer is severely limited, the court has broad powers to protect a party or witness from abusive discovery tactics by ordering that a deposition not be taken, by limiting the time period for the deposition, or by terminating or otherwise limiting the subjectmatter of the deposition. n2 Finally, the court has the power to issue any order to protect a party or the deponent from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense in connection with discovery requests. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceCivil ProcedureTrialsDepositions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n2)Footnote 1.1. See also Fed. R. Evid. 602.

(n3)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(c)(3)(A),,.

(n4)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

* Chapter 17 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 Taking Depositions *

2-17 Federal Litigation Guide § 17.03

§ 17.03 Timing and Location of Depositions

[1] Considering General Importance of Time and Place of Deposition

Although the Federal Rules answer most of the technical questions of when and where a deposition may be taken, these matters should not be viewed merely as the mechanical application of rules. In fact, the timing of a deposition, and the selection of a location for it, can be an important part of planning the discovery program.

[2] Timing of Depositions Under Federal Rules

Under Rule 30(a)(2), without leave of court, a party cannot take a deposition until the parties have met and conferred as required by Rule 26(f). n1 That rule, in turn, mandates that unless exempt by court order, the parties are to meet "as soon as practicable--and in any event at least 21 days before a scheduling conference is to be held or a scheduling order is due under Rule 16(b)." The purpose of the meeting is to discuss:

- The nature and basis of the various claims and defenses and the possibilities for settlement.
- To make or arrange for the Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures.
- To develop a proposed discovery plan.

Depositions can be taken before the Rule 26(f) discovery conference, however, if the notice of deposition "contains a certification, with supporting facts, that the person to be examined is expected to leave the United States and be unavailable for examination in this country unless deposed before that time." In addition, Rule 27 permits depositions to be taken prior to the commencement of an action when it is necessary to perpetuate testimony. n2

[3] Taking Depositions After Written Requests for Discovery

Although depositions can be commenced in conjunction with other formal discovery, in many cases depositions should be taken only after documentary discovery has commenced. Although Rule 30(b)(2) permits a party to couple a notice of deposition with a Rule 34 document request, this should be avoided, absent compelling reasons to the contrary. Good practice dictates the Rule 34 document request be served sufficiently in advance of the deposition to allow documents to be analyzed and the results incorporated into the preparation and actual questioning of the deponent. By taking the deposition after the critical documents have been produced, the deposition can become a much more probing device.

In addition, a deposition frequently should follow some effort to obtain more information about the pleadings. Because notice pleading requires that a pleading give only minimal notice of a party's claims or defenses, you are often well advised to clarify the pleadings with interrogatories or requests for admissions prior to taking any deposition. After further details of the claims or defenses are obtained, you may be better able to determine what information should be sought at the deposition. For instance, answers to interrogatories can provide more factual details of the claim that can help you frame more effective questions and explore details not set forth in the pleadings. In addition, the party-deponent may then be asked to clarify both the pleadings and the interrogatory responses at the deposition. Not surprisingly, the interrogatory responses, which are drafted by counsel, will often provide information about the pleadings different from what the witness will provide.

Counsel sometimes worry about losing priority because of delays occasioned by the service of interrogatories or document requests. Under Rule 26(d), however, absent a court order to the contrary, no party enjoys any "priority" in the order of taking depositions so there need not be a race to notice the first deposition. In addition, as a matter of practice, you can still promptly serve a deposition notice and then agree to adjourn the deposition until after the documents and interrogatory responses are provided. From another perspective, in cases where depositions should be taken immediately, such as where injunctive relief is sought, the abolition of priority also means that no party's deposition discovery need be delayed on grounds that another party has priority. This means that counsel wishing to take a deposition need not wait until the adverse party concludes its deposition discovery. n3

[4] Considering Location of Deposition

[4.--1] Cooperating with Witnesses

Rather than engage in expensive and time-consuming motion practice to determinethe location for a party's deposition, it is generally advisable to agree on a suitable location for the deposition. Such cooperation makes sense because, while the location of a deposition can raise some tactical and financial concerns, these concerns are rarely important enough to justify the court's intervention. Moreover, specifying an inconvenient location of a deposition for the purpose of harassing another party is generally counterproductive. Although there may be a school of thought that believes that making life expensive and unpleasant for adverse parties is always the best course, such behavior often will only stiffen the determination of the adverse party and lead to a breakdown of cooperation among the parties.

Although there is a general presumption that a plaintiff who chooses a forum should be prepared to be deposed in that forum, a court may consider external restraints on the plaintiff's choice of forum, and permit nonresident plaintiffs to be deposed where they live when they have been able to show financial hardship. n4

When the plaintiff seeks to depose the defendant at a location distant from the defendant's principal place of business and the defendant objects, the plaintiff has the burden of affirmatively demonstrating "peculiar" circumstances that compel the court to order the deposition to be held in an alternative location. n4.1

[4.--2] Understanding Subpoena Power for Non-Parties

Under the Federal Rules, the deposition of a party to an action may be noticed for any location. n5 Rule 30(a)(1) states that "the deponent's attendance may be compelled by subpoena under Rule 45." Since a deposition subpoena is unnecessary for a party, Rule 45 does not apply to a party who is being deposed.

In addition to restrictions on service, n6 there are limits on the distance from which a witness must travel in order to attend the deposition. Rule 45(c)(3)(A) provides that on timely motion, the issuing court shall quash or modify a subpoena if it requires a non-party "to travel to a place more than 100 miles from the place where that person resides, is employed or regularly transacts business in person... ." n7 Note that Rule 45(c) also imposes a duty on the party or attorney issuing the subpoena to take reasonable steps to avoid imposing undue burden or expense on the witness. If this duty is violated, the witness may on timely motion move to quash or modify the subpoena. n8

[4.--3] Considering Where to Depose Corporate Employees

Probably the most difficult questions concerning deposition location arise in the context of corporate employees. Rule 30(b)(6) states, in part, that if a corporation, partnership, or governmental entity is named as a deponent, it "shall designate one or more officers, directors, or managing agents, or other persons who consent to testify on its behalf. ... A subpoena shall advise a non-party organization of its duty to make such a designation." Under the Federal Rules, a subpoena is not required to compel the attendance of an employee of a corporate party who is an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation. n9 In addition, the attendance of an employee of a corporate party who is not an officer or director may sometimes be compelled upon notice if an argument can be made that the failure of the employee to cooperate in discovery can be treated under Rule 37 as the failure of the party itself. In practice, even though the Federal Rules may allow the corporate party to require a subpoena for employees who are not officers, directors, or managing agents, some corporations will agree to produce an employee-deponent on notice alone.

Examining counsel's apparently wide discretion when choosing the deposition location for a corporation's officers, directors, and managing agents is more constrained than the Rules might suggest. Exercising their discretion under Rule 26(c)(2)to control the place of discovery, n10 some courts have held that the depositions of executives and officers of corporate parties should generally be taken at the corporation's principal place of business. n11

Although the district court has the power to permit a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition to take place at a location other than a corporation's principal place of business, the party seeking the alternate location must overcome the presumption that the deposition should take place at corporate headquarters. n11.1 The proper procedure for objecting to a notice of deposition is to file a motion under Rule 26(c)(2) for a protective order designating a different location for the deposition. n12 This rule may be applied less stringently to the deposition of a plaintiff who chose the forum than to the defendant who had no such discretion. n13

Thus, where a corporation brings suit in a district far from where its representatives live and work, it may be called upon to respond to notices of deposition where it chose to sue. This rationale is weakened, of course, when problems of personal jurisdiction compelled the plaintiff to sue in a faraway district. n14 But where the corporate plaintiff is dilatory or fails to respond to court orders for discovery, the court may also choose to compel it to appear for depositions in the district in which the suit is pending. Thus, where corporate plaintiffs located in Hong Kong failed to respond to attempts to take depositions in Hong Kong, the court ordered the depositions take place in San Francisco in order that the court might oversee the proceedings. n15

The general proposition that the deposition of a corporation through its agents and officers should be taken at its offices applies especially where the corporation is the defendant. n16 Nevertheless, the proposition that a corporate defendant is entitled to have its spokesmen deposed at its principal offices is subject to the discretion of the court. Frequently, a trial court, in ruling upon the location of a deposition, will allocate the expenses of travel and accommodations in order to balance fairly the respective burdens upon the parties. n17

[4.--4] Strategizing Place of Deposition

As with the depositions of parties, the greatest flexibility may be realized when all counsel to an action can agree on where to take a non-party deposition. For instance, you may be able to work out mutually agreeable arrangements for the location of a deposition of a witness who under the Rules must be subpoenaed (e.g., an employee who is not an officer, director, or managing agent; or a former employee) but who, as a practical matter, is within the parties' control. Frequently, defending counsel can persuade a retired former employee to be deposed at the former employer's place of business. Similarly, counsel may persuade a friendly non-party witness to be deposed at counsel's office in the city where all of the parties and attorneys are located.

Some tactical considerations also can motivate lawyers to focus significant attention on the deposition location. Special local rules may exist in some jurisdictions which require that expenses be paid for the cost of attorneys who must travel significant distances for depositions. Because depositions are usually one of the most expensive discovery devices, some lawyers believe that scheduling expensive depositions can bea means of provoking settlement discussions in smaller cases. Obviously, the cost of any deposition will increase substantially if it is scheduled for a location that requires expensive travel and hotel accommodations. This tactic may provoke the court's displeasure and sanctions before it generates any settlement discussions. Many lawyers prefer to take depositions in their own offices where they have convenient access to the case files and support services, both of which are sometimes needed during the course of a deposition. In addition, some lawyers believe they are more able to control the deposition proceedings when they are conducted in counsel's own office. For instance, examining counsel may be better able to ensure that there are fewer interruptions, such as telephone calls, so that the witness feels compelled to answer the questions fully and promptly.

Even when examining a friendly witness, you should resist the witness's wish to stay near a telephone. Allowing the witness to be distracted by other concerns may be harmful to the quality of the testimony. You should simply explain that the deposition will be over sooner if the witness is not interrupted. For these reasons, whenever possible, many examiners schedule depositions for their own office.

Even when your office is a suitable location under the Rules, however, there are circumstances in which you may desire to schedule the deposition elsewhere. When taking the deposition of a witness with knowledge of many documents, you may consider whether the witness should be deposed close to the place where the documents are located. n18 When you are taking the depositions of a series of employees of an adverse corporation and cannot predict how long each deposition will last, you may find it more efficient to use a conference room at the corporation's office so that each deposition can begin promptly when the previous one is finished. If the depositions are held elsewhere, there may be substantial delays between depositions.

Do not overlook other advantages of deposing the witness at his office or place of business. It may be the only opportunity you will have to observe the layout of the work place and its personnel on the job. You may also be able to observe what treatises, journals, and other reading materials are kept on the tables or in the witness's bookshelves (this is particularly valuable in the case of an expert witness).

In cases where you believe that the lawyer representing the witness may invoke travel arrangements to limit the length of the deposition, you may prefer to travel to the witness in the hope that this will eliminate the excuse for limiting the deposition.

In some cases, with a potentially evasive witness, you may think that the courthouse, with its presumably easier access to the judge and air of formality, is the best place to depose that witness. n19

In some cases, practical considerations may dictate that a particular deposition be taken in an unusual setting. For instance, depositions are sometimes held in hospital rooms or private homes if the witness is too ill to attend elsewhere. n20 In the case of a senior executive of a large corporation, defending counsel may agree to the deposition more readily if it is scheduled for a location convenient for the witness. In such circumstances, by accepting the realities of the witness's schedule and status, you may avoid extensive motion practice and delay. n21

[4.--5] Considering Effect of Location on Witness.

Although the considerations for deposition location often involve matters of convenience, some lawyers believe that witness performance can be affected by the deposition location. Conventional wisdom suggests that a witness may be more comfortable when deposed in or near familiar surroundings. On a purely practical level, the witness may be better rested having spent the night before the deposition at home. For this reason, some lawyers defending depositions believe a witness may not perform as well if the deposition is taken in an unfamiliar city.

In general, however, questions of whether the deposition location will affect a witness's testimony are difficult to answer and can be a distraction from the real purposes of discovery. Because such questions of psychological advantage frequently do not have a clear answer, they usually should not be among your primary concerns. Although both examining and defending counsel may properly give psychological factors more weight with certain witnesses, such as an extremely nervous or unsophisticated witness, counsel's preparation is usually more important to the successful deposition than any perceived psychological concerns.

To the extent that a witness may require reasonable accommodations at thedeposition location, n22 the examining lawyer should make such accommodations if they do not interfere with the questioning. For instance, a doctor or senior executive may claim a legitimate need to be accessible by telephone. While you should not permit the witness to abuse such an accommodation so as to disturb the questioning, it is usually sensible to allow the witness some flexibility. If abuse occurs, you should make a statement on the record and, if it continues, the court's assistance can be sought.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMotions to CompelCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsStipulations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Rule 30(a)(2)(A)(iii) refers to "the time specified in Rule 26(d)." That provision states that "a party may not seek discovery from any source before the parties have met and conferred as required by Rule 26(f)."

(n2)Footnote 2. Upon the petition of the party wishing to take the deposition, the court may order the deposition and may specify the subject matter of the deposition. Note, however, that Rule 27 requires 20 days' notice; one case has held that this notice may not be dispensed with even if the deponent is approaching death. See In re Jacobs, 110 F.R.D. 422 (N.D. Ind. 1986) . In addition, depositions are sometimes taken prior to service of the summons and complaint when the plaintiff is unable to locate the defendant. In United States v. Agnew, 80 F.R.D. 506 (S.D. Fla. 1978) , the government was granted leave to take the defendant's father's deposition even though the defendant had not been served. The court limited the deposition, however, to questioning about the defendant's whereabouts.

(n3)Footnote 3. Although the Federal Rules abolish priority, a court may issue an order setting priority to take depositions in appropriate cases. In Daniels v. AMTRAK, 110 F.R.D. 160 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) , the court granted plaintiff's motion to compel production of any photographs, movies, or videotapes of plaintiff in defendant's possession, but held that the disclosure of such surveillance material need not be made until after the plaintiff's deposition was taken. The court said that the plaintiff's testimony should be "frozen" before the plaintiff has an opportunity to review the defendant's surveillance material.

(n4)Footnote 4. Connell v. City of New York, 230 F. Supp. 2d 432, 436-437 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) .

(n5)Footnote 4.1. See Morin v. Nationwide Fed. Credit Union, 229 F.R.D. 362, 363 (D. Conn. 2005) .

(n6)Footnote 5. See Riley v. Murdock, 156 F.R.D. 130, 132 (E.D.N.C. 1994) (Rule 30(b)(1) allows party noticing deposition to select the place it will be taken).

(n7)Footnote 6. As to service, Rule 45(b)(2) provides as follows:

> Subject to the provisions of clause (ii) of subparagraph (c)(3)(A) of this rule, a subpoena may be > served at any place within the district of the court by which it is issued, or at any place without the district that is within 100 miles of the place of the deposition ... specified in the subpoena or at any place within the state where a state statute or rule of court permits service of a subpoena issued by a state court of general jurisdiction sitting in the place of the deposition ... . When a statute of the United States provides therefor, the court upon proper application and cause shown may authorize the service of a subpoena at any other place. ...

See 28 U.S.C. § 1782. An order to compel answers to a deposition or for contempt of court against a non-party deponent can only be issued by the court in the district where the deposition is taken, and the court in which the action is pending (if different) has no jurisdiction over it. See First Nat'l Bank v. Western Cas. & Surety Co., 598 F.2d 1203 (10th Cir. 1979) . See generally Doe v. Hersemann, 155 F.R.D. 630 (N.D. Ind. 1994) (service of subpoena pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.Proc. 45(b)(1) may be accomplished by certified mail).

(n8)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(c)(3)(A)(ii). Subject to the provisions of Rule 45(c)(3)(B)(iii), an exception exists in the case of trial subpoenas requiring such a person "to travel from any such place within the state in which the trial is held."

(n9)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(c)(3)(A)(iv).
In the case of a subpoena duces tecum, within 14 days after service, or before the time for compliance if such time is less than 14 days after service, the witness may serve written objections, in which case "the party serving the subpoena shall not be entitled to inspect and copy the materials or inspect the premises except pursuant to an order of the court by which the subpoena was issued." The party serving the subpoena may move for an order to compel. An order to compel "shall protect any person who is not a party or an officer of a party from significant expense resulting from the inspection and copying commanded." Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(c)(2)(B).

(n10)Footnote 9. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d) Committee Note (1970).

> A statement of the rule controlling the deposition of a specified corporate official appears in Less v. Taber Instrument Corp., 53 F.R.D. 645 (W.D.N.Y. 1971) . The court noted that the deposition of a corporate party may be taken from a director named in the notice to the corporation even if the director is not personally served with a subpoena. The corporation must produce the named director or risk imposition of Rule 37(d) sanctions. See also Continental Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Delta Corp. 71 F.R.D. 697 (W.D. Okla. 1976) (holding that notice by plaintiff was all that was necessary to require attendance of the officers or managing agents of the defendant at the deposition).

(n11)Footnote 10. See Hyde & Drath v. Baker, 24 F.3d 1162, 1166 (9th Cir. 1994) ("A district court has wide discretion to establish the time and place of depositions").

(n12)Footnote 11. See Baker v. Standard Indus., Inc., 55 F.R.D. 178, 179 (D.P.R. 1972) ; Mitchell v. American Tobacco Co., 33 F.R.D. 262, 263 (M.D. Pa. 1963) ; Reliable Volkswagen Sales & Serv. Co. v. World-Wide Auto. Corp., 26 F.R.D. 592, 594 (D.N.J. 1960) .

(n13)Footnote 11.1. See McDougal-Wilson v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 232 F.R.D. 246, 249 (E.D.N.C. 2005) (citing Moore's Federal Practice).

(n14)Footnote 12. See Continental Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Delta Corp. 71 F.R.D. 697, 699 (W.D. Okla. 1976) . Rule 26(c) is intended to prevent imposition on the deponent of unnecessary trouble and expense by requiring him to travel a great distance to give his deposition. Baker v. Standard Indus. Inc., 55 F.R.D. 178, 179 (D.P.R. 1972) . The rule that the normal location for taking the deposition of a corporation is its principal place of business is not fixed or inflexible, but it does place the burden of justifying a change of location on the party that seeks to take a deposition at a different location. See Cox v. Champion Int'l, 31 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 423 (W.D. Pa. 1981) . Accord Baker v. Standard

Indus., Inc., 55 F.R.D. 178, 180 (D.P.R. 1972) .

(n15)Footnote 13. If the plaintiff designates some place other than the residence or principal place of business of the corporate deponent and the defendant files a timely objection, "the objection should be sustained absent some unusual circumstance to justify putting the defendant to such inconvenience." Continental Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Delta Corp. 71 F.R.D. 697, 699 (W.D. Okla. 1976) (quoting Grey v. Continental Marketing Assocs., Inc., 315 F. Supp. 826, 832 (N.D. Ga. 1970)) ; see also Producers Releasing Corp. de Cuba v. PRC Pictures, Inc., 176 F.2d 93 (2d Cir. 1949) ; Detweiler Bros. v. John Graham & Co., 412 F. Supp. 416 (E.D. Wash. 1976) .

(n16)Footnote 14. For example, in Ellis Air Lines v. Bellanca Aircraft Corp., 17 F.R.D. 395, 396 (D. Del. 1955) , the court observed that the "principle [that plaintiff may be brought to the forum] loses some weight where the plaintiff has no choice of forum but, as here, the plaintiff must bring his suit in one particular jurisdiction or not at all." Because the deponent in Ellis, the president of the plaintiff corporation, probably would not be called by plaintiff to testify at the trial, the court labelled it "an act of annoyance and oppression" to compel him to come from Alaska to Delaware for deposition. Id. at 397 . The court gave the defendant 10 days to choose one of the following alternatives: (1) take the deposition in Alaska; (2) offer to pay for the deponent's trip to Delaware; or (3) use written interrogatories instead.

(n17)Footnote 15. Hyde & Drath v. Baker, 24 F.3d 1162 (9th Cir. 1994) .

(n18)Footnote 16. See Salter v. Upjohn Co., 593 F.2d 649, 651 (5th Cir. 1979) ; accord Cox v. Champion Int'l, 31 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 423 (W.D. Pa. 1981) ; Continental Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Delta Corp. of Am., 71 F.R.D. 697 (W.D. Okla. 1976) . Of course, this general rule is subject to the discretion of the court to designate the place for taking a deposition. Leist v. Union Oil Co. of Cal., 82 F.R.D. 203 (E.D. Wis. 1979) (in view of the comparative burdens on the parties and the fact that all counsel were in the forum district, defendant's request for a protective order was denied); Thompson v. Sun Oil Co., 523 F.2d 647 (8th Cir. 1975) ; Powell v. International Foodservice Sys., Inc., 52 F.R.D. 205 (D.P.R. 1971) .

> See also Afram Export Corp. v. Metallurgiki Halyps, S.A., 772 F.2d 1358 (7th Cir. 1985) (a district court does not abuse its discretion by ordering the deposition of a foreign company president in the United States, where the foreign company maintains an office in the United States and its president frequently travels there). The general rule also may not apply where the defendant has asserted a counterclaim--at least if it is a permissive counterclaim. See Continental Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Delta Corp. of Am., 71 F.R.D. 697 (W.D. Okla. 1976) .

(n19)Footnote 17. See, e.g., Financial Gen. Bankshares, Inc. v. Lance, 80 F.R.D. 22, 23 (D.D.C. 1978) (plaintiff offered to pay the defendant's expenses to the forum district); Tomingas v. Douglas Aircraft Co., 45 F.R.D. 94, 97 (S.D.N.Y. 1968) (defendant could easily arrange transportation to the forum); Connell v. Biltmore Sec. Life Ins., 41 F.R.D. 136 (D.S.C. 1966) .

(n20)Footnote 18. For example, if the case is one in which documents play a significant role, the course of the examination may reveal the existence of documents which have not been produced and which should be. Thus, if the witness discloses that he kept memoranda of his telephone calls, and it appears that he did not supply them to his own lawyer, the course of the deposition is simplified if those memoranda can be reviewed and produced over a lunch hour, or overnight, because they are close at hand rather than far away.

(n21)Footnote 19. Courthouses often have facilities for taking depositions. The quality and availability of such facilities vary, of course, from courthouse to courthouse. Before planning to use courthouse deposition facilities, you should inquire of the clerk's office about the facilities.

(n22)Footnote 20. Since a growing, and significant, portion of the population is elderly, many attorneys have been required to deal with treatment or "right to die" issues in non-traditional settings. Taking depositions in nursing homes, hospitals and similar sites presents unique problems. Even more importantly, questioning the deponent and recording responses is a challenge for the attorney.

(n23)Footnote 21. Do not overlook the possibility of taking a deposition by telephone or other remote electronic means, which is specifically authorized under Rule 30(b)(7) upon written stipulation of the parties or court order. An obvious disadvantage of a telephone deposition is that it does not permit the examiner to observe the demeanor and non-verbal cues of the deponent. Furthermore, the examiner cannot observe whether the deponent is relying on notes or documents or consulting with other persons for assistance. It also makes the use of documents in the examination difficult unless duplicate sets are prepared and transmitted ahead of time to the place of deposition. Fax machines have been used to lessen this hurdle. See Bywaters v. Bywaters, 123 F.R.D. 175 (E.D. Pa. 1988) .

(n24)Footnote 22. The considerations for the deposition site are generally simple and are usually the responsibility of the attorney taking the deposition. The deposition should be taken in an adequate room with a table that will accommodate all the people that will attend the deposition. If possible, there should be access to copying services. The deposition site should be a location where there will be few interruptions. If the deposition is taken in another city, you should arrange to use a conference room in a local law firm or hotel. If the witness has access to a suitable site, you may wish to use that site, particularly if the witness is a non-party who is accommodating the examining counsel. You should urge the witness, or the witness's lawyer, to pick a site that will reduce the risk of interruption.

* Chapter 17 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 Taking Depositions *

2-17 Federal Litigation Guide § 17.04

§ 17.04 Evaluating Basic Principles of All Depositions

[1] Understanding Importance of Deposition Transcript

[1.--1] Determining Method of Recordation

The lawyer taking a deposition must arrange for the deposition to be recorded. Traditionally, most deposition proceedings have been recorded by a stenographer and later transcribed into text. Increasingly, however, depositions are being videotaped in addition to the stenographic recording. Rule 30(b)(3) requires the deposition notice to state the method by which the testimony will be recorded; unless otherwise ordered by the court, the deposition may be recorded by audio, audiovisual or stenographic means, and the noticing party bears the recording costs. n1

If the deposition is taken by nonstenographic means, any party may arrange for a transcription to be made from the recording. Further, if prior notice is given, any party may, at its own expense, designate an additional method of recording. n2

Now that most courts do not require original deposition transcripts to be filed with the court unless they are actually used at trial, be aware that counsel who took the deposition may not necessarily have asked that the deposition be transcribed and that you, therefore, cannot assume that the original deposition transcript will be available in the courtroom. Thus, if you anticipate using the deposition at trial, you should check with the court reporter ahead of time to be sure that a transcription has been made and to determine where the original transcript is located. n3

[1.--2] Developing a Clear Record

A primary goal of examining counsel during a deposition is the creation of a clear and usable record. You must continually assess how the transcript will look. In preparing for and conducting a deposition, you must be conscious of the fact that some of the most important purposes of the deposition can be served only if the written transcript is unambiguous and logical when read. Unlike information that is gained from interrogatory responses or documents that are produced, your freedom to rearrange deposition testimony is sometimes constrained. Since a deposition is given in the witness's own words, testimony often cannot be rearranged without appearing disingenuous. Thus, the transcript should be sufficiently clear so that there is no need for rearrangement or embellishment in the event the testimony is read at trial or incorporated in a motion.

Make sure that exhibits are clearly identified, all answers are verbal, and that only one person speaks at a time so that the reporter can obtain a complete record. Particularly because pauses are usually not recorded on the transcript, you should take the time necessary to frame careful questions. Between lines of questioning, pause to consider whether all necessary questions have been asked to ensure a clear and complete record. If you are going to use demonstrative evidence in the deposition, consider taking photographs with a camera that develops the film instantaneously. Then, have the photographs authenticated and make them part of the exhibits in the record.

In the case of an adverse witness who will appear at trial, the deposition will provide material from which you build a cross-examination. It will supply ammunition for impeachment. If the deposition involves "offensive" discovery--the establishment of points helpful to your case--the deposition record can be the basis for your direct examination of the witness at trial. Obviously, the testimony will have the most impact if the transcript can be clearly understood.

In the case of a witness who does not appear at trial, the deposition questions and answers may be read to the jury, or, in the case of a bench trial, read to or by the judge. One need only sit through a trial at which depositions are read at length to know that, under the best of circumstances, it is difficult to hold the interest of the listeners. Thus, in these situations, it is especially important that the testimony be clear and in a logical sequence.

Similarly, a deposition of a friendly witness will often be used as direct testimony at trial or submitted to the court in connection with a motion. Since the reason for taking such a deposition in the first place is your expectation that the testimony will help your client's position, it follows that you must strive for the most lucid transcript so that the favorable testimony is easily followed.

[1.--3] Going "Off the Record"

The Federal Rules do not have any provisions governing when a deposition is to go"off the record." Generally, you should consider going "off the record" at a deposition only to resolve certain types of procedural problems that may arise. For instance, sometimes when the witness is confused by a line of questions or a document, it may make sense to go "off the record" to clear the confusion before the record itself becomes confused. By resolving such problems off the record, you may be able to keep the record both clear and concise.

Typically, a reporter will stop recording when a lawyer prefaces a statement with the words "off the record." The better practice, however, is to have a stipulation with opposing counsel at the outset that everything said during the deposition will be recorded unless all counsel agree to go "off the record." Even when "off the record," you should, nevertheless, be cautious about what is said during such an interlude. So that both you and your witness may avoid embarrassment, you should advise your witness, during preparation, that nothing is ever really "off the record." Even though the words are not being recorded, opposing counsel may reduce an imprudent statement by the witness to a subsequent question and answer on the record, or purport to recite for the record something you have said while off the record. Of course, a productive off-the-record discussion between counsel often leads to an agreement which should then be recited for the record.

To the extent that an off-the-record discussion involves the witness, it should be closely controlled. If you believe that defending counsel may use the off-the-record discussion to help shape the witness's testimony, you may request that the witness leave the room. If you are deposing your own witness and wish to go off the record to consult with the witness, consider consulting with the witness out of the hearing of other counsel.

Excessive off-the-record discussions at a deposition are undesirable for a number of reasons. They consume time which should be spent questioning the witness. Going off the record may annoy the witness, particularly one who already resents the imposition of a deposition. An overreliance on off-the-record discussions may undermine the impression of control and formality which you intend to convey. So long as you are aware of these concerns, however, the resolution of substantial "technical" confusion in the testimony, or discussions which involve scheduling issues or further document production, should normally be kept off the record to reduce its bulk and expense and make it more readable.

[1.--4] Concluding the Deposition

In concluding the deposition, determine whether the witness will review, correct and sign the deposition under Rule 30(e), which requires review by the deponent only if requested by the deponent before completion of the deposition. n4 If such review is requested, the deponent must be allowed 30 days after being notified by the officer that the transcript or recording is available in which to review the transcript or recording and, if there are changes in form or substance, to sign a statement reciting such changes and the reasons given by the deponent for making them. For purposes of making the deposition most useful, it is almost always advisable to have the witness read and sign the transcript. At trial, the fact that the witness had an opportunity to review and make corrections to the transcript makes the deposition testimony that much more important. n5 Indeed, when impeaching a witness at trial based on deposition testimony, trial lawyers usually ask a litany of questions that underscore that the inconsistent testimony was given under oath and later signed by the deponent after an opportunity to read it. Even if the witness does not sign the deposition, the fact that the witness had an opportunity to review the transcript may underscore that the witness is bound by the testimony.

Second, just as the officer is required to begin the deposition with a prescribed statement, so the officer must make a statement at the conclusion of the deposition: that the deposition is complete and must set out any stipulations made by the attorneys about the custody of the transcript or recording and of the exhibits, or about other pertinent matters. n6 Thus, it is crucial that the officer's statement accurately reflect counsel's understandings and intentions. For example, if the deposition was taken for a limited purpose, such as preparation for a hearing on interim relief, the officer should recite that fact before the deposition is concluded. n7

[2] Determining Who May Attend Deposition

Courts have disagreed over whether other potential witnesses can attend a deposition. n8 Rule 30(c) excepts application of witness exclusion under Fed. R. Evid. 615 during a deposition. n9 Thus, a party cannot unilaterally invoke Fed. R. Evid. 615 to exclude a witness. Still, exclusion is available under Rule 26(c)(1)(E), which allows a court for good cause shown to order that discovery be conducted with no one present except persons designated by the court. Exclusion of a witness (whether party or non-party) from a deposition is within the court's authority. n10 Generally, exclusion will be ordered only in situations where "more than ordinary garden variety or boilerplate'good cause' facts" exist. n11

Civil depositions are generally not open to the public, n12 however, and pretrial discovery is not ordinarily public information until introduced into evidence or filed with the court. "[D]uring the last 40 years in which the pretrial processes have been enormously expanded, it has never occurred to anyone ... that a pretrial deposition or pretrial interrogatories were other than wholly private to the litigants. A pretrial deposition does not become part of a trial' until and unless the contents of the deposition are offered in evidence." n13 The United States Supreme Court in Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart n14 has also held that there is no absolute First Amendment right to access to discovery materials before trial. The Court recognized both that the scope of discovery under Rule 26 is extremely broad and, therefore, allows the introduction of matters that may be inadmissible at trial and that discovery is traditionally a private affair between litigants and the custodians of the information they seek. The court in Amato v. City of Richmond n15 agreed with the Supreme Court's rationale in Seattle Times and noted that courts have generally denied requests of reporters to attend depositions.

On the other hand, the court in Avirgan v. Hull n16 allowed the press to attend a deposition where the witness failed to demonstrate "good cause" under Rule 26(c) to justify a protective order. The court concluded that the Rule contains an inherent presumption that discovery should be open, and that the deponent's conclusory allegations of harm were insufficient to overcome the press' First Amendment interests.

[3] Using Professional Demeanor in Deposition Practice

In taking any deposition, you should prepare to do a professional job. Be certain that the room is available at the time planned, that the court reporter has been retained and will attend, and that any necessary exhibits or equipment (in the case of a deposition recorded by video equipment or other non-stenographic means) are ready.

The tone of the deposition often is set even before the examination begins. Encounters before the deposition can be used to reinforce the impression that you are in control of the deposition and that the deposition is a serious matter.

Maintain a professional bearing. Be sure that your demeanor is not surly or combative. Circumstances will cause enough witnesses to be angry as they begin their depositions. In many cases, a combative examiner will create a hostile and uncooperative witness. n17 In the case of an unsophisticated witness who is uncomfortable in the deposition setting and who is expected to give favorable testimony, you may need to be especially gentle. Here, some effort to put the witness at ease is appropriate. Similarly, when you are deposing a friendly witness and the witness is unduly nervous, some effort to break the tension may be appropriate. n18

Occasionally, the lawyer will encounter a witness who livens up the pre-questioning exchanges by expressing indignation that the deposition is being taken. For example, the witness may say, "I don't see why any of this is necessary; I put everything I know in my written report," or "I don't know anything about this case." Although you may do well to express some sympathy with the witness's concerns, usually you should not allow yourself to be drawn into a squabble about the wisdom of the deposition or the merits of the litigation. You should proceed with the questioning and accommodate the witness only to the extent that such accommodations do not interfere with the questioning.

As a general practice, you should not discuss scheduling and adjournment with an adverse witness even when the witness raises the question. Rather, such matters should be resolved among counsel.

[4] Positioning the Participants at Deposition

The positioning of the witness, the reporter, counsel, and others present at a deposition, such as parties, should be arranged by examining counsel. If the room used for the deposition has a rectangular table, the reporter will usually sit at one end of the table. The witness will usually sit on one side of the table adjacent to the reporter and the lawyer taking the deposition will sit across the table from the witness. The witness's lawyer is normally seated next to the witness. If either lawyer has an assistant or client present, that person can be seated next to the lawyer. This positioning allows examining counsel to consult with the assistant or client. Counsel for other parties will arrange themselves around the remaining available space.

[5] Evaluating Special Considerations for Videotaped Depositions

Videotaped depositions are becoming increasingly common as the technology ofvideotaping becomes more accessible and cost-effective. n19 Unless the court orders otherwise, deposition testimony may be recorded by audio, audiovisual, or stenographic means. n20 [FN:] n21 A deposition may be taken by various means as routine practice. n22 If the deposition is recorded by videotape alone, the nonstenographic recording may be offered as evidence at trial or on a dispositive Rule 56 motion, but a transcript will also be necessary. n23 The decision to videotape a deposition is frequently made when the witness is a non-party who is not subject to subpoena for trial and cannot be persuaded to come to the trial to testify. If you believe that the witness's account of events is important to the case and sufficiently favorable, a videotape may give the testimony greater potential impact than would readings from the deposition transcript.

There may be considerable risk involved in videotaping the deposition of an adverse witness. Such a deposition should be videotaped if the hostile witness will not be subject to a subpoena for trial and the testimony will be sufficiently favorable that the testimonial impact should be maximized. If you have documents that will ensure an effective examination, the risks may be worth assuming. If the testimony is not favorable, opposing counsel can elect to use the videotape, and if the testimony is favorable, opposing counsel can bring the witness to trial in an effort to lessen the favorable impact of the videotaped deposition. Of course, such risk is diminished if counsel has already seen the witness testify either at a trial or previous deposition. At least one court has held that, where a deposition is adjourned to a later date, counsel may choose to use videotape recording, even though the earlier testimony was not recorded in that manner. n24

The mechanics of a videotaped deposition warrant brief mention. First, videotaping usually does not replace a stenographic record and transcript. Most lawyers still want the traditional typed transcript for possible use in motion practice and trial preparation. n25 Under Rule 30(b)(3), a party can designate an additional method of recording the deposition. Thus, if a deposition is to be recorded on videotape, a stenographic recording could also be requested. However, prior notice must be given to the deponent and the other parties, and, absent court order, the additional record or transcript must be made at the requesting party's expense. n25.1

Second, the arrangement of the participants usually differs when a deposition is videotaped. The most "neutral" staging is for only the witness to be on camera with a single camera recording a direct frontal shot from the waist up, without special lenses. The camera will normally show the lawyers only when they introduce themselves. During the questioning, remember that the camera is on the witness. If the witness is confused or puzzled by a question, it may show on the witness's face. Hence, you should be especially sure that questions are clear. A pause that goes unnoticed in a typed transcript may seem longer than it really is on videotape. Just as videotape enhances the impact of deposition testimony, it can also exaggerate a witness's nervousness or confusion. Therefore, with a friendly witness you should consider a dress rehearsal of the deposition to increase the deponent's effectiveness.

Third, if a deposition is videotaped, the recording officer must repeat on the record certain information at the beginning of each tape. n26 Specifically, the officer must state the officer's name and business address, the date, time and place of the deposition, and the name of the deponent.

Fourth, in a videotaped deposition you will also act as producer and director. Camera angles, lighting, and setting can affect the jurors' impressions of a witness's demeanor. The witness should look at the interrogator when questions are posed to avoid being perceived as evasive. Videotape may enhance or detract from the credibility of a witness. Without the proper safeguards, a videotaped deposition can be used to present slanted or distorted testimony. Indeed, given the potential for abuse in the use of videotape and audiotape, Rule 30(b)(5)(B) admonishes that "[t]he deponent's and attorneys' appearance or demeanor must not be distorted through recording techniques."

If the tape contains admissible and inadmissible evidence, it may have to be edited. Care should be taken that the tape does not appear altered. Concern regarding the admissibility of evidence and editing can inhibit questioning. Therefore, you should consider whether the testimony is for discovery or for trial use. Tape is a better format for trial use. On the other hand, if the purpose of the deposition is solely for discovery, then a written record is usually more suitable.

Videotaped depositions are especially effective when used to question a witness at the scene of an accident, nuisance, and the like. They help portray appearances and distances much better than oral testimony. They may also be utilized when seeking to question a witness about an alleged product defect. Thus, in Gillen v. Nissan Motor Corp., n27 the court ordered the plaintiff to appear for a deposition with an automobile which she alleged contained a defective seat belt. However, a court may refuse to allow a tape to be shown if it is shot under conditions different from those that gave rise to the incident or under conditions that are unduly prejudicial, playing on thejurors' emotions. n28

The true advantage of a videotaped deposition is to enable the trier of fact to observe the witness's demeanor and to assess truthfulness. Such testimony holds the interest of a jury much more than reading from a transcript.

Apart from its use at depositions, videotape is also an excellent witness preparation tool. It may be helpful to tape the witness and then have secretaries, law clerks, and other non-lawyers view the tape. Their comments may help you improve the image projected by the witness.

[6] Seeking Protective Orders

A motion for protective order under Rule 26(c) may be made by a party or by a non-party witness ("the person from whom discovery is sought"). Protective orders impose serious burdens upon a party, and they should not be issued lightly. n29

Before the deposition begins, you should raise any relevant issues presented by protective orders in the litigation. If, for example, documents covered by a Rule 26 protective order previously entered in the case will be used at the deposition, any non-party witness should agree to be bound by the terms of the protective order. Such matters should generally be attended to in advance of or at the outset of the deposition, n30 so that there is no confusion about the applicability of the protective order.

Protective orders may be entered by the court concerning many aspects of a deposition. Although Rule 26(c) provides that the court may order that "discovery be conducted with no one present except persons designated by the court," courts usually allow a party to attend all depositions. In a case of extreme hostility between the parties, it may be possible to obtain a protective order to prevent a party from attending a deposition. Sometimes, in actions that involve many parties, a party that seeks to take depositions of numerous parties can obtain a protective order to prevent those parties who will be deposed from attending the prior depositions of other parties. n31

A motion under Rule 26(c) is the appropriate procedure before a deposition commences. Such a motion must be accompanied by a certification that the movant, in an effort to resolve the dispute, has in good faith conferred, or attempted to confer, with other affected parties. A motion for a protective order may serve to protect a party who receives minimal notice of a proposed deposition and is unable to obtain a court ruling on its motion for a protective order. Under Rule 32(a), n32 where a party receives less than 14 days notice of a deposition and promptly files a motion for a protective order, the deposition cannot subsequently be used in court against the moving party, provided the motion is pending at the time of the deposition. n33

In one case, the opinion of plaintiff's psychiatrist that videotaping plaintiff's deposition would "increase her anxiety and not allow her to answer questions as clearly and directly as she could with less anxiety" did not establish good cause for the issuance of a protective order precluding the videotaping of her deposition. n33.1

During a deposition, a motion under Rule 30(d) is the appropriate procedure to terminate or limit the deposition. n34 The motion may be made by any party or by the deponent, and the deposition is suspended for the time necessary to make the motion. In accordance with Rule 37(a)(5), expenses incurred in making the motion may be awarded. n35

[7] Entering Into Deposition Stipulations

Rule 29 was revised in 1993 to give litigants the opportunity to agree upon modifications to the procedures governing discovery or to limitations upon discovery. n36 Even prior to this revision, however, the parties were given the authority to vary the rules concerning depositions by stipulation. As stated early on, "if the parties desire to be relieved of such restraints as the Rules impose, and so stipulate in writing, depositions may be taken before any person, at any time or place, upon any notice, and in any manner." n37 Thus, a wide variety of stipulations concerning the conduct and useof the deposition are possible. n38 Among those sometimes encountered are:

- Stipulations regarding deferral of filing of the deposition (a subject also affected in many instances by local rules).
- Stipulations waiving notice of filing.
- Stipulations altering the standard practice by which objections are waived and reserved.

- Stipulations limiting the scope of examination (e.g., an understanding that, where a deposition is being taken in connection with an issue of personal jurisdiction, the questioning will be confined to those jurisdictional matters, as opposed to the merits, and that the conduct of the deposition subject to this restriction will be without prejudice to examining counsel's right to examine on the merits at a later time).

- Stipulations that, in the case of an imminent hearing, the unsigned transcript may be used in that hearing without prejudice to the witness's right to correct and sign it under Rule 30(e) at a later time.

- Stipulations having to do with limits on the duration of the deposition and/or resumption at a later date.

- Stipulations varying the rule with respect to the number of depositions allowed per side.

- Stipulations concerning multiple depositions of the same witness.

- Stipulations providing the ultimate cost of the depositions be borne by the losing party.

If you practice in various federal districts, you must be especially alert to any blanket statement that the deposition is subject to the "usual stipulations." You should request that each of the intended stipulations be spelled out so that there is no uncertainty about what will be included in the record. In a situation where you are the only outsider in a group of local practitioners who do not question the "usual stipulations," you may apologize for any delay, but insist that the exact stipulations be articulated so that there is no uncertainty.

At the conclusion of the deposition, the officer is to state on the record the various stipulations between counsel. Under Rule 30(b)(5)(C), "[a]t the end of the deposition, the officer must state on the record that the deposition is complete and must set out any stipulations made by the attorneys about custody of the transcript or recording and of the exhibits, or about any other pertinent matters."

[8] Understanding Opening Statements at Deposition

Unless the parties agree otherwise, a deposition must be conducted before an officer appointed or designated under Rule 28. The officer must begin with a statement on the record that includes the following: the officer's name and business address; the date, time, and place of the deposition; the name of the deponent; an identification of all persons present; the administration of the deponent's oath or affirmation. n39

Once the witness is sworn and the officer has made the requisite statement, many lawyers will introduce themselves to the witness on the record. This introduction includes the examining lawyer's name and the name of the party the lawyer represents. (Typically, the examiner states that the deposition is being taken in the case of X v. Y, No. 91 C 123, pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and pursuant to either a notice of deposition or subpoena, which is then briefly described.)

As part of the introductory remarks, many examiners describe the deposition procedure. The witness is told that questions will be asked about various matters and that if a question is not understood, the witness should ask for a clarification. It is sometimes added that if a question is answered, it will be assumed that the witness understood the question. Many lawyers will advise that if the witness wants to interrupt the deposition to consult counsel or simply to take a break, a break may be requested at the conclusion of an answer. Many lawyers also advise witnesses that if they wish to modify, change, or amplify any answer they have given, they will be given the opportunity to do so. Some lawyers will also ask if the witness has been deposed before, and if the answer is "yes," inquiry may be made to find out the nature of the previous deposition. n40

The nature of introductory statements is to some extent a matter of personal style. They probably serve a greater purpose in informing a witness who is not represented by counsel; when the witness is represented, defending counsel has probably already provided the witness with the same information offered by the examining counsel. Nonetheless, for most lawyers these questions serve some purpose in beginning the flow of dialogue. In addition, introductory statements of this nature are sometimes useful in estopping a witness from subsequently claiming a lack of understanding of the procedures under which the deposition was conducted.

[9] Considering Form of Questions

When the preliminaries are completed, the examining lawyer will ask the witness a question. In any deposition, questions should be phrased as simply as possible, without legalese or extensive preambles. Compound questions, which are objectionable onground of form anyway, should be avoided. Questions that use pronouns should be avoided because, out of context, pronouns can lead to ambiguity when the subject of the question is not identified. If a question refers to a particular meeting or document, the information should be included as simply as possible in the question. If the question refers to a limited part of the document, the relevant part of the document may be identified. Very often, the traditional newspaper reporter questions, such as "who," "what," "when," "where" and "how," provide the clearest structure to follow when asking questions. These questions are direct and easily followed.

If a line of questioning is dependent on chronology, it is frequently best to proceed in chronological order. Although some lawyers may believe it is advantageous to confuse a witness by not adhering to a chronological order, a confused witness often creates a confused transcript.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersCourt ReportersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsStipulations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Given the option of nonstenographic recording of depositions, Rule 30(b)(5) provides certain safeguards. It requires that, unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the deposition is to be conducted before an officer appointed or designated under Rule 28. The officer must begin with a statement on the record that includes certain basic information relating to the deposition and those present.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(3)(B).

(n3)Footnote 3. In those instances where the deposition transcript is not filed with the court, the recording officer is to send it to the attorney who arranged for the transcript or recording, the attorney must store it under conditions that will protect it against loss, destruction, tampering, or deterioration. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(f)(1).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(e)(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(e) places no limitations on the type of changes that a witness may make to a deposition transcript before signing it. See Allen & Co. v. Occidental Petroleum Corp., 49 F.R.D. 337 (S.D.N.Y. 1970) . However, if the correction involves a substantive change, the original answer can be used at trial by the opponent, although the witness would then be free to introduce the amended answer and explain the reasons for the change. See Usiak v. New York Tank Barge Co., 299 F.2d 808 (2d Cir. 1962) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(5)(C).

(n7)Footnote 7. It is important to note that Rule 32 does not distinguish between depositions taken purely for discovery purposes and depositions taken for the preservation of testimony. See, e.g., United States v. IBM, 90 F.R.D.

377, 380 (S.D.N.Y. 1981) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 30 Committee Note (1993).

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(c).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Galella v. Onassis, 487 F.2d 986, 997 (2d Cir. 1973) ; Beacon v. R.N. Jones Apt. Rentals, 79 F.R.D. 141 (N.D. Ohio 1978) ; Dunlap v. Reading Co., 30 F.R.D. 129 (E.D. Pa. 1962) .

(n11)Footnote 11. BCI Communication Sys., Inc. v. Bell Atlanticom Sys., Inc., 112 F.R.D. 154, 160 (N.D. Ala. 1986) (Fed. R. Evid. 615 not applicable to depositions; sole remedy for exclusion of witnesses is Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c), under which burden is on party seeking exclusion and obtaining court order before deposition is taken). See also In re Levine, 101 B.R. 260 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1989) (deposition issues included fraud and conspiracy to commit fraud).

(n12)Footnote 12. Note that the 1993 revision of Rule 30(c) addresses only the attendance of potential deponents; it does not address the attendance of others, including the public and the press. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 30 Committee Note (1993).

(n13)Footnote 13. Gannett Co. v. De Pasquale, 443 U.S. 368, 396, 99 S. Ct. 2898, 61 L. Ed. 2d 608 (1979) (Burger, C.J., concurring).

(n14)Footnote 14. Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart, 467 U.S. 20, 104 S. Ct. 2199, 81 L. Ed. 2d 17 (1984) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Amato v. City of Richmond, 157 F.R.D. 26 (E.D.Va. 1994) .

(n16)Footnote 16. Avirgan v. Hull, 118 F.R.D. 252 (D.D.C. 1987) .

(n17)Footnote 17. The deposition may take the witness into memories of traumatic events, and counsel must be prepared to deal with such situations.

(n18)Footnote 18. Unless the need is compelling, taking the deposition of one's own witness who is frightened can be questionable tactically. Clearly, one must evaluate whether a timid witness should be exposed to questioning at this stage. A videotaped deposition will generally only be used in a jury trial. Such an enhancement of testimony usually is not as useful when the case is tried by a judge, who may prefer to read the transcripts.

(n19)Footnote 19. For a thorough discussion of the issues involved in videotaping depositions, see Henke, The Taking and Use of Videotaped Depositions, Defense L.J., Fall 1993 at 559-580

(n20)Footnote 20. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(3)(A)

(n21)Footnote 21. Reserved.

(n22)Footnote 22. Gillen v. Nissan Motor Corp. in USA, 156 F.R.D. 120, 122 (E.D. Pa. 1994) .

(n23)Footnote 23. Fed. R. Civ. P. 32(c); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(3)(A)(ii)

(n24)Footnote 24. Riley v. Murdock, 156 F.R.D. 130, 131 (E.D.N.C. 1994) (nothing in Rule 30(b)(2) or elsewhere in law to prevent deposing party from switching to different medium for subsequent portion of deposition).

(n25)Footnote 25. Under Rule 32(c), if a deposition in nonstenographic form is offered into evidence, the party must also provide the court with a transcript of the offered portions."

(n26)Footnote 25.1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(3)(B)

(n27)Footnote 26. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(5)(B).

(n28)Footnote 27. Gillen v. Nissan Motor Corp., 156 F.R.D. 120 (E.D. Pa. 1994) .

(n29)Footnote 28. See Carson v. Burlington N., Inc., 52 F.R.D. 492 (D. Neb. 1971) .

(n30)Footnote 29. See Davis v. Romney, 55 F.R.D. 337, 340 (E.D. Pa. 1972) (Rules of Civil Procedure designed to encourage free and open discovery; burden is on movant to establish good cause).

> To establish good cause under Rule 26(c), the courts have generally required a "particular and specific demonstration of fact, as distinguished from stereotyped and conclusory statements." See United States v. Exxon Corp., 94 F.R.D. 250, 251 (D.D.C. 1981) (on claim of confidential business information, this standard demands that company prove that disclosure will result in "clearly defined and very serious injury to its business").

(n31)Footnote 30. Typically, obtaining consent to the terms of a protective order will not be difficult in the case of a party witness. The problem can be greater in connection with the deposition of a non-party witness.

(n32)Footnote 31. In Milsen Co. v. Southland Corp., 16 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 110 (N.D. Ill. 1972) , the court granted defendants' motion for a protective order to prevent plaintiff franchisees from attending the depositions of any other plaintiffs. The court held that the defendants were entitled to obtain the independent recollection of each deponent.

(n33)Footnote 32. The Rule states, in relevant part:
[N]or shall a deposition be used against a party who, having received less than 11 days notice of a deposition, has promptly upon receiving such notice filed a motion for a protective order under Rule 26(c)(2) requesting that the deposition not be held or be held at a different time or place and such motion is pending at the time the deposition is held.

(n34)Footnote 33. According to the Committee Note, it follows that when the scheduled deponent is the party moving for the protective order, such deponent will have "just cause," under Rule 37(d)(1), for failing to appear at the deposition. Fed. R. Civ. P. 32(a) Committee Note (1993).

(n35)Footnote 33.1. Fanelli v. Centenary College, 211 F.R.D. 268, 270 (D.N.J. 2002) .

(n36)Footnote 34. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(d)(3)

(n37)Footnote 35. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(d)(3).

(n38)Footnote 36. Fed. R. Civ. P. 29 Committee Note (1993).

(n39)Footnote 37. Spaeth v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., 1 F.R.D. 729 (S.D.N.Y. 1941) .

(n40)Footnote 38. See generally Fed. R. Civ. P. 29.

(n41)Footnote 39. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(5)(A).

(n42)Footnote 40. The inquiry into the deponent's previous deposition experience should, in most cases, be minimal. Because the witness's previous deposition experience is often not relevant to the current litigation, you are usually well advised to learn the nature of the previous lawsuit before asking more detailed questions. Only after it becomes clear that the issues in the two litigations are similar, or if you suspect further inquiry may be relevant on matters of credibility, should you make further inquiry. Of course if the earlier deposition seems relevant, you should try to elicit enough information to enable you to obtain a copy of the earlier transcript.

* Chapter 17 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

16 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 Taking Depositions *

2-17 Federal Litigation Guide § 17.05

§ 17.05 Taking the Deposition of an Adverse Witness

[1] Understanding Purpose of Deposition of Adverse Witness

[1.--1] Evaluating Adversary's Case

The basic purpose in the deposition of an adverse witness is usually to learn everything that the witness knows about the facts in the lawsuit. Such "defensive" discovery generally seeks to uncover all of the relevant facts, helpful as well as harmful, that the witness knows. In the course of a "defensive" deposition, you will probe the witness's recollection in order to learn everything that the witness may say at trial. By acquiring a complete understanding of the adverse witness's knowledge, you will acquire a better understanding of the adverse case that can provide the basis for developing an effective strategy for meeting the opposition at trial. In addition, you should then be better able to evaluate realistically the strength of the adverse party's case for purposes of a possible settlement.

Because the deposition may be your only opportunity to explore the weaknesses of adverse testimony that may be offered at trial, you should probe adverse testimony to determine whether it is based on firsthand knowledge or mere hearsay. You should persistently question the adverse witness about the basis for adverse testimony. Under persistent questioning, an adverse witness may testify about additional facts or bias that can soften the impact of the adverse testimony. Although such questioning may also educate adverse counsel about the witness's knowledge, you usually should assume that counsel would eventually uncover the information anyway.

After the deposition, armed with knowledge of the alleged statements, you can further investigate the facts so as to construct the best possible defense. By learning about the unfavorable testimony as early as possible, you can try to uncover additional facts that will minimize the impact of the unfavorable testimony at trial.

[1.--2] Limiting Scope of Adversary's Testimony

In addition to hearing a witness's unfavorable testimony and trying to uncover weaknesses in the testimony, you usually should try to limit the subjects on which an unfavorable witness can testify. The deposition record should be developed to limit the scope of the witness's knowledge and to show relevant areas in which the witness has no knowledge. By limiting the scope of the witness's knowledge at the deposition, you may prevent the witness from becoming either a surprising or "all purpose" trial witness.

[1.--3] Asking Leading Questions

When taking the deposition of an adverse witness, you are permitted to ask leading questions. Because you may question at the deposition as at trial, leading questions are permitted to the same extent that they may be used at trial. Under Fed. R. Evid. 611, a party may use leading questions at trial when the witness is hostile, an adverse party, or a witness identified with an adverse party. Thus, if the witness falls within any of these categories, you may use leading questions at the deposition.

As a general rule at depositions, leading questions should not be used before answers have been sought to more open-ended questions. Because leading questions tend to limit the range of answers, they should be used only after the witness has already been asked more general questions. By using leading questions after the witness has already given broad answers, you will not be deprived of the opportunity to learn more general information that may lead to new areas of useful questioning.

[1.--4] Using Outline to Organize Deposition

To ensure that all relevant subjects are covered, you should use an outline so that after the questions are asked and answered each item on the outline can be checked. Although inexperienced counsel may feel a need to write out questions in advance, the disadvantage of doing so is that it undermines the flexibility of the deposition process. If you feel obligated to adhere to a predetermined list of questions, you may be less inclined to pursue the witness's answers.

[2] Understanding Methods of Questioning Adverse Party

[2.--1] Determining Bases of Questioning

To learn what a witness knows, you cannot simply say to the witness "Tell me everything you know about the issues in this case," sit back, and listen to a narration. Rather, you must systematically question about the witness's background, bias, and knowledge of relevant facts. For purposes of such questioning, you must break the testimony into manageable parts.

As discussed in greater detail in Chapter 16, Preparation for Depositions, the pleadings, answers to interrogatories, and documents produced in the course of discovery should be used to create a chronology of the facts in the case. You can often lead a party-deponent through each of the factual allegations of the pleadings by asking whether the witness is familiar with the facts underlying an allegation and then exploring the substance and basis of the witness's knowledge. If you have obtained answers to interrogatories that go beyond the identity of witnesses and the sources ofrelevant documents, these answers can provide a basis to explore further the party's contentions. Documents supplied to you both by your client, and by an adverse party in the course of discovery, also provide a basis for questioning. Finally, interviews with your client prior to the deposition can arm you with an understanding of the sequence of events into which the deponent's testimony will fit.

[2.--2] Questioning About Background

In many instances, the deposition of an adverse witness begins with a number of general questions about the witness's education and job experience. When asking about the witness's education and experience, you may wish to ask whether the witness has a resume or employment history. Such a summary of the witness's experience is a legitimate subject for documentary discovery. Sometimes, counsel for the witness will be pleased to supply such a summary because it may speed up the deposition.

Rather than starting the deposition by asking questions about post-high school training and then trace all of the witness's work history, an attorney may begin by questioning about the witness's current job and then asking the witness to go back and fill in the steps that led to it. This approach may lessen the danger that the witness's counsel will object on relevancy grounds to background questions that are far removed from the subject matter of the lawsuit. Some background questions are proper and they may seem more relevant when asked in this manner. Remember that background questions may be more or less relevant depending on the nature of a case.

Background questions are also useful because they put the deponent in a relaxed mood (most people are comfortable and even enjoy talking about their personal history). Moreover, they get the deponent acclimated to talking in a narrative, conversational manner and may set the format for the rest of the deposition.

Having obtained answers to background questions about the witness's position and experience, questions are sometimes asked about the witness's knowledge of the lawsuit. Often, the transition from background questions to questions about the lawsuit can be made by probing how and when the witness learned of the lawsuit. In addition to inquiring when the witness learned of the suit, you should probe what was learned and how it was learned. You may also inquire as to what the witness has done to prepare for the deposition, n1 and particularly what documents and written material the witness has read in preparation for the deposition.

[2.--3] Determining Sequence of Questioning

Although the sequence of questioning about the issues in the case is largely a matter of individual discretion and depends on the facts of the case, this section describes some of the more common sequences of questions that are used at depositions.

As noted, a chronological inquiry into the facts is often the best way to probe a witness's knowledge. While lawyers sometimes are inclined to skip back and forth, changing abruptly the subject of questioning, such changes are often more likely to confuse the witness than to lead to revealing answers. Moreover, while lack of a clear sequence in the conduct of the deposition may not impede its effective use for cross-examination and impeachment, if at a later time the transcript must be read in sequence, you may regret the absence of a simple and consistent pattern.

In a case where the witness was involved in many events that overlapped in time, it may be advisable to pursue each event fully without regard to chronology. Counsel should decide whether the testimony will be clearer if chronology or subject matter is the organizing principle. Even in depositions where chronology is not the organizing principle, questions should leave no doubt about the time frame.

Although most deposition questioning proceeds from the beginning to the later events in a lawsuit, some lawyers begin questioning by examining the witness on the central event underlying the lawsuit, and then, having established the involvement of the witness in that event, move backward or forward to complete the story. For example, if the litigation involves a contested termination of a contract, examining counsel might begin by questioning the witness about the actions and documents at the time of, and immediately preceding, the termination, and then take up the origins and course of the contractual relationship.

Consider carefully what tactics to pursue when the witness gives deposition testimony which is contradicted by documentary evidence. In some cases, it may be advisable to confront the witness with the contradiction in order to discover how the witness will seek to explain the discrepancy. In other cases, it may be better not to focus on the contradiction during the deposition but to reserve the confrontation for the trial. Particularly if the witness has not corrected the discrepancy while reading and signing the transcript, the witness's attempts to explain the discrepancy may be less convincing at trial than if undertaken at the deposition immediately after the contradiction arose. The appropriate tactics will depend on your assessment of the importance of and reason for the contradiction and the likelihood that the witness can somehow explain it.

[2.--4] Exhausting the Witness's Knowledge

One of the most important purposes of an adverse deposition is to learn all that a witness knows about the facts of the lawsuit. Because the events a witness is being deposed about sometimes occurred long before the deposition and may not have been considered by the witness for a long time, many witnesses need to be questioned in detail about the events in which they participated.

There are certain techniques that you can use to prompt the reluctant or forgetful witness. You may ask whether there are any documents that the witness could look at, or other persons the witness could talk to, that might refresh the witness's recollection. If the witness says there are, you can ask that the witness look at such documents andif other persons are mentioned, you can consider talking to or deposing them. If the documents are available at the deposition, the witness can be given a chance to review them and answer the question. If the documents are not immediately available, you may ask that the witness fill in such information when the witness reviews the deposition transcript. n2 You should, of course, be sure to learn what documents the witness will look at in the event that you want to discover them.

In a case where documents play a significant role, you may use documents, especially material written by the deponent, to prompt recollection. This can be done by showing the witness the document, asking whether the witness can identify it, and asking if it refreshes the witness's recollection. Even the most forgetful or reluctant witness may find it more difficult to give a meaningless answer when confronted by a document.

[2.--5] Dealing with Vague, Evasive or Ambiguous Answers

A recurrent and frustrating problem at depositions is the witness who regularly gives vague, evasive, or ambiguous answers. When such a situation occurs at trial, examining counsel can enlist the help of the court. The problem in a deposition is more difficult. Although the help of the court may be sought in the most extreme cases, counsel must have been diligent in questioning the witness before a court will intervene.

When you are confronted by a witness who is answering a question evasively, you should first tell the witness that he or she has not answered the question and then ask it again. It may be appropriate to ask if there is something the witness does not understand about the question. If the witness is forthright, it may be possible to obtain a truthful answer by simply rephrasing the question to eliminate what the witness does not understand. Sometimes, if you can break the question into smaller segments that call for a simpler answer, this may either help the witness understand the question or show that the witness is being deliberately evasive. If appropriate, you may use a leading question to obtain a more responsive answer.

Finally, if you believe the witness is being deliberately evasive, you should object to unresponsive answers. While you may think of objections during the course of a deposition as the province solely of defending counsel, objections to the narrative form of an answer and to unresponsive answers may be made. n3 Prompt objection to such answers serves multiple purposes. Apart from reducing the risk that those answers might be used at trial, such an objection also provides a basis for repeating the question and reducing the concern that an "asked and answered" objection will be sustained at a later time. Such objections also give you an opportunity to communicate with the witness about his or her evasive attitude.

[2.--6] Handling Interruptions

Try to ensure that the examination is not interrupted unnecessarily. Although witnesses should generally be afforded a break when they request one, the continual use of such breaks to interrupt the questioning should not be tolerated. If necessary, you should object to such interruptions on the record and state that if such obstructionist conduct continues, it will become the subject of a communication to the court.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersCourt ReportersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceTestimonyRefreshing RecollectionGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. In United States v. International Business Mach. Corp., 79 F.R.D. 378 (S.D.N.Y. 1970) , the court considered the permissible scope of the examiner's inquiry into discussions between a non-party witness and IBM's counsel. The court held that questions about what the deponent told IBM's counsel did not involve counsel's work product.

(n2)Footnote 2. In such a situation, you should ask the court reporter to leave a space in the transcript so that the answer to the question may be filled in after the witness has had an opportunity to refresh his or her recollection. In addition, the reporter should be asked to prepare a separate page listing all of the pages containing blank spaces to be filled in by the witness.

(n3)Footnote 3. Kirschner v. Broadhead, 671 F.2d 1034, 1037-38 (7th Cir. 1982) .

* Chapter 17 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 Taking Depositions *

2-17 Federal Litigation Guide § 17.06

§ 17.06 Considering Special Issues Under Rule 30(b)(6) Depositions

[1] Using Rule 30(b)(6) Deposition Notices

Rule 30(b)(6) provides:

In its notice or subpoena, a party may name as the deponent a public or private corporation, a partnership, an association, a governmental agency, or other entity and must describe with reasonable particularity the matters for examination. The named organization must then designate one or more officers, directors, or managing agents, or designate other persons who consent to testify on its behalf; and it may set out the matters on which each person designated will testify. A subpoena must advise a nonparty organization of its duty to make this designation. The persons designated must testify about information known or reasonably available to the organization. This paragraph (6) does not preclude a deposition by any other procedure allowed by these rules.

The phrase, "known or reasonably available" to the organization suggests that the witness has some affirmative duty to be familiar with the subjects about which testimony is expected. This is contrary to the traditional rule that a witness need only testify from personal knowledge and need make no attempt to become knowledgeable prior to the deposition. n1

[2] Considering Advantages of Noticing a Deposition Under Rule 30(b)(6)

Once a corporation has designated a representative to answer questions in a particular area, decisional law suggests that the representative is responsible for answering all questions for the corporation in that area. n1.1

Although there is nothing inherently startling about asking questions of a corporate entity and in fact, interrogatories are used for that purpose all the time, the opportunity to obtain oral testimony from someone charged with the knowledge of the corporationcan be very attractive. A Rule 30(b)(6) deposition can be an appealing alternative when the appropriate witnesses are difficult to identify. In a case where costs are a significant concern, the use of Rule 30(b)(6) reduces the problems that arise when witnesses disclaim knowledge so as to require the depositions of numerous witnesses to obtain needed testimony. To some extent, Rule 30(b)(6) shifts the burden of inquiry to the adverse party to determine who has relevant knowledge within the corporation.

A Rule 30(b)(6) deponent may testify both to matters within his or her personal knowledge and matters known or reasonably available to the organization. The deponent is free to testify to matters outside his or her personal knowledge as long as they are within "the corporate rubric." n1.2

An entity that appoints counsel as its designated Rule 30(b)(6) deponent to testify runs the risk that the testifying attorney would subsequently be disqualified from serving as trial counsel. n1.3

[3] Considering Disadvantages of Noticing a Deposition Under Rule 30(b)(6)

Rule 30(b)(6) depositions can have disadvantages. First, an adversary may be careful to designate a witness who is especially strong. Second, a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition sometimes leads to internal consistency that can be lacking when multiple witnesses are probed about a topic. If you want to establish that different parts of a corporation acted differently, it may be appropriate to take depositions of various individuals that will underscore the diverse actions of the corporation.

Sometimes the deposition of a high-ranking corporate officer, such as the CEO, is noticed without regard to what information the officer can actually contribute to the case. Such a witness will not usually be excused from attending the deposition simply because he or she is "too busy". n2 As stated in, Salter v. Upjohn Co., n3"it is very unusual for a court to prohibit the taking of a deposition altogether and absent extraordinary circumstances, such an order would likely be in error." Moreover, mere lack of knowledge is not sufficient grounds for a protective order, n4 and a party seeking discovery is allowed to test a claim of ignorance by deposing the witness. n5 Thus, where a corporation claimed it was unable to provide a witness who had knowledge on twenty-two of twenty-five topics dealing largely with the contentions and affirmative defenses detailed in its answer and counterclaim, the court found it not unreasonable to conclude someone at the corporation believed there were factual bases for the matters contained therein and required the corporation to produce an appropriate witness. n6

However, Rule 26(d) authorizes the court to control the sequence and timing of discovery "for the convenience of parties and witnesses and in the interest of justice." Thus, a court may order that other discovery proceed first to determine if the deposition of the particular corporate officer is really necessary. n7 The court may also require that the party seeking discovery serve written interrogatories upon the company before taking the depositions of its officers. n8 The court can then determine from the interrogatory answers whether the officer does, in fact, have relevant information that cannot be obtained elsewhere in a less oppressive manner. n9

[4] Using Rule 30(b)(6) Deposition for Non-Party Witnesses

A Rule 30(b)(6) deposition can also be used to obtain discovery from non-parties. While Rule 33 provides for interrogatories only to parties, Rule 30(b)(6) clearly contemplates designation by a non-party (i.e., subpoenaed) entity of a representative witness or witnesses in response to a subpoena which advises the "non-party organization of its duty to make such designation." Thus, you should keep this provision in mind when seeking meaningful discovery, without unnecessary commitment of time and money, from a non-party entity.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureRemediesCosts & Attorney FeesCostsDepositions & Transcripts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See PPM Finance, Inc. v. Norandal USA, Inc., 392 F.3d 889, 894 (7th Cir. 2004) .

(n2)Footnote 1.1. Atlantic Cape Fisheries v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 509 F.2d 577 (1st Cir. 1975) ; Mitsui & Co. (U.S.A.), Inc. v. Puerto Rico Water Resources Auth., 93 F.R.D. 62 (D.P.R. 1981) .

See also In re Anthracite Coal Antitrust Litig., 82 F.R.D. 364 (M.D. Pa. 1979) (the court awarded sanctions based on defendants' failure to comply with its previous order requiring further inquiry on the part of corporate representatives designated as deponents under Rule 30(b)(6)).

(n3)Footnote 1.2. See PPM Finance, Inc. v. Norandal USA, Inc., 392 F.3d 889, 894 (7th Cir. 2004) .

(n4)Footnote 1.3. See Cartier, Div. of Richemont N. Am., Inc. v. Bertone Group, Inc., 404 F. Supp. 2d 573, 574 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) .

(n5)Footnote 2. But see Mulvey v. Chrysler Corp., 106 F.R.D. 364 (D.R.I. 1985) . See also § 16.03[3] supra.

(n6)Footnote 3. Salter v. Upjohn Co., 593 F.2d 649, 651 (5th Cir. 1979) .

(n7)Footnote 4. See Mitsui & Co. (U.S.A.), Inc. v. Puerto Rico Water Resources Auth., 93 F.R.D. 62 (D.P.R. 1981) .

(n8)Footnote 5. Less v. Taber Instrument Corp., 53 F.R.D. 645, 647 (S.D.N.Y. 1971) .

(n9)Footnote 6. AMP, Inc. v. Fujitsu Microelectronics, Inc., 853 F.Supp. 808 (M.D. Pa. 1994) .

(n10)Footnote 7. See Marrese v. American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, 726 F.2d 1150, 1161 (7th Cir. 1984) (en banc), rev'd on other grounds, 84 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1985) (Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d) should be used to "schedule the sensitive and highly questionable discovery last").

(n11)Footnote 8. See Mulvey v. Chrysler Corp., 106 F.R.D. 364 (D.R.I. 1985) ; Community Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Federal Home Loan Bank Bd., 96 F.R.D. 619, 621-22 (D.D.C. 1983) ; Mitchell v. American Tobacco Co., 33 F.R.D. 262, 263 (M.D. Pa. 1963) .

(n12)Footnote 9. See also Colonial Capital Co. v. General Motors Corp., 29 F.R.D. 514, 518 (D. Conn. 1961) ; Armstrong Cork Co. v. Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., 16 F.R.D. 389 (S.D.N.Y. 1954) (defendant served "shotgun" notice on corporation, naming nine officers and six directors, one of whom was dead and one long since retired).

* Chapter 17 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 Taking Depositions *

2-17 Federal Litigation Guide § 17.07

§ 17.07 Understanding Objections

[1] Objecting to Form of Question

Rule 32(d) requires that the defending counsel at a deposition make an objection if the objectionable matter can be cured at the deposition. Most commonly, this means that if defending counsel has an objection to the form of the question, or the answer, the objection must be made because the objection may be cured if the examiner rephrases the question. n1

What form of question is objectionable? Certainly, questions that are improperlyleading, argumentative, ambiguous, ungrammatical, or compound may be objectionable because they are susceptible of being properly rephrased. But you should also be alert to questions that assume facts "not in evidence," which in a deposition context is a question that assumes unproved or unprovable facts to be true. A question that begins: "Did you know that ..." is also usually objectionable. A question that misstates what a witness has previously said is another objection going to the form of the question. An objection based on "lack of foundation" is a closer call; the deficiency may be obviated or cured at the time or it may simply be another objection based upon relevancy which is not waived by failing to make the objection during the deposition. n2 In a close call, of course, the safer practice is to make the objection.

[2] Objecting on Basis Other Than Form

With respect to objections that cannot be cured at the deposition, such as relevancy or hearsay objections that must be resolved by a court, these need not be made at the time of the deposition. If such objections are made, examining counsel should usually insist that the witness answer the question despite the objection. n3

An attorney's objections should be succinct and verbally economical, stating the basis of the objection and nothing more. n3.1 According to the Committee Note, ordinarily objections should be limited to those that under Rule 32(d)(3) might be waived if not made at that time. n4

Generally, the proper procedure to follow when an objection is raised to a question propounded in a deposition is for the attorney who raises the objection to note it, but to allow the question to be answered. n4.1

A party may instruct a deponent not to answer in only three instances--when necessary:

- To preserve a privilege.

- To enforce a limitation on evidence directed by the court.
- To present a motion for a protective order under Rule 30(d)(3).

[3] Dealing With Objections

There are several tactical reasons why opposing counsel may make objections. They may signal an especially sensitive area, and a deponent may be put on the alert to be especially cautious when answering the line of questions. Objections may dissuade the examining counsel from pursuing a line of questioning. Objections also break the rhythm and rapport between the deponent and the examining counsel.

On the other hand, too frequent objections may undermine the deponent's confidence. The deponent may feel that there are hidden issues he or she is missing. Objections may also tip off examining counsel that this is a sensitive area.

Finally, an over-abundance of objections may be sanctionable. Indeed, under Rule 30(d)(1), objections are to be stated concisely and in a non-argumentative and non-suggestive manner. n5

When an objection is made to a question that you can recast, you must decide whether to attempt to correct the question. In order to make this decision, the strength of the objection must be determined. If you conclude that the objection is likely to be upheld, you should attempt to modify the question.

Leading questions are frequently objected to at depositions. While a lawyer examining an adverse witness may ask leading questions, the use of leading questions when deposing a neutral witness, or one affiliated with your client, may be challenged. While the courts recognize that leading questions are an efficient way to establish uncontroverted or preliminary matters, the sound course when faced with an objection to the use of leading questions with a friendly or neutral witness is often to recast the question and proceed just as one would at trial.

Opposing counsel may object to questions as being "compound," "ambiguous," or "excessively broad." The basis for the objection in each of these cases is similar--these types of questions may confuse the witness, thereby causing him or her to provide an answer which may or may not accurately represent the facts or which may be confusing to judge or jury if ultimately admitted at trial. It generally is not difficult to rephrase such questions, for example, by breaking down a compound question to more than one question or eliminating any ambiguity.

Similarly, an objection that the examining lawyer has not laid an adequate foundation for a question is one that should often prompt the questioner to backtrack. An objection to lack of foundation bears a relationship to the competency of the witness and Rule 32(d)(3)(A) generally preserves questions of competency. Nevertheless, an examiner's failure to lay a foundation for testimony about a particular conversation or meeting may be easily corrected if the objection is presented in a timely manner.

Another category of objections that must be made in a timely manner is objections toargumentative questions and questions which assume facts in issue in the lawsuit. n6 When such objections to the form of the question are made, an effort to rephrase the question is probably worthwhile.

Similar considerations apply to questions which call for opinion from, or speculation by, the witness. An argument can be made that no change in the form of a question which calls for opinion or speculation will alter the nature of what is sought. Nevertheless, there is some authority that defending counsel should object to such questions at the deposition. n7 Under these circumstances, the best alternative may be to establish, as well as you can, the credentials of the witness to have an opinion or to speculate in an informed manner, and then ask the question again.

Rule 30(c) provides that objections shall be noted by the officer upon the record of the deposition, but the examination still proceeds, and the testimony is taken subject to any objection with the testimony being taken subject to the objections. Accordingly, instructions not to answer may be given only in three instances--when necessary (i) to preserve a privilege, (ii) to enforce a limitation on evidence directed by the court, or (iii) to present a motion under Rule 30(d)(3). n8 A privilege will be waived if the answer is given. n9 In the case of a privilege objection, you can invite objecting counsel to give a limiting instruction. Also, it is permissible for examining counsel to test for the presence of factors which will determine if there really is a privilege: who was present at the meeting; was the meeting for the purpose of obtaining legal advice; and was anyone outside of the meeting told about what was discussed and what advice was given? Obviously, instructing a non-client not to answer a question is particularly dangerous. n10 Refusal to answer gives the examiner the right toadjourn the deposition in order to seek a court ruling under Rule 37(a)(2), although the better practice is to conclude the remainder of the deposition and seek a court order later.

Before going to court, counsel should be sure that there is an instruction not to answer on the record. Often the examiner will be interrupted and then neglect to reiterate the question. This can make it appear as though the question has been abandoned.

It may be possible to obtain an answer to an objectionable question with follow-up questions. You can ask the deponent about how the information can best be obtained. Such questions may lead to indirect discovery of information that cannot be asked for directly. If a witness is instructed not to answer a question, it may also be advisable to ask the witness if he possesses the information necessary to answer the question. If he says no, it would be pointless to seek a ruling from the court. If he says yes, the court may be more inclined to rule that he must answer.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. But see Hall v. Clifton Precision, a Division of Litton Systems, Inc., 150 F.R.D. 525 (E.D. Pa. 1993) (objections which suggested the answer to the client were not allowed).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 32(d)(3)(A).

(n3)Footnote 3. Ordinarily counsel cannot instruct a witness not to answer a question. See Morris, et. al. Recent Developments in Deposition Practice and Document Discovery, at 7, in Resource Materials on Civil Practice and Litigation in Federal and State Courts (Sixth Edition, 1994 ALI-ABA).

(n4)Footnote 3.1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(c)(2); see also Birdine v. City of Coatesville, 225 F.R.D. 157, 158 (E.D. Pa. 2004) .

(n5)Footnote 4. The Committee Note observes that "[d]epositions frequently have been unduly frustrated by lengthy objections and colloquy, often suggesting how the deponent should respond."

(n6)Footnote 4.1. See In re Omeprazole Patent Litig., 227 F.R.D. 227, 230 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) .

(n7)Footnote 5. The 1993 Committee Note observes that depositions frequently have been "unduly prolonged, if not unfairly frustrated, by lengthy objections and colloquy, often suggesting how the deponent should respond." Objections are permissible, but ordinarily they should be limited "to those that under Rule 32(d)(3) might be waived if not made at that time ... ."

(n8)Footnote 6. Objections that questions are argumentative and amount to cross-examination of the witness concern the form of the questions. See Bahamas Agricultural Indus. Ltd. v. Riley Stoker Corp., 526 F.2d 1174, 1180-81 (6th Cir. 1975) . In Oberlin v. Marlin Am. Corp., 596 F.2d 1322, 1329 (7th Cir. 1979) , the trial court was held to have properly admitted responses to leading questions which were not objected to at the deposition. However, the trial court's exclusion of a response to a question which assumed the existence of a fact in issue in the case was erroneous.

(n9)Footnote 7. For example, in Bahamas Agricultural Indus., v. Riley Stoker Corp., 526 F.2d 1174 (6th Cir. 1975) , the Sixth Circuit held that the trial judge erred in sustaining objections to deposition questions that were argumentative or elicited incompetent opinion testimony.

(n10)Footnote 8. Note that before the 1993 amendment to Rule 30(d), the Federal Rules did not provide for an instruction not to answer. See Ralston Purina Co. v. McFarland, 550 F.2d 967 (4th Cir. 1977) (the court held that "the action of plaintiff's counsel in directing [his principal witness] not to answer the questions posed to him was indefensible and utterly at variance with the discovery provisions of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. ... The action of plaintiff's counsel in directing the deponent not to answer was highly improper."); Coates v. Johnson & Johnson, 85 F.R.D. 731 (N.D. Ill. 1980) .

(n11)Footnote 9. See, e.g., Securities and Exchange Comm'n v. Parkersburg Wireless Limited Liab. Co., 156 F.R.D. 529 (D.D.C. 1994) (Fifth Amendment privilege must be invoked at time question asked or it is waived).

(n12)Footnote 10. See, e.g., Shapiro v. Freeman, 38 F.R.D. 308 (S.D.N.Y. 1965) .

* Chapter 17 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 Taking Depositions *

2-17 Federal Litigation Guide § 17.08

§ 17.08 Dealing with Documentary Exhibits

[1] Identifying Documents

An essential skill in taking a deposition is the coherent and effective use of documents. To make effective use of documents at a deposition, the documents should be copied prior to the deposition and organized for easy access.

It is sometimes possible for you to have the court reporter mark in advance the exhibits that you expect to use. This is easiest in the deposition of your own witness where an unexpected exhibit should be a rare event. Such advance marking is sometimes also fairly easy with a "neutral" or hostile witness because, if thorough preparation has been done, you usually know the documents that will be used. By marking the exhibits in advance, you can avoid the loss of the momentum of questioning and avoid irritating a witness by frequent delays.

It should be pointed out, however, that during intense questioning, the marking of exhibits provides defending counsel and the witness with a useful break to review the testimony. In addition, the testimony given at the deposition may cause you to alter the sequence of documentary exhibits or to refrain from using a particular document. A too-rigid advance organization of the documents may undermine your ability to be flexible.

The method of marking exhibits should be agreed upon by counsel. It is usually better to identify exhibits with the name or status (e.g., plaintiff, defendant) of the introducing party and a sequential number. Thus, a given document should be called:

Smith Deposition Exhibit 3 or Plaintiff's Deposition Exhibit 29.

After the exhibit has been marked, you should, in your first reference to the document, identify it by the exhibit number and give some further description. Thus, you may begin by saying:

Q:

Mr. Smith, I show you a five-page document which the reporter has marked Smith Deposition Exhibit 3. Would you please look at it?

[2] Using Documents Effectively at Deposition

To make effective use of a document at a deposition, you should consider the purposes for which the document is being used at the deposition. Thus, as a general proposition, you should first ask questions that establish the relationship of the witness to the document (authorship, participation in preparation, receipt, recollection, total ignorance), and then proceed further, making clear whether the questions seek:

- Meaning and intent (in the case of an author or participant).
- Understanding and response (in the case of a recipient).
- Independent recollection (in the case of a document used to refresh).
- Agreement (in the case of a document seen for the first time).

Effective use can be made of documents which were not composed by the deposition witness. A written narrative may serve to refresh the recollection of the witness about events in which the witness participated. Thus, when a witness has disclaimed any knowledge (or any further knowledge) of some series of events, examining counsel may show the witness an account written by someone else, and ask if reviewing it refreshes the witness's memory. n1

A variation on a simple chronological approach may be used in cases involving extensive documents. Examining counsel may first take the witness through the sequence of significant events without the use of documents, and then refer to the documents. Done effectively, this technique allows counsel to probe the witness's memory once without documents and once with documents. This can lead to more thorough testimony that fully explores the witness's memory without fostering an over-reliance on the documents. Moreover, the witness may be prevented from retreating into an inability to recall details when confronted with relevant documents.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceWritingsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyRefreshing RecollectionGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. As a general rule, examining counsel is entitled to obtain any document that the witness uses during the deposition. Thus, if a witness comes to the deposition with notes and consults the notes when answering questions, you should ask to see the notes and may question about them. In addition, you may ask that the notes, or copies of them, be marked as a deposition exhibit.

* Chapter 17 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 Taking Depositions *

2-17 Federal Litigation Guide § 17.09

§ 17.09 Taking the Deposition of a Non-Party Witness

[1] Determining When to Take Non-Party Deposition

The deposition of a witness who is not affiliated with a party is subject to a number of considerations that differ from those for an adverse witness. In general, the deposition of a non-party is taken when counsel concludes that either:

- The witness's favorable testimony should be put into evidence.

- The risk of the witness's testifying unfavorably at trial is great enough to justify learning what the witness has to say.

- The witness played such an important role in the events leading to the lawsuit or had such an important opportunity to observe the events that the witness'ss testimony is critical.

To a large extent, the deposition of a non-party witness will vary depending on how cooperative the witness may be.

[2] Deposing the Cooperative Non-Party Witness

A lawyer usually takes the deposition of a cooperative non-party witness to put evidence in the record which may not be available at trial. Such a deposition may be required because, while the witness is prepared to testify helpfully, the witness is not willing or able to appear at trial. Another reason for such a deposition is that the deposing lawyer may want to have the witness's testimony available before trial to support a motion to dismiss or for summary judgment or to assist in settlement negotiations. As a general rule, you should only take such a deposition after you have determined that the reasons for the deposition outweigh the benefits of saving the witness's testimony for trial. Of course, where the witness refuses to appear or will be unavailable for trial, you may have little choice in the matter.

When deposing a friendly non-party witness, you should note that the preparation of the witness for the deposition is a legitimate subject of inquiry by adverse counsel. Despite adverse counsel's ability to inquire into the nature of the witness's preparation, detailed preparation for the deposition is often still advisable. The preparation, however, should stick to the facts and you should be careful not to explore unnecessary topics with the witness or editorialize about the case.

When taking such a deposition, you should be especially well prepared. Because the deposition will presumably be read at trial, you must be particularly careful to ask questions that highlight the witness's favorable testimony. It is likely that leading a friendly non-party witness will be challenged by adverse counsel.

When you prepare a friendly non-party witness for a deposition, you should also prepare the witness for cross-examination. You should question the witness about any unfavorable areas of the witness's testimony so that the witness is not caught by surprise. Obviously, if the witness may give unfavorable testimony in important areas in response to cross-examination, you should be certain that the favorable testimony outweighs any dangers that may be presented by the witness's unfavorable testimony.

[3] Deposing the Non-Party Witness Expected to Testify For an Adverse Party

Before taking such a deposition of an adverse nonparty witness, you should evaluate whether the witness will be called at trial. The risk in taking such a deposition is that, in exploring the witness's position, your adversary will be educated about evidentiary material that otherwise might not be discovered. For this reason, you may elect to postpone taking such a deposition until the witness is identified in a pretrial list of trial witnesses, as long as you do not lose your opportunity to take the deposition. Of course, if the unfavorable witness will not be able to attend trial, and is not deposed, there will be no written record of the witness's testimony. Therefore, taking the deposition will only preserve testimony that may damage your case.

Once you are satisfied that the risk of deposing such a witness is justified, you should proceed much as if it were the deposition of a witness under the control of an adverse party. You should, however, take a few steps to confirm your impression that the non-party witness is as hostile as anticipated. Thus, an attempt to confer with the non-party witness prior to the deposition is sometimes worth the effort. In some cases, a non-party witness may be more disinterested than you suspected. Such an effort at informal contact may confirm the adverse alignment of the witness, shed some light on the witness's personality, and contribute to your decision whether or not to proceed to take testimony.

Having decided to proceed with the deposition, you should make the most of this discovery opportunity. First, you should consider serving a request for documents with the subpoena for the deposition. Second, you should ask questions that show the witness is affiliated with the adverse party so as to warrant the use of leading questions. Along these lines, you should ascertain at the beginning of the examination whether the witness has discussed the impending deposition with opposing counsel, what was said, whether the witness discussed the deposition or the lawsuit with the adverse party and, again, what was said. You should also ask whether the witness has agreed to testify at trial or has discussed with anyone the possibility of being subpoenaed for trial. In addition, you should ask whether the witness is being compensated in any way or has any financial, legal or other ties to any of the parties in the litigation. Apart from further clarifying the witness's affiliations, the responses to these questions will give you a clearer idea of how to proceed with the questioning.

If the witness seems likely to appear at trial, your objective in taking the deposition should be, as with an adverse party witness, to explore the deponent's knowledge in order to anticipate the adverse testimony to be provided at trial and to lay a foundation for effective cross-examination. Similarly, as with an adverse party, you should try to limit the use of the witness by the other side at trial.

[4] Deposing the Neutral Non-Party Witness

A third category of non-party deposition is that of the witness who is neither a helpful ally nor allied with an adverse party. For instance, an individual may be identified who has firsthand knowledge of the facts underlying a lawsuit such that his or her account of events should be explored. In many instances, such a deponent will be an "occurrence" witness. For example, in a personal injury suit, a disinterested witness may have observed the accident. In a commercial dispute, such a witness may have had a unique opportunity to be privy to the discussions surrounding the transaction.

Such a deposition may be taken where the testimony of the witness is an essential part of the affirmative case of the party taking the deposition. If, for example, a discontinued distributor is claiming that the defendant-manufacturer terminated it because of urging from competing distributors, testimony from other distributors may be essential to support an antitrust violation. If the deposition does not develop such proof, counsel must look elsewhere for proof, but if the deposition is a success, counsel will have gone a long way toward establishing the client's case.

In addition, if the non-party witness has important information that is central to the issues in the lawsuit, the testimony should be obtained promptly in order to enable you and your client to assess the case intelligently. Of course, if such a deposition yields unfavorable proof, it can have a devastating effect on the client's position. For this reason, the delay of the deposition may be advisable if the object is to maneuver for a while pending a settlement. On the other hand, a desire to hold down the costs of litigation and compel a prompt resolution may commend the early scheduling of an important non-party deposition that you believe will be favorable.

In taking such a non-party deposition you will, at least initially, be operating in an offensive mode, trying to obtain from the witness clear, affirmative testimony. If documents are likely to be significant, you should precede the deposition with a well thought-out subpoena for documents and should try, if possible, to use the documents to bolster the favorable deposition testimony.

After you obtain the needed testimony, it may be appropriate to shift to a more conservative approach, recognizing that excessive inquisitiveness may undermine the favorable testimony. It should be left to opposing counsel to try to nullify or reduce the effect of what has been learned.

[5] Deposing the Adverse Expert

Deposing the adverse expert poses great difficulties for trial counsel. The self-confident and often aggressive demeanor of the expert, his knowledge of the subject matter, and his partisanship all combine to create discomfort and problems for examining counsel. Yet this deposition is often critical for effective trial preparation and adequate assessment of the case in order to engage in meaningful settlement negotiations.

Once it is determined who is a testifying expert, preparation for the deposition should begin. Examination of such a witness presents daunting challenges to the deposing attorney. Clarity in goals is essential in meeting these challenges. While the specific facts of each case and each deposition will determine what aim the deposing attorney has, the general purposes of such depositions may be summarized as follows: discovering the expert's opinions and the facts underlying those opinions; "freezing" the expert to positions from which he may not deviate later in the pretrial or trial proceedings; discrediting or weakening his opinions; harvesting information from the adverse expert which may be useful to your own expert; demonstrating bias of the expert or other reasons which undermine his credibility to the fact-finder. These general goals will require a subtle and nuanced questioning strategy, often balancing one goal against another.

Before attempting to depose the expert, the examining attorney must achieve some degree of mastery of the body of knowledge upon which the expert will testify. This will require extended research and an immersion into the literature. Since the expert's testimony is likely to be limited to specific details of the general body of information at issue, you must hone in on these relevant areas. In addition, investigation of the expert's credentials is critical. This requires study of information regarding his education, experience, publications, prior testimony as an expert, etc. These qualifications may be shown to be so deficient that a court will not allow the expert to state an opinion. This is rare, and indicates either a desperate or amateurish opponent. More likely, the qualifications may offer opportunities for challenging the credibility of the expert's opinions. Before entering the deposition, you should study writings of the expert on relevant topics, prior depositions and/or trial testimony given by the expert, answers to interrogatories and other information offering a glimpse into your adversary's thinking and views.

During the deposition, several goals must be achieved. Examination must specifically focus on the opinions that the witness has formed. Those opinions, of necessity, will be based upon facts and assumptions and each of those elements may be undermined with appropriate investigation and questioning. The theoretical basis for the opinions expressed and the work done to arrive at the opinion must be ascertained. This may suggest alternative methodologies which would produce contrary results. The amount of time spent on the case, the persons who have assisted the expert, what documents and information he has used to reach the opinion, etc., must all be probed. If the expert's work is not finished, this should be determined, together with what additional work will be done.

The most common, but often the most unsuccessful, attack upon the expert is bias. Such bias may be suggested by the amount of compensation being paid for his work, prior relationships with the party, the amount of income derived from expert testimony generally, the writings and philosophical positions of the expert which may show an unalterably closed mind on the subject, etc.

Perhaps the most difficult task of the deposing attorney is to maintain control of the examination, which often functions as cross-examination. The phrasing of questions and the rhythm of the questioning will often determine whether you or the expert has control over the deposition. Careful preparation, and indeed rehearsal with someone familiar with the subject area, will help to gain maximum advantage from this expensive proceeding.

Trial counsel ultimately is the buffer between the expert's purported expertise and the fact-finder. Preparation, logic, and skill will be the basis for protection of your client's interests at the deposition and, ultimately, at trial.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureRemediesCosts & Attorney FeesCostsDepositions & TranscriptsEvidenceTestimonyExpertsCredibilityImpeachment

* Chapter 17 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 Taking Depositions *

2-17 Federal Litigation Guide § 17.10

§ 17.10. Deposing One's Own Witness

[1] Deposing Witness Due to Unvaliability for Trial

The final category of depositions is that of persons who are your own witnesses. In most cases, deposing one's own witness is unnecessary because you can obtain information from the witness without a deposition. There are, however, a limited number of situations in which you may wish to consider deposing your own witness.

The usual reason for deposing your own witness is the preservation of needed testimony which may not be available at the time of trial. Sometimes, a witness's serious illness may make it uncertain whether the witness will be available at the time of trial. In addition, if a corporate employee is about to retire or be transferred to a distant location, you may choose to take that employee's deposition. If litigation is likely to be protracted, you may wish to consider whether helpful testimony may be lost if it is not preserved by a deposition.

[2] Deposing Witness for Purpose of Motion Practice

A deposition of your own witness may be used in support of, or in opposition to, a summary judgment motion under Rule 56. While Rule 56(a), addressing summary judgment for claimant, and Rule 56(b), addressing summary judgment for the defending party, speak only to "supporting affidavits," Rule 56(e) specifies that "[t]he court may permit affidavits to be supplemented or opposed by depositions, answers to interrogatories, or further affidavits." The rule goes on to provide that the party opposing summary judgment may not rely on its pleadings but must respond "by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule" to show the existence of a genuine fact issue. While typically depositions used to support a summary judgment motion will be those of an adverse party, you may wish to use the deposition of your own witness. You may believe such a deposition is more persuasive than conventional affidavits.

Similarly, a deposition may be used in support of, or in opposition to, a motion for a preliminary injunction.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsPerpetuation of TestimonyCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentSupporting MaterialsGeneral Overview

* Chapter 17 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Appendix 17: Appendix to Chapter 17

2-App. 17 Federal Litigation Guide Appendix 17:.syn

§ App. 17.syn Synopsis to Appendix App. 17: Appendix to Chapter 17

Appendix 17: Scope

[PART I] EXAMINATION OF OCCURRENCE WITNESS BY COUNSEL FOR DEFENDANT

[PART II] EXAMINATION OF DEFENDANT'S EXPERT BY COUNSEL FOR PLAINTIFF

DEPOSITION TRANSCRIPT AND COMMENTARY: PRODUCTS LIABILITY CASE

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Appendix 17: Appendix to Chapter 17

2-App. 17 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

DEPOSITION TRANSCRIPT AND COMMENTARY: PRODUCTS LIABILITY CASE

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Appendix 17: Appendix to Chapter 17

2-App. 17 Federal Litigation Guide [PART I]

[PART I] EXAMINATION OF OCCURRENCE WITNESS BY COUNSEL FOR DEFENDANT

Products Liability Case:
Alleged Manufacturer's Design Defect and Failure To Warn
Resulting in Death of Rider of All Terrain Vehicle

FACTS

Plaintiff's decedent, Mrs. Westrum, a wife and mother, was killed in an accident involving a three-wheel, all terrain vehicle (ATV). Mrs. Westrum was riding her ATV up a small dirt hill on an abandoned railroad right-of-way, customarily used by the public for dirt bikes, ATVs, hiking, etc. After going up part of the hill, she attempted to back down, and the ATV flipped over, resulting in her death. Plaintiff filed suit against the manufacturer, Kawasaki, Inc., based on design defects and failure to warn of hazards. Kawasaki claims that the vehicle was properly designed and that plaintiff (i) failed to follow its warnings, (ii) failed to wear a helmet, and (iii) failed to turn the vehicle around rather than back down the hill.

OVERVIEW AND STRATEGY

This is a deposition of an eyewitness to the accident, decedent's daughter, taken by defendant's counsel in his office. The choice of site is important: It gives deposing counsel maximum control, allows the opportunity to retrieve necessary documents, etc. Counsel's specific goals in this deposition are (i) to learn as much as possible about the accident, (ii) to commit the witness to a specific version of the facts, (iii) to assess the demeanor and credibility of this crucial witness, and (iv) to develop a record for defendant's expert witnesses to use in their analysis of the cause of the accident. In addition, deposing counsel is attempting to establish an affirmative defense: that the decedent was an inexperienced rider who lacked the ability to ascend or descend the dirt hill. A crucial element will be to locate the position of the head injury so as to strengthen the claim that a helmet would have prevented or ameliorated the injury.

Counsel's overarching goals for deposition are to assist in evaluating the case for settlement purposes and to prepare for actual trial of the case. These goals, often conflicting in practice, pose substantial challenges for deposing counsel.

SUMMARY OF EXAMINATION

Introductory Questions (Questions 1-16)

Preparation by Witness for Deposition (Questions 17-18)

Purchase of ATV (Questions 19-45)

Safety Equipment (Questions 46-57; 96-98)

Experience ATV (Questions 58-61; 66-75; 79-95; 99-100; 164-170)

Location of Accident (Questions 62-65; 121-134; 152-163; 171-174; 180-206; 313-315; 324-334)

Knowledge of Dangers in Riding (Questions 76-79; 175-179)

Description of Accident and Injuries (Questions 101-120; 135-151; 207-312; 315-338)

DIRECT EXAMINATION

PRELIMINARY MATTERS: The examination should begin with a host of preliminary matters. The attorney will traditionally introduce himself and the other people at the deposition, including the reporter. He will ask the deponent whether she has ever given a deposition and whether she is familiar with the process. The examining attorney will also want to assure the witness of fair treatment and explain his expectation of the witness's role in the examination. Whatever stipulations may be agreed to, such as reservation to objections except as to form, will be placed on the record. It's also helpful to place on the record whether the deponent had agreed to the examination or was present subject to a deposition notice. Sequestration of other potential witnesses to avoid their hearing the testimony of the deponent may also occur. Fed. R. Evid. 615; Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(c). This introductory material is here omitted. See § 17.03[1-8] regarding beginning of deposition.

DIRECT EXAMINATION BY MR. KENNEDY:

LORRAIN WESTRUM, CALLED AS A WITNESS BY DEFENDANT, BEING DULY SWORN, TESTIFIED AS FOLLOWS:

1. Q. Would you please state your full name?

A. Lorrain Westrum.

2. Q. And what is your address?

A. 348 E. 82 Place, Plymouth, Minnesota 55356.

3 Q. How long have you resided there?

A. Since October of'94.

4. Q. Who else lives at that address with you?

A. My father, my sister and my brother.

5. Q. What is your age?

A. Twenty-one.

6. Q. And your date of birth?

A. May 20, 1974.

7. Q. And where did you live immediately prior to moving to Plymouth?

A. Modesto, Minnesota.

8. Q. And your address there?

A. 15 Maple Road.

9. Q. And who lived at that address with you?

A. I lived with my roommate.

10. Q. What is your educational background?

A. I have one (1) year of college behind me.

11. Q. When did you graduate from high school?

A.'91.

12. Q. And what school was that?

A. West High School.

13. Q. And where did you attend college?

A. University of Minnesota.

14. Q. What was your major?

A. Business.

15. Q. Have you ever been employed?

A. Several part-time jobs.

NOTE:

The deposition begins with background and introductory material. This releases tension and lets the attorney and the deponent get into the rhythm of the question and answer format. Additional questions on education, employment and other introductory matters are here omitted.

16. Q. Have you reviewed any documents or anything for today?

A. No.

17. Q. Haven't read anything or looked at any pictures or anything?

A. No.

18. Q. Obviously, we are here about an accident that involved a three (3) wheel cycle. It was, I believe an ATV Kawasaki 100 and I will just probably refer to it as the ATV, if that is okay?

A. Uh huh.

19. Q. Do you recall when that was purchased?

A. May of'93.

20. Q. Do you recall where it was purchased?

A. No.

21. Q. Was it somewhere in Plymouth?

A. Yes.

22. Q. Were you present when it was purchased?

A. No.

23. Q. Do you know why it was purchased?

A. Recreation.

24. Q. Whose idea was it to purchase the ATV?

A. I don't know.

25. Q. Was there any discussion about it before it just appeared one (1) day?

A. I don't know.

NOTE:

The witness is clearly uncommunicative, even in these introductory matters. These one word or noncommittal responses should immediately alert counsel that he faces an uncooperative witness--one who has been clearly warned not to volunteer information, and is in fact heeding this advice. Often witnesses assume the examiner's goal is to trick or trap them. Counsel's task is, by his conduct, to convince the witness he is fair and honest.

26. Q. Had the family or anybody in the family previously owned an ATV?

A. No.

27. Q. Had they, the family, or anybody in the family previously owned a motorcycle?

A. No.

28. Q. Did anyone you know own an ATV?

A. The next door neighbor.

29. Q. Do you recall their name?

A. Dr. and Mrs. Spiegel.

30. Q. Do they still live in Plymouth?

A. Yes.

31. Q. What kind of an ATV did they own?

A. I don't know.

32. Q. Was it a three (3) wheel?

A. Yes.

33. Q. Did they own that before your family purchased one?

A. Yes.

34. Q. Did anyone else in your neighborhood own an ATV?

A. Yes, Capehart.

35. Q. Do you know if your mother had ridden any of these vehicles prior to May of'93?

A. I don't know.

36. Q. Had you ridden any of them?

A. Yes.

37. Q. On more than one occasion?

A. No.

38. Q. Do you recall how the ATV that was purchased by your family got to your home?

A. It was delivered by the dealer.

39. Q. Were you home when it was delivered?

A. No.

40. Q. Did you or anyone in your family receive any instructions or training from the dealer about how to operate the ATV?

A. I wasn't there, I don't know.

41. Q. Do you know who the salesman was, by chance?

A. No.

42. Q. Did the ATV come with an owner's manual?

A. I don't know.

43. Q. Did you ever see an owner's manual?

A. No.

44. Q. Safe to assume you didn't read it either? Did your mother, to your knowledge, if you know?

A. I don't know.

45. Q. Did your mother have the owner's manual or read it?

A. I don't know.

NOTE:

Counsel is searching for information to support a theory that decedent should have read warnings in the Owner's Manual about not riding on terrain above the skill level of the driver. The deposition of this crucial witness is the time to test whether sufficient facts can be developed to support such a theory. Note that the failure to secure this information does not mean the deposition is a failure; to the contrary, the deposition is the time to ascertain all facts, positive, negative, or neutral. If the witness's testimony is negative, it is better to learn this in advance of trial. See § 17.04[1]

46. Q. Did the family have any safety equipment relative to the ATV and by that, I'm talking about a helmet or goggles or something along that line?

A. Not relating to the ATV.

47. Q. Did the family have a helmet?

A. Yes.

48. Q. Why?

A. For the use of snowmobiles.

49. Q. How many helmets did the family have?

A. I don't know. Approximately three (3) to four (4).

50. Q. Were these full helmets? I mean by that, did they come around the ears and across the forehead?

A. I will say as much as covering the ears.

51. Q. Did they have face plates on them?

A. I don't know.

52. Q. Did the family use the helmets when they drove the snowmobiles?

A. Yeah, occasionally.

53. Q. When you would ride the snowmobile, would you wear a helmet?

A. Occasionally. Prior to the accident, not much at all.

54. Q. And did your mother ever ride the snowmobile?

A. Yes.

55. Q. Did she wear a helmet when she rode the snowmobiles?

A. That I don't know.

56. Q. You have no personal knowledge at all on that?

A. No.

57. Q. Are you sure?

A. Yes.

NOTE:

Deposing counsel must insist on a definitive answer to questions posed. An "I don't know" answer often should be probed to ascertain if further refreshing of memory may help. On the other hand, counsel may not wish elaboration of favorable answers. Deposing counsel typically face numerous strategic choices during a deposition. While not determinative, or possibly even admissible, this material about helmet use during snowmobiling is certainly relevant at this discovery proceeding. The test for relevance in discovery is different from the test for admissibility of evidence at trial. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26. Now counsel switches to the family's use of the ATV.

58. Q. Who in the immediate family rode the ATV the most?

A. My brother Bob.

59. Q. Now, who else rode it quite a bit other than Bob?

A. I would say my mother.

60. Q. When would she ride it and what I mean by that, was there any regular, what do I want to say, schedule she had or route, anything like that?

A. She rode it in order to exercise our Doberman.

61. Q. Would that be about every day?

A. Yes.

62. Q. Where would she ride it with the dog?

A. In the location of the accident, that area, the railroad track right-of-way.

63. Q. Just so we are both talking about the same place, that is on the east side of Oakbrook subdivision and the right of way goes from north to south?

A. Yes.

64. Q. And there were and are no railroad ties there, are there?

A. No.

NOTE:

The testimony of this witness is critical because the mound of dirt on which the accident occurred has since been removed. Counsel must thus get a detailed description of the scene at the time of the accident because it is now permanently altered. The deposition provides the opportunity to get details about timing, topography, and specific events.

65. Q. Those have been taken up, so there is just a dirt path, is that true?

A. Yes.

66. Q. When she was exercising the dog, how would she keep the dog with her?

A. The dog had an instinct to stay with its owner.

67. Q. Was the dog on the leash?

A. Once the dog was back on the railroad bed, the dog was off the leash.

68. Q. But getting over there, from your house, it would be on the leash?

A. Yes.

69. Q. And your mother would ride the ATV while holding the dog on the leash, is that correct?

NOTE:

The rider's position on the ATV and her freedom to use her hands could be important issues in this litigation. Moreover, the leash itself could possibly have become entangled in the wheels, creating instability and hastening or causing the tipping of the ATV. The facts about the dog and the leash will require further elaboration, which will occur later in the deposition. Note the examiner's use of leading questions for this adverse witness. See § 17.04 [1] for a discussion of the use of leading questions.

70. Q. Other than exercising the dog, did your mother have occasion to ride the ATV that you are aware of?

A. No.

71. Q. Was there a normal route that she followed to get over to the railroad right-of-way from your home?

A. Yes.

72. Q. What was that route?

A. Down Maple Road, across Hickory Road, across the field, finishing up across the field, down the trail and then to the left which is the railroad track.

73. Q. Would she get onto the railroad right-of-way and go from the south to the north and then turn around and come back to where she had gotten on?

A. That varied.

74. Q. Were there any family rules about the ATV and its use?

A. The only thing was to stay off the roads.

75. Q. Off the paved roads?

A. Exactly, away from traffic.

76. Q. Were you aware of any dangers associated with riding the ATV before this accident?

A. No.

77. Q. Do you know if your mother was aware of any dangers associated with the ATV?

A. I don't know.

78. Q. Did you and your mother ever talk about the ATV?

A. No.

79. Q. Did anyone in your family ever have an accident or a near accident on the ATV before your mother's accident?

A. Not that I know of, no.

80. Q. Who took care of the ATV for the family? If it needed oil or needed to have gasoline, who did that?

A. Bob and Dad.

81. Q. Do you know if the ATV was ever taken back to the dealer for any purpose?

A. Yes.

82. Q. When was that?

A. A week prior to the accident it was taken in for a tune-up.

83. Q. Do you happen to know why it was taken in?

A. Precaution, just to check things out.

NOTE:

The deposition is here proceeding in a traditional "defensive" mode, gathering as much information as possible. The mechanical condition of the ATV and its maintenance is of obvious relevance to the defendant.

84. Q. Were there any problems with its operation that led up to that?

A. I don't know.

85. Q. You're not aware of any?

A. No, I don't know.

86. Q. Do you recall any discussions about the rear tires being worn?

A. No.

87. Q. Do you know if your mother felt comfortable operating the ATV?

A. I don't know. I am assuming.

88. Q. Did she ever express any concerns to you about operating the ATV?

A. No.

89. Q. When she was riding it, did she seem to know how to operate it?

A. Yes.

90. Q. Did she start it herself?

A. Yes.

91. Q. Do you know if she received any training or instructions in how to operate it?

A. No.

NOTE:

The form of this question allows an ambiguous answer. It is unclear whether the "no" means she didn't receive training or that the deponent doesn't know. See § 17.03[9], Form of Questions.

The attorney continues to collect information about the decedent's knowledge and/or instructions in operating the ATV. He is probing for any information that supports his theory of the case.

92. Q. When you rode the ATV, what was your purpose? Why did you ride it?

A. Just fun, and seeing the neighborhood.

93. Q. Where did you go?

A. In Woodmont.

94. Q. On how many occasions?

A. Five (5) to ten (10), approximately.

95. Q. You stayed within the subdivision?

A. Yes.

96. Q. Did you ever wear a helmet on any of those five (5) to ten (10) occasions?

A. No.

97. Q. Did you ever shift while you were riding?

A. Yes.

98. Q. And did you understand how to do that and did it work okay?

A. Yes.

NOTE:

This demonstrates the difficulty with compound questions. It is unclear which part of the question the witness answers. Not only does this create a confusing record, it leaves the questioning attorney without a definitive response to either question. See § 17.03[9].

99. Q. Had your mother ever had any accidents or falls off of the ATV prior to this incident in August?

A. I don't know.

100. Q. You are not aware of any?

A. No.

101. Q. Now, correct me if I'm wrong, but it is my understanding this accident happened on September 25, 1994.

A. Yes.

102. Q. Around 12:20 in the afternoon?

A. Late morning.

103. Q. What was the weather like that day?

A. Humid, hot. I would say in the mid to upper mid 80's.

104. Q. Was it sunny or overcast, if you recall?

A. If I recall with the humidity, it would tend to lean on the overcast side.

105. Q. And where did this accident happen?

A. On the railroad bed that we discussed earlier.

The questioning here continued to probe the witness's recollection and perception of conditions on the day of the accident. This portion of the deposition is here omitted.

106. Q. Who was present when the accident occurred?

A. I was.

107. Q. Anyone else?

A. And my dog. My dog and I.

108. Q. What was the purpose of this trip?

A. To exercise the Doberman.

109. Q. What were you wearing?

A. I was jogging, so I had jogging attire on, running shorts, T-shirt, tennis shoes.

110. Q. Had you ridden the ATV at all on that trip?

A. No.

111. Q. Did you intend to?

A. No.

112. Q. What did your mother have on generally?

A. Walking shorts down to the knees, T-shirt, socks and tennis shoes.

113. Q. Did she have on glasses?

A. Yes.

114. Q. Did she wear prescription glasses?

A. Yes.

NOTE:

Now counsel attempts to reconstruct the accident's details. This witness is the only occurrence witness, so her version of the events will be the only one concerning the actual accident. Counsel will attempt to find support for defendant's theories in the facts as retold by this witness. Specific factual detail is critical; she will be less able to change the story later if the particulars are fixed in the deposition transcript. Counsel's purpose here must be to exhaust the witness's recollection and knowledge, to avoid surprise at trial, and get ready for cross examination. See § 17.04.

115. Q. Did she have a helmet on?

A. No.

116. Q. Did she have a helmet with her?

A. No.

117. Q. Do you recall when you left the house that morning?

A. Mid to late morning. Somewhere in the vicinity between 10:00 and 12:00. I don't remember precisely.

118. Q. How long had you been gone from the house prior to the accident occurring?

A. Approximately a half hour.

119. Q. Do you know if anyone else had ridden the ATV earlier that day?

A. I don't know.

120. Q. Did your mother ride the entire time, about half hour from the time you left the house until the accident?

A. Yes.

121. Q. Let me show you something. I will show Mr. Cohen (defending counsel) this. I believe this is a division map of your subdivision and you might want to look at it to get your bearings. I believe this is your street, I believe the address is rather hard to read. I think that is your address, 15.

DEPOSITION EXHIBIT NUMBER 1 MARKED AT THIS POINT BY THE REPORTER

NOTE:

Documents are commonly used in depositions. They should ordinarily be marked in advance and identified clearly. The record must reflect each document with a coherent marking system. See § 17.07[1].

122. Q. Miss Westrum, I will hand you what the court reporter has marked as Deposition Exhibit 1 and I will ask if you can identify this as a map of the subdivision. Is it familiar enough that you feel comfortable with that?

A. Yes.

123. Q. Are you able to locate your house in Plymouth?

A. Yes.

124. Q. And are you also able to locate the general area where the accident occurred? This is the Pacific Central Railroad right-of-way.

A. Yes.

125. Q. Would you take this? If you could, take a red pen and start at your house and just trace the route that you and your mother took on September 25, prior to the accident.

A. This is where we got on.

126. Q. Make a big X, okay?

A. Uh huh.

127. Q. And would you note on your home, would you just write home?

A. Yes.

128. Q. And the lake was there at the time of the accident?

A. Yes.

NOTE:

The map will become part of the record of this deposition. It is marked as an exhibit for that purpose. Although the witness has not seen this map before, she agrees that she can locate certain places on it, and thus its use is appropriate for marking locations and for the places identified by the witness. See § 17.07.

Additional questions and answers on this are here omitted.

129. Q. Now, okay. You put an X and have written the word Enter where you got onto the railroad right-of-way. Would you continue to draw until where the accident occurred, if that is shown on this exhibit?

A. If you could tell me what number lot Jones' is, then I can say where the accident was. (Marking Jones and another house).

130. Q. And if you want to connect those two (2) to show the route, please make a real big X. (witness draws X)

131. Q. And so the accident happened approximately behind the Jones' residence?

A. Yes.

132. Q. But it was not on their property?

A. No.

133. Q. It was on the railroad right-of-way?

A. Yes.

134. Q. Now, what you have drawn for me shows that you and your mother came out the front of your house and traveled down Maple Road.

A. Yes.

135. Q. Now, prior to getting on the railroad right-of-way, had you or your mother stopped for anything?

A. I was separate from her. I left ten (10) minutes earlier than she did because I jog, but we met later. Where she entered is where we met.

136. Q. So, you left first?

A. Yes.

137. Q. And were running?

A. Yes.

138. Q. And who had the dog?

A. I don't remember.

139. Q. Let me ask a question that may jog your memory. I am not trying to suggest to you which one had the dog. Do you recall the leash -- was the dog still on the leash when the two of you met?

A. I don't remember.

NOTE:

The attorney is about to enter very sensitive territory as he begins to asks for details of the accident. This witness has watched her mother die in a horrifying tragedy. If counsel wants details from her, he must be sensitive to deponent's feelings. Under any circumstances it is difficult to remember specific details of an accident. Because of the trauma involved here, the attorney's task is particularly difficult. He asks about details concerning the dog and the leash to try to create memory chains in the witness. Moreover, the leash may emerge as an issue relevant to causation. Since the purpose of the deposition is to ascertain all details of the accident, deposing counsel must elicit all foundational information. Subsequent follow-up questions are here omitted.

140. Q. Then what did you do when the two (2) of you met?

A. Continued our trail.

141. Q. Going north?

A. Yes.

142. Q. And how far is it approximately in feet from where you got onto the railroad right-of-way until where the accident happened?

A. The accident happened on the way back, but from here to here, it is approximately 200 yards.

143. Q. 200 yards?

A. Uh huh.

144. Q. And was there any obstruction on the path where the accident occurred?

A. Yes.

145. Q. What was it?

A. There was dirt.

146. Q. Well, the path itself was dirt, so what distinguished this point?

A. There was extra piles of dirt that had been dumped there by the Jones'.

147. Q. And you indicated though that you and your mother went past this point further north and had turned around and were coming back south when the accident actually occurred, is that correct?

A. Correct.

148. Q. Where had you gone on further up north?

A. Approximately a mile to a mile and a half.

149. Q. Did you cross any streets?

A. No.

150. Q. Did you see anybody while you were on the railroad right-of-way?

A. No.

151. Q. That you saw or that saw you?

A. No.

NOTE:

The attorney is clarifying and confirming that there were no other potential witnesses to the accident. Therefore, as far as the details of the occurrence, this witness's rendition will be the sole account.

152. Q. Let me ask you about that dirt pile. Do you know how long it had been on the path?

A. No.

153. Q. And I think you have already indicated, but do you know where it came from?

A. The construction.

154. Q. What construction?

A. The construction on the Jones' lot.

155. Q. And the Jones' lot is the one that we have identified as lot 90 and you have put a J on Exhibit One?

A. Yes.

156. Q. What was being constructed on the Jones' lot?

A. An addition to their home.

157. Q. Do you know who put the dirt there?

A. No.

158. Q. Do you know why the Jones' had the dirt put on the path?

A. No.

159. Q. Have you talked to the Jones' about this?

A. No.

160. Q. Have you talked to the Jones' at all since this accident?

A. No.

161. Q. Now, I asked you how long the dirt had been on the path and you said you didn't know. Did you know that it was there before you left home that day?

A. Yes.

162. Q. Had you been on the path on a previous day when the dirt was there?

A. Yes.

163. Q. Had it been there for at least a week before this accident?

A. Yes.

NOTE:

The witness responds with one word answers, while the attorney struggles to extract her story. He tries a series of closed-ended questions in order to elicit testimony from her. Open-ended questions might have been tried to get the witness to answer with a longer narrative. The choice of type of question is an important strategic decision for the attorney. See § 17.03[9] for a full discussion about form of questions.

164. Q. Had your mother been over the dirt pile previously, that is before the accident?

A. Yes.

165. Q. How do you know that?

A. She told me she exercised the dog.

166. Q. When she went over the dirt pile previously was she on the ATV?

A. Yes.

167. Q. On those -- was it more than one (1) occasion?

A. Yes.

168. Q. So, you have previously indicated that it was her normal routine to take the dog out once a day?

A. Yes.

169. Q. So, is it your belief that she had probably been on the ATV over the dirt pile each day for those two (2) weeks or so that the dirt was there?

A. I don't know.

170. Q. But she had at least told you that she had been over it before September 25?

A. Yes.

171. Q. During the two (2) weeks or so that the dirt pile was there, on those occasions when you were also on the path, did you see anybody else on a vehicle going over the dirt pile?

A. Yes.

172. Q. Did you know the people?

A. No.

173. Q. It wasn't your neighbor, the Spiegels?

A. No.

174. Q. What vehicles do you recall seeing on those prior occasions?

A. I recall seeing a bicycle and a motorcycle.

175. Q. At any time prior to the accident, did your mother express any concern about that dirt pile there?

A. Yes.

176. Q. What did she say?

A. She didn't like it.

177. Q. Do you recall what she said?

A. She didn't like it because it was her place to exercise the dog and somebody else had invaded that place.

178. Q. It was an invasion?

A. Yes, a big inconvenience.

179. Q. Did she express any concern about her ability to maneuver the ATV over it?

A. Not to me.

180. Q. Was this path used during the winter time for snowmobiles also?

A. Yes.

181. Q. Was that kind of a favorite place for snowmobiles since it was flat and straight?

A. Yes.

182. Q. Would you now describe for me the dirt pile as it was of the 25th of September as best that you can recall?

A. I can't recall exact dimensions. I was not there with a measuring stick at the time of the accident. I didn't go back with a measuring tape or a camera.

NOTE:

The details about the dirt pile are very important. Because the decedent's inability to go over the dirt pile was part of the cause of the accident, every dimension and an exact description will be necessary for the defendant's case. Defendant's expert will use this description, as will the accident reconstructionist. The witness continues to resist the attorney's request for details and more extensive testimony. Open-ended questions should have been tried in an attempt to extract more details. See § 17.04[2.--4].

184. Q. How high was the dirt pile?

A. Recalling from my own memory, I'm going to guess the height was around somewhere between three (3) to four (4) feet.

185. Q. Did it completely cover the path or was there room to get around?

A. There was room to get around.

186. Q. How wide was it at the top?

A. However wide the trail was.

187. Q. Was it three (3) feet wide, five (5) feet wide?

A. It was about three to four feet wide. It did not come up to a so called peak. People were going over it with all kinds of vehicles.

188. Q. It was more or less flat on top?

A. Yes.

189. Q. Was it wide enough for the ATV to sit up on top?

A. By all means.

190. Q. Do you know whether there had been other traffic over this pile before the 25th?

A. Yes.

191. Q. Do you have an opinion as to whether there had been only a few people over or quite a few over it?

A. I don't have an opinion.

192. Q. Was it basically packed dirt?

A. Yes.

193. Q. Was it dry?

A. Yes.

194. Q. Do you have any knowledge as to how the dirt got there? Did it appear that a dump truck had come out and just dumped one (1) pile or did it appear there had been several dumpings of dirt there by whatever machine?

A. It appeared to be two (2) to three (3) dumpings.

195. Q. I would appreciate it if you would try and draw for me what you recall of the mound. (Handing her paper)

A. What view do you want?

BY MR. COHEN:

Identify that as Exhibit 2, please.

196. Q. First, if you would draw for me the wound as it appeared, as you were standing in the middle of the path on the south side, looking north, so that you'd be drawing it as it appeared as you would go over it going down the path.

DEPOSITION EXHIBIT NUMBER 2 MARKED AT THIS POINT BY THE REPORTER.

197. Q. Now I will hand you what the court reporter has marked as Deposition Exhibit 2. It shows the dirt pile as it appeared when you were standing in the path on the south looking north, is that correct?

A. Yes.

198. Q. Now, were there any ridges or ruts in the dirt pile on the 25th from people riding up this and going over?

A. From this standpoint, from north to south, from here to here, no.

199. Q. Could you estimate if an ATV could sit on top of that dirt pile?

A. Oh, yes.

200. Q. Now, let me have the court reporter mark this. (Handing paper)

DEPOSITION EXHIBIT NUMBER 3 MARKED AT THIS POINT BY THE REPORTER.

BY MR. KENNEDY:

201. Q. Miss Westrum, I would like for you to draw me a side view of that dirt pile.

A. Yes.

202. Q. In drawing this, I would like for you to show me the slope on the north side and the slope on the south side as best you recall.

A. First of all, angles and slopes I am not going to be able to draw very well.

203. Q. Just do the best that you can.

A. Draws on Deposition Exhibit 3.

204. Q. You just want to label the dirt pile again like you did? Now, do you have any recollection as to how far across the dirt pile from south to north?

A. I would guess anywhere between eight (8) and sixteen (16) feet.

205. Q. There is plenty of room again on top for the ATV to sit up there?

A. Yes.

206. Q. Was the slope on the dirt pile steeper on one end than on the other?

A. I don't know.

207. Q. Now, on the 25th, as you and your mother and the dog were going from the south to the north, did your mother ride the ATV over the dirt pile?

A. Yes.

208. Q. Did she have any problems?

A. Not that I recall, no.

209. Q. You were there when she went over it?

A. Yes.

210. Q. To your knowledge, she made it on her first attempt?

A. Yes.

211. Q. And on coming down, did she have any problems that you are aware of, and by coming down, I'm saying off the dirt pile on the north end?

A. I was ahead of her.

212. Q. So, if she had any, you are not aware of any anyway?

A. Correct.

213. Q. She didn't say anything and you didn't hear anything, true?

A. Correct.

214. Q. All right now, you have gone down that trail, turned around a mile or mile and a half down the road and are coming back. Where were you as you approached the dirt pile? Were you still ahead of her?

A. I was ahead of her.

215. Q. Tell me what happened.

A. I jogged up the hill or shall I say dirt pile. I was standing in the middle of the top of the dirt pile. She ascended, but she did not have momentum to get over the top of the dirt pile. She went backwards and it came over on top of her.

NOTE:

Reaching the most sensitive part of the testimony--the actual accident--the attorney should have begun this with a preface. He might have referred to the tragic aspect of the case, showing some empathy for the witness and her difficult task in retelling the story of her mother's death. He makes no attempt to relate to her difficult situation and her alienation makes her very guarded and closed. A more sensitive, humane approach would have encouraged her to be more cooperative.

216. Q. All right. So, the accident happened on her first attempt to get up onto the dirt pile as she came from the north to the south?

A. Yes.

217. Q. How far did she get up, what I will call the northern slope, before she lost momentum?

A. I don't know. I would guess somewhere in the area of almost being there (pointing), but not quite, because she did not have momentum to get over.

218. Q. First of all, let me ask, you were standing on top of the dirt pile, were you watching her?

A. Yes.

219. Q. Where was the dog when this was going on?

A. I don't know.

220. Q. Now, you indicated to me something, we don't have a mark here on Exhibit 3 yet, was that the front wheel, is that the furthest point of the front wheel, is that what you were indicating? Make a mark here how far her front wheel came.

A. (Marking exhibit) This is just a guess. It has been a long time, a lot happened in those few seconds.

221. Q. Okay. Now, you have placed an X which is, as best you can recall, the furthest progress of her front wheel on the ATV?

A. Yes.

222. Q. Now, what happened next? She had lost momentum and you indicated she came to a full stop?

A. She didn't come to a stop. The machine came to a stop. She had put the brakes on, the machine didn't have momentum to keep going. It stopped.

223. Q. Then what happened?

A. She slid back.

224. Q. Was it beginning to roll backwards? Were the wheels actually rolling backwards for some distance?

A. Yes.

225. Q. And then what happened?

A. Machine flipped over on top of her.

226. Q. At what point did that happen, and what I'm trying to get at, how far had it rolled backwards before it flipped?

A. Not far at all. I don't know.

227. Q. What do you recall about the wheels? Were they straight?

A. Yes.

NOTE:

These details will be important for the expert's opinions on causation, so thorough questioning is important here. Counsel should prepare specific questions in advance for this critical part of the story. Follow-up questions will flow naturally. See § 17.08.

228. Q. Was she in the middle of the dirt pile or off to one side?

A. The middle.

229. Q. Had the rear wheel gotten back down on the path when it flipped or were they still going back down the slope?

A. I don't know.

230. Q. What about the front wheel, was it still on the slope when she flipped?

A. The front wheel was still on the slope.

231. Q. But you don't have a recollection as to how far up or down the slope that front wheel was when it flipped, is that true?

A. That is true. Things were in slow motion in my mind.

232. Q. Where were her hands?

A. Holding onto the places where you hold on, the grips.

233. Q. Where was she on the bike?

A. On the seat.

234. Q. She was on the vehicle by herself?

A. She was on the vehicle by herself.

235. Q. I'm asking where on the seat she was, if you recall?

A. The correct place to be on a seat, the most comfortable normal position.

NOTE:

The rider's position on the seat is important. The plaintiff's expert's theory was that the seat was too large, and therefore the rider had to make weight shifts which would increase the tendency of the vehicle to flip over. This will be a matter for expert opinion testimony, but those opinions must be based on the facts established.

236. Q. Was she leaning either forward or backward?

A. I don't recall.

237. Q. Did she change position at any time as she was coming up the slope or as she was beginning to roll backwards?

A. I don't recall.

238. Q. Do you know what gear she was in as she approached the hill?

A. I do not recall.

239. Q. Do you know if anyone checked that after the accident?

A. No, I don't know.

240. Q. Now, tell me what you saw in describing the flip.

A. (Pause) (Crying)The ATV just flipped over and landed on top of her and the gas tank landed on her face and the gas cap crushed her nose and her forehead.

241. Q. You're indicating the front wheel came up off the ground, is that correct?

A. Yes, the front wheel came over and flipped over.

242. Q. Where did she go as that was happening? Did she go backwards?

A. Yes.

243. Q. And did she continue to hold onto the grips?

A. Yes.

244. Q. Did she ever let go of them during the accident sequence?

A. I don't remember.

245. Q. Now, you indicated that the gas tank and the gas cap in particular hit her in the face?

A. Yes.

246. Q. Did you see that?

A. I saw the entire accident occur.

247. Q. The accident, as you were on top, was going away from you, is that correct?

A. Yes.

248. Q. I am curious what you really saw happen.

A. From the angle I was standing, I saw everything happen.

249. Q. Did you see the gas tank actually hit her in the face?

A. (Crying) All I know is that I saw the machine flip over and I saw her go backward and I knew that the machine had impact on her. As to what extent and impact-wise, I did not find that out until I saw the results.

250. Q. After you came down to help her?

A. Yes.

251. Q. Did she come off of the seat at any time as it was flipping backwards or did it basically end up with her on her back on the ground and the ATV on top of her?

A. The second one.

252. Q. So, she stayed on the seat the whole time holding onto the grips all the way back as far as you know and until she hit the ground?

A. As far as I know.

253. Q. Now, did you hear anything while this was going on?

A. Just the machine running.

254. Q. The motor was running? Okay. Do you have a recollection as to how fast she was traveling as she came up to the slope?

A. I don't have a recollection of how fast she was going.

255. Q. Did it seem like she was moving fast or was just moving slowly or do you have an opinion?

A. She was not moving fast.

NOTE:

Counsel continues a series of specific questions concerning the details of the accident. He presses the witness for answers and persists in restating questions and probing even when she responds that she doesn't know. See § 17.04[1]. Counsel would have been better advised to show sympathy for deponent's feelings.

256. Q. Had she stopped anywhere near the dirt pile?

A. I don't know.

257. Q. Now, at the time during this sequence, did you and she have a discussion about her not being able to get up the hill?

A. Words were exchanged when she was briefly stopped on the hill.

258. Q. What was said?

A. I said, jokingly, Mother, you have to go faster to get over these hills. (Crying)

259. Q. Did she say anything to you?

A. No. And then I said do you want me to continue to get it over and she said no, I will just start over and do it myself.

260. Q. And this conversation all occurred while she was stopped?

A. Those few seconds. (Pause -- crying) Momentum had been lost and she was at a fixed position.

261. Q. So, she wasn't moving at all during that conversation?

A. No.

262. Q. Did she take the ATV out of gear before she began to back down the hill?

A. I do not recall.

263. Q. Did you see her move her feet at all?

A. I do not recall. (Crying).

BY MR. KENNEDY:

Now, if you'd like to take a break now, we can.

RECESS TAKEN AT THIS POINT.

NOTE:

This is a strategic break. It allows counsel to review the testimony and lets the witness compose herself before getting into the details of the death. It is generally a wise policy to save the most difficult questions or those that will cause most offense for later in the deposition.

BY MR. KENNEDY:

264. Q. Now, I think we are at the point where the flip has occurred and you are going down to help your mother. Would you describe for me how you found her?

A. First of all, I have a hard time recalling as to whether the ATV rolled off of her, or if I rolled it off of her, because I was in a state of shock at that point in time. Doing what had to be done instantaneously. The state that I found her in was her glasses flung off the face and smashed and her entire face had been crushed flat and she was unconscious.

265. Q. I don't want to make this more difficult for you than it has to be, but I would like to know, as specifically as you can be, her injuries.

A. Okay. (Crying) The weight of the gas tank and gas cap hitting her face obviously caused her face to go flat. Her face was -- her nose was flat, crushed -- her forehead had a huge, huge flat crushed groove, and a lot of crushed bones. All of these bones were completely crushed (indicating), her jaws were crushed, broken.

266. Q. Had her teeth been broken?

A. No.

267. Q. And what kind of a groove are you talking about on her forehead? Did it have an impression of some kind?

A. Just you imagine! (Crying).

268. Q. Was it to one side or the other?

A. It was right in the center.

269. Q. Was it a puncture?

A. All I am going to say is that something solid hit her entire face. The gas cap, for what it is worth, hit this part and caused the extra indent. See, the entire face was indented. Where the gas cap went in, it was a further indentation.

NOTE:

Counsel has continued to demand difficult details with a series of close-ended questions. He now employs an open-ended question, hoping to get a narrative flow from the witness. The assessment of how this occurrence witness will relate this story in court will help defendants evaluate the case for possible settlement. On Form of Questions, see § 17.03[9].

270. Q. Describe your mother's condition when you got to her?

A. She was unconscious.

271. Q. What did you do next?

A. I yelled and said if you are alive, do not move. I am running for help. And I said it over and over. I thought she was dead. I said, if there is any life there, please don't move.

272. Q. She was unconscious until you left to get help?

A. She was unconscious when I left. I didn't know what I was leaving behind.

273. Q. Now, where were her feet in relation to the dirt pile? How did her body line up? Was her head toward the dirt pile or her head toward the north?

NOTE:

Again, counsel asks multiple questions, leaving a less than clear record. See § 17.03.

A. I am just recalling to the best of my knowledge. Her head was facing south in my remembrance and her feet were facing north.

274. Q. That is your best recollection?

A. That is how I remember.

275. Q. And that is before you left?

A. Before I left.

276. Q. To get help? Were there any other injuries other than her face?

A. No.

277. Q. Now, where did you go?

A. I came out of the woods yelling for help.

278. Q. Did you go to a house?

A. No. Luckily Mrs. Jones came out her backyard. I said I need help. I said is there a man around. She said I don't know. I said is there a doctor -- are there any doctors around our neighborhood and she said I don't know and she was very difficult.

279. Q. Do you know why she was difficult?

A. Because she kept saying I am holding my baby.

280. Q. Did you tell her what had happened?

A. I said my mother has had an accident. I think she is dead, call an ambulance now. She said no, I can't, I am holding my baby. I said call an ambulance now, Mrs. Jones. She said I can't, I am helpless. I am holding my baby. I said a few more words and I said do it, she is dead. Finally she went in the house and called the ambulance.

281. Q. Now where did you go after that?

A. Back to the scene of the accident.

282. Q. Was anyone else around when you had the conversation with Mrs. Jones?

A. No.

283. Q. Tell me what happened next when you got back?

A. Mother had gained consciousness. To the best of my knowledge, she was struggling to turn over and was on her front side laying down, struggling to look up, bleeding profusely.

284. Q. Was she in the same relative positions when you left? By that I mean, was her head to the north still and her feet towards the dirt pile?

A. Yes.

285. Q. But she had turned over on her stomach?

A. Yes.

286. Q. So, all she had done was turned over on her stomach since you left and had become conscious?

A. Uh huh.

287. Q. What happened next?

A. I asked if she could breathe.

288. Q. Was she able to talk to you?

A. No, not really.

289. Q. Did she nod her head or anything so that you knew she understood what you were saying?

A. There was an understanding there and I knew that there was difficulty breathing.

290. Q. You left her on her stomach?

A. No, I turned her over.

291. Q. How long was it until the first person arrived to help?

A. I ran out to the Jones residence again to get towels and ice and water and blankets to wrap up my mother who was becoming very cold because of the state of shock she was in. And Mrs. Jones said that the ambulance would be there in three (3) to four (4) minutes.

292. Q. Who was the first one to arrive?

A. The ambulance was first to the scene.

293. Q. Did you know any of those people?

A. Yes.

294. Q. Who did you know?

A. One of the volunteer firemen.

295. Q. Do you know his name?

A. Uh huh.

296. Q. What is his name?

A. Yes, I know his name. It is Jim Bouton.

NOTE:

Each person at the scene must be identified and interviewed and deposed, if possible. An important function of the deposition is to gather such identifications for later investigation.

297. Q. And does he live somewhere in your neighborhood?

A. He lives in Hunter Town.

298. Q. He knew you?

A. He knew of our name.

299. Q. Do you recall your mother discussing there, at the scene, with anyone how the accident happened?

A. No.

NOTE:

If any discussions took place, counsel must get the substance now. A series of questions now probes this topic.

300. Q. Did your mother at any time tell you how this accident happened or why it happened?

A. No.

301. Q. I am not just saying at the scene, at any time in the hospital, for example?

A. No.

302. Q. Do you know if she ever told anybody how it happened or why it happened?

A. No.

303. Q. Did you talk to a police officer?

A. Let me think a minute. No.

304. Q. Did you ever talk to the Sheriff about this accident?

A. Yes.

305. Q. When did you talk to him?

A. In the emergency waiting room.

306. Q. At the hospital, at Parkview?

A. Yes.

307. Q. Do recall what you told him?

A. No.

308. Q. Have you seen the accident report?

A. No.

309. Q. Do you recall telling him that your mother apparently hit the brakes?

A. No.

310. Q. Now, am I correct that you went to the hospital in the ambulance with your mother?

A. Correct.

311. Q. Was she able to talk to anyone in the ambulance?

A. Are you asking -- I don't know. I was in the front seat. She was in the back.

312. Q. Okay. Do you know of any witnesses other than yourself to this accident?

A. No.

313. Q. Do you know when the dirt pile was removed?

A. No.

314. Q. Am I correct that it was removed?

A. Yes

315. Q. Was it removed shortly after this accident?

A. Yes, several days later.

316. Q. Now, I understand you have given two (2) statements concerning this accident to the police and to the insurance company, is that true? Tape recorded statements?

A. Correct.

317. Q. Have you -- did you cover anything in those statements we haven't discussed here?

A. No.

318. Q. Do you know if anyone has ridden the ATV since the accident?

A. No one has ridden the ATV since the accident.

319. Q. Do you know where it is now?

A. It is in Plymouth?

320. Q. Have you told us everything you remember about the accident?

A. Yes.

321. Q. Having thought about the events that occurred, is there anything else which you have not told us today.

A. No.

NOTE:

At the conclusion of the inquiry regarding this aspect of the contested events, counsel employs a "closer" question to ensure the witness will not be able to add to her testimony later. See § 17.04[20.--4].

Counsel abruptly shifts to the subject of damages. This material, again, is relevant and important for defendant's evaluation and trial of the case.

322. Q. Was your mother ever employed outside of the home?

A. No.

323. Q. Okay. Did your mother have a maid prior to the accident?

A. We had someone come in once every two (2) weeks one day.

324. Q. Did she have a cook?

A. No.

[Further questions and answers about damages here omitted.]

DEPOSITION EXHIBITS NUMBERS 4 THROUGH 12 MARKED AT THIS POINT BY THE REPORTER.

BY MR. KENNEDY:

325. Q. I'm going to hand you some photographs, Miss Westrum that the court reporter has marked and hand them to you as a group to begin with. They are marked as Deposition Exhibits 4 through 12. I am going to ask you if you have ever seen those pictures before?

A. No, no, no. (Crying).

AT THIS POINT A RECESS WAS TAKEN.

NOTE:
Again this difficult material is saved for the end of the deposition.

BY MR. KENNEDY:

326. Q. Miss Westrum, I will ask you to look at the pictures that have been identified as 4, 5, 6, 7, 9 10, 11 and 12. I have pulled 8 out because it is of the vehicle. First of all, am I correct these were taken at some point after the accident?

A. Correct.

327. Q. And those pictures that show the area where the dirt pile was, show that the dirt pile has been removed when the pictures were taken, correct?

A. Correct.

328. Q. Am I correct that Exhibit 10 shows the back of the Jones' house?

A. Yes.

329. Q. And was that about how the house looked at the time of the accident? Was it about that far along?

A. If I recall right, this construction had not been built up yet.

330. Q. Does Exhibit 5, a picture taken at the point where the dirt pile was, show the mound looking north?

A. Yes.

331. Q. Exhibit 7, is that a picture taken somewhere to the south of where the dirt pile was, looking back toward where the lake was?

A. This is taken on the south side of the location of the accident, facing south toward the lake.332. Q. Now, let me hand you Deposition Exhibit 8 and let me ask if you can identify that. What is that a picture of?

A. That is the gas tank of the ATV.

333. Q. And is that the way that the gas tank area appeared as best you can recall after the accident or do you have an opinion?

A. I have no opinion.

334. Q. Did the ambulance actually come out onto the railroad right-of-way?

A. Yes.

335. Q. Did it have any difficulty getting back there?

A. I don't recall.

336. Q. You probably don't know if the ambulance was a four (4) wheel drive or not, do you?

A. I don't know.

337. Q. By the way, what was the Doberman's name?

A. Lexi.

338. Q. You still have the dog?

A. No, we gave it away.

BY MR. KENNEDY:

That is all the questions I have.

NOTE:

The attorney concludes with a simple and direct statement. He avoids a commitment that the deposition is concluded in its entirety and for all time. Omitted here are comments about whether the witness will review the transcript, mechanics about signing, etc. See § 17.03[1.--4].

DEPOSITION CONCLUDED AND WITNESS EXCUSED.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Appendix 17: Appendix to Chapter 17

2-App. 17 Federal Litigation Guide [PART II]

[PART II] EXAMINATION OF DEFENDANT'S EXPERT BY COUNSEL FOR PLAINTIFF

Products Liability Case:
Alleged Manufacturer's Design Defect and Failure To Warn
Resulting in Death of Rider of All Terrain Vehicle

(See Facts in Part I, supra.)

OVERVIEW AND STRATEGY

The deposition of an adverse expert is a daunting challenge for even the most experienced trial lawyer. Before deposing an expert, counsel must have thoroughly mastered the facts of the case and the technical knowledge relevant to it. In addition, he should have read writings by the expert on matters pertaining to this case, prior depositions and trial testimony given by the expert, reading lists of courses taught by the expert, etc., i.e., counsel must become an expert on the expert as well as the subject matter. Furthermore, counsel should have read and mastered any prior written discovery. For a general discussion of deposition of an expert witness, see § 17.08[5].

This deposition by plaintiff's counsel of the defendant's expert will concentrate on (i) discovering the expert's opinions and "freezing them," (ii) uncovering the assumptions upon which the opinions are based, (iii) establishing the witness's bias, and (iv) making explicit his criticisms of the plaintiff's expert's theories of the accident. Counsel will use information gained at this deposition to prepare his own expert for examination at trial.

SUMMARY OF EXAMINATION

Introduction & Background (Questions 1-8)

Initial Contact by Defendant (Questions 9-23)

Expert's Function & Materials Reviewed (Questions 24-46)

Expert's Qualifications for ATV Design Evaluation (Questions 47-68)

Expert's Opinion of Design of Kawasaki 100 (Questions 69-73)

Bases for Expert's Opinion and Opposing Expert's Opinion (Questions 74-95)

Explanation of Cause of Accident (Questions 104-119)

Expert's Examination of ATV (Question 120)

Operator Error Theory (Questions 121-126)

Further Work (Questions 127-128)

Bias of Expert (Questions 129-138)

Opinion and Production of Documents (Questions 139-140)

DIRECT EXAMINATION

PRELIMINARY MATTERS: See §§ 17.02 and 17.03 and Part I of this Appendix.

DIRECT EXAMINATION BY MS. PATTON:

EMLEN TUNNEL CALLED AS A WITNESS BY PLAINTIFF, BEING DULY SWORN, WAS EXAMINED AND TESTIFIED AS FOLLOWS:

1. Q. Would you state your full name for the record?

A. Emlen Tunnel.

2. Q. Do you mind if I call you Emlen during the deposition?

A. That's fine.

3. Q. Emlen, I am sure that you have been through a deposition before. You understand that I will be asking you a series of questions. If you don't understand my question, or you can't hear me, please let me know. Otherwise, I will assume, if you answer, that you did understand the question. Is that okay?

A. Fine.

4. Q. Where are you employed?

A. Giant Engineering Associates.

5. Q. And where is Giant Engineering Associates?

A. We are located in four principal locations. I, personally, am located in Albany, New York.

6. Q. And what is your job position with Giant Engineering?

A. I am the director of technical services for the Albany office.

7. Q. Can you tell me roughly how many engineers you have in your Albany office?

A. In the Albany office we have roughly four scientists or engineers, and about six or seven associates.

8. Q. How about Giant Engineering overall?

A. I would estimate that there are approximately 400 people in the corporation total, and of that about 300 are either engineers or scientists by degree.

NOTE:

The deposition begins with introductory comments and questions. This is important in establishing control over the examination and in relaxing the deponent. Note especially the use of first names and the relaxed, informal atmosphere created by the deposing attorney. Extensive questions concerning the expert's educational background, professional associations, experience, etc. are customary in deposing an adverse expert and are here omitted.

9. Q. Emlen, when were you first contacted with regard to this case?

A. May of 1995.

10. Q. And was this a direct contact to you or simply to Giant Engineering?

A. I directly talked to Attorney Kennedy (Defendant's Counsel) shortly after the initial contact.

11. Q. And what was said at the initial contact?

A. As best as I can recall, Kennedy indicated that there had been an accident involving an ATV, that it occurred in an area north of Plymouth, that they were at that point just starting to gather information.

12. Q. What was the purpose of the contact?

A. It was my understanding that Mr. Kennedy wished to retain Giant Engineering's services as consultants to him on the matter.

13. Q. What I am asking is why was Randy talking to you as opposed to someone else?

A. I would guess in a general sense that of all the engineers at Giant Engineering I probably have more experience in evaluating accidents and evaluating design of motorcycle type vehicles than the other engineers.

14. Q. So at that initial point then you weren't asked to do anything?

A. I believe at that point they said they didn't have or at least had not looked at the vehicle or anything like that. So there was not any background material, and I think we left it at that.

15. Q. Did you obtain any facts of the accident at that point?

A. Other than the above, no.

16. Q. Did you make any notes of that initial conversation?

A. They would be in a correspondence file.

17. Q. Is that correspondence file with you today?

A. No.

18. Q. If you have some notes of that initial conversation would you produce it to Mr. Kennedy?

A. If he would like me to I can.

NOTE:

The deposition often leads to additional information, either through formal discovery devices (e.g., Motions to Produce Documents under Fed. R. Civ. P. 34) or, as here, through informal means. This is an important function of the deposition. The deponent agrees to provide any documents to attorney for the defendant.

19. Q. Was any agreement entered into at that point?

A. No. We agreed to assist Mr. Kennedy in a technical evaluation of the accident, but no formal agreement at this point. Just an oral agreement.

20. Q. After this initial contact in May, 1995, when did you next have any conversation or contact regarding this accident?

A. I don't recall specifically, but over the course of the time since that date until today I have received pictures and background information in various forms at various times.

21. Q. What have your brought with you today?

A. Basically the material that was in my investigation file has been consolidated for carrying purposes.

22. Q. I understand you also have a correspondence file which you have not brought with you?

A. That's correct.

23. Q. Do you have any other files with reference to this case?

A. No.

24. Q. As a consulting expert, what were you asked to do with reference to this case?

A. In general I was asked to investigate and determine the cause of the accident and to evaluate the design of the Kawasaki ATV involved, to review the technical work done by various other parties in the matter, to review their work and to provide technical input to Mr. Kennedy and his firm.

NOTE:

Many discovery problems emerge when an expert assumes more than one role, e.g., researcher and consultant for the attorney, advisor, as well as trial witness. The scope of discovery from an expert depends on his status--from none to nearly full disclosure. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2) and 26(b)(4).

25. Q. As I understand it, you were asked to do basically three things: an accident reconstruction, second, an evaluation of design, and third, to review technical work which has been done by others?

A. That's correct, in a very general sense.

26. Q. Have you done all three of those?

A. To the extent that information is available, yes.

27. Q. Is there any information that's not been available to you?

A. It's my understanding that there are some depositions, for example, scheduled that have not yet happened.

28. Q. What materials have you reviewed so far?

A. I have reviewed some photographs of the accident scene and accident vehicle. I have reviewed the Kawasaki ATV Redbook, the police report, some photographs of some helmets taken by Mr. Jamison, the ATV 100 owner's manual, and depositions. I have also reviewed some prior discovery and some legal correspondence.

29. Q. In terms of the depositions, have you simply reviewed those or do you have copies of them?

A. I have been provided copies of them.

NOTE:

Counsel must determine what materials this expert has used to formulate his opinions, and will now ask the witness to describe these items one by one. While an articulate expert's opinion may be difficult to undermine, astute counsel will seek to show that the facts upon which the opinion is based are different, or at least are subject to contrary interpretation.

30. Q. Let me start with the photos. Could I see the photos you have reviewed? (Items handed over.) Have you taken any of these photos?

A. No.

31. Q. Do you know who took the first group of photographs?

A. It's my understanding that they were taken by someone associated with the police.

32. Q. The next thing you mentioned was an ATV Redbook. Is this something that was provided to you in this case?

A. It was provided by Mr. Kennedy[defendant's counsel] in this case.

33. Q. The next thing was a police report. And then you have photographs of the helmets. Did you use the photographs of the helmets for any purpose?

A. Not up until this point.

34. Q. Do you have any plans to use them in the future for any evaluation?

A. Not specifically

35. Q. Then you had an owner's manual. Then the depositions themselves. Have you read those depositions?

A. Yes.

36. Q. Is there anything else you brought with you that is maintained in your files?

A. I have some notes that I took when I examined the ATV that supposedly was involved in this accident. I also took some photographs which are not processed yet, and also obtained a soil sample from the accident scene.

37. Q. And these notes and photographs and soil samples were from what date?

A. This morning.

38. Q. Could we mark the notes from this morning?

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT 1 WAS MARKED FOR PURPOSES OF IDENTIFICATION.

BY MS. PATTON:

39. Q. Emlen, I understand what we've identified as Plaintiff's Exhibit 1 are your notes from an inspection of the vehicle this morning.

A. That's correct.

40. Q. Had you ever examined the vehicle prior to this morning?

A. Not personally.

41. Q. Had anyone ever examined it on your behalf?

A. No.

42. Q. Have you made any type of a report up to this point?

A. No.

43. Q. And have you made any personal notes of any kind?

A. I don't believe so.

44. Q. So everything in your review of accident reconstruction, design, and review of other's technical work is in your head, I take it?

A. Or contained in the file material.

45. Q. You mentioned part of what you've been hired to do is to review the technical work of others. Whose work have you reviewed in this case?

A. I have reviewed the deposition and notes of Dr. Rigney, the plaintiff's expert.

46. Q. In making your consultation have you relied upon any other papers, documents, studies?

A. No

NOTE:

Counsel employs a "closer" question here to ensure she has gotten a complete list of materials used by deponent as the basis for the onsultation. An open-ended question follows. See Form of Questions § 17.03 [9].

47. Q. What work have you done in the past that is relevant to your investigation of this accident?

A. Well, I have operated ATV's of various makes and types, both for investigation purposes and also for recreation. I have conducted certain evaluations of components and design alternatives on ATVs. I have been involved in evaluating the design of four wheel vehicles in the past, and I have investigated other accidents before, involving transportation equipment and involving off-the-road vehicles.

48. Q. Have you made any testing of this particular vehicle?

A. I have evaluated the Kawasaki 100, not this particular vehicle, from a handling standpoint. I have also examined the particular vehicle involved in the accident in this case.

49. Q. When you say you evaluated the 100, what have you done?

A. Among other things looked at how the vehicle is equipped, some of the size and dimensional characteristics of the vehicle, some of the features that the vehicle happens to have. I have operated one in the past.

NOTE:

An expert's credentials must be intensely scrutinized. As in this case, the expert's strength may not be apparent from his c.v. but rather emerges from his practical experience in the field.

50. Q. Have you made any report, written any papers,, anything like that concerning your evaluation?

A. Not specifically of the 100.

51. Q. Have you made any reports or written any papers regarding ATVs in general?

A. Yes, I have.

52. Q. Can you identify those for me?

A. I have been the principle author and researcher on a paper that was published by the SAE on ATV's.

53. Q. What is the name of that paper?

A. The Design and Operation of ATV's. It was published in our Society's Journal in May 1993.

54. Q. Have you done any other papers connected with off road vehicles?

A. Yes. I presented a paper as a part of both an oral and written submission to the Consumer Product Safety Commission. I have also written a paper that involved an off road vehicle and off road photogrometry.

55. Q. What is photogrometry?

A. It's a technique of analyzing, in this particular case, photographs for the purpose of accident reconstruction.

NOTE:

Each term used by the expert at the deposition must be defined. Deposing counsel will not be able to cross-examine this witness effectively at the trial unless she is familiar with all terminology used. In the preparation of a case like this, counsel must herself become expert in the subject matter.

56. Q. Have those two papers been published?

A. The CPSC submission is not, I guess, truly published but is a part of the CPSC's public record. The other paper has been published by, again, the Society of Automotive Engineers.

57. Q. Are there any other papers or textbooks that you relied on in making your investigation of this mater?

A. Nothing so significant that I'd cite it.

58. Q. How long have you yourself been operating ATV's?

A. I'm not sure exactly when the first time I rode one was. It's probably in the late 70's or early 80's.

59. Q. Is this for professional reasons or personal reasons?

A. Personal.

60. Q. Can you describe those vehicles for me?

A. We have a Honda 110, a Honda 200, a Kawasaki 100.

NOTE:

The deposition continued with questions about the company's role in evaluating ATV's. Bias may emerge from immediate fees paid, or long term business opportunities from the defendant or similar corporations. This part of the deposition is here omitted.

61. Q. Have you made a design evaluation of the ATV 100?

A. Yes, I have.

62. Q. And when did you make that evaluation?

A. I'm not sure I know exactly when. I have over the past couple of years obtained information such as specifications and manuals and things like that on the 100. I've looked at the design of the 100, its components, and how they are arranged. I have operated one in an off road environment and to a certain extent have done some evaluation.

63. Q. And were you hired to make this evaluation of the 100?

A. Not at that point in time.

64. Q. Have you been hired at any later point in time to make a design evaluation of the 100?

A. In this particular lawsuit, I've been asked to evaluate the design of the 100.

65. Q. Prior to this case, had you ever been asked to make such an evaluation?

A. I don't believe so.

66. Q. In making your evaluation of the 100, have you used or relied upon any documents or specifications other than what you've described for me today as being maintained in your file?

NOTE:

Counsel employs a "closer" question here to determine if anything other than the materials previously discussed has been used by the expert. This is an excellent technique since it will either produce additional information or back the deponent into a denial which will be difficult to disavow later. See generally § 17.03 [a] and § 17.08.

A. I may have reviewed things like a shop manual, but not necessarily have relied upon it. I, as a part of my design evaluation in this case, have reviewed some of the design material produced as a part of the interrogatory responses.

67. Q. What specifically?

A. The test documents referred to as AO documents.

68. Q. Did you rely upon those test documents in making your evaluation?

A. No, I've not relied upon them.

69. Q. What is your opinion as to your design of the 100 regarding safety?

A. I believe that the Kawasaki 100 is safe for its intended purpose. It provides users a vehicle which is well suited to function in an off road environment and to perform functions relating to recreation and to some limited extent racing. The design of the vehicle allows it to accomplish those functions in a reasonable and safe manner.

NOTE:

The expert here sets out his opinion as to the ultimate issue in the case. This is perfectly proper under the Federal Rules of Evidence and similar state rules. Counsel now begins to probe the logic of the opinions by making explicit the assumptions upon which the opinion is based.

70. Q. When you say safe for its intended purpose, what is your understanding of its intended purpose?

A. Well, it is an off road vehicle, and it's intended to be operated in an off road setting over various kinds of terrains in an off road setting.

71. Q. When you say off road, what is your understanding of off road?

A. Hills, valleys, dirt, sand, snow, rocks, the type of terrain that one would find in nature.

72. Q. Is there any design problem in using the vehicle on a not off road, I guess what I'd call on road concrete, on asphalt?

A. I think that there is not a problem, per se, operating the vehicle on concrete or pavement or whatever. There are some differences in operating in that environment that change the operating characteristics -- more of the operator than of the vehicle, and there are some changes in handling characteristic of the vehicle on all terrains.

73. Q. Is there anything you would suggest changing to make the vehicle safer in any way?

A. Well, I think in the context of how a particular vehicle is going to be used, there may be some changes that one may want to make in power gearing and that type of thing. But as a general purpose, smaller sized ATV, I think the 100 is pretty much an optimization of that design for safety and for utility and the functional use of a vehicle.

NOTE:

The expert here delivers his expected opinion that defendant's product is safe and well designed. The remainder of the deposition will be spent probing the bases for this opinion and casting doubt on his conclusions. It is often difficult to frontally attack the credibility of an expert, but counsel here will attempt to create doubt about the expert's methodology.

74. Q. Did you perform any stability tests on the 100?

A. Not in the sense that I believe you are probably referring to.

75. Q. Then, describe what you have done.

A. I've operated the vehicle in a number of off road settings that dealt with how the vehicle handled those settings from both a maneuverability and controllability and stability standpoint.

76. Q. Have you ever flipped over any ATV vehicles?

A. Well, I fell off one vehicle, but it didn't flip over.

77. Q. Have you ever had the front tire leave the ground in your operation?

A. Yes. Intentionally as well as through normal acceleration characteristics, but not unexpectedly.

78. Q. Would you consider that a part of the normal operation of an ATV 100?

A. I've not had that experience on a 100. I guess people can and people do choose to operate the vehicle by accelerating it or maneuvering it in a manner that the front end leaves the ground and to some people that is some form of recreational enjoyment, I guess.

79. Q. Other than in acceleration have you ever experienced the front wheel leaving the ground?

A. I may have experienced it traversing terrain. I don't recall specifically with the 100.

80. Q. You mentioned you've evaluated the design of all the ATV vehicles. Have you, in your evaluation, reached the opinion that any of them are not safe for their intended purpose?

A. I think that there are some vehicles which have a limited usefulness in terms of their design safety.

81. Q. Have you found any problem with any of Kawasaki's ATVs regarding design safety?

A. I guess I don't specifically recall having evaluated any Kawasaki ATV that I felt was not, from a design standpoint, well suited for its intended purpose.

NOTE:

Once the expert has given a general statement, counsel follows up with more specific questions requiring more explicit answers. This is a crucial feature of good deposition technique, one which illustrates the basic difference between a deposition and other "paper" discovery. In addition, the questioning elicits the facts the expert has relied upon in forming his opinions.

82. Q. Any other manufacturing or other problems with any of the Kawasakis you've examined?

A. I examined one where there was a problem with the rear axle that presented a safety problem.

83. Q. Again, did you feel that was specific to that model or, to that machine or to the model in general?

A. I believe it was that particular machine.

84. Q. You've examined this particular machine involved in this accident?

A. That's correct.

85. Q. Did you identify any manufacturing problems in this particular machine?

A. No, I did not.

86. Q. How much time did you use to come to these conclusions?

A. Well, I've spent 62 hours on this project.

NOTE:
The expert should be asked the amount of time expended. This information may be useful in suggesting bias, or inadequate preparation.

87. Q. Have you reached any conclusion in terms of the Kawasaki models, are certain of the models easier to operate than other models?

A. Well, that depends a lot on who the operator is and where you are going to operate them.

88. Q. Say with an inexperienced operator of small size and weight. Is a smaller machine easier to operate than a bigger machine?

A. Well, it's not so much the size per se, but, for example, you said an inexperienced operator. I would not be surprised if an inexperienced operator would have difficulty handling the gearing system on a Kawasaki 250R for example, because it is a manual as opposed to a semi-automatic clutch system. It takes a little bit of a feel. Inexperienced operators in general probably take a little longer to learn how to handle a two stroke engine which has some difference in characteristics than a four stroke engine would.

89. Q. Say someone came to you and was looking for a Kawasaki ATV for their wife to use, who had never operated an ATV vehicle, to use in off terrain, hilly terrain. Would you recommend this specific model?

A. I guess it would depend on who it was, but I think in general I would recommend it.

90. Q. What feature is particularly useful for the entry level rider on the 100?

A. I think that the 100 has a key start which takes all the hassle of having to pull a rope to start it, which people might get discouraged operating. I think that in itself is probably a significant feature for an entry level operator.

91. Q. Anything else that you are thinking of?

A. I guess nothing in particular.

NOTE:
Where the expert's opinion is phrased in a general way, counsel must make him be specific, as above. The transcript of the deposition will be used by plaintiff's expert to prepare his testimony.

92. Q. Can you tell me what type of research you've done in the human performance as it pertains to an ATV?

A. I have observed people riding ATVs in a natural setting, riding their own ATVs without a bunch of engineers or scientists standing around and watching them, but rather going out and riding. Some people were very experienced and some were literal novices. I have conducted some experimental evaluations where I took individuals at various levels of experience, including either near novices or what I would call low timer, and then having them ride an ATV under my observation for the purpose of evaluating how they handled the vehicle. I have measured the performance of the ATV and the various control functions of an ATV and compared that to basic human performance type data.

93. Q. Have you reached any conclusions in making these evaluations?

A. Yes, I have.

NOTE:

The expert will be able to give a narrative in support of his opinions. The deposition allows plaintiff's counsel to hear this, to assess the expert's credibility, and to prepare useful cross-examination for the trial.

94. Q. Can you tell me what those are?

A. That the ATV is an off road vehicle which imparts a significant amount of very useful information to the operator. This information allows a reasonable operator to first of all learn how to operate the ATV properly in a very, very short period of time, and to be able to successfully handle the vehicle through some pretty difficult maneuvers with minimal training.

NOTE:

The expert's narrative opinion continued with a lengthy explanation of the rationale concerning the importance of the design of the ATV, where the operator sits, the steering system feedback to the operator, etc. This material is here omitted.

95. Q. Is weight transferring normally required to operate an ATV?

A. It is sort of a chicken and the egg question. Because we live on the earth and because there is a gravity on the earth, there will be weight transfer when you operate the vehicle. We can't do anything about it. The weight transfer that occurs in natural operation of an ATV turns out to be exactly the right weight transfer that's necessary for safe operation of an ATV.

NOTE:

Plaintiff's counsel will now test his own expert's opinion that the center of gravity on the Kawasaki 100 was too high and, therefore, a design defect. It is important to hear defendant's expert's reaction to this since trials often are a battle of experts.

96. Q. In your evaluation of the ATV vehicles, have you made any testing as to the coefficient of gravity between the machine and the surface it's running on?

A. I have made some measurements of coefficient of friction at certain areas.

97. Q. Do you find those significant at all in evaluating the design of the machine?

A. Not from a safety standpoint, as Dr. Rigney [Plaintiff's Expert] chooses to apply the coefficient. The frictional characteristics of various surfaces typically are not stability problems. They do relate to braking characteristics and acceleration characteristics of the vehicle.

98. Q. I take it you've reviewed Dr. Rigney's deposition?

A. Yes, I have.

99. Q. And you've reviewed his testing results. Do you feel the data he's using is in any way inaccurate?

A. I have not specifically gone out and measured another comparable 100. Dr. Rigney's numbers look reasonable.

100. Q. What specific shortfall do you find in his application of this data?

A. Well, he has made a basic calculation of a generic center of gravity location and has defined safety and stability as how that center of gravity location is as a function of some moment as it relates to the coefficient of friction. And the dynamics of vehicles in the real world is far more complicated than that. That type of analysis is sophomoric and really doesn't have a place in the real world.

101. Q. What is Dr. Rigney leaving out that you feel comes into play in the real world?

A. In this particular case the list is literally hundreds of items long, and I'll try to narrow it down for you. Dr. Rigney has not taken into account specific body position and how the operator transfers weight other than by simple body position, for example by use of various muscles, by pushing on pegs, by pulling on the handlebars. He does not take into account the use of any form of control which affects acceleration or deceleration rates. He does not take into account use of any control which affects the longitudinal direction of the vehicle. That is critical in my opinion.

NOTE:

The opposing expert has now delivered his basic critique of plaintiff's expert's opinion and theory. Counsel must now attempt to probe and/or discredit the critique, taking up each element separately. These questions and answers are here omitted.

102. Q. You would feel that the theory is wrong because it doesn't flip every time?

A. No, I would think that the theory is amateurish, and just plain doesn't apply to this type of vehicle. It doesn't predict stability of vehicles. That's the whole purpose of physics formulas, to predict the behavior of bodies when used under a specific set of circumstances.

103. Q. Do you then disagree with his recommendation that the vehicle would be more stable by moving the center of gravity both forward and down on the ATV?

A. I think that if we were to build the Rigney ATV and if we were to test it as he tested it in a static sense, then the stability numbers, that he calculates would be closer to what he would want them to be. I don't think that's going to enhance the dynamic stability when you take the thing out to the real world, out of his mathematical formulas, and try to use it on terrain. There is a direct correlation of control and stability.

NOTE:

The witness has disputed key features of the theory advanced by plaintiff's expert to explain the accident. Counsel must now force this witness to give his explanation for the accident as clearly and as comprehensively as possible. This is critical testimony and will be the focal point at the trial.

104. Q. Why did this vehicle flip over?

A. I believe that the vehicle overturned because in the process of descending the hill some abrupt, in engineering terms, a deceleration, was applied to the vehicle, whether the brakes were rapidly applied or the throttle was rapidly applied or something was struck on the terrain that allowed a sudden change in either deceleration or acceleration. There also could have been some longitudinal input to the vehicle which could have affected the overturning.

105. Q. Have you made an accident reconstruction?

A. Yes, I have.

106. Q. What are the results of your accident reconstruction?

A. What I have tried to do is look at the accident in terms of the operator of the vehicle and terrain, and my reconstruction basically is that in very simple terms Mrs. Westrum failed to get up the hill because of inappropriate use of power in taking a run up the hill or however you want to describe it. Her daughter described it as momentum, which is an accurate description, by reaching the point where she could no longer continue up the path she wanted to continue on as a result of inappropriate use of power. She then made some choices. She could have gotten off and allowed the vehicle to back down. She could have gotten off, turned the vehicle around and rolled back down. And she could have, and did in this case, choose to remain on the vehicle and back down the hill. In the process of backing down that hill something in either the terrain or her operation of the vehicle, or some external influence, caused the vehicle to not decelerate or accelerate, whatever way you want to describe it, in a uniform manner, but rather created an abrupt change. The brakes were applied suddenly. There may have been some influence from say the dog, for example; or use of the throttle in an inappropriate manner at the wrong time that caused a sudden change in the rate of acceleration or deceleration. Any factor out there relating to the operator's control of the vehicle and its interaction with the terrain that can cause a sudden change in the rate of acceleration and deceleration can cause the vehicle to overturn.

107. Q. What do you believe happened after one of those causes?

A. A sudden input of acceleration change caused the vehicle to rotate over backwards. And as a part of that rotation, the vehicle and Mrs. Westrum came to rest on the ground. Either she was struck by some part of the vehicle during the overturning, or struck the ground after the overturn occurred.

108. Q. In your reconstruction then, are you saying you don't know if the vehicle actually struck her?

A. I think there is a reasonable possibility that the vehicle struck her. There is no distinct physical evidence on the vehicle that suggests precisely what struck her, and what didn't strike her. There is also a possibility, I guess, that she could have struck something on the ground. It's likely that something on the vehicle was associated with the injuries in terms of that being the thing that she hit her face against.

A RECESS WAS TAKEN HERE.

NOTE:

The expert has given his analysis, and counsel pauses to prepare the next set of questions. Timing is under the control of deposing counsel. Maintaining control over the pace of the examination is an important part of good deposition technique. Counsel must have a basic outline of the goals and issues significant to this deposition and must periodically return to this basic outline for review. Counsel will now summarize the prior testimony and begin again.

109. Q. Emlen, you've identified in your report several possible causes of the accident. And you really don't have an opinion which is more likely, but I do understand it's your opinion one of these five factors caused the accident: the application of the brake, the application of the throttle, striking something on the terrain, backing at an angle, or the dog in some way. Am I summarizing what you've written and said correctly?

A. One of those things accounts for a sudden change in either the acceleration or deceleration rate of the vehicle as it is going back down the dirt pile. That is what's required in a dynamic sense for the accident to occur in the manner in which it occurred.

110. Q. Is that your opinion as to the cause of the accident?

A. I want to make clear that the cause of the accident is bigger than just one of those five things. It's a combination of backing down the hill and having the change in deceleration rate which accounts for the vehicle coming over backwards. I think it's misleading to oversimplify and say only one of these five things caused the accident.

NOTE:

Counsel consistently attempts to pin the expert down to one theory of the cause of the turnover, but Dr. Tunnel refuses to be more definitive. The duel between the attorney and the expert continues.

111. Q. Is there any direct evidence that you reviewed that supports any one of those five?

A. I think that each of those things are possibilities in light of what the various witnesses have said, and of the physical evidence at the accident scenario. We've got a vehicle overturning and we've got a thing coming to rest in certain relative positions.

112. Q. In reaching your opinion, have you made any factual assumptions in terms of the vehicle, the person, the scene, anything involved in the accident?

A. I've assumed that the vehicle I examined this morning was indeed involved in the accident. And I've assumed that the condition I saw it in this morning is the condition it was before the accident. I've assumed that Mrs. Westrum is what she's been described as in the depositions, and I've assumed the path and trip that was described by her daughter in her deposition.[Editor's Note: See Part I of the Appendix.]

NOTE:

Counsel will now attempt to challenge the expert by pointing out other possible causes of the accident and trying to get his reaction to those. This adverse witness will obviously resist these tactics and try to avoid any testimony favorable to plaintiff's theory of the case. The deposition continued with questions and answers concerning the incline of the hill upon which the accident occurred and the distraction potential of a dog upon the ATV operator.

113. Q. Is it your opinion that the dog was in any way a direct cause of the accident?

A. I guess it's a possibility, that somehow she and the dog interacted in some way, that she was afraid she was going to back down and hit the dog, let's say, and slammed on the brakes; or that the dog's leash may have been attached to the vehicle and it got run over by a tire and then actuated a brake or something. There are a lot of possibilities.

NOTE:

The expert now advances additional causes and factual scenarios, all of which would relate causation to factors outside the control of the defendants. Insofar as a jury credits these possibilities, this testimony is beneficial to defendants. Counsel has an excellent opportunity here to assess how persuasively this expert advocates his position.

114. Q. Have you seen any evidence that it's possible the leash was attached to the vehicle and a tire ran over that and it caused it to flip?

A. What I'm suggesting is a possibility, and it is simply that. I have no hard evidence.

115. Q. What's your understanding of the size of the hill?

A. That the hill is somewhere between two and-a-half and four feet high, and ranges from 30 to 45 degrees, according to eyewitness observation of it. There is no physical measurement that was done on it by anyone, that I know of.

116. Q. At the point the ATV was apparently backing down, are you making any assumption as to what gear it's in?

A. I have not made a specific assumption it even has to be in gear, or what gear it was in.

117. Q. Physically what's required to let the machine back down the hill? Is there a reverse gear?

A. No, there's not on this vehicle.

118. Q. How would one get the machine to back down?

A. You can roll down the hill in either neutral gear position or in some gear positions, depending on the hill incline.

119. Q. Are you making any other factual assumptions in your reconstruction?

A. I haven't, independent of that, dreamed up any of my own assumptions.

NOTE:

Expert opinions, based on logic, must be based upon facts and assumptions. If either is incorrect or can be challenged, the opinion's credibility is exposed to doubt.

120. Q. In terms of your investigation today, did you identify anything on the ATV that shows you where it overturned?

A. The left brake lever appears to be rotated, as you sit on the vehicle, down towards the ground, and would indicate that it either was in that position before the accident, which would have been a somewhat uncomfortable position to operate that brake lever with, or that during the course of rolling over that part of the vehicle struck the ground. There is also a mark associated with that side of the vehicle on the steering stock, which would indicate that part of the vehicle hit something pretty hard and it's not inconsistent with that part of the vehicle striking the ground.

NOTE:

A series of questions now focus on possible operator error, an issue of contributory or comparative negligence. Each such potential error is probed. Since depositions are quite expensive, a hallmark of good technique is logical order and completeness.

121. Q. In your opinion was there any operator error involved in the accident?

A. Yes. In each of the factors which may relate to what I believe caused the accident, there is an attribute of either operator error intentionally or inadvertently, or by omission.

122. Q. Let's see if you can define the specific errors for me. In terms of the brake application, what is the operator error involved there?

A. Applying the brakes at the wrong time while backing down the hill.

123. Q. What would be the right time to apply the brakes?

A. After the rear tires are fully on the flat ground. Or applying them at a moderate rate so that you don't get a sudden change in deceleration.

124. Q. The other thing you mentioned was a throttle activation. What operator error would be involved in that?

A. Backing down the hill or applying the throttle too rapidly to overcome for having not done it hard enough the first time.

125. Q. How would operator error be involved in striking something in the terrain?

A. Not noticing that there is something there that is going to capture the tire and cause it to trip, like ruts or tire tracks out there from other vehicles or from a natural rain.

126. Q. How does that lead to a flipover?

A. It will impart a sudden deceleration change in the vehicle. Instead of rolling down smoothly, all of a sudden it goes down and gets captured by this rut, and stops abruptly at that point, and then goes back over.

127. Q. Emlen, do you plan any future work or test in connection with this case?

A. I do not have any real specific plans, but there are some things that Mr. Kennedy and I have talked about to demonstrate some of the opinions that I have tried to communicate with words, in the form of pictures or something like that, that we may elect to do to make it easier for me to explain some of the concepts we've talked about here today.

128. Q. I take it that would be some type of an illustration on a blackboard, a diagram, or a computer simulation?

A. Yes, or possibly photographs demonstrating some of the things, or possibly a video demonstrating some of the things we've talked about.

NOTE:

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(e) imposes broad supplementation duties on the expert and his counsel. Plaintiff's Counsel needs to know what further things the expert plans to do both in examining the accident and in presenting his findings. He may need to continue the deposition at a later time before the trial when the expert has completed supplementary tasks.

129. Q. Are you being paid for you time in this case, or is this part of your concern about ATVS?

A. No, the firm is billing Mr. Kennedy for my time on this particular case.

130. Q. What is your fee arrangement?

A. Two hundred dollars an hour.

NOTE:

The witness's credibility, of course, may be attacked on the basis of bias. Bias may be established by compensation, past history of testifying for the same side, personal interest in the subject matter, etc. Counsel now begins to probe for one of these or other bases to establish lack of neutrality, which may undercut the expert's effectiveness before a jury. Under the new federal rules the required expert's report under Rule 26 must include a list of cases in which he has testified in the preceding four years and publications offered by him in the preceding ten years. See § 17.08[5].

131. Q. You have worked on other ATV cases?

A. Yes, I have.

132. Q. How many others?

A. I really don't know, but I would guess it's in excess of 20 or so.

133. Q. How many of those have gone to the point where you testified?

A. Three.

134. Q. Have any of the other cases involved a 100?

A. I believe there is at least one that has. It's not a Kawasaki 100, but another manufacturer's ATV just like it.

135. Q. In all the cases you've been involved with, have you been hired by the manufacturer?

A. No.

136. Q. In how many cases have you been hired by the injured party?

A. I believe one, but I just consulted. No testimony.

137. Q. Can you tell me what manufacturer did that involve?

A. It involved a Honda.

138. Q. Have you ever concluded that a defective design caused the accident in any of the ATV cases you've been involved in?

A. I think, as I said earlier today, that it is my belief that the design of most of the ATVs out on the market are reasonable for their intended purpose.

NOTE:

The expert is forced to say that his findings in all the cases have been similar; i.e., no design defects have been found. The expert is now questioned on accident information compiled by the Consumer Product Safety Commission. These questions and answers are here omitted.

139. Q. Do you feel there is anything hazardous about a middle-aged housewife operating an ATV?

A. Certainly not.

NOTE:

Deposition concluded and witness excused. The attorney requests all documents mentioned in the testimony, recapping the document he expects to receive. There is no cross examination by plaintiff's counsel.

140. Q. While we're on the record, it's my understanding that Emlen will give to you and you will make available to me his SAE paper, and the CPSC paper and the photogrometry paper, and that's all I think that you asked for.

A. Yes.

MS. PATTON: No further questions.

MR. KENNEDY: I have no questions.

DEPOSITION CONCLUDED AND WITNESS EXCUSED.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 18 Defense of Depositions *

2-18 Federal Litigation Guide 18.syn

§ 18.syn Synopsis to Chapter 18: Defense of Depositions *

§ 18.01 Preparing to Defend Party Witness Depositions
[1] Review Facts of Case in Advance of Deposition
[2] Achieving Successful Testimony
[3] Explain to Witness the Nature and Uses of Deposition Testimony
[4] Explain to Witness Permissible Scope of Deposition
[5] Explain to Witness the Uses That Can be Made of Deposition Testimony
[6] Explain to Witness the Role of Objections at a Deposition
[6.--1] Use Objections to Limit Damaging Testimony
[6.--2] Review Attorney-Client Privilege
[7] Review Substantive Knowledge Before Deposition
[7.--1] Discuss Theory of Case With Witness
[7.--2] Limit Information Shared with Deponent
[7.--3] Use Documents to Review Substantive Testimony
[8] Evaluate the Need for a Protective Order
[8.--1] Seek Protective Order Promptly
[8.--2] Review Grounds for Protective Order
[8.--3] Evaluate Risk of Seeking Protective Order

§ 18.02 CHECKLISTS: Reviewing Basic Rules and Concepts with Witness Before Deposition
[1] CHECKLIST: Reviewing Basic Deposition Rules with Witness
[2] CHECKLIST: Reviewing Basic Deposition Concepts With Witness

§ 18.03 Defending Party Witness Depositions
[1] Consider Whether and How to Intervene
[2] Avoid Undue Aggression
[3] Raise Objections at Deposition
[3.--1] Evaluate Whether to Raise Objection
[3.--2] State Objection in Non-Aggressive Manner
[3.--3] Objecting to Form of Question
[3.--4] Objecting to Confusing Questions
[3.--5] Objecting to Questions Outside Scope of Witness's Knowledge
[3.--6] Objecting to Repetitive Questions

[3.--7] Objecting to Questions Based on Relevance
[3.--8] Objecting on Basis of Attorney-Client Privilege
[4] Monitoring the Examiner's Use of Documents
[5] Monitoring the Witness's Testimonial Performance
[6] Monitoring Opposing Counsel
[7] Conducting Cross-Examination of Witness
[8] Correcting Errors in Testimony
[8.--1] Correcting Errors During Deposition
[8.--2] Correcting Testimony After Deposition

§ 18.04 Defending Non-Party Witness Depositions
[1] Preparing for Non-Party Depositions
[2] Preparing for the Deposition of the Friendly Non-Party Witness
[3] Preparing for the Deposition of the Neutral Non-Party Witness
[4] Preparing for the Deposition of the Hostile Non-Party Witness
[5] Raising Objections at the Deposition of a Non-Party
[5.--1] Objecting to Leading Questions
[5.--2] Avoiding Excessive Objections
[5.--3] Objecting to the Non-Party Witness's Answers
[5.--4] Avoiding Instruction Not to Answer
[6] Cross-Examining the Non-Party Deponent

§ 18.05 Defending Adverse Party Depositions

27 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 18 Defense of Depositions *

2-18 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter covers defending depositions. It separately discusses defending depositions of clients, non-party witnesses, and adverse parties.

The chapter first considers defending a client's deposition as a party to the action. The chapter discusses what counsel should tell the witness about the deposition process and how to effectively prepare the witness to testify. It reviews the ways counsel can help the witness avoid the common pitfalls of deposition testimony. In addition, it discusses reviewing and evaluating the witness's substantive testimony about the lawsuit's factual issues.

After discussing the preparation of the client-deponent, the chapter considers the role of defending counsel during the witness's deposition. It includes consideration of how counsel can use objections to protect against abusive questions and avoid disclosure of privileged attorney-client communication. The chapter also reviews the ways that counsel can keep the witness alert and careful during the deposition. It then evaluates when and how defending counsel can make use of cross-examination, as well as the witness's opportunity to correct the transcript, to further insure accurate and effective testimony.

The chapter next discusses the role of "defending" counsel at the deposition of a non-party witness. It considers how counsel should prepare for the non-party witness's deposition and discusses how counsel's preparation and conduct at the examination will vary depending on whether the witness is friendly, neutral, or hostile, and on whether the witness's testimony is favorable or unfavorable. The appropriate use of objections and cross-examination at the various types of non-party depositions is then reviewed.

Finally, the chapter briefly examines defending counsel's role at the deposition of an adverse party. Although such depositions are relatively rare, the chapter considers how counsel should use objections and cross-examination during such depositions.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 18 Defense of Depositions *

2-18 Federal Litigation Guide § 18.01

§ 18.01 Preparing to Defend Party Witness Depositions

[1] Review Facts of Case in Advance of Deposition

The principal goal when defending a deposition is to minimize the examiner's development of damaging testimony. Thus, far from playing a passive role, defending counsel must continually make important judgments about both the examiner's questions and the witness's testimony to insure that the deposition does as little as possible to undermine counsel's theory of the case.

Successful deposition defense requires counsel to be familiar with the facts of the case, the important issues, the witness's likely testimony, and any trouble spots that may exist. Because litigation costs and budgets can limit the time available for deposition preparation, counsel must be thoroughly familiar with the facts of the case and the likely areas of examination. This can be accomplished by, inter alia, reviewing relevant documents, pleadings, and prior deposition references to the witness. Once counsel is familiar with the likely areas of testimony and with the documents the witness is likely to confront, preparation time can be cut to a minimum. Of course, proper deposition preparation also requires counsel to be well versed in the elements that underlie each theory of relief. Proper preparation also requires counsel to consider the significance of issues concerning attorney-client privilege and whether the need exists to file for a protective order under Rule 26(c) to limit the scope of questioning.

[2] Achieving Successful Testimony

The impression that the witness makes on the examiner can greatly affect the examiner's assessment of the strengths of the case. While careful preparation cannot change the facts of the case, it can greatly improve the witness's ability to testify about the facts in the most favorable manner.

The witness must be educated about the deposition process and prepared to give accurate testimony that does not volunteer information, but is responsive to the examiner's questions. Although the number and extent of preparation sessions with each witness will vary depending on the nature and complexity of the testimony to be given, counsel must be ready to spend whatever time is needed to insure that the witness is well-prepared, both procedurally and substantively, for the deposition. Careful preparation of each witness will help to insure that the deposition testimony will be accurate and responsive. Only through these meetings with the deposition witness can counsel systematically review both the deposition procedure and the witness's substantive testimony.

A well-prepared witness who understands how to listen to and answer deposition questions is usually less likely to become confused by the examiner's questions. At trial, opposing counsel will be sure to attempt to impeach the witness's credibility if she can highlight any inconsistencies between the testimony given at the deposition and at trial. Although preparation does not guarantee "successful" testimony, the well-prepared deponent is generally less likely to give confused and inconsistent testimony that will undermine the case.

[3] Explain to Witness the Nature and Uses of Deposition Testimony

Although it may seem obvious to counsel, most witnesses require an explanation of the basics of how a deposition operates. Thus, preparation should begin with an explanation that the witness's testimony will be taken under oath, verbatim. The witness should be told who will be asking questions, what defending counsel's role is, and other aspects of the process, including where people will sit.

Explaining what happens at a deposition will vary with the case and the witness. Generally, the more complex the case and the anticipated subject matter of the deposition, the greater the need to insure that the witness fully understands the deposition process. Another factor that affects deposition preparation is the deponent's experience with the legal and deposition processes. Most people have never been in court, let alone deposed. Many have only anecdotal views or worse, television-induced views, of the trial and deposition processes. Thus, counsel's first task is to discern the witness's experience and knowledge about depositions.

[4] Explain to Witness Permissible Scope of Deposition

Counsel should also explain what is permissible and what is impermissible at deposition. Thus, the witness should understand that the examiner can ask detailed questions at the deposition to uncover information that may be relevantto the case. The Federal Rules allow discovery of information, whether or not it would be admissible at trial, "if the information sought appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence." n1

The witness should understand that just as the examiner had the opportunity to obtain relevant documents from both parties and non-parties prior to the deposition, the deposition entitles the examiner to further inquire about issues raised by those documents and other discovery.

However, counsel must be sure not to overly intimidate the witness. Thus, while it is essential to explain that the examiner may inquire about both the witness's personal background and knowledge of relevant facts, the witness should be told that there are limits in depositions. n2 Although those limits may not coincide with the witness's desire, counsel is not powerless to intervene on the witness's behalf if the examination runs far afield. The witness should know that while counsel cannot prevent all difficult or sensitive questions, defending counsel can seek to force examining counsel to justify the relevance of questionable interrogation.

[5] Explain to Witness the Uses That Can be Made of Deposition Testimony

It is generally useful to discuss at the beginning of a witness's preparation the uses that can be made of deposition testimony. Witnesses benefit greatly from placing their deposition in context. Thus, as part of preparing deposition witnesses, counsel should explain whether the deposition testimony will likely be used at trial, how the witness's probable testimony fits into the overall case theory picture, and the possibility that deposition testimony can be used to impeach the witness if testimony is inconsistent. Sophisticated witnesses also benefit from explanations of the legal causes of action involved and the reason their testimony is necessary in light of those causes of action.

The witness should understand that deposition testimony, like courtroom testimony, is given under oath and recorded. In a case involving multiple parties, the witness should be aware that all of the parties to the action are entitled to be represented by counsel at the deposition, and that each party's lawyer will have an opportunity to ask the witness questions. Moreover, the witness should be prepared for the possible presence of an adverse party. n3

[6] Explain to Witness the Role of Objections at a Deposition

[6.--1] Use Objections to Limit Damaging Testimony

One of the most useful tasks of deposition preparation is to explain the purpose of objections at a deposition. The witness should understand that decisions about whether to sustain or overrule objections at a deposition are made by the court at trial. Thus, unless counsel specifically directs that a question should not be answered, n4 the question must be answered despite an objection. n5 No matter how well a deponent knows this rule, the deponent is likely to ask if it is permissible to answer a question when an objection has been made. An important psychological advantage exists in promptly giving this guidance to your witness. It demonstrates that you, as defending counsel, are in control. If defending counsel does not speak up, examining counsel will often provide that guidance. If this occurs too frequently, the witness may begin to look for guidance from examining counsel, thus undermining defending counsel's credibility and control.

Even though decision on almost all objections is reserved until the time of trial, during preparation, counsel should encourage the witness to listen to the objections because they may caution the witness to avoid a problem area. When counsel objects to the form of a question, the witness should understand that counsel will sometimes indicate what is wrong with the question -- i.e., the question is ambiguous, the question has been asked and answered, the question assumes facts not in evidence.

[6.--2] Review Attorney-Client Privilege

Counsel's most important task when discussing potential deposition objections with a witness is to explain the attorney-client privilege. To reduce the danger that the witness may inadvertently waive the attorney-client privilege when answering a question, carefully instruct the witness about the precise nature of the privilege. The witness should understand that, while this protection does not mean that a fact becomes privileged simply because it is told to counsel, the privilege does protect the substance of conversations the witness had with counsel for the purpose of obtaining legal advice. n6 Thus, any facts, advice, or legal theories learned from counsel during your discussions are likely to be protected from discovery.

When discussing the scope of the attorney-client privilege, explain that the deposition preparation sessions are generally privileged. Because many examinersroutinely ask whether the witness has discussed the deposition with counsel, the witness should understand that although he must acknowledge that a discussion took place, the substance of the discussions should not be divulged. In addition, inform the witness, just as you should have done during your first conversation, that your communications may become discoverable if they are disclosed to anyone else. If the party is a corporate entity, the witness's discussions must be limited to corporate employees, officers, and directors for the privilege to be preserved.

The witness should understand that examining counsel is entitled to know enough about privileged communications to allow him to assess independently the privilege claim. Rule 26(b)(5) states that for any "information" withheld on the basis of a claim of attorney-client privilege, the party claiming the privilege "shall make the claim expressly and shall describe the nature of the documents, communications, or things ... in a manner that, without revealing information itself privileged or protected, will enable other parties to assess the applicability of the privilege or protection." The Advisory Committee's Note to Rule 26(b)(5) makes clear that the precise information that must be disclosed will vary from case to case. Moreover, this information need only be provided if the withheld information would otherwise be discoverable.

Rather than emphasize the theory of the attorney-client privilege when preparing the client, however, it is better to sensitize the witness to particular conversations that are privileged. By reviewing specific conversations, the witness will have a concrete understanding of what is privileged. Further, reviewing each privileged conversation allows counsel to identify the specific privilege issues that are likely to arise in the course of the client's deposition.

Finally, the witness should clearly understand that when questions arise concerning the attorney-client communications, the witness should ask to speak with counsel rather than risk divulging privileged information. The protection of the privilege outweighs any negative inference that may be drawn from the fact that the witness appears unable to answer questions without consulting with counsel.

[7] Review Substantive Knowledge Before Deposition

[7.--1] Discuss Theory of Case With Witness

During preparation, in addition to discussing the nature and use of deposition testimony and the mechanics of answering deposition questions, the substance of the witness's testimony also must be reviewed. As an initial matter, it is generally helpful to the witness to set forth the theory of the case and the central issues that will be disputed at trial.

A witness who understands the theory of the case and the relevant issues may acquire a better understanding of the significance of deposition testimony. Moreover, the witness may help uncover facts that may support or conflict with the theory.

[7.--2] Limit Information Shared with Deponent

When setting forth a general view of the case, however, avoid sharing unnecessary information with the witness. Although it is important for the witness to have a basic understanding of the theory of the case, there is a risk that the witness may give testimony based on conversations with counsel if too many facts are explained to him. As a general rule, if the witness will not testify on a particular aspect of the case, it is usually unnecessary to discuss it with him.

Thus, prior to preparing the witness for a deposition, identify any subjects that should not be discussed with the witness. By isolating the areas on which the witness should not be educated, counsel can avoid inadvertently educating the adversary.

Regardless of the approach used, in addition to reviewing the issues raised in the pleadings, preparation should include review of the case chronology to insure discussion about each of the events on which there may be deposition questions. In fact, chronological discussion often helps resurrect witnesses' memories. Although it may seem preferable to leave well enough alone, in practice it is always better for defending counsel to know all of the likely testimony, good and bad.

During the course of this systematic review, questions calculated to uncover any gaps or inconsistencies in the witness's testimony are very effective. For instance, if the witness has no recollection of an attended meeting, refreshing the witness's recollection about the meeting with documents or other statements may help. Such efforts help the witness to avoid giving inaccurate testimony. They also let the witness know that you are very familiar with the facts of the case.

[7.--3] Use Documents to Review Substantive Testimony

Documents play an integral role when reviewing a witness's substantive testimony. While documents can be used effectively in witness preparation, as with deposition taking, documents should only be used after exploring the prospective witness's knowledge about the likely testimony. In fact, documents need not be used at all if the witness's recollection provides a positive result. During a deposition, a deponent may not read from a document when asked to recite his or her recollection of an event, but rather, is required to testify in his or her own words. n6.1

Often, a witness may know of documents that have not been produced, but are relevant to the litigation; or the witness may be able to anticipate the documents that are likely to be used during the deposition. Once the witness is aware of the likely areas of inquiry, the witness may be able to identify other documents relevant to those issues.

Counsel should exercise caution when using documents to prepare a witness for deposition. Although the authority is split, it is possible that a court would require production of documents, including privileged documents, used to prepare a witness. Some courts have even required the production of all documents shown to a witness as part of preparation, brushing aside claims of work product. n7

[8] Evaluate the Need for a Protective Order

[8.--1] Seek Protective Order Promptly

Unless a protective order governing the entire case has already been entered, consider whether there is any reason to seek a protective order for the witness. Additionally, even when a general protective order exists, consider promptly moving for a more specific protective order if there are reasons to protect either the witness or possible testimony. In this context, "prompt" means not waiting until the last minute before seeking the court's assistance. n8

[8.--2] Review Grounds for Protective Order

Under Rule 26(c)(1), a protective order may be obtained to "protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense ... ." The grounds for a protective order must fit clearly within one of the permissible reasons provided in Rule 26(c)(1). Although these are broad, they are not limitless. For example, a witness's lack of knowledge alone is rarely sufficient basis for preventing a deposition. n9 The opposing party simply is not obligated to take your word that the witness has no relevant knowledge.

Rule 26(c)(1) provides eight types of protection that may be obtained through a protective order:

(A) That the disclosure or discovery not be had

(B) That the disclosure or discovery may be had only on specified terms and conditions, including a designation of the time or place

(C) That the discovery may be had only by a method of discovery other than that selected by the party seeking discovery

(D) That certain matters not be inquired into, or that the scope of the disclosure or discovery be limited to certain matters

(E) That discovery be conducted with no one present except persons designated by the court

(F) That a deposition, after being sealed, be opened only by order of the court

(G) That a trade secret or other confidential research, development, or commercial information not be revealed or be revealed only in a designated way

(H) That the parties simultaneously file specified documents or information enclosed in sealed envelopes to be opened as directed by the court.

Thus, protective orders can be issued to address many different concerns. For example, a number of courts will grant a protective order delaying depositions of senior corporate officials until after other employees are deposed. n10 In addition, protective orders are frequently issued to protect against the disclosure of confidential information such as trade secrets. If no general protective order has been entered, and a particular witness's testimony may reveal trade secrets, counsel should move for a protective order as soon as the deposition is noticed. Trade secrets will generally be protected if the disclosure of the information poses a sufficient danger. However, if the need to protect trade secrets is not clear, courts may decline to enter a protective order. n11

[8.--3] Evaluate Risk of Seeking Protective Order

There are times when seeking a protective order before a deposition may not be desirable. For example, if the motion will alert opposing counsel to the existence of issues and facts which she might not otherwise raise during the deposition, defending counsel may make a tactical decision to wait and see if the topic is raised at the deposition. Because the Federal Rules allow an attorney to seek a protective order at any time, this strategy, though risky, is not unsound. Nonetheless, it requires weighing the potential for an adverse ruling due to delay in seeking the order against the tactical gain possible.

It is not likely, however, that this concern would apply to privileged information. Typically, counsel should wait until privilege issues arise in a deposition before seeking a protective order. Moreover, because privilege is a legitimate ground for instructing a witness not to answer, waiting until the deposition to assert privileges is acceptable.

It is neither necessary nor appropriate for defending counsel to seek a protective order with respect to every conceivable problem that may arise at a deposition. Instead, relief should be sought in advance of the deposition only if:

- It is reasonably likely that the problem will arise at the deposition, and

- The problem cannot be dealt with at the deposition itself or there is a likelihood that a motion made during the deposition will be denied.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidencePrivilegesAttorney-Client PrivilegeGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyRefreshing RecollectionRefreshing During Testimony

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(d)(3) allows a party or deponent to move to stop a deposition "on the ground that is it being conducted in bad faith or in a manner that unreasonably annoys, embarrasses, or oppresses the deponent or party ... ."

(n3)Footnote 3. In extreme cases, defending counsel may seek a protective order prohibiting a party from attending a deposition. In Galella v. Onassis, 487 F.2d 986 (2d Cir. 1973) , the Second Circuit upheld the trial court's protective order barring plaintiff from attending the deposition of the defendant. The court's decision turned, in part, on the plaintiff's violation of a previous order that was entered to protect the defendant. The court said that although such an exclusion is rarely appropriate, trial courts have authority under Rule 26(c) to exclude parties from a deposition. Parties or other persons also may be excluded when the deposition will deal with facts that are protected from disclosure by a protective order entered under Rule 26(c)(1)(G).
Under Rule 30, "other witnesses are not automatically excluded from a deposition simply by the request of a party. Exclusion, however, can be ordered under Rule 26(c)(1)(E) when appropriate ... ." Fed. R. Civ. P. 30 advisory committee's note (1993).

(n4)Footnote 4. Under Rule 30(c)(2), a deponent may be instructed not to answer a question "only when necessary to preserve a privilege, to enforce a limitation ordered by the court, or to present a motion under Rule 30(d)(3)."

(n5)Footnote 5. "An objection at the time of the examination ... must be noted on the record but the examination still proceeds; the testimony is taken subject to any objection." Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(c)(2).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Evid. 501.

(n7)Footnote 6.1. See Constand v. Cosby, 232 F.R.D. 494, 501 (E.D. Pa. 2006) .

(n8)Footnote 7. When reviewing documents with a witness, avoid using any documents that you do not want toproduce. Some courts have held Fed. R. Evid. 612 applicable to testimony at depositions, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(c), and ordered production of a document used to refresh the witness's recollection. See Sporck v. Peil, 759 F.2d 312, 317 (3d Cir. 1985) , cert. denied, 474 U.S. 903 (1985) . This holding has been questioned. See Omaha Pub. Power Dist. v. Foster Wheeler Corp., 109 F.R.D. 615, 616-17 (D. Neb. 1986) . For authority that waiver occurs when recollection is refreshed at a deposition, see Derderian v. Polaroid Corp., 121 F.R.D. 13 (D. Mass. 1988) ; S & A Painting Co., Inc. v. O.W.B. Corp., 103 F.R.D. 407, 408-09 (W.D. Pa. 1984) .

Privileged material also may be subject to production when used to refresh a witness's recollection prior to a deposition. Although the court in Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 74 F.R.D. 613 (S.D.N.Y. 1977) , protected four notebooks prepared by counsel that were shown to an expert witness prior to his deposition, the court stated that production may be ordered in similar cases in the future. Since then, other courts have held that the use of privileged documents to refresh a witness's recollection prior to testifying waived the privilege. See James Julian, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 93 F.R.D. 138 (D. Del. 1982) ; Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp. v. Underwriters Labs., Inc., 81 F.R.D. 8 (N.D. Ill. 1978) .

Still other courts have held that while waiver occurs as to the portion of the documents relied upon by the deponent while testifying, waiver does not inexorably occur when reliance on documents occurs prior to testifying. In Dederian v. Polaroid Corp., 121 F.R.D. 13, 16 (D. Mass. 1988) , the court went to great length to explain that Congress intended for courts to treat refreshment before testifying in a different manner than refreshment while testifying. The court noted "those courts which hold that disclosure of materials reviewed before testifying is always 'necessary in the interest of justice' ignore the rather clear Congressional intent." See Smith & Wesson v. United States, 782 F.2d 1074, 1083 (1st Cir. 1986) (approving the exercise of discretion in ordering disclosure of materials reviewed prior to testifying; court affirmed ruling which refused to turn over a report which a witness had reviewed prior to testifying).

(n9)Footnote 8. Courts are sometimes less receptive when a protective order is sought on the eve of the deposition or after a deposition has begun. In Stephens v. Sioux City & New Orleans Barge Lines, Inc., 30 F.R.D. 397 (W.D. Mo. 1962) , the court denied a "motion to quash" a deposition notice on the grounds that it was not seasonably made. In O'Brien v. International Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 443 F. Supp. 1182 (N.D. Georgia 1977) , although the court granted the protective order, it criticized plaintiff for waiting until the "eleventh hour" before moving.

(n10)Footnote 9. Transcontinental Motors, Inc. v. NSU Motorenwerke Aktiengesellschaft, 45 F.R.D. 37 (S.D.N.Y. 1968) (an allegation that a deponent has no knowledge does not justify prohibiting the deposition); but see Lewelling v. Farmers Ins. of Columbus, Inc., 879 F.2d 212, 218 (10th Cir. 1989) (upholding district court's exercise of discretion in granting protective order to bar deposition of CEO, who lacked knowledge of any pertinent facts).

(n11)Footnote 10. In Salter v. Upjohn Co., 593 F.2d 649 (5th Cir. 1979) , the court upheld a protective order that delayed the deposition of the defendant's president until after employees with greater factual knowledge were deposed. The court stated that it was very likely that the plaintiff would forego the president's deposition after deposing employees with personal knowledge of the facts.

(n12)Footnote 11. For instance, in United States v. IBM, 67 F.R.D. 40 (S.D.N.Y. 1975) , a case in which the court refused the request of non-party deponents to keep under seal sensitive commercial information in their depositions, the court noted that protection is appropriate only when disclosure will cause a clearly defined and serious injury. As the court said when determining that such injury would not be caused by disclosure, "[t]he disclosure of a secret formula will almost invariably result in this injury ... but thedisclosure of two-and-a-half-year-old sales data will not."

* This chapter was rewritten in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 18 Defense of Depositions *

2-18 Federal Litigation Guide § 18.02

§ 18.02 CHECKLISTS: Reviewing Basic Rules and Concepts with Witness Before Deposition

[1] CHECKLIST: Reviewing Basic Deposition Rules with Witness

The following checklist includes general rules that should be reviewed with the client before deposition. Counsel should be sure that the deposition witness understands each of the following rules on deposition testimony:

- ☐ Always tell the truth.
- ☐ Answer only the question asked.
- ☐ Do not volunteer information.
- ☐ Be sure you understand the question.
- ☐ Ask for clarification wherever required.
- ☐ Pause after the question is posed, and reflect on what is being asked.
- ☐ Take as much time as you need to formulate your answer before speaking.
- ☐ Listen to defending counsel's statements, either objections or instructions.
- ☐ Consult counsel whenever you feel the need.
- ☐ Answer vocally, as movements are not generally recorded.
- ☐ Do not try to win the case with your testimony.

☐ Do not try to explain your answers, unless absolutely necessary--the facts are the facts.

☐ Do not speculate or guess.

☐ If you are asked about a document, review the document carefully.

☐ If you need to refer to documents, ask.

☐ Do not engage in casual conversation during the deposition.

☐ Do not agree with attempts to re-characterize your testimony.

☐ If a question is compound, ask to have it separated into two or more questions.

☐ Do not agree with a question unless you agree with the whole question.

☐ Never get angry.

☐ Do not get upset if the examiner is rude or interrupts you.

☐ Remain dignified.

☐ Do not attempt to be humorous.

☐ Do not attempt to educate the examiner--it is his job to become educated.

☐ Never use obscenity, vulgarity, profanity, ethnic slurs, gender slurs, or derogatory personal references.

☐ If you need a break, request one--a deposition does not place the witness under arrest

[2] CHECKLIST: Reviewing Basic Deposition Concepts With Witness

The following checklist includes general concepts that should be reviewed with the client before deposition. Counsel should be sure that the deposition witness understands the importance of each of the following concepts:

☐ Keep answers simple. The witness's answer to each deposition question should be kept as simple as possible. The witness should volunteer no additional information. To avoid rambling or convoluted answers, she should give short, factual answers to each question.

☐ Identify confusing questions. Urge the witness to listen carefully to each question, making sure that the question is clearly understood before answering it. To allow the witness time to think carefully about each question before giving an answer, insist that she pause for a moment between the questionand answer. A pause forces the witness to think about the question and gives counsel an opportunity to object.

☐ Listen to each question carefully. A way to sensitize the witness to the need to listen carefully to each question is to review common objections to deposition questions. While the witness need not acquire a detailed understanding of each objection, she should be alert to the various types of objectionable questions. By taking the time to review common deposition objections, counsel can reduce the likelihood that the witness will become confused by such questions, or answer a question too quickly.

☐ Avoid speculation. Because a desire to be helpful to the examiner may lead the witness to speculate when she really does not have sufficient knowledge to testify, the witness must comprehend that she is not required to know the answer to every question. Some questions may call for facts outside the witness's knowledge, and others may call for facts that the witness does not remember. Even though witnesses are sometimes surprised by the gaps in their own knowledge, there are some occasions where the witness will simply have to state that she does not know the answer.

☐ Correct Errors. Make certain the witness understands that whenever an inaccurate answer has been given to a question, the answer can and should be corrected as soon as possible. If the witness immediately realizes that an error has been made, he should simply make the correction. If the questioning has already proceeded to a new topic by the time the witness realizes that a mistake has been made, the error should be brought to counsel's attention as soon as possible to determine how best to make the correction.

☐ Avoid humorous and derogatory remarks. A deposition witness should always avoid making any unnecessary statements, such as jokes, or editorial remarks or worse, derogatory remarks. No matter how tempting it may be to answer a question in an argumentative or editorializing manner, such answers are often counter-productive and distract the witness from giving careful testimony. Moreover, a comment or joke that seemed funny at the time often looks foolish or terribly out of place at a later date. The deponent should appreciate that gratuitous remarks invite the examiner to ask additional questions to explore the basis for the remarks. The examiner is free to ask questions to better understand any remark.

☐ Remain calm and patient. The deponent should be encouraged to remain calm and patient during the deposition. It is useful to emphasize that excessive emotion usually undermines the quality of the witness's answers. Much like the witness who tries to be humorous, the angry or bitter witness unwittingly gives the examiner a tactical advantage because the witness's emotions may interfere with his ability to concentrate. Indeed, in most cases, the best way to frustrate an examiner who asks taunting questions is to remain calm and supply careful answers.

☐ Understand the examiner's personal style. Counsel should warn the witness about any known habits of the examiner. Even if you don't know the particular examiner, review the approaches that some examiners use to disarm, or obtain more testimony from, a witness. Warn the witness not to be lulled into less guarded answers by an examiner's friendly style.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceEvidenceTestimonyGeneral Overview

* This chapter was rewritten in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 18 Defense of Depositions *

2-18 Federal Litigation Guide § 18.03

§ 18.03 Defending Party Witness Depositions

[1] Consider Whether and How to Intervene

Defending counsel's role at the deposition will vary depending on the examiner's questions and the witness's responses. So long as examining counsel asks proper questions and the witness answers accurately and does not divulge privileged information, defending counsel's objectives are probably best served by saying as little as possible at the deposition. Rarely, however, is this the case. More often, defending counsel will play an interactive role in the deposition process; defending counsel's role generally will be fluid, changing as the examiner's or witness's actions change.

Throughout a deposition, defending counsel must consider whether and how to intervene. Defending counsel can intervene in a variety of ways, including objecting, instructing a witness not to answer, requesting clarification from the examiner, and asking for a recess. Regardless of the method of intervention, defending counsel must continually weigh the costs and benefits of intervening. In one case, the court found that defense counsel acted improperly under the guidelines for attorney conduct at depositions when, during four depositions, she made repeated objections, instructed witnesses not to answer certain questions, and left the deposition while a question was pending to confer with the deponent. n1 Counsel should actively intercede where intervention is necessary to protect privileged information, avoid damaging confusion, or protect the witness from harassment or embarrassment. As a general rule, a deponent and the deponent's attorney have no absolute right to confer during a deposition except for the purpose of determining whether a privilege should be asserted. n2

In some circumstances, defending counsel's intervention can actually cause harm. For instance, an objection, a request for a recess, or a statement on the record can send a signal that examining counsel has touched on a sensitive area and may encourage a deeper probe to insure that no important details are overlooked. This type of signal is especially clear where a quiet defending counsel suddenly perks up and begins to assert consistent objections. Persistent obstructions also may affect the witness's credibility if the deposition must be used at trial. Overly active intervention by defending counsel may lead a trier of fact to conclude that the deposition testimony is more counsel's than the witness's. Further, frequent interruptions that lead to extensive discussions among counsel can lengthen a deposition and tire, upset, or distract thewitness so much that she gives less effective testimony. In many cases, getting the witness through a deposition as quickly as possible will keep the witness happy and will decrease the likelihood that damaging testimony will come out. Thus, while intervention is sometimes unavoidable, counsel must continuously assess whether action is desirable.

[2] Avoid Undue Aggression

If counsel must intervene to protect his client's interests or to protect the witness, the best strategy is to insure that the level and frequency of intervention are consistent. For example, counsel may need to object to prevent the witness from revealing information protected by the attorney-client privilege, since without counsel's interruption, inadvertent disclosures can easily occur. Although protection of privilege must be aggressive, counsel should assess the tone of the deposition before asserting an across-the-board aggressive posture. In many cases, this will be unnecessary. Further, undue aggression may create an uncomfortable environment for the witness, and can even lead to a lack of confidence in defending counsel, especially when the examiner remains calm. Similarly, while it can be beneficial to object in unimportant areas to feign importance, excessive objections are neither permissible nor desirable.

There are a number of styles applicable to deposition defense. While none is clearly right for all situations, some are more wrong. For example, some lawyers view depositions as a battlefield, with objections as hand grenades or bullets to be randomly and frequently tossed or sprayed across the deposition landscape. Under Rule 30, "[a]n objection must be stated concisely in a non-argumentative and non-suggestive manner." n1

[3] Raise Objections at Deposition

[3.--1] Evaluate Whether to Raise Objection

As a general rule, the only objections that need to be made are those that must be preserved under Rule 30(c)(2). n1 Deposition objections are a more complex subject than the Federal Rules might suggest, however. Despite the apparently limited nature of deposition objections, many courts and lawyers take a broad view of objections that concern the "form" of a question. Thus, to provide a practical guide to deposition objections, this discussion will review the most common objections, including those that may technically go beyond the "form" of a question.

The objection is the principal tool for insuring that deposition questioning is fair to the deponent and to the facts. By properly using objections, the examiner can be encouraged to frame fair and proper questions. Objections also serve to communicate to the witness the dangers posed by unfair questions. But just as counsel should not sit silently while the examiner unfairly attacks the witness, counsel should avoid excessive, unwarranted objections designed either to coach the witness or to break up the examiner's flow.

During the course of a deposition, counsel must make many tactical decisions in favor of or against raising objections. The frequency of objections will vary depending, in part at least, on the examiner's competence. If the examiner is a skilled questioner who consistently asks proper questions, few objections will be necessary during the examination. If a skilled examiner occasionally asks an improper question, the proper response is to state any objection and rely on the examiner to rephrase it.

On the other hand, if the examiner consistently asks improper questions, either because of a lack of skill or for the purpose of confusing the witness, objection strategy becomes more complex. If the examiner asks improper questions that the witness is handling well, counsel may choose to make few objections. Often it is better to let the examination continue than to prompt the examiner to ask more careful questions. There is no need to invite the examiner to ask better questions when the witness is already giving strong testimony. If, however, the examiner asks numerous objectionable questions that are causing the witness difficulty, defending counsel is usually well-advised to object. To the extent that the examiner elicits damaging testimony, counsel's objections may slow the process and remind the witness to be more careful. Such objections also may help prevent the witness from giving ambiguous answers to improper questions and may warn the examiner that such questioning will not go unchallenged. Particularly because many courts are reluctant to exclude potentially useful testimony long after a deposition is taken, the transcript should contain a clear, contemporaneous record of consistent objections where necessary. If examining counsel's behavior is particularly egregious, defending counsel can call a halt to the deposition and seek a protective order from the court. n4

[3.--2] State Objection in Non-Aggressive Manner

Generally, an objection should be stated in a way that does not coach the witness to give a particular answer. As instructed by Rule 30(d)(1), an objection must be stated in a non-argumentative and non-suggestive manner. Moreover, a court may be less likely to sustain an objection that appears to instruct the witness, for it may find that the objection obviated the danger of the question. Sometimes, however, counsel may feel compelled to make an objection that in essence coaches the witness. If at all possible, resist this urge. If the examiner's question as posed has trapped the deponent, and the deponent may give an answer prejudicial to the case absent some type of guidance, counsel need only object. The objection may clue the deponent to the trap the examiner is setting up. But whether the witness catches on is irrelevant. A reasoned objection should provide grounds to argue for the inadmissibility of the witness's answer. Further, if the examiner's question was truly a trap, the judge or jury is likely to see it.

[3.--3] Objecting to Form of Question

Depending on the nature of the objection, counsel may wait until a later time to raise it. Under Rule 32(d)(3), objections are reserved to the time of trial unless they might have been eliminated if they had been presented at the deposition. n5 The purpose of Rule 32(d)(3) is to require that curable objections be stated during the deposition at a time when examining counsel has an opportunity to cure the cited defects. n6 The most common objection in this category is the objection to the "form" of the question. After an objection to the form of a question, the examiner can immediately correct it and the witness can answer the amended question. However, even if the examiner declines to amend his question, it still must be answered. In fact, the witness should understand that questions that involve more substantive objections, such as relevance or hearsay, must be answered by the witness at the deposition even though the court may later sustain the objection.

Note

that during a deposition, objections to the "form" of a question are often used to resist questions that are confusing, seek information outside the witness' knowledge, are repetitive, or are irrelevant.

[3.--4] Objecting to Confusing Questions

Questions can be confusing for many reasons. Some questions are so convoluted that what the examiner has asked is not clear. For instance, the examiner's use of a double negative or unattributed pronouns may make a question difficult to comprehend. Sometimes, a question may be confusing because it is composed of several parts that really ask two or more different questions. n7 Frequently, a question is confusing because it assumes facts outside the witnesss's testimony, n8 or because the examiner phrases the question so as to make an argument rather than to elicit information. Whatever the reason that a question is confusing, it should be objected to at the deposition. Later attempts to explain an answer because the question was confusing will not garner much sympathy if no objection was made during the deposition.

[3.--5] Objecting to Questions Outside Scope of Witness's Knowledge

A question that calls for information outside the witness's knowledge is objectionable. Although many attorneys will state in an objection that the question seeks information outside the witness's knowledge, in reality the objection is one under Fed. R. Evid. 602 -- that the witness is not competent to testify on the subject because she lacks personal knowledge. Because examining counsel is entitled to learn what the witness knows, the examiner should establish the witness's personal knowledge of relevant matters if he hopes to use that testimony at trial. Thus, the examiner generally should not ask a witness about a meeting or telephone conversation without first establishing the basis for the witness's knowledge. However, because this is discovery, and not all depositions are taken for the purpose of admission at trial, examining counsel may wish to pursue a line of questioning even if the witness does not have personal knowledge about the topic. Even though the examiner is permitted to ask these questions, defending counsel should record an objection to prevent use of the witness's answers at trial.

Questions that call upon the witness to interpret what someone else meant by a phrase in a document generally are objectionable because they call for speculation beyond the bounds of the witness's knowledge. n9 Similarly, questions that call upon the witness to use documents to reach answers may call for testimony that is too speculative to be proper and may be objected to. n10 Arguably, an objection that a question calls for speculation need not be made at the deposition. However, many lawyers make the objection at that time because a court may later rule that the objectionable nature of the question could have been cured if the examiner had been asked to lay a proper foundation for the question. Moreover, this objection serves to warn the witness about the dangers of the question.

Another type of question that calls on the witness to speculate beyond the range of the witness's knowledge is the question that "calls for a legal conclusion." For instance, the examiner who asks "Was Mr. Brown negligent?" or, "Did the XYZ Corporation breach its contract?", asks the witness to draw a legal conclusion. Again, this question need not be objected to at the deposition, but many lawyers will not wait until trial for fear that an unfavorable answer might be included in the deposition transcript and potentially used at trial. Further, by objecting at the deposition to a question that seeks a legal conclusion, the witness may realize she need not answer the question, avoiding problems altogether.

Some lawyers improperly use the "legal conclusion" objection to prevent a witness from giving testimony about the witness's own understanding of the significance of what the witness did. For example, in a contract case in which the parties' understanding of their words and acts has legal significance, examining counsel can properly ask what the witness sought to achieve by taking a particular action, such as sending a letter to cancel an order. Even though the witness should not be asked to testify to the legal significance of the letter, the witness can testify to what the letter was intended to accomplish. Courts often lose patience with lawyers who try to inhibit inquiry into the understanding and intent of an actor in a commercial transaction. Thus, while an objection may sometimes be appropriate, it should not be used to inhibit proper questioning.

[3.--6] Objecting to Repetitive Questions

Questions that are repetitive of previous questions are objectionable for that reason. Although the objection that a question is repetitive arguably need not be made during the deposition to be preserved, counsel will commonly object when a question has already been "asked and answered." Often, this objection is made in response to an examiner who is tinkering with the precise form of the question so as to confuse the witness. This type of objection made during the deposition not only records counsel's reasoning for the court, it also prompts the witness to recall prior testimony before answering the question a second time. If the objection is made without appearing to coach the witness, it can very effectively reinforce the witness's testimony.

The asked and answered objection can be especially effective when examining counsel is a skillful questioner. The experienced examiner will often present the witness with substantially the same question a number of times in the hope that he will eventually get the right answer. By objecting, defending counsel keeps the witness aware of this threat.

[3.--7] Objecting to Questions Based on Relevance

Irrelevant questions are frequently asked at a deposition. Counsel commonly will object even though such an objection is reserved for later resolution. Many attorneys use the objection to relevance to try to prevent inquiry into topics that are unrelated to the litigation. Since this is almost never adequate grounds to instruct a witness not to answer, a better strategy is to avoid the objection at a deposition or to use it sparingly. n10.1

In any event, objections to relevance made at the time of the deposition are often counterproductive. First, the objection may provoke the curiosity of examining counsel, who may believe that the objection signals a sensitive subject. Second, if the question is actually irrelevant, counsel may be well-advised to allow the witness to answer and waste the examiner's valuable deposition time with questions that have no application to the case. n11 Finally, because trial judges are interested in limiting material admitted at trial to facts that bear on the contested issues, courts generally will be receptive to an objection made at trial if the deposition questions were truly irrelevant. At the deposition, the objection merely gets recorded in the transcript, while the witness still must answer. Thus, relevance objections accomplish little.

An exception to this rule can arise where examining counsel strays out of relevant matter into areas that are sensitive for other reasons. For example, where an irrelevant line of questioning threatens to disclose unrelated trade secrets, defending counsel may wish to take a stand against further inquiry.

[3.--8] Objecting on Basis of Attorney-Client Privilege

Perhaps the most important objection at a deposition is the one that protects the attorney-client privilege. Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, defending counsel may direct a witness not to answer questions that require or could lead to the disclosure of privileged attorney-client communications. Rule 30(d)(1) states:

Any objection to evidence during a deposition shall be stated concisely and in a non-argumentative and non-suggestive manner. A party may instruct a deponent not to answer only when necessary to preserve a privilege, to enforce a limitation on evidence directed by the court, or to present a motion under paragraph (3).

The foundation for Rule 30(d)(1)'s protection of privilege can be found in Rule 26(b)(1) which provides in pertinent part that "[p]arties may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, that is relevant to the claim or defense of any party... ." Thus, when a line of questioning is likely to call for the disclosure of privileged communications, counsel may and should caution the witness that the substance of any attorney-client communications should not be divulged. Moreover, if a question clearly seeks privileged information, defending counsel should instruct the witness not to answer the question.

If it is not clear whether an answer to a pending deposition question involves privileged material, counsel may intervene to consult with the witness to explore the issue more fully. If the examiner attempts to interfere with this consultation, an effective strategy is to apply the privilege strictly and direct the witness not to respond.

Attorney-client privilege issues usually appear in one of three ways during a deposition: a clearly privileged document is shown to the witness; a document shown to the witness turns out to contain privileged information based on the witness's testimony; the witness's testimony reveals privileged communications.

Any waiver is limited to actual material disclosed and does not extend to other material on the same subject, unless the disclosure is done intentionally to gain tactical advantage, in which case waiver would be extended to all related material. n11.1

A disclosure does not operate as a waiver if n11.2

- The disclosure is inadvertent;
- The holder of the privilege or protection took reasonable steps to prevent disclosure; and
- The holder promptly took reasonable steps to rectify the error, including (if applicable) following Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(5)(B).

[4] Monitoring the Examiner's Use of Documents

When defending a deposition, counsel should pay close attention to the examiner's use of documents. Although attorneys are generally used to dealing with documents, many lay witnesses are unaware of or not used to the traps that may be set using documents. Moreover, many witnesses are more inclined to agree with a statement that appears in writing, and are often reluctant to disavow or disagree with written statements. As a result, the following important rules in dealing with documents should be followed:

- Read the Document Before Answering Questions About It. When the examiner refers to a document, remind the witness to read it before answering any question about it. Even if the examiner claims that there is no need to read the document, insist that the client read it before testifying. Do not allow a witness to commit to anything in a document that he or she has not read, or to substitute the document for the witness's own recollection of the events.

- Insure Questions Are Clear and Understood. In addition to insuring that the witness reads the document, make certain that the examiner's document-related questions are clear. For instance, if the examiner presents a document prepared by the witness and asks whether a statement in the document is true, it is often helpful to ask the examiner to indicate whether the question asks for the witness's understanding at the time the document was prepared or at the time of the deposition. If the examiner expects both responses, the question should be separated into two questions. If the examiner asks questions about a series of documents, be sure that the examiner makes clear what question is being asked with respect to each document.

- Limit Paraphrasing. Do not allow a witness to be cajoled into paraphrasing the text of a document. While questioning about a document is permissible to place its language in context or to learn the basis for statements made in a document, counsel should object to questions that ask the witness to paraphrase a document. Similarly, counsel should warn against the witness discussing the meaning of a portion of a document except in the context of the entire document.

- Limit Inquiry to What the Witness Knows. Courts are likely to sustain an objection to a question that asks what a document means when the witness did not write it and can only speculate as to its meaning. In such a situation, an objection reminds the witness of the limits of his knowledge and the dangers of speculating.

- Prepare the Witness For Problem Documents. Even if it conflicts with the witness's recollection, the witness may feel she should accept the content of a document as true. Caution the witness against accepting the truth of a proposition merely because it is written in a document. A deponent should be prepared not to accept a document's content without first testing the proposition against his memory of events.

[5] Monitoring the Witness's Testimonial Performance

Another important task for defending counsel at a deposition is to closely monitor the witness's performance as a witness. In addition to listening to the substance of the witness's testimony, counsel should insure that the witness remains alert and calm.

If the witness shows signs of tiring or strain, ask for a break. Be especially aware of the need to take breaks later in the day when the witness may be losing concentration. Serious mistakes often occur at the end of a day of deposition when the witness is tired. Even though a witness may prefer to continue a deposition into the evening rather than spend another day giving testimony, this should be discouraged.

Occasionally, both the examiner and the witness will become tired. Although it may be tempting to conclude the deposition in one day in the hope that the witness can remain alert longer than the examiner, such situations can be dangerous. On the other hand, forcing the examiner to ask all his questions in one day will eliminate the chance that the examiner will accumulate a fresh supply of questions. Therefore, at the end of the day, before deciding whether to request an adjournment, carefully evaluate the witness's ability to continue against the examiner's ability to conjure up more questions overnight. Also consider whether the examiner will wrap up more quickly if the deposition is extended a short time.

Sometimes important questions are asked with little warning at the end of the direct examination when the examiner tries to tie up loose ends. The somewhat disconnected nature of this final questioning catches many witnesses off guard. For this reason, consider taking a break near the close of the direct examination to remind the witness of topics that may arise during the examiner's clean-up questioning.

This is especially important where the examiner has missed crucial follow-up questions or failed to ask any questions about relevant topics.

Defending counsel should monitor the witness's temper and attitude during the course of a deposition. If the examiner is reaching an area of sensitive questions that may agitate the witness, it usually helps to take a break and review with the witness the points made about those questions during preparation sessions. If the witness's anger interferes with his ability to give accurate testimony, ask for as many breaks as necessary to calm the witness.

[6] Monitoring Opposing Counsel

In addition to monitoring the witness, deposition defense requires monitoring of opposing counsel. This includes reading verbal and non-verbal signals, paying close attention to the examiner's questioning techniques, learning what areas the examiner focuses on, and protecting the witness from undue harassment. The first three areas require close listening and observation skills, while the latter requires exercising discretion and backbone.

If the examiner is conducting the deposition in bad faith or in an annoying, embarrassing, or oppressive manner, defending counsel may move to terminate the deposition under Rule 30(d)(3). n12 This can be accomplished either by calling the judge or magistrate judge and orally presenting the motion, or by unilaterally terminating the deposition and immediately filing a motion for a protective order. In the latter case especially, counsel must be certain his decision is correct. If the decision to terminate is not validated, counsel and his client will likely be sanctioned under Rule 37.

Although the cases do not provide much guidance as to what conduct will support a motion to terminate, courts have recognized that this remedy is available. n13 Often, however, a stern warning to the examiner will avoid the need to terminate a deposition. Moreover, standing up to the examiner's rough tactics will provide the witness with additional confidence.

[7] Conducting Cross-Examination of Witness

After direct examination of the witness is concluded, counsel must consider whether to conduct cross-examination. Because there is no need to take discovery of your own witness, and because further discovery may only help the other parties to the litigation, cross-examination should be viewed as the exception.

Despite the general rule against cross-examination of one's own deposition witness, there are a few circumstances where cross-examination is appropriate. First, if the effect of a witness's harmful testimony can be alleviated by bringing out additional facts, cross-examination may be the best vehicle. Even though there is no obligation to reveal the ameliorating facts at the deposition, there may be a tactical reason to provide the facts immediately. By placing such facts into the transcript, for example, you may improve the prospects for a favorable settlement. Similarly, bringing out ameliorating facts may fend off a summary judgment motion.

If cross-examination is necessary, counsel should take a short break following direct examination. During the interval between the direct examination and cross-examination, discuss cross-examination questions with the witness and listen carefully to the answers. Because leading questions are not permitted on cross-examination, the witness's answers must be stated in a way that will not damage the case. Therefore, preparation of the cross-examination is important. Finally, cross-examination should be limited so that the examiner cannot reopen the direct examination on grounds that a new area of questioning has been raised.

[8] Correcting Errors in Testimony

[8.--1] Correcting Errors During Deposition

Testimonial errors should not go uncorrected at a deposition, unless the errors are harmless or insignificant. A factual inaccuracy in deposition testimony, even an apparently insignificant one, may later be used to undermine the witness's credibility. Thus, before ignoring factual inaccuracies, carefully weigh the likelihood that they can be used later against the witness. Counsel should err on the side of correcting inaccuracies.

On the other hand, accurate but confusing testimony should only be corrected if it can be misused by the opposing party. Even though there is no affirmative obligation to correct deposition testimony that is merely confusing, it is often wiser to make the correction at the deposition if there is a danger that the deposition testimony will be used against the witness later or the confusion will add to your client's detriment.

Generally, a factual error should be corrected at the first opportunity. Rather than waiting to correct the error in cross-examination, consult with the witness as early as possible to determine how to correct erroneous testimony. If a possibly important error is likely to be compounded during responses to subsequent questioning, ask to speak with the witness so that the witness can make the correction before the damage or inaccuracy grows. If the error is less important or is not likely to be repeated, wait until the next break in the deposition to consult with the witness. In either event, when correcting an answer, the witness should make the clarification in his own words.

[8.--2] Correcting Testimony After Deposition

In addition to correcting errors at the deposition itself, Rule 30 entitles witnesses to review and correct their deposition transcript. Every witness should carefully read the transcript of their deposition and correct any errors that may appear. Review of thetranscript must be requested before the conclusion of the deposition. n14 While execution of the transcript may be waived, there is little advantage in doing so. Execution of the transcript gives the witness and counsel another chance to review the testimony. Despite a widespread notion that review and correction of the transcript is limited to correcting typographical errors, Rule 30(e) provides that the witness may make changes "in form or substance."

When making changes in the transcript, follow the procedures set out in Rule 30(e). The witness must state the specific reason for each change that is made. Although there is no limit to the number or extent of changes that are permitted, if the changes are extensive, the court may order that the examiner be given a further opportunity to depose the witness. n15 In extreme cases, where the deposition is so changed as to become meaningless, the court may decline to permit the changes. n16

Since both the changed and the original version of the testimony, and the explanation for the changes, are admissible, n17 an adverse party will likely try to exploit at trial any extensive changes in a deposition transcript by suggesting that the witness has "rewritten" the testimony. Accordingly, if the transcript is substantially accurate and the testimony is only stylistically deficient, it should not be changed.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMotions to CompelCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceEvidencePrivilegesAttorney-Client PrivilegeGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Plaisted v. Geisinger Med. Ctr., 210 F.R.D. 527, 535 (M.D. Pa. 2002) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See United States v. Philip Morris Inc., 212 F.R.D. 418, 420 (D.D.C. 2002) .

(n3)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(d)(2). The Advisory Committee's Note to the 1993 revision of Rule 30 explained that "[d]epositions frequently have been unduly prolonged, if not unfairly frustrated, by lengthy objections and colloquy, often suggesting how the deponent should respond."

(n4)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30 Advisory Committee's note (1993).

(n5)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(d)(2).

(n6)Footnote 5. Rule 32(d)(3) provides in pertinent part:

> (A) Objections to the competency of a witness or to the competency, relevancy, or materiality of testimony are not waived by failure to make them before or during the taking of the deposition, unless the ground of the objection is one which might have been obviated or removed if presented at that time.
>
> (B) Errors and irregularities occurring at the oral examination in the manner of taking the deposition, in the form of the questions or answers, in the oath or affirmation, or in the conduct of parties, and errors of any kind which might be obviated, removed, or cured if promptly presented, are waived unless seasonable objection thereto is made at the taking of the deposition.

(n7)Footnote 6. Although counsel may choose to make no objection to questions that the witness is handling successfully, counsel should make any objection to the form of a question that may be made at trial, since failure to make this objection probably results in a waiver. At trial, courts will generally prohibit an objection to the form of a question that was not made at the deposition. As the Sixth Circuit noted in Bahamas Agricultural Indus. Ltd. v. Riley Stoker Corp., 526 F.2d 1174 (6th Cir. 1975) , objections that could have been obviated or removed if made at the time of the taking of the deposition are waived if not made then. The court reasoned that to allow defending counsel to wait until trial before objecting would limit the usefulness of the deposition.

(n8)Footnote 7. Rather than an objection as to "form," however, this calls for an objection on the grounds of a compound question.

(n9)Footnote 8. Again, rather than an objection as to "form," a more clearly stated objection would state that the question assumes facts not in disclosure. This objection further provides the witness with some guidance while adhering to the requirement to succinctly state one's objection.

(n10)Footnote 9. In In re Folding Carton Antitrust Litig., 83 F.R.D. 132 (N.D. Ill. 1979) , the court sustained defending counsel's instruction not to answer questions concerning the interpretation of documents that the witnesses did not prepare and had not seen prior to the deposition. The court held that many of the questions were improper because they required "a study and comparison of documents and the performance of mathematical calculations." This kind of instruction is risky, however, since the rules strictly limit the grounds for an instruction not to answer. In most cases, the appropriate response is to lodge an objection and allow the witness to answer.

(n11)Footnote 10. In Deep South Oil Co. v. Metropolitan Ins. Co., 25 F.R.D. 81 (S.D.N.Y. 1959) , the court held that counsel could not ask the witness a series of questions to which the witness did not know the answer and then direct the witness to formulate answers by examining books and records. The court rejected such tactics as an effort to turn a deposition into an interrogatory or inspection procedure. Again, however, after the 1993 amendments to the Federal Rules, the admissible uses of an instruction not to answer are much more limited, and it is unlikely most courts would uphold an instruction under these circumstances.

(n12)Footnote 10.1. See Quantachrome Corp. v. Micromeritics Instrument Corp., 189 F.R.D. 697, 700 (S.D. Fla. 1999) .

(n13)Footnote 11. This tactic may be especially fruitful in jurisdictions that limit depositions to a certain number of hours.

(n14)Footnote 11.1. Fed. R. Evid. 502(a).

(n15)Footnote 11.2. Fed. R. Evid. 502(b).

(n16)Footnote 12. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(d)(3)(A)

(n17)Footnote 13. See, e.g., Batchelor v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 574 F. Supp. 1480 (E.D. Mich. 1983) ; Broadbent v. Moore-McCormack Lines, Inc., 5 F.R.D. 220 (E.D. Pa. 1946) .

(n18)Footnote 14. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(e)(1); see also Hambleton Bros. Lumber Co. v. Balkin Enters., 397 F.3d 1217, 1224-1226 (9th Cir. 2005) ; see also Agrizap, Inc. v. Woodstream Corp., 232 F.R.D. 491, 494 (E.D. Pa. 2006) .

(n19)Footnote 15. In Sanford v. CBS, Inc., 594 F. Supp. 713 (N.D. Ill. 1984) , singer Michael Jackson made extensive changes to the transcript of his deposition but did not explain them. The changes were so extensive that the plaintiff was afforded an opportunity to cross-examine Jackson as to why the changes were made and how his memory improved. The court ordered Jackson to bear the cost of this additional discovery, including plaintiff's attorney's fees.

> See also Lugtig v. Thomas, 89 F.R.D. 639 (N.D. Ill. 1981) ; Erstad v. Curtis Bay Towing Co., 28 F.R.D. 583 (D. Md. 1961) ; Colin v. Thompson, 16 F.R.D. 194 (W.D. Mo. 1954) . Cf. Allen & Co. v. Occidental Petroleum Corp., 49 F.R.D. 337 (S.D.N.Y. 1970) (changes in the transcript were not so extensive as to warrant further cross-examination).

(n20)Footnote 16. In Barlow v. Esselte Pendaflex Corp., 111 F.R.D. 404 (M.D.N.C. 1986) , aff'd without opinion, 838 F.2d 1209 (4th Cir. 1988) , the court held that plaintiff's "cutting, pasting, and mutilation" of the transcript of her deposition amounted to sabotage of the deposition process. The court sanctioned plaintiff for her conduct, deeming her to have signed or waived the signing of the transcript as it originally stood and finding the transcript an accurate representation of her deposition testimony.

(n21)Footnote 17. Lugtig v. Thomas, 89 F.R.D. 639 (N.D. Ill. 1981) .

* This chapter was rewritten in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 18 Defense of Depositions *

2-18 Federal Litigation Guide § 18.04

§ 18.04 Defending Non-Party Witness Depositions

[1] Preparing for Non-Party Depositions

The defense of a non-party deposition brings challenges that do not typically arise when defending a witness that is, or is employed by, your client. The lack of an attorney-client relationship removes the protection of the attorney-client privilege, and limits opportunities to prepare the non-party witness. In fact, many hostile, and some neutral, non-party witnesses will refuse to meet prior to the deposition.

The first task upon receipt of the notice of a non-party deposition is to determine whether the witness will speak to you before the deposition. This will usually depend on whether the deponent is friendly, neutral, or hostile.

If the non-party witness is subject to the trial court's subpoena powers, cross-examination may not be necessary, unless the witness refuses to talk to you outside the deposition. However, if the witness is outside the court's subpoena power and will not agree to appear at trial, cross-examination at the deposition may be the only opportunity to confront the witness.

In addition to learning about the witness's attitude and possible availability at trial, if possible, counsel should learn as much as possible about the background of the witness and the substance of potential testimony. In doing this, look to all available sources, including your client, any relevant documents, and the pleadings in the case to identify the factual issues about which the witness may give testimony.

Counsel should determine whether the non-party witness is represented by an attorney. If the witness is represented, any preparation concerns should be addressed to the witness's lawyer. That lawyer will likely prepare the witness for the deposition. In this way, the preparation sessions will be privileged, avoiding the risk that the witness's preparation for the deposition will be discoverable.

[2] Preparing for the Deposition of the Friendly Non-Party Witness

In the case of a friendly non-party witness, preparation should occur in much the same way that a party witness's preparation occurs. Communications with the witness are not privileged, however. Although any discussions with the non-party deponent will be discoverable, the risk of disclosure is usually outweighed by the desire to prepare the deponent. To the extent possible, however, avoid revealing case strategy or information that could be harmful to your client if repeated at the deposition.

When a friendly non-party deponent is not represented by counsel, be especially cautious about providing excessive factual information. Provide the non-party deponent with an overview of your theory of the case, but do noteducate the witness in any areas on which the examiner is unlikely to ask questions and on which you will not rely on the witness's testimony. If the witness will not provide affirmative testimony on a subject, there is usually no need to provide information that could be discovered. Counsel also should avoid educating the witness about any negative facts.

The friendly witness should be prepared to testify effectively about any matter on which his testimony is needed. Because the principal objective is to prevent the examiner from undermining the deponent's potential usefulness, prepare the witness to deal with any possible weaknesses in the testimony. To the extent there are such weaknesses, try to review facts that may help strengthen that testimony. Similarly, if the friendly non-party witness is expected to give any harmful testimony to your case, focus on ways that the witness might minimize the negative testimony.

[3] Preparing for the Deposition of the Neutral Non-Party Witness

While some neutral non-party witnesses will agree to meet prior to their depositions, others will refuse to do so. If you have an opportunity to meet with the neutral non-party deponent, review the deposition procedure in an even-handed way to avoid offending the witness's desire to remain neutral. Give only limited instruction on how to answer deposition questions. Of course, if the witness requests further advice, provide it. Most importantly, carefully review with the witness all matters on which you may require the witness's testimony. Use the meeting to learn as much as possible about what the neutral non-party witness will say so that you can prepare an effective cross-examination.

When preparing for the deposition of the neutral non-party witness who has refused to meet, counsel must try to anticipate cross-examination topics. Sometimes information is available from sources other than the witness to determine those areas on which the witness's testimony may be useful. For example, employees of counsel's own client may be able to identify the non-party person's role and thus relevant areas of inquiry. If the deponent has a particular piece of information that is central to the litigation, try to learn as much as possible about it prior to the deposition so that cross-examination will be effective.

[4] Preparing for the Deposition of the Hostile Non-Party Witness

Preparation for the deposition of the hostile non-party witness usually will involve a large degree of guess-work. Since there is no opportunity to meet with the witness prior to the deposition, undertake a careful review of the pleadings and documents in the case, and review information gathered in interviews with your client and other witnesses, to help prepare for the witness's testimony.

In many cases, cross-examination of the hostile non-party deponent will be similar to trial examination. The deposition may be the only opportunity to cross-examine the witness since presumably, if the witness were going to be available at trial, the examiner would avoid exposing the witness to a deposition. Counsel must, therefore, be prepared to conduct a vigorous cross-examination to minimize any damaging testimony given during the direct examination. Counsel must try to anticipate each of the areas on which the witness must be cross-examined. This can be done by reviewing all available sources to determine the nature of the negative testimony. Before the deposition, prepare specific questions that may highlight weaknesses in the witness's testimony.

[5] Raising Objections at the Deposition of a Non-Party

[5.--1] Objecting to Leading Questions

Leading questions at the deposition of a non-party are generally objectionable because the defendant is the examiner's own witness. Courts are likely to sustain such an objection at the deposition of a non-party who is friendly or neutral toward the examiner's client. n1 Although the examiner may, as a result, be prompted to build a record showing that the witness is hostile, objecting to leading questions will allow a court to rule on the issue. As at trial, leading questions are permitted on preliminary or uncontested matters.

[5.--2] Avoiding Excessive Objections

Just as with the deposition of your client, the extent to which you use objections at a non-party deposition may depend on whether the testimony is going well or badly from your perspective. On the other hand, if the examiner is obtaining harmless information, refrain from interfering with the questioning. If the examiner is eliciting damaging testimony, however, objections may help to slow down the examination and encourage the witness to give more qualified testimony.

When defending the deposition of a non-party witness, counsel should be especially careful to avoid appearing obstructionist to the witness, particularly if the witness is genuinely neutral. Just as a lawyer trying a case before a jury avoids making objections that would appear to be stifling testimony,counsel must avoid angering the non-party witness with excessive objections. This does not mean that necessary objections should be avoided. However, it may help to explain to a friendly or neutral witness in advance that your objections are made for purposes of the record and not to prevent the witness from answering the question. It also helps to insure that the witness does not misinterpret objections as an attack on the witness's testimony or credibility. If the witness misinterprets objections as either obstructionist or belittling, the witness may be motivated to help the examiner. Of course, if the witness is hostile, this will not be an important concern.

[5.--3] Objecting to the Non-Party Witness's Answers

During the deposition of a non-party witness, objections can be made to the witness's answers, as well as to the question. For instance, if the deponent's testimony goes beyond the question asked, the proper rejoinder is to state a motion to strike on the record. Even though the examiner may then ask a question to which the answer is more responsive, the objection will encourage the witness to be more careful when answering subsequent questions. In addition, if the witness is represented by an attorney, objecting to the answers may encourage the witness's lawyer to direct the witness to give more careful testimony.

[5.--4] Avoiding Instruction Not to Answer

Only counsel representing a witness has standing to direct the witness not to answer a question. n2 In the event the witness chooses to answer an improper question, such as one concerning the witness's conversations with the witness's lawyer, the sole remedy is to make an objection for the record on which the court may later rule. Any attempt to direct the witness not to answer the question is simply improper and will be viewed by the court as obstructionist conduct.

[6] Cross-Examining the Non-Party Deponent

Decisions concerning the cross-examination of a non-party deposition witness turn largely on an assessment of the deponent's availability at trial and the quality of the testimony on direct examination. While it sometimes pays to conduct an extensive cross-examination of a non-party witness, other times call for very little cross-examination.

These decisions are perhaps easiest when the deponent is a friendly witness who will be available at trial. When defending such a witness, if the witness has agreed to appear at trial counsel need not conduct cross-examination at the deposition. This will allow better preparation before any cross-examination is conducted. To a great extent, the factors that will influence whether and how to cross-examine such a deponent are similar to those applicable to deciding whether to cross-examine your own witness at a deposition. As already noted, avoid cross-examination at a deposition unless it is necessary to preserve the witness's credibility or to avoid a summary judgment.

If a neutral or hostile non-party witness who is unavailable for trial gives uneventful testimony, little or no cross-examination may be needed. More detailed cross-examination is necessary only when helpful evidence may be obtained. For example, if documents indicate that the deponent's testimony will be helpful on a particular point, cross-examination can be used to elicit the anticipated testimony.

In contrast, if the direct examination of a neutral or hostile non-party witness has been damaging, consider conducting a more extensive cross-examination. When conducting a cross-examination of the neutral or hostile non-party deponent who will appear at trial, proceed as if taking the direct examination of an adverse witness. That is, view the deposition as an opportunity to discover any information that may be helpful in minimizing the impact of the witness's harmful testimony. Try to uncover material that will show that the previous testimony is unreliable or simply wrong. Because the witness will appear at trial, it is unlikely the negative information obtained on cross-examination will simply be read at trial without the opportunity for further questioning.

It is not uncommon to confront unfavorable deposition testimony from a non-party deponent who will not appear at trial. Indeed, the deposition of a hostile non-party deponent is usually taken to facilitate the presentation of the unavailable deponent's negative testimony at the trial. Presumably, if the deponent were available at trial, the deposition would not be taken, at least not by the opposing party. When confronted with such testimony, narrow cross-examination can weaken or qualify the witness's testimony, much as at trial. When trying to undermine the effect of negative testimony, try to avoid eliciting additional harmful testimony or giving the witness an opportunity to repeat the previously given testimony.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSubpoenasEvidenceTestimonyGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationLeading Questions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. An objection on the ground that a question is leading should be made at the deposition. In Oberlin v. Marlin Am. Corp., 596 F.2d 1322 (7th Cir. 1979) , the court held that the defendant's objections to plaintiff's counsel's leading cross-examination questions were waived because they were not made at the deposition. Interestingly, the objections were not permitted even though the examiner was taking the deposition of his own client.

(n2)Footnote 2. In Shapiro v. Freeman, 38 F.R.D. 308 (S.D.N.Y. 1965) , defending counsel consistently directed a non-party witness not to answer the examiner's questions. In response to these improper directions and other abuses, and especially in view of a prior court order, the court appointed a special master to preside over depositions in the case and directed that the special master's fees be paid by plaintiff's counsel.

* This chapter was rewritten in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 18 Defense of Depositions *

2-18 Federal Litigation Guide § 18.05

§ 18.05 Defending Adverse Party Depositions

Although relatively uncommon, there are circumstances when the deponent may be the examiner's witness. Usually, such a deposition is taken when the examiner wants to preserve testimony because the deponent may be unavailable at trial. Occasionally, a deposition may be taken when examining counselbelieves the negative impression that the witness will make on the trier of fact outweighs the benefit of presenting the witness's live testimony at trial. This type of deposition could also conceivably be taken to support a motion for preliminary relief.

When defending an adverse party deposition, make vigorous use of objections to insure that the questioning is conducted properly. Because the examiner has presumably had an opportunity to rehearse with the client prior to the deposition, a court may be especially willing to sustain objections to leading questions. Moreover, some of the reasons that may prompt you to make few objections in other circumstances have little application when the examiner's client is deposed. For instance, you generally need not be concerned about irritating an already adverse party.

Preparation for the witness's cross-examination should proceed as if you had noticed the deposition in the first instance. In fact, if you believe that your cross-examination may go beyond the scope of the direct examination, cross-notice a contemporaneous deposition of the witness. This will insure against opposing counsel objecting to cross-examination beyond the scope of the direct examination.

Since the circumstances under which such depositions are generally conducted preclude any future opportunity to examine the witness, cross-examination should cover each issue on which the witness may have knowledge. When the examiner's client is deposed, the danger of eliciting additional unfavorable testimony on cross-examination is relatively slight. Presumably, the examiner's direct examination elicited most or all of the harmful testimony that the witness could provide. Similarly, the examiner probably has elicited specific harmful testimony that must then be rebutted. Thus, cross-examination should be more expensive.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyExaminationLeading Questions

* This chapter was rewritten in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide 19.syn

§ 19.syn Synopsis to Chapter 19: Requests to Admit

§ 19.01 Objective to Establish Undisputed Facts

§ 19.02 Requests Must Concern Matters Relating to Fact

§ 19.03 Use Is Limited to Pending Action

§ 19.04 Requests May Concern Any Matters Within General Scope of Discovery

§ 19.05 Responding Party May Admit, Deny, Object, or Declare Inability to Respond

§ 19.06 Admission Only Binds Party to Whom Request Directed

§ 19.07 Admitted Matter Is Conclusively Established Against Responding Party

§ 19.08 Lack of Response or Insufficient Response May Be Treated as Admission

§ 19.09 Court Has Discretion to Permit Withdrawal of Admission

§ 19.10 Requesting Party May Obtain Order to Determine Sufficiency of Response

§§ 19.10 through 19.19 [Reserved]

§ 19.20 Making Requests Unambiguous, Simple, and Direct

§ 19.21 Setting Forth Each Request for Admission Separately

§ 19.22 Including Definitions of Key Terms

§ 19.23 Determining Whether Number of Requests Has Been Limited by Local Rule or Court Order

§ 19.24 Encompassing Factual Matters in Request

§ 19.25 Applying Law to Facts in Request

§ 19.26 Seeking Admission of Genuineness of Documents in Request

§ 19.27 Signing and Certifying Request

§ 19.28 Serving Requests to Admit
[1] General Rule: No Service of Requests Before Rule 26(f) Conference
[2] Service Must Be on All Parties

§ 19.29 CHECKLIST: Drafting and Serving Requests to Admit

§§ 19.30 through 19.39 [Reserved]

§ 19.40 Written Response Typically Required Within 30 Days, Absent Court Order or Stipulation

§ 19.41 Drafting Responses to Requests to Admit

§ 19.42 Admitting Without Qualification

§ 19.43 Admitting or Denying With Qualification

§ 19.44 Denying Fully

§ 19.45 Stating Lack of Information or Knowledge
[1] Providing Specific Response
[2] Meeting Obligation of Reasonable Inquiry
[3] Claiming Lack of Access to Documents

§ 19.46 Objecting to Form or Substance of Request
[1] Establishing Basis of Objection With Specificity
[2] Avoiding Waiver of Objection by Responding
[3] Basing Objection on Issues of Scope
[4] Basing Objection on Privilege
[5] Objecting Because Requests Are Unduly Burdensome
[6] Objecting Because Facts Sought to Be Admitted Are Not Ascertainable Merely by Examination of Request
[7] Objecting Because Document Was Not Attached to Request

§ 19.47 Avoiding Improper Basis for Objection to Request
[1] Improper Objection: Request Entails Genuine Issue for Trial
[2] Improper Objection: Burden of Proof Is on Requesting Party
[3] Improper Objection: Matters Are Within Knowledge of Requesting Party
[4] Improper Objection: Request Concerns Opinions of Fact or Application of Law to Fact
[5] Improper Objection: Lack of Personal Knowledge
[6] Improper Objection: Depositions Will Duplicate Admission Requests

§ 19.48 Signing and Certifying Response

§ 19.49 Serving Responses to Requests to Admit

§ 19.50 CHECKLIST: Drafting, Serving, and Filing Responses to Requests to Admit

§§ 19.51 through 19.59 [Reserved]

§ 19.60 Seeking Court Order Permitting Withdrawal or Amendment of Admission, or Permitting Late Response
[1] Court's Permission Based on Two-Part Test
[2] Different Burdens on Moving and Non-Moving Parties

§ 19.61 Importance of Timing of Request for Court's Ruling
[1] File Motion as Early as Possible
[2] Consider Likelihood of Prejudice for Withdrawals During Trial

§ 19.62 Review Based on Abuse of Discretion Standard

§ 19.63 CHECKLIST: Moving for Withdrawal and Amendment of Admission or Relief From Untimely Response

§§ 19.64 through 19.99 [Reserved]

§ 19.100 Request for Admission
[1] FORM
Request for Admission
[2] Use of Form
[3] Subject Matter of Requests
[4] Each Matter Must Be Described Separately
[5] Signature Required
[6] Rule 26(f) Meeting May Be Required Prior to Formal Discovery
[7] Service and Filing

§ 19.101 Response to Request for Admission
[1] FORM
Response to Request for Admission
[2] Use of Form
[3] Responses Required to Avoid Admission
[4] Denials and Objections Must Be Specific
[5] Lack of Knowledge Must Be Supported by Reasonable Inquiry
[6] Genuine Trial Issue Must Be Addressed
[7] Service and Filing

§ 19.102 Notice of Motion for Leave to Withdraw or Amend Admission
[1] FORM
Notice of Motion for Leave to Withdraw or Amend Admission
[2] Use of Form
[3] Grounds for Withdrawal or Amendment of Admissions
[4] Timing of Motion

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

Requests to admit can be a very valuable tool. Early in the discovery process, they can be used to limit the amount of necessary discovery. Late in the discovery process, they can sharply limit the need for trial witnesses.

As the discovery process is about to start, attempt to identify every important document as to which authentication will be necessary, and every important fact about which you know of no reasonable disagreement. To the extent that admissions of authenticity and facts are procured, no further discovery will be necessary. Even an unexpected denial is useful as a warning flag that a fact you believed to be beyond controversy may be subject to challenge. Forcing an admission combined with an explanation can also be informative, and allow you to sharpen the discovery that follows.

Requests to admit are often tricky to draft. Attempt to avoid the inclusion of two or more facts in a single request; while the responding party is supposed to treat both facts in the response, that requirement is easily evaded and hard to enforce. It is far better to separate the facts of which admission is sought, to procure a clear response and make evasion difficult.

As the discovery process is concluding, attempt to isolate the formal allegations of the adverse pleading, whether assertion or denial, that do not appear to have evidentiary support, and make those the subject of a request for admission that will limit your trial burdens. Be careful, however, to weigh the effect on a jury of the presentation of the sterile admission rather than the evidence. You may wish to use a witness or a document to demonstrate the falsity of an adversary's assertion or denial if the jury may be influenced by that manner of presentation, and an efficient trial judge may limit you to the formal admission.

This chapter discusses requests to admit. It outlines key legal, strategic, and tactical issues concerning use of requests to admit and the responses to those requests, including the use and effect of admissions, the contents of admissions and responses, the timing and service of admissions and responses, and the amendment or withdrawal of admissions.

The chapter also provides procedural checklists for use in requesting and responding to requests for admission. The chapter also includes a form of request for admission, a form of response to request for admission, and a form of motion for leave to withdraw or amend admission.

For expanded coverage of requests for admission, see MOORE'S Federal Practice, Ch. 36, Requests for Admission (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
A. Understanding Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.01

§ 19.01 Objective to Establish Undisputed Facts

Requests to admit are written requests seeking admission of facts about which there is no real dispute. n1 They are helpful to expedite and streamline the course of the litigation. n2 For example, a motion for summary judgment may be granted based on admissions. n2.1

Requests to admit may be directed to any party to the action, including co-parties and adverse parties. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsContent & FormCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjectionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponses

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36.

(n2)Footnote 2. American Auto. Ass'n v. AAA Legal Clinic, 930 F.2d 1117, 1121 (5th Cir. 1991) ; Henry v. Champlain Enters., 212 F.R.D. 73, 77 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (citing Moore's Federal Practice).

(n3)Footnote 2.1. See Directv, Inc. v. Price, 403 F. Supp. 2d 537, 540 (M.D. La. 2005) .

(n4)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
A. Understanding Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.02

§ 19.02 Requests Must Concern Matters Relating to Fact

Requests to admit may call for the admission of any of the following: n1

- Statements of fact
- Opinions of fact
- The application of law to facts
- The genuineness of documents

Requests to admit a legal conclusion are improper. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsContent & FormCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponses

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Golden Valley Microwave Foods, Inc. v. Weaver Popcorn Co., 130 F.R.D. 92, 95-96 (N.D. Ind. 1990) .

37 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
A. Understanding Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.03

§ 19.03 Use Is Limited to Pending Action

An admission made under Rule 36 can only be used in the pending action. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsWithdrawals

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); see Kohler v. Leslie Hindman Inc., 80 F.3d 1181, 1185 (7th Cir. 1996) ; In re Leon Pizante, 186 B.R. 484, 489-490 (9th Cir. 1995) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
A. Understanding Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.04

§ 19.04 Requests May Concern Any Matters Within General Scope of Discovery

Requests to admit may concern any matter or subject to which other discovery techniques may be directed; that is, any non-privileged matter relevant to theclaims or defenses of any of the parties. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjectionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b); see also § 19.46[4] (objecting to request to admit on basis of privilge).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
A. Understanding Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.05

§ 19.05 Responding Party May Admit, Deny, Object, or Declare Inability to Respond

The response to a request for admission may include an admission, denial, objection, or statement of lack of information or knowledge, or any combination of these responses with or without qualifications. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjectionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponses

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); see §§ 19.41-19.46 (responding to notice to admit).

40 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
A. Understanding Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.06

§ 19.06 Admission Only Binds Party to Whom Request Directed

An admission binds only the specific party to whom the request is directed. n1 The requesting party is not bound by a resulting admission. Even if the requesting party offers admitted facts into evidence, it is also free to offer more favorable or contradictory evidence. n2

Admissions resulting from a failure to answer do not bind co-parties of the non-responding party. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsWithdrawals

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); see Riberglass, Inc. v. Techni-Glass Indus., Inc., 811 F.2d 565, 566-567 (11th Cir. 1987) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); see Brook Village North Assocs. v. General Elec. Co., 686 F.2d 66, 75 (1st Cir. 1982) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Becerra v. Asher, 921 F. Supp. 1538, 1544 (S.D. Tex. 1996) ; Riberglass, Inc. v. Techni-Glass Indus., Inc., 811 F.2d 565, 566 (11th Cir. 1987) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
A. Understanding Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.07

§ 19.07 Admitted Matter Is Conclusively Established Against Responding Party

Matters admitted in accordance with Rule 36, whether explicitly admitted or admitted by default, are conclusively established for purposes of the pending action, unless the court, on motion, permits the withdrawal or amendment of the admission. n1

Any matter conclusively established is treated as a judicial admission, not an evidentiary admission. An admission under Rule 36 is comparable to an admission in a pleading or a stipulation drafted by counsel for use at trial, as opposed to an evidentiary admission of a party for use at trial. n2

A matter that is deemed admitted requires no further proof. n3 Once a matter is deemed admitted, it cannot be rebutted by contrary testimony or ignored by the court, even if the party against whom it is directed offers more credible evidence. n4

Note, however, that the requesting party is not bound by the admission. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsWithdrawals

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); see Local Union No. 38, Sheet Metal Workers' Int'l Ass'n v. Tripodi, 913 F. Supp. 290, 294 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) ; Attick v. United States, 904 F. Supp. 77, 79 (D. Conn. 1995) ; see also §§ 19.60-19.62 (seeking withdrawal or amendment of admission).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b) advisory committee's note (1970); In re Corland Corp. 967 F.2d 1069, 1074 (5th Cir. 1992) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Weva Oil Corp. v. Belco Petroleum Corp., 68 F.R.D. 663, 667 (N.D. W. Va. (1975) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See 999 v. C.I.T. Corp., 776 F.2d 866, 869 (9th Cir. 1985) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See § 19.06.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
A. Understanding Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.08

§ 19.08 Lack of Response or Insufficient Response May Be Treated as Admission

A response is timely if it is submitted within 30 days of service of the request for admission, or within any other time to which parties have agreed or that has been allowed by the court. n1

If a timely written response is not made, the matter about which the admission is requested is deemed admitted. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponses

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); Donovan v. Carls Drug Co., 703 F.2d 650, 651-652 (2d Cir. 1983) ; Wright v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 291 F. Supp. 2d 1104, 1111 (C.D. Cal. 2003) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
A. Understanding Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.09

§ 19.09 Court Has Discretion to Permit Withdrawal of Admission

Courts have discretion to permit withdrawal of admissions when the presentation of the merits will be aided and no prejudice to the party obtaining the admission will result. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsWithdrawals

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); see Local Union No. 38, Sheet Metal Workers' Int'l Ass'n v. Tripodi, 913 F. Supp. 290, 293-294 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) ; see also § 19.60 (court's permission to permit withdrawl based on two-part test).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
A. Understanding Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.10

§ 19.10 Requesting Party May Obtain Order to Determine Sufficiency of Response

A party who has requested admissions may move to determine the sufficiency of the answers or the objections. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjectionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponses

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
A. Understanding Requests to Admit

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 19.10 through 19.19

[Reserved]

§§ 19.10[Reserved]

46 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
B. Drafting and Serving Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.20

§ 19.20 Making Requests Unambiguous, Simple, and Direct

Requests to admit must be unambiguous, simple, and direct. n1

A request to admit should be posed in the form of a statement, not a question, should not be argumentive, and should avoid subjective, pejorative, legal, or conclusory terms. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffect

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a) ; see United Coal Cos. v. Powell Constr. Co., 839 F.2d 958, 967-968 (3d Cir. 1988) ; Henry v. Champlain Enters., 212 F.R.D. 73, 77 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (citing Moore's Federal Practice).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Herrera v. Scully, 143 F.R.D. 545, 549 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
B. Drafting and Serving Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.21

§ 19.21 Setting Forth Each Request for Admission Separately

Each matter for which an admission is requested must be set forth separately, and be directed to a single fact or issue. It is inappropriate to include multiple requests in one statement. Instead, the requesting party should limit individual requests to single, discrete facts. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffect

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
B. Drafting and Serving Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.22

§ 19.22 Including Definitions of Key Terms

To help clarify the meaning and scope of a request, and to enhance its readability, a request for admission may begin with definitions of key terms.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffect

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
B. Drafting and Serving Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.23

§ 19.23 Determining Whether Number of Requests Has Been Limited by Local Rule or Court Order

The number of requests to admit may be limited by local rule or court order. Even if there is no applicable numeric limit, litigants must avoid serving requests to admit that are unnecessarily burdensome or duplicative. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue Burdens

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2).

50 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
B. Drafting and Serving Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.24

§ 19.24 Encompassing Factual Matters in Request

Requests to admit may relate to statements or opinions of fact, and may encompass all of the fact issues in the subject action. n1 A request may relate to opinions of fact, including facts that would otherwise be the subject of expert testimony. n2

A request to admit may encompass a genuine issue for trial. The responding party may not, on that ground alone, object to the request. n3 Requests to admit and the resulting admissions may relate to the ultimate facts of a case, and be dispositive of the case based on those facts. Admissions, even those accruing on a party's default in responding, may be sufficient independent grounds for summary judgment. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjections

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see Pleasant Hill Bank v. United States, 60 F.R.D. 1, 4 n.1 (W.D. Mo. 1973) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See, e.g., Lumpkin v. Meskill, 64 F.R.D. 673, 679 (D. Conn. 1974) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); Chemical Eng'g Corp. v. Essef Indus., Inc., 795 F.2d 1565, 1575 (Fed. Cir. 1986) ; see § 19.47[1].

(n4)Footnote 4. Anchorage Assoc. v. Virgin Islands Bd. of Tax Review, 922 F.2d 168, 176 (3d Cir. 1990) ; Dukes v. South Carolina Ins. Co., 770 F.2d 545, 548-549 (5th Cir. 1985) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
B. Drafting and Serving Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.25

§ 19.25 Applying Law to Facts in Request

Requests to admit may relate to the application of law to fact. This includes the legal effect of certain facts, the inapplicability of certain legal principles to facts, or the causal relationship among facts. In addition, a party may be requested to admit what its obligations are as a matter of law. n1

Pure opinions of law are not contemplated by the rule. Requests to admit may not seek legal conclusions or legal theories. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffect

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); Langer v. Monarch Life Ins. Co., 966 F.2d 786, 802 (3d Cir. 1992) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Golden Valley Microwave Foods, Inc. v. Weaver Popcorn Co., 130 F.R.D. 92, 95-96 (N.D. Ind. 1990) ; EEOC v. Otto, 75 F.R.D. 624, 626 n.1 (D. Md. 1976) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
B. Drafting and Serving Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.26

§ 19.26 Seeking Admission of Genuineness of Documents in Request

Requests to admit may seek admission of the genuineness of documents. Such requests can help parties determine which documents that are to be introduced at trial will present foundational problems. Copies of the subject documents must be served with the request, unless the copies have already been furnished or made available for inspection and copying, or are already in possession of the responding party. n1 It is also permissible to request that a party admit or deny the accuracy of quoted textual material from a particular document relevant to the case, and the request may not be ignored on the ground that it seeks an interpretation of the text. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffect

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see Berry v. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. 110 F.R.D. 441, 443 (N.D. Ind. 1986) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Booth Oil Site Admin. Group v. Safety-Kleen Corp., 194 F.R.D. 76, 80 (W.D.N.Y. 2000) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
B. Drafting and Serving Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.27

§ 19.27 Signing and Certifying Request

The request to admit must be signed by the attorney for the requesting party. If therequesting party is unrepresented, the request should be signed by the party. n1

Along with the signature, the attorney or the pro se party must designate his or her address, e-mail address, and telephone number. n2

The signature of the attorney or party constitutes a certification under Rule 26(g) that the request is made in good faith. Attorneys and parties who make certifications that violate the rule are subject to mandatory sanctions. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsContent & FormCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)-(3).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
B. Drafting and Serving Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.28

§ 19.28 Serving Requests to Admit

[1] General Rule: No Service of Requests Before Rule 26(f) Conference

Requests to admit may be served as determined by:

- Time limits prescribed by federal statutes and local rules n1
- Agreement of the parties n2
- Order of the court n3

In most districts, the parties' Rule 26(f) preliminary discovery conference is the event triggering the opening of formal discovery, including requests for admission. Rule 26(d) disallows parties from seeking discovery before the conference, absent a court order or stipulation between the parties. n4

Requests for admission must be made in a timely manner and are a discovery device for purposes of the discovery deadlines established in a scheduling order. n4.1

[2] Service Must Be on All Parties

The signed requests to admit must be served on the party from whom the admission is requested, and copies of the requests must be served on all other parties in the case in accordance with Rule 5(a). n5 Service may be made by delivery, by mail, or by electronic or other means consented to in writing under Rule 5(b)(2)(F). n6 Service by mail is complete on mailing. n7 Service by electronic means is complete on transmission, and service by other consented means under Rule 5(b)(2)(F) is complete when the person making service delivers the copy to the agency designated to make delivery. n8 Service by electronic means is not effective if the party making service learns that the attempted service did not reach the person to be served. n9

If there is no known address for the party being served, service may be made to the court clerk. n10

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsContent & FormCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsStipulationsGovernmentsCourtsClerks of Court

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26, 36.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f), 36(a).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d)(1), (f).

(n5)Footnote 4.1. Joseph L. v. Connecticut Dep't of Children & Families, 225 F.R.D. 400, 403 (D. Conn. 2005) .

(n6)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(a), 36(a).

(n7)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2).

(n8)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(c); Attick v. United States, 904 F. Supp. 77, 79 (D. Conn. 1995) .

(n9)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(E), (F).

(n10)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(E).

(n11)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(D).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.29

§ 19.29 CHECKLIST: Drafting and Serving Requests to Admit

The following checklist may be used as a general guideline for drafting requests to admit:

☐ Make request unambiguous, simple, and direct. Requests to admit should be precisely calculated to elicit admission useful to requesting party. n1

☐ Set forth each request for admission separately. Limit individual requests to single, discrete facts, to ensure that no objection will result, and to reduce the likelihood of confused or evasive answers. n2

☐ Verify that requests solicit only useful and permissible information. Requests to admit may be directed to any non-privileged matter relevant to the claims or defenses of any of the parties, and may concern any of the following: n3

- ☐ Statements or opinions of facts, including the ultimate facts of the case. n4
- ☐ Application of law to facts. n5
- ☐ Question of genuineness of documents. n6

☐ Determine whether requests to admit are limited. The number of requests for admissions allowable may be limited by local rule or court order. n7

☐ Have request signed by proper party, and include address of party. The request for admission must be signed by the attorney for the requesting party, or if the requesting party is not represented by counsel, by the party; the signing party must also designate his or her address, e-mail address, and telephone number. n8

☐ Attach documents if request concerns genuineness of documents. Copies ofdocuments must be served with the request, unless copies have already been furnished or made available for inspection and copying, or are already in possession of the responding party. n9

☐ Verify that request does not place excessive burden on responding party. A protective order may be sought by the responding party if the request is excessively burdensome. n10

☐ Ascertain that requests do not offer possible grounds for objection. The following are bases for objecting to requests:

- ☐ Requested matter goes beyond permissible scope of discovery. n11
- ☐ Requested matter is protected by privilege. n12
- ☐ Request is unduly burdensome because it is convoluted, vague, ambiguous, or otherwise requires extensive analysis or explanation. n13
- ☐ Facts sought to be admitted by requests are not ascertainable merely by examination of the request (for example, request incorporates material by reference). n14
- ☐ Document that is subject of request has not been attached to the request, and has not otherwise been furnished or made available for inspection and copying. n15

☐ Determine whether service of requests to admit must await discovery conference or other established time. Service generally must await the parties' Rule 26(f) discovery conference, absent a court order or stipulation between the parties. n16

☐ Serve request for admission on appropriate parties:

- ☐ Serve original on party from whom admission is requested. The original signed request for admission must be served on the party from whom the admission is requested. n17
- ☐ Serve copies served on all other parties who have appeared in the action. Copies of the request must be served to all other parties who have appeared in the pending action. n18
- ☐ Adhere to all requirements for proper service. Proper service may be made by delivery, by mail, or by electronic or other means consented to in writing under Rule 5(b)(2)(D). n19

Service by mail is complete on mailing. n20 Service by electronic means is complete on transmission, and service by other consented means under Rule 5(b)(2)(D) is complete when the person making service delivers the copy to the agency designated to make delivery. n20.1 Service by electronic means is not effective if the party making service learns that the attempted service did not reach the person to be served. n21 If there is no known address for the party being served, service may be made to the court clerk. n22

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeService of ProcessMethodsElectronic MeansCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsContent & FormCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsStipulationsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective OrdersCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue Burdens

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 19.20.

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 19.21.

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b), 36(a).

(n4)Footnote 4. See § 19.24.

(n5)Footnote 5. See § 19.25.

(n6)Footnote 6. See § 19.26.

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2); see § 19.23.

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1), 36(a); see § 19.27.

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see § 19.26.

(n10)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b), 36(a); see § 19.46[3].

(n12)Footnote 12. See § 19.46[4].

(n13)Footnote 13. See § 19.46[5].

(n14)Footnote 14. See § 19.46[6].

(n15)Footnote 15. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see § 19.46[7].

(n16)Footnote 16. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d)(1), (f), 36(a).

(n17)Footnote 17. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(a), 36(a); see § 19.28[1].

(n18)Footnote 18. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(a), 36(a); see § 19.28[2].

(n19)Footnote 19. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2).

(n20)Footnote 20. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(C).

(n21)Footnote 20.1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(F).

(n22)Footnote 21. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(E).

(n23)Footnote 22. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(D).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
B. Drafting and Serving Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 19.30 through 19.39

[Reserved]

§§ 19.30[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.40

§ 19.40 Written Response Typically Required Within 30 Days, Absent Court Order or Stipulation

If no stipulation or court order provides for specific response time, the responding party must serve a written response to the requests to admit on the requesting party within 30 days of service of the request. n1

If the request to admit was served to the clerk, electronically, or by mail, or by other agreed-upon means, an additional three days are added to the time to respond. If the parties stipulate to extend the time to respond, they may not extend the time beyond the date set for trial or a motion hearing, or the discovery cutoff date, without court approval. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticePleadingsTime LimitationsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsStipulations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 29 (discovery stipulations).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(d), 29.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.41

§ 19.41 Drafting Responses to Requests to Admit

The response to a request for admission must be in writing. n1

The response must meet the substance of the requested admission. A party cannot object to the entire request to admit on the basis of an objection to part of the request. n2

The response may consist of any of the following, or a combination of any of the following, which must be explicitly set forth: n3

- Admission [see § 19.42]
- Admission or denial with qualification [see § 19.43]
- Full denial [see § 19.44]
- Statement of lack of information or knowledge, and statement of reasons why responding party cannot admit or deny [see § 19.45]
- Objections to form or substance of request [see § 19.46]
- Request for extension of time to respond [see Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a)]
- Request for protective order [see Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c)]
- No response, which is deemed to be an admission [see § 19.42]

A response to a request for admission stating that the answers may be found in "previously produced business records" is improper. n3.1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticePleadingsTime LimitationsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective Orders

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); Jackson Buff Corp. v. Marcelle, 20 F.R.D. 139, 140 (E.D.N.Y. 1957) ; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(2), 37.

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n4)Footnote 3.1. In re Heritage Bond Litig., 220 F.R.D. 624, 626 (C.D. Cal. 2004) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.42

§ 19.42 Admitting Without Qualification

If the responding party chooses to admit the request without qualification, a simple unambiguous, explicit, concise, and specific admission is sufficient. The responding party need not specify any evidence or authority underlying the admission, or give the names of witnesses he or she will call. n1

An admission without qualification also results if a request is not responded to within 30 days, or within any other time agreed to by parties or established by the court. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffect

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); Van Horne v. Hines, 31 F. Supp. 346, 348 (D.D.C. 1940) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

60 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.43

§ 19.43 Admitting or Denying With Qualification

The responding party may admit or deny with qualification. A qualified admission can be used if an admission is ostensibly true, but the responding party cannot in good faith admit it without some necessary contextual explanation to remedy any improper inferences. If an admission is qualified, or the party denies only part of a requested matter, it must state specifically what part of the request is true, and explain or deny only the remainder. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffect

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); Henry v. Champlain Enters., 212 F.R.D. 73, 77 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (citing Moore's Federal Practice).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.44

§ 19.44 Denying Fully

A responding party may make full denials as to admissions it knows to be untrue. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffect

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.45

§ 19.45 Stating Lack of Information or Knowledge

[1] Providing Specific Response

A responding party who cannot truthfully admit or deny a request for admission must serve a written answer on the requesting party. The answer should include the following: n1

- A specification of reasons why it is not possible to admit or deny
- A statement that the responding party has made a reasonable inquiry in its attempt to respond to the request [see [2], below]
- A statement that the information known or readily obtainable by the party is insufficient to enable the party to admit or deny

[2] Meeting Obligation of Reasonable Inquiry

The responding party may not simply respond that it lacks information or knowledge regarding the matter in question as an excuse for not admitting or qualifying further, without stating in good faith that it has made a reasonable inquiry and that the information known or readily obtainable is insufficient to enable it to admit or deny. n1.1

Reasonable inquiry includes investigation and inquiry of any of the responding party's officers, administrators, agents, employees, servants, enlisted, or other personnel who conceivably and realistically may have information that may lead to or furnish the necessary and appropriate response, as well as reviewing relevant documents and regulations. n2

If information is held by an individual or entity with which the responding party maintains a relationship that enables it to readily obtain required information, the party is expected to seek out the information. n3

If relevant information is readily available or available through reasonable inquiry, a response based on lack of personal knowledge may be deemed inadequate. A party cannot object by the mere assertion that it would have to contact third persons to prepare responses. n4

If the responding party has failed to make a reasonable inquiry, the court, on motion of the requesting party, may order that the matter be admitted or require an amended answer. n5

[3] Claiming Lack of Access to Documents

With respect to requests to admit concerning the genuineness of documents, a factual assertion by the responding party that it does not have, or have access to, the documents appears to be sufficient. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponses

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see Han v. Food and Nutrition Serv., 580 F. Supp. 1564, 1566 (D.N.J. 1984) .

(n2)Footnote 1.1. See Concerned Citizens v. Belle Haven Club, 223 F.R.D. 39, 44 (D. Conn. 2004) (citing Moore's Federal Practice).

(n3)Footnote 2. See Asea, Inc. v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co., 669 F.2d 1242, 1247 (9th Cir. 1981) .

(n4)Footnote 3. A & V Fishing, Inc. v. Home Ins. Co., 145 F.R.D. 285, 288 (D. Mass. 1993) .

(n5)Footnote 4. Van Wagenen v. CONRAIL, 170 F.R.D. 86, 88 (N.D.N.Y. 1997) ; Hesselbine v. Wedel, 44 F.R.D. 431, 433 (W.D. Okla. 1968) .

(n6)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n7)Footnote 6. See Dallis v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 100 F.R.D. 765, 767 (N.D. Ga. 1984) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.46

§ 19.46 Objecting to Form or Substance of Request

[1] Establishing Basis of Objection With Specificity

Whether an objection is based on form or substance, the responding party must specify the reasons for the objection. n1

If a responding party objects to a particular portion of the request, the response should identify that portion and the objection to it, and the responding party should unambiguously answer the portion of the request to which the objection does not apply. Courts will generally sustain objections to the invalid requests, and direct the responding party to respond to the valid requests. n2

[2] Avoiding Waiver of Objection by Responding

If the responding party responds to the request without objecting to it, any objection is waived. Nonetheless, the court on motion may still permit withdrawal or amendment of an admission. n3

[3] Basing Objection on Issues of Scope

A responding party may validly object if the requested matter goes beyond the scope of discovery. n4

Possible objections in include:

- The request concerns a matter that is irrelevant to the subject matter of the litigation n5
- The request seeks information regarding trial strategy; for example, a request seeking identification of evidence the opposing party plans to present n6

[4] Basing Objection on Privilege

An objection to a request to admit may be based on the responding party'sclaim that the information sought involves privileged matters, such as matters within the attorney-client privilege, the privilege against self-incrimination, or the government privilege. An objection based on privilege must specify the claimed privilege, and how the request violates that privilege. n7

If a criminal matter is pending against the responding party based on the same facts as the civil case, the responding party may be able to object on the basis thatresponding to the request would infringe on the party's right against self-incrimination. Even though Rule 36 states clearly that an admission obtained under the rule is intended to be used only in the pending action, and that the admission may not be used against the responding party in any other proceeding, the Rule does not provide the responding party with adequate protection if a criminal matter is simultaneously pending against the responding party based on the same facts. n8

[5] Objecting Because Requests Are Unduly Burdensome

Undue burden may provide a ground for objection. Requests that are prolix, convoluted, vague, ambiguous, or otherwise require extensive analysis or explanation are usually objectionable. n9

The number of requests that may be served in any given case will depend on the circumstances of that case, subject to the trial judge's discretion.

[6] Objecting Because Facts Sought to Be Admitted Are Not Ascertainable Merely by Examination of Request

An objection to the format of a request to admit may be sustained if the facts sought to be admitted are not ascertainable merely by examination of the request. For example, a request concerning matters that are incorporated by reference is usually not permitted, except in exceptional circumstances. n10

[7] Objecting Because Document Was Not Attached to Request

The responding party may object to a request that seeks to establish the genuineness of a document if the document in question is not attached to the request, or if the document has not otherwise been furnished or made available for inspection and copying by the responding party. n11

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsWithdrawals

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see, e.g., SEC v. Micro-Moisture Controls, 21 F.R.D. 164, 166-167 (S.D.N.Y. 1957) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see English v. Cowell, 117 F.R.D. 132, 135 (C.D. Ill. 1986) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); Pleasant Hill Bank v. United States, 60 F.R.D. 1, 4 (W.D. Mo. 1973) ; see §§ 19.60-19.62 (seeking leave of court to withdraw or amend admission).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n6)Footnote 6. Howell v. Maytag, 168 F.R.D. 502, 504 (M.D. Pa. 1996) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see United States v. 266 Tonawanda Trail, 95 F.3d 422, 428 n. 10 (6th Cir.

1996) (citing Moore's Federal Practice).

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); SEC v. Cayman Islands Reinsurance Corp., 551 F. Supp. 1056, 1059 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) ; Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Logsdon, 18 F.R.D. 57, 58 (W.D. Ky. 1955) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); Herrera v. Scully, 143 F.R.D. 545, 550 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see United States v. Watchmakers of Switzerland Info. Ctr., Inc., 25 F.R.D. 197, 200 (S.D.N.Y. 1959) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.47

§ 19.47 Avoiding Improper Basis for Objection to Request

[1] Improper Objection: Request Entails Genuine Issue for Trial

A party may not object on the basis that the requested matter constitutes a genuine issue for trial, or that the request goes to a disputed matter that presents a genuine issue for trial. n1

Instead, subject to the provisions of Rule 37(c), the responding party may deny the matter, or set forth reasons why the party cannot admit or deny it. n2

[2] Improper Objection: Burden of Proof Is on Requesting Party

A party may not object to a request for admission on the basis that the request is improper because the requesting party bears the burden of proof on the matter requested. n3

[3] Improper Objection: Matters Are Within Knowledge of Requesting Party

A party may not object on the basis that the requested matters consist of facts within the knowledge of the requesting party. n4 The purpose of Rule 36 is to identify or to eliminate facts as matters in controversy, not to discover facts. n5

[4] Improper Objection: Request Concerns Opinions of Fact or Application of Law to Fact

A party may not object on the basis that the request asks for an opinion of fact or the application of law to fact, because these are legitimate subjects of inquiry under Rule 36. n6

[5] Improper Objection: Lack of Personal Knowledge

A responding party may not object to a request on the basis that the party lacks personal knowledge, if the information is obtainable on reasonable inquiry. n7

[6] Improper Objection: Depositions Will Duplicate Admission Requests

A responding party may not object to a request on the ground that depositions already scheduled will duplicate the admission requests, or that the same questions raised in the request were previously asked and answered at a deposition. n8 One of the key uses of requests to admit is to avoid discovery of unessential or uncontested facts. If a party has admitted a matter to be true, however, and the opponent nonetheless conducts additional discovery on that identical matter, the responding party may seeka protective order pursuant to Rule 26(c). n9

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsEffectCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjectionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponses

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); Chemical Eng'g Corp. v. Essef Indus., Inc., 795 F.2d 1565, 1575 (Fed. Cir. 1986) ; In re M & L Bus. Mach. Co., 184 B.R. 366, 368 (D. Colo. 1995) ; see § 19.25.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a), 37(c).

(n3)Footnote 3. See House v. Giant of Maryland LLC, 232 F.R.D. 257, 260 (E.D. Va. 2005) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Webb v. Westinghouse Elec. Co., 81 F.R.D. 431, 436 (E.D. Pa. 1978) ; see also Al-Jundi v. Rockefeller, 91 F.R.D. 590, 594 (W.D.N.Y. 1981) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); O'Neill v. Medad, 166 F.R.D. 19, 21 (E.D. Mich. 1996) ; Wigler v. Electronic Data Sys. Corp., 108 F.R.D. 204, 205 (D. Md. 1985) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n7)Footnote 7. Herrera v. Scully, 143 F.R.D. 545, 548 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See United States v. Kasuboski, 834 F. 2d 1345, 1349 (7th Cir. 1988) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c); Al-Jundi v. Rockefeller, 91 F.R.D. 590, 594 (W.D.N.Y. 1981) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.48

§ 19.48 Signing and Certifying Response

Counsel for the responding party must sign the response. If the responding party is unrepresented, the response must be signed by the responding party. Along with the signature, the attorney or the pro se party must designate his or her address, e-mail address, and telephone number. The response need not be verified. n1

The signature of the attorney or party constitutes a certification pursuant to Rule 26(g). Attorneys and parties who make certifications that violate the rule are subject to mandatory sanctions. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1), 36(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(3).

66 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.49

§ 19.49 Serving Responses to Requests to Admit

The responding party must serve the original response on the requesting party, and serve copies of the response on all other parties in the case in accordance with Rule 5(a). Service may be made by delivery, by mail, by electronic or other means under Rule 5(b)(2)(D), or to the clerk of the court if there is no known address. n1 Service by mail is complete on mailing. n2 Service by electronic means is complete on transmission, and service by other consented means under Rule 5(b)(2)(D) is complete when the person making service delivers the copy to the agency designated to make delivery. n3 Service by electronic means is not effective if the party making service learns that the attempted service did not reach the person to be served. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeService of ProcessMethodsElectronic MeansCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponses

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(C).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(F).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(E).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.50

§ 19.50 CHECKLIST: Drafting, Serving, and Filing Responses to Requests to Admit

The following checklist may be used as a general guideline for drafting a response to a request for admission:

☐ Determine time in which response must be submitted:

☐ 30-day deadline: Response generally must be made within 30 days of service of the request. n1

☐ Different period stipulated by parties or ordered by court: Court order, or written stipulation of parties, may lengthen or shorten the 30-day period. n2 If the parties stipulate to extend the time to respond, they may not extend the time beyond the date set for trial or a motion hearing, or the discovery cutoff date, without court approval. n3

☐ Three-day addition for some delivery methods. If the request for admission was originally sent electronically by mail, or by other agreed-upon means to the responding party, an additional three days are added to the time to respond. Three days are also added to the resonse time when the clerk is served. n4

☐ Set forth response or objection to request. Response may include any of the following, and in any combination, and must fairly meet the substance of the requested admission.

☐ Admission or qualified admission as response. If admission is with qualification, it must specify its qualification or denial of the remainder. n5

☐ Full denial. n6

☐ Lack of information or knowledge after reasonable inquiry. Responding party must state that reasonable inquiry has been made to acquire the requisite information or knowledge. n7

☐ Objection to requests for admission. The responding party may state specific objections to the request or a specific part of the request (in which case the remainder of the request must be answered), on the following bases: n8

☐ Request is not within scope of subject matter of action. In general, the acceptable scope are any matters with the scope of Rule 26(b)(1). n9

☐ Responding party is protected by privilege. This may include the privilege against self incrimination or another privilege. n10

☐ Request is unduly burdensome on responding party. In addition, the responding party may bring a motion for a protective order. n11

☐ Facts sought to be admitted are not ascertainable merely by examining request. Incorrect form would include requests that do not state all relevant matters to be admitted, but rather incorporate some matters by reference. n12

☐ Document was not included with request concerning genuineness of document. Copies of subject documents must be served with request, unless they have been or are otherwise furnished or made available for copying. n13

☐ Have response signed by proper party. The response must be signed by attorney of the responding party, or if the litigant is acting pro se, the responding party, and it must include the address, e-mail address, and telephone numberof the person signing. n14

☐ Serve original response on party who requested admission. The signed response to the request for admission must be served on the party requesting the admission. n15

☐ Serve copies of response on all other parties who have appeared in pending action. Copies of the request must be served to all other parties in the case. n16

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsContent & FormCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjectionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective Orders

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see § 19.40.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see § 19.40.

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 29.

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(d).

(n5)Footnote 5. See §§ 19.42-19.43.

(n6)Footnote 6. See § 19.44.

(n7)Footnote 7. See § 19.45.

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see § 19.46.

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1), 36(a); see § 19.46[3].

(n10)Footnote 10. See § 19.46[4].

(n11)Footnote 11. See § 19.46[5].

(n12)Footnote 12. See § 19.46[6].

(n13)Footnote 13. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see § 19.46[7].

(n14)Footnote 14. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g), 36(a).

(n15)Footnote 15. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(a), 36(a).

(n16)Footnote 16. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(a), 36(a).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
C. Responding to Requests for Admission

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 19.51 through 19.59

[Reserved]

§§ 19.51[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
D. Seeking Withdrawal, Amendment, or Late Response

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.60

§ 19.60 Seeking Court Order Permitting Withdrawal or Amendment of Admission, or Permitting Late Response

[1] Court's Permission Based on Two-Part Test

Courts occasionally permit withdrawal or amendment of responses, or the submission of a late response. n1 Such relief must be sought by motion, and is subject to the provisions of Rule 16 governing amendment of a pretrial order. n2

Courts apply a two-part test in determining whether to grant or deny a request for amendment, withdrawal, or late response: n3

- The presentation of the merits must be subserved by allowing the amendment, withdrawal, or late response
- The party who served the request for admission must not be prejudiced in its presentation of the case if the amendment, withdrawal, or late response is permitted n3.1

[2] Different Burdens on Moving and Non-Moving Parties

The party moving for relief has the burden of establishing that allowing the amendment, withdrawal, or late response will subserve the merits of the case. n4

The party who obtained the admission has the burden of showing that it will be prejudiced if the amendment or withdrawal is allowed. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjectionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsWithdrawals

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., Rolscreen v. Pella Prods. of St. Louis, Inc., 64 F.3d 1202, 1209-1210 (8th Cir. 1995) ; Hadley v. United States, 45 F.3d 1345, 1349 (9th Cir. 1995) ; Chrysler Credit Corp.v. Whitney Nat'l Bank, 824 F.

Supp. 587, 595 (E.D. La. 1993) ; Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians v. United States, 861 F. Supp. 841, 843 (D. Minn. 1990) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16, 36(b); Donovan v. Carls Drug Co., 703 F.2d 650, 651-652 (2d Cir. 1983) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); American Auto. Ass'n v. AAA Legal Clinic, 930 F.2d 1117, 1119 (5th Cir. 1991) .

(n4)Footnote 3.1. See Banos v. City of Chicago, 398 F.3d 889, 892 (7th Cir. 2005) .

(n5)Footnote 4. *Weeks Stevedoring Co. v. Raymond Int'l Bldrs., Inc., No. 88 Civ. 3865 (MJL), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19266, at 8, 9 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 28, 1995) .

(n6)Footnote 5. Hadley v. United States, 45 F.3d 1345, 1348 (9th Cir. 1995) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
D. Seeking Withdrawal, Amendment, or Late Response

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.61

§ 19.61 Importance of Timing of Request for Court's Ruling

[1] File Motion as Early as Possible

The proper procedure to amend or withdraw an admission, or to request additional time for a late response, is to file a motion as quickly as possible after determining thataction is required. This is true even if the requested matters have been deemed admitted because of a failure to respond to the requests in a timely fashion. n1

Rule 36(b) contemplates prejudice arising from the difficulty a party may face in proving its case because of the sudden need to obtain evidence required to prove the matter that had been admitted. n2 The party opposing the motion has the burden of showing that withdrawal or amendment will prejudice that party in maintaining the action or defense on the merits. n3 The moving party need not prove excusable neglect. n4

[2] Consider Likelihood of Prejudice for Withdrawals During Trial

Courts are more likely to find prejudice from the withdrawal of an admission when the motion for withdrawal of the admission is made in the middle of trial. n5 Once trial has begun, the judge may not permit withdrawal or amendment of a Rule 36 admission, unless failure to do so would cause manifest injustice. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjectionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsWithdrawals

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. United States v. Kasuboski, 834 F.2d 1345, 1350 (7th Cir. 1987) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Gutting v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 710 F.2d 1309, 1313-1314 (8th Cir. 1983) ; Brook Village North Assocs. v. General Elec. Co., 686 F.2d 66, 70 (1st Cir. 1982) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Hadley v. United States, 45 F.3d 1345, 1348 (9th Cir. 1995) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); Jones v. Employers Ins. of Wausau, 96 F.R.D. 227, 230 (N.D. Ga. 1982) (citing Moore's Federal Practice).

(n5)Footnote 5. Hadley v. United States, 45 F.3d 1345, 1349 (9th Cir. 1995) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); American Auto. Ass'n v. AAA Legal Clinic, 930 F.2d 1117, 1120 (5th Cir. 1991) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
D. Seeking Withdrawal, Amendment, or Late Response

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.62

§ 19.62 Review Based on Abuse of Discretion Standard

Any review of the district court's determination of whether to allow an amendment or a withdrawal is based on an abuse of discretion standard. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjectionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsWithdrawalsCivil ProcedureAppealsStandards of ReviewAbuse of Discretion

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See American Auto. Ass'n v. AAA Legal Clinic, 930 F.2d 1117, 1119 (5th Cir. 1991) ; Atakpa v. Perimeter Ob-Gyn Assocs., 912 F. Supp. 1566, 1581 (N.D. Ga. 1994) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
D. Seeking Withdrawal, Amendment, or Late Response

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.63

§ 19.63 CHECKLIST: Moving for Withdrawal and Amendment of Admission or Relief From Untimely Response

☐ Determine whether court's two-part test would be satisfied. The court must apply a two-part test in determining whether to grant or deny a request for amendment, withdrawal, or late response: n1

- ☐ The presentation of the merits must be subserved by allowing the amendment, withdrawal, or late response.
- ☐ The party who obtained the admission must not be prejudiced in its presentation of the case if the amendment, withdrawal, or late response is permitted.

☐ Consider burdens of proof. Different burdens of proof fall on the parties as follows: n2

- ☐ The party moving for amendment, withdrawal, or late response has burden of establishing that allowing the amendment, withdrawal, or late response will subserve the merits of the case.
- ☐ The non-moving party has burden of showing that it will be prejudiced if the amendment or withdrawal is allowed.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjectionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsWithdrawalsCivil ProcedureAppealsStandards of ReviewAbuse of Discretion

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); American Auto. Ass'n v. AAA Legal Clinic, 930 F.2d 1117, 1119 (5th Cir. 1991)

; Upchurch v. USTNET, Inc., 160 F.R.D. 131, 132 (D. Ore. 1995) ; see § 19.60[1].

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 19.60[2].

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
D. Seeking Withdrawal, Amendment, or Late Response

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 19.64 through 19.99

[Reserved]

§§ 19.64[Reserved]

74 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
E. Forms

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.100

§ 19.100 Request for Admission

[1] FORM

Request for Admission

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

Request for Admission

[Party designation and name of requesting party] requests [party designation and name of party from whom admissions are sought] within 30 days after service of this request to admit, for the purpose of this action only and subject to all pertinent objections to admissibility that may be interposed at the trial, the truth of the following matters for purposes of this action.

Under the provisions of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 36, you are required to respond to the Request for Admission, in writing, within 30 days of the service of this request. Your response must be signed as required by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 26(g). If you fail to respond to the Request for Admission within 30 days of service, every matter set forth in this request may be deemed admitted and conclusively established against you for purposes of this action.

REQUEST No. 1: [State matter on which admission is requested].

REQUEST No. 2: [State matter on which admission is requested].

REQUEST No. 3: [State matter on which admission is requested].

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local district court rules]

TO: [Name of counsel for party from whom admissions are sought], Attorney for [name of party from whom admissions are sought]
[Address of counsel]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of request for admission for use by a party seeking admitted facts from an opposing party.

[3] Subject Matter of Requests

A party may serve a written request for the admission of any matters within the scope of Rule 26(b) that relates to the following: n1

- Statements or opinions of fact
- The application of law to fact
- The genuineness of any documents described in the request

[4] Each Matter Must Be Described Separately

Each matter of which an admission is requested must be separately set forth. n2

[5] Signature Required

Requests to admit must be signed by the propounding party's attorney, and must state the signer's address, e-mail address, and telephone number. n3

[6] Rule 26(f) Meeting May Be Required Prior to Formal Discovery

Under the Federal Rules, formal discovery must await the parties' initial discovery planning meeting, as required by Rule 26(d) and (f). n4

[7] Service and Filing

The signed request for admission must be served on the party from whom the admission is requested and copies of the request must be served on all other parties in the case in accordance with Rule 5(a). Service may be made on a party by mail to his or her last known address, provided that service requirements of Rule 5(b) are met. Service is complete on mailing. Copies of documents must be served with the request unless they have been or are otherwise furnished or made available for inspection and copying. Without leave of court or written stipulation, requests for admission may not be served before the time specified in Rule 26(d). n5

Discovery requests and responses shall not be filed unless they are used in the proceedings or the court orders filing. n6

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see § 19.21.

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d)(1), 36(a).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(a), 36(a).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
E. Forms

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.101

§ 19.101 Response to Request for Admission

[1] FORM

Response to Request for Admission

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

Answers and Objections to Request for Admission

Party designation and name of responding party], answers and objects to the request for admission served on him (or her) by [party designation and name of requesting party] on[date] as follows:

REQUEST No. 1: [Reproduce request]

ANSWER to Request No. 1: [Admission, denial, or statement of inability to admit or deny, including assertion of reasonable inquiry and partial response if possible]

REQUEST No. 2: [Reproduce request]

OBJECTION to Request No. 2: [Reasons for objection]

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local

district court rules]

TO: [Name of counsel for requesting party], Attorney for [name of party]
[Address of counsel for requesting party]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of response to a request for admission. The response includes samples for answers and objections and must be modified to suit each request and response.

[3] Responses Required to Avoid Admission

A matter stated in a request for admission is admitted unless, within 30 days after service of the request, or within such shorter or longer times as the court may allow, the party to whom the request is directed serves on the party requesting the admission a written answer or objection addressed to the matter, signed by the party or by the party's attorney. n1

[4] Denials and Objections Must Be Specific

If objection is made, the reasons for the objection must be stated. The answer must specifically deny the matter or set forth in detail the reasons why the answering party cannot truthfully admit or deny the matter. A denial must fairly meet the substance of the requested admission. When good faith requires that a party qualify his or her answer or deny only a part of the matter of which an admission is requested, he or she must specify so much of it as is true and qualify or deny the remainder. n2

[5] Lack of Knowledge Must Be Supported by Reasonable Inquiry

An answering party may not give lack of information or knowledge as a reason for failure to admit or deny unless he or she states that he or she has made reasonable inquiry and that the information known or readily obtainable by him or her is insufficient to enable him or her to admit or deny. n3

[6] Genuine Trial Issue Must Be Addressed

A party who considers that a matter of which an admission has been requested presents a genuine issue for trial may not, on that ground alone, object to the request. He or she may, subject to the provisions of Rule 37(c), deny the matter or set forth reasons why he or she cannot admit or deny it. n4

[7] Service and Filing

The responding party must serve the original response on the requesting party or attorney for the represented party and serve copies on all other parties in the case in accordance with Rule 5. Service may be made by delivery, by mail, by electronic or other means under Rule 5(b)(2)(D), or to the clerk of the court if there is no known address. n4.1 Service by mail is complete on mailing. n5 Service by electronic means is complete on transmission, and service by other consented means under Rule 5(b)(2)(D) is complete when the person making service delivers the copy to the agency designated to make delivery. n5.1 Service by electronic means is not effective if the party making service learns that the attempted service did not reach the person to be served. n5.2

Discovery requests and responses shall not be filed unless they are used in theproceedings or the court orders filing. n6

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see § 19.41[1].

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see § 19.45.

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2); see also § 19.47[1].

(n5)Footnote 4.1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b).

(n6)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(C).

(n7)Footnote 5.1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(F).

(n8)Footnote 5.2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(E).

(n9)Footnote 6. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 19 Requests to Admit
E. Forms

2-19 Federal Litigation Guide § 19.102

§ 19.102 Notice of Motion for Leave to Withdraw or Amend Admission

[1] FORM

Notice of Motion for Leave to Withdraw or Amend Admission

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)], or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, [party designation and name of responding party] will move this Court, at the United States Courthouse located at [address of Court], Courtroom [courtroom number], for an order:

(a) pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 36(b), to [withdraw or amend] [his/her] admissions to Requests No. [numbers] given by [him/her] on [date] in response to the Request for Admission served by [party designation and name of requesting party] on [date], on the ground that [state basis of motion]; and

(b) granting [moving party] such other incidental relief as may be appropriate.

This motion is based on this Notice of Motion, the accompanying Affidavit (or appropriate affidavit substitute) of [name of signatory] sworn to (or dated) [date], the accompanying Memorandum of Law [if required] dated [date], and on all of the pleadings and papers on file in this action.

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local district court rules]

TO: [Name of opposing counsel], Attorney for [name of party]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of notice of motion for use by a party who responded to a request for admission to obtain an order to withdraw or amend certain admissions made in the response.

[3] Grounds for Withdrawal or Amendment of Admissions

A court may permit withdrawal or amendment of an admission on motion by the party who responded to a request for admission. The court may grant the motion, subject to Fed. R. Civ. P. 16 (amendment of pretrial order) if both of the following requirements are present: n1

- The presentation of the merits of the action will be subserved by the withdrawal or amendment
- The party who obtained the admission fails to satisfy the court that withdrawal or amendment will prejudice that party in maintaining the action or defense on the merits

[4] Timing of Motion

A motion to withdraw or amend an admission must be filed as quickly as possible after determining that motion is required. This is true even if the requested matters have been deemed admitted because of a failure to respond to the request in a timely fashion. n2

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 19.61.

77 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide 20.syn

§ 20.syn Synopsis to Chapter 20: Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *

§ 20.01 Scope of Discovery Under Rule 34

§ 20.02 Use Limited to Pending Action

§ 20.03 Use Generally Limited to Pretrial Discovery

§ 20.04 Use Limited to Parties

§ 20.05 No Limit on Number of Requests for Production and Inspection

§ 20.06 Comparing Rule 34 Discovery With Subpoena to Nonparty Under Rule 45

§ 20.07 Ensuring Timely Request
[1] Restrictions on Timing of Discovery
[2] Mandatory Disclosure Provisions Generally Affect Timing
[3] Request May Be Untimely If Served After Discovery Cutoff Date

§ 20.08 Ensuring Request Seeks Discoverable Matter
[1] General Rule: Rule 34 May Be Used to Inspect Tangible Things or Land
[2] Limitations to General Rule
[2.--1] Discoverable Matter Must Be Relevant
[2.--2] Unnecessary or Burdensome Requests May Be Barred
[2.--3] Discoverable Matter May Be Protected by Work Product Doctrine
[2.--4] Discoverable Matter May Be Protected by Privilege

§ 20.09 Inspecting "Tangible Things"
[1] Defining "Tangible Things"
[2] "Tangible Things" Includes Computer Software and Hardware

§ 20.10 Inspecting Land and Other Property
[1] Gaining Entry on Premises
[2] Limitations on Use for Entry of Property
[3] Testing of Property and Other Permissible Acts

§ 20.11 Making Requests Specific
[1] Making Requests in Writing
[2] Complying With Required Formalities
[2.--1] Identifying Requested Items Individually or By Category
[2.--2] Describing Requested Items With Reasonable Particularity
[2.--3] Description Satisfying Rule 26(a)(1)(B) Also Should Satisfy Rule 34 Requirements
[2.--4] Specifying Time for Inspection at Least 30 Days After Service of Request
[2.--5] Party May Seek Change in Requested Time
[2.--6] Specifying Reasonable Place and Manner for Inspection

§ 20.12 Certifying Requests

§ 20.13 Serving Appropriate Parties

§ 20.14 CHECKLIST: Drafting Rule 34 Document Request

§§ 20.15 through 20.19 [Reserved]

§ 20.20 Time For Response to Inspection Request Set by Rule 34(b)

§ 20.21 Form of Response
[1] Responding Party Must Produce, Allow Inspection, or State Objection
[2] Reasons For Objections Must Be Given
[3] Waiver of Privilege Objections

§ 20.22 Moving for a Protective Order

§ 20.23 Moving for an Order to Compel Inspection

§§ 20.24 through 20.99 [Reserved]

§ 20.100 Request for Inspection of Property
[1] Form
Request for Inspection of Property
[2] Use of Form
[3] Contents of Request
[4] Signature Required
[5] Rule 26(f) Meeting Generally Required Prior to Commencement of Discovery
[6] Request Must Not Conflict With Mandatory Disclosure Obligations
[7] Effect of Discovery Cutoff Date
[8] Service
[9] Filing Generally Not Permitted

78 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter focuses on inspection of tangible things and entry upon designated land or other property pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 34. Any party may serve on any other party a request to inspect and copy, test, or sample tangible things which are in the possession, custody or control of the party upon whom the request is served; or to permit entry upon designated land or other property in the possession or control of the party upon whom the request is served for the purpose of inspection and measuring, surveying, photographing, testing, or sampling the property. The chapter deals with the substantive and procedural matters that are unique to the inspection of land and tangible things under Rule 34. The inspection of tangible things and land in the possession of nonparties is governed by Rule 45 and discussed in Ch. 13, Production of Documents.

The chapter outlines the key legal, strategic, and tactical issues concerning inspection requests, including the procedural and substantive requirements for requests. Local rules must be consulted before proceeding under Rule 34, as district courts may impose procedural requirements and limitations in addition to those found in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

The chapter includes a sample request for documents, and discusses procedural requirements and use of the form.

For related coverage, see Ch. 13, Production of Documents, Ch. 14, Document Responses, and Ch. 15, Management of Documents.

For expanded coverage of inspections of land, see Moore's Federal Practice, Ch. 34, Production of Documents and Things and Entry Upon Land for Inspection and Other Purposes (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.01

§ 20.01 Scope of Discovery Under Rule 34

Fed. R. Civ. P. 34 authorizes and provides a procedure for the inspection of documents and tangible things in the possession custody, or control of a party, as well as the inspection of land possessed or controlled by a party. n1

This chapter focuses on discovery of tangible things and inspection of land and other property. n2 Rule 34 authorizes not only inspection and copying, but also testing or sampling of tangible things, and permits such procedures as the testing of allegedly defective machinery or equipment and the sampling or analysis of chemicals. n3 Rule 34 also permits entry upon designated land or other property in the possession or control of a party for the purpose of inspection and measuring, surveying, photographing, testing, or sampling the property or any designated object or operation on it. n4

Rule 34 is most commonly employed to request production of documents. For that reason, most of the substantive, procedural and tactical issues that are likely to arise under Rule 34 are discussed in the chapter relating to the discovery of documents in general; see Ch. 13, Production of Documents. A person not a party to the action may be compelled to submit to an inspection as provided in Rule 45. The procedure for requesting inspection from nonparties under Rule 45 is discussed in Ch. 13, Production of Documents.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 34.

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a)(1).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a)(2).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.02

§ 20.02 Use Limited to Pending Action

Rule 34 discovery is only available after an action is commenced. n1

Perpetuation proceedings pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 27 may be used to obtain production or inspection before the initiation of a formal action. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 27(a).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.03

§ 20.03 Use Generally Limited to Pretrial Discovery

Rule 34 is intended to be used principally as a pretrial discovery device. n1

Whether Rule 34 may be used at trial is generally made moot by the Rule's 30-dayresponse time, the easy availability of a Rule 45 subpoena, and the existence of court-ordered discovery deadlines. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Goldy v. Beal, 91 F.R.D. 451, 456 (M.D. Pa. 1981) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b), (c).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.04

§ 20.04 Use Limited to Parties

A Rule 34 discovery demand may be served by any party on any other party. n1

A plaintiff or defendant may serve a request for inspection on a third-party defendant, and vice versa. Co-plaintiffs and co-defendants may serve Rule 34 requests on each other. n2

Inspection requests against nonparties are governed by Rule 45. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePartiesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Biben v. Card, 119 F.R.D. 421, 424-425 (W.D. Mo. 1987) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(c), 45(d).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.05

§ 20.05 No Limit on Number of Requests for Production and Inspection

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure place no limits on the number of requests permitted under Rule 34. Local rules must be consulted for local limitations. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See e.g., M.D. Ga.. L.R. 34 (limited to 10 requests "[e]xcept with written permission of the court first obtained").

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.06

§ 20.06 Comparing Rule 34 Discovery With Subpoena to Nonparty Under Rule 45

Rule 34 governs the pretrial production and inspection of documents, electronically stored informations and "things" from a party and the entry on a party's premises. n1 Rule 45 is the corresponding provision used when a party desires to obtain such materials in the possession of a nonparty in advance of trial. n2

The procedure for requesting inspection from nonparties under Rule 45 is discussed in Ch. 13, Production of Documents.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(c); see also Contardo v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, 119 F.R.D. 622, 624 (D. Mass. 1988) .

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.07

§ 20.07 Ensuring Timely Request

[1] Restrictions on Timing of Discovery

Rule 34 requests may be served as determined by:

- Time limits prescribed by federal statutes and local rules. n1
- Agreement of the parties. n2
- Order of the court. n3

In most cases, the parties' Rule 26(f) preliminary discovery conference is the event triggering the opening of formal discovery, including Rule 34 requests for inspection. Rule 26(d) disallows parties from seeking discovery before the conference, unless there is a contrary order or agreement of the parties. n4

[2] Mandatory Disclosure Provisions Generally Affect Timing

Except in certain categories of cases, Rule 26(a) requires parties to exchange specified types of information at specified times throughout the litigation, absent court order or stipulation. n5

A court may strike as untimely a Rule 34 request that seeks the same information required by the mandatory disclosure requirements of Rule 26(a) if the Rule 34 request is served before the Rule 26(a) disclosures are due. This general prohibition does not prevent otherwise timely discovery under Rule 34 of independently discoverable things not generated for purposes of mandatory disclosure. n6

For further discussion of how mandatory disclosure provisions may affect timing of inspection demands, see Ch. 13, Production of Documents.

[3] Request May Be Untimely If Served After Discovery Cutoff Date

When the court enters a Rule 16(b) scheduling order setting the time for completion of discovery, a party must seek permission from the court to serve Rule 34 requests that seek inspection after the cutoffdate. This rule applies whether service of the request is accomplished before or after the cutoff date. n7

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & InspectionCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26, 34.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f), 34(b)(2)(A).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(2)(A).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d), (f).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1)-(3).

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.08

§ 20.08 Ensuring Request Seeks Discoverable Matter

[1] General Rule: Rule 34 May Be Used to Inspect Tangible Things or Land

Any party may serve on any other party a request to inspect and copy, test, or sample tangible things which are in the possession, custody or control of the party upon whom the request is served; or to permit entry upon designated land or other property in the possession or control of the party upon whom the request is served for the purpose ofinspection and measuring, surveying, photographing, testing, or sampling the property. n1

The production of tangible things and the inspection of land or other property is not limited by:

- The admissibility of the evidence at trial. n2
- The requesting party's prior knowledge of or access to the matters sought. n3

Note, however, that Rule 34 discovery is subject to Rule 26(b), which allows a court to limit discovery that it finds cumulative or duplicative, burdensome or expensive, or directed at information that the discovering party already has within its control. n4

[2] Limitations to General Rule

[2.--1] Discoverable Matter Must Be Relevant

Discovery under Rule 34 is limited to information that is relevant to the claim or defense of any party. n5 For good cause the court may order discovery of any matter relevant to the subject matter involved in the action. Relevant information need not be admissible at trial if the discovery appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. n6

[2.--2] Unnecessary or Burdensome Requests May Be Barred

The court may limit Rule 34 requests if: n7

- The request is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative.

- The requesting party has had ample opportunity by discovery to obtain the information.
- The burden or expense of the request outweighs its likely benefit.

[2.--3] Discoverable Matter May Be Protected by Work Product Doctrine

The work product doctrine protects tangible things used in preparation for trial that reveal an attorney's legal theories, strategy, evaluation of strengths and weaknesses, and mental impressions. n8

[2.--4] Discoverable Matter May Be Protected by Privilege

Discovery under Rule 34 is limited to information that is not privileged. Discovery of privileged information is not permitted even if the information is relevant to the subject matter of the action. n9

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & InspectionCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue Burdens

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a)(1), (a)(2).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart, 467 U.S. 20, 29-30, 104 S. Ct. 2199, 81 L. Ed. 2d 17 (1984) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Italia di Navigazione, S.p.A. v. M.V. Hermes I, 564 F. Supp. 492, 495 (S.D.N.Y.) , aff'd on other grounds, 724 F.2d 21 (2d Cir. 1983) (citing Moore's); see also Burton Mechanical Contractors, Inc. v. Foreman, 148 F.R.D. 230, 236 (N.D. Ind. 1992) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(2)(b); Schwab v. Wyndham Int'l, Inc., 225 F.R.D. 538, 539 (N.D. Tex. 2005) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3), (4); Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 511-512, 67 S. Ct. 385, 91 L. Ed. 451 (1947) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.09

§ 20.09 Inspecting "Tangible Things"

[1] Defining "Tangible Things"

Courts generally accord "tangible things" a broad, common sense meaning that includes practically everything that is not a document, land, or other form of property covered under Rule 34. n1

Examples of things held subject to an order for production include:

- Dead body. n2
- Fingerprints. n3
- Vaccine samples. n4

[2] "Tangible Things" Includes Computer Software and Hardware

In addition to supplying raw electronic data, a party may also be ordered to produce the software and supporting materials the requesting party needs to make the computer data readable on its own equipment, including operating systems, applications, computer-generated models, and other sets of instructions found in computer memory. n5

Discovery of the computer software needed to process raw electronic data can become especially important when the responding party has made its own unique modificationsto standard software programs. n6

Production of computer hardware may be necessary if the hardware is at issue in the case or is essential to the manipulation of the data. n7

Counsel may wish to consider requesting actual entry into the opposing party's computer system. An expert in information retrieval may be able to find documents that the opposing party "deleted" but which remain accessible. Actual entry into the computer system of another party to obtain data orinformation may be permissible when there is no less intrusive manner available to obtain the information sought, and when measures can be taken to prevent the discovering party from accessing confidential or privileged information and harming the discovered party's computer and data bases. Any order for such discovery should define parameters of time and scope, and place sufficient access restrictions to protect the party from whom discovery is requested.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., Zalatuka v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 108 F.2d 405, 405-406 (7th Cir. 1939) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See, e.g., Zalatuka v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 108 F.2d 405, 405-406 (7th Cir. 1939) (proceedings stayed while body exhumed).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Alford v. Northeast Ins. Co., 102 F.R.D. 99, 101 (N.D. Fla. 1984) (fingerprints found relevant (citing Moore's)).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Williams v. American Cyanamid, 164 F.R.D. 608, 611 (D.N.J. 1995) (permitting testing of polio vaccine for HIV-1 virus in action when child allegedly contracted AIDS from polio vaccine).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Williams v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 119 F.R.D. 648, 651 (W.D. Ky. 1987) (ordering production of computer disc with "codebooks," user's manual, and all documents used in encoding data on disc).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Armstrong v. Bush, 139 F.R.D. 547, 553-554 (D.D.C. 1991) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Haseotes v. Abacab Int'l Computers, Inc., 120 F.R.D. 12, 15 (D. Mass. 1988) .

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.10

§ 20.10 Inspecting Land and Other Property

[1] Gaining Entry on Premises

Rule 34 authorizes a request to a party to permit entry upon designated land "or other property" for the purpose of inspecting, measuring, surveying, photographing, testing, or sampling the property or any object or operation located on the property. n1

The Rule has been used to obtain entry to the following:

- Manufacturing facilities. n2
- Schools. n3
- State mental health facilities. n4
- Ships. n5

The property must be within the possession or control of a party to the litigation in order for access to be obtained under Rule 34. n6

[2] Limitations on Use for Entry of Property

The scope of a request to enter on property is limited only by the broad scope of examination permitted by Rule 26(b). n7

As is the case with the inspection of documents, a court may set conditions governing the entry onto property and any related acts to safeguard against unnecessary disruptions and to protect against unwarranted disclosures. n8

It may be permissible for a court to order the inspecting party to pay compensation if any damage occurs during the course of the inspection or testing. n9

[3] Testing of Property and Other Permissible Acts

Rule 34(a)(2) allows a party to perform various acts in connection with entry onto property, including observation, testing, and photographing. n10

When appropriate, access should be allowed to any consultants and experts a party needs to adequately perform the inspection and related acts. n11

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. See, e.g., Cuno Inc. v. Pall Corp., 116 F.R.D. 279, 280-281 (E.D.N.Y. 1987) ; Eirhart v. Libbey-Owens-Ford Co., 93 F.R.D. 370, 371-372 (N.D. Ill. 1981) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., City of Kingsport v. SCM Corp., 352 F. Supp. 287, 288 (E.D. Tenn. 1972) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See, e.g., N.O. v. Callahan, 110 F.R.D. 637, 640 (D. Mass. 1986) ; New York State Ass'n for Retarded Children v. Carey, 706 F.2d 956, 960-961 (2d Cir.) , cert. denied, 464 U.S. 915 (1983) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Mulligan v. Eastern S.S. Lines, Inc., 6 F.R.D. 601, 606 (S.D.N.Y. 1946) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Rule 45 may be utilized to obtain access when the property is in the control of a nonparty; see Ch. 13, Production of Documents for further discussion.

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a)(2); see Cuno Inc. v. Pall Corp., 116 F.R.D. 279, 281 (E.D.N.Y. 1987) (party need not show "need" for inspection, as scope is governed by "relevance" as set forth in Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)).

(n8)Footnote 8. N.O. v. Callahan, 110 F.R.D. 637, 640-641 (D. Mass. 1986) ; National Dairy Prods. Corp. v. L.D. Schreiber & Co., 61 F.R.D. 581, 583 (E.D. Wis. 1973) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Martin v. Reynolds Metals Corp., 297 F.2d 49, 57 (9th Cir. 1961) (order permitting inspection of cattle and taking urine samples required compensation for any damage done).

(n10)Footnote 10. See New York State Ass'n for Retarded Children v. Carey, 706 F.2d 956, 960 (2d Cir.) , cert. denied, 464 U.S. 915 (1983) ; see also N.O. v. Callahan, 110 F.R.D. 637, 640 (D. Mass. 1986) ; United States v. Bunker Hill Co., 417 F. Supp. 332, 333 (D. Idaho 1976) ; Morales v. Turman, 59 F.R.D. 157, 159 (E.D. Tex. 1972) .

(n11)Footnote 11. New York State Ass'n for Retarded Children v. Carey, 706 F.2d 956, 960 (2d Cir.) , cert. denied, 464 U.S. 915 (1983) ; see also Eirhart v. Libbey-Owens-Ford Co., 93 F.R.D. 370, 372 (N.D. Ill. 1981) .

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.11

§ 20.11 Making Requests Specific

[1] Making Requests in Writing

Rule 34 requests must be in writing. n1 A court may refuse to compel production if it finds the formalities of Rule 34 are not satisfied. n2

[2] Complying With Required Formalities

[2.--1] Identifying Requested Items Individually or By Category

The request must contain the items to be inspected or produced, identified either by individual item or by category. n3

It is good practice to number sequentially each particular request.

[2.--2] Describing Requested Items With Reasonable Particularity

Each item in the request must be described with reasonable particularity. The test is whether a reasonable person would know what property is to be inspected pursuant to the request. n4

Reasonable particularity varies according to the facts and circumstances of each case. n5

[2.--3] Description Satisfying Rule 26(a)(1)(B) Also Should Satisfy Rule 34 Requirements

A "description by category and location" satisfying a party's obligations under Rule 26(a)(1)(A)(ii) (mandatory disclosures regarding documents and things relevant to claims or defenses of the parties) should also satisfy the Rule 34(b) requirement to set forth by category the documents to be inspected with reasonable particularity. n6

Consequently, if a party has furnished a description of documents and things pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1)(A)(ii), the opposing party should be able to use that description in a Rule 34(b) inspection request.

[2.--4] Specifying Time for Inspection at Least 30 Days After Service of Request

The requesting party chooses the time for inspection. The time chosen must be reasonable, and should be at least 30 days after service of the request, extended by three days for service to the clerk if there is no known address, or service by mail or by electronic or other agreed-upon means of delivery. n7

The date chosen for production of the documents should be after the date the response is due, so that the requesting party will know whether the responding party plans to produce the items.

[2.--5] Party May Seek Change in Requested Time

If a party wants more or less time to make a request or to allow for the inspection, the party must do one of the following:

- Obtain an agreement in writing from the opposing party, except that stipulations extending the time for responses may be made only with approval of the court if they would interfere with any time set for completion of discovery, hearing a motion, or for trial. n8

- Obtain a court order. n9

[2.--6] Specifying Reasonable Place and Manner for Inspection

The place and manner of inspection must be reasonable. n10 The place of inspection also is subject to control by the court. n11

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a) (requiring service of process).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Roberts v. Americable Int'l, Inc., 883 F. Supp. 499, 501 n.2 (E.D. Cal. 1995) ; see also Schwartz v. Marketing Publishing Co., 153 F.R.D. 16, 20-21 (D. Conn. 1994) (motion to compel denied as to documents requested in letter).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b); In re Folding Carton Antitrust Litig., 76 F.R.D. 420, 424 (N.D. Ill. 1977) (requests comported with reasonable particularity requirement (citing Moore's)); Mallinckrodt Chem. Works v. Goldman, Sachs & Co., 58 F.R.D. 348, 354 (S.D.N.Y. 1973) (citing Moore's); Camco, Inc. v. Baker Oil Tools, Inc., 45 F.R.D. 384, 386-387 (S.D. Tex. 1968) (basing test on person of "ordinary intelligence").

(n5)Footnote 5. Robbins v. Camden City Bd. of Educ., 105 F.R.D. 49, 60 (D.N.J. 1985) (request for all documents that "refer or relate to" plaintiff was too broad and ambiguous to satisfy particularity standard because all documents in defendant's possession could relate to plaintiff in some way); Westhemeco Ltd. v. New Hampshire Ins. Co., 82 F.R.D. 702, 709 (S.D.N.Y. 1979) (plaintiff failed to request documents with reasonable particularity); In re Folding Carton Antitrust Litig., 76 F.R.D. 420, 424 (N.D. Ill. 1977) (requests comported with reasonable particularity requirement).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 230, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993) ; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1) advisory committee's note (1993).

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(d), 34(b).

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(2)(A); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 29(b).

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(2)(A); Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c)(1)(B).

(n10)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(1)(B).

(n11)Footnote 11. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c)(1)(B), 34(b).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.12

§ 20.12 Certifying Requests

If the requesting party is represented by counsel, the requests must be signed by at least one attorney of record. The attorney must include his or her address, e-mail address, and telephone number. n1 An unrepresented party must certify the requests personally and state his or her address, e-mail address, and telephone number. n2

If the request lacks proper certification, no action need be taken with respect to it by the other parties, and the court will strike the request, unless it is promptly signed after the omission is called to the requestor's attention. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(2).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.13

§ 20.13 Serving Appropriate Parties

A Rule 34 request must be served on the party to whom it is directed and on all other parties in the action, unless the court directs otherwise. Service usually is made by delivery or by mail to each party's attorney of record. n1 Service may also be made byelectronic or other means consented to in writing, or to the clerk of the court if there is no known address. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeService of ProcessMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(a), (b), 34(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(E), (F).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.14

§ 20.14 CHECKLIST: Drafting Rule 34 Document Request

The following checklist may be used as a general guideline for drafting inspection requests under Rule 34:

☐ Determine party status. Determine whether the person or entity to whom the request is to be directed is a party to the action

☐ Determine when requests will be served. Determine when requests will be served, considering:

- ☐ Conference requirements. Ascertain that parties have conferred as required by Rule 26(f), unless a stipulation or court order provides otherwise.
- ☐ Local rules. Review local rules for any exceptions to general rule for service of papers.
- ☐ Shortening time. Consider whether a motion for shortening time for service of responses and objections is appropriate.

☐ Draft requests. Draft each request keeping in mind the following issues:

- ☐ Useful information. Is the request precisely calculated to elicit information useful to the proponent?
- ☐ Mandatory disclosures requirement. Ensure that request does not seek the same information required by Rule 26 before the time those disclosures are due.
- ☐ Organization by individual item or by category. Is the request organized either by individual item or by category?

☐ Description with reasonable particularity. Are the requested documents described with reasonable particularity?

☐ Designation of time for inspection or production. Does the request designate a reasonable time for inspection for inspection or copying?

☐ Date of inspection compared to date of response. Is the date of inspection set at least 30 days after the request is served?

☐ Date of inspection compared to date for completion of discovery. Ensure that the request does not seek production or inspection after the discovery cutoff date.

☐ Designation of reasonable place, and manner for inspection. Does the request designate a reasonable place and manner for inspection?

☐ Number requests sequentially. Number each request sequentially, as required by applicable local rules.

☐ Review possible grounds for objections. Review list of possible grounds for objections, and frame requests, as appropriate, to minimize potential objections.

☐ Certifying request. If requesting party is represented by counsel, have at least one attorney of record sign request, and include an address, e-mail address, and telephone number

☐ Service of requests. Serve requests within appropriate time frame.

☐ Certificate of service. Attach certificate of service, if required by local rules.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & InspectionCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsStipulationsGovernmentsCourtsRule Application & Interpretation

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
A. Using Rule 34 Requests to Inspect Tangible Things, Land, and Other Property

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 20.15 through 20.19

[Reserved]

§§ 20.15[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
B. Responding to Inspection Request

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.20

§ 20.20 Time For Response to Inspection Request Set by Rule 34(b)

A party served with an inspection request under Rule 34 generally has 30 days to file a written response. n1

The court has the discretion to shorten or lengthen the 30-day time period for a response to an inspection request, and the parties may agree in writing to a shorter or longer time, subject to Rule 29. n2 Rule 29 requires court approval of any stipulation extending the time to respond to a Rule 34 request if the extension would interfere with a discovery cut-off date, a motion hearing, or trial. n3

If a shorter time has not been ordered by the court or agreed to between the parties but the requesting party has nevertheless specified a time for production that is less than the time allowed by the Rule for a response, the party may not move to compel discovery under Rule 37(a) until the time allowed by Rule 34 has expired. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticePleadingsTime LimitationsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticePleadingsTime LimitationsExtensionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(2)(A).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(2)(A); Smith v. Conway Org., Inc., 154 F.R.D. 73, 76 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (agreement to extend time to respond to document request must be in writing to be enforceable).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 29.

(n4)Footnote 4. See GFI Computer Indus., Inc. v. Fry, 476 F.2d 1, 3-4 (5th Cir. 1973) (plaintiff had requested production in less than allotted time and had filed motion under Rule 37 before expiration of that time).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
B. Responding to Inspection Request

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.21

§ 20.21 Form of Response

[1] Responding Party Must Produce, Allow Inspection, or State Objection

There are three basic appropriate responses to a request for production: n1

- An objection to the scope, time, method, and manner of the requested production.
- An answer agreeing to the requested scope, time, place, and manner of production.
- A response offering a good faith, reasonable alternative production that is definite in scope, time, place or manner.

Local rules in numerous courts mandate the format for such responses; specifically that each request be set forth with its particular response provided just below. n2

If the responding party fails to make a timely objection, or fails to comply with the provisions of the Rule regarding the manner of making objections, the party may be held to have waived its objections. n3

[2] Reasons For Objections Must Be Given

If a party responding to a Rule 34 request objects to a particular item or category of the request, the reason for the objection must be stated. If the party objects to the production of an item or category in part rather than in its entirety, the objection must specify the part to which the objection pertains. n4

An objection to a Rule 34 request must clearly set forth the specifics of the objection and how that objection relates to the documents being demanded. n5

[3] Waiver of Privilege Objections

When claiming a privilege or trial preparation protection to a Rule 34 request, a party must make the claim expressly, and must describe the nature of the documents, communications, or things not produced or disclosed in a manner that, without revealing information itself privileged or protected, will enable other parties to assess the applicability of the privilege or protection. n6 The failure to make a timely and proper privilege objection may be found to be a waiver of the objection. n7

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Jayne H. Lee, Inc. v. Flagstaff Indus. Corp., 173 F.R.D. 651, 656 (D. Md. 1997) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See, e.g., E.D. Mich. L.R. 26.1; D. Del. L.R. 26.1.

(n3)Footnote 3. Richmark Corp. v. Timber Falling Consultants, 959 F.2d 1468, 1473 (9th Cir.) , cert. dismissed sub nom. China Everbright Trading Co. v. Timber Falling Consultants, Inc., 506 U.S. 948 (1992) ; Marx v. Kelly, Hart & Hallman, 929 F.2d 8, 12 (1st Cir. 1991) ; Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. v. West, 748 F.2d 540, 541-542 (10th Cir. 1984) , cert. dismissed, 469 U.S. 1199 (1985) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(2)(C).

(n5)Footnote 5. Some courts have local rules requiring that the specific objections be provided. See, e.g., D.R.I. L.R. 13(b)(3) (objection must be "in a paper separate from the answers or response and shall recite in detail the grounds thereof"); N.D. W.Va. L.R. 3.05 (any ground not set forth is deemed waived).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(5); First Sav. Bank, F.S.B. v. First Bank Sys., Inc., 902 F. Supp. 1356, 1360 (D. Kan. 1995) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. v. West, 748 F.2d 540, 541-542 (10th Cir. 1984) , cert. dismissed, 469 U.S. 1199 (1985) .

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
B. Responding to Inspection Request

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.22

§ 20.22 Moving for a Protective Order

A party from whom Rule 34 discovery is sought may move for a protective order. n1 However, a responding party will more typically elect instead simply to interpose an objection, which will place the burden on the requesting party to make a motion to compel production or inspection under Rule 37(a). n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & InspectionCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective Orders

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 20.21.

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
B. Responding to Inspection Request

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.23

§ 20.23 Moving for an Order to Compel Inspection

If the party from whom production is sought objects to a request or fails to respond,the requesting party may move for an order to compel under Rule 37(a). n1

If the requesting party deems the response to be insufficient in any way, the initiative rests with that party to move for an order compelling production. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & InspectionCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to Compel

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Clinchfield R.R. Co. v. Lynch, 700 F.2d 126, 132 & n.10 (4th Cir. 1983) (requesting party had merely accepted response that documents requested were not available and therefore could not be produced (citing Moore's)).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
B. Responding to Inspection Request

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 20.24 through 20.99

[Reserved]

§§ 20.24 through[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 20 Inspection of Land and Other Tangibles *
C. Forms

2-20 Federal Litigation Guide § 20.100

§ 20.100 Request for Inspection of Property

[1] Form

Request for Inspection of Property

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

Request for Inspection

[Party designation and name of requesting party] requests, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure, Rule 34, that [party designation and name of responding party]:

Produce and permit [party designation and name of requesting party] to inspect and [specify, e.g., photograph] the following: [list objects or property to be inspected].

[Party designation and name of requesting party] requests that the production described above be made on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)]. Inspection will be made by [specify manner of inspection].

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, telephone number, e-mail address, and any other identifying information required by local district court rules]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of request for inspection of property or things for use by a party to request inspection from an adverse party.

[3] Contents of Request

A request for inspection of property must contain the following:

- A description of the property to be inspected, identified either by individual item or by category, and described with particularity. n1

- The time for inspection must be reasonable and should be at least 30 days after service of the request, extended by three days for service to the clerk if there is no known address or service by mail or by electronic or otheragreed upon means of delivery. n2

- The place and manner of inspection, which must be reasonable, and is subject to control by the court. n3

[4] Signature Required

Rule 34 requests must be signed by the requesting party's attorney, and include an address, e-mail address, and telephone number. n4

[5] Rule 26(f) Meeting Generally Required Prior to Commencement of Discovery

Under the Federal Rules, Rule 34 requests generally may not be served before the parties have had their initial discovery planning meeting, as required by Rule 26(d) and (f). n5

[6] Request Must Not Conflict With Mandatory Disclosure Obligations

A court may strike as untimely a Rule 34 request that seeks the same information required by Rule 26 before the time those disclosures are due. This general prohibition does not prevent otherwise timely discovery under Rule 34 of independently discoverable documents or things not generated for purposes of mandatory disclosure. n6

[7] Effect of Discovery Cutoff Date

When the court enters a scheduling order under Rule 16(b) setting the time for completion of discovery, a party must seek permission from the court to serve Rule 34 requests that seek production orinspection after the cutoff date. This rule applies whether service is accomplished before or after the cutoff date. n7

[8] Service

A Rule 34 request must be served on the party to whom it is directed and on all other parties in the action, unless the court directs otherwise. Service usually is made by personal delivery or by mail to each party's attorney of record. n8 Service may also be made by electronic or other means consented to in writing. n8.1

[9] Filing Generally Not Permitted

Discovery requests and responses shall not be filed unless they are used in the proceedings or the court orders filing. n9

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticePleadingsTime LimitationsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(1)(A).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(d), 34(b)(2)(A).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d)(1), 34(b).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1)-(3).

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b).

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(a), (b), 34(a).

(n9)Footnote 8.1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2)(E), (F).

(n10)Footnote 9. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d).

* Chapter 20 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide 21.syn

§ 21.syn Synopsis to Chapter 21: Physical and Mental Examinations *

§ 21.01 Party May Request Mental or Physical Examination Under Rule 35

§ 21.02 Timing of Request

§ 21.03 Persons Who May Be Subject to Examination

§ 21.04 Stipulated Examinations

§ 21.05 CHECKLIST: Determining Whether to Seek a Physical or Mental Examination

§ 21.06 Participating in Motion Practice for Examination Order
[1] Matters That Must Be Addressed in Moving Papers
[2] Conferring With Other Affected Parties Before Filing Motion

§ 21.07 Providing Facts About Proposed Examination in Motion

§ 21.08 Showing That Physical or Mental Condition Is "In Controversy"
[1] Moving Party Has Burden
[2] Using Pleadings to Demonstrate That Condition Is in Controversy
[3] Claim Solely for Past Injury Does Not Put Condition at Issue
[4] Making Requisite Showing in Discrimination and Emotional Distress Cases

§ 21.09 Establishing "Good Cause" Requirement
[1] Moving Party Must Show Necessity
[2] Prior Examination May Affect Determination
[3] Court May Deny Examination Even If Good Cause Present

§ 21.10 Selecting "Suitably Licensed or Certified" Examiner
[1] Proposed Examiner Must Be Qualified
[2] Choice Usually Honored by Court

§ 21.11 Selecting Examination Method
[1] Court May Require Showing of Valid and Reliable Examination Method

[2] Court May Require Showing That Examination Is Not Painful or Dangerous

§ 21.12 Regulation of Examination Procedure
[1] Conditions on Examination
[2] Protective Order
[3] Barring Third Persons From Attending Examination
[4] Allowing Presence of Stenographer and Transcription of Examination

§ 21.13 Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Examination Order
[1] Various Sanctions Possible
[2] Dismissal of Noncooperative Personal Injury Plaintiff
[3] Contempt Citation Not Imposed

§ 21.14 CHECKLIST: Opposing a Request or Motion for Physical or Mental Examination

§ 21.15 Seeking Examiner's Report
[1] Examined Party's Entitlement to Report
[2] Report Must Be Provided in Timely Fashion
[3] Noticed Motion Procedure Available to Compel Delivery of Report
[4] Examinee's Entitlement to Like Reports of Other Examinations of Same Condition
[5] Exclusion of Examiner's Testimony for Failure to Make Report
[6] Waiving Privileges
[7] Discovery of Report by Other Methods

§§ 21.16 through 21.99 [Reserved]

§ 21.100 Notice of Motion Requesting Physical or Mental Examination
[2] Use of Form
[3] Grounds for Physical or Mental Examination
[4] Showing Required in Moving Papers

§ 21.101 Affidavit in Support of Physical or Mental Examination
[2] Use of Form
[3] Supporting Documents

§ 21.102 Order Granting Motion for Physical or Mental Examination
[2] Use of Form
[3] Order Based on Motion and Notice
[4] Contents of Order
[5] LOCAL PRACTICE: Agreement or Settlement of Terms of Proposed Order

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter covers the examination of parties, or persons in the custody or under the control of a party, when the physical or mental condition of the person is in controversy. The chapter discusses motion practice for orders of examination under Rule 35. It also discusses stipulations for physical and mental examination. The chapter discusses when the physical or mental condition of a person is in controversy, as well as the requirement for "good cause" under Rule 35.

The chapter sets forth regulations of physical and mental examinations, sanctions for failure to comply with examination orders, and opposing motions for examination.

The chapter also discusses the report prepared as a result of the examination. Under Rule 35(b), the examined person may request a copy of the examiner's report, but doing so waives whatever privileges may apply to the person's own medical records and consultations. If no such privilege applies, medical records and opinions are subject to discovery in the same way and to the same extent as other facts, and the "demand and waiver" provisions of Rule 35(b) are essentially irrelevant. Failure to supply the examiner's report may result in the exclusion of the examiner's testimony at trial. Otherwise, either party may introduce and rely on that report.

The chapter also provides a sample notice of motion for an examination, a supporting affidavit, and a sample examination order. Comments to the forms set forth procedural requirements and use of the forms.

For expanded coverage of physical and mental examinations, see Moore's Federal Practice, Ch. 35, Physical and Mental Examinations of Persons (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.01

§ 21.01 Party May Request Mental or Physical Examination Under Rule 35

Rule 35 provides that whenever the mental or physical condition of a party or of a person in a party's custody or legal control is in controversy, the court, on a motion for good cause shown, may order the party to submit to a physical or mental examination, or to produce the person in the party's control for examination. n1

Although orders for examination are sought most often in personal injury actions, they are potentially available in any type of civil action in which mental or physical condition is at issue. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Schlagenhauf v. Holder, , 13 L.Ed. 2d 152 (1964) see also In re Letter Rogatory from the Nedenes Dist. Court, Nor., 216 F.R.D. 277, 279 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (blood test permissible in paternity action).

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.02

§ 21.02 Timing of Request

Except when authorized under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, or by order or agreement of the parties, a party may not seek discovery under Rule 35 before the parties have conducted the discovery conference required under Rule 26(f). n1

Parties may be able to use the testimony perpetuation mechanisms of Rule 27 to conduct a Rule 35 examination before a court action has been filed or while an appeal is pending, but such discovery is available on a restricted basis, subject to court approval. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical ExaminationsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsPerpetuation of Testimony

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d), (f), 30(a)(2)(A)(iii).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 27(a), (b); Martin v. Reynolds Metals Corp., 297 F.2d 49, 56 (9th Cir. 1961) (authorizing use of Rule 34 and Rule 35 discovery in prelitigation perpetuation).

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.03

§ 21.03 Persons Who May Be Subject to Examination

Under Rule 35, the court may order the following persons to submit to an examination provided that physical or mental condition is at issue: n1

- Parties.
- Persons in the custody of or under the legal control of a party.

The purpose of the "person in the custody or under the legal control of a party" language is to make it clear that the court may order a parent or guardian suing for personal injuries on behalf of a minor to produce the minor for examination. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Schempp v. Reniker, 809 F.2d 541, 542-543 (8th Cir. 1987) .

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.04

§ 21.04 Stipulated Examinations

When it is clear that a party's physical or mental condition is relevant to the case, the parties commonly agree to have anexamination conducted by agreement or stipulation instead of seeking a court order under Rule 35. n1

Examination by agreement is usually preferable to seeking a court order under Rule 35, because:

- It offers the advantage of flexibility in terms of scheduling and setting limits on the scope of the examination.

- The examined party is still entitled to a copy of the examiner's report under Rule 35(b)(3), but the parties may set forth their own arrangement.

If the parties do not agree to an examination, the party seeking the examination must proceed by noticed motion. n2 A party seeking to compel an examination under Rule 35 must proceed by a motion filed within the time period permitted for discovery. The examining party must follow the general rules applicable to timing and format of motions. In addition, the motion must be specific as to the time, place, manner, conditions, and scope of the examination, and the person or persons by whom the examination is to be made. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical ExaminationsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsStipulations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b) advisory committee's note (1970); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 29.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a).

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 21.06.

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.05

§ 21.05 CHECKLIST: Determining Whether to Seek a Physical or Mental Examination

Before seeking a court ordered physical or mental examination under Rule 35, counselshould determine whether the benefits outweigh the disadvantages. This checklist may be used as a guide in making that determination.

☐ Consider other means of discovery. Determine whether the information sought can be obtained by other means of discovery, such as production of documents under Rule 34. Such discovery does not carry the obligation to produce an examiner's report that is required under a Rule 35 examination. n1

☐ Determine whether claims are overstated. Consult with your own experts to determine whether the claims of the opposing party seem overstated. If they do not, seeking an examination may lead to a report that will be prejudicial to your client. n2

☐ Evaluate likely outcome of examination. Consult with your experts on whether the examination is likely to produce information that will benefit your case. Bear in mind, however, that if the examined party demands a copy of the report, he or she may have to furnish reports not otherwise available to the examining party. n3

☐ Consider other investigative techniques. Especially in personal injury cases involving alleged injuries or symptoms that cannot be conclusively determined by physical examinations (e.g., back injuries; perceived pain), other investigative techniques, such as surveillance and interviews with neighbors and co-workers, may produce more useful results than a traditional physical examination.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 34.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b).

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.06

§ 21.06 Participating in Motion Practice for Examination Order

[1] Matters That Must Be Addressed in Moving Papers

A party who wishes to obtain Rule 35 discovery through a court order must proceed by noticed motion. The moving party must:

- Provide specific facts about the proposed examination as required by Rule 35(a). n1
- Show that the medical condition of the proposed examinee is in controversy. n2
- Show good cause that the examination proceed. n3

[2] Conferring With Other Affected Parties Before Filing Motion

Local district court rules typically require parties to attempt informal resolution of discovery disputes prior to filing a motion. Local rules must be consulted.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Schlagenhauf v. Holder, 379 U.S. 104, 118-119, 85 S. Ct. 234, 13 L. Ed. 2d 152 (1964) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Schlagenhauf v. Holder, 379 U.S. 104, 118-119, 85 S. Ct. 234, 13 L. Ed. 2d 152 (1964) .

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.07

§ 21.07 Providing Facts About Proposed Examination in Motion

In the moving papers, the movant must provide specific information as to each of the following aspects of the examination: n1

- Time.
- Place.
- Manner.
- Conditions.
- Scope.
- Person or persons that will conduct examination.

If the moving papers do not make these specifications, the court will not order an examination. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a); see also Schlagenhauf v. Holder, 379 U.S. 104, 119, 85 S. Ct. 234, 13 L. Ed. 2d 152 (1964) .

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.08

§ 21.08 Showing That Physical or Mental Condition Is "In Controversy"

[1] Moving Party Has Burden

The moving party has the burden of showing that the prospective examinee's mental or physical condition is genuinely in controversy. n1

A showing of mere relevance to the case is insufficient to obtain an order of examination. n2

[2] Using Pleadings to Demonstrate That Condition Is in Controversy

In a personal injury case, when the complaint alleges an ongoing physical or psychiatric injury, the movant often can show that the plaintiff's condition is in controversy by referring directly in the moving papers to the plaintiff's claims. n3

[3] Claim Solely for Past Injury Does Not Put Condition at Issue

Claims that are solely for past physical or emotional suffering do not put the claimant's medical condition "in controversy" for purposes of Rule 35 discovery. n4

[4] Making Requisite Showing in Discrimination and Emotional Distress Cases

Employment discrimination and sexual harassment cases typically include allegations that the plaintiff suffered as part of the damages emotional pain, suffering, and mental distress. General allegations of mental anguish are insufficient to put the plaintiff's mental condition in controversy. n5 A plaintiff in an employment discrimination action does not necessarily place his or her mental condition in controversy with a claim for emotional distress when there is no claim for unusually severe distress and no specific psychiatric malady is alleged, particularly when the plaintiff does not intend to offer expert testimony in support of the emotional distress claim. n6

However, a defendant should be able to overcome this obstacle, by placing the mental anguish claim into specific controversy, perhaps through the use of a doctor's affidavit. For example, if the defendant's doctor-consultant is able to say that mental anguish is not customarily associated with the incident involved, or may be short-lived, the defendant should be entitled to have a psychiatric examination.

Note that the following generally are sufficient to put the examinee's condition at issue:

- An allegation of a psychiatric disorder or an ongoing mental or emotional injury. n7

- A separate tort claim for emotional distress. n8

- Retention by the plaintiff of an expert witness specifically to testify regarding the extent of the plaintiff's emotional injuries. n9

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a); Schlagenhauf v. Holder, 379 U.S. 104, 119, 85 S. Ct. 234, 13 L. Ed. 2d 152 (1964) ; Bennett v. White Lab., Inc., 841 F. Supp. 1155, 1158 (M.D. Fla. 1993) ; Davis v. City of Ellensburg, 651 F. Supp. 1248, 1258 (E.D. Wash. 1987) .

(n2)Footnote 2. O'Quinn v. New York Univ. Med. Ctr., 163 F.R.D. 226, 227-228 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) ; Bennett v. White Lab., Inc., 841 F. Supp. 1155, 1158 (M.D. Fla. 1993) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Schlagenhauf v. Holder, 379 U.S. 104, 119, 85 S. Ct. 234, 13 L. Ed. 2d 152 (1964) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Winters v. Travia, 495 F.2d 839, 840-841 (2d Cir. 1974) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Ricks v. Abbott Labs., 198 F.R.D. 647, 649-650 (D. Md. 2001) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Bowen v. Parking Auth. of Camden, 214 F.R.D. 188, 194 (D.N.J. 2003) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Cauley v. Ingram Micro, Inc., 216 F.R.D. 245, 247 (W.D.N.Y. 2003) ; Ali v. Wang Lab., 162 F.R.D. 165, 168 (M.D. Fla. 1995) ; Ragge v. MCA/Universal Studios, 165 F.R.D. 605, 608 (C.D. Cal. 1995) ; Bridges v. Eastman Kodak Co., 850 F. Supp. 216, 222 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (psychiatric disorder); Duncan v. Upjohn Co., 155 F.R.D. 23, 24-25 (D. Conn. 1994) ; Jansen v. Packaging Corp., 158 F.R.D. 409, 410 (N.D. Ill. 1994) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Lahr v. Fulbright & Jaworski, 164 F.R.D. 204, 209-210 (N.D. Tex. 1996) ; Smith v. J.I. Case Corp., 163 F.R.D. 229, 230-231 (E.D. Pa. 1995) ; Bridges v. Eastman Kodak Co., 850 F. Supp. 216, 222 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Tomlin v. Holecek, 150 F.R.D. 628, 630 (D. Minn. 1993) .

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

110 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.09

§ 21.09 Establishing "Good Cause" Requirement

[1] Moving Party Must Show Necessity

The moving party under Rule 35 must show "good cause" for ordering the examination. n1

Whether good cause is established depends on both relevance and need. n2

[2] Prior Examination May Affect Determination

Good cause for ordering an examination may be lacking if the party's mental or physical condition can be established by referring to a prior examination or other documentary evidence. n3

If the claimant has alleged an ongoing injury or illness, a prior examination probably will not provide an adequate basis for evaluating the party's condition, even if the prior examination yielded voluminous records. n4

The court may also order the examination if the proposed examiners will perform tests not undertaken in the prior examinations. n5

[3] Court May Deny Examination Even If Good Cause Present

Even if good cause is shown, it is still within the court's discretion to determine whether to order an examination. n6 The court will order the examination if it finds that the moving party's right to a fair trial outweighs the party to be examined's right to avoid personal invasion. n7

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a); see also Storms v. Lowe's Home Centers, Inc., 211 F.R.D. 296, 298 (W.D. Va. 2002) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Simpson v. University of Colo., 220 F.R.D. 354, 362 (D. Colo. 2004) ; Smith v. J.I. Case Corp., 163 F.R.D. 229, 231 (E.D. Pa. 1995) .

(n3)Footnote 3. DeCrescenzo v. Maersk Container Serv. Co., 741 F.2d 17, 21 (2d Cir. 1984) ; Plaisted v. Geisinger Med. Ctr., 210 F.R.D. 539, 542 (M.D. Pa. 2002) (citing Moore's Federal Practice); Moore v. Calavar Corp., 142 F.R.D. 134, 135-136 (W.D. La. 1992) ; Stanislawski v. Upper River Servs., 134 F.R.D. 260, 262 (D. Minn. 1991) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Duncan v. Upjohn Co., 155 F.R.D. 23, 25 (D. Conn. 1994) ; Ziemann v. Burlington County Bridge Comm'n, 155 F.R.D. 497, 501-502 (D.N.J. 1994) ; Galieti v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 154 F.R.D. 262, 263 (D. Colo. 1994) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Olcott v. LaFiandra, 793 F. Supp. 487, 492 (D. Vt. 1992) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Plaisted v. Geisinger Med. Ctr., 210 F.R.D. 539, 542 (M.D. Pa. 2002) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Shirsat v. Mutual Pharmaceutical Co., Inc., 169 F.R.D. 68, 72 (E.D. Pa. 1996) ; Sauer v. Burlington Northern R.R. Co., 169 F.R.D. 120, 124 (D. Minn. 1996) ; Curtis v. Express, Inc., 868 F. Supp. 467, 468 (N.D.N.Y. 1994) .

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.10

§ 21.10 Selecting "Suitably Licensed or Certified" Examiner

[1] Proposed Examiner Must Be Qualified

The court may order Rule 35 discovery only if the proposed examiner is "suitably licensed or certified." n1

Qualified examiners include physicians, psychologists, vocational rehabilitation experts, and other certified or licensed professionals. n2

[2] Choice Usually Honored by Court

Courts usually honor the examining party's choice of an examiner. n3

If the parties cannot agree on an examiner, the court may designate one. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Hill ex rel. Hill v. McNairy County Bd. of Educ., 229 F.R.D. 563, 568 (W.D. Tenn. 2004) ; see also Olcott v. LaFiandra, 793 F. Supp. 487, 492 (D. Vt. 1992) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Great West Life Assurance Co. v. Levithan, 153 F.R.D. 74, 76 (E.D. Pa. 1994) ; Powell v. United States, 149 F.R.D. 122, 123-124 (E.D. Va. 1993) ; Olcott v. LaFiandra, 793 F. Supp. 487, 492 (D. Vt. 1992) ; Looney v. National R.R. Passenger Corp., 142 F.R.D. 264, 265 (D. Mass. 1992) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Jansen v. Packaging Corp., 158 F.R.D. 409, 410-411 (N.D. Ill. 1994) .

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.11

§ 21.11 Selecting Examination Method

[1] Court May Require Showing of Valid and Reliable Examination Method

In exercising discretion with regard to requested examinations, courts may consider the scientific validity and reliability of the requested examination method. n1

[2] Court May Require Showing That Examination Is Not Painful or Dangerous

The court may refuse to order the examination if it would be painful or dangerous to the party to be examined. n2

If an examination is painful or risky, the court will require a substantial showing of its necessity. n3

Some courts have utilized a "burden-shifting" approach to analyze potentially dangerous examinations. Under this approach, the party to be examined must first show that the proposed test is prima facie dangerous. Once this burden is satisfied, the burden shifts to the party seeking the examination to demonstrate the need for the examination and its safety. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., Usher v. Lakewood Engineering & Mfg. Co., 158 F.R.D. 411, 413 (N.D. Ill. 1994) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Hernandez v. Gulf Oil Corp., 21 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 1378, 1379 (E.D. Pa. 1976) (pain and stress of proposed bone scan outweighed necessity of examination).

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., Waite v. Noble Drilling Corp., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 469 (E.D. La. Jan. 11, 1996) ; see also Stinchcomb v. United States, 132 F.R.D. 29, 30 (E.D. Pa. 1990) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Pena v. Troup, 163 F.R.D. 352, 353 (D. Colo. 1995) .

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.12

§ 21.12 Regulation of Examination Procedure

[1] Conditions on Examination

Courts may set terms and conditions on Rule 35 examinations. n1

[2] Protective Order

For good cause shown, the court may issue a protective order to shield the prospective examinee from "annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense." n2

[3] Barring Third Persons From Attending Examination

Because the presence of the opposing attorney may inhibit the examiner and also create the possibility that the attorney will become a trial witness, counsel for the party to be examined is usually prohibited from attending the examination. n3

Absent evidence that the proposed examiner intends to use medically unsound or dangerous techniques, the courts usually prevent opposing counsel's expert from attending the examination. n4

[4] Allowing Presence of Stenographer and Transcription of Examination

To prevent undue intrusion on the examination process and for reasons of fairness (there is usually no transcript of the examination by the treating physician), the courts usually do not permit the party to be examined to have the examination transcribed either electronically or by a court stenographer. n5

However, if there is no other effective means of preserving the examined person'sversion of what happened in the examination, such as when the examined person speaks no English, the court may permit a stenographer to be present on the condition that the stenographer does not interfere with the examination. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil

ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. In re American President Lines, Ltd., 929 F.2d 226, 228 (6th Cir. 1991) ; DeCrescenzo v. Maersk Container Serv. Co., 741 F.2d 17, 21 (2d Cir. 1984) ; Nicholas v. Wyndham Int'l, Inc., 218 F.R.D. 122, 124 (D.V.I. 2003) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c)(1); see, e.g., Usher v. Lakewood Eng'g & Mfg. Co., 158 F.R.D. 411, 412-414 (N.D. Ill. 1994) ; see also Swift v. Swift, 64 F.R.D. 440, 443 (E.D.N.Y. 1974) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Cabana v. Forcier, 200 F.R.D. 9, 12 (D. Mass. 2001) ; EEOC v. Grief Bros. Corp., 218 F.R.D. 59, 64 (W.D.N.Y. 2003) ; but see Marsch v. Rensselaer County, 218 F.R.D. 367, 371 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (plaintiff with criminal charges pending against him permitted to have his counsel present at mental examination to protect against self-incrimination).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Underwood v. Fitzgerald, 229 F.R.D. 548, 549 (M.D. Tenn. 2005) ; see also Ragge v. MCA/Universal Studios, 165 F.R.D. 605, 609-610 (C.D. Cal. 1995) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Tirado v. Erosa, 158 F.R.D. 294, 299 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) ; Tomlin v. Holecek, 150 F.R.D. 628, 631-634 (D. Minn. 1993) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Di Bari v. Incaica Cia Armadora, S.A., 126 F.R.D. 12, 14 (E.D.N.Y. 1989) .

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.13

§ 21.13 Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Examination Order

[1] Various Sanctions Possible

Possible sanctions for failure to comply with an examination order include the following: n1

- Refusing to allow the disobedient party to support or oppose designated claims or defenses or introduce designated matters into evidence.
- Striking pleadings or parts of pleadings.
- Staying the action until the order is obeyed.
- Dismissing the action or parts of the action.

[2] Dismissal of Noncooperative Personal Injury Plaintiff

In a personal injury action, the sanction most likely to be employed by the court against a plaintiff who unjustifiably refuses to comply with an order to submit to an examination by the defendant's examiner is dismissal. n2

[3] Contempt Citation Not Imposed

The court may not impose a contempt citation for disobeying an order to submit to a physical or mental examination. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical ExaminationsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureSanctionsMisconduct & Unethical BehaviorGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A).

(n2)Footnote 2. Schempp v. Reniker, 809 F.2d 541, 542-543 (8th Cir. 1987) ; Sloane v. Thompson, 128 F.R.D. 13, 15 (D. Mass. 1989) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(vii); Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b) advisory committee's note (1970).

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.14

§ 21.14 CHECKLIST: Opposing a Request or Motion for Physical or Mental Examination

Before opposing a request or motion for a physical or mental examination, counsel for the party to be examined should determine if there is anything to be gained by such resistance. Negotiation or simple preparation of the client might yield more fruitful results. The following checklist may aid in that determination:

☐ Attempt negotiation. In many cases, especially personal injury cases, there will be no question that the opposing party is entitled to the examination. An agreement will allow for more flexibility than a court-ordered examination, and counsel will still be entitled to review the examiner's report

☐ Focus on scope of examination. If it is clear that the opposition is entitled to an examination, focus your efforts on ensuring that the scope of the examination is properly limited. n1

If the motion does not properly specify the time, place, manner, conditions, and scope of the examination, the motion should be denied.

☐ Ensure that there is no room for examiner discretion. Take advantage of the court's power to set terms and conditions on the examination and make sure that the examiner has no power to expand the scope of the examination either by conducting tests not specified in the agreement or order or by going into areas not specified in the agreement or order.

☐ Consider seeking a protective order. If the proposed examination involves invasive or painful procedures, seek a protective order. n2 Even if the court does not deny the examination outright, it can still ensure that all possible precautions are taken.

☐ Prepare the client on history. Assuming an agreement is reached or the examination ordered, advise the client that the examiner will probably take a history. Prepare the client so that unnecessary information is not disclosed.

☐ Prepare the client for trick questions. Advise the client that the examiner may ask trick questions

(e.g., "When did you start working around the house again?"). Make sure the client understands that there is no obligation to respond to such questions.

☐ Debrief the client. Interview the client immediately following the examination. This provides a means of rooting out any discrepancies in the examiner's report.

☐ Decide whether to ask for a copy of the examiner's report. Although counsel is entitled to a copy of the opposition's examination report, n3 remember that requesting the report obligates counsel to furnish the opposition with its own experts' reports on the same condition. n4 If these reports contain information that you do not wish to disclose, counsel may wish to forego asking for the opposition's examination report. Note that Rule 35 does not preclude discovery of the opposition's examination report under other discovery rules. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical ExaminationsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective Orders

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b)(4).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b)(6).

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

116 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.15

§ 21.15 Seeking Examiner's Report

[1] Examined Party's Entitlement to Report

When an examination is ordered following a noticed motion under Rule 35(a), the examined party or the party against whom the order was made is entitled to request a copy of the report of the examiner and copies of all earlier examinations of the same condition. n1

The obligation to furnish reports on request also applies to examinations by agreement of the parties, unless the agreement expressly provides otherwise. n2

[2] Report Must Be Provided in Timely Fashion

The examined party, on making the request, is entitled to receive a copy of the report in sufficient time to use it in trial preparation. n3

[3] Noticed Motion Procedure Available to Compel Delivery of Report

Following noncompliance with a request, the party requesting the report may compel delivery by moving for a court order. If the examiner fails or refuses to make the report, the court may exclude the examiner's testimony if offered at trial. n4

[4] Examinee's Entitlement to Like Reports of Other Examinations of Same Condition

Once the examining party furnishes the examination report on request of the examined party, the examining party becomes entitled to receive from the examined party copies of reports of all previous and subsequent examinations dealing with the same physical or mental condition. n5 The obligation to exchange reports is triggered only by the examined party's request for a report; there is no obligation to exchange reports unless the examined party makes the initial request. n6

[5] Exclusion of Examiner's Testimony for Failure to Make Report

Failure to produce a requested report empowers the court to exclude the examiner's testimony at trial. n7

[6] Waiving Privileges

By requesting and obtaining a report of the examination or by taking the deposition of the examiner, the examined party waives any privilege regarding the testimony of any other person who examined or may examine the party with respect to the same condition. n8

[7] Discovery of Report by Other Methods

Rule 35 does not bar discovery of an examiner's report or the deposition of the examiner under other discovery rules. n9

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical ExaminationsEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceWritingsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b)(6); Salvatore v. American Cyanamid Co, 94 F.R.D. 156, 158 (D.R.I. 1982) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Shapiro v. Win-Sum Ski Corp., 95 F.R.D. 38, 38-39 (W.D.N.Y. 1982) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b)(5).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b)(3).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b)(1).

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b)(5).

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b)(4).

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b)(6).

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 21.16 through 21.99

[Reserved]

§§ 21.16 [Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.100

§ 21.100 Notice of Motion Requesting Physical or Mental Examination

Notice of Motion Requesting Physical or Mental Examination

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)], or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, [party designation and name of moving party] will move this Court, at the United States Courthouse located at [address of Court], Courtroom [courtroom number], for an order:

(a) pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 35(a), that [party designation and name of examinee] submit to a [physical or mental] examination by a suitably licensed or certified examiner to be appointed by this court, at such time as the court may direct, on the ground that [state basis of motion]; and

(b) granting [moving party] such other incidental relief as may be appropriate.

This motion is based on this Notice of Motion, the Affidavit (or appropriate affidavit substitute; see) of [name of signatory] sworn to (or dated) [date], the accompanying Memorandum of Law [if required; see] dated [date], and on all of the pleadings and papers on file in this action.

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local district court rules]

TO: [Name of opposing counsel], Attorney for [name of party]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of notice of motion for use by a party to obtain a physical or mental examination of another party.

[3] Grounds for Physical or Mental Examination

When the mental or physical condition (including the blood group) of a party, or of a person in the custody or under the legal control of a party, is in controversy, the court in which the action is pending may order the party to submit to a physical or mental examination by a suitably licensed or certified examiner. n1

[4] Showing Required in Moving Papers

A party who moves for a physical or mental examination under Rule 35 discovery must: n2

- Provide specific facts about the proposed examination as required by Rule 35(a), including time, place, manner, conditions, scope, and identity of examiner.
- Show that the medical condition of the proposed examinee is in controversy.
- Show good cause that the examination proceed.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticePleadingsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a).

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.101

§ 21.101 Affidavit in Support of Physical or Mental Examination

Affidavit in Support of Physical or Mental Examination

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

[Name of affiant], being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am a doctor of medicine duly licensed to practice medicine in the State of [name of state], and have so practiced for [number] years; that I have been on the staff of [name of hospital] for [number] years, and am currently [specify position or specialty].

2. I have been retained as a medical expert by [name of moving party's attorney] with respect to [set forth scope of expertise] on behalf of [party designation and name of moving party].

3. [State necessity for examination, using additional numbered paragraphs if necessary].

4. I am competent to examine [party designation and name of examinee] with respect to [describe scope of examination], as follows: [state conditions of examination].

5. I am available to examine [party designation and name of examinee] for the purposes of this action, within the scope described in Paragraph 5, on or about [time and date] at [place], or at any other suitable time and place ordered by the court.

I declare under penalty of perjury [if executed outside the United States or its territories, insert: under the laws of the United States of America] that the foregoing is true and correct.

Executed on [date].

[Signature of affiant]

[Jurat]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of affidavit by a physician for use in support of a motion for an order for a physical or mental examination. n1

[3] Supporting Documents

Local district court rules must be consulted for regulations concerning supporting documents and form of documents (e.g., Affidavits and Memoranda of Law).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a).

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 21 Physical and Mental Examinations *

2-21 Federal Litigation Guide § 21.102

§ 21.102 Order Granting Motion for Physical or Mental Examination

Order Granting Motion for Physical or Mental Examination

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

This cause came on to be heard on motion of [party designation and name of moving party] for an order requiring [party designation and name of party to be examined] to submit to a physical examination. It appearing to the court that the [physical or mental] condition of the [Plaintiff/Defendant] is in controversy in this action,

IT IS ORDERED:

1. That [party designation and name of examinee] submit to [describe type of examination] by Dr. [name] in [his/her] office on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)]. The examination will include the following: [describe nature and scope of examination].

2. That [party designation and name of examinee] submit to [describe any specific procedures, e.g., an x-ray examination].

3. That [party designation and name of examinee] at the time of the examination answer all proper questions and inquiries submitted to [him/her] by Dr. [name], including [describe specific types of questions, e.g., prior injuries], for the purpose of making a proper diagnosis of [his/her] condition.

4. That the personal physician of [party designation and name of examinee] may be present at the examination if [party designation and name of examinee] so desires.

5. That [party designation and name of moving party] bear the costs of the examination.

[Signature of District Judge]

[Typed or printed name of District Judge]

United States District Judge for the [specify district] District of [state in which district located]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of order for a physical or mental examination of an opposing party. The order should be prepared by the moving party, for the judge's signature.

[3] Order Based on Motion and Notice

An order granting a motion for a physical or mental examination under Rule 35 may be made only on motion for good cause shown and on notice to the person to be examined and to all parties. n1

[4] Contents of Order

An order granting a motion for a physical or mental examination under Rule 35 must specify the following: n2

- The time of the examination.
- The place of the examination.
- The manner of the examination.
- The conditions of the examination.
- The scope of the examination.
- The person or persons by whom it is to be made.

[5] LOCAL PRACTICE: Agreement or Settlement of Terms of Proposed Order

When a proposed order is requested by the court, the prevailing party should attempt to come to an agreement with the opposing party as to the terms of the order. If such agreement has been reached, it should be noted on the agreedform of order by adding the endorsement "Approved as to form" and a signature block for opposing counsel.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical Examinations

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a).

* Chapter 21 revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, Esq., San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide 22.syn

§ 22.syn Synopsis to Chapter 22: Enforcement of Discovery

§ 22.01 Determining If Grounds for Order to Compel Exist
[1] Failure to Make Required Mandatory Disclosures
[1.--1] Requirements of Rule 26(a)
[1.--2] Relief Available on Party's Failure to Comply With Rule 26(a)
[1.--3] Motion to Compel Compared With Preclusion Sanction
[2] Failure to Comply With Discovery Requests
[3] Failure to Answer Deposition Questions
[3.--1] Motion for Court Order to Compel Answer
[3.--2] Considering Completion of Remainder of Deposition
[3.--3] Situations in Which Deponent May Decline to Answer
[3.--4] Use of Motion to Compel in Connection With Written Deposition
[4] Failure to Designate Deponent
[5] Failure to Answer Interrogatories
[5.--1] Sanctions for Complete Failure to Respond
[5.--2] Motion to Compel When Incomplete Response Provided
[6] Failure to Produce or to Permit Inspection
[6.--1] Sanctions for Complete Failure to Respond
[6.--2] Motion to Compel When Incomplete Response Provided
[6.--3] Compare: Failure by Nonparty to Respond to Subpoena
[7] Distinguishing Inadequate Response From Complete Failure to Respond
[7.--1] Inadequate Response Prompts Motion to Compel
[7.--2] Interpreting Discovery Request to Determine Adequacy of Response
[8] Clarifying Discovery Requests Without Formal Motion
[8.--1] Desirability of Informal Discussion Between Parties
[8.--2] Understanding Between Parties Should Be Reflected in Writing
[8.--3] Action on Rejection of Informal Request
[9] No Response Leads to Immediate Sanctions
[10] Failing to Supplement Disclosure Material or Discovery Responses
[11] Electronically Stored Information

§ 22.02 Bringing Motion for Order to Compel
[1] Determining Who May Make Motion

[1.--1] Failure to Make Mandatory Disclosure
[1.--2] Failure to Comply With Discovery Request
[2] Making Motion Promptly
[2.--1] Parties Must Have Time to Confer
[2.--2] Parties Must Have Time to Supplement Discovery
[2.--3] Inaction May Constitute Waiver
[2.--4] Court Has Discretion in Determining Timeliness
[3] Providing Reasonable Notice of Motion
[3.--1] Reasonable Notice Must Be Given
[3.--2] Typically, Motion Is Formally Noticed
[3.--3] Immediate Intervention May Be Appropriate
[4] Certifying Good-Faith Attempt at Resolution
[4.--1] Certification Mandatory
[4.--2] Requirement Strictly Construed
[4.--3] Extent of Effort to Meet and Confer
[4.--4] Additional Requirements Under Local District Court Rules
[5] Identifying Inadequacies of Response
[6] Determining Which Court Has Jurisdiction
[6.--1] Filing in Court Where Action Is Pending to Compel Party
[6.--2] Filing in Court Where Discovery Is Taken to Compel Nonparty
[7] Court May Grant or Deny Motion in Whole or in Part
[8] Court May Enter Protective Order or Impose Other Restrictions
[8.--1] On Request of Party
[8.--2] On Own Initiative

§ 22.03 Considering Factors Weighed by Court in Compelling Mandatory Disclosures

§ 22.04 Considering Factors Weighed by Court in Compelling Discovery
[1] Court Order Required to Obtain All Relevant Evidence
[2] Weighing Relevance
[3] Weighing Proportionality
[4] Considering Good Faith
[5] Privilege and Work Product Protection

§ 22.05 Obtaining Expense Shifting Sanctions on Motion to Compel
[1] Presumption Favoring Sanctions
[2] Determining Person Against Whom Sanctions May Be Imposed
[2.--1] Imposing Sanctions Against Party, Attorney, or Both
[2.--2] Apportioning Sanctions When Motion Is Granted in Part and Denied in Part
[2.--3] Split in Authority as to Imposition of Expense Shifting Sanctions Against Nonparty Deponent
[3] Providing Sanctioned Party With Opportunity to Be Heard
[4] Limiting Sanctions to Expenses Incurred in Connection With Motion
[4.--1] Expenses Must Relate to Successful Motion
[4.--2] Attorney's Fees Incurred in Preparing Request May Be Included
[4.--3] Attorney's Fees Not Available to Pro Se Party
[5] Determining Reasonableness of Sanction--Use of Lodestar Formula
[6] Award in Connection With Motion for Protective Order

§ 22.06 Opposing Expense Shifting Sanctions on Motion to Compel
[1] Rebutting Presumption
[2] Rebutting Presumption If Unsuccessful Position Was Substantially Justified--Objective Standard

[3] Overcoming Presumption If Other Circumstances Make Sanctions Unjust
[3.--1] Unjustifiable Conduct by Prevailing Party
[3.--2] Both Parties Entitled to Sanctions Award

§ 22.07 "Abuse of Discretion" Standard of Review

§ 22.08 CHECKLISTS: Motion to Compel
[1] CHECKLIST: Bringing Motion to Compel
[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Motion to Compel
[3] CHECKLIST: Seeking Imposition of Sanctions
[4] CHECKLIST: Opposing Imposition of Sanctions

§§ 22.09 through 22.19 [Reserved]

§ 22.20 Determining If Grounds for Rule 37(b) Sanctions Exist
[1] Order or Direction Must Be Violated
[2] Violation Is Determined by Court
[3] Specified Violation by Specified Person Required
[4] Applicable Orders
[4.--1] Order Must Be Directed at Specific Party for Specific Act
[4.--2] Order Must Give Adequate Notice of Duties Imposed
[4.--3] Source of Authority for Order Is Immaterial
[4.--4] Order Need Not Be Formal
[4.--5] Order Need Not Be Written
[4.--6] Subpoena Is Not Order
[5] Defending Propriety of Order Is Not Necessary
[5.--1] Trial Court Will Not Reexamine Order
[5.--2] Appellate Court May Reexamine Order in Limited Cases
[6] Differences Between 37(a) and 37(b)

§ 22.21 Bringing Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Order
[1] Filing Motion Within Reasonable Time After Alleged Violation of Order
[2] Providing Party With Adequate Time to Prepare for Hearing--Five Days' Notice Typically Required
[3] Providing Adequate Description of Alleged Disobedience
[4] Providing Causal Connection Between Expenses and Alleged Disobedience
[5] Certifying Good Faith Attempt at Resolution
[6] Determining Which Court Has Jurisdiction
[6.--1] Sanctions Against Nonparty Deponent
[6.--2] Sanctions Against Party

§ 22.22 Considering Factors Weighed by Court in Imposing Rule 37(b) Sanctions
[1] Identifying Specified Purpose Furthered by Sanctions
[2] Applying Discretion of Trial Court
[2.--1] Court Has Broad Discretion
[2.--2] Range of Discretion Varies Depending on Severity of Sanction
[3] Imposing Sanctions Against Pro Se Litigants
[4] Party Should Warn Court of Inability to Comply With Order
[5] Inability to Comply Precludes Imposition of Severe Sanctions
[6] Sanctions Reaching Merits Must Affect Only Claim Related to Noncompliance.
[7] Severe Sanctions Require Bad Faith, Willfulness, or Substantial Fault
[7.--1] Requisite Showing for Dismissal for Default Sanction

[7.--2] Valid Objection May Preclude Severe Sanctions
[7.--3] Circuits Divided as to Whether Dismissal or Default Sanctions Must Be Preceded by Warning

§ 22.23 Considering Possible Sanctions Under Rule 37(b)
[1] Overview of Possible Sanctions
[2] Sanctions Deeming Facts Established
[3] Sanctions Prohibiting Support or Opposition to Claims or Introduction of Evidence
[4] Sanctions Striking Pleadings
[5] Sanctions Staying Further Proceedings
[6] Sanctions Dismissing Action or Entering Default Judgment
[7] Sanctions Finding Contempt of Court
[7.--1] Contempt of Court
[7.--2] Procedural Prerequisites to Contempt
[7.--3] Effect of Local District Court Rules on Contempt Proceedings
[7.--4] Potential Contemnor Should Notify Court of Inability to Comply
[7.--5] Criminal Contempt
[8] Sanctions for Failure to Produce Person for Examination
[9] Sanctions Imposing Reasonable Expenses
[9.--1] Compensatory Monetary Sanctions Are Mandatory
[9.--2] Bad Faith Not Required
[9.--3] Overcoming Presumption If Failure Was Substantially Justified
[9.--4] Overcoming Presumption If Other Circumstances Make Sanctions Unjust
[9.--5] Determining Person Against Whom Sanctions May Be Imposed
[9.--6] Limiting Sanctions to Reasonable Expenses Caused by Failure
[10] Sanctions Imposing Such Other Sanctions as Are Just

§ 22.24 "Abuse of Discretion" Standard of Review
[1] Clear Error of Judgment Must Be Shown
[2] Amount of Monetary Sanction
[3] Articulation of Basis by District Court Required

§ 22.25 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Rule 37(b) Sanctions
[1] CHECKLIST: Bringing Motion for Rule 37(b) Sanctions
[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Motion for Rule 37(b) Sanctions

§§ 22.26 through 22.39 [Reserved]

§ 22.40 Determining If Grounds for Preclusion Exist
[1] Failure to Comply With Disclosure Requirements
[2] Disclosure Required by Rule 26(a)
[3] Supplementation of Disclosure Required by Rule 26(e)(1)
[4] Proffering of Undisclosed Evidence Triggers Sanction
[5] Sanction Designed to Be Automatic

§ 22.41 Obtaining Evidence Preclusion Sanction
[1] Prerequisites
[2] Bringing Failure to Court's Attention
[3] Showing Culpable Conduct and Prejudice Before Important Evidence Is Precluded

§ 22.42 Obtaining Other Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Disclosure Requirements

§ 22.43 Opposing Sanctions on Ground That Failure to Disclose Was Substantially Justified
[1] No Sanction If Failure to Disclose Was Substantially Justified
[2] Genuine Discovery Dispute May Substantially Justify Failure
[3] Reasonable Predisclosure Investigation May Substantially Justify Failure
[4] Pro Se Party's Ignorance of Requirement May Substantially Justify Failure
[5] Unforeseen Relevance May Substantially Justify Failure

§ 22.44 Opposing Sanctions on Ground That Failure to Disclose Was Harmless

§ 22.45 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Rule 37(c)(1) Sanctions
[1] CHECKLIST: Seeking Sanctions for Failure to Make Mandatory Disclosures
[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Sanctions for Failure to Make Mandatory Disclosures

§§ 22.46 through 22.59 [Reserved]

§ 22.60 Determining If Grounds for Order for Expense Shifting Sanctions Exist
[1] Requirements for Rule 37(c)(2) Sanctions
[2] Four Exceptions to Mandatory Sanction Rule
[3] Requests for Admission
[3.--1] Scope
[3.--2] Potential Responses
[4] When to Use Rule 37(c)

§ 22.61 Moving for Sanctions Under Rule 37(c)(2)
[1] Determining Person Against Whom Sanctions May Be Imposed
[2] Making Timely Motion
[3] Certifying Good Faith Attempt at Resolution
[4] Complying With Local Procedural Rules
[5] Complying With Local Filing Rules

§ 22.62 Overcoming Presumption Favoring Sanctions
[1] Presumption Favoring Sanctions
[2] Overcoming Presumption If Request Was Objectionable Under Rule 36(a)
[3] Overcoming Presumption If Admission Sought Was of No Substantial Importance
[3.--1] Basis for Rejecting Sanctions
[3.--2] Evaluation on Case-by-Case Basis
[4] Overcoming Presumption If Responding Party Had Reasonable Ground to Believe It Might Prevail
[4.--1] Reasonable Ground for Belief
[4.--2] Examples of Reasonable Grounds for Belief
[4.--3] Reliance on Expert Opinion
[5] Overcoming Presumption If Responding Party Had Other Good Reason for Failure to Admit

§ 22.63 "Abuse of Discretion" Standard of Review

§ 22.64 CHECKLISTS: Moving For Rule 37(c)(2) Sanctions
[1] CHECKLIST: Moving for Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit
[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Motion for Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit

§§ 22.65 through 22.79 [Reserved]

§ 22.80 Determining If Grounds for Rule 37(d) Sanctions Exist
[1] Complete Failure to Respond to Discovery Request Required

[2] Failure to Appear for Deposition
[2.--1] Determining If There Was Failure to Appear
[2.--2] Determining If There Was Failure to Appear by Corporate Deponent
[3] Failure to Respond to Discovery Request
[3.--1] Sanctions Imposed If No Response to Interrogatories or Request for Production
[3.--2] Inadequate Response Does Not Warrant Rule 37(d) Sanctions
[3.--3] Loss of Electronically Stored Information

§ 22.81 Bringing Motion for Rule 37(d) Sanctions
[1] Determining Person Against Whom Sanctions May Be Imposed
[1.--1] Sanctions Against Party
[1.--2] Sanctions Against Attorney
[2] Determining Which Court Has Jurisdiction
[3] Determining When to Move for Rule 37(d) Sanctions
[4] Certifying Good Faith Attempt to Obtain Response
[5] Complying With Local Procedural and Filing Rules

§ 22.82 Considering Possible Sanctions Under Rule 37(d)
[1] Court May Make Such Orders as Are Just
[2] Trial Court Has Broad Discretion
[3] Opportunity to Be Heard Must Be Provided
[4] Sanctions Imposing Reasonable Expenses
[5] Sanctions Deeming Facts Established
[6] Sanctions Prohibiting Support or Opposition to Claims or Introduction of Evidence
[7] Sanctions Striking Pleadings or Staying Further Proceedings
[8] Sanctions Dismissing Action or Entering Default Judgment
[8.--1] Sanctions Available
[8.--2] Factors Considered

§ 22.83 Opposing Motion for Rule 37(d) Sanctions
[1] Pending Motion for Protective Order
[2] Failure Was Substantially Justified
[2.--1] Monetary Sanction Avoidable
[2.--2] Burden Is on Party to Be Sanctioned
[2.--3] Focus of Inquiry
[3] Circumstances Make Sanctions Unjust

§ 22.84 "Abuse of Discretion" Standard of Review

§ 22.85 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Rule 37(d) Sanctions
[1] CHECKLIST: Bringing Motion for Rule 37(d) Sanctions
[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Motion for Rule 37(d) Sanctions

§§ 22.86 through 22.99 [Reserved]

§ 22.100 Determining If Grounds for Sanctions Exist
[1] Failure to Participate in Development or Submission of Discovery Plan
[2] Scope of Duty to Participate in Development or Submission of Discovery Plan

§ 22.101 Obtaining Sanctions
[1] Sanctions Are Discretionary

[2] Sanctions Are Monetary
[3] Alternative Bases for Sanctions
[4] Bringing Failure to Court's Attention
[5] Providing Sanctioned Party With Opportunity to Be Heard

§ 22.102 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Rule 37(f) Sanctions
[1] CHECKLIST: Seeking Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan
[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan

§§ 22.103 through 22.109 [Reserved]

§ 22.110 Determining Whether Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence Are Available
[1] Spoliation Defined
[2] Determining Which Evidence Should Be Preserved
[3] Authority for Sanctions
[4] Considering Loss of Electronically Stored Information

§ 22.111 Considering Factors Weighed by Court in Imposing Sanctions
[1] Severity of Sanction Dependent on Facts
[2] Severe Sanctions Appropriate in Limited Situations
[3] Lesser Sanctions May Be Appropriate

§ 22.112 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence
[1] CHECKLIST: Seeking Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence
[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence

§§ 22.113 through 22.119 [Reserved]

§ 22.120 Certifying Mandatory Disclosures
[1] Signing Disclosures
[1.--1] Represented Party
[1.--2] Unrepresented Party
[2] Warranties Made
[3] Requirements Inapplicable If Mandatory Disclosures Not Required in District

§ 22.121 Certifying Discovery Requests, Responses, or Objections
[1] Signing Discovery Requests, Responses and Objections
[1.--1] Represented Party
[1.--2] Unrepresented Party
[2] Warranties Made
[3] Duty to Read Documents
[4] Certification as to Truthfulness of Responses Not Required
[5] Objective Standard
[6] Privileged Information Remains Protected
[7] Certification Evaluated at Time It Was Made

§ 22.122 Striking Uncertified Request, Response, or Objection

§ 22.123 Obtaining Sanctions for Improper Certification
[1] Who May Be Sanctioned
[2] Sanctions That May Be Requested
[3] Motion to Obtain Sanctions

[4] Cross-Motion to Oppose Motion to Compel
[5] Notice and Hearing
[6] Making Timely Motion
[7] Certifying Good Faith Attempt at Resolution
[8] Complying With Local Procedural and Filing Rules

§ 22.124 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Rule 26(g) Sanctions
[1] CHECKLIST: Drafting and Filing Motion for Sanctions for Improper Certification
[2] CHECKLIST: Drafting and Filing Opposition to Motion for Sanctions for Improper Certification

§§ 22.125 through 22.199 [Reserved]

§ 22.200 Notice of Motion to Compel Mandatory Disclosure
[1] FORM
Notice of Motion to Compel Mandatory Disclosure
[2] Use of Form
[3] Grounds for Motion to Compel
[4] Expense-Shifting Sanctions
[5] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

§ 22.201 Notice of Motion to Compel Compliance With Discovery Request
[1] FORM
Notice of Motion to Compel Compliance With Discovery Request
[2] Use of Form
[3] Grounds for Motion to Compel
[4] Expense-Shifting Sanctions
[5] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

§ 22.202 Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Court Order
[1] FORM
Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Court Order
[2] Use of Form
[3] Types of Sanctions Available
[4] Timing of Motion
[5] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

§ 22.203 Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Make Mandatory Disclosures
[1] FORM
Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Make Mandatory Disclosures
[2] Use of Form
[3] Types of Sanctions Available
[4] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

§ 22.204 Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit
[1] FORM
Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit
[2] Use of Form
[3] When Sanction Is Available
[4] Date and Time of Hearing
[5] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

§ 22.205 Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Appear or Respond
[1] FORM
Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Appear or Respond
[2] Use of Form
[3] Grounds for Motion
[4] Types of Sanctions Available
[5] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

§ 22.206 Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan
[1] FORM
Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan
[2] Use of Form
[3] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter discusses enforcement of discovery obligations and imposition of sanctions for various types of breaches of discovery and disclosure obligations.

It examines the procedural and substantive prerequisites for motions to compel. It also addresses substantive and procedural issues concerning sanctions based on a party's failure to make the disclosures required by Rule 26(a); violation of a discovery order; failure to admit matters addressed in a request for admission; failure to respond to a notice of deposition, to interrogatories, or to a request for production of documents or for inspection; and failure to participate in good faith in developing a discovery plan. Finally, the chapter examines sanctions based on spoliation of evidence and improper certification under Rule 26(g).

The chapter contains checklists and sample forms.

For expanded coverage of enforcement of discovery, see Moore's Federal Practice, Ch. 37, Failure to Make Disclosure or Cooperate in Discovery: Sanctions (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
A. Obtaining Order to Compel Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.01

§ 22.01 Determining If Grounds for Order to Compel Exist

[1] Failure to Make Required Mandatory Disclosures

[1.--1] Requirements of Rule 26(a)

Except in categories of exempt cases, Rule 26(a) imposes on parties a certain set of disclosure obligations, which can be divided into three categories: n1

- Initial disclosures: including information regarding (1) individuals likely to have discoverable information that the disclosing party may use to support its claims or defenses, unless solely for impeachment; (2) documents, electronically stored informations, and tangible things that are in the possession, custody, or control of the party and that the disclosing party may use to support its claims or defenses, unless solely for impeachment; (3) claims and calculations of damages; and (4) insurance coverage

- Disclosures related to expert testimony: including information regarding the background and qualifications of expert witnesses, as well as the content of and bases for the opinions such witnesses will be offering

- Final pretrial disclosures: including identification of trial witnesses and exhibits, and designation of deposition testimony that will be used at trial.

Parties must make these disclosures at the times specified in Rule 26(a), unless a stipulation or court order relieves them of all or part of these obligations. n2

[1.--2] Relief Available on Party's Failure to Comply With Rule 26(a)

If a party fails to make mandatory disclosures required under Rule 26(a) any other party may: n3

- Move to compel mandatory disclosure

- Move for recovery of costs and attorney's fees incurred in connection with the motion to compel

[1.--3] Motion to Compel Compared With Preclusion Sanction

A motion to compel would most likely be filed when the information to be disclosed might be helpful to the party seeking the disclosure, but not to the party required to make it.

When the information sought is more likely to be helpful to the party with the duty to disclose, the more effective enforcement mechanism is found in the court's power under Rule 37(c)(1) to preclude use of the information that was not disclosed. n4

[2] Failure to Comply With Discovery Requests

A motion to compel may be filed not only when a person fails entirely to provide any response to a discovery request, or responds only by objecting and without providing the requested information, but also when a response is provided, but it is at least partially evasive or incomplete. The following types of discovery breaches may precipitate a motion to compel: n5

- A deponent fails to answer an oral or written question propounded pursuant to Rule 30 or 31. n6
- A corporation or other entity fails to designate a person to testify in accordance with Rule 30(b)(6) or 31(a)(4). n7
- A party fails to answer an interrogatory served in accordance with Rule 33. n8
- A party fails to produce documents or to permit an inspection requested pursuant to Rule 34. n9

[3] Failure to Answer Deposition Questions

[3.--1] Motion for Court Order to Compel Answer

If a party or a witness during an oral deposition refuses to answer a question, and if counsel for the examining party has tried in good faith toresolve the matter without judicial intervention, then the examining party has the following options: n10

- Suspending the examination and moving immediately for a court order to compel an answer
- Completing the examination about other matters and then moving for a court order to compel an answer

[3.--2] Considering Completion of Remainder of Deposition

When a deponent refuses to answer a question, the deposing party must consider whether to complete the remainder of the deposition. Often it is better to complete the remainder of the deposition, for the following reasons:

- The deponent has an opportunity to reconsider his or her position, and may later provide the answers
- The information later provided may lead the attorney conducting the deposition to conclude that there is no substantial need for answers to those unanswered questions
- A court looks more favorably on a motion to compel when it is focused on a few questions, than on a motion for an open ended order to compel responses to questions not yet posed in subject areas not yet reached

[3.--3] Situations in Which Deponent May Decline to Answer

Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party may instruct a deponent not to answer a question only when necessary to do one of the following: n11

- Preserve a privilege
- Enforce a court ordered limitation as to the scope of the matters about which evidence may be taken during discovery
- Present a motion for a protective order on the ground that the examination is being conducted in bad faith, or in a manner that unreasonably annoys, embarrasses, or oppresses either the deponent or a party

[3.--4] Use of Motion to Compel in Connection With Written Deposition

A motion to compel also may be used, after exhaustion of good faith efforts to secure responses by conferring with opposing counsel, to require answers to written questions that are posed to a party or to a nonparty witness through a deposition upon written questions. n12

[4] Failure to Designate Deponent

If a business entity or governmental agency served with a deposition fails to designate a deponent in accordance with Rule 30(b)(6) or 31(a), the discovering party may bring a motion to compel. n13

[5] Failure to Answer Interrogatories

[5.--1] Sanctions for Complete Failure to Respond

Absent a court order or a written stipulation extending the time to respond, a party must serve answers or objections to interrogatories within 30 days of being served with the questions. n14

A complete failure to serve answers or objections to interrogatories within the prescribed, ordered, or stipulated time may result in the imposition of sanctions under Rule 37(d). n15

[5.--2] Motion to Compel When Incomplete Response Provided

Because a party who serves objections or what purport to be answers has not completely failed to respond, a motion for sanctions under Rule 37(d) is inappropriate.

Instead, if the party on whom the interrogatories were served responds by serving objections to some or all of the interrogatories, or serves answers that the propounding party considers evasive or incomplete, and if the propounding party has tried unsuccessfully to negotiate a resolution of the dispute, that party may bring a motion for an order compelling answers. The validity of objections or the adequacy of the responses will be tested by such a motion. n16

[6] Failure to Produce or to Permit Inspection

[6.--1] Sanctions for Complete Failure to Respond

Absent a court order or a written stipulation extending the period for responding, a party served with a request for production or inspection must serve responses or objections within 30 days after service of the request. n17

A complete failure to serve responses or objections within the prescribed, ordered, or stipulated time may result in the imposition of sanctions under Rule 37(d). n18

[6.--2] Motion to Compel When Incomplete Response Provided

Because a party who serves a response has not completely failed to respond, a motion for sanctions is inappropriate.

Instead, if the party on whom the request was served responds by serving objections to some or all of the requests, or responds in a manner that the propounding party considers evasive or incomplete, and if the propounding party has tried unsuccessfully to negotiate a resolution of the dispute, that party may bring a motion to compel discovery. The validity of objections or the adequacy of the responses will be tested by such a motion. n19

[6.--3] Compare: Failure by Nonparty to Respond to Subpoena

When a nonparty fails to produce documents responsive to a Rule 45 subpoena, aparty may bring a motion to compel production. However, Rule 37(a) is inapplicable to such a motion, and the costs and fees provision under Rule 37(a) is not available.

Such a failure may, however, result in contempt sanctions under Rule 45(e). n20

[7] Distinguishing Inadequate Response From Complete Failure to Respond

[7.--1] Inadequate Response Prompts Motion to Compel

If a disclosure, answer, or response is given, but the discovering party deems it to be incomplete, that party may move to compel an adequate response. n21

A complete failure to respond to a discovery demand is different from an evasive or inadequate response and should prompt a motion for sanctions under Rule 37(d).

[7.--2] Interpreting Discovery Request to Determine Adequacy of Response

Interrogatories and requests for production should not be read or interpreted in an artificially restrictive or hyper-technical manner to avoid disclosure of information fairly covered by the discovery request. Doing so exposes the responding party, its counsel, or both, to sanctions. n22

[8] Clarifying Discovery Requests Without Formal Motion

[8.--1] Desirability of Informal Discussion Between Parties

Parties should attempt to informally resolve disputes concerning the scope of discovery requests. Consultation between the attorneys will often result in punctual delivery of clearly discoverable information pursuant to an appropriately framed discovery probe.

A party served with an interrogatory or document request that it considers ambiguous or unclear should contact the propounding attorney for clarification, rather than simply objecting. Similarly, a party served with an interrogatory or document request that it considers overly broad, partially irrelevant, or unduly burdensome, should contact the propounding attorney in an attempt to reach an agreement reducing the scope of the probe.

[8.--2] Understanding Between Parties Should Be Reflected in Writing

Any agreement clarifying a discovery request should be reduced to writing. Also, if there is a meaningful chance that the response to aninterrogatory might be used at trial, the clarification should be set forth in a revised interrogatory.

[8.--3] Action on Rejection of Informal Request

If an informal request for clarification is rejected, the responding party should note that fact in its responses, set forth in good faith its understanding of the unclear terms, and then, on the basis of that understanding, provide answers.

Similarly, if an informal request to narrow the scope of a document request is rejected, the responding party should note that fact, identify the scope of a request that it would consider appropriate, and then provide the documents responsive to that narrowed request.

[9] No Response Leads to Immediate Sanctions

In contrast to an inadequate response, if there is a complete failure by a party to appear at his or her own deposition, or to respond to interrogatories or requests for production, in that no answers, objections, or responses of any kind are served, and no motion for a protective order is filed, then the moving party has immediate access to a wider range of sanctions, provided that party has attempted in good faith to secure a response through negotiations. There is no requirement that the moving party must have first secured a court order directing its opponent to provide the discovery in question. n23

[10] Failing to Supplement Disclosure Material or Discovery Responses

A party that without substantial justification fails to supplement disclosure material or discovery responses is not, unless the failure is harmless, permitted to use as evidence at trial, at a hearing, or on a motion, any witness or information that has not been supplemented. n24

In addition to this sanction, the court may, on noticed motion, compel supplementation or impose other appropriate sanctions including: n25

- An award of attorney's fees caused by the failure to supplement
- Informing the jury of the failure to supplement

[11] Electronically Stored Information

Absent exceptional circumstances, a court may not impose sanctions under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure on a party for failing to provide electronically stored information lost as a result of the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system. n26

Rule 37(e) focuses on a distinctive feature of computer operations, the routine alteration and deletion of information that attends ordinary use. Many steps essential to computer operation may alter or destroy information, for reasons that have nothingto do with how that information might relate to litigation. As a result, the ordinary operation of computer systems creates a risk that a party may lose potentially discoverable information without culpable conduct on its part. Under Rule 37(e), absent exceptional circumstances, sanctions may not be imposed for loss of electronically stored information resulting from the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system. n27

The protection provided under Rule 37(e) applies only to sanctions under the Federal Rules, and it does not affect other sources of authority to impose sanctions or rules of professional responsibility.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(A).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a) Committee Note (1993); see also § 22.40.

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(B).

(n6)Footnote 6. See [3], below.

(n7)Footnote 7. See [4], below.

(n8)Footnote 8. See [5], below.

(n9)Footnote 9. See [6], below.

(n10)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(C).

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(c)(2), (d)(2), (3).

(n12)Footnote 12. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(B).

(n13)Footnote 13. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(B)(ii).

(n14)Footnote 14. Fed. R. Civ. P. 33(b)(2); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(d) (extending time to respond by three days when interrogatories are served electronically, by mail, by other agreed-upon means or to the court clerk).

(n15)Footnote 15. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see also § 22.80.

(n16)Footnote 16. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(B).

(n17)Footnote 17. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(d) (extending time to respond by three days when request is served electronically, by mail, by other agreed-upon means or to the court clerk).

(n18)Footnote 18. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n19)Footnote 19. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(B).

(n20)Footnote 20. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(e).

(n21)Footnote 21. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3), (4).

(n22)Footnote 22. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3) Committee Note (1993).

(n23)Footnote 23. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n24)Footnote 24. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n25)Footnote 25. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n26)Footnote 26. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(e).

(n27)Footnote 27. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(f) Committee Note (2006).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
A. Obtaining Order to Compel Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.02

§ 22.02 Bringing Motion for Order to Compel

[1] Determining Who May Make Motion

[1.--1] Failure to Make Mandatory Disclosure

If a party fails to make a disclosure required by Rule 26(a), any other party may move to compel disclosure and for appropriate sanctions. n1

[1.--2] Failure to Comply With Discovery Request

If the discovery failure consists of one of the following, only the party seeking discovery has standing to move to compel compliance: n2

- A deponent fails to answer a question
- A corporation or other entity fails to make a required designation
- A party fails to answer an interrogatory
- A party fails to respond that a requested inspection will be permitted or fails to permit that inspection

[2] Making Motion Promptly

[2.--1] Parties Must Have Time to Confer

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure impose no outside limit on the time within which a motion to compel additional disclosures or discovery must be made. However, such limits may be imposed by local rules, standing orders, or orders entered in individual cases. n3

At a minimum, parties seeking discovery must be given sufficient time after a discovery response is due to meet and confer with parties from whom discovery has been sought. Motions to compel or for sanctions are generally prohibited unless the moving party has first attempted to secure the information it needs through informal negotiations. n4

[2.--2] Parties Must Have Time to Supplement Discovery

Parties have a continuing duty to supplement both their mandatory disclosures, and their responses to formal discovery requests. n5 A motion to compel brought too soon might negate the beneficial effects of the supplementation rule.

[2.--3] Inaction May Constitute Waiver

The best practice is to act promptly to try to resolve discovery or disclosure problems shortly after they surface, first through direct negotiations with opposing counsel, and then, if negotiations fail, by filing a motion. The right to bring a motion to compel may be waived through inaction, especially if the motion is not filed until the trial has concluded. n6

The consequences of failing to bring a timely motion to compel discovery can be very severe. For example, in affirming a district court's denial of a motion for a new trial or relief from judgment based on alleged prejudice by inaccurate responses to interrogatories, the First Circuit explained that seeking reversal after an unfavorable verdict is not the appropriate remedy for parties who uncover discovery violations. n7

Similarly, the Second Circuit upheld a district court's dismissal for lack of prosecution after noting that the plaintiff, when confronted by the defendant's failure to cooperate in discovery, should have apprised the district court, which could have made an appropriate order compelling discovery. n8

[2.--4] Court Has Discretion in Determining Timeliness

Even motions to compel that are filed before or shortly after the discovery cutoff date are not necessarily timely. Courts have considerable discretion in deciding whether motions to compel have been timely filed. n9

Courts may consider many factors, and all pertinent case specific circumstances, including any or all of the following:

- The length of the delay in bringing the motion n10
- Whether the delay in filing the motion is likely to cause prejudice to or impose an undue hardship on any other party n11
- Whether the delay was caused by matters over which the moving party had no control, or about which it was justifiably ignorant n12
- Whether the delay was tactically inspired, the product of negligence, or was occasioned by good-faith efforts to secure the information through negotiations, other discovery tools, or from other sources n13
- Whether permitting the motion would interfere with the pretrial schedule n14

[3] Providing Reasonable Notice of Motion

[3.--1] Reasonable Notice Must Be Given

The party applying for an order to compel discovery or mandatory disclosure must give reasonable notice to the other parties, and to all other persons who would be affected by the order. n15

[3.--2] Typically, Motion Is Formally Noticed

Notice

must comport with the requirements of due process. The notice must be designed to communicate the pertinent information, and must afford the noticed party or persons a meaningful opportunity to be heard. n16

Absent a contrary local rule, standing order, or case-specific directive from the assigned judge, an application to the court for an order compelling disclosures or discovery must be by motion, and notice of the hearing must be served at least five days before the date set for that hearing. n17

[3.--3] Immediate Intervention May Be Appropriate

It is not uncommon for district courts by local rule, or for individual judges by standing order or case-specific directive, to permit parties to seek court assistance with respect to discovery disputes by means other than a regularly noticed motion. Sometimes, immediate intervention can save the litigants considerable expense and time, as when the deposition or document production is underway in a remote location, and failure to resolve the dispute might well force the parties to reconvene the discovery event at another time. n18

Some judges permit discovery disputes to be handled by letters to the judge directly or to the magistrate if one is assigned.

[4] Certifying Good-Faith Attempt at Resolution

[4.--1] Certification Mandatory

A motion to compel must include a certification that the movant has in good faith conferred or attempted to confer with the party from whom disclosure or discovery is being sought in an effort to secure the information without court action. n19

[4.--2] Requirement Strictly Construed

The meet and confer requirement may be strictly construed. Local rules may mandate denial of the motion to compel, or an award of attorney's fees, if counsel have failed to confer for the purpose of attempting to resolve the disputed issues. n20 Many courts vigorously enforce these kinds of rules. n21

[4.--3] Extent of Effort to Meet and Confer

Neither the text of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure nor the Committee Notes purport to define the type of effort that must be undertaken to comply with the requirement that counsel confer in an attempt to negotiate a resolution of a disclosure or discovery dispute before filing a motion to compel. However, cases have held that sending a letter is insufficient. n22 This view requires a live exchange of ideas and opinions.

A Ninth Circuit district court ruled that the "certification of good faith attempt at resolution" requirement has two components. First is the actual certification, which must specifically convey to the court the following information:

- The names of the parties who conferred or attempted to confer
- The manner by which they communicated
- The date and time of that communication
- Specific discovery disputes discussed

- The results of the discussion or an explanation as to why meaningful discussions were not had

Second is the performance of the good faith attempt to confer. "Good faith" under the rule encompasses honesty in one's purpose to meaningfully discuss the discovery dispute, freedom from intention to defraud or abuse the discovery process, and faithfulness to one's obligation to secure information without court action. A party is required to have had or attempted to have had an actual meeting or conference to discuss each contested discovery dispute. This requires a personal, two-way communication, either in person or by telephone. n23

[4.--4] Additional Requirements Under Local District Court Rules

Local district court rules typically require counsel to confer before approaching the court concerning a discovery dispute.

[5] Identifying Inadequacies of Response

A motion to compel discovery or disclosure should both identify specifically the portions of the responses that are inadequate, and explain, at least briefly, what is missing or what kind of information would be necessary to make the responses adequate. n24

[6] Determining Which Court Has Jurisdiction

[6.--1] Filing in Court Where Action Is Pending to Compel Party

If a motion to compel discovery or disclosure is directed toward a party, the motion must be filed with the court where the action is pending. n25

If a deposition of a corporate party is taken in another district through an officer, director, managing agent, or some other individual designated by the corporate party, the forum court has the power to order the deponent to answer questions. n26

[6.--2] Filing in Court Where Discovery Is Taken to Compel Nonparty

If a motion to compel discovery is directed toward a nonparty, the motion must be filed in the court in the district where the discovery is sought. n27

Unlike most orders denying discovery, which generally are deemed interlocutory and nonappealable, the denial of a motion seeking discovery from a nonparty in a district other than the forum district may be immediately appealed because it otherwise would remain unreviewable. n28

[7] Court May Grant or Deny Motion in Whole or in Part

In ruling on a motion to compel discovery or mandatory disclosure, the court may: n29

- Grant the motion in whole
- Deny the motion in whole
- Grant the motion in part and deny the motion in part

[8] Court May Enter Protective Order or Impose Other Restrictions

[8.--1] On Request of Party

A party faced with a motion to compel discovery or mandatory disclosure who objects to the motion on the ground that it would cause annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense, may file a cross motion for a protective order. n30

[8.--2] On Own Initiative

Courts may enter protective orders on their own initiative, without a motion first being brought by the objecting party. If a motion to compel discovery or mandatory disclosure is denied in whole or in part, the court may enter any protective order authorized by Rule 26(c). n31

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(A).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(B).

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., N.D. Cal. L.R. 26-5 (motions to compel discovery may not be filed later than 10 days after discovery cut-off).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(1), (a)(5)(A).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(e).

(n6)Footnote 6. Mercy v. County of Suffolk, 748 F.2d 52, 55-56 (2d Cir. 1984) ; Butler v. Pettigrew, 409 F.2d 1205, 1207 (7th Cir. 1969) .

(n7)Footnote 7. United States Fidelity & Guar. Co. v. Baker Material Handling Corp., 62 F.3d 24, 29 (1st Cir. 1995) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Ali v. A & G Co., 542 F.2d 595 (2d Cir. 1976) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Public Loan Co. v. FDIC, 803 F.2d 82, 86 (3d Cir. 1986) ; Draper v. Coombs, 792 F.2d 915, 924 (9th Cir. 1986) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See Byrnes v. Jetnet Corp., 111 F.R.D. 68, 70-71 (M.D.N.C. 1986) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See Kendrick v. Heckler, 778 F.2d 253, 258 (5th Cir. 1985) .

(n12)Footnote 12. See Petroleum Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 106 F.R.D. 59, 63 (D. Mass. 1985) .

(n13)Footnote 13. See Kendrick v. Heckler, 778 F.2d 253, 258 (5th Cir. 1985) ; Riley v. United Air Lines, Inc., 32 F.R.D. 230, 232-233 (S.D.N.Y. 1962) .

(n14)Footnote 14. See Kendrick v. Heckler, 778 F.2d 253, 258 (5th Cir. 1985) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a).

(n16)Footnote 16. Holcomb v. Allis Chalmers Corp., 774 F.2d 398, 401 (10th Cir. 1985) .

(n17)Footnote 17. Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(c)(1); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 7(b)(1) (motion requirement).

(n18)Footnote 18. See Braziller v. Lind, 32 F.R.D. 367, 368 (S.D.N.Y. 1963) .

(n19)Footnote 19. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(2).

(n20)Footnote 20. See, e.g., N.D. Cal. L.R. 37-1(b).

(n21)Footnote 21. See, e.g., Haselhorst v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 163 F.R.D. 10, 11 (D. Kan. 1995) (plaintiff's motion to compel denied because its counsel failed to make reasonable effort to confer before bringing motion).

(n22)Footnote 22. Soto v. City of Concord, 162 F.R.D. 603, 622-623 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (letter does not satisfy duty to confer); Ballou v. Univ. of Kansas Med. Ctr., 159 F.R.D. 558, 559-560 (D. Kan. 1994) (one letter does not satisfy duty to confer, but a telephone call might).

(n23)Footnote 23. Shuffle Master, Inc. v. Progressive Games, Inc., 170 F.R.D. 166, 170-173 (D. Nev. 1996) .

(n24)Footnote 24. James N. Pappas & Sons, Inc. v. McDonald's Corp., 21 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 773 (D.D.C. 1976) .

(n25)Footnote 25. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(2).

(n26)Footnote 26. See Independent Prods. Corp. v. Loew's, Inc., 27 F.R.D. 426, 428-429 (S.D.N.Y. 1961) ; see also Belfer v. Pence, 435 F.2d 121, 122 (9th Cir. 1970) ; Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(6) (designation requirement).

(n27)Footnote 27. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(2).

(n28)Footnote 28. In re Rubin, 679 F.2d 29, 30 (5th Cir. 1982) .

(n29)Footnote 29. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5).

(n30)Footnote 30. Johnson v. Wayne Manor Apartments, 152 F.R.D. 56, 57 (E.D. Pa. 1993) ; Shapiro v. Freeman, 38 F.R.D. 308, 309 (S.D.N.Y. 1965) ; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

(n31)Footnote 31. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(B), (C); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
A. Obtaining Order to Compel Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.03

§ 22.03 Considering Factors Weighed by Court in Compelling Mandatory Disclosures

Although the standards for ruling on motions to compel Rule 26(a) mandatory disclosures may not materially differ from the standards for ruling on motions to compel other types of discovery, cases construing parties' obligations under the discovery rules may not be reliable guides for determining how courts will rule on motions to comply with specific, mandatory disclosure obligations articulated in Rule 26(a). The only reliable guidance will be found in cases construing the specifically pertinent subdivisions of Rule 26(a).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to Compel

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
A. Obtaining Order to Compel Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.04

§ 22.04 Considering Factors Weighed by Court in Compelling Discovery

[1] Court Order Required to Obtain All Relevant Evidence

The traditional discovery rule has been substantially narrowed in that parties may only obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, that is relevant to the claim or defense of parties to the action. n1 The parties are now required to show good cause for an order allowing discovery of any matter relevant to the subject matter involved in the action. n2 Such relevant information need not be admissible at trial if the discovery appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

[2] Weighing Relevance

Under the relevance standard, information is potentially discoverable if it is both of the following: n3

- It is not privileged
- It is relevant to the claim or defense of any party

[3] Weighing Proportionality

Under the proportionality requirements, a motion to compel should be denied if the party opposing the discovery persuades the court that any of the following are true: n4

- The discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative
- The discovery sought is obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive
- The party seeking the discovery has had ample opportunity by discovery in the action to obtain the information sought
- The burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit n5

[4] Considering Good Faith

Under the good faith requirements, a motion to compel should be denied if the party opposing the discovery persuades the court that either of the following are true: n6

- The discovery sought is not warranted by existing law or a good-faith argument to change existing law, or for establishing new law

- The discovery has been sought for an improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation

[5] Privilege and Work Product Protection

A motion to compel discovery generally will be denied if the materials sought are privileged or protected by the work-product doctrine, irrespective of whether the materials may be otherwise discoverable. n7

A party resisting discovery on the ground that the material sought is privileged or constitutes work product bears the burden of proving that the asserted privilege or protection attaches. n8

In some circumstances, courts will conduct in camera inspections of materials in order to rule on motions to compel that are opposed on grounds of privilege or work product. n9

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersWork ProductGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2).

(n5)Footnote 5. See also Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)(B)(iii) (also articulating burden and expense element).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)(B).

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1) (privilege); (b)(3) (work-product doctrine); see also [2], above.

(n8)Footnote 8. See e.g., In re Horowitz, 482 F.2d 72, 82 (2d Cir.) , cert. denied, 414 U.S. 867 (1973) ; see also Resolution Trust Corp. v. Dabney, 73 F.3d 262, 266 (10th Cir. 1995) ; Davis v. Fendler, 650 F.2d 1154, 1160 (9th Cir. 1981) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See, e.g., United States v. Zolin, 491 U.S. 554, 572, 109 S. Ct. 2619, 105 L. Ed. 2d. 469 (1989) (party seeking in-camera inspection must make threshold showing of appropriateness).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
A. Obtaining Order to Compel Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.05

§ 22.05 Obtaining Expense Shifting Sanctions on Motion to Compel

[1] Presumption Favoring Sanctions

A rebuttable presumption favors imposing expense shifting sanctions on the party against whom a motion to compel disclosures or discovery is resolved. n1

If the motion to compel is granted in part and denied in part, the court may apportion expense shifting sanctions among the parties "in a just manner". n2

[2] Determining Person Against Whom Sanctions May Be Imposed

[2.--1] Imposing Sanctions Against Party, Attorney, or Both

Expense shifting sanctions may be imposed against any party or attorney who is responsible for taking the position that the court rejected when it ruled on a motion to compel. Expense shifting sanctions may be imposed on both counsel and client. n3

If fault is to be apportioned between attorney and client, the character of the apportionment is committed to the sound discretion of the trial court. n4

[2.--2] Apportioning Sanctions When Motion Is Granted in Part and Denied in Part

If a motion to compel discovery or disclosure is granted in part and denied in part, the court, after affording every affected party or person an opportunity to be heard, may apportion the reasonable expenses incurred in relation to the motion among the parties and persons in a just manner. n5

If a motion for an order to compel is granted in part and denied in part, and there is a determination that many of the discovery objections were substantially justified, courts frequently refuse to award expense shifting sanctions to either party. n6

[2.--3] Split in Authority as to Imposition of Expense Shifting Sanctions Against Nonparty Deponent

There is a split in authority as to whether expense shifting sanctions may be imposed against a nonparty deponent, properly subpoenaed for deposition. One court has held that two nonparty deponents who were properly subpoenaed to give testimony and produce documents, and who served objections to the subpoena on the date set for deposition, but who failed to appear for the deposition, were liable for expense shifting sanctions. n7

A different court has reached a contrary conclusion. In ruling that a nonparty deponent was not liable for expense shifting sanctions arising out of a failure to appear at a scheduled deposition, the court held that Rule 37 applies only to parties, and that the only authority for imposing sanctions on a nonparty for failure to comply with a subpoena is found in Rule 45, which authorizes an order of contempt. n8

[3] Providing Sanctioned Party With Opportunity to Be Heard

Before imposing expense shifting sanctions on a party who unsuccessfully made or opposed a motion to compel discovery or mandatory disclosures, a court must afford the persons or parties to be sanctioned an opportunity to be heard. n9

Courts may comply with this requirement either by holding an oral hearing on adequate notice, or by considering written submissions from the affected parties. n10

[4] Limiting Sanctions to Expenses Incurred in Connection With Motion

[4.--1] Expenses Must Relate to Successful Motion

The unsuccessful party on a motion to compel may be ordered to pay sanctions to the successful party. These sanctions consist of the reasonable expenses incurred by the successful party in making or opposing the motion, including attorney's fees. n11

[4.--2] Attorney's Fees Incurred in Preparing Request May Be Included

Attorney's fees incurred in preparing a request for expense shifting sanctions are recoverable. n12

The costs of defending on appeal an award of expense shifting sanctions may be added to the original sanction award. n13

[4.--3] Attorney's Fees Not Available to Pro Se Party

A pro se party may not obtain an award for attorney's fees in conjunction with a motion to compel. However, that party may be awarded the reasonable expenses incurred in bringing or defending the motion. n14

[5] Determining Reasonableness of Sanction--Use of Lodestar Formula

Most courts use the "lodestar" formula to compute attorney's fees as part of expense shifting sanctions.

Under this basic formula, the number of hours spent by the attorneys is multiplied by the hourly rate normally charged for similar work by attorneys of like skill in the area, and the party seeking reimbursement bears the burden of proving the hours spent and the prevailing rates charged. n15

The lodestar figure may be increased or reduced as a result of consideration of a number of different factors, including the complexity of the issues involved, and the perceived skill and efficiency of counsel. n16

[6] Award in Connection With Motion for Protective Order

Expense shifting sanctions may also be awarded in connection with a motion for a protective order. n17

Thus, a court may impose expense shifting sanctions on a party or nonparty who, without substantial justification, unsuccessfully moved for or opposed a motion for a protective order. n18

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(A), (a)(5)(B); Fed. R. Civ. P. 37 Committee Note (1970).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(C).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(A), (a)(5)(B).

(n4)Footnote 4. DeVaney v. Continental Am. Ins. Co., 989 F.2d 1154, 1161-1162 (11th Cir. 1993) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(C).

(n6)Footnote 6. See, e.g., Smith v. The Conway Org., 154 F.R.D. 73, 78 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) ; Caruso v. Coleman Co., 157 F.R.D. 344, 350 (E.D. Pa. 1994) ; Greater Rockford Energy & Tech. Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 138 F.R.D. 530, 538-539 (C.D. Ill. 1991) ; Cal Dive Int'l, Inc. v. M/V Tzimin, 127 F.R.D. 213, 218 (S.D. Ala. 1989) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Rodco Autobody, 130 F.R.D. 2, 4 (D. Mass. 1990) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Cruz v. Meachum, 159 F.R.D. 366, 368 (D. Conn. 1994) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(A), (a)(5)(B).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(4) Committee Note (1993).

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(A), (a)(5)(B); see Cruz v. Meachum, 159 F.R.D. 366, 368 (D. Conn. 1994) ; Foxley Cattle Co. v. Grain Dealers Mut. Ins. Co., 142 F.R.D. 677, 681 (S.D. Iowa 1992) .

(n12)Footnote 12. Sure Safe Indus. Inc. v. C & R Pier Mfg., 152 F.R.D. 625, 626 (S.D. Cal. 1993) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Rickels v. City of South Bend, 33 F.3d 785, 787 (7th Cir. 1994) .

(n14)Footnote 14. Walker v. Tri-Tech Planning Consultants, Inc., 149 F.R.D. 22, 23 (E.D.N.Y. 1993) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Bowne of New York City, Inc. v. AmBase Corp., 161 F.R.D. 258, 266 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) .

(n16)Footnote 16. Bowne of New York City, Inc. v. AmBase Corp., 161 F.R.D. 258, 267 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) ; E.E.O.C. v. Accurate Mechanical Contractors, Inc., 863 F. Supp. 828, 834-835 (E.D. Wis. 1994) ; Gordon v. Castle Oldsmobile and Honda, Inc., 157 F.R.D. 438, 439 (E.D. Ill. 1994) ; Brown v. State of Iowa, 152 F.R.D. 168, 174-175 (S.D. Iowa 1993) Am. Hangar, Inc. v. Basic Line, Inc., 105 F.R.D. 173, 178 (D. Mass. 1985) ;.

(n17)Footnote 17. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(4).

(n18)Footnote 18. Rickels v. City of South Bend, Indiana, 33 F.3d 785, 786 (7th Cir. 1994) ; In re Akros

Installations, Inc. v. Great Nat'l Bank, 834 F.2d 1526, 1530 (9th Cir. 1987) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
A. Obtaining Order to Compel Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.06

§ 22.06 Opposing Expense Shifting Sanctions on Motion to Compel

[1] Rebutting Presumption

The presumption in favor of expense shifting sanctions may be overcome in any of several ways: n1

- If the moving party prevails, the opposing party may rebut the presumption by demonstrating that the motion was filed without the movant's first making a good-faith effort to obtain the disclosure or discovery without court action

- If the moving party prevails, the opposing party may rebut the presumption by demonstrating that its nondisclosure, response, or objection was substantially justified

- If the party opposing the motion prevails, the moving party may rebut the presumption by demonstrating that the making of the motion was substantially justified

- Regardless of who prevails, the party losing the motion may rebut the presumption by demonstrating that other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust

[2] Rebutting Presumption If Unsuccessful Position Was Substantially Justified--Objective Standard

A party meets the substantial justification standard by demonstrating that the dispute about the matter was "genuine," meaning that reasonable lawyers could disagree about the appropriateness of the disputed position. n2

The substantial justification standard is objective, meaning that the source of the norms for determining whether the standard has been satisfied is the court's view about the range of behavior that a hypothetical reasonable lawyer would engage in if confronted with the circumstances presented in the particular case. A prevailing party may secure an expense sanction award without proving that the losing party acted in bad faith, and proof by the losing party that it acted in subjective good faith is not sufficient to defeat a request for sanctions. n3

[3] Overcoming Presumption If Other Circumstances Make Sanctions Unjust

[3.--1] Unjustifiable Conduct by Prevailing Party

There are few reported cases discussing which kinds of other circumstances would make an award of expenses unjust. The drafters suggest that one such circumstance might arise when "the prevailing party also acted unjustifiably". n4

[3.--2] Both Parties Entitled to Sanctions Award

Sanctions may also be unjust when they would be awarded to both parties, and amount to a "wash." One court refused to award sanctions when both parties had filed motions to compel, and both were only partially successful, opining that such an award would have been unjust and not furthering the purpose of minimizing court resources in solving discovery disputes. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelEvidenceInferences & PresumptionsPresumptionsRebuttal of PresumptionsLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(A), (a)(5)(B).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(4) Committee Note (1970); see also Pierce v. Underwood, 487 U.S. 552, 565, 108 S. Ct. 2541, 101 L. Ed. 2d 490 (1988) (establishing meaning of substantial justification within context of Equal Access to Justice Act).

(n3)Footnote 3. DeVaney v. Continental Am. Ins. Co., 989 F.2d 1154, 1162 (11th Cir. 1993) ; Bowne of New York City, Inc. v. AmBase Corp., 161 F.R.D. 258, 262-263 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) ; Eureka Fin. Corp. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 136 F.R.D. 179, 186 (E.D. Cal. 1991) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(4) Committee Note (1970).

(n5)Footnote 5. Tri-Star Pictures, Inc. v. Unger, 171 F.R.D. 94, 103 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
A. Obtaining Order to Compel Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.07

§ 22.07 "Abuse of Discretion" Standard of Review

Trial courts are vested with substantial discretion in determining whether the losing party on a motion to compel took a position that was substantially justified. Appellate courts apply a deferential "abuse of discretion" standard when reviewing trial court rulings with respect to expense shifting sanctions. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelCivil ProcedureAppealsStandards of ReviewAbuse of DiscretionLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Petrucelli v. Bohringer and Ratzinger, 46 F.3d 1298, 1310-1311 (3d Cir. 1995) ; Bill Call Ford, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 48 F.3d 201, 209 (6th Cir. 1995) ; United States v. One 1987 BMW 325, 985 F.2d 655, 657 (1st Cir. 1993) ; AHP Subsidiary Holding Co. v. Stuart Hale Co., 1 F.3d 611, 620 (7th Cir. 1993) ; Haworth, Inc. v. Herman Miller, Inc., 162 F.R.D. 289, 297 (W.D. Mich. 1995) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
A. Obtaining Order to Compel Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.08

§ 22.08 CHECKLISTS: Motion to Compel

[1] CHECKLIST: Bringing Motion to Compel

☐ Determine if grounds for motion to compel disclosure exist. If a party fails to make mandatory disclosures, motion may be brought. n1 Consider:

- ☐ Whether the case is exempt under Rule 26(a)(1)(B). n2
- ☐ Nature of information sought and whether preclusion of that material is more advantageous.
- ☐ Costs of motion against value of information.
- ☐ Delay caused by motion.

☐ Determine if grounds for motion to compel discovery exist. If a party fails to respond to discovery request or to supplement discovery responses, motion may be brought. n3 Consider:

- ☐ Costs of motion against value of information.
- ☐ Delay caused by motion.

☐ Prepare motion, and serve papers. Include following allegations:

- ☐ Court has jurisdiction. n4

☐ Moving party has right to bring motion. n5

☐ Moving party made good-faith effort at resolution of issues. n6

☐ Information is discoverable. n7 or material should have been disclosed. n8

☐ Motion is timely. n9

☐ Reasonable notice was given. n10

[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Motion to Compel

☐ Determine if grounds to oppose motion to compel exist. n11 Consider:

☐ Whether case is exempt from Rule 26(a) requirements, so motion to compel disclosure is inappropriate. n12

☐ Nature of information sought and whether costs of opposing motion are less than value of information.

☐ Court does not have jurisdiction. n13

☐ Moving party does not have right to bring motion. n14

☐ Moving party failed to made good faith effort at resolution of issues. n15

☐ Information is privileged or otherwise protected from discovery. n16 or material did not have to be disclosed. n17

☐ Motion is untimely. n18

☐ Reasonable notice was not given. n19

☐ Prepare and serve response papers.

☐ Determine whether to seek protective order. n20

[3] CHECKLIST: Seeking Imposition of Sanctions

☐ When motion to compel is granted, request sanctions against party opposing motion. n21

Document:

☐ Costs incurred in bringing motion.

☐ Attorney's fees.

☐ When motion to compel is denied, request sanctions against party bringing motion. n22 Document:

☐ Costs incurred in opposing motion.

☐ Attorney's fees.

[4] CHECKLIST: Opposing Imposition of Sanctions

☐ When position on motion to compel was unsuccessful, oppose imposition of expense shifting sanctions. n23 Argue:

☐ Unsuccessful position was substantially justified.

☐ Other circumstances make imposition of sanctions unjust.

☐ Prevailing party did not make good faith attempt at resolution of issues.

☐ Amount requested is excessive.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(A); see § 22.01[1].

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 22.01[1][b].

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(B); see § 22.01[2]-[6].

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(2); see § 22.02[8].

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3); see § 22.02[1].

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(1); see § 22.02[5].

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a); see also § 22.03.

(n9)Footnote 9. See § 22.02[3].

(n10)Footnote 10. See § 22.02[4].

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a).

(n12)Footnote 12. See § 22.01[1][b].

(n13)Footnote 13. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(2); see § 22.02[8].

(n14)Footnote 14. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3); see § 22.02[1].

(n15)Footnote 15. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(1); see § 22.02[5].

(n16)Footnote 16. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n17)Footnote 17. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a); see also § 22.03.

(n18)Footnote 18. See § 22.02[3].

(n19)Footnote 19. See § 22.02[4].

(n20)Footnote 20. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(B), (C); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

(n21)Footnote 21. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(A), (C).

(n22)Footnote 22. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(B), (C).

(n23)Footnote 23. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(A), (a)(5)(C).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
A. Obtaining Order to Compel Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 22.09 through 22.19

[Reserved]

§§ 22.09[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.20

§ 22.20 Determining If Grounds for Rule 37(b) Sanctions Exist

[1] Order or Direction Must Be Violated

Rule 37(b) requires two prerequisites before sanctions may be imposed: n1

- A court order or direction must be in effect
- That order or direction must be violated

[2] Violation Is Determined by Court

Whether a party has violated a particular discovery order is determined by the court that issued the order. That judge is in the best position to determine both what that order means, including how far it reaches, and whether a party's conduct is in violation of the order. n2

[3] Specified Violation by Specified Person Required

Rule 37(b) sanctions are available:

- If a deponent fails to be sworn or answer a question after being directed to do so by the court n3
- If a party (or an officer, director, or managing agent of a person designated under Rule 30(b)(6) or Rule 31(a) to testify on behalf of a party) fails to obey an order to provide or permit discovery n4
- If a party fails to obey an order under Rule 26(f) n5

[4] Applicable Orders

[4.--1] Order Must Be Directed at Specific Party for Specific Act

The court order or direction must be directed at the party against whom the sanctions are sought to be imposed. For example, the Second Circuit has held that sanctions could not be imposed on one defendant when the order compelling discoverywas directed only to its codefendant. n6

[4.--2] Order Must Give Adequate Notice of Duties Imposed

Regardless of the form of the discovery order alleged to have been violated, it must adequately identify the duties it imposes. n7

If the terms of a discovery order are too vague or general to give fair notice of its obligations, it cannot support sanctions. n8

[4.--3] Source of Authority for Order Is Immaterial

Sanctions are permitted for a violation of an order compelling discovery irrespective of whether the order compelling discovery was issued pursuant to Rule 37(a). As long as there was a duly entered order compelling discovery, and it was violated, sanctions are appropriate. n9

When entering orders to compel discovery, courts can draw on a number of different sources of authority, including:

- The court's inherent authority n10
- Rule 16 (pretrial orders) n11
- Rule 26(b)-(g) (general discovery orders) n12
- Rule 35 (orders for physical or mental examinations) n13
- Rule 36 (orders directing compliance with requests for admission) n14
- Rule 37(a) (orders compelling disclosure or discovery) n15
- 28 U.S.C. § 1927 (imposing personal liability on attorneys who unreasonably and vexatiously multiply proceedings)

[4.--4] Order Need Not Be Formal

Informal, minute orders may be sufficient to support sanctions, provided that they are clear. n16

[4.--5] Order Need Not Be Written

The discovery order predicating an award of sanctions under Rule 37(b) need not be written. n17

An oral order will satisfy the prior order requirement, provided that both the following circumstances exist: n18

- The party to whom the oral order was directed was given adequate opportunity to persuade the trial court that the discovery in question should not be compelled
- The oral order gave the party who failed to comply sufficiently clear notice of what the order required that party to do

A deponent may be found in contempt if he or she fails to be sworn or to answer a question, after being "directed" to do so by the court. n19

[4.--6] Subpoena Is Not Order

An order awarding sanctions for disobeying a discovery order must be predicated on a violation of a prior court order compelling discovery. n20

A subpoena, which can be obtained as a matter of course from the court clerk and is not issued by judicial officer in resolution of a discovery dispute, is not considered a prior order. The target of a subpoena has no opportunity before its issuance to contest the propriety of the discovery the subpoena purports to compel. Thus, failure to obey a subpoena, without more, does not constitute a violation of a court order for purposes of Rule 37(b). n21

[5] Defending Propriety of Order Is Not Necessary

[5.--1] Trial Court Will Not Reexamine Order

If sanctions are sought for failure to obey an earlier discovery order, the proprietyof the underlying discovery order generally will not considered. n22

Unless the party against whom sanctions are sought had no opportunity to contest the underlying order, trial courts are unlikely to be interested in revisiting the wisdom of their discovery orders. The issues in the sanctions proceeding at the trial court level usually will be limited to whether there was a violation of the discovery order, and if so, which particular sanction is appropriate.

[5.--2] Appellate Court May Reexamine Order in Limited Cases

Under very limited circumstances a party may challenge the propriety of the underlying discovery order at the appellate level. For example, one court reversed a dismissal sanction after finding that the discovery order on which the sanction was based was unreasonable because compliance with it was physically impossible. The plaintiff was ordered to comply with all outstanding discovery requests by the end of that business day, and she, her attorney, and the courthouse were located in three different cities. n23

[6] Differences Between 37(a) and 37(b)

Note

the following differences between motions to compel under Rule 37(a) and sanctions under Rule 37(b): n24

- Applicability. Rule 37(a) applies to disclosure and discovery disputes; Rule 37(b) applies only to discovery
- Court order as prerequisite to sanctions. Rule 37(a) permits sanctions even if no court order has been entered, but Rule 37(b) authorizes sanctions only if a court has first entered an order compelling the discovery in question, and a party has disobeyed that order
- Meet and confer requirement. Rule 37(a) has a meet and confer requirement, while Rule 37(b) does not
- Potential sanctions. Rule 37(a) sanctions are limited to expenses incurred in connection with the motion to compel, but Rule 37(b) sanctions are not so limited, and indeed may include such severe sanctions as striking pleadings

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b); see United States v. One 1987 BMW 325, 985 F.2d 655, 660-661 (1st Cir. 1993) .

(n2)Footnote 2. United States v. National Med. Enters., Inc., 792 F.2d 906, 911 (9th Cir. 1986) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(1).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f) (preliminary discovery planning meeting).

(n6)Footnote 6. Daval Steel Prods. v. M/V Fakredine, 951 F.2d 1357, 1364 (2d Cir. 1991) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Daval Steel Prods. v. M/V Fakredine, 951 F.2d 1357, 1363 (2d Cir. 1991) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Hathcock v. Navistar Int'l Transp. Corp., 53 F.3d 36, 40-41 (4th Cir. 1995) ; R. W. Int'l Corp. v. Welch Foods, Inc., 937 F.2d 11, 16 (1st Cir. 1991) ; Salahuddin v. Harris, 782 F.2d 1127, 1131-1132 (2d Cir. 1986) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b) Committee Note (1970).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 43-49, 111 S. Ct. 2123, 115 L. Ed. 2d 27 (1991) , reh'g denied, 501 U.S. 1269 (1991) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16; see also Ch. 27, The Pre-Trial Conference.

(n12)Footnote 12. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)-(g).

(n13)Footnote 13. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 35; see also Ch. 21, Physical and Mental Examinations.

(n14)Footnote 14. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 36; see also Ch. 19, Requests to Admit.

(n15)Footnote 15. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a).

(n16)Footnote 16. See Brandt v. Vulcan, Inc., 30 F.3d 752, 756 n.7 (7th Cir. 1994) ; Properties Int'l, Ltd. v. Turner, 706 F.2d 308, 310 (11th Cir. 1983) ; Penthouse International, Ltd. v. Playboy Enterprises, Inc., 663 F.2d 371, 387-390 (2d Cir. 1981) .

(n17)Footnote 17. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(1), (2).

(n18)Footnote 18. Nike Inc. v. Wolverine World Wide, Inc., 43 F.3d 644, 648 (Fed. Cir. 1994) ; Halas v. Consumer Servs., Inc., 16 F.3d 161, 165 (7th Cir. 1994) ; Malautea v. Suzuki Motor Co., 987 F.2d 1536, 1542 n.7 (11th Cir.) , cert. denied, 510 U.S. 863 (1993) ; Avionic Co. v. General Dynamics Corp., 957 F.2d 555, 558 (8th Cir. 1992) ; Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1415, 1991-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69395 (9th Cir.) , cert. denied, 502 U.S. 994 (1991) ; Penthouse International, Ltd. v. Playboy Enterprises, Inc., 663 F.2d 371, 387-390 (2d Cir. 1981) .

(n19)Footnote 19. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(1).

(n20)Footnote 20. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(1), (b)(2).

(n21)Footnote 21. See Daval Steel Prods. v. M/V Fakredine, 951 F.2d 1357, 1364 (2d Cir. 1991) ; Wm. T. Thompson Co. v. General Nutrition Corp., 671 F.2d 100, 102 (3d Cir. 1982) ; Fremont Energy Corp. v. Seattle Post Intelligencer, 688 F.2d 1285, 1286-1287 (9th Cir. 1982) .

(n22)Footnote 22. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b).

(n23)Footnote 23. Diehl v. H.J. Heinz Co., 901 F.2d 73, 73-75 (7th Cir. 1990) .

(n24)Footnote 24. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a), 37(b).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
B. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Comply with Order Compelling Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.21

§ 22.21 Bringing Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Order

[1] Filing Motion Within Reasonable Time After Alleged Violation of Order

Rule 37(b) does not establish any specific time limits within which a motion for sanctions must be filed. n1

Nevertheless, Rule 37(b) motions must be filed within a reasonable time after the alleged violation of the underlying discovery order occurred, was discovered, or should have been discovered through reasonable diligence. The amount of time that is reasonable varies with the circumstances, but long delays will significantly reduce the likelihood that the motion will be granted. n2

[2] Providing Party With Adequate Time to Prepare for Hearing--Five Days' Notice Typically Required

Due process requires that a delinquent party be provided with notice of the possibility that sanctions will be imposed and with an opportunity to present evidence or arguments against their imposition. n3

Absent a contrary local rule, standing order, or case specific directive from the assigned judge, a motion for sanctions predicated upon a party's failure to comply with a discovery order must be by motion, and notice of the hearing must be served at least five days before the date set for that hearing. n4

If it is not feasible for the party accused of the violation to prepare an adequate defense to the motion within five days, the due process clause might require more notice, given the circumstances and the nature of the alleged disobedience. n5

[3] Providing Adequate Description of Alleged Disobedience

A motion for sanctions must describe the alleged disobedience of the order with enough specificity to enable the accused party to understand the charges, so that he or she is given a fair opportunity to develop a defense. The motion must comport with the requirements of due process; it must be real, reasonable, and afford some opportunity to be heard. n6

Absent a clear, contrary indication in the moving papers, any motion for sanctions based on an alleged violation of a discovery order places both the party and the party's counsel on notice that the court might assess sanctions against either or both, unless they provide the court with substantial justification for their conduct. n7

[4] Providing Causal Connection Between Expenses and Alleged Disobedience

If the motion for sanctions seeks an award of expenses, including attorney's fees, itshould describe the causal connection between the expenses and the alleged disobedience of the underlying court order, and it should set forth with particularity the nature of the services rendered, the amount of attorney time spent, and the rates at which the time was billed to the client. n8

[5] Certifying Good Faith Attempt at Resolution

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not require a "meet and confer" with opposing counsel before filing a motion for sanctions under Rule 37(b). n9

Local rules in many district courts, however, impose a duty to confer with opposing counsel before approaching the court. Failure to comply with such local rules may result in denial of a motion for sanctions.

[6] Determining Which Court Has Jurisdiction

[6.--1] Sanctions Against Nonparty Deponent

If sanctions are sought against a nonparty deponent for failure to comply with a discovery order, the motion must be brought pursuant to Rule 37(b)(1), in which case only the court that issued the discovery order has jurisdiction over the motion. n10

If the court that issued the discovery order against the nonparty is not the court where the action is pending, the only sanction that the court may impose pursuant to Rule 37(b)(1) is contempt. n11

[6.--2] Sanctions Against Party

If sanctions are sought against a party for failure to comply with a discovery order, or an order entered under Rule 26(f), the motion may be brought in the court where the action is pending. n12

In such case, the court is not limited to a finding of contempt, but may fashion an appropriate sanctions order, including sanctions that directly affect the parties' substantive rights, and disposition of the action on the merits. n13

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. Brandt v. Vulcan, Inc., 30 F.3d 752, 756 (7th Cir. 1994) ; Zimmerman v. Bishop Estate, 25 F.3d 784, 790 (9th Cir.) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1043 (1994) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Satcorp Int'l Group v. China Nat'l Silk Import & Export Corp., 101 F.3d 3, 6 (2d Cir. 1996) ; Hathcock v. Navistar Int'l Transp. Corp., 53 F.3d 36, 41-42 (4th Cir. 1995) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(c)(1), 7(b)(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Hathcock v. Navistar Int'l Transp. Corp., 53 F.3d 36, 41-42 (4th Cir. 1995) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Hathcock v. Navistar Int'l Transp. Corp., 53 F.3d 36, 41-42 (4th Cir. 1995) .

(n7)Footnote 7. DeVaney v. Continental Am. Ins. Co., 989 F.2d 1154, 1160 (11th Cir. 1993) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Henry v. Gill Indus., Inc., 983 F.2d 943, 946 (9th Cir. 1993) ; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2).

(n9)Footnote 9. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(1).

(n11)Footnote 11. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(1).

(n12)Footnote 12. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2).

(n13)Footnote 13. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(i)-(vii).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.22

§ 22.22 Considering Factors Weighed by Court in Imposing Rule 37(b) Sanctions

[1] Identifying Specified Purpose Furthered by Sanctions

Sanctions are intended to serve the following purposes: n1

- They ensure that a party will not benefit from its own failure to comply with discovery requests
- They are specific deterrents and seek to ensure compliance with discovery orders
- They serve as general deterrents, both in the instant case and in other cases

[2] Applying Discretion of Trial Court

[2.--1] Court Has Broad Discretion

The decision whether to impose sanctions, and the particular type of sanction to by imposed, are left to the trial court's broad discretion. n2

[2.--2] Range of Discretion Varies Depending on Severity of Sanction

The range of trial court discretion varies wtih the severity of the selected sanction. The more severe the sanction imposed, the narrower the range of discretion because the most severe sanctions require the highest degree of fault. n3

Similarly, the scope of a trial court's discretion regarding the procedures it has followed in determining the sanctions request decreases with the magnitude of the sanction selected. The due process considerations that are triggered by the imposition of severe sanctions are greater than those presented by the imposition of lesser sanctions. n4

[3] Imposing Sanctions Against Pro Se Litigants

Courts are less demanding of pro se litigants than of parties who are represented by counsel. n5

However, pro se litigants are expected to obey court orders, and are not immunefrom sanctions for failing to comply with discovery orders, especially if the court concludes that the disobedience was deliberate, or the litigant was warned in advance that sanctions would ensue if the litigant was warned in advance that sanctions would ensue if the litigant did not comply. Indeed, appellate courts have upheld even the most severe sanctions against pro se litigants, including dismissal of the action. n6

[4] Party Should Warn Court of Inability to Comply With Order

It is not clear whether courts may impose lesser sanctions against a party whose disobedience to a discovery order clearly was attributable to a genuine inability to comply.

To protect itself from sanctions, and to prevent other parties from needlessly incurring expenses seeking to enforce discovery orders, a party that is unable to comply with a discovery order should promptly bring that fact to the attention of the court and of the other parties. Failure to promptly report this kind of circumstance, or to seek a protective order, might justifiably lead to imposition of at least an expense shifting sanction.

[5] Inability to Comply Precludes Imposition of Severe Sanctions

If a party's disobedience of a discovery order was due to its inability to comply, and the inability was not fostered by its own conduct or by circumstances within its control, severe sanctions, such as dismissal, are not authorized. n7

Courts are unlikely to accept a party's mere assertion that it was unable to comply with a discovery order, and may require the production of meaningful evidence tending to support the encessary finding of inability. n8

[6] Sanctions Reaching Merits Must Affect Only Claim Related to Noncompliance.

If, as a result of a party's violation of a discovery order, the trial court imposes a sanction that affects that party's ability to litigate the merits of the action, that sanction may only affect the claims, difenses, or isues to which the discovery would have been pertinent. n9

[7] Severe Sanctions Require Bad Faith, Willfulness, or Substantial Fault

[7.--1] Requisite Showing for Dismissal for Default Sanction

The Supreme Court has held that Rule 37 "should not be construed to authorize dismissal of [a] complaint because of [a party's] noncompliance with a pretrial production order when it has been established that failure to comply has been due to inability, and not to willfulness, bad faith, or any fault of [the noncomplying party]." n10

This language has been widely construed to require a showing of bad faith, willfulness, or substantial fault before a dismissal or default sanction may be properly imposed. n11

Several factors may be useful in evaluating a district court's exercise of discretion to dismiss an action under Rule 37. These include: n12

- The willfulness of the non-compliant party or the reason for noncompliance
- The efficacy of lesser sanctions
- The duration of the period of noncompliance
- Whether the non-compliant party had been warned of the consequences of noncompliance

[7.--2] Valid Objection May Preclude Severe Sanctions

Severe sanctions may be rejected if the party resisting discovery had a valid objection to the discovery sought. n13

[7.--3] Circuits Divided as to Whether Dismissal or Default Sanctions Must Be Preceded by Warning

Several circuits have held that in most circumstances, district courts should give advance warning before resorting to dismissal or default sanctions for a party's failure to comply with a discovery order. n14

It is almost certain that all appellate courts will require advance warning if the party sanctioned is proceeding pro se. n15

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePartiesSelf-RepresentationSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. National Hockey League v. Metropolitan Hockey Club, 427 U.S. 639, 642-643 (1976) (per curiam) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Chilcutt v. United States, 4 F.3d 1313, 1320 (5th Cir. 1993) ; Pesaplastic, C.A. v. Cincinnati Milacron Co., 799 F.2d 1510, 1519 (11th Cir. 1986) ; Tamari v. Bache & Co. (Lebanon) S.A.L., 729 F.2d 469, 472 (7th Cir. 1984) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Lediju v. New York City Dept. of Sanitation, 173 F.R.D. 105, 112 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Roadway Express, Inc. v. Piper, 447 U.S. 752, 767 n.14, 100 S. Ct. 2455, 65 L. Ed. 2d 488 (1980) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Salahuddin v. Harris, 782 F.2d 1127, 1132-1133 (2d Cir. 1986) (reversing dismissal of pro se plaintiff's case).

(n6)Footnote 6. Agiwal v. Mid Island Mortgage Corp., 555 F.3d 298, 302 (2d Cir. 2009) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Societe Internationale Pour Participantions Industrielles et Commerciales v. Rogers, 357 U.S. 197, 210-212, 78 S. Ct. 1087, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1255 (1958) (reversing dismissal when compliance with order mandating disclosure of bank records woudl be violation of Swiss laws).

(n8)Footnote 8. Malautea v. Suzuki Motor Co., 987 F.2d 1536, 1543 (11th Cir.) , cert. denied, 510 U. S. 863 (1993) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Avionic Co. v. General Dynamics Corp., 957 F.2d 555, 559 (8th Cir. 1992) ; Daval Steel Prods. v. M/V Fakredine, 951 F.2d 1357, 1366 (2d Cir. 1991) ; United States v. National Med. Enter., Inc., 792 F.2d 906, 910-911 (9th Cir. 1986) .

(n10)Footnote 10. National Hockey League v. Metropolitan Hockey Club, Inc., 427 U.S. 639, 640, 96 S. Ct. 2778, 49 L. Ed. 2d 747 (1976) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See, e.g., Valentine v. Museum of Modern Art, 29 F.3d 47, 49-50 (2d Cir. 1994) ; In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litig., 35 F.3d 717, 791-792 (3d Cir. 1994) , cert. denied sub nom. General Elec. Co. v. Ingram, 513

U.S. 1190 (1995) ; Wouters v. Martin County, Fla., 9 F.3d 924, 934 (11th Cir. 1993) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 812 (1994) ; Philips Med. Sys. Int'l, B.V. v. Bruetman, 982 F.2d 211, 214 (7th Cir. 1992) .

(n12)Footnote 12. See Agiwal v. Mid Island Mortgage Corp., 555 F.3d 298, 302 (2d Cir. 2009) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Fonseca v. Regan, 734 F.2d 944, 947-949 (2d Cir. 1984) , cert. denied, 469 U.S. 882 (1984) .

(n14)Footnote 14. Simmons v. Abruzzo, 49 F.3d 83, 88 (2d Cir. 1995) ; Accord Hathcock v. Navistar Int'l Transp. Corp., 53 F.3d 36, 40-41 (4th Cir. 1995) ; Bass v. Jostens, Inc., 71 F.3d 237, 241-242 (6th Cir. 1995) ; Adriana Int'l Corp. v. Thoeren, 913 F.2d 1406, 1413 (9th Cir. 1990) .

(n15)Footnote 15. See, e.g., Valentine v. Museum of Modern Art, 29 F.3d 47, 50 (2d Cir. 1994) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.23

§ 22.23 Considering Possible Sanctions Under Rule 37(b)

[1] Overview of Possible Sanctions

If a party has failed to comply with a discovery order, the court in which the actionis pending "may make such orders in regard to the failure as are just." n1 Although not an exhaustive list, some of the sanctions that are specifically authorized include: n2

- An order that the matters with respect to which the order was made, or any other designated facts, shall be taken to be established for the purposes of the action in accordance with the claims of the party obtaining the order n3

- An order refusing to allow the disobedient party to support or oppose designated claims or defenses or prohibiting that party from introducing designated matters in evidence n4

- An order striking pleadings or parts of pleadings n5

- An order staying further proceedings until the order is obeyed n6

- An order dismissing the action or proceeding or any part thereof, or rendering a judgment by default against the disobedient party n7

- In lieu of, or in addition to any of the other enumerated sanctions, an order treating the disobedience of the discovery order as a contempt of court, except when the violation is failure to submit to a physical or mental examination: n8

- When a party has failed to comply with an order requiring that party to produce another for physical or mental examination, those orders as are enumerated in Rule 37(b)(2)(A)-(C), unless the party failing to comply demonstrates inability to produce that person for examination n9

In lieu of, or in addition to, any of the enumerated sanctions, the court must require the disobedient party, or the attorney advising that party, or both, to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the violation, unless the court finds that the failure was substantially justified, or that other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust. n10

[2] Sanctions Deeming Facts Established

If a party violates a discovery order, the trial court may order that specified facts or other matters related to the violated discovery order shall be taken as established for the purposes of the action in accordance with the claim of the party obtaining the order. n11

[3] Sanctions Prohibiting Support or Opposition to Claims or Introduction of Evidence

If a party violates a discovery order, the trial court may enter an order prohibiting the disobedient party from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses, or prohibiting that party from introducing designated matters into evidence. n12

Due process considerations require that there be a sufficient nexus between the discovery order that was disobeyed and the matter that the disobedient party is prohibited from introducing into evidence. n13

[4] Sanctions Striking Pleadings

If a party violates a discovery order, the trial court may enter an order striking pleadings or parts of pleadings. n14

[5] Sanctions Staying Further Proceedings

If a party violates a discovery order, the court may stay further proceedings until the order is obeyed. n15

[6] Sanctions Dismissing Action or Entering Default Judgment

If a plaintiff violates a discovery order, the court may dismiss the case, in whole or in part, with prejudice, and if a defendant violates a discovery order, the court may enter a default judgment against the defendant. n16

In view of the severity of a dismissal or default sanction, appellate courts generally require trial judges to consider specific factors in determining whether the sanction is an appropriate response to the party's disobedient conduct. The following factors may be considered in determining whether to impose a dismissal or default sanction: n16.1

- Whether the violation or violations were the product of willfulness, bad faith, or some other substantial fault
- Whether the violations caused other parties to suffer prejudice, and if so, the severity, and whether it was remediable through some other action
- Whether the violation caused delay in the proceedings, and if so, to what extent
- Whether the disobedient party had been warned earlier that violations could or would result in this kind of drastic sanction
- Whether the disobedience was an isolated event or was part of a pattern of misbehavior
- Whether less severe sanctions had been imposed earlier on the disobedient party without sufficient effect

- Whether the trial judge who imposed the severe sanction first considered alternative, less severe measures but concluded, for articulated reasons, why no less drastic sanction would achieve the legitimate ends of the sanctions rules

[7] Sanctions Finding Contempt of Court

[7.--1] Contempt of Court

If a party violates a discovery order, other than an order to submit to a physical or mental examination, the court may enter an order treating the violation as a contempt of court. A contempt sanction is available in addition to, or in lieu of, the following sanctions: n17

- An order deeming facts established n18
- An order of preclusion n19
- An order striking pleadings n20
- An order staying proceedings n21
- An order dismissing the action or rendering a judgment by default. n22

[7.--2] Procedural Prerequisites to Contempt

A court may not impose a contempt sanction without first satisfying the procedural requirements required by due process. A contempt proceeding of any kind must be preceded by clear notice of the alleged disobedience, as well as an adequate opportunity to present a defense to the allegations. The specific procedural requirements will depend on various factors, such as: n23

- The nature of the allegedly contumacious conduct
- Whether that conduct occurred in the presence of the judge
- Whether the sanction consists of a civil contempt or a criminal contempt

[7.--3] Effect of Local District Court Rules on Contempt Proceedings

Local district court rules may set forth specific procedural requirements to be followed with regard to civil contempt.

[7.--4] Potential Contemnor Should Notify Court of Inability to Comply

A party anticipating that it will not be able to comply with a discovery order should explain the circumstances to opposing counsel before the deadline, and request from the court a modification of the original order. If opposing counsel is uncooperative, the party to whom the order is directed should then file a formal motion for reconsideration or modification of the original discovery order, or for a protective order. n24

The least prudent course of action would be to remain silent until after the deadline, and only then to attempt to defend the disobedience.

[7.--5] Criminal Contempt

Criminal contempt may not be imposed as a sanction for disobeying a discovery order unless the disobedience was willful or in bad faith. n25

A party facing a criminal contempt sanction has additional procedural rights and protections. For example:

- That party is entitled to be warned not only that sanctions might be imposed, but also that the sanction could be criminal contempt n26
- That party is entitled to the assistance of counsel in the contempt proceedings, and may have a right to trial by jury on the charges n27
- The facts necessary to support the conviction must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt n28

[8] Sanctions for Failure to Produce Person for Examination

If a party has failed to comply with an order pursuant to Rule 35(a) requiring that party to produce another person for a physical or mental examination, the court may impose any of the following sanctions, unless the disobedient party shows that he or she was unable to produce the person for the examination: n29

- An order deeming facts established n30
- An order of preclusion n31
- An order striking pleadings n32
- An order staying proceedings n33
- An order dismissing the action or rendering a judgment by default. n34 The contempt sanction is unavailable under Rule 37. n35

In this context, alleged inability to produce another for physical or mental examination means that the party must have been "unable in good faith" to comply with the underlying order. n36

[9] Sanctions Imposing Reasonable Expenses

[9.--1] Compensatory Monetary Sanctions Are Mandatory

If a party disobeys a discovery order, the district court may require the disobedient party, or the attorney advising that party, or both, to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the failure, unless the court finds that the failure was substantially justified, or that other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust. n37

The court may impose the compensatory monetary sanction instead of, or in addition to, any other sanctions. n38

[9.--2] Bad Faith Not Required

Negligent failure to comply with a discovery order may provide a basis for monetary sanctions; bad faith is not required. n39

[9.--3] Overcoming Presumption If Failure Was Substantially Justified

The disobedient party bears the burden of proving that its failure was substantially justified, or that it would be unjust

for some other reason to impose compensatory monetary sanctions. This is appropriate because the court already will have found that the resisting party has violated the discovery order. n40

District courts have considerable discretion in determining whether a party was substantially justified in disobeying a discovery order. n41

[9.--4] Overcoming Presumption If Other Circumstances Make Sanctions Unjust

The district court may also elect not to impose compensatory monetary sanctions if "other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust". n42 Such "other circumstances" are most likely to arise when a litigant is proceeding pro se, and is not held to the same standards as represented parties, or when the disobedient party is impecunious. In the latter circumstance, a court that is reluctant in good conscience to impose a monetary sanction might instead impose another type of sanction, especially when the disobedience is willful, repeated, or particularly egregious, and it would threaten the administration of justice not to respond.

[9.--5] Determining Person Against Whom Sanctions May Be Imposed

Compensatory monetary sanctions may be imposed on the disobedient party, on the attorney advising the party, or on both the party and the attorney. n43

[9.--6] Limiting Sanctions to Reasonable Expenses Caused by Failure

Compensatory monetary sanctions are limited to the "reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the failure" to obey the discovery order. n44 Compensatory monetary sanctions awarded for failure to obey a discovery order may compensate for a broader range of losses than monetary sanctions in connection with a motion to compel discovery, which are limited to the reasonable expenses incurred in making or opposing the motion. n45

[10] Sanctions Imposing Such Other Sanctions as Are Just

If a party fails to obey a discovery order, the court may make "issue further just orders". n46 The specific sanctions set forth in Rule 37(b)(2)(A) are illustrative, rather than exclusive. n47

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2).

(n3)Footnote 3. See [2], below.

(n4)Footnote 4. See [3], below.

(n5)Footnote 5. See [4], below.

(n6)Footnote 6. See [5], below.

(n7)Footnote 7. See [6], below.

(n8)Footnote 8. See [7], below.

(n9)Footnote 9. See [8], below.

(n10)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2); see [9], below.

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(i).

(n12)Footnote 12. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(ii).

(n13)Footnote 13. Jankins v. TDC Management Corp., Inc., 21 F.3d 436, 444 (D.C. Cir. 1994) ; Daval Steel Prods. v. M/V Fakredine, 951 F.2d 1357, 1362-1363, 1366 (2d Cir. 1991) ; United States for use of Wiltec Guam v. Kahaluu Constr. Co., 857 F.2d 600, 603 & n.5 (9th Cir. 1988) ; E.E.O.C. v. Kenosha Unified Sch. Dist. No. 1, 620 F.2d 1220, 1226 (7th Cir. 1980) .

(n14)Footnote 14. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(iii).

(n15)Footnote 15. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(iv).

(n16)Footnote 16. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(v), (vi); see generally, Bass v. Jostens, Inc., 71 F.3d 237, 243 (6th Cir. 1995) ; see also Rose v. Franchetti, 979 F.2d 81, 86-87 (7th Cir. 1992) .

(n17)Footnote 16.1. Agiwal v. Mid Island Mortg. Corp., 555 F.3d 298, 302-303 (2d Cir. 2009) .

(n18)Footnote 17. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(vii).

(n19)Footnote 18. See [2], above.

(n20)Footnote 19. See [3], above.

(n21)Footnote 20. See [4], above.

(n22)Footnote 21. See [5], above.

(n23)Footnote 22. See [6], above.

(n24)Footnote 23. See, e.g., Schoenberg v. Shapolsky Publishers, Inc., 971 F.2d 926, 935 (2d Cir. 1992) ; see also Citronelle-Mobile Gathering, Inc., v. Watkins, 943 F.2d 1297, 1304 (11th Cir. 1991) .

(n25)Footnote 24. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

(n26)Footnote 25. Richmark Corp. v. Timber Falling Consultants, 959 F.2d 1468, 1479 (9th Cir. 1992) ; Pesaplastic, C.A. v. Cincinnati Milacron Co., 799 F.2d 1510, 1519-1521 (11th Cir. 1986) .

(n27)Footnote 26. Schoenberg v. Shapolsky Publishers, Inc., 971 F.2d 926, 934-935 (2d Cir. 1992) ; Lamar Fin. Corp. v. Adams, 918 F.2d 564, 567 (5th Cir. 1990) .

(n28)Footnote 27. Muniz v. Hoffman, 422 U.S. 454, 474-476, 95 S. Ct. 2178, 45 L. Ed. 2d 319 (1975) .

(n29)Footnote 28. In re Kave, 760 F.2d 343, 351 (1st Cir. 1985) .

(n30)Footnote 29. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(B); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(a) (examinations).

(n31)Footnote 30. See [2], above.

(n32)Footnote 31. See [3], above.

(n33)Footnote 32. See [4], above.

(n34)Footnote 33. See [5], above.

(n35)Footnote 34. See [6], above.

(n36)Footnote 35. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(B), .

(n37)Footnote 36. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b) Committee Note (1970).

(n38)Footnote 37. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2); see, e.g., Penthouse International, Ltd. v. Playboy Enterprises, Inc., 663 F.2d 371, 392 (2d Cir. 1981) ; see also Eastway Gen. Hosp. v. Eastway Women's Clinic, Inc., 737 F.2d 503, 503 (5th Cir. 1984) ; United States v. Sumitomo Marine & Fire Ins. Co., 617 F.2d 1365, 1371 (9th Cir. 1980) .

(n39)Footnote 38. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(C).

(n40)Footnote 39. Tamari v. Bache & Co. (Lebanon) S.A.L. 729 F.2d 469, 473-474 (7th Cir. 1984) ; Marquis v. Chrysler Corp., 577 F.2d 624, 642 (9th Cir. 1978) .

(n41)Footnote 40. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2) Committee Note (1970).

(n42)Footnote 41. Fonar Corp. v. Magnetic Resonance Plus, Inc., 162 F.R.D. 276, 279 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) , aff'd, 128 F.3d 99 (2d Cir. 1997) .

(n43)Footnote 42. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(C).

(n44)Footnote 43. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(C); see, e.g., Roadway Express, Inc. v. Piper, 447 U.S. 752, 763-764, 100 S. Ct. 2455, 65 L. Ed. 2d 488 (1980) .

(n45)Footnote 44. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(C).

(n46)Footnote 45. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(A), (a)(5)(B).

(n47)Footnote 46. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2).

(n48)Footnote 47. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
B. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Comply with Order Compelling Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.24

§ 22.24 "Abuse of Discretion" Standard of Review

[1] Clear Error of Judgment Must Be Shown

Appellate courts apply a deferential "abuse of discretion" standard when reviewing a trial court's sanctions ruling. Under this test, the trial court's decision will be disturbed only if the reviewing court has a definite and firm conviction, after weighing all the relevant factors, that the court below committed a clear error of judgment in the conclusion it reached. n1

[2] Amount of Monetary Sanction

Appellate courts will not lightly displace a district court's judgment regarding the appropriate amount of a compensatory monetary sanction for a party's disobedience of a discovery order, but a sanction that appears clearly excessive will be reversed. n2

[3] Articulation of Basis by District Court Required

District courts must articulate clearly the bases for the amount of the sanction. A district judge's failure to adhere to this requirement likely will result in a remand. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelCivil ProcedureAppealsStandards of ReviewAbuse of DiscretionLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Friends of Animals, Inc. v. United States Surgical Corp., 131 F.3d 332, 334 (2d Cir. 1997) (citing Moore's); Moore v. Armour Pharmaceutical Co., 927 F.2d 1194, 1197 (11th Cir. 1991) ; Brune v. IRS, 861 F.2d 1284, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1988) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fonar Corp. v. Magnetic Resonance Plus, Inc., 162 F.R.D. 276, 279 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) , aff'd, 128 F.3d 99 (2d Cir. 1997) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Martin v. Brown, 63 F.3d 1252, 1263-1264 (3rd Cir. 1995) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.25

§ 22.25 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Rule 37(b) Sanctions

[1] CHECKLIST: Bringing Motion for Rule 37(b) Sanctions

☐ Determine if grounds for motion for sanctions exist. If a person fails to obey court order for discovery, motion for sanctions may be brought. n1 Consider:

- ☐ If disobedient person is nonparty deponent, contempt is only available sanction. n2
- ☐ If disobedient person is party (or party designee), additional sanctions are available. n3

☐ Prepare motion, and serve papers. Include following allegations:

- ☐ Court has jurisdiction. n4
- ☐ Valid order was violated by person against whom sanctions are sought. n5
- ☐ Moving party made good faith effort at resolution of issues. n6
- ☐ Motion is timely. n7
- ☐ Adequate description of disobedience and sanction sought was given. n8
- ☐ Reasonable notice was given. n9
- ☐ Papers and procedures followed comply with local rules. n10

☐ When monetary sanctions are requested, n11 Document:

- ☐ Costs incurred by party's failure to obey order.
- ☐ Attorney's fees.

[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Motion for Rule 37(b) Sanctions

☐ Determine if grounds to oppose motion for sanctions exist. n12 Consider:

- ☐ Court does not have jurisdiction. n13
- ☐ Order was not valid or was not directed at person to be sanctioned. n14
- ☐ Moving party failed to made good faith effort at resolution of issues. n15
- ☐ Motion is untimely. n16
- ☐ Inadequate description of disobedience and sanction was given. n17
- ☐ Reasonable notice was not given. n18
- ☐ Sanction requested is inappropriate. n19
- ☐ Papers and procedures followed did not comply with local rules. n20

☐ Prepare and serve response papers.

☐ When monetary sanctions are sought, n21 argue:

- ☐ Failure to obey order was substantially justified.
- ☐ Other circumstances make imposition of sanctions unjust.
- ☐ Moving party did not make good faith attempt at resolution of issues.
- ☐ Amount requested is excessive.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelCivil ProcedureSanctionsMisconduct & Unethical BehaviorGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(1),(2); see § 22.21.

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 22.23[7].

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 22.23.

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(1), (b)(2) ; see § 22.21[8].

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b); see §§ 22.20, 22.21.

(n6)Footnote 6. See § 22.21[5].

(n7)Footnote 7. See § 22.21[1].

(n8)Footnote 8. See § 22.21[3].

(n9)Footnote 9. See § 22.21[2].

(n10)Footnote 10. See § 22.21[6], [7].

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2); see § 22.23[9].

(n12)Footnote 12. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b).

(n13)Footnote 13. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b); see § 22.21[8].

(n14)Footnote 14. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b); see § 22.20.

(n15)Footnote 15. See § 22.21[5].

(n16)Footnote 16. See § 22.21[1].

(n17)Footnote 17. See § 22.21[3].

(n18)Footnote 18. See § 22.21[2].

(n19)Footnote 19. See § 22.23.

(n20)Footnote 20. See § 22.21[6], [7].

(n21)Footnote 21. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2); see § 22.23[9].

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
B. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Comply with Order Compelling Discovery or Mandatory Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 22.26 through 22.39

[Reserved]

§§ 22.26[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
C. Sanctions for Failure to Disclose

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.40

§ 22.40 Determining If Grounds for Preclusion Exist

[1] Failure to Comply With Disclosure Requirements

If a party, without substantial justification, fails to disclose information required by Rule 26(a) or 26(e), that party may not use testimony from that witness or the undisclosed information as evidence at trial, at a hearing, or in connection with a motion, unless the failure to disclose was harmless. n1

In lieu of a preclusion sanction, the court, on motion and after affording an opportunity to be heard, may impose other appropriate sanctions. n2

[2] Disclosure Required by Rule 26(a)

Rule 26(a) imposes three sets of automatic disclosure obligations on parties: n3

- Initial disclosures, which include information regarding (1) individuals likely to have discoverable information that the disclosing party may use to support its claims or defenses, unless solely for impeachment; (2) documents, electronically stored information, and tangible things that are in the possession, custody, or control of the party and that the disclosing party may use to support its claims or defenses, unless solely for impeachment; (3) claims and calculations of damages; and (4) insurance coverage

- Disclosures related to expert testimony, including information regarding the background and qualifications of expert witnesses, as well as the content of and bases for the opinions such witnesses will be offering

- Final pretrial disclosures, which include identifying trial witnesses and exhibits, and designating deposition testimony that will be used at trial

District courts may opt out from requiring any or all of these types of disclosure.

[3] Supplementation of Disclosure Required by Rule 26(e)(1)

A party who has made a disclosure under Rule 26(a) is under a duty to supplement at appropriate intervals that disclosure to include information later acquired: n4

- If ordered by the court

- If that party learns that in some material respect the information so disclosedis incomplete or incorrect and if the additional or corrective information has not otherwise been made known to the other parties

[4] Proffering of Undisclosed Evidence Triggers Sanction

If the party does not seek to use the undisclosed evidence at trial or in connection with a motion, there is no occasion to invoke the preclusion sanction, although other sanctions might be available, even if it is unclear that the undisclosed evidence would be helpful to the opposing parties. n5

[5] Sanction Designed to Be Automatic

The drafters described the evidence preclusion sanction for a party's failure to make mandatory, voluntary disclosures as "self-executing" and "automatic," indicating an intent not only that evidence preclusion sanctions are to be imposed without need for a motion, but also that there is to be no occasion for an exercise of discretion by the trial judge. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMotions to CompelLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1); see also Black v. Columbus Pub. Sch., 124 F. Supp. 2d 550, 561 (S.D. Ohio 2000).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(e)(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Resolution Trust Corp. v. Hidden Ponds Phase IV Dev. Assocs., 873 F. Supp. 799, 807 (E.D.N.Y. 1995) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c) Committee Note (1993).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
C. Sanctions for Failure to Disclose

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.41

§ 22.41 Obtaining Evidence Preclusion Sanction

[1] Prerequisites

Before evidence will be precluded:

- The party seeking to invoke the sanction must first prove that the opposing party violated Rule 26(a) or 26(e) by failing to disclose the evidence in question;

- The party to be sanctioned must have an opportunity to demonstrate that its failure to disclose was substantially justified or harmless, factors involving considerable discretion by the district court. n1

[2] Bringing Failure to Court's Attention

Be prepared to object if the opposing party attempts to proffer the nondisclosed witness or information at a hearing or on a motion. Be prepared to prove that such proffer is in violation of Rule 37(c)(1), and request additional time if necessary. If objection is not made at the hearing, be prepared to follow a formal motion procedure.

[3] Showing Culpable Conduct and Prejudice Before Important Evidence Is Precluded

An evidence preclusion sanction may be tantamount to dismissal with prejudice, or entry of a default judgment. Accordingly, many judges are reluctant to exclude evidence that is important to the merits of the case without a showing of substantial and largely irremedial prejudice, as well as bad faith, willfulness, or some other substantial fault. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedurePretrial JudgmentsDefaultGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Meyers v. Pennypack Woods Home Ownership Ass'n, 559 F.2d 894, 904-905 (3d Cir. 1977) ; McNerney v. Archer Daniels Midland Co., 164 F.R.D. 584, 587 (W.D.N.Y. 1995) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
C. Sanctions for Failure to Disclose

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.42

§ 22.42 Obtaining Other Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Disclosure Requirements

In addition to or in lieu of an evidence preclusion sanction, the court may impose other appropriate sanctions if a party, without substantial justification, violates its disclosure obligations pursuant to Rule 26(a) or Rule 26(e), and fails to show that the violation was harmless. These sanctions include: n1

- An order requiring the payment of reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the failure to make the mandatory disclosure n2

- An order that the matters as to which the disclosure was not made, or any other designated facts, shall be taken to be established for the purposes of the action in accordance with the claims of the party seeking disclosure n3

- An order refusing to allow the disobedient party to support or oppose designated claims or defenses, or prohibiting that party from introducing designated matters into evidence n4

- An order striking pleadings or parts of pleadings, staying further proceedings until the disclosure is made, dismissing the action or proceeding or any part of the action or proceeding, or entering a default judgment against the party who violated the disclosure rules n5

- A statement to the jury informing it of the failure to make the mandatory disclosure

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedurePretrial JudgmentsGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Arthur v. Atkinson Freight Lines Corp., 164 F.R.D. 19, 21-22 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) ; Bonin v. Chadron

Community Hosp., 163 F.R.D. 565, 566 (D. Neb. 1995) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 22.23[2].

(n4)Footnote 4. See § 22.23[3].

(n5)Footnote 5. See §§ 22.23[4]-[6].

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
C. Sanctions for Failure to Disclose

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.43

§ 22.43 Opposing Sanctions on Ground That Failure to Disclose Was Substantially Justified

[1] No Sanction If Failure to Disclose Was Substantially Justified

Sanctions may not be imposed if a party's failure to disclose information requiredby Rule 26(a) or 26(e)(1) was substantially justified. n1

[2] Genuine Discovery Dispute May Substantially Justify Failure

A party's position in failing to make disclosure may be substantially justified if it appears that it is based on a genuine discovery dispute. n2

A dispute may be deemed genuine if reasonable attorneys, applying the relevant legal norms to the evidence, could disagree about how the dispute should be resolved. If a rational legal mind could conclude, without the excessive strain that only self-serving motives would tolerate, that the legally imposed duty did not require production of the evidence, the dispute should be deemed genuine, the party's position would be substantially justified, and no sanction would be imposed. n3

[3] Reasonable Predisclosure Investigation May Substantially Justify Failure

A party's predisclosure investigation may be considered by the court in determining whether that party's failure to comply with Rule 26(a) or Rule 26(e)(1) was substantially justified. n4

[4] Pro Se Party's Ignorance of Requirement May Substantially Justify Failure

When the party failing to comply with disclosure requirements is proceeding pro se, that party's lack of knowledge, before the failure, of the disclosure requirements may indicate the failure was substantially justified. n5

[5] Unforeseen Relevance May Substantially Justify Failure

A party may be substantially justified in not disclosing evidence if that party could not have been expected to foresee its relevance. For example, a party may not be barred from calling an undisclosed witness or from using an undisclosed document if the need for the witness' testimony or for the evidence is based upon developments during trial that could not reasonably have been anticipated, such as a change in testimony. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(4) Committee Note (1970).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Hinton v. Patnaude, 162 F.R.D. 435, 439-440 (N.D.N.Y. 1995) ; Nguyen v. IBP, Inc., 162 F.R.D. 675, 680 (D. Kan. 1995) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a) Committee Note (1993).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c) Committee Note (1993).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a) Committee Note (1993).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
C. Sanctions for Failure to Disclose

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.44

§ 22.44 Opposing Sanctions on Ground That Failure to Disclose Was Harmless

Sanctions may not be imposed if a party's failure to disclose information required by Rule 26(a) or Rule 26(e)(1) was harmless. n1 Two examples of harmless failures to disclose are: n2

- The inadvertent omission from a Rule 26(a)(1) disclosure of the name of a potential witness known to all parties

- The failure to list as a trial witness in a disclosure mandated by Rule 26(a)(3) a person so listed by another party

The burden of establishing harmlessness is on the party who failed to make the required disclosure; "harmless" involves an honest mistake on the part of the party who failed to make the disclosure coupled with sufficient knowledge on the party requesting discovery. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c) Committee Note (1993).

(n3)Footnote 3. Russell v. Bronson Heating & Cooling, 345 F. Supp. 2d 761, 778 (E.D. Mich. 2004) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
C. Sanctions for Failure to Disclose

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.45

§ 22.45 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Rule 37(c)(1) Sanctions

[1] CHECKLIST: Seeking Sanctions for Failure to Make Mandatory Disclosures

☐ Determine if grounds for preclusion exist. If a party who failed to disclose information required by Rule 26(a) or 26(e)(1) proffers that evidence, preclusion sanction is available. n1

☐ Raise issue with court. n2

☐ If necessary, prepare motion, and serve papers.

☐ Request monetary sanctions. n3 Document:

- ☐ Costs incurred by party's failure to properly disclose evidence.
- ☐ Attorney's fees.

■ FORM: For a sample notice of motion for sanctions for failure to make mandatory disclosures.

[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Sanctions for Failure to Make Mandatory Disclosures

☐ Determine if grounds to oppose preclusion exist. n4 Consider:

- ☐ Undisclosed material was not proffered as evidence.
- ☐ Failure to disclose was substantially justified. n5

☐ Failure to disclose was harmless. n6

☐ Sanction requested is inappropriate.

☐ Papers and procedures followed did not comply with local rules.

☐ Prepare and serve response papers.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c); see § 22.40.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c); see § 22.41.

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. See § 22.43.

(n6)Footnote 6. See § 22.44.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
C. Sanctions for Failure to Disclose

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 22.46 through 22.59

[Reserved]

§§ 22.46[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
D. Obtaining Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.60

§ 22.60 Determining If Grounds for Order for Expense Shifting Sanctions Exist

[1] Requirements for Rule 37(c)(2) Sanctions

If a party fails to admit the genuineness of any document or the truth of any matter as requested pursuant to Rule 36, and if the requesting party then proves the genuineness of the document or the truth of the matter, the requesting party may seek an order requiring the other party to pay the reasonable expenses incurred in making that proof, including reasonable attorney's fees. n1

[2] Four Exceptions to Mandatory Sanction Rule

If the requisite showing discussed in [1], above, is made, the court must impose expense shifting sanctions unless one of four exceptions is applicable. These exceptions are addressed in § 22.62.

[3] Requests for Admission

[3.--1] Scope

A request for admission asks the other party to admit to the truth of specified matters or the genuineness of specified documents. Requests for admission may encompass matters that relate to statements or opinions of fact, or of the application of law to fact. n2

[3.--2] Potential Responses

A party who does nothing in response to a properly framed request for admission is deemed to have admitted the matter. n3 A party who elects to respond to the request for admission may: n4

- Object to the request and set forth the basis for the objection
- Admit the matter
- Deny the matter

- State that the matter cannot be admitted or denied, setting forth in detail why this is the case

If the responding party provides answers or objections that the propounding party finds to be insufficient, the propounding party may file a motion during the pretrialperiod requesting the court to determine the sufficiency of those answers or objections. n5

[4] When to Use Rule 37(c)

If a party responding to a request for admission provides a response consisting of a straightforward, but clearly unjustified denial, or a statement, proper in form but ultimately wanting in substance, that the responding party cannot either admit or deny the request at that stage of the proceedings, Rule 36 leaves a propounding party effectively without a remedy.

In these situations Rule 37(c) is intended to provide post-trial relief in the form of a requirement that the party improperly refusing the admission pay the expenses of the other side in making the necessary proof at trial. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsObjectionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsResponsesCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2); see SEC v. Happ, 295 F. Supp. 2d 189, 192-194 (D. Mass. 2003) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c) Committee Note (1970).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
D. Obtaining Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.61

§ 22.61 Moving for Sanctions Under Rule 37(c)(2)

[1] Determining Person Against Whom Sanctions May Be Imposed

Expense shifting sanctions for unreasonably denying or unreasonably refusing either to admit or deny a legitimate request for admission may be imposed only on parties, and not on counsel. n1

A court that concludes that an attorney played a culpable role in a party's improper response to a request for admissions must look to another other source of authority to impose sanctions against the attorney. Other sources might include:

- Other provisions of Rule 37
- Rule 26(g), which authorizes sanctions for discovery certifications made in violation of Rule 26(g) n2
- Rule 11(c), which permits sanctions for violations of the obligation to conduct a reasonable inquiry into the law and facts n3
- 28 U.S.C. § 1927, which authorizes sanctions against an attorney who "multiplies the proceedings in any case unreasonably and vexatiously" n4
- A district court's inherent authority n5

[2] Making Timely Motion

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not specify any time frame within which a motion seeking expense shifting sanctions for a party's unreasonable failure to admit must be filed.

However, Rule 37(c)(2) is intended to provide post-trial relief, and it would be inappropriate for counsel to seek expense shifting sanctions before completion of the trial. As a practical matter, it is necessary to complete a proceeding before a court would be able to conclude that the moving party had "proven" the truth of the matter for which an admission was requested, because a court must consider all rebuttal evidence before it may determine what has been proven.

[3] Certifying Good Faith Attempt at Resolution

There is no requirement to meet and confer with opposing counsel before filing a motion for sanctions under Rule 37(c). n6 However, by local rule, a district may have adopted such a requirement.

[4] Complying With Local Procedural Rules

Local district court rules typically contain special requirements governing the preparation of papers supporting and opposing discovery motions, as well as service of these papers.

[5] Complying With Local Filing Rules

Local rules in many districts specify what discovery material should be filed with a discovery motion.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureSanctionsBaseless FilingsGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Johnson Int'l Co. v. Jackson Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 19 F.3d 431, 438 n.8 (8th Cir. 1994) (citing Moore's).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(c).

(n4)Footnote 4. 28 U.S.C. § 1927.

(n5)Footnote 5. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. v. Energy Gathering, Inc., 2 F.3d 1397, 1410-1411 (5th Cir. 1993) , cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1073 (1994) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
D. Obtaining Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.62

§ 22.62 Overcoming Presumption Favoring Sanctions

[1] Presumption Favoring Sanctions

A party responding to a motion for sanctions under Rule 37(c)(2) should consider the applicability of the four exceptions within the rule.

Expense shifting sanctions for unreasonably denying or unreasonably refusing either to admit or deny a legitimate request for admission are mandatory, unless the court finds that one of the following exceptions exist: n1

- The request was held objectionable pursuant to Rule 36(a) n2
- The admission sought was of no substantial importance n3
- The party failing to admit had reasonable ground to believe that the party might prevail on the matter n4
- There was other good reason for the failure to admit n5

[2] Overcoming Presumption If Request Was Objectionable Under Rule 36(a)

Expense shifting sanctions for unreasonably denying or unreasonably refusing either to admit or deny a legitimate request for admission may be denied if the court finds that the request was held objectionable pursuant to Rule 36(a). n6 Apparently, this exception is available only if all of the following conditions exist: n7

- The party who failed to make the admission interposed a timely objection
- The propounding party filed a pretrial motion to determine the sufficiency of the objection
- The trial court ruled that the objection was well founded

[3] Overcoming Presumption If Admission Sought Was of No Substantial Importance

[3.--1] Basis for Rejecting Sanctions

Expense shifting sanctions for unreasonably denying or unreasonably refusing either to admit or deny a legitimate request for admission may be denied if the court finds that the admission sought was of no substantial importance. n8

[3.--2] Evaluation on Case-by-Case Basis

Courts decide whether a particular admission sought was of substantial importance on a case-by-case basis, taking into account all surrounding circumstances. Courts consider whether the propounding party was required by the pertinent law to prove the fact that was the subject of the requested admission in order to prevail on a claim or defense. If the fact was not essential, directly or indirectly, to the party's success, it may not be of substantial importance. n9

[4] Overcoming Presumption If Responding Party Had Reasonable Ground to Believe It Might Prevail

[4.--1] Reasonable Ground for Belief

Expense shifting sanctions for unreasonably denying or unreasonably refusing either to admit or deny a legitimate request for admission may be denied if the party failing to admit had reasonable ground to believe that it might prevail on the matter. n10 The test for determining whether this exception applies is not whether a party prevailed at trial, but whether that party acted reasonably in believing that it might prevail. n11

[4.--2] Examples of Reasonable Grounds for Belief

The test of reasonableness is objective, and courts will reject a party's attempt to invoke the exception if there clearly was too little evidentiary support to permit a rational jury to resolve the matter in favor of the party that failed to make the requested admission. This exception has been invoked successfully in the following circumstances:

- Cases involving substantially conflicting evidence n12
- Good faith arguments about how to resolve important and unsettled questions of law, or of the application of law to fact n13
- Complicated technical issues, particularly when there is no agreement among the experts n14

[4.--3] Reliance on Expert Opinion

Reliance on an expert opinion does not automatically provide a reasonable ground for a party to believe that he or she will prevail on the matter. Courts will not permit a party to escape sanctions by purporting to rely on an expert opinion that is patently implausible or lacks any arguably reliable support. However, a court may look favorably on a party who acknowledges its lack of expertise, and who consults in good faith experts in the relevant field.

[5] Overcoming Presumption If Responding Party Had Other Good Reason for Failure to Admit

Expense shifting sanctions for unreasonably denying or unreasonably refusing either to admit or deny a legitimate request for admission may be denied if the courtfinds that there was other good reason for the failure to admit. n15

This exception is rarely invoked. It may be applicable, however, when the propounding party serves a request for admission that addresses complicated technical or statistical matters that would be the subject of expert analysis, about which the responding party could not have developed a reliable position about the truth of the matters asserted on the basis of readily available information, but would have been required to undertake extraordinary efforts to gather and analyze information it did not have. n16

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductEvidenceInferences & PresumptionsGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2).

(n2)Footnote 2. See [2], below.

(n3)Footnote 3. See [3], below.

(n4)Footnote 4. See [4], below.

(n5)Footnote 5. See [5], below.

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2)(A).

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c) Committee Note (1970).

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2)(B).

(n9)Footnote 9. See Washington State Dep't of Transp. v. Washington Natural Gas Co., 59 F.3d 793, 806 (9th Cir. 1995) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2)(C).

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c) Committee Note (1970).

(n12)Footnote 12. See, e.g., Board of Directors v. Anden Group, 136 F.R.D. 100, 107 (E.D. Va. 1991) .

(n13)Footnote 13. See, e.g., Comeaux v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co., 915 F.2d 1264, 1275 (9th Cir. 1990) .

(n14)Footnote 14. Washington State Dep't of Transp. v. Washington Natural Gas Co., 59 F.3d 793, 806 (9th Cir. 1995) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2)(D).

(n16)Footnote 16. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c) Committee Note (1970).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
D. Obtaining Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.63

§ 22.63 "Abuse of Discretion" Standard of Review

Appellate courts apply an "abuse of discretion" standard when reviewing rulings by district courts on motions for sanctions for unreasonably denying or unreasonably refusing either to admit or deny a legitimate request for admission. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureAppealsStandards of ReviewAbuse of DiscretionLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. SEC v. Happ, 392 F.3d 12, 33-34 (1st Cir. 2004) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.64

§ 22.64 CHECKLISTS: Moving For Rule 37(c)(2) Sanctions

[1] CHECKLIST: Moving for Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit

☐ Determine if grounds for motion for sanctions exist. If a party fails to admit the genuineness of any matter to which requesting party later proves, sanctions are available. n1

☐ Prepare motion, and serve papers.

☐ Prepare documentation for amount of sanctions are requested. Document the following: n2

- ☐ Costs incurred in making proof.
- ☐ Attorney's fees.

[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Motion for Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit

☐ Determine if grounds to oppose motion for sanctions exist. n3 Consider:

- ☐ Unadmitted matter was not proved.
- ☐ Motion is premature.
- ☐ Request was objectionable pursuant to Rule 36(a). n4
- ☐ Admission was of no substantial importance. n5

☐ There was reasonable ground to believe party would prevail on matter. n6

☐ There was other good reason for failure to admit. n7

☐ Sanction requested is excessive.

☐ Papers and procedures followed did not comply with local rules.

☐ Prepare and serve response papers.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2); see § 22.60.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2); see § 22.60.

(n4)Footnote 4. See § 22.62[2].

(n5)Footnote 5. See § 22.62[3].

(n6)Footnote 6. See § 22.62[4].

(n7)Footnote 7. See § 22.62[5].

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
D. Obtaining Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 22.65 through 22.79

[Reserved]

§§ 22.65[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.80

§ 22.80 Determining If Grounds for Rule 37(d) Sanctions Exist

[1] Complete Failure to Respond to Discovery Request Required

A party (or an officer, director, or managing agent of a party or a person designated pursuant to Rule 30(b)(6) or 31(a) to testify on behalf of a party) may be sanctioned for failing to do any of the following: n1

- To appear before the officer who is to take a deposition n2
- To serve answers or objections to interrogatories submitted pursuant to Rule 33 n3
- To serve a written response to a request for production or inspection submitted pursuant to Rule 34 n4

The court may impose any of a wide range of potentially severe sanctions directly, without first issuing an order to compel discovery, or requiring that an order be disobeyed. n5

[2] Failure to Appear for Deposition

[2.--1] Determining If There Was Failure to Appear

A party may be sanctioned if that party fails to appear for its deposition, after being served with a proper notice of deposition. n6 There is a split in authority as to whether sanctions may also be imposed when a party appears at the deposition, but either refuses to answer any questions, or without excuse, provides woefully inadequate responses to questions that should have been anticipated. Some courts insist that this provision must be strictly construed, and will impose sanctions only if a party fails to attend its own deposition, but not if a party appears at its noticed deposition and either refuses to answer specific questions, n7 or answers questions but then improperly adjourns the deposition. n8

Other courts, however, are unlikely to insist on a literal construction of this provision, and believe that sanctions may be imposed if a party appears at the deposition, but refuses to answer questions, or provides inadequate responses. Courts are most likely not to insist on a literal construction in cases involving institutional parties which have been noticed for deposition pursuant to Rule 30(b)(6).

[2.--2] Determining If There Was Failure to Appear by Corporate Deponent

A deponent that is a business entity may be sanctioned if the officer, director, or managing agent or other person designated by the entity to be deposed on it its behalf fails to appear. n9

If the designee appears at the deposition, but does not have information regarding the matters described in the deposition notice, sanctions are usually appropriate. A corporation or association appears vicariously through its designated agent, and if that agent is not knowledgeable about relevant facts, then the appearance is, for all practical purposes, no appearance at all. n10

[3] Failure to Respond to Discovery Request

[3.--1] Sanctions Imposed If No Response to Interrogatories or Request for Production

A party may be sanctioned if that party fails to serve answers or objections to interrogatories, n11 or a written response to a request for production or inspection. n12

[3.--2] Inadequate Response Does Not Warrant Rule 37(d) Sanctions

There is a split in authority as to whether Rule 37(d) sanctions may be imposed when a party has responded to interrogatories or a request for inspection, but the response is so inadequate that it is tantamount to a complete failure to respond. Some courts believe that sanctions are available only if a party has failed completely to serve a timely response to interrogatories or a request for inspection. n13 According to these authorities, if a party serves a response that contains answers that are incomplete, evasive, or false, the aggrieved party may file a motion to compel, n14 but any sanctions will be limited to expense shifting sanctions. n15

Some courts have determined that Rule 37(d) encompasses evasive or misleading responses. n16

[3.--3] Loss of Electronically Stored Information

Absent exceptional circumstances, a court may not impose sanctions under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure on a party for failing to provide electronically stored information lost as a result of the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system. n17

Rule 37(e) focuses on a distinctive feature of computer operations, the routine alteration and deletion of information that attends ordinary use. Many steps essential to computer operation may alter or destroy information, for reasons that have nothing to do with how that information might relate to litigation. As a result, the ordinary operation of computer systems creates a risk that a party may lose potentially discoverable information without culpable conduct on its part. Under Rule 37(e), absent exceptional circumstances, sanctions may not be imposed for loss of electronically stored information resulting from the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system. n18

The protection provided under Rule 37(e) applies only to sanctions under the Federal Rules, and it does not affect other sources of authority to impose sanctions or rules of professional responsibility.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePartiesSelf-RepresentationSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n2)Footnote 2. See [2], below.

(n3)Footnote 3. See [3], below.

(n4)Footnote 4. See [3], below.

(n5)Footnote 5. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. Eco Chem, Inc., 757 F.2d 1256, 1260-1261 (Fed. Cir. 1985) (citing Moore's).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see, e.g., Hyde & Drath v. Baker, 24 F.3d 1162, 1167 (9th Cir. 1994) ; Bobal v. Rensselaer Polytechnic Inst., 916 F.2d 759, 763-766 (2d Cir. 1990) , cert. denied, 499 U.S. 943 (1991) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Estrada v. Rowland, 69 F.3d 405, 406 (9th Cir. 1995) (pro se plaintiff who attended deposition but refused to testify until he received signed commitment that he would be given transcript did not fail to appear); Aziz v. Wright, 34 F.3d 587, 589 (8th Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1090 (1995) (sanctions denied when pro se plaintiff attended deposition but refused to permit videotaped deposition as long as he remained in handcuffs); R.W. Int'l Corp. v. Welch Foods, Inc., 937 F.2d 11, 15 & n.2 (1st Cir. 1991) (reversing dismissal for failure to appear at deposition as improper (citing Moore's)); Salahuddin v. Harris, 782 F.2d 1127, 1131-1132 (2d Cir. 1986) (reversing Rule 37(d) dismissal sanction); Stevens v. Greyhound Lines, Inc., 710 F.2d 1224, 1228 (7th Cir. 1983) (reversing Rule 37(d) dismissal sanction that was based on failure to appear and deliver subpoenaed materials at deposition).

(n8)Footnote 8. Salahuddin v. Harris, 782 F.2d 1127, 1131-1132 (2d Cir. 1986) (reversing dismissal of pro se plaintiff's complaint when he adjourned deposition after answering questions for more than two hours).

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(6), 31(a) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See Resolution Trust Corp., v. Southern Union Co., 985 F.2d 196, 197-198 (5th Cir. 1993) ; Republic of the Philippines v. Marcos, 888 F.2d 954, 956-957 (2d Cir. 1989) ; Buycks-Roberson v. Citibank Fed. Sav. Bank, 162 F.R.D. 338, 342-343 (N.D. Ill. 1995) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); United States v. Aldeco, 917 F.2d 689, 690 (2d Cir. 1990) (reversing default judgment based on single failure to timely answer interrogatories); Coane v. Ferrara Pan Candy Co., 898 F.2d 1030, 1031-1032 (5th Cir. 1990) (affirming award of attorney's fees for failing to answer interrogatories and for producing incorrect version of document); Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. Eco Chem, Inc., 757 F.2d 1256, 1261 (Fed. Cir. 1985) (affirming default as within court's discretion when defendant's failure to respond to interrogatories was part of ongoing pattern of dilatory tactics).

(n12)Footnote 12. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); Henry v. Gill Indus., Inc., 983 F.2d 943, 947 (9th Cir. 1993) (affirming dismissal against plaintiff who produced tax return after dismissal, and failed to produce either legiblecopy or original of key document repeatedly requested by defendant); Marx v. Kelly, Hart & Hallman, P.C., 929 F.2d 8, 11 (1st Cir. 1991) (plaintiff may be sanctioned for ignoring defendant's production request); Badalamenti v. Dunham's, Inc., 896 F.2d 1359, 1362 (Fed. Cir.) , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 851 (1990) (reversing $100,000 sanction award against plaintiff which served objection as written response); Charter House Ins. Brokers v. New Hampshire Ins. Co., 667 F.2d 600, 604-605 (7th Cir. 1981) (affirming dismissal when plaintiff took no action whatsoever in response to either of defendant's requests for production).

(n13)Footnote 13. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. Eco Chem, Inc., 757 F.2d 1256, 1260-1261 (Fed. Cir. 1985) ; Fjelstad v. American Honda Motor Co., 762 F.2d 1334, 1339-1340 (9th Cir. 1985) ; Laclede Gas Co. v. G.W. Warnecke Corp., 604 F.2d 561, 565 (8th Cir. 1979) ; Maritime Ventures Int'l v. Caribbean Trading & Fidelity, Ltd.,

689 F. Supp. 1340, 1358 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) .

(n14)Footnote 14. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b); Fjelstad v. American Honda Motor Co., 762 F.2d 1334, 1339-1340 (9th Cir. 1985) ; Fox v. Studebaker-Worthington, Inc., 516 F.2d 989, 995 (8th Cir. 1975) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a).

(n16)Footnote 16. Hathcock v. Navistar Int'l Transp. Corp., 53 F.3d 36, 40 (4th Cir. 1995) ; Coane v. Ferrara Pan Candy Co., 898 F.2d 1030, 1031 n.1 (5th Cir. 1990) ; E.E.O.C. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 114 F.R.D. 615, 626 (N.D. Ill. 1987) .

(n17)Footnote 17. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(e).

(n18)Footnote 18. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(f) Committee Note.

153 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
E. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Appear at Deposition, or to Respond to Discovery Requests

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.81

§ 22.81 Bringing Motion for Rule 37(d) Sanctions

[1] Determining Person Against Whom Sanctions May Be Imposed

[1.--1] Sanctions Against Party

If a party (or its agent or designee) does not appear for a properly noticed deposition, does not answer or object to interrogatories properly served, or does not make a written response to a proper request for production or inspection, the court may impose a range of sanctions against the party. n1

In lieu of any sanction order, or in addition thereto, the court may order the party failing to act to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the unjustified violation. n2

[1.--2] Sanctions Against Attorney

In lieu of any sanction order, or in addition thereto, the court may order the attorney advising the party violating its discovery obligation to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the violation. n3 Expense shifting sanctions may be imposed against an attorney even if the attorney did not act in bad faith. n4

Courts may look to other sources of authority to impose more severe sanctions against an attorney. Other possible sources include:

- Rule 26(g), which authorizes sanctions for improper discovery certifications n5
- 28 U.S.C. § 1927, which authorizes sanctions against an attorney who "multiplies the proceedings in any case unreasonably and vexatiously"
- A district court's inherent authority n6

[2] Determining Which Court Has Jurisdiction

A motion for sanctions based on a party's failure to appear for deposition, or failureto serve answers or objections to interrogatories or a written response to a request for inspection, must be brought in the court where the action is pending. n7

The forum court is the appropriate jurisdiction to hear the motion, even if the failure physically occurred in a different jurisdiction. Rule 37(d) sanctions may be imposed only against a party or a party's attorney, and the court in which an action is pending must retain the power to discipline misconduct by parties who are using that court to litigate their disputes. n8

[3] Determining When to Move for Rule 37(d) Sanctions

Rule 37(d) does not establish a specific time limit within which a motion for sanctions based on a party's failure to appear for deposition, or failure to serve answers or objections to interrogatories or a written response to a request for inspection must be filed. n9

The nature of the sanctions sought may affect the timing of the motion. For example, if the sanctions sought would affect litigation of the merits of the action, the motion obviously must be filed before those merits are reached. If the moving party seeks an order deeming a fact established, n10 prohibiting another party from supporting or denying a claim or defense, n11 or striking pleadings, n12 the motion must be filed before the hearing or trial of those matters.

It is best to seek relief promptly after the discovery failure and the parties' unsuccessful efforts to resolve the matter. At that time, the parties' memories will be freshest, documentary evidence is least likely to have been lost or destroyed, and intervention by the court may limit any negative ripple effects of the discovery failure.

[4] Certifying Good Faith Attempt to Obtain Response

A motion for sanctions based on a party's failure to serve answers or objections to interrogatories, or a written response to a request for inspection, must include a certification that the moving party has in good faith conferred or attempted to confer with the party failing to answer or respond in an effort to obtain a response without court action. n13

Local rules in many district courts contain special requirements concerning the duty to attempt informal resolution before approaching the court.

[5] Complying With Local Procedural and Filing Rules

Local rules in many districts contain special requirements governing the preparation of papers supporting and opposing discovery motions, service of those papers, as well as the specific discovery material which must be filed with the motion. Those rules should be consulted.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsProfessional ConductGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n4)Footnote 4. Hyde & Drath v. Baker, 24 F.3d 1162, 1171 (9th Cir. 1994) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g).

(n6)Footnote 6. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. v. Energy Gathering, Inc., 2 F.3d 1397, 1410-1411 (5th Cir. 1993) , cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1073 (1994) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n8)Footnote 8. See generally Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n9)Footnote 9. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n10)Footnote 10. See § 22.82[5].

(n11)Footnote 11. See § 22.82[6].

(n12)Footnote 12. See § 22.82[7].

(n13)Footnote 13. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
E. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Appear at Deposition, or to Respond to Discovery Requests

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.82

§ 22.82 Considering Possible Sanctions Under Rule 37(d)

[1] Court May Make Such Orders as Are Just

If a party fails to appear for deposition, or to serve answers or objections to interrogatories or a written response to a request for inspection, the court may make such orders in regard to the failure as are just. n1

[2] Trial Court Has Broad Discretion

District courts have broad discretion in determining whether to impose Rule 37(d) nonmonetary sanctions, even after finding that a party, without substantial justification, failed to appear for deposition, or to serve answers or objections to interrogatories or a written response to a request for inspection. n2

Similarly, once the district court decides that non-monetary sanctions are appropriate, the court has broad discretion in determining the type of sanction to be imposed. n3

[3] Opportunity to Be Heard Must Be Provided

Before sanctions may be imposed, the party to be sanctioned must have had an opportunity to be heard. This may be by oral hearing, although itmay be based on written submissions. n4

[4] Sanctions Imposing Reasonable Expenses

The court may require the party failing to appear for deposition, or to serve answers or objections to interrogatories or a written response to a request for inspection, or the attorney advising that party, or both, to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the failure, unless the court finds that either: n5

- The failure was substantially justified
- Other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust

[5] Sanctions Deeming Facts Established

If a party fails to appear for deposition, or to serve answers or objections to interrogatories or a written response to a request for inspection, the court may order that specified facts or other matters related to the discovery failure will be deemed established in accordance with the claim of the party seeking the discovery. n6

[6] Sanctions Prohibiting Support or Opposition to Claims or Introduction of Evidence

If a party fails to appear for deposition, or to serve answers or objections to interrogatories or a written response to a request for inspection, the court may enter an order refusing to allow the failing party to support or oppose designated claims or defenses, or prohibiting that party from introducing designated matters into evidence. n7

If the court imposes a sanction that would affect a party's ability to present evidence or otherwise litigate fully the merits of a claim or defense, the sanction should be limited to the claims or defenses to which the discovery would have been pertinent. n8

[7] Sanctions Striking Pleadings or Staying Further Proceedings

If a party fails to appear for deposition, or to serve answers or objections to interrogatories or a written response to a request for inspection, the court may enter an order striking pleadings or parts of pleadings, or staying further proceedings until the discovery obligations are met. n9

[8] Sanctions Dismissing Action or Entering Default Judgment

[8.--1] Sanctions Available

If a party fails to appear for deposition, or to serve answers or objections to interrogatories or a written response to a request for inspection, the court may enter an order dismissing the action or any part of the action, or rendering a judgment by default against the noncomplying party. n10

[8.--2] Factors Considered

Appellate courts generally require trial judges to consider specific factors in determining whether the sanction is an appropriate response to the party's discovery failure, although the different circuits disagree as to the factors. Most courts consider the following:

- Whether the violation of the rule was the product of willfulness, bad faith, or other substantial fault n11
- Whether the violation was an isolated event or part of a pattern or repeated breaches of pretrial duties n12
- Whether (or to what extent) the party's discovery failure may be attributed to circumstances beyond its control n13
- Whether the discovery failure caused prejudice to the propounding party n14
- Whether the evidence that was not produced could be discovered from other sources n15
- Whether entering judgment in favor of or against a particular party might cause unfair prejudice to parties aligned with, but not pursuant to the control of, those parties n16
- Whether the court warned the party who violated the discovery rules that dismissal or default was a possible sanction n17

- Whether a less severe measure would adequately achieve the purposes of the sanctions rules. n18

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedurePretrial JudgmentsDefaultDefault JudgmentsLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see Dedvukaj v. Equilon Enters., L.L.C., 301 F. Supp. 2d 664, 668 (E.D. Mich. 2004) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n3)Footnote 3. Marx v. Kelly, Hart & Hallman, P.C., 929 F.2d 8, 10 (1st Cir. 1991) ; Charter House Ins. Brokers v. New Hampshire Ins. Co., 667 F.2d 600, 605-606 (7th Cir. 1981) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Williams v. National Hous. Exch., Inc., 165 F.R.D. 405, 411-412 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(i).

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(ii).

(n8)Footnote 8. Avionic Co. v. General Dynamics Corp., 957 F.2d 555, 558 (8th Cir. 1992) ; Daval Steel Prods. v. M/V Fakredine, 951 F.2d 1357, 1366 (2d Cir. 1991) ; United States v. National Med. Enter., Inc., 792 F.2d 906, 910 (9th Cir. 1986) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(iii), (iv).

(n10)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(v); see also Hoxworth v. Blinder, Robinson & Co., 980 F.2d 912, 919-922 (3d Cir. 1992) ; Panaderia La Diana, Inc. v. Salt Lake City Corp., 342 F. Supp. 2d 1013, 1030-1031 (D. Utah 2004) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See, e.g., Henry v. Gill Indus., Inc., 983 F.2d 943, 948-949 (9th Cir. 1993) ; Bobal v. Rensselaer Polytechnic Inst., 916 F.2d 759, 763-766 (2d Cir. 1990) , cert. denied, 499 U.S. 943 (1991) ; Fox v. Commissioner, 718 F.2d 251, 254-255 (7th Cir. 1983) ; Fox v. Studebaker-Worthington, Inc., 516 F.2d 989, 993 (8th Cir. 1975) ; Morris v. Snappy Car Rental, Inc., 151 F.R.D. 17, 17-19 (D.R.I. 1993) ; Continental Ins. Co. v. McGraw, 110 F.R.D. 679, 682-683 (D. Colo. 1986) .

(n12)Footnote 12. See, e.g., United States v. Aldeco, 917 F.2d 689, 690 (2d Cir. 1990) ; Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. Eco Chem, Inc., 757 F.2d 1256, 1261 (Fed. Cir. 1985) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Beil v. Lakewood Eng'g & Mfg. Co., 15 F.3d 546, 552 (6th Cir. 1994) .

(n14)Footnote 14. See, e.g., Archibeque v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 70 F.3d 1172, 1175 (10th Cir. 1995) ; Hyde & Drath v. Baker, 24 F.3d 1162, 1166-1167 (9th Cir. 1994) ; Pope v. Lexington Ins. Co., 149 F.R.D. 586, 587-588 (E.D. Wis. 1993) .

(n15)Footnote 15. See, e.g., Fox v. Studebaker-Worthington, Inc., 516 F.2d 989, 992-993 (8th Cir. 1975) ; Panaderia La Diana, Inc. v. Salt Lake City Corp., 342 F. Supp. 2d 1013, 1030-1031 (D. Utah 2004) ; El-Yafi v. 360 East 72nd Owners Corp., 164 F.R.D. 12, 17-18 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) .

(n16)Footnote 16. See, e.g., Acme Printing Ink Co. v. Menard, Inc., 812 F. Supp. 1498, 1521 (E.D. Wis. 1992) .

(n17)Footnote 17. See, e.g., Bobal v. Rensselaer Polytechnic Inst., 916 F.2d 759, 763-766 (2d Cir. 1990) (affirming dismissal against pro se plaintiff who had been warned of possibility of dismissal); but see, Archibeque v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 70 F.3d 1172, 1175 (10th Cir. 1995) (affirming dismissal based on plaintiff's willfulness even though she had not been warned of possibility of dismissal).

(n18)Footnote 18. See, e.g., Hyde & Drath v. Baker, 24 F.3d 1162, 1167 (9th Cir. 1994) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
E. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Appear at Deposition, or to Respond to Discovery Requests

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.83

§ 22.83 Opposing Motion for Rule 37(d) Sanctions

[1] Pending Motion for Protective Order

A party who fails to appear for deposition, or to respond to interrogatories or a request for inspection may be excused if he or she has a pending motion for a protective order seeking to block the discovery. n1

Note
that no motion for a protective order is necessary if the party from whom discovery is sought files a timely objection to the discovery. The only safe course available to a party who intends to do nothing in response to a patently objectionable discovery demand, however, is to file a motion for a protective order before the date on which a response to the discovery is due.

[2] Failure Was Substantially Justified

[2.--1] Monetary Sanction Avoidable

A litigant may avoid monetary sanctions of Rule 37(d) if the court finds that the failure was "substantially justified." n2

[2.--2] Burden Is on Party to Be Sanctioned

The burden of establishing substantial justification, and thereby negating the imposition of monetary sanctions, is on the party who failed to appear for deposition, or to serve answers or objections to interrogatories or a written response to a request for inspection. n3

[2.--3] Focus of Inquiry

The focus of the substantial justification inquiry is on the original failure to respond to the discovery request, and not on subsequent efforts by the party or the party's attorney to defend against the motion for sanctions. n4

The determination of whether there is substantial justification is case specific, making it impossible to catalog all pertinent considerations. However, it is likely that a party would meet its burden of demonstrating substantial justification if it shows that its failure to appear or respond was attributable entirely to factors beyond that party's control, at least when the party tried in good faith to warn its opponent that it would not be able to comply within the prescribed time frames. n5

[3] Circumstances Make Sanctions Unjust

The district court may elect not to impose compensatory monetary sanctions if "other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust". n6 The burden of demonstrating other circumstances is on the party who failed to respond to the discovery request. n7

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective OrdersLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n3)Footnote 3. Telluride Management Solutions, Inc. v. Telluride Inv. Group, 55 F.3d 463, 466 (9th Cir. 1995) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Hyde & Drath v. Baker, 24 F.3d 1162, 1171 (9th Cir. 1994) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Speidel v. Bryan, 164 F.R.D. 241, 244 (D. Or. 1996) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n7)Footnote 7. See Hyde & Drath v. Baker, 24 F.3d 1162, 1171 (9th Cir. 1994) .

156 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
E. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Appear at Deposition, or to Respond to Discovery Requests

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.84

§ 22.84 "Abuse of Discretion" Standard of Review

Appellate courts apply a deferential "abuse of discretion" standard in reviewing Rule 37(d) sanctions awards. n1

Determining the type of sanction that is most appropriately responsive to a particular Rule 37(d) violation is a fact specific inquiry that the trial court is presumptively best qualified to make. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedureAppealsStandards of ReviewAbuse of DiscretionLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Telluride Management Solutions, Inc. v. Telluride Inv. Group, 55 F.3d 463, 465-467 (9th Cir. 1995) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Oklahoma Federated Gold & Numismatics, Inc. v. Blodgett, 24 F.3d 136, 139 (10th Cir. 1994) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.85

§ 22.85 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Rule 37(d) Sanctions

[1] CHECKLIST: Bringing Motion for Rule 37(d) Sanctions

☐ Determine if grounds for motion for sanctions exist. If a person fails to appear at deposition or respond to a discovery request, a motion may be brought. n1

☐ Prepare motion, and serve papers. Include following allegations:

- ☐ Court has jurisdiction. n2
- ☐ Moving party made good faith effort at resolution of issues. n3
- ☐ Motion is timely. n4
- ☐ Adequate description of failure to comply and sanction sought was given.
- ☐ Papers and procedures followed comply with local rules.

☐ When monetary sanctions are requested, n5 Document:

- ☐ Costs incurred by party's failure to comply with discovery.
- ☐ Attorney's fees.

[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Motion for Rule 37(d) Sanctions

☐ Determine if grounds to oppose motion for sanctions exist. n6 Consider:

- ☐ Motion for protective order was pending. n7
- ☐ Court does not have jurisdiction. n8
- ☐ Moving party failed to make good faith effort at resolution of issues. n9
- ☐ Motion is not timely. n10
- ☐ Inadequate description of failure to comply and sanction sought was given.
- ☐ Papers and procedures followed did not comply with local rules. n11
- ☐ Sanction requested is inappropriate. n12

☐ Prepare and serve response papers.

☐ When monetary sanctions are sought, n13 argue:

- ☐ Failure to comply with request was substantially justified.
- ☐ Other circumstances make imposition of sanctions unjust.
- ☐ Moving party did not make good faith attempt at resolution of issues.
- ☐ Amount requested is excessive.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see § 22.80.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see § 22.81[2].

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 22.81[4].

(n4)Footnote 4. See § 22.81[3].

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see § 22.82[4].

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n7)Footnote 7. See § 22.83[1].

(n8)Footnote 8. See § 22.81[2].

(n9)Footnote 9. See § 22.81[4].

(n10)Footnote 10. See § 22.81[3].

(n11)Footnote 11. See § 22.81[5], [6].

(n12)Footnote 12. See § 22.82.

(n13)Footnote 13. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d); see § 22.82[4].

158 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
E. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Appear at Deposition, or to Respond to Discovery Requests

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 22.86 through 22.99

[Reserved]

§§ 22.86[Reserved]

159 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
F. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.100

§ 22.100 Determining If Grounds for Sanctions Exist

[1] Failure to Participate in Development or Submission of Discovery Plan

If a party or a party's attorney fails to participate in good faith in the development and submission of a proposed discovery plan as required by Rule 26(f), the court may require the party or attorney to pay to any other party the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the failure. n1

[2] Scope of Duty to Participate in Development or Submission of Discovery Plan

Except in actions exempted by local rule or court order, parties must develop a proposed discovery plan in every civil action, which is expected to reflect the parties' views and proposals concerning: n2

- What changes should be made in the timing, form, or requirement for disclosures, including a statement as to when mandatory, voluntary disclosures pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1) were made or will be made
- The subjects on which discovery may be needed, when discovery should be completed, and whether discovery should be conducted in phases, or be limited to or focused on particular issues
- What changes should be made in the limitations on discovery imposed pursuant to the discovery rules or by local rule, and what other limitations should be imposed
- Any other orders that should be entered by the court

Rule 26(f) may be inapplicable in cases in which the district court has opted out of its requirements.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(f); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f).

160 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
F. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.101

§ 22.101 Obtaining Sanctions

[1] Sanctions Are Discretionary

Rule 37(f) permits, but does not mandate, sanctions. A trial court has broad discretion to decide whether to impose this sanction, even if the failure was willful or in bad faith. n1

[2] Sanctions Are Monetary

The only sanction authorized by Rule 37(f) is monetary. It is limited to the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the failure. n2

[3] Alternative Bases for Sanctions

A breach of a pretrial order directing the party or attorney to participate in the development of a discovery plan could expose the disobedient party or attorney to much more severe sanctions pursuant to Rule 16(f), which governs failure to obey a pretrial or scheduling order, and Rule 37(b)(2), which governs failure to comply with a discovery order. n3

[4] Bringing Failure to Court's Attention

Counsel should be prepared to raise with the court the opposing party's failure to participate in good faith in the development and submission of a proposed discovery plan. Although the court may award sanctions under Rule 37(g) on its own, nothing precludes a party from raising the issue.

[5] Providing Sanctioned Party With Opportunity to Be Heard

A judge who is considering imposing an expense shifting sanction for failing to participate in good faith in the development of a discovery plan must afford the person who would be sanctioned an opportunity to be heard. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedurePretrial

MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedureSanctionsMisconduct & Unethical BehaviorGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(f).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(f).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(f), 37(b)(2); United States For Use & Benefit of Wiltec Guam, Inc. v. Kahaluu Constr. Co., 857 F.2d 600, 602-603 & n.3 (9th Cir. 1988) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(f).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
F. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.102

§ 22.102 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Rule 37(f) Sanctions

[1] CHECKLIST: Seeking Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan

☐ Determine if grounds for sanction exist. If a party fails to participate in development and submission of discovery plan, sanctions are available. n1

☐ Raise issue of noncompliance with court.

☐ If necessary, prepare motion, and serve papers.

☐ Prepare documentation for amount of sanctions requested. n2 Document:

- ☐ Costs incurred due to failure.
- ☐ Attorney's fees.

[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan

☐ Determine if grounds to oppose motion for sanctions exist. n3 Consider:

- ☐ There was no opportunity to be heard.
- ☐ Sanction requested is excessive.
- ☐ Papers and procedures followed did not comply with local rules.

☐ Prepare and serve response papers.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(f).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(f).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
F. Obtaining Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 22.103 through 22.109

[Reserved]

§§ 22.103[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
G. Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.110

§ 22.110 Determining Whether Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence Are Available

[1] Spoliation Defined

Spoliation is defined as the intentional destruction or alteration of evidence. n1

[2] Determining Which Evidence Should Be Preserved

A party is not obligated to retain every document or tangible item that is in its possession, or subject to its control, after a complaint has been filed. However, a party is obligated to preserve materials that the party knows, or reasonably should know: n2

- Might be relevant to the action
- Could lead to the discovery of admissible evidence
- Are likely to be requested during discovery
- Are the subject of a pending discovery request

The obligation to preserve evidence runs first to counsel, who has the duty to advise the client of the type of potentially relevant information and of the necessity of preventing its destruction. n3

[3] Authority for Sanctions

Sanctions for spoliation of evidence as a violation of the rules of discovery have been awarded pursuant to:

- Rule 37(b), for failure to comply with a discovery order
- Rule 37(d), for failure to respond to discovery requests
- The court's inherent authority to maintain its institutional integrity n4

[4] Considering Loss of Electronically Stored Information

Absent exceptional circumstances, a court may not impose sanctions under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure on a party for failing to provide electronically stored information lost as a result of the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductEvidenceRelevanceSpoliationLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Black's Law Dictionary 1401 (6th ed. 1990).

(n2)Footnote 2. Turner v. Hudson Transit Lines, Inc., 142 F.R.D. 68, 72-73 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) ; Wm. T. Thompson Co. v. General Nutrition Corp., 593 F. Supp. 1443, 1455 (C.D. Cal. 1984) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Donato v. Fitzgibbons, 172 F.R.D. 75, 79 & n. 5 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Shepherd v. American Broad. Cos., Inc., 62 F.3d 1469, 1474, 1484 (D.C. Cir. 1995) ; Beil v. Lakewood Eng'g & Mfg. Co., 15 F.3d 546, 552 (6th Cir. 1994) ; Dillon v. Nissan Motor Co., 986 F.2d 263, 266-269 (8th Cir. 1993) ; Unigard Sec. Ins. Co. v. Lakewood Eng'g & Mfg. Corp., 982 F.2d 363, 368 (9th Cir. 1992) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(e).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
G. Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.111

§ 22.111 Considering Factors Weighed by Court in Imposing Sanctions

[1] Severity of Sanction Dependent on Facts

Destruction of potentially relevant evidence occurs along a continuum of fault--ranging from innocence through the degrees of negligence to intentionality and the resulting penalties vary correspondingly.

The severity of the sanction imposed for spoliation of evidence will depend on:

- The significance of the evidence that was destroyed or altered n1
- The magnitude and remediability of the prejudice caused to other parties n2
- The relative culpability of the party who committed the wrong n3

[2] Severe Sanctions Appropriate in Limited Situations

Courts are likely to respond to spoliation of evidence with the ultimate sanction of dismissal or default in either of two situations: n4

- The destroyed evidence is central to the disposition of an issue, claim, or defense, on which the outcome of the entire litigation turns
- The guilty party has engaged in such wholesale destruction of primary evidence that the court cannot fashion effective issue related remedies

[3] Lesser Sanctions May Be Appropriate

If the spoliation is less egregious, courts have imposed other, less severe sanctions. These sanctions have included:

- Preclusion orders n5
- Orders deeming specified facts to be established n6

- Instructions to the jury that it may draw an inference adverse to the party responsible for the absence of the evidence n7

- Monetary awards, not necessarily limited to expenses incurred as a result of the spoliation n8

A party seeking an adverse inference instruction based on the destruction of information must establish: n9

- That the party having control over the information had an obligation to preserve it at the time it was destroyed

- That the information was destroyed with a culpable state of mind

- That the destroyed information was relevant to the party's claim or defense such that a reasonable trier of fact could find that it would support that claim or defense

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductEvidenceRelevanceSpoliationLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. General Envtl. Science Corp., v. Horsfall, 141 F.R.D. 443, 450-455 (N.D. Ohio 1992) ; see Sylla-Sawdon v. Uniroyal Goodrich Tire Co., 47 F.3d 277, 280-281 (8th Cir.) , cert. denied, 516 U.S. 822 (1995) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Thiele v. Oddy's Auto & Marine, Inc., 906 F. Supp. 158, 161-163 (W.D.N.Y. 1995) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Beil v. Lakewood Eng'g & Mfg. Co., 15 F.3d 546, 552 (6th Cir. 1994) .

(N4)Footnote 4. Shepherd v. American Broad. Cos., Inc., 62 F.3d 1469, 1479-1480 (D.C. Cir. 1995) ; Marrocco v. General Motors Corp., 966 F.2d 220, 223-224 (7th Cir. 1992) ; Thiele v. Oddy's Auto & Marine, Inc., 906 F. Supp. 158, 161-163 (W.D.N.Y. 1995) ; General Envtl. Science Corp., v. Horsfall, 141 F.R.D. 443, 450-455 (N.D. Ohio 1992) ; Telectron, Inc. v. Overhead Door Corp., 116 F.R.D. 107, 126-133 (S.D. Fla. 1987) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Dillon v. Nissan Motor Co., 986 F.2d 263, 268-269 (8th Cir. 1992) ; see also Unigard Sec.Ins. Co. v. Lakewood Eng'g & Mfg. Corp., 982 F.2d 363, 368-369 (9th Cir. 1992) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See, e.g., Pressey v. Patterson, 898 F.2d 1018, 1022-1024 (5th Cir. 1990) , reh'g denied, No. 88-2917, 1990 U.S. App. LEXIS 10114 (5th Cir. June 7, 1990) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See, e.g., Dillon v. Nissan Motor Co., 986 F.2d 263, 269 (8th Cir. 1993) ; Turner v. Hudson Transit Lines, Inc., 142 F.R.D. 68, 77 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See, e.g., Turner v. Hudson Transit Lines, Inc., 142 F.R.D. 68, 77-78 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) ; Capellupo v. FMC Corp., 126 F.R.D. 545, 553-554 (D. Minn. 1989; National Ass'n of Radiation Survivors v. Turnage, 115 F.R.D. 543, 558-559 (N.D. Cal. 1987) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Klezmer ex rel. Desyatnik v. Buynak, 227 F.R.D. 43, 48 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.112

§ 22.112 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence

[1] CHECKLIST: Seeking Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence

☐ Determine if grounds for sanction exist. If a party destroys evidence, sanctions are available. n1

☐ Prepare motion, and serve papers.

[2] CHECKLIST: Opposing Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence

☐ Determine if grounds to oppose motion for sanctions exist. n2 Consider:

☐ Sanction requested is excessive. n3

☐ Papers and procedures followed did not comply with local rules.

☐ Prepare and serve response papers.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductEvidenceRelevanceSpoliationLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b), (d).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b), 37(d) ; see § 22.110.

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 22.111.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
G. Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 22.113 through 22.119

[Reserved]

§§ 22.113[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.120

§ 22.120 Certifying Mandatory Disclosures

[1] Signing Disclosures

[1.--1] Represented Party

With regard to represented parties, at least one attorney of record must sign every mandatory initial disclosure made pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1) and every pretrial disclosure made pursuant to Rule 26(a)(3). n1

Each attorney signing a disclosure must sign in his or her individual name and state his or her address, e-mail address, and telephone number. n2

[1.--2] Unrepresented Party

An unrepresented party must sign each mandatory initial disclosure that he or she makes pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1) and also every pretrial disclosure he or she makes pursuant to Rule 26(a)(3). n3

The unrepresented party must also state his or her address, e-mail address, and telephone number. n4

[2] Warranties Made

The signature of the attorney or party constitutes a certification that to the best of the signer's knowledge, information, and belief, formed after a reasonable inquiry, the disclosure is complete and correct as of the time it is made. n5

[3] Requirements Inapplicable If Mandatory Disclosures Not Required in District

The signature requirements for mandatory disclosures are inapplicable in districts that have opted out of the applicable Rule 26(a) disclosure requirements.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil

ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1), (a)(3) (mandatory disclosure requirements).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
H. Obtaining Sanctions for Improper Certification of Discovery Request, Response, Objection, or Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.121

§ 22.121 Certifying Discovery Requests, Responses, or Objections

[1] Signing Discovery Requests, Responses and Objections

[1.--1] Represented Party

With regard to represented parties, every discovery request, response, or objection must be signed by at least one attorney of record. n1

Each signing attorney must sign in his or her individual name and state his or her address, e-mail address, and telephone number. n2

[1.--2] Unrepresented Party

An unrepresented party must sign each discovery request, response, or objection that he or she makes. n3

The unrepresented party must also state his or her address, e-mail address, and telephone number. n4

[2] Warranties Made

The signature of the attorney or party constitutes a certification that to the best of the signer's knowledge, information, and belief, formed after a reasonable inquiry, the request, response, or objection is: n5

- Consistent with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and warranted by existing law or a nonfrivolous argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law, or establishing new law
- Not interposed for any improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation
- Not unreasonable or unduly burdensome or expensive, given the needs of the case, the discovery already had in the case, the amount in controversy, and the importance of the issues at stake in the litigation

[3] Duty to Read Documents

Under Rule 26(g), the signer is obligated to read the particular request, response, or objection that he or she certifies. n6

[4] Certification as to Truthfulness of Responses Not Required

Rule 26(g) does not require a signing attorney to certify the truthfulness of theclient's factual responses to a discovery request. Rather, the signature certifies that the attorney has made a reasonable effort to assure that the client has provided all the information and documents available to him or her that are responsive to the discovery demand. n7

[5] Objective Standard

The "reasonable inquiry" required under Rule 26(g) is satisfied if the investigation undertaken by the attorney and the conclusions drawn from it are reasonable under the circumstances, in accordance with an objective standard similar to that imposed by Rule 11. n8

In making the inquiry, the attorney may rely on assertions by the client and on communications with other counsel in the case as long as that reliance is appropriate under the circumstances. n9

[6] Privileged Information Remains Protected

Rule 26(g) does not require a party or an attorney to disclose privileged communications or work product in order to show that a discovery request, response, or objection is substantially justified. n10

[7] Certification Evaluated at Time It Was Made

A certification made under Rule 26(g) will be evaluated as of the time it was made. n11 Counsel should take care to supplement any discovery documents when appropriate.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)(B).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Apex Oil Co. v. Belcher Co., 855 F.2d 1009, 1015 (2d Cir. 1988) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g) Committee Note (1983); compare Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g) with Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(e), 33; see also Metropolitan Opera Ass'n v. Local 100, Hotel Employees &Rest. Employees Int'l Union, 212 F.R.D. 178, 224 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (district court found that counsel's repeated representations that all responsive documents had been produced were not result of reasonable inquiry).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g) Committee Note (1983); see Imperial Chems. Indus., PLC v. Barr Labs., 126 F.R.D. 467, 473 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) ; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 Committee Note (1983).

(n9)Footnote 9. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g) Committee Note (1983).

(n10)Footnote 10. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g) Committee Note (1983).

(n11)Footnote 11. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g) Committee Note (1983).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.122

§ 22.122 Striking Uncertified Request, Response, or Objection

If a request, response, or objection is not signed, it must be stricken unless it is signed promptly after the omission is called to the attention of the party making it. A party is not obligated to take any action with respect to it until it is signed. n1

Although Rule 26(g) does not specify the procedure for having an uncertified request, response, or objection stricken, a party presumably may bring a motion to strike, utilizing the customary noticed motion procedure.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(2).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
H. Obtaining Sanctions for Improper Certification of Discovery Request, Response, Objection, or Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.123

§ 22.123 Obtaining Sanctions for Improper Certification

[1] Who May Be Sanctioned

If without substantial justification a person makes a certification in violation of Rule 26(g), the court, on motion or on its own initiative, will impose an appropriate sanction on one or both of the following: n1

- The person who made the certification
- The party on whose behalf the disclosure, request, response, or objection is made

[2] Sanctions That May Be Requested

Sanctions that may be requested for improper certification of a discovery request, response, objection, or disclosure, in violation of Rule 26(g), may include the following:

- An order to pay the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred because of the violation, including a reasonable attorney's fee n2
- Preclusion, when a party has engaged in a pattern of conduct evidencing deliberate and willful disregard of the requirements of the rules and the order of a court n3
- Cancellation of a scheduled discovery event, e.g., deposition n4

[3] Motion to Obtain Sanctions

A party seeking sanctions under Rule 26(g) may proceed by motion. n5

[4] Cross-Motion to Oppose Motion to Compel

If the opposing party brings a motion to compel, counsel may file a cross-motion under Rule 26(g) if the discovery request violates Rule 26(g) (e.g., was made for an improper purpose). n6

[5] Notice and Hearing

The sanctioning process must comport with due process requirements. The kind ofnotice and hearing required depends on the facts of the case and the severity of the sanction being considered. In most cases, the court is aware of the circumstances, and only a brief hearing should be necessary. n7

[6] Making Timely Motion

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not specify any time frame within which a motion seeking Rule 26(g) sanctions must be filed. The motion should be filed as soon as possible after it becomes clear that a certification was made in violation of Rule 26(g) without substantial justification. In some cases, this determination may not be possible until the action has terminated.

[7] Certifying Good Faith Attempt at Resolution

There is no requirement to meet and confer with opposing counsel before filing a motion for sanctions under Rule 26(g). n8 However, by local rule, a district may have adopted such a requirement.

[8] Complying With Local Procedural and Filing Rules

Local rules in many districts contain special requirements governing the preparation of papers supporting and opposing discovery motions, as well as service and filing of those papers.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(3).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(3).

(n3)Footnote 3. Jankins v. TDC Management Corp., Inc., 131 F.R.D. 629, 634 (D.D.C. 1989) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 38, 111 S. Ct. 2123, 115 L. Ed. 2d 27 (1991) , reh'g denied, 501 U.S. 1269 (1991) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Bellinger v. Deere & Co., 881 F. Supp. 813, 819 (N.D.N.Y. 1995) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See, e.g., Greenberg v. Hilton Int'l Co., 870 F.2d 926, 931 (2d Cir. 1989) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g) Committee Note (1983).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.124

§ 22.124 CHECKLISTS: Moving for Rule 26(g) Sanctions

[1] CHECKLIST: Drafting and Filing Motion for Sanctions for Improper Certification

☐ Determine whether the certified discovery request, response, objection, or disclosure was made under any of the following conditions:

☐ The document is in some way inconsistent with the Federal Rules Civil Procedure. n1

☐ The document is in some way not warranted by existing law. n2

☐ The document is in some way not warranted by a good faith argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law or for establishing new law. n3

☐ The document was interposed for an improper purpose, such as the following: n4

☐ Harassment.

☐ Unnecessary delay.

☐ Needless increase in litigation costs.

☐ The document is unreasonably or unduly burdensome or expensive in light of the following considerations. n5

☐ The needs of the case.

- ☐ The discovery already completed.
- ☐ The amount in controversy.
- ☐ The importance of the issues at stake.

☐ Determine, if possible, whether the improper certification was made without substantial justification. n6

☐ Follow the applicable informal dispute resolution rules:

- ☐ Prepare and serve the moving papers.

[2] CHECKLIST: Drafting and Filing Opposition to Motion for Sanctions for Improper Certification

☐ Determine whether the grounds asserted in the moving papers are justified under Rule 26(g)(1)(B). If not, draft objections refuting the facts asserted in the moving papers. n7

☐ If there is basis in fact for the grounds asserted in the moving papers under Rule 26(g)(1)(B), then draft opposition papers explaining the substantial justification for the request, response, objection, or disclosure that is the subject of the motion. n8

☐ Determine whether the moving party has complied with local rules concerning dispute-resolution procedures. If not, the motion may be denied on this ground.

☐ Prepare and serve papers in opposition to the motion.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)(B)(i).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)(B)(i).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)(B)(i).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)(B)(ii).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)(B)(iii).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(3).

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)(B).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(3).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
H. Obtaining Sanctions for Improper Certification of Discovery Request, Response, Objection, or Disclosure

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 22.125 through 22.199

[Reserved]

§§ 22.125[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
I. Forms

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.200

§ 22.200 Notice of Motion to Compel Mandatory Disclosure

[1] FORM

Notice of Motion to Compel Mandatory Disclosure

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)], or soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, [party designation and name of moving party] will move this Court, at the United States Courthouse located at [address of court], Courtroom [courtroom number], for:

(a) an order pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 26(a) and Rule 37(a)(3)(A), requiring [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] to make the mandated disclosures as described in the Affidavit of [name] attached hereto on the ground that [state basis of motion, e.g., failure to make the necessary disclosures related to expert testimony]; and

(b) an order pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 37(a)(5), awarding to [party designation and name of moving party] the expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred in bringing this motion.

This motion is based on this Notice of Motion, the Affidavit (or appropriate affidavit substitute) of [name of signatory] sworn to (or dated) [date], the accompanying Memorandum of Law [if required] dated[date], and on all of the pleadings and papers on file in this action.

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local district court rules]

TO: [Name of opposing counsel], Attorney for [name of party]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of notice of motion for use by a party who wishes to obtain an order compelling any other party to comply with its disclosure obligations under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a). This motion is made under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(A).

[3] Grounds for Motion to Compel

If a party fails to make the mandatory disclosures required under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a) and local district court rules, any other party may move to compel mandatory disclosure. n1

[4] Expense-Shifting Sanctions

A rebuttable presumption favors imposing expense-shifting sanctions on the party against whom a motion to compel disclosure is resolved. n2

[5] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

A motion to compel must include a certification that the movant has in good faith conferred or attempted to confer with the party from whom disclosure is being sought in an effort to secure the information without court action. n3

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(A).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(A), (a)(5)(B).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(1).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
I. Forms

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.201

§ 22.201 Notice of Motion to Compel Compliance With Discovery Request

[1] FORM

Notice of Motion to Compel Compliance With Discovery Request

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)], or soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, [party designation and name of moving party] will move this Court, at the United States Courthouse located at [address of court], Courtroom [courtroom number], for:

(a) an order pursuant to [specify federal rule authorizing method under which discovery was sought] and Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 37(a)(3)(B), [specify desired relief, e.g., requiring plaintiff to answer certain questions propounded to her upon her deposition that she refused to answer, as described in the Affidavit of [name] attached hereto], on the ground [state basis of motion, e.g., plaintiff refused to answer these questions, all of which are material and relevant to issues herein, and answers should be required]; and

(b) an order pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 37(a)(5), awarding to [party designation and name of moving party] the expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred in bringing this motion.

This motion is based on this Notice of Motion, the Affidavit (or appropriate affidavit substitute) of [name of signatory] sworn to (or dated) [date], the accompanying Memorandum of Law (if required) dated [date], and on all of the pleadings and papers on file in this action.

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local district court rules]

TO: [Name of opposing counsel], Attorney for [name of party]

[2] Use of Form

This is a notice of motion for use by a party who wishes to obtain an order compelling compliance with its valid discovery request. This motion is made under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(B).

[3] Grounds for Motion to Compel

A motion to compel discovery may be precipitated by any of the following: n1

- A deponent fails to answer a written or oral question propounded pursuant Fed. R. Civ. P. 30 or Fed. R. Civ. P. 31
- A corporation or other entity fails to designate a person to testify in accordance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(6) or Fed. R. Civ. P. 31(a).
- A party fails to answer an interrogatory served in accordance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 33
- A party fails to produce documents or to permit an inspection requested pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 34

A motion to compel also may be appropriate when the response provided is at least partially evasive or incomplete. n2

[4] Expense-Shifting Sanctions

A rebuttable presumption favors imposing expense-shifting sanctions on the party against whom a motion to compel disclosure is resolved. n3

[5] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

A motion to compel must include a certification that the movant has in good faith conferred or attempted to confer with the party from whom disclosure is being sought in an effort to secure the information without court action. n4

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(B).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(4).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(A), (B).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(1).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
I. Forms

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.202

§ 22.202 Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Court Order

[1] FORM

Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Court Order

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)], or soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, [party designation and name of moving party] will move this Court, at the United States Courthouse located at [address of court], Courtroom [courtroom number], for:

(a) an order pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure,

[CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING, AS APPROPRIATE]

Rule 37(b)(2)(A)(i), that the following facts be established as proven: [specify],

[OR]

Rule 37(b)(2)(A)(ii), that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be forbidden from offering any evidence at [trial or other proceeding at which evidence is taken] supporting the following claims: [specify],

[OR]

Rule 37(b)(2)(A)(ii), that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be prohibited from introducing in evidence the following matters: [specify],

[OR]

Rule 37(b)(2)(A)(iii)-(iv), that all further proceedings on behalf of [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be stayed and that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought]'s action be stricken from the trial calendar,

[OR]

Rule 37(b)(2)(A)(v), that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought]'s [complaint or other pleading seeking affirmative relief] be dismissed,

[OR]

Rule 37(b)(2)(A)(vii), that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be adjudged in contempt of this court,

[CONTINUE]

on the ground that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] has failed to comply with this court's order of [date], requiring [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] to [specify terms of order]; and

> (b) an order pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 37(b)(2), that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be required to pay the expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by [party designation and name of moving party] as result of [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought]'s failure to comply with the order.

This motion is based on this Notice of Motion, the Affidavit (or appropriate affidavit substitute) of [name of signatory] sworn to (or dated) [date], the accompanying Memorandum of Law (if required) dated [date], and on all of the pleadings and papers on file in this action.

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local district court rules]

TO: [Name of opposing counsel], Attorney for [name of party]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of notice of motion for use by a party who wishes to obtain an order for sanctions based on another party's failure to comply with a court order to provide or permit discovery. This motion is made under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b).

[3] Types of Sanctions Available

If a party fails to comply with a discovery order, the court in which the action is pending may make such orders in regard to the failure as are just. Some of the sanctions that are specifically authorized include: n1

- An order that the matters with respect to which the order was made, or any other designated facts, shall be taken to be established for the purposes of the action in accordance with the claims of the party obtaining the order

- An order refusing to allow the disobedient party to support or oppose designated claims or defenses or prohibiting that party from introducing designated matters in evidence

- An order striking out pleadings or parts of pleadings

- An order staying further proceedings until the order is obeyed

- An order dismissing the action or proceeding or any part thereof, or rendering a judgment by default against the disobedient party

- An order treating the disobedience of the discovery order as a contempt of court, except when the violation is failure to submit to a physical or mental examination

In lieu of, or in addition to, any of these sanctions, the court must require the disobedient party, or the attorney advising that party, or both, to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the violation, unless the court finds that the failure was substantially justified, or that other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust. n2

[4] Timing of Motion

Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b) does not establish specific time limits for making a motion for sanctions. In the absence of a specific local rule to the contrary, Rule 37(b) motions should be filed within a reasonable time after the alleged violation. The moving party must provide the opposing party with adequate time to prepare for a hearing on the motion. Local rules and individual judge's rules should be consulted with respect to advance notice requirements for motions and regularly scheduled motion days and times.

[5] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

Although Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2) contains no meet and confer requirement before filing a motion for sanctions, many districts have rules requiring an attempt at informal resolution before filing such a motion.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(C).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
I. Forms

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.203

§ 22.203 Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Make Mandatory Disclosures

[1] FORM

Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Make Mandatory Disclosures

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)], or soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, [party designation and name of moving party] will move this Court, at the United States Courthouse located at [address of court], Courtroom [courtroom number], for an order:

(a) pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 37(c)(1), that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be forbidden from offering any evidence at [trial or other proceeding at which evidence istaken] any of the following witnesses or information: [specify], on the ground that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] has failed to make the disclosures mandated by [Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 26(a) or Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 26(e)(1)] as described in the Affidavit of [name], attached hereto; and

(b) pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 37(c)(1), that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be required to pay the expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by [party designation and name of moving party] as result of the failure by [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] to comply with this requirement.

This motion is based on this Notice of Motion, the Affidavit (or appropriate affidavit substitute) of [name of signatory] sworn to (or dated) [date], the accompanying Memorandum of Law [if required] dated [date], and on all of the pleadings and papers on file in this action.

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local district court rules]

TO: [Name of opposing counsel], Attorney for [name of party]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of notice of motion for use by a party who wishes to obtain an order for sanctions based on another party's failure to disclose information required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a) or Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(e)(1). This motion is made under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1). The form seeks a preclusion sanction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(ii) and monetary sanctions. It may be modified when other sanctions under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2) are sought.

[3] Types of Sanctions Available

If a party, without substantial justification, fails to disclose information required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a) or Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(e)(1), the party may not use testimony from that witness or the undisclosed information as evidence at trial, at a hearing, or in connection with a motion, unless the failure to disclose was harmless. n1

In addition to, or in lieu of this sanction, the court, on motion and after affording an opportunity to be heard, may impose other appropriate sanctions. These sanctions may include: n2

- Payment of reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the failure
- Any of the actions authorized in Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(i)-(vi),
- Informing the jury of the failure to make the disclosure

[4] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

Although Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1) contains no meet and confer requirement before filing a motion for sanctions, many districts have local rules requiring an attempt at informal resolution before filing such a motion.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
I. Forms

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.204

§ 22.204 Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit

[1] FORM

Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Unreasonable Failure to Admit

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)], or soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, [party designation and name of moving party] will move this Court, at the United States Courthouse located at [address of court], Courtroom [courtroom number], for an order:

(a) pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 36 and Rule 37(c)(2), that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be required to pay the expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by [party designation and name of moving party] in proving the [genuineness of those documents or truth of those matters] described in the Affidavit of name] attached hereto on the ground that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] unreasonably failed to admit the [genuineness of those documents or truth of those matters] as requested under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 36; and

(b) granting [moving party] such other incidental relief as may be appropriate.

This motion is based on this Notice of Motion, the Affidavit (or appropriate affidavit substitute) of [name of signatory] sworn to (or dated) [date], the accompanying Memorandum of Law (if required) dated [date], and on all of the pleadings and papers on file in this action.

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local district court rules]

TO: [Name of opposing counsel], Attorney for [name of party]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of notice of motion for use by a party who wishes to obtain an order requiring a party who failed to make an admission to pay the expenses incurred by the moving party in proving those matters. This motion is made under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2).

[3] When Sanction Is Available

If a party fails to admit the genuineness of any document or the truth of any matter as requested pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 36, and if the requesting party then proves the genuineness of the document or the truth of the matter, the requesting party may seek an order requiring the other party to pay the reasonable expenses incurred in making that proof, including reasonable attorney's fees. Expense-shifting sanctions must be imposed unless the court finds one of the statutorily set forth exceptions exist. n1

[4] Date and Time of Hearing

Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2) does not set forth a time limit for filing a motion. However, such motions are typically filed after trial based on the requirement that court find that the moving party has "proven" the truth of the matter for which an admission was requested, which requires that all rebuttal evidence be considered.

[5] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

Although Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2) contains no meet and confer requirement before filing a motion for sanctions, many local rules require an attempt at informal resolution before filing such a motion.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(2).

178 of 179 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
I. Forms

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.205

§ 22.205 Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Appear or Respond

[1] FORM

Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Appear or Respond

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)], or soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, [party designation and name of moving party] will move this Court, at the United States Courthouse located at [address of court], Courtroom [courtroom number], for:

(a) an order pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure,

[CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING, AS APPROPRIATE]

Rule 37(b)(2)(A) and Rule 37(d), that the following facts be established as proven: [specify],

[OR]

Rule 37(b)(2)(B) and Rule 37(d), that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be forbidden from offering any evidence at trial supporting the following defenses: [specify],

[OR]

Rule 37(b)(2)(B) and Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d) that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be prohibited from introducing in evidence the following matters: [specify],

[OR]

Rule 37(b)(2)(C) and Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d) that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought]'s [answer or other pleading setting forth affirmative defense] be stricken and that judgment by default in favor of [party designation and name of moving party] for the relief demanded in the complaint be entered,

[CONTINUE]

on the ground that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] has failed to [specify sanctionable failure, e.g., answer or object to interrogatories as described in the Affidavit of (name) attached hereto as Exhibit A, and set forth in the attached Exhibit B]; and

> (b) an order pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 37(d), that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be required to pay the expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by [party designation and name of moving party] as result of [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought]'s failure to comply with the requested discovery.

This motion is based on this Notice of Motion, the Affidavit (or appropriate affidavit substitute) of [name of signatory] sworn to (or dated) [date], the accompanying Memorandum of Law [if required] dated [date], and on all of the pleadings and papers on file in this action.

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local district court rules]

TO: [Name of opposing counsel], Attorney for [name of party]

[2] Use of Form

This is a notice of motion for use by a party who wishes to obtain an order for sanctions based on another party's failure to appear at a deposition or respond to a request for discovery. This motion is made under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

[3] Grounds for Motion

A party (or an officer, director, or managing agent of a party or a person designated pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(6) or Fed. R. Civ. P. 31(a) to testify on behalf of a party) may be sanctioned for failing to do any of the following: n1

- To appear before the officer who is to take a deposition
- To serve answers or objections to interrogatories submitted pursuant to Rule 33
- To serve a written response to a request for inspection submitted pursuant to Rule 34

[4] Types of Sanctions Available

If a party fails to comply with discovery, the court may make such orders in regard to the failure as are just, and among others it may issue any order authorized under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(i)-(vi), such as: n2

- An order that the matters with respect to which the order was made, or any other designated facts, shall be taken to be established for the purposes of the action in accordance with the claims of the party obtaining the order

- An order refusing to allow the disobedient party to support or oppose designated claims or defenses, or prohibiting that party from introducing designated matters in evidence

- An order striking out pleadings or parts of pleadings, or staying further proceedings until the order is obeyed

- An order dismissing the action or proceeding or any part thereof, or rendering a judgment by default against the disobedient party

In lieu of, or in addition to, any of these sanctions, the court must require the disobedient party, or the attorney advising that party, or both, to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the violation, unless the court finds that the failure was substantially justified, or that other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust. n3

[5] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

A motion for sanctions based on a party's failure to respond to interrogatories, or a request for inspection, must include a certification that the moving party has in good faith conferred or attempted to confer with the party failing to answer or respond in an effort to obtain a response without court action. n4

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(C).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 22 Enforcement of Discovery
I. Forms

2-22 Federal Litigation Guide § 22.206

§ 22.206 Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan

[1] FORM

Notice of Motion for Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Discovery Plan

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)], or soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, [party designation and name of moving party] will move this Court, at the United States Courthouse located at [address of court], Courtroom [courtroom number], for an order pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 26(f) and Rule 37(f), that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] be required to pay the expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by [party designation and name of moving party] as result of [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought]'s failure to participate in discovery planning as described in the Affidavit of name] attached hereto on the ground that [party designation and name of party against whom relief is sought] failed to participate in good faith in the development and submission of a proposed discovery plan as required under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 26(f).

This motion is based on this Notice of Motion, the attached Affidavit (or appropriate affidavit substitute) of [name of signatory] sworn to (or dated) [date], the accompanying Memorandum of Law [if required] dated [date], and on all of the pleadings and papers on file in this action.

[Date]

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local

district court rules]

TO: [Name of opposing counsel], Attorney for [name of party]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of notice of motion for use by a party who wishes to obtain an order requiring a party who failed to participate in good faith in the development and submission of a proposed discovery plan to pay the expenses incurred by the moving party as result of that failure. This motion is made under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(f). Rule 26(f) may be inapplicable in cases in which the district court has opted out of its requirements.

[3] Certification of Attempt to Resolve Without Court Action

Although Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(f) contains no meet and confer requirement before filing a motion for sanctions, most local rules require an attempt at informal resolution before filing such a motion.

1 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide 23.syn

§ 23.syn Synopsis to Chapter 23: Discovery of Experts

§ 23.01 Considering the Use of Expert Witnesses
[1] Evaluating the Importance of Expert Testimony
[2] Analyzing the Impact of Rules of Evidence

§ 23.02 Selecting Expert Witnesses
[1] Timing of Expert Selection
[2] Selecting a "Consulting Expert"
[3] Selecting a "Testifying Expert"
[4] Locating Expert Witnesses

§ 23.03 Compelling Testimony From Non-retained Experts

§ 23.04 Contracting with Experts

§ 23.05 Preparing the Expert for Litigation
[1] Withstanding Cross-Examination
[2] Providing the Expert with Access to Facts
[3] Trial-Preparation Protection Pertaining to Experts

§§ 23.06 through 23.09 [Reserved]

§ 23.10 Understanding Scope of Expert Witness Disclosures
[1] Including Requisite Information in Disclosure
[2] Rebutting Expert Witness Information Disclosed Under Rule 26(a)(2)

§ 23.11 Considering Consequences of Not Disclosing Expert Information
[1] Excluding Testimony at Trial
[2] Imposing Lesser Sanctions

§ 23.12 Identifying Expert Witnesses Who May Testify
[1] Testifying Experts Must Be Disclosed
[2] "Lay Experts" Need Not Be Disclosed
[3] Consultants Need Not Be Disclosed

[4] Determining Whether to Disclose Treating Physician as Expert
[5] Including Direct, Cross, or Rebuttal Witnesses in Disclosures

§ 23.13 Preparing Expert Witness Reports
[1] Determining Whether Witnesses Must Prepare Report
[2] Including Opinions and Other Information in Expert Report
[3] Providing Detailed and Complete Report
[4] Protecting Drafts and Communications of Expert Witnesses

§ 23.14 Determining Whether Disclosure Requirement Applies to Treating Physician
[1] Scope of Testimony Determinative
[2] Report Required If Physician Retained or Specially Employed

§ 23.15 Supplementing Expert Disclosures

§ 23.16 Preparing and Certifying Expert Witness Information
[1] Making Proper Disclosures
[2] Preparing Proper Expert Witness Report

§ 23.17 Considering the Impact of the Witnesses Report on Privileged Matter

§ 23.18 CHECKLIST: Expert Witness Disclosures Under Rule 26(a)(2)

§§ 23.19. through 23.29 [Reserved]

§ 23.30 Determining Whether Expert May Be Deposed

§ 23.31 Conducting Informal Investigation of Expert Before Deposition

§ 23.32 Avoiding Ex Parte Communications With Retained Experts

§ 23.33 Deposing Experts Expected to Testify
[1] Conducting Deposition After Receipt of Expert Witness Report
[2] Considering the Applicability of the Work Product Doctrine in Expert Depositions
[3] Deposing Court-Appointed Experts

§ 23.34 Deposing Experts Specially Retained in Preparation of Trial, but Not Expected to Testify
[1] Showing of Exceptional Circumstances Required
[2] Evaluating Policy Factors

§ 23.35 Stipulating to Discovery of Experts

§ 23.36 Preparing the Expert for Deposition
[1] Reviewing Opinion Testimony
[2] Reviewing the Expert's Report Before Deposition

§ 23.37 Preparing To Take An Expert Deposition
[1] Learning the Expert's Field of Expertise
[2] Inquiring About the Expert's Qualifications
[3] Inquiring About the Expert's Retention
[4] Inquiring About Testimony in Other Cases
[5] Inquiring About Publications
[6] Inquiring About Facts and Materials Given to the Expert

[7] Inquiring About Exhibits in Support of Opinions
[8] Inquiring About Reliance on Legal Standards
[9] Inquiring About the Field of Expertise
[10] Inquiring About the Expert's Opinions

§ 23.38 Paying Expert Fees in Context of Discovery
[1] Compensating the Expert to Obtain Discovery
[2] Evaluating Experts' Fees
[3] Seeking Fees Within Reasonable Time

§§ 23.39 through 23.99 [Reserved]

§ 23.100 Expert Witness Disclosure Statement Under Rule 26(a)(2)
[1] FORM
Expert Witness Disclosure Statement Under Rule 26(a)(2)
[2] Use of Form
[3] Required Expert Witness Disclosures
[4] Contents of Expert Witness's Report
[5] Writing and Signature Requirements

2 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter concerns the use and discovery of experts. It begins with a discussion of the role of the expert in modern federal litigation practice and includes suggestions for ways to find and prepare an expert for litigation.

The focus then shifts to an in-depth examination of the provisions of Rule 26(a)(2) governing disclosure of all expert witnesses retained to provide expert testimony. The chapter includes a checklist to help in the preparation of the expert report, which parties are required to exchange in advance of trial unless otherwise stipulated or ordered by the court.

Next, the chapter covers expert depositions. The discussion includes an overview of taking and defending expert depositions and concludes with a section on expert witness fees in the context of discovery.

Finally, the chapter provides a sample expert witness disclosure form with comments concerning the use of the form.

For expanded coverage of discovery of experts, see Moore's Federal Practice, Ch. 26, General Provisions Governing Discovery; Duty of Disclosure, § 26.80.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
A. Understanding the Role of Expert Witnesses in Litigation

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.01

§ 23.01 Considering the Use of Expert Witnesses

[1] Evaluating the Importance of Expert Testimony

Expert witnesses are widely used in federal litigation. Since experts can testify on the "ultimate issue," they may be the most helpful witnesses for the party presenting the expert testimony and the most damaging witnesses for the opposing party. Proper selection and pretrial preparation of expert witnesses and effective discovery of opposing expert opinion is fundamental to a successful result in federal court litigation.

The increase in the use of expert evidence has not been without its critics. Courts have seen cases bogged down by overuse of expert opinion; costs of litigation have soared as a result of the parties' heavy reliance on expert witnesses; and many litigators and judges alike have commented that experts have taken on too large a role in civil litigation.

[2] Analyzing the Impact of Rules of Evidence

Expert testimony has become a critical component of federal trials, in part, because the Federal Rules of Evidence have been expanded to allow for the flexible use of experts. For example:

- Rule 701 allows lay witnesses to offer opinions based on their perceptions if such opinions are helpful to the fact-finder n1

- Under Rule 702, the class of witnesses characterized as experts has been expanded beyond those with formal education or degrees to include persons qualified through skill or experience n2

- Rule 703 now allows experts to base their opinions on inadmissible evidence if it is the type normally and reasonably used by experts in their field n3

- Rule 705 permits the expert to state an opinion without expressing the basis for it n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness

DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsAdmissibility

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 701.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 702.

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Evid. 703.

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Evid. 705.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
A. Understanding the Role of Expert Witnesses in Litigation

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.02

§ 23.02 Selecting Expert Witnesses

[1] Timing of Expert Selection

Experts can be useful at all stages of a case, including the prefiling stage. In some cases, early consultation with a person knowledgeable in the specific technical, medical, or business area involved in the controversy will help with the development of legal claims. Since not all experts selected will be used at trial, consulting with an expert early may at first seem unduly expensive. Retaining an expert as early as possible, however, can provide significant advantages when a suit is filed and an expert is needed. For example, prefiling retention avoids the possibility of losing the expert to the other side. Early retention also gives the expert a chance to learn about the case up-front, and to help in framing discovery.

Yet, retaining an expert early need not add unduly to the cost of litigation. Careful management of the expert's duties will minimize additional expenses. At most, early use of experts will simply move the costs up in time. Unless the case is likely to settle in the very early stages, this is money well spent. Moreover, it could actually reduce costs later on, since the expert will not be forced to do extra work to create theories in short order.

[2] Selecting a "Consulting Expert"

The expert hired at an early stage need not be the perfect trial witness. Some experts who may not want to testify at trial (or who may not be good at it) nevertheless have useful contributions to make to the evaluation of a case. Since the opinions of such "consulting experts" usually are not discoverable, using them early can shield the testifying expert as well. n1

A consulting expert can help formulate theories of the case using principles of science, medicine, or business. Consulting experts, as well as trial experts, can also help counsel understand and assess likely theories of opposing counsel. Each case will require an independent evaluation of the need for early expert participation.

[3] Selecting a "Testifying Expert"

A different set of considerations applies to the selection of testifying experts. Unlike consulting experts, testifying experts must be both knowledgeable on the technical issues presented, and capable of communicating with jurors in the courtroom. Testifying experts must be persuasive, confident, and capable.

In addition to substantive testifying experts, a case may also require the use of experts who do nothing but prepare demonstrative evidence for the trial: models, experiments, videos, or animations. Such demonstrative evidence experts must be prepared to testify, at least on deposition, to authenticate their work for admission into evidence.

Some experts have developed expertise solely in areas of litigation controversy--damages experts, accident reconstructionists, handwriting experts, model makers, recreation safety analysts to name just a few. These experts are unique in that their expertise relates specifically to litigation issues, and exists only partially, if at all, outside that context. Virtually all complex cases will require at least one of these experts.

[4] Locating Expert Witnesses

The appropriate expert may be found in any number of ways: from reported cases; by word of mouth from other attorneys; from bar associations; from technical literature in the field; internet searches; or from colleges or universities. There are many expert clearinghouses whose business it is to direct attorneys to qualified experts, as well as societies that attempt to screen and qualify experts for public reference.

But an independent check on the expert's experience, qualifications, and references is always imperative. Only by interviewing an expert can counsel determine if the expert's knowledge is right for the particular case.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsHelpfulness

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(A), a party is only entitled to disclosure of persons whose expert testimony "it may use at trial." Moreover, Rule 26(b)(4)(B) allows depositions of consulting experts only upon a showing of "exceptional circumstances." Thus, the rules do not support, but also do not completely prohibit, consulting expert discovery.

5 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
A. Understanding the Role of Expert Witnesses in Litigation

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.03

§ 23.03 Compelling Testimony From Non-retained Experts

An expert who has not been retained by another party in a case enjoys no immunity or privilege n1 from testifying and may be compelled to testify by subpoena. An expert can be compelled to testify to opinions that she has previously formed and that require no study of the facts or further preparation. n2 Courts will compel expert testimony, especially when a "conspiracy of silence" is detected. n3 Thus, a treating physician may be compelled to disclose expert opinion based upon an implied contractual "duty of total care" owed by the physician to the patient, which duty includes not only care and treatment but also the duty to aid the patient in litigation by rendering reports andtestifying. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Anker v. G.D. Searle & Co., 126 F.R.D. 515 (M.D.N.C. 1989) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Carter-Wallace, Inc. v. Otte, 474 F.2d 529 (2d Cir. 1972) . See also Kaufman v. Edelstein, 539 F.2d 811 (2d Cir. 1976) (experts could be subpoenaed against their will and enjoyed no absolute or qualified privilege under the Federal Rules of Evidence). See also Wright v. Jeep Corp., 547 F. Supp. 871 (E.D. Mich. 1982) . Other courts have limited unwilling expert testimony. See Buchanan v. American Motors Corp., 697 F.2d 151 (6th Cir. 1983) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Pegram v. Sisco, 406 F. Supp. 776 , aff'd without opinion, 547 F.2d 1172 (8th Cir. 1976) . See also L'Orange v. Medical Protective Co., 394 F.2d 57, 45 Ohio Op. 2d 314 (6th Cir. 1968) (it is against public policy for an insurer to intimidate an expert in a medical malpractice claim by threatening cancellation of his malpractice policy).

(n4)Footnote 4. Miles v. Farrell, 549 F. Supp. 82 (N.D. Ill. 1982) .

6 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
A. Understanding the Role of Expert Witnesses in Litigation

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.04

§ 23.04 Contracting with Experts

The relationship between an attorney and an expert witness is voluntary and contractual. The expert witness must fulfill the contract and perform the services with reasonable care. n1

Even though there is a contractual relationship, there is no contractual duty on the part of the expert to testify in a certain way or express certain opinions; such a contract would violate public policy. Nor does an expert owe a duty to the opposing party. The expert owes a duty only to the court and is immune from liability for claims arising out of an expert report or testimony. n2

Because of these "independent" responsibilities, a contract with an expert should explicitly address the expert's responsibilities. The agreement should also state what the expert's services will cost. Practices vary widely among experts. For example, they may charge by the hour, the day, or the job. Charges for research assistants and other technical assistants should be expressly covered.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Honeywell, Inc. v. American Standards Testing Bureau, 851 F.2d 652 (3d Cir. 1988) (a $300,000 judgment was entered against an expert witness company for "gross negligence" where the expert who signed the report did not participate in its preparation and could not testify as to his own opinion, resulting in an adverse verdict).

(n2)Footnote 2. Kahn v. Burman, 673 F. Supp. 210 (E.D. Mich. 1987) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
A. Understanding the Role of Expert Witnesses in Litigation

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.05

§ 23.05 Preparing the Expert for Litigation

[1] Withstanding Cross-Examination

The expert's role is to analyze the problem in sufficient detail to withstand cross-examination, and to reiterate that detail in a manner understandable to the lay juror or judge. If an expert will not defer to direction of counsel, or cannot because of differing opinions concerning the case theory, a new expert must be located. Of course, as a highly skilled specialist, the expert must feel free to voice contrary opinions. Vigorous discussion will narrow the issues and will facilitate explanation of the most troublesome aspects of the case to the jury. Moreover, discussions with an expert will aid in avoiding a trial theory that is destined to fail.

[2] Providing the Expert with Access to Facts

Fundamentally, the expert's opinion is based on the facts of the case. Accordingly, the expert must have access to all of the facts, good and bad. Such access is crucial in maintaining the expert's credibility; if important facts are withheld from an expert, cross-examination can be devastating.

Generally, the facts should not be gathered by the expert. Rather, counsel should gather the facts before requesting that the expert analyze them. One of the best ways to get an expert into a case quickly is to transmit the case documents to the expert as soon as possible after the expert is retained and a fee schedule is agreed upon.

Documents sent to the expert should be accompanied by an inventory transmittal letter. At the time of the expert's deposition this transmittal letter will help both the expert and counsel keep track of which documents were given to the expert, when they were given, and by whom. In fact, this letter can simply be attached to the expert's Rule 26(a)(2) report. Pertinent documents includes all witness depositions, photographs, test results, key physical evidence, and product information, such as labels and manuals. When testimony will be required on specific legal or statutory standards, it is also often helpful for the expert to review pertinent jury instructions on the area in question.

[3] Trial-Preparation Protection Pertaining to Experts

Effective December 1, 2010, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect drafts of any expert report or disclosure required under Rule 26(a)(2), regardless of the form in which the draft is recorded. n1

Additionally, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect communications between the party's attorney and any expert witness required to provide a report under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), regardless of the form of the communications, except to the extent that the communications do any of the following: n2

- Relate to compensation for the expert's study or testimony
- Identify facts or data that the party's attorney provided and that the expert considered in forming the opinions to be expressed
- Identify assumptions that the party's attorney provided and that the expert relied on in forming the opinions to be expressed

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(B).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(C).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
A. Understanding the Role of Expert Witnesses in Litigation

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 23.06 through 23.09

[Reserved]

§§ 23.06[Reserved]

9 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
B. Making Expert Witness Disclosures

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.10

§ 23.10 Understanding Scope of Expert Witness Disclosures

[1] Including Requisite Information in Disclosure

Rule 26(a)(2)(A) requires each party to disclose the identity of any witness it may use at trial to present evidence under Federal Rule of Evidence 702, 703, or 705. Such a witness is required to provide a written export report under Rule 26(a)(2)(B) only if the witness "is one retained or specially employed to provide expert testimony in the case or one whose duties as the party's employee regularly involve giving expert testimony." n1

Effective December 1, 2010, if a witness identified under Rule 26(a)(2)(A) is not required to provide an expert report, the party must disclose the subject matter of the expected expert testimony and a summary of the facts and opinions to which the expert is expected to testify. n2 This disclosure will support preparation for deposing the witness, and in some settings may satisfy other parties that there is no need for a deposition.

Absent a stipulation or a court order, the disclosures must be made at least 90 days before the date set for trial or for the case to be ready for trial. n3

[2] Rebutting Expert Witness Information Disclosed Under Rule 26(a)(2)

After receiving the other parties' disclosures under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), a party may determine that additional expert testimony, not yet disclosed, may be necessary to contradict or rebut the other parties' disclosed witnesses. In that case, the party must disclose rebuttal expert witness identities and reports within 30 days after the other parties' disclosures. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(A).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(C).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(D).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(D).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
B. Making Expert Witness Disclosures

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.11

§ 23.11 Considering Consequences of Not Disclosing Expert Information

[1] Excluding Testimony at Trial

Failure to comply with the expert disclosure requirements of Rule 26(a)(2) may be countered by a motion to compel by any other party. n1 The failure to make disclosure without substantial justification is sanctionable and sanctions may include disqualification of the witness or the undisclosed evidence. n2 When exclusion would be tantamount to dismissal of the case (based on the party's inability to prove their case without the expert), the trial judge should not impose the exclusion sanction unless it finds that the party's failure to comply with the disclosure requirements was both unjustified and harmful. n2.1

One party's failure to comply with the expert disclosure requirements does not excuse noncompliance by another party. n3 If an expert discusses the omitted opinion in the course of the expert's deposition, that will often operate to satisfy Rule 26(e)(1) and prevent exclusion under Rule 37(c)(1), unless the court determines that the omission was intentional and without substantial justification, and the opponent was unduly prejudiced as a result. However, the mere fact that an expert's deposition is taken and the opposing party has the opportunity to inquire into opinions omitted from the expert's report--but does not in fact do so--will not cure the omission in the report. The omitted opinion will, in these circumstances, usually be excluded under Rule 37(c)(1) unless the proponent can show substantial justification or harmless error. n4

[2] Imposing Lesser Sanctions

In addition to the strong sanction of exclusion, the court has broad discretion in fashioning additional sanctions for failure to disclose experts or to provide proper expert reports under Rule 26(a)(2). The court may as an additional sanction, or in lieu of exclusion: n5

- Require payment of reasonable expenses caused by the failure to disclose (including attorney's fees)
- Designate certain facts be taken as established for the purposes of the action
- Refuse to allow the non-disclosing party to support or oppose certain claims or defenses
- Strike parts of the pleadings

- Stay further proceedings until disclosure is made
- Dismiss any part of the action
- Inform the jury of the failure to disclose

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsAdmissibility

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(A).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1); In re Air Crash at Charlotte, N.C. on July 2, 1994, 982 F. Supp. 1086, 1088 (D.S.C. 1997) .

(n3)Footnote 2.1. See Sherrod v. Lingle, 223 F.3d 605, 612 (7th Cir. 2000) .

(n4)Footnote 3. Smith v. State Farm Fire and Cas. Co., 164 F.R.D. 49, 54 (S.D. W. Va. 1995) .

(n5)Footnote 4. LaMarca v. United States, 31 F. Supp. 2d 110, 123 (E.D.N.Y. 1998) .

(n6)Footnote 5. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1). The Committee Note suggests that the failure to disclose is admissible unless the judge acts to exclude it as evidence: "The failure to identify a witness or document in a disclosure statement would be admissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence under the same principles that allow a party's interrogatory answers to be offered against it."

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
B. Making Expert Witness Disclosures

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.12

§ 23.12 Identifying Expert Witnesses Who May Testify

[1] Testifying Experts Must Be Disclosed

Parties must disclose the identity of experts who may be used at trial to presentevidence under Rules 702, 703, or 705 of the Federal Rules of Evidence. n1 Note that:

- Rule 702 allows experts to offer opinion evidence if it will assist the trier of fact to determine a factual issue. n2

- Rule 703 allows an expert to base an opinion on material provided before or during trial and that may not be admissible. n3

- Rule 705 allows an expert to state the reason for an offered opinion without first disclosing the facts or data relied on to form the opinion. n4

[2] "Lay Experts" Need Not Be Disclosed

A party is not required to disclose--as an expert--the identity of a lay witness who will provide opinion testimony under Rule 701 of the Federal Rules of Evidence. n5 Rule 701 permits a lay witness to testify in the form of opinions or inferences when the testimony is rationally based on the perception of the witness and the testimony will be helpful to a clear understanding of the witness's testimony or the determination of a fact in issue. n6

It is sometimes difficult to distinguish between a lay witness providing Rule 701 testimony and an expert providing testimony under Rule 702, particularly if the witness might otherwise qualify as an expert in his or her field, especially in courts that have adopted a liberal view toward the admissibility of Rule 701 testimony. n7

An essential difference is that Rule 701 requires direct personal knowledge of a factual matter at issue. Only then does it allow introduction of a limited degree of opinion testimony to help convey that information and only if the court finds that it would be helpful to the jury. n8

However, "lay experts" must be disclosed as fact witnesses under Rule 26(a)(1) and (a)(3).

[3] Consultants Need Not Be Disclosed

Rule 26(a)(2) requires the disclosure only of experts who may testify at trial. Consultants who have provided expert opinions, but who the party does not intend to call as witnesses, generally need not be disclosed. n9

Note, however, that facts known or opinions held by such a consulting expert may be discoverable on a showing of exceptional circumstances under which it is impracticable for the party seeking discovery to obtain facts or opinions on the same subject by other means. n10

In addition, reports of physical or mental examinations ordered by the court or agreed to by the parties must be provided if requested by the examined party. n11

[4] Determining Whether to Disclose Treating Physician as Expert

A physician who has treated a party is generally considered to be an ordinary witness, who need not be disclosed, even though a treating physician may be called on to testify based on his or her personal knowledge of the patient's examination, diagnosis, and treatment. In some cases, a treating physician may be permitted to offer an opinion as to what caused the medical condition at issue. n11.1 In contrast, a physician who is merely retained for purposes of trial, and whose opinions are based solely on knowledge acquired and developed in anticipation of litigation or for trial, is considered to be an expert witness, and is subject to expert witness disclosure requirements. n12

Several courts have held that, if a treating physician is called primarily to offer conclusions regarding causation rather than primarily to testify as to what the physician observed during treatment, the physician is an expert witness whose identity must be disclosed under Rule 26(a)(2)(A). n12.1

Although a treating physician may not be required to submit an expert witness report, the party must disclose the subject matter of the expected expert testimony and a summary of the facts and opinions to which the expert is expected to testify even when an expert report is not required. n12.2

[5] Including Direct, Cross, or Rebuttal Witnesses in Disclosures

Expert witness disclosures must include the identity, testimony, and other required information from all expert witnesses expected to testify at trial, including those that will be used to impeach or rebut evidence offered by the other parties' experts. Experts who will be offered solely as rebuttal witnesses, however, need not be identified until 30 days after the other parties' disclosures. n13

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsAdmissibilityEvidenceTestimonyExpertsCredibilityImpeachment

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(A).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Evid. 702.

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Evid. 703.

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Evid. 705.

(n5)Footnote 5. See MCI Telecommunications Corp. v. Wanzer, 897 F.2d 703, 706 (4th Cir. 1990) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Evid. 701.

(n7)Footnote 7. See Asplundh Mfg. Div. v. Benton Harbor Eng'g, 57 F.3d 1190 (3d Cir. 1995) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Wilburn v. Maritrans GP, Inc., 139 F.3d 350, 355-356 (3d Cir. 1998) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(A).

(n10)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(D).

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(D); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b).

(n12)Footnote 11.1. See Brundidge v. City of Buffalo, 79 F. Supp. 2d 219, 224 (W.D.N.Y. 1999) .

(n13)Footnote 12. See Patel v. Gayes, 984 F.2d 214, 217 (7th Cir. 1993) ; Ebewo v. Martinez, 309 F. Supp. 2d 600, 608 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) .

(n14)Footnote 12.1. See Zarecki v. National R.R. Passenger Corp., 914 F. Supp. 1566, 1572-1573 (N.D. Ill. 1996) ; Widhelm v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 162 F.R.D. 591, 594 (D. Neb. 1995) .

(n15)Footnote 12.2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(C).

(n16)Footnote 13. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(C).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
B. Making Expert Witness Disclosures

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.13

§ 23.13 Preparing Expert Witness Reports

[1] Determining Whether Witnesses Must Prepare Report

Unless otherwise stipulated or ordered by the court, two types of witnesses mustprepare written reports: n1

- Those retained or specially employed to provide expert testimony in the case
- Those whose duties as an employee of the party regularly involve giving expert testimony

Courts often consider whether the witness has been paid a fee in determining whether the witness was retained or specially employed, but that fact alone does not make a witness an expert subject to the report requirements. n2

If an expert witness identified under Rule 26(a)(2)(A) is not required to provide an expert report, the party must disclose the subject matter of the expected expert testimony and a summary of the facts and opinions to which the expert is expected to testify. n2.1

[2] Including Opinions and Other Information in Expert Report

The expert's report must contain each of the following: n3

- A complete statement of all opinions the expert will express and their basis and reasons
- The facts or data considered by the witness in forming the opinions
- Any exhibits to be used as a summary of or in support of the witness's opinions
- The witness's qualifications, including a list of all publications written by the witness within the preceding 10 years n3.1
- The compensation to be paid for the study and testimony n3.2
- A list of any other cases in which the witness has testified as an expert at trial or by deposition within

the preceding four years

A party is not excused from producing a detailed and complete list of cases in which that party's expert has testified simply because the expert does not maintain such a list, or because such a list would be costly and difficult to compile because of the number of cases in which the expert has testified. n4 Information that is in the nature of rebuttal evidence need not be included in an expert witness's first report. It is sufficient for this information to appear in the second report filed by a party's expert in response to the other party's expert's report. n5 With respect to the required list of cases in which the witness has testified, one district court has held that the identification of cases at a minimum should include the courts or administrative agencies, the names of the parties, the case number, and whether the testimony was by deposition or at trial. n6

[3] Providing Detailed and Complete Report

An expert witness's report must include all testimony the witness is expected to present during direct examination, and the expert may not testify on a matter not disclosed in the preliminary report. An expert's testimony may be entirely precluded if the expert's report is not made available to opposing counsel within disclosure deadlines. n7

The written report requirement was designed to counter the common practice of providing information so sketchy and vague that it rarely dispensed with the need to depose the expert or was of little help in preparing for a deposition of the witness. n8

Rule 26(a)(2) effectively does away with the need for interrogatories to determine the substance of an expert's testimony because the expert report must contain a complete statement of all opinions to be expressed and the basis and reasons for the opinions, as well as the data or other information considered by the witness in forming the opinions. n9 Because the report must be served before an expert may be deposed, the report may reduce the length of the expert's deposition or may eliminate the need for one entirely. n10

[4] Protecting Drafts and Communications of Expert Witnesses

Effective December 1, 2010, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect drafts of any expert report or disclosure required under Rule 26(a)(2), regardless of the form in which the draft is recorded. n11

Additionally, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect communications between the party's attorney and any expert witness required to provide a report under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), regardless of the form of the communications, except to the extent that the communications do any of the following: n12

- Relate to compensation for the expert's study or testimony
- Identify facts or data that the party's attorney provided and that the expert considered in forming the opinions to be expressed
- Identify assumptions that the party's attorney provided and that the expert relied on in forming the opinions to be expressed

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsAdmissibilityEvidenceTestimonyExpertsHelpfulness

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B).

(n2)Footnote 2. Hall v. Sykes, 164 F.R.D. 46, 48 (E.D. Va. 1995) .

(n3)Footnote 2.1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(C).

(n4)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B).

(n5)Footnote 3.1. See Rivera Pomales v. Bridgestone Firestone, Inc., 217 F.R.D. 290, 293 (D.P.R. 2003) (district court excluded defendant's expert witness for failure to include a copy of the expert's curriculum vitae with the expert witness report).

(n6)Footnote 3.2. See Cary Oil Co. v. MG Ref. & Mktg., Inc., 257 F. Supp. 2d 751, 756 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (disclosure of hourly rate on its own is insufficient).

(n7)Footnote 4. Palmer v. Rhodes Machinery, 187 F.R.D. 653, 655-656 (N.D. Okla. 1999) .

(n8)Footnote 5. ABB Air Preheater, Inc. v. Regenerative Envtl. Equip. Co., Inc., 167 F.R.D. 668, 672-673 (D.N.J. 1996) .

(n9)Footnote 6. Nguyen v. IBP, Inc., 162 F.R.D. 675, 682 (D. Kan. 1995) .

(n10)Footnote 7. Walsh v. McCain Foods Ltd., 81 F.3d. 722 (7th Cir. 1996) .

(n11)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a) Committee Note (1993).

(n12)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2).

(n13)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a) Committee Note (1993).

(n14)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(B).

(n15)Footnote 12. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(C).

13 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
B. Making Expert Witness Disclosures

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.14

§ 23.14 Determining Whether Disclosure Requirement Applies to Treating Physician

[1] Scope of Testimony Determinative

Whether a treating physician must prepare and file an expert witness report has raised some uncertainty. Generally, physicians may testify regarding their treatment and opinions with respect to the injuries or illnesses sustained as they causally relate to the incident and their opinion as to permanency without becoming subject to the more extensive expert witness requirements of Rule 26(a)(2)(B). n1

[2] Report Required If Physician Retained or Specially Employed

If a treating physician is specially retained or employed to render a medical opinion based on factors that were not learned in the course of the treatment of the patient, then such a doctor would be required to prepare an expert written report. n2

Merely paying a fee for the physician to testify at a deposition or in court does not make that physician a specially retained or employed witness. n3 However, an attorney's reference of a client to a physician for treatment raises the appearance that the physician was specially retained, and a written report may be required. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Mangla v. University of Rochester, 168 F.R.D. 137, 139 (W.D.N.Y. 1996) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Mangla v. University of Rochester, 168 F.R.D. 137, 139 (W.D.N.Y. 1996) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Hall v. Sykes, 164 F.R.D. 46, 48 (E.D. Va. 1995) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Hall v. Sykes, 164 F.R.D. 46, 48-49 (E.D. Va. 1995) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
B. Making Expert Witness Disclosures

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.15

§ 23.15 Supplementing Expert Disclosures

The duty to supplement expert testimony disclosures extends not only to the report prepared and provided under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), but also to any deposition of the expert. n1 Any additions or changes to an expert's reports or depositions must be disclosed by the time a party's pretrial disclosures are due. n2

Failure to supplement the expert disclosures when required can lead to the exclusion of the expert's testimony. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(E), (e)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(e)(1).

(n3)Footnote 3. Walsh v. McCain Foods Ltd., 81 F.3d 722, 727 (7th Cir. 1996) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
B. Making Expert Witness Disclosures

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.16

§ 23.16 Preparing and Certifying Expert Witness Information

[1] Making Proper Disclosures

Unless otherwise directed by the court, expert witness disclosures made under Rule 26(a)(2) must be:

- Made in writing n1
- Signed n2
- Served on the other parties n3

Expert witness disclosures are generally not to be filed unless ordered by the court, or unless they will be used in connection with a motion, the trial, or an appeal.

[2] Preparing Proper Expert Witness Report

The report accompanying the expert witness disclosures must be made in writing and be prepared and signed by the witness. n4

Counsel may assist experts in preparing the reports, but the report, which is intended to set forth the substance of the direct examination, should accurately reflect the witness' future testimony. n5

Unless otherwise stipulated or ordered by the court, if an expert witness is not required to provide a written report, the expert disclosure must include both of the following: n6

- The subject matter on which the witness is expected to present evidence under Federal Rule of Evidence 702, 703, or 705
- A summary of the facts and opinions to which the witness is expected to testify

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsHelpfulness

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(4).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B), (4).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(4).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a) Committee Note (1993).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(C) (effective 12/1/10).

16 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
B. Making Expert Witness Disclosures

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.17

§ 23.17 Considering the Impact of the Witnesses Report on Privileged Matter

The written report requirement for experts specially employed to provide testimony nullifies virtually any claim of attorney-client privilege a litigant may make with regard to factual materials furnished to an expert. This holds true whether or not the materials were ultimately relied on by the expert.

If an attorney provides work product to an expert who considers it in forming opinions that he or she will be testifying to at trial, this information is no longer protected by the work product privilege and must be disclosed. n1

Effective December 1, 2010, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect drafts of any expert report or disclosure required under Rule 26(a)(2), regardless of the form in which the draft is recorded. n2

Additionally, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect communications between the party's attorney and any expert witness required to provide a report under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), regardless of the form of the communications, except to the extent that the communications do any of the following: n3

- Relate to compensation for the expert's study or testimony
- Identify facts or data that the party's attorney provided and that the expert considered in forming the opinions to be expressed
- Identify assumptions that the party's attorney provided and that the expert relied on in forming the opinions to be expressed

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersWork ProductGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See American Fidelity Assurance Co. v. Boyer, 225 F.R.D. 520, 521 (D.S.C. 2004) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(B).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(C).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.18

§ 23.18 CHECKLIST: Expert Witness Disclosures Under Rule 26(a)(2)

The following checklist can be used when the expert witness disclosure requirements of Rule 26(a)(2) are applicable in the case.

☐ Unless otherwise stipulated or ordered by the court, the parties must prepare and provide expert witness disclosures as required under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B).

☐ Determine which witnesses must be included in the disclosures as experts:

- ☐ Those retained or specially employed to provide expert testimony in the case.
- ☐ Those whose duties as an employee of the party regularly involve giving expert testimony.
- ☐ Testifying experts.
- ☐ Treating physicians.
- ☐ Direct witnesses.
- ☐ Cross examination witnesses.
- ☐ Rebuttal witnesses (30 days after other parties' disclosures).

☐ Provide to other parties the identity of any expert witness who may testify at trial as required under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(A).

☐ Have each expert witness subject to the disclosure requirements prepare a written report. Counsel may provide assistance, but cannot prepare report. n1 The report must contain the following information, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B):

- ☐ A complete statement of all opinions that the expert will express and their basis and reasons.
- ☐ The facts or data considered by the witness in forming the opinions
- ☐ Any exhibits to be used as a summary of or in support of the witness's opinions.
- ☐ The witness's qualifications, including a list of all publications written by the witness within the preceding 10 years.
- ☐ The compensation to be paid for the study and testimony.
- ☐ A list of any other cases in which the witness has testified as an expert at trial or by deposition within the preceding four years.

☐ Report need not include rebuttal evidence. n2

☐ Review report to assure it is complete. Experts may not testify about matters not included in report.

☐ Prepare expert witness disclosures in writing as required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(4).

☐ Have expert sign written report, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B).

☐ Unless otherwise stipulated or ordered by the court, if an expert witness is not required to provide a written report, the expert disclosure must include both of the following under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(C):

- ☐ The subject matter on which the witness is expected to present evidence under Federal Rule of Evidence 702, 703, or 705
- ☐ A summary of the facts and opinions to which the witness is expected to testify

☐ Serve expert witness disclosures on the other parties as required under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(4).

☐ Supplement expert witness disclosures with any changes or additions by the time pretrial disclosures under Rule 26(a)(3) are due.

■ FORM: For a sample form of expert witness disclosures, see § 23.100.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsHelpfulness

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a) Committee Note (1993).

(n2)Footnote 2. ABB Air Preheater, Inc. v. Regenerative Envtl. Equip. Co., 167 F.R.D. 668, 672-673 (D.N.J. 1996) (rebuttal evidence need not appear in first report submitted by patentee's experts).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
B. Making Expert Witness Disclosures

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 23.19. through 23.29

[Reserved]

§§ 23.19.[Reserved]

19 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
C. Deposing Expert Witnesses

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.30

§ 23.30 Determining Whether Expert May Be Deposed

Once the parties have made all pre-trial disclosures regarding experts who may testify at trial, Rule 26(b)(4) allows the parties to depose any person who has been identified as an expert who may testify at trial. n1

A party may, through interrogatories or deposition, discover facts known or opinions held by an expert who has been retained or specifically employed by another party in anticipation of litigation or preparation for trial who is not expected to be called as a witness at trial only under either of the following circumstances: n1.1

- The expert has conducted a court ordered mental or physical examination under Rule 35 n2

- Upon a showing a exceptional circumstances under which it is impracticable for the party seeking discovery to obtain facts or opinions on the same subject by other means

Discovery can never be had concerning experts who were "informally consulted." n3 Such experts include those consulted at social occasions or those briefly consulted by telephone to whom only general information was provided and no follow-up consultation occurred. An expert may be categorized as an informal expert if she was not of assistance to the attorney, had insufficient credentials, or was otherwise inappropriate to the case.

An expert who acquired information and formed an opinion as to the disputed matter, not in preparation for litigation, but as an actor or observer, is subject to the same broad discovery under Rule 26(b)(1) as any other occurrence witness. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical ExaminationsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsHelpfulness

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4).

(n2)Footnote 1.1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(B).

(n3)Footnote 2. See Fed. Rule Civ. P. 35(b).

(n4)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4) Committee Note (1993); See also U.S.M. Corp. v. American Aerosols, Inc., 631 F.2d 420 (6th Cir. 1980) .

(n5)Footnote 4. Sipes v. United States, 111 F.R.D. 59 (S.D. Cal. 1986) ; Quarantillo v. Consolidated Rail Corp, 106 F.R.D. 435 (W.D.N.Y. 1985) .

20 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
C. Deposing Expert Witnesses

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.31

§ 23.31 Conducting Informal Investigation of Expert Before Deposition

Although information exchanged pursuant to Rule 26(a)(2) will generally serve as the foundation for expert depositions, informal investigation of experts may provide additional insight into the background and credentials of the expert. One approach to informal investigation is to ask your own expert to conduct an investigation of an opposing expert's reputation and credentials. An expert knowledgeable about the field may have sufficient friendly contacts with other professionals to facilitate a few discreet inquiries. Newspapers, magazines, and internet sites often rely on experts for quotable material and may also be useful. Websites for professional associations often list members and include background information. Researching prior testimony may also be helpful. Any inconsistencies between an expert's prior trial or deposition testimony and current proposed testimony may be exploited.

Finally, a client can participate in the investigation of the opposing expert if the client is engaged in a business in the expert's field of expertise. The client or one its employees may be familiar with the expert or may have attended a seminar at which the expert participated. Industry contacts may produce information regarding other companies that have had experience with the expert, either in litigated matters or in a consulting capacity.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsHelpfulness

21 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
C. Deposing Expert Witnesses

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.32

§ 23.32 Avoiding Ex Parte Communications With Retained Experts

Some courts have held that an ex parte contact by one party of another party's expert while the expert is still employed is a violation of Rule 26(b)(4)(B). Because this rule allows a party to discover the opinions of testifying and consulting experts, by implication, it prohibits ex parte contacts with expert witnesses. n1 Thus, the prohibition against ex parte communications is not based on the language of the rule, but rather on the concept of fairness. n2

It has been argued that ex parte communications with an opposing party's experts should not be prohibited when those experts also played a role in the underlying transactions or occurrences that gave rise to the lawsuit. At least one court has rejected this argument. While acknowledging that an expert witness might possess two subsets of information (one involving historic fact, and the other accumulated in preparation for expert testimony), the district court concluded that ex parte communications should be prohibited as to both types of information. In practical terms, the court felt it would be too difficult to separate the two categories of information, and ex parte communications would only invite controversy, overreaching, and professional misconduct. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Olson v. Snap Prods., Inc., 183 F.R.D. 539, 542 (D. Minn. 1998) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Procter & Gamble Co. v. Haugen, 184 F.R.D. 410, 412 (D. Utah 1999) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Olson v. Snap Prods., Inc., 183 F.R.D. 539, 542 (D. Minn. 1998) .

22 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
C. Deposing Expert Witnesses

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.33

§ 23.33 Deposing Experts Expected to Testify

[1] Conducting Deposition After Receipt of Expert Witness Report

Rule 26(b)(4)(A) provides for the pretrial deposition of expert witnesses who are expected to testify at trial. n1 If, however, a report is required from the expert witness under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), the deposition may not be conducted until after the report is provided. n2 The purpose of this restriction is to reduce or eliminate the need for depositions. n3

Once a party has designated an expert witness as someone who will testify at trial, the later withdrawal of that designation may neither prevent the deposition of that witness by the opposing party nor the expert's testimony at trial. n4

[2] Considering the Applicability of the Work Product Doctrine in Expert Depositions

Effective December 1, 2010, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect drafts of any expert report or disclosure required under Rule 26(a)(2), regardless of the form in which the draft is recorded. n5

Additionally, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect communications between the party's attorney and any expert witness required to provide a report under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), regardless of the form of the communications, except to the extent that the communications do any of the following: n6

- Relate to compensation for the expert's study or testimony
- Identify facts or data that the party's attorney provided and that the expert considered in forming the opinions to be expressed
- Identify assumptions that the party's attorney provided and that the expert relied on in forming the opinions to be expressed

[3] Deposing Court-Appointed Experts

Experts appointed by the court also may be deposed. n7 The court will generally determine the type and extent of discovery permitted, and set this out in the order appointing the expert. n8

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsCourt-Appointed ExpertsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(A).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(A).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Smith v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 164 F.R.D. 49, 53 (S.D. W. Va. 1995) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See House v. Combined Ins. Co. of Am., 168 F.R.D. 236, 245-247 (N.D. Iowa 1996) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(B).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(C).

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Evid. 706.

(n8)Footnote 8. See Manual for Complex Litigation 21.48, 21.51 (4th ed. 2004).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
C. Deposing Expert Witnesses

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.34

§ 23.34 Deposing Experts Specially Retained in Preparation of Trial, but Not Expected to Testify

[1] Showing of Exceptional Circumstances Required

A party may use interrogatories or a deposition to discover facts known or opinions held by an expert specially retained by a party in anticipation of litigation or preparation for trial, but not expected to be called as a witness, only under the following circumstances: n1

- The expert has conducted a court ordered mental or physical examination under Rule 35 n2
- Upon a showing of exceptional circumstances under which it is impracticable for the party seeking discovery to obtain facts or opinions on the same subject by other means

In determining whether a witness is an ordinary fact witness or an expert protected by Rule 26(b)(4)(D), the court examines the total factual situation to determine whether the witness obtained the information in the normal course of business or was hired to make an evaluation in connection with expected litigation. For an expert to be hired "in anticipation of litigation," a lawsuit need not have been filed, but there must have existed more than a remote possibility of litigation. n3

The purpose of this Rule is prevent a party from replacing the work of its own experts with that of its opponent. n4 The party seeking discovery has a heavy burden of proving that the required exceptional circumstances exist. n5 Exceptional circumstances may be established by demonstrating that the party seeking discovery is unable to obtain equivalent information that is essential to the preparation of the case from other sources. n6 This includes situations in which the object or condition observed by the non-testifying expert is no longer observable by experts hired by the party seeking discovery. n7 A second situation commonly recognized as constituting exceptional circumstances is when it is possible to replicate the expert discovery, but the costs would be judicially prohibitive. n8

[2] Evaluating Policy Factors

Once a court finds that the party seeking discovery has met its initial burden of showing exceptional circumstances, the court, before ordering discovery, still must analyze the policy considerations underlying Rule 26(b)(4)(D) to determine if they outweigh the exceptional circumstances. Four commonly articulated policy considerations are: n9

- The interest in allowing counsel to obtain the expert advice they need to properly evaluate and present their clients' positions without fear that every consultation with an expert may yield grist for the discovery mill

- The view that each side should prepare its own case at its own expense

- The concern that it would be unfair to the expert to compel its testimony and that experts might become unwilling to serve as consultants if they suspected their testimony would be compelled

- The risk of prejudice to the party who retained the expert as a result of the mere fact of retention

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsMental & Physical ExaminationsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(D).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 35(b).

(n3)Footnote 3. Bank Brussels Lambert v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 175 F.R.D. 34, 43 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Pure Air on the Lake Ltd. Partnership, 154 F.R.D. 202, 207 (N.D. Ind. 1993) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Pure Air on the Lake Ltd. Partnership, 154 F.R.D. 202, 208-209 (N.D. Ind. 1993) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See In re Shell Oil Refinery, 132 F.R.D. 437, 442 , clarified by 134 F.R.D. 148 (E.D. La. 1990) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Braun v. Lorillard Inc., 84 F.3d 230, 236 (7th Cir. 1996) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Bank Brussels Lambert v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 175 F.R.D. 34, 44-45 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Bank Brussels Lambert v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 175 F.R.D. 34, 45 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) .

24 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
C. Deposing Expert Witnesses

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.35

§ 23.35 Stipulating to Discovery of Experts

In cases where both parties clearly will retain experts to testify at trial, consider the possibility of entering into a stipulation regarding discovery of expert witnesses. Rule 26(a)(2)(D) provides the flexibility to tailor expert discovery to the needs of a particular case by stipulation.

Rules 16 and 26(f) provide for a discovery conference, which serves as a convenient mechanism to establish ground rules for expert discovery under the supervision of the court. Because Rule 26(a)(2) sets certain requirements for expert discovery, court approval of any alteration is required. However, often the timing of expert discovery is a big issue, as well as whether depositions will occur. Parties can reduce subsequent controversy by entering a stipulation about these basic issues.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsStipulationsEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
C. Deposing Expert Witnesses

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.36

§ 23.36 Preparing the Expert for Deposition

[1] Reviewing Opinion Testimony

Counsel should not assume that an expert is prepared to testify at a deposition. It is counsel's responsibility to ensure that the expert is prepared on the issues that are critical to the case. No matter how experienced the expert, a meeting several days in advance of the deposition is essential. Make sure the expert understands the fundamental problems that are to be resolved by his or her testimony. Since many experts do not speak in public frequently, insist that the expert articulate opinions in advance of the deposition, as well as the basis for the opinions.

Prepare practice questions to ask the expert on aspects of the expert opinion which may be troublesome and also help the expert to prepare some suggested responses which are consistent with the expert's opinion.

[2] Reviewing the Expert's Report Before Deposition

The expert report exchanged pursuant to Rule 26(a)(2) will often serve as a chief basis of inquiry by the adversary, it is therefore critical to review the report and prepare testimony regarding:

- Opinions to be offered and the basis for the opinions
- The facts or data considered by the witness in forming the opinions
- The exhibits used to support or summarize opinions
- Qualifications as an expert
- All publications, even those written more than ten years ago
- Participation in other litigation, even more than four years ago
- Compensation for testimony offered

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsHelpfulness

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
C. Deposing Expert Witnesses

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.37

§ 23.37 Preparing To Take An Expert Deposition

[1] Learning the Expert's Field of Expertise

The first step in preparing for the expert's deposition is to learn the field of expertise thoroughly. A complete command of all facts of the case is essential in order to place the expert's opinions in context. Prior to an expert deposition, thoroughly review the expert's report and any information gathered through informal investigation.

Counsel should always use their own expert to help prepare for an expert deposition. Moreover, unless costs prohibit it, counsel's expert should attend a deposition of the opposing expert. It also helps to review physical evidence with an expert as part of the preparation. If the case involves the scene of an accident, a construction site, or other physical location where the operative facts occurred, visiting the scene with an expert will give a feel for the events that transpired and will assist greatly in questioning the opponent's expert by providing a basis of personal knowledge from which to create questions.

[2] Inquiring About the Expert's Qualifications

It is important to determine the level of expertise of opposing experts. Detailed inquiry about the expert's qualifications will assist in evaluating the expertise of the witness and assist on the determination of whether to attack the expert's qualifications. Thoroughly probe the witness's educational and employment background and determine the extent of the witness' involvement in the industry involved in the litigation. Many experts appear qualified on paper, but have no direct knowledge of an area peculiar to a contested issue or no direct experience in that area. Thorough inquiry also may bring forth incomplete, inaccurate, or questionable disclosures under Rule 26(a)(2).

[3] Inquiring About the Expert's Retention

Generally it is helpful to determine when the expert was retained. If an expert is retained shortly before deposition and trial, you may later be able to create the impression that his or her testimony was bought or that the expert hastily rushed into forming opinions. Determine whether the expert was given an "assignment" to reach a certain opinion requested by the attorney. Ascertain exactly when the expert first formed the opinion rendered at the deposition. Sometimes experts will give an opinion during their first contact with an attorney. That opinion obviously will be based upon information provided by the attorney and will be offered before the expert has formally reviewed the documents or other materials in the case.

Also find out precisely how the expert was retained and whether or not the expert has been retained by opposing counsel or the opposing party in the past or is a friend of the opponent. If the expert has been retained in the past, it can be useful to delve into the specific circumstances of that retainer. If the expert is a close friend of the party retaining him, or of that party's counsel, the expert's credibility and objectivity will be in doubt.

Finally, while the Rule 26(a)(2) report will provide information regarding "compensation to be paid for the study and testimony," it does not require more. Thus, it is necessary to discover the expert's rate of compensation and the number of hours spent on the project. An expert who charges $10,000 a day or one who has charged $5,000 for one hour of work generally will not be well received by the jury. Also determine whether the expert has been paid anything to date or whether it is understood that he will be paid at the conclusion of the case.

[4] Inquiring About Testimony in Other Cases

Rule 26(a)(2) requires the disclosure all prior deposition or trial testimony going back four years. Many cases, however, have longer histories; and many experts have longer histories as well. Since many experts keep a record of the cases in which they have offered testimony and sometimes include prior litigation experience in their curriculum vitae, this is still an essential area of inquiry during an expert deposition.

[5] Inquiring About Publications

Rule 26(a)(2) limits publications disclosed to the preceding ten years. Thus, this area should also be explored both before and at an expert deposition. The problem with questioning an expert about publications during a deposition is essentially the same problem of faulty recall that plagues deposition questions regarding testimony in other cases. The best approach is to handle this area of inquiry by a prior internal investigation of the expert. It is better practice to review the publications in advance of the deposition and in light of the anticipated testimony as set forth in the expert's report to see if there are inconsistencies between the anticipated testimony and the content of the publications.

[6] Inquiring About Facts and Materials Given to the Expert

Rule 26(b)(4) establishes counsel's right to facts or data considered by the witness in forming the opinions. Obtain all of the facts given to, and considered by, the expert in rendering his or her opinion. Obviously, an understanding of the factual predicate of the opinion is necessary to formulate an attack on the opinion. As a part of gathering these facts, ask the expert to identify all documents that were relied upon to form the opinion being offered.

Also ask the expert for the names of each and every person that the expert has talked to regarding the facts of the case. Many times experts will personally interview witnesses and will not reduce their statements to writing. Elicit from the expert the factual data obtained from each person interviewed and the expert's assumptions based on that data. After the deposition, contact or, if possible, depose those persons and determine whether or not the expert has accurately ascertained their knowledge of the facts. Also determine whether such persons know of a fact that the expert failed to discover or disclosed facts that the expert chose to ignore.

[7] Inquiring About Exhibits in Support of Opinions

As part of the effort to determine the factual basis of the expert's opinion, interrogate the expert regarding all exhibits attached to the expert's report and establish a record of the expert's reliance on any documents used in preparation of the report.

[8] Inquiring About Reliance on Legal Standards

Find out whether the expert considered or relied upon any codes, statutes, rules or regulations in forming the offered opinion. Keep in mind that out-of-state experts are probably not familiar with all state or local regulations which govern a given industry or discipline. Such regulations can provide fertile ground for impeachment if the out-of-state expert has rendered opinions without considering them.

[9] Inquiring About the Field of Expertise

Test the general competence and knowledge of the expert by inquiring into generally accepted principles in the art or science which will be the subject of the expert's trial testimony. It may be possible to develop favorable admissions or grounds for impeachment. Certainly, a jury will be suspicious of an expert who was unable to explain a general principle at deposition but later at trial provides an erudite explanation.

[10] Inquiring About the Expert's Opinions

Explore fully each opinion of the expert. It is often useful strategy to ask the expert to list all his or her opinions in the case at the very beginning of the deposition. This may take the expert off guard and commit him to candid opinions before he has the opportunity to sense possible points of criticism. Also, understanding the complete spectrum of the expert's opinions at the outset of the deposition will provide context for other areas of inquiry. At the end of the deposition counsel should have a complete list of all opinions and the factual basis for each opinion. If, at trial, the expert attempts to offer new or additional opinions, a basis either to exclude the new opinions or to impeach the witness will have been established. n1

Moreover, in developing the expert's opinions, ask for definitions whenever the expert uses a technical term, even if the term or concept appears understandable. Impeachment at trial loses its effect if the expert's meaning and use of the term differed from counsel's or his or her expert's understanding of the term.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsCredibilityImpeachmentEvidenceTestimonyExpertsHelpfulness

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Raymond v. Raymond Corp., 938 F.2d 1518 (1st Cir. 1991) (an expert was not allowed to testify as to an opinion which was never expressed either in his deposition or official report).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
C. Deposing Expert Witnesses

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.38

§ 23.38 Paying Expert Fees in Context of Discovery

[1] Compensating the Expert to Obtain Discovery

No compensation must be paid for preparation of the mandatory expert report under Rule 26(a)(2). However, to accommodate a party's need to have discovery of experts in advance of trial and to rectify any unfairness to the party retaining the expert, Rule 26(b)(4)(E) n1 empowers the court to require the party seeking expert discovery to pay a fair portion of the fees and expenses of the expert. When an expert witness's deposition is noticed, counsel can request that his or her adversary pay all fees which the expert will charge as a result of the deposition. This includes payments for travel time, travel expenses, and time the expert expended in preparing for, giving, and reviewing the deposition. n1.1 Although not all of the expenses are automatically recoverable, parties usually reach reciprocal agreement about the payments made to experts. n2

Even if a deposition is limited solely to an expert's qualifications, and does not seek the expert's opinions in the case, a fee must be paid. n3 When deposing an expert on facts observed as an actor, and not on material prepared in anticipation of litigation, the party seeking discovery does not have to pay any fees to the expert. n4

The rule requiring the party seeking discovery to pay the expert a reasonable fee does not require that the expert's fee be paid in advance of the deposition. One court found that the plaintiff's attorney was wrong in unilaterally terminating the deposition of plaintiff's expert because defendants' counsel did not tender witness fees at the start of the deposition. n4.1

[2] Evaluating Experts' Fees

In determining the reasonableness of a requested fee to compensate an expert for the time spent responding to discovery demands, the court considers: n5

- The expert's area of expertise
- The education and training required to provide the expertise that is sought
- The prevailing rates for other comparably respected experts
- The nature, quality and complexity of the information provided by the expert

- The cost of living in the applicable geographic area

- Any other factor that may assist the court in achieving the proper balance of interests implicated by Rule 26

Courts also consider the fee actually charged to the party who retained the expert, and the fees traditionally charged by the expert on related matters. n6 An agreement among counsel as to the appropriate fee is not controlling, unless that fee is approved by the court. n7 A flat fee as compensation for an expert witness deposition is generally considered to be improper because there should be some reasonable relationship between the services rendered and the remuneration to which an expert is entitled. n7.1

[3] Seeking Fees Within Reasonable Time

The Rules do not contain a time limit within which the court order for the expert's fees must be sought. The courts, however, have held that if the fee application is not brought within a reasonable time, the court does not abuse its discretion in rejecting the application. n8

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Although expert discovery beyond the mandatory disclosure is permissible under a Rule 26(b) without a motion, Rule 26(b)(4)(E) still requires compensation. Griffith v. Mt. Carmel Medical Center, 157 F.R.D. 499 (D. Kan. 1994) .

(n2)Footnote 1.1. See Fisher-Price, Inc. v. Safety 1st, Inc., 217 F.R.D. 329, 331 (D. Del. 2003) .

(n3)Footnote 2. For example, some courts have held preparation time recoverable, Hose v. Chicago & Northern Western Transp. Co., 154 F.R.D. 222 (S.D. Iowa 1994) ; Carter-Wallace, Inc. v. Hartz Mountain Indus., 553 F. Supp. 45, 53 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) ; E.E.O.C. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 138 F.R.D. 523, 526 (N.D. Ill. 1991) , while others have held the opposite, Cotton v. Consolidation Coal Co., 457 F.2d 641, 646-47 (6th Cir. 1972) ; Rhee v. Witco Chem. Corp., 126 F.R.D. 45, 47-48 (N.D. Ill. 1989) .

(n4)Footnote 3. Keith v. Van Dorn Plastic Mach. Co., 86 F.R.D. 458 (E.D. Pa. 1980) .

(n5)Footnote 4. Congrove v. St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co., 77 F.R.D. 503 (W.D. Mo. 1978) . In Parsons v. General Motors Corp., 31 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 1186 (N.D. Ga. 1981) , the court denied a motion for the award of fees because all that the party seeking discovery acquired was information pertinent to the impeachment of the expert, not facts acquired or developed in anticipation of litigation. See also Water Rights v. Northern Colo. Water Conservancy Dist., 677 P.2d 320 (Colo. 1984) (treating physicians and other "actor or viewer" experts are not entitled to an expert witness fee under Rule 26(b)(4)).

(n6)Footnote 4.1. See Harris v. Costco Wholesale Corp., 226 F.R.D. 675, 676 (S.D. Cal. 2005) .

(n7)Footnote 5. See Mathis v. NYNEX, 165 F.R.D. 23, 24-25 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) .

(n8)Footnote 6. See Bowen v. Monahan, 163 F.R.D. 571, 573-574 (D. Neb. 1995) .

(n9)Footnote 7. See U.S. Energy Corp. v. NUKEM, Inc., 163 F.R.D. 344, 347 (D. Colo. 1995) .

(n10)Footnote 7.1. Massasoit v. Carter, 227 F.R.D. 264, 265 (M.D.N.C. 2005) ; Mannarino v. United States, 218 F.R.D. 372, 375 (E.D.N.Y. 2003) .

(n11)Footnote 8. See Ellis v. United Airlines, Inc., 73 F.3d 999, 1011 (10th Cir.) , cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1245 (1996) .

28 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
C. Deposing Expert Witnesses

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 23.39 through 23.99

[Reserved]

§§ 23.39[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 23 Discovery of Experts
C. Deposing Expert Witnesses

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide § 23.100

§ 23.100 Expert Witness Disclosure Statement Under Rule 26(a)(2)

[1] FORM

Expert Witness Disclosure Statement Under Rule 26(a)(2)

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

[Party designation and name of disclosing party] intends to call the following persons to testify as expert witnesses:

[Names]

[Attach a report that contains the following:

(1) a complete statement of all opinions the witness will express, including the basis and reasons for the opinions;

(2) the facts or data considered by the witness in forming the opinions;

(3) the witness's qualifications, including a list of all publications written in the last 10 years;

(4) the compensation for study and testimony paid to the witness; and

(5) a list of any other cases in which the witness has testified as an expert at trial or by deposition within the preceding four years.

For each witness, attach a list of exhibits that will be used as a summary or in support of the witness's opinions]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of expert witness disclosure statement pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2). The form must be accompanied by a report from each witness and a list of all exhibits that support or summarize the expert opinions.

[3] Required Expert Witness Disclosures

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2), unless otherwise stipulated or ordered by the court, the parties must provide the following to other parties at least 90 days before the trial date or the date the case is to be ready for trial: [see § 28.51[1]]:

- The identity of any expert witnesses who may be used at trial to present evidence under the following Rules:
  - Fed. R. Civ. P. 702 (allowing opinion evidence that will assist the trier of fact to determine a factual issue)
  - Fed. R. Civ. P. 703 (allowing expert opinion based on material provided before or during trial that may not be admissible)
  - Fed. R. Civ. P. 705 (allowing expert to state reason for an offered opinion without first disclosing the facts or data relied on to form the opinion)
- A written report prepared and signed by the witness

[4] Contents of Expert Witness's Report

The expert witness's report required under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2) must contain the following information:

- A complete statement of all opinions the expert will express and the expert's basis and reason for each opinion
- The facts or data considered by the witness in forming the opinions
- Any exhibits to be used as a summary of or in support of the witness's opinions
- The witness's qualifications, including a list of all publications written by the witness within the preceding 10 years
- The compensation to be paid for the study and testimony
- A list of any other cases in which the witness has testified as an expert at trial or by deposition within the preceding four years

Unless otherwise stipulated or ordered by the court, if the expert witness is not required to provide a written report, the expert disclosure must include both of the following under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(C):

- The subject matter on which the witness is expected to present evidence under Federal Rule of Evidence 702, 703, or 705
- A summary of the facts and opinions to which the witness is expected to testify

[5] Writing and Signature Requirements

Expert witness disclosures under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2) must be:

- Written [Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(4)]

- Signed [Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(4)] by at least one attorney of record in the attorney's individual name, with the attorney's address or, if unrepresented, by the party, with the party's address [Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)]

- Certified. The attorney's or party's signature certifies that to the best of the signer's knowledge, information, and belief, formed after a reasonable inquiry, the disclosure is complete and correct as of the time it is made [Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(g)(1)]

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsHelpfulness

30 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Appendix 23: Appendix to Chapter 23

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide Appendix 23:.syn

§ 23.syn Synopsis to Appendix 23: Appendix to Chapter 23

IMPLEMENTATION OF EXPERT DISCLOSURE IN UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Appendix 23: Appendix to Chapter 23

2-23 Federal Litigation Guide

IMPLEMENTATION OF EXPERT DISCLOSURE IN UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

District Court	Expert Disclosure Under Rule 26(a)(2)
Alabama-Middle District	26(a)(2)(A) & (B) in effect, 26(a)(2)(B) not in effect.
Alabama-Northern District	Yes
Alabama-Southern District	Yes
Alaska	Yes
Arizona	Yes
Arkansas-Eastern District	Only if ordered by the judge in the specific case or agreed to by the parties.

Arkansas-Western District	Only if ordered by the judge.
California-Central District	26(a)(2)(A) & (B) in effect, 26(a)(2)(C) not in effect.
California-Eastern District	26(a)(2)(A) & (C) in effect, 26(a)(2)(B) not in effect.
California-Northern District	Yes
California-Southern District	By specific court order only.
Colorado	Yes
Connecticut	No
Delaware	Yes
District of Columbia	Yes
Florida-Middle District	In effect for standard (track 2) cases but not in other cases unless ordered by the judge.

	Florida-Northern District	Yes
	Florida-Southern District	No
	Georgia-Middle District	Yes
	Georgia-Northern District	Yes
	Georgia-Southern District	Yes
	Guam	Yes
	Hawaii	Yes
	Idaho	In effect, except that when in conflict, local rules supersede federal rule.
	Illinois-Central District	Yes
	Illinois-Northern District	Yes
	Illinois-Southern District	Yes
	Indiana-Northern District	Yes
	Indiana-Southern District	Yes.

	Local rules allow variation by stipulation.
Iowa-Northern District	26(a)(2)(A) is in effect, but controlled by the Rule 16(b) scheduling order and the Rule 26(f) discovery plan. 26(a)(2)(B) & (C)-No.
Iowa-Southern District	26(a)(2)(A) is in effect, but controlled by the Rule 16(b) scheduling order and the Rule 26(f) discovery plan. 26(a)(2)(B) & (C) are-No.
Kansas	Yes

	Kentucky-Eastern District	Yes
	Kentucky-Western District	Yes
	Louisiana-Eastern District	Yes. The scope and timing of disclosures are directed by the court pursuant to the CJRA Plan.
	Louisiana-Middle District	Yes. The scope and timing of disclosures are directed by the court pursuant to the CJRA Plan.
	Louisiana-Western District	Yes
	Maine	Yes
	Maryland	No, except for a limited number of case types.
	Massachusetts	Yes

	Michigan-Eastern District	Yes
	Michigan-Western District	Yes, as directed by the case management order in the specific case.
	Minnesota	Yes, subject to application by the judge in the specific case.
	Mississippi-Northern District	Yes
	Mississippi-Southern District	Yes
	Missouri-Eastern District	Yes
	Missouri-Western District	Yes
	Mississippi-Southern District	Yes
	Montana	Yes
	Nebraska	Yes
	Nevada	26(a)(2)(A) & (C) are in effect, 26(a)(2)(

		B) is not in effect.
	New Hampshire	No
	New Jersey	Yes
	New Mexico	Yes
	New York-Eastern District	CJRA Plan takes precedence over federal rule.
	New York-Northern District	No
	New York-Southern District	Yes
	New York-Western District	Yes
	North Carolina-Eastern District	Yes
	North Carolina-Middle District	Yes
	North Carolina-Western District	Yes
	North Dakota	Yes
	NMI	Yes
	Ohio-Northern District	Yes
	Ohio-Southern District	Yes

Oklahoma-Eastern District	No
Oklahoma-Northern District	Yes
Oklahoma-Western District	Yes
Oregon	Yes
Pennsylvania-Eastern District	No
Pennsylvania-Middle District	Yes
Pennsylvania-Western District	Yes
Puerto Rico	No
Rhode Island	No
South Carolina	Controlled by local rule.
South Dakota	Yes
Tennessee-Eastern District	Yes
Tennessee-Middle District	Yes
Tennessee-Western District	Yes
Texas-Eastern District	CJRA Plan controls where there is a conflict with the federal rules.

	Texas-Northern District	Application at the discretion of each judge.
	Texas-South District	Yes
	Texas-Western District	No
	Utah	Yes
	Vermont	No
	Virgin Islands	Yes
	Virginia-Eastern District	No
	Virginia-Western District	Yes
	Washington-Eastern District	Yes
	Washington-Western District	26(a)(2)(A) & (C) are in effect, 26(a)(2)(B) is not in effect, but the individual judge may order it in the specific case.

West Virginia-Northern District	No, pending adoption of new local rules.
West Virginia-Southern District	Yes
Wisconsin-Eastern District	No
Wisconsin-Western District	Yes
Wyoming	Yes

32 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide 24.syn

§ 24.syn Synopsis to Chapter 24: Discovery of Computer-Based Information *

§ 24.01 Establishing an Effective Discovery-Management Strategy
[1] Addressing Electronic Information Issues Early in the Litigation
[2] Understanding Procedural Requirements Under Federal Rules

§ 24.02 Evaluating Differences Between Hard Copy and Electronic Records
[1] Embedded Data
[2] Hidden Data and Other Markers
[3] Residual-Deleted Data

§ 24.03 Locating Electronic Files For Discovery Purposes
[1] Accessing Electronic Information
[2] Files on Individual Computers and Networks May Be Subject to Discovery
[3] Files on Back-Up Systems May Be Subject to Discovery
[4] Archived Files May Be Subject to Discovery
[5] Files on Computer Storage Media May Be Subject to Discovery
[6] Files on Retired Computer Systems May Be Subject to Discovery

§ 24.04 Managing Computer-Based Information For Litigation Purposes
[1] Preserving Computer-Based Documents as Potential Evidence
[2] Notifying Party to Stop Records Destruction in Accordance With Records Disposition Policy
[3] Administering Electronic Records During Ongoing Litigation
[4] Destroying Documents as Part of Back-Up System Procedure

§ 24.05 Considering E-mail Messages in the Context of Discovery
[1] Retrieving E-mail Messages May Involve Significant Cost and Burden
[2] Evaluating Employee Privacy Rights with Regard to Employer E-mail Systems

§§ 24.06 through 24.10 [Reserved]

§ 24.11 General Discovery Rules Govern Discovery of Computer-Based Information

§ 24.12 Considering Initial Disclosure Obligations Under Rule 26(a)(1)

§ 24.13 Disclosing Information Regarding Experts Under Rule 26(a)(2)

§ 24.14 Using Interrogatories and Depositions to Determine Extent of Discoverable Computer-Based Information

§ 24.15 Requesting Expedited Discovery to Preserve Electronic Information

§ 24.16 Including Electronic Information Issues in Discovery Plan

§ 24.17 Considering Electronic Information at Rule 16 Pretrial Conference

§ 24.18 Utilizing Ex Parte Seizure to Preserve Electronic Information

§§ 24.19 through 24.20 [Reserved]

§ 24.21 Requested Matter Must Be Relevant to Claim or Defense of Party

§ 24.22 Evaluating Discovery Limits Under Rule 26(b)

§ 24.23 Protecting Privileged Matter from Discovery

§ 24.24 Considering Effect of Disclosure of Privileged Computer-Based Information
[1] Evidence Rule 502 Governs the Scope of Waiver and the Effect of Inadvertent Disclosure of Privileged Material
[2] Considering Scope of Waiver for Disclosure Made in a Federal Proceeding
[3] Considering the Consequences of Inadvertent Disclosure
[4] Considering Disclosures Made in State Proceedings
[5] Controlling Effect of Federal Court Order
[6] Controlling Effect of Party Agreement

§ 24.25 Invoking the Attorney-Client Privilege to Protect E-mail Content

§ 24.26 Protecting Electronic Draft Reports and Communications of Expert Witnesses

§§ 24.27 through 24.30 [Reserved]

§ 24.31 Producing Reasonably Accessible Electronically Stored Information

§ 24.32 Balancing Costs and Potential Benefits of Discovery

§ 24.33 Shifting Cost of Production Based on Undue Burden or Expense
[1] Seeking Cost-Shifting Order
[2] Considering Factors Relevant to Cost-Shifting
[3] Timing of Request for Cost-Shifting Order

§ 24.34 Assessing Likely Benefits of Requests for Electronically Stored Information
[1] Seeking Electronically Stored Information with Independent Evidentiary Significance
[2] Seeking Matter Which Exists Only in Electronic Form
[3] Seeking Electronically Stored Information to Determine Authenticity of Document
[4] Seeking Electronically Stored Information to Verify or Impeach Expert Testimony
[5] Seeking Electronically Stored Information Developed by Non-Testifying Expert

§ 24.35 Assessing Degree of Intrusiveness of Discovery Request
[1] Seeking Electronic Information from Individual Computer-Based Record
[2] Seeking Electronic Information from Single Computer Hard Drive

[3] Seeking Electronic Information from Multiple Computers
[4] Seeking Electronic Information from Back-Up Systems

§ 24.36 Considering Cost of Producing Documents in Requested Format

§ 24.37 Creating Special Program to Retrieve Requested Electronically Stored Information May Be Required
[1] Producing Electronically Stored Information in "Reasonably Usable Form" May Require Software Development
[2] Applying Rule 26(b)(2) Proportionality Analysis to Creation of Software Programs

§ 24.38 Weighing Burden and Expense of On-Site Computer Inspection
[1] Conducting On-Site Computer Inspection on Party's Consent
[2] Conducting On-Site Computer Inspection Over Party's Objections
[3] Accessing Deleted Files Through Mirror-Imaging

§ 24.39 Protecting Against Disclosure of Privileged or Confidential Documents During On-Site Inspection

§§ 24.40 through 24.50 [Reserved]

§ 24.51 CHECKLIST: Requesting Production of Electronically Stored Information

§ 24.52 CHECKLIST: Responding to Electronic Discovery Requests

§§ 24.53 through 24.60 [Reserved]

§ 24.61 Failing to Produce Computer-Based Information May Result in Sanctions

§ 24.62 Destroying Computer-Based Evidence May Result in Sanctions

§ 24.63 Destroying Records Per Routine Policy Not Ordinarily Sanctionable Conduct

§ 24.64 Destroying Records Before Commencement of Litigation Per Reasonable Policy Not Sanctionable

§ 24.65 Destroying Records After Commencement of Litigation Can Lead to Sanctions

33 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter addresses the discovery of computer-based and other electronic records. Although the discovery of computer-based information raises many of the same problems experienced in traditional discovery of hard copy documents, it also raises problems peculiar to electronically stored information. Not only can the volume of electronically stored information far exceed the information contained in traditional hard copy files, but electronically stored information is more likely to be duplicated, more easily manipulated, contains embedded data, and may be restored if deleted.

The chapter provides coverage of the following topics:

- Special characteristics of electronically stored information in the context of traditional discovery
- Managing and preserving electronically stored information for litigation purposes
- Rules and procedures governing discovery of electronically stored information
- General limits on discovery of electronically stored information
- Weighing costs and burdens of requests for production of electronically stored information against likely benefits
- Sanctions for failure to produce discoverable electronic records

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
A. Evaluating Special Characteristics of Electronic Information in the Context of Discovery

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.01

§ 24.01 Establishing an Effective Discovery-Management Strategy

[1] Addressing Electronic Information Issues Early in the Litigation

The information in a computer system is constantly changing, with data added and erased daily. Early recognition that computer-based information will likely be at issue in litigation is key to an effective discovery-management strategy. The Manual for Complex Litigation encourages parties to address the discovery of computer-based information early in the case: "[a]ny discovery plan must address the relevant issues, such as the search for, location, retrieval, form of production and inspection, preservation, and use at trial of information stored in mainframe or personal computers or accessible 'online.' " n1

In general, the sooner information about the parties' respective computer systems is exchanged in the litigation the better. For example in commercial litigation involving electronic information, the name and version of software applications, including custom applications, should be identified at the outset of the litigation. Other items that should be identified include any record-disposition policy, the frequency and nature of back-up systems and the media used to store backed-up data, and the names and e-mail addresses of key individuals familiar with pertinent computer systems. These items should be disclosed pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1) initial disclosures, and, if not disclosed initially, they should be requested. n2

Early identification of computer-based information is necessary to ensure that a party is aware of relevant evidence and the duty to preserve it. Recognition that computer-based information will be at issue is also necessary to notify a party to adjust or halt its records-disposition practices, including disposition of records in a back-up system.

After some preliminary exchange of information has been completed, more focused requests for relevant information should be obtained through interrogatories and document requests. At this stage, for example, the key persons who have knowledge of the facts at issue and the relevant computer system should be identified. n3

If a party has a reasonable concern that computer-based information may be imminently destroyed, the party may seek expedited discovery or a court order on preservation. As the parties obtain more information that may be relevant in the case, they should take steps to narrow the search of computer based records by limiting, for example, the search to a specific time period, computers of selected persons, and specific back-up systems.

[2] Understanding Procedural Requirements Under Federal Rules

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure now explicitly address the disclosure, discovery, and exchange of electronically stored information as follows:

- Rule 26(f). Parties required to confer on all discovery issues, including electronically stored information, at least 21 days prior to the scheduling conference n4

- Rule 26(a)(1)(B). Parties required to disclose electronically stored information as well as documents that it may use to support its claims or defenses n5

- Rule 26(b)(2). Responding party should produce electronically stored information that is relevant, not privileged, and reasonably accessible, subject to the Rule 26(b)(2)(C) limitations that apply to all discovery - the responding party must also identify, by category or type, the sources containing potentially responsive information that it is neither searching nor producing n6

- Rule 33(d). Allows a responding party to substitute access to documents or electronically stored information for an interrogatory answer only if the burden of deriving the answer will be substantially the same for either party n7

- Rule 34(b). Allows the requesting party to designate the form or forms in which it wants electronically stored information produced n8

- Rule 37(e). Absent exceptional circumstances, a court may not impose sanctions under the rules on a party for failing to provide electronically stored information lost as a result of the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system n9

- Rule 45. Electronically stored information may be sought by subpoena, and the subpoena may designate a form or forms for production of electronic data n10

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & InspectionCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSubpoenas

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Manual for Complex Litigation § 11.446 (Federal Judicial Center 4th ed. 2004).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Marker v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 125 F.R.D. 121, 125-126 (M.D.N.C. 1989) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1)(A)(ii).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2).

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 33(d).

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(1)(C).

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(e).

(n10)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 45.

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
A. Evaluating Special Characteristics of Electronic Information in the Context of Discovery

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.02

§ 24.02 Evaluating Differences Between Hard Copy and Electronic Records

[1] Embedded Data

Documents generated on computers often contain embedded data that is affixed to the document at its creation and subsequent modification. Embedded data that identifies the author, creation date, and modification dates remain on a computer's harddrive and may even be retrieved when the information is stored on a CD-ROM or other media. Therefore, a printout or hard copy version of a computer-generated document may not reflect all the information contained in the electronic version of the document. n1

Embedded data may assist in evaluating the authenticity of a document. For example, the relationship and arrangement of a particular file with other electronic files in a directory listing may offer helpful information regarding its authenticity. This data can be particularly useful when earlier drafts differ or the authenticity of an original document is disputed. n2

[2] Hidden Data and Other Markers

A hard copy printout does not reveal comments inserted in an electronic document. Selected passages, which are not visible when the document is printed, can be marked as hidden text in many software programs. This option provides an opportunity to insert comments in the margins or directly in the text of an electronic document that are visible only on a video monitor. Passages in the document may also be highlighted in color for emphasis. Hidden data may be relevant to a claim or defense and subject to discovery depending on the facts of the case.

[3] Residual-Deleted Data

Computer-based data and documents are constantly revised, edited, and ostensibly discarded by deletion. However, the deletion process does not permanently or completely destroy a computer file. Such residual data may be discoverable if relevant to the issues in a particular case. n3

Off-the-shelf software programs are available that can quickly retrieve "deleted" files that have not been overwritten. However, expert technicians are generally required to recover deleted computer files without compromising any information on the computer. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Armstrong v. Executive Office of the President, Office of Admin., 1 F.3d 1274, 1280 (D.C. Cir. 1993) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Chem. Indus., 167 F.R.D. 90, 112 (D. Colo. 1996) . For a complete discussion, see 7 Moore's Federal Practice, § 37A.03[1] (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Antioch Co. v. Scrapbook Borders, Inc., 210 F.R.D. 645, 652 (D. Minn. 2002) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Alexander v. FBI, 188 F.R.D. 111, 117 (D.D.C. 1998) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
A. Evaluating Special Characteristics of Electronic Information in the Context of Discovery

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.03

§ 24.03 Locating Electronic Files For Discovery Purposes

[1] Accessing Electronic Information

Electronically stored information generally can be searched and sorted in many ways. Documents that contain a specific word, name, or other item can be located quickly. However, not all electronic files are searchable. For example, an image of a document may or may not be searchable for particular text, depending on the attributes of the particular image file.

Although the search capabilities of electronic documents may eliminate some discovery burdens, others may be exacerbated. For example, the potentially greater number of electronic documents produced in discovery requires more attention to determine whether they may contain privileged matter, which may require time-consuming manual review. n1 Moreover, the rapid evolution of computer technology results in the frequent replacement of software programs. Organizations often put a low priority on maintaining the ability to access data created using previous software. Thus, finding such data can be difficult and expensive.

[2] Files on Individual Computers and Networks May Be Subject to Discovery

A computer network connects personal computers and allows users to share andmodify information contained within the system. Information and data contained in a shared network may be subject to discovery.

Network users typically have the ability to save files on their desktop or elsewhere on their computers to avoid linking those files to the network, and individual computers will contain data subject to discovery even in the networked environment. Increased telecommuting by employees also multiplies the probability that work-related information is generated or stored on laptop or home personal computers, and those computers may therefore be subject to discovery even in the context of a business dispute. n2

[3] Files on Back-Up Systems May Be Subject to Discovery

Businesses and other organizations routinely establish file-backup and other records-retention policies, which must be determined and considered when requesting or responding to requests for computer-based information. Although practices vary, a computer's active data files can be copied regularly and sent to a separate file server. The back-up tapes usually include all word-processing files, spreadsheets, models, ande-mail messages and depending on the organization's rotational cycle, back-up records may be retained for several months or longer. In addition, many computer software applications include automatic back-up systems that make copies of documents at intervals determined by the user's preference.

[4] Archived Files May Be Subject to Discovery

Archived data is generally stored at locations apart from active files. This safeguard is designed to protect against loss due to a catastrophe. Many businesses and organizations have a comprehensive records retention and disposition policy that sets out procedures for archiving selected data as permanent records. In some industries and commerce, federal regulations require permanent archiving of certain records. Archived data may be contained in retired "legacy" computer systems, which may require more extensive and expensive searches. For a complete discussion, see 7 Moore's Federal Practice, § 37A.04[5][e] (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

[5] Files on Computer Storage Media May Be Subject to Discovery

Data files can be stored in numerous media which may be subject to discovery, including magnetic tapes, a computer's internal hard drive, or on diskettes, zip drives, CD-Roms, or other portable storage devices.

[6] Files on Retired Computer Systems May Be Subject to Discovery

Often information contained in an earlier computer system, referred to as "legacy data," is incompatible with the newer generations of computer systems and cannot be easily transferred to existing databases. Such information is not readable by operational computers but must be retrieved from older, retired models. Some organizations have retired several generations of computer systems, which exacerbates these problems. In addition, even locating all retired computer systems can be difficult, particularly when no formal retirement policy has been followed.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & InspectionCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Procter & Gamble Co. v. Haugen, 179 F.R.D. 622, 632 (D. Utah 1998) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Simon Prop. Group, L.P. v. mySimon, Inc., 194 F.R.D. 639, 641 (S.D. Ind. 2000) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
A. Evaluating Special Characteristics of Electronic Information in the Context of Discovery

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.04

§ 24.04 Managing Computer-Based Information For Litigation Purposes

[1] Preserving Computer-Based Documents as Potential Evidence

A litigant has an affirmative duty to preserve potentially relevant evidence in its possession, custody, or control. n1 The scope of the duty to preserve is a broad one, commensurate with the breadth of permissible discovery. n2 However, even though a party is responsible for preserving relevant evidence, the party is not required to retain every document in its possession after a lawsuit commences. n3 Further, a party need not always preserve every routine draft and edit of a document. If the editing is performed in the ordinary course of business, a party need not take extraordinary steps to preserve each change. n4

The duty to preserve relevant evidence extends to electronically stored information, which may include databases, word-processing documents, spread-sheets, source codes, and e-mail messages contained in various computer storage media, including back-up systems that may be subject to a discovery request. n5

To avoid the risk of sanctions for destroying electronically stored evidence, it is critical to identify early in the course of litigation the scope of the computer-based evidence that needs to be preserved. While the requesting party should confine its requests for electronically stored information to that which is relevant, the responding party should take measures to safeguard against the inadvertent destruction of relevant evidence, including backing up information and recovering residual-deleted files.

[2] Notifying Party to Stop Records Destruction in Accordance With Records Disposition Policy

It is advisable to notify the opposing party when a party contends that it may be necessary to adjust or stop its record-disposition practices in order to prevent the loss of potentially relevant evidence. Absent exceptional circumstances, a court may not impose sanctions on a party under the Federal Rules for failing to provide electronically stored information lost as a result of the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system. n6

The protection provided under Rule 37(e) applies only to sanctions under the Federal Rules, and it does not affect other sources of authority to impose sanctions or rules of professional responsibility. n7

[3] Administering Electronic Records During Ongoing Litigation

Large corporations involved in multiple lawsuits on an ongoing basis are in a quandary when administering a reasonable records disposition policy. Destruction ofcorporate records at any single point in time may involve evidence relevant to some ongoing litigation. The sanctions imposed on parties for destruction of relevant evidence can be severe, including mistrial or an adverse inference instruction, n8 although some defenses, such as the opposing party's failure to notify the party to stop destroying records, may mitigate the severity of potential sanctions. The most prudent course is to halt all destruction or, more sensibly, to provide some alternative means of preserving the data by transferring it to another storage medium whenever litigation is imminent or ongoing. n9

[4] Destroying Documents as Part of Back-Up System Procedure

Many organizations routinely back-up their computer-based data, often on large magnetic tape reels that are reused on a rotational basis every other month or so. When tapes are reused, earlier backed-up data is overwritten and replaced with newer back-up data. A party has the duty to ensure that relevant electronic evidence contained in back-up tapes is not destroyed whenever litigation is imminent or ongoing. The routine recycling of magnetic tapes that may contain relevant evidence should be immediately halted on commencement of litigation.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. *See Danis v. USN Communs., Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16900, at 4 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 20, 2000) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26; see also Herbert v. Lando, 441 U.S. 153, 177, 99 S. Ct. 1635, 60 L. Ed. 2d 115 (1979) .

(n3)Footnote 3. *See Danis v. USN Communs., Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16900, at 99 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 20, 2000) (citing Moore's Federal Practice).

(N4)Footnote 4. See McGuire v. Acufex Microsurgical, Inc., 175 F.R.D. 149, 156 (D. Mass. 1997) .

(n5)Footnote 5. *See New York State NOW v. Cuomo, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10520, at 3-4 (S.D.N.Y. July 13, 1998) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(e).

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(e) Committee Note (2006).

(n8)Footnote 8. Residential Funding Corp. v. DeGeorge Fin. Corp., 306 F.3d 99, 101 (2d Cir. 2002) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Smith v. Texaco, 951 F. Supp. 109, 112 (E.D. Tex. 1997) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
A. Evaluating Special Characteristics of Electronic Information in the Context of Discovery

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.05

§ 24.05 Considering E-mail Messages in the Context of Discovery

[1] Retrieving E-mail Messages May Involve Significant Cost and Burden

E-mail correspondence, if otherwise relevant, is subject to discovery. n1 Because of the unique nature of e-mail, the cost and burden in retrieving e-mail messages, particularly from back-up systems, can be substantial. n2 If a request for production is challenged and cannot be resolved between the parties, the court must determine whether the costs and burdens in retrieving e-mails from a back-up system outweigh the likely benefits. n3

A party need not provide discovery of electronically stored information from sources that the party identifies as not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or cost. On motion to compel discovery or for a protective order, the party from whom discovery is sought must show that the information is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or cost. If that showing is made, the court may nonetheless order discovery from such sources if the requesting party shows good cause, considering the limitations of Rule 26(b)(2)(C). The court may specify conditions for the discovery. n4

Once a party has shown that a source of electronically stored information is not reasonably accessible, the requesting party may still obtain discovery by showing good cause, considering the limitations of Rule 26(b)(2)(C) that balance the costs and potential benefits of discovery. The decision whether to require a responding party to search for and produce information that is not reasonably accessible depends not only on the burdens and costs of doing so, but also on whether those burdens and costs can be justified in the circumstances of the case. n5

[2] Evaluating Employee Privacy Rights with Regard to Employer E-mail Systems

Employees' e-mail messages that are relevant to the claims or defenses of a party are routinely requested as part of discovery. Although e-mail messages may contain personal and private matters about an employee, they must be produced, if otherwise discoverable, in response to a Rule 34 motion. n6 However, on a satisfactory showing, a court may issue a protective order to limit disclosure. n7

Although an e-mail message or personal computer file may contain private information that was produced or transmitted under a mistaken belief that it would remain private, the general rule is that an employee has no reasonable privacy expectation in an e-mail communication sent over the employer's e-mail system. n8

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective OrdersCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue BurdensComputer & Internet LawPrivacy & SecurityCompany Communications

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Williams v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., 226 F.R.D. 144, 146 (D. Mass. 2005) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Linnen v. A.H. Robins Co., (June 15, 1999) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Playboy Enters. v. Welles, 60 F. Supp. 2d 1050, 1054 (S.D. Cal. 1999) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(B).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2) Committee Note (2006).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Metropolitan Opera Ass'n v. Local 100, Hotel Employees &. Rest. Employees Int'l Union, 212 F.R.D. 178, 222 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Smyth v. Pillsbury Co., 914 F. Supp. 97, 101 (E.D. Pa. 1996) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
A. Evaluating Special Characteristics of Electronic Information in the Context of Discovery

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 24.06 through 24.10

[Reserved]

§§ 24.06[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
B. Rules and Procedures Governing Discovery of Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.11

§ 24.11 General Discovery Rules Govern Discovery of Computer-Based Information

The general rules of discovery under Federal Rules 26 through 37 apply to electronically stored information. The following rules make specific mention of electronically stored information:

- Rule 26(a)(1)(A). Disclosure of electronically stored information n1
- Rule 26(b)(2). Responding party should produce electronically stored information that is relevant, not privileged, and reasonably accessible n2
- Rule 26(f). Discovery issues pertaining to electronically stored information to be conferred upon 21 days prior to the scheduling conference n3
- Rule 33(d). Allowing access to electronically stored information in lieu of an interrogatory answer n4
- Rule 34(b). Requesting party may designate the form in which it wants electronically stored information produced n5
- Rule 37(e). No sanctions for failing to provide electronically stored information lost as a result of the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system n6
- Rule 45. Seeking electronically stored information by subpoena n7

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & Inspection

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1)(A)(ii).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 33(d).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(1)(C).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(e).

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 45.

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
B. Rules and Procedures Governing Discovery of Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.12

§ 24.12 Considering Initial Disclosure Obligations Under Rule 26(a)(1)

As part of a party's initial disclosure duties, Rule 26(a)(1) requires the party to provide to other parties a copy of, or a description by category and location of, all documents, electornically stored information, and tangible things that are in the possession, custody, or control of that party and that the disclosing party may use to support its claims or defenses, unless solely for impeachment. n1 This requirement applies in all cases, except for categories of cases enumerated in the rule and cases excepted by a court order or by party stipulation. n2 If a party fails to disclose the information supporting its claims or defenses, that information may not be used as evidence at a trial or hearing. n3

When relevant, the disclosing party should identify the nature of its computer system--including back-up system, network system, and e-mail system--as well as any software applications used to operate those systems. However, the disclosing party should not be required to attempt to search back-up systems or to retrieve deleted files in an exhaustive effort to locate all potentially relevant evidence as part of this initial disclosure obligation. Further, a party should not be held liable for sanctions or other penalties for failing to disclose this evidence as part of its initial disclosure obligation, even when that evidence is subsequently used in the litigation. The difficulty in retrieving this information provides "substantial justification" to excuse such an exhaustive search effort. n4

If a party fails to disclose relevant matter under the initial disclosure requirement, the opposing party may first serve a discovery request and, if not responded to, file a motion to compel disclosure under Rule 37(a)(3). n5 Before filing a motion to compel disclosure, a party must attempt to resolve the dispute with the other party. This is another good opportunity to identify relevant computer-based information and the nature of the medium where it is stored. A proffer showing the relevance and need of the requested material should accompany the motion.

For complete discussion of initial disclosure, see Ch. 10, Planning and Preparation for Discovery.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMotions to CompelCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1)(A)(ii).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.13

§ 24.13 Disclosing Information Regarding Experts Under Rule 26(a)(2)

A party must disclose in a written statement the "basis and reasons" and "the facts or data" relied on by a witness retained or specially employed to provide expert testimony at trial. n1 The disclosures must be made at least 90 days before trial or earlier if otherwise ordered by the court. n2 The case law is unsettled whether communications to a testifying expert from the attorney involving "opinion" work product are subject to disclosure or protected under the privilege-immunity doctrine when the expert considered computer-based information in forming an opinion, including information contained in a computerized attorney litigation support system. n3

Information used by consulting, non-testifying experts is usually not discoverable, unless "exceptional circumstances" are shown under Rule 26(b)(4). n4 However,information furnished by a non-testifying, consulting expert that has been "considered" by a testifying expert in forming opinions must be disclosed in the expert's written report and is discoverable. n5 The party resisting discovery has the burden to show that its expert has not "considered" information furnished to the expert in forming his or her opinions. n6

Effective December 1, 2010, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect drafts of any expert report or disclosure required under Rule 26(a)(2), regardless of the form in which the draft is recorded. n7

Additionally, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect communications between the party's attorney and any expert witness required to provide a report under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), regardless of the form of the communications, except to the extent that the communications do any of the following: n8

- Relate to compensation for the expert's study or testimony
- Identify facts or data that the party's attorney provided and that the expert considered in forming the opinions to be expressed
- Identify assumptions that the party's attorney provided and that the expert relied on in forming the opinions to be expressed

For further discussion of expert testimony disclosure, see Ch. 10, Planning and Preparation for Discovery; and Ch. 23, Discovery of Experts.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsExpert Witness DiscoveryCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersWork ProductGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2); see Hoffman v. United Telecomms., Inc., 117 F.R.D. 436, 439 (D. Kan. 1987) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(D).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Musselman v. Phillips, 176 F.R.D. 194, 197-199 (D. Md. 1997) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Trigon Ins. Co. v. United States, 204 F.R.D. 277, 282-283 (E.D. Va. 2001) .

(n6)Footnote 6. *See United States Fidelity & Guar. Co. v. Braspetro Oil Servs. Co., No. 97 Civ. 6124, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111, at 29 (S.D.N.Y., Jan. 4, 2002) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(B).

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(C).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

§ 24.14 Using Interrogatories and Depositions to Determine Extent of Discoverable Computer-Based Information

Interrogatories may be useful in determining the extent of discoverable electronic information in a case. n1 For example, an interrogatory can be used to identify a responding party's computer network specialist and any records-retention policy. n2

A requesting party must specify the information to be discovered sufficiently to allow the responding party to locate and identify the sought-after records. n3 Once computer-based information is identified, depositions of the responsible persons can lead to information that ascertains the potential pool of computers and computer systems that may eventually be examined, as well as the likelihood that time-consuming and expensive recovery of deleted files or retrieval of documents from a back-up system will be pursued. An interrogatory may also be used to request further analysis of the responding party's computer records or for production of records when a party needs to undertake its own analysis of computer data. n4

Where the answer to an interrogatory may be derived or ascertained from the business records, including electronically stored information, of the party upon whom the interrogatory has been served or from an examination, audit or inspection of such business records, including a compilation, abstract or summary thereof, and the burden of deriving or ascertaining the answer is substantially the same for the party serving the interrogatory as for the party served, it is a sufficient answer to such interrogatory to specify the records from which the answer may be derived or ascertained and to afford to the party serving the interrogatory reasonable opportunity to examine, audit or inspect such records and to make copies, compilations, abstracts, or summaries. n5 A specification shall be in sufficient detail to permit the interrogating party to locate and to identify, as readily as can the party served, the records from which the answer may be ascertained. n6

Rule 33(d) allows a responding party to substitute access to electronically stored information for an interrogatory answer only if the burden of deriving the answer will be substantially the same for either party. Under those circumstances, the responding party must do each of the following: n7

- Specify the records that must be reviewed, in sufficient detail to enable the interrogating party to locate and identify them as readily as the responding party could

- Give the interrogating party a reasonable opportunity to examine and audit the records and to make copies, compilations, abstracts, or summaries

For further discussion of the use and scope of interrogatories, see Ch. 12, Interrogatories.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsInterrogatoriesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsInterrogatoriesUseCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral Depositions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. *See United States v. Personal Computer Ctr., Inc., No. 90-2220-S, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16131, at *2-3 (D. Kan. Oct. 29, 1991) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Laufman v. Oakley Bldg. & Loan Co., 72 F.R.D. 116, 123 (S.D. Ohio 1976) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 33(d).

(n4)Footnote 4. International Ass'n of Machinists v. United Aircraft Corp., 220 F. Supp. 19, 20-21 (D. Conn.1963) , aff'd on other grounds, 337 F.2d 5 (2d Cir. 1964) (responding party required to provide analysis of computer records in lieu of dumping 120,000 pages of personnel records requiring analysis by requesting party).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 33(d).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 33(d).

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 33(d).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
B. Rules and Procedures Governing Discovery of Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.15

§ 24.15 Requesting Expedited Discovery to Preserve Electronic Information

Under ordinary circumstances, discovery is deferred until the Rule 26(f) conference. n1 However, relevant electronic evidence may be lost at the onset of a case because a computer may be deleting relevant evidence as part of routine operations. To prevent inadvertent destruction of relevant evidence, a court may either enter a protective order under Rule 26(c) or, on a party's motion under Rule 26(d), order expedited discovery before the completion of Rule 26(a)(1) initial disclosure or a Rule 26(f) attorney conference. n2

A party may request expedited discovery when the party has reasonable grounds to suspect that the opposing party is destroying relevant electronic evidence that will cause irreparable harm. Under these circumstances, an on-site inspection of computers and mirror imaging of all electronic records can be particularly helpful to ensure preservation of relevant evidence. n3 Expedited discovery can also be helpful to accelerate the disposition of a case involving computer equipment that was seized in accordance with a temporary restraining order but that is essential to ongoing business operations. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceComputer-Generated Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d), (f).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1), (d), (f); Antioch Co. v. Scrapbook Borders, Inc., 210 F.R.D. 645, 651 (D. Minn. 2002) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Antioch Co. v. Scrapbook Borders, Inc., 210 F.R.D. 645, 652-653 (D. Minn. 2002) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See LEXIS-NEXIS v. Beer, 41 F. Supp. 2d 950, 953 (D. Minn. 1999) (expedited discovery ordered to make mirror-image copy of computer hard drive in trade secrets case); Religious Tech. Ctr. v. F.A.C.T.NET, Inc., 901 F. Supp. 1519, 1522-1523 (D. Colo. 1995) (expedited discovery ordered to quickly resolve copyright infringement case in which extensive computer equipment, computer hardware, and voluminous documents were seized).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
B. Rules and Procedures Governing Discovery of Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.16

§ 24.16 Including Electronic Information Issues in Discovery Plan

Except in categories of proceedings exempted from initial disclosure under Rule 26(a)(1)(E) or when otherwise ordered, the parties must, as soon as practicable and inany event at least 21 days before a scheduling conference is held or a scheduling order is due under Rule 16(b), confer to consider the nature and basis of their claims and defenses and the possibilities for a prompt settlement or resolution of the case, to make or arrange for the disclosures required by Rule 26(a)(1), to discuss any issues relating to preserving discoverable information, and to develop a proposed discovery plan that indicates the parties' views and proposals concerning: n1

- What changes should be made in the timing, form, or requirement for disclosures under Rule 26(a), including a statement as to when disclosures under Rule 26(a)(1) were made or will be made

- The subjects on which discovery may be needed, when discovery should be completed, and whether discovery should be conducted in phases or be limited to or focused upon particular issues

- Any issues relating to disclosure or discovery of electronically stored information, including the form or forms in which it should be produced

- Any issues relating to claims of privilege or of protection as trial-preparation material, including--if the parties agree on a procedure to assert such claims after production--whether to ask the court to include their agreement in an order

- What changes should be made in the limitations on discovery imposed under these rules or by local rule, and what other limitations should be imposed

- Any other orders that should be entered by the court under Rule 26(c) or under Rule 16(b) and (c)

Rule 26(f) directs the parties to discuss discovery of electronically stored information during their discovery-planning conference. Parties should consider and discuss whether electronic information is reasonably accessible to the party that has it, including the burden or cost of retrieving and reviewing the information. Rule 26(f)(3) explicitly directs the parties to discuss the form or forms in which electronically stored information might be produced. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresMandatory DisclosuresCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f)(3).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
B. Rules and Procedures Governing Discovery of Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.17

§ 24.17 Considering Electronic Information at Rule 16 Pretrial Conference

Except in categories of actions exempted by district court rule as inappropriate, the district judge, or a magistrate judge when authorized by district court rule, shall, after receiving the report from the parties under Rule 26(f) or after consulting with the attorneys for the parties and any unrepresented parties by a scheduling conference, telephone, mail, or other suitable means, enter a scheduling order that limits the time: n1

- To join other parties and to amend the pleadings
- To file motions
- To complete discovery, including electronic discovery

The scheduling order also may include: n2

- Modifications of the times for disclosures under Rules 26(a) and 26(e)(1) and of the extent of discovery to be permitted
- Provisions for disclosure or discovery of electronically stored information
- Any agreements the parties reach for asserting claims of privilege or of protection as trial preparation material after production
- The date or dates for conferences before trial, a final pretrial conference, and trial
- Any other matters appropriate in the circumstances of the case

If computer-based records are at issue, certain subjects should be considered at the pretrial conference, including the following potential matters:

- The types of computer records that may be required in discovery, including e-mail messages, word-processing files, and databases

- Whether back-up systems or archived data may be requested
- Whether expert testimony may be based on computerized data
- Whether the substantive allegations in the complaint directly involve computer records
- Whether the discovery process may involve a large mass of documents

A party at the Rule 16 conference may request a preservation order ensuring that electronic documents will not be destroyed or lost. If necessary, for example, a mirror image copy of specific computer hard drives may be requested to ensure that no information will be lost through inadvertent or deliberate erasure.

For further discussion of pretrial conferences, see Ch. 27, Pretrial Conferences.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
B. Rules and Procedures Governing Discovery of Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.18

§ 24.18 Utilizing Ex Parte Seizure to Preserve Electronic Information

Computer-based records may seemingly be deleted quickly and easily, although remnants may remain or evidence of the deletion may be retrieved from the affected computer. This characteristic of electronic evidence offers opportunities for surreptitious concealment or destruction and often serves as the basis for requesting an ex parte order seizing computer-based records. However, an ex parte temporary restrainingorder seizing a computer may be issued under Rule 65(b) only in exceptional circumstances. n1

A party must show compelling reasons that the extraordinary remedy of an ex parte seizure is essential to prevent imminent destruction of records, that the jeopardized information is essential to the case, and that no other less intrusive means are available to secure the information. n2 It is insufficient to allege that destruction of computerized evidence is easily accomplished or that the responding party is allegedly involved in a criminal activity and thus more likely to destroy evidence. n3

As a threshold matter, evidence that a party is "likely to take the opportunity" to conceal or destroy evidence must be shown. For example, a showing that a party has a history of concealing evidence may provide persuasive grounds for issuing an ex parte seizure order. n4

Often, means less drastic than an ex parte seizure order can effectively ensure that computer-based evidence is preserved if improper destruction is suspected. n5 However, if an ex parte seizure order will be issued, the court should impose adequate safeguards and limitations on its execution to prevent overbroad and intrusive searches. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesInjunctionsTemporary Restraining OrdersEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceComputer-Generated Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b); see also Religious Tech. Ctr. v. F.A.C.T.NET, Inc., 901 F. Supp. 1519, 1522 (D. Colo. 1995) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b); see also Religious Tech. Ctr. v. Netcom On-Line Communications Servs., 923 F. Supp. 1231, 1259-1264 (N.D. Cal. 1995) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Adobe Sys. v. South Sun Prods. Inc., 187 F.R.D. 636, 641 (S.D. Cal. 1999) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See, e.g., LEXIS-NEXIS v. Beer, 41 F. Supp. 2d 950, 953 (D. Minn. 1999) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Adobe Sys. v. South Sun Prods. Inc., 187 F.R.D. 636, 642-643 (S.D. Cal. 1999) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Interlink Int'l Fin. Servs., Inc. v. Block, 145 F. Supp. 2d 312, 314-315 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
B. Rules and Procedures Governing Discovery of Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 24.19 through 24.20

[Reserved]

§§ 24.19[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
C. Considering Limitations on Discovery of Computer-Based Information

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.21

§ 24.21 Requested Matter Must Be Relevant to Claim or Defense of Party

As a threshold issue, the requested matter must, in accordance with Rule 26(b)(1), be relevant to a pleaded claim or defense of a party. n1 The party resisting a discovery request ordinarily has the initial burden to show lack of relevance if the discovery appears relevant. n2 It is not sufficient to merely recite standard objections that the request is "overly broad, burdensome, oppressive and irrelevant." n3 On the other hand, if the relevancy of the discovery is not apparent, the burden to show its relevancy may be shifted to the party seeking discovery. n4 For example, although electronically stored information may include drafts and many iterations of a particular document, only the latest version may appear relevant and subject to production. A party requesting earlier iterations may bear the burden to show a specific reason for their production, such as to show fabrication of that document. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue Burdens

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1); see Procter & Gamble Co. v. Haugen, 179 F.R.D. 622, 632-633 (D. Utah 1998) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Mackey v. IBP, Inc., 167 F.R.D. 186, 193 (D. Kan. 1996) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Momah v. Albert Einstein Med. Ctr., 164 F.R.D. 412, 417 (E.D. Pa. 1996) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Alexander v. FBI, 194 F.R.D. 316, 325 (D.D.C. 2000) .

(n5)Footnote 5. *See Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. Hasbro, Inc., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16355, at *6-8 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 3, 1995) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
C. Considering Limitations on Discovery of Computer-Based Information

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.22

§ 24.22 Evaluating Discovery Limits Under Rule 26(b)

A party need not provide discovery of electronically stored information from sources that the party identifies as not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or cost. On motion to compel discovery or for a protective order, the party from whom discovery is sought must show that the information is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or cost. If that showing is made, the court may nonetheless order discovery from such sources if the requesting party shows good cause, considering the limitations of Rule 26(b)(2)(C). The court may specify conditions for the discovery. n1

The frequency or extent of use of the discovery methods otherwise permitted under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and by any local rule shall be limited by the court if it determines that any of the following conditions exist: n2

- The discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative, or isobtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive

- The party seeking discovery has had ample opportunity by discovery in theaction to obtain the information sought

- The burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit, taking into account the needs of the case, the amount in controversy, the parties' resources, the importance of the issues at stake in the litigation, and the importance of the proposed discovery in resolving the issues

The court may act upon its own initiative after reasonable notice or pursuant to a motion under Rule 26(c). n3

Once a responding party establishes that a source of electronically stored information is not reasonably accessible, the requesting party may still obtain discovery by showing good cause, considering the limitations of Rule 26(b)(2)(C) that balance the costs and potential benefits of discovery. The decision whether to require a responding party to search for and produce information that is not reasonably accessible depends not only on the burdens and costs of doing so, but also on whether those burdens and costs can be justified in the circumstances of the case. n4

Appropriate considerations may include: n5

- The specificity of the discovery request
- The quantity of information available from other and more easily accessed sources
- The failure to produce relevant information that seems likely to have existed but is no longer available on more easily accessed sources
- The likelihood of finding relevant, responsive information that cannot be obtained from other, more easily accessed sources
- Predictions as to the importance and usefulness of the further information
- The importance of the issues at stake in the litigation
- The parties' resources

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective OrdersCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue Burdens

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(B).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(C).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(C).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2) Committee Note (2006).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2) Committee Note (2006).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
C. Considering Limitations on Discovery of Computer-Based Information

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.23

§ 24.23 Protecting Privileged Matter from Discovery

The risk of privilege waiver, and the work necessary to avoid such a waiver, add to the costs and delay of discovery. When electronically stored information is involved, the risk of waiver, and the time and effort required to avoid it, can increase substantially because of the volume and the difficulty of reviewing electronically stored information. n1

When a party withholds information otherwise discoverable by claiming that it is privileged or subject to protection as trial preparation material, the party shall make the claim expressly and shall describe the nature of the documents, communications, or things not produced or disclosed in a manner that, without revealing information which is privileged or protected, will enable other parties to assess the applicability of the privilege or protection. n2

If information is produced in discovery that is subject to a claim of privilege or of protection as trial-preparation material, the party making the claim may notify any party that received the information of the claim and the basis for it. After being notified, a party must promptly return, sequester, or destroy the specified information and any copies it has and may not use or disclose the information until the claim is resolved. A receiving party may promptly present the information to the court under seal for a determination of the claim. If the receiving party disclosed the information before being notified, it must take reasonable steps to retrieve it. The producing party must preserve the information until the claim is resolved. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersWork ProductGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(5) Committee Note (2006).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(5)(A).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(5)(B).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
C. Considering Limitations on Discovery of Computer-Based Information

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.24

§ 24.24 Considering Effect of Disclosure of Privileged Computer-Based Information

[1] Evidence Rule 502 Governs the Scope of Waiver and the Effect of Inadvertent Disclosure of Privileged Material

The attorney-client privilege and work product protection are fundamental to our legal system. They encourage businesses and individuals to obtain legal counsel when appropriate by protecting the confidentiality of communications between clients and their attorneys, and documents prepared by attorneys to assist their clients in litigation.

The ever-expanding amount of information kept in computerized form increases the potential exposure of privileged matter during discovery. When vast amounts of information are transmitted and stored electronically and can be automatically collected and searched, it is all too easy for a document containing privileged information to be overlooked, even in the face of efforts to prevent it.

Evidence Rule 502 resolves some long-standing disputes in the courts about the legal effect of certain disclosures of communications or information protected by the attorney-client privilege or as work product, specifically disputes involving the scope of disclosure and inadvertent disclosure.

Evidence Rule 502 does not alter the substantive law regarding attorney-client privilege or work-product protection in any other respect, including the burden on the party invoking the privilege (or protection) to prove that the particular communication or information qualifies for it.

[2] Considering Scope of Waiver for Disclosure Made in a Federal Proceeding

Rule 502(a) establishes the scope of waiver resulting from an inadvertent disclosure. The Rule provides that any waiver is limited to actual material disclosed and does not extend to other material on the same subject, unless the disclosure is done intentionally to gain tactical advantage, in which case waiver would be extended to all related material.

The Rule specifically provides that when the disclosure is made in a federal proceeding or to a federal officer or agency and waives the attorney-client privilege or work-product protection, the waiver extends to undisclosed communications if all of the following circumstances are met: n1

- The waiver is intentional

- The disclosed and undisclosed communications concern the same subject matter
- As a matter of fairness, the disclosed and undisclosed communications ought to be considered together

[3] Considering the Consequences of Inadvertent Disclosure

When made in a federal proceeding or to a federal office or agency, a disclosure does not operate as a waiver in a federal or state proceeding if each of the following is true: n2

- The disclosure is inadvertent
- The holder of the privilege or protection took reasonable steps to prevent disclosure
- The holder promptly took reasonable steps to rectify the error, including (if applicable) following Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(b)(5)(B).

[4] Considering Disclosures Made in State Proceedings

When a disclosure is made in a state proceeding and is not the subject of a state-court order concerning waiver, the disclosure does not operate as a waiver in a federal proceeding if the disclosure: n3

- Would not be a waiver if it had been made in a federal proceeding; or
- Is not a waiver under the law of the state where the disclosure occurred.

[5] Controlling Effect of Federal Court Order

A federal court may order that the privilege or protection is not waived by disclosure connected with the litigation pending before the court, in which event the disclosure is also not a waiver in any other federal or state proceeding. n4

[6] Controlling Effect of Party Agreement

An agreement between parties that protects against privilege waivers in the event of inadvertent disclosures is binding only on those parties, and does not apply to nonparties unless incorporated in a court order. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersWork ProductGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 502(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 502(b).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Evid. 502(c).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Evid. 502(d).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Evid. 502(e).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

53 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
C. Considering Limitations on Discovery of Computer-Based Information

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.25

§ 24.25 Invoking the Attorney-Client Privilege to Protect E-mail Content

A communication from a client to an attorney for the purpose of obtaining legal advice that is intended to be confidential is privileged and protected from discovery. The party asserting the attorney-client privilege has the burden to expressly assert the privilege and describe the nature of the information withheld from discovery sufficiently to "enable other parties to assess the applicability of the privilege." n1 Whether an e-mail message is privileged will often turn on one of the following:

- Whether the communications were made for the purpose of giving legal advice n2
- Whether the party intended the message to be confidential and kept it confidential n3

It is usually insufficient to list an "e-mail strand" in a privilege log as a single privileged document, and instead, counsel must break down and list each e-mail within a strand separately on the privilege log. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersAttorney-Client Privilege

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(5); *see also Zapata v. IBP, Inc., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16285, at *22-23 (D. Kan. Nov. 10, 1994) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See TVT Records v. Island Def Jam Music Group, 214 F.R.D. 143, 144-145 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., United States v. Chevrontexaco Corp., 241 F. Supp. 2d 1065, 1078 (N.D. Cal. 2002) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See In re Universal Service Fund Telephone Billing Practices Litig., 232 F.R.D. 669, 674 (D. Kan. 2005) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
C. Considering Limitations on Discovery of Computer-Based Information

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.26

§ 24.26 Protecting Electronic Draft Reports and Communications of Expert Witnesses

Effective December 1, 2010, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect drafts, including electronic drafts, of any expert report or disclosure required under Rule 26(a)(2). n1

Additionally, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect communications, including e-mail communications, between the party's attorney and any expert witness required to provide a report under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), except to the extent that the communications do any of the following: n2

- Relate to compensation for the expert's study or testimony
- Identify facts or data that the party's attorney provided and that the expert considered in forming the opinions to be expressed
- Identify assumptions that the party's attorney provided and that the expert relied on in forming the opinions to be expressed

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersAttorney-Client Privilege

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(B).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(C).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
C. Considering Limitations on Discovery of Computer-Based Information

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 24.27 through 24.30

[Reserved]

§§ 24.27[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.31

§ 24.31 Producing Reasonably Accessible Electronically Stored Information

A party need not provide discovery of electronically stored information from sources that the party identifies as not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or cost. On motion to compel discovery or for a protective order, the party from whom discovery is sought must show that the information is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or cost. If that showing is made, the court may nonetheless order discovery from such sources if the requesting party shows good cause, considering the limitations of Rule 26(b)(2)(C). The court may specify conditions for the discovery. n1

The responding party must identify, by category or type, the sources containing potentially responsive information that it is neither searching nor producing. n2 The identification should, to the extent possible, provide enough detail to enable the requesting party to evaluate the burdens and costs of providing the discovery and the likelihood of finding responsive information on the identified sources. n3

If the requesting party seeks discovery of information from sources identified as not reasonably accessible, the parties should discuss the burdens and costs of accessing and retrieving the information, the needs that may establish good cause for requiring all or part of the requested discovery even if the information sought is not reasonably accessible, and conditions on obtaining and producing the information that may be appropriate. n4

If the parties cannot agree whether, or on what terms, sources identified as not reasonably accessible should be searched and discoverable information produced, the parties may raise the issue either by a motion to compel discovery or by a motion for a protective order. n5

The parties must confer before bringing either motion. If the parties do not resolve the issue and the court must decide, the responding party must show that the identified sources of information are not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or cost. The requesting party may need discovery to test this assertion. Such discovery may take the form of requiring the responding party to conduct a sampling of information contained on the sources identified as not reasonably accessible; allowing some form of inspection of such sources; or taking depositions of witnesses knowledgeable about the responding party's information systems. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective OrdersCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue Burdens

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(B).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2) Committee Note (2006).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2) Committee Note (2006).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2) Committee Note (2006).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2) Committee Note (2006).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2) Committee Note (2006).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
D. Weighing Costs and Burdens of Electronic Discovery Requests Against Likely Benefits

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.32

§ 24.32 Balancing Costs and Potential Benefits of Discovery

Once a responding party establishes that a source of electronically stored information is not reasonably accessible, the requesting party may still obtain discovery by showing good cause, considering the limitations of Rule 26(b)(2)(C) that balance the costs and potential benefits of discovery. The decision whether to require a responding party to search for and produce information that is not reasonably accessible depends not only on the burdens and costs of doing so, but also on whether those burdens and costs can be justified in the circumstances of the case. n1

Appropriate considerations may include: n2

- The specificity of the discovery request
- The quantity of information available from other and more easily accessed sources
- The failure to produce relevant information that seems likely to have existed but is no longer available on more easily accessed sources
- The likelihood of finding relevant, responsive information that cannot be obtained from other, more easily accessed sources
- Predictions as to the importance and usefulness of the further information
- The importance of the issues at stake in the litigation
- The parties' resources

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2) Committee Note (2006).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2) Committee Note (2006).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.33

§ 24.33 Shifting Cost of Production Based on Undue Burden or Expense

[1] Seeking Cost-Shifting Order

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not expressly provide a court with the power to shift discovery costs. However, the Committee Note to Rule 34(a) refers to the proportionality analysis found in Rule 26(b) in situations involvingdiscovery of electronically stored information. n1 Rule 26(b)(2) explicitly provides that a judge may limit discovery if the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit. n2 This plenary power to deny discovery altogether has been interpreted toinclude the lesser power to allocate discovery costs between parties. n3

A court has wide discretion in fashioning a fair and appropriate plan to apportion discovery costs. Thus, costs may be allocated between parties and need not be borne fully by one or the other party. n4 In determining whether to shift costs incurred in discovery of computer-based information from the responding party to the requesting party, courts apply a proportionality analysis by considering the factors set out in Rule 26(b)(2)(C)(iii). n5

[2] Considering Factors Relevant to Cost-Shifting

One court has determined that disputes regarding the scope and cost of discovery of electronic data requires a three-step analysis. n6 First, it is necessary to understand the responding party's computer system thoroughly, with respect to both active and stored data. For data kept in an accessible format, the usual rules of discovery apply: the responding party should pay the costs of producing responsive data. A court should consider cost-shifting only when electronic data is relatively inaccessible. Second, because the cost-shifting analysis is so fact-intensive, it is necessary to determine what data may be found on the inaccessible media. Thus, the responding party may be required to restore and produce responsive documents from a small sample of the requested backup tapes. Third, in conducting the cost-shifting analysis, the following seven-factor test should be applied, weighted more or less in the order stated by the court: n7

- The extent to which the request is specifically tailored to discover relevant information
- The availability of the information from other sources
- The total cost of production, compared to the amount in controversy
- The total cost of production compared to the resources available to each party

- The relative ability of each party to control the costs and its incentive to do so
- The importance of the issues at stake in the litigation
- The relative benefits to the parties of obtaining the information
- The resources available to each party.

[3] Timing of Request for Cost-Shifting Order

The cost-shifting issue arises usually at one of two stages. A party may resist a discovery request as burdensome and seek a protective order. n8 Instead of denying discovery altogether, the court may condition some discovery on the payment of costs. A party may also resist a motion compelling discovery under Rule 37(a) by relying on the proportionality analysis. n9

The parties must attempt to resolve the dispute without court intervention. Cost shifting should be considered during these discussions. Cost shifting makes particularly good sense when the relevancy or importance of the requested information is marginal and the retrieval costs are significant. n10

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue Burdens

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a), Committee Note of 1970.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2).

(n3)Footnote 3. *See Byers v. Illinois State Police, No. 99 C 8105, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9861, at *33-34 (N.D. Ill. May 31, 2002) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Manual for Complex Litigation § 11.446 (Federal Judicial Center 4th ed. 2004).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Rowe Entertainment, Inc. v. William Morris Agency, Inc., 205 F.R.D. 421, 428-429 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) ; see also Zubulake v. UBS Warburg LLC, 217 F.R.D. 309, 324 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Zubulake v. UBS Warburg LLC, 217 F.R.D. 309, 324 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Zubulake v. UBS Warburg LLC, 217 F.R.D. 309, 324 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

(n9)Footnote 9. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(C)(iii).

(n10)Footnote 10. Report of Honorable Paul V. Niemeyer, Chair, Advisory Committee on Civil Rules, to Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure, 181 F.R.D. 24, 36-37 (1998).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
D. Weighing Costs and Burdens of Electronic Discovery Requests Against Likely Benefits

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.34

§ 24.34 Assessing Likely Benefits of Requests for Electronically Stored Information

[1] Seeking Electronically Stored Information with Independent Evidentiary Significance

Electronically stored information that in itself bears independent evidentiary significance is subject to production absent an overriding privilege claim. n1 Information with independent evidentiary significance is essential to prove a party's case and almost always outweighs the costs and burdens incurred in retrieving the information under the proportionality analysis. An obvious example is discovery of a computer software program that is subject to trademark or copyright infringement claims. n2 Other examples include computerized accounting records, n3 and e-mail messages that are relevant to prove a discrimination claim. n4

Nevertheless, a blanket discovery request for all computer-based documents that may have independent evidentiary significance, without any limits, is unreasonable. For example, a mere suspicion that a responding party will fail to produce all relevant information in accordance with a discovery request, including electronic documents bearing evidentiary significance, is insufficient to order production of all computerized data. n5

[2] Seeking Matter Which Exists Only in Electronic Form

If computer-based information represents the sole source of relevant evidence and no hard copy printout or other evidence of the document exists, a responding partymust demonstrate extraordinary hardship to resist discovery under the Rule 26(b)(2) proportionality analysis. n6 For example, relevant e-mail correspondence is subject to discovery even though it exists only in electronic format. n7

[3] Seeking Electronically Stored Information to Determine Authenticity of Document

Many software computer programs retain a record of all inputted changes and revisions to a document. The computer's ability to retain a comprehensive record of all earlier edits and versions of a document can be particularly useful in ascertaining the authenticity of a disputed document. n8 Retrieving some of the earlier edits or versions may be easy, while an extraordinary effort may be required to retrieve other changes.

Because it is so easy to allege that a document has been altered or testimony fabricated, a party alleging tampering must come forward with evidence more than mere speculation under the Rule 26(b)(2) proportionality analysis. n9 In weighing the likely benefits against the costs, a substantial probability of document tampering should be shown when both the likelihood of finding relevant evidence of tampering is low and the burden of its retrieval is heavy. If a discovery request is intrusive and unlikely to culminate in providing relevant and useful information, it is unreasonable and should be denied by the court. n10

[4] Seeking Electronically Stored Information to Verify or Impeach Expert Testimony

The underlying electronically stored information relied on by an expert to develop a model or other simulation that may be used at trial is subject to discovery. n11 Effective cross-examination of the expert often may require some understanding of how the computer program works that may only be obtained by examining the database, source code, information explaining the source code, and a user's manual. n12

[5] Seeking Electronically Stored Information Developed by Non-Testifying Expert

Electronically stored information relied on by an expert retained or specially employed in anticipation or preparation of trial but who is not expected to be called as a witness at trial is nonetheless discoverable under Rule 26(b)(4) "on showing of exceptional circumstances under which it is impracticable for the party to obtain facts or opinions on the same subject by other means." n13 For example, information relied on by an expert in developing computer models or other computer-based exhibits may be subject to discovery. n14

A party seeking discovery of an opponent's non-testifying expert may be responsible for paying the other party a fair portion of the fees and expenses reasonably incurred by the latter party in obtaining facts and opinions from the expert. n15

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue BurdensEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceComputer-Generated Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Sega Enters. v. MAPHIA, 948 F. Supp. 923, 927 (N.D. Cal. 1996) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Smith v. MCI Telecommunications Corp., 137 F.R.D. 25, 26 (D. Kan. 1991) .

(n4)Footnote 4. *See Strauss v. Microsoft Corp., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7433, at *11-12 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 1995) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Alexander v. FBI, 188 F.R.D. 111, 115 (D.D.C. 1998) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Armstrong v. Bush, 139 F.R.D. 547, 555 (D.D.C. 1991) .

(n7)Footnote 7. *See In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8281, at 1 (N.D. Ill. June 13, 1995) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Premier Homes and Land Corp. v. Cheswell, No. 3:02cv495LN, *2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24946, at 3 (D. Mass. Dec. 19, 2002) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Sattar v. Motorola, Inc., 138 F.3d 1164, 1171 (7th Cir. 1998) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See Fennell v. First Designs, Ltd., 83 F.3d 526, 532 (1st Cir. 1996) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B).

(n12)Footnote 12. See Shu-Tao Lin v. McDonnell Douglas Corp., 574 F. Supp. 1407, 1412 (S.D.N.Y. 1983) , aff'd in part, reversed in part, 742 F.2d 45 (2d Cir. 1984) (preferred practice is to provide adversary all underlying data supporting computer analysis or model well before trial).

(n13)Footnote 13. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(D).

(n14)Footnote 14. See Pearl Brewing Co. v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co., 415 F. Supp. 1122, 1134 (S.D. Tex. 1976) .

(n15)Footnote 15. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(E).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
D. Weighing Costs and Burdens of Electronic Discovery Requests Against Likely Benefits

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.35

§ 24.35 Assessing Degree of Intrusiveness of Discovery Request

[1] Seeking Electronic Information from Individual Computer-Based Record

The extent of discovery intrusiveness is ordinarily quite low if a single or a fewidentified computer records are requested. The request is probably reasonable under the Rule 26(b)(2)(iii) analysis even if the likelihood of obtaining relevant evidence is uncertain. This is because a request for a few records is unlikely to be burdensome, so the relevance test is applied in a more relaxed fashion. For example, a request for a computer record containing a list of file names is probably reasonable. n1 Moreover, retrieval of a relevant earlier version of a single document that was later edited may not be intrusive and may be subject to discovery. n2 However, a request for an entire computer database that likely contains information irrelevant to the pleaded claims and defenses is undoubtedly too broad. n3

[2] Seeking Electronic Information from Single Computer Hard Drive

A computer's hard drive or a software program often contains non-discoverable documents, such as confidential or irrelevant files. A showing that a search of a hard drive will likely result in finding the requested information is required to prevent what would otherwise be a "fishing expedition." n4 A limited search of a computer's hard drive is less likely to be intrusive and impose undue burdens and expense under the Rule 26(b)(2) analysis. For example, the authors and dates on which each document is entered and revised are contained on a computer file screen. The degree of intrusiveness in producing the file screen is much less than in producing the contentsof each computer document file. n5

Despite its intrusiveness, a thorough examination of a computer hard drive may be necessary to locate "residual-deleted" files, which are removed from a computer's directory and may be located anywhere on it. The case for such a thorough examination is compelling if a party concedes that files have been tampered with. For example, a complete hard drive search is warranted if the responding party asserts that no documents were deleted, yet later admits that a file had been deleted. n6

When an inspection by the opposing party of a computer's hard drive is appropriate, adequate safeguards must be taken to protect any confidential and privileged documents that are likely to be stored in the database. Ordinarily, the protocol for protecting disclosure of privileged and confidential documents is negotiated between the parties. n7

[3] Seeking Electronic Information from Multiple Computers

Discovery of documents that may be located in a large number of computers raises distinct problems. In a networked computer system in which computers are linked, a single word-search request can locate information contained in any of the linked computers. Large organizations and businesses frequently have several networked drives. Under these circumstances, each of the networked drives might have to be searched. Moreover, computers also have individual drives that are available to the user but that are not on the network, such as the "C" drive. Searches of networked drives might not locate relevant documents contained in non-networked drives. Separate searches need to be executed to locate documents on non-networked drives. n8 The degree of intrusiveness under the Rule 26(b)(2) analysis depends on the extent of the search.

A party seeking intrusive corporate-wide discovery must demonstrate a particularized need and relevance for the information. n9 Copying a significant number of computer hard drives can cause disruption to ongoing business operations and should be allowed only on a showing of sufficient justification. n10 The reasonableness of the request will be significantly affected by the number of individuals and computers affected.

Relevant computer-generated information may be located off-site, for example, on laptop computers or home computers. Accordingly, a request to discover information on all computers may extend to employees' personal home computers that are used for business purposes. n11 Locating and retrieving data from off-site computers pose many practical problems. It may, for example, be difficult to distinguish a laptop computer used for personal or business purposes. n12

[4] Seeking Electronic Information from Back-Up Systems

A party may be required to retrieve data from computer back-up systems notwithstanding the substantial expense and burden involved, n13 because the cost and burden in retrieving computer data from a back-up system are ordinary and foreseeable risks in doing business. n14 Courts have held that requiring the responding party to pay all costs is fair because the responding party has presumably selected the particular computer system to further some current business purpose. Moreover, it is unfair to penalize a requesting party for a business decision made by the responding party. The cases adopting this principle are particularly fact-driven, however, and involve major litigation with huge sums at stake, parties with sizeable resources, and potential evidence that was important in resolving issues, all of which support requiring the responding party to pay the production costs. n15

Courts are beginning to examine more closely requests requiring the responding party to pay all costs for producing e-mails from back-up tapes, particularly because the benefits derived by a responding party from a computer back-up system may be limited. The responding party has little choice in selecting a back-up system that meets discovery demands because the systems are designed to permit disaster recovery and not archival presentation. n16 Consequently, the mere fact that a responding party opts to use a particular back-up system should not justify imposing discovery costs on that party in all cases. n17 Instead, the Rule 26(b)(2)(iii) proportionality analysis should be applied to the particular circumstances of a case to determine whether costs should be allocated among the parties.

If the likely benefits from evidence obtained from a search of back-up systems are marginal, the discovery request may be denied or costs allocated among the parties under the Rule 26(b)(2)(iii) proportionality analysis, especially on a showing of highcosts incurred in retrieving the information. n18

The more likely it is that a backup tape contains information that is relevant to a claim or defense, the fairer it is that the party from whom the information is sought be made to search at its own expense. n19

If court-ordered recovery of data from back-up tapes eventually reveals that no relevant evidence was contained in it or that the requesting party ignored the information retrieved from it, costs incurred in the recovery process can later be assessed against the requesting party. n20

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue BurdensEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceComputer-Generated Evidence

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Momah v. Albert Einstein Med. Ctr., 164 F.R.D. 412, 418 (E.D. Pa. 1996) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See McGuire v. Acufex Microsurgical, Inc., 175 F.R.D. 149, 151-152 (D. Mass. 1997) .

(n3)Footnote 3. *See Murlas v. Mobil Oil Corp., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3489, at *12-13 (N.D. Ill. March 16, 1995) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fennell v. First Stage Designs, Ltd., 83 F.3d 526, 532 (1st Cir. 1996) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Momah v. Albert Einstein Med. Ctr., 164 F.R.D. 412, 418 (E.D. Pa. 1996) (information from computer list screen relevant to show whether documents were back dated to support plaintiff's discharge from employment).

(n6)Footnote 6. See LEXIS-NEXIS v. Beer, 41 F. Supp. 2d 950, 953-954 (D. Minn. 1999) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Mary Imogene Bassett Hosp. v. Sullivan, 136 F.R.D. 42, 48-50 (N.D.N.Y. 1991) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Alexander v. FBI, 188 F.R.D. 111, 117 (D.D.C. 1998) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Mackey v. IBP, Inc., 167 F.R.D. 186, 195-196 (D. Kan. 1996) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Dated November 15, 1993, 846 F. Supp. 11, 13-14 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (government request for copy of company officers' hard drives and all floppy disks created by officers unreasonable, particularly when "key word" search could identify requested information).

(n11)Footnote 11. See Century-ML Cable Corp. v. Carrillo, 43 F. Supp. 2d 176, 178 (D.P.R. 1998) .

(n12)Footnote 12. See Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Chem. Indus., 167 F.R.D. 90, 126 (D. Colo. 1996) (plaintiff sanctioned for bringing unsupportable claims that defendant employee stored business records or documents on disks in personal lap-top computer and that he had duty to preserve disks from overwriting).

(n13)Footnote 13. See Linnen v. A.H. Robins Co., (June 15, 1999) ; *see also Byers v. Illinois State Police, No. 99 C 8105, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9861, at *35-36 (N.D. Ill. May 31, 2002) .

(n14)Footnote 14. See Danis v. USN Communs., Inc., No. 98 C 7482, n.29 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 20, 2000) .

(n15)Footnote 15. See Linnen v. A.H. Robins Co., (June 15, 1999) .

(n16)Footnote 16. See McPeek v. Ashcroft, 202 F.R.D. 31, 32 (D.D.C. 2001) .

(n17)Footnote 17. See Rowe Entm't, Inc. v. William Morris Agency, Inc., 205 F.R.D. 421, 429 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) .

(n18)Footnote 18. See Alexander v. FBI, 194 F.R.D. 316, 332 (D.D.C. 2000) .

(n19)Footnote 19. See McPeek v. Ashcroft, 212 F.R.D. 33, 34-35 (D.D.C. 2003) .

(n20)Footnote 20. See Danis v. USN Communs., Inc., (N.D. Ill. Oct. 20, 2000) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

61 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
D. Weighing Costs and Burdens of Electronic Discovery Requests Against Likely Benefits

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.36

§ 24.36 Considering Cost of Producing Documents in Requested Format

Any party may serve on any other party a request to produce and permit the party making the request, or someone acting on the requestor's behalf, to inspect, copy, test, or sample any designated documents or electronically stored information--including writings, drawings, graphs, charts, photographs, sound recordings, images, and other data or data compilations stored in any medium from which information can be obtained--translated, if necessary, by the respondent into reasonably usable form, or to inspect, copy, test, or sample any designated tangible things that constitute or contain matters within the scope of Rule 26(b) and that are in the possession, custody or control of the party upon whom the request is served. n1

The request shall set forth, either by individual item or by category, the items to be inspected, and describe each with reasonable particularity. The request shall specify a reasonable time, place, and manner of making the inspection and performing the related acts. The request may specify the form or forms in which electronically stored information is to be produced. Without leave of court or written stipulation, a request may not be served before the time specified in Rule 26(d). n2

If objection is made to the requested form or forms for producing electronically stored information--or if no form was specified in the request--the responding party must state the form or forms it intends to use. The party submitting the request may move for an order under Rule 37(a) with respect to any objection to or other failure to respond to the request or any part thereof, or any failure to permit inspection as requested. n3

Unless the parties otherwise agree, or the court otherwise orders: n3.1

- A party who produces documents for inspection shall produce them as they are kept in the usual course of business or shall organize and label them to correspond with the categories in the request

- If a request does not specify the form or forms for producing electronically stored information, a responding party must produce the information in a form or forms in which it is ordinarily maintained or in a form or forms that are reasonably usable

- A party need not produce the same electronically stored information in more than one form

If a party requests information in a format other than the format in which the information is kept in the ordinary course of business and the request is challenged by the responding party, the court will likely weigh the burden and costs of production against its likely benefits to evaluate the reasonableness of the request. n4 The requesting party may, however, offer to pay the additional costs incurred in providing documents in an alternative format. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue Burdens

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b).

(n4)Footnote 3.1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b).

(n5)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(C)(iii).

(n6)Footnote 5. See National Union Elec. Corp. v. Matsushita Elec. Indus., 494 F. Supp. 1257, 1262 (E.D. Pa. 1980) (significant problem of allocating costs in producing computer-readable program was bypassed when defendants expressed willingness to pay costs).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.37

§ 24.37 Creating Special Program to Retrieve Requested Electronically Stored Information May Be Required

[1] Producing Electronically Stored Information in "Reasonably Usable Form" May Require Software Development

Relying on Rule 34's requirement to provide information in a reasonably usable form, some courts have compelled a responding party to modify or develop a software program to retrieve relevant evidence. n1

[2] Applying Rule 26(b)(2) Proportionality Analysis to Creation of Software Programs

The reasonableness of a request to modify or develop special software to retrieve relevant evidence is evaluated under the Rule 26(b)(2) proportionality analysis. If the costs are not substantial and the resources of the responding party are sizeable, a responding party is likely to be required to develop necessary software retrieval programs. n2 However, a discovery request for computer records that are only marginally relevant and that would impose significant burdens on a party may be unwarranted. n3

If the responding party claims that the retrieval effort involves undue expense, a court may consider the extent of the burden and apportion the costs of its production. However, an allegation that the retrieval of relevant records is burdensome because the indexing system adopted by the responding party precludes an efficient search does not support cost sharing. Providing access to a mass of documents with no discernible indexing or filing system does not comply with the discovery rules, even when the documents are retained in that state in the usual course of business. n4 In this situation, the requesting party should show that the costliness of the discovery procedure involved is a product of the responding party's record-keeping system over which the requesting party has no control. n5

The expense involved in modifying or developing special software can make an otherwise reasonable discovery request unreasonable. However, if the requesting party voluntarily offers to pay for some of the programming cost, or itself develops the software program, production of the requested computer data is more likely to be required. n6 Nevertheless, if the request requires inputting new information into a computer, in addition to developing software programs to analyze the information, the request may be unduly burdensome.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & InspectionCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevance

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See National Union Elec. Corp. v. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 494 F. Supp. 1257, 1260-1262 (E.D. Pa. 1980) ; *see also In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8281, at *2-4 (N.D. Ill. June 13, 1995) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(C)(iii); see also Mackey v. IBP, Inc., 167 F.R.D. 186, 199 (D. Kan. 1996) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Marker v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 125 F.R.D. 121, 124-125 (M.D.N.C. 1989) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Kozlowski v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 73 F.R.D. 73, 76 (D. Mass. 1976) .

(n5)Footnote 5. *See In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8281, at *7-8 (N.D. Ill. June 13, 1995) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Mackey v. IBP, Inc., 167 F.R.D. 186, 199 (D. Kan. 1996) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.38

§ 24.38 Weighing Burden and Expense of On-Site Computer Inspection

[1] Conducting On-Site Computer Inspection on Party's Consent

In general, a party may, under Rule 34(a), request to inspect and copy any tangible thing that is discoverable under Rule 26(b). n1 A computer can be inspected on agreement of both parties. A limited on-site computer inspection can be especially cost effective. In addition, the parties may use word-search requests that are executed immediately in both parties' presence. However, the parties should agree on a protocol establishing inspection procedures. n2 Under this arrangement,pertinent documents can be marked and later delivered after the responding party has had an opportunity to review them for privilege purposes.

[2] Conducting On-Site Computer Inspection Over Party's Objections

The on-site inspection of a computer is particularly intrusive and raises specific concerns for a responding party. As a practical matter, a responding party ordinarily will not permit open inspection of a computer, because a computer's databases often contain information that is not relevant to the claims and defenses pleaded in a complaint or that is subject to a claim of privilege, such as attorney-client, work product, trademark, or copyright privileges. n3 Furthermore, Rule 34(a) does not permit unrestricted, direct access to computer information and no court will order this intrusive discovery unless the likely benefits of recovering relevant evidence from the computer inspection outweigh the significant burdens. n4

[3] Accessing Deleted Files Through Mirror-Imaging

Mirror imaging is the preferred method to preserve a record of a computer's files, including deleted files. n5 The mirror-imaging process ensures that the retrieval process itself does not destroy information in the computer, particularly deleted files that have not been permanently destroyed. However, the process may require the attention of a professional computer technician, although many back-up systems make mirror images of computer drives. n6

A mirror-image copy of a computer's hard drive represents a snapshot of the computer's records. It contains all the information in the computer, including embedded, residual, and deleted data. It preserves all information and eliminates any potential inadvertent destruction of evidence, including the creation dates of the files that had overwritten the deleted files. n7

The copying process can result in the affected computer being unavailable to the user for a few hours. n8 However, technological advances continue to accelerate the process, reducing the time needed to make a mirror image. For example, portable mirror-imaging equipment is available to perform the process at the computer's location. Nevertheless, the disruption to an ongoing business can still be significant, particularly if many computers are involved or if computers are located in different places, and may in some circumstances outweigh the benefits of discovery. Courts apply the proportionality test to a request for an on-site inspection or mirror imaging, weighing the burdens (including the extent of the disruption to ongoing business operations and attendant costs) against the potential for finding relevant information that cannot be located by other means. n9

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersWork ProductGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceComputer-Generated Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Strasser v. Bose Yalamanchi, M.D., P.A., 669 So. 2d 1142, 1144-1145 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 4th Dist. 1996) (court suggested option of plaintiff sending representative to access and inspectdefendant's computer in presence of defendant's representative under agreed set of procedures).

(n3)Footnote 3. See McCurdy Group, LLC v. Am. Biomedical Group, Inc., No. 00-6183, 2001 U.S. App. LEXIS 10570, at *20-*23 (10th Cir May 21, 2001) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See In re Ford Motor Co., 345 F.3d 1315, 1316 (11th Cir. 2003) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Chem. Indus., 167 F.R.D. 90, 99-100 (D. Colo. 1996) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See LEXIS-NEXIS v. Beer, 41 F. Supp. 2d 950, 953 (D. Minn. 1999) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Chem. Indus., 167 F.R.D. 90, 103 (D. Colo. 1996) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Playboy Enters. v. Welles, 60 F. Supp. 2d 1050, 1054 (S.D. Cal. 1999) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(C)(iii).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.39

§ 24.39 Protecting Against Disclosure of Privileged or Confidential Documents During On-Site Inspection

A protocol requiring the presence of the responding party's counsel when the requesting party's counsel or representative searches a seized computer and segregation of any claimed privileged material is often essential to ensure confidentiality of otherwise privileged documents. n1 Parties may also agree to inspection by a third party selected by both parties who has signed a confidentiality contract agreeing not to disclose the information to unauthorized individuals. n2

If the parties do not mutually agree on a confidentiality protocol, a responding party may seek a protective order under Rule 26(c) to prevent disclosure of any privileged document that may be revealed during an inspection. n3 A court may also appoint an expert to review the electronic data during an inspection. n4 As an officer of the court, the expert can be bound to maintain confidentiality.

Confidentiality safeguards are especially prudent when a mirror image or an exact duplicate of a computer's hard drive is undertaken during an on-site inspection. n5 Not only does a mirror image contain all the computer's files, but it also will capture residual-deleted files and embedded data generated with each file. Thus, earlier drafts of documents can be located, and the identity of authors, creation dates, and modification dates all will be available to the requesting party. Adequate safeguards must be adopted to ensure that privileged documents contained in a mirror-image copy are not disclosed.

If a mirror image copy of a hard drive is ordered, a protocol should be established to ensure the confidentiality of its information, including provisions preventing waiver of privilege, limiting the presence of persons during the mirrorimaging process, and providing a custodian for the mirror image copy. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsRequests for Production & InspectionCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective Orders

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Religious Tech. Ctr. v. F.A.C.T.NET, Inc., 901 F. Supp. 1519, 1522 (D. Colo. 1995) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Simon Prop. Group, L.P. v. MySimon, Inc., 194 F.R.D. 639, 643 (S.D. Ind. 2000) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Cerruti 1881 S.A. v. Cerruti, Inc., 169 F.R.D. 573, 582 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Chem. Indus., 167 F.R.D. 90, 100 (D. Colo. 1996) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Playboy Enters. v. Welles, 60 F. Supp. 2d 1050, 1055 (S.D. Cal. 1999) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
D. Weighing Costs and Burdens of Electronic Discovery Requests Against Likely Benefits

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 24.40 through 24.50

[Reserved]

§§ 24.40[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.51

§ 24.51 CHECKLIST: Requesting Production of Electronically Stored Information

The following is a checklist of factors to consider when preparing production requests for electronic information:

☐ Consider different forms of discoverable electronically stored information, including hard drives, databases, other storage media, e-mails, software, and residual-deleted data, as well as home computers, laptops, and mobile handheld devices in which relevant information may be available

☐ Determine whether creation of special programs to retrieve electronic data is necessary

☐ Consider formal discovery requests pertaining to opposing party's computer environment, systems, and processes, including party's record retention and destruction policies, if information was not provided in initial disclosure

☐ Consider formal discovery requests for electronically stored information relied on:

- ☐ By opponent's expert as basis for his or her opinion;
- ☐ For creation of computer model or simulation.

☐ Determine whether on-site computer inspection is appropriate

☐ Focus discovery requests by seeking relevant information from:

- ☐ Individual files
- ☐ Individual hard drives

- ☐ Computer database accessed by individual users, and/or
- ☐ Any of opponent's computer systems and equipment with respect to distinct period of time

☐ Determine format of production desired, including:

- ☐ Electronic copies only (specifying preferred storage medium)
- ☐ Paper copies only, or
- ☐ Electronic and paper copies

☐ Consider special issues surrounding production of e-mails, such ascost and burden of retrieval, and potential privileged nature of attorney-client communications

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective OrdersCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue Burdens

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

§ 24.52 CHECKLIST: Responding to Electronic Discovery Requests

The following is a useful checklist for responding to electronic discovery requests:

- ☐ Determine whether objection is appropriate based on:
  - ☐ Relevancy
  - ☐ Assertion that request seeks cumulative or duplicative materials, and/or
  - ☐ Assertion that alternative, more convenient, means to obtain information is available
- ☐ Previous opportunity to obtain the information through discovery
- ☐ Not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or cost
- ☐ Privilege such as work product
- ☐ Carefully review computer-based information being disclosed to avoid inadvertent disclosure of privileged information and risk of waiver of privilege
- ☐ Consider entering into confidentiality agreement with opposition, or seeking court order, to maintain privileged status of documents despite disclosure

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryPrivileged MattersWork ProductGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryProtective OrdersCivil ProcedureDiscoveryRelevanceCivil ProcedureDiscoveryUndue Burdens

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
E. Checklists for Electronic Discovery Requests and Responses

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 24.53 through 24.60

[Reserved]

§§ 24.53[Reserved]

69 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
F. Discovery Sanctions Involving Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.61

§ 24.61 Failing to Produce Computer-Based Information May Result in Sanctions

As a general matter, a party to civil litigation has a duty to preserve relevant information, including electronically stored information, when that party "has notice that the evidence is relevant to litigation or ... should have known that the evidence may be relevant to future litigation." n1 It is the responsibility of the parties to ensure that relevant electronically stored information is preserved, and when that duty is breached, a district court may exercise its authority to impose appropriate discovery sanctions. n2

Sanctions should be considered only if the court finds all of the following: n3

- A clear duty to preserve
- A culpable failure to preserve and produce relevant electronically stored information
- A reasonable probability of material prejudice to the adverse party

In some instances, the district court may issue a preserving order to compel the forensic imaging and production of computer hard drives as a means by which to preserve relevant electronic evidence. Because all litigants are obligated to preserve relevant information in their possession, preservation orders generally must be premised on a demonstration that a real danger of evidence destruction exists, a lack of any other available remedy, and a showing that the preservation order is an appropriate exercise of the court's discretion. n4

A party may choose on its own to preserve information through forensic imaging, and district courts have, for various reasons, compelled the forensic imaging and production of opposing parties' computers. n5 Nevertheless courts have been cautious in requiring the mirror imaging of computers where the request is extremely broad in nature and the connection between the computers and the claims in the lawsuit are unduly vague or unsubstantiated in nature. n6 Thus, even if acceptable as a means to preserve electronic evidence, compelled forensic imaging is not appropriate in all cases, and courts must consider the significant interests implicated by forensic imaging before ordering such procedures. n7

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Fujitsu Ltd. v. Fed. Express Corp., 247 F.3d 423, 436 (2d Cir. 2001) ; see also Zubulake v. UBS Warburg LLC, 220 F.R.D. 212, 216-18 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b), (e); John B. v. Goetz, 531 F.3d 448, 459-460 (6th Cir. 2009) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See John B. v. Goetz, 531 F.3d 448, 459-460 (6th Cir. 2009) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See John B. v. Goetz, 531 F.3d 448, 459-460 (6th Cir. 2009) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See John B. v. Goetz, 531 F.3d 448, 459-460 (6th Cir. 2009) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See John B. v. Goetz, 531 F.3d 448, 459 (6th Cir. 2009) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a) Advisory Committee Note (2006).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
F. Discovery Sanctions Involving Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.62

§ 24.62 Destroying Computer-Based Evidence May Result in Sanctions

Spoliation is the intentional destruction, mutilation, alteration, or concealment of evidence that may be used by another party in pending or future litigation. n1 Although a party is not required to retain every document in its possession once litigation has commenced, n2 the party must preserve evidence that the party knows or should know is relevant to a claim or defense of any party, or that may lead tothe discovery of relevant evidence. n3

Sanctioning a party for the intentional destruction of relevant electronically stored and paper-based or other physical evidence raises spoliation issues. However, theaffirmative duty to preserve relevant computer-based evidence raises unique problems. Computer files are routinely destroyed in the normal course of business without regard to pending or ongoing litigation when tapes are reused in back-up systems, files are disposed of under a record retention-disposition policy, e-mail messages are automatically deleted on a scheduled basis, and residual-deleted data is overwritten as part of daily computer operations.

Often no record exists that identifies which computer-based documents are destroyed, and no method exists to determine whether the records are relevant to the litigation. n4 In such cases, requesting a "mirror-image" of the relevant computer system and back-up files early in the case is essential to ensuring data retention. n5 In these cases, no sanction may be imposed absent some showing that the destroyed documents or files were indeed relevant. However, the exact contents of destroyed electronic documents need not be known. A showing that the destroyed documents fell within a category of documents that were relevant and had some materiality to the litigation may be adequate to impose appropriate sanctions. n6

A computer's residual-deleted data is overwritten and lost whenever a computer is in operation, including when the computer is turned on. n7

The only way to prevent destruction of potential electronic evidence is to halt further computer operations or to make an mirror image copy of the hard drive preserving all files, both of which may involve substantial cost and burden. Unless a specific request is made, or the party is aware that potential residual-deleted files exist that may contain relevant evidence, a party is not automatically obligated to take extraordinary steps either to stop computer operations or make a mirror image copy of computer files. n8 Nevertheless, the better practice is to address potential problems as quickly as possible after commencement of litigation.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewEvidenceRelevanceSpoliationLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See West v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 167 F.3d 776, 779-780 (2d Cir. 1999) ; *Zubulake v. UBS Warburg, LLC, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13574, at 26 (S.D.N.Y. July 20, 2004) .

(n2)Footnote 2. *See Danis v. USN Communs., Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16900, at 99 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 20, 2000) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26.

(n4)Footnote 4. See Procter & Gamble Co. v. Haugen, 179 F.R.D. 622, 631 (D. Utah 1998) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See § 24.38[3].

(n6)Footnote 6. *See Zubulake v. UBS Warburg, LLC, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13574, at *12-26 (S.D.N.Y. July 20, 2004) (detailing plaintiff's efforts to show spoliation of relevant computer files and back-ups tapes); Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Chem. Indus., 167 F.R.D. 90, 115 (D. Colo. 1996) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Chem. Indus., 167 F.R.D. 90, 112 (D. Colo. 1996) .

(n8)Footnote 8. *Zubulake v. UBS Warburg, LLC, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13574, at *12-26 (S.D.N.Y. July 20, 2004) (detailing plaintiff's efforts to demonstrate defendant's destruction of relevant e-mails and back-up tapes).

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
F. Discovery Sanctions Involving Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.63

§ 24.63 Destroying Records Per Routine Policy Not Ordinarily Sanctionable Conduct

Absent exceptional circumstances, a court may not impose sanctions under the federal rules on a party for failing to provide electronically stored information lost as a result of the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system. n1

The protection provided under Rule 37(e) applies only to sanctions under the Federal Rules, and it does not affect other sources of authority to impose sanctions or rules of professional responsibility. n2

A party's record-retention policy is itself subject to discovery. The routine deletion of e-mail messages and temporary files may destroy relevant information subject to discovery. In general, the destruction of a document does not raise an adverse inference of spoliation if it is done in accordance with a routine housekeeping records retention and disposition policy and without knowledge that the destroyed document is relevant to the claim or defense of any party in pending or imminent litigation. n3 Conversely, destroying documents in a manner inconsistent with a record-disposition policy may be persuasive evidence that the destruction was not done in good faith. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductEvidenceRelevanceSpoliationLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(e).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(e) Committee Note (2006).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Coates v. Johnson & Johnson, 756 F.2d 524, 551 (7th Cir. 1985) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practices Litig., 169 F.R.D. 598, 615 (D.N.J. 1997) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

72 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
F. Discovery Sanctions Involving Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.64

§ 24.64 Destroying Records Before Commencement of Litigation Per Reasonable Policy Not Sanctionable

Destroying a relevant document before litigation is commenced in accordance with an established record-disposition schedule that was adopted in furtherance of legitimate business purposes may be reasonable and may not be subject to sanction. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Stanton v. National R.R. Passenger Corp., 849 F. Supp. 1524, 1528 (M.D. Ala. 1994) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 24 Discovery of Computer-Based Information *
F. Discovery Sanctions Involving Electronic Records

2-24 Federal Litigation Guide § 24.65

§ 24.65 Destroying Records After Commencement of Litigation Can Lead to Sanctions

If litigation is imminent or has commenced, destruction of evidence can lead to severe sanctions--even if it is destroyed in accordance with an established recordretention and disposition policy. n1 Sanctions for spoliation are within the trial court's discretion and may include an adverse inference instruction to the jury. n2

For a complete discussion of discovery enforcement, see Ch. 22, Enforcement of Discovery.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryDisclosuresSanctionsCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewEvidenceRelevanceSpoliationLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. *See Zubulake v. UBS Warburg, LLC, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13574, at 26 (S.D.N.Y. July 20, 2004) ; Linnen v. A.H. Robins Co., (June 15, 1999) .

(n2)Footnote 2. *Zubulake v. UBS Warburg, LLC, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13574, at 27 (S.D.N.Y. July 20, 2004) .

* Chapter 24 was written by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

74 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide 25.syn

§ 25.syn Synopsis to Chapter 25: Trial Planning and Preparation *

§ 25.01 Developing an Overall Case Plan

§ 25.02 Maintaining a "To Do" List

§ 25.03 Preparing a Statement of Claims and/or Defenses

§ 25.04 Formulating a Case Theme
[1] Presenting the Case in a Persuasive Manner
[2] Advancing the Theme at Trial

§ 25.05 Maintaining a Trial Notebook Throughout Litigation

§ 25.06 Evaluating the Importance of the Final Pretrial Order

§§ 25.07through 25.10 [Reserved]

§ 25.11 Understanding Burden of Proof
[1] Evaluating Burden of Going Forward
[2] Satisfying the Burden of Going Forward
[3] Evaluating Burden of Persuasion
[4] Satisfying the Burden of Persuasion
[5] Allocating Burden of Proof Based on Burden of Pleading

§ 25.12 Evaluating Manners of Proof

§ 25.13 Considering Legal Presumptions When Preparing for Trial
[1] Understanding Presumptions
[2] Distinguishing Presumptions from Inferences
[3] Presumption Generally Shifts Burden of Going Forward With Evidence, Not Burden of Persuasion
[4] Evaluating Standards of Proof for Presumptions
[5] Rebutting Presumptions
[6] Considering Presumptions in Diversity Cases

§ 25.14 Considering Inferences as Manner of Proof
[1] Understanding Inferences
[2] Arguing Issues That Depend on Inference
[3] Judge May Indicate that Inference May Be Drawn From Evidence

§§ 25.15through 25.19 [Reserved]

§ 25.20 Considering the Importance of Witness Testimony at Trial
[1] Preparing for Use of Witness Testimony at Trial
[2] Evaluating Witness Credibility
[3] Preparing to Use Deposition Testimony at Trial

§ 25.21 Preparing to Offer Documents at Trial
[1] Evaluating Strength of Documents for Trial
[2] Seeking Stipulations of Admissibility of Documents Before Trial
[3] Presenting Documents at Trial

§ 25.22 Preparing to Use Demonstrative Exhibits at Trial
[1] Generating Demonstrative Exhibits for Trial
[2] Planning the Introduction of Demonstrative Evidence

§ 25.23 Sources of Admissions for Use at Trial

§ 25.24 Using Admissions Made in Pleadings at Trial

§ 25.25 Using Rule 36 Admissions at Trial
[1] Requesting Admission of Undisputed Facts
[2] Understanding the Effect of Admissions under Rule 36
[3] Presenting Admissions to the Jury

§ 25.26 Using Interrogatory Admissions at Trial
[1] Offering Interrogatory Answers Into Evidence
[2] Explaining the Significance of Interrogatory Answers to the Jury

§ 25.27 Using Deposition Admissions at Trial
[1] Certifying Deposition Transcript Before Trial
[2] Reviewing Deposition Transcripts for Favorable Admissions
[3] Impeaching Witness With Deposition Admissions

§ 25.28 Using Stipulated Admissions at Trial

§ 25.29 Considering the Use of Judicial Notice at Trial
[1] Understanding Judicial Notice
[2] Deciding Whether to Request Judicial Notice

§ 25.30 Preparing an Order of Proof

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

Success or failure in litigation, and ultimately at trial, follows from the level of pretrial planning and preparation that goes into a case. Proper planning for trial begins at the outset of litigation with the mapping out of the legal foundation for the case, as well as the development of a case theme. The legal foundation and the case theme will shape the course of litigation and will ultimately be presented at trial. The legal foundation requires consideration of the essential elements of the claims or defenses being litigated, while the case theme requires consideration of how to characterize and present the case in the most persuasive manner.

Part A of the chapter provides a discussion of trial planning tools and resources for use throughout the course of litigation, and it covers the following topics:

- Case plans
- "To do" lists
- Statement of claims and/or defenses
- Case themes
- Trial notebooks
- Final pretrial orders

Part B concerns the burden of proof at trial and includes discussion of the following:

- Burden of going forward
- Burden of persuasion
- Manners of proof

- Presumptions
- Inferences

Finally, Part C provides a discussion of forms of proof and includes coverage of the following topics:

- Witness testimony
- Documentary evidence
- Demonstrative evidence
- Party admissions
- Discovery responses
- Stipulations
- Judicial notice

Part C concludes with a discussion of the importance of preparing an order of proof in preparation of trial.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
A Trial Planning Tools and Resources

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.01

§ 25.01 Developing an Overall Case Plan

An overall case plan should be developed at the outset of litigation for all actions being prosecuted or defended in federal court. The case plan provides a framework for developing the legal foundation of the case, as well as the theme of the case for trial. The case plan should be revised as needed as litigation progresses. Initially, the case plan should contemplate the following:

- Client Objectives. What are the client's objectives? Some clients, particularly those with limited resources, may be most concerned with a quick resolution, while others may be most concerned with a specific outcome.

- Case Strategy. How can the client's objectives be best achieved? The case strategy should include a plan for voluntary exchange of information at the outset of litigation, a discovery plan, a plan for motion practice, and ultimately a trial plan.

- Negotiation Strategy. Can the case be resolved informally without the need for protracted and expensive litigation?

- Case Deadlines. What deadlines have been set by the court in pretrial conferences and case management conferences? Consider deadlines for discovery cut-off, and the filing of motions during the early stages of litigation.

- Case Weaknesses. What are the problems with the case and how can weaknesses be overcome?

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral Overview

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
A Trial Planning Tools and Resources

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.02

§ 25.02 Maintaining a "To Do" List

By keeping a "to do" list throughout the lifetime of a case, counsel can track everything that is being done and that must later be done in preparation of trial. Such a list may be kept manually or electronically. Some software companies offer programs that are designed to help plan and schedule litigation in preparation of trial.

As to each item or project, the "to do" list may be used to record:

- The nature of the project
- Who is to do each item
- The deadline by which it is to be completed

The list might differentiate between long-term and short-term projects. It may also be broken down according to the type of activity, such as research, discovery problems, interviews, "for trial" projects, and miscellaneous projects. "For trial" items would include such matters as drafting jury instructions, issuance of trial subpoenas, and drafting voir dire questions.

The "to do" list should be updated regularly and a copy of it should be distributed to everyone who is working on the case. The list's function is not only to keep track of the various projects, but also to serve as a checklist by which persons working on the case can measure their responsibilities.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral Overview

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
A Trial Planning Tools and Resources

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.03

§ 25.03 Preparing a Statement of Claims and/or Defenses

In plannning for trial, it generally is beneficial to prepare a statement of each cause of action and/or defense that is raised in the action. Such a statement generally should include:

- A breakdown of each element of the claims or defenses
- A brief identification of the various ways in which each element is to be established

A statement of claims or defenses will help to avoid potential oversights in any case going to trial. Often, claims or defenses subtly change through the course of litigation. Decisions affecting the strategy for establishing the elements of a claim or defense are also subject to change. Strong witnesses may supplant weak ones as more depositions or statements are taken. Documents and demonstrative evidence, such as photographs or engineering plans, may be used to buttress or even replace live testimony. As a result, a regular review of the statement of claims and defenses will allow for timely and meaningful decisions in your trial preparation strategy.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral Overview

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
A Trial Planning Tools and Resources

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.04

§ 25.04 Formulating a Case Theme

[1] Presenting the Case in a Persuasive Manner

The central case theme is the overarching story that explains the case. Often, the successful construction of a convincing theme is more important than the strict analysis of the elements of each claim or defense. It is critical to decide on a perspective from which to present the facts, and then to explain every aspect of the case in a way that is consistent with that perspective. The theme of the case will impact all aspects of litigation including the original pleadings, pretrial conference planning, discovery, and motion practice. Ultimately, the theme of the case will determine what evidence is presented in what order at trial to best persuade the trier of fact.

[2] Advancing the Theme at Trial

The case theme should act as a centerpiece of trial presentation and may be advanced in the following ways:

- Opening Statement. The theme of the case should determine what evidence is to be mentioned in the opening statement, in what order, and with what emphasis

- Expert Testimony. This is one of the most common and usually the most effective ways to promote nonevidentiary themes since experts deal in opinions and the reasons for those opinions, or the philosophy underlying the opinions n1

- Testimony by Other Witnesses. Themes can also be advanced by fact witnesses

- Documents. The case theme may be illustrated or even specifically argued from documents that are admissible for other reasons

- Innuendo. Themes often can be advanced as elements incidental to other evidence, questions, or colloquy

- Closing Argument. Because you are permitted to discuss not only the evidence but also the inferences and innuendos arising from it, closing argument provides a final opportunity to advance the case theme

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsClosing ArgumentsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsAdmissibility

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Federal Rules of Evidence 703, 704, and 705 provide the relevant parameters governing the admissibility of expert testimony.

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
A Trial Planning Tools and Resources

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.05

§ 25.05 Maintaining a Trial Notebook Throughout Litigation

Trial notebooks are often helpful to organize a case for trial. The precise format of the trial notebook will vary from case to case. Often it will consist of binders with separate sections delineated for easy access at trial. Some practitioners use both binders and electronic files that may be accessed on a laptop computer. The trial notebook will evolve as trial preparation progresses and it may include:

- "To-Do" List. This section includes a record of tasks to be performed in preparation of trial n1
- Chronology. A short chronology of events that emphasizes the theme of the case
- Statement of Claims and/or Defenses. A basic checklist of the items to be proved or explored that includes a breakdown of each element of the claims or defenses with identification of the various ways in which each element is to be established at trial n2
- Complaint. A copy of the complaint
- Responsive Pleadings/Motions/Answers. Copies of pleadings in response to the complaint
- Key Documents. Documents that are critical to the factual or legal development of the case
- Law. Copies of critical cases or points of law, along with notes and memoranda
- Interrogatory Answers/Answers to Requests for Admission/Key Documents. Significant documents produced or disclosed during the course of discovery
- Deposition Outlines/Summaries. Outlines for the most significant remaining depositions and abstracts of the more significant depositions taken to date
- Opening Statement. A draft or an outline of the opening statement
- Order of Proof. A checklist of the order of presentation of argument and evidence at trial

- Examination Outlines for Individual Witnesses. A separate section for each witness with relevant documents, discovery responses, and deposition testimony (if the witness is going to authenticate a critical document, the specific questions laying the proper evidentiary foundation should be attached to the individual exhibits in that witness' folder)

- Copies of Motion in Limine/Memoranda of Law. Appropriate motions with supporting legal authority to object to the introduction of evidence or testimony that may be considered improper or prejudicial

- Draft Instructions/Forms of Verdict. Copies of relevant jury instructions and forms of verdict

- Notes for Closing Argument. Notes of points that should be stressed or answered in closing argument

- Final Pretrial Order. The final pretrial order governs who may be called as witnesses; may contain binding stipulations; and may limit the questions, evidence, exhibits, and legal theories to be presented at trial

The trial notebook takes different forms depending on the type of case, the size of the legal team handling the case, and its stage of development. The notebook is a single reference point to which you should be able to turn at any time and under any circumstances for information as to the essential elements and problems of the case.

From a practical standpoint, since the trial notebook typically will contain an enormous amount of counsel's thoughts and work product, counsel should maintain a backup copy of all the contents of the notebook.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 25.02 supra.

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 25.03 supra.

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
A Trial Planning Tools and Resources

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.06

§ 25.06 Evaluating the Importance of the Final Pretrial Order

The critical importance of the final pretrial order cannot be overemphasized: the final pretrial order supersedes the pleadings; governs who may be called as witnesses (and possibly impeachment witnesses and rebuttal witnesses); may contain binding stipulations; and may limit the questions, evidence, exhibits, and legal theories to be presented at trial. n1 Matters not preserved in the final pretrial order are eliminated from the case. n2 Thus, a witness not disclosed prior to the entry of the order may be precluded from testifying, n3 and documents not previously identified may not be permitted to be introduced at trial. n4

Great care is required in preparing the final pretrial order, as many, if not most, judges will insist that it be followed with precision. The trial court, but not the parties, has a certain amount of latitude to deviate from final pretrial order. n5 If counsel is required to prepare the order, the individual judge's rules should be consulted. In general, a final pretrial order should clearly state the following: n6

- Facts establishing jurisdiction and venue
- A statement of the case
- The date and time that the trial will commence
- All rulings made at the final pretrial conference
- A summary of all factual and legal issues to be tried, and any issues to be severed and tried separately
- Witnesses to be called
- Expert witnesses to be called, and a summary of their qualifications
- Exhibits to be presented at trial; identification of exhibits to be admitted without objection, and summary of any objections

- Discovery excerpts from stenographic and video depositions, responses to interrogatories, and requests for admission
- Undisputed facts and judicially noticed facts
- Order of proof, including procedures for presenting testimony and exhibits
- Whether additional or specified evidence is precluded
- Procedures for selection, management, and instruction of jury, including deadlines for submitting proposed voir dire questions and jury instructions
- Any objections that are sustained, denied, or deemed waived
- Estimated length of trial
- Verdict stipulations

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesFinal Pretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Pretrial conferences and orders are discussed in detail in ch. 27.

(n2)Footnote 2. See Southern Cal. Retail Clerks Union v. Bjorklund, 728 F.2d 1262, 1264 (9th Cir. 1984) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Geiserman v. MacDonald, 893 F.2d 787, 791 (5th Cir. 1990) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Devices for Medicine, Inc. v. Boehl, 822 F.2d 1062, 1067 (Fed. Cir. 1987) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See HBE Leasing Corp. v. Frank, 22 F.3d 41, 45 (2d Cir. 1994) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See, e.g., Manual for Complex Litigation (Third), §§ 21.67, 40.3, 41.63 (1995).

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
A Trial Planning Tools and Resources

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 25.07through 25.10

[Reserved]

§§ 25.07[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
B Burden of Proof at Trial

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.11

§ 25.11 Understanding Burden of Proof

[1] Evaluating Burden of Going Forward

If at trial a party fails to adduce sufficient proof as a matter of law for any claim or defense at issue, the party may fail to meet the burden of going forward with that claim or defense. Under Rule 50(a), federal trial courts have a procedure for avoiding the time and expense of a jury trial on issues or claims for which there is insufficient proof as a matter of law. n1 If the trial court decides there is insufficient evidence to find for a party on an issue, the court may determine that issue against that party and grant a Rule 50(a) motion for judgment against that party with respect to a claim or defense that, under controlling law, cannot be maintained or defeated without a finding on that issue before the case is submitted to the jury. n2

[2] Satisfying the Burden of Going Forward

It is virtually impossible to define the nature or to quantify the amount of evidence that is sufficient to satisfy the burden of going forward. Clearly, some evidence, whether it be direct or circumstantial, must be adduced in support of the proposition at issue. The sufficiency of the evidence is tested by its probative value, not by its volume. A "scintilla" of evidence will not suffice to create a jury question, especially on an issue as to which the burden of proof belongs to the party opposing a motion for judgment as a matter of law. n3 The evidence adduced generally must be such that a reasonable person could draw from it an inference of the existence of the particular fact to be proved.

The problem of insufficient evidence usually arises in situations where proof of an essential element of a case must be made by inference from circumstantial evidence. Generally, no problem occurs when direct evidence is relied on in support of a proposition. Except in rare cases, such as those in which a witness' testimony is flatly contradicted by physical facts, or the testimony on its face is not believable, the testimony of even one witness may be enough to satisfy the burden of going forward. This is true even when the testimony of the witness is in dispute. However, the credibility of the witness or his or her persuasive qualities relate to the burden of persuasion, and not usually to the burden of producing evidence. Similarly, facts appearing in an admissible document or other evidentiary exhibit generally are sufficient even when challenged.

If the opposing party fails to meet the burden of going forward, counsel should make a Rule 50(a) motion for judgment as a matter of law at the close of the opposing party's case, keeping in mind that the court will view the evidence in the light most favorable to the opponent. n4 This motion should clearly state how the evidence is deficient. n5

If initially denied, a motion for judgment as a matter of law should be renewed at the close of trial and after an unfavorable verdict. Failure to do so will jeopardize post-trial and appellate rights. n6

[3] Evaluating Burden of Persuasion

In a civil case, the party with the burden of proof generally must persuade the jury that a certain proposition is more likely true than untrue. The probative value of the evidence, the wording of the jury instructions, and the jury's reaction to the respective parties and their case will all combine to determine which party has carried the burden of persuasion.

[4] Satisfying the Burden of Persuasion

In federal courts, proof by a preponderance means proof that leads the jury to find, after considering all evidence, that a fact in controversy is more likely true than not, otherwise termed the "preponderance of probability." While the preponderance test will apply in most cases in federal court, counsel is cautioned to determine the level of proof that will be required as to each contested issue at trial and to tailor evidentiary presentations and argument to meet or defeat the applicable standard. In a diversity case, the applicable burden is generally a matter of state law. n7

[5] Allocating Burden of Proof Based on Burden of Pleading

In most cases, the party who has the burden of pleading a fact will also have both the burden of going forward and the burden of persuasion. The pleadings, therefore, will provide a useful road map in apportioning the burdens of proof.

Looking to the pleadings to determine the allocation of the burdens, however, is not foolproof. In some situations the burdens do not follow the pleadings. For example, under Rule 8(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, contributory negligence is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded by the defendant. Where federal jurisdiction is based on diversity and the applicable state substantive law requires the plaintiff to prove due care or lack of contributory negligence, the burden of producing evidence and persuading the trier may rest with the plaintiff, irrespective of who has the burden of pleading. n8

Finally, reference to which party has pleaded a claim or defense may be irrelevant in a matter of first impression where there are no established pleading rules. In such circumstances, allocation of the burdens will depend on a number of factors, including:

- The natural tendency to place the burden on the plaintiff as the party initiating the action
- Policy considerations
- Convenience
- Fairness, such as placing the burdens on a party who has the only available knowledge or information concerning an issue

As a practical matter, counsel should never knowingly fail to introduce evidence essential to any claim or defense based on a belief that the court will ultimately determine that the opposing party has the burden of proof.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsBurdens of ProofGeneral

OverviewEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsBurdens of ProofAllocationEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsBurdens of ProofBurden ShiftingEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsBurdens of ProofUltimate Burden of Persuasion

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(a); see ch. 38 infra.

(n3)Footnote 3. Bailey v. Board of County Comm'rs, 956 F.2d 1112, 1119 (11th Cir. 1992) ; Veranda Beach Club v. Western Sur. Co., 936 F.2d 1364, 1375 (1st Cir. 1991) . See also McCormick on Evidence, § 338; 9 MOORE'S Federal Practice, § 50.02[2] (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

(n4)Footnote 4. Jones v. Century Oil U.S.A., Inc., 957 F.2d 84, 85 (3d Cir. 1992) ; Fane v. Zimmer, Inc., 927 F.2d 124, 128 (2d Cir. 1991) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Price v. Lockheed Space Operations Co., 856 F.2d 1503, 1505 n.6 (11th Cir. 1988) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Windsor Shirt Co. v. New Jersey Nat'l Bank, 793 F. Supp. 589, 594 (E.D. Pa. 1992) .

(n7)Footnote 7. McEwen v. Delta Air Lines, Inc., 919 F.2d 58, 59 (7th Cir. 1990) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Palmer v. Hoffman, 318 U.S. 109, 116-117, 63 S. Ct. 477, 87 L. Ed. 645 (1943) . See 2A Moore's Federal Practice, § 8.27[2] (Matthew Bender).

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
B Burden of Proof at Trial

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.12

§ 25.12 Evaluating Manners of Proof

Well before trial commences, counsel must become familiar with the legal elements of the claims or defenses and prepare to adduce legally sufficient evidence at trial to prove each of those elements. At trial, a party must prove each element of the claim or defense in one of the following ways:

- By law or legal presumption
- By one of the traditional evidentiary resources (testimony, documents, judicial admissions, etc.)
- By inference derived from either or both of the foregoing

Counsel should pay particular attention to those elements of the claim or defense which can or seemingly must be proved by inference only. Is inference enough? Does the direct evidence really support the intended inference? Should an expert be used to draw the inference for the trier of fact? Most importantly, how do you make it clear to the court or jury that this inferential element of the case, on which the direct evidence is silent, is being or has been proved?

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsBurdens of ProofGeneral OverviewEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsBurdens of ProofAllocationEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsBurdens of ProofBurden ShiftingEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsCircumstantial & Direct Evidence

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
B Burden of Proof at Trial

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.13

§ 25.13 Considering Legal Presumptions When Preparing for Trial

[1] Understanding Presumptions

A presumption is a procedural rule affecting the finder of fact. Under this rule, if a basic fact is established, then the fact-finder must accept that the presumed fact has also been established, unless the presumption is rebutted. n1 Failure to present sufficient evidence to create a presumption may result in the case being taken from the jury when the presumed fact is one of the elements of a particular claim. n2 However, a "presumption is not evidence and may not be given weight as evidence." n3

Although a presumption is not a form of evidence, it has evidentiary value. A presumption can have the effect of shifting the burden of going forward, the burden of persuasion, or both. Presumptions serve one or more of four distinct functions: n4

- They serve to "avoid a factual impasse" when direct proof of a fact is unavailable
- They shift the burden of persuasion on an issue
- They permit the judge to instruct the jury on the relationship between facts
- They allocate burdens of production

[2] Distinguishing Presumptions from Inferences

An inference is distinguished from a presumption in that in an inference, the existence of a particular fact may be deduced from the existence of another fact by the ordinary rules of reasoning and logic whereas in a presumption, the existence of a particular fact must be assumed because of a rule of law. n5 For example, in most jurisdictions the tort rule of res ipsa loquitur provides that if certain basic facts are proven, a jury may--but need not--find negligence. It is an inference (permissive), not a presumption (mandatory).

[3] Presumption Generally Shifts Burden of Going Forward With Evidence, Not Burden of Persuasion

Under Rule 301 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, the effect of a presumption is to shift to the other party the burden of production, that is, the burden of going forward with evidence to rebut or meet the presumption. A party's failure to meet this burden of production may result in the case being taken from the jury. n6 Evidence presented to rebut a presumption generally must be sufficient to overcome a directed verdict. n7

Under Rule 301, a presumption does not shift the burden of persuasion or the "burden of proof in the sense of nonpersuasion," that is, the degree to which a party must prove each element of the case. That burden remains on the party on whom it was originally cast. n8 Thus, once the presumption arises, the party opposing the presumption need only come forward with sufficient evidence to avoid a directed verdict. After this amount of rebuttal evidence is presented, the presumption disappears from the case. n9

As a practical matter, counsel must pay close attention to the jury charges concerning a presumption to ensure that the burdens of production and persuasion are kept separate and are properly allocated. n10

[4] Evaluating Standards of Proof for Presumptions

Rule 301 says nothing about how much evidence is needed to create a presumption that will shift the burden of production. However, the presumed facts in most civil cases must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. n11 The type of evidence required to establish the presumed fact, and create the presumption, varies depending on the issues involved. The courts have, in many cases, set forth specific elements that must be shown to invoke a particular presumption. n12

As explicitly acknowledged in Rule 301, Congress may provide that a higher standard of proof apply to some presumptions. n13 The courts may require a standard of proof higher than mere probability with respect to a presumed proposition of fact if the cause of action is one that, as a matter of substantive policy, requires proof by more than a preponderance. For example, a denaturalization case, while technically a civil litigation, requires "clear, unequivocal, and convincing" evidence. n14 Civil commitment, n15 libel, n16 and deportation n17 cases also require a standard of proof higher than a preponderance of the evidence.

However, exceptions to the preponderance of the evidence standard used in most civil cases, are "uncommon," n18 and are ordinarily "reserved to protect particularly important interests in a limited number of civil cases." n19

[5] Rebutting Presumptions

Rule 301 says nothing about how much evidence is needed to rebut a presumption, n20 although the evidence necessary to rebut will be less than the burden of persuasion in the case. The opponent of the presumed fact, in order to rebut, generally has the burden of presenting enough evidence so that a reasonable jury could be convinced of the non-existence of the presumed fact. n21 This evidentiary requirement has been variously described as the need to come forward with "only some evidence" n22 or the amount of evidence "that would be sufficient to overcome a directed verdict." n23

[6] Considering Presumptions in Diversity Cases

Under Rule 302, the federal court must apply state law, rather than federal procedural law, to determine the existence and effect of a presumption concerning a fact that is an element of a claim or defense that has its source in state law. n24 Since it is limited to presumptions concerning facts that "are an element of a claim or defense," the rule applies only when the presumption operates as a rule of substantive law. n25

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceInferences & PresumptionsGeneral OverviewEvidenceInferences &

PresumptionsPresumptionsEffectsEvidenceInferences & PresumptionsPresumptionsRebuttal of PresumptionsEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsBurdens of ProofGeneral OverviewEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsWeight & Sufficiency

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Cammer v. Bloom, 711 F. Supp. 1264, 1290 & n.45 (D.N.J. 1989) , appeal dismissed, 993 F.2d 875 (1993) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Klein v. Trustees of Indiana Univ., 766 F.2d 275, 280-281 (7th Cir. 1985) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Routen v. West, 142 F.3d 1434, 1439 (Fed. Cir. 1998) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Allen, Presumptions in Civil Actions Reconsidered, 66 Iowa L. Rev. 843, 845 (1981).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Herbert v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 911 F.2d 1044, 1047 (5th Cir. 1990) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Louisell, Construing Rule 301: Instructing the Jury on Presumptions in Civil Actions and Proceedings, 63 Va. L. Rev. 281, 286 (1977).

(n7)Footnote 7. See Sinatra v. Heckler, 566 F. Supp. 1354, 1359-1360 (E.D.N.Y. 1983) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Wards Cove Packing Co. v. Atonio, 490 U.S. 642, 659-660, 109 S. Ct. 2115, 104 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1989) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See America Online, Inc. v. AT & T Corp., 243 F.3d 812, 818 (4th Cir. 2001) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See Sharp v. Coopers & Lybrand, 649 F.2d 175, 186, 189 n. 21 (3d Cir. 1981) , cert. denied, 455 U.S. 938 (1982) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 253, 109 S. Ct. 1775, 104 L. Ed. 2d 268 (1989) .

(n12)Footnote 12. See St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 U.S. 502, 508-509, 113 S. Ct. 2742, 125 L. Ed. 2d 407 (1993) .

(n13)Footnote 13. See Alabama By-Products. Corp. v. Killingsworth, 733 F.2d 1511, 1514 (11th Cir. 1984) .

(n14)Footnote 14. See California ex rel. Cooper v. Mitchell Brothers' Santa Ana Theater, 454 U.S. 90, 93 n.6, 102 S. Ct. 172, 70 L. Ed. 2d 262 (1981) .

(n15)Footnote 15. See Addington v. Texas, 441 U.S. 418, 428, 99 S. Ct. 1804, 60 L. Ed. 2d 323 (1979) .

(n16)Footnote 16. See Rosenbloom v. Metromedia, Inc., 403 U.S. 29, 50, 91 S. Ct. 1811, 29 L. Ed. 2d 296 (1971) .

(n17)Footnote 17. See Woodby v. INS, 385 U.S. 276, 285-286, 87 S. Ct. 483, 17 L. Ed. 2d 362 (1966) .

(n18)Footnote 18. See Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 253, 109 S. Ct. 1775, 104 L. Ed. 2d 268 (1989) .

(n19)Footnote 19. See California ex rel. Cooper v. Mitchell Brothers' Santa Ana Theater, 454 U.S. 90, 93, 102 S. Ct. 172, 70 L. Ed. 2d 262 (1981) .

(n20)Footnote 20. See Fed. R. Evid. 301.

(n21)Footnote 21. See North Mississippi Communications, Inc. v. Jones, 874 F.2d 1064, 1069 (5th Cir. 1989) .

(n22)Footnote 22. See Clay v. Traders Bank, 708 F.2d 1347, 1351 (8th Cir. 1983) .

(n23)Footnote 23. See Sinatra v. Heckler, 566 F. Supp. 1354, 1359-1360 (E.D.N.Y. 1983) .

(n24)Footnote 24. Fed. R. Evid. 302.

(n25)Footnote 25. See National Indus., Inc. v. Republic Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 677 F.2d 1258, 1266 (9th Cir. 1982) .

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
B Burden of Proof at Trial

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.14

§ 25.14 Considering Inferences as Manner of Proof

[1] Understanding Inferences

Inference has been defined as "the process of reasoning by which a fact or proposition sought to be established is deduced as a logical consequence from other facts, or state of facts, already proved or admitted." n1 The determination of a fact by inference is not unique to the judicial process. Since many of the assumed facts on which we base our everyday existence are derived by inference, the chief pitfalls to be avoided with respect to inference issues are overconfidence by the plaintiff and a failure of critical examination by the defendant in assuming that an apparent inference is really valid.

[2] Arguing Issues That Depend on Inference

Issues that depend on inference should be supported by testimony and the introduction of relevant evidence, as well as by specific argument regarding the reference. The judge or jury must not be left in doubt on those issues. While argument in this context refers primarily to closing arguments, it also refers to opening statements and to argument of any objections to which the inference is relevant.

[3] Judge May Indicate that Inference May Be Drawn From Evidence

The judge may indicate to the jury the inferences that may rationally be drawn from evidence before it. n2 If an inference may be drawn from the nonproduction of evidence or of a witness, the trial court should make certain that its suggestion of a hypothesis is reasonable and that in any event the jury is aware that it is free to draw its own conclusions. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceInferences & PresumptionsGeneral OverviewEvidenceInferences & PresumptionsInferencesEvidenceInferences & PresumptionsPresumptionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Computer Identics Corp. v. Southern Pac. Co., 756 F.2d 200, 204 (1st Cir. 1985) ; Greiner v.

Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft, 429 F. Supp. 495, 498 (E.D. Pa. 1977) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fook v. United States, 164 F.2d 716, 717 (D.C. Cir. 1947) , cert. denied, 333 U.S. 838 (1948) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See United States v. Lawrenson, 298 F.2d 880, 885 (4th Cir. 1962) , cert. denied, 370 U.S. 947 (1962) .

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
B Burden of Proof at Trial

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 25.15through 25.19

[Reserved]

§§ 25.15[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
C Forms of Proof

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.20

§ 25.20 Considering the Importance of Witness Testimony at Trial

[1] Preparing for Use of Witness Testimony at Trial

Because live testimony involves an individual and the human interest associated with an individual's personal recollection of events, it is the most effective of all the evidentiary tools. Careful trial planning requires the preparation of witness questions to be asked on direct examination, as well as the drafting of anticipated questions for cross-examination. As the litigation progresses, pertinent witness questions will arise and may be compiled in the trial notebook or other trial planning resources that may be used.

Pretrial preparation of witnesses is a critical part of planning for trial. A live witness sustains interest and projects a personality with which the court and the jury can identify. Unlike a document or other exhibit, a live witness can perceive and correct misunderstandings or ambiguities and can moderate his or her tone and demeanor to suit the circumstances of the moment. n1 Parties and friendly witnesses should be apprised of the importance of their testimony, and they should have an understanding of how their testimony fits into the overall theme of the case.

[2] Evaluating Witness Credibility

To properly plan for trial, counsel must evaluate the credibility of the parties and witnesses who are likely to testify at trial. Depositions generally are the best method to evaluate a witness' credibility. Depositions not only give counsel a first-hand opportunity to determine witness credibility, they may also provide relevant testimony for impeachment purposes at trial.

A live witness is subject to cross-examination and may be caught in, and ruthlessly embarrassed by, falsehoods and inconsistencies. The witness' personality may not be attractive because he or she is argumentative, boastful, crude, insincere, deceptive, or, worse yet, dishonest. A skillful cross-examiner usually can exploit these personality traits before the trier of fact. Moreover, uncorroborated oral testimony may be the flimsiest of all evidence. Without support from documents or other corroborating evidence, live testimony may be perceived as entirely fabricated, and the success of your entire case will depend on what the fact finder concludes about the credibility of the witness.

[3] Preparing to Use Deposition Testimony at Trial

Not all testimony is presented "live." Deposition transcripts must sometimes be used to present testimony under oath to the jury. n2 Deposition testimony is often a weak form of evidence and it may have limited impact on the trier of fact. Even when properly read, deposition testimony may come across as bland. There are many reasons for this: the witness is not present; personality may emerge only through words read by someone else; and, unlike a document that the judge and the jury can see and feel, those words are merely heard. When it is anticipated that deposition testimony will be needed for trial due to the unavailability of the witness for trial, a videotaped deposition should be considered.

Nevertheless, deposition testimony must occasionally be used. There are even occasions when its use is desirable. For example, if the character of a witness is in question or if the witness' appearance is distracting or suggests untrustworthiness, counsel may prefer to present the witness' testimony by reading the deposition transcript.

If a significant amount of deposition testimony is to be read, counsel should plan to intersperse other more absorbing and interesting types of evidence. Counsel should also edit the transcript carefully to eliminate irrelevant material. Finally, the questions and especially the testimony of the recorded witness should be read by individuals who are both familiar with the transcript and capable of reading it as though the words were being spoken spontaneously by a live witness sitting on the witness stand. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsDepositionsEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsObjections & Offers of ProofOffers of ProofEvidenceTestimonyGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityRehabilitation

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See ch. 33 infra.

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 33.15 infra.

(n3)Footnote 3. See discussion in § 33.15 infra.

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
C Forms of Proof

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.21

§ 25.21 Preparing to Offer Documents at Trial

[1] Evaluating Strength of Documents for Trial

Documents generated in the course of the events or transaction that are the subject-matter of the lawsuit--as distinguished from demonstrative or other exhibits specially prepared for the litigation--are an extremely effective form of evidence, especially if they corroborate the testimony of key witnesses. Throughout the course of litigation, counsel should flag all documents that may eventually be offered at trial.

Documents are critical at trial because they can be seen and physically handled by the jury. With the exception of forgeries, documents are immutable; unlike human beings, documents do not forget. Documents can be taken into the jury room or to the judge's chambers, and if the testimony of the witness is either forgotten or confused, the language of the documents is still there, available to be read by all.

[2] Seeking Stipulations of Admissibility of Documents Before Trial

Whenever possible, obtain stipulations of admissibility or of authenticity in advance in order to reduce the time required to lay a foundation for their use at trial. If you are unable to obtain such a stipulation and contemplate an objection to the admission of a document, prepare appropriate motions in limine and other pretrial motions.

[3] Presenting Documents at Trial

Counsel should keep in mind some basic principles relating to the presentation of documents: n1

- Present the documents in the most logical and informative sequence, i.e., in such a way that the background necessary to understand them is available at the time they are presented and read

- A document is best presented by a witness who can place it in the chronological sequence of relevant testimony and explain what the document is, why it was written, and even what it says

- If several critical documents will be used extensively at trial, refer to the individual documents with an easily remembered shorthand name (use of a name, such as the "Reed memo" or the "Krause report," will create a more memorable connection between the document itself and the testimony or argument that relates to it)

- Even if copies of a document are distributed to the jury, the key passages should be read aloud so that the jurors can see and hear the relevant words simultaneously

- In the case of particularly important or complicated documents, consider enlargened forms of visual presentation (such as with an overhead projector or other electronic means) in conjunction with oral reading from the document and/or distribution of "hard" copies to the jury

- During the closing argument, physically display to the jury the critical documents that have been admitted into evidence and read the relevant passages which support the relevant claims or defense

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceWritingsGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceWritingsTranscripts & TranslationsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. These and other techniques relating to the presentation of documents are considered in detail in ch. 34 infra .

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
C Forms of Proof

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.22

§ 25.22 Preparing to Use Demonstrative Exhibits at Trial

[1] Generating Demonstrative Exhibits for Trial

Demonstrative exhibits are those exhibits prepared specifically for use at trial, usually for the purpose of explaining or simplifying some aspects of the factual background of the case. Demonstrative exhibits include those that use words or numbers (charts, tables, graphs, etc.), as well as those that use illustrations or physical representations (pictures, drawings, models, electronic reanactments through use of special computer software, mock-ups, etc.).

Physical or illustrative exhibits present their own problems of authentication and presentation, but if properly prepared and handled, they can save thousands of words and prevent confusion. On the other hand, written or numerical demonstrative exhibits present all of the problems of the ordinary documents, and more. Having been prepared specially for the lawsuit, demonstrative exhibits of this type are particularly vulnerable to claims, suggestions, or suspicions of bias. By definition, they deal with a complicated subject. Worse yet, in the technical, financial, and statistical areas, they deal with subjects beyond the experience of the average juror or judge.

[2] Planning the Introduction of Demonstrative Evidence

As with documentary evidence in general, many of the problems associated with demonstrative exhibits can be minimized. Consider the following:

- Demonstrative exhibits should always be introduced by a witness who not only authenticates them, but also explains their substance and their format, such as scale, calibrations and headings

- Each demonstrative exhibit should be as simple as possible; three simple charts explaining a given set of propositions in logical sequence are better than a single more complicated chart that combines all the information

- Demonstrative exhibits should be carefully planned from the perspective of one who comes to the case and its factual background essentially "cold"

- Remember that demonstrative exhibits may be excluded if they are found to be cumulative, confusing, a waste of time, or if they unduly emphasize certain aspects of the proponent's case n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceAdmissibilityEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceComputer-Generated EvidenceEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceFoundational RequirementsEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceWritingsSummaries

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Evid. 403.

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
C Forms of Proof

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.23

§ 25.23 Sources of Admissions for Use at Trial

At trial, counsel must utilize the full arsenal of evidence to enhance the persuasiveness of the case, to facilitate the introduction of other evidence, and to avoid wasting trial time. The effective presentation of a case at trial involves not only the skillful presentation of exhibits and testimony that are competent, relevant, and material, but also the effective use of admissions and stipulations.

Admissions are the words of a party opponent offered into evidence against that party. Admissions are excluded from the category of inadmissible hearsay and play a valuable role in the trial of a lawsuit by eliminating issues or facilitating proof of matters in dispute. The following sources of admissions should be considered in preparation for trial:

- Statements made in the pleadings
- Responses to formal requests to admit
- Statements contained in documents
- Responses to interrogatories
- Answers to deposition questions

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceHearsayExemptionsStatements by Party OpponentsGeneral OverviewEvidenceJudicial AdmissionsGeneral OverviewEvidenceRelevanceGeneral Overview

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
C Forms of Proof

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.24

§ 25.24 Using Admissions Made in Pleadings at Trial

The final pleadings on which a case is tried define the fact issues on which proof must be adduced at trial. The court will look to the pleadings as part of the record in passing on the relevancy of evidence and in determining what issues should be submitted to the jury for decision. When used for these purposes, the pleadings may constitute judicial admissions and are treated similarly to Rule 36 admissions.

Therefore, before the start of trial, always review the allegations of the complaint along with the admissions and denials contained in the answer. Many times basic facts such as dates, locations, and ownership are admitted in the initial pleadings. This, of course, obviates the necessity for proof at trial. If a pleading or any allegation therein is amended, withdrawn, or superseded by a substitute pleading, it ceases to be a judicial admission but it may be introduced as an evidentiary admission. n1

Admissions contained in pleadings are judicial admissions, unless the admission is contained in an alternative or hypothetical pleading. n2 Also keep in mind that a party's pleading in one case, whether final or later withdrawn, can be used as an evidentiary admission in other litigation. n3

Although a verified pleading usually is considered to be part of the record without the need for formal introduction, do not wait until closing argument to discuss an admission contained in a pleading. Counsel can gain several tactical advantages by introducing such an admission during the presentation of the evidence: you can immediately ask for, and usually get, an instruction regarding the significance of the admission; you may be able to use the admission as compelling on-the-spot corroboration of other evidence in your case thereby imbuing all of your evidence with an added aura of accuracy; and such an admission may facilitate the introduction of additional evidence or may be a necessary predicate for a presumption or inference needed to avoid a directed verdict.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceJudicial AdmissionsPleadingsEvidenceRelevanceGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Sunkyong Int'l, Inc. v. Anderson Land & Livestock Co., 828 F.2d 1245, 1249 (8th Cir. 1987) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See 2 Weinstein's Federal Evidence, § 410.09 (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

(n3)Footnote 3. Dugan v. EMS Helicopters, Inc., 915 F.2d 1428, 1432 (10th Cir. 1990) .

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
C Forms of Proof

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.25

§ 25.25 Using Rule 36 Admissions at Trial

[1] Requesting Admission of Undisputed Facts

Requests for admission n1 are written requests seeking admission of facts about which there is no real dispute. n2 Requests may be directed to any party to the action, including co-parties and adverse parties, n3 and they may call for the admission of any of the following: n4

- Statements of fact
- Opinions of fact
- The application of law to facts
- The genuineness of documents

[2] Understanding the Effect of Admissions under Rule 36

An admission made under Rule 36 may be used as a judicial admission only in the pending action. n5 Moreover, an admission binds only the specific party to whom the request is directed. n6 Even if the requesting party offers admitted facts into evidence, the requesting party may also offer more favorable or contradictory evidence. n7 Matters admitted in accordance with Rule 36, whether explicitly admitted or admitted by default, are conclusively established for purposes of the pending action, unless the court, on motion, permits the withdrawal or amendment of the admission. n8

A matter that is deemed admitted requires no further proof. n9 Any matter conclusively established is treated as a judicial admission, not an evidentiary admission. An admission under Rule 36 is comparable to an admission in a pleading or a stipulation drafted by counsel for use at trial, as opposed to an evidentiary admission of a party for use at trial.

[3] Presenting Admissions to the Jury

A Rule 36 admission may be used at trial in any way that will further the case or facilitate introduction of other evidence. Admissions regarding facts may be read to the jury at the appropriate time or may be marked as exhibits for introduction into evidence. If an answer to a request admits the authenticity of a document, counsel may proceed to introduce the document and need not either read the admission or call a sponsoring witness. However, the jury may not fully comprehend the significance of admissions that are simply shuffled to them with numerous other documentary exhibits, and the better practice generally is to read the admissions to the jury.

On the other hand, if the admission is signed by the opposing party, counsel may want to have that party read the admission to the jury during cross-examination, after an appropriate foundation has been laid. The jury will not soon forget a damaging admission read to them by a party who has conceded the harmful fact. In closing argument, when you refer to that fact, you can remind the jurors that they heard the admission directly from the opposing party.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsWithdrawalsCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceJudicial AdmissionsPleadings

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Requests to admit are discussed in detail in ch. 19.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36.

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a); Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(a).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); Kohler v. Leslie Hindman, Inc., 80 F.3d 1181, 1185 (7th Cir. 1996) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); Riberglass, Inc. v. Techni-Glass Indus., Inc., 811 F.2d 565, 566-567 (11th Cir. 1987) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); Brook Village North Assocs. v. General Elec. Co., 686 F.2d 66, 75 (1st Cir. 1982) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36(b); Local Union No. 38, Sheet Metal Workers' Int'l Ass'n v. Tripodi, 913 F. Supp. 290, 294 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Herrera v. Scully, 143 F.R.D. 545, 550 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) .

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
C Forms of Proof

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.26

§ 25.26 Using Interrogatory Admissions at Trial

[1] Offering Interrogatory Answers Into Evidence

If you intend to rely on an admission contained in an interrogatory answer as evidence, you must introduce the answer into evidence. n1 Answers to interrogatories may be used at trial in much the same way as other pretrial statements of a party. The fact that interrogatory answers have been prepared by counsel, and not by the party, is not a ground for disregarding the answers. n2

An answer to an interrogatory may be introduced into evidence as an admission by a party-opponent since it is a statement which is excluded from the definition of hearsay by Federal Rule of Evidence 801(d)(2). n3 Objections to the admissibility of the interrogatory answer may be made at the time the answer is offered. n4 Such an admission is an evidentiary admission, which may be rebutted by the party against whom it is offered. n5 When there is a conflict between interrogatory answers and other admissions or evidence adduced at trial, it is up to the finder of fact to weigh all the evidence and resolve the conflict.

[2] Explaining the Significance of Interrogatory Answers to the Jury

Since the answers have been sworn to, there is no need to authenticate them before publishing them to the jury. However, it is important to explain to the jury the relevance of such answers. As a foundation, counsel can establish that the interrogatory responses are answers to questions which deal with the subject matter of the lawsuit, they are in writing, they are signed by the party, they are given under oath, and they were probably drafted with the assistance of counsel. Having the party who made the response read it to the jurors generally will have a far greater impact on them than if counsel reads it.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsAdmissionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsInterrogatoriesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsInterrogatoriesUseCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceHearsayExemptionsGeneral OverviewEvidenceHearsayExemptionsStatements by Party OpponentsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Heilig v. Studebaker Corp., 347 F.2d 686, 689 (10th Cir. 1965) ; Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Fotopoulos, 32 F.R.D. 333, 334 (D. Minn. 1963) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Victory Carriers, Inc. v. Stockton Stevedoring Co., 388 F.2d 955, 959 (9th Cir. 1968) . Interrogatories are discussed in general in ch. 12.

(n3)Footnote 3. See Gridiron Steel Co. v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 361 F.2d 791, 794 (6th Cir. 1966) ; Heilig v. Studebaker Steel Corp., 347 F.2d 686, 689 (10th Cir. 1965) ; Gadaleta v. Nederlandsch-Amerekaansche Stoomvart, 291 F.2d 212, 213 (2d Cir. 1961) ; 7 Moore's Federal Practice, § 33.160 (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

(n4)Footnote 4. Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Fotopoulos, 32 F.R.D. 333, 334 (D. Minn. 1963) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Hudson United Bank, 653 F.2d 766, 777 (3d Cir. 1981) .

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
C Forms of Proof

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.27

§ 25.27 Using Deposition Admissions at Trial

[1] Certifying Deposition Transcript Before Trial

When deciding whether to use a deposition as substantive evidence, counsel should carefully review Rules 30 and 32 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which govern the taking, filing and use of depositions at court proceedings. n1 This review will often occur during the preparation of your order of proof in advance of trial. Specifically, counsel should be sure that all depositions which are to be used at trial have been properly certified and filed by the court reporter who transcribed them.

[2] Reviewing Deposition Transcripts for Favorable Admissions

Whether the case involves one or 100 depositions, review of deposition transcripts is often an essential part of trial preparation. When searching a deposition transcript for favorable admissions or impeaching material, note specific page and line references along with the words used by the witness in the deposition. The page and line reference of the impeaching testimony may be noted in the margin of your planned cross-examination. The language of the statements may then be incorporated into the cross-examination of the witness. Impeachment of a witness with deposition testimony is much more effective when the witness is confronted with the exact words of a prior inconsistent statement.

[3] Impeaching Witness With Deposition Admissions

Admissions made by a party-opponent in a deposition are often used most effectively on cross-examination. n2 Having a party-opponent confirm a damaging admission contained in a deposition is probably the most effective way of presenting it to the trier of fact. If the party-opponent is not available for trial, the testimony containing the admission should be read to the jury.

The most important fact to remember about admissions is that they may be read or otherwise presented to the jury at any time. Thus, a genuine and self-contained admission included in a deposition may be read to the jury at any time, in isolation from other portions of the deposition. This can be a particularly effective impeachment device.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsOral DepositionsCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceWritingsTranscripts & TranslationsDeposition TranscriptsEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentPrior Inconsistent Statements

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Depositions are discussed in detail in chs. 16, 17, and 18.

(n2)Footnote 2. Cross-examination is discussed in detail in ch. 35.

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
C Forms of Proof

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.28

§ 25.28 Using Stipulated Admissions at Trial

The strategic questions of when to use an admission and how to keep the admission fresh in the minds of the judge and jury most commonly arise in connection with stipulations. Since a stipulation conclusively establishes a given fact or resolves a given issue, repeated references or supplemental proof concerning that fact or issue are repetitive and usually objectionable. Thus, you might be precluded from commenting on a very favorable aspect of your case for much of the trial. In particular, if the trial court follows the practice of reading the stipulation of uncontested facts to the jury at the beginning of the trial, key admissions are likely to be forgotten by the jury, and if further references to the admission are prohibited, your only opportunity to comment on or argue the admission will be in opening statement and closing argument.

On request during the final pretrial conference, the court may well allow both sides to read any portion of the stipulation of uncontested facts to the jury at the point in the evidence where the particular stipulations are relevant, whether or not the court has read the entire stipulation to the jury at the beginning of the trial. Also, stipulations very often can form the predicate for questions and/or explanatory testimony.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsStipulationsCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceJudicial AdmissionsGeneral Overview

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
C Forms of Proof

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.29

§ 25.29 Considering the Use of Judicial Notice at Trial

[1] Understanding Judicial Notice

Facts in dispute generally are determined by the jury on the basis of evidence adduced by the parties and admitted into evidence by the trial judge. When facts are not subject to reasonable dispute, however, the court may take judicial notice of their existence.

Rule 201 of the Federal Rules of Evidence prescribes the instances in which, and the procedures by which, the court may take judicial notice of facts. n1 The rule relates only to adjudicative facts, which are facts about the particular event that gave rise to the lawsuit and explain who did what, when, where, how, and with what motive and intent. n2 To be judicially noticed under Rule 201, the facts must be either:

- Generally known within the local geographic area in which the trial court sits, or
- Capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned

There is no limitation on the kinds of facts that may be judicially noticed. Among the numerous matters of which courts take judicial notice are geographical facts, historical facts, medical facts, n3 matters relating to banking and government, n4 and the laws of the various states of the United States. n5 Judicial notice may also be taken even on appeal of records and decisions in other actions. n6

[2] Deciding Whether to Request Judicial Notice

Judicial notice may be taken at any time during the proceedings, including appeal. In a civil case, the facts that have been judicially noticed are established conclusively and the jury will be instructed that it must accept them as such. Adverse parties, on timely request, are entitled to be heard on the propriety of taking judicial notice of the matter proposed.

While Rule 201 empowers a court to take judicial notice, you should not request it unless taking judicial notice will save a substantial amount of trial time and then only if you are armed with authority that clearly demonstrates that judicial notice is proper under the circumstances. If your adversary is likely to oppose the taking of judicial notice, it may be a safer practice to prove the matter at trial, even though you believe that the trial judge may be disposed to grant your request. By doing so, you avoid the risk of reversal if an appellate court later finds that the matter should not have been judicially noticed. On the other hand, the opportunity to obtain judicial notice at any stage of the proceedings is particularly useful if you discover after your evidence is closed that you have omitted necessary evidence regarding well recognized facts. You may then request by motion that the court judicially notice those facts. In federal court, such a motion may be granted even when made for the first time on appeal.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceJudicial AdmissionsGeneral OverviewEvidenceJudicial NoticeGeneral OverviewEvidenceJudicial NoticeScientific & Technical Facts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Federal Rule of Evidence 201 provides:

> (a) Scope of rule.--This rule governs only judicial notice of adjudicative facts.
>
> (b) Kinds of facts.--A judicially noticed fact must be one not subject to reasonable dispute in that it is either (1) generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court or (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned.
>
> (c) When discretionary.--A court may take judicial notice, whether requested or not.
>
> (d) When mandatory.--A court shall take judicial notice if requested by a party and supplied with the necessary information.
>
> (e) Opportunity to be heard.--A party is entitled upon timely request to an opportunity to be heard as to the propriety of taking judicial notice and the tenor of the matter noticed. In the absence of prior notification, the request may be made after judicial notice has been taken.
>
> (f) Time of taking notice.--Judicial notice may be taken at any stage of the proceeding.
>
> (g) Instructing jury.--In a civil action or proceeding, the court shall instruct the jury to accept as conclusive any fact judicially noticed. In a criminal case, the court shall instruct the jury that it may, but is not required to, accept as conclusive any fact judicially noticed.

(n2)Footnote 2. Davis, Judicial Notice, 55 Colum. L. Rev. 945, 952 (1955), cited in the Committee Comments.

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., Steffan v. Cheney, 780 F. Supp. 1, 8 n.14 (D.D.C. 1991) (judicial notice of statistics concerning contracting of HIV).

(n4)Footnote 4. Jenkins v. Red Clay Consol. Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ., 780 F. Supp. 221, 234 (D. Del. 1991) , rev'd on other grounds, 4 F.3d 1103 (3d Cir. 1993) (judicial notice of racial discrimination); Harris Trust & Sav. Bank v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 767 F. Supp. 1269, 1279 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) , aff'd, 970 F.2d 1138 (2d Cir. 1992) , cert. granted, 507 U.S. 983 (1993) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Levy v. Scranton, 780 F. Supp. 897, 900 (N.D.N.Y. 1991) (judicial notice of legislative history).

(n6)Footnote 6. In re American Biomaterials Corp., 954 F.2d 919, 922 (3d Cir. 1992) (judicial notice of guilty plea).

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 25 Trial Planning and Preparation *
C Forms of Proof

3-25 Federal Litigation Guide § 25.30

§ 25.30 Preparing an Order of Proof

The order of proof reflects your plan for the presentation of your case. As reflected by the order of proof, the presentation must cover all of the "bases"--the elements of the claims or defenses--and must also advance the important themes to the maximum possible extent. The order of the presentation should sustain the fact finder's interest and it should open strong and finish strong.

In all but the very simplest of cases, this plan must be reduced to a writing known as an order of proof. The order of proof is within the court's discretion and will be addressed at the final pretrial conference. The plan typically identifies:

- Sequentially every witness to be called
- Every document to be introduced
- Every stipulation or admission to be read
- Every other event that will transpire as part of the presentation of the case

In reality, the sequence of the case will be at the mercy of the judge's and witnesses' schedules and of the inherent uncertainties in predicting the length and course of a trial.

Also, as the case unfolds, your tactics may change. An issue may seem more important than it previously did or new and unexpected issues may arise. Such events may require adjustments in the order of proof. At the time of its preparation, though, the order of proof should represent your best judgment as to the most logical and effective way to present your case. It may be revised as circumstances require. If, in spite of changes, it has been carefully prepared and updated, it should represent a master checklist against which the progress and completeness of the case can be measured.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesFinal Pretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral

OverviewEvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsPreliminary QuestionsAdmissibility of EvidenceGeneral Overview

* Chapter 25 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 26 Conduct and Demeanor of Attorneys *

3-26 Federal Litigation Guide 26.syn

§ 26.syn Synopsis to Chapter 26: Conduct and Demeanor of Attorneys *

§ 26.01 General Rules.

§ 26.02 Special Problems.
[1] Reargument of Issues.
[2] Improper Questions.
[3] Ex Parte Communications With the Court.
[4] Difficulty With the Judge.
[5] Dealing With Your Adversary's Sharp or Unethical Conduct.
[5.--1] Tactics.
[5.--2] Remedies.
[6] The Lying Witness.

§ 26.03 Trial Publicity.

§ 26.04 Bibliography.
[1] Law Reviews and Periodicals.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 26 Conduct and Demeanor of Attorneys *

3-26 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter explores some considerations relating to the conduct and demeanor of an attorney at trial. The chapter begins with an examination of general rules such as basic honesty and good faith when dealing with clients, adversaries, the court, and the jury, and the necessity for controlling the conduct of your client.

Also addressed are special problems that may arise, including ethical considerations, improper questions, and ex parte communications with the court.

The chapter concludes with a discussion of trial publicity.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 26 Conduct and Demeanor of Attorneys *

3-26 Federal Litigation Guide § 26.01

§ 26.01 General Rules.

As a trial lawyer your goal is to win. To attain that objective, you must attempt to control many variables such as the credibility of your client, the composition of the jury, the witnesses, the issues, and your opposing counsel. But the variable over which you have the greatest control is your demeanor, both in and out of the courtroom. The purpose of this chapter is to set forth some general rules and considerations that apply to your conduct.

"Conduct" encompasses everything from basic honesty and fair dealing to your attire and demeanor at the counsel table. Remember that you are always on display during a jury trial. Your credibility and effectiveness with both the judge and the jury will be greatly influenced by the way you conduct yourself during the trial. Jurors will form impressions of you based on your conduct outside the courtroom, as well as inside. While going to and from court and waiting in courthouse hallways, always assume that jurors can see you. Prospective jurors may remember you from the day before while they were going to and from other courtrooms. You are always on stage.

At the outset we are concerned with those affirmative aspects--in some instances, nuances--of conduct and demeanor that not only comply with your fundamental ethical obligations as a trial lawyer, but also create the favorable atmosphere and impression that can influence the outcome of the case. n1 Such an atmosphere and impression can be promoted in a variety of ways, some large and some (seemingly) small.

Basic honesty and good faith. Trial lawyers who both in fact and in appearance meet their obligation to deal honestly and in good faith will most favorably impress the court and the jury. Fostering an image of fair dealing is particularly important with respect to the jurors. They are generally unfamiliar with the adversary process and can sometimes misunderstand courtroom events. For example, they may view your objections as an attempt to keep the truth from them. To counter this, you should attempt to resolve key evidentiary issues before trial by means of pretrial motions or motions in limine. n2 During trial you should try to take up sensitive matters out of the presence of the jury. Addressing these matters during recesses minimizes potential juror resentment at being excused during the course of the proceedings.

If an action might have an adverse effect, however remote, on the court's or the jury's perception of your personal honesty or good faith, do not pursue it. This practical rule should govern decisions whether to engage in numerous stratagems, large and small.

For example, failing to produce a nonprivileged document that is responsive to a proper notice or demand is clearly unethical, and the consequences to you and to your client's cause are potentially disastrous. Similarly unadvisable is the "ploy" of attempting to impede the flow of your adversary's examination by quarreling over some technical aspects of his description of a document, or claiming to be unable to locate your copy of the document; although not necessarily a breach of ethics, it is a petty strategy. The court and the jury will likely recognize it as such and your client's cause and your own credibility will be impaired. n3

While ethical issues should not be resolved on a crass "what if I get caught" basis, this analysis is an easy way to test your own subjective reaction to a given course of conduct.

Professionalism. You will best serve your client and bolster your credibility by adopting an attitude of thorough-going professionalism. Your job is to advance your client's interests, but you are also obliged to insure that your client's interests are served, and justice determined, in the most straightforward and expeditious manner.

In practical terms, this means that you should speak to the point at issue, that your objections should be crisp, that you should not make frivolous or harassing objections, and that you should not unnecessarily disrupt or delay the proceeding.

A smart adversary will seek to project the same image of quiet professionalism. If your adversary fails to do so, do not be concerned so long as the trial judge adequately controls the trial. To the contrary, incompetent, sharp or otherwise irregular conduct on the part of your adversary will underscore your own competence and professionalism.

Force. Except in the rarest of circumstances, do not raise your voice or become visibly angry in the courtroom. Real or uncontrolled lapses of temper will almost always hurt your credibility with the court and jury.

It is possible to be aggressive without being loud or abusive. Indeed, with respect to histrionics and decibels, the best advocacy is often understated. At trial, effective force is the product of careful preparation, cogent analysis, incisive cross-examination, persistence, eloquence and good sense. Calculated, and carefully controlled, displays of temper may occasionally have their place, but they should be reserved for situations in which your adversary has committed a genuinely serious breach of proper conduct, and they should always be carefully measured.

This does not mean that you should never show emotion. Indeed, effective use of emotion will enhance your case by creating sympathy or outrage at the right time. An older case even held:

[t]ears have always been considered legitimate arguments before a jury ... we know of no rule or jurisdiction in the court below to check them. It would appear to be of the natural rights of counsel which no court or consititution could take away. ... Indeed, if counsel has them at his command, it may seriously be questioned whether it is not his professional duty to shed them whenever proper occasion arises. n4

Respect. Although everyone in the courtroom recognizes that the trial lawyer is an advocate, your advocacy should be restrained and dignified. Your attitude toward the court, your opponent and the witnesses should always be one of respect. Advocacy does not require that a lawyer be discourteous, unfeeling or offensive in the courtroom. Such conduct is unseemly and will likely prejudice both judge and jury against your case.

Adopt a respectful attitude, one that is forthright and candid, not patronizing or, in the case of the court, fawning. Refrain from ridiculing an incompetent or bumbling adversary who may well have the sympathy of the court or the jury. The judge and the jury are also likely to recognize and resent conduct that is artificially solicitous of them or of their comfort.

Always address the court as "your Honor," not "Judge."

Preparation. At trial, there are few things that will enhance the judge and the jury's perception of your credibility and professionalism more than preparation. Preparation not only means knowing the issues, the legal authorities, and the technical aspects of your case, but also requires having your exhibits and witnesses ready and available so that the trial can proceed expeditiously. Such groundwork seldom goes unappreciated.

Dealings with your adversary. Both good practice and some local rules require that, except under unusual circumstances, you should address the court, not your adversary, particularly when the jury is present. Thus the proper form is: "Objection, your Honor; Mr. Jones is mischaracterizing the testimony"; not "Tom, that's a gross mischaracterization of the record." Or, at a more mundane level: "Your Honor, could we identify that document by its exhibit number"; not: "Tom, what's the number of that exhibit?" And, when you refer to other lawyers, you should do so formally, not by their first names.

These are matters of local custom, and you should be prepared to adapt your conduct to that custom. For example, you would not want to seem distant and stiff when your adversary, with the apparent approval of the court, is relaxed and informal. However, until the local ground rules are established, you should err on the conservative, formal side of the line.

Arguments directly with your adversary should be avoided except in the most exceptional circumstances. Even in extreme cases, they should occur only in defense of attacks launched by your adversary and only when it is clear that the court will not redress or correct the situation. n5

Never make insulting or disparaging remarks to, or concerning, your adversary. Not only will such comments make you seem petty, vengeful, or out of control, but they may damage your ability to work with that lawyer or firm in the future. Remember that lawyers do not have friends or enemies among co-counsel or opposing counsel. Do not impair your long-term interests in a fit of pique.

The jury. Jurors, like most people, form first impressions from which they are not easily dissuaded. If they take an initial liking to you, they will be predisposed to be sensitive to your point of view. During the trial, they will continue to evaluate you, to dispel or confirm the decisions they have already made about you. How you talk to them and the judge, how you ask questions and your every action will influence their judgment of what kind of person you are and the amount of trust they can place in you. The confidence you win from them will be carried over into the jury room.

You should raise questions regarding the comfort or convenience of the jury only if some problem clearly exists. Direct smiles of jurors should be returned but not offered. Casual nods and good mornings to jurors as they enter or leave the jury box should be given only if the court, your adversary or court functionaries do likewise.

You should approach or stand close to the jury box only if the physical arrangement of the courtroom requires you to do so, and you should never lean on the railing of the jury box. Asides or sotto voce remarks intended to be heard by the jury are absolutely forbidden and will almost certainly impair your standing with the jury.

Witnesses. You should treat your witnesses formally. Address and refer to them only by their last name. Some counsel believe that first name references add a little personal flair to their case and give the jurors the sense that they know the witness personally. The prevailing view, however, is that first name references tend to make the jury feel that the witness is too close to you or your case to be objective, and does not comport with the formalism they expect in the courtroom.

Your Client's Conduct. The need to control your client's conduct during the trial is only in part a matter of your responsibility to the judicial system. Just as you and your demeanor are "on trial," so is your client and your client's demeanor. Everything that is appropriate with respect to your own conduct is equally applicable to your client.

This is a subject to which many trial lawyers do not give adequate attention. Since the trial lawyer is experienced in the atmosphere and controversy of a courtroom, and in most situations is several steps removed in terms of personal involvement, he can easily forget that his client may not understand the importance of maintaining an appearance of calm throughout the proceeding, or that, because of the client's personal involvement, it may be very difficult to maintain that appearance. Also, as a practical matter, if your client is seated at the counsel table, you will normally have your back turned to the client and will not normally observe his demeanor, facial expressions or other reactions. Thus, as a matter of sound trial preparation, you should carefully instruct your client as to what is expected and proper in the way of courtroom demeanor. The best preparation for trial is to videotape a practice direct examination and a mock cross-examination of the client. Watching themselves on videotape is the best way to discourage bad habits and unfortunate mannerisms. n6

And remember to tell your client that conduct outside the courtroom is also subject to scrutiny. Disagreeable behavior in hallways and courthouse parking lots may be just as devastating to a case as improper demeanor in the courtroom. Caution your client to avoid behavior which may be perceived as offensive by any jurors. Convince a client who smokes to abstain in or around the courthouse. Advise your client to avoid excesses in dress, makeup or jewelry.

Conduct at the counsel table. Your attitude at the counsel table should be one of attention and respect. Sit in an erect or forward position; do not lounge. Keep the counsel table itself as orderly as possible. Those present at the counsel table (lawyers, clients and client representatives) obviously should communicate by whispers or by notes as freely as necessary, but unnecessary consultations, whispered remarks, or notes should be avoided.

Avoid grimaces, sneers or other facial expressions intended as commentary on the evidence or other aspects of the proceedings. The same, of course, is true of expressions of surprise or disappointment in the face of unfavorable developments. In the former case, the jury may not agree with your apparent assessment of the evidence and may in any event feel that your silent commentary is inappropriate. In the latter case, the jury may not fully have understood the import of the evidence being received and your reaction will only draw it to their attention. If the adverse nature of the evidence is clear, your reaction will underscore it. Indeed, it is very common for jurors to glance in the direction of counsel to see how he is taking an adverse development. In that event an attitude or expression of calm may reassure the jurors that your case has not been seriously hurt; at a minimum, it may leave them puzzled, wondering whether the evidence is really as negative as it seems.

Whispered remarks or conversations unrelated to the evidence being received, particularly if accompanied by a smile or other facial expression, can easily be misunderstood as a reaction to, or commentary on, the evidence that is being received. As a result, while discussions at the counsel table concerning problems other than those of the moment are often necessary, they should be held to a minimum. In general, you and others at the counsel table should be concentrating, and concentrating seriously, on the matters at hand. Give the excitable client who cannot contain himself a notepad to write on. Ask him to pass notes to you, rather than engage in fevered conversations. Of course, even the passing of notes can be distracting, so impress on the client the need to appear calm and confident even when things are not going so well.

In some so-called "seated" jurisdictions, all examination is conducted from the counsel table unless there is an affirmative reason (perhaps that the witness is hard of hearing) to use a rostrum or unless the witness or a demonstrative exhibit must be approached. In other jurisdictions, examination should be conducted from the counsel table only with the permission of the court and then only when it is necessary to simultaneously refer to a large number of exhibits.

Before starting a trial in an unfamiliar court, always learn the local rules governing trial demeanor. Follow them. It is embarrassing and reflects on your competence to be admonished by the judge because you did not stand when making an objection as required by local rules. In addition to formal court rules, you should learn what particular practices an unfamiliar trial judge requires in the courtroom. Other attorneys and the court clerk are usually a good source of this information.

Promptness. You should be prompt both at the beginning of each court session and when you return to the courtroom after recesses or other short breaks. Jurors become impatient with counsel they perceive to be wasting time. Judges, too, are irritated when lawyers are not present and ready to proceed. Chronic tardiness irritates judges and jurors. Although the jurors (who will spend a lot of idle time in the jury room under any circumstances) may not know who has caused any particular delay, they will likely learn through a stray comment by the marshal or otherwise if you are the cause of frequent delays.

Many judges also employ a double standard for returning from recesses. They expect the lawyers to be ready when they are, but do not mind lengthening the break for their personal convenience. Even if the judge usually does not take the bench at the indicated time, do not conclude that he will always be late. Assume that court will resume at the time stated by the judge.

Delays for personal convenience. Requests for continuances, recesses or other delays based on your personal situation or convenience should be made only in extreme or "hardship" situations. All such appeals should obviously be made outside the presence of the jury.

The extended courtroom. Marshals, clerks, court reporters and other court functionaries are part of the courtroom scene and should be treated with courtesy and respect. They are employees, and quite likely, personal friends of the judge. In all but the shortest of trials, they may also become friendly with individual jurors. Consequently, conferences in the halls should be conducted at a safe distance from anyone who might overhear. Save boisterous remarks and other jocular conduct for the privacy of your office. Remember that you are always on display. Be professional, polite, and reserved around court officers, as well as any part of the courthouse where jurors or potential jurors may be found.

Attire. Your dress should be consistent with that generally followed in the district where your case is being tried; within that context, it should be conservative. The courtroom is no place for a personal statement on attire or any other subject. Gerry Spence and Melvin Belli, and a few others, can succeed with flamboyance in the courtroom. Most of us can not. By the same token, if you have a Rolls Royce (or any expensive or outrageous car) and a Chevrolet, drive the Chevrolet to court. Jurors may see you in the parking lot and decide that you do not need any more money.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsProfessional ConductGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsProfessional ConductOpposing Counsel & PartiesLegal EthicsProfessional ConductTribunals

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Colter, Connecting with Jurors, 29 Trial 114 (Feb. 1993) (goal is to strike a rapport with the jury).

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 37.05[2].

(n3)Footnote 3. See Savell, Why Are They Picking on Us?, 78 A.B.A.J. 72, 73 (Nov. 1992).

(n4)Footnote 4. Ferguson v. Moore, 98 Tenn. 342, 39 S.W. 341, 343 (1897) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See § 26.02[5] infra.

(n6)Footnote 6. See Capello, Preparing CEOs for Trial, 15 Trial Diplomacy J. 317 (1992).

* Chapter 26 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 26 Conduct and Demeanor of Attorneys *

3-26 Federal Litigation Guide § 26.02

§ 26.02 Special Problems.

[1] Reargument of Issues.

Ethical Consideration 7-22 of the A.B.A. Model Code of Professional Responsibility provides:

Respect for judicial rulings is essential to the proper administration of justice; however, a litigant or his lawyer may, in good faith and within the framework of the law, take steps to test the correctness of a ruling of a tribunal.

Among other things, this ethical consideration raises the familiar question of how often and aggressively a trial lawyer should seek to reargue evidentiary or other issues that have already been decided by the court. n1 The question is primarily a matter of litigation tactics, not professional ethics. It is possible to pursue an objection or other issue to the point where an order of contempt is entered. But long before that, you will undoubtedly have passed the point at which, as a tactical matter, reargument is futile, imprudent, or both. There may be situations in which the issue is so critical or in which the court's decision is so premature or ill-advised that repeated rearguments are justified. There are also judges who can be "moved" simply by the persistence of counsel. All of these are situations which must be judged on their own facts. You must balance the importance of the issue at stake against the likely adverse effect upon both the court and the jury of your unwillingness to accept the court's ruling on a particular issue.

[2] Improper Questions.

Testing the ruling of the court by reargument or other legitimate means is obviously different from trying to reach your objective through improper questions or statements. If the court has found a particular line of evidence irrelevant or prejudicial, it is improper for you to allude to the irrelevant or prejudicial material in the jury's presence. Flagrant abuse of this principle may justify a finding of contempt. n2

Similarly, where the court has not ruled on the admissibility of a particular fact or line of evidence, if you know that it is both prejudicial and subject to a debatable objection, you may be either required or well advised to raise the issue with the court outside the presence of the jury. This type of situation obviously calls for the exercise of a more discriminating judgment. It would be a tactical mistake for a trial lawyer to needlessly anticipate objections which might not be forthcoming. On the other hand, seeking to introduce material that is both marginally relevant and highly prejudicial can provoke a sharp objection claiming foul play and a rebuke from the court. These consequences are serious indeed. At a minimum, in these circumstances you will be well advised to raise a doubtful evidentiary issue outside the presence of the jury. This course should also be followed if you have a clear indication that your adversary objects to the admissibility of the evidence. You will have to judge other, more marginal cases on their own facts, taking into account the practice of the judge before whom the case is being tried, the extent to which the evidence is known to or has been discussed with opposing counsel, the way in which similar issues have been treated during the course of the trial, and other, comparable considerations.

If the fact or evidentiary matter in issue is central to a party's case, the question of reference to it in opening statements should be discussed with the court before the trial begins. In some cases, a request for an in limine ruling may be appropriate. n3

[3] Ex Parte Communications With the Court.

On the matter of ex parte communications with the court, your duty as a trial lawyer is quite clear. You should not only refrain from initiating such communications but should also seek to avoid even casual conversations with the court that might be misinterpreted. n4 This prohibition extends to communications with the judge's law clerks about the merits of the case. n5 This is more than a tactical issue, it is an ethical one.

Rule 3.5 of the Model Rules of Professional Conduct states in part:

A lawyer shall not:

(a) Seek to influence a judge ... or other official by means prohibited by law;

(b) Communicate ex parte with such a person except as permitted by law;

A unavoidable problem arises when, one attorney arrives in chambers for a discussion of evidentiary or other matters prior to the arrival of his adversary. The duration of these ex parte "presences" will vary, but many judges can be quite relaxed or conversational in their manner. Others, anxious to proceed, will push ahead with background or nominally preliminary matters. Typically, the lawyer will have no choice but to follow the court's lead, at least to the point of responding to questions on neutral matters. However, the lawyer should attempt to confine his statements to noncontroversial matters. If the discussion unavoidably progresses to any more substantial issue, he should be careful to note those points on which he knows or believes his adversary may have a differing view.

Though it should never occur, a lawyer can occasionally be faced with a situation in which the judge, perhaps by telephone, initiates an ex parte discussion of the merits of the case or of a substantial procedural issue. Although the practicalities of this situation may be difficult and may be resolved in differing ways, the lawyer's ethical obligation is absolute. He should decline to discuss the case.

Other ex parte communications are also improper. It is unethical to communicate with a party whom you know is represented by counsel. n6 While all contacts with jurors during trial are forbidden, there may be limited access to jurors allowed after trial, depending on local rules.

[4] Difficulty With the Judge.

Judges may be preemptive or restrictive in dealing with a lawyer who seeks to present evidence or advance arguments that the judge believes to be legally unsupported or of doubtful relevance. Other judges can be abusive in their treatment of lawyers generally or in their attitude toward a particular party. Still others may be silent or indifferent in a situation in which your adversary seeks to obtain unfair advantages through a fundamental misuse of the judicial system. n7 Then the weight of the court's rulings and attitude will be added, or at least seem to be added, to the force of your adversary's arguments. n8

Often there is nothing you can do to offset directly the actions of the judge. Unless a case has sufficient merit to justify an appeal, you must deal with the situation at the trial judge's level.

The first thing to do when you feel the judge is being unfairly one-sided is to step back and take an objective view of the personal dynamics. What is the reason for the judge's actions? Is it something personal? Is it something political? Is it something involving the case, the litigants or opposing counsel? Next, devise a strategy to counteract the effects of what the judge is doing. Your strategy will depend on the nature of the case, whether it is being tried to the court or to a jury, and the harm caused by the judge's words or rulings.

One way to get the judge's attention about the way in which you think you are being unfairly treated is to begin building a record, even if an appeal is unlikely. Many judges are bored by the routine and do not think about how their dismissive or rude conduct is perceived. Stating for the record what you think the judge's demeanor or gestures have been may lead to an apology (of sorts) and an end to the conduct. With other judges who are just bullies, bulding the record of their inappropriate conduct shows that you are willing to stand up to them. For example:

Your honor, I would point out for the record, respectfully, that after the witness gave that last answer, you threw your glasses down on the bench and whirled around in your chair to face the back wall of the courtroom.

After a few statements like that are entered in the record, most judges will settle down.

However onerous the task may be, your duty to your client requires that you do everything in your power to compel the court to permit a full and fair exposition of your client's case. Common sense suggests that this will more likely be accomplished if you deal with the court with quiet force and patient argument, rather than loud or rambling harangues or threats to "take the case up." This is true for several reasons. First, your chances of persuading the judge to change his attitude will be improved if your approach is both rational and calm. Second, an alternative purpose of your strategy will be to inform and, hopefully, to persuade the jury of the justice of your contentions, whether or not you are successful in convincing the court. Finally, you will be making a record for appeal, and that record will be more effective if your position is cogently stated.

[5] Dealing With Your Adversary's Sharp or Unethical Conduct.

Another difficult situation arises when your adversary seeks to obtain improper advantage through a misuse of the judicial system. The techniques employed by such an adversary can run the full gamut of unethical, sharp or overly aggressive practices: excessive or inflamatory remarks during opening statement or closing argument, abusive or grossly deceptive cross-examination, objections which incorporate blatantly argumentative material, failure to honor commitments to the court or to you with respect to the production of documents or scheduling of witnesses, repeated comment or questioning on prejudicial matters not relevant to the case, and so on and on.

Such tactics may, of course, be self-defeating. However, you cannot be sure that both the court and the jury will recognize them as grossly unethical. You must deal with the situation as best you can, seeking the aid of the court if it is forthcoming. Occasionally, such aid is not given. Indeed, almost by definition, the type of situation discussed in this section cannot occur unless the trial judge defaults on his responsibility to control the trial. You may then have no alternative but to respond in kind, and in extreme cases you may need to resort to one or more of the relatively few formal remedies available to you.

[5.--1] Tactics.

While each adversary and every situation must be assessed individually, your first attempt--both as a matter of professional responsibility and as a matter of tactics--should normally be to seek the assistance of the court along traditional lines. Such assistance is most readily and properly given in two forms: (1) by sustaining objections to, and instructing the jury to disregard, particular statements or testimony and (2) through judicial warnings or admonitions to your adversary to refrain from improper conduct. n9

Objections and requests for instructions to disregard are most appropriate in response to irrelevant, prejudicial, or grossly argumentative matter. Requests for warnings or admonitions to your adversary are generally more appropriate where counsel makes remarks unrelated to particular questions--for example, when your adversary attempts to argue the facts during the course of his own objections. In the broader sense, however, the two tactics are interchangeable, and warnings or admonitions should be requested if counsel engages in any persistent or flagrant conduct.

If your adversary is in fact engaged in sharp or marginally unethical conduct, and if the court is rendering rulings in your favor on at least a few of your objections, there will normally be no potential "downside" to making repeated objections and requesting that your opponent be admonished. The very essence of your problem is that your adversary may gain an unfair advantage with the jury. If this is so, your objections should have the effect of underscoring the doubtful character of his conduct, and even a few favorable rulings from the court will suggest to the jury that your position is the proper one.

Since your purpose is to neutralize your opponent's conduct in the minds of the jurors, your objections and requests should normally be made in open court. Capitalize on your opportunity to present a professional contrast to your adversary. State your objection completely. Be explicit as to the nature of the impropriety of your adversary's conduct. Address the court and not counsel. Do not be angry or emotional. The same arguments designed to convince the court that the opponent's conduct is improper will also covey that message to the jury. But do not appear to be whining about the conduct, as if this were a dispute on the playground. Argue clearly why it is unfair and that you have not been guilty of any similar conduct.

However, if the judge is generally defaulting in his obligation to control the trial, you may wish to seek a conference in chambers where your adversary's conduct can be discussed and attacked on a comprehensive basis. Such a conference may well be prudent and may sometimes be effective where isolated objections or requests for admonitions are not. Generally, though, the judge who is unwilling or unable to control the trial in response to normal procedural mechanisms will not be influenced by such an appeal, regardless of how thorough and cogent it may be. Still, one advantage of the conference in chambers is to interrupt the momentum in the courtroom. It will give the other lawyer a chance to cool off if he was acting in the heat of the moment. And, it will give you a longer period of time to consider how best to counter the conduct when you return to the courtroom.

Sometimes the judge to whom the case is being tried may require that objections be made outside the presence of the jury. The problem is unlikely to arise in this context since the judge who imposes such a requirement is likely to be in firm control of the trial.

When a conference out of the jury's presence occurs, remember that you have a dual purpose: you not only want to put a stop to the objectionable conduct, you must also make a record for use in the event of an appeal. Insist that the court reporter be present so that your objections and the comments of opposing counsel and the court can be recorded contemporaneously. Attempts to summarize on the record later is a poor substitute for an actual transcript of the proceedings.

If the trial court does not provide the support that you require and your adversary persists in his tactics, you must decide whether 1) to continue to appeal to the court for corrective rulings or 2) to meet your adversary on his own ground.

As to the first question--whether to persist in your objections and requests--the answer will usually be yes. At the most basic level, you must make and preserve your record for appeal. Perhaps more importantly, you must continue the fight with your adversary with every weapon available to you. Continued objections will enable you to do that in two ways: (1) by characterizing your adversary's conduct as improper; and (2) by using your objections as "springboards" for your own expositions of the evidence and of your theories of the case. The benefits of this approach must be weighed against the risk that the jury will interpret the court's repeated denials of your objections and requests as express or tacit approval of your adversary's conduct or theories. This effect will be heightened if the judge has the jury's respect and if the jury interprets your continued objections as criticism of the court's conduct. No matter how incompetent you think the judge to be, the jury undoubtedly continues to regard the judge as a god, or at least their best friend in the courtroom. They will punish attacks on their friend. For these reasons, your continuing objections should be carefully couched as criticisms of your adversary, and not of the court. To the extent your objections unavoidably imply criticism of the judge, that criticism should be confined to the formal aspects of the proceedings and should avoid any adverse suggestion as to the judge's personal integrity.

The only situation in which you should abstain from all objections, except those necessary to preserve your record on appeal, is that where the judge's unwillingness to control the trial is combined with an apparent bias against your client's case. In that event, of course, the judge's rulings on your objections are likely to contain comments on the evidence or other remarks detrimental to your client's cause.

The second question--whether to meet your adversary on his own grounds--is much more difficult to assess. To a much larger degree, it depends on the particular circumstances in which the problem arises. The primary considerations are:

1. Do your adversary's tactics appear to be effective with the jury?

2. Are those tactics combined with a personality and method of approach which are ultimately likely to be self-defeating?

3. To what extent are you able to neutralize your adversary's tactics by the conventional means of objections and comments to the court?

4. To what extent, given all the circumstances of the case, can you respond to your adversary in kind without destroying your own credibility?

The most likely result of this analysis will be that you should strike some sort of a compromise between the straightforward, high level approach which would normally be appropriate and a full resort to your adversary's tactics (which, bear in mind, you have deplored and will most likely continue to deplore through your objections and other statements). Thus, if your adversary flavors his objections with extensive characterizations or argument of the evidence, you can properly insist on the opportunity to respond not only to the objection but to his comments on the evidence as well. Frequently, it is also advisable to interrupt a rambling, argumentative objection to dispute the facts on which the objection is nominally based. Any factual assertion by your adversary is vulnerable to rebuttal along the lines: "That may well be true, your honor, but the evidence also shows ...," followed by an exposition of relevant evidence favorable to your client's position. Finally, of course, you can also include argumentative material in your own objections and in other colloquy with the court.

[5.--2] Remedies.

Motions for mistrial aside, there are only three formal remedies available at trial to an attorney seeking to control egregious conduct on the part of the adversary during trial: (1) a motion or separate suit asking for a finding of contempt of court; (2) a separate complaint before an appropriate disciplinary body; and (3) a motion for the award of attorneys' fees and costs pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1927. (Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is commonly thought of as the rule which imposes sanctions on lawyers; however, it is limited to pleadings and motions. Oral statements in court are not governed by Rule 11.) n10

Some of these remedies, even if successful, may not bear fruit until after the immediate need for them has passed, and those that depend on the discretion or forcefulness of the trial court may fall upon the same deaf ears that have declined to rule favorably on objections directed to the conduct in question and have thereby created or exacerbated the problem in the first instance. At least one court has noted that the district court is not normally the arbiter of attorney ethics, unless unethical conduct threatens to taint the trial. n11

And even if granted at the trial or disciplinary level, such remedies may fall victim to the judicial philosophy expressed in In re Dellinger. n12 Though that action was an appeal from findings of contempt in a criminal case, the thoughts expressed are all too typical of some judges, particularly at the appellate level, who are unfamiliar with the realities of trial practice:

[M]ere disrespect or insult cannot be punished where it does not involve an actual and material obstruction. This is particularly true with respect to attorneys where the "heat of courtroom debate" may prompt statements which are ill-considered and might later be regretted. Substantial freedom of expression should be tolerated in this area since "[j]udges are supposed to be men of fortitude, able to thrive in a hardy climate." However, ... although it is elusive, there is a line beyond which disrespect becomes obstruction. When the remarks create an imminent prejudice to a fair and dispassionate proceeding, that line has been crossed. ...

...

... Attorneys have a right to be persistent, vociferous, contentious, and imposing, even to the point of appearing obnoxious, when acting in their client's behalf. An attorney may with impunity take full advantage of the range of conduct that our adversary system allows. Given this extreme liberality necessary to a vital bar and thus the effective discovery of truth through the adversary process, an attorney possesses the requisite intent only if he knows or reasonably should be aware in view of all the circumstances, especially the heat of controversy, that he is exceeding the outermost limits of his proper role and hindering rather than facilitating the search for truth. n13

On the other hand, many trial judges take a harder view of the parameters of proper trial conduct and seek to expand the scope and impact of the available remedies. In addition, a trial judge who lacks the initiative or consistency of approach to control a trial through conventional means may take a different attitude when offered a concrete, formal vehicle by which the improper conduct can be redressed. Finally, though unlikely, the unscrupulous adversary may follow a more conservative course when confronted with the reality of formal proceedings which may result either in damage to his own professional reputation or in pecuniary loss to himself or his client.

Contempt. Civil contempt findings mean that the "key to the jailhouse door" is in the wrongdoer's pocket. When the offensive conduct ends, the fines or inprisonment ends. Criminal contempt is imposed for a fixed amount of money or jail time to punish past conduct. An attorney may be subject to both civil and criminal contempt proceedings for failing to obey a court order. n14

Though findings or hearings for contempt of court are normally entered or initiated by the court itself, a motion for a finding of contempt can be made by others, including attorneys for parties in the case aggrieved by the improper conduct. However, the motion must be addressed to conduct which either offends the dignity of the court or prevents the proper conduct of proceedings. Accordingly, the motion must normally show that the adversary's conduct (1) creates an obstruction blocking the judge's performance of his duties and (2) delays the proceedings.

Disciplinary proceedings. Disciplinary proceedings against attorneys relating to improper conduct during a trial are not commonly brought until the trial is concluded, and a decision in any such proceeding would not, in any event, be forthcoming until after any but the very longest of trials was over. n15 However, we are not aware of any procedural limitation requiring a complainant to wait until the trial is concluded before initiating a disciplinary action. Indeed, you may wish to institute such a proceeding immediately in order to obtain whatever cautionary effect it may have upon your adversary.

The decision whether to seek an order of contempt before instituting disciplinary proceedings is a difficult one. Your relations with the trial judge might be seriously impaired if you do not first seek his aid in the control of proceedings currently pending before him. On the other hand, the need to resort to a remedy so indirect as disciplinary proceedings will not have arisen if all judicial remedies short of a motion for contempt have not proved fruitless. Also, an unfavorable ruling on the motion for contempt will probably blunt whatever cautionary influence the institution of disciplinary proceedings might have on your adversary and might well reduce the chances of a favorable result in the disciplinary action itself. It is probably advisable to move for an order of contempt before filing disciplinary proceedings (the ruling on the motion might be deferred), because disciplinary proceedings are the most indirect, and perhaps the least effective, of the available remedies. n16

28 U.S.C. § 1927. This statute authorizes the imposition of costs and attorney's fees as a personal obligation upon an attorney "who so multiplies the proceedings in any case as to increase costs unreasonably and vexatiously." Sanctions under § 1927 may also be imposed on an attorney who does not reevaluate the merits of his claims or advances an unreasonable claim or one that "is not brought with a reasonable good faith belief that it is justified." n17 Section 1927 is powerful because it authorizes the imposition of costs and attorney's fees upon the infringing attorney "personally," a potential consequence that might inhibit some attorneys where "mere" injury to their reputation, or costs assessed against their client, would not.

In Barnd v. City of Tacoma, n18 a suit for false arrest and imprisonment, the attorney for the defendant was ordered to pay the plaintiff's attorney's fees incurred because the defense attorney caused a mistrial. In a motion in limine, the judge ruled that the defense could not introduce evidence of the plaintiff's prior arrest record. Despite this ruling, the defense attorney expressly referred to plaintiff's prior arrests. On motion of plaintiff, the court ordered a mistrial, and two days later assessed fees against the defense attorney. n19

Little used during the first twenty years after its enactment (only a handful of reported cases were decided under the statute between 1948, the date of enactment, and 1966), resort to § 1927 is now more frequent. The holding of Barnd supports an action for costs and attorney's fees whenever your adversary has delayed the proceedings by willfully disregarding a court order. However, nothing in the statute or in the reasoning of Barnd requires that the objectionable conduct be in violation of an express order of the court, and there is clearly no requirement that the objectionable conduct must result in a mistrial. n20

Note that trial tactics undertaken in good faith having the effect of delaying proceedings are not grounds for § 1927 sanctions. In E. & J. Gallo Winery v. Consorzio Del. Gallo Nero, n21 the defendant filed a motion under Rule 56(f) to delay the plaintiff's original summary judgment motion for four months. The plaintiff argued that the Rule 56(f) motion was made in bad faith because the defendant had not taken any of the depositions necessary for opposition to summary judgment and that the opposition did not rely on any of the numerous documents produced during discovery. The district court denied sanctions because parallel settlement negotiations were being conducted and that the plaintiff was at least partially responsible for the delay.

[6] The Lying Witness.

Infrequently, you may suspect that a witness is lying and will perjure himself if called to testify. The facts you have gained in discovery may indicate that the witness could not possibly have been at a certain meeting or that a certain event could not possibly have occurred. Or, a witness may directly tell you that he will do anything to win the case for his side.

Confronted with this situation, your first obligation is to ascertain, to the extent you can, whether the witness is in fact lying. You can confront the witness directly or you can conduct your own investigation to ascertain the truth. You are duty bound to your client to present relevant admissible evidence unless you know, or from facts within your knowledge you should know, that testimony is false, fraudulent or perjured.

The law and disciplinary rules prohibit the use of false, fraudulent or perjured testimony. n22 One court has succinctly remarked that "[u]nder any standard of proper ethical conduct, an attorney should not sit by silently and permit his client to commit what may have been perjury, and which certainly would mislead the court and the opposing party on a matter vital to the issue under consideration." n23 You cannot allow your client to take the stand to give false testimony. You must try to dissuade the client from committing perjury; failing that, you must try to convince the client to correct the perjury. If the client rejects these efforts, you should attempt to withdraw from the representation and decline further employment. n24 Failure to takes these steps may subject you to discipline. There is an A.B.A. ethics opinion requiring counsel in a civil case to disclose the client's perjury to the court. n25

In short, resist the temptation to look the other way and win the case at all costs. In many instances, the very facts causing you to expect false testimony will be known to your adversary. Skillful examination will destroy the witness and your whole case. You may lose both the case and your career.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsProfessional ConductGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsProfessional ConductOpposing Counsel & PartiesLegal EthicsProfessional ConductTribunals

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. There are, obviously, other ways (including certification, mandamus and interlocutory appeal) in which rulings of the trial court may be tested.

(n2)Footnote 2. U.S. v. Allocco, 994 F.2d 82 (2d Cir. 1993) (attorney who intended to, and did, obstruct administration of justice was correctly held in contempt).

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 37.05[2] infra.

(n4)Footnote 4. United States v. Napue, 834 F.2d 1311 (7th Cir. 1987) . Unless actual bias is shown, a judge will not be disqualified on the basis of contacts with defendant and certain parties. In re Beard, 811 F.2d 818 (4th Cir. 1987) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Vanzant v. R. L. Products., Inc., 139 F.R.D. 435 (S.D. Fla. 1991) .

(n6)Footnote 6. United States v. Ryans, 903 F.2d 731 (10th Cir.) , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 855, 111 S. Ct. 152, 112 L. Ed. 2d 118 (1990) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See § 26.02[5] infra.

(n8)Footnote 8. However, where the court questions witnesses in an effort to move a trial forward and comments on counsel's preparedness, but neither comments on the case's ultimate issues nor appears to be an advocate, a motion for mistrial for judicial bias is properly denied. Shad v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 799 F.2d 525 (9th Cir. 1986) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See ch. 37 infra.

(n10)Footnote 10. Hamer v. Career College Assoc., 979 F.2d 758 (9th Cir. 1992) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Koch v. Koch Indus., Inc., 798 F. Supp. 1525 (D. Kan. 1992) . But see In re Shell Oil Refinery, 144 F.R.D. 73 (E.D. La. 1992) (court has the authority to control the conduct of persons who appear before it).

(n12)Footnote 12. 461 F.2d 389 (7th Cir. 1972) . See also, United States ex rel. Robson v. Oliver, 470 F.2d 10, 13 (7th Cir. 1972) .

(n13)Footnote 13. 461 F.2d at 400 (citations omitted).

(n14)Footnote 14. See, e.g., Taberer v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 954 F.2d 888 (3d Cir. 1992) (upholding criminal contempt sanctions against attorney who defied magistrate judge's order to appear).

(n15)Footnote 15. Even in a "marathon" trial of, say, six months or a year, the lawyer against whom the disciplinary proceeding was brought would undoubtedly request that a hearing be delayed until the trial was concluded.

(n16)Footnote 16. For a discussion of the proper standards for imposing sanctions for meritless litigation, see In re Ruben, 825 F.2d 977 (6th Cir. 1987) .

(n17)Footnote 17. Moore v. Western Surety Co., 140 F.R.D. 340 (N.D. Miss. 1991, aff'd without opinion, 977 F.2d 578 (5th Cir. 1992) .

(n18)Footnote 18. 664 F.2d 1339 (9th Cir. 1982) .

(n19)Footnote 19. The Ninth Circuit remanded the case for additional findings by the lower court on, inter alia, whether defense counsel acted willfully or in bad faith. 664 F.2d at 1343 .
Attorney's fees and costs were properly taxed against counsel who pressed objections to a referee's decision, despite having stipulated that this decision would not be reviewable. Baker Indus. v. Cerberus, Ltd., 764 F.2d 204 (3d Cir. 1985) .
See generally, Rothschild and Fenton, Rule 11: Stop, Think, and Inverstigate, 11 Litig. 13 (Winter 1985) (noting that § 1927 sanctions are rarely imposed for anything less than egregious conduct). Even where the court does not give actual notice that such sanctions are being considered, sanctions may be imposed under § 1927 for breach of a local rule where counsel's conduct is willful and counsel has adequate opportunity to defend himself. See Toombs v. Leone, 777 F.2d 465 (9th Cir. 1985) .

(n20)Footnote 20. Tom Growney Equip. v. Shelley Irrigation Development, 834 F.2d 833, 835 (9th Cir. 1987) . Cf. United States v. Bingham, 769 F. Supp. 1039 (N.D. Ill. 1991) .

(n21)Footnote 21. 782 F. Supp. 457, 470-71 (N.D. Cal. 1991) .

(n22)Footnote 22. See Model Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 3.3(a)(4)(c).

(n23)Footnote 23. In re Carroll, 244 S.W.2d 474, 474-75 (Ky. 1951) . See also Nix v. Whiteside, 475 U.S. 157, 106 S. Ct. 988, 89 L. Ed. 2d 123 (1986) .

(n24)Footnote 24. McErlean, Mistakes: What Do You Do When Your Client Lies?, 15 Litig. 8 (Winter 1989).

(n25)Footnote 25. A.B.A. Comm. on Ethics and Prof. Resp., Formal Op. 87-353 (1987).

* Chapter 26 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 26 Conduct and Demeanor of Attorneys *

3-26 Federal Litigation Guide § 26.03

§ 26.03 Trial Publicity.

A practical reality of litigation today is that publicity, whether in the form of formal press reports or word-of-mouth community opinion, may affect the way in which a trier of fact, judge or jury, perceives pending civil litigation. Although the problems may be greater in the area of criminal litigation, given the sensational nature of many cases and the penalties that an adverse decision may impose upon a defendant, the issues in civil litigation may also capture the interest of a community. It is important for you to be familiar with both the rules that assist in controlling publicity at its source, including extrajudicial attorney comment, and those which seek to minimize the effects of publicity once control is no longer possible.

Publicity problems underscore the long-standing tension between First Amendment rights and the state's substantial interest in assuring a fair and impartial trial. In the criminal context, the Supreme Court has described such trials as "the most fundamental of all freedoms." n1 In civil litigation, triers of fact annually determine the disposition of millions of dollars in treble damages, recompense for personal injuries and commercial awards. The state's interest in preventing prejudice from out-of-court statements, and in protecting the dignity and proper function of judicial proceedings, extends to civil trials as well.

Courts and legislatures have acknowledged that the right to a fair trial "can be impaired by lawyers' unrestrained, prejudicial comment" before and during trial. n2 At the same time, however, they have recognized that "lawyers' responsibility to protect the fairness of the judicial process does not mean that lawyers and litigants surrender their First Amendment rights at the courthouse door." n3 In an effort to protect the fairness of trials while preserving the rights of attorneys and the public, both state and federal courts have established rules to govern the range of permissible statements by attorneys about pending litigation.

As attorneys, you and your opponent are the persons most knowledgeable about the facts underlying the case. If, for example, you have obtained information through discovery that reflects police surveillance of local citizens, or government destruction of damaging documents, or a corporate policy to dump toxic waste into a community, you and your adversary may be the only persons who have had first-hand exposure to the records of such facts. Where the materials are covered by an agreed protective order, you will probably be bound not to disclose them except in court, for the sole purpose of furthering the lawsuit. Where no protective order exists, two key questions emerge: (1) is your client's interest served by public discussion of the basis for your lawsuit, and (2) do the prevailing "no-comment" rules in your jurisdiction permit you to engage in such a discussion.

Inevitably, emergency situations will occur in civil litigation where a statement must be made to correct highly prejudicial or harmful statements or allegations published in the news media. This situation is most likely to occur in bankruptcy or reorganization situations, antitrust litigation, or lawsuits regarding defects in consumer products.

Pretrial publicity can be an effective litigation tool that accomplishes goals more quickly or thoroughly than litigation itself. The risk of public disclosure of damaging facts may affect the willingness of your opponent--or your client--to settle. An interested press and public have substantial power to intrude upon the lives of individuals and the workings of corporations. Corporations whose marketing efforts may be severely hampered by adverse publicity often decide to settle a claim rather than subject their plans or past practices to public scrutiny and comment. Individuals involved in divorce or defamation cases may wish to avoid the presence of reporters, photographers, spectators or private detectives around their homes, businesses and family members.

You may decide that publicity will improve your client's settlement posture. It may also assist you in locating useful information for trial, such as other parties with similar claims and facts about your opponent from new sources. However, publicity may also be harmful. There are serious risks of being misquoted, disclosing client confidences, revealing trial strategies to your adversary, and angering the trial judge. Publicity may also focus public attention on any negative features of your client or case. For these reasons, no comments--even permissible comments--should be made to the press unless you have first discussed the intended publicity, and the perceived reasons for it, with your client. Although media publicity can aid in building a legal practice, and can be an ego booster, never allow that fact to influence your judgment regarding whether to seek publicity in a given case. Of course, the client may refuse to permit you to make any public comment. Your zeal for notoriety must not undermine your representation of your client.

Always keep in mind that certain kinds of publicity may jeopardize the impartiality of the trier of fact, whether judge or jury. If you use extrajudicial statements as a means of buttressing your case, you may create support for a motion for change of venue or for a mistrial. Because you, as an attorney involved in the case, are a knowledgeable source of facts, your words may be presented by the press and accepted by the public as more credible and reliable than those of your client or witnesses. With that credibility, however, comes the power to influence community opinion, or even the judge. n4 Because of such risks, many practitioners believe it is rarely to counsel's strategic advantage to attempt to try a case in the media.

You should not, by yourself or through others, n5 publish or cause to be published any matter concerning a case that might interfere with a fair trial. Generally, the best comment is no comment. In situations where some comment is necessary, you may make a statement to the press, but you may not do so anonymously and you should not go beyond quotations from court records or from official documents. A good practice might be simply to refer the media to certain documents on file with the court. In most jurisdictions, you may not comment on the merits, nor should you make any comment regarding intended evidence, proof or witnesses. n6

Additionally, in light of potentially significant prejudice from attorney comments, the disciplinary rules of most jurisdictions limit carefully the content of such remarks. Accordingly, if you believe that publicity would serve your client's interests, it is important to familiarize yourself with the applicable rules for both the jurisdictions in which you are licensed and the jurisdiction in which the trial is to take place. The rules vary between jurisdictions, but usually resemble one of several models. One such model is former ABA Canon 20, which provides:

Newspaper Discussion of Pending Litigation.

Newspaper publications by a lawyer as to pending or anticipated litigation may interfere with a fair trial in the Courts and otherwise prejudice the due administration of justice. Generally they are to be condemned. If the extreme circumstances of a particular case justify statement to the public, it is unprofessional to make it anonymously. An ex parte reference to the facts should not go beyond quotation from the records and papers on file in the court; but even in extreme cases, it is better to avoid any ex parte statement. n7

This kind of general condemnation of public statements by attorneys has been rejected in many jurisdictions as the equivalent of a prior restraint upon political speech. n8 Several courts have emphasized that those most knowledgeable about facts unearthed in the course of an investigation must be free to comment publicly upon issues of political and social interest, such as government abuse, neglect of public needs, and commercial practices, that may arise in the course of civil litigation.

In response to such criticism, some jurisdictions adopted the "no- comment" rule embodied in Disciplinary Rule 7-107 of the Code of Professional Responsibility:

A lawyer or law firm associated with a civil action shall not during its investigation or litigation make or participate in making an extrajudicial statement, other than a quotation from or reference to public records, that a reasonable person would expect to be disseminated by means of public communication and that relates to:

(1) Evidence regarding the occurrence or transaction involved.

(2) The character, credibility or criminal record of a party, witness, or prospective witness.

(3) The performance or result of any examinations or tests or the refusal or failure of a party to submit to such.

(4) His opinion as to the merits of the claims or defenses of a party, except as required by law or administrative rule.

(5) Any other matter reasonably likely to interfere with a fair trial of the action.

In an effort to balance the restriction on First Amendment rights against the right to a fair trial, many courts have incorporated an additional requirement that any statement within the categories of DR 7-107 pose a "reasonable likelihood" of harm to a fair hearing before an attorney's comments will be deemed violative of the rule. n9 Other jurisdictions, however, insist that this "reasonable likelihood" standard permits too broad a limitation of an attorney's right to free speech. For example, in Chicago Council of Lawyers v. Bauer, n10 the court held that an attorney's comments must pose "a serious and imminent threat of interference with a fair trial" before they can be restrained by court rule.

The ABA's Model Rule of Professional Conduct 3.6 states:

A lawyer shall not make an extrajudicial statement that a reasonable person would expect to be disseminated by means of public communication if the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that it will have a substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing an adjudicative proceeding.

As a practical matter, Supreme Court precedent precludes any substantial limitations upon the press itself. The press may be foreclosed from comment:

only when (1) pretrial publicity is likely to be so pervasive that it probably will have an effect on jurors; (2) there are no alternative methods of dealing with the problem through (a) change of venue, (b) postponement of the trial, (c) questioning jurors closely during voir dire, (d) clear instructions at trial, or (e) sequestration of the jury; and (3) the prior restraint will be effective. n11

But the mere fact that the press may have a right to comment on civil cases does not require that you encourage that comment. n12

Although substantive limitations are generally unavailable, there are procedural restrictions that may be placed upon the press to limit their impact upon the parties, the witnesses and the jury. For example, the local court rules for the federal court for the Northern District of Oklahoma provide that the court may order that no member of the news media be permitted within the bar railing, allocate a certain number of seats to news media representatives, insulate witnesses from news interviews during the trial period, prohibit the photographing or sketching of jurors within the environs of court, and require the clearing of entrances to the hallways at various points during the trial in order to protect the jury and witnesses from any contact with reporters or photographers. n13 If your clients or witnesses reasonably fear harassment by the press, you may wish to move that the court order such protective measures.

Aside from these restrictions, neither courts nor attorneys can control media discussion of a lawsuit to any significant degree. You may, however, rely upon the local disciplinary rules to restrain the comments of your adversary. Escalating a media war begun by your adversary may result in sanctions against the client and sanctions and/or discipline against the attorney.

In some cases, you may find that formal publicity is limited, but the community grapevine has produced extensive discussion of your case or client. For example, if your client is a large local employer who has recently laid off a substantial number of its workers, your client may encounter hostility and unfavorable word-of-mouth reports when a plaintiff sues it for wrongful termination. The jury pool may include friends and relatives of former employees, who have heard unfavorable opinions about your client.

Where the lawsuit or the parties have been widely discussed and evaluated within the community, it becomes important to elicit that fact upon voir dire. If the informal publicity has created an adverse sentiment against your client, you should seek a change of venue or make certain that the questions and instructions are designed to impress upon the jurors their duty to ignore any extrajudicial statements when weighing the evidence presented in court.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsProfessional ConductGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsProfessional ConductOpposing Counsel & PartiesLegal EthicsProfessional ConductTribunals

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Estes v. Texas, 381 U.S. 532, 540, 85 S. Ct. 1628, 14 L. Ed. 2d 543 (1965) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Hirschkop v. Snead, 594 F.2d 356, 363-4 (4th Cir. 1979) .

(n3)Footnote 3. In re Halkin, 598 F.2d 176, 186 (D.C. Cir. 1979) , cited with approval in Seattle Times v. Rhinehart, 467 U.S. 20, 104 S. Ct. 2199, 2207, n.18, 81 L. Ed. 2d 17 (1984) .

(n4)Footnote 4. At least one court of appeals has noted that "[p]retrial publicity has not been shown to be a source of interference to fair bench trials." Hirschkop v. Snead, 594 F.2d 356, 371 (4th Cir. 1979) . Other courts disagree. See Levine v. United States Court for the Cent. Dist. of Cal., 764 F.2d 590, 595 (9th Cir. 1985) ; In re Halkin, 598 F.2d 176, 193 (D.C. Cir. 1979) ("... the threat of prejudicial publicity is entitled to some weight in a bench trial ..."); Chicago Counsel of Lawyers v. Bauer, 522 F.2d 242, (7th Cir. 1975) , cert. denied, 427 U.S. 912 (1976) .

(n5)Footnote 5. A lawyer may not avoid discipline for improper public comment in the media by directing a third person, including his client, to approach the press. Ala. State Bar Ethics Op. 89-21 (1989).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Code of Professional Responsibility DR 7-107(G) and Model Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 3.3(a)(4)(c).

(n7)Footnote 7. Code of Professional Responsibility, as amended by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, retaining Canon 20 of the Canons of Professional Ethics, quoted in In re Halkin 598 F.2d 176, 181 (D.C. Cir. 1979) . See also Model Code of Professional Responsibility DR 7-107(G); Hardy, Comment, Order in the Courtroom, Silence on the Courthouse Steps: Attorneys Muzzled by Ethical Disciplinary Rules, 22 Seton Hall L. Rev. 1401 (1992).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada, 111 S. Ct. 2720, 115 L. Ed. 2d 888 (1991) (a Nevada Supreme Court rule similar to Model Rule 3.6 of the A.B.A. Models Rules of Professional Conduct was invalidated as void for vagueness as applied).

(n9)Footnote 9. Hirschkop v. Snead, 594 F.2d 356, (4th Cir. 1979) ; see also citations in In re Halkin, 598 F.2d 176, 193 (D.C. Cir. 1979) .

(n10)Footnote 10. 522 F.2d 242 (7th Cir. 1975) . See also Levine v. United States Court for the Cent. Dist. of Cal., 764 F.2d 590, 595 (9th Cir. 1980) .

(n11)Footnote 11. In re Halkin, 598 F.2d 176, 183 n.14 (D.C. Cir. 1979) ; quoting Nebraska Press Ass'n v. Stewart, 427 U.S. 539, 562, 563-4, 96 S. Ct. 2791, 49 L. Ed. 2d 683 (1976) .

(n12)Footnote 12. See Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada, 111 S. Ct. 2720, 115 L. Ed. 2d 888 (1991) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Local Rule 27(1) of the Northern District of Oklahoma.

* Chapter 26 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 26 Conduct and Demeanor of Attorneys *

3-26 Federal Litigation Guide § 26.04

§ 26.04 Bibliography.

[1] Law Reviews and Periodicals.

Attack on Rambo: Bar Courtesy Codes Spread, 14 Bar Leader 11 (Nov.-Dec. 1988).

Broder, When the Opponent Plays Hardball ... the Practitioner Need Not Play Lowball, 25 Trial 62 (1989).

Brown, Narcissism, Manners, and Morals: Can Grace and Collegiality Be Salvaged?, 13 Litig. 17 (Winter 1987).

Carlson, Argument to the Jury: Passion, Persuasion, and Legal Controls, 33 St. Louis U.L.J. 787 (1989).

Colter, Connecting with Jurors, 29 Trial 114 (Feb. 1993).

Dombroff, Unfair Tactics in Examining Witnesses, 21 Trial 65 (Feb. 1985).

Elliot, "I'd Love to Tell You, But ..." Ethical Constraints on the Lawyer's Right to Disclose, 66 Conn. B. J. 321 (1992).

Fitzwater, Toward a Renaissance of Professionalism in Trial Advocacy, 20 Tex. Tech. L. Rev. 787 (1989).

Gaetke, Lawyers as Officers of the Court, 42 Vand. L. Rev. 39 (1989).

Gerber, Victory v. Truth: The Adversary System and Its Ethics, 19 Ariz. St. L.J. 3 (1987).

Gold, Psychological Manipulation in the Courtroom, 66 Neb. L. Rev. 562 (1987).

Green, Government Lawyers and the Press, 5 Com. & L. 3 (Summer 1983).

Kanner, Welcome Home Rambo: High-minded Ethics and Low-down Tactics in the Courts, 25 Loy. L.A. L. Rev. 81 (1991).

Kornstein, The Qualities of an American Advocate, 61 N.Y. St. B.J. 8 (1989).

Marks, Honesty Pays-- Especially in the Law Business, 33 Decalogue J. 31 (Oct. 1987).

Oatley, Negotiating Techniques for Lawyers, 6 Advocates Q. 214 (Aug. 1985).

Park, Don't Speak for Yourself: The Lawyer's Duty to Refrain from Expressing Personal Opinion at Trial, 36 Fed. B. News & J. 36 (1989).

Potter, Settlement of Claims and Litigation: Legal Rules, Negotiation Strategies, and In-House Guidelines, 41 Bus. Law. 515 (1986).

Savelle, Why Are They Picking On Us?, 78 A.B.A.J., Nov. 1992, at 72.

Smith, The Advocate's Use of Social Science Research into Nonverbal and Verbal Communications: Zealous Advocacy or Unethical Conduct? 134 Mil. L. Rev. 173 (Fall 1991).

Sayler, Rambo Litigation: Why Hardball Tactics Won't Work, 74 ABA J. 78 (Mar. 1, 1988).

Sprinkle, Professional Responsibility, 57 UMKC L. Rev. 735 (1989).

Thompson, Tactics that Get Lawyers Sued, 10 Cal. Law. 48 (1990).

Weidman & McGuire, Troublesome Trials-- Improper Conduct of Counsel, 16 Trial Law. Q. 5 (1984).

Yannello, Trial Advocacy on Trial, 7 Ohio N.U. L. Rev. 3 (1980).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsProfessional ConductGeneral OverviewLegal EthicsProfessional ConductOpposing Counsel & PartiesLegal EthicsProfessional ConductTribunals

* Chapter 26 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide 27.syn

§ 27.syn Synopsis to Chapter 27: The Pretrial Conference

§ 27.01 Pretrial Conferences Promote Active Judicial Case Management
[1] Rule 16 Is Primary Source of Court's Case Management Authority
[2] General Objectives of Pretrial Conferences
[3] Importance of Local Rules and Individual Judges' Practices

§ 27.02 Referring Case to Magistrate Judge
[1] Magistrate Judge May Handle Significant Pretrial Activity
[2] Scope of Assignments to Magistrate Judges Vary
[3] Standard of Review of Magistrate Judge's Ruling

§ 27.03 Appointing Special Master
[1] Appointment Procedure
[2] Reference Must Aid Judge
[3] Advantages and Disadvantages of Special Masters
[4] Court Fixes Compensation of Special Master
[5] Seeking Review of Special Master's Determination

§§ 27.04 through 27.09 [Reserved]

§ 27.10 Parties Must Confer at Least 21 Days Prior to Scheduling Conference

§ 27.11 Drafting Proposed Discovery Plan at Initial Conference of Parties; Filing Report Outlining Plan

§ 27.12 CHECKLIST: Initial Conference of Parties; Planning for Discovery

§§ 27.13 through 27.19 [Reserved]

§ 27.20 Scheduling Order Mandatory Unless Exempted by Local Rule

§ 27.21 Mandatory and Optional Topics to Be Addressed by Scheduling Order

§ 27.22 Contact Between Judge and Litigants Mandatory Prior to Issuance of Scheduling Order
[1] Providing Input to Judge Prior to Issuance of Scheduling Order

[2] Manner of Initial Contact Between Judge and Litigants Not Prescribed

§ 27.23 Local Rules May Exempt Categories of Cases From Scheduling Order Requirement

§ 27.24 Seeking Modification of Scheduling Order
[1] Modification of Scheduling Order Requires Showing of Good Cause
[2] Strategic Consideration

§§ 27.25 through 27.29 [Reserved]

§ 27.30 Different Districts Use Different Labels to Describe Scheduling Conference

§ 27.31 Scheduling Conference Discretionary Unless Mandated by Local Rule

§ 27.32 Purpose of Scheduling Conference

§ 27.33 Timing of Scheduling Conference

§ 27.34 Who Must Attend Discretionary Scheduling Conference

§ 27.35 Importance of Preparing for Scheduling Conference

§ 27.36 Court Annexed ADR Typically Discussed at Scheduling Conference

§§ 27.37 through 27.49 [Reserved]

§ 27.50 Different Districts Use Different Labels to Describe Interim Pretrial Conferences

§ 27.51 Purpose of Interim Pretrial Conference

§ 27.52 Interim Pretrial Conference Discretionary Unless Required by Local Rule

§ 27.53 Procedures for Conducting Interim Pretrial Conferences

§ 27.54 Requesting Interim Pretrial Conference

§ 27.55 Attendance Requirements at Interim Pretrial Conferences

§ 27.56 Subjects for Consideration at Interim Pretrial Conferences
[1] Listing of Rule 16(c) Interim Pretrial Conference Topics
[2] Developments Specific to Case Dictate Subjects Considered at Interim Pretrial Conference
[3] Consult Local Rules and Individual Judge's Rules
[4] Use of Court-Appointed Experts

§ 27.57 Interim Pretrial Conference Orders
[1] Court May Enter Interim Pretrial Conference Order
[2] Seeking Modification of Interim Pretrial Conference Order

§ 27.58 Settlement Conferences
[1] Settlement Conferences Discretionary Unless Mandated by Local Rule
[2] Settlement Cannot Be Coerced
[3] Referring Settlement Conference to Magistrate Judge or Special Master
[4] Benefits of Settlement Conference; Strategy Considerations
[5] Preparing and Filing Settlement Conference Statement

[6] CHECKLIST: Preparing for Settlement Conference

§§ 27.59 through 27.69 [Reserved]

§ 27.70 Definition of Final Pretrial Conference

§ 27.71 Final Pretrial Conference Discretionary Unless Mandated by Local Rule

§ 27.72 Final Pretrial Conference Agenda
[1] Formulating Trial Plan
[2] Other Appropriate Final Pretrial Conference Topics
[2.--1] Substantive Issues
[2.--2] Logistical Matters

§ 27.73 Final Pretrial Conference Attendance Requirements

§ 27.74 Preparing Final Pretrial Order
[1] Final Pretrial Order Generally Required
[2] Final Pretrial Order Controls Course of Case
[3] Drafting Final Pretrial Order
[4] Seeking Modification of Final Pretrial Order
[4.--1] Modification Appropriate Only to Prevent Manifest Injustice
[4.--2] Factors Typically Considered

§§ 27.75 through 27.79 [Reserved]

§ 27.80 Imposing Sanctions for Failing to Comply With Pretrial Order or Other Pretrial Conference Obligations
[1] Failing to Attend or Substantially Prepare for Conference
[2] Failing to Participate in Good Faith in Pretrial Conference
[3] Failing to Obey Pretrial Order

§ 27.81 Sanctions May Be Imposed Upon Motion or Sua Sponte

§ 27.82 Court Determines Appropriate Sanction
[1] Selection of Sanction Discretionary
[2] Types of Available Sanctions

§§ 27.83 through 27.99 [Reserved]

§ 27.100 Proposed Discovery Plan
[1] FORM
Proposed Discovery Plan
[2] Use of Form

§ 27.101 Report of Parties' Planning Conference
[1] FORM
Report of Parties' Planning Meeting
[2] Use of Form
[3] Disagreement of Parties

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

One of the major changes in federal practice in recent years has been the increasing emphasis on case management through early and continuing judicial involvement in the pretrial process. The goal is to manage and control the pretrial process to avoid wasteful and unduly expensive activities, and to expedite the process of achieving a disposition of the case. Accordingly, litigation strategy must be planned from the outset with the concept firmly in mind of participating in one or more conferences.

Rule 16 grants the trial judge significant discretion in using pretrial conferences to simplify issues for expeditious trial, to eliminate surprise, and to facilitate settlement. Additionally, many judges enter standard pretrial orders to facilitate the cooperation of counsel, and to eliminate unnecessary cost or delay in the pretrial process. Local rules may also set forth requirements and guidelines for the efficient conduct of pretrial proceedings.

Typically, the court will hold a series of pretrial conferences. An early conference will usually focus on scheduling and establishing deadlines for matters such as motions and discovery. Subsequent interim conferences may focus on the extent and timing of discovery, or whether summary judgment motions may be appropriate.

The final pretrial conference will ordinarily be held as close as possible to the trial date, and will deal with ground rules for trial, simplifying the issues to be tried, the order of the presentation of evidence, identifying witnesses and exhibits, and final pretrial motions, such as motions in limine to exclude evidence. The order entered after the final pretrial conference, generally referred to as the final pretrial order, will dictate the framework for the trial; the order will supersede the pleadings in the case, and may be modified only upon a showing of manifest injustice. As a result, substantial care must be given to drafting the order and preparing for the conference at which its terms will be determined.

This chapter discusses the effective use of pretrial conferences, from the initial scheduling conference, through the final pretrial conference. The chapter is organized by the chronological sequence in which counsel are most likely to encounter the operation of Rule 16 and related local rules. The chapter outlines the critical legal, strategic, and tactical issues surrounding pretrial conferences, and includes:

- Advice concerning practice under Rule 16 and related local rules
- Warnings about the dangers inherent in failing to comply with the requirements of those rules

- Observations about ranges of real world pretrial conference practices
- Discussion of settlement conferences and the use of special masters in the pretrial context
- Overview of enforcement of pretrial conference orders and other pretrial conference obligations

The chapter also includes sample forms, including a proposed discovery plan, and a report of the parties' Rule 26(f) planning meeting.

For expanded coverage of pretrial conferences, see Moore's Federal Practice, Ch. 16, Pretrial Conferences; Scheduling; Management (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
A. Understanding Pretrial Conference Objectives

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.01

§ 27.01 Pretrial Conferences Promote Active Judicial Case Management

[1] Rule 16 Is Primary Source of Court's Case Management Authority

Rule 16 is the principal source of the powers and tools that district courts may use to achieve the fundamental purpose stated in Rule 1 of securing "the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action and proceeding." n1

Rule 16 promotes a concept of active judicial management of the case development process in most civil actions to reach a swift, inexpensive, and just resolution of litigation, with the participation and cooperation of counsel and the parties. n2 The Manual for Complex Litigation suggests that effective case management should generally be active, substantive, timely, ongoing, firm but fair, and carefully prepared. n3

[2] General Objectives of Pretrial Conferences

The court is responsible for ensuring that each case is positioned as quickly and as efficiently as possible for disposition. Accordingly, judges direct pretrial activity, including fixing deadlines for completing the major pretrial tasks and for trial, and are encouraged to actively participate in designing case-specific plans for structuring litigation as efficiently as possible for disposition by settlement, motion, or trial. Rule 16 authorizes and regulates the use of a wide range of case management tools and powers, principally through pretrial conferences, and authorizes a wide range of sanctions for violations of pretrial orders. n4

The court may, in its discretion, direct the attorneys for the parties and any unrepresented parties to appear for a pretrial conference or conferences for case management purposes, including the following: n5

- Expediting the disposition of the action
- Establishing early and continuing control so that the case will not be protracted because of lack of management
- Discouraging wasteful pretrial activities
- Improving the quality of the trial through more thorough preparation

- Facilitating the settlement of the case

[3] Importance of Local Rules and Individual Judges' Practices

The variety of practices under Rule 16 among sitting federal judges can be confusing. At the outset, it is imperative for counsel to consult the local rules of the particular district, and the individual judge's rules.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial Orders

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16; see Fed. R. Civ. P. 1.

(n2)Footnote 2. Lamborn v. Dittmer, 873 F.2d 522, 527 (2d Cir. 1989) (citing Moore's Federal Practice).

(n3)Footnote 3. Manual for Complex Litigation 10.13 (4th ed. 2004); see Manual for Complex Litigation 10.1, 11.1, 11.2 (4th ed. 2004).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16.

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(a).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
A. Understanding Pretrial Conference Objectives

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.02

§ 27.02 Referring Case to Magistrate Judge

[1] Magistrate Judge May Handle Significant Pretrial Activity

As a result of the congested dockets in district courts, and the need to allocate judicial resources, district judges may appoint magistrate judges to handle significant pretrial activity, particularly with respect to scheduling and planning. n1 Because these delegations are increasingly common, practitioners must be familiar with the rules under which the referrals are made, as well as the procedures and standards that apply when a party seeks to have the district judge reconsider a non-dispositive ruling made in the first instance by a magistrate judge. n2

[2] Scope of Assignments to Magistrate Judges Vary

The types of assignments that may be given to magistrate judges vary significantly, even within the same court. For example, some district judges assign all responsibility for handling all discovery disputes in all their cases to magistrate judges, while others almost never refer discovery matters to magistrate judges. Some judges selectively refer particular discovery disputes to magistrate judges. Further, some judges assign substantial case management responsibilities to magistrate judges, whereas others never assign substantial case management responsibilities.

Counsel should consult the local rules of the particular district, as well as the individual judge's rules, regarding assignment of cases to magistrate judges.

[3] Standard of Review of Magistrate Judge's Ruling

When reconsidering a magistrate judge's ruling or report and recommendation, the standard of review applied by a district court varies with the type of decision made, and the basis for the decision. Interlocutory scheduling orders issued by a magistrate judge, for example, may be reviewable by a district judge under the clearly erroneous or the abuse of discretion standard. The clearly erroneous standard is applied to findings of fact made by magistrate judges that support rulings on non-dispositive motions, or the exercise of case-management discretion. n3

By contrast, a district judge reviews those aspects of a magistrate judge's decision that involve interpretations of applicable law under the contrary to law standard, meaning de novo review. District judges must also apply the de novo standard when ruling on objections to a magistrate judge's report and recommendation on a potentially dispositive motion. n4

Counsel should be aware that if a magistrate judge enters the scheduling order in a case assigned to a district judge, the parties may ask the district judge to reconsider the magistrate judge's decision. A party must file any challenge within 14 days after being served with a copy of the order; any objections not timely filed are waived. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersMagistratesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial Orders

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See 28 U.S.C. § 636.

(n2)Footnote 2. See [3], below.

(n3)Footnote 3. See 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(A).

(n4)Footnote 4. See 28 U.S.C. § 636(a)(4), (b)(1), (c)(4); Fed. R. Civ. P. 72.

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(a).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
A. Understanding Pretrial Conference Objectives

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.03

§ 27.03 Appointing Special Master

[1] Appointment Procedure

Unless a statute provides otherwise, a court may appoint a special master only to: n1

- Perform duties consented to by the parties, or
- Hold trial proceedings and make or recommend findings of fact on issues to be decided by the court without a jury if warranted by special circumstances or by the need to perform an accounting or resolve a difficult computation of damages, or
- Address pretrial and post-trial matters that cannot be addressed effectively and timely by an available district or magistrate judge

Consent of the parties is not required as a condition of the reference, nor does their consent mandate a reference. n2

[2] Reference Must Aid Judge

The purpose of a special master is to assist the district judge by reporting on matters, supervising various pretrial phases of litigation, taking on burdensome discovery tasks, negotiating settlements, and issuing rulings on preliminary issues. Since special masters do not satisfy the criteria set by Article III of the U.S. Constitution for the exercise of judicial power, district judges must decide all dispositive issues of fact and law. n3

[3] Advantages and Disadvantages of Special Masters

A special master may be able to devote more time to the case, and may have developed a specialized expertise in a pertinent field that may be of great value when the case involves esoteric or highly technical matters. n4

On the other hand, the appointment of a special master may increase the cost of litigation, particularly if the parties are obligated to pay the special master's compensation. n5

[4] Court Fixes Compensation of Special Master

The court, in its discretion, fixes the amount of the master's compensation. However, if a magistrate judge is designated to serve as a special master, the amount of compensation is determined by statute. The court determines whether the special master's compensation is to be charged to the parties, or paid out of a fund or subject matter of the action that is in the court's custody or control. n6

[5] Seeking Review of Special Master's Determination

In acting on a master's order, report, or recommendations, the court must afford an opportunity to be heard and may receive evidence, and may take any of the following actions: n7

- Adopt or affirm
- Modify
- Wholly or partly reject or reverse
- Resubmit to the master with instructions

A party may file objections or file a motion to adopt or modify the master's order, report, or recommendations no later than 21 days from the time of the master's order, report, or recommendations are served, unless the court sets a different time. n8

The court must decide de novo all objections to findings of fact made or recommended by a master unless the parties stipulate with the court's consent that: n9

- The master's findings will be reviewed for clear error, or
- The findings of a master appointed under Rule 53(a)(1)(A) or (C) will be final

The court must decide de novo all objections to conclusions of law made or recommended by a master. n10

Unless the order of appointment establishes a different standard of review, the court may set aside a master's ruling on a procedural matter only for an abuse of discretion. n11

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersMagistratesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureJudicial OfficersMastersAppointmentsCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial Orders

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Stauble v. Warrob Inc., 977 F.2d 690, 695 (1st Cir. 1992) ; Reed v. Cleveland Bd. of Educ., 607 F.2d 737, 747-748 (6th Cir. 1979) ; Cademartori v. Marine Midland Trust Co., 18 F.R.D. 277 (S.D.N.Y. 1955) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Madrigal Audio Labs., Inc. v. Cello Ltd., 799 F.2d 814, 818 (2d Cir. 1986) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See, e.g., New York State Ass'n for Retarded Children v. Carey, 706 F.2d 956, 962-963 (2d Cir.

1983) , cert. denied, 464 U.S. 915 (1983) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See [4], below (compensation of special master).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(g); see also 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(2).

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(f)(1).

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(f)(2).

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(f)(3).

(n10)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(f)(4).

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(f)(5).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
A. Understanding Pretrial Conference Objectives

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 27.04 through 27.09

[Reserved]

§§ 27.04[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
B. Scheduling Initial Conference of Parties; Planning for Discovery

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.10

§ 27.10 Parties Must Confer at Least 21 Days Prior to Scheduling Conference

The first pretrial conference is the initial conference between opposing counsel mandated by Rule 26(f). Counsel must confer at least 21 days before a scheduling conference is held or a scheduling order is due under Rule 16(b) to accomplish the following: n1

- Discuss the nature and basis of their claims and defenses
- Discuss the possibilities for a prompt settlement or other resolution of the case
- Make or arrange for the required initial disclosures
- Develop a proposed discovery plan

Counsel should consult the local rules of the particular district, as well as the individual judge's rules, for any provisions regarding the initial conference of parties.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
B. Scheduling Initial Conference of Parties; Planning for Discovery

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.11

§ 27.11 Drafting Proposed Discovery Plan at Initial Conference of Parties; Filing Report Outlining Plan

The proposed discovery plan which the parties are required to develop at the initial conference of parties n1 must indicate the parties' views and proposals concerning: n2

- What changes should be made in the timing, form, or requirement for disclosures under Rule 26(a), including a statement as to when disclosures under Rule 26(a)(1) were made or will be made
- The subjects on which discovery may be needed, when discovery should be completed, and whether discovery should be conducted in phases or be limited to or focused upon particular issues
- Any issues relating to disclosure or discovery of electronically stored information, including the form or forms in which it should be produced
- Any issues relating to claims of privilege or of protection as trial-preparation material, including-if the parties agree on a procedure to assert such claims after production-whether to ask the court to include their agreement in an order
- What changes should be made in the limitations on discovery imposed under these rules or by local rule, and what other limitations should be imposed
- Any other orders that should be entered by the court under Rule 26(c) or under Rule 16(b) and (c)

A written report outlining the discovery plan must be submitted to the court within 14 days after the initial meeting of parties. n3

Counsel should consult the local rules of the particular district, as well as the individual judge's rules, for any provisions regarding content and filing requirements for discovery plans.

It may be productive for the scheduling order to state expressly that any motion to compel discovery must be filed prior to the date discovery closes rather than the later deadline in the scheduling order for filing "all other motions." There is not much authority on the topic and it is split. The better view is that the discovery deadline fixes the time for filing motions to compel discovery. n4

However, there is some authority to the contrary. n5

A form of report of the parties' planning meeting can be found at § 27.101.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 27.10.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a), (f).

(n4)Footnote 4. Days Inn Worldwide, Inc. v. Sonia Investments, 237 F.R.D. 395, 398 (N.D. Tex. 2006) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See e.g., Greene v. Swain County P'ship for Health, 342 F. Supp. 2d 442, 449 (W.D.N.C. 2004) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
B. Scheduling Initial Conference of Parties; Planning for Discovery

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.12

§ 27.12 CHECKLIST: Initial Conference of Parties; Planning for Discovery

☐ Schedule initial conference of parties, pursuant to Rule 26(f), to be held at least 21 days prior to scheduling conference is held or scheduling order is due under Rule 16(b).

☐ Review topics required to be discussed.

☐ Prepare proposed discovery plan at initial meeting of parties. Consult local rules, as well as individual judges' rules, regarding contents of proposed discovery plan.

☐ File report outlining discovery plan within 14 days after the initial conference of parties. Consult local rules, as well as individual judges' rules, regarding filing requirements.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
B. Scheduling Initial Conference of Parties; Planning for Discovery

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 27.13 through 27.19

[Reserved]

§§ 27.13[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
C. Preparing and Filing Scheduling Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.20

§ 27.20 Scheduling Order Mandatory Unless Exempted by Local Rule

Except in categories of actions expressly exempted by local rule as inappropriate, n1 the judge or magistrate judge must enter a pretrial scheduling order, after receiving the Rule 26(f) proposed discovery report from the parties, if required, n2 or after consulting with the attorneys for the parties and any unrepresented parties. n3 The scheduling order must be issued as soon as practicable, but in any event the earlier of 120 days after any defendant has been served with the complaint or 90 days after any defendant has appeared. n4

The scheduling order, sometimes referred to as a case management order, is the court's primary method to control its calendar, assert control over the case management process, and define the parameters and subsequent course of the case. The requirement of a scheduling order permits the court to intervene early to set realistic deadlines for discovery and other aspects of pretrial case development, as well as to position the case for settlement, alternative dispute resolution, or trial.

All sides to a federal action should, from the earliest time, analyze their discovery needs in order to be ready for the initial meeting of parties. n5 While scheduling orders are frequently altered in the course of the case, district judges vary in their willingness to substantially alter the schedules, and counsel generally must be prepared to show unanticipated needs to procure substantial changes.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 27.23.

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 27.11 (drafting and filing proposed discovery plan).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(1).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(2).

(n5)Footnote 5. See § 27.10 (initial meeting of parties).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
C. Preparing and Filing Scheduling Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.21

§ 27.21 Mandatory and Optional Topics to Be Addressed by Scheduling Order

The scheduling order must limit the time to join other parties, amend the pleadings, complete discovery, and file motions. n1 The scheduling order may also include: n2

- Modifications of the times for disclosures under Rules 26(a) and 26(e)(1) and of the extent of discovery to be permitted
- Provisions for disclosure or discovery of electronically stored information
- Any agreements the parties reach for asserting claims of privilege or of protection as trial preparation material after production
- The date or dates for conferences before trial, a final pretrial conference, and trial
- Any other matters appropriate in the circumstances of the case

The scheduling of discovery deadlines is a critical component of the scheduling order. Rule 16(b)(3)(B) specifically alerts the court to address the handling of discovery of electronically stored information in the scheduling order. n3

Rule 16(b)(3)(B) also includes among the topics that may be addressed in the scheduling order any agreements that the parties reach to facilitate discovery by minimizing the risk of waiver of privilege or work-product protection. n4 Parties may agree to a wide variety of arrangements. For example, they may agree that if privileged or protected information is inadvertently produced, the producing party may by timely notice assert the privilege or protection and obtain return of the materials without waiver. n5 An order that includes the parties' agreement may be helpful in avoiding delay and excessive cost in discovery. Rule 16(b)(3)(B) recognizes the propriety of including such agreements in the court's order. n6

An agreement that protects against privilege waivers in the event of inadvertent disclosures is binding only on those parties, and does not apply to nonparties unless incorporated in a court order. n7

Counsel should consult the local rules of the particular district, as well as the individual judge's rules, for any provisions regarding topics to be addressed in the scheduling order.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Grochowski v. Phoenix Constr., 318 F.3d 80, 86 (2d Cir. 2003) ; Bradford v. DANA Corp., 249 F.3d 807, 809 (8th Cir. 2001) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(3).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(3)(B)(iii).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(3)(B)(iv).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b) Committee Note (2006).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b) Committee Note (2006).

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Evid. 502(e).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
C. Preparing and Filing Scheduling Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.22

§ 27.22 Contact Between Judge and Litigants Mandatory Prior to Issuance of Scheduling Order

[1] Providing Input to Judge Prior to Issuance of Scheduling Order

The judge may not issue a scheduling order without having first either received from the litigants the proposed discovery plan report, n1 or consulted with the attorneys for the parties and any unrepresented parties by a scheduling conference, n2 telephone, mail, or other suitable means. n3

This preliminary contact serves the following purposes:

- The parties are given an opportunity at the outset to inform the court of potential procedural and substantive problems, as well as personal scheduling conflicts, that might affect the pretrial schedule
- The court may tailor the scheduling order to the needs of the individual case
- The court may assert control over the litigation and the parties from the outset

[2] Manner of Initial Contact Between Judge and Litigants Not Prescribed

Under Rule 16, the required contact between the judge and the litigants which forms the basis for the court's scheduling order n4 need not be in person or by telephone. The manner of contact is discretionary, and it is sufficient to solicit and receive input from counsel in writing or electronically. n5

The receipt of a written report outlining the discovery plan is one method to satisfy this requirement. n6 Practices vary between courts, between individual judges in the same court, and between types of cases. Counsel should consult the pertinent local rules, as well as any individual judges' rules.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See § 27.11 (drafting and filing proposed discovery plan).

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 27.31 (scheduling conferences).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(3)(B)(iv).

(n4)Footnote 4. See [1], above.

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Restrepo v. Colgate Univ., 149 F.R.D. 17, 19 (N.D.N.Y. 1993) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f); see § 27.11 (drafting and filing proposed discovery plan).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
C. Preparing and Filing Scheduling Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.23

§ 27.23 Local Rules May Exempt Categories of Cases From Scheduling Order Requirement

Local rules may exempt categories of cases from the scheduling order requirement. The only means for exempting categories of cases from the scheduling order requirement is by local rule. n1 Individual judges, acting on their own initiative and their own authority, may not issue standing orders that purport to exempt certain categories of cases from the scheduling order requirement.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(1).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
C. Preparing and Filing Scheduling Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.24

§ 27.24 Seeking Modification of Scheduling Order

[1] Modification of Scheduling Order Requires Showing of Good Cause

A scheduling order may not be modified except by leave of court on a showing of good cause. n1 Courts have wide discretion in determining good cause. n2 A court is more likely to respond favorably to a motion seeking an extension if counsel has not waited until the last minute to file the request. n3 An attorney's "excusable neglect" does not constitute good cause for modifying a Rule 16(b) scheduling order; instead, good cause requires a showing that, despite diligence, the party could not have reasonably met the schedule ordered. n4

[2] Strategic Consideration

Counsel should review the scheduling order deadlines and inform the court at the earliest possible moment if problems arise in complying with the schedule. A showing of good cause ordinarily requires that counsel establish an inability to meet the scheduled deadlines despite exercising due diligence. Accordingly, counsel should describe with specificity the actions that have been taken to comply with the scheduling order. Counsel should also propose a new schedule that contemplates getting the case trial-ready as quickly as possible under the changed circumstances. The proposed new dates should be as close to the dates originally fixed as feasible, and that fact should be pointed out in the request.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(4); see also Andretti v. Borla Performance Indus., 426 F.3d 824, 830 (6th Cir. 2005) ; see also Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. City of El Paso, 346 F.3d 541, 546 (5th Cir. 2003) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Doe v. Hawaii Dep't of Educ., 351 F. Supp. 2d 998, 1007 (D. Hawaii 2004) ; Colorado Visionary Academy v. Medtronic, Inc., 194 F.R.D. 684, 687-688 (D. Colo. 2000) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Harding v. Federal Reserve Bank, 707 F.2d 46, 52 (2d Cir. 1983) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Arnold v. Krause, Inc., 232 F.R.D. 58, 65 (W.D.N.Y. 2004) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
C. Preparing and Filing Scheduling Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 27.25 through 27.29

[Reserved]

§§ 27.25[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
D. Attending Discretionary Scheduling Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.30

§ 27.30 Different Districts Use Different Labels to Describe Scheduling Conference

Different district courts use different labels to describe the first conference between counsel, unrepresented parties, and the judge or magistrate judge. Some districts label the conference a scheduling conference, while others call it an initial status conference, an initial pretrial conference, an initial case management conference, a Rule 16 conference, or a first discovery conference.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
D. Attending Discretionary Scheduling Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.31

§ 27.31 Scheduling Conference Discretionary Unless Mandated by Local Rule

Judges may, but are not required to, hold a scheduling conference before issuing a scheduling order. Although some form of communication between the court and the parties is required before the court issues its scheduling order, n1 that communication may be by: n2

- Scheduling conference
- Telephone communication
- Mail communication
- Other suitable means
- Report outlining the proposed discovery plan n3

Counsel should consult the local rules of the particular district, as well as the individual judge's rules, regarding any scheduling conference requirements.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 27.22.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(1)(B).

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 27.11.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
D. Attending Discretionary Scheduling Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.32

§ 27.32 Purpose of Scheduling Conference

The purpose of the discretionary scheduling conference is to prepare and adopt a case specific management plan that will be memorialized in the court's scheduling order. n1 Scheduling orders put limits on the time to do the following: n2

- Join other parties
- Amend the pleadings
- File motions
- Complete discovery

The scheduling order also may include: n3

- Modifications of the times for disclosures under Rules 26(a) and 26(e)(1) and of the extent of discovery to be permitted
- Provisions for disclosure or discovery of electronically stored information
- Any agreements the parties reach for asserting claims of privilege or of protection as trial preparation material after production
- The date or dates for conferences before trial, a final pretrial conference, and trial
- Any other matters appropriate in the circumstances of the case

For discussion of scheduling orders, see §§ 27.20 -27.24.

At the Scheduling Conference, the parties must also be prepared to discuss the topics outlined in Rule 16(c), which broadly describes the issues that courts might address over the full range of pretrial conferences, from the scheduling conference to the final pretrial conference. n4 For discussion of the topics outlined in Rule 16(c), see § 27.56[1].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(3)(A).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(3)(B).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(c).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
D. Attending Discretionary Scheduling Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.33

§ 27.33 Timing of Scheduling Conference

If a discretionary scheduling conference is held at all, n1 it is ordinarily held after the key defendants have been served with process, and the parties have had an opportunity to meaningfully meet their initial disclosure and discovery planning obligations. For cases that are not relatively simple, scheduling conferences are ordinarily held several months after the filing of the complaint (assuming the plaintiff served the key defendants promptly). The conference will be particularly productive, and of greater tactical use, if the parties have accomplished the following tasks:

- Completed some of the core investigative homework
- Attempted to identify for one another the factual and legal issues that are likely to be most important
- Shared the names of likely witnesses
- Identified key documents, or shared specific information about the volume and kinds of documents to be examined, and estimated the timing of document production
- Explored settlement possibilities, and identified obstacles that must be overcome to make any negotiations productive
- Attempted to settle at least the basic elements of a plan for completing their initial and expert disclosures, n2 and for conducting necessary discovery

The timing of the scheduling conference may be affected by the early filing of motions, or by a party's early pursuit of equitable relief. When it is substantially likely that an early motion will resolve the case, the judge might postpone the scheduling conference until that motion is resolved, or devote the first conference to helping the parties establish a plan for generating the evidence needed to resolve the motion. Similarly, if a ruling on a petition for a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction is likely to significantly affect the nature or the viability of the litigation, the judge might postpone the scheduling conference until those issues are resolved.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 27.31 (scheduling conference discretionary unless mandated by local rule).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
D. Attending Discretionary Scheduling Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.34

§ 27.34 Who Must Attend Discretionary Scheduling Conference

If the court does require a scheduling conference, n1 the conference must be attended by attorneys for the parties, as well as by all unrepresented parties. At least one of the attorneys for each party participating in the conference must be authorized to enter into stipulations, and to make admissions regarding all matters that might reasonably be anticipated to be discussed at the conference. In addition, when appropriate, the court may require that a party or its representative be present or reasonably available by other means to consider possible settlement. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 27.31 (scheduling conference discretionary unless mandated by local rule).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(c)(1).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
D. Attending Discretionary Scheduling Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.35

§ 27.35 Importance of Preparing for Scheduling Conference

Before attending the scheduling conference, counsel should have a well thought-out description of their position, as well as a rationalized discovery plan. Counsel should also be prepared to identify probable motions. Many judges will press for quicker discovery than counsel prefer, so counsel must be prepared to explain exactly what they want, and how long it will take. If expert testimony may be used at trial, a schedule will be imposed for an exchange of information, and the availability of experts for pretrial examination. If the court is given the impression that one party's counsel is ill-prepared, has not decided on what is needed, and has no schedule in mind, the court may watch for dilatory conduct in the future, to the detriment of that party. Conversely, counsel who seem to understand all issues in the case, what witnesses and documents will be needed for discovery purposes, and the like, may receive deference from the court on such matters throughout the conduct of the case.

Counsel should attempt to determine the court's attitude toward discovery scope and scheduling in advance of the scheduling conference. As a last resort, chambers may provide copies of other scheduling orders upon request. Examples of the potential benefits of careful preparation include:

- Counsel might persuade the court to hear a potentially dispositive motion significantly earlier than might otherwise occur, and to limit discovery to evidence related to the motion until the court renders its decision

- Counsel might persuade the court to impose severe restrictions on discovery generally; restrictions that the court might not have imposed if it had received the benefit of fully-informed input from the unprepared lawyer

- Counsel might persuade the court to stage discovery in ways that are calculated to develop a view of the evidence that favors their client

- Counsel might simply persuade the court to put the case on an appreciably faster (or slower) track than usual

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
D. Attending Discretionary Scheduling Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.36

§ 27.36 Court Annexed ADR Typically Discussed at Scheduling Conference

The scheduling conference may include discussion of court annexed alternative dispute resolution programs. Some districts mandate court annexed ADR in certain types of actions, and other districts provide voluntary ADR programs. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureAlternative Dispute ResolutionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 3. See In re Atl. Pipe Corp., 304 F.3d 135, 145 (1st Cir. 2002) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
D. Attending Discretionary Scheduling Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 27.37 through 27.49

[Reserved]

§§ 27.37[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
E. Attending Interim Pretrial Conferences and Settlement Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.50

§ 27.50 Different Districts Use Different Labels to Describe Interim Pretrial Conferences

Different district courts use different labels to describe periodic pretrial conferences authorized by Rule 16(c). n1

Some districts label the conferences interim pretrial conferences, while others call them status conferences, discovery planning conferences, Rule 16 conferences, and interim or intermediate case management conferences. For clarity, this chapter refers to the first conference between the court and counsel as a scheduling conference, n2 and refers to all other conferences as interim pretrial conferences.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(c).

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 27.30.

130 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
E. Attending Interim Pretrial Conferences and Settlement Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.51

§ 27.51 Purpose of Interim Pretrial Conference

An interim pretrial conference provides an opportunity for the presiding judicial officer and counsel to revisit the issues in the case; to determine whether the case is progressing as scheduled; and to refine or add detail to the operative scheduling or interim pretrial order. Status conferences are discretionary with the judge, and may cover virtually any procedural or substantive issue relevant to the case.

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure rules do not prescribe specific procedures for interim pretrial conferences. Rather, local rules, and more typically, individual judge's rules may specify conference procedures. For example, counsel may be required prior to the pretrial conference to submit written statements or reports addressing matters related to case development. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 27.58[5].

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
E. Attending Interim Pretrial Conferences and Settlement Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.52

§ 27.52 Interim Pretrial Conference Discretionary Unless Required by Local Rule

The judge has discretion to hold one or more interim pretrial conferences. n1 Local rules may require judges to hold interim pretrial conferences in specified categories of cases, or in specified circumstances. Counsel should consult the individual judge's rules, which often contain provisions regarding interim pretrial conferences.

Under the activist case management philosophy that underlies Rule 16, judges and counsel are encouraged not to assume that the case development plan fashioned at the scheduling conference n2 should remain rigidly fixed. Rather, judges and counsel should periodically review pretrial developments, and expect to make adjustments in the original plan, or even to move the pretrial process in a different direction, as disclosures, discovery, motion activity, or external developments provide new information or changed litigation circumstances. External developments are most likely to be relevant to the parties' views about settlement, such as when a dramatic change in a party's economic circumstances makes that party significantly more or less interested in settlement.

It is useful to attempt to ascertain, as early as possible, whether the assigned judge or magistrate judge will actively manage the case. Most judges fit into one of two styles--either they actively manage the case and conduct periodic pretrial conferences, or they don't manage the case at all and have few if any pretrial conferences.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 27.32.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
E. Attending Interim Pretrial Conferences and Settlement Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.53

§ 27.53 Procedures for Conducting Interim Pretrial Conferences

The procedures for conducting interim pretrial conferences vary from one district to another, and from judge to judge. Conferences may be conducted formally in the courtroom, with the judge on the bench, and with all proceedings recorded. Alternatively, interim pretrial conferences may be more productive when conducted less formally, either in chambers or by telephone or video-conference, and off the record.

Counsel should consult the individual judge's rules to ascertain how the judge tends to handle interim pretrial conferences. Counsel should also speak with the judge's courtroom deputy for guidance.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
E. Attending Interim Pretrial Conferences and Settlement Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.54

§ 27.54 Requesting Interim Pretrial Conference

If the case might benefit from an interim pretrial conference, counsel should consider making a request to the assigned judge. Counsel are usually in a better position than the judge to observe developing pretrial matters, and a request for n interim pretrial conference signifies that counsel are taking their pretrial responsibilities seriously. Counsel should state any changed circumstances that give rise to the need for a conference, explain how a conference would contribute to the pretrial case development process, and propose an agenda.

If counsel for all parties agree on the proposed changes, they should consider submitting a stipulation, accompanied by a written explanation of the new circumstances, and the reasons that support the proposed new terms of the pretrial order. This approach is most promising when the stipulated changes do not jeopardize the dates that the court feels are most critical to docket control, especially the dates for trial and the final pretrial conference. If counsel propose new critical dates or deadlines, full and persuasive rationale should be presented to the court. It would be unwise for counsel to act inconsistently with the governing pretrial order until formal court approval is secured for the changes.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
E. Attending Interim Pretrial Conferences and Settlement Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.55

§ 27.55 Attendance Requirements at Interim Pretrial Conferences

At a minimum, every unrepresented party and at least one attorney for each represented party must participate in every interim pretrial conference. If appropriate, the court may require that a party or its representative be present or reasonably available by other means in order to consider possible settlement of the dispute. n1

At least one of the participating attorneys for each represented party must have authority to enter stipulations and make admissions with respect to any matter that he or she should reasonably anticipate may be discussed at the conference. n2 Courts may impose a broad range of sanctions if no appearance is made on behalf of a party at an interim pretrial conference. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(c)(1).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(c).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(f); see § 27.82[2] (types of available sanctions).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
E. Attending Interim Pretrial Conferences and Settlement Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.56

§ 27.56 Subjects for Consideration at Interim Pretrial Conferences

[1] Listing of Rule 16(c) Interim Pretrial Conference Topics

Rule 16(c) provides that the following matters may be considered and acted on at any pretrial conference: n1

- The formulation and simplification of the issues, including the elimination of frivolous claims and defenses
- The necessity or desirability of amendments to the pleadings
- The possibility of obtaining admissions of fact and of documents to avoid unnecessary proof, stipulations as to the authenticity of documents, and advance rulings on evidence admissibility
- The avoidance of unnecessary proof and cumulative evidence, and any limitations or restrictions on the use of expert testimony under Fed. R. Evid. 702
- The appropriateness and timing of summary adjudication n2
- The control and scheduling of discovery, including orders affecting disclosures and discovery pursuant to Rule 26 and Rules 29 through 37
- The identification of witnesses and documents
- The need and schedule for filing and exchanging pretrial briefs
- The date or dates for further conferences and for trial
- The advisability of referring some or all of the case to a magistrate judge or special master
- Settlement, and the use of any authorized ADR methods

- The form and substance of the pretrial order
- The disposition of pending motions
- The need for adopting special procedures for managing potentially difficult or protracted actions involving complex issues, multiple parties, difficulty legal questions, or unusual proof problems
- An order for separate trial pursuant to Rule 42(b) with respect to a claim, counterclaim, cross-claim, or third party claim, or with respect to any particular issue in the case
- An order directing a party or parties to present certain evidence early in the trial with respect to a manageable issue that could, on the evidence, be the basis for judgment as a matter of law under Rule 50(a), or a judgment on partial findings under Rule 52(c)
- An order setting a reasonable limit on the time allowed for presenting evidence
- Any other matters that might facilitate the just, speedy, and inexpensive disposition of the action

[2] Developments Specific to Case Dictate Subjects Considered at Interim Pretrial Conference

Rule 16(c) broadly describes the topics that may be addressed at the interim pretrial conferences over the course of the litigation. n2 Some of the listed items, such as the identification of the disputed legal and factual issues, and the control and scheduling of disclosures and discovery, are likely to receive considerable attention at the beginning and interim stages of the pretrial period. Other items, such as reviewing remaining claims and defenses, are more likely to be considered at the final pretrial conference. n3 Ordinarily, the developments specific to an individual case dictate which subjects are actually considered. The court, counsel, and unrepresented parties may suggest agenda items for these conferences.

[3] Consult Local Rules and Individual Judge's Rules

Local rules should be consulted regarding any interim pretrial conference topics not enumerated in Rule 16(c). More commonly, individual judges' rules set forth additional interim pretrial conference topics.

[4] Use of Court-Appointed Experts

A judge may consider and propose the use of a court-appointed expert at a scheduling or interim pretrial conference. n4 A court-appointed expert may help provide an early foundation for stipulations, reduce the scope of discovery, facilitate early settlement, reduce the adversarial nature of the proceedings and conflicts between the parties' experts, and potentially identify, clarify, and narrow the disputed issues.

A judge contemplating the appointment of a court-appointed expert must issue an order to show cause why expert witnesses should not be appointed. n5 The judge may solicit nominations for the appointment from the parties; n6 when one of the primary purposes of an appointment is to encourage an early settlement, the appointment of an expert who enjoys the confidence of all of the parties may be particularly beneficial. The court may consider specifying a date by which the expert must complete the investigation and file a report.

This procedure is rarely used, but could be an effective tool to propose, particularly if the proponent is confident regarding an appropriate issue.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDiscoveryMethodsStipulationsCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersEvidenceTestimonyExpertsAdmissibilityEvidenceTestimonyExpertsCourt-Appointed ExpertsProcedures

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(c)(2).

(n2)Footnote 2. See In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig., 229 F.R.D. 35, 40 (D. Me. 2005) .

(n3)Footnote 2. See [1], above.

(n4)Footnote 3. See § 27.72 (final pretrial conference agenda).

(n5)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Evid. 706.

(n6)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Evid. 706.

(n7)Footnote 6. See Fed. R. Evid. 706.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.57

§ 27.57 Interim Pretrial Conference Orders

[1] Court May Enter Interim Pretrial Conference Order

After any pretrial conference held pursuant to Rule 16, the court should issue "an order reciting the action taken". n1 The Supreme Court has ruled that the word"shall" in this sentence authorizes, but does not compel, judicial action. n2

Counsel should consult the local rules, as well as the individual judge's rules, to determine whether pretrial conference orders are required, and if so, whether it is counsel's responsibility to draft a proposed order. Even if a pretrial conference order is not required, counsel should nevertheless consider requesting the opportunity to present a proposed order, or at least a memorandum summarizing the results of the conference. An order (or memorandum) stating the decisions and stipulations made at the pretrial conference assists the parties in keeping track of the litigation; reduces the risk of confusion, friction between parties, inefficiency, and unfairness; and provides a record for appellate review. Additionally, in the course of preparing a writing, the judge or counsel may identify additional matters that should be addressed.

[2] Seeking Modification of Interim Pretrial Conference Order

An interim pretrial conference order controls the subsequent course of the action, unless modified by a subsequent order. n3 Rule 16 does not identify the standard that the court should apply in determining whether to modify an interim pretrial conference order. The absence of an articulated standard of review does not necessarily mean thatmotions to modify interim pretrial conference orders should be freely granted. Rather, judges should generally apply a standard that is essentially mid-way between freely given and to prevent manifest injustice. n4

Counsel should review the interim pretrial conference order deadlines, and inform the court at the earliest possible moment if problems arise in complying with the order. A showing of good cause ordinarily requires that counsel establish an inability to meet the scheduled deadlines despite exercising due diligence. n5 Accordingly, counsel should describe with specificity the actions that have been taken to comply with the order. Counsel should also propose a new schedule that contemplates getting the case trial-ready as quickly as possible under the changed circumstances. The proposed new dates should be as close to the dates originally fixed as feasible, and that fact should be pointed out in the request.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(d).

(n2)Footnote 2. Gutierrez De Martinez v. Lamagno, 515 U.S. 417, 433 n.9, 115 S. Ct. 2227, 132 L. Ed. 2d 375 (1995) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(d).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16 Committee Note (1993).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Doe v. Hawaii Dep't of Educ., 351 F. Supp. 2d 998, 1007 (D. Hawaii 2004) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
E. Attending Interim Pretrial Conferences and Settlement Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.58

§ 27.58 Settlement Conferences

[1] Settlement Conferences Discretionary Unless Mandated by Local Rule

Although settlement may be discussed at every pretrial conference, n1 courts may hold conferences specifically for the purpose of discussing and encouraging settlement. n2

Counsel should consult the local rules, as well as the individual judge's rules, to determine whether settlement conferences are mandatory or discretionary, and whether counsel may initiate a request for a settlement conference.

[2] Settlement Cannot Be Coerced

The law encourages pretrial settlement discussions, and favors the voluntary settlement of civil suits. n3

The presiding judicial officer has considerable discretion in determining the applicable procedure for a settlement conference. However, the officer may not coerce a settlement or impose sanctions if the parties do not settle the case when the officer deems a settlement appropriate. n4

[3] Referring Settlement Conference to Magistrate Judge or Special Master

Settlement conferences may be hosted by district court judges, magistrate judges, or other neutral mediators. Few district court judges conduct settlement conferences in their own cases, particularly in nonjury cases. Rather, judges typically refer the settlement conference to a magistrate judge, special master, or other neutral mediator. n5

However, there are district judges who are willing to involve themselves in settlement, which can pose a sensitive issue for counsel. When the district judge volunteers involvement in settlement discussions, and seeks the consent of all parties to that involvement, a dilemma is presented, particularly in nonjury cases. Counsel should make every possible effort to find others who have participated in settlement conferences with the assigned judge, in an effort to gain as much insight as possible into the judge's settlement approach. Counsel must determine whether settlement is so much in the client's interest that it is worth the risk of frank discussions with the court. In some instances, the opportunity to make the court aware of all surrounding facts, whether developed in discovery or otherwise, in a confidential setting, presents an opportunity that is otherwise not available. Because the consequences of agreeing to the court's involvement can be substantial, client participation in the decision is extremely important.

[4] Benefits of Settlement Conference; Strategy Considerations

Settlement conferences may be beneficial to the litigants even if an early settlement is not achieved. The advantages of settlement conferences include the following:

- Assisting the parties in understanding the factual and legal issues in the case, including identifying strengths and weaknesses of their own positions
- Highlighting remaining disclosure, discovery, or motion practice needed to position the case for settlement or trial
- Providing an opportunity for extended dialogue across party lines regarding the pertinent evidence and law
- Offering the litigants an opportunity to present the equities of their case to a representative of the court system

Counsel should determine the manner in which the settlement conference is conducted, whether the conference is joint or separate, the expected degree of client participation, and the need for filing a settlement conference statement at or prior to the conference. n6 If counsel agree that a settlement conference would be most productive if structured in a specific manner, counsel should suggest that structure or format to the presiding judicial officer, preferably in a joint writing submitted prior to the scheduled conference. Focusing on settlement, even when ultimately unsuccessful, frequently enables counsel to identify the principal obstacles to settlement, and to tailor a discovery or motion plan that attacks those obstacles.

[5] Preparing and Filing Settlement Conference Statement

Settlement conference statements, if required at all, ordinarily outline the facts ofthe case, the contentions of the parties, and the damages. Counsel should consult the individual judge's rules to determine whether settlement conference statements must be filed.

[6] CHECKLIST: Preparing for Settlement Conference

A settlement conference requires extensive preparation, mostly with the client, irrespective of whether the client will be present at the conference. Every effort should be made to determine the attitude and methods of the judge, magistrate judge, or other neutral presiding. The client's goals, as well as minimums, should be explored and tested. Damage theories should be fully rationalized. Damage calculations should be made and tested, and proof of damages should be organized. If the client is to be present, prepared the client for questions that may be put to him or her directly. Decide in advance what will and will not be said about the underlying facts. Warn the client that the neutral may find it useful to emphasize the problems with the client's case, so that the client will not react inappropriately or unproductively.

Anticipate to the extent possible the adversary's settlement approach. Prepare to use the neutral as a testing ground for the facts, theories, and damage calculations and proof.

The following checklist should be consulted as well:

☐ Ascertain applicable procedure for settlement conference, including whether client needs to attend or remain available for consultation by telephone.

☐ If required, prepare settlement conference statement prior to conference, which should clearly state any conditions applicable to offer or demand for settlement, such as nondisclosure requirement.

☐ Determine whether any conference obligations must be met prior to settlement conference.

☐ Explore settlement possibilities with client, including ramifications of settlement.

☐ Review contentions, summaries of proposed testimony, and settlement demands with client.

☐ Ascertain whether counsel should confer with co-parties, regarding any conflicting contentions and overall settlement.

☐ Prepare to candidly respond to settlement inquiries by court, avoiding any representations that contradict client's expectations and counsel's own settlement authority.

☐ Consider requesting court annexed or private ADR.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSettlementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureSettlementsSettlement AgreementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesCase ManagementCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesScheduling Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 27.56 (subjects for consideration at interim pretrial conferences).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(c).

(n3)Footnote 3. ABKCO Music, Inc. v. Harrisongs Music, Ltd., 722 F.2d 988, 997 (2d Cir. 1983) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Kothe v. Smith, 771 F.2d 667, 669 (2d Cir. 1985) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See §§ 27.02 (referring case to magistrate judge), 27.03 (appointing special master).

(n6)Footnote 6. See [5], below (preparing and filing settlement conference statement).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
E. Attending Interim Pretrial Conferences and Settlement Conferences

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 27.59 through 27.69

[Reserved]

§§ 27.59[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
F. Attending Final Pretrial Conference; Preparing Final Pretrial Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.70

§ 27.70 Definition of Final Pretrial Conference

Final pretrial conference is a the term used by Rule 16(c) to describe the conference between counsel, unrepresented parties, and the judge, at which a trial plan is formulated.

Typically, the final pretrial conference is chronologically the last conference in the case. However, subsequent conferences may be conducted to discuss such matters as last minute settlement possibilities, or trial adjournments.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesFinal Pretrial Conferences

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
F. Attending Final Pretrial Conference; Preparing Final Pretrial Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.71

§ 27.71 Final Pretrial Conference Discretionary Unless Mandated by Local Rule

Judges have discretion to determine whether to hold a final pretrial conference, and what to include on the agenda. n1 As a practical matter, most federal judges conduct final pretrial conferences in most mainstream civil cases. Counsel should consult the local rules, and more importantly, the individual judge's rules, to determine whether final pretrial conferences are required, and if so, to ascertain the agenda and procedures that will be followed at the conference. Even if not required by the assigned judge, counsel should consider requesting a final pretrial conference for the purpose of streamlining the trial.

If a final pretrial conference is required, it should be held as close to the time of trial as is reasonable under the circumstances of the case. n2 The time between any final pretrial conference and the trial should be as short as possible to avoid the inefficiency involved in having the preparations repeated because of a delay between the last conference and trial.

The section should be read in conjunction with § 27.74, dealing with final pretrial orders.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesFinal Pretrial Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(e).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(e).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
F. Attending Final Pretrial Conference; Preparing Final Pretrial Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.72

§ 27.72 Final Pretrial Conference Agenda

[1] Formulating Trial Plan

The primary purpose of a final pretrial conference is to formulate a specific plan for the trial of the action, including a program for facilitating the admission of evidence. n1 A detailed trial plan might specify the following matters:

- The juncture at which opening statements will be made (a defendant may elect to give some or all of its opening statement after the plaintiff has presented itscase in chief), and the time allotted for the opening statements
- The order in which each witness will testify (except those called solely for impeachment or rebuttal) or each deposition excerpt will be read, and the time allotted for each direct and cross-examination
- The sequence in which documentary and other exhibits will be introduced, and identification of the witnesses who will sponsor the exhibits
- When any demonstrations will be performed or site visits made
- The junctures, if any, at which interim summarizations or arguments may be presented by counsel
- The order in which closing arguments will be presented, and the time allotted for each

[2] Other Appropriate Final Pretrial Conference Topics

[2.--1] Substantive Issues

Although the primary purpose of a final pretrial conference is to formulate a specific plan for the trial of the action, n2 counsel should consult the local rules and the individual judge's rules for any specific final pretrial conference agenda requirements. Rule 16(c) broadly describes virtually all topics that courts might address over the full range of pretrial conferences, from the scheduling conference to the final pretrial conference. n3 Some of the listed topics, such as the control and scheduling of disclosures and discovery, are likely to receive considerable attention in the beginning and interim stages of the pretrial period. Other topics, such as reviewing remaining claims and defenses, are more likely to be considered at the final pretrial conference than at an initial or interim conference.

Counsel might expect the following topics to be discussed at the final pretrial conference:

- Remaining or renewed prospects for settlement
- Remaining claims and defenses, to ensure that the parties agree as to the nature of the claims and defenses to be tried, to ascertain whether any pleadings require amendment, and to determine whether any claims or defenses can be eliminated voluntarily or by order
- Summary judgment possibilities
- Bifurcation of trial issues, such as liability and damages, or sequencing the trial of a particular claim or defense, a related cluster of claims or defenses, or a specific issue or set of issues
- The resolution of any remaining discovery or disclosure disputes, and if appropriate, the need for any orders mandating the prompt completion of any unfinished but clearly necessary discovery activity
- Identifying any factual, evidentiary, and procedural matters that can be resolved by stipulation (particularly regarding foundational evidentiary issues) or additional admissions
- Rulings on the admissibility of evidence and motions in limine
- Identification and marking of proffered documents and other exhibits
- Remaining disputes about demonstrative evidence, visual aids, summaries, charts, or other graphics, including the submission and exchange of all proposed items
- The scope, purposes, form, and projected duration of each witness's testimony, including testimony to be read to the jury or into the record from deposition transcripts
- Any time limits imposed on the parties for particular parts of the trial or for all trial purposes
- Whether and how to present input from special masters or any court-appointed neutral experts
- For jury trials, the composition and voir dire of the jury, proposed jury instructions, as well as court policy toward jurors regarding written copies of instructions, taking and using notes, and whether and how jurors may ask questions
- For nonjury trials, any disputes regarding proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law submitted to the court
- Resolving any disputes regarding verdict forms and previously submitted special interrogatories

[2.--2] Logistical Matters

If a final pretrial conference is held, counsel and the court should review logistical matters, such as the following:

- The dates and times for trial

- The hours each day that the court will keep the trial in session, including lunch breaks
- Whether the trial will be interrupted because of other court responsibilities, such as a motion calendar
- Any arrangements for special equipment or facilities, such as video-monitors, slide projectors, displays for large graphics, or equipment and space for demonstrations
- Security for sensitive trial materials and access to the courtroom when trial is not in session
- Arrangements for expedited transcripts
- Arrangements for interpreters

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesFinal Pretrial Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(e).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(e); see [1], above.

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(c) see § 27.56[1] (listing of Rule 16(c) interim pretrial conference topics).

142 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
F. Attending Final Pretrial Conference; Preparing Final Pretrial Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.73

§ 27.73 Final Pretrial Conference Attendance Requirements

If a final pretrial conference is required, n1 it must be attended by at least one of the attorneys who will conduct the trial for each of the parties, as well as by any unrepresented party. n2 As with all pretrial conferences, at least one of the participating attorneys for each party must have authority to enter into stipulations, and to make admissions regarding all matters that might reasonably be anticipated to be discussed. n3

Additional attendance requirements may be imposed by local rules, or by the individual judge's rules.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesFinal Pretrial Conferences

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 27.71 (final pretrial conference discretionary unless mandated by local rule).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(e).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(c).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
F. Attending Final Pretrial Conference; Preparing Final Pretrial Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.74

§ 27.74 Preparing Final Pretrial Order

[1] Final Pretrial Order Generally Required

After any Rule 16 pretrial conference, including a final pretrial conference, the court should issue "an order shall be entered reciting the action taken". n1 The Supreme Court has ruled that the word "shall" in this sentence authorizes, but does not compel, judicial action. n2

Counsel should consult the local rules, as well as the individual judge's rules, to determine whether a final pretrial conference order is required, and if so, the requirements of the order, and whether it is counsel's responsibility to draft the proposed order.

Most federal judges require a final pretrial order. Even if a final pretrial conference order is not required, counsel should nevertheless consider requesting the opportunity to present a proposed order. An order stating the decisions and stipulations made at the final pretrial conference reduces the risk of confusion, and provides a record for appellate review.

[2] Final Pretrial Order Controls Course of Case

The final pretrial order controls the subsequent course of the action, unless modified by subsequent order. n3

The critical importance of the final pretrial order cannot be overemphasized: the final pretrial order supersedes the pleadings; governs who may be called as witnesses (and possibly impeachment witnesses and rebuttal witnesses); may contain binding stipulations; and may limit the questions, evidence, exhibits, and legal theories to be presented at trial. Matters not preserved in the final pretrial order are eliminated from the case. n4 Thus, a witness not disclosed prior to the entry of the order may be precluded from testifying, n5 and documents not previously identified may not be permitted to be introduced at trial. n6

Great care is required in preparing the final pretrial order, as many, if not most, judges will insist that it be followed with precision. The trial court, but not the parties, has a certain amount of latitude to deviate from final pretrial order. n7

[3] Drafting Final Pretrial Order

The final pretrial order must recite all actions taken and rulings made at the final pretrial conference. n8 If counsel is required to prepare the order, the individual judge's rules should be consulted. For illustrative purposes, a final pretrial order should clearly state the following: n9

- Facts establishing jurisdiction and venue
- A statement of the case
- The date and time that the trial will commence
- All rulings made at the final pretrial conference
- A summary of all factual and legal issues to be tried, and any issues to be severed and tried separately
- Witnesses to be called
- Expert witnesses to be called, and a summary of their qualifications
- Exhibits to be presented at trial; identification of exhibits to be admittedwithout objection, and summary of any objections
- Discovery excerpts from stenographic and video depositions, responses to interrogatories, and requests for admission
- Undisputed facts and judicially noticed facts
- Order of proof, including procedures for presenting testimony and exhibits
- Whether additional or specified evidence is precluded
- Procedures for selection, management, and instruction of jury, including deadlines for submitting proposed voir dire questions and jury instructions
- Any objections that are sustained, denied, or deemed waived
- Status of discovery, disclosure, and motions
- Procedures for consolidation, severance, or transfer of cases
- Estimated length of trial
- Verdict stipulations
- Statement that the order may not be modified except to prevent manifest injustice

The burden is on the parties, rather than the court, to assure that the pretrial order accurately reflects their respective positions regarding the issues, legal theories, and all other included matters. Likewise, it is the parties' responsibility to make necessary revisions and later to seek amendments, if necessary, in a timely fashion. n9.1

[4] Seeking Modification of Final Pretrial Order

[4.--1] Modification Appropriate Only to Prevent Manifest Injustice

The final pretrial order may be modified only to prevent manifest injustice. n10 The term manifest injustice is not defined by Rule 16, but is clearly more stringent than the standard applicable to modification of any other pretrial order. n11

The Second Circuit approaches the issue of manifest injustice with relative flexibility: motions to modify final pretrial orders should be granted when the interests of justice make such a course desirable. n12

The Fifth Circuit has indicated that an amendment of a pretrial order should be permitted when no substantial injury will result to the opposing party, the refusal to allow the amendment might result in injustice to the movant, and the inconvenience to the court is slight. n13

[4.--2] Factors Typically Considered

Courts generally consider the following types of factors in determining whether the manifest injustice standard of Rule 16(e) for modifying a final pretrial order has been satisfied:

- Whether the moving party should have anticipated the circumstances that give rise to the need for modification
- Whether granting the modification would unfairly impair the opposing party's ability to litigate the merits of the case
- Whether the modification would impose unjustifiable expenses or disruptions on another party
- Whether the party resisting the proposed modification should have known that the movant intended to proceed in the manner proposed in the motion
- Whether the need for the modification is the result of a good faith oversight
- Prejudice to the movant if the motion were denied
- Whether the proposed changes are extensive or modest

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesFinal Pretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial Orders

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(d).

(n2)Footnote 2. Gutierrez De Martinez v. Lamagno, 515 U.S. 417, 433 n.9, 115 S. Ct. 2227, 132 L. Ed. 2d 375 (1995) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(d).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Youren v. Tintic Sch. Dist., 343 F.3d 1296, 1305 (10th Cir. 2003) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Geiserman v. MacDonald, 893 F.2d 787, 791 (5th Cir. 1990) (if a pretrial order or local rule requires disclosure of witnesses, the court may exclude testimony by undisclosed witnesses, when party seeking to introduce evidence from those witnesses offers no justification for delay in disclosure).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Devices for Medicine, Inc. v. Boehl, 822 F.2d 1062, 1067 (Fed. Cir. 1987) (documents not marked and identified before trial, as required by pretrial order, were properly excluded); see also Armstrong v. Burdette Tomlin Mem'l Hosp., 276 F. Supp. 2d 264, 277 (D.N.J. 2003) .

(n7)Footnote 7. HBE Leasing Corp. v. Frank, 22 F.3d 41, 45 (2d Cir. 1994) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(d).

(n9)Footnote 9. See, e.g., Manual for Complex Litigation (Third), §§ 21.67, 40.3, 41.63 (1995).

(n10)Footnote 9.1. See Wilson v. Muckala, 303 F.3d 1207, 1215 (10th Cir. 2002) .

(n11)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(e).

(n12)Footnote 11. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16 Committee Note (1983).

(n13)Footnote 12. Madison Consultants v. FDIC, 710 F.2d 57, 62 n.3 (2d Cir. 1983) .

(n14)Footnote 13. DP Solutions, Inc. v. Rollins, Inc., 353 F.3d 421, 435 (5th Cir. 2003) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
F. Attending Final Pretrial Conference; Preparing Final Pretrial Order

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 27.75 through 27.79

[Reserved]

§§ 27.75[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
G. Enforcing Pretrial Conference Orders and Other Pretrial Conference Obligations

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.80

§ 27.80 Imposing Sanctions for Failing to Comply With Pretrial Order or Other Pretrial Conference Obligations

[1] Failing to Attend or Substantially Prepare for Conference

Courts may impose sanctions if a party or party's attorney fails to attend a scheduled pretrial conference or to substantially prepare for the conference without sufficient excuse. n1

Sanctions may also be imposed if the lead counsel does not attend a final pretrial conference, n2 but instead sends a substantially unprepared attorney. n3

[2] Failing to Participate in Good Faith in Pretrial Conference

Courts have broad authority to sanction a party or an attorney who fails to participate in good faith in a pretrial conference. n4 Courts may also impose sanctions for failing to participate in good faith in the development and submission of a proposed discovery plan. n5

Determining fair standards for evaluating whether a party or counsel has participated in a conference in good faith may be difficult. Presumably, a court could find that counsel failed to participate in good faith if counsel refused to enter even the most basic of stipulations when no ground for the refusal existed, or if counsel refused to engage in any analytical discussion of claims, defenses, or evidence. n6

[3] Failing to Obey Pretrial Order

Courts may impose sanctions if a party or party's attorney fails to obey a pretrial order without sufficient excuse. n7

Pretrial orders should be enforced vigorously, and material breaches should be sanctioned. n8

In general, the imposition of sanctions under Rule 16(f) does not require a finding of bad faith or obstinate conduct. n9 A negligent failure to comply with Rule 16 can justify the imposition of sanctions under some circumstances. n10 Even an inadvertent failure to comply may justify the imposition of sanctions when the conduct results in prejudice. n11

However, the Fifth Circuit requires a clear record of delay or contumacious conduct to impose sanctions. n12

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureDiscoveryMisconductCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesSanctionsLegal EthicsSanctionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(f)(1); see also O. Ahlborg & Sons, Inc. v. United States, 233 F.R.D. 224, 226 (D. Mass. 2005) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 27.73 (final pretrial conference attendance requirements).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Ha-Lo Indus. v. Your Favorite Producers, Inc., 164 F.R.D. 233, 234 (N.D. Ill. 1995) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(f)(1).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f); Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(g).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Salahuddin v. Harris, 782 F.2d 1127, 1133 (2d Cir. 1986) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(f)(1).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Harding v. Federal Reserve Bank, 707 F.2d 46, 52 (2d Cir. 1983) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Ayers v. City of Richmond, 895 F.2d 1267, 1270 (9th Cir. 1990) .

(n10)Footnote 10. O. Ahlborg & Sons, Inc. v. United States, 233 F.R.D. 224, 226 (D. Mass. 2005) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See e.g., Tracinda Corp. v. DaimlerChrysler AG, 502 F.3d 212, 242 (3d Cir. 2007).

(n12)Footnote 12. See S.E.C. v. First Houston Capital Res. Fund, Inc., 979 F.2d 380, 382 (5th Cir. 1992) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
G. Enforcing Pretrial Conference Orders and Other Pretrial Conference Obligations

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.81

§ 27.81 Sanctions May Be Imposed Upon Motion or Sua Sponte

Sanctions for failing to comply with a pretrial order or other pretrial conference obligation may be imposed upon motion or the judge's own initiative. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesSanctions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(f)(1).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
G. Enforcing Pretrial Conference Orders and Other Pretrial Conference Obligations

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.82

§ 27.82 Court Determines Appropriate Sanction

[1] Selection of Sanction Discretionary

The court has discretion to impose whichever sanction it deems appropriate under the circumstances of the particular case. n1

In exercising its discretion, the court will typically examine the following factors:

- The nature and consequences of the violation
- The extent and nature of the alleged violation, and its effect on the other parties and the administration of justice
- The mental state or degree of culpable behavior: willfulness, recklessness, negligence, or bad faith is not required, but may affect the severity of the sanction
- Who is responsible for the violation: counsel, party, or both
- Whether the violation resulted from forces beyond the party's control
- Whether the violation is an isolated incident, or part of a pattern of conduct

To ensure an adequate record for appellate review, counsel should request that the court memorialize its findings and reasons on the record, or in a written order.

[2] Types of Available Sanctions

The range of sanctions available for failing to comply with a pretrial order or other pretrial conference obligation is extremely broad, and includes:

- Reprimand

- Imposition of costs, including attorney's fees, caused by the violation
- Excluding evidence or a claim or defense
- Striking pleadings or parts of pleadings
- Granting or denying additional time for discovery
- Continuing or staying the proceedings
- Contempt
- Dismissing a claim or the action n2
- Entering a default judgment

The imposition of monetary sanctions under Rule 16(f)(2) does not require a showing of prejudice in order to justify the sanctions. n3 In the absence of prejudice, however, courts may decline to impose sanctions that preclude a party from presenting evidence or that otherwise would compromise a party's ability to litigate the merits of an action. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial ConferencesCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesSanctionsLegal EthicsSanctionsReprimands

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Sieck v. Russo, 869 F.2d 131, 134 (2d Cir. 1989) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Gripe v. City of Enid, 312 F.3d 1184, 1188-1189 (10th Cir. 2002) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(f)(2); John v. Louisiana, 899 F.2d 1441, 1448-1449 (5th Cir. 1990) .

(n4)Footnote 4. 7-Eleven, Inc. v. McEvoy, 300 F. Supp. 2d 352, 365 (D. Md. 2004) .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
G. Enforcing Pretrial Conference Orders and Other Pretrial Conference Obligations

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 27.83 through 27.99

[Reserved]

§§ 27.83[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
H. Forms

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.100

§ 27.100 Proposed Discovery Plan

[1] FORM

Proposed Discovery Plan

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local rule requirements]

1. Description of Case:

(a) Plaintiff's claims are as follows: [describe plaintiff's claims]

(b) Defendant's defenses are as follows: [describe defendant's defenses]

2. Counsel:

The name, address and telephone numbers of counsel for the plaintiff is as follows:

The name, address and telephone numbers of counsel for the defendant is as follows:

3. Disclosures:

[Include if applicable] The parties request the following changes in the Rule 26(a) disclosure requirements:

Disclosures as required by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 26(a) [were/will be] made on [date].

4. Discovery:

The following are subjects on which discovery may be needed: [list subjects]

Discovery should be completed by [date].

[use the following as appropriate:]

Discovery should be conducted in phases because: [insert reasons]

Discovery should be limited as follows: [insert limitations]

The following modifications should be made to the limitations imposed on discovery by the Federal Rules [or local rules]: [insert modifications]

Discovery on [list issues for early discovery] to be completed by [date].

Disclosure or discovery of electronically stored information should be handled as follows: [brief description of parties' proposals]

Parties have agreed to an order regarding claims of privilege or of protection as trial-preparation material asserted after production, as follows: [brief description of provisions of proposed order]

The following protective orders should be issued: [list protective orders sought]

[continue with the following:]

5. Settlement Potential:

(a) Counsel for the parties have met in person on [date], and participated in settlement discussions as required by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 26(f) [and any applicable local rule].

(b) All parties were promptly informed of all offers of settlement, and, following discussion by all counsel, it appears that there is now [choose one of the following: a possibility of settlement before discovery, a possibility of settlement after discovery, a possibility of settlement but a conference with the judge is needed, no possibility of settlement]

(c) Counsel [do/do not] intend to hold additional settlement conferences among themselves prior to the close of discovery. [The proposed date of the next settlement conference is [date].]

(d) The following specific problems have created a hindrance to settlement of this case: [specify problems hindering settlement].

Date: [insert date]

PLAINTIFF:

By: [Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local rules]

DEFENDANT:

By: [Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local rules]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of proposed discovery plan which the parties are required to develop at the initial meeting of parties. n1

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f); see also §§ 27.10, 27.11.

150 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 27 The Pretrial Conference
H. Forms

3-27 Federal Litigation Guide § 27.101

§ 27.101 Report of Parties' Planning Conference

[1] FORM

Report of Parties' Planning Meeting

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local rule requirements]

Date Complaint Filed: [insert date]

Date Complaint Served: [insert date]

Date of Defendant's Appearance: [insert date]

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b), 26(f) and Local Civil Rule [insert appropriatelocal rule reference, if any] a conference was held on [insert date] [date]. The participants were: [list participating parties and counsel]

I. Certification

Undersigned counsel certify that, after consultation with their clients, they have discussed the nature and basis of the parties' claims and defenses and any possibilities for achieving a prompt settlement or other resolution of the case and, in consultation with their clients, have developed the following proposed case management plan. Counsel further certify that they have forwarded a copy to this report to their clients.

II. Jurisdiction

A. Subject Matter Jurisdiction: [Provide a statement of the basis for subject matter jurisdiction with appropriate statutory citations. If plaintiff's allegation of subject matter jurisdiction is denied, specify the basis for the denial.]

B. Personal Jurisdiction: [State whether personal jurisdiction is contested and, if it is, summarize the parties' competing positions.]

III. Brief Description of Case: [Briefly summarize the claims and defenses of all parties and describe the relief sought.]

A. Claims of Plaintiff/s: [describe plaintiff's claims]

B. Defenses and Claims (Counterclaims, Third Party Claims, Cross Claims) of Defendant/s: [describe defenses and any counterclaims, thirty party claims, or cross claims]

C. Defenses and Claims of Third Party Defendant/s: [insert description]

IV. Statement of Undisputed Facts:

Counsel certify that they have made a good faith attempt to determine whether there are any material facts that are not in dispute. The parties state that the following material facts are undisputed: [list undisputed material facts]

V. Case Management Plan:

A. Scheduling Conference with the Court

The parties [request/do not request] a pretrial conference with the Court before entry of a scheduling order pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b). The parties prefer a conference [in person/by telephone].

B. Early Settlement Conference

1. The parties certify that they have considered the desirability ofattempting to settle the case before undertaking significant discovery or motion practice. Settlement [is likely/is unlikely at this time/may be enhanced by use of the following procedure]: [describe procedure (i.e., meeting with court appointed neutral]

2. The parties [request/do not request] an early settlement conference.

3. The parties prefer a settlement conference with [the presiding judge/a magistrate judge/a parajudicial officer/ a special master].

4. The parties [request/do not request] a referral for alternative dispute resolution pursuant to Local Rule [insert appropriate local rule number].

C. Joinder of Parties and Amendment of Pleadings

1. Plaintiff(s) should be allowed until [date] to file motions to join additional parties and until [date] to file motions to amend the pleadings.

2. Defendant(s) should be allowed until [date] to file motions to join additional parties and until [date] to file a response to the complaint.

D. Discovery

1. The parties anticipate that discovery will be needed on the following subjects: [list each of the principal issues of fact on which discovery will be needed].

2. All discovery, including depositions of expert witnesses pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P.

26(b)(4), will be commenced by [date] and completed by [date]

3. Discovery [will/will not] be conducted in phases.

4. Discovery on [issues for early discovery] will be completed by [date].

5. The parties anticipate that the plaintiff(s) will require a total of [insert number] depositions of fact witnesses and that the defendant(s) will require a total of [insert number] depositions of fact witnesses. The depositions will commence by [date] and be completed by [date].

6. The parties [will/will not] request permission to serve more than 25 interrogatories.

7. Plaintiff/s [intend/do not intend] to call expert witnesses at trial. Plaintiff/s will designate all trial experts and provide opposing counsel with reports from retained experts pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2) by [date]. Depositions of any such experts will be completed by [date].

8. Defendant/s [intend/do not intend] to call expert witnesses at trial. Defendant/s will designate all trial experts and provide opposing counsel with reports from retained experts pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2) by [date]. Depositions of such experts will be completed by [date].

9. A damages analysis will be provided by any party who has a claim or counterclaim for damages by [date].

10. Disclosure or discovery of electronically stored information should be handled as follows: [brief description of parties' proposals]

11. Parties have agreed to an order regarding claims of privilege or of protection as trial-preparation material asserted after production, as follows: [brief description of provisions of proposed order]

E. Dispositive Motions

Dispositive motions will be filed on or before [date].

VI. TRIAL READINESS

The case will be ready for trial by [date].

Date: [insert date]

PLAINTIFF:

By: [Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local rules]

DEFENDANT:

By: [Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

[Attorney's or firm's address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local rules]

[2] Use of Form

This is a sample form of report of the parties' Rule 26(f) planning conference.

Pursuant to Rule 26(f), counsel must confer at least 21 days before a scheduling conference is held or a scheduling order is due under Rule 16(b) to accomplish the following: n1

- Discuss the nature and basis of their claims and defenses
- Discuss the possibilities for a prompt settlement or other resolution of the case
- Make or arrange for the required initial disclosures.
- Develop a proposed discovery plan

Within 14 days after the Rule 26(f) conference, the parties must submit to the court a written report outlining the discovery plan. n2

A discovery plan must state the parties' views and proposals on: n3

- What changes should be made in the timing, form, or requirement for disclosures under Rule 26(a), including a statement of when initial disclosures were made or will be made;
- The subjects on which discovery may be needed, when discovery should be completed, and whether discovery should be conducted in phases or be limited to or focused on particular issues;
- Any issues about disclosure or discovery of electronically stored information, including the form or forms in which it should be produced;
- Any issues about claims of privilege or of protection as trial-preparation materials, including -- if the parties agree on a procedure to assert these claims after production -- whether to ask the court to include their agreement in an order;
- What changes should be made in the limitations on discovery imposed under these rules or by local rule, and what other limitations should be imposed; and
- Any other orders that the court should issue under Rule 26(c) or under Rule 16(b) and (c).

For complete discussion of the parties' initial planning meeting, see §§ 27.10 and 27.11.

[3] Disagreement of Parties

If the parties cannot agree on deadlines to be included in the form, they should propose their own deadlines to the court in separate paragraphs or subparagraphs, as necessary.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f)(3).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide 28.syn

§ 28.syn Synopsis to Chapter 28: Consolidation and Separate Trials *

§ 28.01 Understanding Consolidation
[1] Defining Consolidation
[2] Insuring That Cases Are "Pending Before the Court"
[3] Ascertaining That Cases Are Related
[4] Limiting Consolidation

§ 28.02 Evaluating Factors that Favor Consolidation
[1] Promoting Interests of Justice
[2] Avoiding Unnecessary Costs or Delay
[3] Avoiding Inconsistent Results

§ 28.03 Evaluating Factors that Disfavor Consolidation of Cases
[1] Juror Confusion
[2] Delay
[3] Prejudice to Party
[4] Administrative Difficulties

§ 28.04 Identifying Cases Most Amenable to Consolidation
[1] Cases with Like Claims
[2] Cases with Overlapping Parties
[3] Cases Involving Single Tort or Identical Torts or Products
[4] Cases with Discovery Overlap
[5] Cases at Same Stage of Litigation

§ 28.05 Considering Class Action as Alternative to Consolidation

§ 28.06 Transferring Cases for Purpose of Consolidation
[1] Consolidation Is Effected by Transferee Court
[2] Transfer May Be Made to District Where Action Might Have Been Brought
[3] Transfer in Multidistrict Litigation
[4] Transferring Cases Pending in Other Forums for Consolidation

§ 28.07 Understanding Court's Power to Consolidate

[1] Discretion to Consolidate Is Broad
[2] Broad Discretion Extends to Power to Consolidate Sua Sponte
[3] Abuse of Discretion To Consolidate Exists When There Are Insufficient Common Questions of Law or Fact

§ 28.08 Agreeing to Consolidate

§ 28.09 CHECKLIST: Moving for Consolidation

§ 28.10 CHECKLIST: Opposing Consolidation

§ 28.11 Dealing With Practical Problems in Consolidated Litigation
[1] Drafting a Consolidated Pleading
[2] Determining Roles of Counsel
[3] Handling Demands for Jury Trial
[4] Allocating Peremptory Challenges of Prospective Jurors

§ 28.12 Obtaining Appellate Review of Consolidation Ruling
[1] Understanding That Ordinary Appeal Not Available
[2] Seeking Review by Petition for Mandamus
[3] Obtaining Review Through Certification

§§ 28.13 through 28.19 [Reserved]

§ 28.20 Understanding Separate Trial Rule
[1] Defining Separate Trial Rule
[2] Considering Standard for Separate Trials
[2.--1] Courts Have Broad Authority
[2.--2] Furtherance of Convenience
[2.--3] Avoidance of Prejudice
[2.--4] Expedition and Economy

§ 28.21 Evaluating Factors That Favor Separate Trials
[1] Key Issues Which May Determine Outcome of Proceeding
[2] Liability and Damages
[3] Punitive Damages

§ 28.22 Evaluating Factors That Disfavor Separate Trials
[1] Prejudice May Result to Party
[2] Important Evidence May Be Excluded
[3] Overlapping Issues May Result in Presentation of Same Evidence Twice

§ 28.23 Distinguishing Severance Order From Grant of Separate Trial

§ 28.24 Understanding Court's Power To Order Separate Trials
[1] Court May Act on Motion or Sua Sponte
[2] Reviewable Only For Abuse of Discretion

§ 28.25 Agreeing to Try Claims or Issues Separately

§ 28.26 CHECKLIST: Moving for Separate Trials

§ 28.27 CHECKLIST: Opposing Motion for Separate Trials

§ 28.28 Seeking Appellate Review

§§ 28.29 through 28.99 [Reserved]

§ 28.100 Notice of Motion for Consolidation of Actions
[2] Use of Form
[3] Time for Seeking Consolidation
[4] Consolidation Compared With Joint Trial
[5] LOCAL PRACTICE: Master Docket of Consolidated Actions
[6] Common Question of Law or Fact Required for Consolidation
[7] Date and Time of Hearing

§ 28.101 Notice of Motion for Separate Trial
[2] Use of Form
[3] Time for Seeking Separate Trials
[4] Grounds for Ordering Separate Trials

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter discusses consolidation and separate trials under Rule 42. The decision to make a motion for consolidation or separate trials may arise in all kinds of civil litigation. Consolidation and separate trials each promote convenience and efficiency and provide potential tactical advantages in the isolation or combination of proof. This chapter discusses the legal prerequisites for consolidating or separating trials, as well as strategic decisions that must be made before moving the court for such orders.

The chapter first deals with the consolidation of all or some issues in two or more actions involving common questions. Then it treats the procedure for holding separate trials of claims or issues within a lawsuit.

Consolidation may be sought by the parties or ordered by the court on its own motion to join two or more actions that involve common questions of law or fact. This chapter demonstrates how consolidation can reduce the cost of litigation by coordinating discovery, hearings, or trial and eliminating duplicated effort. It also discusses the strategic reasons for consolidation, such as to take advantage of the strengths of a related case or of another party. In addition, the chapter examines the impact on a case of the appointment of lead counsel. This chapter reviews the factors which should be considered by the court and counsel in dealing with the issue of consolidation and provides checklists for making a motion to consolidate and opposing a motion to consolidate. The chapter discusses the court's broad power of discretion whether to consolidate, and how consolidation orders generally are not subject to immediate appeal.

Separate trials may be requested by the parties or ordered by the court on its own motion if separate trials will promote convenience, avoid prejudice, expedite the matter, or achieve economy. This chapter demonstrates how separate trials can be used to avoid prejudice, and how separate trials can streamline an action by isolating dispositive issues for expedited discovery or trial. Separation of trials under Rule 42 is most frequently used to separate issues of liability and damages. The chapter distinguishes separation of trials from Rule 21 severance, which results in separate cases. The chapter also has a checklist for making a motion for separate trials and a checklist for opposing a motion for separate trials. The chapter also discusses the limitations for appealing Rule 42 orders.

The chapter sets forth sample forms for a motion to consolidate and a motion for separate trials, as well as comments for use of the forms.

For expanded coverage of consolidation and separate trials, see MOORE'S Federal Practice, Ch. 42, Consolidation; Separate Trials (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

153 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.01

§ 28.01 Understanding Consolidation

[1] Defining Consolidation

When two or more cases pending before the court share a common question of law or fact, the court may order "consolidation," that is, order the cases to be combined for joint or shared pretrial or trial on any or all of the issues. The explicit purpose of consolidation is to avoid unnecessary costs or delay. n1

[2] Insuring That Cases Are "Pending Before the Court"

Rule 42(a) requires that cases may be consolidated only if they are "pending before the court." n2 A court may acquire such power through routine assignment or transfer. n3

[3] Ascertaining That Cases Are Related

The threshold determination for consolidation of all or part of cases pending before a court is that the cases share a common question of law or fact. n4

Common questions of law and fact do not have to predominate. All that is required is that the district court find they exist and that consolidation will prove beneficial. n5

[4] Limiting Consolidation

To minimize prejudice and confusion, the trial court's consolidation order will often stop short of full consolidation for all purposes including trial. Full consolidation is generally granted only under compelling circumstances and when attempts to seek other, more conventional, avenues of relief have been exhausted. Courts are more likely to order the following: n6

- Consolidation of some but not all common questions of law or fact.
- Joint or shared discovery.
- Preparation of consolidated pleadings or papers.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a).

(n3)Footnote 3. See In re Air Crash Disaster at Detroit Metro. Airport, 737 F. Supp. 391, 392-393 (E.D. Mich. 1989) ; For a discussion on transfer of cases for purposes of consolidation, see § 28.06.

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a); Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U.S. 285, 292, 12 S. Ct. 909, 36 L. Ed. 706 (1892) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Saudi Basic Indus. Corp. v. ExxonMobil Corp., 194 F. Supp. 2d 378, 416 (D.N.J. 2002) (citing Moore's); see also Hanes Cos. v. Ronson, 712 F. Supp. 1223, 1230 (M.D.N.C. 1988) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Katz v. Realty Equities Corp., 521 F.2d 1354, 1358-1359 (2d Cir. 1975) .

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

154 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.02

§ 28.02 Evaluating Factors that Favor Consolidation

[1] Promoting Interests of Justice

Courts have been most likely to approve consolidation when they find that it serves the interests of justice. Courts have employed a balancing test to determine whether consolidation serves the interests of justice. In weighing the interests of convenience and economy against an ultimate goal of fairness and impartiality at trial, as well as individual justice, courts have found fairness must be paramount. n1

[2] Avoiding Unnecessary Costs or Delay

An explicit purpose of consolidating cases or issues is to avoid unnecessary costs or delay resulting from multiple lawsuits and trials. n2

The savings of time and expense, however, must outweigh the risks of unfairness, prejudice, and confusion resulting from consolidation. n3

[3] Avoiding Inconsistent Results

One of the primary objectives of consolidation is to prevent separate actions from producing conflicting and inconsistent results. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Johnson v. Celotex Corp., 899 F.2d 1281, 1285 (2d Cir. 1990) , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920 (1990) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a); Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U.S. 285, 292, 12 S. Ct. 909, 36 L. Ed. 706 (1892) (landmark Supreme Court consolidation case involving dispute over life insurance policies).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Malcolm v. National Gypsum Co., 995 F.2d 346, 350 (2d Cir. 1993) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Waste Distillation Technology, Inc. v. Pan Am. Resources, Inc., 775 F. Supp. 759, 761 (D. Del. 1991) .

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.03

§ 28.03 Evaluating Factors that Disfavor Consolidation of Cases

[1] Juror Confusion

When multiple lawsuits are tried together, there is always a risk of juror confusion. n1 The risk of confusion has been found in the following circumstances:

- When consolidation produces too large a body of evidence. n2
- When the parties' situations are exceedingly diverse. n3
- When the parties' circumstances are subtly, but significantly, different. n4

Closely drafted, cautionary jury instructions and special verdict forms outlining the claims of each plaintiff and advising the jury to consider each claim individually may minimize the potential for jury confusion in consolidated cases. n5

[2] Delay

When separate trials of two actions will not involve a substantial duplication of effort, their consolidation will often delay rather than expedite resolution of the parties' claims. In such a case, delay becomes a significant factor weighing against consolidation. n6

One of the matters courts focus on when assessing delay is the state of case preparation and discovery in each action. n7 Consolidation may be denied when there is a considerable difference in trial readiness. n8

[3] Prejudice to Party

Consolidation is inappropriate when it will adversely affect the rights of the parties. n9 A party may be prejudiced when the claims or defenses particular to that party are substantially different from the other consolidated claims, and management of the consolidated case is vested in lead counsel, whose efforts are likely to focus on the interests of the majority, thereby depriving the minority of full discovery and preparation. n10

Consolidation may also be damaging to a case if it results in the disclosure of prejudicial information to the jury such as:

- The extent of insurance coverage. n11
- The existence of other lawsuits. n12
- Offers of settlement. n13

[4] Administrative Difficulties

Consolidation is inappropriate when it results in administrative difficulties that impair the potential for a fair and impartial trial. n14

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of ActionsCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate Trials

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Johnson v. Celotex Corp., 899 F.2d 1281, 1285 (2d Cir. 1990) , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920 (1990) ; see also Southwest Marine, Inc. v. Triple A Mach. Shop, Inc., 720 F. Supp. 805, 807 (N.D. Cal. 1989) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Molever v. Levenson, 539 F.2d 996, 1003 (4th Cir. 1976) , cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1024 (1976) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See King v. General Elec. Co., 960 F.2d 617, 626 (7th Cir. 1992) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Seguro de Servicio de Salud v. McAuto Sys. Group, Inc., 878 F.2d 5, 9 (1st Cir. 1989) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Johnson v. Celotex Corp., 899 F.2d 1281, 1285 (2d Cir. 1990) , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920 (1990) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Southwest Marine, Inc. v. Triple A Mach. Shop, Inc., 720 F. Supp. 805, 807 (N.D. Cal. 1989) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Lewis v. Four B Corp., 347 F. Supp. 2d 1017, 1020 (D. Kan. 2004) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Mills v. Beech Aircraft Corp., 886 F.2d 758, 762 (5th Cir. 1989) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Johnson v. Manhattan R. Co., 289 U.S. 479, 496-497, 53 S. Ct. 721, 77 L. Ed. 1331 (1933) (in landmark case for consolidation, court held that consolidation does not merge actions and rights of parties should not be substantially affected by it).

(n10)Footnote 10. Garber v. Randell 477 F.2d 711, 714-716 (2d Cir. 1973) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Arnold v. Eastern Air Lines Inc., 712 F.2d 899, 906 (4th Cir. 1983) , cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1040 (1984) (testimony as to concurrent insurance settlements in front of jury during liability phase of trial found highly prejudicial and abuse of discretion).

(n12)Footnote 12. Bradley v. Soo Line R.R. Co., 88 F.R.D. 307, 310 (E.D. Wis. 1980) (denial of consolidation of two cases by plaintiff against his employer, as jury would be prejudiced by learning of second claim).

(n13)Footnote 13. American Employers' Ins. Co. v. King Resources Co., 545 F.2d 1265, 1269 (10th Cir. 1976)

(consolidation denied, as judge had participated in settlement discussions with parties).

(n14)Footnote 14. See In re Repetitive Stress Injury Litig., 11 F.3d 368, 371-373 (2d Cir. 1993) .

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.04

§ 28.04 Identifying Cases Most Amenable to Consolidation

[1] Cases with Like Claims

Consolidation will frequently be permitted when there are causes of a like nature, or relative to the same question pending before a court. n1 Claims are more likely to be consolidated if they arise under the same or similar:

- Property interests. n2
- Legal transactions. n3
- Accidents. n4
- Patterns of conduct. n5

[2] Cases with Overlapping Parties

The presence of overlapping parties in cases enhances the prospects for consolidation, assuming that there are other common issues of law, fact, or both. n6

[3] Cases Involving Single Tort or Identical Torts or Products

Consolidation is often sought in cases where there are multiple tort actions with common factual and legal questions, such as:

- Air crash disasters. n7
- Exposure to the same injurious product. n8
- The pursuit of an illegal scheme or plan. n9

[4] Cases with Discovery Overlap

Discovery in one case that is applicable to discovery in another case is a practical benefit of consolidation, and a court will consider the usefulness of completed and planned discovery when deciding if consolidation will expedite the cases without prejudice to the parties. n10

Cases do not have to be at the same stage of discovery for consolidation to take place, and courts will balance a reasonable amount of delay in the trial of one case against the avoidance of duplicate efforts in the discovery process, as well as conservation of financial resources of the parties as a result of consolidation. n11

[5] Cases at Same Stage of Litigation

Cases at different stages of trial preparedness are generally not good candidates for consolidation if one case is ready for trial and one is not. n12 Although cases at different stages of litigation may be consolidated, courts tend not to disturb the momentum of a case that is ready for trial under local procedural rules. n13

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of ActionsCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate Trials

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U.S. 285, 292, 12 S. Ct.909, 36 L. Ed. 706 (1892) ; see also Howard Gunty Profit Sharing Plan v. CareMatrix Corp., 354 F. Supp. 2d 18, 22 (D. Mass. 2000) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Cedars-Sinai Medical Center v. Revlon, Inc., 111 F.R.D. 24, 31-34 (D. Del. 1986) .

(n3)Footnote 3. In re Ivan F. Boesky Sec. Litig., 948 F.2d. 1358, 1365 (2d Cir. 1991) .

(n4)Footnote 4. In re Air Crash Disaster at Detroit Metro. Airport, 737 F. Supp. 391, 394-395 (E.D. Mich. 1989) .

(n5)Footnote 5. In re Wirebound Boxes Antitrust Litig., 128 F.R.D. 256, 259 (D. Minn. 1989) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Werner v. Satterlee, Stephens, Burke & Burke, 797 F. Supp. 1196, 1211 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) ; Cedars-Sinai Medical Center v. Revlon, Inc., 111 F.R.D. 24, 31-34 (D. Del. 1986) .

(n7)Footnote 7. In re Air Crash Disaster at Detroit Metro. Airport, 737 F. Supp. 391, 392 (E.D. Mich. 1989) (156 individual cases consolidated for trial as result of crash of Northwest Flight 255 on August 16, 1987).

(n8)Footnote 8. Johnson v. Celotex Corp., 899 F.2d 1281, 1284 (2d Cir. 1990) , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920 (1990) (asbestos).

(n9)Footnote 9. In re Wirebound Boxes Antitrust Litig., 128 F.R.D. 256, 259 (D. Minn. 1989) (price-fixing).

(n10)Footnote 10. Werner v. Satterlee, Stephens, Burke & Burke, 797 F. Supp. 1196, 1211-1212 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Lloyd v. Industrial Bio-Test Lab., Inc., 454 F. Supp. 807, 812 (S.D.N.Y. 1978) .

(n12)Footnote 12. Mills v. Beech Aircraft Corp., 886 F.2d 758, 762 (5th Cir. 1989) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Mills v. Beech Aircraft Corp., 886 F.2d 758, 762 (5th Cir. 1989) .

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.05

§ 28.05 Considering Class Action as Alternative to Consolidation

A class action may be a better alternative than consolidation when many parties are asserting claims with a common question of law or fact. n1

Class certification, however, requires that the number of plaintiffs be so numerous that joinder of all is impractical. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureClass ActionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of ActionsCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate Trials

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a).

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

158 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.06

§ 28.06 Transferring Cases for Purpose of Consolidation

[1] Consolidation Is Effected by Transferee Court

Although Rule 42(a) does not contain language allowing transfer, actions pending in different district courts may be transferred to other districts and then consolidated by the transferee court "for the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice," under 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a). n1 Courts may also make such transfers to different divisions within the same district. n2

In order to transfer cases under Section 1404(a), courts must establish that the action could have been brought in the transferee district or court, that it will be in the interests of justice to effect transfer and that it will be a convenience to the parties and witnesses if the transfer is completed. n3

[2] Transfer May Be Made to District Where Action Might Have Been Brought

In its discretion, a court may transfer a civil action to any other district where the case might have originally been brought. n4 To determine where a suit might have been brought, venue must be proper and personal jurisdiction must exist. n5

[3] Transfer in Multidistrict Litigation

Under 28 U.S.C. § 1407(a), the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation may order the temporary transfer to a single district of "civil actions involving one or more common questions of fact" for "coordinated or consolidated pretrial proceedings." Transfer under Section 1407(a) is intended to be a device to manage pretrial procedure. Cases may then be transferred back to their transferor forums for trial. Trials may be consolidated under Section 1404(a) based on common issues of law or fact, as well as the transferee court's familiarity with the pretrial phase of the cases.

In matters involving multidistrict litigation, refer to Manual on Complex Litigation, for direction with respect to transfer and consolidation. n6

[4] Transferring Cases Pending in Other Forums for Consolidation

In addition to interdistrict transfers, a district court may transfer to itself and consolidate cases pending in other forums.

A case pending in bankruptcy court may be transferred to the district court and consolidated with a case pending there, without prior determination of the bankruptcy court. n7 Similarly, a case pending in admiralty may be transferred to the district court and consolidated with a pending case. n8

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureVenueMultidistrict LitigationCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of ActionsCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate Trials

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. In re Storage Technology Corp. Sec. Litig., 630 F. Supp. 1072, 1074 (D. Colo. 1986) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Mills v. Beech Aircraft Corp., 886 F.2d 758, 761 (5th Cir. 1989) .

(n3)Footnote 3. In re Joint E. & S. Dist. Asbestos Litig., 769 F. Supp. 85, 87-88 (E.D.N.Y. 1991) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Waste Distillation Technology, Inc. v. Pan Am. Resources, Inc., 775 F. Supp. 759, 761 (D. Del. 1991) .

(n5)Footnote 5. In re Air Crash Disaster at Detroit Metro. Airport, 737 F. Supp. 391, 392-393 (E.D. Mich. 1989) .

(n6)Footnote 6. In re Air Crash Disaster at Detroit Metro. Airport, 737 F. Supp. 391, 392 (E.D. Mich. 1989) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See In re Macon Uplands Venture, 624 F.2d 26, 27 (5th Cir. 1980) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Blake v. Farrell Lines, Inc., 417 F.2d 264, 265 (3d. Cir. 1969) .

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.07

§ 28.07 Understanding Court's Power to Consolidate

[1] Discretion to Consolidate Is Broad

There is broad judicial discretion in determining whether consolidation is proper and courts exercising that discretion will seldom be overruled. n1 The decision to consolidate cases will be upheld on appeal unless the court has committed a clear abuse of discretion. n2

Discretion extends to the very form that consolidation takes. The court may limit consolidation to particular issues, pleadings, or proceedings. n3

[2] Broad Discretion Extends to Power to Consolidate Sua Sponte

The broad power of the district court to consolidate extends to the consolidation of cases where no motion has been brought. A trial court has the power sua sponte to hold a hearing to determine whether the actions then pending before it should be consolidated. n4

Even when the parties or issues of law are not identical, courts may, without any motion pending, find a commonality of law or fact and consolidate a case with other pending cases. n5

[3] Abuse of Discretion To Consolidate Exists When There Are Insufficient Common Questions of Law or Fact

However broad, judicial discretion to consolidate actions is not unbounded and a finding of common issues of law, common issues of fact, or both, is a necessary prerequisite for exercise of judicial discretion. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of Actions

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Waste Distillation Tech., Inc. v. Pan Am. Resources, Inc., 775 F. Supp. 759, 761 (D. Del. 1991) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See E.E.O.C. v. HBE Corp., 135 F.3d 543, 550-551 (8th Cir. 1998) ; see also Chatham Condominium Ass'ns v. Century Village, Inc., 597 F.2d 1002, 1013-1014 (5th Cir. 1979) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See In re Air Crash Disaster at Detroit Metro. Airport, 737 F. Supp. 391, 393-395 (E.D. Mich. 1989) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Miller v. United States Postal Serv., 729 F.2d 1033, 1036-1037 (5th Cir. 1984) ; see also In re New York Community Bancorp, Inc., Sec. Litig., 448 F. Supp. 2d 466, 475 (E.D.N.Y. 2006) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Capps v. Eggers, 782 F.2d 1341, 1342 (5th Cir. 1986) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Enterprise Bank v. Saettele, 21 F.3d 233, 235-236 (8th Cir. 1994) ; see also King v. General Elec. Co. 960 F.2d 617, 626 (7th Cir. 1992) .

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

160 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.08

§ 28.08 Agreeing to Consolidate

As with most matters of procedure, the parties, through their respective counsel, may be able to stipulate and agree that particular cases can be consolidated, provided there are proper grounds for the consolidation. An agreement notwithstanding, the trial judge has the discretion to refuse consolidation. Local rules and judges rules must be consulted for procedural requirements for such stipulations.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of Actions

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.09

§ 28.09 CHECKLIST: Moving for Consolidation

The following checklist will assist counsel in moving for consolidation. Local rules and judges rules must be consulted for motion procedures. Note that individual judge's rules may require scheduling a pre-motion conference.

☐ A party bringing a motion for consolidation has the burden of showing the commonality of facts, law, or both in the cases sought to be combined.

☐ Unless all related cases are pending before the court, prepare to seek transfer of those filed in another district or jurisdiction. n1

☐ Determine that consolidation would serve tactical purpose, such as:

- ☐ Save time and expense. n2
- ☐ Avoid inconsistent results. n3
- ☐ Aid impression that opposing party committed wrongdoing by larger number of persons harmed or wrongs charged.
- ☐ Make certain that consolidation would not work injustice on any party, such as:
  - ☐ Causing unnecessary delay. n4
  - ☐ Adding unsolvable confusion. n5
  - ☐ Resulting in undue prejudice to a party. n6

- [ ] Prepare motion and memorandum of law to establish: n7
  - [ ] Common question of law or fact exist in designated cases.
  - [ ] Savings of time and expenses attainable by consolidation.
  - [ ] Lack of unfairness or prejudice to any party.
- [ ] Consolidation sought would not create undue complexity or be likely to confuse jury.
- [ ] Extent of consolidation sought and any limitations proposed, such as being limited to discovery and pretrial only.

■ FORM: For a motion to consolidate, see § 28.100.

- [ ] File moving papers timely, that is:
  - [ ] When proceedings in all cases clearly indicate existence of common question.
  - [ ] Well before one or more cases are ready for trial.
- [ ] File moving papers in case brought by consolidation movant with copies filed in all other cases to be consolidated.
- [ ] Arrange hearing date.
- [ ] Serve notice and moving papers on all counsel (as well as any pro se parties) in all cases concerned.
- [ ] Prepare and file memorandum in reply to any opposition, as considered necessary and advisable.
- [ ] Appear at hearing on designated date to offer evidence and argument:
  - [ ] To support grounds for motion.
  - [ ] To justify ability of suggested lead counsel.
- [ ] Prepare to provide draft for court's order granting consolidation in accordance with court's decision, including:
  - [ ] Ordering filing of consolidated complaint.
  - [ ] Appointing lead counsel and designating powers.

☐ Describing extent of consolidation, such as consolidation for pretrial purposes only.

☐ If consolidation is denied, consider asking the court to include in the denial order language effective to certify the order to provide a basis for petitioning the Circuit Court for permission to pursue an interlocutory appeal. n8

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 28.06.

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 28.02.

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 28.02.

(n4)Footnote 4. See § 28.03.

(n5)Footnote 5. See § 28.03.

(n6)Footnote 6. See § 28.03.

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a).

(n8)Footnote 8. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.10

§ 28.10 CHECKLIST: Opposing Consolidation

The following checklist may assist counsel in opposing a motion for consolidation. Local rules and judges rules must be consulted for motion procedures.

☐ The party seeking consolidation has the burden of convincing the court that consolidation is warranted, meaning not only that common issues exist but that no party would be unduly prejudiced. Typically, a party resisting another's or the court's own attempt to consolidate actions should file a timely memorandum in opposition to consolidation, serving copies on counsel for all parties in each action.

☐ A party opposing consolidation should demonstrate to the court that combining the cases would result in:

- ☐ Prejudice.
- ☐ Confusion.
- ☐ Delay.
- ☐ Inconsistent Judgments.
- ☐ Unfair Consequences.

☐ To demonstrate possible confusion and complexity, consider the following:

- ☐ Differences in actions.

- ☐ Differences in parties.
- ☐ Different evidence required to prove case.

☐ Counsel should also consider the following when drafting an opposition motion to consolidation:

- ☐ Whether one or more cases involved in a consolidation request are ready for or close to trial and would have to be delayed pending completion of pretrial in the other cases.
- ☐ Whether a conflict of interest exists between the plaintiffs (or the defendants) in the separate actions.
- ☐ Whether certain information admissible in one case is privileged or otherwise immaterial in another, resulting in prejudice to the protected party notwithstanding a limiting instruction to the jury. Note that while this situation may mitigate against consolidation for trial, it would not seem to prevent consolidating cases for pretrial and discovery.

☐ Prepare and file memorandum in opposition to motion for consolidation.

☐ Appear at hearing on designated date to offer evidence and argument to oppose motion.

☐ Prepare to provide draft for court's order denying consolidation.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of ActionsCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate Trials

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.11

§ 28.11 Dealing With Practical Problems in Consolidated Litigation

[1] Drafting a Consolidated Pleading

The court may and often does order the preparation and filing of a consolidated complaint, answer, or both, when the asserted claims or defenses are essentially the same and arise out of the same or similar transactions. n1

[2] Determining Roles of Counsel

Attorneys in consolidated cases may be appointed or designated by the district court to perform specific functions to facilitate the litigation and cooperation among all counsel and parties. n2

Courts exploring the practical aspects of facilitating multidistrict consolidated litigation have generally looked to the Manual for Complex Litigation (4th ed. 2004), which suggests specific functions for lead, liaison, and trial counsel, as well as committees of counsel or steering committees. n3

General or lead counsel may be appointed to supervise and coordinate the conduct of consolidated cases. n4 Lead counsel may be appointed for plaintiffs or defendants in complex actions to perform a number of substantive and administrative tasks, such as drafting and filing a consolidated complaint, participating in and organizing a discovery plan, deposing principal witnesses and parties, arranging for experts, overseeing litigation deadlines and schedules, keeping individual plaintiffs' counsel informed of settlement negotiations, preparing for trial, and trying the lawsuit. In large, complex, mass tort cases, lead counsel may consist of a committee of attorneys. n5

Appointment of a lead or general counsel is not to substitute that person for the counsel of each party's choice. Rather, the function of general counsel is to supervise and coordinate the conduct of the cases.

[3] Handling Demands for Jury Trial

A number of practical issues arise regarding jury trials when cases are consolidated. The right to trial by jury may be properly demanded in a consolidated lawsuit despite the fact that it may have been waived in one or more of the constituent cases. It has been held that when two cases are consolidated for all purposes, including trial, the right to jury trial attaches to all claims, even those in the lawsuit in which a jury trial was waived. n6

[4] Allocating Peremptory Challenges of Prospective Jurors

When cases are consolidated resulting in multiple parties, the trial court is empowered to apportion peremptory jury challenges ("strikes") to achieve equality and fairness. n7 The general rule is that parties are allowed the same number of peremptory challenges they would have had if there had been no consolidation. n8 What this means in practice is that the number of different pre-consolidation lawsuits involving any party fixes the number by which peremptories should be multiplied to produce the total number of strikes for that party in a consolidation. It should be noted, however, that this number is limited pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1870, which allows each side in an individual lawsuit only three peremptory challenges unless the court allows a larger number. n9

It is, however, within the discretion of the court to set the number of challenges. If consolidation results in two plaintiffs and only one defendant, the court may treat the plaintiffs as one party, assuming their interests were not conflicting, and allow them a party's three challenges, the same number as the defense. On the other hand, the court could allow each of the plaintiffs to exercise three challenges but increase the defendant's strikes to six. n10

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureVenueMultidistrict LitigationCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of ActionsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsRight to Jury Trial

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See In re Equity Funding Corp. of Am. Sec. Litig., 416 F. Supp. 161, 175 (C.D. Cal. 1976) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Vincent v. Hughes Air W., Inc., 557 F.2d 759, 773-775 (9th Cir. 1977) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See In re Ivan F. Boesky Sec. Litig., 948 F.2d 1358, 1364-1365 (2d Cir. 1991) ; see also Vincent v. Hughes Air West, Inc., 557 F.2d 759, 773-774 (9th Cir. 1977) (court relied upon second edition).

(n4)Footnote 4. In re Thirteen Appeals Arising out of the San Juan Dupont Plaza Hotel Fire Litig., 56 F.3d 295, 309-310 (1st Cir. 1995) .

(n5)Footnote 5. In re Air Crash Disaster at Detroit Metro. Airport, 737 F. Supp. 391, 394-395 (E.D. Mich. 1989) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Cedars-Sinai Medical Center v. Revlon, Inc., 111 F.R.D. 24, 31-32 (D. Del. 1986) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 47(b); see also 28 U.S.C. § 1870.

(n8)Footnote 8. Fedorchick v. Massey-Ferguson, Inc., 577 F.2d 856, 858 (3d Cir. 1978) (statute allowing a number of jury challenges for single-party cases expanded to include multiple peremptory challenges for multiparty cases).

(n9)Footnote 9. 28 U.S.C. § 1870.

(n10)Footnote 10. See Manual on Complex Litigation, § 22.41 (3d Ed., 1995).

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.12

§ 28.12 Obtaining Appellate Review of Consolidation Ruling

[1] Understanding That Ordinary Appeal Not Available

A consolidation order, or an order denying a motion for consolidation, is generally classified as interlocutory in nature and may not be appealed, unless designated for review by certification. n1

An important exception to this rule is the "collateral order doctrine," which allows immediate review of a consolidation order or denial of consolidation. Immediate appeal has been recognized as a necessary response to a consolidation order or denial that may have significant impact on the rights of the parties apart from the consolidation itself. It has been held that parties may petition for immediate review of a "collateral order" that finally determines "claims of right separable from, and collateral to, rights asserted in the action, too important to be denied review and too independent of the cause itself to require that appellate consideration be deferred until the whole case is adjudicated." n2

[2] Seeking Review by Petition for Mandamus

Consolidation orders may be challenged by writ of mandamus under extraordinary circumstances, or where there is gross abuse of discretion that amounts to action beyond the court's power. n3

[3] Obtaining Review Through Certification

The safest method of putting the consolidation question before the appellate court is to move the trial court to "certify" the order for appeal by ordering or including in the consolidation order that: n4

- There is substantial ground for difference of opinion on the controlling question of law.
- An immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation.

A petition for permission to appeal must be filed with the clerk of the court of appeals within 10 days after the entry of such an order. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of ActionsCivil ProcedureAppealsReviewabilityGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See 28 U.S.C. § 1291; NAACP of La. v. Michot, 480 F.2d 547 (5th Cir. 1973) ; Garber v. Randell, 477 F.2d 711, 714-715 (2d Cir. 1973) (citing Moore's).

(n2)Footnote 2. Garber v. Randell, 477 F.2d 711, 714-715 (2d Cir. 1973) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., In re Repetitive Stress Injury Litigation, 11 F. 3d 368 (2d. Cir. 1993) .

(n4)Footnote 4. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. App. P. 5(a).

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
A Consolidation

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 28.13 through 28.19

[Reserved]

§§ 28.13[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
B. Separate Trials

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.20

§ 28.20 Understanding Separate Trial Rule

[1] Defining Separate Trial Rule

Any claim, cross-claim, counterclaim, or third-party claim can be a candidate for a separate trial. Moreover, any issue or issues within a claim can be tried separately. To do so, however, the court must be of the opinion that separate trials of a given claim or issue will either: n1

- Further convenience.
- Avoid prejudice.
- Foster expedition and economy of the litigation.

Ordering separate trials of claims or issues is often referred to as "bifurcation." Cases are often bifurcated into separate trials for liability and damages. In some situations, however, there may be more than two resulting trials; for instance, when the court splits the issues into liability, compensatory damages, and punitive damages.

[2] Considering Standard for Separate Trials

[2.--1] Courts Have Broad Authority

Courts have broad authority to try issues and claims separately in furtherance of convenience or to avoid prejudice, or when separate trials will be conducive to expedition and economy. n2 If any one of these factors is present, it is sufficient to warrant a district court's order of a separate trial. n3

[2.--2] Furtherance of Convenience

Convenience may justify bifurcation when counterclaims or similar matters (including cross-claims and third party claims) contain substantially different materials from the plaintiff's original allegations, n4 raise new or complex issues for discovery, or would retard preparation for trial. n5 Courts have reasoned that joint trial of original claims and counterclaims may in some cases undermine the focus of the trier of fact, confuse the issues, or cause prejudice. n6

Convenience also may be furthered by bifurcating a single issue for joint trial in a consolidated case, thereby resolving that question for each of the consolidated cases. n7

[2.--3] Avoidance of Prejudice

When a jury's reaction to potentially prejudicial material contained within one claim or issue threatens to injure a litigant, courts are authorized to bifurcate the case and separately try other issues in the action first, so as to minimize the risk of untoward prejudice. n8 The potential inclusion of reference to insurance coverage, for example, has been deemed sufficient to warrant bifurcation in an air crash case. n9 Similarly, reference to an illegal wiretap as the basis for a counterclaim has been found to have sufficient potential for prejudice to warrant bifurcation of that counterclaim. n10

Note,

however, that separate trials to avoid prejudice is rarely if ever necessary when the matter is for trial to the court without a jury. In a bench trial, "the kind of prejudice contemplated by Rule 42(b) does not come into play." n11

[2.--4] Expedition and Economy

Bifurcating the case to first decide a controlling issue can often resolve litigation quickly and at minimal expense to the parties and the court. Not only is separation of liability as a predicate for damages a viable matter for application of the rule, but also bifurcation of issues such as venue, the bar of limitations, res judicata, or other complete defenses may be candidates for separate trial in advance of the case in chief. Nevertheless, it should be noted that bifurcation and separate trials are not the normal course of events, and a single trial usually will be more expedient and efficient. n12

Bifurcation is often employed where the determination of one claim may obviate the need to adjudicate one or more other claims as, for example, where rejection of a claim of insurance coverage renders unnecessary evaluation of a number of claims under the insurance contract. n13

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureVenueGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConsolidation of ActionsCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate Trials

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(b); M2 Software, Inc. v. Madacy Entm't, 421 F.3d 1073, 1088 (9th Cir. 2005) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(b) Wilson v. Morgan, 477 F.3d 326, 339 (6th Cir. 2007) ; Shum v. Intel Corp., 499 F.3d 1272, 1276 (Fed. Cir. 2007) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Sanford v. Johns-Manville Sales Corp., 923 F.2d 1142, 1145-1146 (5th Cir. 1991) ; Dollar. Inc. v. Avcar Leasing. Inc., 890 F.2d 165, 170 (9th Cir. 1989) ; In re Beverly Hills Fire Litig., 695 F.2d 207, 216 (6th Cir. 1982) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Industrial Equip. & Marine Servs., Inc. v. M/V Mr. Gus, 333 F. Supp. 578, 582 (S.D. Tex. 1971) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Davis & Cox v. Summa Corp., 751 F.2d 1507, 1517 (9th Cir. 1985) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See SCFC ILC, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 801 F. Supp. 517, 528-529 (D. Utah 1992) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See In re Air Crash Disaster at Detroit Metro. Airport, 737 F. Supp. 391, 395 (E.D. Mich. 1989) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Mattison v. Dallas Carrier Corp., 947 F.2d. 95, 110 (4th Cir. 1991) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Arnold v. Eastern Air Lines, 712 F.2d 899, 906-907 (4th Cir. 1983) , cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1040 (1984) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See Sound Video Unlimited, Inc. v. Video Shack, Inc., 700 F. Supp. 127, 146 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) .

(n11)Footnote 11. United States v. IBM, 60 F.R.D. 654, 655-658 (S.D.N.Y. 1973) .

(n12)Footnote 12. Kos Pharms., Inc. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 218 F.R.D. 387, 391 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (citing Moore's).

(n13)Footnote 13. See O'Malley v. United States Fidelity & Guar. Co., 776 F.2d 494, 500-501 (5th Cir. 1985) .

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
B. Separate Trials

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.21

§ 28.21 Evaluating Factors That Favor Separate Trials

[1] Key Issues Which May Determine Outcome of Proceeding

Resolution of a key issue may determine the outcome of an entire proceeding. In such a case, and so long as the issue may reasonably be separated from the remainder of the case, bifurcation of that issue for trial is likely to be conducive to judicial economy and expedition. n1

[2] Liability and Damages

Cases where liability and damages may be effectively separated often have been held to be proper subjects for bifurcation. n2

Even if the district court decides to bifurcate the trial into separate liability and damages phases, it may assign the same jury to decide both phases if doing so serves the interests of judicial economy. n3

[3] Punitive Damages

Rule 42(b) authorizes presentation of evidence relating to punitive damages after the jury's determination of other issues, thereby insulating the jury from considering that evidence while determining liability and compensatory damages. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate TrialsCivil ProcedureRemediesDamagesPunitive Damages

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See In re Bendectin Litig., 857 F.2d 290, 317 (6th Cir. 1988) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Sanford v. Johns-Manville Sales Corp., 923 F.2d 1142, 1145-1146 (5th Cir. 1991) ; see also Cherdak v. Stride Rite Corp., 396 F. Supp. 2d 602, 604 (D. Md. 2005) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See, TVT Records v. Island Def Jam Music Group, 254 F. Supp. 2d 322, 330 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Mattison v. Dallas Carrier Corp., 947 F.2d 95, 110 (4th Cir. 1991) ; North Dakota Fair Hous. Council, Inc. v. Allen, 298 F. Supp. 2d 897, 899 (D.N.D. 2004) .

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

168 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
B. Separate Trials

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.22

§ 28.22 Evaluating Factors That Disfavor Separate Trials

[1] Prejudice May Result to Party

Bifurcation is improper when separate trials would result in prejudice to a party;for example, by triggering delay in the proceedings, or increasing expense. n1

[2] Important Evidence May Be Excluded

A party may object to bifurcation on the ground that it effectively results in exclusion of important evidence from the jury. n2

[3] Overlapping Issues May Result in Presentation of Same Evidence Twice

Bifurcation is improper where the issues are so closely interwoven that the plaintiff would have to present the same evidence twice in separate trials. In such circumstances, judicial economy is fostered by a single trial. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate Trials

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Willemijn Houdstermaatschaapij BV v. Apollo Computer, 707 F. Supp. 1429, 1433-1434, (D. Del. 1989) (citing Moore's).

(n2)Footnote 2. See In re Bendectin Litig., 857 F.2d 290, 309 (6th Cir. 1988) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Willemijn Houdstermaatschaapij BV v. Apollo Computer, 707 F. Supp. 1429, 1433-1434 (D. Del. 1989) (citing Moore's).

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

169 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
B. Separate Trials

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.23

§ 28.23 Distinguishing Severance Order From Grant of Separate Trial

The Rule 42(b) technique of separately considering certain claims or issues while holding others in abeyance in a single lawsuit is to be contrasted with another procedural response to the problem posed by liberal joinder. The latter approach is embodied in Rule 21, which authorizes the "severance" of claims. Severance leads to the creation of two or more lawsuits where one existed before. n1

Unlike a claim to be tried separately under Rule 42(b), a severed claim effectively becomes an independent lawsuit with a separate docket number. It will result in its own judgment that can be appealed independently of the other claims originally joined. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate Trials

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Gaffney v. Riverboat Servs. of Ind., 451 F.3d 424, 440-444 (7th Cir. 2006)

(n2)Footnote 2. See Nolan v. Boeing Co., 919 F.2d 1058, 1067 (5th Cir. 1990) , cert. denied, 499 U.S. 962 (1991) .

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
B. Separate Trials

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.24

§ 28.24 Understanding Court's Power To Order Separate Trials

[1] Court May Act on Motion or Sua Sponte

Not only does the court have discretion to bifurcate claims or issues traditionally considered to be divisible, such as liability and damages, but also to separate for trial virtually any other issue that it thinks proper. n1 In doing so, the court may act on the motion of any party or sua sponte. n2

The determination whether to order separate trials is left to the sound discretion of the trial court, n2.1

[2] Reviewable Only For Abuse of Discretion

The court's power to grant or deny motions to bifurcate claims and order separate trials is subject to appellate reversal only if there has been an abuse of discretion. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate TrialsCivil ProcedureAppealsStandards of ReviewAbuse of Discretion

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. In re Beverly Hills Fire Litig., 695 F.2d 207, 216 (6th Cir. 1982) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N.Y. v. Mills, 319 F.2d 63, 63-64 (5th Cir. 1963) .

(n3)Footnote 2.1. See Layman v. Alexander, 343 F. Supp. 2d 483, 495 (W.D.N.C. 2004) .

(n4)Footnote 3. E.E.O.C. v. HBE Corp., 135 F.3d 543, 551 (8th Cir. 1998) ; Exxon Co. v. Sofec, Inc., 54 F.3d 570, 575 (9th Cir. 1995) , aff'd on other grounds, 517 U.S. 830 (1996) ; Layman v. Alexander, 343 F. Supp. 2d 483, 495 (W.D.N.C. 2004) .

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
B. Separate Trials

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.25

§ 28.25 Agreeing to Try Claims or Issues Separately

The parties may stipulate and agree that specified claims or issues are to be tried separately when there are the requisite differences in the claims or issues and doing so could save time and expense for all concerned. Nonetheless, it appears that the trial judge could refuse the joint request as the matter of separate trials rests solely within the court's discretion.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate Trials

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
B. Separate Trials

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.26

§ 28.26 CHECKLIST: Moving for Separate Trials

The party seeking bifurcation has the burden of proving that bifurcation will satisfy the expressed objective of the rule including furtherance of convenience, avoidance of prejudice, or enhancement of expedition and economy. The following checklist will assist counsel is moving for separate trials. Counsel should check local rules as well as individual judge's rules for motion procedures. Note that individual judge's rules may require scheduling a pre-motion conference.

☐ Ascertain that there are separable claims or issues with different witnesses and proof.

☐ Consider tactical edge in trying claim separately, such as avoiding multiple or stronger opposing counsel.

☐ Determine that separate trials would serve beneficial purpose, such as:

- ☐ Saving time and expense, by determining whether liability exists before trying damages question or by ascertaining validity of claimed defense. n1
- ☐ Avoiding prejudice to party. n2

☐ Make certain that separate trials would not work injustice on any party, such as: n3

- ☐ Causing unnecessary delay.
- ☐ Unduly prejudicing a party.

☐ Prepare motion and memorandum of law to establish that claim or issues should be separately tried,

clearly pointing out: n4

- ☐ Different evidence that will be offered.
- ☐ Movant's reasonable fears that prejudice will result unless claims or issues separated for trial.

☐ Bifurcation will cause no undue delay or unfairness to any other party.

■ FORM: For a notice of motion for separate trials, see § 28.102.

☐ File moving papers timely, that is:

- ☐ When pleadings show claims and relationships of parties sufficiently for understanding of need for separate trials.
- ☐ At pretrial or case management conference. n5

☐ Arrange hearing date.

☐ Serve notice and moving papers on all counsel (as well as any pro se parties).

☐ Prepare and file memorandum in reply to any opposition, as considered necessary and advisable.

☐ Appear at hearing on designated date to offer evidence and argument to support grounds for motion.

☐ Prepare to provide draft for court's order granting separate trials.

☐ If the motion is denied, consider asking the court to include in the denial order language effective to certify the order to provide a basis for petitioning the Circuit Court for permission to pursue an for interlocutory appeal. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate Trials

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 28.20[2].

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 28.20[2].

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 28.20[2].

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(b).

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(a).

(n6)Footnote 6. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
B. Separate Trials

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.27

§ 28.27 CHECKLIST: Opposing Motion for Separate Trials

☐ Although the burden of proof is on the movant to establish that separate trials of certain claims or issues are warranted, the opposing party should file memorandum in opposition, countering as many of the bases for separation as possible. The party opposing a motion should:

- ☐ Show how harm or prejudice will result if case is bifurcated.
- ☐ Show how bifurcation will cause delay and result in added expense.
- ☐ Show that bifurcation motion is premature. A motion for separate trials of issues may be premature if discovery has not progressed sufficiently to fully develop all the issues that may exist among the parties or if one of the claims involved is planned to be the subject of a motion for summary judgment.

☐ Prepare and file memorandum in opposition to motion for separate trials.

☐ Appear at hearing on designated date to offer evidence and argument to oppose motion.

☐ Prepare to provide draft for court's order denying separate trials.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate Trials

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
B. Separate Trials

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.28

§ 28.28 Seeking Appellate Review

Appellate jurisdiction requires a final decision, n1 and an order granting or denying separate trials is interlocutory and not immediately reviewable on appeal, as a general rule. n2

Two other procedures should be considered to obtain appellate review of an interlocutory order, although neither offer the complaining party much hope of success:

- Mandamus may be available to correct a clear abuse of discretion or to confine the trial court to a lawful exercise of its authority. n3

- The trial judge might be prevailed upon to certify the order for appeal thus providing the basis for a petition to the Circuit Court for permission to appeal. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial OrdersCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate TrialsCivil ProcedureAppealsAppellate JurisdictionInterlocutory OrdersCivil ProcedureAppealsReviewabilityGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

(n2)Footnote 2. See In re Repetitive Stress Injury Litig., 11 F.3d 368, 372 (2d Cir. 1993) , aff'd on rehearing, 35 F.3d 637 (2d Cir. 1994) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Moses H. Cone Memorial Hosp. v. Mercury Constr. Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 18, 103 S. Ct. 927, 74 L. Ed. 2d 765 (1983) .

(n4)Footnote 4. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
B. Separate Trials

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 28.29 through 28.99

[Reserved]

§§ 28.29[Reserved]

176 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
C. Forms

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.100

§ 28.100 Notice of Motion for Consolidation of Actions

Notice of Motion for Consolidation of Actions

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.)], or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, [party designation and name of moving party] will move this Court, at the United States Courthouse located at [address of Court], Courtroom [courtroom number], for an order:

(a) pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a) consolidating this action with the action pending in this district court entitled identify case to be consolidated by official caption, e.g., XYZ Company, Plaintiff v. John Doe Corporation, Defendant], Docket No. [number], on the ground that [state basis of motion, e.g., both actions turn upon the validity of the same contract entered into by the defendant, thereby presenting common questions of law and fact]; and

(b) granting [moving party] such other incidental relief as may be appropriate.

This motion is based on this Notice of Motion, the accompanying Declaration (or other appropriate affidavit substitute) of [name of signatory] sworn to (or dated) [date], the accompanying Memorandum of Law [if required] dated [date], and on all of the pleadings and papers on file in this action.

[Date]

Respectfully submitted,

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local

district court rules]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of notice of motion for use by a party in seeking consolidation of two or more actions pending in the same district court under Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a).

[3] Time for Seeking Consolidation

A motion seeking consolidation of two or more actions pending in the same district court need not be filed within any particular time. n1 However, consolidation is designed to serve judicial economy by permitting joint resolution of the common questions of law or fact presented by the actions. That economy is greater if the motion is made at an early stage of the proceedings.

[4] Consolidation Compared With Joint Trial

The court may order either a joint trial of multiple actions or consolidation of those actions. n2 Consolidation essentially merges the actions into a single action for all but a few purposes. If the actions are consolidated, discovery and other pretrial matters will be handled together. Joint trials of cases, on the other hand, are tried together but every other aspect of the cases remains separate.

[5] LOCAL PRACTICE: Master Docket of Consolidated Actions

When cases are consolidated, one of the cases, generally the oldest on the docket, is designated the "lead" or "master" case. All papers in each of the consolidated actions then are filed under that master docket, with copies filed in the other cases and served on all parties in all cases.

[6] Common Question of Law or Fact Required for Consolidation

Consolidation is appropriate only if the actions pending in the court involve at least one common question of law or fact. n3 If the court orders consolidation without the required common question, the error is reversible, provided some objection to consolidation was lodged.

[7] Date and Time of Hearing

Local rules and the individual judge's rules should be consulted with respect to advance notice requirements for motions and regularly scheduled motion days and times.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a).

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

177 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 28 Consolidation and Separate Trials *
C. Forms

3-28 Federal Litigation Guide § 28.101

§ 28.101 Notice of Motion for Separate Trial

Notice of Motion for Separate Trial

[Insert caption of action and title of document pursuant to local district court rule requirements]

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on [date] at [time of day (specify a.m. or p.m.], or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, [party designation and name of moving party] will move this Court, at the United States Courthouse located at [address of Court], Courtroom [courtroom number], for an order:

(a) pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 42(b) requiring separatetrials in this action of [identify claims or issues on which separate trial is sought, e.g., the issues of liability and damages] on the ground that [state basis of motion, e.g., the resolution of the issue of liability may obviate the necessity of complex and difficult issues of damages]; and

(b) granting [moving party] such other incidental relief as may be appropriate.

This motion is based on this Notice of Motion, the accompanying Declaration (or other appropriate affidavit substitute] of [name of signatory] sworn to (or dated) [date], the accompanying Memorandum of Law [if required; see] dated [date], and on all of the pleadings and papers on file in this action.

[Date]

Respectfully submitted,

[Signature of attorney]

[Typed or printed name of attorney]

[Firm name, if applicable]

Attorney for [name and designation of party]

[Attorney's or firm's address, e-mail address, telephone number, and any other identifying information required by local district court rules]

TO: [Name of opposing counsel], Attorney for [name of party]

[2] Use of Form

This is a form of notice of motion for use by a party in seeking separate trials of particular issues or claims in an action. Related, but analytically distinct, is a motion to sever a party or parties, which actually creates a new action in the district court. Separate trials, on the other hand, simply are phases of a single action.

[3] Time for Seeking Separate Trials

Although the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not contain any time limitation for seeking separate trials, n1 it is wise to do so as soon as possible. Generally speaking, the motion should be brought at or before any pretrial or case management conference. A request for bifurcation on the eve of trial or during an ongoing trial is not apt to succeed, especially if the potential harm to be avoided could have been anticipated earlier.

[4] Grounds for Ordering Separate Trials

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 20(b), separate trials may be ordered when parties who are not adverse claimants are joined in an action and the joinder will result in delay, prejudice, expense, or other cost to one of the parties. On the other hand, Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(b) authorizes separate trials in virtually any circumstance that appears to warrant such bifurcation, such as convenience of the court or parties, or to prevent prejudice, delay, or expense. Perhaps the most common instance of separate trials is the bifurcation of an action into liability and damages phases.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 20(b); Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(b).

* Chapter 28 was completely revised in 1999 by Peter Kearns, San Francisco, California.

178 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 29 Trial Briefs *

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide 29.syn

§ 29.syn Synopsis to Chapter 29: Trial Briefs *

§ 29.01 Evaluating the Purpose of Trial Briefs

§ 29.02 Consulting Local Rules and Individual Judge's Rules
[1] Filing May Be Required Under Local Rule
[2] Following Procedural Requirements Under Local Rules

§ 29.03 Considering Pretrial Orders When Drafting Trial Briefs

§ 29.04 Filing Trial Briefs in Both Bench and Jury Trials
[1] Filing Trial Briefs in Bench Trials
[2] Filing Trial Briefs in Jury Trials

§ 29.05 Evaluating the Form of the Brief

§ 29.06 Analyzing Scope of Trial Briefs
[1] Setting the Tone for Trial
[2] Referring to Parties in Trial Briefs
[3] Considering Length of the Brief
[4] Discussing Issues Succinctly and Separately
[5] Stating Governing Case Law
[6] Using the Appropriate Tone

§ 29.07 Organizing Trial Briefs
[1] Table of Contents
[2] Topical Headings
[3] Table of Authorities
[4] Procedural Background and Issues
[5] Statement of Facts
[6] Legal Argument
[7] Statement of Admissions and Stipulations
[8] Issues Related to Jury Instructions
[9] Evidentiary Issues
[10] Statement of Damages

[11] Appendices and Special Aids

§ 29.08 CHECKLIST: Drafting Trial Briefs

§ 29.09 Considering Alternatives to Trial Briefs

179 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 29 Trial Briefs *

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter focuses on the use of trial briefs in federal court. Although the federal rules are silent regarding the use of trial briefs, local rules and individual judge's rules often govern the filing and service of such briefs in advance of trial. The chapter covers the following topics:

- The purpose of trial briefs
- The importance of consulting local rules and individual judge's rules
- Consulting pretrial orders before drafting trial briefs
- Filing briefs in bench trials, as well as jury trials
- The form and scope of trial briefs
- Organizing trial briefs

The chapter also includes a checklist for drafting trial briefs. It concludes with a discussion of alternatives to the trial brief for the rare occasion when a trial brief is not submitted.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 29 Trial Briefs *

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide § 29.01

§ 29.01 Evaluating the Purpose of Trial Briefs

The purpose of the trial brief is to provide the court with full and complete disclosure of the parties' respective theories of the case. The trial brief typically sets forth the theory of the case and statutory or precedential support for the theory together with any unusual evidentiary or legal questions which may be anticipated at trial. Trial briefs provide an opportunity to discuss and forcefully argue in written form the law of the case based on the facts at hand. A trial brief generally should clearly identify and address the following:

- The elements of the relevant claims and/or defenses to be proved at trial
- The law applicable to the relevant claims and/or defenses
- The facts that will be presented at trial to prove the claims and/or defenses

A trial brief is an advocacy tool and should present the facts and the law in the most favorable light that can fairly be argued in support of the case. Even if the court has been presented with a thorough presentation of the case through pretrial motions and pretrial conferences, the trial brief should stand on its own and provide a summary of the case to be presented at trial. Unless the trial is to be bifurcated as to liability and damages or along other lines, the trial brief should be comprehensive, even if that involves repetition of matters covered in briefs filed in support of prior motions. Thus, while the depth of treatment of particular facts or issues may be affected by the fact that those issues have been briefed or discussed in other court papers, the trial brief should address all relevant issues and place them in their proper context.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral Overview

* Chapter 29 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 29 Trial Briefs *

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide § 29.02

§ 29.02 Consulting Local Rules and Individual Judge's Rules

[1] Filing May Be Required Under Local Rule

Trial briefs are a critical argumentative tool appropriate in most all cases. If a case is worth trying, it generally justifies the filing of a trial brief which will help focus trial preparation, assist the judge during trial, and serve as a starting point for appeal. While the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are silent on the subject, local rules and individual judge's rules often contain some sort of provision concerning trial briefs. In some districts, the filing of a trial brief is mandatory. n1 In other districts, while the language of the rule appears to leave the question of filing to counsel's discretion, the specificity of other provisions relating either to trial briefs or to pretrial orders strongly suggests that a trial brief is expected in most, if not all, cases. n2

Often, the specifications in local rules are quite general and do little more than list the commonly recognized functions that are covered in this chapter. n3 Other local rules, however, are quite detailed, and some require inclusion of matters not normally recognized as essential elements of a trial brief such as admissions and stipulations. n4

Consideration should also be given to local rules relating generally to briefs. Such rules typically speak to matters such as content and form of briefs (including length), time and place of filing, and manner of service. n5

[2] Following Procedural Requirements Under Local Rules

Local rules often dictate the following procedural topics regarding trial briefs:

- When trial briefs must be filed n6(a few rules are ambiguous, however, apparently permitting the trial court to exercise its discretion in setting a particular due date for trial briefs) n7
- Where trial briefs must be filed n8
- Page limitations n9
- The number of copies to be filed n10
- Service on adversary counsel n11

At least one district even requires that trial briefs be served on opposing counsel before they are filed. n12

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial Orders

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., Northern District of California--Rule 235.

(n2)Footnote 2. See, e.g., Northern District of California--Rule 235.

(n3)Footnote 3. For example, Middle District of Pennsylvania Rule 509 provides:

> The trial brief shall contain a succinct statement of the evidence to be presented and the position of the party filing the same with respect to anticipated legal issues, and the legal authorities relied upon to support the same.

(n4)Footnote 4. See, e.g., Eastern District of California--Rule 285.

(n5)Footnote 5. For example: Southern District of Indiana--Rule 12 (no brief filed or submitted to the court shall exceed 25 pages without permission from the court); Southern District of Mississippi--Rule 5 (all briefs must be submitted directly to the judges and shall not exceed 30 pages without permission from the court); Wyoming--Rule 37 (parties must tender any briefs to the Clerk's Office).

(n6)Footnote 6. See, e.g., Northern District of California--Rule 235.

(n7)Footnote 7. See, e.g., Kansas--Rule 20 (in advance of trial).

(n8)Footnote 8. See, e.g., Eastern District of Louisiana--Rule 5.

(n9)Footnote 9. See, e.g., Central District of California--Rule 3.10.

(n10)Footnote 10. See, e.g., Alaska--Rule 12.

(n11)Footnote 11. See, e.g., Middle District of Pennsylvania--Rule 509.

(n12)Footnote 12. Kansas--Rule 20 (trial brief must be served on opposing counsel at least 3 days prior to its submission to the clerk of the court).

* Chapter 29 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 29 Trial Briefs *

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide § 29.03

§ 29.03 Considering Pretrial Orders When Drafting Trial Briefs

Comprehensive final pretrial orders generally inform the court of the nature of the case, the issues presented, and many of the details of the evidence which the parties intend to introduce. n1 The final pretrial order not only informs the court about the key aspects of the case before trial, it sometimes even dictates the procedural requirements regarding the contents, filing, and exchanging of trial briefs. Accordingly, the pretrial order must be consulted when deciding what to cover in a trial brief, as well as the manner of filing and service of the brief.

If an exhaustive pretrial order has been filed, the order generally will address the uncontested facts, the contested issues of fact and law, the witnesses to be called, and the documents to be offered. In some pre-trial orders, the parties' position on key jury instructions and evidentiary issues will also be discussed. Although final pretrial orders supplement many of the same functions served by trial briefs, pretrial orders may be drafted in a cooperative effort with opposing counsel. Accordingly, final pretrial orders often suffer from at least the following serious limitations that are not an issue with trial briefs:

- A pretrial order generally does not provide the opportunity to discuss the law of the case in detail
- The typical structure of a pretrial order--uncontested facts, contested facts and issues, witnesses and documents--provides no opportunity, and in many ways interferes with, a coherent, analytical statement of a party's case
- In a pretrial order, contested issues generally are stated in summary form and many other important matters are stated in essentially objective form
- A pretrial order rarely provides an opportunity to discuss important evidentiary and jury instruction issues

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial Orders

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Pretrial conferences and orders are discussed in detail in ch. 27.

* Chapter 29 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 29 Trial Briefs *

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide § 29.04

§ 29.04 Filing Trial Briefs in Both Bench and Jury Trials

[1] Filing Trial Briefs in Bench Trials

In bench trials, a trial brief is an especially effective way to present the case in a cogent and persuasive manner before presenting evidence at trial. n1 A well-drafted trial brief is more likely to positively influence the judge's final decision in the case than one that is formulated with minimal effort. Because the trial judge will be the finder of both the facts and the law, it generally is imperative to file a detailed and persuasive trial brief in all bench trials. Although it is possible that motions in limine and briefs in support of requested instructions can do some of the work of a trial brief, the trial brief plays a unique role in providing the framework for the court's legal and factual analysis of the case. Clearly, this role assumes great importance in the context of a bench trial.

[2] Filing Trial Briefs in Jury Trials

As with bench trials, a trial brief is critical in most jury cases. As the arbiter of all legal issues, some of which may be mixed questions of law and fact, the trial judge in a jury case must rule on the evidence and instruct the jury, and the rulings on those matters will often be influenced by the judge's views on the merits of the case. Tacitly or overtly, the judge may disclose a view of the facts or the law to the jury. Finally, the judge will rule both on motions for judgment as a matter of law and on any post-trial motions which may be filed based on the judge's view of either the facts or the law. For these reasons, even in a jury trial, it is important to use all available tools to persuade the court not only of the correctness of the client's position on the law, but also of the merits of the client's factual case.

It is certainly true that in particularly simple or routine cases, the length and scope of a trial brief may be radically affected by the fact that the case will be tried to a jury. In the most straightforward of cases, the trial brief in a jury case might be confined to a discussion of evidentiary issues and/or legal principles applicable to the instructions. Even in more complex jury cases, the trial brief's discussion of the facts might be greatly abbreviated. In a non-jury case, by contrast, the trial brief is a direct attempt to convince the court that your client's position is supported by the facts and the law.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil

ProcedureTrialsBench TrialsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Bench trials are discussed in detail in ch. 41.

* Chapter 29 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 29 Trial Briefs *

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide § 29.05

§ 29.05 Evaluating the Form of the Brief

A comprehensive trial brief generally will include the following:

- Table of contents. The table of contents should list the main parts of the brief and must give page references for each part (in the argument section, the point headings for each argument should be set forth in full and separately referenced with page numbers)

- Table of authorities. The table of authorities should list the cases (alphabetically arranged), statutes, and other authorities cited, with references to the pages of the brief where they are cited

- Case statement. A brief statement outlining the general nature of the case

- Statement of facts. A full and complete statement of the facts the party expects the evidence will establish

- Legal argument. The party's theory of liability or defense based on those facts, together with argument and authorities in support thereof

- Damages. The party's theory of damages or other relief in the event liability is established, together with authorities in support thereof

- Conclusion. A brief conclusion stating the precise relief sought

In addition, a trial brief will often cover the following:

- Procedural background

- The party's theory of any anticipated motion for judgment as a matter of law, together with authorities in support thereof

- In jury cases, the party's authorities in support of particular requested jury instructions

- The party's position on any anticipated evidentiary problems

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral Overview

* Chapter 29 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 29 Trial Briefs *

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide § 29.06

§ 29.06 Analyzing Scope of Trial Briefs

[1] Setting the Tone for Trial

A trial brief should be written with its three principle functions in mind:

- To tell the court what the case is about
- To explain to the court why the party on whose behalf the brief is filed should prevail
- To set forth the law which compels that result

The first two of these functions are closely related. Indeed, the first purpose is more important than the second. The judge cannot intelligently decide the case in your favor unless he or she understands it. These considerations suggest that organization, clarity and logical development are extremely important elements in a trial brief. The trial brief must be persuasive, but it should be more than a rhetorical device. It must be an integrated document, with internal consistency that compels the court to adopt your client's position.

The third general purpose--to provide the court with the controlling law--is also extremely important. In most jury trials, the trial brief is the only written vehicle by which you can explain the law to the judge in a coherent fashion. Briefs in support of motions or requested instructions, by themselves, present a jumbled view of the case--a series of snapshots, rather than a broad panorama of the entire case. While this is less true in bench trials where post-trial submissions will be made, the opportunity to educate the court on the law before the evidence is received should be fully exploited. Thus, a primary objective of every trial brief will be to inform the court of the law on which your client's case depends.

[2] Referring to Parties in Trial Briefs

In a trial brief, counsel should minimize use of the terms "plaintiff" and "defendant." To make briefs clear, counsel should use the parties' actual names or descriptive terms (such as "the employee," "the injured person," or "the taxpayer"). By addressing the parties by name or descriptive title, the brief will often be more readable and easier for the judge to follow.

[3] Considering Length of the Brief

A trial brief is useless if it is not read, and a short brief is more likely to be read than a long one. Although harder to write, a short brief will be more effective than a long one. The brief must adequately cover those matters essential to achieve its objectives. Its length will necessarily vary from case to case.

Limitations on the length of a brief generally are set by local rule or the individual judge's rules, which must be consulted prior to the drafting of any trial brief. In general, the trial brief should be as short as possible and within the page limit set by the court. However, the case should not be compromised by filing a brief that does not adequately address all of the key facts and legal arguments. Trial briefs should address all of the issues that will be addressed at trial, and provide the factual background necessary to an understanding of those issues.

If the draft brief seems overly long, carefully examine each point and each paragraph to be sure that it is essential to the purposes of the brief. Eliminate marginal points or issues. Emphasize issues on which your client's position is strong but do so succinctly. Counsel should avoid unnecessary exposition. If you have carefully stated the issue and the facts relating to it, and have carefully pruned and organized your authorities, further explanation is unnecessary. An overlong draft may be an indication of faulty organization or unnecessary repetition. If that is the case, revise the draft so that you make your point and then move on.

[4] Discussing Issues Succinctly and Separately

It is difficult to generalize about the subject of the depth of treatment of particular issues within trial briefs. An issue sufficiently important to be dealt with in a trial brief at all should be discussed in the depth necessary to both explain the issue and persuasively argue your client's version of it.

In each section of the brief, be sure that the issue presented is succinctly stated and that multiple issues have not been included under the same heading or in the same discussion. Deal with one issue at a time, under appropriate headings. Use headings and sub-headings as you would in an appellate brief. Rather than showing unnecessary complexity, your effort to write analytically will show that you have thought the issue through. Counsel should also avoid unnecessary repetition of the facts. Factual detail, if appropriate at all, should be set forth only once, either in the general statement of facts or in connection with the legal point to which it relates. Only the most important facts should appear in both places, and then with different emphases.

[5] Stating Governing Case Law

When citing a case for a general proposition, counsel should avoid unnecessary recitation of the facts of the cited case. The facts of a case cited for a proposition of pure law are, by definition, unnecessary. Where the relevancy of a case depends upon the similarity of its facts to the facts of your case, include only those facts necessary to demonstrate the similarity. When dealing with a group of such cases, summarize the facts of the one or two most nearly parallel to your own and confine your explanation of the others to parenthetical references. Likewise, counsel should use only succinct quotations from other cases (they will often be shorter as well as more effective than your summary of them). Avoid long or repetitive quotations. If a long quotation cannot be reduced to manageable length, paraphrase it. In general, counsel should avoid string citations; they are almost always unnecessary, and they waste valuable space. Pick the most persuasive case from the controlling, or most persuasive, court.

[6] Using the Appropriate Tone

Where the facts of your case are ethically neutral--i.e., do not involve claims of intentional fraud, duress or similar matters--the trial brief should generally "argue" those facts subtly and by innuendo rather than by unnecessary and self-serving analysis. The latter approach will not be persuasive to most judges and may have an adverse effect. Above all, facts which you characterize as undisputed should be accurately stated, and your recitation of the expected proof of disputed issues should be realistic.

Issues of law generally should be attacked frontally and in the strongest terms which the authorities will allow. The reason for this distinction in approach between the facts and the law of the case, though subtle, can be stated as follows: The judge's decision on the facts in a bench trial n1 is a subjective one which is properly based on the evidence and his or her perception of it. An overly aggressive presentation of the facts in advance of trial both anticipates the judge's hearing and review of the evidence and prematurely intrudes on the subjective evaluation of that evidence. In contrast, while the judge is also the arbiter of the law, the law is objective and may be determined both in advance and in abstraction from the evidence. You cannot hide from the law and such a tactic is seldom successful. Moreover, if the case is proceeding to trial, it is usually true that you must have at least some law and some facts to support your claim. Use the law to your advantage; do not try to evade it in any way.

In general, the statements or conduct of opposing counsel should normally be referred to only if they constitute an admission or they are both improper and germane to the issue in the case. Remember that opposing counsel is not a party to the case; address your opponent's argument, but not your opponent personally.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. In a jury case, the vehement discussions of the facts should almost always be saved for the jury.

* Chapter 29 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 29 Trial Briefs *

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide § 29.07

§ 29.07 Organizing Trial Briefs

[1] Table of Contents

In all trial briefs, a table of contents will help the court. In a long brief, a table of contents is essential. Subject to any local rules about the format of trial briefs, consider using tabs or other finding aids so that the judge can quickly locate a specific part of the trial brief.

The trial judge may not have the opportunity to read a long brief in one sitting. Accordingly, the judge might be inclined, even on first reading, to skip around, reading first the discussion of points which seem the most important or interesting and leaving others for later review as the trial progresses. Even if the judge reads the brief through in one sitting, he or she will be likely to want to return to particular points as they arise during the trial. A good table of contents will allow the judge to do this quickly.

[2] Topical Headings

A table of contents is only as helpful as the internal structure that it reflects. Again, even the shortest of trial briefs must have some internal structure. Long briefs should, if anything, be over-structured. Long statements of facts should be broken down under topical headings. Legal points should not only have separate headings but should be broken down into any subdivisions which logically exist, and all other reasonable divisions of the brief should be thoughtfully made. Be sure that the headings in the table of contents conform with the corresponding headings in the brief itself.

Subheadings should be as informative as possible. Thus, the subheading for each proposition of law should be a full sentence that states the legal proposition in affirmative terms. Subdivisions of the statement of facts should not be argumentative in form, but they should suggest the nature of the factual matter discussed.

[3] Table of Authorities

A list of the cases and other authorities cited in the trial brief, together with references to the pages of the brief on which they appear, is critical in most briefs. The judge should not have to skim entire sections of the trial brief to determine whether you have discussed an important case.

[4] Procedural Background and Issues

The procedural background should provide a procedural chronology of the case and outline all relevant pretrial motions. The procedural background is especially critical in cases that have multiple parties and claims, as well as in cases where dispositive motions have been filed in advance of trial.

[5] Statement of Facts

The organization of the statement of facts may present more of a problem in complex cases where "common sense" often fails to resolve conflicting organizational or argumentative considerations. Where the case requires a comprehensive preliminary statement of facts and also presents multiple and generally discrete legal issues, the facts may be presented chronologically or on an issue-by-issue basis. Because facts are best absorbed by most readers if they are presented in more or less chronological form, that approach is preferable. On the other hand, it is especially difficult for most readers to simultaneously absorb facts in two contexts--that is, in both their chronological and issue-by-issue contexts. As a result, if an issue-by-issue treatment is necessary or preferred, the overall chronology of the facts should first be set forth, and the detailed issue-by-issue discussion should then follow.

A closely related problem arises in simple as well as complex cases: whether to set forth particular facts in the general factual statement at the beginning of the brief or to state those facts in connection with the legal issue to which they relate. The solution to this problem will usually be a compromise, with the critical facts being stated in detail in one place and either summarized or cross-referenced in the other. Doubts as to which part of the trial brief should be favored should be resolved in favor of a comprehensive preliminary statement of all of the relevant facts. This is true for two reasons. First, in most cases, the judge will want to read--and you will want to provide, in one place--a forceful and comprehensive statement of all of the facts of the case. Second, if the relevant facts are effectively presented at the beginning of the brief, a later, summary of them in connection with particular legal points will likely recall those facts quickly to the judge's mind. Also, if your general statement of facts is well organized, with informative subheadings, later cross-references back to the facts relevant to particular legal points can easily be followed by the court.

Another common problem is the level of detail which any factual discussion should contain. Case-to-case variations make any general statement on this point particularly difficult. Nevertheless, a few overall observations may be made. The primary purpose of the trial brief is to address the law, because the judge will in due course hear the evidence. In many cases, either the pretrial order or previous exposure to the case will give the judge a good general understanding of the facts. Consequently, the trial brief's statement of facts, and particularly its statement of the expected proof, should normally be presented in summary rather than detailed form. The trial brief, should nevertheless, include as much detail as may be necessary to make the brief intelligible and forceful. There are several types of cases where a detailed presentation of at least some facts should be made. Among these are cases:

- Where the facts are essential to overcoming or avoiding an adverse proposition of law
- Where the conduct of the adverse party was illegal or morally or ethically reprehensible
- Where your own client's conduct was questionable and requires careful explanation or justification
- Where the case is logistically complicated because of the presence of multiple parties, an abundance of counterclaims, cross-claims or third party claims, or the assertion of alternative and inconsistent theories of relief
- Where the court's understanding of complicated financial, technical or other evidence will be facilitated by a background discussion of--in essence, an introductory course on--that evidence

[6] Legal Argument

Setting forth and arguing the law of the case is the principal purpose of a trial brief. The legal issues dealt with in the trial brief will often parallel the party's statement of contested issues of law in the pretrial order. The law should be argued in forthright, affirmative terms. However, the discussion of the law should be kept as short as possible. A short, incisive argument is likely to be the most effective. The drafting and revising necessary to reduce the length of a legal argument generally will strengthen it.

[7] Statement of Admissions and Stipulations

Admissions and stipulations are often included in the final pretrial order and some local rules require that trial briefs also list or describe all admissions and stipulations. n1 In those jurisdictions, it will probably be appropriate to list such admissions and stipulations in a separate section of the brief, regardless of whether particular admissions or stipulations are separately discussed elsewhere in the brief. If the adverse party or its counsel has made significant admissions or stipulations, you should emphasize them; if you or your client have made significant admissions or stipulations, you will want to explain them in order to minimize their significance.

[8] Issues Related to Jury Instructions

For tactical reasons, issues raised by jury instructions may be dealt with in a separate brief or memorandum, or through the parties' proposed jury instructions. Nevertheless, the question sometimes arises as to whether such issues should be dealt with as part of the general treatment of the law or in a separate section of the trial brief.

If the jury instruction issue is substantive and directly related to a legal issue considered in the brief, the treatment of the two issues should be combined. Presentation of the instruction issue will almost always be improved without blunting the effective presentation of the underlying issue itself. Additionally, combining the issues avoids repetition and reduces the length of the brief. If the jury instruction issue is not related to a substantive issue in the case, it is usually best discussed in a separate section even though it is substantive in character. This is particularly true if you must address several such issues. In general, it will be helpful to collect your discussion of jury instructions under one clearly identified heading. Where some instruction issues are discussed in connection with the substantive points to which they relate and others are discussed under a separate heading, the jury instruction section should cross-reference the discussions of instruction issues that appear elsewhere in the brief.

[9] Evidentiary Issues

Unlike jury instruction issues, evidentiary issues are typically unrelated to substantive issues. Even if they are related, a digression from the discussion of the substantive issue to consider a subsidiary evidentiary point is likely to detract from your analysis of the substantive issue. Accordingly, evidentiary issues should almost always be dealt with in a separate section of the trial brief. However, if the evidentiary issue is inseparable from the substantive issue, they should be presented together. For example, if the validity of one cause of action depends entirely on the admissibility of expert testimony on that issue, the evidence becomes the substance.

[10] Statement of Damages

The trial brief should deal with damage issues or other requested relief. If relief other than damages is requested, or if any aspect of the relief question is complex, such issues are usually best discussed in a separate section of the brief. The propriety of permanent injunctive relief or the terms of a desired declaratory judgment should be discussed in detail. The reasons why multiple forms of relief, for example, damages and injunction, are required should also be explained, and supported by citation to authority. If the disputed damage issues are really evidentiary issues--relating, for example, to the admissibility of certain forms of damage proof--those issues should almost always be discussed in a separate section of the brief.

[11] Appendices and Special Aids

Finally, in complex cases, a trial brief should include any special tool that might assist the court in its understanding of the facts and the law. Such tools include charts, graphs, schematic drawings and even photographs. If the cast of characters in the case is large, an alphabetical list of the "players" with a brief description of their background, title or position in the case, may be helpful. If the case involves complex transactions covering a long period of time, a one-page chronology of events will be helpful. This is particularly true if the nature of the case requires that most of the facts be presented in a non-chronological way.

Charts, graphs, and the like may often be physically incorporated into the factual discussion to which they relate and are more likely to be studied by the court if they are presented in that way. Short form chronologies and lists of witnesses are usually best set forth in a separate section of the brief. If appendices are used, for any purpose, they should be informatively tabbed: for example, "App. A--Chronology of Facts," not simply, "App. A." An index to the appendix should also be considered.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., Eastern District of California--Rule 285.

* Chapter 29 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 29 Trial Briefs *

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide § 29.08

§ 29.08 CHECKLIST: Drafting Trial Briefs

The following checklist identifies issues that should be considered when drafting trial briefs.

☐ Consult local rules and individual judge's rules. The importance of consulting local rules, as well as individual judge's rules, cannot be overstated. Local rules and individual judge's rules often govern the filing of trial briefs and may address the following issues: n1

☐ Whether the filing of a trial brief is mandatory.

☐ Time and place of filing.

☐ Form and contents of the brief.

☐ Page limits.

☐ Timing of service to opposing counsel.

☐ Consult the final pretrial order. The final pretrial order will include many of the same issues to be addressed in the trial brief and may even dictate the requirements for filing and serving trial briefs n2

☐ Consider filing a trial brief in every case, even if not mandatory. Trial briefs are critical in both bench and jury trials and generally should be filed n3

☐ Form of the brief. Most trial briefs will include the following sections: n4

☐ Table of contents.

☐ Table of authorities.

☐ Statement of the case.

☐ Statement of facts.

☐ Legal argument.

☐ Statement of damages.

☐ Conclusion.

☐ Scope and tone of the brief. Consider the following issues when drafting the brief: n5

☐ Covering all the issues to be presented at trial as succinctly as possible.

☐ Referring to parties by name or descriptive title.

☐ Citing all relevant case law.

☐ Avoiding personal attacks on opposing counsel.

☐ Organizing the brief. Consider the following organizational tools when drafting trial briefs: n6

☐ Topical headings. Section headings in the brief allow the judge to locate pertinent sections with ease

☐ Table of contents. Even if not mandated, all briefs should include a table of contents that refers to the section headings

☐ Table of authorities. The table of authorities allows the reader to quickly locate relevant law in the argument section

☐ Refer to local rules and individual judge's rules concerning form. Most briefs will include a statement of facts, the legal argument, a section on damages, and a brief conclusion

☐ Consider attaching visual aids. Tables, charts, graphs, and other visual aids are sometimes appropriate to simplify the presentation of issues to the court

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesFinal Pretrial Conferences

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See § 29.02.

(n2)Footnote 2. See § 29.03.

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 29.04.

(n4)Footnote 4. See § 29.05.

(n5)Footnote 5. See § 29.06.

(n6)Footnote 6. See § 29.07.

* Chapter 29 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

188 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 29 Trial Briefs *

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide § 29.09

§ 29.09 Considering Alternatives to Trial Briefs

If the filing of a trial brief is not mandated and if the client has requested that one not be filed for financial or other reasons, alternatives to the trial brief should be considered to advance the client's position before trial. No alternative will be completely satisfactory and some may even be unavailable. However, alternatives to consider may include:

- Pretrial orders. Draft your portions of the pretrial order to obviate the need for a trial brief, paying particular attention to the statement of contested issues of fact and law and adding citations in support of the more important legal points

- Post-trial briefs in bench trials. In a bench trial, it may be appropriate to urge that trial briefs be "waived" in favor of post-trial submissions

- Previously submitted briefs. If briefs in support of or in opposition to substantive motions have been filed dealing with most or all of the issues in the case, simply rely on those briefs and remind the court of their contents

- Case memorandum. Many cases involve only one critical issue. If that is true of your case, prepare a short memorandum dealing with that issue, explain to the court why you are not filing a full-blown trial brief, and offer to supply similar memoranda dealing with other issues, if the court so desires

- Memorandum of points and authorities. Drafting full and effective summaries of the facts and argument of the law accounts for a major part of the time and cost of preparing a conventional trial brief--if cost issues are a significant factor, consider filing a short memorandum of points and authorities

- Copies of relevant law If the essence of your position is expounded in one or two cases, advise the trial judge of that fact and provide copies of any authorities which might not be readily available

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil

ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersConferencesPretrial Orders

* Chapter 29 was rewritten in 2002 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Appendix 29: Appendix to Chapter 29

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide Appendix 29:.syn

§ 29.syn Synopsis to Appendix 29: Appendix to Chapter 29

PART I SAMPLE TRIAL BRIEF
Sample Trial Brief

190 of 190 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Appendix 29: Appendix to Chapter 29

3-29 Federal Litigation Guide PART I

PART I * SAMPLE TRIAL BRIEF

This sample trial brief begins with a table of contents, a table of authorities, and an overview of the argument. The actual argument, which is quite detailed, is followed by a brief conclusion.

WILLIAM D. NAEVE, Esq,
COTKIN, COLLINS, & FRANSCELL
A PROFESSIONAL CORPORATION
200 WEST SANTA ANA BLVD., SUITE 800
SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA 92701
Attorneys for Defendants, [Employees' Pension Plan], [Employer] and [Employees Pension Plan Committee]

Anthony vs. Ryder Truck Lines, Inc., et al.,
466 F. Supp. 1287 (E.D. Pa. 1979)

Bachelder vs. Communications Satellite Corporation,
837 F.2d 519 (1st Cir. 1988)

Freund vs. Gerson,
610 F. Supp. 69, 71 (D.C. Fla. 1985)

Henne vs. Allis-Chalmers Corporation,
660 F. Supp. 1464 (E.D. Wis. 1987)

Higgins vs. Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund,
524 F. Supp. 601, 607 (E.D. Pa. 1981)

Kolentus vs. Avco Corporation,
798 F.2d 949, 958 (7th Cir. 1986)

O'Brien vs. Sperry Univac,

458 F. Supp. 1179 (D.C. 1978)

Spitznass vs. First National Bank of Oregon,
269 Or. 676, 525 P.2d 1318, 1323 (1974)

Tinsley vs. General Motors Corporation,
622 F. Supp. 1547, 1552 (D.C. Ind. 1985)

Van Orman vs. American Insurance Company,
680 F.2d 301 (3rd Cir. 1982)

Zittrouer vs. Uarco Inc. Group Benefit Plan,
582 F. Supp. 1471 (N.D. Ga. 1984)

STATUTES

29 U.S.C. § 1022(a)(1)

29 U.S.C. § 1132

29 U.S.C. § 1022(b)

Department of Labor Regulations § 2520.102-3

1. OVERVIEW

Plaintiff alleges that the Summary Plan Description Booklets, furnished during his second period of employment by [Employees' Pension Plan], were inconsistent with the formal Plan and mislead him to his detriment into a belief that his Years of Service with [Employer] prior to December 1, 1976, would be reinstated for vesting and benefit accrual purposes. He further alleges that the Summary Plan Description controls over the Plan, and that he is entitled to rely upon it.

Plaintiff's analysis is off the mark.

The Summary Plan Description Booklets at issue herein contain strong disclaimers precluding reliance upon their terms, which are, despite Plaintiff's contentions, consistent with the formal Plan, and case law establishes that the Plan controls over the Summary Plan Description, as the following arguments make clear.

2. INTRODUCTION

In the direct testimony of [Plaintiff], appended as Exhibit A to a document entitled "Direct Testimony of Witnesses in Chief Submitted to this Court", on page 6, lines 7-23, Plaintiff states:

I did review Summary Plan Descriptions [] in an attempt to clarify the situation. I never found anything in the Summary Plan Descriptions which I felt supported [[Employer's] position], nor did I find anything in the Summary Plan Descriptions which I felt contradicted what I had previously been told by [a representative of [Employer]].

(Emphasis added.)

These allegations are repeated elsewhere in Plaintiff's Direct Testimony and his Complaint, and are entirely unfounded.

The Plaintiff admits receiving at least three copies of the Summary Plan Description Booklets, identified as trial Exhibits "_____", "_____", "_____", (hereinafter referred to as "SPD's"). In response to interrogatory number 96 of Defendant [Employer's] Third Set of Interrogatories to Plaintiff (see Plaintiff's responses, number 96, page 12, lines 9-13), Plaintiff admits having in his possession the June 1979 edition, as well as the October 1981 edition and the May 1984 edition. The three booklets are virtually identical.

Plaintiff either did not review the SPD's, or he simply missed or failed to notice the numerous provisions contained within the Summary Plan Description Booklets he admits receiving and reading.

...

[Plaintiff's] failure to notice or review the vesting requirements and the provisions of the SPD's regarding Years of Service is particularly perplexing in light of [Plaintiff's] fifteen years experience as an attorney!

Plaintiff further contends that the SPD's provided to Plaintiff by [Employer] contained erroneous and misleading information (see Complaint, page 9, P 41, lines 8-12; page 10, P 45, lines 9-14; and page 15, prayer, lines 1-3). Again, Plaintiff either did not read the SPD's, or he simply failed to comprehend the detailed information set forth therein, since the Booklets contain no erroneous or misleading information such as would support his position.

Plaintiff's allegations that nothing in the SPD's supports Defendants' position denying Plaintiff retirement benefits for his second period of employment and that he was misled by the SPD's will be laid to rest in the following discussion.

A. Issues Relating To Summary Plan Descriptions

To analyze and determine the effect of Plaintiff's allegations, certain issues must be considered. These are:

(1) Do the SPD's adequately inform the participant of the relevant provisions of the Plan?

(2) Does the formal Plan control over the SPD's?

(3) As a matter of law, can the Plaintiff seek to obtain pension plan benefits under ERISA based on the terms of an SPD?

(4) What must the Plaintiff show in order to rely on provisions of the SPD?

(5) Do the SPD's comport with 29 U.S.C. § 1022(b) and Department of Labor Regulations § 2520.102-3?

3. THE SUMMARY PLAN DESCRIPTION ADEQUATELY INFORMED PLAINTIFF OF HIS PENSION RIGHTS UNDER THE PLAN.

As was detailed in the brief which analyzes the terms and conditions of the formal post-ERISA Plan documents, Plaintiff is simply not entitled to reinstate-- count-- his pre-ERISA employment for purposes of vesting and benefit accrual purposes under those Plan documents. The reason is simple: [Plaintiff's] first period of employment was not continuous or consecutive through November 30, 1976, and therefore does not constitute "Years of Service" or "Credited Service" as defined by the Plan. Because his pre-ERISA service cannot be counted and because his second period of employment did not last for the required ten-year vesting period, [Plaintiff] is not entitled to a pension benefit for his second period of employment with the company, and his monthly pension benefit, based upon his first period of employment, is $381.43.

The result urged above is based upon an analysis of the post-ERISA Plan documents. As the following analysis will also demonstrate, nothing contained in the SPD's received by Plaintiff is contrary to the terms or conditions contained within the formal Plan documents.

A. Vesting Requirement:

Initially, the SPD's clearly inform the Plaintiff of the Plan's ten-year vesting requirement.

A section or subsection entitled "Benefit for Terminated Employees--Vesting" appears on page 10 of the SPD's received by Plaintiff.

...

B. Normal Retirement Benefits Provisions:

On page 3 of the Summary Plan Description begins a section entitled "Normal Retirement Benefits." That section contains a formula for determining the amount of the monthly pension benefit available at age 65.

...

C. Years Of Service Defined:

Whether the Plaintiff is entitled to either of a vested "Benefit for Terminated Employees" or to "Normal Retirement Benefits" depends entirely upon the definition of "Year of Service," which appears on page 20 of each SPD.

...

The definition unequivocally informs the Plaintiff that his Years of Service prior to December 1, 1976 cannot be used under the Plan because those Years of Service were not consecutive through November 30, 1976.

Plaintiff's Years of Service after December 1, 1976, for purposes of the current benefit plan, fall under definition (b), since he was employed beginning on July 14, 1979. However, his benefits did not become vested, because he did not have 10 or more years of service on the date of his termination in February of 1987 as required by the Summary Plan Description on page 10 under the heading "Benefit for Terminated Employees-Vesting," as quoted hereinabove.

D. Determining Years Of Credited Service:

The non-applicability of the Plaintiff's service for the Company prior to December 1, 1976 is made even clearer by considering the method of determining Years of Credited Service, which is found on page 2 of the SPD's, under the subheading "Eligibility":

...

Since the Plaintiff herein did not have consecutive years of service through November 30, 1976, the Plaintiff could not begin to accrue credited service until he had returned to his employment with [Employer] in 1979.

Thus, the Summary Plan Description Booklet in effect at the time that Plaintiff was reemployed by [Employer], as well as subsequent editions, makes abundantly clear the fact that Plaintiff was not entitled to receive pension credit under the Plan for his years of service for the Company prior to December 1, 1976.

Moreover, by the clear terms of the Summary Plan Description Booklets, Plaintiff is not entitled to benefits under the Plan for his second period of employment, since he must have 10 years of Credited Service in order to obtain benefits, and his second period of employment from July 14, 1979 to February of 1987 does not total 10 years of Credited Service.

E. Entitlement To Participation:

Yet another provision of the SPD's is directly on point. Page 1 of the SPD's contains the heading, "Employees Entitled to Participate":

...

This provision clearly excludes [Plaintiff's] first period of employment. His second period of employment was of insufficient length for his benefits to vest, as was demonstrated hereinabove.

F. Reemployment:

Page 3 of the Summary Plan Description Booklet issued by [Employees' Pension Plan] in June of 1979 contains a section entitled "Reemployment." A similar provision is contained within the October 1981 and May 1984 editions of the booklets.

...

That section is clearly inapplicable, vis-a-vis Plaintiff, since it applies only to those individuals who terminated after December 1, 1976. Plaintiff herein terminated on January 2, 1976-- before December 1, 1976. Because this provision is inapplicable to Plaintiff, he was clearly placed on notice that his case would be determined on an "individual basis."

...

G. Other Provisions Of The Summary Plan Description Booklet:

On page 6 of the June, 1979 Booklet begins another subsection entitled "Early Retirement Benefits--All Participants." The text begins by stating, "You may retire anytime after you reach age 55 and have completed 15 continuous years of employment with the employer company."

Page 7 of the SPD describes "Disability Retirement", which requires that the claimant produce medical evidence of total and permanent disability, which is not at issue in this case.

Pages 8 and 9 deal with death benefits, which are not at issue herein.

The foregoing analysis of the language of the Summary Plan Descriptions furnished to Plaintiff makes it extremely difficult to find credible the Plaintiff's statement, quoted page 3 supra:

I never found anything in the Summary Plan Descriptions which I felt supported [Employer's position].

The Plaintiff's position is completely untenable and unpersuasive.

4. THE FORMAL PLAN CONTROLS OVER THE SUMMARY PLAN DESCRIPTION.

The leading case on the effect of a summary plan description in insurance plans controlled by ERISA is Anthony vs.

Ryder Truck Lines, Inc., et al., 466 F. Supp. 1287 (E.D. Pa. 1979) , which stated:

Initially, we must determine which is the controlling instrument, the plan or the booklet. Spitznass vs. First National Bank of Oregon, 269 Or. 676, 525 P.2d 1318, 1323 (1974) . When, as here, the booklet itself expressly states that it is simply a brief description or outline of the plan, it cannot be said to control the provisions of the plan.

466 F. Supp. at 1292-93 .

The reviewing court held, at 611 F.2d 944, 948 (3rd Cir. 1979) , that the disclaimer in the summary plan description which stated that the formal plan controlled was valid.

In the instant case, the Plaintiff, upon his being reemployed on or about July 14, 1979, was provided with an SPD by the [Employees' Pension Plan]. (See Declaration of Chuck Adams, page 87, lines 7-21, attached as Exhibit "E" to Declaration of Defendants' Witnesses Offer In Lieu of Direct Oral Testimony In Support of Defendants' Case In Chief.) A copy of that Booklet, dated June 1979, is attached hereto as Exhibit "A" and by reference made a part hereof. The second page of that Booklet contains a Forward, and the second paragraph of that Forward states:

As a Participant in the Plan, you are entitled to know what the Plan provides. This Summary will help you understand the Plan's important features. But remember, this is just a summary. The only complete statement of the terms of the Plan are set forth in the "[Employees' Pension Plan]" document and only the provisions of that Plan govern.

(Emphasis added.)

The October 1981 and May 1984 SPD's contain identical language.

As the Anthony trial court explained, "The introduction of the summary booklet gave Anthony adequate warning that the pamphlet was not designed to supersede the plan but was intended as information and an invitation to all employees to examine the plan itself if they desired more information or had any questions." 466 F. Supp. at 1293 .

Significantly, the Forward of the SPD's involved in the instant case warns the reader to "[r]emember, this is just a summary." Such language puts the reader on notice that the SPD's cannot cover all possible situations.

The June 1979 SPD furnished to Plaintiff (as well as the October 1981 and the May 1984 editions) goes on to inform the reader where the complete statement of the terms can be found.

...

Therefore, the Plaintiff was on notice that only the provisions of the formal plan govern, and was apprised of his right to examine all plan documents in the personnel office or to obtain copies upon written request. Yet the Plaintiff, an experienced attorney for [Employer], never asked anyone associated with the [Employees' Pension Plan] any questions regarding the contents of the SPD, nor did he ever ask to examine or obtain copies of Plan documents. The fact that Plaintiff did not avail himself of the opportunity to review the actual Plan documents is not the fault of Defendant herein.

Anthony has been followed in Kolentus vs. Avco Corporation, 798 F.2d 949, 958 (7th Cir. 1986) ; Tinsley vs. General Motors Corporation, 622 F. Supp. 1547, 1552 (D.C. Ind. 1985) , and Higgins vs. Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund, 524 F. Supp. 601, 607 (E.D. Pa. 1981) . Without relying on Anthony, Van Orman vs. American Insurance Company, 680 F.2d 301 (3d Cir., 1982) also held that the formal Plan controls over the Summary Plan Description.

The disclaimer itself need not inform the participant of his right to examine the plan documents and obtain copies of those documents. In Higgins, which likewise dealt with a disclaimer in a Summary Plan Description and followed the reasoning of Anthony, the court explained that, "One provision of a writing may not be read in isolation from other provisions. Rather, the writing must be interpreted as a whole." 524 F. Supp. at 607 . See also, 680 F.2d 301, 309 (3d Cir. 1982) .

Obviously, the provisions dealing with Plaintiff's rights under ERISA on page 13 of the SPD's at issue herein that the Plan documents could be examined at the personnel department would indicate to a reasonable person that such documents could be examined at the personnel department during normal business hours. Certainly, they furnish more information to the employee than was furnished in Van Orman, in which employees were not advised of when or where plan documents could be examined.

No Ninth Circuit case has been located which follows the reasoning of Anthony. However, the case of Spitznass vs. First National Bank of Oregon, 269 Or. 676, 525 P.2d 1318 (1974) , found that the Summary Plan Description is a mere illustration of the controlling plan.

...

From the foregoing, there can be no doubt but that Plaintiff was adequately informed by the disclaimer that the Plan governs over the SPD, and that the courts have upheld such disclaimers in ruling that the formal plan documents control over summary plan descriptions.

5. AS A MATTER OF LAW, PLAINTIFF CANNOT SEEK TO OBTAIN PENSION PLAN BENEFITS UNDER AN ERISA PLAN BASED ON THE TERMS OF A SUMMARY PLAN DISCRIMINATION.

In the case of O'Brien vs. Sperry Univac, 458 F. Supp. 1179 (D.C. 1978) , the plaintiff sued to have a part of the plan declared void because the summary plan description appeared to alter the terms of the original plan. The Court held that it was not a claim under the terms of the plan.

...

In the case at bar, to the extent that the Plaintiff seeks to recover Plan benefits through the enforcement of provisions contained within the Summary Plan Description Booklets, this Court has no jurisdiction to award those benefits under the auspices of the ERISA statutes in general and under 29 U.S.C. § 1132 in particular.

6. THE PARTICIPANT MUST SHOW REASONABLE RELIANCE OR PREJUDICE FROM A FAULTY SUMMARY PLAN DESCRIPTION.

From the foregoing, it is evident that the Plaintiff cannot reasonably have interpreted any provision of the SPD with which he was provided when he was reemployed by [Employer] in 1979 (or any other SPD) to mean that his years of service prior to December 1, 1976 would be credited toward his pension benefits under the Plan. Moreover, there is ample case authority that not only must Plaintiff have relied to his detriment upon the SPD, but his reliance must have been reasonable.

In Freund vs. Gerson, 610 F. Supp. 69, 71 (D.C. Fla. 1985) , the court found:

Although ERISA specifically allows private actions for benefits, injunctions and other appropriate relief, including attorney's fees, 29 U.S.C. § 1132, this Court is of the opinion that a private action cannot lie for merely a "technical breach of [29 U.S.C.] § 1022(b).' Instead, this Court finds, and case law suggests, that in order to recover damages for the breach, Plaintiff must show some significant reliance upon, or possible prejudice flowing from the faulty Summary Plan description.

Anthony, 611 F.2d 944, at p. 947, held that there would be no recovery for the plaintiff without proof of an estoppel. Zittrouer vs. Uarco Inc. Group Benefit Plan, 582 F. Supp. 1471 (N.D. Ga. 1984) at p. 1475 , held that the plaintiff must show (1) an intentional deception through concealment or inaction, or gross negligence amounting to constructive fraud; (2) justifiable reliance; and (3) damages. Because there is no evidence of intentional deception by Defendant and because the SPD's accurately "summarize" the Plan, Plaintiff cannot possibly demonstrate estoppel in this case.

The issue of reasonableness was considered in Bachelder vs. Communications Satellite Corporation, 837 F.2d 519 (1st Cir. 1988) , which was decided partly upon the basis that there was no indication of any reasonable or significant reliance on the part of the plaintiffs. 837 F.2d at 523 .

...

And finally, in Henne vs. Allis-Chalmers Corporation, 660 F. Supp. 1464 (E.D. Wis. 1987) , it was held that:

[] most decisional law requires a showing of active concealment or of some significant reliance upon or possible prejudice flowing from a faulty summary plan description.

660 F. Supp. at 1474. [Emphasis in original.]

Even if Plaintiff could somehow point to some provision of the SPD's in question which are inconsistent with Formal Plan Documents, he must demonstrate that he reasonably relied upon the language contained therein to his detriment. Alternatively, he must show intentional deception through concealment or inaction, or gross negligence amounting to constructive fraud.

Plaintiff was quoted page 3 supra, stating:

I did review Summary Plan Descriptions [] in an attempt to clarify the situation. I never found anything in the Summary Plan Descriptions which I felt supported [[Employer's] position], nor did I find anything in the Summary Plan Descriptions which I felt contradicted what I had been previously been told by [a representative of [Employer]].

(Emphasis added.)

Even a second reading of the SPD's was apparently insufficient to enable Plaintiff to appreciate the Plan's unambiguous provisions, for he states, on page 7 of Plaintiff's Direct Testimony, lines 20-23:

... I again looked at Summary Plan Descriptions, and, again, found nothing in them which I felt supported [[Employer's]] position. I felt the conclusions [[Employer]] had reached were incorrect.

(Emphasis added.)

Even the average reader with a high school education should be capable of understanding the unambiguous provisions of the SPD's quoted hereinabove. However, [Plaintiff] graduated from law school in 1971 and practiced as an attorney for [Employer] from February of 1972 until January of 1976, when he left [Employer] for the first time. He then worked for a private law firm until July of 1979, when he returned to [Employer]. Certainly, as an attorney, [Plaintiff] was routinely required to read, analyze and adopt a legal position regarding the effect of contract language, particularly insurance contract language. In fact, [Plaintiff] was no doubt capable of drafting the very SPD's in which he now claims he can find no language to support the position of Defendant herein.

The patent unreasonableness of Plaintiff's position is made more apparent by the fact that Plaintiff received at least three editions of the Summary Plan Description Booklets, all containing similar provisions. Plaintiff's response to interrogatory number 96 at page 12, lines 9-13 of Plaintiff's Responses to Defendant's Third Set of Interrogatories admits that Plaintiff received copies from [Employer] of Summary Plan Description Booklets dated June 1979, October 1981, and May 1984, and Plaintiff admits having "reviewed" and "looked at" the booklets, as noted hereinabove.

Plaintiff has failed to show reliance on the Summary Plan Description Booklets, whether it be reasonable or justifiable, and has not shown any intentional concealment or gross negligence on the part of the authors of the Plan. On the contrary, the SPD's clearly elucidate the circumstances under which service prior to December 1, 1976 will be credited toward pension benefits. Plaintiff simply could not have been reasonably mislead by the SPD's because he is an experienced attorney, and the SPD's tell the reader exactly how to compute pension benefits, specifically excluding any service prior to December 1, 1976 which was not consecutive through November 30, 1976.

Therefore, any attempt by the Plaintiff to demonstrate that he suffered any detriment as a result of reasonable and justifiable reliance upon the Summary Plan Description at issue herein must fail.

7. THE SUBJECT SUMMARY PLAN DESCRIPTION COMPLIES WITH TWE REQUIREMENTS STATED IN LABOR REGULATIONS § 2520.102-3 AND 29 U.S.C. § 1022(b).

Title 29 U.S.C. § 1022(b) and Department of Labor Regulation § 2520.102-3 set forth the required contents of the summary plan description. They contain virtually identical requirements, except that item number eleven of D.L.R. § 2520.102-3 is not required by 29 U.S.C. § 1022(b). Since the Labor Regulations require an additional item of content of the summary plan description, the following discussion will center on the Labor Regulation requirements.

...

The manner in which the Summary Plan Description booklet meets these requirements is discussed separately and at length hereinbelow.

...

Labor Regulation § 2520.102-3 also prescribes the manner in which the material must be presented:

...

The SPD's in question meets these criteria, especially given the fact that most insurance company employees are well educated, and most probably have college degrees. The booklet contains no technical jargon or long, complex sentences, contains a table of contents, several clarifying examples for computing benefits, and has five pages of typical questions and answers.

Title 29 of the United States Code, § 1022(a)(1) requires that the summary plan description " ... shall be sufficiently accurate and comprehensive to reasonably apprise such participants and beneficiaries of their rights and obligations under the Plan." (Emphasis added.) As demonstrated by the foregoing, the SPD's at issue herein comply with this standard, as well as the Department of Labor regulations.

8. CONCLUSIONS

Based upon the foregoing analysis, Defendants respectfully request that this Court hold that:

1. The Summary Plan Description Booklets at issue herein both adequately and accurately apprise Plaintiff of the relevant provisions of the Plan;

2. Plaintiff may not rely upon the Summary Plan Description Booklets, because the formal Plan controls;

3. Even if relevant provisions of the Summary Plan Description Booklets were contrary to the corresponding provisions of the Plan, this Court has no jurisdiction to award benefits based solely upon the Summary Plan Description;

4. Even if provisions of the Summary Plan Description Booklets were contrary to provisions of the Plan itself, and even if this Court finds jurisdiction, the Plaintiff's reliance on the Summary Plan Description Booklets is wholly unreasonable, and;

5. The Summary Plan Description Booklets at issue herein comply with the requirements of the United States Code and Department of Labor regulations.

Dated: January _____, 1989

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES P. COLLINS, JR., Esq. WILLIAM D. NAEVE, Esq. COTKIN, COLLINS & FRANSCELL

BY: .....

.....

Attorneys for Defendants, [Employer], [Employees' Pension Plan] and [Employees Pension Plan Committee]

Sample Trial Brief

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

Plaintiff, Plaintiff vs. [Employees' Pension Plan]; [Employer]; [Employees Pension Plan Committee] and DOES I-IX,inclusive, Defendants.	)))))))))	Case No. TRIAL BRIEF ON ISSUES RELATING TO THE SUMMARY PLAN DESCRIPTION BOOKLETS APPLICABLE TO THE Employees' Pension Plan Trial Date:Time:CtRm:

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. OVERVIEW

2. INTRODUCTION

A. Issues Relating To Summary Plan Descriptions

3. THE SUMMARY PLAN DESCRIPTION ADEQUATELY INFORMED PLAINTIFF OF HIS PENSION RIGHTS UNDER THE PLAN

A. Vesting Requirement

B. Normal Retirement Benefits Provisions

C. Years Of Service Defined

D. Determining Years Of Credited Service

E. Entitlement To Participation

F. Reemployment

G. Other Provisions Of The Summary Plan Description Booklet

4. THE FORMAL PLAN CONTROLS OVER THE SUMMARY PLAN DESCRIPTION

5. AS A MATTER OF LAW, PLAINTIFF CANNOT SEEK TO OBTAIN PENSION PLAN BENEFITS UNDER ANERISA PLAN BASED ON THE TERMS OF A SUMMARY PLAN DESCRIPTION

6. THE PARTICIPANT MUST SHOW REASONABLE RELIANCE OR PREJUDICE FROM A FAULTY SUMMARY PLAN DESCRIPTION

7. THE SUBJECT SUMMARY PLAN DESCRIPTION COMPLIES WITH THE REQUIREMENTS STATED IN LABOR REGULATIONS § 2520.102-3 AND 29 U.S.C. § 1022(b)

8. CONCLUSIONS

SUPPORTING EXHIBITS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

* This sample trial brief was furnished courtesy of James P. Collins, Jr. and William D. Naeve, Cotkin, Collins & Franscell, Santa Ana, California. In this sample brief, the names of all parties, witnesses, and opposing counsel have been changed, and the text has been condensed.

1 of 181 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide 30.syn

§ 30.syn Synopsis to Chapter 30: Juries *

§ 30.01 Evaluating the Constitutional Right to a Trial by Jury
[1] Preserving the Right to Jury Trial Under the Seventh Amendment
[2] Construing Seventh Amendment Right Liberally
[3] Waiving Seventh Amendment Right to Jury Trial
[4] Combining Legal and Equitable Claims

§ 30.02 Evaluating the Right to Jury Trial Under Rule 38
[1] Protecting Actions at Law Pursuant to Constitution
[2] Recognizing Right to Trial by Jury Under Federal Statutes

§ 30.03 Distinguishing Between Actions at Law and Suits in Equity
[1] Actions Formerly Cognizable in Equity Do Not Require Jury Trial
[2] Traditional Actions at Law May Be Tried by a Jury
[3] Newly Created Rights That Would Be Enforceable at Common Law Are Triable to Jury
[4] Traditional Equitable Actions Tried Without a Jury

§ 30.04 Admiralty Claims Generally Tried Without a Jury
[1] No Constitutional Jury Trial Right in Admiralty Cases
[2] Federal Rules Create No Jury Trial Right in Admiralty Cases

§ 30.05 Evaluating Public Rights Exemption to Jury Trial

§ 30.06 Determining Right to Jury Trial Based On Nature of Action and Remedy Sought

§ 30.07 Evaluating Right to Jury Trial in Diversity Cases

§ 30.08 Deciding Whether to Demand a Jury Trial
[1] Evaluating Whether Facts of Case Have Jury or Bench Appeal
[2] Considering Case and Trial Management Methods of the Court
[3] Considering the Duration and Complexity of Trial

§ 30.09 Demanding a Jury Trial Under Rule 38
[1] Making a Proper Jury Demand in Writing

[2] Specifying the Scope of the Jury Demand
[3] Any Party May Make Demand
[4] Failing to Serve and File Demand Results in Waiver

§ 30.10 Timing of Demand
[1] Making Demand Immediately
[2] Demanding Jury Within 14 Days After Service of Last Pleading Directed to Issue
[3] Defining Pleadings for Purposes of Rule 38
[4] Answer to Intervenor Complaint Treated as Last Pleading
[5] Adding Three Days When Service Is by Mail
[6] Fourteen-Day Period May or May Not Be Deemed Mandatory

§ 30.11 Evaluating Form and Sufficiency of Demand
[1] Making Demand in Writing
[2] Rule 38 Takes Precedence Over Local Rules as to Adequacy of Demand
[3] Demanding Jury by Endorsement on Pleading
[4] Demanding Jury by Endorsement in Pretrial Order
[5] Checking Box on Civil Cover Sheet Generally Insufficient, But May Suffice if Served on Other Parties

§ 30.12 Serving and Filing Jury Demand
[1] Serving Demand
[2] Filing Demand

§ 30.13 Demanding Jury Trial in Removed Actions
[1] Making Timely Demand in Federal Court When Demand Has Not Been Made in State Court
[2] Relying on Proper Demand Made Under State Law

§ 30.14 Making Demand Based on Amended or Supplemental Pleadings
[1] Raising New Issues In Amended Pleading
[2] Adding or Changing Parties Will Revive the Right if Issues Are Affected
[3] Alleging New Issues Does Not Relieve Waiver as to Original Issues
[4] Asserting New Theories Provides No New Opportunity to Demand Jury Trial
[5] Demanding Different Relief Insufficient to Relieve Party of Waiver
[6] Applying 14-Day Rule to Issues Raised in Amended Pleading

§ 30.15 Making Demand Based on Counterclaim
[1] Demanding Jury Based on New Issues Raised in Counterclaim
[2] Making Jury Demand Within 14 Days of Reply to Counterclaim
[3] Making Jury Demand on Compulsory Counterclaim

§ 30.16 Withdrawing Jury Demand
[1] Seeking Consent for Withdrawal
[2] Electing Admiralty to Accomplish Withdrawal
[3] Withdrawing Demand Without Consent of Party Who Objected to Jury Trial Demand
[4] Withdrawing Demand Without Consent of Party Unaffected by Jury Trial Demand

§ 30.17 Specifying Issues in Jury Demand
[1] Evaluating the Effect of Specification Under Rule 38(c)
[2] Relying on Another Party's Limited Demand
[3] Failing to Specify Constitutes Demand as to All Issues Triable by Jury

§ 30.18 Filing Jury Demand Triggers Court Response Under Rule 39

§ 30.19 Waiving Right of Jury Trial
[1] Presumption Against Waiver
[2] Waiving Right Expressly or Implicitly
[3] Determining if Action Constitutes Waiver
[4] Proving Waiver

§ 30.20 Applying Waiver Rule to Pro Se Litigants

§ 30.21 Failing to Timely Serve and File Demand
[1] Failure Generally Constitutes Waiver
[2] Waiver May Not Be Circumvented by Voluntary Dismissal
[3] Considering Effect of Demands Filed by Other Parties

§ 30.22 Waiving Jury Right by Contract
[1] Voluntarily Waiving Right by Agreement
[2] Construing Waiver Provisions Strictly
[3] Determining If Waiver Is Voluntary
[4] Consenting to Dispute Resolution in Non-Jury Forum

§ 30.23 Waiving Jury Right by Conduct
[1] Participating in Bench Trial
[2] Failing to Object to Pre-Trial Order Providing for Bench Trial
[3] Discharging Jury
[4] Failing to Submit Issue to Jury
[5] Waiving Right by Express Consent of Party or Counsel
[6] Filing Claim Against Debtor in Bankruptcy Constitutes Waiver

§ 30.24 Considering the Effect of Jury Demands on Subsequent Trial
[1] Preserving Demand in Second Related Suit
[2] Introducing New Issue Provides Opportunity for New Demand
[3] Ordering of New Trial Does Not Revive Right to Jury Demand

§§ 30.25 through 30.29 [Reserved]

§ 30.30 Evaluating the Policy of Jury Selection and Service Act
[1] Selecting Potential Jurors at Random
[2] Disqualifying Potential Juror From Jury Service
[3] Selecting and Summoning of Jury Panel by District Court
[4] Mandating Daily Juror Attendance Fees

§ 30.31 Challenging Compliance With Statutory Selection Procedures

§ 30.32 Ensuring Selection of Impartial Jury Through Voir Dire

§ 30.33 Conducting of Voir Dire by District Court
[1] Recognizing District Court's Wide Discretion in Conduct of Voir Dire
[2] Introducing Potential Jurors to Voir Dire Process
[3] Examining Potential Jurors
[4] Supplementing Examination Conducted by Court
[5] Posing Questions Designed to Elicit Information Beyond That Which Would Disqualify Juror for Cause

§ 30.34 Evaluating Standard of Review on Appeal

§ 30.35 Conducting Voir Dire by Written Questionnaire

§ 30.36 Working With Jury Consultants

§ 30.37 Using Commercially-Prepared Jury Books

§ 30.38 Dealing With Juror Untruth During Voir Dire Examination
[1] Eliciting Truthful Responses
[2] Waiving Right to Object to Nondisclosure
[3] Nondisclosure Must Be Deliberate and Material

§ 30.39 Challenging a Juror For Cause
[1] Rejecting Juror Based on Partiality
[2] Granting of Challenge Based on Actual Bias

§ 30.40 Asserting Peremptory Challenges
[1] Removing Jurors Who Have Unacknowledged or Unconscious Bias
[2] Evaluating Right Under Jury Selection and Service Act
[3] Determining Number of Peremptory Challenges
[4] Utilizing Peremptory Challenges

§ 30.41 Evaluating Whether Peremptory Challenge is Discriminatory
[1] Opposing Peremptory Strikes As Discriminatory
[2] Opposing the Peremptory Challenge in Timely Manner
[3] Conducting Inquiry on Challenge

§ 30.42 Understanding the Jury's Role at Trial

§ 30.43 Assuring Requisite Number of Jurors
[1] Seating a Jury Of At Least Six Members
[2] Stipulating to Verdict From Jury of Fewer Than Six Members

§ 30.44 Understanding Judge's Role During Jury Trial
[1] Ruling on Questions of Law
[2] Managing Juror Conduct
[3] Instructing and Aiding Jury

§ 30.45 Evaluating Court's Authority to Enter Judgment Different From Jury Verdict
[1] Granting Judgment as Matter of Law
[2] Granting New Trial
[3] Granting Remittitur When Option of New Trial Is Offered
[4] Granting Additur Is Impermissible Violation of Seventh Amendment

§ 30.46 Excusing Jurors During Trial or Deliberation
[1] Removing Sitting Jurors From Service During Trial or Deliberation for Good Cause
[2] Grounds Justifying Excuse of Juror

§ 30.47 Investigating and Removing Sitting Juror for Misconduct
[1] Hearing Ordinarily Required
[2] Hearing May Be Waived by Parties
[3] Voir Dire of Juror Regarding Prejudice From Extrajudicial Information

§ 30.48 Reaching Unanimous Jury Verdict
[1] Unanimity Provides Greater Certainty in Result
[2] Verdict Should Be in Writing and Signed by All Jurors
[3] Counsel Should Remain During Deliberations and Be Advised of Communications With Jury
[4] Conducting Post-Verdict Polling

§ 30.49 Conducting Post-Trial Interviews With Jurors

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter primarily addresses the considerations relating to jury demands and jury selection. The chapter first focuses on the fundamental right to a jury trial and the procedures for demanding a jury trial under Rule 38, and the following topics are discussed:

- Legal authority for jury trials under the U.S. Constitution and the Federal Rules
- Availability of jury trials in specific types of actions and for specific issues
- Considerations in demanding a jury trial
- Making a proper written demand for jury trial (including specific rules in cases removed to federal court, cases involving amended and supplemental pleadings, and cases involving counterclaims)
- Timing of jury demands
- Waiving the right to trial by jury

The chapter then turns to jury selection and jury conduct, and the following topics are covered:

- The scope of the Federal Jury Selection and Service Act
- The selection of an impartial jury through voir dire
- The court's role in conducting voir dire
- Dealing with problems during voir dire, such as juror untruth
- Challenging potential jurors for cause
- Utilizing peremptory challenges

- Opposing an adversary's challenge of a potential juror
- The judge's role during the jury trial
- Excusing or removing jurors during trial or deliberation
- Reaching verdict with the requisite number of jurors

For expanded coverage of the topics covered in this chapter, see Moore's Federal Practice, Ch. 38, Jury Trial of Right (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

3 of 181 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.01

§ 30.01 Evaluating the Constitutional Right to a Trial by Jury

[1] Preserving the Right to Jury Trial Under the Seventh Amendment

The Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution provides: "In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law." n1

"Suits at common law" refers to suits in which legal rights are to be ascertained and determined, in contradistinction to those where equitable rights alone are recognized, and equitable remedies are administered. The amendment may be construed to embrace all suits which are not of equity or admiralty jurisdiction. n2

If the issue, in its modern context, is such that it would have been heard at common law in 1791, then it is triable by a jury as of right, and that right is constitutionally protected. n3

[2] Construing Seventh Amendment Right Liberally

It has been held that the right to jury trial under the Seventh Amendment should be liberally construed, n4 and that when there is doubt, the balance is tilted in favor of a jury trial. n5 The strong federal policy favoring jury trials provides the impetus for finding the right to jury trial in questionable cases. n6 When the court has discretion, it is "very narrowly limited and must, wherever possible, be exercised to preserve jury trial." n7

Since the right to jury trial is a fundamental right, it may not be suspended for lack of funds. n8 Nor may the right be abridged by administrative concerns over the length of the federal docket. n9

[3] Waiving Seventh Amendment Right to Jury Trial

The Seventh Amendment does not mandate jury trials but instead preserves an entitlement to a jury trial for parties in particular cases. As such, the jury trial right may be waived. n10

[4] Combining Legal and Equitable Claims

When a plaintiff brings both legal and equitable claims in the same action, the Seventh Amendment right to jury trial on the legal claims must be preserved by trying those claims first, or at least simultaneously with the equitable claims, and the jury's findings on any common questions of fact must be applied when the court decides the equitable claims. n11

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsActions in EquityCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsRight to Jury TrialConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsCriminal ProcessRight to Jury TrialConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil ActionsGovernmentsCourtsCommon Law

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. U.S. Const. amend. VII.

(n2)Footnote 2. Teamsters v. Terry, 494 U.S. 558, 564, 110 S. Ct. 1339, 108 L. Ed. 2d 519 (1990) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See United States v. Jones, 158 F.R.D. 309, 312 (D.N.J. 1994) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See In re Beeline Eng'g & Constr., Inc., 139 B.R. 1025, 1027 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1992) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Deborah Leslie, Ltd. v. Rona, Inc., 630 F. Supp. 1250, 1253 (D.R.I. 1986) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Bower v. Bunker Hill Co., 675 F. Supp. 1254, 1261-1262 (E.D. Wash. 1986) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Beacon Theatres, Inc. v. Westover, 359 U.S. 500, 510, 79 S. Ct. 948, 3 L. Ed. 2d 988 (1959) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Avco Corp. v. PPG Indus., Inc., 867 F. Supp. 84, 97 (D. Mass. 1994) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Reiner v. New Jersey, 732 F. Supp. 530, 533 (D.N.J. 1990) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Bellmore v. Mobil Oil Corp., 783 F.2d 300, 306 (2d Cir. 1986) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Colorado Visionary Acad. v. Medtronic, Inc., 397 F.3d 867, 875 (10th Cir. 2005) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.02

§ 30.02 Evaluating the Right to Jury Trial Under Rule 38

[1] Protecting Actions at Law Pursuant to Constitution

Rule 38(a) preserves the right of jury trial in those cases in which the right is protected by the Seventh Amendment to the Constitution. n1

[2] Recognizing Right to Trial by Jury Under Federal Statutes

Many actions created and recognized under federal law provide for the right of a jury trial. Rule 38(a) recognizes the right of jury trial in those cases that allow for a jury under federal statute. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsRight to Jury TrialConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsCriminal ProcessRight to Jury TrialConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(a).

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.03

§ 30.03 Distinguishing Between Actions at Law and Suits in Equity

[1] Actions Formerly Cognizable in Equity Do Not Require Jury Trial

Prior to the adoption of the Seventh Amendment, a jury trial was customary in suits brought in the English law courts. Under the Federal Rules, a jury trial is required in those suits that are analogous to such "suits at common law." In contrast, those actions that are analogous to 18th-century cases tried in courts of equity do not require a jury trial. n1

While an action seeking a monetary award will frequently be legal in nature, a monetary claim that is made in a context historically allowed in equity rather than at law (certain claims for restitution), will not be triable to a jury. n2

[2] Traditional Actions at Law May Be Tried by a Jury

The following traditional civil actions, when they are not complicated by equitable defenses, may be tried by a jury when timely demand is made:

- A damages action for trespass to property n3
- A damages action for assault, battery, or false imprisonment n4
- A damages action for negligence n5
- A damages action for conversion n6
- An action seeking recovery of contract damages (money due on a contract or recovery of damages for breach of contract) n7
- A damages action alleging fraud or deceit n8
- A damages action for slander, libel, or defamation n9
- A malicious prosecution action n10

- A damages action for nuisance n11
- An ejectment action--to recover possession of land n12
- An action to recover a debt n13

[3] Newly Created Rights That Would Be Enforceable at Common Law Are Triable to Jury

The Seventh Amendment is applicable to new causes of action created by congressional enactment if the statute creates legal rights and remedies enforceable in an action for damages in the ordinary courts of law. n14

[4] Traditional Equitable Actions Tried Without a Jury

Parties in an action seeking relief in equity do not have a right to a jury trial. Actions traditionally cognizable in equity include:

- Injunctive actions, including actions: to enjoin enforcement of, or compel compliance with, or enjoin violation of a statute or administrative order; to enjoin patent, copyright or trademark infringement; to enjoin repeated trespasses or injury to property; and to enjoin enforcement of a judgment n15
- An action to foreclose a lien n16
- An action to impose a constructive trust n17
- An action for rescission and cancellation n18
- An action seeking reformation n19
- An action for restitution n20
- An action for specific performance of a contract n21
- An action to declare or enforce a trust n22
- An action for an accounting of a trust or other equitable accounting n23
- A proceeding to enforce a settlement agreement n24
- A fraudulent conveyance claim n25
- An action to quiet title n26

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsActions in EquityConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Tull v. United States, 481 U.S. 412, 417, 107 S. Ct. 1831, 95 L. Ed. 2d 365 (1987) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Waldrop v. Southern Co. Servs., Inc., 24 F.3d 152, 157 (11th Cir. 1994) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See United States v. Williams, 441 F.2d 637, 643-644 (5th Cir. 1971) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Ross v. Bernhard, 396 U.S. 531, 533, 90 S. Ct. 733, 24 L. Ed. 2d 729 (1970) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Ross v. Bernhard, 396 U.S. 531, 533, 90 S. Ct. 733, 24 L. Ed. 2d 729 (1970) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See In re Beeline Eng'g & Constr., Inc., 139 B.R. 1025, 1027 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1992) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See Ross v. Bernhard, 396 U.S. 531, 542, 90 S. Ct. 733, 24 L. Ed. 2d 729 (1970) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See Skippy, Inc. v. CPC Int'l, Inc., 674 F.2d 209, 214 (4th Cir. 1982) .

(n9)Footnote 9. See Ross v. Bernhard, 396 U.S. 531, 533, 90 S. Ct. 733, 24 L. Ed. 2d 729 (1970) ; New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 285 n.26, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 (1964) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See Smoot v. Fox, 353 F.2d 830, 833 (6th Cir. 1965) , cert. denied, 384 U.S. 909 (1966) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See In re Acushnet River & New Bedford Harbor Proceedings, 712 F. Supp. 994, 1000-1004 (D. Mass. 1989) .

(n12)Footnote 12. See Pernell v. Southall Realty, 416 U.S. 363, 370, 94 S. Ct. 1723, 40 L. Ed. 2d 198 (1974) .

(n13)Footnote 13. United States v. Higginbotham, Inc., 722 F. Supp. 283, 284 (N.D. Miss. 1989) .

(n14)Footnote 14. Curtis v. Loether, 415 U.S. 189, 193, 94 S. Ct. 1005, 39 L. Ed. 2d 260 (1974) .

(n15)Footnote 15. See NAACP v. Acusport Corp., 226 F. Supp. 2d 391, 397 (E.D.N.Y. 2002) .

(n16)Footnote 16. See DeVore v. Fed. Sav. Bank, 822 F. Supp. 31, 35 (D. Me. 1993) .

(n17)Footnote 17. See Hauytin v. Grynberg, 52 B.R. 657, 658-661 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1985) .

(n18)Footnote 18. See Gorenflo v. Texaco, Inc., 735 F.2d 835, 838 (5th Cir. 1984) .

(n19)Footnote 19. See Enserch Corp. v. Shand Morahan & Co., 952 F.2d 1485, 1502 (5th Cir. 1992) .

(n20)Footnote 20. See Teamsters v. Terry, 494 U.S. 558, 570, 110 S. Ct. 1339, 108 L. Ed. 2d 519 (1990) .

(n21)Footnote 21. See Warner v. Rossignol, 513 F.2d 678, 683-684 (1st Cir. 1975) .

(n22)Footnote 22. See Swan Brewery Co. v. United States Trust Co., 143 F.R.D. 36, 41 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) , aff'd on reh'g, 145 F.R.D. 40, 44 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) .

(n23)Footnote 23. See Dardovitch v. Haltzman, 190 F.3d 125, 133-134 n.1 (3d Cir. 1999) .

(n24)Footnote 24. See Warner v. Rossignol, 513 F.2d 678, 683-684 (1st Cir. 1975) .

(n25)Footnote 25. See Hyde Properties v. McCoy, 507 F.2d 301, 305-306 (6th Cir. 1974) .

(n26)Footnote 26. See United States v. Williams, 441 F.2d 637, 644 (5th Cir. 1971) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

6 of 181 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.04

§ 30.04 Admiralty Claims Generally Tried Without a Jury

[1] No Constitutional Jury Trial Right in Admiralty Cases

There is no constitutional right of trial by jury in cases that are properly within the admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts. n1 This is so even when the action is of a type typically tried to a jury, such as an action for personal injury. Actions for personal injury brought in the federal admiralty jurisdiction under general maritime law have not entitled the injured plaintiff to a jury trial, unless the injured party establishes an independent jurisdictional basis for such a trial. n2

[2] Federal Rules Create No Jury Trial Right in Admiralty Cases

Rule 38(e) expressly states that the Rules are not to be construed to create a right to a jury trial of issues in an admiralty or maritime claim within the meaning of Rule 9(h). n3 Thus, when a claimant properly designates a claim as one in admiralty under Rule 9(h), or when the claim is only cognizable in admiralty, whether so identified or not, there is no constitutional jury trial right as to that claim. n4 A Rule 9(h) election by the plaintiff precludes a defendant from obtaining a jury trial on a closely intertwined counterclaim. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Admiralty LawPractice & ProcedureConstitutional AuthorityCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsActions in EquityConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Green v. Ross, 481 F.2d 102, 103 (5th Cir. 1973) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Green v. Ross, 481 F.2d 102, 103 (5th Cir. 1973) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(e).

(n4)Footnote 4. Durden v. Exxon Corp., 803 F.2d 845, 849-850 (5th Cir. 1986) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Windsor Mt. Joy Mut. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 264 F. Supp. 2d 158, 162 (D.N.J. 2003) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.05

§ 30.05 Evaluating Public Rights Exemption to Jury Trial

If a claim that is legal in nature asserts a "public right," then the Seventh Amendment does not entitle the parties to a jury trial if Congress assigns its adjudication to an administrative agency or specialized court of equity. n1 The Supreme Court has held that when Congress creates new statutory public rights, it may assign their adjudication to an administrative agency with which jury trials would be incompatible. n2 However, a statutory right must be closely intertwined with a federal regulatory program that Congress has power to enact, before a claim that is legal in nature may be deemed a public right. n3

The fact that a monetary award may be made by the administrative body does not render the case a suit at common law, or the equivalent of such a suit. Thus, an award of back pay made by the National Labor Relations Board, as authorized under the Act, was not a violation of the defendant employer's Seventh Amendment rights. n4 Similarly, the Occupational Safety and Health Act was found not to violate the Seventh Amendment by providing that a review commission may levy civil penalties against employers violating the Act. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsActions in EquityConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Granfinanciera, S.A. v. Nordberg, 492 U.S. 33, 50-54, 109 S. Ct. 2782, 106 L. Ed. 2d 26 (1989) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Atlas Roofing Co. v. OSHRC, 430 U.S. 442, 456-460, 97 S. Ct. 1261, 51 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1977) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Granfinanciera, S.A. v. Nordberg, 492 U.S. 33, 50-54, 109 S. Ct. 2782, 106 L. Ed. 2d 26 (1989) .

(n4)Footnote 4. NLRB v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U.S. 1, 48-49, 57 S. Ct. 615, 81 L. Ed. 893 (1937) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Atlas Roofing Co. v. OSHRC, 430 U.S. 442, 456-457, 97 S. Ct. 1261, 51 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1977) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.06

§ 30.06 Determining Right to Jury Trial Based On Nature of Action and Remedy Sought

To determine whether the Seventh Amendment entitles a particular litigant to a jury trial in a particular case, the court must determine whether that case will resolve legal rights or only equitable rights. This is particularly challenging when newly created causes of action do not fit neatly into traditional molds. The Supreme Court has designed a two-part test to determine the applicability of the Seventh Amendment to newly created statutory causes of action.

To determine whether a statutory action is more similar to cases that were tried in courts of law than to suits tried in courts of equity or admiralty, the following factors must be examined: n1

- The nature of the action, and
- The remedy sought

The first prong of the test--analysis of the nature of the action--has been described by the Supreme Court as being obviously difficult to apply, requiring an extensive and possibly "abstruse historical" search for the nearest 18th-century analog. n2 The Court has repeatedly stressed that the second factor--i.e., characterizing the relief sought--is the more important prong of the two-prong test. n3

The Supreme Court has determined that the Seventh Amendment guarantees the right to have a jury determine the amount of statutory damages in a copyright infringement action brought under the Copyright Act. n4 The Supreme Court has also held that the Seventh Amendment requires courts to grant requests for jury trials in patent infringement cases. However, the particular issue of determining the scope of the patent grant is a legal issue to be resolved by the court. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsActions in EquityCivil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Tull v. United States, 481 U.S. 412, 417-418, 107 S. Ct. 1831, 95 L. Ed. 2d 365 (1987) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Tull v. United States, 481 U.S. 412, 421, 107 S. Ct. 1831, 95 L. Ed. 2d 365 (1987) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Wooddell v. International Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 502 U.S. 93, 97, 112 S. Ct. 494, 116 L. Ed. 2d 419 (1991) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Feltner v. Columbia Pictures Television, Inc., 523 U.S. 340, 353-354, 118 S. Ct. 1279, 140 L. Ed. 2d 438 (1998) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Markman v. Westview Instruments, Inc., 517 U.S. 370, 372, 116 S. Ct. 1384, 134 L. Ed. 2d 577 (1996) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.07

§ 30.07 Evaluating Right to Jury Trial in Diversity Cases

The right to a jury trial in the federal courts is to be determined as a matter of federal law in diversity as well as other actions. In diversity cases, the substantive dimension of the claim asserted finds its source in state law, n1 but the characterization of that state-created claim as legal or equitable for purposes of determining whether a right to jury trial is indicated, must be made under federal law. n2 Thus, even when the source of the substantive claim is in state law, federal law will determine the right to jury trial. n3 Even if the state would grant a jury trial but the federal law would not, federal courts have held that federal law would apply, and a jury trial would be denied. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJurisdictionDiversity JurisdictionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsActions in EquityCivil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 78-80, 58 S. Ct. 817, 82 L. Ed. 1188 (1938) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Simler v. Conner, 372 U.S. 221, 222, 83 S. Ct. 609, 9 L. Ed. 2d 691 (1963) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Gallagher v. Wilton Enters., Inc., 962 F.2d 120, 122 (1st Cir. 1992) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Phillips v. Kaplus, 764 F.2d 807, 812 (11th Cir. 1985) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.08

§ 30.08 Deciding Whether to Demand a Jury Trial

[1] Evaluating Whether Facts of Case Have Jury or Bench Appeal

One of the profound decisions litigation counsel must make is whether to demand trial by jury. The outcome of the trial and the likelihood of success on appeal may be affected by the decision. The purpose of a trial is the resolution of disputed issues of fact, and experienced litigation counsel will have some judgment whether the facts in the case will have jury or bench appeal. From the plaintiff's perspective, the action should be shaped before the complaint is filed.

At the threshold, the right to trial by jury is limited by the Seventh Amendment to "Suits at common law," n1 by Rule 38 "as given by a statute of the United States," n2 and by the nature of the relief sought at law or in equity. Plaintiff's counsel must consider these issues before the commencement of the action.

The venue of the action is an important factor in deciding on a bench or jury trial. The demography of the location and of the resultant prospective jurors will have a significant effect on the outcome of the case, and must be considered. For example, there are areas of the country in which jurors may not be receptive to the facts of a particular case, but the judge in a bench trial may be more tolerant.

[2] Considering Case and Trial Management Methods of the Court

In most districts in the federal system, a case is assigned to a judge when it is filed. The reputation and known predispositions of the judge must be taken into account, in particular whether judge's history and reputation indicate that the judge would be receptive or antagonistic to cases involving the facts, theory, and relief sought.

The work habits of judicial officers must also be considered. If the case is tried to a jury, counsel should consider whether the judge will actively participate in pretrial preparations, set a realistic work schedule and adhere to it, not permit the trial to be interrupted by other matters, not invite or permit incessant sidebar conferences out of the hearing of the jury and not repeatedly send the jury out of the courtroom. Jurors resent delay and exclusion from the process. Following a bench trial, does the judge promptly prepare findings of fact and conclusions of law pursuant to Rule 52(a) or will the parties wait--sometimes for years--for a decision? Does the judge tend to adopt (with some revisions) findings and conclusions drafted by counsel?

[3] Considering the Duration and Complexity of Trial

The anticipated length and complexity of the trial will also be a factor in deciding whether to demand a jury trial. For example, in a complex and lengthy case, counsel may have to depend on either the jury's recollection or on a judge's recollection refreshed by note taking. In a bench trial, some judges take notes and stay on top of the evidence, while other judges tend to rely on a later-prepared transcript of the testimony in the preparation of findings and conclusions. Alternatively, it must be considered whether a potential group of jurors will be able to follow the technicalities or complexities of a given case.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsBench TrialsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsActions in EquityCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsCivil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. U.S. Const. amend. VII.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(a).

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.09

§ 30.09 Demanding a Jury Trial Under Rule 38

[1] Making a Proper Jury Demand in Writing

Rule 38(b) provides that any party may demand a jury trial of any issue triable of right by a jury. The demand must be in writing, and must be served on the other parties within 14 days after service of the last pleading addressing that issue. n1 The demanding party must also file the demand, with a certificate of service, within a reasonable time after service as required by Rule 5(d). n2 The demand may be endorsed on a pleading. n3

[2] Specifying the Scope of the Jury Demand

The issues in the action as to which the demand is made may be specified; otherwise the demand is deemed to apply to all issues triable by a jury. If a demand is made as to less than all issues triable by a jury, any other party has 14 days (or less if so ordered) to demand jury trial as to any or all other issues. n4

[3] Any Party May Make Demand

The demand may be made by any party to the action. This includes third-party defendants, n5 intervening parties, n6 and parties to interpleader actions. n7

[4] Failing to Serve and File Demand Results in Waiver

Failure to serve and file the demand as provided constitutes a waiver by the party of the right to trial by jury. A demand, once made, may not be withdrawn without consent of the parties. n8

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(b).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(c).

(n5)Footnote 5. State Mut. Life Assurance Co. v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 581 F.2d 1045, 1050 (2d Cir. 1978) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Campbell v. Plank, 133 F.R.D. 175, 176 (D. Kan. 1990) .

(n7)Footnote 7. In re Larsen, 172 B.R. 988, 991 (Bankr. D. Utah 1993) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(d).

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.10

§ 30.10 Timing of Demand

[1] Making Demand Immediately

Under Rule 38(b), the demand for jury trial may be made immediately on the commencement of the action. n1 For example, the plaintiff may indorse the demand on the original complaint.

[2] Demanding Jury Within 14 Days After Service of Last Pleading Directed to Issue

The jury demand must be made not later than 14 days after service of the last pleading directed to the issue as to which jury trial is demanded. n2 The 14-day period begins to run with service of the last pleading directed to the issue. Until the pleading is served, the 14 days does not begin to run. n3 The 14-day provision enables counsel to reflect on the various factors which should be considered in deciding whether to demand a jury.

Although an answer may be served months after service of a complaint, there is no waiver of the jury trial right if the demand is made within 14 days of service of the answer. n4

The "last pleading" within the meaning of the rules generally will be an answer or reply, and is determined on a case-by-case basis. n5 If there are multiple defendants, the fact that one defendant has served its answer does not begin the running of the 14-day period as against the plaintiff with regard to any issues that are also alleged against a second defendant, if the second defendant has not yet served its answer. A jury demand is timely if served within 14 days after the last defendant has served its answer. n6

The same general rule applies when defendants are jointly liable as to a claim containing an issue on which there is a right to a jury trial. That is, when defendants are jointly liable on a cause of action that contains any issue triable by jury, a jury demand as to that issue is timely if served within 14 days after service of the last defendant's answer. n7

[3] Defining Pleadings for Purposes of Rule 38

The plain text of Rule 7(a) defines what constitutes "pleadings" for purposes of Rule 38. n8 Thus, "special reports" filed by a defendant in response to a claim, pursuant to a court order, are not "pleadings" under Rule 38 and do not begin the running of the 14-day period. n9

Similarly, neither a motion to dismiss n10 nor a motion for summary judgment n11 constitutes a pleading within the meaning of Rule 38, which would cause the 14-day limit to commence to run. It also has been held that a memorandum in opposition to a summary judgment motion is not a pleading for these purposes, n12 nor is a notice giving names and addresses of prior users in a patent suit. n13

[4] Answer to Intervenor Complaint Treated as Last Pleading

In a case in which intervention is authorized, the answer to the intervenor complaint, rather than the answer to the original complaint, is considered the last pleading directed to the triable issues under Rule 38(b). Demand made within 14 days of service of such answer entitles the party to a jury trial, even though the right may previously have been waived with respect to the original complaint. n14

[5] Adding Three Days When Service Is by Mail

If service of a pleading is by mail, Rule 6(e) provides that "3 days shall be added to the prescribed period." The additional three days runs in favor of the party being served by mail. n15

[6] Fourteen-Day Period May or May Not Be Deemed Mandatory

The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has held that waiver may occur only by express action or by passage of the 14-day period. The court held that, in a case in which jury trial would be available of right, absent express waiver, the trial court's advancement of the trial to a date prior to expiration of the 14-day period without addressing the jury question was an improper denial of the parties' right to jury trial. n16

By contrast, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has permitted such advancement, holding that when plaintiff's attorneys were advised of the early trial date and did not request a jury trial, this amounted to a waiver. n17

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. King v. Patterson, 999 F.2d 351, 353 (8th Cir. 1993) .

(n3)Footnote 3. McCarthy v. Bronson, 906 F.2d 835, 840 (2d Cir. 1990) , aff'd, 500 U.S. 136 (1991) .

(n4)Footnote 4. In re Texas Gen. Petroleum Corp., 52 F.3d 1330, 1339 (5th Cir. 1995) .

(n5)Footnote 5. In re Kaiser Steel Corp., 911 F.2d 380, 388 (10th Cir. 1990) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Bentler v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n, 959 F.2d 138, 141 (9th Cir. 1992) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Frost v. Agnos, 152 F.3d 1124, 1131 (9th Cir. 1998) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 7(a).

(n9)Footnote 9. Burns v. Lawther, 53 F.3d 1237, 1241 (11th Cir. 1995) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Burns v. Lawther, 53 F.3d 1237, 1241 (11th Cir. 1995) .

(n11)Footnote 11. In re Zweibon, 565 F.2d 742, 747 (D.C. Cir. 1977) .

(n12)Footnote 12. Molinaro v. Watkins--Johnson CEI Div., 359 F. Supp. 467, 474, 178 U.S.P.Q. 211 (D. Md. 1973) .

(n13)Footnote 13. General Tire & Rubber Co. v. Watkins, 331 F.2d 192, 195-196 (4th Cir. 1964) .

(n14)Footnote 14. United States v. California Mobile Home Park Mgmt. Co., 107 F.3d 1374, 1378-1379 (9th Cir. 1997) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Priest v. Rhodes, 56 F.R.D. 478, 479 (N.D. Miss. 1972) .

(n16)Footnote 16. Bowles v. Bennett, 629 F.2d 1092, 1095 (5th Cir. 1980) .

(n17)Footnote 17. Bills v. Hodges, 628 F.2d 844, 846 (4th Cir. 1980) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.11

§ 30.11 Evaluating Form and Sufficiency of Demand

[1] Making Demand in Writing

Rule 38(b) requires that the demand for jury trial be in writing. An oral demand is ineffective. n1

[2] Rule 38 Takes Precedence Over Local Rules as to Adequacy of Demand

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure take precedence over local rules with regard to the adequacy of a demand for jury trial. Failure to list the demand in the caption of a pleading, as required by a local procedural rule, will not invalidate a demand that meets the requirements of Rule 38. n2

Some local rules specifically acknowledge that a failure to make the demand in the form required by local rule is not, by itself, a waiver of the right to a jury trial. n3 Although the federal rule is controlling, at least 28 district courts still have local rules that require the demand to be in a certain form. n4

Similarly, it has been held that although the federal bankruptcy rules do not specifically incorporate the provision of Rule 38 requiring jury demand within 10 days of the last pleading, the courts should borrow the provisions of the Rule to determine when a valid jury demand has been made in a bankruptcy case. n5

[3] Demanding Jury by Endorsement on Pleading

Rule 38(b) provides that the jury trial demand may be endorsed on a pleading. The simple notation "Jury Demanded" placed beneath the docket number on a complaint has been deemed sufficient to place the opposing party on notice that a jury trial has been requested. n6 In one case, the plaintiff's statements in the prayer of the complaint asking for back pay "as may be found by a jury" and for pain and suffering "in such amount as may be awarded by a jury" were sufficient to demand a jury trial as to damages. n7

Similarly, a demand made on the last page of defendant's answer, although not in the preferred style on the outside of the pleading, was deemed to be in compliance with the requirements of Rule 38(b). n8

[4] Demanding Jury by Endorsement in Pretrial Order

The right to jury trial may properly be invoked by the endorsement of a demand in a pretrial order. n9

[5] Checking Box on Civil Cover Sheet Generally Insufficient, But May Suffice if Served on Other Parties

Checking the "Yes" box on the civil cover sheet next to "Jury Demand" generally is held not to constitute a valid demand for jury trial. n10 Typically the cover sheet will not accompany pleadings served on litigants and therefore would not give opposing parties notice of the jury trial request. n11

This rule has been applied to pro se litigants as well. n12 However, if the cover sheet containing the jury trial notation is served with the summons and complaint, it may be deemed sufficient. n13

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Bankruptcy LawPractice & ProceedingsJury TrialsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Early v. Bankers Life & Cas. Co., 853 F. Supp. 268, 270 (N.D. Ill. 1994) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Partee v. Buch, 28 F.3d 636, 638 (7th Cir. 1994) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., S.D. Ind. LR 38.1; D. Neb. LR 38.1; D. Minn. LR 38.1 (practitioner is advised to consult most recent version of local rules since local rules may change frequently).

(n4)Footnote 4. See, e.g., M.D. Ala. LR 38.1.

(n5)Footnote 5. In re Andrews, 189 B.R. 380, 381 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1995) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Hupp v. Siroflex of Am., Inc., 159 F.R.D. 29, 30 (S.D. Tex. 1994) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Lutz v. Glendale Union High Sch., 403 F.3d 1061, 1065 (9th Cir. 2005) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Gargiulo v. Delsole, 769 F.2d 77, 78-79 (2d Cir. 1985) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Heri v. Fritz Cos., 841 F. Supp. 1188, 1193 (N.D. Ga. 1993) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See DeWitt v. Hutchins, 309 F. Supp. 2d 743, 754 (M.D.N.C. 2004) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Moores v. Greenberg, 834 F.2d 1105, 1108 (1st Cir. 1987) .

(n12)Footnote 12. See Favors v. Coughlin, 877 F.2d 219, 220 (2d Cir. 1989) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Winant v. Carefree Pools, 118 F.R.D. 28, 29 (E.D.N.Y. 1988) , aff'd without opinion, 891 F.2d 278 (2d Cir. 1989) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.12

§ 30.12 Serving and Filing Jury Demand

[1] Serving Demand

Failure to serve the other parties with a jury trial demand waives the right to jury trial. n1

[2] Filing Demand

The party demanding a jury trial must file the demand in court with proof of service. n2 Failure to properly file may constitute a waiver. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Omawale v. WBZ, 610 F.2d 20, 21-22 (1st Cir. 1979) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(b); Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d).

(n3)Footnote 3. Early v. Bankers Life & Cas. Co., 853 F. Supp. 268, 271 (N.D. Ill. 1994) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.13

§ 30.13 Demanding Jury Trial in Removed Actions

[1] Making Timely Demand in Federal Court When Demand Has Not Been Made in State Court

Rule 81(c) requires that when an action is removed from state to federal court, and a jury trial demand has not already been made in state court (if required in state court), a demand for jury trial must be made within 14 days after filing the removal petition, if the party making the demand is the petitioner. n1 If the party making the demand is not the petitioner, the demand must be made within 14 days after service of notice of the removal petition. n2

In at least one district court, a removed action will be placed on the jury list if the removing party includes the word "jury" at the top of the notice of removal, "immediately below the case number," whether or not a jury was requested in state court. n3

If no demand is required in state court, the requirement also is excused in federal court, n4 unless the judge orders otherwise. n5 Failure to make a demand when one is required constitutes a waiver of the jury trial right. n6

[2] Relying on Proper Demand Made Under State Law

If a demand is duly made in state court, it will be honored in federal court, even if it would not have satisfied the federal timing requirements if the action had originally been brought in federal court. n7

Once a demand has been made under state law, other parties may rely on the demand, and need not make their own demand on removal. n8

It has been held that if the necessary pleadings have not yet been filed as of the date of removal of an action to federal court, the time in which to demand a jury is governed by Rule 38, rather than Rule 81(c). n9

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemovalProceedingsNoticesCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsRight to Jury Trial

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 81(c)(3)(B).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 81(c)(3)(B).

(n3)Footnote 3. See E.D. Tex. CV-81 (practitioner is advised to consult most recent version of local rules, since local rules may change frequently).

(n4)Footnote 4. Clements v. Continental Cas. Ins. Co., 730 F. Supp. 1120, 1122 (N.D. Ga. 1989) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 81(c).

(n6)Footnote 6. Mills v. Degesch Am., Inc., 835 F. Supp. 923, 924 (E.D. Tex. 1993) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Aligheri v. Long Island R.R., 156 F.R.D. 55, 57 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Marcella v. Brandywine Hosp., 47 F.3d 618, 625 (3d Cir. 1995) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Vidal v. American Airlines, Inc., 636 F. Supp. 771, 772 (D.P.R. 1986) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.14

§ 30.14 Making Demand Based on Amended or Supplemental Pleadings

[1] Raising New Issues In Amended Pleading

When an amended pleading raises new issues, by asserting new facts, a jury trial may be demanded with regard to those new issues, even if the right had been waived with regard to issues raised in the original pleading. n1

[2] Adding or Changing Parties Will Revive the Right if Issues Are Affected

Amendment of a pleading by the addition of new parties may or may not revive the right to jury trial, depending on the circumstances. When the addition of parties alters the claims or nature of relief sought, the right to demand a jury trial should revive. n2 If the right to a jury trial is revived, the practitioner should consult the local rules to assure compliance with any new time limits. On the other hand, when the addition does not alter the claims or add new issues to the case, the right should not be revived. n3

[3] Alleging New Issues Does Not Relieve Waiver as to Original Issues

Assertion of the right to jury trial with regard to new issues raised in an amended pleading does not affect the waiver with respect to the issues raised in the original pleading. n4

[4] Asserting New Theories Provides No New Opportunity to Demand Jury Trial

An amended complaint which merely asserts new theories of recovery, but is based on the same facts as the original complaint, does not reestablish the party's right to demand a jury trial when the right had been waived as to the original complaint. n5 Only new issues asserted in the amended pleading will generate a new right to make the demand. n6

The term "issue" means something more than the evidence offered and the legal theories pursued. One must ask whether the ultimate issue for decision is different. n7 New facts that merely clarify the same general issues raised in the original complaint do not create new issues of fact on which to assert a jury demand, n8 and the mere submission of more detailed statements of previously submitted claims does not confer anew the right to jury trial. n9 Amendments to pleadings thus may contain new facts which do not create new issues triable by a jury.

[5] Demanding Different Relief Insufficient to Relieve Party of Waiver

A pleading which does not raise new issues or change the character of the original pleading, but merely seeks additional relief is insufficient to revive the right to demand a jury trial. n10

[6] Applying 14-Day Rule to Issues Raised in Amended Pleading

Demand for a jury trial with regard to issues raised in an amended pleading must be made within 14 days of service of the last pleading directed at those issues. n11

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticePleadingsSupplemental PleadingsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. LaMarca v. Turner, 995 F.2d 1526, 1545 (11th Cir. 1993) .

(n2)Footnote 2. LaMarca v. Turner, 995 F.2d 1526, 1545-1546 (11th Cir. 1993) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Jones v. Boyd, 161 F.R.D. 48, 49 (E.D. Va. 1995) .

(n4)Footnote 4. In re Kaiser Steel Corp., 911 F.2d 380, 388 (10th Cir. 1990) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Westchester Day Sch. v. Mamaroneck, 363 F. Supp. 2d 667, 670 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Swan Brewery Co. v. United States Trust Co., 143 F.R.D. 36, 39 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) , aff'd on reh'g, 145 F.R.D. 40, 44 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Rosen v. Dick, 639 F.2d 82, 94 (2d Cir. 1980) .

(n8)Footnote 8. LaMarca v. Turner, 995 F.2d 1526, 1545 (11th Cir. 1993) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Clement v. American Greetings Corp., 636 F. Supp. 1326, 1334 (S.D. Cal. 1986) .

(n10)Footnote 10. American Home Prods. Corp. v. Johnson & Johnson, 111 F.R.D. 448, 453 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) .

(n11)Footnote 11. United States v. Jones, 158 F.R.D. 309, 312 (D.N.J. 1994) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.15

§ 30.15 Making Demand Based on Counterclaim

[1] Demanding Jury Based on New Issues Raised in Counterclaim

If a jury trial has already been demanded with respect to issues raised in the complaint, that demand will be effective as to those claims raised as counterclaims that are directed at the same issues. n1 As to issues raised for the first time in a counterclaim, a new demand may need to be made. It has been held that the failure to demand a jury trial on new issues raised in the counterclaim waives the right as to those issues, even if a general demand was made with regard to the issues in the complaint. n2 Elsewhere, it has been held that a general demand made with respect to the issues in the complaint will cover all issues raised in the counterclaim, even if they are unrelated. n3

In one case, a plaintiff who failed to demand a jury trial on the complaint, but who requested a jury trial as to a counterclaim, was not entitled to a jury trial on the complaint after the defendants dismissed their counterclaim. The court held that the request for a jury trial as to the counterclaim had not revived the right to a jury trial on the complaint because the issues in the complaint and the counterclaim were not so "interwoven" as to implicitly preserve the right to a jury trial as to the complaint. n4

However, a plaintiff who fails to demand a jury trial on the complaint, but who requests a jury trial as to a counterclaim, may not be entitled to a jury trial on the complaint if the defendant dismisses the counterclaim and the issues in the complaint and the counterclaim are not so "interwoven" as to implicitly preserve the right to a jury trial as to the complaint. n5 If a defendant demands a jury trial on counterclaims that turn on the same matrix of facts as the claims in the complaint, the plaintiff may rely on the defendant's jury demand and is not required to make its own jury demand on the issues raised in the complaint. n6

[2] Making Jury Demand Within 14 Days of Reply to Counterclaim

If a counterclaim raises the same issues as those raised in the answer, a jury demand within 14 days of the reply to the counterclaim will be effective for all issues raised by the answer and counterclaim; however, if the issues raised in the counterclaim are new issues, not those raised in the answer, demand within 14 days of the reply will only be effective as to those new issues, and not as to issues addressed in the complaint and the answer. n7

[3] Making Jury Demand on Compulsory Counterclaim

Rule 13(a) provides for compulsory counterclaims. The Rule generally requires that a pleading state, as a counterclaim, any claim which at the time of serving the pleading the pleader has against any opposing party, if it arises out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim, and does not require the presence of inaccessible third parties.

The test for determining whether a request for a jury on a counterclaim entitles a party to a jury trial on the complaint is whether the counterclaim is compulsory, that is, whether it arises out of the subject matter of the plaintiff's legal claim. Since a compulsory counterclaim, by definition, relates to the issues raised in the complaint, the demand brings those issues before the jury. n8 By contrast, a counterclaim which is not compulsory but permissive, under Rule 13(b), brings new issues before the court. A jury trial demand on such a counterclaim would therefore not relieve a party of its waiver regarding the issues raised in the complaint.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticePleadingsCounterclaimsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Marvel Entertainment Group, Inc. v. Arp Films, Inc., 116 F.R.D. 86, 89-90 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Mount Everest Ski Shops, Inc. v. Ski Barn, Inc., 736 F. Supp. 531, 532-533 (D. Vt. 1989) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Horwitz v. Alloy Automotive Co., 677 F. Supp. 564, 566 (N.D. Ill. 1988) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Bogosian v. Woloohojian Realty Corp., 323 F.3d 55, 62-63 (1st Cir. 2003) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Bogosian v. Woloohojian Realty Corp., 323 F.3d 55, 62-63 (1st Cir. 2003) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See California Scents v. Surco Prods., 406 F.3d 1102, 1108 (9th Cir. 2005) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Whirlpool Fin. Corp. v. Sevaux, 866 F. Supp. 1102, 1105 (N.D. Ill. 1994) .

(n8)Footnote 8. California Scents v. Surco Prods., 406 F.3d 1102, 1108 (9th Cir. 2005) ; Park Club, Inc. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 967 F.2d 1053, 1057 (5th Cir. 1992) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.16

§ 30.16 Withdrawing Jury Demand

[1] Seeking Consent for Withdrawal

A demand for jury trial made under the provisions of Rule 38 may not be withdrawn without the consent of the parties. n1 Thus, if a demand is made by a party who later seeks to withdraw it, the adverse party has the opportunity to reflect again on the factors to be considered in making a decision to demand a jury and either consent or object to the withdrawal. Absent written stipulation filed with the court or oral stipulation entered on the record, there can be no withdrawal. n2

[2] Electing Admiralty to Accomplish Withdrawal

Although withdrawal of a jury demand without the consent of all parties affected by the demand is impermissible, at least one Court of Appeals has held that it may nevertheless be accomplished indirectly by the election of a party in a maritime suit, after a jury demand has been made, to pursue a non-jury remedy only under the admiralty jurisdiction of the court. n3

[3] Withdrawing Demand Without Consent of Party Who Objected to Jury Trial Demand

A party that opposed a jury trial demand cannot be said to have relied on that demand, and it has been held that the consent of such a party is not needed for the demand to be validly withdrawn. n4 However, it has been held that this exception ceases to apply once trial has begun. A party may not sit back and allow the jury trial to proceed and then unilaterally withdraw its jury demand, simply because the other party initially opposed the demand. n5

[4] Withdrawing Demand Without Consent of Party Unaffected by Jury Trial Demand

Although Rule 38(d) gives each party an effective veto over the withdrawal of a jury demand, consent is only required to the extent that a particular party would have been entitled to rely on the demand, that is, to the extent the demand covered that party's jury issues. If a party is unaffected by a demand as to certain issues or has already waived its jury trial right as to those issues, its consent to withdrawal is not required. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(d).

(n2)Footnote 2. Banff, Ltd. v. Colberts, Inc., 996 F.2d 33, 36 (2d Cir. 1993) , cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1010 (1993) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Emerson G.M. Diesel, Inc. v. Alaskan Enter., 732 F.2d 1468, 1471 (9th Cir. 1984) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Reid Bros. Logging Co. v. Ketchikan Pulp Co., 699 F.2d 1292, 1304 (9th Cir. 1983) , cert. denied, 464 U.S. 916 (1983) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Fuller v. City of Oakland, 47 F.3d 1522, 1531-1532 (9th Cir. 1995) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Rosen v. Dick, 639 F.2d 82, 92 (2d Cir. 1980) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.17

§ 30.17 Specifying Issues in Jury Demand

[1] Evaluating the Effect of Specification Under Rule 38(c)

In the demand, a party may specify those issues it wishes to have tried by a jury. Issue specification is a desirable practice to follow in cases where there are both legal and equitable issues. Absent specification, the party will be deemed to have demanded jury trial on all issues triable by a jury.

If a party specifies only some issues in the demand, any other party may demand trial by jury of any other or all jury-triable issues in the action. This is done by serving a demand within 14 days after service of the original demand on it, or within such lesser time as the court may order. n1

Although the party making the demand may specify issues to be tried to a jury, a general demand to try all of the issues so triable is advised. The sorting out of the issues may occur later pursuant to Rule 39.

[2] Relying on Another Party's Limited Demand

If issues are specified in a demand, other parties may rely on the demand as to those specified issues, and need not make their own demands for jury trial of those issues. n2 However, a party desiring jury trial of an issue not specified must make its own demand with regard to it. n3

[3] Failing to Specify Constitutes Demand as to All Issues Triable by Jury

When a general demand for jury trial is made without specifying particular issues, the demand is deemed to be a demand for jury trial of all issues in the case that are triable by a jury. n4 A jury demand that does not specify particular issues covers all issues raised in subsequent pleadings affecting the party making the demand. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(c).

(n2)Footnote 2. In re N-500L Cases, 691 F.2d 15, 22 (1st Cir. 1982) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Rosen v. Dick, 639 F.2d 82, 91-92 (2d Cir. 1980) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(c).

(n5)Footnote 5. YJR Enters., Inc. v. Twin County Grocers, Inc., 709 F. Supp. 499, 501 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

20 of 181 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.18

§ 30.18 Filing Jury Demand Triggers Court Response Under Rule 39

When a timely demand for a jury trial has been made under Rule 38, all issues within the demand will be tried to a jury, unless the parties stipulate otherwise, or unless the court, on motion or sua sponte, finds that there is no jury trial right as to some or all of the issues within the demand. n1 But if there is no objection--by a party, or by the court on its own initiative--the jury trial will proceed. n2

Rule 39(b) provides that issues not demanded for trial by jury shall be tried by the court. n3 However, the court in its discretion may, on motion, order a jury trial if the party would have been entitled to demand a jury as of right, but failed to do so. Under Rule 39(c), a jury trial may be ordered on consent of all the parties, even though it is not available as of right. As an alternative, on motion, or on its own initiative, the court may try any issue with an advisory jury. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 39(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 39(a).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 39(b).

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 39(c).

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.19

§ 30.19 Waiving Right of Jury Trial

[1] Presumption Against Waiver

The right to a trial by jury is a fundamental right, and the courts will indulge every reasonable presumption against waiver of that right. n1

[2] Waiving Right Expressly or Implicitly

Regardless of the presumption, the right to jury trial may be waived as follows: n2

- By agreement or stipulation
- By conduct
- By failure to timely assert the right

The courts have held that the waiver need not be express, but may be implied, n3 as where a contract provision calls for dispute resolution in a nonjury forum. n4 For example, an arbitration agreement constitutes a waiver of jury trial.

[3] Determining if Action Constitutes Waiver

The courts have noted that the test to determine whether a party has waived its right to trial by jury is less stringent than the intentional relinquishment or abandonment of known right or privilege test n5 applicable to other constitutional rights, in that the right may be relinquished by a mere failure to act. n6

[4] Proving Waiver

Although there is no dispute that the right to a jury trial may be waived, the case law is not clear as to who bears the burden of proving waiver. It has been held that the party seeking to enforce the waiver has the burden. n7 However, it has elsewhere been held that the burden is on the party seeking to avoid the waiver. n8 Other courts have expressly avoided the issue. n9

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil ActionsEvidenceInferences & PresumptionsPresumptionsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Kennedy, 301 U.S. 389, 393, 57 S. Ct. 809, 811-812, 81 L. Ed. 1177 (1937) .

(n2)Footnote 2. United States v. Moore, 340 U.S. 616, 621, 71 S. Ct. 524, 95 L. Ed. 582 (1951) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Commodity Futures Trading Com. v. Schor, 478 U.S. 833, 848, 106 S. Ct. 3245, 92 L. Ed. 2d 675 (1986) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Northwest Airlines, Inc. v. Air Line Pilots Ass'n, Int'l, 373 F.2d 136, 142 (8th Cir. 1967) , cert. denied, 389 U.S. 827 (1967) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Barber v. Page, 390 U.S. 719, 725, 88 S. Ct. 1318, 20 L. Ed. 2d 255 (1968) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Early v. Bankers Life & Cas. Co., 853 F. Supp. 268, 271 (N.D. Ill. 1994) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Cooperative Fin. Ass'n, Inc. v. Garst, 871 F. Supp. 1168, 1172 n.2 (N.D. Iowa 1995) .

(n8)Footnote 8. K.M.C. Co. v. Irving Trust Co., 757 F.2d 752, 755-758 (6th Cir. 1985) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Whirlpool Fin. Corp. v. Sevaux, 866 F. Supp. 1102, 1105 (N.D. Ill. 1994) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.20

§ 30.20 Applying Waiver Rule to Pro Se Litigants

In the interest of fairness and judicial economy, the waiver rule has frequently been applied to pro se litigants in the same manner that it is applied to litigants who are represented by counsel. n1 However, in several cases, courts have held that the sanction is overly harsh, and have found no waiver. n2

An implied waiver of the right to a jury trial by a pro se party is likely to be more closely scrutinized by an appellate court than an implied waiver by a represented party. For example, a party's participation in a bench trial usually is considered to be a waiver of the right to a jury trial.

However, the Fifth Circuit has held that when a trial court disregards an unrepresented party's demand for a jury trial and conducts a bench trial instead, the unrepresented party's mere participation in the bench trial without objection does not constitute an unquestionable knowing and voluntary waiver of the right to a jury trial. Further, the pro se prisoner who participated in the bench trial did not waive the right to jury trial by signing a "Consent to Jurisdiction by a United States Magistrate Judge," which included a waiver of the right to a jury trial, because the language of the form did not unquestionably demonstrate a knowing and voluntary relinquishment. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsBench TrialsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Lawson v. Kolender, 658 F.2d 1362, 1372 (9th Cir. 1981) , aff'd, 461 U.S. 352 (1983) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Lawson v. Kolender, 658 F.2d 1362, 1372 (9th Cir. 1981) , aff'd, 461 U.S. 352 (1983) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Jennings v. McCormick, 154 F.3d 542, 545 (5th Cir. 1998) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.21

§ 30.21 Failing to Timely Serve and File Demand

[1] Failure Generally Constitutes Waiver

Rule 38(d) provides that the failure to serve and file a demand as required by Rule 38 constitutes a waiver of the right to jury trial. n1 Some judges look with disfavor on motions to file a tardy demand.

[2] Waiver May Not Be Circumvented by Voluntary Dismissal

A plaintiff may not overcome the waiver by voluntarily dismissing the action without prejudice and then refiling and making the demand. n2

[3] Considering Effect of Demands Filed by Other Parties

Once one party files a demand, other parties are entitled to rely on that demand for the issues it covers, and need not file their own demands. n3 The demand may be made by any other party, as long as it is directed to the issue in question. Thus, a defendant may rely on a demand by a cross-claim defendant, or by another defendant who later obtains a dismissal of the claim against it. n4

Whether reliance on another party's jury demand is effective depends on whether issues have been raised beyond those encompassed in the demand. If so, there may be no reliance as to those additional issues. n5 Thus, a third-party plaintiff whose claim raises new issues not addressed in the original complaint may not rely on the demand of the plaintiff with regard to the third-party claim. n6 Similarly, a plaintiff may not rely on the jury demands of some defendants to preserve its jury trial right with respect to its claims against another defendant if that claim deals with factual issues not implicated in the claims against the other defendants. n7

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Jolivet v. Deland, 966 F.2d 573, 577 (10th Cir. 1992) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Noonan v. Cunard S.S. Co., 375 F.2d 69, 71-72 (2d Cir. 1967) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fuller v. City of Oakland, 47 F.3d 1522, 1531 (9th Cir. 1995) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Mid Kan. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Orpheum Theater Co., 810 F. Supp. 1184, 1190 (D. Kan. 1992) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Davidson Pipe Co. v. Laventhol & Horwath, 125 F.R.D. 363, 367 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Espinosa v. Van Dorn Plastic Mach. Co., 813 F. Supp. 252, 253-254 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Indeca v. Continental Ill. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 675 F. Supp. 1515, 1517-1518 (N.D. Ill. 1987) , aff'd, 858 F.2d 1264 (7th Cir. 1988) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.22

§ 30.22 Waiving Jury Right by Contract

[1] Voluntarily Waiving Right by Agreement

The parties to a contract may, by prior written agreement, entered into knowingly and voluntarily, waive the right to a jury trial. n1 Such agreements are neither illegal, nor contrary to public policy. n2

[2] Construing Waiver Provisions Strictly

Although contractual waiver of the right to jury trial is not illegal, the jury trial right is a fundamental one, and there is a presumption against its waiver. n3 Therefore, contract provisions waiving the right will be strictly and narrowly construed, n4 and the requirement of knowing, voluntary, intentional waiver strictly applied. n5 Jury trial waivers are common in loan agreements and loan guarantees, and these are regularly enforced. n6

[3] Determining If Waiver Is Voluntary

Factors to be considered in determining whether a contractual waiver of a jury trial right was entered into knowingly and voluntarily include: n7

- Negotiability of contract terms and negotiations between the parties concerning the waiver provision
- Conspicuousness of the provision in the contract
- The relative bargaining power of the parties
- Business acumen of the party opposing waiver
- Whether counsel for the party opposing waiver had an opportunity to review the agreement

Thus, a party seeking to enforce a contractual waiver of the right to jury trial may prepare to meet that burden by carefully drafting the provision waiving the right, presenting the provision conspicuously in the contract, and preparing a record to show that the provision was explained and reviewed, for example by requiring that the provision be initialed. n8

When the criteria outlined above have been met, the waiver has been deemed enforceable. n9 But courts have refused to enforce waivers that have failed to meet these criteria. n10

[4] Consenting to Dispute Resolution in Non-Jury Forum

The acceptance of a contract clause providing for dispute resolution in a forum in which there is no entitlement to jury trial may satisfy the "voluntary and knowing" standard for waiver of the jury trial right. n11

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Brown v. Cushman & Wakefield, Inc., 235 F. Supp. 2d 291, 294 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Phoenix Leasing Inc. v. Sure Broad., Inc., 843 F. Supp. 1379, 1384 (D. Nev. 1994) , aff'd without opinion, 89 F.3d 846 (9th Cir. 1996) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Wauhop v. Allied Humble Bank, 926 F.2d 454, 455 (5th Cir. 1991) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Hulsey v. West, 966 F.2d 579, 581-582 (10th Cir. 1992) .

(n5)Footnote 5. In re Reggie Packing Co., 671 F. Supp. 571, 573 (N.D. Ill. 1987) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Okura & Co. v. Careau Group, 783 F. Supp. 482, 489 (C.D. Cal. 1991) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Allyn v. Western United Life Assur. Co., 347 F. Supp. 2d 1246, 1252 (M.D. Fla. 2004) ; Westside-Marrero Jeep Eagle, Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., 56 F. Supp. 2d 694, 707 (E.D. La. 1999) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Cooperative Fin. Ass'n, Inc. v. Garst, 871 F. Supp. 1168, 1172, n.2 (N.D. Iowa 1995) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Telum, Inc. v. E.F. Hutton Credit Corp., 859 F.2d 835, 837 (10th Cir. 1988) , cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1021 (1989) .

(n10)Footnote 10. National Equip. Rental Ltd. v. Hendrix, 565 F.2d 255, 258 (2d Cir. 1977) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Seaboard Lumber Co. v. United States, 903 F.2d 1560, 1563 (Fed. Cir. 1990) , cert. denied, 499 U.S. 919 (1991) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.23

§ 30.23 Waiving Jury Right by Conduct

[1] Participating in Bench Trial

Knowing participation in a bench trial without objection constitutes a waiver of the right to jury trial despite a previous timely jury demand. Particularly when a party's participation in a bench trial is vigorous, and there is no mention of a jury, it has been held that the omission may not be presumed the result of mere inadvertence, but may only be ascribed to knowledgeable relinquishment of the prior jury demand. n1

[2] Failing to Object to Pre-Trial Order Providing for Bench Trial

It has been held that a litigant may waive its right to jury trial, even after making a timely demand, by failing to object to a district court's pretrial order providing for a bench trial. n2 However, the failure to object to a withdrawal of a jury trial demand, or to an informal direction that the trial is to be held without a jury will not constitute a waiver if circumstances are such that the intent to waive jury trial is not clear. n3

[3] Discharging Jury

Counsel's acquiescence in discharge of the jury will constitute a waiver of the jury trial right. Thus, in one case, a statement by counsel for plaintiff that he was done with the jury and an expression of agreement that the jury may be discharged, combined with counsel's knowledge that the jury was being discharged and a continued colloquy with the court thereafter, and failure to protest until an hour and a half later, was deemed to evince consent sufficient to constitute a waiver. n4

[4] Failing to Submit Issue to Jury

If in submitting the case to the jury the court omits any issue of fact raised by the pleadings or by the evidence, each party waives the right to a trial by jury of the issue so omitted unless before the jury retires the party demands its submission to the jury. As to an issue omitted without such demand, the court may make a finding; or, if it fails to do so, it shall be deemed to have made a finding in accord with the judgment on the special verdict. n5

Thus, when a special verdict is sought, a party waives its right to have a jury trial of any issue if it neglects to request that the issue be submitted to the jury, n6 or fails to object when the issue is not presented. n7 This rule has been applied to the failure to submit an issue in interrogatories presented to the jury, n8 to the failure to object when interrogatories are submitted that do not contain the particular issue, n9 and when a particular claim is omitted from a general submission made to the jury. n10

[5] Waiving Right by Express Consent of Party or Counsel

Waiver of jury trial may be effectuated by a party's or their counsel's express consent to trial by the bench. n11 It has been held that a jury trial waiver may not be conditioned on a bench trial by a particular judge. n12

[6] Filing Claim Against Debtor in Bankruptcy Constitutes Waiver

It has generally been held that by filing a claim in bankruptcy against a debtor, a creditor waives trial by jury of that claim. Determination of the claim is part and parcel of the process of allowance and disallowance of claims integral to restructuring of the debtor-creditor relationship, which is a public right, triable without a jury by the bankruptcy court. n13

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsBench TrialsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Cooper v. Loper, 923 F.2d 1045, 1049 (3d Cir. 1991) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fields Eng'g & Equip., Inc. v. Cargill, Inc., 651 F.2d 589, 592 (8th Cir. 1981) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Hupp v. Siroflex of Am., Inc., 159 F.R.D. 29, 30-31 (S.D. Tex. 1994) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Pope v. Savings Bank of Puget Sound, 850 F.2d 1345, 1355 (9th Cir. 1988) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Civ. P. 49(a).

(n6)Footnote 6. Rose Confections, Inc. v. Ambrosia Chocolate Co., 816 F.2d 381, 389 (8th Cir. 1987) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Kavanaugh v. Greenlee Tool Co., 944 F.2d 7, 11-12 (1st Cir. 1991) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Anderson v. Cryovac, Inc., 862 F.2d 910, 915-918 (1st Cir. 1988) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Eastern Mountain Platform Tennis v. Sherwin-Williams Co., 40 F.3d 492, 501 (1st Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1103 (1995) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Preferred RX, Inc. v. American Prescription Plan, Inc., 46 F.3d 535, 548 (6th Cir. 1995) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Fuller v. City of Oakland, 47 F.3d 1522, 1530 (9th Cir. 1995) .

(n12)Footnote 12. Kahn v. GMC, 865 F. Supp. 210, 214, 33 U.S.P.Q.2d 1660 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Kahn v. GMC, 865 F. Supp. 210, 214, 33 U.S.P.Q.2d 1660 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.24

§ 30.24 Considering the Effect of Jury Demands on Subsequent Trial

[1] Preserving Demand in Second Related Suit

If a demand for jury trial has been duly made in an action, that demand will be preserved, as to the issues embraced by the demand, if the case is remanded after appeal or consolidated with another case, n1 or if an action is brought for breach of an agreement settling the original action. n2

[2] Introducing New Issue Provides Opportunity for New Demand

When an action is remanded for new trial and an issue not raised in the original action is newly introduced, it has been held that this has the effect of amending the pleadings, thereby providing the parties with an opportunity to demand a jury trial on the newly introduced issue. n3

[3] Ordering of New Trial Does Not Revive Right to Jury Demand

When the right to a jury trial is waived in the original case by failure to timely make the demand, or by affirmative withdrawal of the demand, the right is not revived by the ordering of a new trial. n4 A party who wishes to obtain a jury trial on remand after waiver may move under Rule 39 for relief in the court's discretion. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DemandsConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. United States v. Nordbrock, 941 F.2d 947, 949-950 (9th Cir. 1991) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Carpenter v. Ford Motor Co., 20 Fed. Rules Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 345, 348 (N.D. Ill. 1991).

(n3)Footnote 3. In re Zweibon, 565 F.2d 742, 746-748 (D.C. Cir. 1977) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Hanlon v. Providence College, 615 F.2d 535, 539 (1st Cir. 1980) .

(n5)Footnote 5. McGowan v. United States, 296 F.2d 252, 256 (5th Cir. 1961) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
A. Asserting the Right to Trial by Jury

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 30.25 through 30.29

[Reserved]

§§ 30.25[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.30

§ 30.30 Evaluating the Policy of Jury Selection and Service Act

[1] Selecting Potential Jurors at Random

In pertinent part, 28 U.S.C. § 1861 declares that "[i]t is the policy of the United States that all litigants in Federal courts entitled to trial by jury shall have the right to grand and petit juries selected at random from a fair cross section of the community in the district or division wherein the court convenes." n1

Jury selection is the key to successful jury decision making. It starts with random selection of prospective jurors from the registered lists in the district. Volunteer jurors are no longer welcome. Participation by those persons who are summoned is important. Routine excuses because of distance, job, social engagements or travel plans should not be tolerated. The result of liberal excuse from jury service is a skewed cross-section of the community. The demography of the venue is altered when distance of travel is allowed as a ready excuse. Similarly, the venire can be overpopulated with the unemployed or the elderly when employment is a ready excuse.

[2] Disqualifying Potential Juror From Jury Service

The Jury Selection and Service Act specifically prohibits exclusion from service as a juror "on account of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or economic status." n2

Section 1865 of the Act provides, in pertinent part, that the "chief judge of the district court, or such other district court judge as the plan may provide, ... shall determine solely on the basis of information provided on the juror qualification form and other competent evidence whether a person is unqualified for ... jury service." n3

The Act specifies five grounds for disqualification for service as a juror, and mandates that "any person" shall be qualified to serve as a juror unless the candidate: n4

- Is not a citizen of the United States 18 years old who has resided for a period of one year within the judicial district

- Is unable to read, write, and understand the English language with a degree of proficiency sufficient to fill out satisfactorily the juror qualification form

- Is unable to speak the English language
- Is incapable, by reason of mental or physical infirmity, to render satisfactory jury service
- Has a charge pending against him for the commission of, or has been convicted in a State or Federal court of record of, a crime punishable by imprisonment for more than one year and his civil rights have not been restored

[3] Selecting and Summoning of Jury Panel by District Court

The Jury Selection and Service Act requires that each United States district court to "devise and place into operation" a plan for random selection of jurors that is consistent with, and is designed to achieve, the objectives of sections 1861 and 1862 of the statute, n5 and provides the courts with guidance with respect to procedures for drawing names of prospective jurors from a master jury wheel, n6 and for the selection and summoning of jury panels. n7 All records of these procedures must be maintained for at least four years, and they must be made available for public inspection. n8

[4] Mandating Daily Juror Attendance Fees

The Jury Selection and Service Act provides that jurors in district courts be paid a daily attendance fee of $40 for "actual attendance" at the place of hearing or trial. n9 The statute also provides for payment of an additional fee, not in excess of $10 more than the attendance fee, for each day "in excess of thirty days" on which the petit juror is required to hear the case. n10 The Act also provides for reimbursement of travel expenses and for a subsistence allowance, when applicable. n11

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 28 U.S.C. § 1861.

(n2)Footnote 2. 28 U.S.C. § 1862.

(n3)Footnote 3. 28 U.S.C. § 1865(a).

(n4)Footnote 4. 28 U.S.C. § 1865(b).

(n5)Footnote 5. 28 U.S.C. § 1863(a).

(n6)Footnote 6. 28 U.S.C. § 1864.

(n7)Footnote 7. 28 U.S.C. § 1866.

(n8)Footnote 8. 28 U.S.C. § 1868.

(n9)Footnote 9. 28 U.S.C. § 1871(a), (b)(1).

(n10)Footnote 10. 28 U.S.C. § 1871(b)(2).

(n11)Footnote 11. 28 U.S.C. § 1871(c), (d).

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.31

§ 30.31 Challenging Compliance With Statutory Selection Procedures

28 U.S.C. § 1867 provides the "exclusive means" by which a party to a civil case in a federal court may challenge a jury on the ground that the members were not selected in conformity with the provisions of the Act. n1 A statutory challenge to the jury panel must be made "before the voir dire examination begins, or within seven days after the party discovered or could have discovered, by the exercise of diligence, the grounds therefor, whichever is earlier." n2

Because the remedy is not a new trial, but a stay of proceedings until a new jury can be selected in conformity with the statute, n3 the time period set by the statute is strictly enforced, and a challenge to the panel on the grounds that it was not selected from a fair cross-section of the community must be made prior to voir dire. n4 However, parties are not precluded from "pursuing any other remedy, civil or criminal, which may be available for the vindication or enforcement of any law prohibiting discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, national origin or economic status in the selection of persons for service on grand or petit juries." n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 28 U.S.C. § 1867(e).

(n2)Footnote 2. 28 U.S.C. § 1867(c).

(n3)Footnote 3. 28 U.S.C. § 1867(d).

(n4)Footnote 4. 28 U.S.C. § 1867(c).

(n5)Footnote 5. 28 U.S.C. § 1867(e); Dawson v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 978 F.2d 205, 209 (5th Cir. 1992) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.32

§ 30.32 Ensuring Selection of Impartial Jury Through Voir Dire

The provisions of the Jury Selection and Service Act, n1 confer on all federal litigants entitled to a jury trial the broad right to a jury selected from a fair cross section of the community or district "wherein the court convenes." n2 Rule 47(a) is designed to ensure that the jury selected to deliberate in a federal case is impartial and free "to the furthest extent practicable" from extraneous influences that "may subvert the fact-finding process." n3

To that end, the examination on voir dire must be sufficient to discover bias. n4 Additionally, the voir dire must provide "essential information so as to allow the intelligent exercise of jury challenges." n5 The notion of an impartial jury is not merely good policy or legislative grace. Rather, the constitution preserves the right to an impartial jury. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionVoir DireConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. 28 U.S.C. § 1861.

(n2)Footnote 2. 28 U.S.C. § 1861.

(n3)Footnote 3. Waldorf v. Shuta, 3 F.3d 705, 709 (3d Cir. 1993) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Swink v. City of Pagedale, 810 F.2d 791, 793-794 (8th Cir. 1987) , cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1025 (1987) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Rainey v. Conerly, 973 F.2d 321, 325 (4th Cir. 1992) (citation omitted).

(n6)Footnote 6. Thiel v. Southern Pac. Co., 328 U.S. 217, 220 (1946) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.33

§ 30.33 Conducting of Voir Dire by District Court

[1] Recognizing District Court's Wide Discretion in Conduct of Voir Dire

The "obligation to impanel an impartial jury lies in the first instance with the trial judge," n1 who "has a serious duty to determine the question of actual bias." n2 However, as the text of Rule 47(a) suggests, the trial court has wide discretion both as to the manner in which the voir dire is conducted, and the scope of the questions posed. n3

[2] Introducing Potential Jurors to Voir Dire Process

When the prospective jurors arrive at the courtroom, they know nothing about the case and frequently little about their duties. The judge is responsible for welcoming the jurors, describing the historic function of the jury and its responsibilities, describing the nature of the case (including the plaintiff's claims and the defendant's denials and defenses), introducing the participants in the trial, disclosing the identity of prospective witnesses, and advising the jury of the anticipated length of the trial and working schedule. The judge should make an enthusiastic presentation and emphasize the importance of the case to the parties and to the community.

Virtually every federal judge has his or her own procedure for the selection of jurors. For example, a judge may prepare a brief written address that is read to the jurors. Individual judges may prepare written questionnaires that are distributed to the prospective jurors, and each judge may have a particular approach to questioning the jurors in open court. Counsel must obtain these materials and study them. They can be obtained from the judge's clerk, law clerk or secretary or at the initial status conference from the court itself. It is inexcusable to commence a jury trial and not know the procedure the court will follow in jury selection.

Most judges, after introducing the case to the prospective jurors, will conduct the initial inquiry into the background of each juror. Each juror is asked to give a narrative autobiographical sketch, including such things as place of birth, education, makeup of current family, residence (own or rent), occupation, occupation of persons with whom the prospective juror lives, leisure activities, hobbies, reading, newspaper and television habits. Frequently prospective jurors are asked about prior jury services. Further questions relate to the nature of the particular case.

[3] Examining Potential Jurors

Rule 47(a) grants the court discretion to permit the parties or their attorneys to directly conduct the examination of prospective jurors. Few federal judges select this option. If counsel is experienced in personal one-on-one jury selection, he or she should request permission to participate in the examination. The rule also provides that the court may conduct the examination. Most federal judges examine the prospective jurors themselves.

Local rules of many district courts specify procedures for the conduct of voir dire. Additionally, local rules in some courts explain particular procedures required of attorneys in exercising their challenges.

Counsel must be attentive during the examination. The jurors' first impression of counsel occurs at this time. A show of boredom with the whole process will be destructive. Moreover, peremptory challenges will be exercised on the basis of what counsel learns during the examination.

There is no requirement that the trial court put questions in any particular form, or ask any particular number of questions simply on a party's request, n4 or allow counsel an unlimited time--or any opportunity at all--to question prospective jurors. n5 Indeed, the trial court need not pursue any specific line of inquiry, and "[a]ny method is sufficient provided it is probative on the issue of impartiality." n6

[4] Supplementing Examination Conducted by Court

When the judge conducts the voir dire examination, Rule 47(a) provides that the parties are entitled to request to supplement the court's examination. n7 Counsel must be prepared to do this, and written supplementation should be submitted to the court in advance of trial.

[5] Posing Questions Designed to Elicit Information Beyond That Which Would Disqualify Juror for Cause

In order to secure litigants a fair and impartial jury, the trial court has an affirmative duty to pose questions designed to elicit information beyond that which would disqualify a juror for cause. n8

Questions on voir dire must be probing enough to reveal a prospective juror's prejudices so that counsel may exercise challenges in a meaningful manner, and the trial court "should at all times be on guard" to propound questions that will assist counsel in the exercise of peremptory challenges and challenges for cause. n9 The inquiry must reasonably assure that bias or prejudice, if present, will be discovered. n10

Where relevant, the trial court must inquire as to possible racial bias of prospective jurors. There is, however, no requirement that those questions be put in any particular form, n11 or that a particular question be asked if the substance of the inquiry is covered by another question. n12 Indeed, the wide latitude afforded the trial court on voir dire demands only that the voir dire not be so general that it fails to probe adequately the possibility of bias and prejudice. n13

In light of the considerable discretion vested in the trial court, it is incumbent on counsel to lay a foundation for proposed questions by showing that the inquiry is reasonably calculated to discover a likely source of prejudice, n14 or to furnish the trial court with a list of questions that delineates the nature and scope of the requested examination. n15

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionVoir DireConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Rosales-Lopez v. United States, 451 U.S. 182, 189, 101 S. Ct. 1629, 68 L. Ed. 2d 22 (1981) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Dennis v. United States, 339 U.S. 162, 168, 70 S. Ct. 519, 94 L. Ed. 734 (1950) ; Butler v. City of Camden, 352 F.3d 811, 819 (3d Cir. 2003) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Real v. Hogan, 828 F.2d 58, 62 (1st Cir. 1987) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Swink v. City of Pagedale, 810 F.2d 791, 793 (8th Cir. 1987) , cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1025 (1987) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Hicks v. Mickelson, 835 F.2d 721, 725 (8th Cir. 1987) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Waldorf v. Shuta, 3 F.3d 705, 710 (3d Cir. 1993) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Fed. R. Civ. P. 47(a).

(n8)Footnote 8. Fietzer v. Ford Motor Co., 622 F.2d 281, 285 (7th Cir. 1980) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Harold v. Corwin, 846 F.2d 1148, 1150 (8th Cir. 1988) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Art Press, Ltd. v. Western Printing Mach. Co., 791 F.2d 616, 618-619 (7th Cir. 1986) , aff'd in part, rev'd in part, and remanded, 852 F.2d 276 (7th Cir. 1988) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Swink v. City of Pagedale, 810 F.2d 791, 793 (8th Cir. 1987) , cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1025 (1987) .

(n12)Footnote 12. Darbin v. Nourse, 664 F.2d 1109, 1113 (9th Cir. 1981) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Waldorf v. Shuta, 3 F.3d 705, 710 (3d Cir. 1993) .

(n14)Footnote 14. United States v. Robinson, 475 F.2d 376, 381 (D.C. Cir. 1973) .

(n15)Footnote 15. James v. Continental Ins. Co., 424 F.2d 1064, 1065 (3d Cir. 1970) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.34

§ 30.34 Evaluating Standard of Review on Appeal

Given the broad discretion afforded the court on voir dire, the district court's determination on issues concerning the scope of voir dire will be overturned only for an abuse of discretion. n1 In general, a trial court's determination of the scope of voir dire will not be disturbed on appeal unless the voir dire was insufficient to elicit bias n2 or to enable litigants to intelligently exercise their right to challenge prospective jurors, n3 or if the trial court itself injected irrelevant and prejudicial material into the inquiry. n4

In the absence of voir dire limitations that effectively preclude a litigant's ability to assess prospective jurors for partiality, bias, or prejudice, the trial court's determinations with respect to the conduct and scope of the voir dire will not provide a basis for reversal on appeal. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsMisconductCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionVoir DireCivil ProcedureAppealsReviewabilityGeneral OverviewConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Kanekoa v. City of Honolulu, 879 F.2d 607, 614 (9th Cir. 1989) , cert. denied, 500 U.S. 933 (1991) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Waldorf v. Shuta, 3 F.3d 705, 712 (3d Cir. 1993) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fietzer v. Ford Motor Co., 622 F.2d 281, 285 (7th Cir. 1980) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Scott v. Lawrence, 36 F.3d 871, 874 (9th Cir. 1994) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Lewis v. Holden, 821 F.2d 291, 294 (5th Cir. 1987) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.35

§ 30.35 Conducting Voir Dire by Written Questionnaire

Increasingly judges have allowed parties to supplement traditional voir dire with a written questionnaire administered to potential jurors prior to commencement of oral voir dire. n1 This procedure strikes a constructive compromise between attorney-conducted voir dire and the cursory voir dire traditionally conducted by federal judges.

The procedure for assembling and distributing the questionnaire should be discussed no later than the pretrial conference. The parties should agree on, or the court should order, a procedure that allows each party to contribute questions, to object to questions, and to seek final court approval of the questionnaire before it is distributed. That is necessary to ensure that one party does not ask unfair or misleading questions or questions which themselves would prejudice prospective jurors.

Administration of the same questionnaire to all prospective jurors provides each side with identical information that may be used to demonstrate cause for disqualification or to exercise peremptory challenges. Use of a questionnaire makes it feasible to ask each prospective juror individually about a wide range of subjects. There is no need to rely on prospective jurors to remember questions posed to the panel as a whole, and then to volunteer their answers to those remembered questions. Each juror records a specific and direct response to every question posed.

A written questionnaire is not a complete substitute for traditional voir dire. It does eliminate the need for many boilerplate background questions, but the questionnaire should be supplemented with appropriate questions (put by the judge or by the attorneys) to follow up on answers to the questionnaire. Use of the questionnaire technique is especially helpful if jury-selection consultants have been engaged because counsel will ordinarily have the opportunity to consult with the jury consultant before challenges must be exercised.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionVoir DireConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n v. NFL, Civil Docket No. 78-3523-HP (C.D. Cal. 1982), aff'd, 726 F.2d 1381 (9th Cir. 1984) , cert. denied, 469 U.S. 990 (1984) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.36

§ 30.36 Working With Jury Consultants

Well in advance of trial, counsel must consider the jury selection process. In some cases, it may beneficial to hire a jury consultant to assist in selecting a jury that is likely to be more receptive to the client's case.

Jury consultants typically apply the insight and techniques of psychology, sociology and public opinion polling to establish correlations between likely attitudes about issues in a case and facts that may be ascertainable at, or prior to, voir dire. Consultants can also assist during the voir dire itself, primarily by observing body language and speech patterns--psycholinguistic clues that may reveal much more about the jurors than their literal answers. Each consultant or firm has its own methods, but generally they employ one or more of the following techniques:

- General Polling. Polls of randomly chosen respondents conducted either by telephone or in person are used to determine general community perceptions and attitudes.

- Focus Groups. Focus groups range from 10 to 50 people and are selected to represent the demographic profile of the jury pool. Usually the group is presented with a briefing about the case (typically a video tape presentation by one or more of the lawyers on the case). The group is then asked to complete a questionnaire and invited to participate in a discussion of their reaction to the case.

- Targeted Polling.This technique involves targeted polling in neighborhoods where individuals known to be members of a specific jury pool reside. The technique is intended to provide a more refined measurement of likely juror perceptions and attitudes, and also to identify facts ascertainable on voir dire that can be correlated to probable reactions to issues in the particular case.

- Mock Trials. Juror surrogates are recruited from the community in which the trial will take place or from a demographic match with the forum community. Some form of summary trial is then conducted, usually consisting of modified summations on behalf of each side. Observers can get reactions to the facts of the case, the effect of instructions, the performance of the lawyers and, where applicable, the effectiveness of witnesses and exhibits.

- Jury Selection. Jury consultants may be involved in drafting a jury questionnaire, if such questionnaires will be allowed. With or without a questionnaire, consultants may also advise on the exercise of peremptory challenges using data compiled before the fact as well as (in some cases) direct observation of the voir dire process.

- Shadow Juries and Jury Observation. Some consultants recommend use of a shadow jury. This is a group of people recruited to match as nearly as possible the exact make-up of the trial jury. Shadow jurors sit in the courtroom and observe the actual progress of the trial. They are polled individually for their reactions to proceedings on a day-to-day or session-by-session basis.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionVoir DireCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsPolling of JuryConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.37

§ 30.37 Using Commercially-Prepared Jury Books

In some districts, commercial vendors prepare books for use in voir dire which compile all publicly available information about persons in the jury array, such as the political affiliation of registered voters, property ownership, and participation in lawsuits. These books may also include information about the individual's service on prior juries. These materials, where available, are helpful aids to conducting voir dire and exercising peremptory challenges.

If a commercial jury book is not available, and if the case justifies the expense, substantially the same information may be obtained by an investigator or paralegal. When collecting information about jurors on behalf of a party to the action, however, it is imperative that the investigator take care not to make any prospective juror aware of the inquiry.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionVoir DireConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.38

§ 30.38 Dealing With Juror Untruth During Voir Dire Examination

[1] Eliciting Truthful Responses

The purpose of the voir dire examination is to discern potential bias and prejudice in prospective jurors, and to enable litigants to intelligently exercise peremptory challenges and challenges for cause. On occasion, however, that purpose is frustrated because prospective jurors fail to answer honestly a material question posed on voir dire.

A deliberately untruthful response on voir dire may indicate an attempt to conceal bias, which may provide the basis for a cause challenge n1 or provoke a peremptory challenge. n2 Accordingly, the right of challenge includes the incidental right that information elicited on voir dire shall be true. n3 The trial judge should admonish the prospective jurors of the necessity that they be honest in their response to questions asked them.

[2] Waiving Right to Object to Nondisclosure

Once a litigant presents a prima facie case that the right to challenge was impaired by the failure to disclose material information on voir dire, it falls to the trial court to hold an evidentiary hearing to determine the circumstances surrounding the nondisclosure. n4 Because jurors cannot be faulted for failing to disclose information for which they were never asked, a litigant has the burden to show that the voir dire questions, or the responses of other jurors, put the juror on notice that a particular answer was required. n5

Further, if the basis for challenge might have been discovered earlier on voir dire, failure to exercise the challenge at the time the jury is empaneled constitutes waiver of the right to challenge nondisclosure. n6 Similarly, a party who has actual knowledge of undisclosed facts but fails to challenge a juror, choosing to gamble on the outcome of the trial, waives the right to relief. n7

[3] Nondisclosure Must Be Deliberate and Material

A juror's honest but mistaken response to a material question on voir dire does not warrant a new trial. n8

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsMisconductCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionChallenges for CauseCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionVoir DireConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Hard v. Burlington N. R. Co., 870 F.2d 1454, 1459 (9th Cir. 1989) .

(n2)Footnote 2. McCoy v. Goldston, 652 F.2d 654, 659 (6th Cir. 1981) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Photostat Corp. v. Ball, 338 F.2d 783, 786 (10th Cir. 1964) .

(n4)Footnote 4. McCoy v. Goldston, 652 F.2d 654, 657 (6th Cir. 1981) .

(n5)Footnote 5. McCoy v. Goldston, 652 F.2d 654, 658-659 (6th Cir. 1981) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Robinson v. Monsanto Co., 758 F.2d 331, 335 (8th Cir. 1985) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Dunn v. Denk, 54 F.3d 248, 251 (5th Cir. 1995) , rev'd on other grounds, 79 F.3d 401 (5th Cir. 1996) , cert. denied, 519 U.S. 813 (1996) .

(n8)Footnote 8. McDonough Power Equip., Inc., v. Greenwood, 464 U.S. 548, 555, 104 S. Ct. 845, 849-850, 78 L. Ed. 2d 663 (1984) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.39

§ 30.39 Challenging a Juror For Cause

[1] Rejecting Juror Based on Partiality

The challenge for cause permits "rejection of jurors on a narrowly specified, provable and legally cognizable basis of partiality," n1 and is narrowly confined to instances in which threats to impartiality are admitted or presumed from the relationships, n2 pecuniary interests, n3 or clear biases of a prospective juror. n4 The challenger has the burden of production. n5 Per se rules of disqualification are disfavored. n6

The central inquiry in examining a challenge for cause is whether the prospective juror holds a particular position, belief, or opinion that prevents or substantially impairs the impartial performance of the duties of juror. n7 It should be noted, however, that when a juror falls into one of the narrowly confined circumstances in which partiality is presumed, the juror's assertion of impartiality is irrelevant. n8

In the absence of facts pointing to presumptive bias, a prospective juror is presumed to be impartial. Neither the existence of a preconception n9 nor a particular occupational background will be sufficient to rebut the presumption of impartiality, so long as the prospective juror can render a verdict based solely on the evidence presented at trial. n10

[2] Granting of Challenge Based on Actual Bias

The trial court must grant a challenge for cause if a prospective juror shows actual bias or prejudice. n11 Further, the trial court should resolve doubts about the existence of actual bias against permitting the juror to serve. n12 However, the trial court's determination of impartiality, in the first instance, is "essentially one of credibility and therefore largely one of demeanor," and is entitled to "special deference." n13 Accordingly, a trial court has broad discretion on rulings on challenges for cause, n14 and the court's determination will be reversed only for an abuse of discretion. n15

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionChallenges for CauseCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionVoir DireConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Swain v. Alabama, 380 U.S. 202, 220, 85 S. Ct. 824, 13 L. Ed. 2d 759 (1965) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Bailey v. Board of County Comm'rs of Alachua County, 956 F.2d 1112, 1128 (11th Cir. 1992) , cert. denied, 506 U.S. 832 (1992) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Getter v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 66 F.3d 1119, 1122 (10th Cir. 1995) , cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1146 (1996) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Darbin v. Nourse, 664 F.2d 1109, 1113 (9th Cir. 1981) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Marks v. Shell Oil Co., 895 F.2d 1128, 1129 (6th Cir. 1990) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Depree v. Thomas, 946 F.2d 784, 787-788 (11th Cir. 1991) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Bell v. Lynbaugh, 663 F. Supp. 405, 414 (E.D. Tex.) , aff'd, 828 F.2d 1085 (5th Cir. 1987) , cert. denied, 484 U.S. 933 (1987) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Gladhill v. General Motors Corp., 743 F.2d 1049, 1050 (4th Cir. 1984) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Poynter v. Ratcliff, 874 F.2d 219, 221 (4th Cir. 1989) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Marks v. Shell Oil Co., 895 F.2d 1128, 1130 n.1 (6th Cir. 1990) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Walzer v. St. Joseph State Hosp., 231 F.3d 1108, 1112 (8th Cir. 2000) .

(n12)Footnote 12. Bailey v. Board of County Comm'rs of Alachua County, 956 F.2d 1112, 1128 (11th Cir. 1992) , cert. denied, 506 U.S. 832 (1992) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Shattuck v. Kinetic Concepts, Inc., 49 F.3d 1106, 1111 (5th Cir. 1995) .

(n14)Footnote 14. Shattuck v. Kinetic Concepts, Inc., 49 F.3d 1106, 1111 (5th Cir. 1995) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Kirk v. Raymark Indus., Inc. 61 F.3d 147, 154-155 (3d Cir. 1996) , cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1145 (1996) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.40

§ 30.40 Asserting Peremptory Challenges

[1] Removing Jurors Who Have Unacknowledged or Unconscious Bias

The peremptory challenge is considerably more extensive than the challenge for cause, and serves to remove jurors who, in the opinion of a party or counsel, have unacknowledged or unconscious bias. n1

[2] Evaluating Right Under Jury Selection and Service Act

Rule 47(b) provides that the court "shall allow the number of peremptory challenges provided by 28 U.S.C. § 1870." The text of Rule 47(b) reminds litigants that the source of the right to peremptory challenge is statutory, and not constitutional, a distinction that may have a significant impact on the remedy to which a litigant is entitled if the right to peremptory challenge is impaired or denied. n2

[3] Determining Number of Peremptory Challenges

The Jury Selection and Service Act entitles each party to three peremptory challenges, but also provides that "[s]everal defendants or several plaintiffs may be considered as a single party for the purpose of making challenges, or the court may allow additional peremptory challenges and permit them to be exercised separately or jointly." n3

Courts have interpreted this latter provision to vest the trial court with considerable discretion in the number and assignment of peremptory challenges in cases of multiple litigants. n4

[4] Utilizing Peremptory Challenges

The district court has wide latitude in its management of peremptory challenges, which will be reversed on appeal only if the court's procedure bars a litigant from using the statutorily mandated number of peremptory challenges against a person who becomes a member of the jury. n5

A party may not claim error with respect to the district court's denial of any number of peremptory challenges unless all available peremptories have been exercised. n6

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionPeremptory ChallengesCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionVoir DireConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Swain v. Alabama, 380 U.S. 202, 220, 13 L. Ed. 2d 759 (1965) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Ross v. Oklahoma, 487 U.S. 81, 88, 108 S. Ct. 2273, 101 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1988) .

(n3)Footnote 3. 28 U.S.C. § 1870.

(n4)Footnote 4. Stonewall Ins. Co. v. Asbestos Claims Mgmt. Corp., 73 F.3d 1178, 1219 (2d Cir. 1995) , modified on other grounds, 85 F.3d 49 (2d Cir. 1996) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Medrano v. City of Los Angeles, 973 F.2d 1499, 1503 (9th Cir. 1992) , cert. denied, 508 U.S. 940 (1993) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Mills v. GAF Corp., 20 F.3d 678, 680 (6th Cir. 1994) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.41

§ 30.41 Evaluating Whether Peremptory Challenge is Discriminatory

[1] Opposing Peremptory Strikes As Discriminatory

The Supreme Court has established that once a party of a cognizable racial group establishes a prima facie case of discriminatory peremptory challenges, by showing that the adversary's exercise of peremptory challenges has removed members of that racial group from the panel of prospective jurors, the burden shifts to the adversary to come forward with a race-neutral explanation for the challenges. n1 The trial court is then obligated to determine if the explanation for the challenge is merely pretextual, and whether or not the party opposing the peremptory challenge has established purposeful discrimination. n2

Describing the statutory scheme responsible for the establishment of the jury trial system in general, and the peremptory challenge procedure in particular, the Court observed that "without the overt, significant participation of the government, the peremptory challenge system, as well as the jury trial system of which it is a part, simply could not exist." n3

The Supreme Court has further held that a party has standing to object to race-based exclusion of jurors by peremptory challenge whether or not the party and the excluded jurors are members of the same race. Reasoning that racial discrimination in the selection of jurors casts doubt on the integrity of the judicial process and places the fairness of a proceeding in doubt, the Court concluded the race of a litigant challenging the discriminatory exercise of a peremptory challenge was "irrelevant to a defendant's standing to object to discriminatory use of peremptory challenges." n4

The same reasoning has been applied to claims of gender discrimination in the exercise of peremptory challenges, holding that "gender, like race, is an unconstitutional proxy for jury competence and impartiality." n5

[2] Opposing the Peremptory Challenge in Timely Manner

Although the trial court is required to determine whether a party's exercise of peremptory challenges is discriminatory, in the absence of an objection the court does not have a duty, sua sponte, to prevent the discriminatory exclusion of jurors. n6 Accordingly, a litigant wishing to challenge an opponent's use of peremptory challenges as discriminatory must lodge an objection in a timely fashion. n7

If a prima facie showing of discriminatory use of a peremptory challenge has been made, the burden shifts to the party who has exercised the challenge "to come forward with a neutral explanation for challenging" the prospective juror. n8 The objector then has an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence. n9

It is incumbent on the objecting party to set forth--on the record and before the trial judge--why the proffered reasons are merely pretextual, in order to preserve the issue for appellate review. The burden of persuasion remains on the objector.

[3] Conducting Inquiry on Challenge

On a timely objection that a party's exercise of peremptory challenges is discriminatory, the trial court must inquire as to the reasons for the striking party's challenges, n10 and determine whether, under the circumstances of the case, the proffered reason is neutral, or merely pretextual. And, while it may be the better practice, there is no requirement that the trial court articulate for the record the reasons underlying the ruling, n11 or that the reasons proffered for the peremptory challenge be based on record evidence. n12

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionPeremptory ChallengesCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsSelectionVoir DireConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 89, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 1719, 90 L. Ed.2d 69 (1986) ; Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., 500 U.S. 614, 622, 111 S. Ct. 2077, 114 L. Ed. 2d 660 (1991) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., 500 U.S. 614, 622, 111 S. Ct. 2077, 114 L. Ed. 2d 660 (1991) ; Forrest v. Beloit Corp., 424 F.3d 344, 350 (3d Cir. 2005) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., 500 U.S. 614, 622, 111 S. Ct. 2077, 114 L. Ed. 2d 660 (1991) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Powers v. Ohio, 499 U.S. 400, 415-416, 111 S. Ct. 1364, 113 L. Ed. 2d 411 (1991) .

(n5)Footnote 5. J.E.B. v. Alabama ex rel. T.B., 511 U.S. 127, 129, 146, 114 S. Ct. 1419, 128 L. Ed. 2d 89 (1994) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Clark v. Newport News Shipbldg. & Dry Dock Co., 937 F.2d 934, 939 (4th Cir. 1991) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Dawson v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 978 F.2d 205, 210 (5th Cir. 1992) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 97, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 90 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1986) ; United States Xpress Enters., Inc. v. J.B. Hunt Transp., Inc., 320 F.3d 809, 812-813 (8th Cir. 2003) .

(n9)Footnote 9. United States v. Roan Eagle, 867 F.2d 436, 441 (8th Cir. 1989) , cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1028 (1989) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Montiel v. City of Los Angeles, 2 F.3d 335, 340 (9th Cir. 1993) .

(n11)Footnote 11. Hopson v. Fredericksen, 961 F.2d 1374, 1377 (8th Cir. 1992) .

(n12)Footnote 12. Great Plains Equip. v. Koch Gathering Sys., 45 F.3d 962, 965 (5th Cir. 1995) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.42

§ 30.42 Understanding the Jury's Role at Trial

A jury is a group of individuals selected from a district by the court to be sworn for the purpose of determining by verdict a question of fact. Whereas the court determines questions of law, the jury determines questions of fact. All jurors must participate in the verdict unless excused from service by the court. Unless the parties stipulate otherwise, the verdict must be unanimous. n1 No verdict may be taken from a jury reduced in size to fewer than six members. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsProvince of Court & JuryConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Johnson v. Louisiana, 406 U.S. 356, 369-370, 370 n.5, 92 S. Ct. 1620, 32 L. Ed. 2d 152 (1972) ; Murray v. Laborers Union Local No. 324, 55 F.3d 1445, 1451 (9th Cir. 1995) , cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1219 (1996) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 48.

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.43

§ 30.43 Assuring Requisite Number of Jurors

[1] Seating a Jury Of At Least Six Members

Rule 48 provides that a jury "must begin with at least 6 and no more than 12 members." n1 Local rules of court in some jurisdictions specify a more precise number of jurors within this six-to-twelve person range. For a complete discussion of jury verdicts, see Ch. 40, Verdicts and Jury Deliberations.

[2] Stipulating to Verdict From Jury of Fewer Than Six Members

Rule 48 provides that all of the six to 12 jurors "must participate in the verdict unless excused under Rule 47(c)." n2 Rule 48 also provides that unless the parties stipulate otherwise, the verdict must be unanimous and must be returned by a jury of at least 6 members. n3 However, stipulations have been found not to be controlling when there has been compliance with the numerical requirements of Rule 48 and the court has proper reason to excuse a juror from service. n4

There is conflicting authority whether courts may disregard local rules pertaining to jury size in the absence of a stipulation by the parties. n5 The integrity of the local rules is advanced by a decision that requires individual district judges to adhere to their local rules.

Difficulties in requirements for jury size have arisen in situations where alternate jurors have been permitted to deliberate with the jury. Allowing alternates to deliberate has been held to be prejudicial. n6 Nonetheless, failure to timely object may constitute a waiver n7 or an express agreement to allow alternates to deliberate. n8

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsRight to Jury TrialConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 48(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 48(a).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 48(b).

(n4)Footnote 4. Bondie v. Bic Corp., 947 F.2d 1531, 1535 (6th Cir. 1991) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Compare Kuykendall v. Southern Ry. Co., 652 F.2d 391, 392-393 (4th Cir. 1981) ; with Hanson v. Parkside Surgery Ctr., 872 F.2d 745, 749-750 (6th Cir. 1989) , cert. denied, 493 U.S. 944 (1989) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Cabral v. Sullivan, 961 F.2d 998, 1002 (1st Cir. 1992) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Rideau v. Parkem Indus. Servs., Inc., 917 F.2d 892, 896 (5th Cir. 1990) .

(n8)Footnote 8. EEOC v. State of Delaware, DHSS, 865 F.2d 1408, 1420-1421 (3d Cir. 1989) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.44

§ 30.44 Understanding Judge's Role During Jury Trial

[1] Ruling on Questions of Law

The substance of the right of trial by jury, as guaranteed by the Seventh Amendment, means a trial to a jury presided over by a judge with authority to rule on questions of law. n1 The province of the jury is to determine disputed questions of fact. Therefore, the jury trial right does not extend to issues that are matters of law. n2

[2] Managing Juror Conduct

The court has the inherent power to control the proceedings and to ensure an orderly trial. The district court judge, with the aid of the bailiff, is responsible for managing all aspects of jury service including:

- Preinstructing the jury regarding the scope of service, the order of proceedings, and the role of participants (court personnel, litigants, counsel, witnesses)
- Admonishing improper juror conduct during service such as inattentiveness during testimony or improper communications
- Communicating with the court (jurors generally required to submit communications in writing to the court)
- Viewing evidence
- Questioning of witnesses (jurors are typically required to submit proposed questions in writing to the court)
- Notetaking (jurors may be required to leave notebooks with the court when trial is not in session)

[3] Instructing and Aiding Jury

The court, at its election, may instruct the jury before or after argument, or both. n3 In charging the jury, the trial judge is not limited to instructions of an abstract sort. It is within the judge's province to assist the jury in arriving at a just conclusion by explaining and commenting on the evidence, by drawing their attention to the specific evidence; and by expressing opinion on the facts, provided the jury is clearly informed that all matters of fact are submitted to their determination. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsProvince of Court & JuryCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsRight to Jury TrialConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. DeBry v. Transamerica Corp., 601 F.2d 480, 490 (10th Cir. 1979) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Rhea v. Massey-Ferguson, Inc., 767 F.2d 266, 268-269 (6th Cir. 1985) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 51.

(n4)Footnote 4. Quercia v. United States, 289 U.S. 466, 469, 53 S. Ct. 698, 77 L. Ed. 1321 (1933) ; Desjardins v. Van Buren Community Hosp., 969 F.2d 1280, 1281-1282 (1st Cir. 1992) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.45

§ 30.45 Evaluating Court's Authority to Enter Judgment Different From Jury Verdict

[1] Granting Judgment as Matter of Law

A motion for judgment as a matter of law under Rule 50(a), generally referred to as a motion for directed verdict, is made at the close of evidence on grounds of lack of pleading or proof of a material issue, or absence of any controverted issues of fact on which reasonable persons could differ. If such a motion is not granted, it may be renewed within 28 days after entry of judgment. The renewal motion, under Rule 50(b), is generally referred to as a motion for judgment n.o.v., that is, a judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

In ruling on the renewal motion, the court may allow the judgment to stand, grant a new trial (if such relief is sought), or direct entry of judgment as a matter of law. n1 The court's setting aside of the verdict and entry of judgment under Rule 50(b) raises a constitutional question, since the Seventh Amendment forbids re-examination of any fact tried by a jury "in any court of the United States other than according to the rules of common law." n2

The Rules get around this Seventh Amendment violation by structuring the motion for judgment n.o.v. as a renewal of a motion for directed verdict. The directed verdict motion is beyond constitutional challenge (as long as the court properly applies the standards) since it has a long history in the common law, and since it does not involve "re-examination" of a jury verdict. Under Rule 50, the court's decision on the directed verdict motion is automatically reserved if the motion is not granted before submission of the case to the jury; the subsequent motion for judgment n.o.v. is thereby transformed into a renewal of the earlier motion, and the court is not technically setting aside the jury's verdict but is in essence withdrawing the case from the jury's consideration. n3

[2] Granting New Trial

A motion for new trial under Rule 59 may be made on the grounds that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence. The motion is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, which may set aside the verdict and direct a new trial. The granting of a new trial under Rule 59 has survived constitutional challenge. Since the Seventh Amendment only prohibits re-examination of facts tried by a jury that is in derogation of the common law, it has been held that the grant of a new trial in accordance with common-law principles is clearly permissible and proper. n4

[3] Granting Remittitur When Option of New Trial Is Offered

When excessive damages have been awarded to a party, the court may order remittitur or new trial, at the option of the party awarded damages. n5 Remittitur is permissible under the Seventh Amendment only when the verdict cannot be justified on the evidence, n6 and it has generally been held that remittitur may be granted only if the option of a new trial is offered. n7

[4] Granting Additur Is Impermissible Violation of Seventh Amendment

An order of additur, increasing a damages award when it is deemed insufficient, is a violation of the Seventh Amendment and is impermissible. n8

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsProvince of Court & JuryCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsRight to Jury TrialCivil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentGeneral OverviewConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. Slocum v. New York Life Ins. Co., 228 U.S. 364, 376-388, 33 S. Ct. 523, 57 L. Ed. 879 (1913) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Neely v. Martin K. Eby Constr. Co., 386 U.S. 317, 322, 330, 87 S. Ct. 1072, 18 L. Ed. 2d 75 (1966) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Cone v. West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co., 330 U.S. 212, 215-216, 67 S. Ct. 752, 91 L. Ed. 849 (1947) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Morgan v. Woessner, 997 F.2d 1244, 1258-1259 (9th Cir. 1993) , cert. dismissed, 510 U.S. 1033 (1994) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Boyd v. Bulala, 672 F. Supp. 915, 921 (W.D. Va. 1987) , aff'd in part, rev'd in part and questions certified, 877 F.2d 1191 (4th Cir. 1989) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Morgan v. Woessner, 997 F.2d 1244, 1258 (9th Cir. 1993) , cert. dismissed, 510 U.S. 1033 (1994) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Hattaway v. McMillian, 903 F.2d 1440, 1451 (11th Cir. 1990) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.46

§ 30.46 Excusing Jurors During Trial or Deliberation

[1] Removing Sitting Jurors From Service During Trial or Deliberation for Good Cause

Recognizing that circumstances sometimes arise during trial that require the dismissal of a juror, Rule 47(c) empowers the district court to excuse a juror from service, during trial or deliberation, for good cause.

Because the right of all parties to the judgment of the jury is a "qualified one," n1 the dismissal of a juror under appropriate circumstances will not cause a mistrial, and the demands of due process are met as long as at least six jurors, or a smaller number if the parties have so stipulated, remain to render a verdict. n2

[2] Grounds Justifying Excuse of Juror

The concept of "good cause" permits the trial court, in its discretion, to excuse a juror for reasons of "[s]ickness, family emergency or juror misconduct that might occasion a mistrial." n3

Rule 47(c) confers wide discretion on the trial court to dismiss a juror "when necessary to preserve the integrity of the judicial process." n4 Courts have exercised their discretion to excuse jurors for the following reasons:

- So that the juror may take an important business trip n5
- Because of the stress felt by the juror during deliberations n6
- Because of a scheduling conflict during protracted deliberations n7
- Because of the juror's planned vacation n8
- Because of the juror's chronic lateness n9

The court may not, however, remove a juror simply because the juror refuses to join with remaining jurors in reaching a unanimous verdict. n10

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsRemovalsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsRight to Jury TrialConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Murray v. Laborers Union Local 324, 55 F.3d 1445, 1451 (9th Cir. 1995) , cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1219 (1996) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Ballew v. Georgia, 435 U.S. 223, 245, 98 S. Ct. 1029, 55 L. Ed. 2d 234 (1978) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Murray v. Laborers Union Local 324, 55 F.3d 1445, 1451-1452 (9th Cir. 1995) , cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1219 (1996) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Civ. P. 47(c).

(n5)Footnote 5. Interpool Ltd. v. Patterson, 874 F. Supp. 616, 618 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Mason v. Texaco, Inc., 948 F.2d 1546, 1558 (10th Cir. 1991) , cert. denied, 504 U.S. 910 (1991) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Murray v. Laborers Union Local 324, 55 F.3d 1445, 1451 (9th Cir. 1995) , cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1219 (1996) .

(n8)Footnote 8. United States v. McFarland, 34 F.3d 1508 (9th Cir. 1994) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Bondie v. Bic Corp., 947 F.2d 1531, 1535 (6th Cir. 1991) .

(n10)Footnote 10. Murray v. Laborers Union Local 324, 55 F.3d 1445, 1451-1452 (9th Cir. 1995) , cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1219 (1996) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.47

§ 30.47 Investigating and Removing Sitting Juror for Misconduct

[1] Hearing Ordinarily Required

Although courts may excuse jurors for good cause during trial or deliberation, the Supreme Court has held that, in investigating allegations of juror misconduct, trial courts should not decide and take final action ex parte. Rather, courts should determine the circumstances and their impact on jurors, and whether or not it was prejudicial, in a hearing with all interested parties permitted to participate. n1

The issue has arisen in several cases involving proceedings investigating the potential dismissal of a sitting juror who is the lone holdout. Absent exigent circumstances, such proceedings must be conducted in the presence of the parties, and a record of the hearing must be made for the benefit of the parties and the reviewing court. n2

[2] Hearing May Be Waived by Parties

Although the trial judge ordinarily should not conduct any portion of the hearing ex parte, ex parte communications may be upheld when "the circumstances warrant and fundamental fairness is not sacrificed." n3 The Eighth Circuit has found no plain error in conducting a hearing outside the parties' presence to investigate allegations of jury tampering when both parties knew about the hearing in advance, declined to participate, and raised no objection. n4

[3] Voir Dire of Juror Regarding Prejudice From Extrajudicial Information

Good cause encompasses juror misconduct that might occasion a mistrial. Thus, decisions involving granting or denying a mistrial for juror misconduct (misconduct of jury as grounds for new trial) may provide guidance as to the proper method of investigation of juror misconduct. In one such case, the court stated that when a trial court becomes aware that a member of the jury may have learned extrajudicial information that could adversely affect the jury's ability to decide the case impartially on the record evidence alone, the court must determine whether the impartiality of the juror has been compromised. n5

The appropriate method for inquiry into possible prejudice of a juror is voir dire of the juror. n6 The method of conducting the voir dire is in the discretion of the court; any method is sufficient provided it is probative on the issue of impartiality. n7 However, the court's voir dire must be sufficiently thorough to ascertain whether there is a substantial likelihood of prejudice. n8

When the exposure to extrajudicial information has been substantial, the court's determination of partiality should be made based on objective criteria rather than on the juror's own subjective assessment of continued impartiality, since the effect of extrajudicial information may be prejudicial even if not so perceived by the juror. n9

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsMisconductCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsRemovalsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsRight to Jury TrialConstitutional LawBill of RightsFundamental RightsTrial by Jury in Civil Actions

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Remmer v. United States, 347 U.S. 227, 228-229, 74 S. Ct. 450, 98 L. Ed. 654 (1954) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Harris v. Folk Constr. Co., 138 F.3d 365, 371-372 (8th Cir. 1998) .

(n3)Footnote 3. United States v. Behler, 14 F.3d 1264, 1268 (8th Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 960 (1994) .

(n4)Footnote 4. United States v. Behler, 14 F.3d 1264, 1267-1268 (8th Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 960 (1994) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Waldorf v. Shuta, 3 F.3d 705, 709-710 (3d Cir. 1993) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Waldorf v. Shuta, 3 F.3d 705, 709 (3d Cir. 1993) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Waldorf v. Shuta, 3 F.3d 705, 710 (3d Cir. 1993) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Waldorf v. Shuta, 3 F.3d 705, 711, 713 (3d Cir. 1993) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Waldorf v. Shuta, 3 F.3d 705, 710-711 (3d Cir. 1993) .

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.48

§ 30.48 Reaching Unanimous Jury Verdict

[1] Unanimity Provides Greater Certainty in Result

Unlike the procedure in many states, Rule 48 provides that the jury's verdict must be unanimous unless the parties otherwise stipulate. n1 Unanimity provides greater certainty in the result and reinforces each juror's agreement with the verdict. In short, unanimity protects the parties and the jury. Although counsel should be cautious about stipulating to a verdict that is not unanimous, such a stipulation may help avoid a mistrial. For a complete discussion of jury verdicts, see Ch. 40, Verdicts and Jury Deliberations.

Prior to the 1991 revision of Rule 48, courts disputed whether a federal jury verdict must be unanimous absent a stipulation by the parties. Revised Rule 48 resolves that dispute by clarifying that "the verdict must be unanimous" unless the parties stipulate to the contrary. n2

[2] Verdict Should Be in Writing and Signed by All Jurors

If it is not the general practice in the district in which the case is being tried, counsel should suggest to the trial judge that the verdict be in writing and signed by all of the jurors. This adds greater certainty and reliability to the verdict.

[3] Counsel Should Remain During Deliberations and Be Advised of Communications With Jury

Counsel should remain in the courtroom during deliberations and should request to be advised of any communication from or with the jury. Jury deliberations are among the most delicate and important parts of the trial.

[4] Conducting Post-Verdict Polling

After a verdict is returned but before the jury is discharged, the court must on a party's request, or may on its own, poll the jurors individually. If the poll reveals a lack of unanimity or lack of assent by the number of jurors that the parties stipulated to, the court may direct the jury to deliberate further or may order a new trial. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJury DeliberationsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsRight to Jury TrialCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsVerdictsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsVerdictsGeneral VerdictsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsVerdictsInconsistent VerdictsCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsVerdictsSpecial Verdicts

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 48.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 48.

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 48(c).

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 30 Juries *
B Selecting the Jury and Monitoring Jury Conduct

3-30 Federal Litigation Guide § 30.49

§ 30.49 Conducting Post-Trial Interviews With Jurors

Once the verdict is returned in open court, counsel may decide to request an opportunity to poll the jurors regarding the verdict and the trial. Local rules and the desires of federal judges vary widely on the question of whether, and when, attorneys may speak to jurors after their verdict has been rendered. Some judges specifically advise jurors that they are free, but not obligated, to discuss the case with attorneys or others after their dismissal.

If the custom or preference of a particular judge, or in a particular district, is uncertain, it will always be wise to ask the trial judge for permission to speak with jurors after the trial is over.

Even the most experienced trial lawyer will profit from post-trial interviews with key jurors. In any case where there is a significant chance of retrial, such interviews may be very important. Material questions may include:

- What was the essential rationale of the verdict?
- Which arguments (on each side) did the jury find most and least persuasive and why?
- Which witnesses (from each side) did the jury find most and least persuasive and why?
- Were any particular instructions either controlling in the jury's mind, ambiguous, or otherwise significant?
- How did the jurors react to the personalities and conduct of counsel on each side?
- Was there anything about your case (arguments, witnesses, conduct of counsel, etc.) that the jurors found offensive?
- Regardless of the jury's ultimate decision, were there unexplained or confusing aspects of your case that should have been clarified?

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsPolling of JuryCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsRight to Jury TrialCivil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsVerdictsGeneral Overview

* Chapter 30 was rewritten in 2001 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

48 of 181 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide 31.syn

§ 31.syn Synopsis to Chapter 31: Exclusion of Witnesses *

§ 31.01 Excluding Witnesses Under the Rules of Evidence

§ 31.02 Court Must Exclude Witnesses on Party's Request

§ 31.03 Witnesses Not Subject to Exclusion
[1] Party Who Is Natural Person May Not Be Excluded
[2] Representative of Party Who Is Not Natural Person May Not Be Excluded
[3] Person Essential to Presentation of Party's Cause May Not Be Excluded
[4] Person Authorized By Statute to be Present May Not Be Excluded

§ 31.04 Claiming Exemption From Exclusion

§ 31.05 Timing Of Request to Exclude

§ 31.06 Court Should Instruct Excluded Witnesses Not to Discuss Case With Each Other

§ 31.07 Considering Consequences of Non-Compliance With Rule

§ 31.08 Evaluating Available Sanctions

§ 31.09 Barring Testimony Based on Violation of Exclusion Order

§ 31.10 Ruling on Effect of Violation Is Within Discretion of Trial Court

§ 31.11 Showing Harm From Violation to Obtain Mistrial, New Trial, or Reversal on Appeal

§ 31.12 Tactical Considerations Involved in the Exclusion of Witnesses

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

Under Rule 615 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, a party may request the trial court to remove most witnesses from the courtroom during the testimony of other witnesses. The chapter explains the purpose of the rule, its mandatory nature, and the instructions that the court should give to the excluded witnesses. It also describes witnesses who may not be excluded, including parties and persons essential to the presentation of a party's case. The consequences of violating an exclusionary order are examined, and the chapter concludes with a discussion of possible sanctions for violating such an order.

For expanded coverage of exclusion of witnesses, see Weinstein's Federal Evidence, Ch. 615, Exclusion of Witnesses (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.01

§ 31.01 Excluding Witnesses Under the Rules of Evidence

The exclusion of witnesses from the courtroom is governed by Rule 615 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, which provides:

At the request of a party the court shall order witnesses excluded so that they cannot hear the testimony of other witnesses, and it may make the order of its own motion. This rule does not authorize exclusion of (1) a party who is a natural person, or (2) an officer or employee of a party which is not a natural person designated as its representative by its attorney, or (3) a person whose presence is shown by a party to be essential to the presentation of the party's cause, or (4) a person authorized by statute to be present. n1

Rule 615 authorizes the trial court to exclude witnesses from the courtroom so that they cannot hear the testimony of the other witnesses. n2 A court order excluding witnesses is sometimes referred to as a sequestration order, and witnesses who have been excluded from the courtroom may be termed "sequestered." n3

Exclusion or sequestration is designed to prevent "the possibility of one witness shaping his testimony to match that given by other witnesses at the trial." n4 Additionally, if witnesses who are questioned separately use language that is very similar, it may be concluded that the similarity results from coaching, memorization, or fabrication. n5

The rule by its own terms applies only during the testimony of witnesses. n6 The rule applies to witnesses even after they have testified, if they might be recalled for further testimony. The concerns of preventing the tailoring of testimony, which gave rise to the rule, are equally valid for rebuttal witnesses. n7

There is some disagreement as to whether witnesses should be excluded at other times during the trial such as during opening arguments n8 and closing arguments. n9

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionEvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonySequestration

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 77(b), which provides that all trials on the merits shall be conducted in open court, appears to be concerned with policy issues unrelated to those presented by the exclusion of witnesses. That rule apparently does not limit the effect of Federal Rule of Evidence 615. See also Weinstein's Federal Evidence, Ch. 615, Exclusion of Witnesses (Matthew Bender 2 ed.).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 615.

(n3)Footnote 3. Opus 3 Ltd. v. Heritage Park, Inc., 91 F.3d 625, 628 (4th Cir. 1996) .

(n4)Footnote 4. United States v. Johnston, 578 F.2d 1352, 1355 (10th Cir. 1978) , cert. denied, 439 U.S. 931 (1978) .

(n5)Footnote 5. United States v. Perry, 815 F.2d 1100, 1105-1106 (7th Cir. 1987) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Evid. 615.

(n7)Footnote 7. United States v. Ell, 718 F.2d 291, 293 (9th Cir. 1983) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Compare Queen v. Washington Metro. Area Transit Authority, 842 F.2d 476, 481-482 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (application of rule during opening arguments) with United States v. Brown, 547 F.2d 36, 38 (3d Cir. 1976) (although Fed. R. Evid. 615 does not apply during opening arguments, but trial court has discretion to make exclusion order during opening arguments).

(n9)Footnote 9. Compare United States v. Alvarez, 755 F.2d 830, 860-861 (11th Cir. 1985) (government agents who had testified at trial could not be excluded from courtroom after close of testimony, since "Rule 615 is inapplicable after all witness testimony has been concluded"), with United States v. Juarez, 573 F.2d 267, 281 (5th Cir. 1978) (proper to exclude witnesses during closing arguments which often restate witnesses' testimony, since trial judge could justifiably fear that fairness of a second trial might be jeopardized if witnesses learned the testimony of other witnesses).

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.02

§ 31.02 Court Must Exclude Witnesses on Party's Request

Rule 615 gives a party a right to request the exclusion of witnesses from the courtroom. A court may not deny a request for the exclusion of witnesses, except as to a witness who fits into one of four exempted categories. n1 After an exclusion order is issued, each witness must be excluded from the courtroom both before and after testifying. n2 Although a court may exclude witnesses on its own motion, a party who does not request the exclusion of witnesses waives the right to complain about the trial court's failure to issue an exclusion order. n3

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See United States v. Farnham, 791 F.2d 331, 334-335 (4th Cir. 1986) .

(n2)Footnote 2. United States v. Greschner, 802 F.2d 373, 375-376 (10th Cir. 1986) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See United States v. Abbott, 30 F.3d 71, 73 (7th Cir. 1994).

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.03

§ 31.03 Witnesses Not Subject to Exclusion

[1] Party Who Is Natural Person May Not Be Excluded

A party who is a natural person may not be excluded from the courtroom. This exception addresses constitutional concerns about fundamental fairness and due process, which would arise if a party were excluded from the proceedings. n1

[2] Representative of Party Who Is Not Natural Person May Not Be Excluded

Rule 615 prohibits exclusion of "an officer or employee of a party which is not a natural person designated as its representative by its attorney." n2 To be designated as a party's representative, the officer or employee is not required to be an agent who is empowered to bind the party. n3 However, a person who is not an officer or employee of a party may not be designated as its representative. n4

One issue that may arise, is whether a party has the right to more than one designated representative. Some courts permit only a single representative, n5 some courts permit more than one representative when there is a practical reason justifying the use of more than one representative, n6 and some courts impose no limitation on the number of representatives. n7 In addition, it is the practice of some courts to allow multiple representatives to remain for most testimony but to exclude the other representatives when one representative is testifying. n8

The court has the authority under Rule 611 to order witnesses to testify at an early stage of the trial. n9 When the government designates as its representative an agent in a criminal case who has been in charge of the case and it is anticipated that the agent will be called as a witness, the agent may be called first so as to avoid giving the prosecution unfair advantage or the appearance that the prosecution is being favored. n10 In most instances, however, the court will not interfere with the parties' choice of the order in which evidence will be introduced. n11

[3] Person Essential to Presentation of Party's Cause May Not Be Excluded

Rule 615 prohibits exclusion of "a person whose presence is shown by a party to be essential to the presentation of the party's cause." n12 This category includes persons such as an agent who handled the transaction being litigated or an expert needed to advise counsel in the management of the litigation. Although the exemption is phrased in the singular, courts have the discretion to exempt more than one witness as essential to the preparation of the party's case. n13 This practice seems appropriate, since it is not difficult to imagine a complex case in which several witnesses could reasonably be characterized as essential. Whether a witness is essential and thus should be exempt from an exclusion order is "a matter soundly within the discretion of the trial court." n14 When the trial court exercises its discretion to permit a person asserted to be essential to the presentation of a party's cause to remain in the courtroom, the trial court should fully articulate the basis for the exercise of its discretion. n15 This exception is frequently invoked in the case of expert witnesses, usually on the ground that the expert will base his or her testimony and conclusions on evidence that will be shown at trial. n16

Another type of witness often viewed as essential is a "summary witness," who testifies to summarize voluminous information such as documents, charts, or tapes, to clarify the situation for the jury. Some courts hold that a summary witness is automatically recognized as essential to the presentation of a party's case. n17 However, such witnesses may also qualify independently for exemption from exclusion as expert witnesses, n18 or as designated representatives of a party. n19 The Second Circuit has listed the following factors to guide the trial court's determination whether a witness is essential: n20 (1) how critical is witness's testimony; (2) is that testimony ordinarily subject to tailoring; (3) is the testimony likely to cover the same issues as that of other witnesses; (4) in what order will the witnesses be called; (5) is there any potential bias that could incline the witness to tailor his or her testimony; and (6) is the witness's presence essential or simply desirable?

[4] Person Authorized By Statute to be Present May Not Be Excluded

Rule 615 prohibits exclusion of "a person authorized by statute to be present." n21 This provision is intended both to conform the rule to federal victim's rights acts, and also to account for any other existing or future statutory exceptions. Under the Victims' Rights and Restitution Act of 1990, crime victims have the right "to be present at all public court proceedings related to the offense, unless the court determines that testimony by the victim would be materially affected if the victim heard other testimony at trial." n22 In this context, the term "victim" means a person who "has suffered direct physical, emotional, or pecuniary harm as a result of the commission of a crime." n23 If the affected person is an institutional entity, the term "victim" means an authorized representative of the entity. n24 If the victim is "under 18 years of age, incompetent, incapacitated, or deceased," the person with the right to attend is one of the following (in the following order of preference): n25

- A spouse
- A legal guardian
- A parent
- A child
- A sibling
- Another family member
- Another person designated by the court

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Evid. 615 advisory committee's note. See Geders v. United States, 425 U.S. 80, 96 S. Ct. 1330, 47 L. Ed. 2d 592 (1976) ; Potashnick v. Port City Constr. Co., 609 F.2d 1101 (5th Cir. 1980) , cert. denied, 449 U.S. 820, 101 S. Ct. 78, 66 L. Ed. 2d 22 (1980) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 615; Nanoski v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., 874 F.2d 529, 531 (8th Cir. 1989) (witness who "had been designated at trial as [the defendant's] corporate representative" was "not excludable" under Fed. R. Evid. 615).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Queen v. Washington Metro. Area Transit Authority, 842 F.2d 476, 481-482 (D.C. Cir. 1988) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Opus 3 Ltd. v. Heritage Park, Inc., 91 F.3d 625, 630 (4th Cir. 1996) .

(n5)Footnote 5. United States v. Pulley, 922 F.2d 1283, 1285-1287 (6th Cir. 1991) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See United States v. Jackson, 60 F.3d 128, 134-135 (2d Cir. 1995) .

(n7)Footnote 7. United States v. Spina, 654 F. Supp. 94, 95 (S.D. Fla. 1987) , aff'd, 881 F.2d 1086 (11th Cir. 1989) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See, e.g., United States v. Ramirez, 963 F.2d 693, 703-704 (5th Cir. 1992) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Evid. 611.

(n10)Footnote 10. United States v. Frazier, 417 F.2d 1138, 1139 (4th Cir. 1969) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See United States v. Parodi, 703 F.2d 768, 775 (4th Cir. 1983) .

(n12)Footnote 12. Fed. R. Evid. 615(3).

(n13)Footnote 13. See United States v. Green, 293 F.3d 886, 892 (5th Cir. 2002) .

(n14)Footnote 14. See Polythane Sys., Inc. v. Marina Ventures Int'l, Ltd., 993 F.2d 1201, 1209 (5th Cir. 1993).

(n15)Footnote 15. See Government of Virgin Islands v. Edinborough, 625 F.2d 472, 476 (3d Cir. 1980) .

(n16)Footnote 16. See Opus 3 Ltd. v. Heritage Park, Inc., 91 F.3d 625, 629 (4th Cir. 1996) (party failed to establish that claimed expert needed to hear trial testimony of other witnesses, and so failed to prove that his presence was "essential").

(n17)Footnote 17. See United States v. Bertoli, 854 F. Supp. 975, 1037-1038 (D.N.J. 1994) .

(n18)Footnote 18. See United States v. Mohney, 949 F.2d 1397, 1404-1405 (6th Cir. 1991) .

(n19)Footnote 19. See United States v. Strauss, 473 F.2d 1262, 1263 (3d Cir. 1973) .

(n20)Footnote 20. Bruneau ex rel. Schofield v. South Kortright Cent. Sch. Dist., 163 F.3d 749, 762 (2d Cir. 1998) .

(n21)Footnote 21. Fed. R. Evid. 615(4); see also United States v. Visinaiz, 428 F.3d 1300, 1314-1315 (10th Cir. 2005).

(n22)Footnote 22. 42 U.S.C. § 10606(b)(4).

(n23)Footnote 23. 42 U.S.C. § 10607(e)(2).

(n24)Footnote 24. 42 U.S.C. § 10607(e)(2)(A).

(n25)Footnote 25. 42 U.S.C. § 10607(e)(2)(B).

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.04

§ 31.04 Claiming Exemption From Exclusion

Under Rule 615, a trial court that issues an exclusion order must exclude all witnesses other than a party or a party's designate unless the party opposing exclusion can convince the court to exercise its discretion to exempt a particular witness from its order. n1 The Rule carries a strong presumption in favor of exclusion. Thus, the party opposing exclusion has the burden to demonstrate why a particular exception applies to the desired witness. n2 If a party is mistakenly excluded and the attorney does not object, the party may find that his or her right to be present has been waived. n3

Similarly, because the decision to exempt a witness as essential to the presentation of a party's cause falls within the discretion of the trial court, it is the burden of that party to ask for an exemption. n4 When a request for sequestration is made, counsel should specifically set forth why the sequestration is needed and specify the parts of the trial during which the order is to apply. n5

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See United States v. Agnes, 753 F.2d 293, 306-307 (3d Cir. 1985) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See United States v. Jackson, 60 F.3d 128, 135 (2d Cir. 1995) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Hull v. Merck & Co., 758 F.2d 1474, 1478 (11th Cir. 1985).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Polythane Sys, Inc.. v. Marina Ventures Int'l, Ltd., 993 F.2d 1201, 1209 (5th Cir. 1993).

(n5)Footnote 5. Government of Virgin Islands v. Edinborough, 625 F.2d 472, 475 (3d Cir. 1980) .

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.05

§ 31.05 Timing Of Request to Exclude

Rule 615 does not require that the motion to exclude witnesses be made at any particular stage of the trial. The cases imply that it can be made at any time--even if testimony has already been heard. n1 It is probably correct to say that the matter lies within the trial court's discretion. n2

In practice, however, most judges take a strict view of the timeliness requirement on motions to exclude and will refuse to entertain such a motion after even a small part of the evidence has been received. In theory perhaps, Rule 615, which contains no requirement as to timeliness, should have the effect of moderating this rigid attitude. However, most of the decisions of the trial court on these matters are discretionary. Reversals of rulings on the exclusion of witnesses can be obtained, if at all, only upon a showing of both a clear abuse of discretion and substantial prejudice. Accordingly, make all motions and objections under Rule 615 on the record before any evidence is received, and before opening statements, if you want to exclude witnesses during those statements.

You also may wish to exclude witnesses, or designate a party representative or person essential to the presentation of the client's cause, in certain pre-trial proceedings. Rule 615 applies to depositions and may be invoked when necessary. n3 The same requirements for exemption from exclusion apply at this time as during trial. n4

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Wood v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., 637 F.2d 1188, 1194 (8th Cir. 1981) , cert. denied, 454 U.S. 837, 102 S. Ct. 142, 70 L. Ed. 2d 118 (1981) ; Sperberg v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 519 F.2d 708, 713-14 (6th Cir. 1975) , cert. denied, 423 U.S. 987, 96 S. Ct. 395, 46 L. Ed. 2d 303 (1975) (pre-rule) ("There is no federal rule requiring that a request for separation of witnesses be made at any particular stage of a trial.").

(n2)Footnote 2. Sperberg v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 519 F.2d 708 (6th Cir. 1975) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Cox v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 146 B.R. 800 (Bankr. E. D. Ark. 1992) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Cox v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 146 B.R. 800 (Bankr. E. D. Ark. 1992) .

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.06

§ 31.06 Court Should Instruct Excluded Witnesses Not to Discuss Case With Each Other

Rule 615 gives no guidance on what instructions, if any, the court should give the witnesses when they are excluded from the courtroom. n1 However, if the witnesses were free to discuss their testimony with each other, it would defeat the purpose of excluding them from the courtroom. As a result, most cases have indicated that the court should direct the witnesses not to discuss the case with each other. n2 These instructions, however, usually permit the witnesses to discuss their own or other witnesses' testimony with counsel for either side. n3 The court is not required to instruct a witness who has been exempted from a sequestration order not to discuss his testimony with other witnesses, in the absence of a request for such an instruction. n4

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 615.

(n2)Footnote 2. See United States v. Green, 293 F.3d 886, 892 (5th Cir. 2002) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., United States v. Rhynes, 218 F.3d 310, 317 (4th Cir. 2000) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See United States v. Visinaiz, 428 F.3d 1300, 1314-1315 (10th Cir. 2005) .

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.07

§ 31.07 Considering Consequences of Non-Compliance With Rule

The trial judge violates Rule 615 if he or she does not issue an exclusion order on the request of a party; if the order fails to exempt a natural party, the designee of another type of party, a person essential to the presentation of a party's cause, or a person authorized by statute to be present; or if the order exempts a witness who does not qualify for exemption. n1

A witness violates Rule 615 if he or she remains in the courtroom despite an exclusion order. n2 It is also a violation of the rule if excluded witnesses disobey an instruction not to speak with each other. n3 Some courts take the position that mere contact between excluded witnesses does not violate the rule unless the aggrieved party makes a showing that the witnesses actually spoke about the case to each other after having been instructed not to. n4 It has been found that the rule is violated if a witness who has been excluded from the courtroom reads daily copies of the trial transcript. n5 There are, however, alternative ways in which a witness's recollection can be stimulated other than by hearing fellow witnesses testify, reading their testimony, or discussing their testimony with them. Conferences with an attorney prior to trial, n6 refreshment by pertinent materials at trial or before trial, and reading of the witness's own statements are some of the ways in which the witness's memory can be revived without running undue risks of perjury or suggestion. Rule 612 may minimize the risks of these alternatives by requiring witnesses to divulge what writings they consulted in preparing their testimony if the court, in its discretion, so orders.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Evid. 615 ; see also United States v. Ell, 718 F.2d 291, 293 (9th Cir. 1983) (distinguishing between errors by trial court and violations by witnesses).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 615.

(n3)Footnote 3. See United States v. Eyster, 948 F.2d 1196, 1210-1211 (11th Cir. 1991) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See United States v. Solorio, 337 F.3d 580, 593-594 (6th Cir. 2003) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Miller v. Universal City Studios, Inc., 650 F.2d 1365, 1373 (5th Cir. 1981) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See United States v. Rhynes, 218 F.3d 310 (4th Cir. 2000) .

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.08

§ 31.08 Evaluating Available Sanctions

Rule 615 is silent on the consequences of noncompliance with an order of exclusion, and the imposition of sanctions is therefore a matter of case law. n1

A witness who has violated an exclusion order may be cited for contempt. n2

A judge who has excluded the witnesses may permit the opposing counsel to comment on a witness's noncompliance with the order as affecting the witness's credibility. n3 The trial court may allow counsel to cross-examine the affected witnesses about the nature and extent of their violation. This approach simultaneously explores the effect of the violation and reveals its occurrence to the finder of fact. n4 The trial court itself may instruct the jury about the witness's violation of the exclusion order so the jury may assess the witness's credibility in light of the violation. n5An instruction or comment, while useful, may have unwarranted repercussions if the witness remained in the courtroom or had a discussion with another witness but his or her testimony was unaffected. A derogatory comment on the witness's credibility under these circumstances may actually distort the truth.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Pickel v. United States, 746 F.2d 176, 182 (3d Cir. 1984) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See United States v. McMahon, 104 F.3d 638, 642-643 (4th Cir. 1997) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See United States v. Rhynes, 218 F.3d 310 (4th Cir. 2000) (one available sanction for violation of sequestration order is instructing jury that they may consider the violation as affecting the witness's credibility).

(n4)Footnote 4. See United States v. Posada-Rios, 158 F.3d 832, 871-872 (5th Cir. 1998) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Dutton v. Brown, 812 F.2d 593, 601 (10th Cir. 1987) .

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.09

§ 31.09 Barring Testimony Based on Violation of Exclusion Order

In most reported cases dealing with violations of exclusion orders, the opponent of the party who called the offending witness moves to bar the witness from testifying. One strain of authority holds that it is ordinarily an abuse of discretion to disqualify a witness from testifying because of a violation of the rule, because it deprives the party offering the witness of the opportunity to present relevant testimony. n1

On the other hand, barring the witness from testifying may be an appropriate sanction under certain circumstances. n2 In some instances, if the witness has already testified before the violation is discovered, the testimony may be stricken. n3 For example, the trial court may exclude testimony even though the exclusion might have a slight prejudicial effect if the party could have presented the same information through another witness who has not violated the exclusion order. n4 Most courts hold that violating a proper exclusion order is not in itself sufficient to warrant excluding the testimony of the witness who violated the rule. n5 These courts require at least a showing of probable prejudice resulting from the violation before authorizing exclusion of the witness's testimony. n6 Prejudice might be shown, for example, if the party identifies portions of the testimony that may have been tailored as a result of hearing other witnesses' testimony. n7 Prejudice is not shown, however, if the only evidence heard or conversation held in violation of the rule was fully explored in court and did not involve any substantive aspect of the case. n8 Moreover, the purpose of the rule is not offended when a person who has remained in the courtroom is called to the stand to impeach a witness who gave testimony that was contrary to previous statements. A person called to impeach a prior witness would not be tailoring his or her testimony to match prior testimony. n9

Some courts do not authorize the exclusion of testimony, despite a showing of actual prejudice resulting from the violation, unless a witness, counsel, or party deliberately violated the rule. n10 Another approach is to refrain from excluding testimony if imposition of the sanction would make it impossible for the party to present its claims or defenses. n11 Based on similar considerations, a court may favor barring testimony that does not bear directly on a controlling issue in the case n12 or testimony that is largely cumulative to evidence already admitted. n13 It may be possible in some cases for the court to limit the sanction by excluding only testimony that might have been affected by the particular exposure that occurred. n14

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See United States v. Rhynes, 218 F.3d 310 (4th Cir. 2000) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Rowan v. Owens, 752 F.2d 1186, 1191 (7th Cir. 1984) (barring testimony "is a natural sanction for violation" of witness exclusion order).

(n3)Footnote 3. Jerry Parks Equip. Co. v. Southeast Equip. Co., 817 F.2d 340, 342 (5th Cir. 1987) (trial court did not abuse its discretion in striking testimony of defendant's witness for violation of sequestration order).

(n4)Footnote 4. See United States v. Sanchez, 866 F. Supp. 1542, 1548 (D. Kan. 1994) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See T.J. Stevenson & Co., Inc. v. 81,193 Bags of Flour, 629 F.2d 338, 384 (5th Cir. 1980) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See United States v. Solorio, 337 F.3d 580, 593-594 (6th Cir. 2003) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See United States v. Wylie, 919 F.2d 969, 975-977 (5th Cir. 1990) .

(n8)Footnote 8. See United States v. Posada-Rios, 158 F.3d 832, 871-872 (5th Cir. 1998) .

(n9)Footnote 9. United States v. Shurn, 849 F.2d 1090, 1094 (8th Cir. 1988) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See United States v. Friedman, 854 F.2d 535, 568 (2d Cir. 1988) .

(n11)Footnote 11. See Rowan v. Owens, 752 F.2d 1186, 1191 (7th Cir. 1984) , cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1140 (1984) .

(n12)Footnote 12. See, e.g., United States v. Nash, 649 F.2d 369, 371 (5th Cir. 1981) .

(n13)Footnote 13. See, e.g., United States v. Sanchez, 866 F. Supp. 1542, 1548 (D. Kan. 1994) .

(n14)Footnote 14. See Central Telecommunications v. TCI Cablevision, 610 F. Supp. 891, 905 (W.D. Mo. 1985) , aff'd, 800 F.2d 711 (8th Cir. 1986) .

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.10

§ 31.10 Ruling on Effect of Violation Is Within Discretion of Trial Court

When a witness has violated an exclusion order, the determination whether to prohibit the witness from testifying is left to the discretion of the trial judge. n1 Thus, trial court orders barring testimony for a violation of an exclusion order are commonly upheld, n2 especially when the testimony excluded would have been of limited usefulness in establishing the party's claim or defense. n3

On the other hand, since the exclusion of testimony is a serious sanction, a trial court also has discretion to permit a witness to testify even though the witness has violated an exclusion order. n4 Even if there may have been some prejudice after a violation of an exclusion order, the trial court may retain discretion to overlook the violation if the same result would have occurred without it. n5

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. United States v. Friedman, 854 F.2d 535, 568 (2d Cir. 1988) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See United States v. Montgomery, 262 F.3d 233, 243-244 (4th Cir. 2001) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Matter of Martin, 963 F.2d 809, 814-815 (5th Cir. 1992) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See United States v. Rugiero, 20 F.3d 1387, 1394 (6th Cir. 1994) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See United States v. Nelson, 603 F.2d 42, 47 (8th Cir. 1979) .

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.11

§ 31.11 Showing Harm From Violation to Obtain Mistrial, New Trial, or Reversal on Appeal

In determining whether the court's ruling on a Rule 615 issue or a witness's violation of an exclusion order amounts to reversible error, most circuits apply the harmless error standard. Under this standard, there is no reversal unless the party who moved for exclusion of the witnesses was prejudiced by the error. n1

Some courts require the party who moved for exclusion of all witnesses to show that a violation of the rule resulted in prejudice. n2 Another approach is to place the burden to demonstrate lack of prejudice on the party who opposed sequestration. n3

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See United States v. Jackson, 60 F.3d 128, 136 (2d Cir. 1995) (most circuits apply harmless error test to violations of Fed. R. Evid. 615).

(n2)Footnote 2. Capeway Roofing Systems v. Chao, 391 F.3d 56, 59 (1st Cir. 2004) (petitioner roofing contractor failed to show prejudice, even though sequestration of witnesses had been ordered, because there was no indication that second witness changed his testimony or that he added any significant new evidence to regulatory agency's case).

(n3)Footnote 3. See United States v. Jackson, 60 F.3d 128, 136 (2d Cir. 1995) .

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 31 Exclusion of Witnesses *

3-31 Federal Litigation Guide § 31.12

§ 31.12 Tactical Considerations Involved in the Exclusion of Witnesses

The decision whether to obtain an exclusionary order will depend upon a witness-by-witness analysis of whether your witnesses or your adversary's witnesses will suffer more as a result of being excluded from the courtroom. That decision will also depend, in part, on how important the presence and assistance of particular witnesses in the courtroom will be to you or to your adversary and on whether you believe that you or your adversary will be successful in exempting those witnesses from the operation of the exclusionary order. Although a motion in limine seeking a ruling on exceptions is the most effective way to find out whom the court will exempt, such a motion may cause opposing counsel to think more about trial strategy than might otherwise be the case.

Since plaintiff's witnesses will normally testify early in a trial and will, therefore, normally obtain less benefit from hearing the testimony of other witnesses, plaintiffs generally might be more inclined to invoke the exclusionary rule. From the standpoint of assisting in the conduct of the trial after they have testified, plaintiff's witnesses would also be available earlier in the case than defendant's witnesses. However, if, under the terms of the exclusionary order, witnesses cannot remain in the courtroom after they have testified, or if particular witnesses will have to be recalled later in the case, the plaintiff may prefer not to invoke the rule.

At a more fundamental level, however, the basic decision whether to obtain an exclusionary order should not be resolved on a simplistic plaintiff-versus-defendant analysis. Plaintiff's witnesses may be in particular need of the reassurance that the observation of even a few witnesses or a few hours of court proceedings will provide. Some of plaintiff's more important witnesses may be needed only for rebuttal. Defendant's witnesses, on the other hand, may be so well versed in the facts of the case, or otherwise expert in the litigation process, that hearing some part, or all, of the proceedings will be of no particular advantage to them. In short, each situation must be evaluated based on the particular facts of the case.

* Chapter 31 revised in 1993 by Andrea L. Sanderson, Berryhill, Cage & North, P.C., Denver, Colorado.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide 32.syn

§ 32.syn Synopsis to Chapter 32: Opening Statement *

§ 32.01 Outlining the Case for the Jury

§ 32.02 Federal Rules are Silent Concerning Opening Statements

§ 32.03 Local Rules of Some Districts Govern Opening Statements

§ 32.04 Understanding the Objectives of Opening Statements

§ 32.05 Drafting Considerations
[1] Outlining the Opening Statement
[2] Presenting the Case Theme
[3] Using Persuasion to Advance the Client's Case
[4] Avoiding Unnecessary Repetition
[5] Considering the Plaintiff's Perspective
[6] Considering the Defendant's Perspective

§ 32.06 Conveying Key Facts to the Jury
[1] Developing a Chronology of Facts
[2] Relying on Specific Facts and Not General Assertions
[3] Dealing with Unfavorable Facts

§ 32.07 Preparing the Jury for Key Witnesses and Their Testimony

§ 32.08 Using Exhibits During Opening Statement
[1] Presenting Exhibits to Organize the Opening Statement and to Engage the Jury
[2] Seeking Leave to Use Exhibits for Opening Statement
[3] Challenging the Use of Misleading Exhibits

§ 32.09 Determining the Proper Length of the Opening Statement
[1] Length of Opening Statements Established by Local Rule or the Trial Judge
[2] Seeking Permission to Exceed Time Limit

§ 32.10 Determining the Order of Opening Statements

[1] Party with Burden of Proof Generally Makes First Statement
[2] Opening Statement Generally Precedes Presentation of Evidence

§ 32.11 Waiving Opportunity for Opening Statement

§§ 32.12through 32.19 [Reserved]

§ 32.20 Argumentation and Discussion of the Law Not Permitted
[1] Avoiding Argument
[2] Discussion of the Law

§ 32.21 Avoiding Overstatements

§ 32.22 Considering the Effect of Admissions Made During Opening Statement

§ 32.23 Objecting to the Content of the Adversary's Opening Statement

§ 32.24 Evaluating the Standard for Mistrial Based on Content of Opening Statement

§ 32.25 Evaluating the Standard of Review for Mistrial Based on Content of Opening Statement

§ 32.26 CHECKLIST: Drafting the Opening Statement

63 of 181 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter provides an in-depth look at one of the most important tools available to trial attorneys--the opening statement.

The relatively few technical rules relating to opening statements are straightforward. In the absence of formal rules, it is essential to understand the informal practices and customs of the particular court and jurisdiction in which your case is being tried. Specific local rules also may be significant and should be consulted.

The chapter discusses the following topics concerning opening statements:

- Objectives and drafting considerations
- Communicating key facts to the jury
- Introduction of key witnesses and documents
- Using exhibits
- Length and order of the opening statement
- Prohibitions against argument, legal discussion, inflammatory statements, and overstatements
- Effect of admissions made during opening statement
- Comments that may be grounds for mistrial

The chapter concludes with a checklist that sets forth objectives and techniques for drafting and presenting the opening statement.

For expanded coverage of opening statements, see WEINSTEIN'S Federal Evidence, Ch. 611, Mode and Order of Interrogation and Presentation (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.01

§ 32.01 Outlining the Case for the Jury

The purpose of an opening statement is to state what evidence will be presented, to make it easier for the jurors to understand what is to follow, and to relate parts of the evidence and testimony to the whole. It is not an occasion for argument. n1

A good opening statement paves the way for a successful trial. It represents the attorney's first opportunity to persuade the jury that the case outcome should be in the client's favor. The opening statement should be concise, persuasive, and engaging. The trial attorney should provide a synopsis for the entire case during the opening statement and demonstrate that the evidence will prove the client's case or defense.

The purpose of an opening statement is to outline the case so the jurors can follow and understand the evidence as it unfolds during the trial. It also provides an opportunity to:

- Highlight important witnesses and testimony that will be heard during the trial, and
- Identify important documents and demonstrate what they will prove

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsImproper Remarks

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Testa v. Village of Mundelein, Ill, 89 F.3d 443, 445 (7th Cir. 1996) .

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.02

§ 32.02 Federal Rules are Silent Concerning Opening Statements

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Federal Rules of Evidence are silent with respect to the use of opening statements at trial. Except in those relatively few jurisdictions where local rules speak to one or more aspects of the subject, the technical rules relating to opening statements are matters of custom and discretion of the trial court. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Puerto Rico Aqueduct and Sewer Authority v. Constructora Lluch, Inc., 169 F.3d 68, 83 (1st Cir. 1999) .

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

66 of 181 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.03

§ 32.03 Local Rules of Some Districts Govern Opening Statements

The local rules in some districts allow the option of making an opening statement, n1 while others provide counsel "shall" make an opening statement. n2

Some districts limit the length of opening statements, n3 and still others preclude opening statements altogether, absent leave of court. n4

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureCounselGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsCourtsRule Application & Interpretation

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See D. Ariz. Loc. R. 2.14(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. See E.D.N.C. Civ. R. 39.3

(n3)Footnote 3. See N.D. Iowa Loc. R. 83.6(a) (unless the court orders otherwise, an opening statement must not exceed 15 minutes).

(n4)Footnote 4. See D. Conn. Loc. R. 12(d) (opening statements by counsel not allowed except upon application of presiding judge out of the hearing of the jury).

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.04

§ 32.04 Understanding the Objectives of Opening Statements

Some trial attorneys consider the opening statement to be the most important part of a trial because the judge and jury are likely to be most alert, receptive, and responsive at the commencement of the trial. However, evidence of the persuasive effect of opening statements is often exaggerated. n1 Although the opening statement is critical part of the trial, it should not be overplayed. As one court has noted, "[f]irst impressions count, but even in an era of courtroom cameras, short attention spans, and newsworthy sound bites, trial lawyers are well-served when they follow the Broadway adage and save a little for the last act'." n2

The following is a list of objectives to keep in mind while preparing the opening statement:

- Inform the jury of the facts of your case. At the end of your opening statement the jury should have a general understanding of what it will ultimately be asked to decide, and of the facts which bear on those decisions.

- Make the jury understand your version or theories of the issues and facts. Tell the jury not only how they should decide the case, but why.

- Forewarn the jury of those facts which are unfavorable to your case. Explain that there will be testimony which allows more than one conclusion because different people saw things differently. Without making admissions, guide the jury into seeing only one logical solution--the one you seek.

- Educate the jury as to the manner in which the trial will proceed. Explain difficult terms, diagrams and exhibits, how the witnesses interact, what they will say, and what it means.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJudgment as Matter of LawDirected VerdictsCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See, Hydrite Chemical Co. v. Calumet Lubricants Co., 47 F.3d 887, 891 (7th Cir. 1995) ; see also Hans Zeisel, "A Jury Hoax--The Superpower of the Opening Statement," Litigation, Summer 1988, p. 17.

(n2)Footnote 2. Testa v. Village of Mundelein, Ill, 89 F.3d 443, 446 (7th Cir. 1996) .

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.05

§ 32.05 Drafting Considerations

[1] Outlining the Opening Statement

It is essential to prepare your opening statement with great care. It should be outlined in detail far enough in advance of trial so that it can be critically analyzed from a variety of standpoints, such as: completeness, clarity, and persuasive impact.

Do not read or recite the opening statement. Outline the significant portions of the opening and have the outline at the rostrum for guidance. This will help to maintain the mental flexibility necessary to adjust either the order of the presentation or the emphasis which you give to particular subjects to suit the emerging realities of the courtroom situation.

Reduce your notes to one or two note-cards. The use of exhibits and other visual aids is a useful mean of engaging the jury, and visuals help to present the opening statement with less reliance on notes.

[2] Presenting the Case Theme

Let your opening statement tell a story in a logical and well-reasoned manner so the jury is left with the impression that the results you advocate are the only logical conclusion to be reached.

You should begin your opening statement with a general but strong summary of your client's position on all of the major issues in the case and be very candid with the jury as to exactly what you are doing and why. The theme of the case is also the theme of the opening statement. Make sure that the jury can remember your opening statement by the theme that you weave throughout, either by repeating it word for word or by expressing the same theme in different ways.

[3] Using Persuasion to Advance the Client's Case

Persuasion is the most important objective of an opening statement. In essence, everything you say in opening statement, from your initial introduction to your concluding remarks, should be directed to persuading the jurors to your point of view. Even in dealing with matters potentially harmful to your client's position, your objective is to persuade the jury that your client should prevail.

Accordingly, every statement made and every point included in an opening statement should be weighed to ascertain whether the statement advances your client's interest. If it does not, it should be deleted or revised.

[4] Avoiding Unnecessary Repetition

Opening statements should be clear and concise. Even in complex cases, you should not insult the jury's intelligence by belaboring the obvious or by unnecessary repetition. The opening statement should not be so long that, either in its own right or by comparison with the statement made by your adversary, it seems apologetic or defensive. In a particular case, where both the facts and your client's version of them are straightforward, you may want to deliberately "grandstand" by making a statement that is extremely short and in pointed contrast to the opponent's longer statement.

[5] Considering the Plaintiff's Perspective

Plaintiff's counsel must lay out the prima facie case in the opening statement. Plaintiff's counsel should prepare an opening statement that tells the story of why the lawsuit was filed. The goal should be to motivate the jury to right the wrong to which the plaintiff has been subjected. The sense that an injustice has occurred will encourage the jurors to see the facts from the plaintiff's point of view.

[6] Considering the Defendant's Perspective

The defendant's opening statement is of particular importance. Plaintiff will proceed first with its evidence, and in a long trial, it may be days or weeks before the jury hears a cohesive presentation of the defendant's version of the case. Therefore, defense counsel must establish credibility and fairness by way of the opening statement. Counsel should avoid negative statements, apologies to the jurors, and other statements that may undermine the importance of the opening statement. If, however, plaintiff's counsel has overstated plaintiff's case, you may want to remind the jury that what your adversary says is not evidence.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsImproper Remarks

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.06

§ 32.06 Conveying Key Facts to the Jury

[1] Developing a Chronology of Facts

Facts are often best presented in chronological fashion. Use of a sequential time line in the opening statement generally will make it easier for the jury to follow the case. A chronological approach will also make it easier to relate particular facts to particular issues. At the conclusion of the chronological development, it is often useful to recapitulate the issues as illustrated by the central facts.

Although a chronological presentation of the facts is the most straight-forward approach for the opening statement in many cases, the facts in some case are best understood when relayed on an issue-by-issue basis. If the facts of the case are genuinely linked to the separate issues in the case, the facts should be presented in that manner. If certain facts are common to all of the issues in the case, while others are best stated on an issue-by-issue, it may be possible to present a chronological overview of the facts and to then deal with particular facts on an issue-by-issue basis.

[2] Relying on Specific Facts and Not General Assertions

General assertions are rarely as effective as the recitation of specific facts. On the other hand, an opening statement should not bog down the fact finder with too much detail. Accordingly, the opening statement should be a continuing balance of the general and the specific: "The evidence will show that my client was not negligent. It will demonstrate that fact in many ways, some of the most important of which I will now describe to you. ...

[3] Dealing with Unfavorable Facts

Your case will be won in part by advancing those facts which are favorable to your client and in part by explaining or negating those facts which are, or appear to be, adverse. The time to start dealing with those adverse facts is at the beginning, i.e., in opening statement. For plaintiff's counsel, the ideal effect of addressing unfavorable facts will be that when the jurors hear the particular adverse facts mentioned by defendant's counsel, they will also consider the plaintiff's explanation. Moreover, the jurors will not be surprised by the adverse facts, which will lend to the plaintiff's credibility.

Defendant's counsel must also be sure to respond to each significant adverse fact which that's counsel has made reference to in opening statement. Though you should not dwell on the weaknesses of your case, the jury should hear about them from you, not only from your opponent. Indeed, if the adverse point is a serious one, the jury may be most interested in hearing a response to the harmful material.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsImproper Remarks

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.07

§ 32.07 Preparing the Jury for Key Witnesses and Their Testimony

In certain cases, the principal witnesses in the trial will, as a matter of course, be identified in the opening statements. Even in those cases where this does not happen automatically, if your evidence includes a particularly strong witness, such as an expert or a non-party occurrence witness, it may be wise to identify that witness and the substance of his or her testimony in the opening statement. This will prepare the jury for the testimony.

At times it may also be appropriate to specifically identify one or more of your adversary's witnesses, and to describe the specific defects (such as admissions or earlier contrary statements) to which their testimony will be subject. This sort of anticipation is obviously much more risky than a description of your own witnesses and their testimony. You will be gambling on the success of your cross-examination of the witness, and if the gamble turns out to have been ill-advised, you will have merely heightened the effect of that witness' testimony.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsImproper Remarks

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.08

§ 32.08 Using Exhibits During Opening Statement

[1] Presenting Exhibits to Organize the Opening Statement and to Engage the Jury

It is often desirable to read from or show particular exhibits to the jury during the course of opening statements. Exhibits shown to the jury during opening statement can be very effective and may be remembered more than other exhibits that are first used during presentation of the case-in-chief. Exhibits might include actual exhibits--i.e., those admitted or admissible in evidence for their probative value --or demonstrative exhibits--i.e., charts, diagrams, animations, samples and the like that are used to convey information to the jury. The use of exhibits will help reduce the need to rely on notes in the opening statement, and will help to engage the jury.

Case exhibits are effective during opening statement because they are specific. Key exhibits demonstrate a particular point because they are "real" evidence and they are tangible. They must, however, be used with caution during opening statements, especially since many judges do not favor the practice. In addition, the effect of truly important exhibits can be lost if less important exhibits are also used. Therefore, you should use exhibits sparingly during opening statement and probably should not use any exhibit unless it is determinative or almost determinative of some ultimate issue in the case.

Demonstrative exhibits are also useful during opening statement, both in relatively simple cases, where models, charts, or diagrams can be worth a thousand words, and in more difficult cases where complex technical, financial or accounting background must be explained. Demonstrative exhibits are usually "self-selecting"; they do not come into existence unless you consciously recognize an inability to explain a particular concept or interrelationship of concepts. If your perception is correct, the court is likely to agree. As a result, demonstrative exhibits are far less likely to be over-used than case exhibits.

[2] Seeking Leave to Use Exhibits for Opening Statement

Generally, case exhibits may be shown to the jury only after they have been admitted into evidence. Thus, if pre-trial procedures have not established the admissibility of an exhibit, you must obtain the court's permission to show it to the jury during opening statement.

From a technical standpoint, demonstrative exhibits stand on a somewhat different, and more favored, footing. By definition, demonstrative exhibits are tendered not as evidence but for their expositive or educational value, and are, therefore, particularly appropriate for opening statement. Despite this difference, unless counsel is confident of the practices of the trial judge, it is advisable to seek leave to use any exhibit, demonstrative or otherwise, in opening statement.

Permission to use an exhibit during opening statement should be sought far enough in advance of trial to allow you to revise your strategy in the event that permission is denied. This consideration is more important with regard to demonstrative exhibits than with case exhibits. The substance of case exhibits can be summarized to the jury so that their general import is understood. Demonstrative exhibits, on the other hand, will have been formulated for a specific educational purpose. Accordingly, you will need advance notice of a denial of permission to use the exhibit in order to effectively restructure your opening statement to include verbal explanations, rather than demonstrative exhibits.

[3] Challenging the Use of Misleading Exhibits

It is critical to make sure that all exhibits that opposing counsel intends to use in the opening are free of any bias or argumentative element. As a practical matter, always ask to see any exhibits that your adversary intends to use during opening statement, and challenge the use of any exhibits that are misleading or otherwise unfair.

Since you cannot immediately probe the fairness of an exhibit used by the adversary during an opening statement, an objection to any bias inherent in the exhibit is likely to carry special weight with the court. If a case exhibit is long or otherwise cumbersome you should move the court to exclude its use in the opening, or request that opposing counsel be required to read or show extensive additional portions of the exhibit to limit bias. Demonstrative exhibits may be especially misleading and should be challenged whenever their use may be prejudicial.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceComputer-Generated EvidenceEvidenceDemonstrative EvidencePhotographs

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.09

§ 32.09 Determining the Proper Length of the Opening Statement

[1] Length of Opening Statements Established by Local Rule or the Trial Judge

There is no general federal rule fixing the length of opening statements in either jury or bench trials. The local rules of some districts set time limits for opening statements. n1 In courts that have no local rule on the subject, the length of opening statements is fixed either on a case-by-case basis or by the customary practice of the particular judge. n2 The length of opening statements rests within the sound discretion of the trial court whose rulings will not be disturbed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion. n3

[2] Seeking Permission to Exceed Time Limit

Given the importance of the opening statement, it is critical that you know in advance how much time you will be permitted. Where important objectives demand that your opening statement be longer than that normally permitted by the court it is crucial to obtain permission in advance to exceed the time limit. This issue should be addressed at the pre-trial conference, and may even be the subject of a provision in the pre-trial order.

Arguments for an unusually long opening statement may be predicated on the grounds that:

- The case is extraordinarily complicated
- The factual background is unfamiliar or complex
- A large number of witnesses will testify and that it is necessary to explain the functions of each
- A longer opening statement is necessary to give the jury a comprehensive overview of the case

Generally speaking, the longer and more complex the trial, the greater the amount of time that should be devoted to opening statement. The defendant in a long trial should take pains to obtain the time necessary to make a full exposition of the case and its background. It may be weeks or even months before defense witnesses have an opportunity to testify and before defense counsel has an opportunity to present a coherent version of the defendant's case.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See S. D. Iowa Loc. R. 83.6(a) (15 minutes, unless the court orders otherwise); D. Me. Loc. R. 39(a) (shall not exceed 30 minutes, except by leave of court); D. Md. Civ. R. 107(8)(a) (one hour, unless otherwise ordered).

(n2)Footnote 2. See, e.g., Glenn v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 32 F.3d 1462, 1465 (10th Cir. 1994) (court's "Preparation for Trial Checklist" imposed 10-minute limitation on opening statements unless case unusually complex).

(n3)Footnote 3. Glenn v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 32 F.3d 1462, 1464 (10th Cir. 1994) (10-minute time limitation on opening statements).

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.10

§ 32.10 Determining the Order of Opening Statements

[1] Party with Burden of Proof Generally Makes First Statement

Plaintiff's counsel is usually entitled to speak first in opening statement because the plaintiff normally has the burden of proof on some or all of the issues in the case. n1 If in fact the defendant has the burden on all issues, the defendant should be entitled to speak first. n2 Where there are multiple plaintiffs or defendants, the order of the opening statements and closing arguments as among themselves rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. n3 Though the initiative may be less important in opening statements than in other parts of the trial, it is usually an advantage to proceed first. Accordingly, if you represent a defendant who comes to trial with the burden of proof on all issues (or, for that matter, on all threshold issues), you should normally seek the opportunity to speak first. In some jurisdictions this is established by local rule. n4 Even if no specific authority is available, it is clear that the trial court has broad discretion to regulate the order of both opening statements and closing argument. n5

[2] Opening Statement Generally Precedes Presentation of Evidence

Opening statements are generally given after voir dire, but before the presentation of evidence. Some districts permit defendant's counsel to make an opening statement either at the beginning of the trial or immediately before the beginning of defendant's case. n6 Other districts require that defendant's statement be made at the beginning of trial. n7 The custom in almost all districts without a specific rule is that the defendant's counsel should make an opening statement at the beginning of the trial, immediately following the statement of plaintiff's counsel. The timing of opening statements is a matter with which the trial court is vested with broad discretion, however, and it may order the parties to give their opening statements at what might normally be considered an unusual time where the circumstances so dictate. n8

It is difficult to imagine why the defendant would want to defer the entire opening statement until the presentation of its own evidence. Except for cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses, defendant's only opportunity to make an impression on the jury before presenting its own case is the opening statement. The defendant should carefully consider giving up this opportunity; otherwise, the plaintiff may win the jury over before the defendant has the opportunity to present its case.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsBurdens of ProofGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., M.D.N.C. Civ. R. 43.1(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Ridgeway v. Montana High School Ass'n, 633 F. Supp. 1564, 1569 n.5 (D. Mont. 1986) , aff'd, 858 F.2d 579 (9th Cir. 1988) (in action by high school girls and their parents alleging sex discrimination in high school athletics programs, defendants had burden of proof and right to open first).

(n3)Footnote 3. Martin v. Chesebrough-Pond's, Inc., 614 F.2d 498, 501 (5th Cir. 1980) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See D. Neb. Loc. R. 39.1(a) ("After the jury is selected and sworn, the party upon whom rests the burden of proof may ... make an opening statement, after which the adverse party ... may make an opening statement."); E.D.N.C. Civ. R. 39.3.

(n5)Footnote 5. See Ridgeway v. Montana High School Ass'n, 633 F. Supp. 1564, 1569 n.5 (D. Mont. 1986) , aff'd, 858 F.2d 579 (9th Cir. 1988) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See D. Ariz. Loc. R. 2.14(a); D. Me. Loc. R. 39(a).

(n7)Footnote 7. See D. Neb. Loc. R. 39.1(a); M.D.N.C. Civ. R. 43.1(a).

(n8)Footnote 8. See, e.g., Matter of Yagman, 796 F.2d 1165 , amended, 803 F.2d 1085 (9th Cir. 1986) (no abuse of discretion where court ordered parties to make their opening statements to the entire jury panel before voir dire where the court hoped the opening statements would acquaint the panel members with the case so that they could better determine whether they could freely sit as jurors in light of the substantial publicity regarding the events leading to the trial).

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

74 of 181 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.11

§ 32.11 Waiving Opportunity for Opening Statement

Opening statements may be waived entirely. n1 However, since opening statements give the jury an initial sense of who is right and why, the decision to waive opening statement should be made with extreme caution. While, in most instances, neither counsel should willingly waive an opening statement, the defense counsel should be particularly reluctant to do so. The plaintiff will generally proceed first and may, by presenting an opening witness who will lay out the entire case, obviate the need for an opening statement. By contrast, the defendant will not "have the floor" again until after the plaintiff has presented all of its evidence-in-chief. This rule of primacy is inherently detrimental to the defendant. If the defense does not present an opening statement, it may be too late for the defense to recapture the jurors.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., D. Ariz. Loc. R. 2.14(b).

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
A Preparing the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 32.12through 32.19

[Reserved]

§§ 32.12[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
B Evaluating the Limitations of the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.20

§ 32.20 Argumentation and Discussion of the Law Not Permitted

[1] Avoiding Argument

Argument in the opening statement is not permissible. n1 This limitation encompasses any interpretation of facts tending toward an ultimate result. However, almost any declarative statement is likely to have argumentative overtones. Indeed, in the litigation context, it may be more difficult to frame a neutral statement of fact than it is to formulate an argumentative one. The result is that there is a substantial gray area between bare statements of fact and impermissible argument which can be successfully exploited by capable counsel. Your job is to exploit that gray area to the fullest extent possible and to prevent your adversary from utilizing any more of it than necessary.

[2] Discussion of the Law

In general, it is the province of the court to pass upon the law and, thus, not appropriate for discussion during opening statement. n2 This again, however, is an area in which familiarity with the standards and preferences of the judge before whom the case is being tried will be worth more than any amount of abstract guidance.

In general, the need for discussing the law or legal issues in opening statement is usually not of great importance since the jury decides only factual issues. Moreover, the primary purpose of an opening statement is to inform the jury of the facts as you want the jury to see them. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsImproper RemarksCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsObjections

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. United States v. Dinitz, 424 U.S. 600, 612, 96 S. Ct. 1075, 47 L. Ed. 2d 267 (1976) (opening statement "is not an occasion for argument"); Testa v. Village of Mundelein, 89 F.3d 443, 445 (1996)

(n2)Footnote 2. See Schwartz v. System Software Assocs., 32 F.3d 284, 288 (7th Cir. 1994) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Central Telecommunications, Inc. v. TCI Cablevision, Inc., 610 F. Supp. 891, 904 (W.D. Mo. 1985) , aff'd on other grounds, 800 F.2d 711 (8th Cir. 1986) , cert. denied, 480 U.S. 910 (1987) ("Opening statements afford the parties an opportunity to outline what their evidence will be. Legal arguments offered during the course of an opening statement are improper. Accordingly, the Court had no choice but to direct defendant's attorney to refrain from making references to principles of constitutional jurisprudence during his opening statement, particularly where, as here, his characterization of the law was either erroneous or misleading.").

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
B Evaluating the Limitations of the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.21

§ 32.21 Avoiding Overstatements

It is fundamentally unfair for an attorney to present to the jury statements not susceptible of proof but intended to influence the jury in reaching a verdict. n1 An opening statement should assert your client's claims or defenses in affirmative, even zealous or aggressive terms, but it should avoid demonstrable overstatements. Hyperbole that might work in closing argument will unnecessarily expose you to objections to the opening statement. At a minimum, your adversary will most likely comment in closing argument that your evidence has failed to support one or more claims that you made in your opening statement. Ultimately, overstatements can work to undermine credibility with the jurors. n2 Even if the subjects of your overstatements do not warrant comment in the judge's instructions to the jury, many judges strongly resent the sort of advocacy represented by such overstatements and will, in one way or another, find an opportunity to comment upon them.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsImproper RemarksCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsObjections

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. United States v. Dinitz, 424 U.S. 600, 612, 96 S. Ct. 1075, 1082, 47 L. Ed. 2d 267, 277 (1976) (concurring opinion).

(n2)Footnote 2. If overstatements relate to important issues, the judge may advise the jury that the evidence has not supported your version of the facts, or--worst of all--that the jury is instructed to disregard the remarks made on those subjects during your opening statement. Reversal may even occur due to statements unsupported by the evidence where a party is prejudiced by such statements. See, e.g., Kiefel v. Las Vegas Hacienda, Inc., 404 F.2d 1163, 1165-1167 (7th Cir. 1968) , cert. denied, 395 U.S. 908 (1969) .

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
B Evaluating the Limitations of the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.22

§ 32.22 Considering the Effect of Admissions Made During Opening Statement

Admissions made by counsel in opening statement may properly be incorporated in the court's instructions to the jury as to those matters that are in issue and those that are not. n1

If admissions made by counsel during opening statement relate to one or more ultimate issues in the case, they can constitute the basis of a motion for judgment as a matter of law. To warrant a directed verdict based on the opening statement, the admission must clearly preclude recovery (or eliminate all defenses), and the party is entitled to the benefit of all favorable inferences that might be drawn from the attorney's statement. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsJudgment as Matter of LawGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsDirected Verdicts

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Herrera v. Valentine, 653 F.2d 1220, 1223 (8th Cir. 1981) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See Franchi Constr. Co. v. Combined Ins. Co., 580 F.2d 1, 8 (1st Cir. 1978) .

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
B Evaluating the Limitations of the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.23

§ 32.23 Objecting to the Content of the Adversary's Opening Statement

In defending against the adversary's opening statement a successful objection will be effective both in undermining the adversary's appearance of credibility and fairness, and in breaking the "trance" of an effective opening. However, counsel must also be judicious in asserting objections. An unsuccessful objection may be as harmful to your cause as a successful objection would be to your opponent's case.

In general, be cautious when making objections during opening statement. Repeated objections, all or most of which are denied, will create an unfavorable impression on the jury. You will appear to be attempting to obstruct your opponent's efforts to tell the jury facts which both opposing counsel and the court apparently believe the jury is entitled to know. The jury may view the repeated objections as harassment of the opposing party or attorney. Moreover, you risk emphasizing those very matters that you feel are objectionable, thereby making them more likely to remain in the minds of the jurors.

Usually, there is no "record" to be made by objections during opening statement. All but the most egregious improprieties are deemed to be cured by the traditional caution to the jury that the attorney's opening statements are not evidence. n1 Nevertheless, failure to make a timely objection to inappropriate statements may be fatal to a finding of prejudice on a motion for mistrial. n2 On appeal, misconduct will be reviewed only for "plain error" where counsel fails to make a timely objection. n3 While "timely" generally means the objection should be made immediately after the objectionable statements have been made, an objection made immediately after the conclusion of the opening statement with a request for a curative instruction has been found sufficient to preserve the issue for purposes of appeal. n4

Unless you are confident that the judge before whom the case is being tried takes a strict attitude concerning the scope of opening statement the best course of action under most circumstances will be to wait until you believe that your adversary has clearly exceeded permissible bounds before objecting.

If the objection is sustained, you will have a clear indication that objections are not unwelcome and, as your adversary's opening statement progresses, you can continue to object, testing the judge with objections to more marginally offensive material. If your first objection is denied, proceed cautiously thereafter, objecting again only if you have an important interest to protect, or if your adversary seems to have committed a more serious or different form of error.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsImproper RemarksCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsObjectionsCivil ProcedureAppealsReviewabilityGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureAppealsReviewabilityPreservation for Review

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Martin v. Cavalier Hotel Corp., 48 F.3d 1343, 1358 (4th Cir. 1995) (prompt instruction to jury obviated any possible prejudice from counsel's remarks during opening statement); West v. Carson, 49 F.3d 433, 436 (8th Cir. 1995) (plaintiff failed to show any prejudice where objections to counsel's comments were sustained and jury admonished).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Arnold v. Eastern Air Lines Inc., 681 F.2d 186, 200 (4th Cir. 1982) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Glenn v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 32 F.3d 1462, 1464 (10th Cir. 1994) ; Doty v. Sewall, 908 F.2d 1053, 1056-1057 (1st Cir. 1990) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Arnold v. Eastern Air Lines Inc., 681 F.2d 186, 200 (4th Cir. 1982) .

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
B Evaluating the Limitations of the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.24

§ 32.24 Evaluating the Standard for Mistrial Based on Content of Opening Statement

In certain extreme situations, excessive or otherwise improper statements made in the course of an opening statement may be grounds for, or at least the subject of, a motion for a mistrial. This is particularly true of inflammatory statements concerning matters not properly before the jury at all, but it also applies to other excessive statements, including statements with respect to the evidence, that the jury cannot reasonably be expected to disregard. When the conduct of counsel in argument causes prejudice to the opposing party and unfairly influences a jury's verdict, a new trial generally should be granted. n1

A trial judge has particularly broad discretion in determining whether an incident, in the context of an entire trial, is so serious to warrant a mistrial. n2 The exercise of this discretion includes determining whether giving a cautionary instruction, rather than ordering a mistrial, can prevent any possible prejudice. n3

The request to a jury to put themselves in the place of the plaintiff or defendant, the so-called "Golden Rule" argument, has repeatedly been found to be improper. n4 Such an argument is universally condemned because it encourages the jury to "depart from neutrality and to decide the case on the basis of personal interest and bias rather than on the evidence." n5

A blatant appeal for sympathy on behalf of the client constitutes an improper and prejudicial comment that may result in mistrial. n6

Derogatory remarks during opening statement about the opposing party, his or her attorney, or his or her witnesses may constitute grounds for a mistrial. n7

Motions for a mistrial should be made at the earliest possible opportunity after the event that provides the basis for the motion. In the case of inflammatory or otherwise excessive statements made during opening statements, object at once in strong terms in the presence of the jury and then ask for a conference with the judge outside the presence of the jury, during which conference you should make the motion for a mistrial.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsImproper RemarksCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsObjections

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Hopson v. Riverbay Corporation, 190 F.R.D. 114, 124 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) .

(n2)Footnote 2. See United States v. Schimmel, 943 F.2d 802, 806 (7th Cir. 1991) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See United States v. Ferguson, 935 F.2d 1518, 1527 (7th Cir. 1991) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Insurance Co. of N. Am., Inc. v. United States Gypsum Co., Inc., 870 F.2d 148, 154 (4th Cir. 1989) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Dole v. USA Waste Servs. Inc., 100 F.3d 1384, 1388 (8th Cir. 1996) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Morrissey v. Welsh Co., 821 F.2d 1294, 1303 (8th Cir. 1987) (new trial on the issue of damages where clear pleas for sympathy were made during plaintiff's opening statement).

(n7)Footnote 7. See, e.g., Outley v. City of New York, 837 F.2d 587, 592-595 (2d Cir. 1988) (unfair reference to plaintiff as "perpetual litigant"); see also Bufford v. Rowan Cos., Inc., 994 F.2d 155, 157-158 (5th Cir. 1993) (plaintiff's substantial rights to fair trial impaired when defense counsel implied plaintiff's attorneys distorted minor injuries into major ones and prosecuted baseless claims).

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
B Evaluating the Limitations of the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.25

§ 32.25 Evaluating the Standard of Review for Mistrial Based on Content of Opening Statement

Absent an abuse of discretion, the appellate court will defer to the district court's denial of a motion for a new trial on the basis of improper argument or conduct of counsel. n1 In assessing the effect of improper conduct by counsel, the appellate court will often examine the following factors to determine if the statement at issue was prejudicial: n2

- The totality of the circumstances, including the nature of the comments
- The frequency of the comments
- The possible relevancy of the comments to the real issues before the jury
- The manner in which the parties and the court treated the comments
- The strength of the case
- The verdict itself

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsObjectionsCivil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions for New TrialsCivil ProcedureAppealsStandards of ReviewAbuse of Discretion

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Dole v. USA Waste Servs. Inc., 100 F.3d 1384, 1388 (8th Cir. 1996) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Puerto Rico Aqueduct and Sewer Authority v. Constructora Lluch, Inc., and CNA Casualty of Puerto Rico, Inc., 169 F.3d 68, 83 (1st Cir. 1999) .

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 32 Opening Statement *
B Evaluating the Limitations of the Opening Statement

3-32 Federal Litigation Guide § 32.26

§ 32.26 CHECKLIST: Drafting the Opening Statement

The following checklist includes objectives and techniques for drafting and presenting opening statements:

☐ Set forth the case theme. The opening statement should start with a clear statement of the case theme, which should be reiterated near the end of the statement.

☐ Present the case in a succinct and organized manner. The opening statement should be clear and organized to limit jury confusion.

☐ Be persuasive. Although the opening cannot be argumentative, it should be interesting and persuasive. A successful opening statement should be engaging and should leave the jury feeling that the case should be resolved in favor of the client.

☐ Highlight key evidence. Inform the jury about key witnesses and documents, and the significance of each.

☐ Start strong and end strong. In organizing the opening statement, remember that jurors tend to remember best what they hear first and last.

☐ Use rhetorical questions. Engage the jurors with rhetorical questions that will help them think about the key issues in the case.

☐ Introduce case weaknesses. The opening statement should also be used to introduce the weak portions of your case and to defend against your opponent's case. Disclose problems such as damaging evidence which you expect to appear at trial.

☐ Use authorized exhibits. The use of case exhibits and demonstrative aids during the opening will greatly increase the jury's understanding of what the evidence will actually show. Moreover, it directs the jury's attention to important evidence and allows them to recognize it once it is introduced during trial.

☐ Do not include objectionable material in the opening statement. In general, counsel should avoid use of the following:

☐ Argumentation.

☐ Discussions of the law.

☐ Overstatements.

☐ Pleas for sympathy.

☐ Relax and move away from the podium. This will allow you to speak more freely and openly.

☐ Do not read the opening statement. Use as few notes as possible and speak to the jury about the case using easy to understand language.

☐ Use future tense. Prepare the jury for the case by informing them what they will hear and see at trial.

☐ Do not rush. Speak in a manner that is relaxed, easy to understand, and engaging.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsMotions for MistrialCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsImproper RemarksCivil ProcedureTrialsOpening StatementsObjections

* Chapter 32 was rewritten in 2003 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq., of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide 33.syn

§ 33.syn Synopsis to Chapter 33: Direct Examination *

§ 33.01 Present Case Understandably and Persuasively

§ 33.02 Select Witnesses
[1] Choose Witnesses Who Will Testify Most Credibly and Persuasively
[2] Rely on Witness Interviews and Depositions in Selecting Trial Witnesses
[3] Select Critical Witnesses for Purpose of Making a Record at Trial

§ 33.03 Prepare Witnesses
[1] Familiarize Witnesses with Trial Process and Facts of Case
[2] Prepare Each Witness Separately
[3] Prepare Witnesses Far Enough in Advance of Trial
[4] Do Not Assume That Witnesses Are Familiar with Trial Process
[5] Explain Protocol of Examination and Cross-Examination to Witnesses
[6] Reassure Witnesses Concerning Possible Adverse Developments During Testimony
[7] Tell Witnesses about Demeanor and Personality of Judge and Opposing Counsel
[8] Familiarize Witnesses with Physical Characteristics of Courtroom
[9] Provide Witnesses with a Case Overview and Explain Significance of Testimony
[10] Assist Witnesses in Advance of Trial to Refresh Memory
[11] Review Deposition Testimony with Witnesses
[12] Instruct Witnesses to Control Temper at All Times
[13] Discuss Demeanor, Attire, and Speaking Manner with Each Witness
[14] Avoid Over-Preparing Witnesses

§ 33.04 Avoid Problem Characteristics of Witnesses
[1] Evaluate Personality Traits of Witnesses
[2] Antagonistic Witnesses
[3] Nice-Guy Witnesses
[4] Boring Witnesses

§ 33.05 Strategize Order of Witnesses
[1] Order of Witnesses Should Reflect Principles of Primacy and Recency
[2] Present Witnesses in Logical Sequence

[3] Consider Availability and Convenience of Witnesses
[4] CHECKLIST: Strategizing Order of Witnesses

§ 33.06 Maximize Each Trial Day

§ 33.07 Prepare Outlines for Direct Examination of Lay Witnesses
[1] Outlines Enhance Control over Direct Examination and Minimize Risk of Oversight
[2] Start with Skeleton Outline
[3] Outline Should Include Key Points as to Which Witness Will Testify
[4] Outline Should List All Exhibits to Be Used with Particular Witness
[5] Outline Should Include Detailed Questions
[6] Consider Using Topical Outlines
[7] Do Not Provide Witness with Copy of Outline
[8] Anticipate Objections

§ 33.08 Lay a Foundation
[1] Connect Evidence to Case
[2] Occurrence Witness
[3] Ordinary Conversations
[4] Telephone Communications

§ 33.09 Present Effective Direct Examination
[1] Acquaint Jury with Witness
[2] Keep Direct Examination Brief and Simple
[3] Phrase Questions to Elicit a Narrative Response
[4] Use Leading Questions on Direct Examination in Certain Circumstances
[5] Control Speed of Direct Examination
[6] Handling Cumulative or Corroboration Witnesses on Direct Examination
[7] Utilizing Opinions by Lay Witnesses
[8] Refreshing a Witness' Recollection and Utilizing Past Recollection Recorded
[8.--1] Refreshed Recollection
[8.--2] Past Recollection Recorded

§ 33.10 Anticipate Problem Testimony

§ 33.11 Deal with Adverse and Hostile Witnesses
[1] Adverse Witnesses
[2] Hostile Witnesses

§ 33.12 Trial Counsel Should Control Conduct and Demeanor
[1] Counsel's Conduct and Demeanor Plays a Critical Role in Jury's Perception of Case
[2] Trial Counsel Should Always Be Sincere
[3] Counsel Should Strategically Position Himself or Herself
[4] Counsel Should Never Show Irritation With His or Her Own Witnesses

§ 33.13 Direct Examination By Defense Counsel

§ 33.14 Compelling Witness Attendance
[1] Counsel Should Subpoena All Witnesses He or She Intends to Call at Trial
[2] Issuing and Serving Trial Subopenas
[3] Territorial Limitations of Subpoenas
[4] Witness Fee Must Be Tendered with Subpoena

[5] Ignoring Trial Subpoena Subjects Witness to Contempt

§ 33.15 Using Depositions Affirmatively at Trial
[1] Using Deposition Testimony When Witness Is "Unavailable"
[2] Deciding Which Portions of Deposition Testimony Should Be Read at Trial
[3] Advise Court in Advance as to Deposition Testimony to Be Read at Trial

§ 33.16 Using Expert Witnesses
[1] Understanding Rules Governing Expert Testimony
[2] Assessing Whether Experts Should Be Retained
[3] Locating Appropriate Experts
[4] Assess Vulnerability of Potential Experts
[5] Exercise Caution as to In-House Experts
[6] Consider Using More Than One Expert
[7] Protecting Expert and Client
[8] CHECKLIST: Preparing Experts
[9] Qualify Witness as an Expert
[10] Introducing Expert Opinion Testimony
[10.--1] Three Approaches to Develop Expert Opinion Testimony
[10.--2] Expert Testimony Based on Firsthand Knowledge
[10.--3] Expert Testimony Based on Hypothetical Questions
[10.--4] Expert Testimony Based on Secondhand Knowledge
[10.--5] Use of Treatises

§ 33.17 Table of Expertise Areas

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

In most trials, the bulk of a party's case is put in through oral testimony. This chapter provides a comprehensive look at the manner in which such testimony is best presented to the trier of fact. Although the chapter's examples assume that the direct examination is taking place in a jury trial, the same principles also ensure a more effective presentation in a bench trial.

The process begins with deciding which witnesses to call, if there is more than one available to testify on a particular point, and in what order. Witness preparation should put the potential witness at ease, familiarize him or her with the trial process and the particular action, and provide instruction on how to provide truthful testimony in a manner that will help your case. A witness should be advised to avoid a number of specific characteristics of witnesses which, unless alleviated, may antagonize juries.

An outline of the anticipated direct testimony is indispensable during preparation and also at trial. Although the outline is often organized as a list of questions and answers, that format has numerous disadvantages, including loss of flexibility and spontaneity. An outline organized on a topical basis is usually preferable. It must be kept in mind that a foundation must be laid for most of the testimony elicited--a proper foundation establishes a witness' ability to provide admissible testimony.

Direct testimony should be presented in a manner that is interesting and will be easy for the jury to understand. In most instances, repetition and presentation of witnesses whose testimony is cumulative should be avoided. Examination of hostile or adverse witnesses generally should be undertaken only when necessary to an essential element of the case and should be as brief as possible. Because the conduct of counsel makes a compelling impression on the jurors, suggestions are made about proper trial demeanor.

After examining how to compel witnesses' attendance and the sanctions for noncompliance, the chapter concludes with a detailed look at using expert witnesses. In addition to discussing whether experts should be used and prepared, general guidelines for selecting a particular expert, as well as a number of sources to assist in locating expert witnesses are provided. Methods for developing expert opinion testimony on direct examination are also discussed.

Finally, to assist the litigator in identifying appropriate experts, the chapter includes a table summarizing various expertise areas.

For expanded coverage of direct examination, see WEINSTEIN'S Federal Evidence, Ch. 611, Mode and Order of Interrogation and Presentation .

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.01

§ 33.01 Present Case Understandably and Persuasively

Most trials are won on the strength of a party's case-in-chief. Oral testimony usually constitutes a critical part of that proof. Ultimate success at trial depends on presenting the case in the most understandable and persuasive way possible. This in turn requires an orderly and interesting presentation of witnesses. The need to "tell a story" at trial does not require that the story be dramatic, much less melodramatic. However, the logical, thorough presentation of a story about how people have acted under certain circumstances always includes elements of drama and sometimes even comedy.

Your primary concern at trial is with adducing legally sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case. Evidence that is sufficient to defeat a motion for judgment as a matter of law must be presented on each of the essential elements of a claim or defense. In other words, you must make a complete record of all evidence which will support the legal arguments you may want to urge during trial or later on appeal. With a thorough grasp of the legal theories and a complete understanding of the available evidence, you will have little difficulty fashioning direct examination which adequately raises each claim or defense. But evidence that is sufficient to support a claim or defense is not necessarily evidence that will convince the jury of the justice of the client's position. While a prima facie case is an absolute precondition to success, ultimate success depends on developing trial techniques that enable you to present the evidence in a way that enhances its persuasiveness. Consequently, undue concern with presenting a prima facie case may result in missed opportunities to drive points home to the jury. After constructing the bare bones of direct examination necessary to survive the motion for judgment as a matter of law, you should elaborate on the facts in ways that arouse the jurors' sympathies or their outrage at the opposing party's claims or conduct. Even if the jury feels compelled to render a verdict in favor of one party under the court's instructions, the size of the verdict may depend on their feeling that the result is just and fair.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesPersonal KnowledgeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.02

§ 33.02 Select Witnesses

[1] Choose Witnesses Who Will Testify Most Credibly and Persuasively

In many respects the trial of a lawsuit resembles a theatrical production. The attorney's outline of proof is the script. All persons with knowledge of the facts and events in controversy are auditioning for parts. As a director casts the characters in a play, the trial lawyer casts the witnesses. He or she must fill every role required by the script and must rely on skill and experience to select those persons who will perform most credibly and persuasively.

Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, every person with personal knowledge is competent to testify as a witness at trial unless excluded by a specific rule. n1 No mental or moral qualifications are specified. Religious belief, conviction of crime and connection with or interest in the litigation are not grounds for excluding a witness. Of course, neither the judge nor a juror may testify at a trial in which he or she is sitting. n2

Not all persons who are competent to testify at trial should be called as witnesses. Witnesses should be chosen for the importance of their testimony, their persuasiveness, and the attorney's perception of how the jury may react if the witness is not called to testify. Failure to call a witness about whom other witnesses have testified or about whom the jury is naturally curious will make the case seem weaker even though the particular witness' testimony is not logically required in order to establish a prima facie case.

[2] Rely on Witness Interviews and Depositions in Selecting Trial Witnesses

Before determining trial strategy, you should have interviewed or taken depositions of all persons who have personal knowledge of facts that support or contradict your theory of the case. Through this process, you will have developed a feel for the strengths and weaknesses of the case, and will have formed impressions concerning the extent of each person's knowledge, the accuracy of his or her statements, and the quality of that person as a witness. In other words, you will have formed a picture of how important the person's testimony is to the case and how the jury will perceive the witness.

[3] Select Critical Witnesses for Purpose of Making a Record at Trial

When selecting witnesses, you should keep in mind the need to make a complete record at trial. If no evidence has been adduced at trial on a key aspect of the case, an attorney may not complain later if a motion for judgment as a matter of law is granted against his or her client. Consequently, a person's testimony may be so vital to the case that he or she must testify no matter how you anticipate the witness will be received by the jury. In these situations, you should concentrate on emphasizing the witness' strengths and minimizing his or her weaknesses--all toward the goal of improving the witness' presentation at trial.

In selecting witnesses, you also must anticipate what opposing counsel is likely to do at trial. Each side will want to have a prepared witness available to contradict the key elements of the opposing case or to defuse certain unfavorable testimony. Even if such a witness will not be called until rebuttal, you should prepare the witness before trial, saving time during the trial for the surprises that invariably crop up.

You should not intentionally fail to call a strong or key witness in the case in chief with the idea that the witness may be called in rebuttal. Opposing counsel may structure his or her case so as to prevent the witness from being presented in rebuttal.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesPersonal KnowledgeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 601, 602.

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 605, 606. Jurors by rule are also precluded from testifying, either orally or by affidavit, about any matter or statement that occurs during deliberations, except that a juror may testify about extraneous prejudicial information affecting the verdict or improper outside influence. See Fed. R. Evid. 606(b); WEINSTEIN'S Federal Evidence, § 606.04 (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.03

§ 33.03 Prepare Witnesses

[1] Familiarize Witnesses with Trial Process and Facts of Case

Simply choosing persons to testify who have the capacity or personality to present your case at trial most persuasively and credibly does not insure effective communication to the jury. Before trial you must engage in intensive preparation of your witnesses to familiarize them with the trial process and the case and to minimize the unfavorable and maximize the favorable personality traits of the witnesses. Take full advantage of videotaping a practice direct examination with the witness so he or she can see the mannerisms and speech habits that the jury may find distracting. Most people are surprised at how they come across to others. Videotape is the best way to show them.

The ability to prepare your witnesses will depend on whether their appearance is voluntary. In addition to your client, the client's family, friends, employees, or business associates will likely be cooperative witnesses who will be willing to be prepared and will be motivated to do a good job. Those fact witnesses who are either neutral or hostile will be more difficult to prepare. Your direct examination of them should have more modest goals because you have had less influence on them. Perhaps the most you can do is explain the process to them, assuming they will listen.

All of the following suggestions must somehow be achieved while simultaneously keeping the witnesses reasonably calm and reasonably confident about the prospect of testifying. There is, of course, no magic formula for success, but there are a number of things you can do. In discussing the witness' testimony, emphasize its good and its negative aspects. For example, emphasize that the witness has essentially unique information on a given topic or that his or her approach to answering questions is very good. Similarly, potential benefits of cross-examination should be pointed out to the witness: for instance, that inept cross-examination may give the witness the opportunity to repeat and underscore the favorable aspects of his or her direct testimony, or the fact that the witness who responds to an abusive examiner in calm and forthright terms almost always "prevails" in the minds of the finders of fact.

[2] Prepare Each Witness Separately

Prepare each witness separately. When interviews are conducted separately, you have the witness' undivided attention, you will convey the importance of his or her testimony, and you will best be able to work frankly and directly with troublesome personality traits or mannerisms. The presence of other witnesses may be disruptive or embarrassing. Moreover, by preparing each witness separately, you can prevent a witness from learning confusing information or from adopting other witnesses' statements, expressions, opinions, and recollections. When opposing counsel asks on cross-examination what the witness did to prepare for trial, the presence of other witnesses during such sessions will sound highly suspicious. This may lead to examination regarding conversations that refreshed recollections and may detract from credibility.

[3] Prepare Witnesses Far Enough in Advance of Trial

Prepare each witness far enough in advance of trial to permit adequate time to reconsider the witness, reevaluate his or her areas of testimony, and make further decisions about using alternative witnesses. Whether preparation takes place the week before or many months before trial depends on the complexity of the case, the number of witnesses to be prepared, the timing of other pretrial matters, and your schedule. Each witness should be given a refresher preparation session shortly before that witness testifies. It is best if the lawyer who will conduct the direct examination at trial does the preparation. The witness needs all possible familiarity with and trust in the examining lawyer.

[4] Do Not Assume That Witnesses Are Familiar with Trial Process

Witnesses are generally apprehensive about the prospect of testifying in court. They may be unfamiliar with trial proceedings, concerned that they will forget what to say, or fear being embarrassed or browbeaten at trial. Witnesses often have a mistaken impression about trials resulting from watching television dramas. A brief description of the trial process, including an explanation of the roles of the judge, the jury, the attorneys, and the witnesses will help allay the witness' fears. You should also explain that if opposing counsel begins to treat the witness unfairly, the lawyer will object immediately and the judge will intervene. If the witness has been deposed, he or she may feel slightly more comfortable with the process, although the differences between depositions and trials should be explained.

Also, witnesses should be prepared for the inherent uncertainties of the trial schedule. They should not be told they will definitely testify at a given time when in fact there is some uncertainty on that subject. Witnesses must obviously be prepared to testify when required, but they should be spared unnecessary false alarms. Witnesses who are present in the courtroom during your adversary's case must also understand that, absent unusual procedural limitations, they may be called to the witness stand at any time, even by opposing counsel.

[5] Explain Protocol of Examination and Cross-Examination to Witnesses

Each witness should be informed, for example, that he or she will be sworn before testifying and asked to state his or her name for the record; that questions can, if necessary, be reread by the court reporter; that objections must be ruled on before the witness may answer the question; that the judge may ask questions, and so on. The witness should also be told that you will be permitted to ask more questions on redirect and recross, and that there is a possibility he or she could be recalled as a witness later in the case.

[6] Reassure Witnesses Concerning Possible Adverse Developments During Testimony

Witnesses sometimes make mistakes, and sometimes those mistakes appear to be very serious. Usually, however--and the point must be stressed in preparation of the witness--appearances are deceiving. Very often the mistake is not as serious as it may seem. Often it may be corrected or explained, and even if serious, it may be lost in the mass of other more affirmative evidence in the case. Most important of all, whether serious, explainable, remediable or not, mistakes must be kept in perspective and, having been dealt with to the extent that it is possible to do so, they should be set to one side and forgotten. The witness must understand that it would be foolish to make additional mistakes as a result of being preoccupied with ones previously made.

[7] Tell Witnesses about Demeanor and Personality of Judge and Opposing Counsel

If opposing counsel is known to be low-key and gentle or devious and overbearing on cross-examination, the witness should know about it. Similarly, if the judge has particular quirks or idiosyncracies regarding witness demeanor, the witness should be told about them during preparation and not put in jeopardy of reprimand at trial.

[8] Familiarize Witnesses with Physical Characteristics of Courtroom

A general description of the size and layout of the courtroom is sufficient in most cases. More apprehensive witnesses can be shown a courtroom (perhaps even the one in which trial will be held). Such a tour might involve a short visit to a trial heard by the judge assigned to your case. Do not recommend that a witness observe an entire trial. If an apprehensive witness observes a trial in which witnesses are treated harshly, his or her apprehension may grow into fright. In situations where exposure to a trial is necessary, you should investigate pending trials and direct the witness to one that will most closely approximate the circumstances and tone of the trial in your own case.

Also, witnesses should be informed that courthouse halls, restrooms, and elevators have ears and eyes. Jurors, judges, opposing counsel, adverse parties, and other witnesses are present everywhere, and jurors may be particularly observant of conduct outside the courtroom. Witnesses must understand that the manner in which they conduct themselves off the witness stand is as important as their behavior and appearance while testifying.

[9] Provide Witnesses with a Case Overview and Explain Significance of Testimony

Providing witnesses with a case overview and explaining the significance of their testimony should help the witness better understand the questions that will be asked during direct and cross-examination. Witnesses should also be cautioned to answer only questions that they understand. Advise them that if they do not understand a question, they should tell the examiner and ask that the question be rephrased. Caution witnesses that requests to rephrase questions at important points in the testimony may create the impression that they are avoiding difficult questions or trying to hide facts from the jury. Similarly, caution them not to give clever or sly answers or to try to outwit the opposing attorney. All too often this will only result in making the witness look insincere, foolish, or evasive.

Even before the preparation session begins, outline the witness' direct testimony. n1 Review all aspects of your outline with the witness to assure yourself that the witness can testify as anticipated. However, do not prepare a script for the witness. Jurors will know when a witness is testifying from a prepared, memorized text and may conclude that the witness is simply giving testimony that is, at best, partially fabricated.

Some witnesses who do not trust their memory prepare a "cheat sheet" to remind them of key aspects of their testimony. An experienced trial lawyer will ask to review any writing the witness brings to the stand. For this reason, witnesses also should be warned not to take documents, such as notes or copies of correspondence, to the witness stand to aid recall. Convince your witnesses that you are preparing them sufficiently for their testimony.

In the course of preparing the witness, you should actually go through the direct examination and simulate cross-examination so that the witness has some practice in following all of your advice. Videotape these sessions and review them with the witness. During the course of the practice session, you can coach the witness to keep his or her voice up and can suggest more effective ways of providing testimony. When preparation is complete, the witness should feel comfortable and you should know the answer to each question that you will ask on direct.

Finally, tell the witness not to be defensive or reluctant to admit that he or she has discussed testimony with you. If the witness has not been prepared for this question, he or she may answer evasively. If the witness fudges on this point, he or she can be backed into a corner and the credibility of that witness' entire testimony may be questioned. Tell each witness to admit without hesitation that they have discussed their testimony with the attorney who called him or her as a witness. It is not improper for an attorney to have interviewed a witness, and it also is understandable if the witness spoke with other people about his or her testimony.

[10] Assist Witnesses in Advance of Trial to Refresh Memory

You should try to help the witness refresh his or her memory concerning the information that will be sought on direct and cross-examination. If a description of a location will be involved, the witness can revisit the location. If exhibits memorialize aspects of an event, the exhibits can be reviewed. If you have learned of facts that might refresh the witness' recall, those facts can be shared with the witness.

If a witness does not know the answer to a question, he or she should say so and should not speculate about what might have happened. The response "I don't recall" or "I don't remember" is an acceptable answer. However, witnesses should not be told to use "I don't know" as "an all-purpose life preserver." n2

[11] Review Deposition Testimony with Witnesses

If a witness has been deposed, review the deposition transcript and discuss any inconsistencies with the witness. Cross-examiners generally try to impeach a witness by showing that the witness' trial testimony is inconsistent with a prior statement of the witness. During the preparation you should also ask the witness whether he or she has given any statements in the case. That includes conversations with others about the case, not just formal statements to investigators, insurance adjusters, or lawyers. A barroom conversation with an acquaintance may furnish impeachment through prior inconsistent statements just as well as a deposition. If possible, you should then contact those to whom the witness made oral statements about the case or the facts if there is any chance that opposing counsel would do so. Any prior written statements should be obtained and reviewed. n3 If there is a good and logical explanation for apparent inconsistencies between anticipated trial testimony and prior statements, the witness should be prepared to give the explanation smoothly and convincingly. If, for example, the witness testified at deposition that he or she does not recall a certain event, but at trial the witness will describe the event at length, the witness must be prepared to explain how his or her recollection was refreshed.

[12] Instruct Witnesses to Control Temper at All Times

An angry witness ordinarily makes a very negative impression on the jury and may be easily manipulated by opposing counsel. You may only learn that a witness has an explosive or sarcastic demeanor through a practice cross-examination, perhaps by another attorney in your office. The composed witness who cooperates with your proposed, non-threatening direct examination may come unhinged when his or her veracity is challenged.

Explain that the lawyers are the professional advocates in the courtroom and that the arguing should be left to them. The witness will almost always lose credibility in the eyes of the jury by arguing with opposing counsel. If the witness believes that a question is particularly hostile or argumentative, the witness may pause before answering to give the direct examiner an opportunity to object. The witness should also be told never to argue with the judge about rulings.

[13] Discuss Demeanor, Attire, and Speaking Manner with Each Witness

The location of the trial may affect what advice you give regarding attire. Generally, witnesses should be told to dress in "Sunday clothes" and not to wear loud, flashy, or bizarre clothing. Jewelry should be kept to a minimum. The same witness giving the same testimony while dressed in conservative attire is more credible. One of New York's most effective young lawyers, Ken Nolan, has given this advice:

Appearances count. If you want money from a jury, forget the Rolex, gold chains, and John Gotti look. Don't force a tie and jacket on a truck driver. When in doubt, dress conservatively. Teenagers are trouble, but most juries will understand their craziness. If you're in small-town Indiana, forget the tasseled shoes and double-breasted suits. If your client is in court for weeks, a different outfit each day is revealing. n4

Similarly, witnesses should be told not to put their hands over their mouths when testifying. Each should be told to speak loudly and clearly so that he is easily understood and not to slouch in the witnesses chair because it might create an impression of indifference or disrespect. The witness must be convinced of the importance of looking at the jury when answering questions and keeping eye contact with them during most of their testimony, especially the key parts. That strikes most witnesses as unnatural because they want to look at the person who asked them the question. If the case is a bench trial, the witness should be advised to look at the judge for the same reasons. Once again, practice will make the difference. During the preparation sessions make sure that the witness looks in the direction where the jury will be seated at trial.

Also, some witnesses, as a habit of speech, tend to qualify each answer. Instead of testifying that "John said it," a witness might state "I believe," or "I think that John said it." If the witness is certain that John said it, he or she should be counseled to give a positive answer, rather than an answer that suggests equivocation. A practice direct examination that is videotaped is the best way to break the witness' habit.

Witnesses also must be cautioned that their persuasive impact on the jury does not end with their last answer. The jury will watch the way witnesses leave the witness stand. Witness' mannerisms should not denote relief, frustration, defeat, or triumph. They should leave the witness stand in a dignified and confident manner.

[14] Avoid Over-Preparing Witnesses

The danger of witness preparation is that witnesses can be overly prepared and sound false to their own style of speech or expression. Do not iron out witness' personalities. Rather, use their natural strengths to strengthen their testimony. Make sure the witness is not open to charges that you told him or her what to say. Witnesses should be repeatedly told that you want them to tell the truth and that the reason for preparation is so they can do a better job stylistically telling the truth. You are trying to improve style, not substance.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of EvidenceEvidenceTestimonyRefreshing RecollectionGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyRefreshing RecollectionRefreshing Before Testimony

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See § 33.07 infra.

(n2)Footnote 2. Lutz, Fudging and Forgetting, 19 Litigation 10 (Spring 1993).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3) provides that:

> A party may obtain without the required showing [of the party's substantial need of the materials] a statement concerning the action or its subject matter previously made by that party. Upon request, a person not a party may obtain without the required showing a statement concerning the action or its subject matter previously made by that person.

(n4)Footnote 4. Nolan, Direct Examination--For Real, 19 Litigation 48 (Spring 1993).

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.04

§ 33.04 Avoid Problem Characteristics of Witnesses

[1] Evaluate Personality Traits of Witnesses

When selecting witnesses for trial, evaluate the personality of each witness and identify traits that might interfere with his or her effectiveness at trial. Trial lawyers frequently categorize witnesses by personality type. Preparation of witnesses with undesirable characteristics concentrates not on changing a witness' entire personality, but on neutralizing or minimizing unfavorable traits.

[2] Antagonistic Witnesses

Antagonistic witnesses are easily identified as the people who take the lawsuit too personally. They view the other side, including opposing counsel, as people who have deliberately wronged the witness. To this witness, the adversary is the enemy for whom contempt must be shown whenever possible.

The jury may dislike the witness' belligerent attitude, view him or her as too partisan to tell the whole truth, or consider the belligerence as a cover-up for a weak case. A skilled cross-examiner will be able to exploit the hostility and raise serious questions as to the credibility of the witness. This witness' antagonisms may well overcome good sense, and anger may lead the witness to exaggerate or to lie.

Antagonistic witnesses should be used sparingly unless you can overcome their belligerence. Convince the witness that the best way to strike back at the adversary is to win the lawsuit. Explain that the witness will hurt, not help, the case if the jury is turned off by his or her personal, vindictive attitude toward the other party or lawyer. The jury will not share the witness' presumptions against the other side and will not reward belligerence. The way to help win the case is to testify as a reasonable person who was wronged, rather than as a sarcastic or hateful person trying to make someone pay for imagined injuries. While the jury is likely to discount the testimony of the belligerent witness, the greater danger is that they also will take it out on the party who presented the witness--guilt by association. Explain to the witness that his or her attitude will have a negative impact on the entire case and will jeopardize the chances of winning at trial.

[3] Nice-Guy Witnesses

Some people are helpful by nature and want everyone to like them. The eagerness with which this witness responds to your suggestions indicates that you are dealing with the nice-guy witness. When answering questions, the nice-guy witness volunteers information and even tries to anticipate the questions. Perhaps the witness believes that if he or she is nice, the jury will be sympathetic. While this type of witness is likely to create a favorable first impression with the jury, he or she is also likely to provide unsolicited testimony that may be harmful to the case.

A useful way to prepare this witness is, first, to thoroughly explain trial procedures and the roles of the various players and then simulate a cross-examination in which you demonstrate the consequences of being too helpful or trying too hard to be liked. Explain that the witness will be liked and respected in the courtroom if he or she is honest, straightforward, and direct.

[4] Boring Witnesses

A boring witness may be frustrating, but generally will not be vulnerable. He or she may have excellent recall and may be very intelligent. The only problem is that because the witness lacks enthusiasm, he or she has a tendency to put the jury to sleep.

Sometimes, little can be done to liven up a boring witness' presentation. It is usually best to structure his or her testimony so that the essential aspects of it come first and last, and so that the witness' total time on the stand is as brief as possible. Even if the jury is bored to tears by most of the testimony, the testimony heard first will be best remembered and the testimony heard last will be last remembered. You also should structure your direct examination to elicit relatively short answers.

The boring witness generally is only boring when given the opportunity to provide rambling, narrative answers. Indeed, the boring witness may be boring because the questions you ask are boring. Repetitive questions or those that digress into trivia and fail to advance the story line are boring. Questions that do not emphasize testimony or highlight the importance of the answer to follow compound the boredom. n1

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Kinrich, Dull Witnesses, 19 Litigation 38 (Spring 1993).

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.05

§ 33.05 Strategize Order of Witnesses

[1] Order of Witnesses Should Reflect Principles of Primacy and Recency

Deciding the order in which to call your witnesses to testify is one of the most important decisions you will make. The order should reflect the principles of primacy and recency. In other words, the beginning and the end of your case will be best remembered by the jury. The first impression is normally the most lasting, most important, and hardest to dislodge. The last impression is the easiest to recall. For these reasons, you will want to start and finish strong and try to present any weak or unfavorable evidence in the middle of your case.

Your first witness is usually the most important witness to the your case. He or she must be strong (confident and able to withstand cross-examination) and very credible. Ordinarily, the first witness also should be able to provide an overview of your story. Blending these notions with the need to present your facts in a logical sequence frequently means that the first witness will be your client. Usually, the client can give the most complete and logical presentation of the facts of your case, may be necessary to lay a predicate for other testimony, may be your best and strongest witness, and the jury will be anticipating his or her testimony. n1 Keep in mind, however, that your client should not automatically be called first in every case. You must evaluate your other witnesses and decide the order in a thoughtful and not habitual manner.

[2] Present Witnesses in Logical Sequence

Present your witnesses in a sequence that informs the court of the essential aspects of your proof, but also permits each element of proof to be understood in light of what has gone before. This requires a logical order of witnesses and often suggests that you take a chronological approach to your story. Whether the order is chronological or topical, thought must be given to the best way to tie the testimony of witnesses together so that it is understandable and builds on the evidence that has been introduced before.

[3] Consider Availability and Convenience of Witnesses

Consider the availability and convenience of your witnesses. Because you want your case to proceed at an even pace, you will want to avoid long delays or early adjournments during trial. On the other hand, if your case depends on nonparty witnesses, you will want to be cooperative in accommodating their schedules. Practical considerations often will require variations from your preferred order as well as flexibility to accommodate schedule changes. Therefore, thoughtful advance planning and flexibility regarding the order of your witnesses is necessary.

[4] CHECKLIST: Strategizing Order of Witnesses

The following is a useful checklist of factors to consider when structuring your case:

1. Plan your order of witnesses in advance of trial.

2. Be flexible to accommodate changing conditions.

3. Attempt to present your case in a logical progression, as in a chronological sequence, for example.

4. Start with a strong witness.

5. Finish with a strong witness.

6. Because the jury usually is freshest at the start of a session, begin each morning and afternoon with favorable testimony and an interesting witness.

7. End each trial day on a high note.

8. Do not bore the jury. Intersperse technical elements of your case with more lively evidence. Consider alternating lay and expert witnesses. Rather than relying on transcripts of depositions in lieu of live testimony, play edited videotapes of the deposition. Jurors are accustomed to receiving information from television. If you must read from depositions because of the unexpected absence of a witness, do so creatively with one person reading the witness answers while you read the questions.

9. Do not prolong the case unnecessarily.

10. Consider concluding your case with an expert witness with whom you can summarize all favorable evidence.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral
OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral
OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. At the outset of trial, the judge will introduce the lawyers and the other persons sitting at counsel's table. From this point, the jury becomes interested in the client, or client representative, sitting with you and will almost immediately want to know what he or she has to say about the case.

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.06

§ 33.06 Maximize Each Trial Day

Jury service may take jurors from their jobs, family, and friends for an extended period of time. You must be prepared to use the full day for trial so that the jurors will not feel that you are wasting their time.

When you have a good case, keep it moving by putting in a full day of evidence. This does not mean you should hurry through a witness, only that you should resist any temptation to string the case out. The longer the trial takes, the more impatient and the less interested the jury will become. You do not want the jury to hold you and your client responsible for wasting time.

You should prepare for more than a single day of trial at a time. Inevitably, testimony takes longer or shorter than anticipated. If direct examination is to the point, the jury will not be troubled with long testimony from a witness. You will be rewarded for concise direct examination especially when the cross-examination is unnecessarily lengthy, aimless, and exploratory. The real problem arises when one witness takes a much shorter time to complete his or her testimony. You must have another witness ready to testify so that you are not compelled to request a recess or waste time. The only danger from being ready with one more witness is that the "spare" witness will resent the imposition.

While you will have prepared each witness before trial actually begins, you should not call the witness to testify until you have had a refresher session. The refresher session will be brief, reminding the witness of the major points from earlier sessions, and often is held over the telephone at night after your day in court. To guard against the eventuality of a short trial day, you should "refresh" at least one more witness than you anticipate calling on the next trial day. In that way, you will keep the continuity of your case and will not have alienated the jury through persistent delays.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.07

§ 33.07 Prepare Outlines for Direct Examination of Lay Witnesses

[1] Outlines Enhance Control over Direct Examination and Minimize Risk of Oversight

Most trials are won on the strengths of your case-in-chief than on the weaknesses of your opponent's case. Consequently, effective direct examination that clearly, logically, and forcefully presents the facts of your case will have a decisive effect on the outcome of the case.

Direct examination is an important, but potentially frustrating, part of the case. No matter how much time you spend preparing witnesses, you will not be in control of what the witness says on the witness stand. You may not lead your witness or cut off narrative answers. You must rely on your witness to be persuasive, direct, and credible. The best way to have some degree of control over direct examination is to thoroughly prepare each witness for direct examination. You should know the answer to each question before you ask it. There should be no surprises in direct examination. Consequently, prepare your witnesses by asking the same questions that you will ask at trial. To facilitate preparation and enhance your control over the direct examination, prepare an outline of the direct testimony of each of your witnesses.

Outlines of all direct testimony serve another important function at trial. They provide you with a checklist to avoid inadvertently failing to cover an important aspect of testimony. If you forget to ask certain questions on direct, you may not be able to resurrect that area of inquiry on redirect. Compare your outlines with the pre-trial brief to ensure that all elements of each of your claims or defenses are covered in direct examination. By actually checking off subjects on your outlines as the testimony is given, you will know whether you have overlooked any desired testimony.

[2] Start with Skeleton Outline

Sometimes getting started is the hardest part of the outline. When you prepared your outline of proof, you already had consciously given thought to who would say what to prove your case. Your witness outlines are simply detailed blowups of various parts of your outline of proof.

An outline should evolve. Many lawyers start with an outline that does little more than block out general areas of testimony that immediately come to mind in the context of what must be proven at trial. A first draft outline of a witness who will testify about a relevant product and geographic market might look like this:

Jones Outline

I. Background

A. Education

B. Work Experience

II. Duties and Responsibilities

III. Product Definition

A. Appearance

B. Function or uses

C. Customers

D. Competitors

E. Similar Products
1. Prices

2. Vendors

IV. Geographic Market

A. Location of sales offices

B. Location of competitors

C. Area serviced by plaintiff

[3] Outline Should Include Key Points as to Which Witness Will Testify

There is no standard form for a final witness outline. Most outlines are either a question-and-answer or topical format. Any outline, however, should include at least a summary of the key points to which the witness will testify at trial. For example, assume that your witness will testify that his or her company had five reasons for terminating a distributor. You should note all five reasons on your outline so that skillful questioning can remind the witness of any reason that he or forgets to mention at trial. Do not trust your memory to store the reasons for instant recall at the appropriate time. Given the emotions, emergencies, number of witnesses, and number of tasks involved in a trial, you almost certainly will not remember every answer that each of your witnesses is expected to give.

[4] Outline Should List All Exhibits to Be Used with Particular Witness

Your outline should set forth the "choreography" of your direct examination, and conspicuously list the exhibits to be used. A good practice is to list all exhibits to be used with a particular witness at the beginning of the outline so that you can collect all of them easily before examination commences. You should also note on the outline when they will be marked, shown to the witness, and offered into evidence.

[5] Outline Should Include Detailed Questions

For every important witness, questions should be written out in enough detail to ensure consistency between the questions asked in pre-trial preparation of the witness and those asked at trial. In addition, phrasing questions extemporaneously at trial is also more likely to lead to awkward or objectional questions. It is not that much more work to prepare the questions in a detailed fashion. Having a detailed outline does not mean that you cannot ask new questions at trial.

On the other hand, questions should not be written out word-for-word. You may become tied to your outline for fear that if you deviate from the script you will never get back on track and might omit vital areas of inquiry. If that happens, you will lose the flexibility and spontaneity that make for the most effective trial presentations. Never let the jury think that you are reading from a script and that you have prepared and orchestrated the entire direct testimony.

[6] Consider Using Topical Outlines

For witnesses whose part in the story is minor or mechanical, consider using topical outlines. One type of topical outline lists the essential elements of what the witness will say. Another lists topics to be covered, followed by a brief narrative statement of what you expect the witness to say. Your questions are structured at trial to cover all topics on your list and elicit the desired responses. Trial lawyers who use this technique usually appear natural and have greater flexibility.

Assume that you will call Ms. Jones to offer testimony on a relevant market issue in a merger case. Your outline of a portion of her testimony might appear as follows:

Click here to view image.

With this form of outline, your topics are listed in a column on the left side of the page. The right side is left open for reminders, such as when to use an exhibit and how to respond to objections. In this example, ID DX1 would be used in connection with testimony involving the description of the product. The right side of the outline also should include the drafts of the few questions you may want to write out in full before trial. Some attorneys will also use the right side to note at trial the significant aspects of the testimony. Voluminous notes, however, will clutter up the reminders. For this reason, if you tend to take voluminous notes, you may want to consider a three-column approach.

[7] Do Not Provide Witness with Copy of Outline

Generally, you should not provide your witness with a copy of your outline. On cross-examination your adversary may ask if the witness was shown an outline of his or her testimony. If the outline is in a question format, the jury will have the impression that a script was prepared and that the witness is simply filling a role at trial. If the outline is a topical format, the jury still may get the idea that you have suggested or provided answers to the witness. The witness also may adopt language and descriptions appearing in the outline or may even try to memorize the outline. You want the witness to be prepared, not programmed.

[8] Anticipate Objections

Before trial, you should have a game plan for introducing all evidence that will prove your case. To assure the smoothest possible trial presentation, try to anticipate your adversary's objections to the testimony or documents to be offered into evidence. When you have identified likely objections to significant evidence, you may ask the court to deal with them in advance of trial by filing a motion in limine. That will give the parties and the court the advantage of dealing with the legal issue in a relatively unpressured atmosphere, with the advantage of full briefing. If you have chosen not to raise the potential objection before trial, you may deal with it in two ways.

First, you can try to work around the problem. For example, if you had planned to call X to testify about what Y said during a meeting, you might seek to avoid any hearsay problem by calling Y to testify. If you have a chain of custody problem, you can arrange to have all necessary persons available to testify to preempt the objection.

Second, you can prepare to argue against the objection. Even though you have chosen not to file a motion in limine, you should have a brief memorandum of law to submit to the court on the legal issue raised by the evidence and the objection to it. That level of preparation for foreseeable problems will make your extemporaneous objections during trial more credible. Of course, if the judge nonetheless sustains the objection you will have to proceed in a different way than you planned. A good trial lawyer will always have an alternate path worked out before trial. The alternate may consist of a different series of questions, alternate witnesses, or a different document, but it is important that you formulate a plan in advance.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.08

§ 33.08 Lay a Foundation

[1] Connect Evidence to Case

In a general sense, all evidence needs a foundation. The testimony of a witness who seeks to describe an event is not admissible unless it first is shown that the witness was present and saw what was happening. Similarly, a gun found at the scene of the crime can hardly constitute relevant evidence against the defendant unless it is somehow linked to him or her through ownership or possession. Laying a foundation is your way of connecting the evidence to the case--showing that it is relevant. What follows are specific examples of laying foundations for witness testimony that may easily be adapted for a variety of situations.

[2] Occurrence Witness

An occurrence witness is a common and important witness. Before you ask about the occurrence, that is, what the witness saw, heard, or experienced, you must lay a foundation that places the witness at the scene of the events in a position to see what happened.

Example:

Q:

Mr. Jones, where were you on July 20, 1990, at 1 P.M.?

A:

I was at the corner of Jackson and Clark Streets in downtown Chicago.

Q:

In which direction does Jackson go?

A:

Jackson is one-way going east.

Q:

In which direction does Clark go?

A:

Clark is one-way going south.

Q:

Where exactly were you?

A:

I was standing on the southeast corner, the corner right by the X Bank parking garage, waiting for the traffic light to change.

Q:

What was the weather like at the time?

A:

Hot, sunny and very clear.

Q:

In which direction were you looking?

A:

I was looking north, straight at the federal building across the street.

[3] Ordinary Conversations

Conversations are commonly introduced at trial. Before putting the conversation in evidence, however, you should review its evidentiary basis. Keep in mind that a conversation is an out-of-court statement and thus may be hearsay if offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted. n1 To determine if you have a hearsay problem, you first should decide if the statement is being offered to prove the truth of what was asserted. If it is not, you may not have a hearsay problem. Suppose a witness, Mary, states that Bob told her that Frank was driving a stolen car at ninety miles an hour. If you are trying to prove through this testimony that Frank stole a car and was driving it at ninety miles per hour, the statement probably is inadmissible hearsay. But if you intend to offer it for a completely different purpose, such as to show that Bob knows Frank or to show that Bob made defamatory statements about Frank, the statement may be admitted for either purpose. Even if the statement is hearsay, it may be admissible if it constitutes an admission of a party-opponent or if it satisfies any other exceptions to the hearsay rule. n2

Example:

Q:

Mr. Jones, do you know Mr. Smith?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Who is he?

A:

The president of Company X.

Q:

How long have you known him?

A:

For about five years.

Q:

Have you ever had lunch with Mr. Smith?

A:

Yes.

Q:

When?

A:

The first of November 1992.

Q:

At what time?

A:

I recall it was a late lunch, we met at about 1:30 P.M.

Q:

How long did lunch last?

A:

About two hours.

Q:

Where did you have this lunch?

A:

At the Cathedral Hall dining room of the University Club.

Q:

Was anyone else present at this lunch?

A:

No.

Q:

Was anything said at this lunch about the price of widgets?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Please tell us what you said and what Mr. Smith said at this lunch on the subject of widget prices.

[4] Telephone Communications

Laying a foundation for a telephone conversation requires identifying the participants either by familiarity with the speaker's voice or extrinsic facts that circumstantially demonstrate the identification. When the witnesses know each other and recognize each other's voice, the foundation is similar to that of an ordinary conversation with the addition of testimony regarding voice recognition.

Example:

Q:

Ms. Jones, on July 20, 1992, did you call Mr. Smith?

A:

Yes.

Q:

What time did you place the call?

A:

About 2 P.M.

Q:

Where did you call him from?

A:

My office.

Q:

Do you know Mr. Smith?

A:

Yes.

Q:

How long have you known him?

A:

About five years.

Q:

Did you talk with Mr. Smith on this occasion?

A:

Yes.

Q:

How do you know you were talking with Mr. Smith?

A:

I recognized his voice.

Q:

How did you recognize his voice?

A:

I have spoken with him numerous times over the five years I have known him, both in person and on the telephone.

Q:

Did anyone else take part in the conversation?

A:

No.

Q:

Please tell the court and the jury what you said and what Mr. Smith said during this phone conversation.

Although this example shows previous telephone contact between the participants, it is not necessary to show that the other voice may be recognized because of previous telephone conversations. Federal Rule of Evidence 901(b)(5) provides that voice identification may be made by an opinion based on hearing the voice at any time under circumstances connecting it with the alleged speaker.

If your witness may not have been familiar with the other party to a phone conversation at the time it took place but later becomes familiar with the other party, no substantial foundation problem exists. Because Federal Rule of Evidence 901(b)(5) provides that voice identification may be based on familiarity with the voice gained at any time; questions need only be added regarding the subsequent conversations.

Example:

Q:

Mr. Smith, where were you at approximately 2 P.M. on July 20, 1992?

A:

I was at home watching T.V.

Q:

What happened at that time?

A:

The phone rang.

Q:

Did you answer it?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Did you recognize the voice of the person calling?

A:

No, not at the time.

Q:

Since 2 P.M. on July 20, 1992, have you had any meetings or conversations with Ms. Jones?

A:

Yes.

Q:

When?

A:

I met with her in her office on July 21, 1992, and I have had at least 20 telephone conversations with her since that date.

Q:

After July 20, 1992, did you become familiar with Ms. Jones' voice?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Mr. Smith, regarding the phone call you received on July 20, 1992, can you now state whether you recognized the voice of the person with whom you spoke?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Whose voice was it?

A:

Ms. Jones.

Q:

Did anyone else take part in the phone conversation?

A:

No.

Q:

As best you can recall, please tell the court and jury what you said and what Ms. Jones said during this phone conversation.

Federal Rule of Evidence 901(b)(6)(B) provides that a foundation for a phone call to a business may be established by showing that the phone call was (1) made to a business, (2) placed to the number that had been assigned to the business by the telephone company at the time of the call, and (3) the conversation related to business reasonably transacted over the telephone.

Example:

Q:

Mr. Smith, where were you on July 20, 1992, at about 2 P.M.?

A:

At home.

Q:

What did you do at that time?

A:

I got out my phone directory to look up the phone number of X Company.

Q:

Was the phone number listed?

A:

Yes.

Q:

What did you do then?

A:

I called X Company.

Q:

Then what happened?

A:

Someone picked up the phone and said "X Company."

Q:

Did you ask for anyone in particular at X Company?

A:

No.

Q:

Did anyone else take part in the conversation?

A:

No.

Q:

What was said during the conversation?

If you wish to show that the conversation was held with a certain person at the business, you also should show that a certain person was asked for by name, title, or description and that the call was connected to such person.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceHearsayGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 801(c).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d), 803, 804.

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.09

§ 33.09 Present Effective Direct Examination

[1] Acquaint Jury with Witness

Allow the jury to become acquainted with your witnesses. The jurors have no information concerning who a witness is and how he or she fits into the case until you (or the witness) tell them. For certain vital witnesses, you may make a brief introduction during your opening statement. For many witnesses, however, the jury will first meet the witness when he or she takes the stand for direct examination. You want the witness to be believed, so you want the jury to get to know the witness and get a sense of who he or she is.

[2] Keep Direct Examination Brief and Simple

Do not bury important facts in masses of detail or the jury will not be able to decipher what is and what is not important. Minimize or avoid entirely the use of unimportant facts, and dwell on the important. If you rush too quickly through critical facts, the jury will not fully comprehend them. In short, you should determine in advance what the critical part of the witness' testimony will be, get to it quickly, develop it fully, then stop.

Ask clear, succinct questions. As one commentator pointed out, "This is the age of the television sound bite. People are used to hearing thoughts expressed in simple, catchy phrases. Asking stilted, convoluted questions is going to get you in trouble." n1

Ask questions in a conversational manner. Fancy words are likely to confuse the jury and create the impression that you are showing off. Your questions should be asked in a conversational manner without resort to hyperbole, crescendo, or metaphors. How you phrase a question affects the answer and the impact of the answer on the jury. Therefore, you should choose simple words that advance the theme of your case and avoid stiff formal questions that smack of jargon or legalese. Consider whether you should ask if the bottle was half full or half empty, how fast or how slow a vehicle was travelling, or how light or how dark it was. Keep it simple. It is far better to ask "What happened after you left the party?" than "What events transpired when you terminated your participation in the festivities?"

[3] Phrase Questions to Elicit a Narrative Response

Narrative responses are typically more effective than a rapid succession of specific fact questions that are answered by a "yes" or "no". The more expansive response makes it appear that the facts are originating with the witness, rather than with the lawyer. It also helps minimize your presence during direct examination. The goal during the direct examination is to create the impression that the witness is speaking directly to the jury, telling his or her own story. If the witness has a good memory, is personable and articulate, and has been appropriately prepared to avoid hearsay and other mistakes, his or her seemingly spontaneous story may be interesting and believable. Typically, the best answers are usually elicited by open-ended questions, such as "Then what happened?" However, you must be prepared to interrupt the narrative to ask about critical facts that were glossed over or omitted or simply to break up the testimony when the narrative takes too long.

[4] Use Leading Questions on Direct Examination in Certain Circumstances

Federal Rule of Evidence 611 prohibits leading questions on direct examination of a witness "except as may be necessary to develop his testimony" or with respect to a "hostile witness, an adverse party, or a witness identified with an adverse party." n2 The "necessary to develop testimony" exception permits deviation from the general rule for the sake of convenience, efficiency or necessity. Consequently, leading questions may be asked of a non-adverse, non-hostile witness in any of the following cirucmstances n3

- Questions are directed to preliminary matters that are necessary foundations or set the stage for questions regarding the material matters in controversy (e.g., the name and address of the witness).
- They are directed to undisputed matters.
- They are used to connect up testimony.
- The witness has limited or impaired understanding, as when the witness is a young child.
- A witness is being asked to contradict statements made at trial by other witnesses.
- The witness needs his or her recollection refreshed.

As a tactical matter you should avoid leading questions on critical issues in the case because responses to leading questions may be ignored or discounted by the jury. Not only will the testimony elicited by the leading question be suspect, but the credibility of the witness, his or her entire testimony, and perhaps even your entire case will be questioned. Moreover, persistent leading questions can lead to repeated, sustained objections, and consequently, repeated interruptions in the direct testimony. They also contribute to an overall impression that you do not know what you are doing or are trying to buttress a weak case by improper methods. Finally, persistent use of leading questions may lead to a reprimand from the court.

You may be tempted to use a leading question, fully aware that an objection to it will be sustained, to signal the witness about what you want him or her to say. Even when an objection to the question is sustained, the signal cannot be erased from the witness' mind and you may then obtain the vital information by a proper question. n4

[5] Control Speed of Direct Examination

When you have a good case, you will want to keep the direct examination moving but not so rapidly that the jury will overlook a crucial aspect of the testimony. Despite advance planning, the exigencies of trial can cause the train to speed up. If you ask a key question and the answer produces the desired response, but the crucial testimony either is hidden in a long answer or the witness has gone over it too quickly for the jury to grasp its significance, what can you do? A number of different techniques may be used. First, you may simply ask the witness to repeat the answer, saying, "Ms. Jones, I'm sorry, I didn't hear what you said regarding Y." Second, you may break apart the answer by asking a more specific question about the crucial evidence. Third, you may repeat the crucial testimony as a part of your next question. Finally, you may interrupt the answer at the crucial time and emphasize the evidence through a follow-up question.

Generally, you should put on as much evidence as possible each day, resisting any temptation to string out the case. Your planned, concise presentation may contrast sharply with opposing counsel's more typical rambling and unfocused approach. The longer the trial takes, the more likely are the jurors to lose interest, forget testimony, and even daydream. It is best to have the jury decide the case as quickly as possible while evidence is still fresh in their minds. It is also best that they not resent you for wasting their time.

[6] Handling Cumulative or Corroboration Witnesses on Direct Examination

Calling cumulative or corroborative witnesses may hurt your case. The jury has a short attention span and wants the trial to end as soon as possible. Calling a number of cumulative witnesses will bore the jury and create the impression that you lack confidence in certain testimony or certain witnesses. Keep in mind that the fewer witnesses you call, the less exposure you create for yourself. When you have sufficiently made a point through one witness, leave the point alone. Do not call another witness just because you have one available. Unless corroboration is required by law, proceed cautiously in calling corroboration witnesses and then only after painstaking pretrial preparation.

However, sometimes you may be compelled by other testimony or the circumstances of the case to call corroboration witnesses. This usually happens with occurrence witnesses; the jury will want to hear from everyone who witnessed the crucial events. In certain cases, a negative inference may be drawn from your failure to call a person to the stand who is available as a witness. When a witness is not available to the other side, for example, the opposing party may be entitled to an instruction, called a "missing witness" instruction, to the effect that the witness did not appear because his or her testimony was not helpful to you.

If you call two or more witnesses with similar testimony, the substance of their testimony should be as consistent as possible. Any doubt you create in your own case will be magnified and exploited by your adversary. On the other hand, it is the common experience of jurors that two people rarely agree totally on what they both witnessed or experienced. Again, you should launch a preemptive strike during opening statements: "You will notice during the trial that the testimony of witnesses almost never totally agrees even though they both saw the same thing. As you know, we all see and remember somewhat differently. However, the testimony will show that, on all important points, the witnesses tell a consistent story."

A technique to use with corroborating witnesses is to keep their testimony brief and simple. When you put the corroborating witness on the stand, focus on only the essential points. Provide the necessary corroboration and then stop. The jury will appreciate the fact that you did not belabor the point. You also will limit the witness' vulnerability on cross-examination. To create the impression that the corroborating witness would testify fully consistent with the primary witness, you may consider introducing your direct examination with a statement like: "Ms. Franks, Ms. Smith already has testified fully about the meeting of January 10, 1992. Rather than go through it all again, let me ask you these few questions." By leading with your strongest witness and keeping the testimony of the corroborating witness very short, you will effectively minimize the usual dangers of calling a cumulative or corroborating witness.

[7] Utilizing Opinions by Lay Witnesses

The federal rules require a witness to testify from personal knowledge. n5 Hence, an occurrence witness must actually have observed the event at issue. This general rule has led to the popular belief that a lay person may not provide opinion testimony. Because a lay person usually has no special qualifications or training to reach the conclusions that may be offered, at trial many lawyers object to opinions by lay witnesses as being nothing more than guesswork, surmise or speculation.

Federal Rule of Evidence 701 permits opinion testimony by a lay witness when the opinions (or inferences) are:

(a) rationally based on the perception of the witness and (b) helpful to a clear understanding of the witness' testimony or the determination of a fact in issue.

Common subjects on which lay opinions may be offered include kinship, handwriting or voice identification, age, speed, and lighting conditions. When obtaining such opinion testimony you should lay a foundation that shows that the witness has a basis for rendering the opinion.

Because opinions by lay persons are susceptible to attack on cross-examination, and may even be excluded as being speculative, you should not rely solely on such testimony for a crucial aspect of your proof. Unless financial constraints exist, opt for an expert opinion. An expert witness is better trained to draw the crucial opinion and is more likely to stick with that opinion on cross-examination. The jury also may consider an expert to be more detached, and less emotional and altogether more credible. n6

[8] Refreshing a Witness' Recollection and Utilizing Past Recollection Recorded

[8.--1] Refreshed Recollection

Often during the course of a trial, a witness will forget aspects of his or her anticipated testimony. When that happens, you may hand the witness a document or even an object to inspect for the purpose of refreshing his or her recollection. Virtually any writing may be used, n7 and the document then need not be admitted into evidence because the witness will proceed to testify from his or her refreshed memory. The fundamental preconditions to refreshing the witness' memory while he or she is testifying at trial is showing a lapse of memory and the existence of something that will refresh the witness' recollection.

Example:

Q:

Tell us what you said and what Mr. Smith said during your meeting on July 20, 1992.

A:

[Witness relates what he recalls.]

Q:

Do you recall anything being said on the subject of widget prices?

A:

I can't recall anything else at the moment.

Q:

Did you take notes at this meeting?

A:

Yes, I did.

(NOTE: you may simply ask if the witness knows of any writing that would refresh his recollection about the meeting.)

Q:

Ms. Jones, I hand you defendant's Exhibit A for identification and ask if you recognize it?

A:

Yes, it's my notes of that meeting.

Q:

Please take a moment to review your notes. Have you completed your review?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Does defendant's Exhibit A refresh your recollection concerning the meeting?

A:

Yes, it does.

Q:

May I have the exhibit back, please. Now, please tell us what else you recall being said at the meeting on the subject of widget prices.

The witness testifies from his or her memory after it has been refreshed; the witness does not simply read his or her notes to the jury. If the witness cannot testify from memory after reviewing the writing, you may be able to introduce the writing into evidence as a past recollection recorded.

[8.--2] Past Recollection Recorded

Federal Rule of Evidence 803(5) authorizes the admission into evidence of a recorded recollection:

A memorandum, or record concerning a matter about which a witness once had knowledge but now has insufficient recollection to enable the witness to testify fully and accurately, shown to have been made or adopted by the witness when the matter was fresh in the witness' memory and to reflect that knowledge correctly. If admitted, the memorandum or record may be read into evidence but may not itself be received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party.

If thus properly qualified, the writing may be admitted and read into evidence. It may not go to the jury, however, unless offered by an adverse party.

Example:

Q:

Ms. Jones, how many people attended X Company's stockholders' meeting on July 20, 1992?

A:

About 75 to 100--I can't recall.

Q:

Who was there?

A:

I can't recall.

Q:

Ms. Jones, did you take notes during that meeting?

A:

Yes, I did.

Q:

Do those notes disclose who was present?

A:

Yes, they do.

Q:

And those notes were taken during the course of the meeting?

A:

Yes, they were.

Q:

Do those notes correctly show who was present?

A:

Yes, they do.

Q:

Would your notes refresh your recollection as to who was present at the meeting?

A:

No, there were just too many people there.

Q:

I show you what has been marked as defendant's exhibit No. 1 for identification and ask whether you recognize it?

A:

Yes, I do.

Q:

What is it?

A:

These are my notes of that meeting.

Q:

Are the notes in the same condition now as when you made them?

A:

Yes.

Direct the witness to read the document to the jury right when it is introduced into evidence.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyExaminationLeading QuestionsEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesOpinion TestimonyPersonal PerceptionsEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Williams, What to Do When Your Witness Goes Haywire, 29 Trial 118, 122 (May 1993).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 611(c). See Weinstein's Federal Evidence, § 611.06 (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Weinstein's Federal Evidence, § 611.06[2][b] (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

(n4)Footnote 4. The ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct and Code of Judicial Conduct deals with this aspect of coaching the witness only indirectly through general rules. See DR7-106, EC 7-25.

(n5)Footnote 5. See Kaczmarek v. Allied Chem. Corp., 836 F.2d 1055, 1061 (7th Cir. 1987) (witness may state an inference drawn from facts within witness' personal knowledge); Fed. R. Evid. 602.

(n6)Footnote 6. Experts are discussed in § 33.16 infra.

(n7)Footnote 7. See Fed. R. Evid. 612. See also Applegate, Preparing for Rule 612, 19 Litigation 17 (Spring 1993).

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.10

§ 33.10 Anticipate Problem Testimony

To be an effective advocate, you must not only present favorable evidence but you must also anticipate weaknesses and potentially damaging evidence. Jurors do not expect a person to be right all of the time. If you have a weakness in your case, face it squarely, put it into proper perspective, and take steps to minimize the impact it likely will have on the jury. The process of minimizing the weak points begins in the opening statement when you have a chance to prevent the damage that a weakness does when it surprises the jury.

One tactic to consider is addressing the harmful evidence on direct examination, rather than waiting for your opponent to exploit it dramatically on cross-examination. There is no easy answer as to when you should use this tactic and the answer necessarily must differ from case to case. You should consider the following in reaching your decision:

1. Does your opponent know of the harmful evidence?

2. Does your opponent have the necessary skills to exploit the harmful evience on cross-examination?

3. Just how damaging is the harmful evidence and what mitigating factors exist? Should those mitigating factors be presented before your adversary can exploit the weakness?

4. Does the harmful evidence relate to a crucial element of the case or just an incidental matter?

5. Can you present the harmful evidence to the jury gracefully in direct examination?

6. What effect will introduction of the harmful evidence during direct examination have on the scope of cross-examination?

7. Will you gain credibility with the jury by introducing the harmful evidence, thereby demonstrating that you are being candid and fair?

A corollary of this general consideration is that when you decide to disclose a weakness in your case, you must do so in the way that is most effective. Jurors know that people rarely behave as if they were expecting litigation or planned to be called as a witness years later. Memories fade or are wrong. Documents are destroyed or misplaced. This is not shocking. Just explain the weakness honestly. If the explanation is particularly weak, it may be better to offer no explanation at all and simply structure the testimony to say "I'm sorry." Jurors understand that everyone makes mistakes and will generally admire a witness for his or her honesty and frankness in admitting an error. The witness who says "I'm sorry" will obtain more understanding and sympathy from the jury than the witness who says "I'm sorry, but ..." followed by an implausible explanation.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.11

§ 33.11 Deal with Adverse and Hostile Witnesses

[1] Adverse Witnesses

An adverse witness may be any witness who is a party or has a special relationship to a party. Adverse witnesses include witnesses who are officers, directors, and managing agents of parties. Federal Rule of Evidence 611(c) broadens the definition of an adverse witness to include any witness "identified with an adverse party." Because adverse witnesses are motivated to weaken your case, you should call them sparingly and limit their testimony.

An adverse witness should be called only when necessary to establish an essential element of your case, and then only when you cannot obtain the desired evidence from a safer source. If you must call an adverse witness, you should conduct your examination by leading questions so as to control as much as possible the answers you will receive. n1

The only other time you should consider calling an adverse witness is when you are convinced the witness will make a poor impression on the jury. Again, this is a risky practice because your evaluation of the witness may have been incorrect.

Before calling an adverse witness, you should be satisfied that the court will in fact find the witness to be "adverse." If any doubt exists on this issue, you should have the issue resolved in limine before calling the witness to testify. Even if the judge finds that a witness is not adverse in a legal sense, your perception of the witness and his or her antagonisms to your case may be well-founded. You do not want to be placed in the position before the jury of either excusing the witness after he or she takes the stand or conducting your examination without resort to leading questions. If you find yourself in this predicament at trial, you may choose to cut your losses and excuse the witness almost immediately, even though you run the risk of leaving the jury wondering or creating a negative impression with them. The harm such a witness may inflict on your case may be far more damaging.

[2] Hostile Witnesses

Hostile witnesses should be handled in the same manner as adverse witnesses. A hostile witness is a witness who you thought was on your side, but who turns against you at trial. You will have prepared the witness to testify and you will be proceeding at trial through non-leading, open-ended questions when you find yourself surprised by the hostility of his or her testimony. If this happens, you may interrogate the witness as if on cross-examination under Federal Rule of Evidence 611(c).

Assume the worst about all nonparty witnesses. Every trial lawyer who has had the unpleasant experience of having a witness become hostile at trial knows not to be complacent about the testimony of nonparty witnesses who appear cooperative. When preparing your outline, include references to deposition testimony or exhibits that may be used to impeach the witness should the need arise.

You must avoid becoming involved in colloquy with the court or opposing counsel about the hostility of a witness in the presence of the jury. Federal Rule of Evidence 607 allows you to attack the credibility of a witness you have called to testify. You may impeach the witness without seeking leave from the court to do so. However, you may want to continue your examination and have the benefit of leading questions. If it is not obvious to the court that the witness is hostile, you may either ask a few additional questions to develop the hostility more fully or ask for a side bar in which you explain to the judge the reasons why you consider the witness hostile.

As with an adverse witness, you will want to keep your examination of a hostile witness as short as possible. Lead the witness to the point quickly, elicit the essential information you need, then stop.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyExaminationLeading QuestionsEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 611(c).

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.12

§ 33.12 Trial Counsel Should Control Conduct and Demeanor

[1] Counsel's Conduct and Demeanor Plays a Critical Role in Jury's Perception of Case

The importance of trial counsel to the art of persuasion should not be underestimated. While the trial of a lawsuit clearly is directed at developing the facts, it is not "just the facts" that determine the eventual winner. A host of intangibles directly affect how the jury will view the facts of each case and the impression trial counsel makes on the jury is perhaps one of the most important of these intangibles.

You are within sight and sound of the jury throughout the proceedings. The jury's impression of you will be affected by your actions in corridors, on elevators, and during recess. You are never not on display. Some lawyers act as if they become invisible when they are not speaking. Your nonverbal conduct is more important than the words you say. What you do and what you say will color the jury's impression of your case. Your conduct, style, sense of confidence, preparedness, and professional abilities will be scrutinized at all times. Remember that jurors are ordinary people who rely on their everyday experiences to decide the case. The matters that persuade them in the courtroom are essentially no different from those that confront them in business and social settings.

[2] Trial Counsel Should Always Be Sincere

Jurors react favorably to a lawyer who is sincere. Sincerity impresses on the jury the feeling that you are fighting a battle you believe in, that you have a solid case, and that you are sharing accurate and complete information with the jury. The sincere advocate may be trusted not to mislead.

Some young lawyers believe that entertaining the jury is the route to ultimate success. The jury will be most responsive if the evidence is presented in a way that captures and maintains the jury's interest. The jury is instructed by the court as to their duty and most jurors take their job as a juror quite seriously. Because they want to reach the correct result, they look to you as vehicles of assistance, not as court jesters. Do not confuse the clear, precise direct examination that maintains interest with entertainment that detracts from your message. While your case should be made interesting, you should not strive to entertain the jury at the expense of a sincere, orderly, and credible presentation of evidence. If you assume an unnatural demeanor at trial for the sake of entertaining or overly impressing the jury, you may succeed only in convincing the jury that you are not to be believed. Few people who are not trained actors have the ability to assume a number of roles, and jurors have an uncanny knack of recognizing an imposter. If the jury concludes that you are not being sincere, they may conclude that you are a fraud who is not to be believed and who is attempting to put something over on them. Be natural, be sincere, and be yourself.

Sincerity also requires that you maintain a consistent attitude towards your opposing counsel. Certainly, all lawyers must cooperate to facilitate the trial of the lawsuit, but cooperation does not require you to fraternize with opposing counsel during a recess. If the jurors see you battling during trial and then socializing at recesses, they may conclude that the trial is nothing more than a game or a big show. Any conduct that may suggest that the courtroom is a special private club for you and your opposing counsel must be avoided. If your personality or the strategy in a particular case requires that you be cordial to opposing counsel in the courtroom, the jury will not find any hypocrisy if they see you being cordial with opposing counsel in the hallway.

[3] Counsel Should Strategically Position Himself or Herself

Usually, you should conduct your examination from one place. Pacing around only distracts the jury from what should be the object of their attention--the witness. Most examinations are conducted from the podium, counsel's table, or the edge of the jury box. You may find that the need to record your questions as a back-up for the court reporter requires that you stand behind or beside the podium which cannot be moved because the microphone is wired into the floor. If you have any flexibility, consider the following schematic drawing of a courtroom:

Click here to view image.

Positions A, B, C and D represent likely places from which you can conduct your examination. Position A, nearest the witness box, generally should be used only when handing the witness an exhibit and asking a few brief foundation questions about it. It is otherwise an undesirable location for direct examination because it places you too close to the witness, creating the impression that you and the witness are having a private conversation. From this point it is very difficult to direct your witness' attention to the jury and the witness may not keep his or her voice up to be heard by the jury. Also, it may be difficult to shield your notes from the witness and the jury may feel that you are collaborating with or coaching the witness from a prepared text. Avoid position A-1. This position blocks the jury's view of the witness and also puts you in the position where your back is to the jury.

Position B represents the podium, which is the usual place for conducting examination in most federal courts. The podium is usually placed in the middle of the courtroom a suitable distance from the witness, judge, and jury. Some federal judges insist that all questioning be conducted from the podium. The location is satisfactory, but you may have some difficulty directing the witness' attention to the jury when answering and the jury may be able to observe the written notes from which you are conducting the examination. Advance planning may minimize these problems. The remaining problem with the podium is that the jury may not be able to see most of your body. Communication theory suggests that you will be more credible if you are standing in the open where all your body language is visible. If possible, stand beside or in front of the podium at least some of the time. Vary your position slightly even if the microphone problem means that you cannot stray far.

Some federal judges may allow you to conduct your examination from your table, position C. Don't. The benefits of this position derive from the proximity to co-counsel, the opportunity to use notes without the jury being actively aware of them, and the freedom to spread out notes and exhibits. This position, however, is not conducive to directing the witness to the jury and usually is a less desirable place than the podium for conducting direct examination. You will do a better job communicating with both the witness and the jury if you are standing up. You will be more visible and give a greater impression of being in command if you are standing. If you decide to conduct your direct examination from counsel's table, you should generally stand when doing so. If you must sit, be sure to sit up straight and do not cross your legs or position yourself in any way that might suggest disrespect, laxity, or disinterest.

Position D is perhaps the optimal location for conducting your direct examination. Because the position is relatively near the jury, you should first ensure that the judge will permit you to conduct your examination from that point. This position allows you to remove yourself from the jury's line of sight to the witness, forces the witness to make eye contact with the jury, and also will require the witness to speak loudly enough for the jury to hear his or her testimony. If your adversary is conducting direct examination from this position, watch what he or she is doing closely. The proximity to the jury may allow opposing counsel to display exhibits that are not in evidence or to adopt a style that might curry favor with certain jurors.

[4] Counsel Should Never Show Irritation With His or Her Own Witnesses

During the course of a trial, one of your witnesses may forget or ignore one of the instructions you gave during pretrial preparation. Perhaps the witness will give a long, rambling answer, make an unsuccessful effort at humor, or act overly antagonistic. You might be inclined to show displeasure or irritation so that the witness recalls your preparation session and does not make the mistake a second time. You must resist this temptation. Your irritation with your own witnesses may rub off on the jurors and cause the witness to become even less effective than he otherwise might be. Your irritation may only highlight the unpleasant characteristics of the witness and may even make you a less effective advocate.

If you fail to project an image of confidence, the jury may sense that something has gone wrong with your case. Your attitude will play a prominent role in persuading the jury of the strength of your case. Thus, if a witness becomes a problem, and you think you can correct the problem by a few brief reminders to the witness, consider requesting a short recess, if other circumstances make it appropriate. If a recess is inappropriate, get the witness off of the stand as quickly as possible, but continue to project the image of a competent lawyer who is confident of a favorable outcome.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsJury TrialsJurorsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.13

§ 33.13 Direct Examination By Defense Counsel

Direct examination by defense counsel involves some special considerations that derive from the nature, extent, and strength of the plaintiff's proof and the nature of the defenses. For example, in situations where the plaintiff has put in a strong case that appears to have favorably impressed the jury, defense counsel will have to mount a defense that squarely and persuasively controverts the plaintiff's case. The relevant cliche is: "The best defense is a good offense." To be effective, defense counsel must affirmatively contradict the plaintiff's case and may not rest only on a series of denials.

Using a chronological presentation or having a first witness who can provide an overview of the case is not as important a consideration for the defendant as it is for the plaintiff. Instead, defense counsel should go for the jugular, focusing attention on a major weakness of the plaintiff's case or on a major strength of the defendant's own case. By doing so, defense counsel gains credibility, rekindles the jury's interest, and paves the way for additional favorable evidence.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral Overview

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.14

§ 33.14 Compelling Witness Attendance

[1] Counsel Should Subpoena All Witnesses He or She Intends to Call at Trial

Any person who is not your client whom you intend to call at trial should be subpoenaed. While you may be completely comfortable and confident that a nonparty witness will appear as promised, he or she is not compelled to do so, and without the subpoena you will have no way to command the witness' appearance. n1

A subpoena also protects the witness. For example, it provides proof to the witness' employer of the need to be absent from work on a particular day. The subpoena also gives the witness someone to blame for his or her testimony. If a witness is confronted by a friend or customer, for example, who says "What's this I hear about you testifying against Joe?" the witness may blame the court. Moreover, some lawyers on cross-examination make it their practice to ask whether the witness was subpoenaed to appear. If a witness has not been subpoenaed, your adversary may attempt to create the impression that the witness is biased and in consort with your client.

[2] Issuing and Serving Trial Subopenas

Subpoenas are issued either by court clerks or attorneys. n2 If the clerk is requested to issue the subpoena, the subpoena is issued in blank, but for the signature. n3 No showing of materiality or relevance need be made to obtain a subpoena, and leave of court is unnecessary. Issues of materiality and relevance are raised by a motion to quash filed before the date of the appearance stated in the subpoena.

Attorneys may issue subpoenas for courts in which they are authorized to practice. n4 In addition, attorneys may issue subpoenas for courts in the district where the subpoena is compelling a deposition or production, if that deposition pertains to an action pending in a court where the attorney is authorized to practice. Therefore, if an attorney to an action in one district needs to subpoena a witness for a deposition in another district, the attorney may issue the subpoena on behalf of the latter court even though the attorney is not authorized to practice law in that court. In addition to the provisions of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 45(a)(3), local rules of court may give magistrate judges authority to issue subpoenas. n5

A subpoena with witness fees may be served by any person who is not a party and is not less than 18 years of age. n6 As a practical matter, you should have the subpoena served by a special process server who satisfies the requirements of this rule. A special process server provides you with control over when and in what manner the subpoenas will be served.

The rule does not provide any time period in advance of trial by which the subpoena must be issued and served, but you should see to it that all necessary subpoenas are served a reasonable time before the witness is required to appear. Generally, service two weeks in advance will be found to be reasonable. As the trial date approaches, you should know where to find your witnesses. Discovering that a key witness is out of the country and will not return until after your trial would be utter disaster. While not many nonparty witnesses will be so cooperative as to rush back to the United States to offer testimony, you may seek to avail yourself of the "interest of justice" provision of section 1783 of the Judicial Code n7 to compel witness attendance. However, it is unlikely that the judge will be persuaded or that your tactics will endear the witness to you and your case.

[3] Territorial Limitations of Subpoenas

All subpoenas may be served: n8

- Anywhere in the district of the court from which it is issued
- Any place within 100 miles of the place of the trial, hearing, deposition, production, or inspection specified in the subpoena
- Anywhere in the state where a state statute or rule would permit service of a subpoena issued by a state court sitting in the place of the trial, hearing, deposition, production, or inspection

These territorial limitations on the service of subpoenas are meant to prevent "undue inconvenience" to witnesses. n9 The Rule uses a state court's subpoena reach as a yardstick for the reach of a subpoena issuing from a district court in that state so that the district court subpoena will be "at least as extensive as that of the state courts." n10 If the state court rules would allow service of a subpoena for a greater distance than the "100 mile" or "within the district" distance of the federal rule, n11 the state-sanctioned distance will be adhered to, since it is "likely to reflect the varying degrees of difficulty and expense attendant on local travel." n12 In addition, a subpoena may be served at any other place when authorized by a United States statute. n13 The circumstances and procedure for serving a subpoena on a United States national or resident who is in a foreign country are governed by 28 U.S.C. § 1783. n14

[4] Witness Fee Must Be Tendered with Subpoena

Witness fees must be tendered with the subpoena unless it is issued on behalf of the United States or any agency thereof. n15 Under 28 U.S.C. § 1821, the witness must be paid an attendance fee of $40 per day for each day's attendance at trial, including time spent in travel. A witness is entitled to his or her actual transportation expenses when traveling by common carrier so long as the witness uses "the most economical rate reasonably available." n16 Otherwise, mileage expenses for witnesses are set based on the current allowance for federal employees on official business. n17 If the witness' home is too far to permit commuting, he is allowed a per diem as subsistence, also based on the per diem paid to federal employees on official business away from home. n18 As a practical matter, you will want to pay in full for your witness' travel, hotel, and meals. Exceeding the statutory rates affects only the amount you may claim as costs if you prevail in the case.

All witnesses are entitled to the fees specified in 28 U.S.C. § 1821, whether or not they are subpoenaed to give testimony.

[5] Ignoring Trial Subpoena Subjects Witness to Contempt

A witness may not ignore a subpoena without subjecting himself or herself to contempt. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 45(f) provides:

Failure by any person without adequate excuse to obey a subpoena served on that person may be deemed a contempt of the court from which the subpoena issued.

If a motion to quash is pending, the witness may refuse to comply with the subpoena until the motion is decided. n19 The decision whether there is an adequate excuse for failure to obey a subpoena is within the court's discretion. n20

If you suspect that a witness you would like to call at trial will move to quash the subpoena, you should make the subpoena returnable before you anticipate calling the witness so that any motion to quash can be decided without affecting the order of proof you have developed. If no motion to quash is filed, you may ask the judge to continue the subpoena in force until the desired date. You are under no ethical prohibitions in contacting a nonparty witness, and as the trial progresses you can advise the witness of the exact date on which he or she should appear.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersSubpoenasCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Where an unsubpoenaed witness who cooperated throughout the proceeding does become unavoidably absent, it is an abuse of discretion for the district judge to deny a continuance requested by the party calling that witness. Grochal v. Aeration Processes, Inc., 797 F.2d 1093, 1097 (D.C. Cir. 1986) , vacated on other grounds, 812 F.2d 745 (1987) ; see Trakas v. Quality Brands, Inc., 759 F.2d 185, 187-188 (D.C. Cir. 1985) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(a)(3).

(n3)Footnote 3. See McGill v. Duckworth, 944 F.2d 344, 353 (7th Cir. 1991) , cert. denied, 503 U.S. 907 (1992) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See Kupritz v. Savannah Coll. of Art & Design, 155 F.R.D. 84, 86-87 (E.D. Pa. 1994) .

(n5)Footnote 5. 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(3).

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(b)(1).

(n7)Footnote 7. 28 U.S.C. § 1783(a) provides:

> (a) A court of the United States may order the issuance of a subpoena requiring the appearance as a witness before it, or before a person or body designated by it, of a national or resident of the United States who is in a foreign country, or requiring the production of a specified document or other thing by him, if the court finds that particular testimony or the production of the document or other thing by him is necessary in the interest of justice, and, in other than a criminal action or proceeding, if the court finds, in addition, that it is not possible to obtain his testimony in admissible form without his personal appearance or to obtain the production of the document or other thing in any other matter.

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(b)(2).

(n9)Footnote 9. Committee Note of 1980 Amendment to Fed. R. Civ. P. 45.

(n10)Footnote 10. Committee Note of 1980 Amendment to Fed. R. Civ. P. 45.

(n11)Footnote 11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(b)(2).

(n12)Footnote 12. Committee Note of 1980 Amendment to Fed. R. Civ. P. 45; Yun Ja Chung v. Chrysler Corp., 903 F. Supp. 160, 164 (D.D.C. 1995) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 23, which pertains to suits by the United States under the antitrust laws, a writ of subpoena may be issued for a distance greater than 100 miles with permission of the court after proper application and cause shown.

(n14)Footnote 14. 28 U.S.C. § 1783.

(n15)Footnote 15. Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(b)(1); see also 28 U.S.C. § 1825.

(n16)Footnote 16. 28 U.S.C. § 1821(c)(1).

(n17)Footnote 17. 18 U.S.C. § 1821(c)(2).

(n18)Footnote 18. 18 U.S.C. § 1821(d)(1)-(3).

(n19)Footnote 19. See Moore's Federal Practice, § 45.04[3] (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

(n20)Footnote 20. Generally, the advice of an attorney is not an adequate excuse. See MOORE'S FEDERAL PRACTICE, § 45.04[6] (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.15

§ 33.15 Using Depositions Affirmatively at Trial

[1] Using Deposition Testimony When Witness Is "Unavailable"

Deposition testimony is inadmissible at trial unless it falls into one of the exceptions set forth in the Federal Rules of Evidence. An unavailable declarant is one exception. n1

Federal Rule of Evidence 804 defines an unavailable witness. In federal court, a witness is "unavailable" when either:

- The witness is exempted from testifying under a claim of privilege
- The witness refuses to testify
- The witness testifies to a lack of memory of the subject matter of his or her statement
- The witness is unable to testify because of death or mental or physical illness
- The witness' attendance at trial may not be compelled by subpoena

The district court may properly exclude a plaintiff's deposition testimony if the plaintiff is responsible for his or her own absence. The fact that a party is more than 100 miles from the court does not require the district court to automatically admit that party's deposition. Rather, the trial court may consider all the circumstances related to the party's absence to determine whether the deposition may be used. n1.1

[2] Deciding Which Portions of Deposition Testimony Should Be Read at Trial

Live testimony is far more interesting to the jury than deposition testimony. Consequently, you normally should not read deposition transcripts at trial. Videotaped depositions are so common that reading depositions at trial seems hopelessly old fashioned. Jurors love videotape. They are accustomed to obtaining information from television. And this without commercials! The extra expense, especially where you anticipate that the witness will be unavailable or you do not intend to pay an expert witness to appear at trial, is nominal. You then edit the videotape and opposing counsel can play his or her edit by way of cross-examination. The process for agreeing on the edits is now part of the pre-trial order in most cases. If there is no videotape, be aware of the need to make it lively.

When you must read deposition testimony, keep in mind that the reading should be like a direct examination. In addition to reading substantive testimony of events, you also should read those sections of the deposition that familiarize the jury with the witness--tell the jury who the witness is and why he or she should be believed. You should also read complete answers to the jury. Since your adversary has the right to insist that the jury hear complete answers, any attempt to pick and choose parts of an answer that take the answer out of context will accomplish little other than to convince the jury that your entire case is suspect.

The most effective way to read depositions into evidence is to place a colleague or someone from your office on the witness stand to read the answers while you read the questions. This approach helps to enliven the transcript and makes the testimony more interesting, easier for the jury to follow, and easier to understand. Keep in mind that whomever you place on the witness stand to play the role of the witness will be evaluated by the jury much like any other witness. The true demeanor of the person who gave the testimony will never be known to the jury. The testimony of a person with numerous undesirable characteristics might be effective and persuasive when read at trial by an "actor" with a personable and convincing demeanor. Remind whoever will read testimony that the presentation should be clear, and statements should be read with conviction. Rehearse the reading before delivering it to the jury.

[3] Advise Court in Advance as to Deposition Testimony to Be Read at Trial

Before trial you should advise the court of which parts of which deposition transcripts you intend to read at trial. n2 Standard pretrial orders of many federal judges require the parties to designate and counterdesignate portions of deposition transcripts expected to be read at trial. One party first will designate by page and line those portions of the transcript he or she intends to read at trial. The other party then has an opportunity to counterdesignate those portions of the transcript that are necessary to clarify, explain, or complete the answers given in the designated portions.

Pretrial designations and counterdesignations will enable you to focus on any objections that were made at the time of the deposition. By seeking a ruling on these objections prior to the time the transcript will be read into evidence, you will be able to read the transcript to the jury without interruption.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureTrialsDepositionsEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyLay WitnessesGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Evid. 804.

(n2)Footnote 1.1. Garcia-Martinez v. City & County of Denver, 392 F.3d 1187, 1191 (10th Cir. 2004) .

(n3)Footnote 2. See generally Ch. 27, Pretrial Conference.

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.16

§ 33.16 Using Expert Witnesses

[1] Understanding Rules Governing Expert Testimony

Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, any witness may offer an opinion that is "rationally based on" the witness' perception and helpful to the determination of a fact in issue. n1 Additionally, the Rules permit you to call a witness who has specialized knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education that may assist the jury in understanding the evidence or determining a fact in issue. n2

At trial, the admissibility of expert testimony turns on the court's determination of whether the expert's testimony "will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue." n3 The barriers that you must overcome in federal court before expert testimony is admissible were set out in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., n4 wherein the Supreme Court held that the Federal Rules of Evidence restrict the admissibility of expert testimony, and that trial judges have the "gatekeeping" responsibility of screening such evidence.

Under Federal Rule 402 of Evidence, a qualified expert may offer an opinion if "scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact... ." As the test of Rule 702 is "technical knowledge," an expert opinion must involve a level of certainty beyond speculation or subjective belief, i.e., a standard of "evidentiary reliability" or trustworthiness. The Court in Daubert offered general observations concerning some of the pertinent factors bearing on the admissibility of expert testimony: whether the theory has been reliably tested; whether the theory has been published or otherwise subjected to review in the scientific community; the known or potential rate of error of a particular technique; whether the theory has "general acceptance" in the scientific community, or has garnered little support; whether the opinion is based on facts reasonably relied on by experts in the particular field; and whether the probative value of the testimony is outweighed by any of the factors enumerated in Federal Rule of Evidence 403, such as prejudice or waste of time. These considerations are merely factors to be considered by a judge.

A witness is qualified as an expert by his or her training, experience, skill, or knowledge. n5 The subject matter of his or her testimony must be capable of assisting the trier of fact in reaching its decision, but must not supplant the factfinder's obligation to make the decision. Under Federal Rule of Evidence 704, however, expert testimony "is not objectionable because it embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact."

[2] Assessing Whether Experts Should Be Retained

An expert's utility in litigation goes beyond merely offering testimony. Experts, whether retained merely as consultants or to testify at trial, may educate and assist you with respect to technical aspects of a case. Therefore, to maximize the value of the experts you retain, you should quickly identify those issues that are appropriate for expert assistance.

A consulting expert may be able to assist you in preparing for client and witness interviews and depositions; he or she may suggest questions to ask, areas to explore and documents to request. Some thought should be given to having the expert attend interviews and depositions. The expert may be able to assist you in formulating and structuring discovery. He or she may draft or suggest interrogatories or answers to interrogatories. The expert also may be used to analyze documents produced, prepare summaries of voluminous documents, and prepare demonstrative evidence for use at trial. Finally, the expert may assist trial counsel in undermining an adverse expert. The expert may collect prior writings of the adverse expert and generally recognized industry treatises that may impeach the adverse expert. And, of course, your expert should be able to identify the weaknesses in the adverse expert's analysis and opinions. Note, however, that if a testifying expert performs any of these tasks, the results will be discoverable. n6

Once you have identified the issues on which expert testimony would be useful, you must consider the economic aspects of the case. If the case presents minimal damage exposure or your client is relatively impecunious, you may decide to forego an expert. This may be risky. In some cases, expert analysis and opinion is essential to success. In those cases, you should consider whether any of your potential witnesses could qualify as an expert on the "expert" issues in the case. An in-house expert may be better than no expert at all. Use both the opening statement and preliminary questions on direct examination to raise and deflate the issues of bias or prejudice on the part of the in-house expert.

[3] Locating Appropriate Experts

Once you have decided to use an expert, either as a consultant or as a witness, you must begin the selection process. The first step is to identify the particular field of expertise most suited to the issues to be resolved. The table that appears as the appendix to this chapter may also be of assistance. Consider the following sources as well:

- Client suggestions. For example, if you are defending a case for a major bank which requires expert testimony about economic projections, you may want to consult with your client's chief economist who may know experts in that field.

- Internet Searches. Many witnesses who testify regularly as experts have websites setting forth their background, areas of expertise, and prior cases in which they have participated as an expert witness.

- Local colleges or universities. Home grown experts are more persuasive with jurors than experts from distant places, even if the local expert may have a less impressive resume or be testifying for the first time. (If the expert is less experienced as a witness, you will need to spend more time in pretrial preparation.) While a university is unlikely to have a formal referral system, the chairperson of the appropriate department may provide names of faculty members and alumni or may have a specific recommendation for you. Even if the names produce no candidates with the requisite skills, those contacts may be able to steer you to other sources.

- Trade associations and professional organizations. Many of these groups have referral systems and they usually are quite helpful in identifying members with particular expertise. These groups also may be able to provide you with directories or handbooks that may identify potential candidates.

- Attorneys who have handled similar cases. Not only may these attorneys supply the names of experts within the pertinent field, but they also may furnish information on the performance of various experts at trial, and their helpfulness, cooperation, and thoroughness in trial preparation.

- The Association of Trial Lawyers of America (ATLA). ATLA will provide members with a list of attorneys who have handled cases regarding a particular topic within the last ten years. These attorneys then may be contacted to find out which experts they have used.

[4] Assess Vulnerability of Potential Experts

You should try to assess each potential expert's vulnerability to attack by your adversary. Inevitably, the type of person you are considering for the job of expert witness has written books or articles, or has given a number of speeches. During your preliminary interview, you should ascertain whether the candidate has ever expressed an opinion contrary to your position in the case. If you cannot distinguish your case from the expert's prior, contrary opinions, or if there is no good explanation for the expert's change in attitude, the candidate should be dropped from consideration. You do not want an expert witness who creates the impression that he or she can be "bought" for the right price. Moreover, such a witness may lack the conviction to stand up to cross-examination. An expert who agrees with your adversary is obviously worse than no expert at all.

[5] Exercise Caution as to In-House Experts

On many occasions you will find an employee of your client who has all of the characteristics necessary to be an outstanding expert witness. The only real problem is that he or she is an employee of a party. Expert witnesses should have the aura of objectivity. Even though they receive compensation for testifying, they are third parties who are more likely to be believed than a person who owes his or her livelihood to one of the litigants. Consequently, unless financial constraints preclude you from hiring an outside expert, you should be reluctant to use an in-house person as an expert who will testify at trial in the case. n7

That is not to say that an in-house expert never should be used. Given the size of the claim involved or the client's financial condition, an employee may be the only realistic alternative. If you decide to use an in-house expert, the person chosen should not have had any personal involvement in the matters in controversy. Personal involvement may cloud objectivity and judgment; an in-house expert with such personal involvement may try to win the case to vindicate himself or herself at all costs and will be extremely vulnerable to cross-examination. Your in-house expert should belong to professional associations and be a person who is recognized in the industry. For example, an employee who chairs a trade association committee on developing adequate warning signs may be a better expert than a bright and knowledgeable assistant.

Furthermore, in-house experts may be used in conjunction with outside experts to reduce costs. The in-house expert can work closely with the outside expert in analyzing documents, preparing summaries, and digging for information the outside expert needs to formulate his or her opinion.

In-house experts are especially helpful for pretrial assistance. The in-house expert is familiar with company policies and procedures, filing systems and the internal workings of the company and thus may work rapidly in obtaining desired information. The in-house expert also is likely to know the jobs of his or her fellow employees and may be able to locate quickly the right person to interview. An in-house expert may also be used as a source of information and may provide guidance to you as the case progresses to trial.

[6] Consider Using More Than One Expert

You should not retain more than one expert simply for the sake of numbers. You are not likely to enhance your chances of success merely by having more experts than your adversary. Indeed, the danger exists that your own experts may contradict one another during their cross-examinations. Moreover, having two experts testify about essentially the same issues may create an unfavorable impression with the jury.

However, there are some circumstances in which there are compelling advantages in retaining more than one expert. For example, it might make sense to retain multiple experts if the experts' fields are limited or highly specialized, and the issues in the case transcend more than one speciality. You may also wish to retain multiple experts in order to prevent them from being hired by your opponent if there are few qualified experts in a field.

[7] Protecting Expert and Client

If you retain an expert to testify, the opposing party is entitled to discover the expert's identity, the subject matter of the expert's testimony, the expert's opinions, and the basis for the expert's opinions. n8 However, the Advisory Committee Notes on Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(4) state that the identity of an expert who is informally consulted and has not been employed to testify or to assist in trial preparation is not discoverable. n9

The identities of all experts you plan to call at trial may be the subject of an interrogatory early in the case. If you disclose a testifying expert before you determine the nature of the expert's opinions, you may later need to discharge the expert or not use him or her to testify. This will attract your adversary's attention. The safest approach is to discuss potential opinions first and retain the expert as a consultant, leaving the decision on trial testimony for a later time.

Effective December 1, 2010, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect drafts of any expert report or disclosure required under Rule 26(a)(2), regardless of the form in which the draft is recorded. n9.1

Additionally, Rules 26(b)(3)(A) and (B) protect communications between the party's attorney and any expert witness required to provide a report under Rule 26(a)(2)(B), regardless of the form of the communications, except to the extent that the communications do any of the following: n9.2

- Relate to compensation for the expert's study or testimony
- Identify facts or data that the party's attorney provided and that the expert considered in forming the opinions to be expressed
- Identify assumptions that the party's attorney provided and that the expert relied on in forming the opinions to be expressed

[8] CHECKLIST: Preparing Experts

Expert witnesses present many of the same preparation problems as lay witnesses. Generally, an expert should be prepared in the same fashion as any other witness. n10 You should not abbreviate or dispense with preparation of an expert just because he or she is a professional.

In preparing an expert, you should consider the purpose for which you will be calling the expert at trial: to apply his or her specialized knowledge to assist the jury in understanding the case and thus in reaching the proper verdict. The jury may view the expert as the most important part of the case, and the impression that the expert makes on the jurors may improve their appraisal of your other witnesses. The testimony of an expert must proceed smoothly with no surprises. The expert must be confronted with his or her prior opinions and writings in advance of trial, and should be thoroughly prepared for cross-examination by your use of hypothetical questions. Therefore, experts present unique problems and require more extensive preparation than lay witnesses. A number of rules should be followed in preparing an expert to testify.

1. Preparation should begin immediately after selection, and it should be a give-and-take process. The expert likely will have to educate you on technical matters so that you ask the right questions and foresee possible areas for cross-examination. Even though you may have a good grasp of the concepts involved, it is a mistake to conduct witness preparation without the benefit of the expert's insight regarding your proposed line of questioning, other fertile areas of inquiry, and possible cross-examination. Undoubtedly, your adversary will use his or her expert to find holes in your expert's opinions and to formulate questions for cross-examination. In preparing your expert to testify, you should always ask how other knowledgeable persons in the industry would receive or react to the testimony you plan to offer.

2. You must make a diligent effort to keep your expert objective. You do not want a surrogate advocate who may argue with opposing counsel or take extreme positions in order to win the case. If the expert appears to be an advocate, the jury may feel he or she is biased. The expert should be courteous and respectful to opposing counsel. The expert should be clearly instructed not to argue with opposing counsel or to express personal views regarding the opposing party or counsel.

3. Make sure that your expert is familiar with recent editions of any standard treatises in his or her field. The expert also should review any relevant articles and books he or she has written. You also should assure yourself that your expert's definition of terms coincides with those appearing in technical dictionaries and encyclopedias. These sources certainly will be examined by opposing counsel and opposing experts.

4. Before calling the expert to testify, you also should learn how the expert's peers evaluate him or her. Part of this process entails discovering whether anything derogatory exists about the witness so that you can steer clear of opening the door on such matters. The expert should be told that opposing counsel will thoroughly investigate the expert's past, and the expert should be encouraged to disclose any discrediting information.

5. Provide the expert with a comprehensive and balanced view of the case so the expert understands the relevancy of his or her own testimony. Note, however, that such information is discoverable.

6. Make sure that your expert realizes he or she is not expected to be expert in all fields. If a question outside the expert's areas of expertise is asked on cross-examination, he or she should feel comfortable admitting that the question is outside the expert's area of expertise. The expert's candor in such an admission will bolster his or her credibility.

7. You should make maximum use of visual aids to help the jury understand expert testimony. n11 You should work with your expert in advance of trial to develop demonstrative evidence that is both clear and effective.

8. Be sure that you provide the expert all necessary physical evidence and exhibits to be analyzed or tested by your expert.

9. Determine in advance what qualifying questions you will ask. For example, you do not want to ask at trial whether the witness has written articles in his or her field only to hear a firm "no." By jointly developing the format for qualifying the expert, you can avoid creating doubt about your witness' credentials. The question format for planning direct examination is virtually mandatory for expert witnesses because the each question must be precise.

10. The expert should be advised to use clear, everyday language that may be easily understood by the average juror. The expert should be able to define or explain technical or specialized concepts. Instruct the expert to analogize to everyday life, and do not hesitate to make suggestions.

11. You and your experts should cooperate closely in devising the most persuasive format for your expert's testimony. If you will use a hypothetical question, write it out in advance and review it with your expert. Remember to include all relevant facts in any hypothetical question.

12. Explain what your opinion questions will be and how you will be required to phrase them. You should explain that certain terms may have a different meaning in court than they have in the sciences. For example, legal causation differs from scientific concepts of causation with which he may be familiar.

13. Have the expert review his or her deposition testimony. Go over the deposition with the expert to point out problems or necessary clarifications. Also show the expert any document he or she may be asked about during cross-examination.

14. After the examination format has been developed, you should have one or more practice sessions with the expert.

15. The expert must be thoroughly prepared for cross-examination. He or she should be aware that a common technique is for opposing counsel to offer a hypothetical question, or series of hypothetical questions, containing fact assumptions that differ from those used by the expert in direct examination. Tell the expert to listen carefully to each question and to remain calm and collected during cross-examination. Finally, tell the expert to stick to his or her opinions.

16. Explain to the expert that you will have an opportunity for redirect testimony. The expert should not become frustrated or angry if opposing counsel will not let the expert fully explain an answer. You will be able to fix that on redirect.

17. Advise the expert not to be embarrassed by questions about compensation. The expert should consider testifying that his or her time is valuable, that the fees charges are reasonable for a person with his or her qualifications, and that the fees do not depend on the outcome of the trial. The expert should also admit, if questioned, that he or she has thoroughly discussed his or her trial testimony with you so that the jury could better understand the technical matters involved.

18. Explain to the expert that cross-examination questions properly may be answered "yes" or "no"; not every response by the expert should be a definitive treatise on the subject.

[9] Qualify Witness as an Expert

As a purely legal matter, expert opinion testimony will not be admitted into evidence until the witness is qualified as an expert. Moreover, testimony regarding the qualifications of an expert helps persuade the jury that the expert has the necessary qualifications to render accurate and trustworthy opinions. Therefore, direct examination of an expert should commence with the expert's qualifications. Let the jurors get to know your expert so they can develop confidence in his or her opinions. Fully develop the expert's educational and employment background, experience in the specific industry, professional associations, public or professional offices held, honors received, and articles, books and publications authored. Remember, however, that formal education and honors are not an essential prerequisite to qualifying a witness as an expert. In a given situation, training and experience alone may suffice. In those situations you should downplay the witness' education and highlight his or her on-the-job training and experience. In every case, testimony about the expert's qualifications should be tailored to impress on the jury that the expert is credible.

Be wary of stipulating to the qualifications of your expert. In most cases in which you will use an expert witness, your opponent also will have one. Your goal is for the jury to view your expert as more qualified and reliable than your adversary's expert. The experts' respective qualifications will certainly be considered by the jury in making this assessment. For this reason, you do not want your adversary to stipulate to your expert's qualifications. It is far more effective to have your expert tell the jury just how expert he or she is, than to rely on a dry, terse statement that opposing counsel stipulates to the qualifications of your expert. If you and your adversary stipulate to the qualifications of each other's expert witnesses, the jury will have no basis to differentiate between the qualifications of the witnesses. Let your witness show off his or her credentials to the jury.

In most cases, you should have little difficulty in qualifying your expert. An "expert" is not viewed in a narrow sense. Under Federal Rule of Evidence 702, an expert is a person qualified by knowledge, skill, experience, training or education. n12 District courts have broad discretion to admit or exclude offered expert testimony. n13 A court may exclude testimony where the expert lacks training or experience in the field or where the expert appears to be unreliable.

n14

[10] Introducing Expert Opinion Testimony

[10.--1] Three Approaches to Develop Expert Opinion Testimony

Federal Rules of Evidence 703 and 705 control the method by which counsel introduces opinion testimony from his or her expert. Rule 703 provides:

The facts or data in the particular case on which an expert bases an opinion or inference may be those perceived by or made known to the expert at or before the hearing. If of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences upon the subject, the facts or data need not be admissible in evidence.

Under this rule, counsel has three approaches available to develop opinion evidence. n15 First, the expert may provide an opinion based on his or her firsthand knowledge. Second, the expert may provide his or her opinion in response to a hypothetical question. The expert also may provide an opinion based on data presented to the expert outside of court and developed by someone other than the expert. Such data need not be admissible evidence in the case.

The companion rule, Federal Rule of Evidence 705, provides:

The expert may testify in terms of opinion or inference and give the reasons therefor without first testifying to the underlying facts or data, unless the court requires otherwise. The expert may in any event be required to disclose the underlying facts or data on cross-examination.

This rule obviates the necessity of laying an elaborate foundation for expert opinion testimony. Indeed, this rule eliminates the need to ask a hypothetical question specifying all the facts that the expert knows or assumes in formulating his or her opinion. n16 In most situations, however, the expert should be asked on direct examination to state in detail the basis of any opinions. It must be remembered that the practitioner's goal is to persuade the jury that the expert witness is more believable than the opponent's expert. By asking the expert to provide the basis for his or her opinion, you allow the expert to expand on his or her views, making the opinion more believable and meaningful for the jury. The adversary cannot be counted on to probe the basis for the expert's opinion on cross examination. The opponent's cross examination may relate solely to bias or qualifications, leaving the expert's naked opinion untouched; the jury may then never hear the basis of the expert's opinions. When the adversary then fully develops the factual basis of his or her own expert's opinions during the case, the jury may conclude that the opinion of the opponent's expert is well supported, and is more likely true than counsel's expert's unsupported opinion. The opponent will also likely point out the differences in both experts' opinions in his or her closing argument.

[10.--2] Expert Testimony Based on Firsthand Knowledge

The expert may render an opinion based on firsthand observation. A good example of this situation is an expert who inspects an allegedly defective product and renders an opinion based on that inspection. The questioning should demonstrate what inspection was made, what that inspection revealed, and what opinions the expert formed as a result of his or her inspection and findings.

[10.--3] Expert Testimony Based on Hypothetical Questions

An expert opinion need not be based on facts within the expert's personal knowledge, but may be based on assumed facts. Federal Rule of Evidence 703 contemplates two types of hypothetical questions. First, the expert witness may listen to the testimony relevant to his or her opinion as it is presented in open court. The expert then is asked to assume as true the facts developed and to render an opinion based on those facts. Second, the examiner may read a prepared question that includes all of the necessary facts that the expert is asked to assume as true. It is not necessary that those facts be undisputed; they only need be supported by evidence in the case. n17 Some courts will allow the attorney to include in the hypothetical question facts not yet developed on the representation that the facts will be proven by additional witnesses. If those facts are not developed later in the case-in-chief, opposing counsel should move to strike the expert's answer. Generally, the better approach is to call the expert to testify after all necessary facts have been developed. That is the time when the opinion is psychologically most powerful to the jury.

The practitioner has latitude in determining which form of hypothetical question to ask. Although the second type--including all necessary facts in the question--may present a risk of a lengthy and intricate question, it has advantages that outweigh any possibility of jury confusion or unrest. This form of hypothetical question highlights the salient facts. It provides you with an opportunity to make a speech to the jury. It avoids requiring the expert to sit through lengthy testimony. Moreover, the problems of length and possible confusion inherent in this type of question usually may be remedied by careful drafting and a clearly enunciated reading of the question to the expert. A blow-up of the question may be displayed for the jury to see. You could then refer to it in closing argument, going through each part of the question and reminding the jury how that issue was resolved by testimony in the client's favor.

The hypothetical question should be drafted in advance of trial in consultation with the expert. The expert must make sure that the proposed hypothetical question contains sufficient facts to serve as the basis for his or her opinion. n18 You should caution the expert that he or she may be cross-examined on each assumed fact and may be asked whether contrary facts would affect the opinion. For this reason, it is important that the expert understand the evidence of record that supports the assumed facts.

[10.--4] Expert Testimony Based on Secondhand Knowledge

The Advisory Committee Notes to Federal Rule of Evidence 703 indicate that an expert opinion need not be based only on firsthand knowledge or assumed facts presented to the witness by hypothetical question. It may be impossible for the expert to have firsthand knowledge as, for example, when the allegedly defective product is destroyed when the plaintiff was injured. It is no longer available for inspection or testing. The expert also may base his or her opinion testimony on "presentation of data to the expert outside of court and other than by his own perception," such as scientific evidence. When an expert witness relies on scientific evidence, the evidence is admissible, pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 702, if relevant and based on a reliable foundation. n19 The trial court's decision to admit or to exclude an expert's testimony based on scientific evidence is discretionary, reversible only for an abuse of such discretion. n20 If an expert is willing to rely on secondhand evidence in making crucial decisions in his or her own practice, he or she should be able to rely on such evidence in rendering an opinion at trial. n21 The Advisory Committee Notes provide the best example:

Thus, a physician in his own practice bases his diagnosis on information from numerous sources and of considerable variety, including statements by patients and relatives, reports and opinions from nurses, technicians and other doctors, hospital records, and X-rays. Most of them are admissible in evidence, but only with the expenditure of substantial time in producing and examining various authenticating witnesses. The physician makes life-and-death decisions in reliance on them. His validation, expertly performed and subject to cross-examination, ought to suffice for judicial purposes.

The rule recognizes that asking a hypothetical question after a proper foundation is laid in such cases will be expensive and inefficient. And the hypothetical question may be too lengthy and complex to be within the understanding of the jury. In such circumstances, the witness may provide his or her opinion just as if he or she had firsthand knowledge of the underlying facts.

The use of this method of developing expert opinion is not limited to physicians. For example, experts on accounting matters should be able to rely on audited financial statements of a company without the need to introduce all of the underlying documents and the methodology employed in auditing such statements.

[10.--5] Use of Treatises

Because your expert must be believed by the jury, you may consider ways to augment the expert's credibility on direct examination. Sometimes a learned treatise is used in the direct examination of an expert to corroborate the testimony of the expert and thereby add to the expert's aura of trustworthiness. Federal Rule of Evidence 803(18) supports such use by providing:

The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness:

(18) Learned treatises. To the extent called to the attention of an expert witness upon cross-examination or relied upon by the expert witness in direct examination, statements contained in published treatises, periodicals, or pamphlets on a subject of history, medicine, or other science or art, established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice. If admitted, the statements may be read into evidence but may not be received as exhibits.

Nonetheless, you should introduce learned treatises during direct examination only if some need exists to do so beyond mere corroboration. First, the lawyer who does so opens up the door to cross-examination on the basis of those treatises. You should check to determine if conflicting evidence appears elsewhere in the treatise, in which case the expert will have undermined his or her own credibility. Second, you should consider using a treatise only when you anticipate a strong challenge to the witness' opinions. Even then, it may be better to save the treatises for redirect examination. Finally, too frequent reliance on learned treatises to bolster your expert's opinion may create the impression that you are concerned with your expert's testimony--it may be viewed as a sign of weakness or uncertainty. The jury may question the qualifications of your expert or believe that you have hired an expert merely to give an opinion that should have been given by another. The jurors may ask themselves: "Why was this witness called instead of the person who authored the treatise; does this witness really know what he or she is talking about?" Finally, because you must read the portions of the treatise and may not introduce it into evidence, you run the risk of boring the jury.

If you decide to use a learned treatise on direct examination, remember to lay a proper foundation. You must demonstrate that the treatise is reliable authority. For example:

Q:

Expert, are you familiar with Johnson's Textbook of Civil Engineering?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Do civil engineers generally accept that textbook as an authoritative and reliable treatise on civil engineering principles?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Do you consider it authoritative and reliable?

A:

Yes.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceHearsayExceptionsLearned TreatisesExpert Witness RequirementEvidenceScientific EvidenceDaubert StandardEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsAdmissibilityEvidenceTestimonyExpertsCredibilityGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExpertsCredibilityImpeachmentEvidenceTestimonyExpertsDaubert Standard

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 701; see Weinstein's Federal Evidence, § 701.02 (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Fed. R. Evid. 702; Miami Int'l Realty Co. v. Paynter, 841 F.2d 348 (10th Cir. 1988) (expert witnesses permitted to testify as to lost profits as an element of damages and as to standard of care required of attorneys); see also Weinstein's Federal Evidence, § 702.02 (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Evid. 702.

> There is no more certain test for determining when experts may be used than the common sense inquiry whether the untrained layman would be qualified to determine intelligently and to the best possible degree the particular issue without enlightenment from those having a specialized understanding of the subject involved in the dispute.

See Committee Note to Original Fed. R. Evid. 702 (1975), quoting Ladd, Expert Testimony, 5 Vand. L. Rev. 414, 418 (1952).
It is prejudicial error to admit an expert's testimony as to the cause of an accident where it is insufficient to establish liability under applicable law but, rather, tends to interfere with the jury's independent judgment. Scott v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 789 F.2d 1052 (4th Cir. 1986) .

(n4)Footnote 4. 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993) .

(n5)Footnote 5. See Fed. R. Evid. 702.

(n6)Footnote 6. See Ch. 23, Discovery of Experts.

(n7)Footnote 7. In re Montgomery Court Apartments, Ltd., 141 B.R. 324, 337 (S.D. Ohio 1992) (permitting in-house expert to testify while noting that bias could be explored on cross-examination).

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4). See MOORE'S Federal Practice, § 26.81[1] (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

(n9)Footnote 9. See Moore's Federal Practice, § 26.80 (Matthew Bender 3d ed.).

(n10)Footnote 9.1. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(B).

(n11)Footnote 9.2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(C).

(n12)Footnote 10. See § 33.03.

(n13)Footnote 11. See Ch. 34, Exhibits.

(n14)Footnote 12. See Friendship Heights Assocs. v. Koubek, 785 F.2d 1154, 1162-1163 (4th Cir. 1986)

(discussing standard for qualifying expert witnesses). See also Exum v. General Elec. Co., 819 F.2d 1158 (D.C. Cir. 1987) .

In one case, the district court properly allowed farmers to testify as experts, where their practical experience provided the basis for qualification as experts. Federal Crop Ins. Corp. v. Hester, 765 F.2d 723, 728 (8th Cir. 1985) .

In a personal injury action, the district court properly admitted the expert testimony of a biostatistician-epidemiologist who was not a medical doctor. Gideon v. Johns-Manville Sales Corp., 761 F.2d 1129 (5th Cir. 1985) . In another case, however, a district court acted properly in refusing to rule a witness an expert as to conditions in a mental hospital where, despite her experience in the area, the witness was neither a physician nor a psychologist. Doe v. Gaughan, 808 F.2d 871, 876 (1st Cir. 1986) .

In an accident case, the district court properly permitted a police officer to testify as an expert as to the cause of the accident. Kelsay v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 749 F.2d 437, 448-449 (7th Cir. 1984) .

(n15)Footnote 13. Quinones-Pacheco v. American Airlines, Inc., 979 F.2d 1, 7 (1st Cir. 1992) .

(n16)Footnote 14. See, e.g., Broadcort Capital Corp. v. Summa Medical Corp., 972 F.2d 1183 (10th Cir. 1992) ; O'Conner v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 13 F.3d 1090, 1106-1107 (7th Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1222 (1994) (for a more detailed discussion, see district court opinion at 807 F. Supp. 1376 (C.D. Ill. 1992)) .

(n17)Footnote 15. Only an opinion based on facts may be expressed; a lawyer may not be called as an expert to offer an opinion on conclusions of law, a matter solely within the court's domain. Adalman v. Baker, Watts & Co., 807 F.2d 359, 370 (4th Cir. 1986) . Note, however, that an expert may offer an opinion as to foreign law.

(n18)Footnote 16. Federal Rule of Evidence 705 was amended in 1993. In its former version, it stated that "[t]he expert may testify in terms of opinion or inference and give reasons therefor without prior disclosure of the underlying facts or data ... . According to the advisory committee note, the revision was necessary "to avoid an arguable conflict with revised Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 16, 26(a)(2)(B) and 26(e)(1) or with revised Rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, which require disclosure in advance of trial of the basis and reasons for an expert's opinions."

(n19)Footnote 17. In asking a hypothetical question, the examiner may seek the witness' opinion on "any combination of facts within the tendency of the evidence." Vermont Food Indus., Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 514 F.2d 456, 463 (2d Cir. 1975) . The sufficiency of the assumptions as well as the soundness of the opinion may be tested on cross-examination.

(n20)Footnote 18.

> The Fourth Circuit has stated:
>
> > A question that assumes any material fact not supported by the evidence is inadmissible. A question that omits any material fact essential to the formation of a rational opinion is likewise incompetent. The facts on which the expert bases his opinion or conclusion must permit reasonably accurate conclusions as distinguished from mere guess or conjecture.
>
> Kale v. Douthitt, 274 F.2d 476, 482 (4th Cir. 1960) .
>
> See Orth v. Emerson Elec. Co., 980 F.2d 632, 636 (10th Cir. 1992) (expert testimony based on assumptions of known facts admissible).

(n21)Footnote 19. Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993) (admissibility of scientific evidence is governed by Fed. R. Evid. 702; Rule supersedes test of Frye v. United States, 293 F. 1013, 54 App. D.C. 46 (1923) , which held that expert opinion testimony was inadmissible unless underlying scientific technique was generally accepted as reliable).

(n22)Footnote 20. GE v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136, 141-142, 118 S. Ct. 512, 139 L. Ed. 2d 508 (1997) (circuit court erred in applying more stringent standard of review to trial judge's exclusion of expert testimony; traditional abuse of discretion standard should have been applied).

(n23)Footnote 21. You should, however, be wary of an expert opinion that is based on the statements of interested witnesses. Faries v. Atlas Truck Body Mfg. Co., 797 F.2d 619 (8th Cir. 1986) (police accident report and investigating officer's testimony were not admissible when the officer's factual investigation of the accident was incomplete and depended largely on statements of interested witnesses).

The expert's opinion testimony, when based on secondhand information, should not appear too speculative or it will not withstand a renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law. Nichols Constr. Corp. v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 808 F.2d 340, 351 (5th Cir. 1985) (expert testimony was based solely on the conclusions of others that were stated in documents that were never produced or identified).

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 Direct Examination *

3-33 Federal Litigation Guide § 33.17

§ 33.17 Table of Expertise Areas

USE OF EXPERTS

AREA OF EXPERTISE	USE DURING LITIGATION
Physical Sciences
CHEMISTRY (Specialties include: analytical chemistry, chemical engineering, clinical chemistry, environmental chemistry, industrial chemistry, radiochemistry serology, and toxicology.)	Analysis or explanation of natural and man-made products; discussion of safety factors; analysis of animal and plant serums; explanation of environmental pollution; industry safety and production factors.
PHYSICS	Explanation of processes involving mechanics, acoustics, heat, electricity, magnetism, radiation, atomic and nuclear structures and energy production.
GEOLOGY (Specialties include: economic & mineral	Analysis or explanation of earth formations, rocks, minerals and water bodies.

geology, environmental geology, geotechnical engineering, and hydrology.)
GEOGRAPHY		Description of land (terrain), sea and air features of specific geographic area, including plant and animal life.
MATERIAL SCIENCES		Analysis of abrasives, brick & clay, ceramics, glass, metals, plastics, rubber and biomaterials.
METEOROLOGY		Weather forecasting and other atmospheric analyses.
Life Sciences
AGRICULTURAL SCIENCES (Specialties include: agricultural engineering, fibers, textile technology, forestry, arboriculture, wood science and technology.)		Analysis of agricultural products, especially wood, as well as explanation of farming and wood cultivating processes.
BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES (Specialties include: aquatic & marine biology, biochemistry, botany & plant pathology, environmental microbiology, food science & food microbiology, physiology, and zoology.)		Analysis of food products, explanation of animal functions; explanation of plant processes and environmental pollution.

PHARMACOLOGY (Specialties include: drug research & development, drug manufacture, medicinal chemistry, and pharmaceutical science.)		Detection, analysis and identification of drugs and poisons; drug production; adverse drug and cosmetic reactions.
TOXICOLOGY		Analysis of poisons and explanation of their effect.
MATHEMATICS & STATISTICS		Explanation or application of statistics, actuarial methods, polls & surveys; operations research.
COMPUTER SCIENCES		Use or explanation of computers and other information systems; collation and analysis of voluminous data.
INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY		Technical analysis and consultation regarding patents and trademarks.
Social Sciences
ANTHROPOLOGY		Explanation of human beings' relations to race, origin, culture, environmental and physical characteristics.
ECONOMICS		Application of economic analysis to solve valuation and damage issues and explain market performance in areas such as antitrust, labor, industrial relations, tax, public finance, public policy.

EDUCATION		Explanation of methods at all levels of educational institutions.
GENEALOGY		Explanation of a person's or family's descent from an ancestor.
LAW		Proof of foreign or international law.
SOCIOLOGY		Explanation of social behavior and social norms; criminology and criminal justice theories.
URBAN PLANNING		Application of social science theories to populated areas.
Humanities
FINE ARTS		Conservation and authentication of art; valuation; illustration.
LANGUAGE		Explanation of the principles of linguistics; translations.
Medicine
FORENSIC PATHOLOGY		Diagnosis or explanation of environmental injuries and diseases; radiation injuries; industrial and traffic accidents; autopsies.
PHYSICAL HEALTH (Specialties include: dentistry, health care		Analysis of specific injuries, diseases or medical problems; explanation of standard methods and procedures.

delivery systems, injury bio-mechanics, medical devices, medical research, medicinal chemistry, medicine & surgery occupational medicine, pharmacology, podiatry, radiation & radiology.)
PSYCHIATRY		Diagnosis or explanation of mental, emotional or behavioral disorders of a group or an individual.
PSYCHOLOGY (Specialties include: child and juvenile psychology, criminal behavior, community psychology, family psychology, rehabilitation and disability assessment, sex offenses, and suicidology.)		Diagnosis or explanation of mental or behavioral characteristics of a group or an individual.
Technology
ARCHITECTURE		Building structure examination and explanation.
AERONAUTICAL ENGINEERING		Explanation of air travel and planes; aviation accidents. Analysis of manufactured products.
CIVIL ENGINEERING	>	Explanation of airport engineering, dredging, land surveying, sanitary methods, structural engineering, highway design and safety.

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING	Analysis and explanation of electrical systems.
INDUSTRIAL AND MANUFACTURING ENGINEERING (Specialties include: human factors effect, safety engineering, fire protection, quality control, industrial hygiene, and occupational health and safety.)	Explanation of accident prevention; manufacturing methods.
MECHANICAL ENGINEERING	Explanation of the areas of automotive engineering, design engineering, instrumentation and controls.
METALLURGY	Analysis or use of metals and their products.
MINING AND PETROLEUM ENGINEERING	Analysis or explanation of natural resources exploration.
Business
BUSINESS MANAGEMENT	Application of managerial theories; explanation of standard practices, corporate structures, and business performance.
ACCOUNTING	Analysis of financial reports; valuation.

INSURANCE	Analysis of risks.
MARKETING AND DISTRIBUTION	Analysis of product and industry markets.
BANKING/FINANCE	Explanation of banking and other investment practices, valuation of tangible and intangible corporate property.
Other
CONSULTANTS in accident reconstruction, corrosion, dangerous materials, design, electrical incidents, failure analysis, fire and explosions, security and emergency planning.	Development of a causation theory.
VALUATION SPECIALISTS	Determination of damages suffered by individuals or businesses; appraisal of personal and real property.
LITIGATION SUPPORT SPECIALISTS	Assistance with questioned documents; identification; investigations; photography; laboratory testing; jury selection; exhibits and models.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect ExaminationEvidenceTestimonyExpertsGeneral Overview

* Chapter 33 was written by Richardson R. Lynn, Esq. of Nashville, Tennessee; the chapter was revised in 2004 by Andrew E. Westley, Esq. of San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide 34.syn

§ 34.syn Synopsis to Chapter 34: Exhibits *

§ 34.01 Definition of "Exhibit".

§ 34.02 Selection of Exhibits.
[1] Documentary Evidence.
[2] Other Physical Exhibits.

§ 34.03 Introduction of Exhibits.
[1] Introduction by Stipulation.
[2] Introduction Pursuant to Rule.
[3] Introduction by Sponsoring Witness.

§ 34.04 Timing the Introduction of Exhibits.
[1] Use During Direct Examination.
[2] Use at the Close of Direct Examination.
[3] Use During Cross-Examination.

§ 34.05 Pretrial Organization of Exhibits.

§ 34.06 Getting Exhibits Into Evidence.
[1] The Best Evidence Rule.
[2] Learn Local Trial Procedures.
[3] Mark the Exhibits.
[4] Exhibit Logs.
[5] Show the Exhibit to Opposing Counsel.
[6] Authenticate the Exhibit.
[6.--1] In General.
[6.--2] Physical Objects.
[6.--3] Business Records.
[6.--4] Other Documents.
[6.--5] Photographs and Motion Pictures.
[6.--6] Aural Recordings.
[6.--7] Charts, Graphs and Other Summary Exhibits.

[6.--8] Diagrams, Drawings, Models and Maps.
[6.--9] Smooth Presentation.
[7] Move for Admission.
[8] The Court Must Rule on Your Request.
[9] Present the Exhibit to the Jury.

§ 34.07 Keeping Exhibits Out of Evidence.

§ 34.08 Arrange for All Necessary Equipment Before Trial.

§ 34.09 Summary Exhibits.

§ 34.10 Demonstrative Evidence.
[1] Charts.
[2] Maps.
[3] Models.
[4] Photographs and Motion Pictures.
[5] Sketches.
[6] Computer Graphics

§ 34.11 Limited Use of Unadmitted Exhibits.

§ 34.12 Additional Resources.
[1] Federal Litigation Guide Reporter.
[2] Treatises and Forms.
[3] Law Reviews and Periodicals.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

This chapter addresses the selection, introduction and use of documentary and other tangible evidence.

An exhibit is any object that facilitates juror understanding. The selection of trial exhibits begins as early as discovery and continues throughout the litigation process. Once you have selected and created evidentiary and demonstrative exhibits that will help the jury visualize specific issues in the trial, the proper foundation for their admission must be prepared and integrated into the trial plan. In addition to the mechanics of introducing exhibits into evidence, this chapter discusses how to keep possibly harmful exhibits out of your opponent's case, and how to use demonstrative exhibits to help your presentation.

For expanded coverage of exhibits, see WEINSTEIN'S Federal Evidence, Ch. 103, Rulings on Evidence (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.01

§ 34.01 Definition of "Exhibit".

An exhibit is a tangible item which has been admitted into evidence during the course of a judicial proceeding. This tangible item may be a suspected murder weapon, or it may be the contract which is the subject of the litigation. Thus, a narrow discussion of exhibits deals with those items that are virtually essential for presentation to the trier of fact in order to prevail in the case. For example, the prosecution wants the jury to know that this gun, registered to the defendant, was the gun used to kill the victim. Just as importantly, the plaintiff suing on a claimed breach of contract wants the judge or jury to know that this was the contract signed by the defendant.

Yet exhibits have no life of their own. Thus, for each proffered exhibit there must be a foundation by stipulation or witness testimony. n1 Exhibits and testimony are as symbionic as the interrelationship among them and the rules of evidence. While this chapter focuses on exhibits, trial counsel should not forget that the successful use of exhibits depends upon their integration into oral testimony and a complete knowledge of the rules of evidence.

So too, trial counsel should not forget that today's juror is visually oriented. The morning newspaper has been supplanted by television's morning and evening news program. The great presidential debates of the last century have been replaced by sound bites on the network television news. Our public officials attempt to sway public opinion by 30-second or one minute television commercials. Even battles and wars are the subject of television presentation, description, and analysis, in well under ten minutes. Given this preconditioning, no trial attorney can expect a jury to listen to droning witnesses for hours on end, day after day, without a visual break. The winning trial attorney does not expect to prevail by "out boring" the other side. While exhibit presentation will not overcome bad facts, it will put your best foot forward.

Given this reality about the nature of jurors--and please remember that a judge is but a juror with legal training and decision making authority--the narrow definition of "exhibit" should be expanded to encompass the whole range of sights and sounds that may be presented to the trier of fact to facilitate the fact-finding process. Today's jurors are also conditioned to believe that anything on television is true, or, at least, accustomed to obtaining information through television. Therefore, video exhibits will be especially credible. Included in the term "exhibits" are those items that are essential to prove your case, as well as those things that will make your case more credible and that will help the trier of fact conclude that your client should prevail. Exhibits should not be viewed as hurdles with difficult foundations causing admissibility problems. Rather, you should view exhibits as the strongest part of your case.

An example may help to illustrate this concept: If you are representing a plaintiff injured by an intoxicated driver, you may be suing that driver, as well as one or more liquor establishments that allegedly served alcoholic beverages to the defendant. Initially, your case may consist of the testimony of your client to establish his safe driving, as well as the negligent conduct of the defendant. The arresting police officer can testify as to the apparent intoxicated state of the defendant shortly after the accident, and the passenger in the defendant's car will testify as to the three bars visited by the defendant prior to the accident. These three witnesses will establish a bare bones, boring, probably sufficient case-in-chief.

But now this case will be transformed by the wonder of trial exhibits to a visual presentation wrapped around this basic testimony which is more consistent with the visual media experience of a trier of fact. Admitted into evidence are the following:

- 11 x 14 color photographs of the exterior of each liquor establishment;
- credit card receipts establishing how much money the defendant spent for alcoholic beverages at each establishment;
- photographs of the accident scene and the damage to both vehicles;
- photographs of the injuries suffered by your client; and
- the police department video tape of the defendant taking the field sobriety test.
- a "day-in-the-life" video of your client if crippling injuries are received and/or extraordinary daily nursing or rehabilitative care is required.

Also used during the trial is a large poster containing a map of the area which tracked the defendant's travels from bar to bar, and eventually brought him to the intersection where he slammed his vehicle into the car being driven by your client.

Will the use of a wider range of exhibits result in a victory? Only the trier of fact can answer that. However, a broader range of exhibits will help the trier of fact understand the case, and understanding may well help your case.

Thus, this chapter uses a broad definition of "exhibits." They include evidentiary items essential for the proof of your case, as well as any item, either historical or prepared specifically for the litigation, that assists the trier of fact in understanding a fact or circumstance at issue in the litigation.

As you prepare for trial, consider not only those existing items of evidence, documentary or otherwise, that may be introduced into evidence. Consider also the entire range of demonstrative and corroborative things that are available to the creative mind of the trial attorney. To that end, you should consult with graphic artists, computer animation experts, and model makers who are professionals at portraying events in visual and tangible forms.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceAdmissibilityEvidenceDemonstrative EvidencePhotographsEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See § 34.03 discussing the introduction of exhibits.

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.02

§ 34.02 Selection of Exhibits.

[1] Documentary Evidence.

The final selection of documentary evidence to submit during the course of your case should come after the preliminary motions and the discovery process. As plaintiff's counsel, the causes of action may have been limited. Certain factual issues may have been stipulated to by opposing counsel, or are no longer controverted. Your own understanding of what it will take to prove your client's case has also been enhanced. Representing the defendant, you are more aware of the plaintiff's weaknesses and how to exploit them. Following is a broad overview of a methodology to assure that all possible documentary exhibits have been marshalled.

First, determine what elements exist for each cause of action you are pursuing or defending. Thus, if the issue is a breach of contract, the existence of a contract, its terms, the alleged breach, and the resultant damages are specific elements at issue. If the issue is one of tort, the time-worn trilogy of duty, breach, and damages will be your touchstone. Each cause of action may include unique twists, such as affirmative defenses that may have been pleaded. For example, our contract claim may involve a lack of consideration issue, while the tort litigation includes a comparative negligence claim. Having thus highlighted the legal issues that must be proved or refuted, the litigation attorney can then begin to marshal the facts that will inevitably lead the trier of fact to the desired conclusion.

Second, after you have established the legal issues, the potential witnesses should be considered and reviewed. Documents do not go into evidence except by witness or agreement; therefore, you should use a witness-by-witness planning schedule for all but the most involved cases. (Which witness will offer testimony to establish some evidence of each of the necessary legal elements?) Once you have identified the main witnesses, you may then move into the heart of document selection.

Third, knowing the issues and the witnesses for each, review the documents discussed during that witness's deposition. Not all such documents will become trial exhibits, but all are worthy of review. As each deposition is reviewed, ask whether the admission of this particular document will factually support a necessary legal element you seek to prove. If not, the document is probably not required, unless it assists in making the case more "visual." In reality, the threshold issue when reviewing a document for possible use as a trial exhibit is whether it is relevant. If not, it is unlikely that the judge will allow it into evidence. n1 If the document is relevant and supports your theory of the case, you must determine whether its admission could be damaging. For example, a color photograph of the bar where the defendant consumed alcoholic beverages before ramming the plaintiff generally would be useful. However, if a post-crash photograph depicted the plaintiff in an obviously intoxicated condition, it would not be useful.

Fourth, after reviewing those documents referred to during depositions of witnesses, review all other existing documents possibly relevant to the litigation. For a variety of reasons, documents that seem irrelevant at the start of a case may well become important immediately before trial. Thus, all documents must be reviewed and considered in light of what the legal issues are, and who the witnesses will be. Again, relevancy is the threshold issue.

Fifth, having reviewed all the documents in the case and selected certain ones for possible use as trial exhibits, you should consider the probable testimony of each witness. The objective is to determine whether documents can be obtained which would support the probable testimony of one or more witnesses. For example, the plaintiff will testify that his automobile had only 2,200 miles on it immediately before the accident, and that he was coming from dinner at a vegetarian restaurant that does not serve alcohol. Upon review, plaintiff's counsel may be able to obtain a recent oil change receipt showing the vehicle's mileage, and a credit card receipt corroborating dinner at that restaurant. These would then become documentary exhibits which, of course, under the rules of most courts, would have to be disclosed to opposing counsel prior to trial. But the impact of having these exhibits is to make the plaintiff more believable. This is one of the most powerful benefits of documentary exhibits. If every time your client makes a statement there is a piece of paper to support that testimony, those instances where there could not be any corroboration may be viewed with more credibility by the trier of fact. After all, every other assertion has been corroborated. (However, make it clear why this fact cannot be supported by documentary evidence.)

Sixth, after selecting those documents that are potential trial exhibits, each should be subjected to the following scrutiny:

1. Is the exhibit repetitive of other exhibits? If so, select the single most effective exhibit rather than repetitive exhibits.

2. Are the exhibits consistent with each other and with potential trial testimony? If not, the inconsistencies must be addressed prior to trial.

3. What is the likely impact of each exhibit? If its likely impact is not supportive of your theory, it should not be used.

Documentary exhibits will not save a fatally flawed case; yet some claims could have been successfully proved had available exhibits been offered. Every trial lawyer should believe that any case worth trying is worth trying well, including the thoroughly effective use of exhibits. Do not be intimidated by what at first blush may appear to be complex foundational requirements. During the course of trial preparation, select those documents that will help you establish each legal element of your claim, and that will help make your presentation more visual. Offer and use them with confidence; your opponent will.

[2] Other Physical Exhibits.

Having been through the selection process for documents, the same basic concepts apply to the selection of other physical objects to use as trial exhibits. While documents tend to dominate as trial exhibits, you should not forget other physical objects. Certainly when such items are real evidence, they are not easily forgotten. (The murder weapon will be offered into evidence in all trials.) But what of the metal plate and screws which were used to hold bone together while it healed? These are relevant and dramatic exhibits.

The point is that creativity should not end with documents. The entire experience of the trier of fact is visual, and your trial presentation should be consistent with this experience. Show them, photographically or preferably by color video, the locations or items at issue. n2 Present a model of the accident scene. If a commercial contract was breached, show them the product that was manufactured defectively or never delivered. In other words, help the trier of fact understand your theory of the case and how certain items of evidence support the legal elements of the case. However, be wary of ghoulish or offensive behavior. Anatomically correct models of human extremities may be better than gruesome photographs of severely damaged limbs. n3 As with many things, a balancing of tastefulness and effectiveness is necessary in the selection and use of trial exhibits.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceFoundational RequirementsEvidenceDemonstrative EvidencePhotographsEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See generally Fed. R. Evid. 401 which provides that "[r]elevant evidence' means evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence." (Emphasis added.) See also Fed. R. Evid. 402 which states that irrelevant evidence is not admissible during trial.

(n2)Footnote 2. See Boddren and Winter, The Case for a Visual Presentation, 15 Trial Diplomacy J. 125 (1992).

(n3)Footnote 3. See the discussion of demonstrative exhibits infra §§ 34.09, 34.10.

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.03

§ 34.03 Introduction of Exhibits.

Once you have determined which exhibits you would like to offer into evidence, it is essential that you ascertain whether a legally sufficient foundation for each proffered exhibit can be established. This section will address that issue and provide suggestions on how to facilitate the process. In general, introduction may occur by stipulation of the parties, by court rule, or by establishing an evidentiary foundation through a witness.

[1] Introduction by Stipulation.

The reality of litigation is that all trial courts are under pressure to manage their dockets. This means that judges are pressured to try cases as quickly and efficiently as possible. This translates into pressure placed upon trial counsel to stipulate to the admissibility of trial exhibits wherever possible. Before adopting a singular position on this point, some discussion is in order. First, it makes a difference as to what type of case you are handling. In criminal cases, the only defense may be that the prosecution cannot prove its case. Criminal cases have been won because of prosecutorial mistakes with exhibits. Thus, in criminal cases there may be matters which preclude the stipulation to any exhibits. In the civil arena, there may be a blood feud between the parties. In such instances, your client may say that there will be no stipulations. However, your client may never again appear before this judge, or be required to ever again litigate against opposing counsel. Generally, a balanced approach is more productive.

Also, consider that if you decline to stipulate to the admissibility of any exhibits, your opponent is unlikely to stipulate to any of your exhibits. This may needlessly prolong a trial and increase the costs to all litigants. A better guide is to consider whether the proposed exhibit will hurt your case at trial. If it will not hurt your case, what is the harm in expediting the case by stipulating to the exhibit? If it will hurt your case, but there is really no evidentiary basis upon which to claim exclusion, what is the benefit to not stipulating? If you can think of no benefit to not stipulating, a stipulation may be in order. Of course, evidentiary stipulations should be met with reciprocity by your opponent.

On the issue of stipulation, be sure to check the applicable rules of court. Many federal district courts, n1 as well as certain state trial courts, require the parties to file a pretrial memorandum which includes a list of all proposed trial exhibits. The parties also set forth any objections which may be interposed to the admissibility of any exhibit. A common practice is to stipulate as to the authenticity of the exhibits, but reserve until the exhibit is offered substantive objections such as hearsay or relevancy. Of course, you should not stipulate to authenticity if you doubt that an exhibit is authentic.

Mechanically, stipulations as to exhibits should be made in writing. Each exhibit should be listed separately, and a specific statement set forth after each as to the limit of the stipulation (for example, authentication or admissibility). This written stipulation should be signed by counsel for all parties and presented to the court prior to the start of trial. Whether the written stipulation will be presented to the jury, read to the jury, or not mentioned at all to them, will be a matter of local rules and practice. n2

It may be appropriate to mention to the jury in opening statement and closing argument that the opposition agreed that your important exhibits were admissible. The jurors, or a few of them, may think that a stipulation means that the opponent thinks that the exhibits are true. On the other hand, if you have stipulated to admissibility, be sure to tell the jury that stipulations are about technical questions of evidence, not whether you agree with the exhibit or even think that it is important to their decision.

[2] Introduction Pursuant to Rule.

Certain documents are self-authenticating. That means that they may be admitted into evidence without authentication by a witness. The underlying theory for the admissibility of this class of documents is that certain public and other records are inherently trustworthy and do not require the normal process of authentication. However, self-authentication does not end the evidentiary inquiry. Even though a document is self-authenticating, it may not be relevant. The class of self-authenticating documents is established by statute or court rule. n3

Basically, in federal courts certain evidence does not require "extrinsic evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to admissibility." n4 The evidence not requiring authentication is grouped as follows:

1. public documents under seal;

2. domestic public documents not under seal;

3. foreign public documents;

4. certified copies of public records;

5. official publications;

6. newspapers and periodicals;

7. trade inscriptions and the like;

8. acknowledged documents;

9. commercial paper and related documents; and

10. presumptions under Acts of Congress.

[3] Introduction by Sponsoring Witness.

Absent a stipulation or applicable rule, exhibits may be admitted only after the establishment of a proper foundation by one or more witnesses. This foundation is established by taking the witness through a series of somewhat standard questions. n5 This testimony should be quick and smooth so as to not detract from the main impact of that witness' substantive testimony. For, while the exhibit is important and its admissibility crucial, the foundational process may be quite boring to the jury, and could prove fatal if counsel demonstrates his inability to establish a proper foundation.

In deciding which witness to use in establishing a foundation for a particular exhibit, the applicable evidentiary rules should be considered. Basic evidentiary concepts apply to exhibits, just as they do to testimony; thus, in order to authenticate an exhibit, a witness must have personal knowledge concerning that exhibit. n6 Therefore, in selecting a witness to authenticate an exhibit, be sure that the selected witness will not testify based upon hearsay. Whether a witness has met the requirement of establishing personal knowledge is a question for the jury, unless the judge finds that no reasonable juror could conclude that the witness had personal knowledge concerning the exhibit. n7 If the judge so finds, the exhibit should be excluded. An example of a common error in the context of business records will clarify this point:

Q:

Please state your name and position.

A:

I am Jane Jackson, the vice-president of finance for XYZ, Inc.

Q:

To your knowledge, is Exhibit A a business record of the company? n8

A:

Of course!

Cross-examination:

Q:

As vice-president, do you actually prepare these forms?

A:

Of course not.

Q:

Do you supervise the preparation of these forms?

A:

No.

Q:

Have you ever read or seen any of the procedures that relate to the preparation of this form?

A:

No.

Q:

How do you know that this form is kept in the ordinary course of XYZ, Inc.'s business?

A:

The accounting supervisor, Mr. Cant, told me.

At times there is a common assumption that a certain title carries with it the ability to authenticate certain business records. Rather than be confronted with that situation at trial, be sure to review the foundational questions with each witness prior to trial. Be sure that the answers are based on personal knowledge, rather than a title or hearsay. Conduct that review of the basis for the witness' testimony in time to secure a better witness if needed. Foundational requirements should never be taken for granted or overshadowed by a desire to prepare only the substantive areas.

Beyond the "personal knowledge" requirement of the Rules, n9 there is the specific requirement of authentication. n10 Under the federal rules, authentication or identification is satisfied by offering evidence, in most cases testimonial, to establish that the proposed exhibit is what it purports to be. n11 Simply put, you cannot offer into evidence a letter from Pam to Fred unless somebody establishes that the letter is in fact a letter from Pam to Fred. This can easily be accomplished by, for example, Fred's testimony that he received the letter and recognizes the signature as that of Pam. Lay testimony is sufficient to authenticate handwriting. n12 Authenticity may also be established by circumstantial evidence. n13 For example, the authentication requirement was met in one case where the document appeared to be that which it was claimed to be and was produced by the defendant in response to a discovery request. n14

While you must have one witness to authenticate most exhibits, sometimes the problem is having several potential witnesses who could authenticate the same exhibit, as when a single memorandum is sent to several people. In deciding which of the many should be selected, the following considerations may help facilitate the choice:

1. Who is the better witness, i.e., makes the best presentation?

2. Who has the most knowledge about the exhibit and the subject matter?

3. Which witness could injure the case if put on the stand?

4. Can several exhibits be authenticated by a single witness to speed the trial?

5. Are some potential witnesses confused about the exhibit?

In sum, authentication of exhibits by a witness is not difficult so long as the basic requirement of personal knowledge is kept in mind. The objective is to establish the requisite technical foundation as smoothly as possible. n15

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsEvidenceAuthenticationGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceFoundational RequirementsEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyGeneral Overview

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., Local Rule 5.00(a), N.D. Ill.

(n2)Footnote 2. Of course, regardless of practice, trial counsel should assure that any stipulation becomes part of the court record in case there is an appeal.

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Evid. 902. See § 34.06[6].

(n4)Footnote 4. Id.

(n5)Footnote 5. See § 34.06[6] infra.

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Evid. 602.

(n7)Footnote 7. See United States v. Owens, 699 F. Supp. 815 (C.D. Cal. 1988) .

(n8)Footnote 8. For purposes of this example, please ignore the obvious objection to the nature of the question.

(n9)Footnote 9. Fed. R. Evid. 602.

(n10)Footnote 10. Fed. R. Evid. 901.

(n11)Footnote 11. Id.; United States v. Long, 857 F.2d 436 (8th Cir. 1988) (proponent need only have a rational basis for the claim that a document is authentic).

(n12)Footnote 12. Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(2).

(n13)Footnote 13. Fed. R. Evid. 903.

(n14)Footnote 14. McQueeney v. Wilmington Trust Co., 779 F.2d 916 (3d Cir. 1985) .

(n15)Footnote 15. See § 34.06[6].

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.04

§ 34.04 Timing the Introduction of Exhibits.

General concepts of trial strategy apply with equal force to trial exhibits. n1 The same is true regarding the general psychological concept of primacy, which dictates that the first exhibit seen, or testimony heard, is the most likely to be retained. Also, the last seen or heard is likely to be retained. Thus, in planning your overall trial strategy, the placement of exhibits is more a function of that strategy than a function of a particular exhibit. Of course, if you have a very powerful exhibit, it will have the most impact if used first or last during your case in chief. Additionally, the doldrums of mid-trial can be enhanced by the use of exhibits or demonstrative evidence.

Keep in mind, however, that in any trial there will be a theme--a thread that inevitably leads to the conclusion of the party offering the theme. The theme begins with the opening statement and should provide the structure for the rest of the case. All evidence, by way of testimony or exhibit, must support and conform with this theme. The exhibits must also support the legal elements of the operative cause of action or defense. Without this framework, exhibits should be offered when they fit, i.e., when their introduction flows logically from the ongoing order of proof.

The trier of fact should be made comfortable with your presentation. Do not lull the jurors to sleep, but by the same token do not give the impression that you are guiding them on a tour of a haunted house with unguarded pits interspersed among vast wastelands of darkness. Refer to the key exhibits during the opening statement so the jury will be expecting them to explain and support the case. You can actually use the exhibits during closing argument, after they have been admitted into evidence, to reinforce the theme you have developed all along. In other words, help the jury understand and follow your theme. Certainly you want to open strong, and close with a flourish. But make sure that these flurries of brilliance do not conceal a deficient trial, and be certain that they do not appear staged or contrived.

Demonstrative exhibits should be used to help the judge or jury understand the case. Especially where financial records or directions are involved, demonstrative exhibits may be essential. They should be used when dictated by the presentation of the witnesses. Thus, when the accountant testifies, a summary chart concerning the calculations is called for. And when witnesses speak about direction of travel of vehicles, a diagram or map should be in place and being used.

In short, use exhibits when they make sense, not merely because an exhibit is more likely to be remembered if used first or last. If an exhibit is used out of logical sequence for effect only, it may well be remembered, but not because it had any relevance to the issues of the case.

[1] Use During Direct Examination.

Exhibits should normally be introduced when first mentioned during examination of the witness. The foundation necessary in order to admit an exhibit is not burdensome and can be covered in a few moments. Once the foundation has been established, the exhibit may then be used throughout the remainder of the trial. Do not refer even once more than necessary to "Plaintiff's Exhibit 1 for Identification," rather than "Plaintiff's Exhibit 1." Promptly move for the admission of the exhibit into evidence.

To the extent that the foundation process involves a physical object (such as our proverbial murder weapon), the questioning of a witness concerning an evidentiary foundation provides a natural break for the trier of fact to be alerted that something new is about to happen. The trier's interest can be heightened by holding this new exhibit during the foundation process. Once the exhibit is admitted, you have a window of opportunity of enhanced interest within which your critical testimony can be adduced.

If you are dealing with documentary exhibits, you may consider providing each juror with his or her own punched binder with appropriate tabs to hold documentary exhibits admitted into evidence. During the process of direct examination and the admission of documentary exhibits, copies of these exhibits can be furnished to the jurors. Where the exhibits are stipulated to or their admission into evidence will be routine, an even better practice is to hand the jury the completed notebook in advance. Your opponent can only object to the inclusion of truly disputed items in the notebook. This procedure assures, to the extent possible, that the jurors will view your exhibits. Also, the process of distributing copies is more likely to stimulate juror interest, or at least indicate some minimal level of attention.

Of course, this process must be conducted in a way that is not disruptive of the trial. The danger in this practice is that the jurors may pay less attention to witness' testimony while they thumb through the exhibits or try to read ahead. Therefore, pause in the questioning to allow the jurors to find the relevant documents in order to minimize the distractions. You may even request that the court allow the jurors a few minutes to read documents in their evidence notebooks.

[2] Use at the Close of Direct Examination.

Some trial attorneys prefer to wait until the completion of all testimony of a witness before proceeding to use the witness as a foundation for documentary or other exhibits. The theory is that the attorneys may repeat some testimony by discussing topics covered by exhibits, and that this procedure keeps the flow of direct examination smoother.

There are drawbacks to this approach. Remember that after the first witness, the jurors will be aware that the presentation of the first exhibit means a period of highly technical foundational questions. In short, you will have marked the place in each witness' presentation when they may stop listening. Also, waiting until the end of direct examination to establish the foundation for all exhibits may necessitate that certain exhibits are dealt with out of order. You may need to recall foundation witnesses in response to an objection and discuss an exhibit out of order. This may confuse the jurors. On balance, unless a specific purpose is sought to be accomplished, exhibits should be dealt with as they logically occur in the presentation, rather than at a single predetermined time.

[3] Use During Cross-Examination.

Cross-examination is not the taking of a deposition. It should be crisp and focused. Know why you are asking a particular question and how the expected answer will benefit your case. Debating points alone do not count. During cross-examination use only those exhibits that advance the narrow, limited scope of the questioning. Do not use an exhibit during cross-examination unless you have a reason. For Example:

Q:

Sir, when your lawyer asked you about the Jones agreement, you said that you didn't know anything about it until January or February 1993, isn't that true?

A:

Well, I think so.

Q:

So you didn't know what a Jones agreement was at anytime during 1992, did you?

A:

Well now, I really want to make sure that I'm as accurate as I can be. So, it is just possible that I may have heard something about it in 1992.

Q:

But you don't remember a specific conversation about it in 1992, do you?

A:

No, but I'm just trying to be as accurate as I can.

Q:

Now the Jones agreement is very important isn't it?

A:

Of course, it involves the sale of the entire company.

Q:

So you would remember if you discussed the Jones deal, wouldn't you?

A:

I certainly would ... now I'm sure I knew about it in early 1993--I could have known about it in late 1992, but I don't have a specific recollection about it that early.

Q:

Sir, I show you what has previously been marked as Defendant's Exhibit Q, do you recognize it?

A:

Well ... I'm ... I'm ... not sure.

Q:

But isn't that your signature on the second page?

A:

Yes.

Q:

And you wrote this letter didn't you?

A:

I guess I did.

Q:

And Exhibit Q is a two page letter outlining the entire Jones deal, isn't it?

A:

Yes.

Q:

What is the date on the front page of Exhibit Q?

Q:

March 3, 1992.

A:

Why did you tell the ladies and gentlemen of the jury, while you were under oath, that you didn't find out about the Jones deal until some 9 months later?

The use of exhibits during cross-examination cannot be done in isolation. They must be part of an overall plan with a specific objective in mind. Once the objective is formulated, the exhibit can help you reach that objective.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationDirect Examination

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., § 25.04 supra, discussing an outline of the trial order of proof

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.05

§ 34.05 Pretrial Organization of Exhibits.

It is essential for your trial exhibits to be organized and readily retrievable before you utter your first word at trial. Many attorneys have lost credibility before a jury, and drawn the wrath of the judge, due to fumbling and disorganization. More importantly, a lack of organization may result in missing an opportunity to help your case by utilizing the proper exhibit for cross-examination. Sufficient organization is needed to avoid embarrassment and enhance the likelihood of a favorable verdict. Have sufficient copies of each exhibit for the court, jury, and adversary counsel; keep them in neat, uncluttered files which add to your appearance as a polished professional.

At the outset, you should highlight your witness outlines with references to exhibits that you anticipate using during your examination. The outline should be flagged so as to remind you to introduce the exhibits at the appropriate times. Another good practice is to append a sequential list of the exhibits a witness will sponsor to the outline of his testimony. This list will provide a ready checklist at trial to safeguard against an inadvertent failure to introduce an exhibit.

The actual organization of trial exhibits should be done in a way so that you can comfortably locate and retrieve the exhibits during the course of trial. A good practice is to have essentially two files of exhibits at trial. One should be organized sequentially to serve as a control file. When a particular exhibit is mentioned during the course of the trial, you can go to this file for almost immediate access.

A second, "witness" file also should be created. Organize by witness the exhibits that you will use and that you anticipate your adversary will use with each witness. You can use one large expandable folder in which separate folders for each exhibit are placed. Each exhibit folder usually contains the "original" exhibit and three or four copies, depending upon the ground rules you have worked out for handling exhibits. On many occasions, you will want one copy for your use, one copy for your adversary, one copy for the judge, and perhaps one or more copies for the jury, if you want the jurors to view an exhibit simultaneously or they are compiling an evidence notebook.

A personal computer can be a useful tool for organizing your trial exhibits. All that is required is a personal computer with appropriate software and a printer. A summary of each document is entered into the computer database once. This information may then be sorted by witness, date, topic, or any other field established before data entry began. Common topics entered for each document are:

1. author;

2. recipient;

3. names mentioned;

4. date;

5. topic of document;

6. number of pages;

7. summary; and

8. document number.

This information can then be used for deposition preparation, trial preparation, or the printing of a trial exhibit list. Such a list is expanded as trial preparation proceeds and will also be useful when seeking stipulations, preparing Pre-trial Orders, and disclosing exhibits to opposing counsel. The software used can be one of several programs developed specifically for litigation support, or may be a more generic type of relational database software program.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceGeneral Overview

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.06

§ 34.06 Getting Exhibits Into Evidence.

Before trial you should anticipate evidentiary problems with exhibits and prepare your foundational questioning of witnesses. If you anticipate a complex legal argument on an evidentiary point, consider preparing and submitting in advance a trial brief on that issue. You should also be comfortable with the particular judge and courtroom involved. If you have not tried a case in that setting, consider observing a trial conducted by the same judge before your case begins.

[1] The Best Evidence Rule.

Essentially, the best evidence rule requires the introduction of an original document rather than a copy in order to establish the contents of such writing. n1 While the best evidence rule varies from state to state, the federal version provides a good example of its scope and application.

Rule 1002 of the Federal Rules of Evidence provides that:

To prove the content of a writing, recording, or photograph, the original writing, recording, or photograph is required, except as otherwise provided in these rules or by Act of Congress.

The Rule is limited to those instances where the contents of a document are sought to be proved. n2 However, where a fact is sought to be proven by nondocumentary evidence, i.e., by testimony, the best evidence rule is inapplicable even though there may be some documents which relate to, or otherwise establish the existence of the same fact. n3 It is only when the writing is used to establish the existence of the fact that the best evidence rule comes into play. n4

However, the federal rules have limited significantly the scope of the common-law best evidence rule. Rule 1003 states:

A duplicate is admissible to the same extent as an original unless (1) a genuine question is raised as to the authenticity of the original or (2) in the circumstances it would be unfair to admit the duplicate in lieu of the original. n5

The federal rules also expand the situations in which duplicates are admissible. Admissibility of duplicates is permitted in the following circumstances:

1. The originals are lost or stolen other than in bad faith,

2. The original is not obtainable,

3. The original is possessed by the opposing party, or

4. The original at issue is closely tied to a controlling issue. n6

Thus, unless there are exceptional circumstances, the best evidence rule should not preclude the admissibility of documentary exhibits. To successfully oppose introduction of a duplicate under Rule 1004, you must show that the authenticity of the unintroduced original is at issue or that the duplicate is untrustworthy or its introduction would be unfair. n7

[2] Learn Local Trial Procedures.

Learn the local rules and customs of the jurisdiction and judge where you will be trying the case. A copy of the local rules can usually be obtained from the local court clerk for a nominal charge. Read these local rules. Equally important are the customs and practices of the particular trial judge. The only effective way to learn these is by observing a trial in the judge's courtroom. If this cannot be done, be sure to ask the judge's clerk about any idiosyncracies. For example, some judges still require counsel to ask permission from the court before approaching a witness with an exhibit. Also, jurisdictions vary as to the requirement that "for identification" be stricken from exhibits after they are admitted into evidence. A little preparation in this area may save embarrassment before a jury.

[3] Mark the Exhibits.

Unless local rules specifically prevent it, premark your trial exhibits. This forces you to organize before trial and allows you to prepare an exhibit in advance of trial. It also prevents the almost inevitable scolding by the court when you seek to slow down the trial process by asking the court reporter--who is busy enough without an extra task--to mark each trial exhibit.

In premarking exhibits, be familiar with court practices. Some courts, for instance, may require plaintiffs to use letters and defendants to use numbers. Whatever the requirements, be aware of them before you begin marking. Also, be certain that exhibit labels are affixed to a location on the exhibit where nothing is covered or obliterated.

Multiple page exhibits should be numbered with a group number, and each individual page of the group exhibit numbered. Of course, the offering party of the exhibit should be identified. Thus, discussion concerning exhibits would be facilitated by proper numbering.

Example:

Q:

I show you what has been marked as plaintiff's exhibit 14.

Q:

I show you what has been previously admitted as defendant's group exhibit R. Now, calling your attention to page 3 of group exhibit R ...

Premarking exhibits helps facilitate the use of exhibits at trial and is also helpful in case of an appeal. The cold record is unforgiving to the trial attorney who fails to make clear what exhibit is the subject of questioning. Premarking and referring to exhibits as designated always clarifies the record.

[4] Exhibit Logs.

During the course of trial, always track which exhibits have been admitted into evidence in your case, as well as your opponent's case. The most efficient manner of tracking exhibits is to use a document log. For your case, simply include a listing of your premarked exhibits. As to your opponent's case, you may have a complete listing if in a federal jurisdiction that requires a pretrial memorandum. Even if you have no complete listing of your opponent's exhibits from a pretrial memorandum, keep a log of each exhibit your opponent attempts to introduce into evidence. New exhibits that develop during trial can be added to either log in fill in the blanks fashion. The following is a suggested format:

EXHIBIT LOG
PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBITS

Exhibit	Description	Witness	Offer?	Objection?	Admitted?
1	5/2/89 letter cost proposal	Smith	Y	N	Y
2	sample 3-piece silverware set	Robertson	Y	Y	Y
3	Purchase order Intect Inc.	Jackson	Y	Y	Y

[5] Show the Exhibit to Opposing Counsel.

In most instances the exhibit you are about to offer will have already been furnished to opposing counsel in the exhibit book provided to counsel and the court before the trial began. Thus, all you need do is refer to the exhibit by its number. Where exhibits are not exchanged before trial, a copy of the exhibit should be given to your opponent immediately before you begin your examination of the witness concerning that exhibit.

Formerly, a single exhibit was given to opposing counsel for review before giving that same exhibit to the witness to view. That practice was followed even when the opponent was intimately familiar with the document or exhibit and had been for months. In some jurisdictions, the old practice may be the norm. However, the use of multiple copies expedites the trial process and results in much less delay. In those rare instances where an opponent attempts to offer an exhibit which you have not previously seen, you should interpose an objection. You will be given an opportunity to review the exhibit.

[6] Authenticate the Exhibit.

[6.--1] In General.

The technical process of admitting an exhibit into evidence during the course of a trial is known as authentication. It is also referred to as laying foundation for a particular exhibit. This foundational requirement means that there must be sufficient evidence before the judge to establish that the exhibit offered is what it purports to be. n8 In addition to authentication through a witness at trial, exhibits may be authenticated in earlier litigation, n9 as well as by stipulation or self-authentication. n10 The following are authentication considerations that apply to certain types of exhibits.

[6.--2] Physical Objects.

There may exist a substantial difference in the foundation required for a physical object, as compared to that required for a document. This is because an object is usually self-explanatory--what more need be said about a gun or an electric drill? Yet while many physical objects are self-explanatory, others are susceptible to damage or change over time. In the case of a document, the author must be able to tell if his words have been altered, but the document may have deteriorated over the years to the point where it is no longer legible. Expert testimony may be necessary to authenticate such a document. However, to identify a document sufficiently to warrant its admissibility, a witness need not be able to testify as to familiarity with every page. n11

The task is not as obvious with physical objects. Was the handle on the lawn mower bent at the time of the accident, or did that occur while it was in storage after the accident? In order to lay a proper foundation for the admission of a physical object, counsel must establish that the item offered is in substantially the same condition at the time of trial as it was at the time at issue in the lawsuit. This may be accomplished by using a foundation witnesses who can recognize it at both times, or by using chain of custody witnesses. The following are examples of each.

Example--Single Foundation Witness:

Q:

Sir, I call your attention to Exhibit 24. Do you recognize it?

A:

Yes.

Q:

What is it?

A:

It is the lawn mower that I used for cutting my grass before the accident.

Q:

Please tell the ladies and gentlemen of the jury how you are able to recognize it after three years.

A:

Well, the lawn mower I was using at the time of the accident was a green widget model 406. The clips that held the throttle wire to the handle were missing, and I used grey duct tape to hold the wire to the handle. Also, when I fell under the mower the spark plug bent up at a 45 degree angle. This Exhibit 24 is the same model with the tape I put on it and the bent spark plug. It is my old lawn mower.

Q:

And, is the lawn mower, plaintiff's Exhibit 24, in substantially the same condition now as it was immediately after your accident three years ago?

A:

Yes.

That colloquy should be sufficient to establish the admissibility of the lawn mower.

If a single foundation is not possible, a series of foundation witnesses may be necessary to establish that an exhibit has not been tampered with. The term for this foundation is "chain of custody." The test for chain of custody is whether the authentication testimony is sufficiently complete so as to convince the court that it is improbable that the original item has been exchanged with another or otherwise tampered with. n12 Even if a perfect chain cannot be completed, you should note that the trial judge may rule that the imperfect chain goes to weight and sufficiency of the exhibit, not its admissibility. n13

Example--Multiple Foundation Witnesses:

Q:

Officer Smith, I show you Plaintiff's Exhibit D, please describe it.

A:

It is a glass vial, much like the test tubes used in high school chemistry courses. It appears to have a rubber stopper inserted in the top with two pieces of tape across the top of the vial and the stopper. One piece of tape--the top piece--is green with some markings on it. The bottom piece of tape is red and has some printing and writing on it.

Q:

Officer Smith, do you recognize the red tape and the markings on it?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Please identify them.

A:

The red tape has printed on it "APD." That is the initials of my police department. We use it for evidence marking. I also recognize the initials "RJC" printed on the tape and the date "4/6/88." The initials and date were placed on the tape by me on April 6, 1992.

Q:

Officer Smith, what did you place in the vial, Plaintiff's Exhibit D, on April 6, 1992?

A:

While at the accident scene I've previously described, I was administering first aid to the defendant in this case. While attempting to stop a severe blood flow from his arm, I took this vial and filled it partially with blood coming from his wound.

Q:

Was anything else placed in the vial?

A:

No--it was empty when I removed it from our blood-alcohol kit, and the only thing I collected was the defendant's blood.

Q:

What did you do with the vial after sealing it?

Q:

I gave it to Paramedic Jones.

Next Witness:

Q:

Paramedic Jones, do you recognize Plaintiff's Exhibit D?

A:

Yes, it is a vial given to me by the officer at the defendant's accident scene on April 6, 1992.

Q:

How do you know it is the same vial?

A:

I recognize the markings and initials on the label.

Q:

What did you do with it after you received it from Officer Smith?

A:

I placed it in my medical bag until I arrived at the hospital and gave it to Technician Cedric.

Q:

Did you at any time open the vial, put anything in it, or otherwise change the vial?

A:

No.

Next Witness:

Q:

Technician Cedric, do you recognize Plaintiff's Exhibit D?

A:

Yes, it is the vial I received from Paramedic Jones on April 6, 1992.

Q:

How can you be sure of that?

A:

I remember the red tape and markings on the vial when I received it.

Q:

What did you do to the vial?

A:

I cut the red tape, opened the stopper, and withdrew a sample of the fluid in order to conduct a blood alcohol analysis. I then replaced the stopper, covered it with green tape, and placed my initials and date on the green tape.

Q:

Where has the vial been since then?

A:

It has been in the locked vault into which I placed it until two hours ago when I removed it and brought it here to court.

While establishing a foundation involving a chain of custody can appear complicated, recall that it is presented in chronological order, one witness at a time. As the name indicates, each subsequent witness builds on prior testimony. Of course, such chain of custody testimony should be carefully planned in advance of the trial. Also, keep sight of your objective--to establish that the exhibit offered at trial is the same object actually involved in the case. n14

[6.--3] Business Records.

Business records are separately considered because of the hearsay rule. Hearsay is defined as a statement made by someone other than the witness which is offered into evidence to prove the truth of the content of such statement. n15 The statement may be oral, written, or nonverbal conduct. n16 For example, in the normal course of commercial and other types of litigation, a party will attempt to introduce a document which is one of many similar documents generated by a business. A credit card company may generate thousands of billing statements each month, and identifying the person who actually produced a particular statement could be impossible.

Because of the practical problems of establishing an evidentiary foundation in such instances, and the fact that certain types of prepared statements or records are inherently reliable, the business records exception to the hearsay rule was created at common-law and incorporated into the federal rules of evidence. n17 In order to have a business record admitted over a hearsay objection, it is necessary to establish that:

1. The author of the exhibit had knowledge of the information contained in the exhibit.

2. The exhibit was created at or about the time of the activity memorialized in it.

3. It was the regular practice of the business to create such exhibits.

4. The exhibit was kept in the ordinary course of business.

5. There is no demonstrable lack of trustworthiness in connection with the exhibit.

You may be able to combine exceptions to the hearsay rule in order to bolster your argument that certain documents are admissible. For example, a medical social worker's report based on interviews with a party was deemed admissible by combining the party admission exception to the hearsay rule with the business records exception. n18

Clearly excluded from this exception to the hearsay rule are exhibits created specifically for trial. n19 Thus, where a bank generates a loan balance statement each month for each account, these statements would probably qualify as admissible under the business records exception. However, a loan balance statement generated in the middle of the month, which included accrued attorneys fees and court costs, submitted specifically for trial, would not constitute a business record within the meaning of the business record exception.

Also, you should be aware that computer-generated exhibits have some additional foundational requirements. In order to establish a proper foundation for the admission of computer-generated exhibits, counsel must establish that:

1. The exhibit is relevant and material;

2. The input device, central processing unit, and output device are recognized as standard in the industry;

3. The computer hardware was operated properly by fully trained personnel;

4. The source of the input information was trustworthy;

5. The information input into the computer system was put into it in the regular course of business, reasonably close in time to the occurrence of the underlying event;

6. The information was processed by the central processing unit according to a standard, unmodified program operated according to its instructions;

7. The accuracy of the output was verified; and

8. The timing of each step in the process was consistent with its trustworthiness, i.e., there were not excessive delays between any step. n20

Example--Business Record:

Q:

Are you employed by State Bank?

A:

Yes.

Q:

What is your position there?

A:

I am the head cashier.

Q:

Please describe your duties.

A:

I supervise each of the tellers, and also establish training programs for them and assure that each successfully completes that training. In addition, I am responsible for assuring that all of the accounts of each teller balance at the close of each day. Thus, I personally review the teller cage sheets for each day, and also the summary sheets that compare the individual teller entries with the cross-match on an account-by-account basis.

Q:

So, each day you assure that all of these various accounts and reports are in balance?

A:

Yes.

Q:

And what is the process if something is out of balance?

A:

The underlying slips for each transaction are reviewed until the error--the reason for being out of balance--is located and corrected.

Q:

Is there ever a circumstance where things are left out of balance?

A:

No.

Q:

Now, I would like to show you plaintiff's exhibit 14. Do you recognize it?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Please describe it to the ladies and gentlemen of the jury.

A:

It is a daily account summary. It is generated each and every day--manually--by listing all of the account activity for each account for that day. The accounts are sorted numerically, and after the day's activities are recorded, the account balance for the previous day is entered. The new account balance, as of the close of business for that day, is recorded in the space across from the legend "Day Closing Balance."

Q:

When is the daily account summary prepared?

The information is recorded and balanced by 6:

00 p.m. of the day that the activity occurred.

Q:

Is this a special report?

A:

No. The daily account summary is prepared each day by State Bank, and is a document kept by it in the ordinary course of its business.

Q:

Was plaintiff's exhibit 14 prepared as you have just described?

A:

Yes.

Q:

How do you know that?

A:

In the bottom right hand corner are my initials. I put them on each and every daily account summary which has been found to be in balance. Thank you.

A business records foundation is not complicated, but each and every one of the required elements must be covered. This is one area of pretrial preparation where it would be very helpful to write out your questions and anticipate answers in advance, even if you do not generally follow this practice. In addition, the witness should be carefully prepared so as not to jump ahead of the step-by-step ordering of the information you have planned.

[6.--4] Other Documents.

The required foundation for other documents depends upon the specific nature of the document sought to be admitted. Assuming that there has been no stipulation, n21 you should determine whether the author of the document is available to testify. The author is the easiest foundation witness, and can readily identify his or her signature and the circumstances surrounding the creation of the document. This foundation witness will also be able to establish that the proffered document is in substantially the same condition at trial as when it was created and dispatched. Thus, a letter sent by a witness can be authenticated by testimony that the witness authored the letter, recognizes his or her signature on the letter, and that the content of the letter has not been altered.

A common problem occurs when the document offered has some additional writing on it, not authored by the foundation witness. In such an instance, the typed portion of the letter can be admitted, with the handwritten portions subject to further authentication, if possible, by subsequent witnesses. n22 The following is an example of the foundation necessary to admit a letter with several notations:

Q:

I show you plaintiff's exhibit D, do you recognize it?

A:

Yes.

Q:

What is it?

A:

A letter that I sent to Barb Mann.

Q:

And how do you recall that?

A:

Well, that is my signature above where my name is typed, and I remember sending her this letter in response to a telephone conversation we had.

Q:

And did you write everything contained on that single page?

A:

No ... I wrote the typed written portion. I do not know who wrote the red or blue handwritten notes on it.

Q:

Your honor, I move the admission of the typed portions of plaintiff's exhibit D.
Now, Ms. Mann, I show you plaintiff's exhibit D, do you recognize it?

A:

Yes, it is a letter that Bill Smith sent me.

Q:

When you received the letter, was there any handwriting on it?

A:

No. I wrote the red portions ... they were my thoughts on the subject at the time. I do not know who wrote the blue portions.

Q:

Thank you. Your honor, I move the admission of the red handwritten portions of plaintiff's exhibit D. ... [Admitted] Mr. Johnston, do you recognize plaintiff's exhibit D?

A:

Yes.

Q:

What is it?

A:

It is a letter I found in the desk drawer of a desk I bought at a garage sale a year or so ago.

Q:

Do you know who wrote the letter?

A:

I don't know anything about the letter except that it was in the drawer of a desk I bought for $200 at a garage sale.

Q:

Did you write a note on the letter?

A:

Well, I thought the letter might be important to somebody, so I jotted a note on the letter so that I would remember when and where I found it.

Q:

What color ink did you use for your note?

A:

Blue. The blue handwriting is mine.

Q:

What did you do after you wrote the note on the letter?

A:

I called the F.B.I. and they came over and picked it up.

Q:

Thank you. Your honor, I move the admission of the blue handwritten portions of plaintiff's exhibit D. ... [Admitted]

[6.--5] Photographs and Motion Pictures.

Because the judge or jury are accustomed to receiving information visually, where possible, photographs, video tapes, or motion pictures should be used during the course of your trial presentation. Such exhibits may be either demonstrative evidence or real evidence. The foundational requirements for demonstrative visual exhibits is much less stringent than the foundational requirements for real visual exhibits. If the visual exhibit represents facts or circumstances that are witnessed or explained by an occurrence witness, it is generally demonstrative in nature. On the other hand, if no witness observed what is depicted in the visual exhibit, then very stringent requirements may be applied.

The most common type of visual exhibit is a photograph. It may be a photograph of a damaged vehicle, of injuries suffered by the plaintiff, or of an allegedly defective machine. In such instances, the foundational requirement is that a witness be able to testify that the photograph fairly and accurately represents what it portrays at some relevant time period.

Q:

Please describe the damage to your vehicle after the accident.

A:

The right front fender was smashed in. The radiator was leaking. The headlight was broken. There was a piece of the fender shoved into the tire. The hood was sprung. It was a mess.

Q:

Did you take any photographs of the damage?

A:

Yes ... before the tow truck came my neighbor came over with a camera and I took a few pictures of the damage.

Q:

Do you recognize plaintiff's exhibit 3?

A:

Yes, that is one of the photographs that I took.

Q:

Does plaintiff's exhibit 3, the photograph that you took, fairly and accurately portray the damage to your car as it appeared after the accident?

A:

Yes.

In the case of motion pictures or video tapes, courts tend to scrutinize the foundation very closely. Under certain circumstances, the court may require that such evidence be viewed by the court before trial. The court wants to be assured that there has been some evidence asserted as to all of the facts presented in the film or video. For example, if a "Day in the Life" film portrays a plaintiff who cannot walk, or feels pain during every routine movement, prior testimony should have established these facts. Even where the predicate foundation for a motion picture or video tape has been established, some judges believe that such evidence may be too prejudicial or otherwise seeks a verdict based upon sympathy. Relevant evidence "may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time or needless presentation of cumulative evidence." n24 Thus, it is uncertain as to whether such "Day in the Life" films or videos will generally be admitted. The deciding factors will be the quality of the presentation, the ability of plaintiff's attorney, and the discretion of the judge. Any doubt as to the balance between prejudice and probative value should be resolved in favor of admissibility. n25

In those few cases where the photograph or film is itself the real evidence, the foundational requirements are more cumbersome. For example, if a camera is set on a timer, or connected to a trip wire, and the resultant photograph is offered into evidence in circumstances where no witness is available to establish its accuracy, the court will want to be assured that there was no tampering with the proffered result. Thus, a chain of evidence of the unexposed film, as well as the method and nature of its processing, must be established. A sometimes insurmountable problem is establishing the time of the photograph. Unless the photographic equipment records the date and time automatically, there is no witness to establish these elements. Of course, if the photograph recorded an event which probably occurred, the lack of a precise time should not bar its admissibility.

A visual exhibit may also be excluded because of its gruesome nature. The argument for relevancy is that the exhibit actually depicts the injury or harm. However, where the gruesome nature of that depiction is so strong that it may unduly inflame or prejudice a jury, the judge may properly exclude it. n26

[6.--6] Aural Recordings.

The admissibility of sound recordings closely parallels the admission of photographs, motion pictures, and video tapes. Essentially, the foundation should establish that:

1. The recording equipment was of an acceptable quality capable of accurate recording in the conditions as they existed at the time the actual recordings were made.

2. The operator of the recording equipment was trained and qualified to operate it.

3. A witness can establish that the recording accurately sets forth what the witness heard at the time of the recording.

4. The tape has been secure from tampering since the time of the recording.

5. The recorder to be used in court is of an acceptable quality to accurately reproduce the taped recordings.

6. The voices on the tape can be identified.

Problems arise where the tape recordings need to be enhanced in order to hear what was recorded. In such instances, it is necessary to establish that the method of enhancement is scientifically acceptable and performed by a trained operator in such a manner so as to not alter or damage the original recording.

When presenting an aural recording to the judge or to a jury, you should tender in advance a transcript of the taped conversations to facilitate the listening process.

[6.--7] Charts, Graphs and Other Summary Exhibits.

In the context of cases involving voluminous documents, the courts have wholeheartedly embraced the concept of our adversary system. In fact, Federal Rule of Evidence 1006 is specifically designed to assure that large numbers of documents may be simply presented to the trier of fact by way of summary, with the accuracy of any such summary checked by the ability of opposing counsel to review the underlying documents and successfully cross-examine the author of the summary. n27 Rule 1006 provides that:

The contents of voluminous writings, recordings, or photographs which cannot conveniently be examined in court may be presented in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation. The originals, or duplicates, shall be made available for examination or copying, or both, by other parties at reasonable time and place. The court may order that they be produced in court.

Thus, if a damage calculation is based upon hundreds or even thousands of individual bills or invoices, these may be presented by a single line entry on a chart, rather than page by page. Opposing counsel must be given access to these underlying documents, and the witness who calculated the summary must be able to testify with certainty as to the accuracy of that calculation. n28

In fact, in those instances where the case involves economic calculations or totals, a summary chart may serve as a basis for your closing argument. It is also the type of exhibit jurors appreciate in complicated cases. Remember to keep each page or chart simple. The purpose of the summary is defeated if a single page looks like the federal budget or an organizational chart for the executive branch of the government. You can always use more than one chart to avoid a confusing presentation.

In summary, you should always seek to simplify the case for the jury, and to use as many visual aids and summary charts as is reasonable for your case. The Rules of Evidence generally allow, and in fact encourage, this use of exhibits.

[6.--8] Diagrams, Drawings, Models and Maps.

Diagrams, drawings, models and maps, like demonstrative photographs, require a foundation. The essence of any such exhibit is that it fairly and accurately represents something relevant being described by a witness with a first-hand basis for the testimony. For example, a witness viewing a drawing of an intersection may establish that such drawing is an accurate representation of the intersection as it appeared at the time of the accident.

Demonstrative exhibits should not mislead or confuse the jury. Thus, where a model of a machine alleged to be defective omits a hand guard on the actual machine, its use should be precluded. Of course, the judge has wide discretion to admit such exhibits subject to limitation, or to exclude them altogether.

[6.--9] Smooth Presentation.

Well before the trial begins, you should determine which exhibits you intend to use, and the order of their use. You should plan the necessary foundation for each, and be certain that you are familiar with the necessary questioning of the foundation witnesses. Do not abbreviate any foundational questioning even though your opponent may not hold you to exacting standards; on appeal, you may find a panel of judges much less forgiving if admission of an exhibit was plain error, even though the opponent failed to object at the time. Trial preparation in a complex case should entail rehearsing the introduction of exhibits with co-counsel or colleagues. In short, be prepared and follow your trial plan in order to instill a feeling of confidence in your presentation.

[7] Move for Admission.

Be certain to move for the admission of each and every exhibit you offered into evidence. This should be done when you have finished the foundational questioning of the witness. Such motion should be framed as follows:

"Your Honor, I offer Plaintiff's Exhibit 4 into evidence."

The court will then ask your opponent if there is an objection and, if so, will probably ask for the basis of that objection. Generally, local custom will determine the amount of argument the court will hear on the issue of admissibility. In most cases, you will have anticipated the objection and offered your legal argument on admissibility to the court in your trial brief. Also, most courts do not appreciate extensive argument before a jury, but rather hear evidentiary issues on the record at a side bar conference. If there is any chance the court might exclude the evidence at trial, raise the issue by a motion in limine to avoid the last minute surprise and disruption in your trial plan.

After you have concluded your case-in-chief, and before resting, you should review your exhibit log n29 to confirm that all of the exhibits offered have been admitted by the court. Before resting, and probably out of the presence of the jury, you should summarize for the court those exhibits your log reflects as having been admitted by the court. Once your log and the court are in agreement, and after you have quickly assured yourself that nothing was omitted from your case-in-chief, you may confidently rest your case.

[8] The Court Must Rule on Your Request.

If the court does not grant your motion to admit a certain exhibit, it is not in evidence. At times a court may reserve its ruling as to admissibility. It is your obligation to be certain that you obtain a ruling from the court as to each exhibit offered. If the evidence is excluded, be sure to mark the exhibit "for identification" so that it will be included in the record for the appellate court's review.

[9] Present the Exhibit to the Jury.

Once an exhibit has been admitted into evidence, you should ask leave of court to present it to the jury. This may be accomplished by having the witness read some or all of the exhibit to the jury. Or the jury may be permitted to step down and view a large exhibit, such as a car chassis or large model. Individual documents or multiple copies may be passed to the jury. Also, depending upon local court rule, you may give each juror a binder in which to insert a set of documentary exhibits. You must persuade the jury with the strength of your exhibits, but not bore them with the length of your exhibits.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceAuthenticationGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceAdmissibilityEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceFoundational RequirementsEvidenceDocumentary

EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceBest Evidence RuleEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceCompleteness

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See generally 6 WEINSTEIN'S Federal Evidence, § 1002.04 (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

(n2)Footnote 2. See 6 Weinstein's Federal Evidence, § 1002.05 (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., United States v. Sliker, 751 F.2d 477 (2d Cir. 1984) (proof of fact of insurance did not require production of actual insurance policy).

(n4)Footnote 4. In re Mullins, 125 B.R. 808 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1990) .

(n5)Footnote 5. United States v. Leight, 818 F.2d 1297 (7th Cir.) , cert. denied, 484 U.S. 958, 108 S. Ct. 356, 98 L. Ed. 2d 381 (1987) ; In re Bobby Boggs, Inc. 819 F.2d 574 (5th Cir. 1978) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Fed. R. Evid. 1004.

(n7)Footnote 7. Tyson v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 958 F.2d 756 (7th Cir. 1992) ; United States v. Georgalis, 631 F.2d 1199 (5th Cir. 1980) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Fed. R. Evid. 901.

(n9)Footnote 9. Cathey v. Johns-Manville Sales Corp., 776 F.2d 1565 (6th Cir. 1986) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See § 34.03 supra.

(n11)Footnote 11. United States v. Whittington, 783 F.2d 1210 (5th Cir. 1986) .

(n12)Footnote 12. United States v. Mendel, 746 F.2d 155, (2nd Cir. 1984) , cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1213, 105 S. Ct. 1184, 84 L. Ed. 2d 331 (1985) .

(n13)Footnote 13. Hoover v. Thompson, 787 F.2d 449 (8th Cir. 1986) .

(n14)Footnote 14. United States v. Harrington, 923 F.2d 1371 (9th Cir. 1991) .

(n15)Footnote 15. Fed. R. Evid. 801(c).

(n16)Footnote 16. Fed. R. Evid. 801(a).

(n17)Footnote 17. Fed. R. Evid. 803(6) provides that:

> A memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, in any form, of acts, events, conditions, opinions, or diagnoses, made at or near the time by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge, if kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity, and if it was the regular practice of that business activity to make the memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, all as shown by the testimony of the custodian or other qualified witness, unless the source of information or the method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness. The term "business" as used in this paragraph includes business, institution, association, profession, occupation and calling of every kind, whether or not conducted for profit.

(n18)Footnote 18. Bondie v. Bic Corp., 947 F.2d 1531 (6th Cir. 1991) .

(n19)Footnote 19. Paddack v. Dave Christensen, Inc., 745 F.2d 1254 (9th Cir. 1984) ; In re Applin, 108 B.R. 253 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1989) .

(n20)Footnote 20. See, e.g., Grand Liquor Co. v. Department of Revenue, 67 Ill.2d 195, 367 N.E.2d 1238 (1977) .

(n21)Footnote 21. See § 34.03[1] supra, concerning the introduction of exhibits by stipulation.

(n22)Footnote 22. But see United States v. Caldwell, 776 F.2d 989 (11th Cir. 1985) (handwritten alterations were at issue).

(n23)Footnote 24. Fed. R. Evid. 403. The trial judge has broad discretion to determine whether the prejudice inherent in otherwise relevant evidence outweighs its probative value. United States v. Poole, 929 F.2d 1476 (10th Cir. 1991) .

(n24)Footnote 25. United States v. Terzado-Madruga, 897 F.2d 1099 (11th Cir. 1990) . See generally Bannister v. Town of Noble, Okla., 812 F.2d 1265 (10th Cir.1987) .

(n25)Footnote 26. See In re Air Crash Disaster Near New Orleans, La. on July 9, 1982, 767 F.2d 1151 (5th Cir. 1985) (photographs of bodies charred by fire).

(n26)Footnote 27. See United States v. Paulino, 935 F.2d 739 (6th Cir. 1991) (defendants had full opportunity to cross-examine foundational witnesses to alleviate any inaccuracy or unfair characterizations in the summary and the charts were not substantially inconsistent with the trial testimony).

(n27)Footnote 28. E.g., United States v. Jennings, 724 F.2d 436 (5th Cir. 1984) , cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1227, 104 S. Ct. 2682, 81 L. Ed. 2d 877 (1985) (charts summarizing 200 pages of material and substantial amounts of mathematical computations were supported by sufficient evidence).

(n28)Footnote 29. See § 34.06[4] supra.

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.07

§ 34.07 Keeping Exhibits Out of Evidence.

If your trial takes place in a court which requires pretrial submission of all exhibits, you will know what your opponent intends to offer. If not, pretrial discovery should have at least identified the most likely exhibits. In any event, this knowledge and basic training in the applicable rules of evidence will provide the framework for keeping the opponent's exhibits out of evidence.

Of course, to be admissible each exhibit must be relevant and material and if hearsay, subject to one of its exceptions. Additionally, there must be a proper foundation to authenticate each exhibit. After reviewing each of your opponent's potential exhibits, you should know which exhibits may not meet the required evidentiary standards. Each potential problem exhibit should be marked with a tag, or somehow flagged so that when the exhibit is offered, you will remember to object to its admissibility. Depending on the complexity of the evidentiary issue raised, you should have completed at least some basic legal research, with the appropriate authorities, for each objectionable exhibit. If the evidence is excluded, be sure to mark the exhibit "for identification" so that it will be included in the record for the appellate court's review.

In some instances, you may not have a basis for an objection until after you have examined your opponent's witness on the exhibit. If that is the case, make your objection as soon as you become aware of the grounds, and ask the court to strike an exhibit that has already been admitted. For example:

Plaintiff's counsel:

Q:

Can you identify the signatures on the loan documents?

A:

Yes. They are the signatures of the borrower's wife.

Q:

Your Honor, I offer these exhibits into evidence.

Defendant's counsel: Your Honor, I ask this court to reserve its ruling until I have had an opportunity to cross-examine this witness.

The Court: I will reserve my ruling.

Defendant's counsel:

Q:

Thank you. Now, did you actually see the borrower's wife sign the loan documents?

A:

No ... but he told us that they were signed by his wife.

Q:

But weren't some of these documents signed before you started working at the bank?

A:

Well yes ... but he told the loan officer that his wife signed the documents.

Q:

So, you personally did not see her sign the loan documents, isn't that true?

A:

That's correct.

Q:

And you never met his wife, did you?

A:

No, I never met her.

Q:

And the borrower never told you personally that his wife signed the documents, did he?

A:

No, he didn't.

Q:

So, isn't true that when you said that the signatures on the loan documents were those of the borrower's wife, you were merely repeating what another bank officer had told you?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Isn't it also true that you can't identify her signature because you never saw her sign anything, isn't that also true?

A:

Yes.

Q:

Your Honor, I ask this court to deny the pending motion to admit these exhibits.

The Court: The motion will be denied; these exhibits are not admitted.

You must also be cognizant of exhibits that, even if excluded, will unduly prejudice your case. For example, if a key witness was convicted of tax fraud ten years ago, merely asking the witness if there was such prior conviction would generate substantial negative jury feelings even if the objection were sustained. n1 No curative instruction can excise what has already been heard by the jury. In such cases, you should consider a motion in limine. n2 Such a motion is made before trial and asks the court to provide an evidentiary ruling before the trial begins. It allows both sides to brief the issue, and gives the court an opportunity to consider the issue before the pressure of trial.

Be sure to make your objections to exhibits at the earliest opportunity; if an objection is not timely made it is waived. Rule 103(a) of the Federal Rules of Evidence requires a contemporaneous objection to a motion to introduce an exhibit. In the absence of such objections, only plain error affecting substantial rights will be the basis for appellate reversal. n3

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceFoundational RequirementsEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceBest Evidence RuleEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceCompletenessEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsObjections & Offers of ProofObjectionsEvidenceProcedural ConsiderationsRulings on Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Fed. R. Evid. 405(b) (use of testimony of past instances of conduct to prove character).

(n2)Footnote 2. For a discussion of motions in limine see § 37.05[2] infra.

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Evid. 103(d).

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.08

§ 34.08 Arrange for All Necessary Equipment Before Trial.

Do not rely upon anyone else to provide you with the necessary tools to try your case; do not rely on court personnel or court equipment. Determine in advance what equipment you will need, arrange for it to be in the courtroom, and personally ensure that it is in good working order. A quick checklist of possible items could include:

1. Chalkboard

2. Easel

3. Poster board

4. Chalk

5. Eraser

6. Markers

7. Pointer

8. Overhead projector

9. Electrical cords

10. Large screen televisions monitor

11. Video tape player.

Be sure that you bring an adequate number of exhibits to the courtroom, as well as sufficient pens and paper. If the unexpected occurs, ask the court for time to correct the problem. For example:

Prosecutor:

Q:

Now tell the jury what they will see when the light is turned on.

A:

Each of the coins has been marked with invisible ink. On each coin has been placed my last initial, "B." So, when the black light is turned on, the jury will see a "B" on each coin.

Q:

And these coins were taken from the defendant when he was arrested?

A:

That is correct.

Q:

Will the bailiff please close the curtains and dim the lights. Thank you. Officer, please turn on the black light.

Defense Attorney: I can't see anything. ... I don't see any "B's." Prosecutor:

Q:

Your Honor, may we please have a brief recess? [Whereupon a brief recess was had in order to change the bulb in the black light.]
Officer, what do you see?

A:

A "B" clearly visible on each coin.

Q:

Thank you very much!

Be prepared.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceComputer-Generated EvidenceEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceRecordingsEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceVisual FormatsEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceGeneral Overview

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.09

§ 34.09 Summary Exhibits.

In the horse and buggy era of litigation, individual documents were introduced into evidence separately. This method is still used and indeed may be the proper way to handle exhibits in certain kinds of uncomplicated cases. As trials become more complex, however, the need for summarization of large volumes of technical data must be considered. Summary exhibits can effectively compile voluminous financial records and other statistical data, or clearly depict a chronological sequence of events appearing in documents. Summaries of voluminous writings, recordings or photographs inevitably make a case more interesting and understandable. n1

As a tactical matter, a summary exhibit should be considered under the following circumstances:

1. The materials are so voluminous that they cannot easily be transported or kept in the courtroom.

2. The separate introduction of the exhibits would require a number of sponsoring witnesses, would unduly disrupt the flow of testimony and would waste the court's time.

3. The documents contain information vital to the case which cannot be understood by the jury unless presented in summary fashion.

4. An accurate method summarizing the documents must be utilized. The person who made, or supervised the preparation of, the summary must be prepared to vouch for its accuracy at trial.

5. The data supporting the summary exhibits must be available for other parties in the case at a reasonable time and place.

Rule 1006 of the Federal Rules of Evidence provides the general rule in federal court:

The contents of voluminous writings, recordings or photographs which cannot conveniently be examined in court may be presented in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation. The originals, or duplicates, shall be made available for examination or copying, or both, by other parties at [a] reasonable time and place. The court may order that they be produced in court.

To be admissible, the summary must be based on accurate, nonprejudicial documentary proof. If the summary is of disputable accuracy, assumes an unproven fact, or is used as an argumentative device, the district court may, in its sound discretion, properly rule the summary inadmissible. n2 A summary is also inadmissible when the underlying information was not provided to the opponent prior to the introduction of the summary. n3

When faced with the possibility that your adversary will present voluminous records through summary exhibits, you should insist that the exhibits be available before trial so that you have an adequate opportunity to review the supporting data to prepare a meaningful cross- examination. n4 A pre-trial conference is a convenient place for making this request. If opposing counsel seeks to surprise you at trial with a summary exhibit, you should request, and must be allowed, an adequate opportunity to review it before it is introduced.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceWritingsGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceWritingsSummaries

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See Note, Discovery and Use of Computerized Information: Examination of Current Approaches, 13 Pepperdine L. Rev. 405 (1986).

(n2)Footnote 2. United States v. Paulino, 935 F.2d 739 (6th Cir. 1991) ; Gomez v. Great Lakes Steel Div. Nat'l Steel Corp., 803 F.2d 250 (6th Cir. 1986) (summary dealt with estimated damages and assumed unproven facts).

(n3)Footnote 3. United States v. Miller, 771 F.2d 1219 (9th Cir. 1985) .

(n4)Footnote 4. See R & R Assoc., Inc. v. Visual Scene, Inc., 726 F.2d 36 (1st Cir. 1984) (defendant had ample opportunity to view original underlying records in advance of trial).

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.10

§ 34.10 Demonstrative Evidence.

Spoken, and even written, words are often inadequate to create an understanding of the facts in the minds of the jurors. A lawyer can avoid the proverbial "thousand words" by drawing a picture. The picture itself can be drawn orally in the minds of the jurors or sketched on a piece of paper so that the jurors actually "see the testimony."

Verbal demonstrative evidence should pervade the trial. For example, rather than eliciting testimony from the witness that the box involved was about three feet by five feet six inches, the witness could add that the box was about the size of a refrigerator. You should structure virtually all of your testimony in a way which creates an image and stimulates the thought processes of the jurors.

Visual demonstrative evidence is any graphic display which clarifies other evidence. It can be a chart, map, model, photograph, motion picture, or a drawing created by the witness or by counsel during the course of the witness' testimony. Because a visual aid is not substantive evidence but is merely a means of supplementing other evidence, the judge has discretion in determining the manner and circumstances of its use at trial. Even if a judge refuses to admit the visual aid, the immediate effect of the jury viewing it is virtually the same as if it was admitted into evidence. Nonetheless, you should press for the admission of a visual aid because then no question arises as to the propriety of the jury taking it into the jury room during deliberations.

The visual aid should not be displayed to the jury until after you either have received the court's permission to do so or have obtained your adversary's stipulation to use it. If the court deems the visual aid improper, but it already has been seen by the jury, prejudicial error may have been injected into the trial. To avoid this potential problem, you should advise the court and opposing counsel of your intention to use a visual aid either at a pre-trial conference or during trial outside the presence of the jury. Your adversary has the right to inspect it before it is displayed to the jury. If surprise at trial is desired, the exhibit should be stored so that the jury cannot see it until after a foundation for it is established and the judge either admits it into evidence or grants you leave to display it to the jury.

You should develop a comfortable and natural style in using demonstrative evidence. Before trial you should practice handling it and integrating it into the witness' testimony. Once again, rehearsal with co-counsel or colleagues will give you confidence that presentation of the exhibit will go smoothly in the courtroom. Rehearse the use of demonstrative exhibits as part of your pretrial preparation of witnesses or during mock cross-examination of witnesses, using a stand-in for the opponent's expected witness at trial. Demonstrative evidence should be presented in a way that complements and enhances the testimony. A self- conscious or awkward performance with demonstrative evidence may well confuse rather than clarify matters in the juror's minds.

[1] Charts.

Charts and graphs are useful in translating a mass of statistical data into an easy-to-understand form. Charts will be particularly helpful in:

1. Presenting data in a comparative manner;

2. Describing organizational structures;

3. Depicting trends, sales volumes, profitability or shares.

Assume that your witness will testify that Company X had sales of $1.0 million in 1988, $2.5 million in 1990; $4 million in 1991 and $3.5 million in 1981, and that the sales of Company Y for those same years were $2.5; $4.0; $2.0 and $1.5 million respectively. This testimony can be charted in three ways:

Click here to view image.

Click here to view image.

The alternative chosen will depend upon the purpose of the chart and the impact you want to achieve. If you want to depict the trend of Company X and Company Y, you may choose alternative 1. If you want to emphasize a comparison between the performance of Company X and Company Y for the four year period, you could choose either alternative 2 or alternative 3; and if you want the emphasis to be most dramatic you may opt for alternative 2 over alternative 3.

Assume your witness will testify that Company X is a large conglomerate engaged in the business of banking (50%), shipbuilding (10%), construction (5%), insurance (20%), and computer leasing (25%). Assume further that the case involves residential construction and that Company X's construction business is broken down into residential construction (10%); industrial construction (50%) and commercial construction (40%). These relationships could be displayed to the jury as follows (among other ways):

Click here to view image.

If you want to depict the relative composition of (1) construction to all other lines of business engaged in by Company X, and (2) residential construction to all other construction, you might use pie charts of the sort depicted in alternative 1. If, however, you want to emphasize that construction is only a small part of Company X's overall business and that residential construction is only a small part of Company X's construction business, you might opt for pie charts of the sort depicted in alternative 2.

Relationships between people, or among companies, can become confusing when presented verbally. However, a simple organizational chart, possibly with a few colored connecting lines, can go far to facilitate juror understanding. Again, be sure that your chart is not more confusing than the testimony. Experiment with a few different designs, then select the simplest. Also, use colors if at all possible.

The types and uses of charts and graphs in a case are limited only by your imagination and that of the graphic design consultants whom you employ. Rely on professionals who are trained to think visually. Most lawyers are more verbal than visual and are better at precise language than at spatial relationships. In addition, many computer graphics programs readily available come equipped with alternate comparative formats which can be adapted for litigation purposes. In using such visual aids, you should keep three factors in mind:

1. Be sure that the visual aid is clear and large enough to be seen by the jury;

2. Be sure to label each graphic; and

3. Do not try to show too much in one illustration.

Creative use of colors, diagonal, horizontal and broken lines can solve many problems. At all times you should keep in mind that the charts and graphs must actually clarify testimony for the jury and not look like a confusing swirl of lines or shapes which resemble an impressionistic painting of a pizza.

The chart presented by one party is not inviolate. The opponent or other witnesses may be permitted to mark on the exhibit in order to make a different point or to point out flaws or inconsistencies in the exhibit. Or, they may prepare an identical exhibit and then visually destroy the impression you intended to convey. A transparent overlay may be placed on the exhibit so that another witness can make the marks or comparisons which weaken the exhibit. Prepare charts with those possibilities in mind.

[2] Maps.

One of the quickest ways to confuse a jury is to ask questions about directions or spacial relationships. Do not limit your use of maps to auto accident cases. Rather, anytime there is a spacial relationship, consider using a map. But do not use a street map, for generally all of the roadways and landmarks only serve to add to the confusion. Have a map prepared for the litigation, as large as practical, with the scale as accurate as possible, but which deletes unnecessary detail. You should also consider the use of clear plastic overlays to allow witnesses to mark on the map while they testify.

With a map, a plastic overlay, and a prepared witness, the jury is more likely to understand the evidence. For example:

Q:

Please draw a circle around your home.

A:

(Whereupon the witness drew a circle around a space on plaintiff's exhibit 23.)

Q:

Now please put an "X" over your destination.

A:

We were going to the Baptist Church right over here.

Q:

Now, please trace the route you took right up until the accident.

A:

We went straight up First to Main Street, then left up to Fourth which is where he hit us.

After the testimony, the overlay with the map should be offered into evidence so that the trial court record is preserved.

The inclusion of too much information on a single map or too many tracings and drawings can render a map unintelligible. Proliferation of copies and overlays can be equally confusing. Use separate maps for different issues in the case, rather than one all-purpose map, which will become obliterated by detail.

Maps are admissible when they are relevant and fairly and accurately depict the scene they purport to represent. The sponsoring witness need not be the map maker, but the witness should have first-hand knowledge of the scene or area.

[3] Models.

Because models are three dimensional and have qualities that cannot be matched by other types of demonstrative evidence. They can be of two types: (1) models that simply depict a scene or tangible object, and (2) operational models which simulate events or movements.

Models can give the jury a perspective which is not easily captured by a photograph. A juror can perceive more in one glance at a model than by close scrutiny of most photographs, and can therefore more vividly experience the witness' testimony. Operational models are eye-catching and may be the only effective means of showing jurors how a machine works, for example. When using an operational model, however, extreme care must be taken to guarantee that the model is in working condition. The jury may lose confidence in your whole case if the model fails to operate.

Courts differ widely in their approach to models. Some judges will admit a model only if it is completely accurate to scale. Other courts require only reasonable accuracy. Before proceeding to construct a model, ascertain which view your judge takes.

[4] Photographs and Motion Pictures.

Photographs and motion pictures have a variety of uses in court ranging from the photographic enlargement of a microscope slide to a panoramic view of the Grand Canyon. Unless sufficient planning is done before trial and effective presentation is made at trial, photographs or motion pictures may be ineffective or may be interpreted by jurors as a half-hearted effort to add some color to an otherwise weak case. Accuracy and effectiveness of photographs and motion pictures requires care in selecting a photographer and hard work by both the attorney and photographer.

A photographer with litigation experience should be hired. While photographs taken by a general photographer may be clear, they also may have been taken from an improper angle or may over-dramatize certain aspects of the scene thus rendering the photograph inadmissible. A photographer with experience in taking photographs for use at trial will more easily understand instructions and also may be a source of valuable suggestions concerning how best to present photographic evidence.

Even the most highly skilled photographer cannot prepare persuasive photographic evidence without the cooperation of the attorney. The photographer must be given clear and precise instructions and he must be retained sufficiently in advance of trial so that he has time to prepare photographs which will have the greatest positive effects upon jurors. n1 Use one or two effective photographs rather than ten or twenty casual snapshots.

Photographs and motion pictures should be admitted (1) if relevant, (2) and the sponsoring witness can testify that they fairly and accurately depict the scene as it appeared at the relevant moment. n2 Once the photograph is admitted into evidence you should present it in a way which best focuses the entire jury upon it. Enlargements and use of an overhead projector are preferable to one copy passed among the jurors or multiple copies for each juror. If the witness will have to mark or emphasize portions of the photograph, the overhead projector method is best. If multiple witnesses are to mark on the projection, each should use a different color crayon.

[5] Sketches.

The method of asking a witness to prepare a sketch--or having the lawyer do so while conducting his examination--is a widely accepted practice. A blackboard or large chart mounted on an easel should be placed in the courtroom in easy view of both the jury and the judge. When the courtroom arrangement prevents both judge and jury from seeing the board, position it for the jury and make your apologies to the trial judge. The judge can step down from the bench in order to see the drawing. When using the chart you should prepare your witness, or yourself, to make the drawing from a position that does not interfere with the view of any juror. A blackboard may have to be reused during trial and can be easily erased, and it is difficult to preserve a blackboard drawing for the record; consequently many lawyers opt to use chart paper over a blackboard.

Using a blackboard or chart to sketch aspects of testimony is an effective way of indelibly etching testimony into the minds of the jury. In courts that refuse to allow juror access to trial transcripts, a drawing made on chart paper can be an effective reminder of the highpoints of the witness' testimony. This technique is particularly effective when a witness will provide numerous reasons why certain action was taken. The witness can step down and first list generally all the reasons on the chart, leaving enough room between the statements so that sub-reasons can be added later during the testimony. Once the reasons are all listed, you can take the witness back over each one of them to discuss them in detail, making additions to the chart as the testimony proceeds.

While a hand-drawn chart of statements may be effective, the drawing of a scene by a witness at trial is usually a practice to be avoided. Such drawings are usually misleading and inaccurate. The better practice is to have a map or diagram prepared before trial which the witness can then qualify for admission.

The use of a blackboard or chart during voir dire or opening statement is effective and should facilitate juror understanding of the case's facts and theories. (However, very few cases have discussed the propriety of using a visual aid at those points; those cases facing the issue have generally upheld the discretion of the trial court in allowing counsel to use a blackboard or chart.) n3 The use of a blackboard or chart during closing argument also is within the judge's discretion. n4 During summation, the chart can be used effectively to remind the jury of the vital aspects of the case brought out by the testimony.

As to sketches prepared by witnesses, an issue to be aware of is preservation of the record. Thus, if a witness sketches on a chalk board which is erased at the end of his testimony, the sketches are not preserved for the record. Similarly, drawings on a sketch pad not admitted into evidence will not follow the case to the appellate court. In order to preserve the record, either offer into evidence the sketch pages, or photograph the chalk board prior to its erasure and offer the photograph into evidence.

[6] Computer Graphics

Computer graphic animation was first successfully admitted as substantive evidence in 1989. n5 Although costly in some cases, computer animation has the advantage of presenting highly complex or technical material in a visually clear and understandable manner. However, as with any exhibit, a computer presentation will not be admitted without adequate foundation. It the case of computer graphic animation that includes establishing "the trustworthiness of the original source data, all calculations and assumptions used in analyzing the data, its input into the computer, the operation and capability of the computer and software, the output process used for the graphics, the medium used to reproduce the computer graphics for presentation at trial, and the accuracy of the final presentation itself." n6 Increasingly, jurors who are used to computer games or computer graphics will accept computer generated animation as easily as re-creations on video.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceAdmissibilityEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceFoundational RequirementsEvidenceDemonstrative EvidencePhotographsEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceVisual Formats

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See generally Courtney, Effective Use of the Evidence Photographer, 17 Prac. Law. 33 (April 1971); Ehrlich, Preparing and Using Photographs, 3 Am. Jur. Trials § 43 (1965).

(n2)Footnote 2. See United States v. Englebrecht, 917 F.2d 376 (8th Cir. 1990) ; United States v. Rembert, 863 F.2d 1023 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (admissibility of photographs taken by camera in automatic teller machine).

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., United States v. Scales, 594 F.2d 558 (6th Cir. 1978) , cert. denied, 441 U.S. 946 (1979) . See also 6 Weinstein's Federal Evidence, § 1006.08 (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

(n4)Footnote 4. See, e.g., United States v. White, 766 F.2d 22 (1st Cir. 1985) (not abuse of discretion to deny counsel use of blackboard to illustrate arguments during closing); United States v. Young, 955 F.2d 99 (1st Cir. 1992) (permissible to use chart during closing to summarize information already in evidence).

(n5)Footnote 5. In re Air Crash at Dallas/Ft. Worth Airport, 117 F.R.D. 392 (N.D. Tex. 1989) , aff'd, 919 F.2d 1079 (5th Cir. 1991) .

(n6)Footnote 6. Krieger, Sophisticated Computer Graphics Come of Age--And the Evidence Will Never Be the Same, 78 A.B.A.J. 93, 96, Dec., 1992.

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.11

§ 34.11 Limited Use of Unadmitted Exhibits.

Reliance at trial upon exhibits not introduced into evidence may undermine the evidentiary base of a favorable decision with two exceptions. First, the court may allow the use of visual aids without requiring that they be admitted into evidence. Second, unadmitted exhibits may be used to refresh the recollection of a witness.

Often during the process of interrogation a witness cannot recall a particular event of conversation. When that happens, any writing, whether made by the witness or another person, can be used to refresh the witness' memory. After the witness reviews the documents--refreshes his memory--he must put it aside, state that his memory is refreshed and proceed to testify to the facts from his own knowledge. The writing is not evidence.

Generally, notes, memoranda, correspondence, reports, depositions, prior statements, computer printouts, photographs and virtually any other document can be used to refresh recollection. The writing need not be written or prepared by the witness; it may be a copy; and, it may even be incomplete. The time when the document was generated is immaterial and its reliability or competency as evidence need not be established before use. n1 The extent to which a witness may refer to a "refreshing" document is within the court's sound discretion. n2

Rule 612 of the Federal Rules of Evidence (Writing Used to Refresh Memory)states the federal rule as follows:

Except as otherwise provided in criminal proceedings by section 3500 of title 18, United States Code, if a witness uses a writing to refresh his memory for the purposes of testifying, either (1) while testifying, or (2) before testifying, if the court in its discretion determines it is necessary in the interests of justice, an adverse party is entitled to have the writing produced at the hearing, to inspect it, to cross-examine the witness thereon, and to introduce in evidence those portions which relate to the testimony of the witness. If it is claimed that the writing contains matters not related to the subject mater of the testimony the court shall examine the writing in camera, excise any portions not so related, and order delivery of the remainder to the party entitled thereto. Any portion withheld over objections shall be preserved and made available to the appellate court in the event of an appeal. If a writing is not produced or delivered pursuant to order under this rule, the court shall make any order justice requires, except that in criminal cases when the prosecution elects not to comply, the order shall be one striking the testimony or, if the court in its discretion determines that the interests of justice so require, declaring a mistrial.

Procedurally, the witness is asked about a particular subject, and cannot recall the answer. A document is then shown to the witness, who recalls the answer based on the document. Refreshing recollection should be distinguished from past recollection recorded, n3 wherein the actual document itself is admitted into evidence. For example:

Q:

Do you recall when you signed the contract?

A:

No.

Q:

Is there any document which would refresh your recollection as to when you signed the contract?

A:

Yes. If I could see the contract, I remember writing the date above my signature, and I had to look at a calendar to find out what the actual date was.

Q:

I show you what has been marked as plaintiff's exhibit W, and ask you to look at it. ... Having seen and reviewed exhibit W, is your recollection now refreshed as to the date that you signed the contract?

A:

Yes. Now I remember that I signed the contract on March 21, 1991.

Because the adverse party has a right to inspect the "refreshing" document, privileged communications cannot be used to refresh a witness' recollection. n4 If privileged materials or attorney work product is used for the purpose of refreshing recollection, the privilege is lost. n5

When the witness has forgotten the facts and cannot refresh his memory, the document relied upon may be read into evidence as a "past recollection recorded" under certain conditions and subject to certain limitations. Under Rule 803(5) of the Federal Rules of Evidence, a memorandum or other record concerning a matter about which a witness once had knowledge is admissible as a recorded recollection if the record was made when the facts were fresh in the witness' mind, the record was accurate when made, and the witness when testifying has insufficient recollection "to enable the witness to testify fully and accurately." Once so qualified, the record may be read into evidence but may not be received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceHearsayExceptionsRecorded RecollectionGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyRefreshing RecollectionGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyRefreshing RecollectionMemory AidsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyRefreshing RecollectionRefreshing Before TestimonyEvidenceTestimonyRefreshing RecollectionRefreshing During Testimony

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., United States v. Tolbert, 367 F.2d 778, 781 (7th Cir. 1966) . See also 4 Weinstein's Federal

Evidence, § 612.03[3] (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

(n2)Footnote 2. See 4 Weinstein's Federal Evidence, § 612,03[1] (Matthew Bender 2d ed.).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Evid. 803(5).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Derderian v. Polaroid Corp., 121 F.R.D. 13 (D. Mass. 1988) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Auto Owners Ins. Co. v. Totaltape, Inc., 135 F.R.D. 199 (M.D. Fla. 1990) .

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 Exhibits *

3-34 Federal Litigation Guide § 34.12

§ 34.12 Additional Resources.

[1] Federal Litigation Guide Reporter.

Kitch, Admissibility of "Day in the Life" Films, 1 Fed. Litigation Guide Rep. 663 (1987).

Lynch, Use of Video Tape in the Courtroom, 1 Fed. Litigation Guide Rep. 479 (1987).

McClearn, Strategies in Developing and Using Demonstrative Exhibits, 1 Fed. Litigation Guide Rep. 601 (1987).

Reasoner and Owens, Innovative Judicial Techniques in Managing Complex Litigation, 2 Fed. Litigation Guide Rep. 603 (1989).

Solovy and Byman, The Effective Use of Nonusable Evidence, 1 Fed. Litigation Guide Rep. 415 (1986).

[2] Treatises and Forms.

Federal Trial Guide, §§ 20.21, 30.01, 30.02, 30.10-30.35, 40.54.

Moore's Federal Practice (3d ed.), Ch. 30, Depositions Upon Oral Examination .

Weinstein's Federal Evidence (2d ed.), Ch. 612, Writing Used to Refresh Memory ; Chs. 1001-1006.

[3] Law Reviews and Periodicals.

Boddren and Winter, The Case for a Visual Presentation, 15 Trial Diplomacy J. 125 (1992).

Dombroff, Effective Demonstrative Evidence, 12 Litigation 44 (Fall 1985).

Henke, Admissibility of Computer-Generated Animated Reconstructions and Simulations, 34 Trial Lawyer's Guide 434 (1992).

Joseph, Demonstrative Videotape Evidence, 22 Trial 60 (June 1986).

Krieger, Sophisticated Computer Graphics Come of Age--And the Evidence Will Never Be the Same, 78 A.B.A.J. 93, 96, Dec., 1992.

Lederer, Scientific Evidence--An Introduction, 25 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 517 (1984).

McCullough and Underwood, How To Prepare and Use Demonstrative Evidence in a Civil Trial, 28 Prac. Law. 19 (1982).

Medina, The Admissibility of Computer Records as Evidence, 39 Wash. St. B. News 14 (July 1985).

Mulroy, Jr. and Rychlak, Use of Real and Demonstrative Evidence at Trial, 33 Trial Law. Guide 550 (Winter 1990)

Nicastro, How to Control Documents, 10 Litig. 36 (Summer 1984).

Note, Beyond Words: The Evidentiary Status of "Day in the Life" Films, 66 Boston U. L. Rev. 133 (1986).

Note, Discovery and Use of Computerized Information: Examination of Current Approaches, 13 Pepperdine L. Rev. 405 (1986).

Seiden, Physical Evidence in Criminal Cases, 28 Trial 106 (Aug. 1992).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceAuthenticationGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceAdmissibilityEvidenceDemonstrative EvidenceFoundational RequirementsEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceGeneral OverviewEvidenceDocumentary EvidenceBest Evidence Rule

* Chapter 34 revised in 1993 by Richardson R. Lynn, Nimmo, Baker & Lynn, Nashville, Tennessee; Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Pepperdine University School of Law, Malibu, California.

116 of 181 DOCUMENTS

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *

3-35 Federal Litigation Guide 35.syn

§ 35.syn Synopsis to Chapter 35: Cross-Examination *

§ 35.01 Judicial Control Over Mode and Order of Interrogating Witnesses

§ 35.02 Planning Cross-Examination to Elicit Favorable Testimony or Neutralize Unfavorable Testimony

§ 35.03 Considering the Scope of Cross-Examination

§ 35.04 Determining the Scope of Direct Examination

§ 35.05 Preparing Before Trial for Cross-Examination

§ 35.06 Outlining Questions for Cross-Examination

§ 35.07 Deciding Whether to Cross-Examine a Witness

§ 35.08 Assessing the Damage Done on Direct

§ 35.09 Calculating the Probability of a Successful Cross-Examination

§ 35.10 Considering a Limited Cross-Examination

§ 35.11 Conducting Cross-Examination
[1] Treating the Witness Fairly
[2] Choosing Between a Friendly or Hostile Manner
[3] Choosing the Appropriate Placement in the Courtroom to Conduct Cross-Examination
[4] Looking the Witness in the Eye
[5] Projecting Confidence to the Jury
[6] Pacing Questions on Cross-Examination

§ 35.12 Considering Interrogation Techniques
[1] Determining the Length of Cross-Examination
[2] Asking Simple and Clear Questions
[3] Avoiding "Why" or "How" Questions
[4] Asking Leading Questions
[5] Avoiding the Ultimate Question

[6] Shifting Areas of Inquiry
[7] Knowing the Answer
[8] Resisting Argumentation
[9] Refraining From Opening the Door

§ 35.13 Controlling Deviating Witnesses

§ 35.14 Persevering Against Evasive Witnesses

§ 35.15 Responding to Questioning Witnesses

§ 35.16 Choosing Language that Favors One's Position

§ 35.17 Eliciting Helpful Evidence on Cross-Examination

§§ 35.18through 35.19 [Reserved]

§ 35.20 Understanding Impeachment in the Context of Cross-Examination

§ 35.21 Considering Impeachment Strategies
[1] Determining Who May Be Impeached
[2] Impeaching the Adversary's Witness
[3] Impeaching One's Own Witness
[4] Considering the Subject of Impeachment

§ 35.22 Evaluating Whether to Impeach a Witness
[1] Strategizing Impeachment
[2] Considering the Basis for Impeachment

§ 35.23 Impeaching the Witness with a Prior Inconsistent Statement

§ 35.24 Preparing to Impeach With Prior Inconsistent Statement

§ 35.25 Evaluating How to Best Utilize Prior Inconsistent Statements
[1] Recommitting the Witness to Prior Testimony
[2] Using Simple, Direct Questions
[3] Laying a Foundation Before Impeaching the Witness With a Prior Inconsistent Statement
[4] Establishing the Reliability of the Prior Inconsistent Statement
[5] Confronting the Witness With the Prior Inconsistent Statement
[6] Using Prior Testimony for Impeachment
[7] Using Written Statements for Impeachment
[8] Using Pleadings for Impeachment
[9] Using an Omission in a Prior Statement for Impeachment

§ 35.26 Impeaching a Witness by Highlighting Inconsistency With Other Witnesses

§ 35.27 Impeaching a Witness by Relying on Bad Character, Bias, or Interest
[1] Using Evidence of Bad Reputation or Character for Impeachment Purposes
[2] Using Evidence of Criminal Acts for Impeachment Purposes
[3] Using Evidence of Bias or Interest for Impeachment Purposes

§ 35.28 Impeaching Witnesses by Showing Their Version of Events to be Highly Improbable

§§ 35.29through 35.39 [Reserved]

§ 35.40 Evaluating the Importance of Expert Testimony

§ 35.41 Considering Topics of Cross-Examination for Expert Witnesses
[1] Challenging the Qualifications of an Expert
[2] Probing for Expert Bias or Interest
[3] Asking Hypothetical Questions
[4] Corroborating Your Expert's Position
[5] Impeaching Expert Witnesses
[6] Forcing Equivocation
[7] Demonstrating Lack of Thoroughness
[8] Questioning the Expert Concerning Learned Treatises

§§ 35.42through 35.49 [Reserved]

§ 35.50 Conducting Redirect Examination
[1] Understanding the Importance of Redirect Examination
[2] Evaluating the Scope of Redirect Examination
[3] Considering Whether to Conduct Redirect Examination

§ 35.51 Offering Rebuttal Evidence
[1] Understanding the Importance of Rebuttal Evidence
[2] Evaluating the Scope of Rebuttal
[3] Considering the Extent of Rebuttal
[4] Selecting Rebuttal Witnesses
[5] Considering Rebuttal Techniques

§ 35.52 Understanding the Importance of Surrebuttal

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *

3-35 Federal Litigation Guide Scope

Scope

SCOPE

Effective trial advocacy requires a thorough understanding of cross-examination and impeachment of witnesses. A successful trial does not require an extensive cross-examination of every witness. Rather, the first decision is whether to cross-examine at all. After carefully exploring the factors underlying this decision, the chapter considers the conduct and demeanor of counsel during cross-examination. Although cross-examination is an extremely situation-specific litigation tool, certain general stylistic considerations are highlighted. Thereafter, the method of constructing a successful cross-examination is analyzed, including the various techniques that are available for maintaining control of witnesses.

Following the discussion of cross-examination in general, the chapter covers the goals and techniques of successful witness impeachment. While cross-examination that obtains affirmative evidence for the case-in-chief is important, cross-examination also is a valuable way to impeach the veracity of a witness and the reliability of his or her testimony. In this regard, various strategic considerations are set forth, such as who, what, when and how to impeach successfully. Cross-examination of expert witnesses is treated separately. Impeachment by prior inconsistent statement, character, bias, interest and inherent improbability of testimony are all explored in detail. Finally, the goals of redirect, rebuttal and surrebuttal are discussed.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.01

§ 35.01 Judicial Control Over Mode and Order of Interrogating Witnesses

The court is responsible for maintaining reasonable control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence so as to: n1

- Make the interrogation and presentation effective in ascertaining the truth
- Avoid needless consumption of time
- Protect witnesses from harassment or undue embarrassment

In general, the trial court has the discretion to determine the order and the mode of cross-examination. n2

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 611(a).

(n2)Footnote 2. Argentine v. United Steelworkers, 287 F.3d 476, 486 (6th Cir. 2002) .

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.02

§ 35.02 Planning Cross-Examination to Elicit Favorable Testimony or Neutralize Unfavorable Testimony

Effective cross-examination increases the likelihood of prevailing at trial. Cross-examination serves two essential purposes:

- To elicit additional favorable facts that were not established by prior direct testimony
- To neutralize or discredit unfavorable testimony

Evidence favorable to the cross-examining party is generally more compelling when developed through an adverse, antagonistic, or hostile witness. Similarly, evidence may be far more damaging when elicited on cross than when it is developed through the same witness on direct. Cross-examination also provides the opportunity to bring out facts tending to discredit the witness by showing that the witness' testimony was untrue, biased, or based on faulty memory or perception.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.03

§ 35.03 Considering the Scope of Cross-Examination

A party who is adverse to the party initially calling a witness may cross-examine the witness in the sequence that the court directs. Cross-examination is typically limited to: n1

- The subject matter of the witness' direct examination
- Matters affecting the credibility of the witness

However, the court may, in the exercise of discretion, permit inquiry into additional matters as if on direct examination. n2 Typically, cross-examination is permitted when reasonably related to the witness' direct testimony. n3 The subject matter of direct examination is generally construed to include all inferences and implications arising from the testimony. n4 When only part of an act, declaration, conversation, or writing is elicited during direct examination, the remainder may be inquired into during cross-examination.

Refusal to permit cross-examination of a witness concerning matters testified to on direct examination constitutes prejudicial error. n5 In general, trial judges have wide latitude in determining the proper scope of cross-examination. n6 A trial court's rulings on the scope of cross-examination will not be reversed except for clear abuse of that discretion. n7

With respect to the allowable scope of cross-examination, a party is guaranteed "only an opportunity for effective cross-examination, not cross-examination that is effective in whatever way, and to whatever extent, the defense might wish." n8 In setting the boundaries, the trial court is required to strike a balance between the opportunity to cross-examine and the need to prevent repetitive or abusive cross-examination. n9 In light of the discretion given to the trial judge to determine the scope of cross-examination, counsel should become familiar with the way the judge handles cross-examination.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudicial OfficersJudgesDiscretionCivil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 611(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 611(b).

(n3)Footnote 3. United States v. Lara, 181 F.3d 183, 199 (1st Cir. 1999) .

(n4)Footnote 4. U.S. v. Tomblin, 46 F.3d 1369, 1386 (5th Cir. 1995) .

(n5)Footnote 5. Francis v. Clark Equipment Co., 993 F.2d 545, 550 (6th Cir. 1993) .

(n6)Footnote 6. U.S. v. Easter, 66 F.3d 1018, 1022 (9th Cir. 1995) ..

(n7)Footnote 7. Bryan v. Hall Chemical Co., 993 F.2d 831, 836 (11th Cir. 1993) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Douglas v. Owens, 50 F.3d 1226, 1230 (3d Cir. 1995) ; Kentucky v. Stincer, 482 U.S. 730, 739, 107 S. Ct. 2658, 96 L. Ed. 2d 631 (1987) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Douglas v. Owens, 50 F.3d 1226, 1230 (3d Cir. 1995) .

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.04

§ 35.04 Determining the Scope of Direct Examination

In general, the scope of cross-examination coincides with the subject matter of direct examination. n1 However, a skillful cross-examiner will not restrict questions to a categorical review of matters, dates, and times covered in the direct examination. His or her cross-examination may be directed toward eliciting any matter that tends to overcome or diminish the effect of the witness' direct examination. The trial court has discretion during cross-examination to permit inquiry about a collateral fact when it is directly connected with a question in dispute and essential to its proper determination, or when it affects the witness' credibility. n2

Thus, if a party opens up a subject on direct examination, there is no basis for objection if the opposing party introduces evidence on the same subject on cross-examination. n3 This principle has two important consequences:

- First, it may allow a party more extensive cross-examination than would have been available had the subject not been raised on direct

- Second, it may allow a party to introduce evidence on cross-examination that would not otherwise be admissible in the action

Under the second consequence, for example, the court may be more inclined to exercise its discretion to permit inquiry into additional matters as if on direct examination. n4 Although a trial court may restrict cross-examination on new matters not raised on direct, the court may not restrict a party's right of cross-examination until that right has been substantially and fairly exercised as to matters introduced on direct. n5 Thus, if a matter appears to be beyond the scope of direct examination, the proponent may attempt to have it received by arguing that the opposing party opened the door to the subject on direct examination. Similarly, a relevancy objection may be defeated by arguing that the door was opened on direct examination. n6

The second consequence mentioned above is particularly important. For example, although evidence of collateral source payments is generally inadmissible, in a case in which the plaintiff testified on direct examination that he retired under disability, the defendant was entitled to impeach the plaintiff by asking whether the plaintiff left with full retirement benefits. n7 Similarly, the Eighth Circuit ruled that evidence of workers' compensation payments was admissible to impeach a plaintiff's statement that he had suffered financial stress after the accident in question. n8 Likewise, evidence of "subsequent remedial measures" (generally inadmissible under Federal Rules of Evidence 407) is admissible to impeach the testimony of a witness. n9 Thus, cross-examining counsel should carefully scrutinize matters elicited on direct examination to see if the "door has been opened" for the admission of potentially damaging information that would otherwise be inadmissible under the rules of evidence.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 611(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 611(b).

(n3)Footnote 3. Francis v. Clark Equipment Co., 993 F.2d 545, 550 (6th Cir. 1993) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Evid. 611(b).

(n5)Footnote 5. Francis v. Clark Equipment Co., 993 F.2d 545, 550 (6th Cir. 1993) .

(n6)Footnote 6. E.E.O.C. v. General Dynamics Corp., 999 F.2d 113, 119 (5th Cir. 1993) .

(n7)Footnote 7. Brandt v. Vulcan, Inc., 30 F.3d 752, 760 (7th Cir. 1994) .

(n8)Footnote 8. Cowens v. Siemens-Elema, AB, 837 F.2d 817, 824-825 (8th Cir. 1988) .

(n9)Footnote 9. Trytko v. Hubbell, Inc., 28 F.3d 715, 724 (7th Cir. 1994) .

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.05

§ 35.05 Preparing Before Trial for Cross-Examination

Planning for an effective cross-examination begins well before trial. Preparation generally includes reviewing discovery responses, deposition testimony, and other related documents. These materials will often illuminate the potentially adverse testimony of key opposition witnesses, and the materials can often be used to impeach or otherwise cross-examine those witnesses.

It is a rare case in which counsel does not have a reasonably good idea before trial of what each of an adversary's witnesses will testify about. Give advance thought to the potential benefit and harm of each likely witness. Preparation and judgment, and not necessarily eloquence, linguistic dexterity, or clever impromptu impulses, are the touchstones of effective cross-examination.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.06

§ 35.06 Outlining Questions for Cross-Examination

An outline of areas of inquiry for each potential adverse witness that includes potential cross-examination questions will likely be helpful for use at trial. The outline can be organized based on the key issues that need to be established at trial. Using these key issues, counsel should know where to concentrate during any given cross-examination. From discovery, counsel should generally know the identity of witnesses the opposing party will likely call, their probable testimony on direct examination, and their anticipated responses on cross-examination. In preparing to cross-examine these witnesses, list the strongest points you hope to make during cross-examination.

Depending on the complexity of the case, counsel may want to focus on only three or four major areas during cross-examination of each adverse witness. Questions prepared in advance of trial can be adapted and augmented at the time of trial depending on the actual testimony of the witness on direct examination. Discard any parts of the prepared outline of anticipated cross-examination that now seem irrelevant or marginal in light of the witness' actual testimony. By analyzing and evaluating the witness' testimony on direct examination, counsel may also detect new and unanticipated areas of weakness that can be exploited on cross-examination.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.07

§ 35.07 Deciding Whether to Cross-Examine a Witness

During direct examination, it is critical to analyze and evaluate the opposing witness' testimony. The following are examples of issues to consider at that time:

- Has the witness' testimony been harmful?
- Can damaging testimony be rebutted?
- How did the witness relate to the jury and is the witness vulnerable to a credibility challenge?
- Is it possible that the witness will alter his or her testimony under cross-examination?
- Are there inconsistent statements or discovery responses that might be used to induce the witness to change his or her testimony?
- Will cross-examination emphasize damaging testimony?
- Will cross-examination create sympathy for the witness?
- Will cross-examination open new areas for redirect?

Listen attentively to the direct and watch both the witness and the jury for perceptions and reactions. Even though a cross-examination has been prepared, be flexible and mentally prepared to dispense with it if appears unnecessary or counterproductive. For example, the jury may not have gotten the critical point made on direct; a cross may only help drive it home clearly. If the jurors do not like the witness, they may reject what he or she says without cross. It is also possible that the jury will like the witness and resent the attorney for trying to score any points on the witness in cross-examination. The sweet old grandmother, the valiant humble disabled person and the straight-arrow uniformed police officer may be embraced by the jury. If there is another way to contradict or impeach these witnesses, take it. Only if their testimony is critical and there is no other effective way to attack it should such a witness be aggressively cross-examined.

For these reasons, decide whether to cross-examine a witness after direct examination concludes. Although some attorneys may believe that all adverse witnesses should be cross-examined, it is the mark of the experienced trial attorney not to cross-examine a witness who has not harmed that attorney's client.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.08

§ 35.08 Assessing the Damage Done on Direct

A primary factor in determining whether to cross-examine is whether the witness provided damaging evidence. If the witness has not hurt the case on direct, consider foregoing cross-examination unless it is highly likely that favorable evidence can be elicited. Cross-examination may provide the witness with a second chance to give unfavorable evidence. Perhaps the witness has forgotten to make a key point and the opponent has failed to direct the witness' attention to it. The witness may recall it during cross and may be able to bring it out either during cross or on redirect. Perhaps the opponent does not realize that a key point was skipped during direct. Cross-examination may raise it and the opponent can hammer it in during redirect.

A surprising number of witnesses, including experts, are passive and uninspired during their direct examination, yet become impassioned advocates when challenged on cross. Moreover, the jury may not have been paying attention to the witness' monotone delivery on direct, and may well have missed a point. If the jury is alerted to the issue through cross-examination, the damage to the case is intensified. In short, cross-examination of a witness who has not provided damaging testimony only gives a harmless witness a chance to become a harmful one.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.09

§ 35.09 Calculating the Probability of a Successful Cross-Examination

If the witness has been harmful, quickly evaluate the likelihood that cross will be successful. An unsuccessful attempt to defuse unfavorable testimony may only emphasize and increase the damage. If the basic rule is "Don't cross-examine the witness who hasn't harmed you," the corollary is "Don't cross-examine the witness who has harmed you unless you are sure that cross-examination can undo the harm." If the damage is great and the harm is obvious to the jury, there may be so very little to lose that even a slight chance of success would justify a cross-examination. If cross-examination likely will fail, consider whether another witness' direct evidence will refute the damaging testimony. If so, avoid cross-examination of the witness, or limit it to laying a foundation for later introduction of the favorable evidence. For many harmful witnesses, the best way to undo harm is through the testimony of other witnesses or the use of exhibits.

Unfavorable evidence in this context refers to evidence directed to a material issue in the case. If the witness has testified only to incidental or collateral matters, has provided only foundation testimony or is a documents witness, it may be better not to cross-examine. Cross-examination of such a witness may create an atmosphere of needless contentiousness, may cloud the fundamental issues in the case and may cause the jury to lose patience. In turn, such cross-examination may adversely affect how the jury receives cross-examination of an important witness on material issues.

Consider also the witness' credibility. If the witness is not believable or otherwise has made a mess of the direct examination, let that unfavorable impression be the only and last reaction the jury will have to the witness. Cross-examination may provide the witness with an opportunity to rehabilitate himself or herself or to clarify the testimony. On the other hand, if the witness is convincing and credible, the jury will likely take the witness' side, and cross-examination may only make matters worse.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationCollateral MattersEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.10

§ 35.10 Considering a Limited Cross-Examination

If the objective is to discredit the witness's credibility, it may not be necessary to cross-examine on all possible points of dispute. Such an exhaustive examination may cause the jury to lose interest or sympathize with the witness. Rather, counsel may be able to reach the objective just as effectively by thoroughly undermining only one or a few key areas of the witness's testimony. From such a focused example of lack of truthfulness, the jury may decide not believe the witness on any point.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.11

§ 35.11 Conducting Cross-Examination

[1] Treating the Witness Fairly

While the need to be fair permeates the entire trial, it is most pronounced during cross-examination. The jurors will tend to side, sympathize, and even identify with the witness. The jurors may view counsel as an expert in interrogation who has a decided advantage over the legally unsophisticated lay witness. The jury may believe that the witness is nervous or in awe of the courtroom proceedings and may easily forgive his or her mistakes and inadvertent misstatements. Because the witness is viewed as the underdog, tactics during cross-examination will be scrutinized. Even the slightest hint of unfairness may evoke an unfavorable reaction from the jurors.

Although counsel may be tempted to control a hostile witness with pointed or abrasive remarks, this tactic may have a negative impact on the jury. Further, a witness who comes to dislike the cross-examiner may become more hostile and thus less responsive. Arguing with the witness only gives him or her a chance either to withdraw prior damaging testimony or to explain it away. Either way, the outcome will be harmful if your goal is to undermine the witness' credibility.

[2] Choosing Between a Friendly or Hostile Manner

Cross-examination may be conducted in a friendly or hostile manner. Try to vary the style depending on the witness and the circumstances of the case. Ordinarily a friendly, courteous approach to cross-examination will be well received by jurors. Most jurors will assume that incorrect testimony is unintentional, resulting from faulty observations or mistaken perception. The average juror will presume that a witness is testifying honestly and will in most cases identify with the witness, not with the lawyer. Generally, it is inadvisable to commence cross-examination of a seemingly honest witness by attacking in a hostile tone. This may offend the jurors, causing them to pull for the witness.

Moreover, a friendly attitude may be more conducive to eliciting favorable testimony from the witness. Many witnesses believe that cross-examination is such an inherently antagonistic procedure that even a mild cross-examination will be considered a personal insult to their integrity and honesty. A hostile approach only exacerbates the problem. The witness who is treated with respect and with a friendly tone will be less likely to view cross-examination as a personal attack. The witness may become less defensive in answering and may even let his or her guard down. The witness then may become more cooperative and more disposed to accepting suggestions and may be more easily led. If the witness has been poorly prepared by the opponent, gentle questions may not set off any alarms. Remember that few witnesses hear the opening statements or the testimony of the witnesses who precede them. Their overview of the case is sketchy at best. Unless counsel's manner makes the witness suspicious, counsel may be able to lead the witness in another direction.

Adopting a friendly style for most witnesses will also make the cross-examination of hostile or overtly lying witnesses more effective. If a hostile approach is used with only a few witnesses, the jury will be better able to discern and appreciate the lawyer's righteous indignation.

[3] Choosing the Appropriate Placement in the Courtroom to Conduct Cross-Examination

To the extent that the court will allow, counsel should consider where to stand in the courtroom for a successful cross-examination. Unlike direct examination, where the witness should be the primary focus of the jury, during cross-examination the attorney should be the center of attention. If the goal is to insert the attorney's personality into the cross and have the jury remember the attorney and not the witness, it is critical to place yourself so that the jury will not be between you and the witness. Choosing a position which puts the jury between the witness and the lawyer will force the jury to divide their attention between the two and ultimately most juries will focus more on the witness. That is precisely the reason why, when possible, counsel should conduct direct examination with the jury between himself or herself and the witness, so that the jury will recall the witness better.

[4] Looking the Witness in the Eye

On cross-examination, attract and hold the eye of the witness. Make the witness fully aware that he or she is being studied. That will make the witness less likely to exaggerate. Moreover, to the extent that counsel can induce the witness to engage in eye contact, the witness will be less credible for the very reason that he or she is not making contact with the jury.

[5] Projecting Confidence to the Jury

The projection of confidence throughout the proceedings is critical. During direct examination the jury's attention is riveted on the witness and the confidence the witness displays can be an effective part of the persuasiveness of the adversary's case. During cross-examination, the jury will concentrate on counsel's questions in much the same way that they concentrated on the answers of the witness during direct. While conducting cross-examination, counsel must display confidence and be prepared to absorb damaging blows with equanimity.

If a question is answered in an unexpected and harmful way, and there is no ready means of impeachment, the safest procedure under most circumstances is to ask another question on a new subject.

The confidence exhibited by counsel should be most notable at the conclusion of the cross-examination. Plan the cross-examination so that it ends with a question or line of questions that emphasize a particularly strong point. Then stop.

If counsel appears to have the witness on the run, he or she should develop what is needed and then stop. Prolonging the examination will reduce the effectiveness of the cross-examination. A continued attack on the witness may elicit sympathy for the witness from the jury. If the same point is hammered over and over again, the witness may finally come up with a plausible explanation. Opposing counsel may try to interrupt the cross to give the witness time to think or perhaps to use an objection to coach the witness. Be prepared to stop the other lawyer from coaching or making a speech.

[6] Pacing Questions on Cross-Examination

As to the speed at which questioning should proceed, the same principles govern both direct examination and cross-examination. Give the jury enough time to digest each answer. Pause before launching the next question. If the question and answer were complicated, pause longer. The chance is slim that pausing will give the witness time to regroup or to see where the questioning is heading. It is more important to make sure the jury hears and understands. Constantly consider what effect the questions are having on the jury; whether the jury has grasped the significance of a certain point; whether the question was too long to be understood; and whether the jury was distracted. If the question or the answer was complicated because it was poorly asked or confusingly answered, start over: "Ms. Witness, I'm sorry, my question may not have been clear enough. I'll rephrase it." or "Mr. Witness, I'm not sure I followed you on that. Let's try again."

The pace of questioning necessarily will vary from witness to witness based on factors like the witness' age, education, social status and counsel's analysis of the witness' strengths, weaknesses and personality. Although a pause between questions is often helpful for the jury to digest the testimony, rapid-fire questioning can be useful when responses seem particularly planned.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.12

§ 35.12 Considering Interrogation Techniques

[1] Determining the Length of Cross-Examination

The length of cross-examination is even more important than the pace, and knowing when to stop is critical. Since the jury has a fairly limited listening capacity, limit cross-examination to a few key areas. If cross-examination is crisp, clear and short, counsel will have the jury's full attention throughout, and will earn their appreciation for not dragging out the length of trial. While there is no magic number, it is unrealistic to expect the jury to focus on more than three key points in any one witness' cross-examination. Even if there are a dozen powerful points that could be made, select three or four of the most powerful ones, and drive them home. Too much of a good thing diffuses the benefit of a short succinct cross-examination. It may be painful to winnow out winning points, but the result will be better if the examination concentrates on a few clear issues. Make any remaining points through other witnesses or evidence. Prolong cross-examination only if there is no alternative method of making the point.

[2] Asking Simple and Clear Questions

Be sure that questions are understandable so that the answers and their relationship to the case are clear to the jury. Avoid fancy, technical and legal terminology. Long, compound questions will be ineffective. Language above the understanding of the average juror will be misunderstood or resented. It also may appear to the jurors that needlessly complex terminology and questions are designed to confuse the witness rather than to elicit the facts of the case.

In advance of cross-examination prepare clear, simple questions for each important witness. Clear and simple questions have the following advantages:

- They are less confusing for the witness
- They are better understood by the jury
- They are less likely to be objected to by opposing counsel

[3] Avoiding "Why" or "How" Questions

Counsel should strive to limit the witness to the facts called for in the question. "Why" or "how" questions are particularly dangerous in this regard. They permit a witness to go into a long, narrative answer on subjects regarding which he or she is substantially more knowledgeable than the questioner. The answer to a why question may sound like a self-serving commendation or classroom lecture. The well-prepared witness also may utilize this type of question as a springboard for introducing prejudicial or irrelevant evidence that otherwise may be inadmissible. An articulate, well-informed witness may give such a good answer that the witness seizes the momentum and captures the jury.

As with most rules of trial practice, the rule against open-ended questions is stated in absolute terms, but it can be overridden for a good reason. For example, if counsel is satisfied that the witness has no reasonable explanation for a dogmatic and damaging assertion made on direct, a why question may take the witness by surprise and effectively demonstrate that the witness' assertions have no basis in fact. Or the witness may have such a pompous, arrogant manner that allowing the witness to talk at length without interruption will increase the jury's aversion to the witness.

The rule against open-ended questions is not foolproof. Opposing counsel can still ask the last, fatal question during redirect. This should be considered when preparing for cross-examination.

[4] Asking Leading Questions

The "essential test of a leading question is whether it so suggests to the witness the specific tenor to the reply desired by counsel that such a reply is likely to be given irrespective of an actual memory. The evil to be avoided is that of supplying a false memory for the witness." n1

The ground rules for cross-examination favor the examiner and provide the means for staying in command throughout the entire cross-examination. The Federal Rules of Evidence recognize the difference between questioning one's own witness and confronting an adversary's witness. Rule 611(c) provides that leading questions should not be used on direct examination, except when necessary to develop the witness' testimony. However, leading questions should be permitted on cross-examination, or when a party calls a hostile witness, an adverse party or a witness identified with an adverse party. n2

On cross-examination counsel can and should make extensive use of leading and suggestive questions. Leading questions allow the attorney to control the area of inquiry, and to use his or her own words to describe the facts and limit the witness to responses based on the facts stated in the question. Leading questions also imply to the witness that the questioner has a mastery of the facts, gained through an exhaustive investigation, and will discourage exaggeration or fabrication.

Cross-examination questions should be stated so as to elicit simple "yes" or "no" responses. Typically, make a statement of fact and have the witness agree with it. Grammatically, this can be accomplished in a number of ways. For example, the same question can be phrased in any of the following ways:

Q:

Isn't it true that you called Mr. Smith on January 10, 1983?

or

Q:

You called Mr. Smith on January 10, 1983, didn't you?

or

Q:

You called Mr. Smith on January 10, 1983, isn't that correct?

or

Q:

You called Mr. Smith on January 10, 1983, right?

Slightly varying the terminology from question to question will break up the monotony. Using the proper tone of voice can make a question "leading," without the use of typical phrases, such as "Isn't that right?" Selective use of non-leading questions also makes the cross-examination more interesting. A non-leading question can be asked when the answer is not important. A non-leading question also can be asked safely when the witness is committed to a particular answer by prior statements or when any answer other than the anticipated one would be nonsensical. In such instances, the witness can be impeached if he or she gives an unexpected answer, and such impeachment will fuel the overall effectiveness of the cross-examination. Non-leading questions also can be an effective way to break up monotony and to change the pace of the questioning.

The ability to use leading questions allows counsel to proceed methodically with a series of short, precise, interrelated questions which lead to an inescapable conclusion, with which the witness must agree.

[5] Avoiding the Ultimate Question

Undertake cross-examination with a firm grasp of the points to be developed and the facts that underlie those points. Work up to those points methodically, step by step. An effective cross-examiner must know how far to go with the questions. Avoid asking the witness to agree with the ultimate conclusions. An effective and safe cross-examination develops all facts necessary for the point to be made, but assumes that the jury understands how those facts support the ultimate conclusion.

Ask only enough questions on cross-examination to suggest the ultimate point. Cross-examination should be used to supply the facts; make the point itself during closing argument when the witness cannot provide an unhelpful response. For example, assume that a third-party witness has identified the defendant as the person who assaulted the plaintiff. Defense counsel's questions attacking the witness' ability to observe might proceed as follows:

Q:

You were standing about 100 feet from the altercation, were you not?

Q:

And the altercation took place at about 7 P.M.?

Q:

There were no street lights at the location, were there?

Q:

And it was a rainy, overcast day, wasn't it?

Q:

The persons involved in the altercation were moving around constantly, were they not?

These questions convey the sense to the jury that the witness really could not clearly see the defendant. The ultimate question "Isn't it a fact that you really couldn't see well enough to make a positive identification?" might give the witness an opportunity to make an exculpatory conclusion.

An unplanned cross-examination, even by an experienced trial attorney, is likely to stumble on an ultimate question. If a cross-examination has gone well, the instinct to end on a strong point may prompt one to ask an ultimate question that gives the witness an opportunity to provide an unhelpful explanation. Planning cross-examination helps put that temptation into perspective.

[6] Shifting Areas of Inquiry

Cross-examination should not be haphazard. On the other hand, there can be benefits to shifting among areas of inquiry rather than proceeding in a logical sequence.

Throughout cross-examination the witness will be trying to figure out what the questioner is getting at. Varying topics during cross-examination may help disrupt that effort. During closing argument counsel can weave any disjointed evidence into a logical fabric that supports the client's position.

On the other hand, if counsel is successfully hiding the objective from the witness, the jury might lose sight of the purpose as well. Because the jurors are less familiar with the case than the witness is, they may become confused more easily and sooner. For that reason, a logical approach is usually preferable.

[7] Knowing the Answer

On cross-examination, the witness is more likely to want to hurt than help the cross-examiner's case. Do not give the witness opportunities to inflict that kind of damage. A cardinal rule of cross-examination is that one should not ask any question to which the examiner does not know the answer. Careful preparation, including extensive discovery, will provide guidance regarding the expected answer. Do not take a shot in the dark; the risk of obtaining a harmful answer is too great. Avoid the temptation to satisfy one's curiosity by fishing for information during cross-examination.

[8] Resisting Argumentation

Sometimes, answers received on cross-examination lead to the conclusion that the witness is skillfully hiding the true facts. If counsel cannot expose the witness' deception, the natural tendency is to argue with the witness. Resist the temptation. It will not impress the jury, it is unlikely to lead to helpful information, and it may strengthen the witness' credibility and re-emphasize the witness' testimony. Counsel will also appear unprofessional and may be open to a sustained objection.

[9] Refraining From Opening the Door

The cross-examiner must keep in mind that the adversary will have another chance to examine the witness through redirect. Do not open the door for the admission of harmful or prejudicial matter on redirect that could not have been adduced but for the scope of the cross-examination.

This problem usually can be avoided if the cross-examiner stays within the scope of the witness' direct examination, and sticks to a plan to elicit a few key points from the witness. One of the most frequent "door openers" is the use of a document on cross. If a document is introduced, the opponent probably will be given the opportunity to use the entire document on redirect. If the document was not admissible in the first place, the fact that it was only used for impeachment does not prevent the other side from using it now in their case-in-chief.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. United States v. Durham, 319 F.2d 590, 592 (4th Cir. 1963) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 611(c).

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.13

§ 35.13 Controlling Deviating Witnesses

Overriding concerns during cross-examination include:

- Keeping the witness on a narrow path
- Preventing the witness from straying into areas that should not be explored
- Seeking straight answers to questions
- Silencing the witness who tries to extemporize in response to pointed, specific questions

Counsel is entitled to clear and direct responses to questions. The use of leading questions tends to control a witness but provides no guarantee that the witness will not launch into a narrative response.

Many witnesses avail themselves of every opportunity to tell their version of the facts. No matter what question is asked, the witness eagerly expounds his or her full version of the facts, thereby frustrating the pace and objectives of the cross-examination. Counsel may be tempted to interrupt that kind of response to limit it to the question asked. This puts counsel in a delicate situation. If counsel fails to interrupt, the witness may repeat damaging testimony, infuse prejudicial matter, or open an area of inquiry for which counsel is unprepared. However, if counsel interrupts, the jury may believe that counsel is being unfair or is afraid to allow the jury to hear the whole truth. If the witness is clearly uncooperative or evasive, consider giving the witness plenty of chances to avoid a simple answer to a simple question. The jury will hold that against the witness. Counsel must continue to be polite and patient until sure that the jury believes that the witness has something to hide or an interest to protect. In some instances, a talkative witness may be reined-in by restating the question and requesting a more responsive answer.

Another tactic to consider is to allow the witness to complete the answer the first few times that he or she strays, and then move to strike the response. After a few such motions are granted, the talkative witness may become more attentive and the jury will get the idea that the witness is trying to evade the question. If the witness persists, ask the court to instruct the witness to respond only to the question asked. However, the judge will give the witness a chance to explain a "yes or no" answer. Because asking the judge for help is an admission that counsel is unable to control the witness, it should be a last resort.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyExaminationLeading QuestionsEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.14

§ 35.14 Persevering Against Evasive Witnesses

A witness may try to avoid answering question altogether. Rather than qualifying or masking the answer with irrelevant facts, the evasive witness purposely avoids answering the question asked.

Although an evasive witness tries to derail cross-examination, such a witness is vulnerable. The witness evades a question when he or she knows the answer may be unfavorable. Continued evasiveness only emphasizes the very evidence the witness hoped to downplay. Therefore, when confronted with an evasive answer, do not promptly ask the court to instruct the witness to answer the question. Keep in mind that one of the objectives of cross-examination is to expose the witness' lack of credibility. That objective is better accomplished by giving the witness the opportunity to continue the evasion, carefully framing questions so that the evasion becomes apparent to the jury. Rather than turning to the court for an instruction, calmly and slowly repeat the question until an answer is received.

One effective method is to ask the court reporter to read the question back. Then say to the witness "Mrs. Smith, would you please answer that question now." Another method is to confront evasive witnesses with their own contradictory testimony.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyExaminationLeading QuestionsEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.15

§ 35.15 Responding to Questioning Witnesses

If a witness asks counsel to explain or clarify a question, counsel should evaluate what is happening before supplying the explanation or clarification. A request for clarification can be a method of evasion or a stall for time to think. Also keep in mind that some questions from a witness may be rhetorical, argumentative or designed to dilute the answer given.

The more questions the witness asks the greater the chance that counsel will lose control of the examination and begin to argue with the witness. Whether to respond to a witness' question depends on the question and the facts of the case. Counsel might answer the question, while using the opportunity to frame the point in the context of the counsel's theory of the case. Keep in mind, however, that this breaks the pace of the cross and invites argument from opposing counsel and the witness. Counsel can simply ignore the question; but the jury may feel that counsel is discourteous or is evading the question because the answer is damaging. Finally, counsel can advise the witness that he or she is not allowed to testify. This type of response is courteous and reminds the jurors that they must decide the case based on the evidence adduced by witnesses, not on statements of counsel. It tends to dispel any inference that counsel is evading an embarrassing question, and it permits counsel to control the cross-examination.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.16

§ 35.16 Choosing Language that Favors One's Position

It is critical for counsel to pay attention to the meanings and nuances of words, and their psychological impact. The sophisticated cross-examiner hones his or her vocabulary sharply for effect, and selects with care just the right words to use. For example, a study of the differences in responses to questions using a definite article (the) and an indefinite article (a) showed that questions with an indefinite article (e.g., "Did you see a broken headlight?" as opposed to "Did you see the broken headlight?") led to many more "I don't know" responses. Subjects who were asked questions with an indefinite article were more than twice as likely to respond "I don't know." Asked questions with a definite article, subjects tended to commit themselves to a "yes" or "no" response. n1 The definite article suggests that the word it modifies (the headlight) did exist.

Other word choices also make a difference: people may estimate speed higher when asked about the cars "smashing," rather than "hitting." A defense lawyer asks about an "accident." Plaintiffs are injured in "crashes" and "wrecks." Witnesses may be more apt to estimate that they were further away from something they witnessed if asked how "far away" the incident was, instead of how "close" they were to the incident.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Barnum, Effective Communication: Putting Research to Work in the Courtroom, Trial 42, 43 (Dec. 1984).

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.17

§ 35.17 Eliciting Helpful Evidence on Cross-Examination

Always consider whether the witness can corroborate or support favorable evidence. If the facts the witness can corroborate are important, or even secondary, get the corroboration. Such admissions or support from an adverse witness on cross capture the jury's attention, and can bolster the case far beyond the immediate significance of the evidence directly corroborated.

Remember that not all witnesses called by the other side are adverse or hostile. They may be called because their testimony is about a critical link in the case. Try to form a good relationship with these witnesses during discovery, and conduct the cross in a friendly manner to elicit favorable testimony.

Consider also whether the witness can be used to help lay the foundation for the subsequent admission, in your case-in-chief, of any exhibits. Demonstrative evidence and exhibits can be powerful tools of persuasion with a jury, particularly when they are supported or authorized by witnesses from the other side.

Cross-examination also may be used to establish what the witness does not know. If the opponent calls a dozen witnesses, but only one of them can testify about a critical fact, emphasize through the cross that no other witness can corroborate that fact.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureTrialsGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationScopeEvidenceTestimonyExaminationLeading QuestionsEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
A Evaluating the Essentials of Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide §§ 35.18through 35.19

[Reserved]

§§ 35.18[Reserved]

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
B Impeaching Witnesses on Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.20

§ 35.20 Understanding Impeachment in the Context of Cross-Examination

Impeachment is the vehicle by which trial counsel calls into question the veracity of the witness and the reliability of testimony. Impeaching proof is not substantive evidence. n1 However, it is the basis on which counsel will argue at closing either that the jury need not concern itself with a witness' testimony, for they will have been shown that the witness is untrustworthy, or that the evidence from that witness' testimony, when compared to that of other witnesses, falls far short of the mark required to prevail in the case.

Matter used for impeachment is not offered for the truth of what it contains or asserts. Rather, it is used only to impeach the witness' credibility. Thus, proof of a prior inconsistency is received for the limited purpose of affecting the credibility of the witness. However, as a practical matter, experienced litigators recognize that, to the jury, the impeaching matter will corroborate and highlight other evidence that supports their case. n2

For example, assume that immediately after an accident a state trooper interviewed a passenger in plaintiff's car and took down the passenger's statement in the presence of a third-party witness, Smith. The passenger made statements indicating that plaintiff's speed was excessive. After the state trooper read back the statement to the passenger and Smith, Smith remarked that he had just heard what the passenger had said, that that was just what happened and that he couldn't add anything to it. When Smith testifies at trial, the defendants, to challenge Smith's credibility and to contradict Smith's testimony, will be permitted to introduce the testimony of the state trooper as to what the passenger told him in Smith's presence. Such testimony will be admitted solely with respect to the issue of Smith's credibility, and not as affirmative evidence of any facts the passenger related to the state trooper. On the other hand, if Smith were the plaintiff in the case, his prior statements could be admitted into evidence as admissions.

The trial court has considerable discretion in determining whether evidence should be admitted for impeachment purposes. n3 The court should balance the probative value of the evidence against the unfair prejudice that might result from its introduction. n4 Consequently, if the facts developed in impeachment are necessary elements of the cause of action or defense, counsel must prove those facts by other witnesses or exhibits.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentGeneral

OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral
OverviewEvidenceTestimonyExaminationLeading QuestionsEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. United States v. Wilson, 930 F.2d 616 (8th Cir. 1991) .

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2).

(n3)Footnote 3. Bobb v. Modern Prods., Inc., 648 F.2d 1051 (5th Cir. 1981) .

(n4)Footnote 4. United States v. Weiss, 930 F.2d 185 (2d Cir. 1991) .

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
B Impeaching Witnesses on Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.21

§ 35.21 Considering Impeachment Strategies

[1] Determining Who May Be Impeached

The credibility of a witness may be attacked by any party, including the party calling the witness. n1 Significantly, the Federal Rules of Evidence abandon the traditional prohibition against impeaching one's own witness. n2 However, notwithstanding the practice of using otherwise inadmissible evidence for impeachment, a party may not impeach its own witness as a way of putting inadmissible evidence before the jury. n3

[2] Impeaching the Adversary's Witness

Resist the impulse to impeach every witness called by the adversary, even if there is an inconsistency or something unfavorable in the witness' testimony. Before attacking a witness' credibility, consider whether the overall testimony of the witness on direct is favorable or unfavorable, and whether the witness likely will provide favorable evidence during cross-examination. It may be wiser to enhance, rather than undermine, the credibility of a witness called by the adversary who on balance has provided, or will provide, favorable evidence.

If during discovery the witness provided favorable evidence on an essential issue in the case, plan to develop that evidence during cross-examination. If the witness then contradicts himself or herself at trial, the decision regarding whether or not to impeach becomes far easier--impeach the witness regarding that essential point as well as any other material matters about which the witness testified inconsistently during direct. If the witness sticks to deposition testimony and, as expected, substantially helps the case, forego any impeachment, but instead highlight the favorable testimony in closing argument.

Arguing affirmative admissions to the jury generally is more effective than merely arguing that the witness is not to be believed. Moreover, if counsel impeaches the witness after obtaining favorable admissions, the witness' credibility will be in issue and even the favorable evidence may be viewed with suspicion. The jury may not be able to decipher the lies from the truth and may take the easy out of rejecting the entire testimony of the witness.

An unsuccessful attempt at impeachment may have the most harmful consequences when the ground of attack involves the character of the witness. Never imply that the witness has lied deliberately, unless convinced that the attack is justifiable and is essential to the case.

Obviously, instances arise when there is no choice but to impeach. This is particularly true when trial testimony flatly contradicts deposition testimony on an essential aspect of the case. In such situations, the chances of failure are slim. Although the witness may attempt to gratuitously explain away the inconsistency or opposing counsel may attempt to rehabilitate the witness, those efforts will be viewed with suspicion by the jury.

[3] Impeaching One's Own Witness

A party is entitled to impeach its own witness. n4 The rule is not limited to situations where the party calling the witness is surprised or misled, and the rule places no limitation on the manner in which a party may impeach his or her own witness. n5 A party, however, should not be permitted to call a witness for the purpose of impeachment with otherwise inadmissible evidence. n6

Do not rush into impeaching any witness. If the witness has helped overall, it is probably best not to impeach. If the inconsistency goes to a fundamental element of the case, however, counsel will need to set the record straight. Some attorneys try to get around outright impeachment by suggesting that the witness does not recall and then using the prior inconsistent statement to refresh the witness' recollection. Alternatively, start the impeachment by suggesting that the witness' memory was fresher when the prior statement was given and attempt to lead the witness back to endorsing the prior statement. These approaches are effective when it appears that the witness is honest, but forgetful. If the witness appears to have become hostile, however, a more traditional and aggressive manner of impeachment may be appropriate.

[4] Considering the Subject of Impeachment

Counsel generally is granted a wide latitude in testing the credibility and reliability of a witness' testimony. n7 Nonetheless, impeachment should be related to material facts in controversy. n8 This general rule precludes the cross-examiner from impeaching the witness on collateral, insignificant, or trivial matters. The test is whether the impeaching proof relates to a subject which forms the basis of plaintiff's case or defendant's defense--does it relate either to an issue in the case as framed by the pleadings or to some matter, such as bias or corruption, which tends to discredit the witness. While the dividing line between material and collateral matters is not always clear, as a practical matter the judge will allow impeachment regarding any significant or important fact.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentBad Character for TruthfulnessGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentContradictionEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentPrior Inconsistent StatementsEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 607.

(n2)Footnote 2. United States v. Peterman, 841 F.2d 1474, 1479-81 (10th Cir. 1988) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Whitehurst v. Wright, 592 F.2d 834 (5th Cir. 1979) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Evid. 607.

(n5)Footnote 5. United States v. Schatzle, 901 F.2d 252, 256 (2d Cir. 1990) .

(n6)Footnote 6. United States v. Gomez-Gallardo, 915 F.2d 553 (9th Cir. 1990) .

(n7)Footnote 7. United States v. Lynch, 800 F.2d 765 (8th Cir. 1986) .

(n8)Footnote 8. United States v. Weiss, 930 F.2d 185 (2d Cir. 1991) .

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
B Impeaching Witnesses on Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.22

§ 35.22 Evaluating Whether to Impeach a Witness

[1] Strategizing Impeachment

Before deciding to make use of any impeaching matter, consider the alternatives:

- Using the material for impeachment during cross-examination
- Introducing it in the case-in-chief as affirmative proof on an element of the case or defense
- Not using the material at all for impeachment

Consider the following when deciding whether to impeach a witness:

- Is there a basis for impeachment?
- When during cross-examination should impeachment be attempted?
- Should the witness be impeached during cross-examination or should the impeaching matter be introduced as affirmative evidence later?

In answering each of these questions, the goal is to maximize impact on the jury. Consider the witness' personality, his or her relationship to the case, and the strength of the impeaching matter.

[2] Considering the Basis for Impeachment

Counsel should consider the following avenues for impeachment:

- Showing that the witness' testimony at trial is inconsistent with previous statements n1
- Using extrinsic evidence during the case-in-chief by presenting a witness or document that discredits the testimony of the witness n2

- Showing that the testimony is influenced by pecuniary interest, bias or kinship for one party or hostility to another n3

- Challenging the character of the witness n4

- Challenging the ability of the witness to observe, remember or recount the matters testified about

Evidence of the beliefs or opinions of a witness on matters of religion is not admissible for the purpose of showing that by reason of their nature the witness' credibility is impaired or enhanced. n5

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentGeneral
OverviewEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentConvictionsGeneral
OverviewEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentPrior
ConductEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentReligious
BeliefsEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 613; United States v. Smith, 776 F.2d 892, 897 (10th Cir. 1985) .

(n2)Footnote 2. United States v. Tarantino, 846 F.2d 1384, 1409-1410 (D.C. Cir. 1988) .

(n3)Footnote 3. Douglas v. Owens, 50 F.3d 1226, 1230 (3d Cir. 1995) .

(n4)Footnote 4. Fed. R. Evid. 608, 609.

(n5)Footnote 5. Fed. R. Evid. 610.

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
B Impeaching Witnesses on Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.23

§ 35.23 Impeaching the Witness with a Prior Inconsistent Statement

One method of challenging the credibility of a witness is to show that the witness has previously made a statement that is inconsistent with his or her present testimony. Even if that prior inconsistent statement would otherwise be inadmissible as hearsay, it may be admissible for the limited purpose of impeaching the witness. n1

In examining a witness concerning a prior statement made by the witness, whether written or not, the statement need not be shown nor its contents disclosed to the witness at that time, but on request the same shall be shown or disclosed to opposing counsel. n2

Extrinsic evidence of a prior inconsistent statement made by a witness other than a party-opponent is not admissible unless the witness is afforded an opportunity to explain or deny the same and the opposite party is afforded an opportunity to interrogate the witness thereon, or the interests of justice otherwise require. n3

A witness' earlier contradictory statement may take many forms, including the following:

- An oral statement made to another person either at the time of or after the events in question n4
- A written statement appearing in a document signed by the witness
- Sworn testimony at prior trials or hearings, administrative hearings or depositions
- Statements in court documents signed or verified by the witness
- An omission in an earlier statement
- A statement by the witness in an article, book or other published documen

Prior inconsistent statements are often found in a transcript of the witness' testimony taken before trial, at a deposition, for example. When such testimony exists, the inconsistent statement is read into the record and the witness is given an opportunity to respond.

To be an effective device for impeachment, the form of the prior inconsistent statement does not matter, nor does it matter what accepted methods of proof are used to establish that the statement was made. A statement can be made in the presence of a court reporter, a secretary or other person who reduces the statement to writing, whether or not the statement is signed. It may be preserved on a recording device, or it can merely be an overheard conversation remembered by another person.

A prior written statement need not have been shown to the witness at the time it was made, although any prior confirmation of the statement, such as a signature, certainly makes it stronger. Proof of the statement can come from the witness, from other persons who claim to have overheard the statement, or by introduction into evidence of the writing which contains the statement. The impeaching evidence must only be competent and admissible. Statements need not be diametrically opposed in order to be inconsistent. n5 The probative value of the proof offered varies with the perceived reliability of that proof. A recorded statement is more probative than testimony of a witness who claims to have overheard the statement; a sworn statement is better than one not under oath.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceHearsayCredibility of DeclarantsImpeachment EvidenceEvidenceHearsayExemptionsPrior Statements by WitnessesInconsistent StatementsEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentPrior Inconsistent StatementsEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d).

(n2)Footnote 2. Fed. R. Evid. 613(a).

(n3)Footnote 3. Fed. R. Evid. 613(b).

(n4)Footnote 4. Jankins v. TDC Management Corp., Inc., 21 F.3d 436, 442 (D.C. Cir. 1994) .

(n5)Footnote 5. United States v. Agajanian, 852 F.2d 56, 58 (2d Cir. 1988) .

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
B Impeaching Witnesses on Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.24

§ 35.24 Preparing to Impeach With Prior Inconsistent Statement

To satisfy its goal, impeachment must effectively demonstrate and underscore the inconsistent statement of the witness. The contrast between the witness' statements must be clear, and that is best accomplished when the statements are presented one after the other.

To be most effective, counsel should respond to the inconsistent statement quickly. If after receiving unfavorable testimony, counsel muddles through a deposition transcript or pile of exhibits looking for the impeaching matter, it will minimize the effect of the impeachment. The jury may become impatient and lose sight of the testimony counsel is attempting to impeach. A long delay between the witness' testimony at trial and confronting the witness with an inconsistent statement will dull the contrast between the inconsistencies.

If the statement was just made on direct, counsel should consider asking the court reporter to read it back. If it was made several hours or days before, give the court reporter sufficient notice so that the reporter can find that portion of the direct testimony. After the reporter reads the testimony, ask the witness if the statement was correct and whether he or she wishes to modify it in any way.

A detailed pretrial review of a witness' deposition testimony and all documents relating to the witness' story are indispensable to effective impeachment. Prior to the start of trial, isolate all testimony and written material supporting the case. Conspicuously note on the cross-examination outline, by page, those vital areas of deposition testimony counsel wants the witness to verify. Similarly, the cross-examination outline should refer by number to any exhibits that are inconsistent with deposition testimony. These notations will facilitate retrieval of impeaching matter at trial and thereby promote effective impeachment.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
EvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyCredibilityImpeachmentPrior Inconsistent StatementsEvidenceTestimonyExaminationCross-ExaminationGeneral OverviewEvidenceTestimonyPresentation of Evidence

* This chapter was rewritten in 2006 by Andrew E. Westley whose law office is located in San Francisco, California.

Federal Litigation Guide
Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 Cross-Examination *
B Impeaching Witnesses on Cross-Examination

2-35 Federal Litigation Guide § 35.25

§ 35.25 Evaluating How to Best Utilize Prior Inconsistent Statements

[1] Recommitting the Witness to Prior Testimony

When attempting to recommit the witness, use the witness' own words. The witness will be more likely to agree with his or her own words than with counsel's paraphrase of the answer. Moreover, do not rush too quickly into impeachment. Wait for the witness to fully commit to the statement so that the witness cannot change his or her position without seriously undermining credibility. Do not signal an intention to impeach until the witness is committed to the statement. For this reason, know the details of the prior statement so that the witness can be examined without immediately producing the statement. Then when the statement is produced, the witness may be caught off guard.

If the planned scope of cross-examination of a particular witness is narrowed to three or four major issues, the preparation necessary for impeachment is also minimized. If the possible impeachment concerns a matter about which counsel is not planning to cross-examine the witness, the matter may be collateral or so minor that impeachment will be unproductive.

[2] Using Simple, Direct Questions

Try to phrase cross-examination questions so that simple "yes" or "no" answers will be given. The longer the question, the harder it will be for the jury to perceive the inconsistency, and the easier it will be for the witness to concoct an explanation or further confuse the point by an unintelligible answer. As with other issues to be covered by cross-examination, break each point down into its component parts.

[3] Laying a Foundation Before Impeaching the Witness With a Prior Inconsistent Statement

The cross-examiner generally may not ask the witness about a specific prior inconsistent statement without first calling the witness' attention to the time, place and circumstances of the prior statement. While this requirement is not found in Rule 613, it is the practice of most federal courts as a matter of fairness and is well within the judge's discretion under the Rule. This requirement is intended to guard against unfair cross-examination wherein the cross-examiner takes a statement out of context without giving the witness an opportunity to reflect on the prior statement.

Although there is no requirement that the witness be shown the prior written statement before using it for impeachment purposes, it must be shown to opposing counsel on request. n1

Whenever an adversary's cross-examination suggests that a prior inconsistent statement was made, counsel should immediately ask to review any written statement and should ask for the substance of any oral statement. Of course, the attorney providing the substance of an oral statement should do so out of the hearing of the witness so as not to lose any advantage of surprise.

The trial judge has the discretion to require that the cross-examiner to show the witness the prior inconsistent statement if that approach avoids confusing the witness or the jury. n2 Moreover, a witness has the right to obtain the statement on demand. n3 Rule 613(a) does not defeat the application of Rule 26(b)(3) but its operation "may be suspended temporarily." n4 This means that if the request is made during cross-examination, the trial judge may allow the examination to proceed and direct the statement be delivered to the witness after the examination is completed.

Extrinsic evidence of a prior inconsistent statement by a witness other than a party opponent is not admissible unless the witness is afforded an opportunity to explain or deny the same and the opposite party is afforded an opportunity to interrogate the witness thereon, or the interests of justice otherwise require. n5

Surprise is often critical to successful cross-examination. Once a witness is committed to a certain statement, surprise has served its purpose. If extrinsic evidence will be used to contradict the statement, the witness should be afforded an opportunity to admit, deny or explain it. This affords the honest witness with a chance to reconcile differences and also to refresh his or her recollection. For example, counsel does not provide a sufficient foundation for the admission of a letter to impeach a witness if he or she merely elicits the witness' admission to writing the letter but does not establish the significance of the letter or give the witness an opportunity to explain the alleged inconsistency in the letter. n6 If the witness has no explanation for the prior statement even after being shown a copy of it, the jury more likely will believe the prior statement than if it never had been shown to the witness.

[4] Establishing the Reliability of the Prior Inconsistent Statement

Be sure to establish that the prior inconsistent statement was made at a time and under circumstances that ensure its reliability, especially when counsel wants the jury to believe the prior statement, rather than the witness' direct testimony. For example, if the prior statement was made during a deposition, emphasize that the testimony was under oath and that the witness had the opportunity to read and correct the testimony.

Keep in mind that impeachment has many different purposes. For example, counsel may want the jury to accept the prior statement as true or may want to create doubt about the witness' veracity or recall by demonstrating vacillation over time. Counsel should build up the prior statement only if he or she wants the jury to accept that statement as true.

[5] Confronting the Witness With the Prior Inconsistent Statement

Always read the prior inconsistent statement to the witness and ask the witness to admit making it. If the witness does not unequivocally admit to making the statement, complete the impeachment by offering proof of the impeaching matter. If the witness asserts that the prior statement is only partially accurate, that he or she does not remember making the statement at all, or that it was made when the witness was ill or under the influence of drugs or alcohol, impeachment must include rebuttal of those claims, in addition to establishing the existence and content of the prior statement.

[6] Using Prior Testimony for Impeachment

Prior testimony is perhaps the most frequently used form of prior inconsistent statement. The testimony may be from a prior hearing in the case (such as a preliminary injunction hearing), direct examination during trial, or a deposition in the case. It also may be testimony given by the witness in another case, in an administrative hearing, or in a proceeding before a board or grand jury. If a witness testified in an earlier trial, he or she may also have given a deposition in that case. For this reason, many lawyers routinely ask during deposition whether the witness ever has testified before in any other proceeding. Other attorneys rely on their own investigation to uncover such prior testimony in hopes of surprising the witness with the testimony at trial. Pleadings signed or filed by a witness who was a party in another case may also be a source of inconsistent statements. n7

Preliminary questions should relate to the time, place, and circumstances of the prior testimony. Emphasize the fact that the witness was under oath and that he or she told the truth on the prior occasion.

[7] Using Written Statements for Impeachment

Written statements of all types may be used to impeach a witness. The statement may be one given to an investigator or a lawyer, a report that summarizes events, or a piece of correspondence. A written statement need not be shown to the witness before impeachment on the basis of its contents. n8 Nonetheless, many attorneys still use the traditional method of showing the document to the witness before impeachment because they believe that it is more persuasive with the jury. Counsel might even seek permission to pass copies of the prior statement to the jurors so they can read along. The jury will see a tangible object handed to the witness which may bear his or her signature and the jury will be impressed if the witness is unable to explain the inconsistency even after having a fair chance to review and explain the document.

